

Technical and Bibliographic Notes/Notes techniques et bibliographiques

The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming, are checked below. L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.

	Coloured covers/ Couverture de couleur		Coloured pages/ Pages de couleur Covers damaged/ Couverture endommagée		Pages damaged∕ Pages endommagées
	Covers restored and/or laminated/ Couverture restaurée et/ou pelliculée		Pages restored and/or laminated/ Pages restaurées et/ou pelliculées
	Cover title missing/ Le titre de couverture manque	V	Pages discoloured, stained or foxed/ Pages décolorées, tachetées ou piquées
	Coloured maps/ Cartes géographiques en couleur		Pages detached/ Pages riétachées Coloured i≂k (i.e. other than blue or black)/ Encre de couleur (i.e. autre que bleue ou noire)	$\checkmark$	Showthrough/ Transparence
	Coloured plates and/or illustrations/ Planches et/ou illustrations en couleur	$\square$	Quality of print varies/ Qualité inégale de l'Impression
	Bound with other material/ Relié avec d'autres documents		Includes supplementary material/ Comprend du matériel supplémentaire
	Tight binding may cause shadows or distortion along interior margin/ La reliura serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de la distortion le long de la marge intérieure		Only edition available,' Seule édition disponible Pages wholly or partially obscured by errata
	Blank leaves added during restoration may appear within the text. Whenever possible, these have been omitted from filming/ il se peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutées lors d'une restauration apparaissent dans le texte, mais, lorsque cela était possible, ces pages n'ont pas été filmées.		slips, tissues, etc., have been refilmed to ensure the best possible image/ Les pages totalement ou partiellement obscurcies par un feuillet d'errata, une pelure, etc., ont été filmées à nouveau de façon à obtenir la meilleure image possible.
	Additional comments:/ Commentaires supplémentaires:
This	item is filmed at the reduction ratio checked below/

This item is filmed at the reduction ratio checked below/ Ce document est filmé au taux de réduction indiqué ci-dessous.

The co to the g R M

The im possibl of the filming

Origina beginni the last sion, ou other o first pa sion, ai or illus

The las shall co TINUE whiche

Maps, differen entirely beginn right au require method détails détails ues du modifier ger une filmage

ées

re

y errata ed to nt ne pelure, içon à

32X

The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of: Ralph Pickard Bell Library Mount Allison University

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol  $\longrightarrow$  (meaning "CON-TINUED"), or the symbol  $\nabla$  (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'axemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de: Relph Pickerd Bell Library Mount Allison University

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'Impression ou d'Illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'Impression ou d'Illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole  $\longrightarrow$  signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole  $\nabla$  signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent êtrefilmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'Images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

1	2	3
4	5	6

EITH AND WORDS

L]

HHI

CHERET.

CUNNINGHAM GERRIE D.D.

" The Lift was the Light of sten?"-John ?. A.

MEW TORF: AMERICAN BOOK BLOHANGE

PADALINE FROMINY

THE

BT200 G312

3-4.

LIFE AND WORDS

CHRIST.

The second se

My I' I

· · · · ·

11

CUNNINGHAM GEIKIE D.D.

at the second and the second sec

"The LIFE was the Light of Men."-John i. 4.

NEW YORK:

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE, TRIBUNE BUILDING,

The second secon

1880.

LIFE AND WORDS

THE

8.	allene internentingeneraliseteringeneraliseteringeneraliseteringen vor indernetingen
2.1	"ALT FTTTN"	4 2 44
是我们点气		MILLAND .
Stree It.	INTROLUCTOR	1
YI []	CAL ZAR SHT	11
08 - 1	PALEBIESE AT THE TIME OF CURISS S
11 - 02		VI
· The months	THE JEWISS WOULD AP THE TAULOUT STREET, DE CHILLEN STREET	Y
2 2 1	The RADER AT THE SAL AR CHIEF, AND THERE INST.	127 - 83 83
教育 有利	BREED OF JOHN TEN DATE MATTING WEITH
Enter annual that	and the second 22 - 63 =	, C. C E. J. A. J. M. D. M. L. Hand Kind Kind and Chill	The second se y 88 98	Ат Вэтнимнем.	the second 002-12	40 Tosle and
1299 4 we first	BRANCH AND THE SALLY DESC OF SERVICE MICHINE	Salar TTC is
QSI 29.1	MARK THE STATE AND THE STATE OF STATE	SHER.
62-6631	South The LIER reas the Light of Man." - John i. 4.	· * 3.45
(10)天	THE PALEON & S. LET TO LANGELLES	10719
12214-150	Live Evers TRUE LATE and the second	DERS UNDER ORDER 138 AVO ROME.
2917-198	THE BOWAY PRO JULATION OF THE STATES	XIX
310-201	HEROE ANTINE AND CREATE ON A CHANGE	17.72
. 798 - 919	THE GAMERANCE AND THE EL COLD A MATCH
i to a start	Date as The D. ww.
1. 28 E Str	THE REAL OF DEALER IS AN INTERNET AND
1 639	THE TORE IN THE MANNESS
1 252 - 16-12	TAR L'AR PROPERTY MANAGER OF STAR
206 420	In article of Shire and the Leave of Anti-	· martin -
413 508-	AMBRIGAN BOOK BY GHANGE.	II VIL
. 202-4711	This for they read the Witt begins of and Di Brings	····································· 208-345	Visu ro Jonesius,	Tax to mandle	- CATALANS OF ETLANDER HOAT	L. F. And 8.4 1761	- main and manual and the second	112.2.7
	in the second

this Ling V. · CELINIVI. 1576 11 18 1 Lin VIL ter: VIII. The IX. 10. Man XI. XI, Y XII, N XIII, E XIV, S XV, T XVI, E XVII, L XVIII, J XIX, T XX, H XXI, T XXI. TE XXII. BE XXIII. TH XXIV. TH XXV. TH XXVI. TH XXVII. TH XXVIII. THE XXIX. THE XXX. VISI XXXI. FROM

ir

A STAR

Titon No

XXXII. OPEN

covtents.

iv

CITATE:

I III III IV IV

117 1112.2 117 1112.2 117 1727. 117 1727. 117 1727.2

AF HVXX INT HBYXY INT YBYXY INT YIXX

ingle 112.2.7

	-	· · · ·	,
	PAGE	•	CHAPTER
	SSHY COPP	CLPEREASYM	119777
		anne and a second a second best a set part and the second bear and the	an a g sa alan a 191 514	THE CROUP OF THE TWEEKE, AND THE PLES .N ON THE PLOT T.	VXXX.
	R+12	Truckaness or 305 Marst ranking	1777.2
	N AND - ALAN	Tarsenworky run Stor remarkedig	17 17 77
	4 . W . inder der.	a consideration of the state of	A & C Mu dradia Chin with	OPEN CONSTRUCT	which I doubt by 3.3° - 8.34	CONTRINICO BARLAD	. S. I. Z. R. H.
	may also	CONTENTS.	1.1.2
	TR. In - M. P.	THE SELEND OF THE STORY	adadam
	HOC ASSA		. 2 2 . 1
	301 -515	The state of the s	REIX
	1		. This are
	1	The Create de me L'ANTARA	1.3.2
	1 4 4 4 W WILK 3	INTRODUCTORY	1- 10 show the	L THE HOLY LAND	11 11 17
	185		111/11/1
	the per sure is a set	PALESTINE AT THE TIME OF CHRIST
	Callen & IV	. THE REIGN OF HEROD	-11.80-44
	WE Sont	. THE JEWISH WORLD AT THE TIME OF CHRIST	. 1 45- 51
	Se ex multiple	. THE RABBIS AT THE TIME OF CHRIST, AND THEIR IDEAS BI	n a s
	N	SPECTING THE MESSIAH.	100 KO . NO
	1771 1934
	Taga VII	BIRTH OF JOHN THE BAPTIST
	137. i VIII	THE ANNOUNCEMENT TO MARY	. 7 78- 80
	mar IX	. THE BIRTH OF CHRIST	. 80 88
		AT BETHLEHEN
	1584 641	. THE MAGI.	90-109
	Selfa E		100-100
		NAZARETH, AND THE EARLY DAYS OF JESUS
	XIII	EARLY BOYHOOD	. 126-180
	A SHARE XIV	SOCIAL INFLUENCES.	189-149
		. THE PASSOVER VISIT TO JERUSALEN.	140_160
		EARLY YEARS
		LIFE UNDER THE LAW.
Ŷ		. JUDEA UNDER ARCHELAUS AND ROME
	XIX	. THE ROMAN PROCURATORS	198-907
	XX	. HEROD ANTIPAS AND CHRIST'S OWN COUNTRY	208-215
3		. THE GALILEANS AND THE BORDER LANDS
		BEFORE THE DAWN
		. THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN IS AT HAND
	XXIV	. THE VOICE IN THE WILDERNESS	258-269
	XXV	. THE NEW PROPHET IN THE WILDERNESS	. 270-284
		. THE BAPTISM OF JESUS AND THE DEATH OF JOHN THE TENTATION
		. THE RETURN FROM THE WILDERNESS
		THE OPENING OF CHRIST'S PUBLIC MINISTRY VISIT TO JERUSALEN
	XXXI	FROM JERUSALEN TO SAMARIA	356-378
		OPENING OF THE MINISTRY IN GALILEE

A57175

CONTENTS.

CHAPTER PAGES XXXV. THE CHOICE OF THE TWELVE, AND THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT. 410-422 XXXVI. THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT (continued)...... 422-482 MEAN XEIX: AT THE FEAST OF TABERNACLES THE COURSE TRACK MERIA STA. 578-590 LI. THE LAST MONTH OF THE YEAR! UNLE SUS. TA ENGLISH STAR 1 600-611 LII. A WANDERING LIFE. LIV. IN PEREA (continued): LV. PALM SUNDAY. LV. JEBUSALEM. 675-687 EVIL. THE INTERVAL LIX. THE FAREWELL The state and and the set of the set of the set of the set 192 - 12 in the second of a second of the Buiter and a state in the state of the state WHEN MELL WE WARRAND AND AND A WELL AT AND MELLING TO WERE AND THE WARRAND THE WARRAND We was a second and the second s Silver and a second and a second s we fit the in the second second second the second s 192- Lie ..... Mar I had at yarer in the saturday and

6.467 ide. Elit -4 -Core 2 6 2 fr 1 Et frank -1" t- - -1 m _ D. "Bardi 1 Kak The PLEA - grafit ISC-GIS Andr the Augu 2 vo Augus Alt. 1814. Baring saism Baringera. Baumga · Christ Baumga Braun Baur's ( hunder Bengelii Bertheau saische

Besser's 1864

Brunet's

1865.

Campbell Gospels.

Caspari, Ch Einleitun Cohen's Hi

d. Jüdisc

zig, 1819. Curtis' War

1852

Buxtorf's mudicur

Basileæ, Buxtorf's 1680.

Paris, 1 Bunsen ( Bible. Bunsen's

vi

Contraction of age of

and an all a set of the set of th Rabin manufes . by to some later and the second sec - COLLER FOR MARK MARKER & MORENTER STATE OF A LINE I SAFE OF STATE OF ST

LIST OF AUTHORITIES. The following are some of the authorities used in this book ; many, howand file ever, being necessarily omitted :-

Andrews, The Life of Our Lord upon the Earth. London, 1863. Augusti's Predigten d. Kirchenväter. 2 vols. Leipzig, 1688. Augusti u. De Wette's Uebersetzung, d. Alt. u. Neuen Test. Heidelberg, 1814.

VI

PAGES 382-393 894-409

410-422

422 492 433-445 . 445-458 458-467 467-477 478 480 489-501

> 501-515 515-581

582-544

544-556

557-567

567-578

578-590 591-599

600-611 611-624 625-641

641-659 659 675

.... 675-687

.... 785-745

746-756

792 812

TUIE * . et

Pitterner Sill 16831

A BERTHERE B.S. Harry X

Electron Electron

SNY WOL.

Sillin on moth

Cost W. Lile 编书 記込

1.1.2019191919 itt & mytra

702-718

719-735

756-778

Baring-Gould's Heathenism and Mo-saism. 8vo. London, 1869. Baring-Gould's Christianity. 8vo. 1870. Post Mediæval Preachers. London, 1865. Baumgarten's Leidensgeschichte Jesu Christi Halle, 1757. Baumgarten's Geschichte Jesu.

Braunschweig, 1859. Baur's (F. C.), Die Drei Ersten Jahr-hunderte, Tübingen, 1863. Bengelii Gnomon, Londini, 1855.

Bengem Gnomon. Londin, poen Mo-Bertheau E., Die Sieben Gruppen Mo-saischer Gesetze. Göttingen, 1840. Besser's Bibelstunden., 2 vols., Halle, Brunet's Les Evangiles Apocryphes.

Bunsen (Ernest), Chronology of the Bible. London, 1874.

Bunsen's Das Leben Jesu. Leipzig, Buxtorf's Lexicon, Chaldaicum Tal-mudicum et Rabbinicum. Folio. Basileæ, 1639.

Buxtorf's Synagoga Judaica. Basileæ, is the articulated and a solution the sounds Campbell (Principal), On the Four Gospels: Aberdeen, 1803 Caspari, Chronologisch-geographische Einleitung, &c. Hamb., 1869 Cohen's Historisch Krit. Darstellung

d. Jüdischen Gottesdienstes. Leip-Curtis'

Wanderer in Syria. London, 1852

Statist when the Participation of the Anna D Davidson's (Dr. 8.) Tischendorf's New Test., London, 1875.

De Wette's Handbuch z. Neuen Test.

De Wette's Archäologie. Leipnig, 1830. De Wette's Archäologie. Leipnig, 1830. Delitzech's Ein Tag in Capernaum. Delitzsch's Ein Tag in Capernaum. Leipzig, 1873. Delitzsch's Schet Welch ein Mensch! Leipzig, 1872. Delitzsch's Durch Krankheit sur Genè-sung. Leipzig, 1873. Delitzsch's Jfülisches Handworkerle-ben sur Zeit Jesus und. Hillel: Erlan-gen, 1867.

Derenbourg's Palestine après les Talmuds, &c. Paris, 1867 Dilimann, d. Buch Henoch, Leipzig, Dillmann, d. Buch d. Jubilaen, in Ewald's Jahrbuch, 1849-1851. Dollinger's The Gentlle and the Jew, &c. 2 vols. London, 1862. Dollinger's Christenthum und Kirche.

Regensburg, 1868. Duke's Rabbinische Blumenlese, Leipzig, 1844. Dupanloup (Evêque d'Orleans), His-toire de N. S. Jesus Christ. Paris, DE rates 3 sec. 5 roles in An & A MATTER &

maril

Ebrard's, The Gospel History. Edin-burgh, 1863.

Ecce Homo. 6th edition. London, 1866.

Eichhorn's Einleitung in d. N. Test. Leipzig, 1830

Eisenmenger's Entdecktes Juden-thum. 2 vols. Königsberg, 1711. Ellicott's (Bishop) Historical Lectures on the Life of Our Lord Jesus Christ. Elsey's Arnotations. 3 vols. London, Till Hutton (R. H.), Essays Theological and Literary. 2 vols. London, 1871. Ewald's Geschichte, Vols, 1 to 6, Göttingen, 1864. Eweld's Alterthümer. Göttingen. 1866. Ewald's Die Dret Ersten Evangelien, 9 vols. Göttingen, 1870-9. Eusebius, Eccles. Hist. London, 1857. Farrar's Life of Christ. 2 vols. London, 1874. Fritzsche's Libri Apoc. Vet. Test. Græce. Lipsiæ, 1871. Furrer's Wanderungen durch Palästi-na. Zürich, 1865. Fürst's Hebräisches Handwösterbuch: 2 vols. Leipzig, 1863. uilant ermacher's Loben Jesu. rich, 1867. 1866. Gieseler's Eccles: History, 5 vols. Edinburgh, 1640, Sana and Antonio Godet's St. Luke: 2 vols. Edinburgh, 1875, Statute & Albandforder, 1875, 1864. Greswell's Harmonia Evangelica. Oron. 1850. Groti Annos tones. Londini, 1727. Guillemard's Grosk Testament. Ho-braistic Edition, S. Matthew, Cambridge, 1875 roomoo. T Hagenbach's Kirchengeschichte. Vol. 1. Leipzig, 1861. Hanna's (Dr.) Life of Our Lord: 4 vols. Edinburgh 1809, del 2005 Hartemann's Leben Jesu Stuttgart, 21860, altyla bas gold asned Habe's Leben Jesu. Leipzig, 1865. Haberath's Neutestameniliche Zeitge-schichte. Vols 1 and 2. Heidelberg, 1974: 1997 1999 1999 1999 1999 1999 Herder's Geist des Christenthums. Leipzig, 1798. Herzog's Real-Encyklopädie. 22 vols. 1875 Hess' (J. J.) Leben Jesu. 8 vols. Zü-Hess' (M.) Rom und Jerusalem. Leip-brig, 1863. 10 automili 20 to permanent don. Hilgenfeld's A Messias de Judgeorum. Lipsige, 1869, word, storts bund.

Hofmann's Leben Jesu nach d. Apok-ryphan, Leipeig, 1857. Hug's Einleitung. Stuttgart, 1847. Hurwitz, Heimann, Sagen der Ebrier. Oettingen, 18:8, and foot inchard Irving (Edward), John the Baptist. London, 1864. Irving (Edward), Our Lord's Tempta-tion. London, 1864. MADI MARK Jacox, Secular Annotations on Script-ure Texts. London, 1875. Jost's Geschichte des Judenthums. Leipzig, 1857. Josephus, Opera Omnia (Bekker). Leipzig, 1858. Josephus, Whiston's Translation. Keim's Jesu von Nazara, 8 vols. Zu-Keim's Geschichte Christus. Zürich, Ritto's Cyclopedia of Biblical Litera-ture. 3rd edition. Edinburgh, 1860. Kuinoel's Novum Test. Libri Historici. 8 vols. London, 1895 art. 100 storif Kurzgefasstes Exeg. Handbuch zum Alten Test. 17 vols. Leipzig, 1841 Palestine Exploration, FamiliRor Lenge's Life of Christ, 6 vols. Edin-burgh, 1864. Lange's Kommentar Matthans, Markus, Johannes. Bielefeld, 1860, Langen's Judenthum in Palistins, &c. Freiburg, 1866. Lightfoot's Hores Hebraices. 4 vols. Oxford, 1859. Lücke's Kommentar ü. d. Schriften Lücke's Kommentar u. d. Schritten Johannis. Bonn, 1820. Luthardt's Das Johanneische Evange-lium. Nürnberg, 1852. Luthandt's Fundamental Truths of Christanity. Edinburgh, 1849. Lynch's Exploration of the Jordan and Dead Sea. Thiladelphia, 1849. McClellan's New Testament, London, Martineau's (Harriet), Eastern Life, Present and Past., London, 1850, Martensen's Christian Ethics, Edinburgh, 1873. Maundrell's Journey, London, 1810. Melvill's (H.) Sermons. 6 vols, Lon-Merivale's Conversion of the Loman Empire. London, 1865. Merrill's (Rev. Selah) Galilee in the Time of Christ. Bib. Saera. Ando-ver, U.S., 1874. Meyer's Kommentar G. d. New, Test.

E Bus Nean 185 Nork

Nork's buck Nugen

ON ter Biele: 111.77 Pagnin Folio.

Palestin 1870-7 Passow ischen 1831. je Paulus Heldel Paulus, 8 vols.

Pressel, 1 1857. Pressense Life, an

Recovery London. Reland's A

Renan VI 46 Sa

Riggenbac

ben Jesu Robertson'

London,

Robinson's es in Syn London, Robinson's

New Teste Robinson's

Gospels,

It:L' Reynolds' 1875.

.0]:16

Newp Lon

it

MI

Milt Ne

Mon

Mone

-1 90

Gesenius, Thesaurus Linguse Hebrase et Chaldese 440, Lipsis, 1983, Gfrörer's Das Jahrhundert d. Hells, Stuttgardt 1988, aspundert d. Hells, Hilgenfeld's Die Jüdische Apokalypni tik, v. Jena, 1857. ....

LIET OF AUTHORITHES.

Michaelis' Mosaisches Recht. $ vols. Frankfurt a. Mayn, 1776 Mill's British Jews, London, 1853. Nablous and the Modern Samar Nabious and the Moderi Samar-itans. London, 1863. Milman's History of Christianity. 8vo. New York, 1861. Mommsen's Römische Geschichte. 3 vols. Berlin 1868. Monod's (Adophe) L'Enfance de Je-sus. Paris, 1800.

Neander's Life of Christ, London, 1857.

1857. Newman's (J. H.) Sermons. 10 vols. London, 1860. Nork's Rabbinische Quellen u. Paral-Ielen. Leipzig, 1859. Nork's Etymologisch Real-Wörter-buch. 4 vols. Stuttgart, 1845. Nugent's (Lord) Lands Classical and Secred. London.

Costerzee's d. Evan. nach Lukas-Bielefeld, 1867.

Pagnini Thesaurus Lingues Sanctes Folio, 1577, Palestine Exploration Fund Reports, 1870-75.

Passow's Handwörterbuch der Griechischen Sprache. 2 vols. Leipzig, 1831. 1831. Paulus, Das Leben, Jesu, 8 vols. Heidelberg, 1823. Paulus, Die Drei Ersten Evangelien. 3 vols. Heidelberg, 1843. Pressel, Das Leben Jesu. Rentlingen, 1857.

Pressensé's Jesus Christ, His Times, Life, and Work. London, 1858.

Recovery of Jerusalem (The). 8vo. London, 1871.

Reland's Antiquitates Sacrae. Utrecht, 1712.

Renan-Vie de Jesus. Paris, 1870. Debuol Les Apôtres. 2019 10 1866. 13/1 66 44

Saint Paul. 1869. Stife. L'Antechrist. 1) " 11.1873.

Reynolds' John the Baptist. London, 11875. 221

Riggenbach's Vorlesungen ü. das Leben Jesu. Basel, 1859. Robertson's (F. W.) Sermons. 8 vols.

London, 1872.

London, 1872. Robinson's (Dr. E.) Biblical Research-es in Syria and Palestine. 8 vols. London, 1860. Robinson's (Dr. E.) Lexicon of the New Testament. New York, 1858. Robinson's (Dr. E.) Harmony of the Gospels. London.

Röhr's Palistina, Zeits, 1985, Rosenmüller's (D. J. G.) Scholla in Novum Testameatum, Norim-berge, 1894, Rosenmüller's (K. F. K.) Haadbuch der Biblischen Aktsthumskunde, 5 vols, Leipzig, 1885, Scapule Lexicon Greeco - Latinum. Fol. Oxonii, 1890. 36 :103

Schenkel, Das Charakterbild Jesu. Wiesbaden, 1864. Schenkel's Bibel-Lexicon. 5. vols.

Leipzig, 1869. Contained and Schlebermacher's Prodigton. 4 Trola.

Berlin, 1844.

Schleiermacher's Leben Jesu. Berlin, 1864 T. competer arrunded T. Willmann

Schletamer's Lexicon in Nov. Test. 2 Schneckenburger's Vorlesuagen 1.
Neutestamentliche Zeitgenchichte.
Frankfurt-am-Main, 1808.
Schütgen, Horas Hebraicze et Taimudice.
Dresden u. Leipzig, 1738.
Schrader's Der Apostel Paulus, 5 vols.
Leipzig, 1830.

Oreservel's We Harnorus.

Schürer's Lebrbuch d. Neutest. Zeit-geschichte. Leipzig 1874

Schmidii N. T. Concordantise. Glasgue, 1819. Sepp, Das Leben Jesu, 6 vola Ra-gensburg, 1865. 1981 minuted 1

Sepp's Jerusalem u. d. Heilige Land. 2 vols. Schaffhausen, 1978.

Smith's (Dr.) Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biog. and Myth. 3, vols. London, 1853. Smith's (Dr.): Dictionary of the Bible.

8 vols. London, 1860.

Smith's (Dr.) Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities. London, 1869. Stanley's Sinal and Palestine. London; 1856, 19179 Stanley's Jewish History. London, 1856 5 2 iven Jest.

Stanley's Sermons on the Apostolic Age. Oxford, 1847. and 19 2011 Steinmeyer's Miracles of our Lord, Edinburgh, 1875. and Edinburgh, 1875. Incidents of Travel in Egypt, Arabia Petries, and the Holy Land. 2 vols. New York, 1888.

Louisan s hober dern nach d. Anon Theile and Stiers' Polyglotten-Bibel. Bielefeld, 1868. Thomson's The Land and the Book.

London, 1863.

ptist.

mpter

script hums.

ekker).

1 8 90

ls. Zu-

Zurich,

I Litera-gli, 1860. Listorici.

uch zum

ig, 1841 hours.

l'alestine ls. Edin-

haus Mar-

1960 Latina, &c.

e. 4 vols.

Schriften

he Evange

Trutha of 1869. he Jordan phia, 1849.

t. London.

stern Life.

on, 1850, finites.

ndon, 1810.

vols, Lon-

the Loman

alilee in the

hera. Andq-

I. New Test. · inspects

here ?

Tholuck's Bergpredigt Christi, Ham-

Tholuck's Bergpredigt Christi, Hamburg, 1803.
Tholuck's Kommentur z. Evangelio Johannis. Hamburg, 1897.
Tholuck's Sittliche Charakter d. Heidenthums. Gotha, 1807.
Tischendorf's Pilati circa Christum Judicio quid Lucis afferatur ex Actis Pilati. Lipsice, 1855.
Tobler (T.). Bethlehem. Gallen u. Berne, 1840.
Tobler (T.) Nazareth. Berne.
Transactions of Society of Biblical Archeology, 1872-76. London.
Trench's (Archbishop) Notes on the Parables. London, 1860.
Trench's (Archbishop) Notes on the Parables.

Trench's (Archbishop) Notes on the Miracles, London, 1836, Tristram's Natural History of the Bible, London, 1878, Tristram, the Great Sahara, London, 1870. Tristram, the Land of Mosb. London.

Ulimann's Die Sündlosigkeit Jesu. Gothe 1868; i John As Ullmann's Historisch oder Mythisch? Gothe 1860 19197 10 Castalette dow Wet a Tatth in One Chinybe Labor of Line where tradmen view.

ere averial delate

Banging and the second of the second se

Von der Alm's Urtheile heidnischer u. Jüd Schriftsteller ü. Jesus. Leipzig, 1864 with of the strate the

1 29 3 F 1 4 1 8 "

1- 11-1 1 19

Webster and Wilkinson's Greek Test, 2 vols. London, 1855. Weldemann's Darstellungen d. Lebens Jesu, &c., Goths, 1864. Well's The Bible, the Koran, and the Talmud. London, 1846. Westcott's Intro. to Study of the Gos-pels. London, 1860. Wieseler's Beiträgs. Gotha, 1990. Wieseler's Beiträgs. Gotha, 1990. Hamburg, 1843. Williams' Commentary on the Gospel. Narrative. 6 vols.' London, 1800. Winer's Realworterbuch. 2, yols, 3 Winer's Realwörterbuch: 9 yola 5 Auf. Leipzig. No date. Winer's Grammatik Neutestament-lichen Sprachidioms, Siebente Auf, Leipzig, 1867. withersting done

The influence anation the stant of the Torne. Zunz, Die Gottesdientslichen Vorträge der Juden, &c." Berlin, 1882 externel: universale instead of he offer the sector and the said

Breach the first true obtains hans a suffy for seating a the sector of the God and our aditation of the contraction of high and the book of the second of the sec indials the dealer with the share of the standing of the stand stuff Privite and matting of Her Sould a win hum day in Sauch villaguit Weinstein auf an Station and a state of the state of the

To the first of and the stand the stand of the stand of the stand of the stand of the and a serie and a serie and a series of the Runenicense the fifes, so perfer i done it not the the state of the state of the tender to the there red at the desch on the line.

11 10 58.35 PITON Section 1 13211 11 1 No a for th nial, j anew The a grea each g death. ] humani external dowry o and, thu firmed t germs of God and lie veiled sense, to dom to t created li private, c prompt fin tinually de itself antic To the lieve in W with God. Beneficence than to rece down at its ord of His

17 -1 ·· · [] !·

11

- ATTE TERESTOR - ANTON THE TOAL

- Hind Calent & milleren All Statil , dille in his statil and the statistical statistics of the . It is all he are a deal to all and the all all with the hear and the bearing lscher u. Loip

110 19

Greek Lebons and the

the Gos-

1800. 47 14 Synopse.

n, 1800. Nyola, 8

satamentente Auf.

this this

Vorträge

TRIPALIZO

id vision

Eridy Milts:

LT EXTRACTED AVERTINA

610 640

Lafian off

sense, to -

S. Mont. Bornt

T being ST. alletting

iff that's D'yllastait

it services of the Soft OT

History and the 1850 1974

San Photo a

Noti OSI ARELL

d'In Arrob Alt to Bre

the and the for the for is one to be the second to be the endert and the set of an order of shoel and his bein states ABILITY IS ABLE OF BALL PROPERTY AND A DEPARTURE AND A DEPARTU No applogy is needed for the publication of another Life of Christ, for the subject, to use the words of Mr. Carlyle, is ... of quite perennial, infinite character, and its significance will ever demand to be anew inquired into, and anew made manifest." The freshpess and interest of the name of Jesus, and its power as a great factor in the spiritual history of the world, increase, with each generation. The influence of His life, His, words, and His death, have, from the first, been like leaven cast into the mass of humanity. He made, religion spiritual instead of ceremonial and external; universal, instead of local. He gave us the magnificent dowry of a faith in One Common Father of the whole human race, and, thus, of a world-wide brotherhood of all mankind. He confirmed the doctrine of our immortality, and scattered abroad the germs of a heavenly life by His fundamental requirements of love to God and our neighbour. All reforms of individual and public life lie veiled in these principles, awaiting the advance of our morel sense, to apprehend and apply, them. They have already given freedom to the slave; raised woman; purified morals; mitigated war; created liberty; and made humanity a growing force, in things private, civil, and political. All that love to our fellow man car prompt finds itself only a copy of that Life which was spent in continually doing good, and the noblest self-sacrifice for others, finds itself anticipated by Calvary and Thouder of espinos enouncy and rog To the individual Christian, JESUS is the Divine Saviour, to believe in Whom is life everlasting: to know Whom is to have peace with God. Love has no diviner emblem than the Good Shepherd: Beneficence no ideal so perfect, as that "it is more blessed to give than to receive:" Fidelity to duty no loftier standard than a life laid down at its command: Self-sacrifice no dream so perfect as the rec-

PREFACE.

To write the story of such a life is no easy task, but it is one beyond all others important for the best interests of the age. It is impossible to describe the infinite dignity of His person, but His. words and acts are His legacy to us, which it is vital to study and apply.

I have tried in this book to restore, as far as I could, the world in which Jesus moved; the country in which He lived; the people among whom He grew up and ministered; the religion in which He was trained; the Temple services in which He took part; the ecclesiastical, civil, and social aspects of His time; the parties of the day, their opinions and their spirit; the customs that ruled; the influences that prevailed; the events, social, religious, and political, not mentioned in the Gospels, that formed the history of His lifetime, so far as they can be recovered.

In this ploture, He, Himself, is, of course, the central figure, to which all details are subordinate. If have tried to present His acts and words as they would strike those who first saw or heard them, and have added only as much elucidation to the latter as seemed needed. All His Sayings and Discourses are given in full, for a Life in which He is not His own interpreter, must be defective. No one can feel more keenly than myself how open such a book must be to criticism. Where the best and wisest have differed, I could not expect that all will agree with me, and I cannot hope to have escaped oversights, or even errors, in treating a subject so extensive. I can only plead my honest desire for truth and correctness, in mitigation of judgment.

I trust, however, that my book, as a whole, presents a reliable picture of the Life of Our Lord in the midst of the world in which He moved, and that it will throw light on the narratives in the Gospels, by filling up their brief outlines, where possible.

For the various sources to which I have been indebted I must only refer to the books named in the list of authorities at the beginning. I have used them freely, but always, so far as I know, with due acknowledgment.

And now, go forth, My Boek, and may He whose honour thou seekest, bless thee, and thy Unknown Reader!

it bin al Dor all Ha -izalon . 7.98 i 1. 1719301 usai h TH2 ever r agerin 02001 taught Massh confesa Gospela differen whethe indiffer Weil after pa many-sic and Mil show th Jean Pa who, bei holy, lift turned th the ages. Kant and Schelling "I esteen for there limity, pr kind as o

How pa

says Rous

ings at on He whose

there anyth

300

11 55

iH.

ban y

The life of Jesus Christ, which is to be told in these pages, must ever remain the noblest and most fruitful study for all men, of every age. It is admitted, even by those of other faiths, that He was at once a great Teacher, and a living illustration of the truths. He taught. The Mohammedan world give Him the high title of the Masth (Messiah), and set Him above all the prophets. The Jews confess admiration of His character and words, as exhibited in the Gospels. Nor is there any hesitation among the great intellects of different ages, whatever their special position towards Christianity; whether its humble disciples, or openly opposed to it, or carelessly indifferent, or vaguely latitudinarian.

We all know how lowly a reverence is paid to Him in passage after passage by Shakspere, the greatest intellect known in its wide, many-sided splendour. Men like Galileo, Kepler, Bacon, Newton, and Milton, set the name of Jesus Christ above every other. To show that no other subject of study can claim an equal interest, Jean Paul Richter tells us that "the life of Christ concerns Him who, being the holicst among the mighty, the mightiest among the holy, lifted with His pierced hand empires off their hinges, and turned the stream of centuries out of its channel, and still governs the ages." Spinoza calls Christ the symbol of divine wisdom; Kant and Jacobi hold Him up as the symbol of ideal perfection, and Schelling and Hegel as that of the union of the divine and human. "I esteem the Gospels," says Goethe, " to be thoroughly genuine, for there shines forth from them the reflected splendour of a sublimity, proceeding from the person of Jesus Christ, of so divine a kind as only the divine could ever have manifested upon earth." "How patty are the books of the philosophers, with all their pomp," says Rousscan, "compared with the Gospels! Can it be that writings at once so sublime and so simple are the work of men? Can He whose life they tell be Himself no more than a mere man? Is there anything, in His character, of the enthusiset or the ambitious is one It is ut His. dy and vorld in people hich He ecclesithe day, nfluences not menne, so far figure, to at His acts and them, as seemed for a Life

ich a book differed, I ot hope to oject so exorrectness, a reliable d in which ves in the must only beginning. with due mour thou wait served to at est-f. s. any 135.

2

sectary? What sweetness, what purity in His ways, what touching grace in His teachings! What a loftiness in His maxims, what profound wisdom in His words! What presence of mind, what delicacy and aptness in His replies! What an empire over His passions? Where is the man, where is the sage, who knows how to act; to suffer, and to die without weakness and without display? My friend, men do not invent like this; and the facts respecting Socrates, which no one doubts, are not so well attested as those about Jesus Christ. These Jews could never have struck this tone, or thought of this morality; and the Gospel has characteristics of truthfulness so grand, so striking, so perfectly inimitable, that their inventors would be even more wonderful than He whom they portray." "Yes, if the death of Socrates be that of a sage, the life and death of Jesus are those of a God."

Thomas Carlyle repeatedly expresses a similar reverence. "Jesus of Nazareth," says he, "our divinest symbol Higher has the human thought not yet reached." "A symbol of quite perennial, infinite character, whose significance will ever demand to be anew. inquired into, and anew made manifest." Dr. Channing, of Boston, the foremost man in his day among American Unitarians, is equally marked in his words. ""The character of Jesus," says he, "is wholly inexplicable on human principles." Matthias Claudius, one of the people's poets of Germany, last century, writes to a friend, "No one ever thus loved fas Christ did, nor did anything so truly. great and good as the Bible tells us of Him ever enter into the heart of man. It is a holy form, which rises before the poor pilgrim like a star in the night, and satisfies his innermost craving, his most secret vernings and hopes." .... Jesus Christ," says the exquisite genius, Herder, "is in the noblest, and most perfect sense, the realized ideal of humanity. Beby seads he astull of menu and stanshort off at his

No one will accuse the first Napoleon of being either a pietist or weak-minded. He strode the world in his day like a Colossus, a man of gigantic intellect, however worthless and depraved in moral sense. Conversing one day, at St. Helena, as his custom was, about the great men of antiquity and comparing himself with them, he suddenly turned round to one of his suite and asked him, " Can you tell me who Jesus Christ was?" The officer owned that he had not yet taken much thought of such things. "Well, then," said Napoleon, "I will tell you." He then compared Christ with himself, and with the heroes of antiquity, and showed how Jesus far surpassed them. "I think I understand somewhat of human nature," he continued, "and I tell you all these were men, and I am a man, but not one is like Him: Jesus Christ was more than man. Alexander, Cæsar, Charlemagne, and myself founded great empires; but upon what did the creations. of our genius depend? ... Upon force. Jesus alone founded His empire upon love, and to this very day millions would die for Him." "The Gospel is no mere book," said he at another:

tim all Iton . with Gos its t Jesu -th CODS Men who Hims huma In indefi Am an int fearles senten lation. that th Christ. than th which ] and inc justly r Christ in from Hi mightily or acted. Nor is acknowl have bee army of the foun teristic of tion tells lips, "No carp,-ab answered "Eighty wrong; al Nearly ser confessor share in th of high c pled only

, C.YIY

ing

pro-ons?)

t, to end,

ates,

Jesus

ht of 38 80

would es, if

Jesus

Jesus

asthe

ennial,

e anew

Boston, equally

he, is friend,

so truly

he heart

im like a

st secret

zed ideal

pietist or

18; a man

ral sense.

, he sudh you tell

d not yet Napoleon, and with sed them.

ontinued,

not one is

r, Cæsar,

what did

sus alone

ons would

at another

in should time, "but a living creature, with a vigour, a power, which conquers all that opposes it. "Here lies the Book of Books upon the table [touching it reverently]; I do not tire of reading it, and do so daily with equal pleasure. The soul, charmed with the beauty of the Gospel, is no longer its own: God possesses it entirely: He directs its thoughts and faculties; it is His. What a proof of the divinity of Jesus Christ! Yet in this absolute sovereignty He has but one aim —the spiritual perfection of the individual, the purification of his conscience, his union with what is true, the salvation of his soul. Men wonder at the conquests of Alexander, but here is a conqueror who draws men to Himself for their highest good; who unites to Himself, incorporates into Himself, not a nation, but the whole human race!"

I might multiply such testimonics from men of all ages and classes, indefinitely; let me give only one or two more.

Among all the Biblical critics of Germany, no one has risen with an intellect more piercing, a learning more vast, and a freedom and fearlessness more unquestioned, than De Wette. Yet, listen to a sentence from the preface to his Commentary on the Book of Revelation, published just before his death, in 1849: "This only I know, that there is salvation in no other name than in the name of Jesus Christ, the Crucified, and that nothing loftier offers itself to humanity than the God-manhood realized in Him, and the kingdom of God which He founded—an idea and problem not yet rightly understood and incorporated into the life, even of those who, in other respects, justly rank as the most zealous and the warmest Christians to Were Christ in deed and in truth our Life, how could such a falling away from Him be possible? Those in whom He lived would witness so mightly for Him, through their whole life, whether spoken, written, or acted, that unbelief would be forced to silence."

Nor is the incidental testimony to Christ of those who have openly acknowledged their supreme devotion to Him less striking. There have been martyrs to many creeds, but what religion ever saw an army of martyrs willingly dying for the personal love they bore to the founder of their faith? Yet this has always been the characteristic of the martyrs of Christianity, from the days when, as tradition tells us. Peter was led to crucifizion with the words ever on his lips, "None but Christ, none but Christ," or when the aged Polycarp,-about to be burned alive in the amphitheatre at Smyrna,answered the governor, who sought to make him revile Christ-"Eighty and six years have I served Him, and He never did me wrong; and how can I now blaspheme my King who has saved me?" Nearly seventeen hundred years passed from the time when the early confessor died blessing God that he was counted worthy to have a share in the number of martyrs and in the cup of Christ; and a man of high culture and intellect lies dying, the native of an island peopled only by outside barbarians in the days of Polycarp. The attendants, watching his last moments, see his lips move, and bending over him, catch the faint sounds, "Jesus, lovel—Jesus, lovel—the same thing,"—the last words uttered before he left them. It was the death-bed of Sir James Macintosh. Thus the character of Christ still. retains the supreme charm by which it drew towards it the deepest affections of the heart in the earliest age of the Church; and such a character must claim, above all others, our reverent and thoughtful sturly.

If we attempt to discover what it is in the personal character of Jesus Christ, as shown in His life, that thus attracts such permanent admiration, it is not difficult to do so.

In an age when the ideal of the religious life was realized in the Baptist's withdrawing from men, and burying himself in the ascetic solitudes of the desert. Christ came, bringing religion into the haunts and homes and every-day life of men. For the mortifications of the hermit He substituted the labours of active benevolence; for the fears and gloom which shrank from men. He brought the light of a cheerful piety, which made every act of daily life religious. He found the domain of religion fenced off as something distinct from common duties, and He threw down the wall of coparation, and consecrated the whole sweep of existence. He lived, a man amongst men, shar--ing alike their joys and their sorrows, dignifying the humblest details of life by making them subordinate to the single aim of His Father's glory, Henceforth the grand revolution was inaugurated. which taught that religion does not lie in selfish or morbid devotion to personal interests, whether in the desert or the temple, but in loving work and self-sacrifice for others.

The absolute unselfishness of Christ's character is, indeed, its unique charm. His own life is self-denial throughout, and He makes a similar spirit the test of all healthy religious life. It is He who said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive;" who reminds us that life, like the wheat, yields fruit only by its own dying; who gave us the ideal of life in His own absolute self-oblivion. We feel instinctively that this Gospel of Love alone is divine, and that we cannot withhold our homage from the only perfectly Unselfish Life ever seen on earth.

There is much, besides, to which I can only allude in a word. He demands repentance from all, but never for a moment hints at any need of it for Himself. With all His matchless lowliness, He advances personal claims which, in a mere man, would be the very delirium of religious pride. He was divinely patient under every form of suffering, +-a homeless life, hunger and thirst, craft and violence, meanness and pride, the taunts of enemies and betrayals of friends, ending in an ignominious death. Nothing of all this for a moment turned Him from His chosen path of love and pity. His last words, like His whole life, were a prayer for those who returned Him cvil for good. His absolute superiority to everything narrow or loca a co and Him an a ority terna no o when WI WI His Him from Testa Creat God, of all creatu Being yet is ness at and tra a fathe the cha His'so soever the Ne Father God of points t race. The f lime as The hig of his C love, to of no vi divine li religion divine la The m demands itation to possibilit and in tr ness of G obedience

nding

!-- tho

ras the

ist still.

leepest

such a ightful

cter of

manent

l in the

ascetic

haunts

s of the

he fears

a cheer-

e found

common secrated en, shar-blest de-

a of His

gurated,

devotion

t in lov-

deed, its

le makes who said,

s us that gave us:

1 instinc-

re cannot

Life ever

ord. He ts at any He ad-

the very ler every

and vio-

rayals of this for a

ity. His returned

IO WOTTAL

local so that He, a Jew, founds a religion in which all mankind are a common brotherhood, equal before God; the dignity calmness and self-possession' before 'rulers, priests, and governors, which sets Him "immedsurably above them; His freedom from superstition, in an age which was superstitious almost beyond example: His superiority to the merely external and ritual, in an age when rites and externals were the sum of religion: all these considerations, to mention no others, explain the mysterious attraction of His character, even when looked at only as that of an ideal Manot unlost for in the strift When, from His character, we turn to His teachings, the claims of His Life on our reverent study are still further strengthened. To Him we owe the expansion of whatever was vital in Ancient Judaism from the creed of a tribe into a religion for the world. The Old Testament reveals a sublime and touching description of God as the Creator and the All-wise and Almighty Ruler of all things; as the God. in whose hand is the life of every living thing and the breadth of all mankind; the God of Providence, on whom the eyes of all creatures wait, and who gives them their meat in due season; as a Being of infinite majesty, who will by no means clear the guilty, but yet is merciful and gracious, longeuffering, and abundant in goodness and truth as keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and as pitying them that fear Him, like as a father officith his children. But it was reserved for Uhrist to bring the character of God, as a God of Love, into full noon-day light, in His so loving the world as to give His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him might not perish, but have eternal life. In the New Testament He is first called Our Father in Heaven-the Father of all mankind. The Old Testament proclaimed Him the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob the Portion of Israel: Christ points the eyes of all nations to Him as the God of the whole human . In some of the sector to us of the for some way in we much and race.

The fundamental principles of Christianity are as new and as subline as this grand conception of God, and spring directly from it. The highest ideal of man must ever be, and his soul reflects the image of his Creator, and this image can only be that of pure, all embracing love, to God and man, for God is love. Outward service, alone, is of no value: the pure heart, only, loves aright: it, only, reflects the divine likeness; for purity and love are the same in the Eternal. A religion resting on such a basis bears the seal of heaven. But this divine law constitutes Christianity.

The morality taught by Christ is in keeping with such fundamental demands. Since love is the fulfilling of the law, there can be no limitation to duty but that of power. It can only be bounded by our possibilities of performance, and that not in the letter, but in spirit and in truth, both towards God and our neighbour. The perfect holiness of God can alone be the standard of our aspiration; for love means obedience, and God cannot look upon sin. To be a perfect Christian is to be a sinless man-sinless through the obedience of perfect love. Such a morality has the seal of the living God on its forchead. It is to be remembered, in realizing our obligations to Christ, that there was a perfect novelty in this teaching. Antiquity, outside the Jewish world, had no conception of what we call sin. There is no word in Greek for what we mean by it: the expression for it is synonymous with physical evil. There was either no guilt in an action, or the deity was to blame, or the action was irresistible. Priests and people had no aim or desire in sacrifices, prayers, or festivals, beyond the removal of a defilement, not considered as a moral, but a physical stain; and they attributed a magical effect to propitiatory rites through which they thought to obtain that removal; this effect being sure to follow if there were no omission in the rite, even though the will remained consciously inclined to evil!

The Roman was as free from having any conception of sin as the Greek. Even such moralists as Seneca had only a blind, spiritual pride which confounded God and nature, and regarded man-the crown of nature and its most perfect work—as God's equal, or even as His superior, for the divine nature, in his creed, reaches perfection in man only. Every man, he tells us, carries God about with him in his bosom; in one aspect of his being he is God—virtue is only the following nature, and mea's vices are only madness. Compare with this the vision of God—high and lifted up. of awful holiness but of infinite love, mand the doctring of human responsibility, which the heart itself re-echoes—as taught by Christ; and the study of His life becomes the loftiest of human duties.

We owe it no less to Christ that the belief in a future life, with its light or shadow depending on a future judgment, is now part of the creed of the world. Judaism, indeed, in its later ages at least, knew these revelations, but Judaism could never have become the religion of mankind. Pagan antiquity had ceased to have any fixed ideas of anything beyond, this life. Immortality was an open question, the dream of poets rather than the common faith. But Christ brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel:

a death which He Himself proclaimed to be a voluntary offering "for the life of the world," could not fail to have a mighty influence.

The leaven thus cast into the mass of humanity has already largely transformed society, and is destined to affect it for good in everincreasing measure, in all directions. The one grand doctrine of the Brotherhood of Man, as man, is in itself the pledge of infinite results. The seminal principle of all true progress must ever be found in a proper sense of the inherent dignity of manhood; in the realization of the truth that the whole human race are essentially equal in their faculties, mature, and inalienable rights. Such an idea was unknown to antiquity. The JEW, speaking in the Fourth Book of Esdras, addressed God—"On our account Thou hast created the world. Other nation spittle cask. Thine bis tel than a before Tot erhood regard spite o ginian to men contem gods to sion to gods da and not The did not unless t between stronger could, p fact tha which R means si objected seeking Celsus, Asia, Eu be utterly which, b readily at wants of of the ra barian to It was ] revealing them with to all; by were heav for rest; b as graciou publicans and Lazar the ruler;

t love.

st, that

utaida

here is or it is in an istible.

r festi-

moral, propitial; this te, even

a as the piritual

an the

or even

h him in only the

of awful

responsi-

and the

with its

rt of the st, knew

religion

ideas of

tion; the

brought

wned by offering

nfluence.

y largely in ever-

e results.

und in a

zation of

eir facul-

mown to

dras, ad-

Other

nations, sprung from Adam, Thou hast said are nothing, and are like spittle, and Thou hast likened their multitude to the droppings from a cask. But we are Thy people, whom Thou hast called Thy first-born, Thine only-begotten, Thy well-beloved." In the Book Sifri, the Rabbis tell us—" A single Israelite is of more worth in the sight of God than all the nations of the world; every Israelite is of more value before Him than all the nations who have been or will be."

To the GREEK, the word "humanity," as a term for the wide brotherhood of all races, was unknown. All races, except his own, were regarded and despised as "barbarians." Even the Egyptians, in spite of their ancient traditions and priestly "wisdom;"—the Carthaginians, the Phœnicians, Etruscans, Macedonians, and Romans, not to mention outlying and uncivilized peoples, were stigmatized by this contemptuous name. The Greek fancied himself appointed by the gods to be lord over all other races; and Socrates only gave expression to the general feeling of his countrymen when he thanked the gods daily for being man and not beast, male and not female, Greek and not barbarian.

The ROMAN, in common with antiquity at large, considered all who did not belong to his own State, as hostes, or enemies; and hence, unless there were a special league, all Romans held that the only law between them and those who were not Romans was that of the stronger, by which they were entitled to subjugate such races if they could plunder their possessions, and make the people slaves. The fact that a tribe lived on the bank of a river on the other side of which Romans had settled made its members "rivals," for the word means simply the dwellers on opposite sides of a stream. It was even objected to Christianity, indeed, that its folly was patent, from its seeking to introduce one religion for all races. "The man," says Celsus, "who can believe it possible for Greeks and Barbarians, in Asia, Europe, and Libya, to agree in one code of religious laws, must be utterly devoid of sense." Antiquity had no conception of a religion which, by readily uniting with everything purely human, and as readily attacking all forms of evil, could be destined or suited to the wants of all humanity. Nor did it deign to think that the aristocracy of the race could stoop to have a religion in common with the barberian to whom it almost refused the name of man.

It was left to Christ to proclaim the brotherhood of all nations by revealing God as their common Father in Heaven, filled to ards them with a father's love; by His commission to preach the cospel to all; by His inviting all, without distinction, who laboured and were heavy laden, to come to Him, as the Saviour sent from God, for rest; by His receiving the woman of Samaria and her of Canaan as graciously as any others; by His making Himself the friend of publicans and sinners; by the tone of such parables as that of Dives and Lazarus; by His equal sympathy with the slave, the beggar, and the ruler; by the whole bearing and spirit of His life; and, above all, by His picture of all nations gathered to judgment at the Great Day. with no distinction of race or rank, but simply as men action more more In this great principle of the essential equality of man, and his responsibility to God, the germs lay hid of grand truths imperfectly realized even yet a solt to I infictance to act mover used and the land in n-inte Thus, it is to this we owe the conception of the rights of individual conscience as opposed to any outward authority. ... There was not dream of such a thing before Christ came. The play of individuality, which alone secures and exemplifies those rights, was unknown of restricted. Among the Greeks, the will of the State was enforced on the individual. Morality and goodness were limited to what was voted by the majority as expedient for the well-being of the community at large. When a man had paid the gods the traditional sacrifices and ceremonies, he had little more to do with them. only could he not act for himself freely in social or private affairs; his conscience had now liberty. The State was everything, the man nothing. Rome knew as little of responsibility to higher laws than its own, and had very limited ideas even of personal freedom. Christ's words, "One is your "Teacher," and all ye are hethren;" "One is your Father,' even the Heavenly," "One is your fullde," even the Christ," were the inauguration of a social and moral revolution des 10 grade dura di anno our a trades stil froi unesti cresitatenice "The slave, before Christ came, was a piece of property of less worth than land or cattle An old Roman law enacted a penalty of death for him who killed a ploughing ox; but the murderer of a slave was called to no account whatever. O Crassus, after the revolt of Spartacus, crucified 10,000 slaves at one time. "Augustus; in violation of his word, delivered to their masters, for execution, 80,000 slaves, who had fought for Sextus Pompeius. "Trajan, the best of the Romans of his day, made 10,000 slaves fight at one time in the amphitheatre, for the amusement of the people, and prolonged the massacre 128 days. The great truth of man's universal brotherhood was the are laid at the root of this detestable crime-the sum of all villanies ad By first infusing kindness into the lot of the slave, then by slowly undermin ing slavery itself, each century has seen some advance, till at last the man-owner is unknown in nearly every civilized country, and even Africa itself, the worst victim of slavery in these later ages, is being aided by Christian England to raise its slaves into freementid, but one "ACCRESSIVE WAR is no less distinctly denounced by Christianity, which in teaching the brotherhood of man, proclaims war a revolt, abhorrent to nature, of brothers against brothers. The voice of Christ, commanding peace on earth, has echoed through all the centuries since His day, and has been at least so far honoured that the horrors of war are greatly lessened, and that war itself-no longer the rule, but the exception-is much rarer in Christian nations, than in former times of Willieut out, windy foil - auna in toistairing vote at The POOR, in antiquity, were in almost as bad a plight as the slave.

How poor n of the sands d ing an herds most n avoid to be j fathers. give the was this in ; nak in priso andefor that all of the s regenera The co the slave married. morality ple, was the fidel were fam reacted riages be escape th married rolled the only spot morals of in the ope Gertian of the tru Tacitus, "Happy in around hi the vow a among the the Alps; These to formulated Christ. E marriage, the toy and corruption, eat Day. 1001:1000 and his. perfectly SCIAR-BEI adividual wasend viduality. cnown of forced on what was the comraditional emisiNot te affairs; hing, the igher laws freedom brethren: ir f Guide, norslaneye-CONTRACTOR OF rty of less penalty of rof a slave olt of Sparviolation of slaves, who Romansiof heatro for 128 days. axe laid at Bystirat undermu at lass the and even s, is being Hd. Britons pristianity. ar a revolt, voice of ll the cend that the longer the nsothan in ILLS TO BAL the slaye:

"How can you possibly let yourself down so low as not to renel a poor man from you with scorn?" is the question of a rhetorician of the imperial times of Rome, to a rich man. No one of the thousands of rich men living in Rome ever conceived the notion of founding an asylum for the poor, or a hospital for the sick. There were herds of beggars. Seneca often mentions them, and observes that most men fling an aims to a beggar with repugnance, and carefully avoid all contact with him. Among the Jews, the poor were thought to be justly bearing the penalty of some sin of their own, or of their fathers. But we know the sayings of Christ-"It is more blessed to give than to receive:" "I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me:"""Give to the poor." The abject and forlorn received a charter of human rights when He proclaimed that all men are brethren: sprung from the same human stock sons of the same Almighty Father; one family in Himself, the Head of regenerated humanity. nots such the fur the of four fore store the anter

The condition of woman in antiquity was little better than that of the slave. She was the property of her husband, if married; if unmarried, she was the plaything or slave of man, never his equal. The morality of married life, which is the strength and glory of any peor ple was handly known. Pompey and Germanicus were singular in the fidelity that marked their marriage-relations, on both sides, and were famous through the singularity. The utter impurity of the men. reacted in a similar self-degradation of the other sex. In Rome, marriages became, as a rule, mere temporary connections. In order to escape the punishments inflicted on adultery, in the time of Tiberius, married women including even women of illustrious families, enrolled themselves on the official lists of public prostitutes, St. Paul only speke the language which every one who knows the state of morals of those days must use, when he wrote the well-known verses in the opening of his Epistle to the Romans. The barbarians of the German forests alone, of the heathen world, retained a worthy sense of the true dignity of woman. "No one there laughs at vice," says. Tacitus, "nor it is a buce and to be seduced called the fashion." "Happy indeed," continues the Roman, thinking of the state of things around him, "those states in which only virgins marry, and where the vow and heart of the bride go together!" "Infidelity is very rare among them." The traditions of a purer time still lingered beyond the Alps; the afterglow of light that had set elsewhere.

These traditions, thus honoured in the forests of Germany, were formulated into a supreme law for all ages and countries by Jesus Christ. Except for one crime, husband and wife, joined by God in marriage, were not to be put asunder. Woman was no longer to be the toy and inferior of man. Polygamy, the fruitful source of social corruption, was forbidden. Man and woman were to meet on equal 10 their children amidst the sanctities of a pure family life. and many theory

The enforcement of these and kindred teachings, destined to regenerate humanity, required lofty sanctions. That these are not wanting, in the amplest fulness, we have in part seen already, and shall see more and more as we advance. Meanwhile, enough has been said to show why, even apart from the mysterious dignity of His divine nature, God manifest in the flesh, and even independently of His being the Lamb of God, who takes away the sins of the world. Christ's life and sayings, alike unique among men, deserve the reve erent study of allow free in derive agent bir agent. Lit deo seconst acta under artic MFrom first to last," said the great Napoleon, on one occasion, "Jesus is the same; always the same majestic and simple, infinitely severe and infinitely gentle. Throughout a life passed under the public eye, He never gives occasion to find fault. The prudence of His conduct compels our admiration by its union of force and gentle ness. Alike in speech and action, He is enlightened, consistent, and calm. Sublimity is said to be an attribute of divinity : what name, then shall we give Him in whose character were united every element of the sublime? bury onto field who offer any the state of the part the set I know men; and I tell you that Jesus is not a man. Everything in Him anazes me. His spirit outreaches mine, and His will, confounds me. In Comparison is impossible between Him and any other being in the world. He is truly a being by Himself. His ideas. and His sentiments; the truth that He announces; His manner of convincing; are all beyond humanity and the natural order of things. "His birth, and the story of His life: the profoundness of His doctrine, which overturns all difficulties, and is their most complete solution; His Gospel; the singularity of His mysterious being; His appearance; " His empire; "His progress, through all conturies and kingdoms;-all this is to me a prodigy, an unfathomable mystery. "I see nothing here of man." Near as I may approach, closely as I may examine, all remains above my comprehension great with a greatness that crushes me. It is in vain that I reflect all remains unaccountable lettelafter tons and there in tassafer to be where the unstruction of the state of any provider of the provider o funni sor shoul, i real islessi a onithe fundation and is a sufficient in the induction in a diffusion of the analysis of the standard standard in the second standard in the second standard and the second standard and the second standard and the second standard and stand Were approved the provestion of the art of the art of the article and the article and the The Area is and a soll being the way the the same and the the same HIVE VERYNAU'T Warmen ar al an an and the and the and the area of the and the area of the River to any location for conclosed and when set of press in pressing in the later door to a pressing Standing to the Wards Other decidence of when any in the strend to sate the offer the strend the sate in our and it being an and which to the property have a property of the suit in the strate of the st

CHELIN THE world, Greece. half th Was on the cra the nor and the on the Mediter When last four world w and wer the prec looked mighty promise tween E the great less past Yet its real or a passable try, eithe which ha by a strip contagion and its w ages, was cestors, be in which all the peo the future carried ou amongst n been comp had becom of the Gos easy path o

1911CL

ALTER COLORIST

trainibir '

DOOP MAN d to reto are hot ady, and ugh has it ignity of endently be world the pere 113:48 31711 occasion, infinitely inder the denceok ad gentle. stent, and at name, every eleoun think and Everyd His will and apy His ideas manner of of things, of His complete eing; His turies and hystery. logely as I at with a alista al grist the attitute TERN' LANDE ILE MARKER 目的中国科学科学科学 and Bupping Stin bild spild uto balletso AN I STANDARD TIS ALLON ALLA in Starragin 山田 拉斯 知以

-TRAILURIES

-BURHO - THE BOARD HAD BE AND PROVIDE PROPERTIES OF A THE TAKES PROPERTY IN THE TRANSPORT OF THE TRANSPORT OF THE PROPERTY OF THE TRANSPORT OF THE PROPERTY OF

The contrast between the influences which have most affected the world, and the centres from which they have sprung, is very striking. Greece, the mother of philosophy and art, for all time, is not quite half the size of Scotland; Rome, the mighty mistress of the world, was only a city of Italy; Palestine, the birthplace of our Lord, and the cradle of revelation, is about the size of Wales. From Dan, on the north, to Beersheba, on the south, is a distance of only 189 miles, and the paltry breadth of twenty miles, from the coast to the Jordan; on the north; increases slowly to only forty between the shore of the Mediterranean, at Gaza, and the Dead Sea, on the south.

"When it is remembered that America was unknown till within the last four centuries, the position of Palestine on the map of the ancient world was very remarkable. It seemed the very centre of the earth, and went far to excuse the long-prevailing belief that Jerusalem was the precise central point. On the extreme western limit of Asia, it looked castward, towards the great empires and religions of that mighty continent, and westward, over the Mediterranean, to the promise of European civilization. It was the connecting link between Europe and Africa, which could then boast of Egypt as one of the great centres of human thought and culture; and it had the dateless past of the East for its background: He gasatr we ability, and into Yet its position towards other lands was not less striking than its real or apparent isolation. Separated from Asia by the broad and impassable desert, it was saved from becoming a purely Eastern country, either in religion, or in the political decay and retrogression which have, sooner or later, marked all Eastern States. Shut in. by a strip of desert, from Egypt, it was kept, in great part, from the contagion of the gross morality and grosser idolatry of that land; and its western coasts were washed by the "Great Sea," which, for ages, was as much a mystery to the Jew, as the Atlantic to our ancestors, before the era of Columbus. There could have been no land in which the purpose of God to "separate" a nation "from among all the people of the earth," to be the depositary of divine truth, and the future missionaries of the world, could have been so perfectly carried out. Nor did its special fitness as a centre of heavenly light amongst mankind pass away till the whole scheme of revelation had been completed; for by the time of Christ's death the Mediterranean had become the highway of the nations, and facilitated the diffusion of the Gospel to the cities and nations of the populous West, by the easy path of its wide waters. The long seclusion of ages had already, trained the Jew in religious knowledge, when forced or voluntary dispersion sent him abroad to all lands, with his lofty creed: the passing away of that seclusion opened the world to the ready dissemination of the message of the Cross.

Bible earth

ceive

colde

and i

region

duce i eall it

The p

the he mits o the Jo

the otl

of the to the Thus,

from the pine, the first state of the pine, the pine state of the willow heights the mo rounde the app

wheat, tuce, e himself out of

It look

tulip, t mallow

known

joram.

hound.

water-c

from w

will rec carob.

courses.

India, t grasses

vine, th

and the

The t

Inte Bible have l

It is an additional peculiarity of the Holy Land, in relation to the history of religion, that its physical features, and its position, together. brought it, from the earliest ages, in contact with the widest range of peoples and empires. Egypt and it are two cases in wide spreading deserts, and as such attracted race after race. Vast migrations of northern tribes towards the richer southern countries have marked all ages; and Egypt, as the type of fertility, was a special hand of wonder, to which these wandering populations ever turned greedy eyes. In a less degree, the Holy Land shared this dangerous admiration. It was the next link to Egypt in the chain of attractive con-quests-Egypt itself being the last. As in later times the Assyrian, the Chaldean, the Persian, the Greek, the Roman, and the Turk successively coveted the valley of the Nile, and took possession of it, so in the very earliest ages, as many indications prove, wave after wave of immigration had overflowed it. In all these inreads of new nationalities, the Holy Land, as the highway to Egypt, necessarily shared, and hence, as centuries passed, race after race was brought in contact with the Jew, in spite of his isolation, and the Jew into contact with them. Such a fact was of great significance in the religious education of the world. It leavened widely distant nations, more or less, with the grand religious truths which had been committed to the keeping of the Jew alone; it led or forced him abroad to distant regions, to learn, as well as to communicate; and it reacted to ensure the infense religious conservatism to which the Jew, even to day, owes his continued national existence. That was a fitting scene, moreover, for the advent of the Saviour of the world, in which, small though its bounds. He was surrounded not by the Jew alone, but by a population representing a wide proportion of the tribes and nations of the then-known earth. The inscription on the cross, in Greek, Latin, and Hebrew, was the symbol of the relation of Christ's life, and of His death, to all humanity

But perhaps the most striking peculiarity of Palestine as the spot chosen by God for His revelations of religious truth to our race, and for the incarnation of the Saviour of mankind, is that it presents within its narrow bounds the characteristics of climate and productions scattered elsewhere over all the habitable zones—from the snowy north to the tropics. The literature of a country necessarily takes the colour of its local scenery and external nature, and hence a book written in almost any land is unfitted for other countries in which life and nature are different. Thus the Koran, written in Arabia, is essentially an Eastern book, in great measure unintelligible and uninteresting to nations living in countries in any great degree different, in climate and modes of life, from Arabia itself. The voluntary reed: the y dissem-

12

on to the together, t range of spreading rations of e marked al land of ed greedy is admiractive con-Assyrian, Turk sucn of it, so ifter wave is of new iecessarfly brought in nto cone religious s, more or nmitted to to distant ted to enen to-day, ing scene, in which, lew alone, tribes and cross, in of Christ's the spot race, and t presents d producfrom the eccessarily id hence a untries in written in ntelligible eat degree eff. The mcred books of other religions have had only a local reception. The Bible alone finds a welcome smong nations of every region over the earth. It is the one book in the world which men everywhere receive with equal interest and reverence. The inhabitant of the coldest north finds, in its imagery, something that he can understand, and it is a household book in multitudes of homes in the subtriest regions of the south.

Intended to carry the Truth to all nations, it was essential that the Bible should have this cosmopolitan attractiveness. Yet it could not have had it but that such a country as Palestine was chosen to produce it. Within the narrow limits of that strip of coast, as we might call it, are gathered the features of countries the most widely apart. The peaks of Lebanon are never without patches of snow, even in the heat of summer. Snow falls nearly every winter along the summits of the central ridge of Palestine, and over the tableland east of the Jordan, though it seldom lies more than one or two days." On the other hand, in the valley of the Jordan, summer brings the heat of the tropics, and the different seasons, in different parts, according to the elevation, exhibit a regular gradation between these extremes. Thus, within the extent of a single landscape, there is every climate, from the cold of northern Europe to the heat of India. The oak, the pine, the walnut, the maple, the juniper, the alder, the poplar, the willow, the ash, the ivy, and the hawthorn, grow luxuriantly on the heights of Hermon, Bashan, and Galiles. Hence the traveller from the more northerly temperate lands finds himself, in some parts, surrounded by the trees and vegetation of his own country. He sees the apple, the pear, and the plum, and rejoices to meet the familiar wheat, and barley, and peas, and potatoes, and cabbage, carrots, lettuce, endive; and mustard. The Englishman is delighted to find himself surrounded by many of the flowers of his native land: for out of the 2,000 or 2,500 flowers of Palestine, perhaps 500 are British. It looks like home to see the ranunculus, the yellow water lily, the tulip, the crocus, the hyacinth, the anemone, mignonette, geraniums, mallows, the common bramble, the dog-rose, the daisy, the well-known groundsel, the dandelion,—suge, and thyme, and sweet mar-joram, blue and white pimpernel, cyclamens, vervain, mint, horehound, road-way nettles, and thistles; and ponds with the wonted water-cress, duck-weed, and rushes.

The traveller from more southern countries is no less at home; for from whatever part he come, be it sunny Spain or Western India, he will recognize well-known forms in one or other of such a list as the carob, the oleander and willow, skirting the streams and watercourses; the sycamore, the fig, the olive, the date palm, the pride of India, the pistachio, the tamarisk, the acacia, and the tall tropical grasses and reeds; or in such fruits as the date, the pomegranate, the vine, the orange, the shaddock, the lime, the banana, the almond, and the prickly pear. The sight of fields of cotton, millet, rice, sugar-cane, maize, or even of Indian indigo, and of patches of melons, gourds, pumpkins, tobacco, yam, sweet potato, and other southern or tropical field or garden crops, will carry him back in thought to his home.

There can be no more vivid illustration of the climate of any land than the vegetation it yields, and Palestine, tried by this test, reproduces climates and zones which, in other countries, are separated by many hundred miles.

A book written in such a land must necessarily be a reflection, in its imagery and modes of thought, so far as they are affected by external nature, of much that is common to men all over the earth. The Scriptures of the two Testaments have had this priceless help in their great mission, from Palestine having been chosen by God as the land in which they were written. The words of prophets and apostles, and of the great Master Himself, sound familiar to all mankind, because spoken anidst natural images and experiences common to all the world.

Though essentially a mountainous country, Palestine has many broad and fertile plains. It is a highland district, intersected throughout, and bordered on the western side, by rich, wide spreading lowlands.

The plain on the western side extends from above Acre, with an interruption by Mount Carmel, along the whole coast, under the respective names of the plain of Acre, the plain of Sharon, and the Shefelah, or low country, the land of the Philistines in early ages. From this border plain the country rises, throughout, into a tableland of an average height of from 1,500 to 1,800 feet above the Mediterranean; the general level being so even, and the hills so close together, that the whole length of the country, seen from the coast, looks like a wall rising from the fertile plain at its foot. Yet the general monotony is broken, here and there, by higher elevations. Thus, to begin from the south, Hebron is 3,029 feet above the sea; Jerusalem 2,610; the Mount of Olives 2,724; Bethel 2,400; Ebal and Gerizim 2,700; Little Hermon and Tabor, on the north side of the plain of Esdraelon 1,900; Safed 2,775; and Jebel Jermuk 4,000.

This long sea of hills is full of valleys running east and west, which form so many arms of torrent beds, opening into the Jordan valley or the Mediterranean. These valleys, on the eastern side of the watershed, towards Jord.n, are extremely steep and rugged; as, for instance, the precipitous descent between Mount Olivet and Jericho, which sinks over 4,000 feet in a distance of about fifteen miles. The great depression of the Jordan valley makes such rugged and difficult mountain gorges the only passes to the upper country from the east. There is not a spot, till the plain of Esdraelon joins the valley of the Jordan, open enough to manceuvre more than a small body of foot soldiers. The western valleys slope more gently, but, like the eastern, are the only means of communication with the plains, and otier a entren nough tain fa The was at The so desert. in Bible tract of and Be is mond year. are cove with tor of the o The flow are "toupland smooth north, ar alike on appears. appear of says Dea are form are think which m races, of rather the courses a side by si part of rounded are for th known." cisterns, a place. Such a west and vegetation in some p dark folla city of for But the width by steep desc oner such difficulties as explain the security of Israel in ancient times, entrenched among hills which, at the best, could be reached only by rough mountain passes. The Jew lived, in fact, in a strong mountain fastness stretching like a long wall behind the plain beneath.

The appearance and fertility of this highland region, which, alone, was at any time the Holy Land of the Jews, varies in different parts. The southern district, below Hebron, is a gradual transition from the desert, from which it is approached in slow ascent. It was known in Bible times as the Negeb, or south country, and is an uninviting tract of barren uplands. As we pass north into the hills of Judah and Benjamin there is somewhat more fertility, but the landscape is monotonous, bare, and uninviting in the extreme, for most of the year. In spring, even the bald grey rocks which make up the view are covered with verdure and bright flowers, and the ravines are filled with torrents of rushing water, but in summer and autumn the look of the country from Hebron up to Bethel is very dreary and desolate. The flowers vanish with the first fierce rays of the summer sun : they are "to-day in the field, to morrow cast into the oven." The little upland plains, which, with their green grass, and green corn, and smooth surface, relieve the monotony of the mountain-tops farther north, are not found in Judea, and are rare in Benjamin. The soil, alike on plain, hill, and glon, is poor and scanty. Natural wood disappears, and a few small bushes, brambles, or aromatic shrubs, alone appear on the hill-sides. ""Rounded hills, chiefly of a grey colour," says Dean Stanley-" grey partly from the limestone of which they are formed, partly from the tufts of grey shrub with which their sides are thinly clothed-their sides formed into concentric rings of rock, which must have served in ancient times as supports to the terraces, of which there are still traces to the very summits; valleys, or rather the meetings of those grey slopes with the beds of dry watercourses at their feet-long sheets of bare rock laid like flagstones, side by side, along the soil-these are the chief features of the greater part of the scenery of the historical parts of Palestine. These rounded hills, occasionally stretching into long undulating ranges, are for the most part bare of wood. Forest and large timber are not known." Fountains are rare in this district; and wells, covered cisterns, and tanks cut out in the soft white limestone, take their place. T arrestable Tash 127 11 11 Less

Such are the central and northern highlands of Judea. In the west and north-western parts, which the sea-breezes reach, the vegetation is more abundant. Olives abound, and give the country in some places almost a wooded appearance. The terebinth, with its dark follage, is frequent, and near the site of Kirjath-jearim, "the city of forests," there are some thickets of pine and laurel.

But the eastern part of these hills—a tract nine or ten miles in width by about thirty-five in length—between the centre and the steep descent to the Dead Sca—is, and must always have been, in

f melons, soutbern ought to any land st, reprotrated by ection, in ed by exhe earth. eless help by God as phets and all mannces comhas many ntersected de-spread-e, with an ler the ren, and the early ages. to a tableabove the ls so close the coast, Yet the elevations. e the sea; Ebal and ide of the 4,000. est, which valley or the wateras, for in-Jericho, les. The and diffifrom the he valley l body of like the

ains, and the truest sense a desert. Van de Velde well describes it as a barg arid wilderness: an endless succession of shapeless yellow and ashcoloured hills, without grass or shrubs, without water, and almost without life. Another traveller speaks of it as a wilderness of mountain-tops, in' some places tossed up like waves of mud, in others wrinkled over with ravines, like models made of crumpled brown paper, the nearer ones whitish, strewn with rocks and bushes. Such is the desert or wilderness of Judea, the scene of the earlier retires ment of John the Baptist, and the popularly supposed scene of the Temptation of our Lord.

Though thus barren and uninviting as a whole, in our day, the universal presence of ruins proves that Judah and Benjamin had a teeming population in former ages. Terrace cultivation utilized the whole surface, where there was the least soil; and in such a climate. with an artificial supply of water, luxuriant fertility might be secured everywhere except on the bare rock The destruction of these terraces has doubtless allowed much soil to be washed into the valleys, and lost, and the destruction of the natural forests of which there are still traces must have greatly diminished the supply of water. Even in the new utterly barren districts of "the south" abundant proofs have been discovered that cultivation was anciently extensive. The fact that there are no perennial streams in the western wadys. while there are many in those trending to the Jordan on both sides. where the forests or thick shrubberies of oleanders and other flowering trees still flourish, speaks volumes as to the cause of the present. sterility all which the been and the country and the Bible the stilles are Passing northward from Judea, the country gradually opens and is more inviting. Rich plains, at first small, but becoming larger as we get north, stretch out between the hills, till at last, near Nablous, we reach one a mile broad and six miles long. The valleys running west are long, winding, and mostly tillable: those on the east are less deep and abrupt than farther south, and, being abundantly watered by numerous fountains, are rich in orange groves and (orchards) Nablous itself is surrounded by immense groves, of olive-trees. planted on all the hills around. Nowhere in Palestine are there nobler brooks of water. The rich uplands produce abundant crops of grain when cultivated, yet it is, on the whole, a region specially adapted for olives, vineyards, and orchards. The mountains, though bare of wood, and but partially cultivated, have none of that arid, worn look of those of some parts farther south from a dis use? bus (1 and North-west of the city of Nablous the mountains gradually sink down into a wide plain, famous as that of Sharon, mostly an expanse of sloping downs, but dotted here and there with huge fields of corn and tracts of wood, recalling the county of Kent, and reaching to the southern slopes of Carmel, with their rich woods and park-like scenery. State V and

Passing still northward, from Samaria to Galilee, another wide plain the r gover and Vege clsew and n andin occur arbuti those south ofSur paradi Judea. life, e ing of The on the that po the sea land.ou bare a stroyed south, t we reac Philistia ing corr The e Jordan it mean flows Galilee. Lake of from no tinued ra straight: country, steep mo the Dead There is the same can sail t river.utio. all-stance shin' wide

16

as a bare and ashid almost of mouns . in others ed brown es. A Such lier) retires ene of the R.C.PHILIUSS. r day; the min had a itilized the a climate. might be truction of ed into the ts of which y of water. " abundant extensive. tern wadys, both sides, ther flowerthe present We reach th opensiand ng larger as ar Nablous, eys running. east are less tly watered orchards. olive-trees. e are there hdant crops on specially ins, though f that arid, Proto Diana P dually sink an expanse elds of corn reaching to d park-like other wide

plain of great fertility-that of Esdraelon-stretches out from the northern side of the luxuriant Carmel. It might, under a good government, yield vast crops, but the inhabitants are few and poor, and tillage is imperfect. The country now rapidly improves. Vegetation is much more luxuriant among the hills of Galilee than elsewhere west of the Jordan. Fountains are abundant and copious. and many of the torrent beds are never dry. The hills become more and more richly wooded with oaks and terebinths, while ravines occur here and there thickly clothed, in addition, with the maple, arbutus, sumach, and other trees. The hills of Judea are barren; those of Samaria have been well compared to the hilly districts of the south of Scotland; but those of Galilee are more like the rich hills of Surrey of Yet the whole region is thinly peopled. This highland paradise has far fewer inhabitants than even the bleak mountains of Judea, where "for miles and miles, there is often no appearance of life, except the occasional goat-herd on the hill-side, or the gathering of women at the wells." down is with as fuse ab vellepolering theat "The coast of the Holy Land, as has been said, is a long plain. This, on the north, is a mere strip, till near Acre, but it spreads out from that point into a flat, rich, loamy plain, at first only a few feet above the sea level. Corn-fields and pasture lands reach several miles inland. South of Carmel it expands into the plain of Sharon, now left bare and parched in many parts; its ancient forests long ago destroyed, except in stray spots, and cultivation little known. As we go south, the soil is lighter and drier, and the vegetation scantier, till we reach the Shephelah, or "low country" of the Bible, the ancient Philistia, which begins in rolling downs, and passes into wide-spreading corn-fields and vast expanses of loamy soil to the far south, don't a The eastern boundary of Palestine is the deep chasm in which the Jordan has its channel. The name of that river indicates its course: it means "the descender." Rising in the mountains of Liebanon, it flows south through the marshy Lake Merom and the Lake of Galilee, to the Dead Sea, in a course of about 150 miles. From the Lake of Gallee, its channel is a deep cleft in the mountain range, from north to south, and so broken is its current that it is one continued rapid. Its bed is so crooked that it has hardly half a mile straight; so deep, moreover, is it, below the surface of the adjacent country, that it can only be approached by descending one of the steep mountain valleys, and it is invisible till near its entrance into the Dead Sea, at a level of 1,317 feet below that of the Mediterranean. There is no town on its banks, and it has in all ages been crossed at the same fords; no use can be made of it for irrigation, and no vessel can sail the sea into which it pours its waters. It is like no other river more have dark to prever out industry of a bush the west the base the space strated in the former with this rich which such as his file

i Parsiogub. In - deliver from the marate in Pala " another wide

- Dans assound a to-search which we have builting the Unit built . exclusion time als time is possibly devery brassigning and the second for Para quelo vista o vista CHAPTER III. Entraductor o des blasmos de la constante de la constant

1,2 Stellemont 1115

Ar the birth of Christ the striking spectacle presented itself, in a degree unknown before or since, of the world united under one sceptre. From the Euphrates to the Atlantic; from the mouths of the Rhine to the slopes of the Atlas, the Roman Emperor was the sole lord. The Mediterrancan was, in the truest sense, a Roman lake. From the pillars of Hercules to the mouths of the Nile, on its southern shores; from the farihest coasts of Spain to Syria, on its northern; and thence round to the Nile again, the multitudes of men now divided into separate nations, often hostile, always distinct, reposed in peace under the shadow of the Roman eagles. There might be war on the far eastern frontier, beyond the Euphrates, or with the rude tribes in the German forests on the north, but the vast Roman world enjoyed the peace and security of a great organic whole. The merchant or the traveller might alike pass freely from land to land; trading vessels might bear their ventures to any port, for all lands and all coasts were under the same laws, and all mankind, for the time, were citizens of a common State.

At the head of this stupendous empire a single man. Octavianus Cæsar-now better known by his imposing title, Augustus-ruled as absolute lord. All nations bowed before him, all kingdoms served him. It is impossible for us, in the altered condition of things, to realize adequately the majesty of such a position. Rome, itself, the capital of this unique empire, was itself unique in those ages. Its population, with its suburbs, has been variously estimated; some writers, as Lepsius, supposing it to have been eight millions, others, like De Quincey, setting it down as not less than four millions at the very least, and not impossibly half as many more. On the other hand, Merivale gives it as only half-a-million, while others make it two millions and a half. Gibbon estimates, it at twelve hundred thousand, and is supported in his supposition by Dean Milman. The truth lies probably between the extremes. But the unique grandeur of Rome was independent of any question as to its size or population; the fact that arrested all minds was rather that a mere city should be the resistless mistress of the habitable world.

Round the office and person of the Cæsar, who only, of all rulers, before or since, was in the widest sense a monarch of the whole race of men.-taat is, one ruling alone, over all nations, -- there necessarily gathered peculiar and incommunicable attributes of grandeur. Like the far-stretching highways which rayed out from the golden milestone in the Roman Forum to the utmost frontiers, the illimitable majesty of the Emperor extended to all lands. On the shadowy,

The outsi rega barb sef sid de ser the v the w son. slave gilde the b expec impo exten being the fi ocean mann gladly noxio Marce conqu Att great : the so "exce kingde neath, or pot domin throug summe A. It W whole to the : Nor.Nor the bir prize o desolat Marius alike i blood.

years o

resis

emb man

132.9

r stolttingt Protiting Mar Shapm dorr groff Mar groff Mar groff ed itself, In l under one e mouths of was the sole toman lake. its southern ts northern; f men now nct, reposed re might be or with the vast Roman whole. The land to land: for all lands kind, for the Octavianus tus-ruled as doms served n of things, Rome, itself, those ages. mated; some lions, others, r millions at On the other hers make it lve hundred ean Milman. the unique o its size or that a mere ld.

of all rulers, e whole race e necessarily ideur. Like golden milee illimitable he shadowy, resistless, uncertain, but ever-advancing frontiers of a dominion which embraced almost the whole habitable world, as then known, the commands issued from the imperial city were as resistless as in Italy. There were, doubtless, some unknown or despised empires or tribes outside the vast circumference of the Roman sway, but they were regarded, at the best, as Britain looks on the wandering hordes or barbarous and powerless empires beyond the limits of her Indian possersions. Gibbon has set the grandeur of Rome in a vivid light, by describing the position of a subject who should attempt to flee from the wrath of a Cæsar. "The empire of the Romans," says he, "filled the world, and when that empire fell into the hands of a single person, the world became a safe and dreary prison for his enemies. The slave of imperial despotism, whether he was condemned to drag his gilded chain in Rome and the Senate, or to wear out a life of exile on the barren rock of Seriphus, or on the frozen banks of the Danube, expected his fate in silent despair. To resist was fatal, and it was impossible to fly. On every side he was encompassed with a vast extent of sea and land, which he could never hope to traverse without being discovered, seized, and restored to his irritated master. Beyond the frontiers, his anxious view could discover nothing, except the ocean, inhospitable deserts, hostile tribes of barbarians, of fierce manners and unknown language, or dependent kings, who would gladly purchase the emperor's protection by the sacrifice of an ob-nozious fugitive. "Wherever you are," said Cicero to the exiled Marcellus, 'remember that you are equally within the power of the conqueror.'" 相关 机造 、标的一直输出力 花

At the birth of Christ this amazing federation of the world into one great monarchy had been finally achieved. Augustus, at Rome, was the sole power to which all nations looked. His throne, like the "exceeding high mountain" of the Temptation, showed "all the kingdoms of the world and their glory," spread out around it far beneath, as the earth lies in the light of the sun. No prince, no king, or potentate of any name could break the calm which such a universal dominion secured—"a calm," to use De Quincey's figure, "which, through centuries, continued to lave, as with the quiet undulations of summer lakes, the sacred footsteps of the Cæsarean throne."

It was in such a unique era that Jesus Christ was born. The whole earth lay hushed in profound peace. All lands lay freely open to the message of mercy and love which He came to announce.

Nor was the social and moral condition of the world at large, at the birth of Christ, less fitting for His advent than the political. The prize of universal power, struggled for through sixty years of plots and desolating civil wars, had been won at last, by Augustus. Sulla and Marius, Pompey and Cæsar, had led their legions against each other, alike in Italy and the Provinces, and had drenched the earth with blood. Augustus himself had reached the throne only after thirteen years of war, which involved regions wide apart. The world was line.

100000000

Th

party

throw

death

the P

worse

a weal

bold a

tobulu

Pharis

was ha

throne hood.

change

present

gained

triguer

called i

the Ro

result,

in the y the Ten era in I would I restored

Hyrcan

the con

was re-

Jerusale

This its new ma

sown, e

staff ins

what se Antip

stronges

suppose

found t

lost, and him that

"Why s

is far fre

is:ael?"

against ]

of the r

Through

exhausted by the prolonged agony of such a strife; it sighed for repose, and perhaps never felt a more universal joy than when the closing of the Temple of Janus in the twenty-ninth year before Christ amounced that at last the earth was at peace.

The religions of antiquity had lost their vitality, and become effete forms, without influence on the heart. Philosophy was the consolation of a few-the amusement or fashion of others; but of no weight as a moral force among men at large. On its best side, that of Stoicism, it had much that was lofty, but its highest teaching was resignation to fate, and it offered only the hurtful consolation of pride in virtue, without an idea of humiliation for vice. On its worst sidethat of Epicureanism-it exalted self-indulgence as the highest end. Faith in the great truths of natural religion was well-nigh extinct. Sixty-three years before the birth of Christ, Julius Cæsar, at that time the Chief Pontiff of Rome, and, as such, the highest functionary of the state religion, and the official authority in religious questions, openly proclaimed, in his speech in the Senate, in reference to Catiline and his fellow-conspirators-that there was no such thing as a future life; no immortality of the soul. He opposed the execution of the accused on the ground that their crimes deserved the severest punishments, and that, therefore, they should be kept alive to endure them, since death was in reality an escape from suffering, not an evil. "Death," said he, "is a rest from troubles to those in grief. and misery, not a punishment; it ends all the evils of life; for there is neither care nor joy beyond it."

Nor was there any one to condemn such a sentiment even from such lips. Cato, the ideal Roman, a man whose aim it was to "fulfil all righteousness," in the sense in which he understood it, passed it over with a few words of light banter; and Cicero, who was also present, did not care to give either assent or dissent, but left the question open, as one which might be decided either way, at pleasure.

Morality was entirely divorced from religion, as may be readily judged by the fact, that the most licentious rites had their temples, and male and female ministrants. In Juvenal's words, "the Syrian. Orontes had flowed into the Tiber," and it brought with it the appalling immorality of the East. Doubtless, here and there, throughout the empire, the light of holy traditions still burned on the altars of many a household; but it availed nothing against the thick moral night that had settled over the earth at large. The advent of Christ was the breaking of the "dayspring from on high" through a gloom that had been gathering for ages; a great light dawning on a world which lay in darkness, and in the shadow of death.

To understand the condition of things in the Holy Land in the life time of Jesus, it is necessary to notice the history of the reign that was closing at His birth, for religious and political affairs acted and reacted on the spirit of the nation as only two phases of the same thing.

sighed for when the fore Christ come effete ie consolano weight at of Stoicas resignaof pride in orst sideghest end. gh extinct. t that time ctionary of questions, ice to Catithing as a xecution of he severest e to endure ing, not an se in grief. ; for there ALA . 111216 even from s to ffulfil , passed it o was also t the queseasure. be readily r temples, he Syrian the appalhroughout e altars of ick moral. of Christ a gloom n a world

> n the life eign that acted and the same

The reign of Alexander Jannæus, of the Maccabæan or Asmonean line, had been marked by the bitterest persecutions of the Pharisaic party, whose insolence and arrogant claims had caused the king to throw himself into the hands of their Badducean rivals. After his death these disputes continued under Queen Alexandra, who favoured the Pharisees, but the disgulat culminated, after her death, in the far worse evil of a civil war between her two sons, the elder, Hyrcanus, a weak, indolent man; the younger, Aristobulus, on the other hand, bold and energetic." Hyrcanus had been made high priest, and Aristobulus had been kept from all power during Alexandra's life-the Pharisaic party themselves holding the reins of government; but she was hardly dead before Aristobulus forced his brother to resign the throne, to which he had succeeded, and left him only the high priesthood. Hyrcanus would, apparently, have quietly acquiesced in this change, but the evil genius of Aristobulus and of the nation was present in the person of an influential Edomite, Antipater, who had gained the confidence of Hyrcanus. Stirred up by this crafty intriguer, the elder brother re-claimed the throne-Arab allies were called in-Jerusalem was besieged, and both the brothers appealed to the Roman generals in Syria for a decision between them. As the result, Pompey, then commanding in the East, appeared on the scene, in the year 63 B.C.; got possession of the country by craft; stormed the Temple, which held out for Aristobulus, and inaugurated a new era in Palestine. The Pharisees had hoped that both of the brothers. would be put aside, and the theocracy, which meant their own rule, restored; but Pompey, while withholding the name of king, set up Hyrcanus as high priest and ruler, under the title of ethnarch. All the conquests of the Maccabæans were taken from him: the country was re-distributed in arbitrary political divisions; the defences of Jerusalem thrown down, and the nation subjected to tribute to Rome. This itself would have been enough to kindle a deep hatred to their new masters, but the seeds of a still more profound enmity were sown, even at this first step in Roman occupation, by Pompey and his staff insisting on entering the Holy of Holics, and thus committing what seemed to the Jew the direst profanation of his religion.

Antipater had allied himself from the first with Rome, as the strongest, and was now the object of furious hatred. The nation had supposed that Pompey came as a friend, to heal their dissensions, but found that he remained as their master. Their independence was lost, and Antipater had been the cause of its ruin. It is perhaps of him that the author of the Psalms of Solomon speaks when he says, "Why sittest thou, the unclean one, in the Sanhedrim, and thy heart is far from the Lord, and thou stirrest up with thy sins the God of is ael?" Treachery, hypocrisy, adultery, and murder are charged against him, and he is compared to a biting serpent. Yet the guilt of the people, it is owned, had brought these calamities on them. Through this, the ram had battered the holy walls, the Holy of Holige

He

and

Afte

enam

cong

receiv

be se

which

haster

But t struct

who, 1

refused

way.

unched

Their I

and th

public |

sixth h

the five

the who

the tow

ing as tl

Judea, r

the Ron

canus, a

made he

legal dec

granted.

reward,

property

this date

hencefor

care to ha

brass.

popular.

show the

from the

ever deep

Maccabæa

Essene, M

he met hin

the Macca

Yet Hyrc

energy to

These

On

had been profaned, the noblest of the Sanhedrim slain, and their sons and daughters carried off captive to the West to grace Pompey's triumph. At the thought of this the Pselmist is still more cast down, and humbles himself in the dust before the retributive hand of Jeliovah.

But there was no peace for Israel. War lingered on the southern borders, and in B.C. 57 Alexander, the son of Aristobulus, once more overthrew the government of Hyrcanus and Antipater, but the Romans forthwith came in force, and crushed the revolt by another conquest of Jerusalem. In this campaign a cavalry colonel, Mark Antony, so especially distinguished himself, that the keen-sighted Antipater, seeing he had a great future, formed friendly relations with him, which led to the weightiest results in later years.

Hyrcanus and his favourite were now again in power, but they had a troubled life. The people rose again and again, only to be as constantly crushed. In B.C. 56 Aristobulus, who had escaped, from Rome, began the war once more, and the next year, his son Alexander made another vain revolt. In B.C. 52, when the Parthians, had revenged themselves by the destruction of the legions of Crassuswho, in time of peace, had plundered the Temple to fill his own, treasures—the Jews rose still once more, but Cassius, who had escaped with the wreck of the army of Crassus from the Parthian horsemen, soon crushed the insurrection, and Antipater emerged as, at last, the unfettered lord of the country.

The civil war which broke out, in the year 49, between Pompey and Cæsar, for a time promised a change. Judea, like all the East. adhered to Pompey, and Cæsar therefore set the imprisoned Aristobulus free, and gave him two legions to clear his native country of the adherents of his rival. 1 Antipater and Hyrcanus already trembled at the thought of a popular revolt, supported by Rome, when news came that Aristobulus had suddenly died-no doubt of poison-and that his son Alexander had been beheaded, in Antioch, by Pompey's orders. Antipater had thus managed to get his enemies out of the way, When Pompey's cause was finally crushed, next year, at Pharsalia, Hyrcanus and Antipater, like the princes round them, were in a false position in Six weeks later, Pompey lay murdered on the Egyptian sands. Meanwhile, Cæsar, who had landed in Egypt, at the head of hardly 4,000 men; to settle the disputes for the throne of that country, was attacked by the native soldiery and the restless population of Alexandria, and reduced to the most desperate straits. At this moment a motley army of Eastern vassals came to his relief. anxious to efface at the earliest opportunity the remembrance of their relations to Pompey. It included hordes of Arabs from Damaseus, and bands of Itureans from beyond Jordan, but its strength lay in 3,000 chosen troops brought by Antipater. The strange host was nominally commanded by Mithridates of Pergamos, a bastard of the great Mithridates, but Antipater was the real head, chie to some of the sector is a first we shall be our their sons Pompey's castdown. nd of Jee southern once more ut the Ronother cononel, Mark een-sighted y relations ut they had be as conaped, from son Alexanrthians had f Crassus fill his own , who had he Parthian; emerged as, een Pompey all the East, oned Aristocountry of dy trembled when news poison-and y Pompey's s out of the ext year, at ound them, hurdered on d in Egypt. the throne the restless rate straits. b his relief, mbrance of Arabs, from an, but its oater. The Pergamos, e real head,

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

while residues the edit

He induced the Bedouin leaders on the opposite side to withdraw, and persuaded the Egyptian Jews to supply Casar with provisions. After fierce fighting, the Roman fortune triumphed; and Cesar, now enamoured of Cleopatra, then one-and-twenty years of age, remained conqueror. Alexandria was heavily punished: the Egyptian Jews received extensive privileges, but the affairs of Palestine were left to be settled when Cæsar came back from Pontus, in Asia Minor, to which he had been summoned to repet an invasion from Armonia.

On his return to Syria, in the autumn of the year 47, Antipater hastened to meet him, as did also Antigonus, a son of Aristobulus. But the wounds of Antipater, received in rescuing Cæsar from destruction, weighed more than the hereditary claims of Antigonus, who, feeling this, fled to the Parthians, to seek the aid which Rome refused. In other respects, the Jews were treated in the friendliest way. Those of Lesser Asia were confirmed in the privilege of unchecked remittance of their Temple contributions to Jerusalem. Their synagogues, were put under the protection of the Temple laws, and they were once more granted immunity from all demands for public service on the Sabbath, and on the preparation day, from the sixth hour. In Palestine, Hyrcanus was sanctioned as high priest; the five divisions of the land previously made were put aside, and the whole united under Antipater, as procurator. The Jews in all the towns of Syria and Phenicia, were put on the same favoured footing as those of the Holy Land itself. No troops were to be raised in Judea, nor any Roman garrisons introduced. The Temple tax and the Roman dues were regulated according to Jewish usage. Hyrcanus, as high priest, received the rank of a Roman senator, and was made hereditary, ethnarch, with the right of life and death, and of legal decision on all questions of ritual. Still more, the right was granted to fortify Jerusalem again, and Antipater, for his own reward, was made a Roman citizen, with freedom from taxes on his property. The Idumean dynasty may be said to have begun from this date, as the procuratorship granted to Antipater made him henceforth independent of Hyrcanus. All these concessions he took care to have forthwith confirmed at Rome, and graven on plates of These diplomatic successes, however, failed to make Antipater. popular. He assumed some of the public duties of Hyrcanus, to show the Sanhedrim that the civil power had been rightly transferred from the incapable hands of the high priest. But the suspicion sank ever deeper in the popular mind, that the final setting aside of the Maccabean family was designed, and it was even said that the Essene Menahem had told Herod, Antipater's son, years before, as he met him on the street, that he would grow up to be the scourge of the Maccabæans, and would in the end wear the crown of David. Yet Hyrcanus could not shake himself free, even had he had the energy to do so, for he needed the help of the alien to protect him

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

against his own family. His daughter Alexandra had lost, on his account, both husband and father in law. by foul or legal murder, His nephew, Anfigonus, lived in a foreign land as a claimant of the throne; his grand-children were the orplians of Alexander, who had fallen under the axe of the headsman," The house of the Idumean. the alten in Israel, was nearer to him than his own flesh and blood. Antipater, in accordance with the tradition of his house, had married a daughter of the Bedouins-the fair Kypros-to preserve the connection with the sheikhs of the desert by which his father had grown rich. She bore him four sons, Phasacl, Herod, Joseph, and Pheroras, and a daughter, Salome. Of these, Antipater nes ruler of the country, maned Phasael governor of Jerusalem, and Herod-a young man of twenty-five-he sent to Galilee, to put down the bands of desparadoes, who thickly infested it, half robbers, half religious zealots, fighting against the hated Romans. Herodiwas well qualified to maintain the honour of his house. He was a fearless rider, and no one threw the spear so straight to the mark, or shot his arrow so constantly into the centre. Even in later years. when strength and agility begin to fail in most, he was known to have killed forty wild beasts in one day's hunting. Herod took prisoner Hezeklah, the dreaded hader of the "robbers," and his whole band, and put them all to death. But his success only enraged the patriots of Jerusalem. In violation of the right put exclusively into the hands of Hyrcanus, as high priest, by Casar, he had slain "free Jews Oand these, men fighting for the Law, and against the heather intruders into the heritage of Jehovalr, and the Sanhedrim-Uthe high council-forced their nominal leader, whose egal prerogative had been thus invaded, to summon the offender before them. Herod obeyed, after having made Galilee sat but appeared with a powerful escort; and at the same time, a mussage was sent by the proconsul of Syrin not to injure him o He would, however, have been sentenced to death, had not Hyrcanus left the chair, and counselled his young friend to leave Jerusalem. Gnashing his teeth. Herod rode off to Damascus to the proconsul from whom he shortly after bought the governorship of Cœle Syria and Samaria, for which, as a Roman citizen, he was qualified, returning soon after, with a strong force to Jerusalem, to avenge the insult offered hlin. But, at the entreaty of his father, whom his boldness confirmed in authority, he withdrew, without violence. 1911 Burgoan of good 136 All Palestine was now in the hands of Herod's house, for Antipater ruled Judea, and Herod himself was over Samaria and Coele-Syria. The Roman generals were uncertain whom to follow. Ozsar's fortunes seemed waning in Africa. Bassus, one of Pompey's party, scized Tyre, and sought to seduce the soldiers of Sextus Cæsar, the Syrian proconsul." Antipater sent a mixed force, and Herod led the cavalry of Samaria, to the proconsul's help. Bassus was beaten, but Sextus Cæsar himself was murdered by his own soldiers, and for two riten FCOTS the y that h . urh a lead preve Cassin the w equal sum di it up. Judea, militar wello Antipa in the murde Dameagainst brother year lat withoth master! mi.They son on t Herod c the hou childish daughte daughter wife, Do sent awb Maccaba Star Then H battle Antony. them: on of titles. testinging Herod ha vided wit Jews. and cighteen nowiaccu Ephesus their part positions.

4

THE LIFE OF CHRIST. to noise of but interestion in the state of the state of

ost. on his al murder nant of the r, who had e Idumean, nd blood. house, had to preservo h his father rod. Joseph, ntipater 1188 usalein, rand to put down robbers, half Herodiwas e was a learthe mark, or a later years, as known to Herod took ers," and his ccess only enright put ex. by Cæsar, he he Law land valr: and the leader, Swhose the offender ilee sate but ne, a mussage to He would, canus left the n. v. Gnashing from whom and Samaria, turning soon insult offered ess confirmed of these be for Antipater

d Cœle-Syria. Cæsar's fornpey's party; us Cæsar, the Herod led the as beaten, but , and for two Plan Gron the year 44, the news came, when all were expecting Cæsar in the East that he was mardered. The schemes of Herod's family seemed ruined. Things, however, soon righted, themselves. Antony, began to play a leading part in Rome, and had all the edicts of Casar confirmed, to prevent hupeless confusion. Interest led Antipater for the time to join Cassing Ceser's murderer. Herod won favour as the first to pay him the war tax of about £150,000, levied on Galilec. Antipater showed count real: but when the people were too poor to pay the enormous sum demanded, Cassius sold their sons and daughters as slaves, to make it up, Feeling Herod's usefulness, the republican leader, on leaving Judea, named him procurator of Coele-Syria, and gave him a'so military power over all Judes, promising him the crown, if all went well The Idumean family were still on the top of the tide. But Antipater's course wes run ... Shortly before the Feast of Tabernacles, in the year 48, he died of poison given him in his wine. The murderer was well known-a follower of Hyrcanus, Malichus by name who wished to excite insurrection in the Maccabean's favour against the Romans land their Idumean viceroy. Herod and his brother, with well-acted) craft, feigned friendliness with him, till, a year later, they got him into their power, and murdered him, in turn, with the help of Cassius Hyrcanus kissed the hands of his new master; and cursed the murdered man as the enemy of his country! The year 48 closed with wild troubles all over the land. Malich's son on the south, and Antigonus on the north, invaded the land; but Herod overthrew them both. The week Hyrcanus, who still dreaded the house of Aristobulus, received the conqueror in Jerusalem, with childish gratitude in Herod availed himself, of this to ask Mariannia, daughter of Alexander, whom Pompey had beheaded, and grand-daughter of Hyrcanus himself, in marriage. He had already one wife; Doris; who had borne him a son, Antipater; but she was now sent away, and went off to bring up her son in deadly hatred of the Maccabeean family, who had taken her young husband from her. The hopes of the Jewish patricts revived once more after the battle of Philippi, in the autumn of the year 42. It was left to Antony to pay the soldiers after the battle what had been promised them: and to raise the vast, sums required, by war taxes and the sale of titles, he moved towards Asia, Here a deputation of Jews protesting against Herod and Phasael's government waited on him: but Herod had always been friendly to the Romans, and was better provided with money than the people, Antony, for his part, hated the Jews, and liked Herod, as the son of an old comrade, with whom, cighteen years before, he had fought against the very people who now accused his son before him, Hyrcanus himself appeared in Enhesus on behalf of the two brothers, and they themselves played their part so well that they were not only confirmed in their own positions, but received substantial favours besides.

in it

The

Wer

und

coul

such

reign

dran

with

18 A I

Her

pearl

amus

as he naked

SCQ-W

Iours.

the co

of Syr 40, to

to; dra

overtu

posed

And

before

of that

palace.

Chalcis

from th

and 500

gonus y

in drivi

up in it.

was near the city.

which, 1

crowds

came to

tween th enough t quarters, peace, ?.

after fett fused to ]

Sun

Antony was one of those undisciplined natures which revolutionary times produce a man of powerful but neglected parts, who had grown up in the shattered and utterly immoral Homan world: unoridled in his passions, and, amidst all the energy of his will, without moral restraint. When in Egypt, as colonel of horse, he had for the first time seen Cleopatra, then fourteen years old, but already. flirting with the son of Pompey. In the years B.C. 46 to 44 she was living in Cæsar's gardens at Rome as that great man's mistress, and there Antony had been amongst the most zealous in paying lier honour. After Cæsar's death he had done her service, and had tried to get her son Cæsarion put on the list of Cæsar's heirs. But, like Herod, she had been forced to go to war against Antony, because the camp of Cassins was nearer than that of his opponent. For this she was summoned before him, and made her appearance at Tarsus, in Cilicia, in the summer of 41. She was now twenty-eight, but still in the bloom of her beauty, and displayed her charms so effectively that A tony was forthwith her slave. His worst deeds begin from the time he met her. To please her he caused her sister to be dragged out of a temple in Miletus and murdered, and he put to death all she chose to denounce. She herself hastened to Egypt, whither Antony panted to follow her.

In Antioch, in Syria, in the autumn of the same year, he would have put to death a Jewish deputation sent to protest against the two brothers, had not Herod prevented him. The two were, moreover, appointed tetrarchs, with all formality. At Tyre, to which ho had advanced, thousands of Jews threw themselves in his way with loud, persistent, fanatical cries that he should depose the brothers. Angry before, he was now furious, and set his troops on them and hewed them down, killing even the prisoners taken. He then moved on to spend the winter with Cleopatra.

Throughout Judea and even in Egypt the deepest despondency reigned among the Jews. The advent of the Messiah was to be precoded by times of darkness and trouble, and so gloomy seemed the state of things then prevailing that it appeared as if the long-expected One must be close at hand. The belief or, at least, hope, found expression in the writings of the day. The Jewish Sibylline Books, composed in Egypt in these years, predicted that "when Rome once rules over Egypt, then will the greatest of the kingdoms, that of the Immortal King, appear among men, and a Holy Lord shall come, who will rule all the countries of the earth, through all ages, as time flows on."

In Palestine there was great excitement. After their bloody inauguration into their office by Antony, the two tetrarchs, Phasael and Herod, could count on few faithful subjects, and a new storm soon rose from the East which threatened to destroy them. Since they had sold themselves to the Romans, the exiled Maccabean prince had conspired more eagerly with the Parthians, and had been supported olutionary who ha an world: will, withhe had for out already. 44 she way istress, and paying lier d had tried But. like because the For this she t Tarsus, in , but still in ectively that gin from the be dragged death all she ther Antony ar, he would against the were; moreto which he his way with the brothers. on them and e then moved despondency vas ta be prev seemed the ong-expected pe, found exviline Books, in Rome once s, that of the all come, who as time flows bloody inau-Phasael and w storm soon Since they an prince had en supported In his appeal by Roman, exiles of the party of Brutus and Cassius. The Parthians hesitated long, but at last the rumour came that they were proparing for war. Jorusalem trembled, for the Euphrates was undefended, and there were still garrisons of the republicans, which could not be trusted, all through Syria. The action of Antony in such a crisis was impatiently awaited; but feasting and pleasures reigned in Alexandria. The queen played at dice with the Triumvir; drank and hunted with him; wandered through the streets by night with him, playing rough tricks; she, dressed as a servant-woman, he, as a servant man. She let him escape her neither by night nor day. Her extravagance was unparalleled; at a dinner she drank crushed pearls, that the cost of a meal might come to a million scateril, as she had wagered it would. There was no end of her light follies, to amuse him, she had foreign pickled lish hung by divers on his hooks as he fished, and induced the senator Plancus to dance as Glaucus, maked, at one of her banquets, painted blue, his head wreathed with sca-weed, and waving a tail ochind him, as he went gliding on all fours. The costlicit meals were at all times ready in the castle, for the cook never, knew when they would need to be served up.

Sunk in this sensual indulgence, Antony left it to the proconsul of Syria to defend that province, till forced, in the spring of the year 40, to go to Greece, to manage a war which his wife had stirred up, to draw him away from Gleopatra. Meanwhile, Asia Minor was overrun by the Parthians, and Phasael and Herod saw themselves exposed to an early inroad, against which they were helpless.

And now, to use the fine figure of Hausrath, there rose again before Hyrcanus, as if from some long-disused churchyard, the ghost of that dynastic question which for thirty years had haunted the palace, and could not be laid. His nephew Antigonus came from Chalcis, where he had been living with a relative, and obtained help from the Parthian leader, on the promise of giving him 1,000 talents and 500 wives, if he were restored to the throne. At Carmel, Antigonus was greated with shouts, as king, and he hastened on to Jeru-salem, where part of the people joined him. The tetrarchs succeeded in driving him and his adherents into the Temple, and shutting them up in it rout daily fights took place in the streets, and, as Pentecost was near, and crowds of armed and half armed pilgtims arrived in the city, the brothers were, in their turn, shut up in their palace, from which, however, their soldiers made constant sallies, butchering the crowds like sheep. At last the cup-be of the Parthian prince came to the gate with 500 cavalry, asking entrance as a mediator between the factions, and was admitted by Phasael, who was even weak enough to let himself be persuaded to set out for the Parthian headquarters, taking Hyrcanus with him, to conclude arrangements for peace. At Ptolemais they found themselves prisoners, and were soon after fettered and put in confinement. Herod, meanwhile, had refused to listen to similar treacherous invitations, and having mounted

zcal

the

Ato

the

Yet

the .

H

Rom

Anti

only large

could

them.

Asia'

Euph

gener

a brib

fell in family and Ju

Jerusa

of tak

knew i took h

he had

and ca energy

B.C. he

the sieg

in their support

his brid

it first b

once ino

tans, fri

and Leb

which w

taken p

Herod's

towards

moncan

Herod w

the count

its lawles

the Roma

28

his family on mules by night, set off with them, in the darkness, towards the strong fortress Masada, on the Dead Sea, where his brother Joseph had command, reaching it only after terrible fighting in the passes of the hills. Leaving his women behind in safety, and taking his men with him, he now fied towards Edom; but as he had no money, the sheikhs of Mount Seir refused to receive him.

In the meantime the Parthians had thrown off the mask in Jerusalem, had plundered the city, and were sweeping like a devouring fire through the land, proclaiming Antigonus everywhere as king. In the camp. Hyrcanus was the first to do homage to the new sovereign; but Antigonus flew at him, and with his own teeth bit off his ears, to unfit him for ever for the high priesthood, and then sent him beyond the Euphrates as a prisoner. Phasael escaped further insult by a voluntary death. Deprived of weapons, he beat out his brains against the walls of his dungeon. Antigonus now assumed the name of Mattathias, from the founder of the Maccabsen family,-and the titles of high priest and king. But his position was insecure, for Masada still held out, and was defended by Joseph, Herod's brother, for two years, till Herod relieved it. The barbarities of the Parthians, moreover, undermined his authority. On their small horses of the steppes they scoured the country in troops, mangling the men, maltreating the women; burning down whole towns, and torturing even the defenceless. No wonder that, though a Parthian never watered his horse in the Jordan after the year B.C. 38, the memory of these mounted hordes lingered in the minds of the people, so that even St. John introduces them in the Apocalypse, as a symbol of the plagues of the final judgment, which were to destroy a third part of men.

Herod, repelled from Idumea, fled to Egypt, which Antony had left at the beginning of the year 40. Cleopatra, however, gave him a friendly and even distinguished welcome, thinking she could win him over to her service, and use him as general against the Parthians. But Herod had higher aims. Braving the danger of autumn storms, he set sail for Rome, was shipwrecked off Rhodes, built a new trircine with borrowed money, reached Italy soon after, and on getting to Rome found there both Octavian and Antony. (Before them he had his cause pleaded so skilfully that the Senate unanimously appointed him King of Judea, and he was formally installed in the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, with the usual heathen sacrifices. Seven days later he was on his way back to Palestine, and the cause of Antigonus was doomed. This new dignity, however, carried in its bosom the seeds of all Herod's future misery. Hyrcanus, though disqualified for being high priest, could yet be ethnarch, and his grand-child Aristobulus, brother to Marianne, Herod's betrothed, was alive. Herod's kingship was a wrongful usurpation of the rights of both. Meanwhile, the position of Antigonus was getting desperate..... The cruelties of the Parthians, the failure to take Massda, and a fresh outbreak on a great scale, in Galilee and on the lake of Gennesarcth, of a fresh out.

nesareth, of

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

zeal against the heathen oppressors of the land, had turned the Rabbis and the Sanhedrim, hitherto his supporters, against him. Nor were the people more friendly. As he left the Temple on the Day of Atonement, accompanied by a crowd, to conduct him to his palace, the multitude turned away to follow two Rabbis who chanced to pass. Yet Herod was still, in the eyes of the nation, only "the servant of the Asmonéans."

Herod began the war against Antigonus with the assurance of Roman help, but Silo, the Roman general, let himself be bribed by 'Antigonus, and Herod had to struggle single-handed. The Romans only plundered Jericho, and quartered themselves idly on the nation at large. Herod had to turn against the zealots of Galilee, since he could get no help towards more serious efforts; and he soon extirpated them." The Parthians, however, by this time had been driven out of Asia Minor and Syria, and finally crushed, in a great battle on the Euphrates. Two new legions were now free to aid Herod, but their general, like Silo, cared only for making money, and, like him, took a bribe from Antigonus. In the meantime, Joseph, Herod's brother, fell in battle, and this roused Herod; who was always faithful to his With only a nondescript army he burst on Galilee family, to fury. and Judea, and drove the Maccabæans before him like chaff. Except Jerusalem, the whole land was now his, and he set himself to the task of taking the capital. For two years, with only raw recruits who knew nothing, veterans who had forgotten everything. Iturcans who took his pay and did as little as possible for it, and treacherous allies, he had fought against a fanatical people, who turned every hamlet and cavern into a fortress. It needed a genius and a superhuman energy like his to triumph in such a war. In the early spring of 37 n.c. he proceeded to invest Jerusalem, but thought it politic, before the siege actually began, to go to Samaria and marry Marianne, the grand-daughter of Hyrcanus, his rival and enemy. The Samaritans, in their hatred of the Maccabaan dynasty, had been Herod's devoted supporters in the war; and he had honoured their loyalty by placing his bride, and the rest of his family in their keeping, at Samaria, when it first broke out. He was no sooner married than the work of blood once more began. Jerusalem was besieged by his army of Samari-tans, friendly Jews, wild Idumeans, and mercenaries from Phenicia and Lebanon, and fell on the 10th of June, after a fierce struggle, which was followed by wild pillage and slaughter. Antigonus was taken prisoner, and was put to death by the Roman general, at Herod's entreaty, after he had suffered the outrage, hitherto unknown towards a prince, of being scourged like a slave. Thus another Asmoncan was out of the way. The family had reigned 126 years. Herod was now really king. A great bribe to the Roman army freed the country of the burden of the Roman support, and the misery of its lawlessness." A bloody proscription, after the pattern of that of the Roman triumvirate, mowed down all enemies within the city, the the refer off the party destroy and place area. 101 0 4 9 11 9 10 9 11 19 6 1 19 6 1 19 6 1 19 6 1 19 6 1 19 6 1 19 6 1 19 6 1 gates of which were closed till the executions were ended. In the midst of this, Antony, once more beside Cleopatra, in Egpyt, and needing endless wealth for their mutual prodigalities, sent a demand to all the kingdoms he controlled, -Judea amongst others, -for a vast sum of money. Herod had only an empty treasury; a country strewn with ruins and smoking heaps; and moreover, it was the Sab-bath year, in which the laws made by Cæsar prohibited the levying: any tax. The proscription had therefore to be made a means of raising funds, as had been done by Octavian and Antony, at Rome. Forty-five of his richest opponents were put to death, and their property confiscated so ruthlessly, that even their coffins were searched at the city gates for jewels or money. Many were glad to escape death by giving up all they had. "The oppression and tyranny had no limit," says Josephus. Herod, however, was none the richer, for he had to send off the whole crown treasures of the Asmoneans to Laodicea, to help to make up the amount demanded from him. or iterrite chi tot pate pate bard of the set of the set

ER MIN

THE REIGN OF HEROD. thing to reorganize. Galilee lay exhausted by brigandage, entire towns were unpeopled, as Lydda, Thamna, Gophna, and Emmaus, whose inhabitants had been sold by Cassius as slaves. Jericho had been taken and plundered once and again: five towns round it lay in: rubbish and ashes; Marissa had been burned down by the Parthians; and in the midst of all, the bleeding land had to be harried afresh to satisfy Cleopatra and her slave, Antony. But the genius of Herod erclong built up a strong government out of this chaos, surrounding, himself with his old friends, and ruthlessly crushing his enemies. Filling posts, where needful or desirable, with foreigners of any nation, he yet strove to keep on a good footing with the Rabbis, and Pharisee party at large, but gradually took from their Sanhedrim and schools the legal and civil powers they had exercised, leaving them the control only of municipal and ecclesiastical details. A high priest was appointed, such as the times seemed to demand. No native could be trusted; Hyrcanus, who still survived in Babylon, was disqualified; Aristobulus, the king's brother-in-law, was too young, and Herod was a born Idumean. A Rabbi from Babylon was therefore selected, as likely to give no trouble, but the rule was introduced, as an extra precaution, that the office should, henceforth, be held, by any one, only for a short time. Hyrcanus was wiled from the East that Herod might have him in his own power, and prevent his being played off against him in case of another Parthian war, active in anise But Herod's position was a fatal one. Willing to treat his subjects well, them ingai that king dead ambi an en and h to ma colou failed round he hop In Ari himsel safe. best-lo verych picions could a flesh ar a king. Towa Antony from M try, pur Twenty army tra

Coast, Tu that his she wou army to entirely esults. Alexan aggrieved his right. Jerusalen got the p it was wi of thus ra

tony fell

acting on tress. He boy to hir

Sea; and

d: In the Sgpyt, and a demand -for a vast a country as the Sabhe levying ans of raisat Rome. their propsearched at scape death ny had no cher, for he ans to Laoa. on leante safe. , But, f Destribled w isiklidu yrs7 piceona y cre conste survey bi ticso and oly le had everydage, entire id Emmaus, Jericho had and it lay in e Parthians; ied afresh, to: us of Herod surrounding. his enemies. rs of any nar Rabbis, and nhedrim and eaving them A high priest native could disqualified; 1 Herod was selected, as in extra preny one, only that Herod played off his subjects well. Rome to whom he owed his crown, forced lum to oppress them. He wished to reign as a Jew, but he had made a thank-offeringthin the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus for the crown, the knew. that he could be popular only by observing the Law, but his being king at all was illegal. He flattered the Rabbis, but they were his deadliest enemies. Yet all this was little to the troubles which his ambition had prepared for him in his own household. Had he founded an entirely new dynasty, his relations would have been on his side, and he could have relied on a party. But he had been unwise enough to marry into the family he had overthrown, in the hope of gaining a colour of legitimacy for his reign; and in doing so he had at once failed to appease the injured, and had brought his mortal enemies. round him, as his relations. The marriage with Mariamne, by which he hoped to strengthen his title, carried with it his keenest indictment. In Aristobulus, his brother in-law, he saw only a rival, and he betook himself to the usual remedy of tyrants-murder-to make himself safe. But this only made his position so much the worse, for his best-loved wife knew that he had murdered her brother, and their very children had more right to the throne than himself. His suspicions were thus roused at his every step in his own palace, and could only be appeased by fresh crimes. He raged against his own flesh and blood, and made himself wretched as a man, to be secure as a tring ball of a second readily and which the second in all the mailtener with

Towards the close of the year a great disaster befell the Triumvir, Antony. His troops, deserted by their barbarous allies, had to retreat from Media, marching for twenty seven days through a wasted country, pursued by the Parthians, and often in want of food or water. Twenty thousand foot, and four thousand horse, perished, and all the army train was lost, before he reached the Araxes, on the Caspian Sea, and eight thousand more died before he got to Sidon on the seacoast. Here he waited for Cleopatra, who was alarmed at hearing that his wife Octavia was coming to meet him, and, pretending that she would die if he deserted her, so unmanned him that he left his army to his officers and went off with her to Egypt. He was now entirely in her hands, and the neighbouring powers soon felt the esults.

Alexandra, the mother of Mariamne and Aristobulus, was sorely aggrieved that her son should not have been made high priest, as was his right, and plotted with a crafty officer of Antony's suite, then at Jerusalem, to get Antony to help her in the matter. He asked and got the portraits of both brother and sister to send to his master, but it was with the design of getting Antony enamoured of Mariamne and of thus raising a rival to Cleopatra, and his scheme succeeded. Antony fell in love with the Jewish queen, and was only kept from acting on his passion by his fear of the jealousy of his Egyptian mistress. He confined himself for the time to asking Herod to send the boy to him.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

82

Herod was alarmed, and induced Antony to withdraw his request, which he said would lead to a revolt if granted; but seeing how things stood, he deposed the high priest and appointed Aristobulus, then seventeen; in his place. Unfortunately for the lad, the Jews hailed his elevation with delight. The result was that Herod, soon after, got him held under the water in a bath, at Jericho, till he was drowned, and pretended it was an accident.

Alexandra and Mariamne, knowing the truth, thirsted for revenge, and plotted with Cleopatra to obtain it. She on her part was anxious to get hold of Judea, and only used the plotters for this end. Herod was summoned before Antony, but he ordered, before he left, that, should he not return, Alexandra should be put to death as a punishment, and Mariamne, also, killed, to prevent her falling into the hands of Antony. Unfortunately for all, this was told them in his absence, and Mariamne, roused to frenzy, greeted him, on his coming back, with an outburst of the long pent-up hatred she felt at his crimes. Alexandra was forthwith thrown into chains; his sister Salome's husband, who had betrayed the secret, was put to death; Mariamne, whom he passionately loved, was spared a little longer.

Other troubles, from outside, now, for a time, thrust the domestic miseries into the background. Herod had discovered Cleopatra's derigns, which were to get all the country, from Egypt to Syria, for herself. Antony was to be persuaded on one pretext or other, to dethrone the different rulers. She did actually get him to put Lysanias, the ruler of the Lebanon district, to death, on pretence of his being in league with the Parthians, and got his principality, which she presently farmed out. Herod was now between her possessions, on both north and south, and feared lest her influence with Antony might be his ruin, not and the parthian of the being of the being of the being the being of the being being being being being being of the being being being being being being being being of the being bein

She next begged and got part of the Nabatsan kingdom: then the whole sea-coast of Palestine from the river Eleutherus to Egypt-Tyre and Sidon excepted—and, finally, Herod had to give up to her the Oasis of Jericho with its balsam plantations—the richest part of his kingdom. The summons to Laodicea and the taking away of Jericho seemed to show that Herod's influence with Antony was shaken, and opposition consequently raised itself once more. Plots were again rife on every side, at home and abroad. Cleopatra was his constant terror, for at any moment she might spring some new mine under his feet. Even the Maccabsans were once more raising their heads. The Rabbis, whose schools had flourished immensely since their exclusion from politics, began to interfere with them again. Hillel and Schammai were, respectively, the heads of the more ilberal and the harsher parties. But Herod was too much occupied by great affairs to trouble himself about them.

Things were rapidly coming to a crisis in the Roman Empire. The object of the Egyptian queen in lavishing her blandishments on Antony became more and more apparent. She had entangled him in

her

lews hailed n after, got s drowned, ..... V'121:3" for revenge, was anxious nd. Herod e left, that, is a punishing into the them in his his coming e felt at his s; his sister: ut to death; tle longer. the domestic Cleopatra's to Syria, for other, to deput Lysanias, of his being y, which she ossessions, on with Antony 1 100 005 om: then the s to Egyptve up to her chest part of king away of Antony was more. Plots leopatra was ng some new more raising d immensely h them again. more liberal pied by great

how things

bulus, then

Empire. The ments on Anngled him in her snares only to serve herself, and the great Samson laid his head unsuspiciously on her Delilah lap. She dreamed of bringing the whole Eastern empire of Rome, through him, under Egyptian rule, and of becoming the empress of half the world; and it seemed as if he were willing it should be so. He gave mortal offence at Rome by celebrating his triumphs, not there, but at Alexandria. He gave Cleopatra the title of the "queen of kings." Their two sons, Ptolemy and Alexander, were to be "kings of kings." He gave Syria, Phenicia, and Cilicia to the former, and Armenia and Media, with Parthia, as soon as it should be overcome, to the latter; while to their daughter, the young Cleopatra, he handed over Cyrenaika. Cleopatra herself was made Queen of Egypt, Cyprus, Libya, and Cœle-Syria, her son Cæsarion sharing them with her. After the example of the Pharaohs and Ptolemies, both he and she assumed divine honours-Cleopatra as Isis, Antony as Osiris-and their statues were set up in sacred places. Public feeling at Rome was outraged and alarmed. The popular poets sent verses afloat in which Antony sought to make the Jupiter of Rome give way to the barking, dog-headed Anubis, threatened the galleys of Rome with being outsailed by the boats of the Nile, and would fain frighten the trumpets of Rome with the clattering sistrum. Cæsar laid the facts before the Senate, and Antony, in return, made charges against Cæsar. War-long inevitable -at last broke out, and was decided in the sea-fight at Actium. Cleopatra had persuaded her dupe to fight on the water rather than on land, that she might flee to Egypt at the first signs of defeat, and she did this in the migst of the battle, when victory was yet entirely doubtful. Ever his ruin, she thus completed her fatal triumph, for the weak man, as if he could not live without her, forthwith deserted his forces, though his ships were still fighting stoutly, and he had 100,000 foot, and 12,000 horse, on the sea-shore, who had never fought at all. It was noticed that on the day of Actium a terrible earthquake took place in Palestine, killing 10,000 persons and endless cattle. Herod, seeing Antony fallen, forthwith made peace with Cæsar. Fresh plots of Alexandra had been discovered, in which Hyrcanus, now eighty years old, was to be played off against him; but they only led to the revolting sight of the last of the Maccabæans, in extreme old age, being beheaded by his son-in-law. Herod's hands were getting redder and redder with the blood of his kindred. With Cæsar he managed things well, entertaining him royally on his way through Palestine to Egypt, and providing supplies for his army on their march, with equal wisdom and munificence. Meanwhile Antony and Cleopatra spent their last days in feasting and revely, varied with ghastly trials, before them, of every known poison, by turns, on different prisoners, to see which caused the easiest death. In the autumn of 30 B.C. Antony stabbed himself mortally, and Cleopatra soon after ended her life by poison, leaving Herod to breathe Freely for the first time in long years. Octavian took him into favour, bro

ful

wel hon

and

hon Gre

wor

espi Her

who king A

flatte of gr was

Hero

Rom every they set! they plyin Of

Herod

from tories

The fe

and th

the te

reduce success to Cæs

him.

Antioc suitably Jewish

Lebano sea-coas

to Hero

Agrippa

taken, 1

Amidst thing to

ried a J Alexand the allia for he needed such a man as a protection on the eastern borders, to defend them against the Parthians. Jericho was given back, Sanaria was incorporated with his kingdom, with various coast towns, and some territory beyond the Jordan. Cleopatra's body guard of 400 Gauls was presented to him by Octavian. But if he had honour and rewards, it was at the cost of an expenditure, to do honour and homage to his imperial master, that seemed to have overstrained his resources.

Once more safe from dangers that might well have overwhelmed him, Herod found, on his return from attendance on Octavian, such troubles at home as darkened his whole future life. The quarrels of his seraglio had come to a head, Alexandra and her daughter Marianne were now the only two left of the old royal race, and were so much the more hated by the kindred of Herod. Marianne—tall and noble in person-had the pride of a daughter of kings, and let Salome, Herod's sister, feel it. 'In Herod's absence she discovered that, for the second time, he had left orders to kill her and her mother if he did not return; and she showed what she thought of this when he did come back, by receiving him with undisguised aversion. Her enemics took advantage of this to fan 'Herod's anger by every scandal they could invent against her, till, in the end, he believed she had been unfaithful, and the fair queen, deserted and betrayed by all, was handed over to the headsman. Herod's remorse, when she had thus actually perished, was awful. He lost his reason for a time, would call for her, lament over her, kept his servants calling her as if she were still alive, gave up all business, and fled to Samaria, where he had married her, to seek relief from his thought; in hunting. At last he fell into violent illness, and lay seemingly hopeless. Alexandra, furious at her daughter's murder, thought this the right moment to attempt to set Mariamne's two sons on the throne, which was theirs by right, more than their father's. A plague had broken out, and this the Rabbis construed into divine vengeance for the queen's death. The news roused the tyrant, ill as he was. Alexandra was instantly put to death, and many others shared her fate; but already a new suspilcion had risen to torment the wretched man. Alexandra's procla-mation of his sons as the rightful heirs had made them, also, his fancied enemies. Among the people the memory of Mariamne was sacred, and their hopes were set on her sons.

Octavian was now sole ruler of the Roman world, under the high rame of Augustus, and an era of restoration and refinement took the place of destruction and tumult. With the widespread peace, trade revived, and prosperity returned to Judea among other countries. The patronage of literature and art, the construction of public works, and the rebuilding and beautifying of Rome and the cities and towns of the provinces, were now the fashion, set by Augustus, and slavishly followed by vassal kings. In imitation of him, Herod patronized men whose writings could shed a lustre on his court—notably the two borders, to ck. Samaria towns, and uard of 400 honour and honour and strained his verwhelmed tavian, such quarrels of ughter Mariand were so ine-tall and d let Salome, that, for the her if he did when he did Her enemies scandal they he had been by all, was she had thus time, would her as if she where he had At last he fell ndra, furious at to attempt eirs by right, and this the death. The instantly put y a new susdra's proclaem, also, his ariamne was der the high ient took the peace, trade er countries, ublic works, is and towns and slavishly I patronized ably the two hrothers. Nicolaus and Ptolemy, of Damascus, both, able and faithful public servants. Nicolaus was a voluminous and skilful author as well. Other Greeks and half-Greeks were put in offices of trust or honour, as members of the government, or ambassadors, or as tutors and travelling companions to his sons. Most of them served Herod honourably to the last, but there were not wanting some of the Greek sycophants who at that time infested all courts, and one of the worst of these, Eurykles the Lacedæmonian, who amassed wealth by espionage and false witnesses, was destined to be the bad genius of Herod's later years. The biting wit of the Pabbils spoke of the whole heathen government of the court as "the proselytes of the king's table."

A shrewd and able man like Herod, whose leading thought was to flatter and serve Augustus, so as to secure his permanent favour. was of great use in a disturbed border country, to one who, like Augustus, was as much disinclined as unqualified for war. When, therefore, Herod determined in the year B.C. 23 to send Mariamne's two sons to Rome, Cæsar received them with every honour, and gave the lads every facility for growing up in the midst of high Roman life. But they little knew in how dark a gloom all this early splendour would set! By a curious coincidence it was their tutor's son, with whom they rose to manhood, whom Virgil had flattered as an infant by applying to him, in the fourth Eclogue, the Messianic hope of the Jews. Of this "Messiah" of Virgil they were now the youthful friends. Herod himself took his sons to Rome, and was honoured by a gift from Augustus of the district of Lebanon, and of the lawless territories of Iturea and Trachonitis, with the fertile plains of the Hauran. The former swarmed with robbers, like Galilee in Herod's jouth. and the two latter were filled with wild clans of borderers, who were the terror of the land at large. But on his return, Herod soon reduced them so thoroughly that they were peaceful even under his successors. A year after; Herod could personally report his success to Cæsar's minister Agrippa, at Mitylene, to which he went to meet him. Two years later Herod received from Augustus, in person, at Antioch, the districts of Ulatha and Panias, to round off his kingdom suitably. He now reigned over a larger kingdom than any preceding Jewish monarch. The glory of David seemed to be outshone. From Lebanon to the far South, and from' the edge of the Desert to the sea-coast, was Jewish territory. Nor was the political glory granted to Herod less than the material. He was made the representative of Agrippa in the East, and it was required that his counsel should be taken, before anything of moment was done by consuls or governors. Amidst these flatteries from Augustus it was necessary to do something to conciliate the Jews. Hence, in the year 24 Herod had married a Jewish maiden-Mariamne, daughter of Boëthos, a priest of Alexandrian origin, who was raised to the high priesthood, to dignify the alliance with "the fairest woman in the world,"-Jesus, the son of Phabi, the high priest at the time, being set aside in his favour. Boëthos was a great accession to the small body of the Sadducean dignitaries, but, in politics, was, of course, a Herodian.

less

The

were deed

capi their

poral

sible

thron

princ Ptole he to

Amo by A Rom

offeri provi Herod

befor

daily musth

heath all the

at lag

tension with th

abound

cty, ar and fri aty, a Hircul Acalón Mircur asthe h

Oi the had be wirship dvinity Dana,

tin Se slipper

In Ty rtained

h Dam

ules, ar

emples.

The

So much intercourse, with heathenism, however, and the splendid flatteries by which Herod sought to retain and increase the power of his master, were not without their effects on Judaism. Even in the days of the Syrian kings, Palestine had been encircled by Greek towns and cities, and the immigration of heathen settlers had, in Herod's day, made the towns of the Philistine coast and of the Decapolis much more Greek than Jewish. The only bounds to Herod's introduction of foreign novelties were his dread of national opposition. Greek had become the court dialect of the Empire, as French was that of Europe in the days of Louis XIV., and still remains to a great extent; and hence it was universally favoured and spoken by the upper classes in Herod's dominions. Samaria received a Greek name, had Greek coins, and Greek idolatry. The first act of Herod, after Augustus had aggrandised him so greatly, was to build a temple of white mar-ble to his patron, at Panias, the future Cæsarea Philippi, lying finely on one of the southern spurs of Lebanon. Before long, venturing to bring heathenism nearer the centre of the land, he built another temple to Cæsar in Samaria, and surrounded it by a consecrated approach, a furlong and a half in circumference. A grand palace was also begun in Jerusalem itself, in the heathen style, with wide porticoes, rows of pillars, and baths, its one wing receiving the name of Cæsar, the other that of Agrippa. Herodium, which he built on the hill, at the mouth of the deep gorge leading, to the Dead Bea, where he had so bravely defended himself against the Parthians, was planned as a Roman castle, rising over an Italian town, with public buildings and stately aqueducts. His grandest undertaking, after the Temple, was the creation of Cæsarea, on the coast. The name was another flat-tery of the Emperor; that of one of the great signal towers on the smaller harbour was Drusion, after Cæsar's son. The great pler was adorned with splendid pillars. Broad quays, magnificent bazaars, spacious basilicæ, for the courts of law and other public uses, and huge sailors' homes, invited a great commerce; and on an eminence above rose a temple, with a colossal statue, visible far out at sea, of Augustus, as Jupiter Olympus, and another of Rome defiled as Juno. Theatres and amphitheatres were not wanting. A grand palace, designed for Herod himself, became later the Pretorium of the Roman procurators. Temples to Jupiter, Neptune, Apollo, Hercules, Bacchus, Minerva, Victory, and Astarte, soon adorned the town, and showed the many-coloured heathenism of its population. It was moreover; provided with a system of magnificent underground sewers in the Roman manner. Cæsarea was in every respect a foreign city. Its population was more heathenish than Jewish, and their mutual hatred often led to fierce riots. In Jerusalem itself a theatre and amphitheatre were crected. Count-

his favour. Badducean

he splendid e power of Even in the freek towns in Herod's apolis much ntroduction Greek had t of Europe extent; and er classes in had Greek er Augustus white marlying finely venturing to another temed approach, ace was also le porticoes, ne of Cæsar, n the hill, at here he had planned as a uildings and Temple, was another flatwers on the reat pler was: ent bazaar's, es, and huge nence above a, of Augusd as Juno. palace, dethe Roman rcules, Bac-town, and n. It was, ound sewers oreign city. heir mutual

ed. Count

less foreign proselytes and numerous heathens had settled in the city. The coins bore Greek inscriptions. Among the troops of Herod were Thracian, German, and Gallic regiments. So thoroughly, in. deed, had foreign elements gained a footing, even in the fanatical capital, in spite of the Rabbis, that, while the people at large retained their native dialect, many Greek words had been permanently incorporated with it. The very Temple displayed proofs of the irrepressible influences of the great world outside Judca. Its outer court was thronged by heathens, and countless gifts presented by heathen princes and nobles adorned the walls of the court of the priests. The Ptolemies had enriched it by numerous costly gifts. Sosius, when he took Jerusalem, in concert with Herod, vowed a golden crown. Among the Temple vessels were wine jars which had been present d by Augustus and his Empress. It was, indeed, a common thing for Romans to make gifts of this kind. They very often, also, presented offerings. When Pompey had taken Jerusalem, his first care was to provide the usual sacrifices. Agrippa, the friend and patron of Herod, offered a hecatomb on his visit to Jerusalem fifteen years before Christ, and Augustus provided that sacrifices should be offered daily at his expense to the Most High God; and such an example must have had countless followers. All the hatred between Jews and heathen was not strong enough to prevent the Temple becoming, like all the famous sanctuaries of the age, a gathering point for the world at large. all

There was, clearly, much to keep a fanatical people in a constant tension, and to make them more fanatical still. 'Heathen temples, with their attendant priests, pompous ritual, and 'imposing sacriflees, abounded in the land. Gaza, in the south, was virtually a Greek city, and worshipped a local Jupiter as the town god, "who sent minald fruitfulness on the earth." and associated with him, in its idolaty, another Jupiter—the Victory Bringer—Apollo, the Sun, and Hrcules, and the goddesses Fortune, Io, Diana, Juno, and Venus. Acalon worshipped Jupiter. Neptune, Apollo, the Sun, Mincrva, Mrcury, Castor and Pollux, and the Syrian Moon goddess Astarto, asthe heavenly Venus—the warlike, spear-bearing, Queen of Fleaven. Of the rocks at Joppa, the marks of the chains were shown which had been forged for Andromeda. A laurel-crowned Jupiter was wrshipped at Dora, north of Cæsarea. At Ptolemais the favourite dpinity was the goddess Fortune, but with her, Jupiter, Apollo, Dana, Venus, Pluto and Persephone, and Perseus, with the Egyptan Serapis, and the Phrygian Cybele, had their respective worslippers.

In Tyre, the old worship of Baal and Astarte—the Sun and Moon ptaiged their pre-eminence, with a Greek colouring of the idolatry. In Damascus Greek heathenism was in the ascendant. Jupiter, Herules, and Bacchus, Diana, Minerva, Fortune, and Victory had their emples, and were stamped on the local coins. In the future province

that

10 g

need

touc

unfi

the 0

was.

grati

cagle

tation

The

havin

that ]

abyss

of Jer

had tr

Jewis

their l

and th

Even (

faith b

made

make

be high

virtues

by pest

reign.

failed.

was a ji crimes

vears sh

theatre

which n

great po

moreove

tion, an wisest a

palace, a

corn, wl

people,

before th

the wint

killed for the evil t

-Augus

In ve to dese

of Philip heathenism was predominant. In Panias or Cæsarea Philippl, as we have seen. Herod built a temple for the worship of Augustus, but the leading divinity was the god Pan, as the old name of the town—Panias—Indicates: Jupiter, however, and Astarte, with a horn of plenty, Apollo, and Diana, had also their votaries, and no doubt their temples. Heathenism flourished in Batanza, Trachonitis, and Auranitis. Helios, the Sun, was the great object of worship, and so deep-rooted was this idolatry that the early Unristian missionaries knew no other way of overthrowing it than by changing it into the mane of the prophet Elias, and turning the temples into charches dedicated to him. Round this central divinity, however, the worship of Bacchus, Saturn, Hercules, Minerva, Fortune, Venus, Victory, Peace, and other divinities flourished more or less. The cities of the Decapolis were very heathen.

Thus, all round the central district of Palestine, and to some ex-, tent even within its limits, heathenism had already in Herod's day, and, consequently, in Christ's, its temples, altars, idols, and prests, Jehovah was no longer the sole God. With a few exceptions of Syrian or Egyptian divinifies, Greck names and rites marked the source of the corruption, though we have given the Roman names as letter known. Of all this aggressive heathenism Herod, so far as he dired, was the ostentatious patron. If he could hardly venture on nucha within the narrow limits of Judes, cenotaphs, mausoles, and ther monuments offensive to a Jew, were seen along all the leading reads, and so many places were called by new Latin names, in honoir of the imperial family, that a traveller might think he was in Taly. Nor was Herod ever without money to bestow on neighbouring heathen cities, as a mark of friendliness, in building gymnasia, piazzas, theatres, and aqueducts, or in the shape of prizes to be striven for in the circus. It seemed as if the throne of David existed only to spread heathchism. It was clear to the Jews that Herod's heather subjects were nearest his heart, since, amidst all his lavish munificency to them, he had done nothing to beautify a single Jewish town except Jerusalem, to which his additions were, themselves, heathen. The most appalling reports respecting him spread from mouth to mouth. He had preserved the body of Mariamne for seven years in honey for the most hideous ends: he had strangled all the great Rabbis, except Baba-ben-Boutra, and him he had blinded. The most intense hatret of him prevailed.

It was with the extremest mistrust, therefore, that the Rabbi heard in the year n.c. 20 that Herod intended replacing the humbh temple of the Exlle by one unspeakably more splendid. It is said that Baba-ben-Boutra had seen a crack in the old structure, and counselled Herod to build another in its place, as an explation for the murder of Marianne and the Rabbis, and to conciliate the people for his favour to heathenism. The prophecies were played off by him, to win popular sanction to his undertaking, for Haggai had foreted esurea Phil; p of Augus, name of the with a horn d no doubt honitis, and ship, and so missionaries it into the to churches the worship us, Victory, cities of the

to some exlerod's day, and prests, ons of Syrian he source of nes as letter as he dired re on nucha a, and ther ading reads, d in honour of vas in laly. neighbouing asia, piazzas, striven for 11 sted only to od's heather munificence town excert athen. The h to mouth in honey for bbis, except tense hatrel tos bo the Rabbi the humble It is saie e, and coun ion for the e people for off by him, that a new temple of surpassing glory would one day be built. But so great was the distrust, that all the materials of the new temple needed to be brought together before a stone of the old one could be touched. At last, on the regnal day of Herod, in the year B.C. 14, the unfinished structure was consecrated, and the lowing of 300 oxen at the Great Altar announced to Jerusalem that the first sacrifice in it was offered. But scarcely was the consecration over than national gratitude was turned into indignation by his setting up a great golden cagle-the emblein of heathen Rome-over the great gate, in expectation of a visit from distinguished strangers from the imperial city The nation was not duped as the king had expected." In spite of his having begun a temple so magnificent that even a Jewish saying owns that he who had not seen it had seen nothing worth looking at, an abyss yawned between him and them. He had burned the registers of Jerusalem to destroy the pedigrees of which the people boasted: he. had tried to make it be believed that he was the descendant of a foreign Jewish family, but no one regarded him as anything but the slave of their kings. All felt that his conduct was as little Jewish as his birth; and that he was rather a Roman proconsul than the King of Israel. Even the worst of the Maccabean house were bound to the national faith by the functions of the pontificate, but though Herod might be made King of Judea by the favour of Rome, no earthly power could make him a descendant of Aaron, without being which he could not he high priest.

ad foretold

In vain Herod tried to make himself beloved. He had done much to deserve gratitude in these later years, and yet the nation wrote his virtues in water, and his faults in brass. A dreadful famine, followed by pestilence, had spread misery and death in the thirteenth of his reign. No rain had fallen at the required times, and the crops utterly failed, so that there was no food for either man or beast. Men said it was a judgment of God for the defilement of His land by their king's crimes and heathen innovations, for Marianne's blood, now four years shed, still seemed to cry for vengeance, and since her mirder a theatre and circus had profaned Jerusalem, and heathen games, in which men fought with men, to the death, had been set on foot with great pomp. Samaria, the hated rival of Jerusalem, was even then, moreover, being rebuilt, with a heathen temple in it, in which a man -Augustus-was to be worshipped. Herod felt the peril of his position, and acted from policy, as others might have done from the wissest and most energetic philanthropy. Selling the very plate in his palace, and emptying his treasury, he sent funds to Egypt and bought corn, which he brought home and distributed, as a gift, among all the people, for their money had been spent for the merest necessaries before this relief came. He even provided clothing for the nation in the winter, where it was wanted, for sheep and goats allke had been killed for food, and he supplied seed corn for next spring, and thus the evil time was tided over. For a while it seemed as if the people

temp

bride

Jerus

parec

carrie

what avol

ity k

oon

Salon

Phari

Herod

ness, y

marria

process

Antipa

from tl

enemy

pater in every y to his f the sus

The pro two, Ar

might s enemies

to work

such, to

to deepe

Rome, ta

Cæsar f

liowever

turned to dominion But the women.

fruitless, tortured, and he, y cnough to relations,

Antip

On winter first times

would really become loyal. But his best acts of one moment were poiled the next. The bazaars and schools muttered treason continually. One year Herod remitted a third of the taxes, but tongues went against him none the less, and presently he seemed to justify their bitterness by decreeing that all thieves should be sold as slaves to other countries, where, as the people said, they would be lost for ever. Meanwhile Agrippa, visited Jerusalem again, and bore himself so wisely that thousands escorted him to the sea-coast when he left, strewing his path with flowers. Next year Herod returned the visit at Sinope, layishing bounty on heathen and Jewish communities alike, on his journey out and back. The Jews of each city of Asia Minor seized the opportunity of his passing, to complain, through him, to Agrippa, that the privileges granted them by Cæsar were not observed. The Greeks, on the other hand, revited them as bloodsuckers and cancers of the community, who refused to honour the gods, and hence had no right to such favour, but Herod prevailed with Agrippa on behalf of the Jews. For once, Jerusalem received its king heartily when he returned; he, on his side, acknowledging the feeling by a remittance of a quarter of the taxes of the year.

The dismal shadow that had rested over the palace in past times had been in part forgotten while the two sons of the murdered Mari-! amne were in Rome. In the year B.C. 17, however, the old troubles had begun again, to darken at last into the blackest misery. Herod had recalled his sons from Rome. Alexander, the elder, was eighteen; Aristopulus, the younger, about seventeen. They had grown tall, taking after their mother and her race. In Italy and Judea alike, their birth and position, amidst so many shares, won them universal sympathy. Roman education had given them an open, straightforward way, however, that was ill-fitted to hold its own with their crafty fawning Idumean connections, in Jerusalem. Their morals had, moreover, suffered by their residence in Rome, so that Alexander, at least, appears to have exposed himself to charges against which Jewish ecclesiastical law denounced death. In any case they were heirs to the hatred that had been borne towards their mother. Her fate doubtless affected their bearing towards their father, and it was said that they wished to get the process against Mariamne reversed, and her accusers punished. Their ruin was doubtless determined from the first; and their unsuspicious frankness, which showed their aversion to the other members of the family, gave materials for slan-der, and aided in their destruction. Hered sought to reconcile the strife by the course usual at the time, and married Aristobulus to his sister Salome's daughter Berenice, who was, unfortunately, still, en-tirely under the hostile influence of her mother, though she afterwards grew to be a worthy woman. Alexander, as became the heir to the throne, was married to a king's daughter. Glaphyra, of the family of Archelaus, king of Cappadocia-a daughter of a prostitute of the oment were son continbut tongues to justify Id as slaves ild lose the be lost for ore himself. hen he left; ned the visit unities alike. Asia Minor ough him; to not observed. suckers and ls, and hence Agrippa on king heartily feeling by a in past times irdered Mariold troubles sery. Herod was eighteen; d grown tall, Judea alike, em universal n, straightforvn with their Their morals that Alexanarges against any case they their mother: father, and it mne reversed. s determined showed their rials for slanreconcile the tobulus to his tely, still, enhe afterwards heir to the the family of stitute of the uemple of Venus in Corinth, whom Archelaus had married. The bride might be fair, but she was not prudent, and filled the palace in Jerusalem with stories of her contempt for Herod's family as compared with her own. Whatever Aristobulus said to his wife was carried to Salome, and spics were set on the two young men, to report what they could. The quarrels of the women grew tiercer daily, and volved the two brothers fatally. Nothing else was spoken of in the ity but the strife in the palace. Another element of mischief was oon added. Herod's youngest brother, Pheroras, joined the party of Salome. He had married a slave girl, who was so devoted to the Pharisees that she got her husband to pay for them the penalties Herod had imposed, for their having refused to take the oath of allegiance. Pheroras, who was a true Edomite in his fickle faithlessness, was a born conspirator. He had plotted alreidy against Herod, and resolved, in revenge for Glaphyra's loose tongue about his low marriage, to join Salome, and hunt the two youths to death.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

On Herod's return from his visit to Agrippa in Asia Minor, in the winter of B.C. 14, he found the palace in a ferment, and heard for the first time that the youths intended to apply to Augustus to have the process against Marianne reversed. In his rage, he resolved to recall Antipater, his eldest son, who, with his mother, had been banished from the court on account of Marianne, and who was thus a deadly enemy of her sons. This step was the ruin of Herod's peace. Antipater instantly joined Salome's party; watched every step and caught every word of the unsuspecting youths: never himself accused them to his father, but played the part of Iago consummately, in exciting the suspicions to which Herod's guilty conscience was only too prone. The presence of an elder brother not having sufficed to humble the two, Antipater's mother, Doris, was also recalled to court; that they might see how their hopes of the throne were vanishing. Their enemies, moreover, did their best to stir them up against each other, to work more harm to both.

Antipater, erclong, got himself named as heir, and was sent, as such, to Rome, in the year B.C. 13, but even from Italy he managed to deepen his father's suspicions so much, that Herod himself went to Rome, taking the two young men with him, to have them tried before Cæsar for intended parricide. They defended themselves so well, however, that an outward reconciliation followed, and Herod returned to Jerusalem with them, as joint heirs, with Antipater, of his dominions.

But the quiet was soon disturbed. The mutual hatred of the women, and the plots of Pheroras and Antipater, though for a time fruitless, made progress in the end. The slaves of the youths were tortured, at their suggestion, and accused Alexander of conspiracy; and he, weary of life, and furious at the toil laid for him, was foolish enough to say that he was guilty, but only in common with all Herod's relations, except Antipater. The unfortunate young man made an exception in his case as a special and trusted friend in The whole of Herod's connections were now unanimous for his death, but it was not to happen yet. His father-in-law found means to appease. Herod once more, which was the easier, as Herod had discovered the deceit of Pheroras, and had found his sister Salome carrying on intrigues which he did not approve.

He was indeed to be pitied. The family quarrels embittered his existence, and his suspicions had been so excited that he trusted nobody. Every one was suspected, and could only defend himself by raising suspicions against others. A Greek at court determined to profit by the position of affairs and bring it to a final crisis. Trusting to get money from Antipater, Herod, and Archelaus, alike, if he ended the matter, he laid his plans to bring about the death of the young men. Forging documents and inventing acts, he made Herod believe that his sons were really plotting his death. The tyrant forthwith had them thrown into chains; and their slaves put to torture, stoning those who confessed any guilt. Nothing kept him from putting the princes to death but fear of offending Augustus, for even Salome tormented him day and night to kill them, though one was her son-in-law. "At last Herod sent to Rome for permission from Augustus to put them to death. The request cost him the crown of Arabia, Augustus declaring that the man who could not keep his house in order was unfit to be trusted with additional kingdoms. Yet he gave him permission to do as he thought fit with his sons. A court, one-half of Romans, one-half of Jews, was now held at Berytus, and Herod appeared as prosecutor. In vain the Roman proconsul brought his three sons with him to excite the grey-headed despot's fatherly feelings a He acted like a madman: detailed his injuries with the utmost passion, and supplied the want of proof by bursts of fury. The sentence was given as he desired, and he had the satisfaction of having pursued his own sons to the death. In the year n.c. 7, the princes were strangled at Samaria, where Herod had married their mother an end of herabing anon after THE DE HORIZE o If the hoary murderer hoped for peace by this new crime he was deceived. Antipater lived with his two brothers, Archelaus and Philip, at Rome, and, there, first excited them against his father. and then betrayed them to him. Pheroras, Herod's brother, he sought to make his tool in killing Herod. He was afraid that if he did not destroy his father soon his own infinite villany in the past would be discovered. " Pheroras was, in fact, in a false position. His wife and her relations were strongly on the side of the Pharisees. who wished above everything to destroy Herod, and put Pheroras, as their friend, on the throng, Prophecies were circulated by them, that it was the will of God that Herod and his sons should lose the kingdom, and that Pheroras and his wife should inherit it. Their tool, Herod's eunich, Bagoastiwas to have ita son who would be the Messiah Many were won over in the palace, but the plot was dis-cove that cour soon had mour Sit Inc secre pater when have out o Alexa most those Ant whom friend of his his m spirits might given he cou As he taken f him as consul. hated. erimina Herod The tions, w deadty could n of him, were ab son of S whole a the spir anger of violation divine Herod i eagle ove rewards. from ven Fhe: whole of h, but it was ppease. Herod red the deceit on intrigues mbittered his e trusted nod himself by determined to isis. Trusting , alike, if he e death of the e made Herod e tyrant forthnut to torture, him from putstus, for even ough one was rmission from the crown of not keep his nal kingdoms. h his sons. held at Beryman proconsul eaded despot's d his injuries of by bursts of had the satis-In the year erod had mard doin 75 JOINS.

crime he was Archelaus, and ast his father, he afraid that if villany in the false position. the Pharisees, t Pheroras, as by them, that lose the king-Their tool, would be the plot was discovered, and many Rabbis and others put to death. Heroid demanded that Pheroras should divorce his wife, but he preferred to leave the court and go to Perea with her, rather than forsake her. Here he soon after suddenly died, report said, by poison. Herod, however, had his body brought to Jerusalem; and appointed a great national mourning on his account.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

Inquiry respecting his death at last brought to light the whole secret listory of years. He had died by taking poison, sent by Antipater to kill Herod. The plot was found to have wide ramifications where least suspected. Even the second Marianne was proved to have been privy to it, and her son Herod, was on this account, blotted out of his father's will. Thus, as Josephus says, did the ghosts of Alexander and Aristobulus go round all the palace, and bring the most deeply hidden secrets to light, summoning to the judgment seat those who seemed freest from suspicion.

Antipater was now unmasked, and Herod saw the kind of man for whom he had sacrificed his wife and his sons. With pretended friendliness he sent for him from Rome, nor did any one warn him of his danger, though proceedings had gone on many months against his mother, ending in her divorce. Perhaps, says Josephus, the spirits of his murdered brothers had closed the mouths of those who might have put him on his guard. His first hint of danger was given by no one being at Caesarea to receive lim, when he landed, but he could not now go back, and determined to put a bold face on it. As he rode up to Jerusalem, however, he saw that his escort was taken from him, and he now felt that he was ruined. Herod received him as he deserved, and handed him over for trial to the Syrian proconsul. All hastened to give witness against one so universally hated. It was proved that he had sought to poison his father. A criminal who was forced to drink what Antipater had sent for Herod presently fell dead of Antipater was led away in chains, not built The strong nature of Herod at last gave way under such revelations, which he forthwith communicated to his master at Rome. A deadly illness seized him, and word ran through Jerusalem that he could not recover. The Rabbis could no longer repress their hatred of him, and of the Romans. Their teachings through long years were about to bear fruit. Two were especially popular, Judas, the son of Sariphal, and Matthias, the son of Margolouth, round whom a whole army of young men gathered daily, drinking in from them the spirit of revolution. All that had happened was traced to the anger of Jehovah at Herod's desecration of the Temple and city, and violations of the Law during his whole reign. To win back the divine favour to the nation, the heathen profanations erected by Herod in the Temple must be pulled down, especially the golden eagle over the great gate. Living or dying, they would have eternal rewards for this fidelity to the laws of their fathers. Such counsels from venerated teachers were like fire to the inflammable passions of

010

Date.

NOLL

DUL

Sizt.

.735

2.WI

ferred victor

kindki

ing th

advan

had be long b

the ass sure o from chapte period

ment t

of the

Babyle

thusias

forth, their re

favour

with an that the

and wa

of their

cumsta restorat

the year ion, and once m of the hundred Persian

The r

second tainty t

together were op

7,337 sei

who might hearted

youth. In the middle of the day a vast crowd of students of the Law rushed to the Temple; let themselves down with ropes from the top of the great gate, tore down the hated symbol of Rome and of idolatry, and hacked it to pieces in the streets. Mobs rose in other parts of the city, also, to throw down other objects of popular hatred, but the troops were turned out, and the unarmed rioters were scattered, leaving, forty young Pharisees in the hands of the military. Brought before Herod and asked who had counselled them to act as they had done, they answered, touchingly, that they did it in obedience to the Law. In vain he tried to alarm them by saying they must die: they only replied that their eternal reward would be so much the greater. The two Rabbis and the young men were sent to Jericho for trial before Herod, and the Rabbis and the ringleaders were burned alive, the others being beheaded. On the night after they suffered there was an eclipse of the moon, which fixes the date as the 11th of March, B c, 4.

as the 11th of March, B.C. 4. Death was now busy with Herod himself. His life had been a splendid failure. He had a wide kingdom, but his life had been a long struggle with public enemies or with donlestic troubles, and in his oil age he found that all this misery, which had made him the munderer of his wife, her mother, and his two sons, bot to speak of other relations and connections, had been planned for selfish ends by those whom he had trusted. The curse had come back on him to the full, for his eldest son had sought to murder him. His government had been no less signal a failure, for revolt had burst into flames at the mere report of his death. The strong man was bowed to the dust at last. A loathsome disease prostrated him, and he suffered such agonies that men said it was a punishment for his countless iniqui-tics. Carried across the Dead Sea to the sulphur baths of Callirhoe, he fainted and almost died under the treatment. All round him were alarmed lest he should do so before ordering the execution of Antirater, but an attempt on the part of the prisoner to bribe his gapler was fatal to him. Augustus had granted permission for his execu-tion, with the caustic irony, that it was better to be Herod's sow than his son. Five days after Antipater had fallen Herod himself ex-pired. He was in his seventy-first or seventy-second year when he died. and its and the bound of the first of seventy second year when he died. and its and the bound of the first of the fi ali weather and the state of the state of the second and make a second and make and the second a The see within the rest of was to king the low hattie to so the -isonitary voices have don not be considering an anisonal the day' built Bredsee rein't the whole and a self the section of the sector and sector state to Buchandat the rene of Servicite's hand the other cure ritiges single chine is the dimension of the model of the second could be added by a second to be a seco "I Bar shive be the share THE Assignment on double satore lied . which we when the set of the set the west the west the start of the start the etoises and may but be that he to the first day off her best off

The menedity the Tongul; for themselves down with ropes want

dents of the ropes from of Rome and rose in other pular hatred, rs were scatthe military. nem to act as id it in obesaving they would be so were sent to e ringleaders e night after fixes the date the assurtanter e had been a e had been a ubles, and in nade him the t to speak of effish ends by on him to the s government nto flames at ed to the dust suffered such ntless iniquiof Callirhoe. and him were tion of Antibe his gabler or his execuod's sow than himself exear when he of grow shad Bryg bill" to Hir briband WERP Balter BT : The se shirt Butter Trendson 1 + 101 W WY TRIES malmarthings t instro off w 17.537 servin + Filmiter hidron No EPSTALSA

the dow of the armiticated autobautonate bated spanied of Roma. ad. abritabilited Land has found in the inite and the attress. Nobs ruse in athen Calling JEWISH WORLD AT THE TIME OF CHRIST. OF HIS WHEN the conquest of Babylon by Darius and Cyrus had trans-ferred the fate of the Jews, then in captivity in that empire, to the victorious Persian, their long exile had had its natural effect in rekindling their zeal for the religion of their fathers, and of intensify-ing their desire to return to their own land. Before Cyrus finally advanced to the conquest of the great city, more than twenty years had been spent, for the most part, in distant military operations. But long before he drew near Babylon, the Jewish leaders, stimulated by the assurances of the prophets then living, or of earlier date, felt sure of his victory, and, of the speedy deliverance of their nation from their hated oppressors, The glorious promises of the late chapters of Isaiah, and the exultation of many of the Psalms of the period, are doubtless only illustrations of the intense spiritual excito-ment that prevailed in the Jewish community, throughout the lands of their exile, during the years immediately preceding the fail of Babylon. All that was noblest in them had been roused to an en-thusiasm which might, perhaps, become perverted, but was, hence-forth, never to die. The spirit of intense nationality, fed by zeal for their religion as the true faith, confided to them exclusively as the ferencies of Heaven — bad been gradually kindled and favourites of Heaven, — had been gradually kindled, and yearned, with an irrepressible carnestness, for a return to their own country, that they might be free to fulfil its requirements. Men of the purest and warmest zeal for the honour and the historic rights of their race had never been wanting during the captivity, as the natural leaders of their brethren, and now took advantage of the character and circumstances of Cyrus to obtain from him a favourable devree for the restoration of Jerusalem, and the free return to it of their people. In the year 536 before Christ, such as were most zealous for their religion, and most devoted to their country and race, were thus enabled once more to settle in the land of their fathers, under the protection of the Persian empire, of which they continued subjects for two hundred years, till Alexander the Great, in B.C. 333, overthrew the Persian power. The new community, which was to found the Jewish nation for a second time, was by no means numerous, for we still know with certainty that the whole number of these Pilgrim Fathers, who gathered together amidst the ruins of Jerusalem, and the other cities which were open to them, did not amount to more than 42,360 men, with 7,337 servants of both sexes. The dangers and difficulties before those who might return had winnowed the wheat from the chaff: the fainthearted and indifferent had lingered behind, and only the zealots and The rock on which Jewish nationality had foundered in former times had been too frank an intercourse with other nations: too great a readiness to adopt their customs, and even their heathenism; too slight a regard to the distinctively Jewish code of social and political law; and, with these, too wide a corruption of morals. The veryexistence of the nation had been imperilled, and, now, the one fixed thought, of leader and people alike, was to make it sure for the future.

Their manners, and their whole system of civil and religious laws. offered a ready and effectual means to aid them in this supreme obfect. It was only necessary to secure an intensely conservative spirit which should exclude all change, and Israel would henceforth liave an abiding vitality as a separate people. Nor was this difficult, for the ancient framework of their social polity largely provided for it. The spirit of Judaism, as embodied in its sacred law; directly commanded, or indirectly implied, all that was needed. Intercourse with other nations, as far as possible, must be prevented; the introduction of foreign culture shut out; the youth of the nation trained on a fixed model; and, finally, no gap must be left by which new opinions might possibly rise from within the people themselves. For this last end some studies must be entirely prohibited, and others rewarded with supreme honour and advantage. Finally, some caste or class must make it their special care to see that this great aim of national isolation be steadily carried out—a caste which should itself be secure of abiding unchangeableness, by clinging fanatically to all that was old and traditional, and shrinking from any contact with whatever was foreign or new.

The Moscic laws had already inclined the Jew to a dislike to friendly intercourse with other nations, and this feeling grew to a fixed contempt and aversion towards the rest of mankind, after the return, as Judaism deepened into a haughty bitterness of soul, under the influence of national sufferings, and weakened spiritual life. Tacitus describes the Jews of his day as true to each other and ready with help, but filled with bitter hatred towards all other men; cating and marrying only among themselves; a people marked by sensual passions, but indulging them only within their own race.

. . . The first instruction to proselytes, says he, is to despise the gods, to abjure their country, and to cast off parents, children, or brothers. Juvenil paints them as refusing to point out the way to any but a Jew, or to lead any one, not circumcised, to a fountain he sought.

A nation which thus hated all other men would be little disposed to sit at the feet of any people as scholars. Prejudice, strengthened by express laws, shut out all foreign culture. A curse was denounced against any Jew who kept pigs, or taught his child Greek. No one sephu his ra eign r free-b wise, to exp vancer Grecia Still th a sacre -d It w Hebrev trouble help hi a secon Rabbis made J But t the Jew that "I Law, he he learn graven faught a to learn the duti the misf history t The e thus, wi mere lea a finishe Rabbis n recogniz into two lay a wi ments, tl as " curs The fli call them years aft these ear that they were the ence in t than had

could

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

13

could hope for eternal life who read the books of other nations. Josephus, with true Jewish pride, and smooth hypocrisy, tells us that his race looked down on those who had learned the language of foreign nations, such an accomplishment being common not only to free-born men, but to any slave who fancied it. He only is reckoned wise, he adds, among the Jews, who is skilled in the Law, and able to explain the sacred writings. In the days of our Lord, when advancement could be obtained only by a knowledge of Greek and of Greetan culture, pride and scruples often gave way before interest. Still the nation, as a whole, held ignorance of everything not Jewish a sacred part of their religion.

It was as little permitted that the hated Gentile should learn the Hebrew language or read the Law. St. Jerome expatiates on the trouble and cost he had at Jerusalem and Bethlehem to get a Jew to help him in his Hebrew studies. His teacher "feared the Jews, like a second N'codemus." "He who teaches infidels the Law," said the Rabbis. "transgresses the express words of the command; for God made Jacob" (the Jews, not the heathen) "' to know the Law." But though thus jealous of others, the greatest care was taken by the Jew to teach his own people the sacred books. Josephus boasts that "if any one asked one of his nation a question respecting their Law, he could answer it more readily than give his own name; for he learns every part of it from the first dawn of intelligence, till it is graven into his very soul." That every Jewish child should be taught to read, was held a religious duty; and every boy was required to learn the Law. There was no Jew who did not know thoroughly the duties and rites of his religion, and the great deeds of his fathers. the misfortune was, that they were kept utterly ignorant of any other history than their own."

The exact knowledge of the contents of the Books of the Law was, thus, within the reach of all; but much more was needed than the mere learning by heart the five Books of Moses, to gain the repute of a finished legal knowledge. The almost endless comments of the Rabbis must be mastered, by years of slavish labour, before one was recognized as a really educated man. Hence the nation was divided into two great classes of learned and unlearned, between whom there lay a wide gulf. Puffed up with boundless pride at their attainments, the former frankly denounced their less scholarly countrymen as "cursed countrymen" or boors.

The first trace of a distinct caste of professional legalists, if I may call them so, is found in the days of Ezra and Nehemiah, some eighty years after the return from Babylon. Jewish tradition speaks of these early Rabbis as the "men of the Great Synagogue," and adds that they trod in the footsteps of the prophets—that is, that they were their virtual successors. From the first they had great influence in the State. To secure a far more strict observance of the Law than had been known before, they gradually formed what they called eader of the Itim endices ed in former as: too great thenism; too and political The very he one fixed e for the fu-5月4月9月4月 ligious laws, supreme obconservative d henceforth this difficult. provided for law: directly Intercourse d; the introation trained y which new mselves. For nd others resome caste or great; aim of should itself atically to all contact with a dislike to g grew to a nd, after the ess of soul, ned spiritual o each other rds all other ople marked ir own race. despise the children, or the way to fountain he fift to Matrice tle disposed trengthened s denounced k. No oue

Jude

Was

whic to ta

At

power

Judea

given

had p

name

their

than th

how th

Herod

every swear

was cal They e

God, as the kin

Sadduc

position office, t

carry of popular

Ther

Judea. empire.

organiza

plined a

The san

over the democrat

people, w selves the trusted i peculiar dangers.

earthly p

They repu

who main

human po

was that misfortune

morality, rather than a hedge round it—that is, they added endless refinements and subtletics to every command, that by the observance of such external rites and precepts, the command itself should be the less in danger of being broken. To this "hedge" Judaism owes the rigid fidelity of its people ever since for rites and forms at all times find, a much stricter obedience from the masses, than the commands of a spiritual religion.

In spite of all precautions, however, the new State had already the seeds of religious division in its midst, in a number of doctrines, hitherto more or less unknown, which had been brought back in the return from the captivity. These were adopted by the orthodox party, who were the great majority, but rejected by a few, in whom may be traced the germ of the sect afterwards known as the Sadducees. The orthodox leaders, on the other hand, were the beginning of the party afterwards known as the Pharisees. It was they who put the "hedge" round the Law; the Sadducees insisted on standing by the simple letter of the laws of Moses alone. The one were the High-Churchmen of their nation, the others the Rationalists, with a cold creed which denied the existence of angels, the resurrection of the dead, and a future state, and rejected Rabbinical tradition. The mass of the nation followed the Pharisees: the Sadducees, were always a very small party.

always a very small party. The Pharisees, as the leaders of the great bulk of the people, soon merged more strictly religious aims in the political one of moulding the State into a spurious independent theoracy, under the rule of their party. The Law, as expounded by them, with their thousand additions, was to rule supreme, in civil as well as religious life; in the affairs of the nation, as well as those of the individual.

The stormy times of the later Maccabæan kings gave the Pharisees an opportunity of playing a great part in the nation. The priests had previously given the new State a head in the person of the high priest, Simon, brother of Judas Maccabæus. But his grandsons quarrelled, and the future history of the house became little more than a record of cruelties, disputes for the throne, civil wars, and persecutions. The orthodox party, led by the Pharisees, stoutly resisted the growing corruption, which ended by the Romans assuming supreme authority in Judea, with Herod as the vassal king. Asked to be arbiters, they ended as conquerors. The supremacy of the Pharisees, who had done much to assist the popular cause, was now secure. They had organized themselves as a great power in the State, and maintained this position till the fall of the nation. Under Herod and the Romans, they were the soul of the great national party, which only sullenly submitted to Herod and his family, or to the Roman power, as, alike, foreign oppressors, whom they could not shake off, foes accursed of God, as usurpers of His heritage. To them may be traced the restless turbulence of the nation, which neither terror nor flattery could appease-a turbulence which made

s and subtleexternal rites in danger of id fidelity of find a much of a spiritual d already the of doctrines, it back in the the orthodox ew, in whom as the Sadduthe beginning was they who d on standing one were the nalists, with a courrection of adition. The idducees, were e people, soon e of moulding der the rule of their thousand ligious life; in lual.

the Pharisees The priests had n of the high his grandsons ne little more ivil wars, and risees, stoutly Romans assumvassal king. supremacy of lar cause, was t power in the ation. Under great national s family, or to they could not heritage. To nation, which which made Judea, to Herod and the Roman emperors, what Ireland at one time was to England, and Poland to Russia—the seat of chronic revolt, which knew no considerations of odds against success, and seemed to take counsel of despair.

At the time of our Lord the Pharisees were at the height of their power. Josephus tells us that they numbered above 6,000 men in Judea, in the days of Herod the Great; that the women, as especially given to religious entitusiasm, were on their side, and that they even had power enough at times, to defy the king. He describes them by name as a party among the Jews who prided themselves greatly on their knowledge of the Law, and made men believe they were holier than their neighbours, and especially in favour with God, and relates how they plotted with some of the ladies of Herod's family to put Herod to death. They thwarted and opposed the king, he says, on every hand, refusing to own his authority or that of Rome, or to swear allegiance either to him or the Emperor, when all the nation was called on to do so, and, with the exception of them, consented. They even claimed the gift of prophecy, through the inspiration of God asserting that He had decreed that Herod should die, and that the kingdom would pass to those who had shown them favour. The Sadducees had shrunk to a party few in number, though high in position, and had become so unpopular that when appointed to any office, they accepted it sorely against their will, and were forced to carry out the views of their rivals—the Pharisees—for fear of the popular thry.

The political schemes of this great party were not confined to Judea. Its members were numerous in every part of the Roman empire, and were all closely bound to each other. Without a formal organization or a recognized head, they were yet, in effect, a disciplined army, by implicit and universal assent to the same opinions. The same spirit and aim inspired all alike: teacher and follower, over the world, were but mutual echoes. They were, in effect, the democratic party of their nation, the true representatives of the people, with the Maccabæan creed that "God has given to all alike the kingdom, priesthood, and holiness." They considered themselves the guardians of the Law and of the ancestral customs, and trusted implicitly that He who selected their nation to be His peculiar people would protect them and their country from all dangers, believing that, as long as they were faithful to God, no maintained that a man's destiny was in his own hands, and that human policy ought to dictate political action. Their noble motto was that "everything depends upon God but a man's piety." The misfortune was that, to a large extent, they divorced religion from morality, hying stress on the exact performance of outward rites, rather than on the duties of the heart and life, so that it was possible, as has been said of the Indian Brahmins, for the worst men among them to be in their sense, the most religious for pall really spolits lift The one thought of this great party, in every land, was nothing less than the founding of a grand hierarchy, perhaps under the Messiah, in which the Jews should reign over the whole world, and Jerusalem become the metropolis of the earth ... They did not confine themselves to the spread of superstition and fanaticism amongst their own race, but sought proselytes in every country, especially among the rich and among women." Even in Rome, sunk as it was, like all the Gentile world of that age, in the dreariness of worn-out religions, they made many female converts among the great, even in the palace of the Cæsars. Their kindness to their poor their loving. family life, their pure morals, compared to the abominations of the times, their view of death as a sleep, their hope of resting with the just, and rising with them to immortal happiness, had great charms in such an age. The Great Synagogue of Ezra's day, according to their traditions, had loft them a solemn charge-"to make many scholars;" and they compassed sea and land, in furtherance of this command, to make one proselyte, though their worthless dependence, in too many cases, on more outward religiousness, often made him, when won, of twofold more the child of hell than themselves." The vast numbers thus gained to Judaism are shown in the multitudes from all countries present at the Passover immediately after our Lord's death, and from many passages in heathen writers. The Pharisees, or, as I may call them, the Rabbis, had thrown the hereditary priestly body of the nation quite into the shade in the days of Christ: A priest gained his position by birth; a Babbi-owed his to himself. The Temple service, and the vast sums of money received from Jews in all parts of the world, as a yearly tax in support of their religion, gave the priests great influence, and opened, to the higher grades, the control of the highest ecclesiastical offices in the nation, which still survived. But the influence of the Pharisees was so overwhelming that even the highest priests were. glad to respect their opinions, to secure public favour. A priest," says the Mischun, "has precedence of a Levite, a Levite of other Israelites, a common Israelite of a bastard, a bastard of one of the Nethinim, a Nethin of a foreign proselyte, a foreign proselyte of a freed slave." This is the law when these persons are equal in other. respects; but if a bastard be a Rabbi (a scholar of the wise), and the high priest not a Rabbi (and, therefore, one of "the ignorant country people" who are "cursed" for not knowing the Pharisaic traditions; and requirements), such a bastard takes a higher place than such a high priest. The multitudinous rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic Law, with the vast additions of the Pharisaic "hedge," and the corrupting influence of power and general flattery, had the worst effects on the Pharisees as a body. They gave themselves up largely to formalism, outward religiousness, self-complacency, im-measu till at the na mingle cate th orYet numbe denour God b doubth Amon Jerusal the byonly fo obtain ] fore me the grou who, to shut,9 a Pharise might s who cla thing ne kept-th would a the seco -who t be gentl revile ag all men. wouldst like just Baptist? all these The P ness in t and hyp had out founders alive the the imm now fas after Oh S afg ( ) off off bad JH ESTE ini you

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

measurable spiritual pride. love of praise, superstition and deceit. till at last, after the destruction of the Temple, they themselves laid the name of Pharisce aside, from its having become the symbol of mingled fanaticism and hypocrisy. How thoroughly does this vindicate the language often used respecting them in the Gospels! "Yet it must not be thought that there were no good men in their number: Though the Talmud names six classes of them, which it denounces, it has a seventh-the Pharisee from Love, who obeys God because he loves Him with all his heart. But the six classes. doubtless, marked the characteristics of too large a proportion. Among the many figures, whom our Lord passed in the streets of Jerusalem, and elsewhere, He must often have met those to whom the by-name was given of Shechemite Pharisees-who kept the Law only for interest, as Shechem submitted to circumcision simply to obtain Dinah; or the Tumbling Pharises who, to appear humble before men, always hung down his head, and shuffled with his feet on the ground, so that he constantly strubled; or the Bleeding Pharisee who, to keep himself from seeing a woman, walked with his eyes shut and, so, often bled lis head against posts; for the Mortan Pharisee, with a cap like a mortar over his eyes, to shut out all that might shock his pure nature; or the What-more-can-I-do Pharisee, who claimed to have kept the whole Law, and wished to know something new, that he might do it also; or the Pharisee from Fear, who kept the Law only for fear of the judgment to come. But He would also see Pharisees such as Hillel, the greatest of the Rabbis, the second Ezra, who was, perhaps, still alive when Christ was born who taught his school of a thousand pupils such precepts as "to be gentle, and show all meekness to all men," "when reviled not to revile again," "I Love peace and pursue it be kindly affectionate to all men, and thus commend the law of God," or "Whatsoever thou wouldst not that a man should do to thee, do not thou to him,"--- or like just Simeon, who was a Pharisee, or Zacharias, the father of the Baptist, or Game lel, the teachers of Paul, or like Paul, himself, for all these were Pharisees, and must have been types of many more. The Pharisees had, however, as a whole, outlived their true usefulness in the days of Christ, and had become largely a hollow pretence and hypocrisy; as the monks and friars of Luther's day, or earlier. had outlived the earnest sincerity and real worth of the days of their. founders. They had done good service in former times, in keeping alive the faith of their nation in the Messiah, the Kingdom of Heaven, the immortality of the soul, and the judgment to come, but they were now fast sinking into the deep corruption which, in a generation after Christ's death, made them drop the very name of their party. the Most of States of the and the second of the last of the second of th und the correlations influence of minier and general fluttery, bed the worshill acts on the Phanisces as a course. They gave themselves up Inreally to formalism, outward religiousness, wif-complacency, but

and the second of the second second men among.

andenlight Hit was nothing under the a world, and not confine nongst their ially among was, like all ut religions. even in the their loving. tions of the ing with the reat charms according to: make many: cance of this dependence, made him. lves." The e multitudes ly after our 9. WILL JULY thrown the hade in the h; a Rabbiast sums of. a yearly tax luence, and ecclesiastical nences of the priests were. 15 A priest, 1 ite of other one of the oselyte of a ual in other wise), and he ignorant e Pharisaic igher place remonies of c ." hedge," ry, had the mselves, up acency, im80

minuted clistaff: thut his transformed doubted and a treater of the poinmost hard har at they this structure of the structure formulation of the structure of

THE RABBIS AT THE TIME OF CHRIST, AND THEIR IDEAS RESPECT-ING THE MESSIAH: Ing the most important figures in the society of Christ's day were the Pharisees, it was because they were the Babbis or teachers of the Law. As such they received superstitious honour, which was, indeed, the great motive, with many, to court the title, or, join the party.

party. The Rabbis were classed with Moses, the patriarchs, and the prophets, and claimed equal reverence. Jacob and Joseph were both said to have been Rabbis. The Targum of Jonathan substitutes Rabbis, or Scribes, for the word "prophets," where it occurs. Josephus speaks of the prophets of Saul's day as Rabbis. In the Jerusalem Targum all the patriarchs are learned Rabbis: Issae learned in the school of Seth; Jacob attended the school of Eber; and, hence, no wonder that Rabbis are a delight to God, like the incense burned before Himi They were to be dearer to Israel than father or mother, because parents avail only in this world, but the Rabbi for ever. They were set above, kings, for is it not written, "Through me kings reign?" Their entrance into a house brought a blessing; to live or to eat with them was the highest good fortune. To dine, with a Rabbi was as if to enjoy, the splendour of heavenly majesty, for it is written, "Then came Aaron and all the elders in Israel, to eat bread with Moses" father in-law before God."

To learn a single verse, or even a single letter, from a Rabbi could be repaid only by the profoundest respect, for did not tradition say that David learned only two words from Ahithophel, and yet, simply for this, David made him his teacher, counsellor, and friend, as it is written. "Thou art a man mine equal, my guide, and mine acquaintance?" The table of the Rabbi was nobler than that of kings; and his crown more glorious than theirs. The Rabbis went even farther than this in exalting their order.

The Rabbis went even farther than this in exalting their order. The Mischna declares that it is a greater crime to speak anything to their discredit than to speak against the words of the Law. The words of the Rabbis are to be held as worth more than the words of the prophets; for the prophet is like a king's legate who is to be owned on showing his master's signet, but the Rabbis need no such witness, since it is written of them. "Thou shalt do according to the sentence which they shall shew thee;" whereas it is said of the prophets, "If he giveth thee a sign or a wonder." Miracles are related which happened to confirm the sayings of Rabbis. One cried out; when his opinion was disputed. "May this tree prove that I am right!" and forthwith the tree was torn up by the roots, and hurled a o herbandin r' . must the con DETTE BISTERS : TEC : that materiater on any bid on S RESPECT. MINORITED SCOTT i mor bailing ... 's day were teachers of which was, , or join the has senordent hs, and the h were both. substitutes e it occurs. obis. In tho Isaac learned and, hence, cense burned er or mother, rever. They ch me kings g; to live or ding with a majesty, for Israel, to eat e Law, The the words of who is to be need no such ording to the said of the es are related ine cried out, ve that I am and hurled a hundred ells off. But his opponents declared that a tree could prove nothing. "May this stream, then, witness for me!" cried Ellezer, and at once it flowed the opposite way. Still, his opponents urged that water could prove nothing. "Now," said Eliezer, "if truth be on my side, may the walls of the school confirm it!" He had scarcely spoken when the walls began to bow inwards. The Rabbi Joshua threatened them: "What is it to you if the sons of the wise dispute? you shall not fall;" and, to honour Rabbi Joshua, the walls did not fall wholly together, but neither did they go back to their places, that the honour of Rabbi Ellezer might not suffer, but remain slanting to this day. "At last Ellezer called for the decision of heaven: "If I am right, let heaven witness." Then came a voice from heaven, and said, "Why dispute ye with Rabbi Ellezer? he is always right!"

Rabbi could tradition say d yet, simply iend, as it is ine acquaintof kings; and their order.

Inordinate pride, one might think, could hardly go farther than this, but the bigoted vanity of the Rabbis Christ had daily to meet was capable eyen of blasphemy in its claims. The Talmud tells us that there are schools of the licavenly Rabbis above, as well as those of the earthly Rabbis here, and relates that there once rose in the great Rabbis' school of heaven a dispute respecting the law of the leper. The Almighty, who is the Chief Rabbi of the skies, pronounced a certain case, detailed in the text, as clean. But all the angels thought differently—for the angels are the scholars in this great academy. Then suid they, "Who shall decide in this matter between us?" It was agreed on both sides—God and the angels—to summon Ramban, the son of Nachman, since he was wont to say of himself, "No one is equal to me in questions respecting leprosy." Thereupon the Angel of Death was sent to him, and caused him to die, and brought his soul up to heaven, where Ramban, when brought before the heavenly academy, confirmed the opinion of God, which gave God no little delight. Then heavenly voices, which sounded down even to the earth, exalted the name of Ramban greatly, and miraeles were wrought at his grave.

Such a story illustrates better than any words the audacious claims and blasphemous spiritual pride with which our Lord had to contend, and which He often rebukes in the Pharisees of His day. Even the Talmud itself, in other parts, is forced to reprove it. The only palliation of it lies in the fact that the Law itself was written in a language which the people had long ceased to speak, so that it was left to the Rabbis to explain and apply it. The heads and leaders of the nation, they kept it in their leading strings. It had come into their hands thus, and they were determined to keep it in the same state. Heresy, which would be fatal to the blind unanimity which was their political strength, could only be excluded by rigidly denouncing the least departure from their precepts. The Law and the Prophets must, therefore, be understood only in the sense of their traditions. The reading of the Scriptures was hence discouraged, lest it should win their hearts, and they should cease to reverence the words of the Rabbis. One hour was to be spent on the Scriptures in the schools; two on the traditions. The study of the Talmud alone won honour from God as from man. That vast mass of traditions, which now fills ten folio volumes, was, in reality, the Bible of the Rabbis and of their scholars.

in

the.

It v by v

trad

to be

them

senid

was anot

wear

from

Ton

to ge bless

often

comm

Th

favou stren

Jewis

in aft

learne

of con

That Proph

theolo

cruel

every

power

the de

intoler The

Rabbis

Messia

the Ch ever t

their g

Moses,

promis

Israel. ing, by far-dis

Suc Pharia

Bu

In

Yet, in form, the Law received boundless honour. Every saying of the Rabbis had to be based on some words of it, which were, however, explained in their own way. The spirit of the times, the wild fanaticism of the people, and their own bias, tended, alike, to make them set value only on ceremonies and worthless externalisms, to the utter neglect of the spirit of the sacred writings. Still, it was owned that the Law needed no confirmation, while the words of the Rabbis did.

So far as the Roman authority under which they lived left them free, the Jews willingly put all power in the hands of the Rabbis. They or their nominees filled every office, from the highest in the priesthood to the lowest in the community. They were the casuists, the teachers, the priests, the judges, the magistrates, and the physicians of the nation. But their authority went still further, for, by the Rabbinical laws, nearly everything in daily life needed their counsel and aid. No one could be born, circumcised, brought up, educated, betrothed, married, or buried—no one could celebrate the Sabbath or other feasts, or begin a business, or make a contract, or kill a beast for food, or even bake bread, without the advice or presence of a Rabbi. The words of Christ respecting binding and loosing, were a Rabbinical proverb: they bound and they loosed as they thought fit. What they loosed was rermitted —what they bound was forbidden. They were the brain, the eyes, the cars, the nerves, the muccles of the people, who were mere children apart from them.

This amazing power, which has lasted for two thousand years, owed its vitality to the fact that no Rabbi could take money for any official duty. They might enslave the minds of the people, but they never abused their despotism to make gain of them. The great Rabbi Hillel says, "He who makes gain of the words of the Law, his life will be taken from the world." No teacher, preacher, judge, or other Rabbinical official, could receive money for his services. In practice this grand law was somewhat modified, but not to any great extent. A Rabbi might receive a moderate sum for his duties, not as payment, but only to make good the loss of time which he might have used for his profit. Even now it is a Jewish proverb that a fat Rabbi is little worth, and such a feeling must have checked those who, if they could, would have turned their position to pecualary advantage. How, then, did the Rabbis live? A child destined for this dignity began his training at five years of age, and gradually shrank. d they should bur was to be aditions. The as from man. folio volumes, holars.

Every saying , which were, of the times, bias, tended, and worthless cred writings, mation, while aey lived loft hands of the ce, from the nunity. They res, the magisauthority went thing in daily born, circumuried—no one a business, or bread, without rist respecting ey bound, and was vermitted rain, the eyes, ho were mere ousand years, ke money for if the people, if them. The the words of No teacher, eceive money newhat modiht receive a only to make or his profit. little worth, they could, e. for this digually shrank.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

in most cases, into a mere pedant, with no desire in life beyond the few wants needed to enable him to continue his endiess study. It was, moreover, required that every Rabbi should learn a trade by which to support himself. "He who does not teach his son a trade," says Rabbi Jehuda, "is much the same as if he tanght him to be a thief."

In accordance with this rule, the greatest Rabbis maintained themselves by trades. The most famous of them all, Rabbi Hillel, senior, supported himself by the labour of his hands. One Rabbi was a needle-maker, another a smith, another a shoemaker, and another, like St. Paul, who also was a Rribbi, was a tent-cover weaver. Rabbis who taught in schools received small presents. from the children.

But there were ways by which even Rabbis could get wealth. To marry the daughter of one was to advance one's self in heaven; to get a Rabbi for son-in-law, and provide for him, was to secure a blessing. They could thus marry into the richest families, and they often did it. They could, besides, become partners in prosperous commercial houses.

The office of a Rabbi was open to all, and this of itself secured the favour of the nation to the order, just as the same democratic feelingstrengthened the Romish Church in the middle ages. The humblest Jewish boy could be a master of the Law, as the humblest Christian, in after times, could in the same way be a monk or priest; and the learned son of a labourer might, in both cases, look down with a kind of contempt on the proudest noble.

Such, then, were the Rabbis in the days of our Lord. They were Pharisees as to their party, and Rabbis in their relations to the Law. That one who came, not indeed to destroy the Law and the Prophets, but to free them from the perversions of Rabbinical theology, should have been met by the bitterest hatred and a cruel death, was only an illustration of the sad truth, to which every age has borne witness, that ecclesiastical bodies who have the power to persecute, identify even the abuses of their system with the defence of religion, and are capable of any crime in their blind intolerance.

The central and dominant characteristic of the teaching of the Rabbis was the certain advent of a great national Deliverer—the Messiah. or Anointed of God, or in the Greek translation of the title, the Christ. In no other nation than the Jews, has such a conception ever taken such root, or shown such vitality. From the times of their great national troubles, under their later kings, the words of Moses, David, and the prophets had, alike, been cited as divine promises of a mighty Prince, who should "restore the kingdom to Israel." The Captivity only deepened the faith in His duly appearing, by increasing the need of it. Their fathers had clamoured, in far-distant times of distraction and trouble, for a King, who should

of ( His

hea

and

God

tho

sple

Go

the

con

spol

dom

Mes

and

the.

real

true the hum

day,

shou

of H

be of

of It'

leher

lieve

came

then

them

Him He w

tribe

Israe

beaut

sprin

and c

their

Him:

foes;

grape

tlesh

years

bands

broke

whose

TI

S

be their Messiah, the viceroy of God, anointed by prophets. They had had kings, but had found only a partial good from them. As ages passed, the fascination of the grand Messianic hope grew ever more hallowed, and became the deepest passion in the hearts of all, burning and glowing henceforth, unquenchably, more and more, and irrevocably determining the whole future of the nation.

For a time, Cyrus appeared to realize the promised Deliveror, or at least to be the chosen instrument to prepare the way for Him. Zerubbabel. in his turn, became the centre of Messianic hopes. Simon Maccabæus was made high-priest-king only "until a faithful prophet -the Messiah-should arise." As the glory of their brief independence passed away, and the Roman succeeded the hated Syrian as ruler and oppressor, the hope in the Star which was to come out of Jacob grew brighter, the darker the night. Deep gloom filled every heart, but it was pierced by the beam of this heavenly confidence. Having no present, Israel threw itself on the future. Literature, education, politics, began and ended with the great thought of the Messiah. When would He come? What manner of kingdom would He raise? The national mind had become so inflammable, long before Christ's day, by constant brooding on this one theme, that any bold spirit, rising in revolt against the Roman power, could find an army of fierce disciples who trusted that it should be he who would redeem Israel.

""That the testimony of Jesus was the spirit of prophecy," was only the Christian utterance of a universal Jewish belief respecting the Christ. "All the prophets," says R. Chaja, "have prophesied only of the blessedness of the days of the Messiah." But it was to Daniel especially, with his seeming exactness of dates, that the chief regard was paid. It was generally believed that "the times" of that prophet pointed to the twentieth year of Herod the Great, and, when that was past, not to mention other dates, the year 67 of our reckoning was thought the period, and then the year 135; the war which ended in the destruction of Jerusalem rising from the one calculation, and the tremendous insurrection under Hadrian from the other.

With a few, the conception of the Messiah's kingdom was pure and lofty. The hearts of such as Zacharias, Elizabeth, Mary, Anna, Simeon, and John the Baptist, realized, more or less, the need of a redemption of the nation from its spiritual corruption, as the first recessity. This grander conception had been slowly forming in the minds of the more religious. Before the days of the Maccabees, the conception of the Messiah had been that of a "Son of David," who should restore the splendour of the Jewish throne; and this, indeed, continued always the general belief. But neither in the Book of Daniel nor in the later religious writings of the Jews before Christ, is the Messiah thus named, nor is there any stress laid on His origin or, birthplace. Daniel, and all who wrote after him, paint the Expected Que as a heavenly being. He was the Messenger, the Elect hets. They i them. As ie grew ever earts of all, d more, and iveror, or at Him. 6 Zepes. Simon iful prophet f independd Syrian as come out of filled every confidence. Literature, ught of the gdom would ble, long bene, that any ould find an who would phecy." was f respecting prophesied nt it was to hat the chief nes" of that , and, when our reckonwar which calculation, other. Ha vas pure and ary, Anna, e need of a the first nening in the ccabees, the avid," who his, indeed, he Book of fore Christ. His origin int the Ex-, the Elect of God, appointed from eternity, to appear in due time, and redeem His people. The world was committed to Him as its Judge all heathen kings and lords were destined to sink in the dust before Him, and the idols to perish utterly, that the holy people, the caosen of God, under Him, might reign for ever. He was the Son of Man, but, though thus man, had been hidden from eternity, in the all glorious splendour of heaven, and, indeed, was no other than the Son or God, sitting at the right hand of the Majesty of His Father. He was the Archetypal Man—the ideal of pure and heavenly Manhood, in contrast to the fallen Adam. Two centuries before our era, He was spoken of as "the Word of God," or as "the Word," and as "Wisdom," and as, in this way, the Incarnation of the Godhead.

Such were, in effect, the conceptions gradually matured of the Messiah—the Immortal and Eternal King, clothed with divine power, and yet a man—which had been drawn from the earliest, as well as the latest, sacred or religious writings of the national But very few realized that a heavenly King must imply a holy kingdom; that His true reign must be in the purified souls of men... Few realized that the true preparation for His coming was not vanglorious pride, but humiliation for sin.

The prevailing idea of the Rabbis and the people alike, in Christ's day, was, that the Messiah would be simply a great prince, who should found a kingdom of matchless splendour. Nor was the idea of His heavenly origin at all universal: almost all fancied He would be only a human hero, who should lead them to victory a out viao it was agreed among the Rabbis that His birthplace must be Bethlehem, and that He must rise from the tribe of Judah. it it was believed that He would not know that He was the Messiah till Elias came, accompanied by other prophets, and anointed Him. Till then He would be hidden from the people, living unknown among them. The better Rabbis taught that the sins of the nation had kept Him from appearing, and that "if the Jews repented for one day, He would come." He was first to appear in Galilee: for, as the ten tribes had first suffered, they should first be visited. be He was to free Israel by force of arms, and subdue the world under it. of How beautiful," says the Jerusalem Targum, "is the King Messiah, who springs from the house of Judah! He girds His loins, and descends, and orders the battle against His enemies, and slays their kings and their chief captains; there is no one so mighty as to stand before Him. He makes the mountains red with the blood of His slaughtered foes; His robes, dyed in their blood, are like the skins of the purple grapes." ""The beasts of the field will feed for twelve months on the tlesh of the slain, and the birds of the air will feed on them for seven. years." "The Lord," says the Targum, "will revenge us on the bands of Gog. At that hour will the power of the nations be broken; they will be like a ship whose tackling is torn away, and whose must is sprung, so that the sail can no longer be set on it.

Then will Israel divide the treasures of the nations among them—a great store of booty and riches, so that, if there be the lame and blind among them, even they will have their share." The heathen will then turn to the Lord, and walk in His light.

The universal kingdom thus founded was to be an earthly paradise for the Jew. In that day, say the Rabbis, there will be a handful of corn on the top of the mountains, and the stalks will be like palmtrees or pillars. Nor will it be any trouble to reap it, for God will send a wind from His chambers, which will blow down the white flour from the ears. One corn of wheat will be as large as the two kidneys of the hugest ox. All the trees will hear continually. A single grape will load a waggon or a ship, and when it is brought to the house they will draw wine from it as from a cask.

hid

the t

true

throu

ages,

truth

agen Th a far

throu

the li

they

the '

their holy

In th

whic

a visi

of ma

realiz

supre

not u

as suc

The

rule, ual a

by the

and v stood,

King,

only I

ent of

-His

till the history

Instea

gods,

proph

But

As

A great king must have a great capital, and hence Jerusalem, the capital of the Messiah's kingdom, will be very glorious. In the days to come, say the Rabbis, God will bring together Sinai, Tabor, and Carmel, and set Jerusalem upon them. It will be so great that it will cover as much ground as a horse can run over from the early morning till its shadow is below it at noon. It will reach to the gates of Damascus. Some of them even tell us that its houses will be built three miles in height. Its gates will be of precious stones and pearls, thirty ells long and as broad, hollowed out. The country round will be full of pearls and precious stones, so that Jews from all parts may come and take of them as they like.

In this splendid city the Messiah is to reign over a people who shall all be prophets. A fruitful stream will break forth from the Temple and water the land, its banks shaded by trees laden with the richest fruits. No sickness or defect will be known. There will be no such thing as a lame man, or any blind or leprous; the dumb will speak and the deaf hear. It will be a triumphal millennium of national pride, glory, and enjoyment,

It was to a people drunk with the vision of such outward felicity and political greatness, under a world-conquering Messiah, that Jesus Christ came, with His utterly opposite doctrines of the aim and nature of the Messiah and His kingdom. Only here and there was there a soul with any higher or purcr thoughts than such gross, material, and narrow dreams.

A strand to the provident of the standard of t g them—a lame and he heathen ly paradise handful of like palmor God will the white as the two nually. A brought to usalem, the In the days Tabor, and that it will early mornhe gates of will be built and pearls, round will l parts may people who th from the en with the here will be e dumb will hium of na-ard felicity essiah, that the aim and d there was i gross, ma-antifigura entral (1) central (1) fighthous fighthous fighthous (1) fighthous (1) écutar (1) écutar (1) and proved of the second states of the second

Lithand par Hi BIRTH OF JOHN THE BAPTIST. (1/011 m. Kenterrol

THE time had at last come, when "the mystery which had been hid from ages and from generations"—the high purpose of God in the two thousand years' history of Israel—was to be revealed. The true relations of man to his Maker and Heavenly King had been, throughout, the grand truth to be taught to mankind, in all future ages, from the education and example of the Jewish race, and this truth was now to be revealed directly by God Himself, all lower agencies and means having proved inadequate.

The people of Israel had been set apart by God, while yet only a family, as specially His own. Brought at last, after centuries, through the discipline of the household, the bondage of Egypt, and the life of the wilderness, to a settled home, as a nation, in Canaan, they were still more distinctly proclaimed by Him as "His people," the "portion of Jehovah"—the "lot of His inheritance." The Lord their God was their only King, and they were declared to be a "people holy to Him," chosen as peculiarly His, "above all other nations." In them, as a nation, if they faithfully observed the "covenant" which they had made with Him, was to be exhibited the spectacle of a visible kingdom of God amongst men—its obligations on the side of man, its high privileges on that of Heaven.

As centuries passed, however, it was clear that Israel failed to realize the ideal of a "people of Jehovah," with Him as its direct and supreme Ruler. The anarchy of the days of the Judges—a period not unlike our own early history—showed too clearly that the nation, as such, was far from illustrating the true relations of man to God. The Kingdom of God on earth, in the simplest form of His direct rule, with no human intervention, having proved too lofty and spiritual a conception, the second step in its development was introduced, by the appointment of a supreme magistrate as His representative and viceroy, He remaining the actual Sovereign. The king of Israel stood, thus, before the people, simply as the deputy of its invisible King, and was as much His servant, bound in all things to carry out only His will, as any of his subjects. Yet his office, as the vicegerent of God, had an awful dignity. He was "the Lord's Anointed" —His Messiah—consecrated to the dignity by the holy oil, which had, till then, been used only for priests.

But the ideal sought was as far from being attained as ever. The history of Israel was very soon only that of other kingdoms round it. Instead of being holy to Jehovah, it turned from Him to serve other gods, and grew corrupt in morals as well as creed. The order of prophets strove to restore the sinking State, and recall the nation to

dre

att

Da

kno reta

twe

fore

pos

tool

san alor

Saci

nor

She

ston

han

ecy

out

holy

fron

sym

anoi

soler

nate rise (

study

the

came

neges

past

10.Th

could

tion,

bers (

Jerus

come

Talm

to tak

24,000

hower

rect i

even

a cou

dis As

its faith; and good kings from time to time listened to them, and sought to carry out their counsels. But the people themselves were degenerate, and many of the kings found it easy to lead them into still greater sin and apostasy. The prophets—at once the mouthpieces of God and the tribunes of the people—nobly resisted, but only to become martyrs to their fidelity. The inevitable result came, in the end, in the ruin of the State; and the exile in Assyria and Babylon.

The third step was no less a failure. On the return from captivity, a zeal for Jehoyah as the only King of Israel became the deep and abiding passion of all Jews. 'Henceforward, it was determined that what we might call the " Church" should act as His vicegerent: By turns, priests, priest-kings, and other ecclesiastical or religious leaders, led the nation; but only as temporary substitutes for a great expected King-the Messiah, before whose glory even that of David or Solomon, their most famous monarchs, would be as nothing. But they were as insensible as ever to the highest characteristics of a true Ruler of the "people of God," ruler or subject, alike, looking only to outward power and splendour, and political ambition, and forgetful of the grand fact that the kingdom of God must, first, of necessity, be the reign of holiness and truth, in both. Religion became a thing of outward observances, with which the heart and life had no necessary connection. "The Messianic hopes of the centuries immediately before Christ degenerated into a standing conspiracy of the nation against their actual rulers, and a vain confidence that God would raise up some deliverer, who would "restore the kingdom to Israel" in a merely political sense. another hun both togs to rice sten

Thus the true conception of the kingdom of God had been wellnigh lost. A few of the Rabbis, indeed, with a finer spiritual sense, taught that the condition of the coming of the Messiah must be sincere repentance for their sins, on the part of the nation, and a return to a purer state. But such counsels had little weight with the community. Blindly self-righteous, and yet wedded to evil, everything tended to a speedy extinction of Judaism by its inveterate corruption.

It was at this time that the first direct steps were taken by God towards the advent of the true Messiah, who should finally erect, once for all, His, the true, divine, kingdom, on earth, all the dreams of which had hitherto been such disastrous failures. He would thus save Judaism from itself, by perpetuating that which was permanent in it under His holy and spiritual reign. Discarding all that was merely temporary and accidental, and bringing into lasting prominence whatever of everlasting truth the older dispensation contained, He would found the only true kingdom of God possible on earth; one in which the perfect holiness of the Anointed Head should stimulate a like holiness in all, and, indeed, demand it. The Messianic hope was to be realized in a grander and loftier sense than man had hem, and lves were them into ie mouthsisted, but sult came, syrialand newingwill from cape the deep tetermined leegerent: rareligious or a great of David hing. But is of a true oking only nd forgettofonecesbecamela ife had no nturies imispiracy of e that God ingdom to nate could been wellitual sense, h must be , and a reht with tho evil, everyeterate cor red blaco nally erect. the dreams would thus permanent i that was ing promicontained, earth; one H stimulate sianic hope man had dreamed, but the very grandeur and loftiness of the realization would attest its divine authority and source. The priests among the Jews had been divided, since the time of David, that is, for about a thousand years, into twenty-four courses, known also as "houses" and "families." Of the original courses, however, only four, each numbering about a thousand members, had returned from Babylon, after the captivity; but out of these the old twenty-four courses were reconstituted, with the same names as before, that the original organization might be perpetuated as far as possible. The priesthood of the second Temple, however, never took the same rank as that of the first. The diminished glory of the sanctuary in which it ministered, compared with that of Solomon, alone, made this inevitable, for the second Temple had no longer the sacred ark, with its mercy seat and the overshadowing cherubim, nor the holy fire, kindled, at first from heaven, nor the mysterious Shechina, or Glory of God, in the Holy of Holies, nor the tables of stone written by the finger of God, nor the ancient Book of the Law, handed down from the great lawgiver, Moses. The spirit of prophecy was no longer granted; the Urim and Thummim no longer shone out mysterious oracles from the breast of the high priest, and the holy anointing oil, that had been handed down, as the Rabbis taught, from the days of Aaron, had been lost. There could thus be no consecration of the high priest, or his humbler brethren, by that symbol which above all others had been most sacred-the priestly anointing. The priests were now set apart to their office only by solemnly clothing them with their official robes, though the subordinate acts of sacrifice and offering were no doubt continued. The rise of the Synagogue, and the supreme importance attached to the study of the Law, tended also to throw the office of the priest into the background. In the centuries after the Return, the Rabbi became the foremost figure in Jewish history. Yet the priest was a necessary appendage to the Temple, and even the traditions of the past lent his office dignity. In a services at the Temple in Jerusalem, where alone sacrifices could be offered, were entrusted to the care of each course in rota-

could be offered, were entrusted to the care of each course in rotation, for a week of rix days and two Sabbaths, and, hence, the members of each, whose ministrations might be required, had to go up to Jerusalem twice a year. As the office was hereditary, the number of the priesthood had become very great in the days of our Lord, so that according to the come very great in the days of our Lord, so that, according to the Talmud, in addition to those who lived in the country, and came up to take their turn in the Temple services, there were no fewer than 24,000 settled in Jerusalem, and half that number in Jericho. This, however, is no doubt an exaggeration. Josephus is more likely correct in estimating the whole number at somewhat over 20,000. But even this was an enormous proportion of clergy to the population of a country like Judea, as the name was then applied,—a district of about 100 miles in length, and sixty in breadth, or as nearly as possible of the same number of square miles as 'Yorkshire.' 'They must have been a more familiar sight in the streets of Jerusalem, and of the towns and villages, than the seemingly countless ecclesiastics in the towns and cities of Spain or Italy at this time.

The social position, as well as official standing, of such a large order necessarily varied greatly. First in consideration, after the high priest, came his acting deputy, or assistant the Sagun-and those who had filled that office, and the heads or presidents of the twenty-four courses collectively, the "high priests," or "chief priests," of Josephus and the New Testament; and next, the large body of officiating priests, the counterpart of our working clergy. But there were, besides, large numbers, like the lower priests of Russia or Italy, uneducated, who were the object of contempt, from their ignorance of the Law, in the Rabbinical sense. The countless sacrifices and offerings, with the multiplied forms to be observed in connection with them, which were settled by the strictest rules, required a knowledge at once minute and extensive, which could only be attained by assiduous and long continued labour. Hence, it is no wonder that there were many priests who knew little beyond the rites in which they had to take part. The priesthood was thus divided into "the learned"-or those who knew and observed the countless laws of ceremonial cleanness, and the endless ritual enforced_and "common priests." There were others, doubtless in large numbers, whom some physical defect, or other cause, disqualified from public ministrations, though they retained a right to their share of the offerings.

C

a

ei tl f

eft

81 oth

th

121

W

W

80 p

th an fa

of j en

at

A

ino

»bu

pri

prl.

ye

to be an

ord

MO

ina ish

The great mass of the order must have been poor in the days of Christ, which were certainly in no way higher in tone than those of Malachi, when blind, and torn, and lame, and sick, beasts were offered for sacrifice, so that the priest as well as the altar suffered; and "the whole nation" withheld their tithes and offerings. The higher ranks of the priesthood-rich and haughty-contributed to the degradation of their poorer brethren, whom they despised, oppressed, and plundered. Nor was the general character of the priesthood unaffected by the corruption of the times; as a class, they were blind guides of the blind. Not a few, however, in so numerous a body, must have retained more or less religious sensibility, for we find that many even of the members of the Jerusalem Council were so alive to the corruption of the hierarchy at large, that they believed on Christ, its great antagonist, and a large number of priests, shortly after His crucifixion, openly joined His disciples." But the evil was deep-rooted, and widely spread, and the corruption and demoralization of the order, especially in its higher ranks, grew more and more complete. The high society of Jerusalem was mainly comprised in a circle of governing priestly families; and their example tainted the whole priesthood: during a all the rear bell of the frequences tob of any first the west strain, remark was used stranger all ly as possi-They must em, and of estastics in ich a large i, after the Sagan-and ents of the or "chief t, the large ing clergy. ests of Rusfrom their ntless sacrirved in cones, required only be ate, it is no beyond the vas thus dibserved the ss'ritual endoubtless' in se, disqualiight to their 1111 8. 2 1005 14 1 1 1 the days of an those of beasts were ar suffered; rings. The ntributed to lespised, opf the priests, they were numerous a lity, for we ouncil were at they beof priests, s. But the uption and ranks, grew was mainly their examin in the field of the VILL IN det

The pride, the violence, irreligion, and huxury of this ecclesiastical aristocracy already, at the beginning of our era, pointed to the excesses they erelong reached. After the banishment of Archelaus, in the early childhood of our Lord, the government became an aristocracy-the high priests virtually ruling the nation-under the Romans, Under Herod and his son, they had been mere puppets, elevated to their dignity, for their proved subserviency to their royal' masters. Under Agrippa II., ladies hought the high priesthood for their husbands for so much money; Martha, daughter of Boëthus, one of these, simoniacs, when she went to see her, husband, spread carpets from her door to the gate of the Temple. The high priests themselves were ashaned of their most sacred functions. The having to preside over the sacrifices was thought by some so repulsive and degrading, that they wore silk gloves when officiating, to keep their hands from touching the victims, Given to gluttony-the special vice of their Roman masters-they also, like them, abandened themselves ito; luxury, and oppressed the poor, to obtain the means for indulgence. Thoroughly heathen in feeling, they courted the favour of the Romans, who repaid them by rich places for their sons, and they openly robbed and oppressed the poor priests supported hy the people, going the length of violence in doing so. Josephus tells us that they even sent their servants to the threshing-floors, and took away by force the tithes that belonged to the priests, beating those who resisted, and that thus not a few poorer priests died from a want, sublimited in the real of the real but was the real of the

Yet the office of the priest, in itself, was the highest in Jewish society, and the whole order formed a national aristocracy, however poor and degraded many of its members might be. Every priest was the lineal descendant of a priestly ancestry running back to Aaron, and as the wives of the order were generally chosen from within its families, this lofty pedigree in many cases marked both parents. The law fixed no certain age at which the young priest should enter on his office, though the Rabbis maintain that he needed to be at least twenty, since David had appointed that age for the Levites. As in corrupt ages of the Church, however, this wholesome rule was not always observed, for Josephus tells us that Herod made Aristobulus high priest when he was seventeen, and we read of common priests whose beards were only beginning to grow.

yet only a lad. As soon as the down appeared on his cheek he had to appear before the council of the Temple, that his genealogy might be inspected. If it proved faulty, he left the Temple clad in black, and had to seek another calling: if it satisfied the council, a further ordeal awaited him. There were 140 bodily defects, any one of which would incapacitate him from sacred duties, and he was now carefully inspected to discover if he were free from them. If he had no blemish of any kind, the white tunic of a priest was given him, and he began his official life in its humbler duties, as a training for higher responsibilities in after years.

aw:

cou

His

san

usu

ing

the

gree

tool the

the

day

sma

mon

and

valu

the i

to in

on n fact.

land

Jew

Rabl

cerer

not.

tastir

demo

he m

head, caref

laws

wido

lawfu

and r

Josep

regar

take ]

witne

conse

have larly

which

bility.

Thi

Th

It

Ordination, or rather the formal consecration, followed, when the priest attained the legal age. For this, much more was necessary, in, theory, than freedom from bodily blemish. The candidate must be of blameless character, though, in such an age, this, no doubt, was little considered.

The ceremony, as originally prescribed, was imposing. The neo phyte was first washed before the sanctuary, as a typical cleansing, and then clothed in his robe. His head was next anointed with holy oil, and then his priestly turban was put on him. A young ox was now slain as a sin-offering, the priest putting his hands upon its head; then a ram followed, as a whole burnt offering, and after that, a second ram as an offering of consecration, and this was the crowning feature in the rite. Some of the warm blood of the victim was put on the right ear, the right thumb, and the right great toe of the candidate, to show his complete consecration to the service of Jehovah. He was then sprinkled with the blood flowing from the altar, and with the holy oil, as if to convey to him their purifying virtues, and transform him into another man. This sprinkling was the sign of completed consecration; he was now a priest. The pieces of the ram for the altar, with the meat-offering that accompanied them, were put into his hands, to show that he could, henceforth, himself prepare what was needed for the altar services. Having laid them on the altar, other ceremonies followed. The pieces of the sacrifice usually given to the priest were consumed as a special sin-offering, and with their burning on the altar the installation into office ended. The first day, however, did not close the ceremonies. The same sacrifices offered on this day were required to be repeated on each of the seven days following, that the solemnity of the act might be felt by all. It had been thus in the early and glorious days of the priesthood, but how many of these ceremonies were observed under the second Temple is not known.

The official dress of a pricet, like t at of the priests of ancient Egypt, was of white linen. On his hear he wore a kind of turban in his ministrations, reverence demanding that he should not enter the presence of Jehovah uncovered, and for the same reason his feet were left bare, the ground on which he stood, in the near vision of the Almighty, being holy. The full official dress was worn only in the Temple, and was kept there by a special guardian, when the ministrations ended for the time. In private life a simpler dress was worn, but whether in his service at the Temple or at his house, he was still a priest, even to the eye. The richly ornamented dress of the high priest—the "golden vestment" as it was called by the Rabbis was, of course, much more costly than that of his brethren, and passed down from one high priest to another. It marks the character of the times that, under the Romans, it was kept in their hands, and only given out to the high priest, for use, when needed.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

for higher , when the eccessary, in te must be doubt, was The neocleansing d with holy ung ox was on its head; at, a second ning feature put on the candidate. h. He was nd with the d transform completed ram for the ere put into re what was altar, other given to the their burnst day, howered on this s following, d been thus bw many of not known. of ancient f turban in ot enter the is feet were sion of the only in the h the minisdress was s house, he dress of the e Rabbisand passed acter of the s, and only

The duties of the priests were many and various. It was their awful and peculiar honour to "come near the Lord." None but they. could minister before Him, in the Holy Place where He manifested His presence: none others could "come nigh the vessels of the sanctuary or the altar." It was death for any one not a priest to usurp these sacred prerogatives. They offered the morning and even. ing incense; trimmed the lamps of the golden candlestick, and filled them with oil; set out the shewbread weekly; kept up the fire on the great altar in front of the Temple; removed the ashes of the sacrifices; took part in the slaving and cutting up of victims, and especially in the sprinkling of their blood; and laid the offerings of all kinds on the alter. They also announced the new moons, which were sacred days, like the Sabbatas, by the blowing of trumpets. But this was a small part of their duties. They had to examine all cases of ceremonial uncleanness, especially leprosy, clearing those who were pure, and pronouncing others unclean; to estimate, for commutation, the value of the countless offerings vowed to the Temple, and to watch the interior of the Tomple by hight. They were required, moreover, to instruct the people in to niceties of the Law, and to give decisions on many points reserved, .....ong us, to magistrates. The priests, in fact, were, within certain limits, the judges and magistrates of the land, though the Sanhedrim, which was the supreme court in later Jewish history, was composed of chief priests, laymen, and scribes, or. Rabbis, in apparently equal numbers.

It was necessary that an officiating pricest should be in every point ceremonially "clean" during his period of duty, for a priest who was, not "clean" could not enter the Temple. A wise law prohibited his, tasting wine or strong drink during the term of his service. The demonstrations of grief common to the nation were unlawful in him; he must not rend his garments, or cut himself, or shave his beard or head, whatever befell him or his. Contact with the dead was to be carefully shunned as a defilement.

The same ideal purity, as of one holy to the Lord, marked the laws of the priest's marriage, for he could only marry a virgin, or a widow who had not been divorced, and she must be a pure Israelite, lawfully born. The daughters of priests were held in special honour, and marriage of priests with them was in high favour. A priest, says Josephus, must marry a wife of his own nation, without having any regard to money, or other dignitles; but he is to make a scrutiny, and take his wife's genealogy from the ancient records, and procure many witnesses to it, just as his own had been carefully tested before his consecration. An order thus guarded by countless special laws must have been as sacred in the eyes of the multitude as the almost similarly exclusive Brahmins of India. Josephus could make no boast of which he felt so proud as that he belonged to such a sacerdotal nobility.

Thirteen towns, mostly near Jerusalem, and thus affording

to

aft

kn chi

ho

dre

the

me

bur eld

T. r.T

Jer

teri of whi

besi prie

othe

of

sept

pro

mag

spri ites,

glor

whi brea

som

heig

squa gild by 9

with

on i W

whi

trac

the

of th

the i requi

ofa

buil

phu

nor

easy access to it, when their duties called them to the Temple, were assigned to the priests. During their term of service they lived in rooms in the Temple buildings, but they came there alone, leaving their households belind them.

For the support of the order, provision had been made from the carliest times, by assigning them part of the various tithes paid by the people; fees for the redemption of the first-born of man or beast, and in commutation of vows, and what may be called the perquisites of their office—the shewbread, heave-offerings, parts of the sacrifices, the first-fruits of corn, wine, and oil, and other things of the same Mnd. Officiating priests were thus secured in moderate comfort, if they received a fair proportion of their dues, and the whole order had, besides, the great advantage of freedom from any tax, and from military service.

Among the members of this sacred caste ministering in the Temple, in the autumn of the sixth year before that with which the Christian era, as commonly reckoned, commences, was one who had come up, apparently, from Hebron. He was now an elderly man, and had left behind lim, at home, a childless wife-Elisabeth by name-like himself, advanced in years. The two were in the fullest sense "Israelites indeed:" their family records had established their common descent from Aaron, and their lives proved their lofty realization of the national faith, for "they were, both, righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless." <sup>10</sup> But, notwithstanding all the satisfaction and inward peace of innocent and godly lives, in spite of the natural pride they, doubtless, felt in the consideration that must have been shown them, as born of a priestly ancestry, stretching back through fifteen hundred years, and though they must have had round them the comforts of a modest competency, there was a secret grief in the heart of both. Elisabeth had no child, and what this meant to a Hebrew wife it is hard for us to fancy, Rachel's words, "Give me children, or else I die," were the burden of every childless woman's heart in Israel. The birth of a child was the removal of a reproach. Hannah's prayer for a son was that of all Jewish wives in the same position. To have no child was regarded as a heavy punishment. from the hand of God." How bitter the thought that his name should perish was for a Jew to bear, was seen in the law which required that a childless widow should be, forthwith, married by a dead husband's brother, that children might be raised up to preserve the memory of the childless man, by being accounted his. Nor was it enough that one brother of a number acted thus: in the imaginary instance given by the Sadducees to our Lord, seven brothers, in succession, took a dead brother's wife, fer this object. The birth of a child was therefore a special blessing, as a security that the name of his father "should not be cut off from among his brethren; and from the gate of his place," and that it should not be "put out of Israel." Ancient nations, generally, seem

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

emple, were hey lived in lone, leaving de from the thes pald by nan or beast, e perquisites he sacrifices, of the same ate comfort, whole order ax, and from the Temple. the Christian ad come up. and had left ie-like hime "Israelites mon descent ation of the lod, walking meless." rd peace of y, doubtless, n, as born of ndred years, of a modest Elisabeth hard for us I die," were The birth of ver for a son ave no child God. How Jew to bear, v should be. ldren might in, by being f a number ucees to our r's wife, fcr al blessing, cut off from and that it crally, seem to have had this feeling, and it is still so strong among Orientals, that after the birth of a first-born son, a father and a mother are no longer known by their own names, but as the father and mother of the child. There was, besides a higher thought of possible relations. however distant, to the great expected Messiah, by the birth of children: but Zacharias and Elisabeth had, reason enough to sorrow at their childless home, even on the humbler ground of natural sentiments. They had grieved over their misfortune, and had made it the burden of many prayers, but years passed, and they had both grown elderly, and yet no child had been vouchsafed them. The autumn service of the course of Abia had taken Zacharias to Jerusalem, and his week of Temple duty was passing. As a ministering priest he had a chamber in the cloisters that ran along the sides of the outer Temple court. His office took him day by day, in his white official robes, to the fourth and inmost space, immediately beside the sanctuary itself, a part into which none could enter but priests wearing their sacred garments. This court rose above three other spaces, each, in succession, lower-the court of the men, that of the women, and that of foreigners who had become Jews-each. separated from the other by marble walls or balustrades, and approached only by great gates, famous throughout the world for their magnificence. Over all, in the central space, stood the sanctuary, springing from a level fifteen steps higher than the court of the Israelites, next, below it, and thus visible from all parts, as the crown and glory of the whole terraced structure. It was built of blocks of fine white marble, each about 37 feet in length, 12 in height, and 18 in breadth, the courses which formed the foundations, measuring, in some cases, the still huger size of 70 feet in length, 9 in width, and 8 in height. The whole area enclosed within the Temple bounds formed a square of 600 or 900 feet, and over the highest level of this rose the gilded walls of the sanctuary, a building, perhaps, about 150 feet long by 90 broad, with two wings or shoulders of 30 feet cach, on a line with the facade, the whole surmounted by a roof glittering with gilded spikes, to prevent pollution from above by unclean birds alighting on it.

When it is remembered that the natural surface of the hill on which these amazing structures were built was altogether too contracted and steep to supply the level space needed, the grandeur of the architecture as a whole will be even more apparent. The plateau of the successive courts was only secured by building up a wall from the valley beneath, to the height required, and this, on the south side, required a solid mass of masonry about 600 feet in length, and almost equal in height to the tallest of our church spires, while, on the top of an erection so unequalled, rose the magnificent Royal Porch, a building longer and higher than York Cathedral. No wonder Josephus calls such a wall "the most prodigious work ever heard of," nor that its surpassing magnificence, in these years, when its dazzling whiteness shone fresh from the mason's hands, should have gone abroad to all countries. Character and a section adda

a co

of th

of t none

and

first

and

cloth

perse

ing

was

town

cust

the d

of th

cense

offer

at th

dain

on th

of w ina

of the

then

oural

offer

any of high,

rest c shipp

towa ing in their Jeho

Holy

mem

them lamb

rifice

side.

symt

and knov still

inga

Du

Th

The sanctuary itself was divided into two unequal parts-the Holy 30 and the Holy of Holles, "Before the porch stood the great altar for burnt offerings, with rows of rings, -- to which the beasts for sacrifice were tied, -slink in the pavement, near, -while a line of cedar beams, and resting on eight low pillars, gave the priests the means of hanging up it the slaughtered victims, to dress them for the alter. The Holy of Holics, the inmost division of the sanctuary, was left an awful solitude throughout the year, except on the great Day of Atonement, on the which the high priest entered it alone. In the Temple standing in " Christ's day it was entirely empty, unless, indeed, the tradition of the Mischna be correct, that a stone stood in it, instead of the longlost Ark of the Covenant, as a spot on which the high priest could rest his censer," Great gates, plated with gold, shat in this awful chamber, 10 and a thick veil of Babylonian tapestry, in which blue and scarlet and purple were woven into a fabric of matchless beauty and enor-ito mous value—the veil that was afterwards rent in twain at the time of the the crucifizion-hung before it, dividing it from the Holy Place, and shutting out all light from its mysterious depths of a to yach term set as

The entrance to the Holy Place was by two doors, of vast height and breadth, covered with plates of gold, as was the whole front on each side of them, over a breadth of thirty feet, and a height of fully a hundred and thirty. The upper part, over the gates, which remained always open, was covered by an ornamentation of great golden vines, from which hung clusters of grapes the length of a man's stature. No wonder Josephus adds that such a front wanted nothing that could give an idea of splendour, since the plates of gold, of great weight; as he adds, reflected the rays of the morning sun with a dazzling brightness, from which the eyes tuined away overpowered. When the gates of the Holy Place were opened; all was seen as far as the inner veil, and all glittered with a surface of beaten gold.

In the Holy Place stood only three things: the golden candlestick with its seven lamps, in allusion to the seven planets; the table of shewbread; and, between them, the altar of incense. In the entrance, which was merely the open fore-half of the sanctuary, and, like the rest of the front, was covered with plates of gold, stood two tables, one of marble, the other of gold, on which the priests, at their entering or coming out of the Holy Place, hald the old shewbread and the new. Before the entrance, in the court of the priests, stood the great altar of burnt offering, of unnewn stone, which no tool had touched, and the brazen laver, in which the priests washed their hands and feet before beginning their ministrations.

"In the morning," says Josephus, "at the opening of the inner temple," that is, of the court of the priests, "those who are to officiate," receive the sacrifices, as they do again at noon. It is not lawful to carry any vessel into the holy house. When the days are over in which have gone" nderine addie the Holy 10 at altar for on or saorifica an dar beama tul hangingun he Holy of awful solinement: ou standing insu radition of f the long t could rest l chamber, 10 and scarlet 90 and enorallo the time of se Place, and di 1-1 (913) 9541 (4) vast height le front on ht of fully us h remained den vines. ture. Nono that could 10 weight as fer ing bright-When the the inner I al principality andlestick (4) e table of st entrance. l. like the vo tables, r entering 11 the new. at altar of isi d and the eet before (1. 101(1821.7 B the inneritie officiate: lawful to 13 in which at a course of priests officiates, other priests succeed in the performance of the sacrifices, and assemble together at mid-day and receive the keys of the Temple, and the vessels." Among the various priestly duties none was of such esteem as the offering of incense. The heat of eastern and southern countries, by its unpleasant physical effects, doubtless first led to the practice of burning odorous substances, though luxury and mere indulgence soon adopted it. Ultimately, not only chambers. clothes, and furniture were thus perfumed, but the beards and whole persons of guests, in great houses, at their coming and leaving. Burning censers were waved before princes, and altars, on which incense was burned, were raised before them in the streets, when they entered towns or cities. Thus esteemed a mark of the highest honour, the custom was early transferred to religious worship, in the belief that the deity delighted in the odours thus offered. Hence it became a part of the recognized worship of Jehoyah, the Mosaic law requiring incense to be burnt on the altar with many offerings. A daily incense offering morning and evening, on a special altar, in the Holy Place, at the times of trimming and kindling the sacred lamps, was also or dained, and another yearly, in the Holy of Holies, by the high pricet, on the great Day of Atonement.

68

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The daily incense offering required the ministration of two priests, one of whom bore the incense in a special vessel; the other, glowing embers in a golden fire-pan, from the altar of burnt sacrifice before the entrance of the Holy Place, and these he spread on an altar within. The first priest then sprinkled the incense on the burning coals, an office held so honourable that no one was allowed to perform it twice, since it brought the offering priest nearer the Divine Presence in the Holy of Holies than any other priestly act, and carried with it the richest blessing from on high, which all ought to have a chance of thus obtaining. Like the rest of the sacred functions, it was determined daily by lot.

During the burning of the incense, each morning and night, the worshippers in the different courts remained in silent prayer, their faces towards the holy spot where the symbol of their devotions was ascending in fragrant clouds towards heaven; their fondest hope being that their prayer might rise up, odorous and well-pleasing like it, towards Jehovah. While the priests entered, morning and evening, into the Holy Place, with its seven lamps burning night and day for ever, the memento of the awful presence in the pillar of fire that had guarded them of old, and its table of "continual bread" of the presence — a male lamb, with the due fruit and drink-offering connected with such a sacrifice, was roady to be offered on the great altar of burnt offering outside. The atoning sacrifice, and the clouds of incense, the outward symbol of the prayers of the people, were thus indissolubly associated, and so holy were they in all eyes, that the hours sacrifice. They served, still further, to set a time, throughout the Jewish world, for the morning and evening prayers of all Israel, and thus, when the priest stord by the incense altar, and the flame of the burnt offering, outside, ascended, the prayers offered in the Temple courts were repeated all over the land, and even in every region, however distant, to which a godly Jew had wandered.

On the day when our narrative opens, the lot for the daily incense offering had fallen on Zacharias. In his white sacerdotal robes, withcovered head and naked feet, at the tinkling of the bell which announced that the morning or evening sacrifice was about to be laid on the great altar, he entered the Holy Place, that the clouds of the incense, which symbolized Israel's prayers, might herald the way for the smoke of the victim presently to be burned in their stead. In a place so sacred, separated only by a veil from the Holy of Holies, the awful presence chamber of the Almighty—a place where God had already shown that He was near, by human words to the officiating priest—at a moment so solemn, when it had fallen to him to enjoy an awful honour which most of his brethren could not expect to obtain, and which could never be repeated, he must have been well-nigh overpowered with emotion. At the tinkling of the bell all the priests and Levites took their stations through the Temple courts, and he and his helper began their ministrations.

And now the coals are laid on the altar, the helping priest retires, and Zacharias is left alone with the mysterious, ever-burning, lamps, and the glow of the altar which was believed to have been kindled, at first, from the pillar of fire in the desert, and to have been kept unquenched, by miracle, since then. He pours the incense on the flames, and its fragrance rises in clouds, which are the symbol of the prayers of Israel, now rising over all the earth. As the intercessor for his people, for the time, he, too, joins his supplications.

We need not question what the burden of that prayer must have been, with one, who, like him, "waited for the Consolation of Israel," and "looked for Redemption." It was, doubtless, that the sins of the nation, his own sins, and the sins of his household, might be forgiven; that Jehovah would accept the atonement of the lamb presently to burn on the great altar in their stead; and that the long-expected Hope of Israel, the Messiah foretold by prophets, might soon appear.

While he prays, there stands a mysterious Presence before him, on the right side of the altar, the side of good omen, as the angels, afterwards, appeared at the right side, in the Holy Sepulchre, and as Christ was seen, by the Martyr Stephen, standing on the Right Hand of God. No wonder he was alarmed at such a sight, in such a place. Fear of the supernatural is instinctive. In the history of his own nation, which Zacharias, like every Jew, knew so well, Jacob had held it a wonder that he had, as he believed, seen God face to face, and that his life was preserved; Jehovah Himself had hidden Moses in a cleft of the rock, that he might see the divine glory only after it had passed by, "For no man," He had said, "shall see me and live." The stout-hearted Gideon had trembled at the sight of an angel; Mano

Mean appear the sam was a 1 that no spectim scene, vividly a comp the pro a servi "Ho titude can it

at once

was as when i Most I as the of wat summo ments, of the g, outside, ase repeated all at, to which a daily incense al robes, withbell which ant to be laid on uds of the inne way for the d. In a place lies, the awful l had already ing priest—at joy an awful o obtain, and ell-nigh overhe priests and nd he and his priest retires, uning, lamps, en kindled, at been kept unon the flames, of the prayers cessor for his er must have on of Israel," he sins of the t be forgiven; sently to burn pected Hope appear. efore him, on angels, afterchre, and as Right Hand such a place. y of his own l, Jacob had face to face, udden Moses only after it ne and live." of an angel; Manoah had expected to die after a similar vision; and when Daniel saw the very angel now before Zacharias "there remained no strength in him."

But Gabriel had come on a mission befitting the world from which he had been sent. The hour had arrived when the prayer which Zacharias, and those like him, had so long raised, should be heard. The Messiah was about to be revealed, and the faithful priest who had so longed for His appearing would be honoured by a relationship to Him. He had for many a year desired a son: not only would his wish be granted, at last, but the son to be born would be the prophet, long announced, to go before the Expected One, to prepare His way. He needs not fear: he who speaks is Gabriel, the archangel, who stands in the presence of God, and as one who thus always beholds the face of the Great Father in heaven, he has a tender love to His children on earth. Had Zacharias thought how the skies rejoice at a sinner's repenting; how the angels are always near us when we pray; how they bear our prayers into the presence of God; and how, at last, they guide the souls of the just to everlasting joy; he would have rejoiced even while he trembled.

<sup>6</sup> But the heart is slow to receive the access of any sudden joy, and to hay aside disappointment. The thought rises in the heart of Zacharias that the glad tidings of the birth of the Messiah may well be true: but, as to the son promised his wife, stricken in years as she now is, can it be possible? A sudden dumbness, imposed at the angel's word, at once rebukes his doubt, and confirms his faith.

Meanwhile, the multitude without wondered at the delay in his reappearance, to bless and dismiss them. The priest's coming out of the sanctuary was the signal for the lamb being laid on the altar, and was a moment of passing interest in Jewish worship. A passage in that noble relic of pre-Christian Jewish literature, Ecclesiasticus, respecting the great patriot high priest, Simon the Just, brings a similar scene, though on a far grander scale, on the great Day of Atonement, vividly before us. The crowds now around marked some other than a common day, and we need only tone down the picture to suit it to the present case; for Zacharias, as a faithful priest, engaged on such a service, was, for the time, an object of almost sacred reverence.

"How glorious was he," says the Son of Sirach. "before the multitude of the people, in his coming forth from within the veil! He was as the morning star in the midst of a cloud, and as the moon when its days are full; as the sun shining upon the temple of the Most High, and as the rainbow that glitters on the bright clouds, and as the flower of roses in the spring of the year; as lilles by the rivers of waters, and as the branches of the frankincense tree in the time of summer.

"When he put on the robes of state, and was arrayed in all his ornaments, when he went up to the holy altar, he adorned the forecourt of the Sanctuary. But when he received the pieces of the sacrifice

tumn,

neyard

sound

ther t

reeth

me of

ce wit

ptist;

e child

missio

WHILE

ssing,

zareth

v of th

betro

ition-

noble

cient k

vid an

lt need

cestry s

lges, w

nily pr

uit of

ban wl

the ve

bry of t

direct

George

rt, Shro

Woods

val arm

d amon

, fifth s urch.

ry; its d

succes-

e Asmo

erod, wi

d left, t

imble ci

from the hands of the priests, and stood at the side of the altar, a crown of brethren round him, then was he like the young cedar on Lebanon, and they were round him like palm-trees, and all the sons of Aaron were in their splendid robes, and the gifts for the Lord in their hands, from the whole congregation of Israel. And, when he had finished the service at the altars, that he might do honour to the offering of the Most High, Almighty, he stretched forth his hand over the sacrifice, and poured out the blood of grapes; he poured it out at the foot of the altar, as a sweet-smelling savour unto the Most High, the King of all. Then should the sons of Aaron; with the silver trumpets of wondrous workmanship did they sound, and made a great noise to be heard, for a remembrance before the Most High, Then all the people, together, hasted, and fell down to the earth. upon their faces, to worship God, the Lord Almighty, the Most High, The singers also sang praises with their voices, with great variety of sounds was there made sweet melody. And the people besought the Lord, the Most High, by prayer before Him that is merciful, till the glorious exalting of the Lord was ended, and His worship was finished.

"Then he came down, and lifted up his hands over the whole congregation of the children of Israel, to give the blessing of the Lord with his lips, and to glorify His name. And they bowed themselves down to worship the second time, that they might receive a blessing from the Most High."

Fear lest any calamity might have befallen Zacharias added to the rising excitement. He might have been ceremonially unclean, and the divine anger at the Holy Place being thus polluted, might have struck him down. The offering priest never remained longer than was necessary in so august a Presence. His appearance, at last, however, explained all. They could receive no blessing that day, and Zacharias could no longer minister in his course, for he was speechless; all he could do was to tell them by signs what had happened. Had they known it, his silence for the time was but the prelude to the lasting silence of the Law, of which he was a minister, now that Christ was about to come.

Having now no more to detain him at Jerusalem, Zacharias returned home, we presume, to Hebron. His journey, if it was in October, as seems likely, would lead him through the cheerful scenes of the grape harvest—a great event, even yet, in the Hebron district. Had it been in April, at the spring service, the stony hills, and deep red or yellow soil of the valleys through which he had to pass, would have been ablaze with bright colours; shrubs, grass, gay weeds, and wild-flowers, over all the uplands, and thickets, of varied blossom, sprinkled with sheets of white briar roses, in the hollows; the beautiful cyclamen peeping from under the gnarled roots of great trees, and from amidst the roadside stones. Towns of stone houses, of which the ruins still remain, rose, flat-roofed, from the hill-sides, or from their tops, in sight of each other, all the way. Fields with stone walls, now in the e of the altar, a young cedar on and all the sons for the Lord in And, when he lo honour to the forth his hand es; he poured it r unto the Most Aaron; with the sound, and made the Most High. vn to the earth, , the Most High. great variety of ple besought the merciful, till the hip was finished. er the whole coning of the Lord owed themselves receive a blessing

.....

rias added to the ally unclean, and uted, might have ined longer than nce, at last, howng that day, and the was speech thad happened. t the prelude to inister, now that charias returned as in October, as enes of the grape ct. Had it been ep red or yellow have been ablaze ild-flowers, over kled with sheets clamen peoping rom amidst the he ruins still reeir tops, in sight lls, now in the tumn, lay idle after the harvest, or were being re-sown; but the nevards, which spread far and wide, over valley and sloping height, sounded with voices, for the houses were well-night forsaken to ther the ripe grapes Somewhere in Hebron, in its cradle of hills, ree thousand feet above the neighbouring Mediterranean, lay the me of Zacharias, and there, some time in the next year, in accordce with the promise of the angel. Elisabeth bore a son-the future ptist; and Zacharias received back his speech, on the glad day of e child getting its name-the eighth after its birth,-the day of its mission into the congregation of Israel by circumcision, and the shuft

. The off missions intratant of a the transmitter is my of owned it CHAPTER' VIII. The set of the ist state and and all contraction at 1 at 1 at 10 million of a reaction of the second

end that when the stand of the man of a stand of the section of th

A DESTRICT THE ANNOUNCEMENT TO MARY. DE DES STOLD BE

WHILE Zacharias and Elisabeth were rejoicing at their promised ssing, in their quiet home in the south, there lived in the village of zar th or Nazara, over a hundred miles to the north of than, a y of the name of Joseph, and a simple malden named Mary, who betrothed to him as his future wife. Though humble enough in ition-for he was by trade a carpenter-Joseph was, in reality, of noblest blood of his race, for he could claim descent from the cient kings of his nation, and was the legal heir to the throne of vid and Solomon.

t needs not surprise us that the representative of such an illustrious cestry should be found in a station so obscure. In the book of dges, we find a grandson of Moses reduced to engage himself as nily priest, in Mount Ephraim, for a yearly wage of "ten shekels, uit of apparel, and his victuals." At the present day, the green ban which marks descent from Mahomet is often worn in the East the very poor, and even by beggars. In our own history, the bry of the once illustrious Plantagenets so completely waned, that e direct representative of Margaret Plantagenet, daughter and heiress George Duke of Clarence, followed the trade of a cobbler in Newrt, Shropshire, in 1637. Among the lineal descendants of Edmund Woodstock, sixth son of Edward I, and entitled to quarter the val arms, were a village butcher, and a keeper of a turnpike gate, d among the descendants of Thomas Plantagenet, Duke of Gloucesr, fifth son of Edward III., was included the late sexton of a London hurch. The vicissitades of the Jewish nation for century after cenry; its deportation to Babylon, and long suspension of national life; succession of high-priestly rulers, after the return; its transition to e Asmonean line, and, finally, the reign of the Idumean house of crod, with all the storm and turmoil which marked so many changes. d left, to use the figure of Isaiah, only a root in a dry ground, an mble citizen of Nazareth, as the heir of its ancient royalty.

In the same city lived a family, which, like that of Joseph, seems to have been long settled there. The names of the parents we do not know, but they had three daughters, one of whom, Mary, was betrothed to Joseph. The relation thus created was familiar to our own ancestors as late as the time of Shakespere, and was equivalent to a civil contract of marriage, to be duly followed by the religious rite. Among the Jews of Mary's day, it was even more of an actual engagement. The betrothal was formally made, with rejoicings, in the house of the bride, under a tent or slight canopy raised for the purpose. It was called the "making sacred," as the bride, thenceforth, was sacred to her husband, in the strictest sense. To make it legal, the bridegroe'n gave his betrothed a piece of money, or the worth of it, before witnesses, with the words, "Lo, thou art betrothed unto me," or by a formal writing, in which similar words, and the maiden's name, were given, and this, in the same way, was handed to her before witnesses. Betrothals were commonly arranged by the fathers, or in case of their being dead, by the mothers, or guardians, and the consent of any brothers the maiden might have, was required. In the carlier ages, verbal agreements, sometimes confirmed by oath, before witnesses, were most in use, but after the Return, written forms became the rule.

Though betrothal was virtually marriage, and could only be broken off by a formal "bill of divorcement," the betrothed did not at once go to her husband's house. To give her time for preparation, and to soften the pain of parting from her friends, or, perhaps, in part, to let them get a longer benefit of her bousehold services, an interval elapsed before the final ceremony; it might be so many weeks, or months, or even a whole year.

It was now the sixth month from the appearance of Gabriel to Zacharias, and Mary's time of betrothal was passing quickly away in her family home at Nazareth. The future Herald had been pointed out, and now the advent of the Messiah Himself was to be announced, as silently, and with as little notice from men, for Christ, like the sun, rose in noiseless stillness.

A heart like that of Mary, full of religious thoughtfulness and emotion, must have been doubly carnest in the daily devotions which no Jew or Jewess neglected. Like all her people, the time of the morning offering, the hour of noon, and the time of the evening sacrifice, would find her in her private chamber in lowly prayer. At some such moment, the great event took place of which the narrative of St. Luke informs us.

In the sixth month, we are told, after the visit to Zacharias, Gabriel was sent from God to Mary, and having entered her chamber, where the presence of a man must have been startling at any time, but then especially,—stood before her with the usual salutation, to which he added the mysterious words, that she was highly favoured, and that the Lord was with her. Naturally troubled by such an interruption and such nature in salutation before the alarm; he other wom long-expec Holy Gho Highest sl Son of Go father Day and of Hi more than ment, but that a mir herself, ha answer is nocence:ing to thy Had the literature But in the different c mind. The elevation of the Jews life, make have risen a Jew is l nature of universal receive n Mcssiah.

What b Mary's he well as he pected 'M mind, and Visitation fer with 1 miles. What v tary she'r travelled custom o made to l cance.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

Joseph, seems nts we do not lary, was bear to our own uivalent to a religious rite. an actual enicings, in the for the purthenceforth, ake it legal, the worth of trothed unto the maiden's to her before e fathers, or and the conred. in In the oath, before n forms bely be broken i not at once ation, and to a part, to let rval elapsed months, or

Gabriel to kly away in ccn pointed announced, ist, like the ulness and ions which ime of the vening sacrayer. At e narrative as, Gabriel ber, where e, but then which he , and that terruption and such words, she shows a characteristic of her calm, self-collected nature in being able to think and reason, as if undisturbed, what the salutation might mean. Whatever fear she has, speedily passes, before the soothing words of her visitor. He bids her lay aside her alarm: he has come to tell her that she has found favour, above all other women, with God, by being chosen as the future mother of the long-expected Messiah, who was to have the name of JESUS. ""The Holy Ghost," he says, "shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore thy son shall be called the Son of God; and the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David; and He shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever: and of His kingdom there shall be no end." It would have been no. more than human weakness, if doubts had risen at such an announcement, but these he sets to rest, if they were springing, by telling her that a miracle, no less wonderful than that which would happen with herself, had already been wrought upon her relative Elisabeth. Mary's answer is the ideal of dignified humility, and meek and reverend innocence :-- "Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me accord-" ing to thy word." And presently she was alone. """ and presently she was alone.

Had the narrative of the miraculous conception occurred in the literature of a heathen nation, it would justly have raised doubts. But in the sober verses of the Gospels, written by Jews, it takes a far different character. The idea was altogether foreign to the Jewish mind. The Hebrew doctrine of the Unity of God, and of the infinite elevation of the Divine Being above man, the profound regard of the Jews for the martied state, and their abhorrence of unwedded life, make it impossible to imagine how such a thought could ever have risen among them. The improbability of its being invented by a Jew is heightened by the fact, that, though lofty thoughts of the nature of the Messiah were not wanting in some Israelites, the almost universal belief was that He was to be simply a man, who would receive miraculous endowments, on His formal consecration as Messiah.

What best to do in a position so mysterious may well have troubled Mary's heart. The angel had told her that her relative Elisabeth, as well as herself, had been favoured of God in connection with the expected Messiah, and it is a natural trait, in one whose strength of mind, and calm decision of character, had shown itself even in her Visitation, that she now determined to go to her kinswoman and confer with her, though the distance between them was over a hundred miles.

What were the thoughts of Mary in her solitary journey—for solitary she must have been, with such a secret in her heart, even if she travelled with a company? She likely went on foot, for it was the custom of her people, and, moreover, she was poor. The intimation made to her was one which she could hardly grasp in its full significance. Her Son was to sit upon the throne of His father David, and reign over the souse of Jacob, founding a kingdom which should endure for ever. But this was only what she had expected, as a Jewess, for, like all her nation, she thought of the Messiah as a Jewish king. who should restore the long-lost glories of her race, and make Israel triumphant over all the heather. She had been told, as well, however, that her child, from its birth, should be called the Son of the Highest, and the Son of God. The human mind is slow to grasp great truths, and needs to grow into a comprehension of their meaning: it cannot receive them in their fulness till it has been educated, step by step, to understand them. Long years after this she only partially realized the import of such words. In her Son's youth she was perplexed to know what was meant by His answer, when He stayed Lehind in the Temple, and years after that she failed, once again, to realize her true relations to Him. Nor does she seem to have risen to the full sublimity of her position, and of His, while He lived, though the deathless love of a mother for her child brought her to the foot of the Cross. But in such slowness to believe, and such abidingly imperfect conceptions, she was only on a footing with those who enjoyed habitual intercourse with Him, hearing His words, and seeing His miracles, day by day; for even the disciples remained, to the end, Jewish peasants, in their ideas respecting Him, thinking that He was only a political deliverer of the nation. Preoccupation of the mind. by fixed opinions, leads to a wrong reading of any evidence. We unconsciously distort facts, or invent them, to support our favourite. theories, and see everything through their medium; like the musician. who held that God worked six days, and rested on the seventh, because there are seven notes in music; or as in the instance fancied by Helvetius, where a loving couple had no doubt that two objects, visible on the disc of the moon, were two lovers bending towards each other, while a clergyman had as little, that they were the two steeples. of a cathedral. Our conclusions are determined largely by our predispositions, and our prejudices, or prejudgments, in great measure monopolize our faculties. We are not so much ignorant as perverted. We see truth through a prism. We are so entirely the creatures of education, of the opinions of our neighbours and of our family, and of the thousand influences of life, that the only way we can hope to see truth in its own white and unbroken light is, as Christ tells us, by our becoming little children. With Mary and the disciples this came, in the end, but not till then. The influence expressed in Seneca's apophthegm-Sordet cognita veritas-blinded their eyes, in part, while our Lord was still with them; but He rose to His divine grandeur as He left them. In the Acts and the Epistles the disciples breathe a far loftier spirituality, in their conception of the work and Person of Christ, than in the Gospels, and Mary, beyond question, was not behind men with whose lot she from that time cast in her own. Her meeting with Elisabeth was naturally marked by the deep emotion of both, and we owe to it the earliest and grandest of our hymns, the I of her Lord, nature, in a into which sl one imbued, the Old Testa utters a song My sould And my s For He h For, beho For He th And His He hath He hath He hath And exal He hath And the He hath In remen As He sp To Abral

The whole guage, and s people that h nature, an 'e might have of those days in oracles of G phrases and contemplation them, must special prov her people tanism, of t very atmosp hereafter to

The high veal a natu shows spiri throughout Jewish mai rejoices in greatly, not for her, wh has thus fa such; from strength wi ould en-

Jewess.

ish king, ke Israel

however,

Highest,

uths, and

t cannot step, to realized blexed to ad in the her true full subhe death-

t of the mperfect

enjoycd eing His the end, He was he mind

ce. We avourite.

usician.

nth, bc-

icied by cts, visi-

ds each

steeples

our pre-

neasure

verted

ures of

ly. and lope to us, by s came

eneca's

, while

deur as

e a far

son of 105 be-

Evel cull

e deep

of our

hymns, the Magnificat. Greeted by Elisabeth as the future mother of her Lord, Mary breaks out, with the poetical fervour of Eastern nature; in a strain of exalted feeling. The rhythmical expression into which she falls was only what might have been expected from one imbued, as all Jewish minds were, with the style and imagery of the Old Testament. Like Miriam, Deborah, Hannah, or Judith, she utters a song of joy:

My soul doth magnify the Lord. And my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour; For He hath regarded the low estate of His handmaiden: For, behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed. For He that is mighty hath done to me great things: And Holy is His name. And His mercy is on them that fear Him, from generation to generation. He hath shewed strength with His arm; He hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts He hath put down the mighty from their seats; And exaited them to flow degree. He hath filled the hungry with good things; And the rich He hath sent empty away. He hath holpen His servant Israe In remembrance of His mercy; As He spake to our fathers, To Abraham and to His seed, for ever.

The whole hymn is a mosaic of Old Testament imagery and language, and shows a mind so coloured by the sacred writings of her people that her whole utterance becomes, spontaneously, as by a second nature, an echo of that of propher and saints. It is such as we might have expected from the lips of some ideal Puritan maiden, in those days in our own history, when men were so deeply read in the oracles of God, that their ordinary conversation fell into Scriptural phrases and allusions, and their whole life was coloured by the daily contemplation of superior beings and eternal interests. Mary, like them, must have lived in a constant realization of the presence, and special providence, of One, with whose gracious communications to her people she had thus filled her whole thoughts. A Jewish puritanism, of the loftiest and most spiritual type, must have been the very atmosphere in which she moved, and in which her child was hereafter to be trained.

The high intellectual emotion and eloquence of the Magnificat reveal a nature of no common mould, as its intense religious fervour shows spiritual characteristics of the noblest type. But the strain throughout is strictly limited to what we might have expected in a Jewish maiden. It is intensely national when it is not personal. She rejoices in God, and magnifies His name, for having honoured her so greatly, notwithstanding her low estate. He has done great things for her, which will make all generations pronounce her blessed. He has thus favoured her because she feared Him, for His mercy is on such, from generation to generation. As of old, when He shewed strength with His arm, and scattered the proud, and put down the mighty from their thrones, to deliver or exalt His weak and lowly people, so, now, Ho has exalted her, and disappointed the hopes of the great ones; He has filled her, who was like the hungry, with good things, and has sent away the rich empty, who expected His favours. Through her He has holpen Israel, in remembrance of His promise to her fathers, to Abraham, and to his seed, for ever, that He would be their God. Her son was to be the Anointed who should redeem Israel out of all its troubles. As a descendant of David, she doubtless thinks of Herod, sitting, as an Edomite intruder, on the throne rightfully due to her own race, yet, as an Israelite in the best sense, the redemption of her people goes beyond the merely patriotic and political, to the restoration of that primitive loyalty to the God of their fathers which she cherished in her own breast, but the spirit of which her people had well-nigh lost, amidst all their steadfastness in the outer forms:

It is easy to understand how willingly Mary lingered in Hebron, and that she was loath to return to Nazareth sooner than was necessary. Elisabeth knew her great secret and her innocence, but at Nazareth she would be among her neighbours, who might not credit her assurances; and she must some day, as late as possible, break the matter to her betrothed. It is no wonder to find that three months passed, before she could venture to turn her face homeward once more.

Her position on her return, indeed, exposed her to a trial, great above all others to a virtuous woman. Conscious of perfect purity, she is suspected of the reverse by him to whom her troth is plighted; but He who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb relieved her from her troubles by making known to Joseph the mysterious truth. As a just man-which was a current expression of the time for a strict observer of the Law-and yet unwilling to expose her to public shame, he had made up his mind to divorce her formally, by a written "bill," duly attested by witnesses, but being divinely instructed that his fears were groundless, he freed her from all future trouble by taking her home as his wife.

Legend, as might have been expected, was early busy with the story of Mary and Joseph.

We are told that Joseph, though a carpenter, was made a priest in the Temple, because of his knowledge of the Law, and his fame for holiness. Mary was his second wife, and found herself, on her coming home, in a circle of four sons and two daughters, left by her predecessor—the family known in the Gospels as the brethren and sisters of our Lord. Mary, as has been said, was the daughter of Joachim and Anna. On her father's side, she came from Nazareth; on her mother's, from Bethlehem. Joachim was a simple, God-fearing man, a shepherd, of the tribe of Judah, and married Anna when he was twenty years of age. Twenty years passed, however, without their having a child, and both Jeachim and Anna grieved sorely at their loneliness. from among Anna, also, ha Then "Ann day of the Lo thy soul mour the Lord has gave me; it i maid, and tho and laid aside bridal robes, a she saw a lau God - God heardest Sara now, she was the laurel-tree have no child before the ch away from th I liken mysel not to the sen not to the cr earth, for it I Lord."

Then an ar Anna said, I vow it to th And A ana bo manded.

When six 1 found that s Lord liveth, have led thee year, Joachin scribes, and maiden to the fathers, bless through all g

We are the was three ye her in her fa foot of the fi changing the the custom w but kept her that she mig From this and lowly he hopes of y, with good His favours promise to e would be uld redeem she doubtthe throne best sense, triotic and the God of he spirit of lfastness in in Hebron, was necesnce, but at not credit , break the ree months ward once trial, great fect purity, is plighted; l her from uth. As a for a strict to public y a written ucted that trouble by h the story a priest in s fame for her comby her preand sisters f Joachim h; on her ring man. en he was hout their ly at their loneliness. At the Temple, Joachim found himself ordered away from among those who had children, and his offerings refused, and Anna, also, had to bear reproach from the women of her people.

Then "Anna wept sore, and prayed to God." And when the great day of the Lord came, Judith, her maid, said to her, How long will thy soul mourn? It becomes thee not to be sad, for the great day of the Lord has come. Take thy head-dress, which the needlewoman gave me; it is not allowed me to put it on thee, because I am thy maid, and thou comest of kings." Then was Anna much troubled. and laid aside her mourning, and adorned her head, and put on her bridal robes, and went into the garden about the ninth hour. There she saw a laurel-tree, and sat down beneath it, and prayed thus to God .- "God of my fathers, bless me and hear my cry, as Thou heardest Sarah, and blessedst her by giving her a son, Isaac." While, now, she was looking up to heaven, she saw the nest of a sparrow in the laurel-tree, and she sighed and said, "Woe is me, woe is me, who have no child!" Why was I born that I should have become accursed before the children of Israel, and despised, and scorned, and driven away from the temple of the Lord my God? Woe is me, to what can I liken myself?" Not to the birds of the heavens, for they have young: not to the senseless beasts, for they are fruitful before Thee. O Lord: not to the creatures of the waters, for they have young; not to the earth, for it brings forth fruits in their seasons, and blesses Thee, O Lord."

Then an angel came and told her she should have a child. And Anna said, "As the Lord God liveth, be it male or female that I bear," I vow it to the Lord, and it shall serve Him all the days of its life." And A nua bore a daughter, and called it Mary, as the angel had commanded.

When six months had passed, Anna put Mary on the ground, and found that she could totter a few steps. Then she said, "As the Lord liveth, thou shalt never put thy foot on the earth again till I have led thee into the Temple of the Lord". At the end of the first year, Joachim made a great feast, and called to it the priests and scribes, and the elders, and many friends. And he brought the maiden to the priests, and they blessed her, and said, "God of our fathers, bless this child, and give her a name which shall be known through all generations." And all the people said, Amen."

We are then told that Mary was taken to the Temple when she was three years old, having lived till then in a sanctuary made for her in her father's house. And while Joachim and Anna were at the foot of the fifteen steps that led up to the Temple courts, and were changing their soiled travelling raiment for clean and fitting dress, as the custom was, Mary climbed the steps alone, and never looked back, but kept her face towards the altar. And she was left in the Temple, that she might grow up with the other virgins.

From this time till she was twelve years old, it is said, she lived in the Temple, her graces keeping pace with her years. From the morning till the third hour, she remained in prayer, and from that till the ninth she was busied with spinning. Then she betook herself once more to prayer, till an angel each day came with food for her. Her hetrothal to Joseph is related in great detail, but we forbear to quote it bestern at along to an a grand work out they have Tradition, to which we owe these beautiful legends, has delighted to speak of the Virgin's appearance and character. She was more given to prayer, we read, than any round her, brighter in the knowledge of God's law, and perfectly humble; she delighted to sing the Psalms of David with a melodious voice, and all loved her for her kindness and modesty. (n at . regiter - at " a free funt " while a

It is impossible to trust to the descriptions of Mary's person, but it is interesting to know how remote generations imagined her. She was in all things serious and carnest, says one old tradition, spoke little, and only what was to the purpose; she was very gentle, and showed respect and honour to all. She was of middle height, though some say she was rather above it. She spoke to all with a prudent frankness, soberly, without confusion, and always pleusantly. She had a fair complexion, blonde hair, and bright hazel eyes. Her eyebrows were arched and dark, her nose well proportioned, her lips ruddy and full of kindness when she spoke. Her face was long rather than round, and her hands and fingers were finely shaped. She had no pride, but was simple, and wholly free from deceit. Without effeminacy, she was far from forwardness. In her clothes which she herself made, she was content with the natural colours.

"Didenser game a star felse na mar a soule ese anon sue a contenent instructure of a second of the in the set of the and CHAPTER IX.

At association of the BIRTH OF CHRIST. Post of the state of At your built over the IT might have been expected that Mary's child would have been born in the city of Nazareth, where Joseph and Mary lived, but circumstances over which they had no control made a distant village the birthplace; 100 to mech to pays the end of and the The Jewish nation had paid tribute to Rome, through their rulers, since the days of Pompey; and the methodical Augustus, who now reigned, and had to restore order and soundness to the finances of the empire, after the confusion and exhaustion of the civil wars, took good care that this obligation should neither be forgotten nor evaded. He was accustomed to require a census to be taken periodically in every province of his vast dominions, that he might know the number of soldiers he could levy in each, and the amount of taxes due to the treasury. So exact was he, that he wrote out with his own hand a summary of statistics of the whole empire, including the citizens and allies in arms, in all the kingdoms and provinces, with their tributes and fiscal and m and 767th ve fore the birt ond, very no

'In an em

could hardl fixed time; provinces o minions of manded by ing of a sub vears passed to take. H obtaining th that in one o made the wl Emperor as It is quite was left ver his people, a like a genera was designed simple regist of 'enrolling future use: sults, when will hereafte The proch no choice b which his fa quired him close of the in Palestine the Novemb as St. Luke willing to 1 Mary with painted-Jo by-paths int have chosen which it is can follow t Passing d selves cross tilled and w full of teem

80

the morntat till the rself, once her. [] Her r, to quote delighted was more he knowlo sing the er for her son, but it her, She tion, spoke gentle, and th, though a prudent ntly. She Her eyed, her lips was long ly shaped. om deceit. er clothes colours.

boo M and In m of All a m of All a m of a star m of a teir rulers, who now finances of wars, took tor evaded. odically in v the numxes due to town hand the citizens with their tributes and taxes. Three separate surveys of the empire for such fiscal and military ends are recorded as ordered—in the 726th, 746th, and 767th years of the city of Rome, respectively: the first, long before the birth of Christ; the third, in our Lord's youth; but the second, very near the time when He must have been born.

1

In an empire embracing the then known world, such a census could hardly have been made simultaneously, or in any short or fixed time; more probably it was the work of years, in successive provinces or kingdoms. Sooner or later, however, even the dominions of vassal kings like Herod had to furnish the statistics de manded by their master. He had received his kingdom on the footing of a subject, and grew more entirely dependent on Augustus as years passed, asking his sanction at every turn for steps he proposed to take. He would, thus, be only too ready to meet his wish, by obtaining the statistics he sought, as may be judged from the fact that in one of the last years of his life, just before Christ's birth, he made the whole Jewish nation take a solemn oath of allegiance to the Emperor as well as to himself.

It is quite probable that the mode of taking the required statistics was left very much to Herod, at once to show respect to him before his people, and from the known opposition of the Jews to anything like a general numeration, even apart from the taxation to which it was designed to lead. At the time to which the narrative refers, a simple registration seems to have been made, on the old Hebrew plan of enrolling by families in their ancestral districts, of course for future use; and thus it passed over quietly. The very different results, when it was followed by a general taxation, some years later, will hereafter be seen.

The proclamation liaving been made through the land, Joseph had no choice but to go to Bethlehem, the city of David, the place in which his family descent, from the house and lineage of David, required him to be inscribed. It must, apparently, have been near the close of the year 749 of Rome, or at the opening of 750; but winter in Palestine is not necessarily severe, for the flowers spring up after the November rains, and flocks are often driven out to the pastures, as St. Luke tells us was the case at the time of Christ's birth. Unwilling to leave her behind in a home so new to her, Joseph tool: Mary with him: the two journeying most likely, as tradition has painted—Joseph afoot, with Mary on an ass at his side. There were by paths interlacing and crossing, all over the country, and they may have chosen some of these, but if they kept to the travelled road, which it is most likely they did, both for safety and company, we can follow their progress even now.

Passing down the little valley of Nazareth, they would find themselves crossing the rich plain of Esdraelon, not then, as now, half tilled and well-nigh unpeopled, but covered with cities and villages, full of teening life and human activities. Galilee, according to Josephus, contained in those days, two hundred and four cities and villages, the smallest of which numbered above fifteen thousand inhabitants. It is calculated, indeed, that it had a population of about fifteen hundred to the square mile, which is a third more than the number in Lancashire, crowded as it is with large and densely peopled towns. Speaking of the district just north of Galilee, Captain Burton tells us that, to one standing on a peak of Lebanon, overlooking it, "the land must, in many places, have appeared to be one continuous town;" and in the highlands of Syria, still north of this, in the region of Hamah, there are the ruins of three hundred and sixty five towns, so that Mr. Drake had good ground for thinking the Arabs right in saying, "that a man might formerly have travelled for a year in this district, and never have slept twice in the same village." Leaving, on the left, the rounded height of Tabor, and the villages of Nain and Endor, up among the hills, the road stretched directly south to Jezreel, once Ahab's capital, on a gentle swell of the rich plain of Esdraelon. On their way they would pass through a landscape of busy cities and towns, varied by orchards, vinevards, gardens, and fields, for every available spot was cultivated, to the very tops of the hills. The mountains of Gilboa, where Saul perished, lay a little east of Jezrcei as they went on, and then came Engannian, with its spring, on the edge of the hill-country of Samaria. Dothan, with its rich pastures, where Joseph liad found his brethren so many ages before, would soon be seen on their right; and, before long, their winding road, rising and falling among continuous hills, would bring them to Samaria itself, then just rebuilt by Herod, with such magnificence, that he had given it the name of Sebaste, the Greek equivalent of Augusta, in honour of his imperial master. Sychar or Shechem, with its lovely neighbourhood, would be their resting-place on the second day, for it is nearly midway between Judea and Galilee; and though the distance between the two was often reckoned as only a three days; journey, it was not uncommon to lengthen it to four. As the chief town of the Samaritans, Sychar would hardly offer hospitality to travellers with their faces towards the hated Jerusalem. Joseph and Mary, as was the custom with Jaws passing through, would, therefore, avoid the town, and pass the night in what shelter they could find at Jacob's springs, -or Jacob's well, as our version has it,-not far off, eating provisions they had brought with them, to avoid tasting food defiled by the touch of a Samaritan, and drinking only the water from the springs. The beauty of the valley, with its swelling heights of Ebal and Gerizim, separated only by a few hundred paces, and its rich upland glens, opening on each side beyondthe crown and water-shed of Central Palestine-would have little in-terest to them, for it was Samaritan ground. They would breathe freely only when they had passed the heights of Akrabbim, the border ridge between Samaria and Judea, and had once more set foot on the holy soil of Israel. way as the stand

Once i opening o Shiloh : W the Lord; would ne had sung. springs; winds on crable Bet where Jer or carried Gibeon. h later they raised his passed fro the gates o Bethleh Jerusalem upper slor limestone, seamed by Its narrow Mediterra one of the mountain. fortificatio Herod was Moab rose olate upla far to the its northe day, with gantic ste olives, por banks, and limestone ruptly, int gorges, wl and to the the town. which Ru brook whi It was of Ruth a David. the last n Jacob's li ties and vil

sand linhab-

of about fif-

an the num-

ely peopled

aptain Buroverlooking one contin-

this, in the d sixty five the Arabs

d for a 'year lage."

the villages

ned directly

of the rich ugh a landeyards, garto the very erished, lay

Engannim.

Dothan.

en so many

e long, their would bring

reek equiv-

har or She-

ng-place on

nd Galilec:

ned as only

it to four.

y offer hos-Jerusalem.

g through.

hat shelter

our version

th them, to

d drinking ey, with its a few hun-

e bevond—

ve little in-

id breathe

abbim, the

cre set foot

Once in Judca, its bleak and bare hills were hallowed, at each opening of the landscape, by the sight of spots sacred to every Jew. Shiloh would greet them first, where Hannah came to pray before the Lord; then Gilgal, where her son sat to judge Israel. Their way would next pass through the valley of Baca, of which the Psalmist had sung, "Passing through the valley of tears, they make it rich in springs; and the latter rain covers it with blessings.". The road winds on from this, through the district town Gophua, past the vencrable Bethel, with all its memories, and past Ramah, in Benjamin, where Jeremiah had pictured Rachel weeping for her children, slain or carried of by the Babylonian conqueror, Over against it rose Gibeon, high on its hill, where Solomon worshipped; and an hour later they would pass Mizpeh, on its lonely height, where Samuel raised his memorial stone Ebenezer. And then, at last, after having passed from one holy place to another, their feet would stand within the gates of Jerusalem.

Bethlehem, the end of their journey, lay about six miles south of Jerusalem, on the east of the main road to Hebron. It covered the upper slope, and part of the top, of a narrow, ridge of grey Jura limestone, of about a mile in length-one of the countless heights, seamed by narrow valleys, which make up the hill country of Judea. Its narrow, steep streets lay no less than 2,538 Paris feet above the Mediterranean, and looked out over a sea of hills, bare and rocky,one of them, about three miles to the east, the peak of the Frank mountain, Jebel Fureidis, now bare, but then covered with the new fortifications of Herodium, in the circuit of which the hated tyrant Herod was soon to find his tomb. On the east, the mountains of Moab rose against the horizon like a purple wall, the barren and desolate uplands of the wilderness of Judea lying between, and stretching far to the south. The ridge of Bethlehem itself is still covered, on its northern side, as all the hills around must have been in Mary's day, with bold, sweeping lines of terraces, which descend, like gigantic steps, to the lower valleys, and bear tier on tier of fig-trees, olives, pomegranates, and vines; the vines overhanging the terrace banks, and relieving the eye from the dazzling glare of the white limestone rocks and soil. The ridge, as a whole, breaks down, abruptly, into deep valleys, on the north, south, and east, passing into gorges, which descend, in the distance, to the Dead Sea on the east, and to the coast lowlands on the west. In a little plain close under the town, to the eastward, are some vineyards and barley-fields, in which Ruth came to glean in the early days of Israel, beside a gentle brook which still murmurs through them.

It was to Bethlehem that Joseph and Mary were coming, the town of Ruth and Boaz, and the early home of their own great forefather David. As they approached it from Jerusalem, they would pass, at the last mile, a spot sacred to Jewish memory, where the light of Jacob's life went out, when his first love, Rachel, died, and was buried, as her tomb still shows, "in the way to Ephrath, which is Bethlehem." The ascent to the town over the dusty glare of the grey limestone hills, was the last of the journey, and it is well if Mary did not find it, in parts, as other travellers have found it, before and since; so slippery as to make it seem safer to alight and go up on foot." A quarter of a mile to the north of the town gate she would pass the well, from which, as she had heard from infancy, her ancestor David had so longed to drink. Presently, passing through the low gate; she and Joseph were in the mountain town or village of Bethlehem.

Travelling in the East has always been very different from Western ideas. As in all thinly settled countries, private hospitality; in early times, supplied the want of inns, but it was the peculiarity of the East that this friendly custom continued through a long series of ages. On the great roads through barren or uninhabited parts, the need of shelter led, very early, to the erection of rude and simple buildings, of varying size; known as khans, which offered the wayfarer the protection of walls and a roof, and water, but little more. The smaller structures consisted of sometimes only a single empty room, on the floor of which the traveller might spread his carpet for sleep; the larger ones, always built in a bollow square, enclosing a court for the beasts, with water in it for them and their masters. From Immemorial antiquity it has been a favourite mode of benevolence to raise such places of shelter, as we see so far back as the times of David, when Chimham built a great khan near Bethlehem, date het ween Definition on the caravan road to Egypt. foll to the

But while it has long been thus, in special circumstances, the Eastern sense of the sacredness of hospitality, which was felt deeply by the Jews, made inns, in one sense, or even khans, where travellers provided for themselves, unnecessary in any peopled place. The simplicity of Eastern life, which has fewer wants than the Western mind can well realize, aided by universal hospitality, opened private houses everywhere to the traveller. I The ancient Jew. like the modern Arab, held it a reflection on a community if a passing way. farer was not made some one's guest. To bring water at once to wash the traveller's feet, dusty with the Eastern sandals, was an act of courtesy which it showed a churlish spirit to omit. Food and lodging, for himself and his beasts, if he had any, were provided, and he was regarded as under the sacred protection of his host. At the time of Christ this primitive simplicity stills continued. The Rabbis constantly urge the religious merit of hospitality, promising Paradise as its reward, and ranking the kindly reception of strangers higher than to have been honoured by an appearance of the Shechinah itself. Its universal recognition as a natural duty in His age, is often found even in the discourses of our Lord. At This the We may feel sure therefore, that it was not an "inn" where Joseph and Mary found shelter after their journey, though that word to associat

which ma

umphant

The sin

compared recorded

embellisht

miraculou

featuresiin

or even su

how the

"It happe

going up t

be born, d

ass, and h

shall I tal

near/ the mother of

is used

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

is used in our English version. In the only two other places in which it occurs, it refers to a friendly "guest-chamber" in a private house. At each a time, however, when Strangers had arrived from every part, the household to which they looked for entertainment had already opened their guest-chamber to earlier comers, and the only accommodation that could be offered was a place, half kitchen and half stable, which was simply one of the countless natural hollows or caves in the hill-side, against which the house had been built, as is still seen frequently in Palestine.

How long Joseph and Mary had been in Bethlehem before Jesus was born is impossible to say, for time is of no value to Orientals, and a stay of a few weeks more or less would be little regarded. St. Luke merely tells us that "while they were there? Mary gave birth to the Saviour. Milton, following the immemorial tradition of the Church, singstandary in the immemorial tradition of the

"It was the winter wild While the heaven-born child, All needly, wrapt, in the rude manger lies; Nature, in awe to him, Had don't her gaudy trim, With her great Master so to sympathize; It, was no season then for her; To wanton with the sum: But the most's season alone organs the block

But the poet's fancy alone creates the bleak wintryness of the time. for the outlying shepherds on the hills around were living witnesses of the reverse. Yet it seems most probable that the great event took place between December, 749, of Rome, and February, 750; and the only reason why there can be any hesitation in supposing December. 25th to have been the very day is the natural doubt whether the date could have been handed down so exactly, and the fear lest the wish to associate the birth of the Redeemer with the return of the sun. which made Christmas be early spoken of as the "day of the triumphant sun," may have led to its having been chosen. Mana & baim, The simplicity of St. Lake's narrative is very striking. An event, compared with which all others in human history are insignificant, is recorded in a few words, without any attempt at exageration or embellishment. The Apocryphal Gospels, on the contrary, abound in miraculous details, for the most part trifling and childish. Some features in their narratives, however, are not wanting in naturalness or even sublimity, and, at the least, they have the merit of showing how the early Church painted for itself the scene of the Nativity. "It happened," say these old legends, "as Mary and Joseph were going up towards Bethlehem, that the time came when Jesus should be born, and Mary said to Joseph, Take mendown from my ass, and he took, her down from her ass, and said to her. Where shall I take thee, for there is no inn here?' Then he found a cave near the grave of Rachel, the wife of the Patriarch Jacob-the mother of Joseph and Benjamin; and light never entered the cave.

th, which is Prichter y limestone did not find nd since, so on foot. A rld pass the cestor David ow gate, she lehem. om Western lity; in early iarity of the ng series of d parts, the and simple red the waylittle more. single empty is carpet for enclosing a leir masters. de of benevback as the Bethlehem. Winder Iner We istances, the s feit deeply ere travellers place. The the Western ened private ew, like the bassing wayr at once, to was an act Food and re provided, of his host. continued. hospitality, ly reception ppearance of aral duty, in star P Lister inn" where h that word

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

but it was always filled with darkness. And the sun was then just going down. Into this he led her, and left his two sons beside her, and went out toward Bethlehem to seek help. But when Mary entered the cave it was presently filled with light, and beams, as if of the sun, shone around; and thus it continued, day and night, while she remained in it.

"In this cave the child was born, and the angels were round Him at His birth, and worshipped the New-born, and said, fiGiory to God in the highest, and peace on earth and good-will to men. Meanwhile Joceph was wandering about, seeking help. And when he looked up to heaven he saw that the pole of the heavens stord still, and the birds of the air stopped in the midst of their flight, and the sky was darkened. And looking on the earth he saw a dish full of food, prepared, and workmen, resting round it, with their hands in the dish to eat, and those who were stretching out their hands did not take any of the food, and those who were lifting their hands to their mouths did not do so, but the faces of all were turned upwards. And he saw sheep which were being driven along, and the sheep stood still, and the shepherd lifted his hand to strike them, but it ren sined uplifted. And he came to a spring, and saw the goats with their mouths touching the water, but they did not drink, but were under a spell, for all things at that moment were turned from their course." But if wonders such as these were wanting, the birth of the Saviour was not without attestations of His divine glory. If His birth was mean on earth below, it was celebrated with hallelujahs by the heavenly host in the air above. The few fields in the valley below Bethlehem have, likely, been always too valuable to be used for pasture, but the slopes and heights of the hills around were then, as they had been in David's time, and are still, the resort of shepherds, with their numerous flocks, which supplied the requirements of the neighbouring Temple. The "Onomasticon," of Eusebius informs us that about "a thousand paces from Bethlehem stands a tower called Eder-that is, the tower of the shepherds-a name which fore. shadowed the angelic appearance to the shepherds, at the birth of our Lord." Jewish tradition has preserved the record of a tower of this name, in this locality, where the flocks of sheep for the Temple sacrifices were pastured; and there still remain, at the given distance, eastwards from Bethlehem, the ruins of a church which Helena, the mother of Constantine, caused to be built on the spot believed to have been that at which the heavenly vision was seen. On the night of the birth of Christ, a group of shepherds lay out, with their flocks, on the hill side, in the neighbourhood of this ancient watch-tower. Some of them were keeping their turn of watching while the others slept, for shepherds relieved each other by watches, as our sailors do, at fixed hours. St. Luke expressly tells us that they were "watching the watches of the night." To have received such surpassing honour from above, they must have been member cluded. -the r nation in in their that kin believed which h significa which h meaning in the ot stillness sheep; t numerab. dear to around t Luke, the Lord the angel tidings of you is bo the Lord. wrapped there was God and a

With this ever heard angels wen of night, interested simple tru and its m eager hast Joseph, an No detai of reveren lowliness o Child, are dignified b its purest the earliest DOOL

members, though poor and humble, of that true Israel which included Mary and Joseph, Zacharlas and Elisabeth, Simeon and Anna the representatives, in those dark days, of the saints of their nation in its brighter past. They must have been men looking out, in their simple way, towards the invisible and eternal, and seeking that kingdom of God for themselves which was one day, as they believed, to be revealed in their nation at large. Only that mind which has sympathy with external nature can receive in their true significance the impressions it is fitted to convey, and only the heart which has sympathy with spiritual things can recognize their full meaning. Poetic sensibility is required in the one case, and religiousin the other. In each it is the condition of sincere emotion. The stillness over hill and valley, broken only by the bleating of the sheep; the unclouded brightness of the Syrian sky with its innumerable stars; and the associations of these mountain pastures, dear to every Jew, as the scene of David's youth, were over and around them. And now, to quote the beautiful narrative of St. Luke, "lo, an angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them, and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them, Fcar not, for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all the people. For unto you is born, this day, in the City of David, a Saviour, who is, Christ, the Lord. And this shall be the sign unto you: ye shall find a babe. wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger." And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the Heavenly Host, praising God and saying - I date bass dates they it robal wifet all soil die Glory to Got in the highest, in and which the distinct of free off. to the And on earth peace, soil, in and model to the gastice, but the soil of the soil

With this ever-memorable anthem—the first and last melody of heaven ever heard by, mortal ears—the light faded from the hills, as the angels went away into heaven, and left earth once more in the shadow of night, knowing and thinking nothing of that which so supremely interested distant worlds. Wondering at such a vision, and full of simple trust, the shepherds had only one thought—to see the babe and its mother for themselves. Climbing the hill, therefore, with eager haste, they hurried to Bethlehem, and there found Mary and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger, as had been told them.

No details are given: no heightening of the picture of this first act of reverence to the new-born Saviour. Nor are they needed. The lowliness of the visitors, the pure image of the Virgin Mother and her Child, are better left in their own simplicity. Infancy is for ever dignified by the manger of Bethlehem: womanhood is ennobled to its purest ideal in Mary; man; as such, receives abiding honour, in the earliest accepted homage to her. Son being that of the simple poor.

Mary enns, as if of ight, while REPERSON MARCH ound Him ory to God Meanwhile looked up ill, and the he sky was food, prethe dish to ot take any ieir mouths And he saw od still, and ed uplifted. ouths touchspell, for all

16.10 Mar

then just eside her.

the Saviour lis birth was tahs by the valley below be used for vere then, as f shepherds, ments of the oius informs inds a tower e which fore birth of our tower of this the Temple ven distance, h Helena, the leved to have 194395 641 5 4,03

erds lay out, iood of this heir turn of each other by ressly tells us To have rest have been would the of Mound to a second second itself, or

tion with

formal a hencefor

Israelite. Thirty

custom,

dwelling God, Ir pass fort after that life, Af thank G

legal rite When, Mary, wi Women s blasts of prayer.

hill which

Pompey,

the holy theatre, w as was the within—1 end of H her. The ward, to t two valley

Over Oph Temple, a

upon a so our churc road skir the morni shadow o

of the old by Herod

one, after and the th could not

The n nunciati ance wit

A great teacher has pointed some striking lessons on the way in which the whole incident was received, as St. Luke relates, by those immediately concerned. The shepherds spread abroad the story, with hearts full of grateful adoration; the hearers wonder at it, but Mary ponders in her heart all that had been told her. "There were more virgins in Israel, more even of the tribe of David, than she," says the great preacher; "but she was the Chosen of God. It was natural, and it is easy to understand, that when a second appearance of angels, like that which she had already herself experienced, was seen, the should ponder in her heart their words, which, concerned her so nearly. But, if we ask ourselves-was this pondering the words in her heart already the true faith that carries the blessing, -the fruitful seed of a personal relation to the Saviour?- did Mary sheady believe, firmly and immovably, that the Saviour of the world should see the light of life through her?—the Gospels leave us too clearly to think the opposite. There was a time, long after this, when Christ was already a Teacher, when she wavered between Him and His brethren who did not believe in Him; when she went out with them to draw Him away from His, course, and tring Him back to her parrower circle of home life, as one who was hardly in His right mind. Firm, unwavering trust, that knows no passing cloud, is a work of time with all who have an inner personal nearness to the Saviour, and it was so with Mary. She reached it only, like us all, through manifold doubts and struggles of heart, by that grace from above which roused ber, ever, anew, and led her on from step to step," "hill which leverlooks Monut Zion from the south - that on which Ponyoy, sixty years defore, had pucked his camp -a defilement of the holy soll mover since an arrange and ssing flerod's great amphi-theatre with its heatfler ormanized arrange as revolting to a Jewcess the must be conclubranen and the destation celebrated in the circus rodificit satisfic fisher The first two months of the life of Christ, if not a longer time, were, spent, quietly in Bethlehem. That great event in a Hebrew household, His circumcision, marked the eighth day from His birth. To dedicate their children to the God of Israel in His appointed way, and thus at once give them 'a portion in Israel," and set them upart from the nations by this sacred token, was a duty which no Jewish parent would for a moment dare to neglect. "On the eighth day," says the Book of Jubilees, "shalt thou circumcise thy boy, for on that day were Abraham and the people of his house circumcised. And no one may dare to change the day, nor go a day lieyond the eight days, for it is an everlasting law, established and graven on the tablets of heaven. And he who does it not belongs not to the children of the promise, but to the children of destruction. Sons of Belial are they who do it not." The infant Saviour was in all probability carried on the legal day to the Temple, as it was so near, for the performance of the rite, for Joseph and Mary, like all other Jews.

o way in

by those ory, with but Mary

ere more of angels, scen, tho

ed her BO

words in

ne fruitful iv believe,

id see the y to think

hrist was parrower

nd. Firm,

h manifold

ilch rousod

PORTHUCK

the helv

and The organ state

onger time.

a Hebrew His birth.

ointed way,

them upart

no Jewish

ighth day,"

boy, for on ircumcised.

Veyond the

aven on the

to the chil-Sons of in all probanear, for the other Jews, would think a religious act doubly sacred within the hallowed courts of Mount Zion. Custom however, would allow its being done in the local synagogue, or in the humble house of prayer in Bethlehem itself, or even in the house in which Mary and Joseph lodged. The name Mary's child received had already been fixed at the Annunciation, and was formally given at the circumcision, in accordance with Jewish customs in reference to male infants. Its association with such a strictly Jewish rite made it the symbol of the child's formal admission into the congregation of Israel, of which he was henceforth a member. The infant Jesus was now an acknowledged Israelite.

Israelite. Thirty three days more had to elapse, in accordance with Jewish custom, before Mary could visit the Temple, or even go outside her dwelling, or touch anything made sacred by being consecrated to God. Including the circumcision week, the Jewish mother had to pass forty days of seclusion after the birth of a son, and sixty-six after that of a daughter, before she could again take part in common life. After this long delay, she might appear in the Holy Place, to thank God for her preservation, and to receive from the pricet the legal rite of purification.

When, at last, the day of her long-desired visit to the Temple came, Mary, with her child, had to present themselves in the Court of the Women as soon as the morning incense had been offered, and the nine blasts of the Temple trumpets had given the signal for morning prayer. The road from Bethlehem ran along the western side of the hill which overlooks Mount Zion from the south,-that on which Pompey, sixty years before, had pitched his camp-a defilement of the holy soil never since forgotten. Passing Herod's great amphi-theatre, with its heathen ornaments, a sight as revolting to a Jewess as was the remembrance of the bloody games celebrated in the circus within-Mary would go up the Valley of the Giants, and at the further end of it the full splendour of the city and Temple would be before her. The long sweep of the valley of Hinnom ran, bending westward, to the valley of the Kidron, with the royal gardens where the two valleys met, and mansions and palaces rising on the hills beyond. Over Ophel rose the dazzling whiteness of the Royal Porch of the Temple, a structure longer and higher than York Cathedral, built upon a solid mass of masonry, almost equal in height to the tallest of our church spires. Passing up the northern arm of Hinnom, her road skirted the pools of Gibon, shining, as she looked at them, in the morning light, and wound round to the Gennath Gate, under the shadow of the great towers beyond the palace of Herod, on the line of the oldest of the city walls. These fortresses had all been built by Herod to overawe Jerusalem, and had been named by him, the one after his friend Hippicus, the next, after his brother Phasacl, and the third, after his wife Marianne, whom he had murdered, but could not forget. On the north-east, the colossal, cight-sided Psephinos, with its double crown of breastworks and battlements, looked down on the city, and all four glittered in the early light, and fosg high into the clear blue of the sky. Mary was now within the walls of Jerusalem, and had to thread ber way through the narrow streets of the lower town, and, after crossing the bridge over the valley, to Mount Moriah, would at last reach the castern side of the Temple, where the Golden Gate, at the head of the long flight of steps that led to the valley of the Kidron, opened into the Court of the Women.

She would, doubtless, be early enough on her way to hear the three trumpet blasts which announced the opening of the outer gate, long before the call to prayer. The earlier she came, the less chance would there be of her meeting anything on the way that might defile her; and prevent her entering the Temple. Women on her errand commonly node to the Temple on oxen, that the body of so huge a beast between them and the ground might prevent any chance of defilenent from passing over a sepulchre on the road, and, doubtless, she road either an ass or an ox, as was the custom.

While the mothers who were coming that morning for purification gradually gathered. Mary would have to wait outside the lofty gate of the Court of the Israelites, known as that of Nicanor, because the head and hands of the Syrian general of that name, slain in battle by Judas Maccabæus, had been hung up on it in triumph." She had doubtless often heard, among the household stories of her childhood, how the haughty enemy of her people wagged his hand, each day towards Judes and Jerusalem, with the words, "Oh! when will it be in my power to lay them waste?" and how the hand that had thus been lifted against the holy place in blasphemy, had been exposed on the gate before her in shame. It was the greatest of all the Temple gates: greater even than the outer gate east of it, known as the Beautiful, from its being covered with massy silver and gold, richly carved, or from its being made of Corinthian brass, elaborately chased, and of far higher value than even gold. It was known also as the Agrippa Gate, for over its eastern, or outer side, glittered a gigantic Roman cagle, underneath which Herod had inscribed the name of his friend Vipsanius Agrippa, the friend and son-in-law of Augustus, "A flight of fifteen steps, in crescent shape, formed the approach to it, and marked the height of the Court of the Men, above that of the Women. The gate, itself, stood at the inner end of a massive structure, fifty cubits in depth, with porticoes at the eastern side, and chambers above it, under which Joseph doubtless waited with Mary, for husbands could enter the Court of the Women with their wives, though no woman could pass into the Court of the Men. They must have shuddered as they passed underneath the great golden eagle, for it was the hateful symbol of idolatry and Roman domination, for destroying which, in the riots before Herod's death, so many of the flower of Jerusalem were soon to die. " Hintel, a but surver in rolly it mailel

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

a, looked and fose

the walls

w streets

valley, to

Temple,

tops that

t of the

the three rate, long

ice would lefile her.

and come a beast

of defile-

btless, she

urification ity gate of cause the buttle by

She had

childhood,

each day,

h will it be had thus xposed on

he Temple

the Beau-

hly carved.

sed, and of 18 Agrippa

tic Roman

his friend

A flight

to it, and ie Women.

cture, fifty

bers above

r husbands

though no

have shud-

t was the destroying flower of

Will Thrils!

YUNIT DED

Loe show want he in PULL HEPOTLERUL After a time, the Nicar r Gate was opened, and the offerings of all the women who had come for purification, which was much the same as churching is with us, were taken from them, by the Levites, into the Court of the Priests, to be burned on the altar, after the morning sacrifice. Mary might have had either a lamb, or a pair of young pigeons, for the rite; but Joseph was poor, and she was contented with the cheaper offering of doves, very probably bought from the Temple officer, who kept flocks of doves, purchased with the funds of the Temple, and sold to those who were about to offer, at the market price. Or she may have got them in the outer court, which had been turned into a noisy bazear, by great numbers of money-changers, sellers of doyes, and even dealers in oxer, who sought the custom of the crowds frequenting the Temple, contrary to the very idea of such a place. Meanwhile the assembled mothers spent the interval before their offering was laid on the altar, in giving thanks to God for their recovery After a time, a priest came with some of the blood, and, having sprinkled them with it, pronounced them clean, and thus the rite ended most an interim the bary woods and to define the own the purification," however, was not the only object of this first visit to the Temple, after the birth of her Son. In the patriarchal times, the firstborn son of each family seems to have been the assistant of the Family Head in the priestly services of the household. Jewish tradition has always supported this belief, and the ancient commentators appeal to various passages in support of it. A great change was however, introduced by Moses. Aaron, and his sons were set apart, with the whole tribe of Levi, as the only priests, and thus the priestly services of the firstborn were no longer required. That they had originally been claimed, however, was still kept before the people by a law erelong announced at Sinai, that the eldest male, of both man and beast, was sacred to God. Of the lower creatures some were to be offered on the altar, others, redeemed at a fixed price. The firstborn son was to be presented before God in the Temple, and consecrated to His service, a month after birth, but a money payment of not more than five shekels, and, in the case of a parent's poverty, of less, was accepted as a "redemption" of the rights this involved. Rabbinical law, in the time of Mary, had made a refinement on the original statute of Moses, no child being required to be "presented to the Lord" who was in any way maimed, or defective, or had any blemish, so as to be unfit for a priest-a rule which throws an incidental light on Mary's child, such as might have been expected. He must have been, in all points, without physical blemish, which is the new The details of the ceremony, as observed in the days of our Lord. have not come down to us, but may, doubtless, be illustrated by those still in force for the "redemption of the firstborn" is still observed by strict Jews as the legacy of immemorial tradition. The Hebrew father invites ten friends and a Rabbi, who must be a Cohen that is one reputed to belong to the house of Aaron, -- to his house, on the

ghara Just counts the La

was ca

Natha

drawin

that G him."

cerned for ms among the far liveran

restore

should

the Ter

senting ceremon the you

God in vant de

Thy Sal

ples: a Israel." Messian world an Turni

words, v

mother.

many in

of many

which sl

tradictio

Him"_a

tribe of was eight

period of every Je promised the Asmo

all the m

legions of

The rise

would

At tha

thirty-first day after the child's birth. The infant is then brought in by him and laid on the table before the Rabbi, with a sum of money -which, in England, if the father be ordinarily well-to-do, generally amounts to about twelve shillings. He then formally tells the Rabbi that his wife, who is an Israelite, has borne, as her firstborn, a male child, which, therefore, he now gives to the Rabbi, as the representative of God. "Which would you, then, rather do?" asks the Rabbi, "give up your firstborn, who is the first child of his mother, to Jehovah, or redeem him for five shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, which is five gera?" The father, of course, answers that he wishes to redeem his child. "This is my firstborn," says he; "here, take unto thee the five shekels due for his redemption." As he hands the money to the Rabbi, he praises God for the day..." Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who hast sanctified us with Thy commandments, and commanded us to perform the redemption of a son. Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe. which ast maintained us, and preserved us, to enjoy this season." The Rabbi then takes the money, and after passing the coin round the child's head, as a symbol of redemption, lays his other hand on its brow, with the words—"This [child] is instead of this [money], and this [money] instead of this [child]: may this child be brought to hite, to the Law, and to the fear of heaven; and as he has been brought to be ransomed, so may he enter into the Law, and good deeds." He then places both his hands on the child's head, and prays-"God make thee as Ephraim and Manasseh. The Lord bless and preserve thee. The Lord lift up His countenance upon thee, and give thee peace. Length of days, years, and peace, be gathered to thee; and God keep thee from all evil and save thy soul," And now the rite is over.

In a nation which has boasted, for two thousand years, that it hands down its religious customs, from generation to generation, without a shadow of change, in word or form, a practice of to-day is, doubtless, in most respects, identical with its counterpart in the time of Mary. It was, we may assume, with some such prayers and solemn forms that Joseph and Mary, still standing before the Nicanor Gata, "presented" the infant Saviour "to the Lord," after Mary had been declared "clean" by the sprinkling of the blood of the doves.

It was still morning, and crowds of men were entering the Court of the Israelites, by the Nicanor Gate, or passing out. The mothers and fathers who had firstborn sons to redeem were still before the gate, Mary and Joseph among them. And now an aged man, who could not come earlier to his morning devotions, approaches. We know only that his name was Simeon, a very common one, then, among the Jews, and that he was one in whom the the reign of form and rite had not extinguished true spiritual conceptions. He was "a just man and devout," says St. Luke—an expression, the force of which, in those days, is seen in the explanation of nearly the same nought in generally

he Rabbl

n, a male

epresenta-

he Rabbi

r to Jebo-

anctuary

wishes to take unto hands the

art Thou,

d us with

edemption

Universe, son." The round the

ioney], and ight to life, brought to ceds." He

avs-"God

ad preserve

d give thee

o thce; and

w the rive is ears, that it

ation, withf to-day is.

in the time and solemn

canor Gate.

ry had been ves.

g the Court

the mothers

still before

aged man.

approaches. n one, then,

ion of form

He was "a

the force of

rly the same

character given to the great high pricet Simon, "He was called Just both for his plety towards God, and his charity towards his countrymen." Simeon must have been one who, though he followed the Law, did so from the love of it, and from the fear of God, and was careful of its spirit, while, no doubt, exact in the countless ritual observances then thought to constitute "righteousness;" one, like Nathanael, "an Israelite indeed, in whom was no guile." Habitually drawing near God, the promise had been fulfilled to this aged saint that God would draw near to him: for "the Holy Ghost was upon him." Too old to care for longer life, so far as earth alone was concerned, his heart yet beat warmly for his down-trodden nation, and for man at large, sunk in heathen darkness. He would fain wait among the living till the appearance of the "Consolation of Israel"the familiar name by which his race, in their deep yearning for deliverance, had come to speak of the long-expected Messiah, as the sure restorer of its glory. He had a premonition, divinely sent, that he should have this joy, and had come this morning "by the spirit" into the Temple. How he knew it we cannot tell, but, as Mary stood pre-senting her child, he recognized in Him the "Messiah of God." The ceremony over, his full heart cannot restrain itself. Tottering towards the young mother, he takes her babe in his arms, and gives thanks to God in words of touching beauty--"Lord, now lettest Thou Thy ser-vant depart in peace, according to Thy word: for mine eyes have seen Thy Salvation, which Thou hast prepared before the face of all peoples: a light to lighten the heathen and the glory of Thy people Like a true Jew, he thinks of Israel as the centre of the [srael. Messianic glory, the light of which is to stream, afar, over the heathen world around, attracting them to it, that the flat most sold used

Turning to Joseph and Mary, the old man then says a few parting words, with prophetic insight of the future both of the child and its mother. "Your child," says he to her, "is destined for the fall of many in Israel, for many will reject Him; but also for the rising again of many, who will believe on Him and live. He is sent for a sign which shall be spoken against, and will meet with reproach and contradiction, which will reveal the thoughts of many hearts respecting Him"—a truth too sadly culminating at Calvary. Mary's own heart "would be pierced with a great sorrow."

At that instant, we are told, an aged woman, Anna by name, of the tribe of Asher, and therefore a Galilean, approached the gate. She was eighty four years of age, and had thus lived through the long sad period of war, conquest, and oppression, which had intensified, in every Jewish heart, the yearning for national deliverance by the promised Messiah. She must have remembered the fatal war between the Asmonean brothers, Aristobulus and Hyrcanus, which had brought all the misery of her people in its train, and she had likely seen the legions of Pompey, when they encamped on the hills round Jerusalem. The rise of Herod was a recollection of her middle life, and its dread. ful story of war, murder, and crime, must have sunk into her heart, as it had into the heart of all her race.

stanti

the n

St. Ca

the A

The

-is b

the lor from t

the po

in sev

uncov nians I

throug

of the

the cer

markin

over B reached

tiful m

cave its

and is p

lined w

off, and are hun hangs a site of t

niche al

The pay

cave, al

with sp

runs an

de Virgi

steps lo

the Mar

vrlier ti

terest

coloured

the She

before t

painting

central f

a long. c are varid

shown th

under th the cave

South

Her long life had been spent in plous acts and services, for, after she had been seven years a wife, her husband had died, leaving her, doubtless, still very young, since Hebrew girls married at twelve or fourteen years of age. She had never married again, a fact mentioned by St. Luke, in accordance with the feeling of the day, to her honour, but had been in the words of St. Paul, "a widow indeed," "trusting in God," and "continuing in supplications and prayers night and day." She might, in truth, be said to have lived in the Temple, and to have spent her life in fastings and prayers; having very likely come from Galilee to be near the holy place, and thus able to give herself up to religious exercises, on the spot, where, in the eyes of a Jew, they were most sacred.

Such a woman must have been well known in a place like Jerusalem. Catching the burden of Simeon's words as she passed, she too, like him, forthwith thanks God that the promise of the Messiah is now, at last, fulfilled. There could have been few, however, to whom the glad tidings of such a Saviour were welcome, for though the heart of the nation was burning with Messianic hopes of a political kind, we are told that Anna was able to tell them to all in Jerusalem who looked for a redemption of a higher type.

Returning to Betalehem, Joseph and Mary seem to have intended to settle in it permanently, for even after their return from Egypt they would have gone to it again, but for their fear of Archelaus. St. slatthew speaks of their living in a "house" when the Magi came, very soon after the Presentation, but the natural chamber in the hillside, which was Mary's first shelter, would be as much a part of a house as any other. It has for ages been the custom to speak of the birthplace of Jesus as a cave, but the word raises very different ideas in our minds, from any that could have been felt, where such cool, dry recesses are, even still, ordinary parts of village or country houses of the humbler kind.

The "Cave of the Nativity" now shown in Bethlehem, is surrounded by such artificial distractions, that it is hard to realize the possibility of its being the actual scene of the most stupendous event in all history. A convent, like a mediæval castle for strength and solidity, and of great extent, crowns the hill, its huge buttresses resting on the shelving rocks far below. The village lies on the eastern and western summit-crests of the hill, at a height above the sea only 300 feet lower than the top of Helvellyn, and as high as the loftiest hill-top in the Cheviot range. You may walk round it in a quarter of an hour, or along its whole length in half that time, or from side to side of it in a quarter. The villagers support themselves partly by field work, but mainly by carving reavies, crucifixes, and models of the Holy Sepulohre, in wood, for sale. The Cave of the Nativity lies on the east hill, under a "Church of St. Mary." first built by the Emperor Con-

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

her hear

for, after ving her.

twelve or fact menlay, to her

w indeed.

d prayers

ved in the

rs; having

d thus able

iere, in the

il:e Jerusa

d, she too

he Messian however, to

for though

of a polici

1 in Jerusa

ve intended

from Egyp

helaus. S

Magi came in the hill-

a part of a peak of the fferent ideas

such cool,

intry houses

surrounded

e possibility

nt in all his-

nd solidity,

esting on the

and western

00 feet lower ill-top in the an hour, or ide of it in a

ld work, but

Holy Sepul-

on the east

mperor Con-

stantine, but often renewed since. To this church there is joined, on the north, the Latin cloister of the Franciscans, with the Church of St. Catherine, which belongs to it, and, on the south, the Greek and the Armenian cloisters.

The "Church of the Nativity"—venerable at least for its great age -is built in the form of a cross. The choir, two steps higher than the long nave, includes the top and arms of the cross, and is divided from the nave by a partition. A low door, in the west, leads, through the porch, to the desolate and cheerless nave, with forty-four pillars, in seven rows, supporting the roof, the rough beams of which are uncovered, and look very bare and dreary. The Greeks and Armenians have charge of this part, the Latins being only allowed to pass through it to their cloister. The former have altars in the choir; that of the Greeks, which is consecrated to "the three kings," standing in the centre, and showing, in a niche under it, a star of white marble, marking the spot where the star of the wise men stood in the heavens over Bethlehem!. The Cave of the Nativity is under the altar, and is reached, from both sides of the choir, by a flight of broad and beautiful marble steps, respectively fifteen and thirteen in number. The cave itself is about thirty-eight feet long, eleven broad, and nine high. and is paved with black and red-veined marble. The sides are partly lined with marble slabs, but some of these, on the north, have fallen off, and show the bare wall, while, elsewhere, curtains of silk or linen are hung up—the silk apparently only at festivals. From the roof hangs a row of silver lamps along the whole length of the cave. The site of the manger itself is on the east side of the grotte, in a rounded niche about eight feet high and four broad, in which an altar stands. The pavement of this recess is a few inches higher than that of the cave, and is formed of marble slabs on which there is a silver star, with sparkling rays, inlaid with precious stones. Along the edge runs an inscription which no one can read without emotion-"Hic de Virgine Maria Jesus Christus natus est."

South from this spot, in a corner, is a small separate cave, three steps lower than the larger one, and in this stands the "Altar of the Manger;" but as the wooden manger which was exhibited in rlier times was taken to Rome in 1486, by Pope Sixtus V., very little terest attaches now, even on the ground of antiquity, to the crib of coloured marble shown in its place. A painting of the Adoration of the Shepherds covers the rock behind. Five silver lamps swing before this, and opposite is the "Altar of the Magi," with another painting. It throws additional distrust over all, except, perhaps, the contral facts of the spot, that a door from the larger cave admits into a long, crooked, rough opening, like the gallery of a mine, in which are various altars, in recesses, natural, or formed by man. You are shown the "Chapel of St. Joseph;" then that of "The Innocents," under the altar of which a square latticed opening is said to lead to the cave in which the bones of the murdered Innocents were buried.

: 95

From the Chapel of the Innocents you pass the sitar of Eusebius of Cremons, who lies there; and in a cave at the west end of the gallery you are shown the tombs of the Hely Paula and her daughter Eustochium, with that of their friend St. Jerome, whose cell—the scene of his wonderful version of the Scriptures—is pointed out, a little beyond.

beyond. The state of the life of the state o

men n bût wi

pain s

After

from there v

live wi As r main n low the Creator receive many

of Ahr

designe

longer

would

been go as a se

spirits i

driven

followe

any one third da

every so

and hell

deeds of the sou

welcom

wicked

over the

and the

with lau

agonies

the days

assumin

the deve

direct or

concepti

Old Tes

The doc

among t

the Aves

received

relation

similarit

un sich

How

THE two centuries in which Judea was a province of the Persian Empire were, perhaps, the happiest time in the history of the Jewish nation. Enjoying perfect religious liberty, for which alone they cared, they were loyal and contented. Nchemiah, the rebuilder of Jerusalem, was at the same time a Persian pacha, and the people at large only expressed their common fidelity to the power he represented, in allowing, with a liberality amazing in their case, a sculpture of Susa, the Persian metropolis, to be cut over one of the gates of the Temple.

The most striking characteristic of each nation furthered this mutual respect. In Persia the highest form of Aryan religion had been brought face to face with the highest form of Shemitic, and there were many points in which mutual sympathy and regard were inevitable. Both nations hated idolatry; indeed, the Persian was more zealous in this than the Jew had been, for there were not wanting, even in the exile, Jews who served idols. In Ormuzd and Ahriman, the personifications of Light and Darkness, or Good and Evil, the Persian, as it might seem, had only developed the Jewish doctrine of Jehovah and the Evil that struggled to counteract His beneficent rule. To the Persian, as to the Jew, his sacred books were the weapon against darkness, and the guide to blessedness. They prescribed commandments and supplied revelations. They, taught a life after death, and future rewards and punishments; they disclosed the issue of the great struggle between Good and Evil, and what would happen at the end of the world. Times of great trial. were to prove the faithful before the final day. Their blood would flow like water. At the end of every millennium, however, Ormuzd would send a prophet, with a new revelation, and thus a reformation would be effected for the time of The prophet next to appear would Le born of a virgin, and, after destroying the works of Ahriman, would establish a happy kingdom for a thousand years. To aid him. in this, the most famous men of all times would appear in life again. At the end of the millennium, the resurrection, it was taught, would take place through fifty-seven years. Then would begin the burning-up of the world by fire: the mountains would sink, and the whole globe become like a sea of molten metals. Through this all

usebius of

he gallery

iten Eustoie scene of it, a little

O'HH'n 'SYIL

main neutr

low the for the Jewish

lone they

ebuilder of people at

he repre-

f the gates

hered this

emitic, and

egard were

ersian was were not

rmuzd and Good and

the Jewish

nteract His

cred books

plessedness.

ns. They

nents; they

d Evil, and great trial

lood would

er, Ormuzd

reformation

pear would

Ahriman,

To aid him

life again.

ight, would

in the burn-

nk, and the

ugh this all

As recarry

e Persian

men must pass, to be purified from the sins still cleaving to them; but while the holy would do it with case, the wicked would suffer pain such as the same torments would have given them during life. After this purification, even the formerly wicked would be freed from evil. Ahriman and hell would be conquered and pass away; there would remain only the great communion of the blessed, who live with Ormuzd.

As regards this life, the Persians were taught that no man can remain neutral, but must take the side either of good or evil. To follow the former was not only right but natural; since Ormuzd is the Creator. Yet even he who chooses the right side does not always receive his reward, for evil is powerful, and hinders Ormuzd, in many ways, from favouring his servant here. The bad, by the help of Ahriman, may obtain prosperity, and even secure the blessings designed for the good, but in the world to come this would be no longer possible. As a man has lived on earth, so, they believed, would be his reward or suffering in the life beyond. He who has been good and pure, in thought, word, and deed, would be owned as a servant of Ormuzd, and received into the fellowship of the spirits in light, while he who had opposed Ormuzd here, would be driven down, in the life hereafter, to dwell with Ahriman and his followers, in thick darkness. The decision as to the side to which any one belongs would be given according to his works. On the third day after death, judgment, they were taught, will be held, and every soul will have to pass over a bridge, where the ways to heaven and hell divide." Beside it sit the judges of the dead and weigh the deeds of each soul in great scales." If the good bear down the evil, the soul goes forward, over the bridge, to Paradise, where it is welcomed, and has its dwelling till the Last Judgment. But when a wicked soul presents itself, on the third day after death, to try to pass over the bridge, it seems too narrow and slight, the footsteps totter. and the soul falls into the dark abyss beneath. It is there received with laughter and mockery by fiends, and tortured with the bitterest agonies till the Day of Judgment is studiabusmano, bediavesia yodi

How far this early creed retained its hold among the Persians in the days of the Captivity, is not known, and there are no grounds for assuming that the Jews were indebted to it, to any great extent, for the development of their theology. The unity of Jehovah was in direct opposition to the dualism of the Persian system. The Jewish conception of Satan, like that of the resurrection, has its roots in the Old Testament, in which the development of both may be traced. The doctrine of the resurrection, indeed, seems hardly to have been among the old Persian popular beliefs, though found in one place in the Avesta. Jewish ideas respecting angels, good and bad, no doubt received an impulse from those of the Persians, but, as a whole, the relation between the two theologies was mainly that of independent similarity in some details.

from Pontu self; the pu

and

and I pian

ther to

agenc which

that a spoke

ing ca

and Je was m

Jewish Moses.

gums o strove

phetic throug centrat

tation.

The

versal and rel

the co festival

ets," th the hea

Herod

quired

of the

governi The bi siahs, y

walls of prophet their fa wildern

Daniel, of thing try, wh exagger

three m whole

Am

But while the Jew borrowed very little from Persian sources, the exile, partly under Persian rule, the two hundred years of Persian supremacy in Judea, and the lasting connection between the Jews of the East and their brethren in Palestine, must have created a deep interest, on both sides, in faiths which had so much in common. The extent to which Parsism had spread in the East, in the days of Christ, cannot be known, but it had doubtless diffused itself, more or less, by the movements of men in these troublous times, over many regions.

On the other hand, the knowledge of Judaism was by no means confined to Palestine. The great bulk of the Jewish nation had never returned from Babylon, but remained, in distinct communitics, spread over the surface of that emplie. Their fidelity to their faith was proved by their having supported the colony at Jerusalem till it no longer needed their help. They looked to the Temple as their religious centre, contributed largely to its funds, and received their ecclesiastical instructions from its authorities. The Babylonian Jew prided himself on the purity of his descent. What the Hebrews of Judea boasted they were, compared to those of other countries, the Babylonian Hebrew claimed to be to the Judean— like pure flour compared to dough." From Babylon, the Jew had spread through every region of the East, and wherever he went he became a zenous missionary of his faith. Various causes had led to the same wide dispersion in the West, with the same result. The number of proselytes gained, over the world, by this propaganda, was incredible. The West was as full of Jews has the East. Egypt, and otherparts of Africa, had a vast Jewish population. To use the words of Josephus, the habitable globe was so full of Jews, that there was scarcely a corner of the Roman empire where they might not be found. The great synagogne at Alexandria was so large that, if we can believe the Tahmud, the Hazan, or Reader, had to make use of a handkerchief, as a signal, when the congregation were to repeat their "Amen."

Incidental proofs of the success of Jewish proselytism are numerous. Cicero, and Horace, Juvenal, Tacitus, and Seneca alike give vent to the irritation everywhere felt, at the numbers of Greeks and Romans, thus won over, to what they regarded as a hateful superstition. Exemption from military service granted to the Jews, trade privileges they specially enjoyed, marriage, and other inducements, swelled the list of proselytes in every part. "The Jewish faith," says Seneca, "is now received over every land: the conquered have given laws to the conqueror." "This race," says Dio Cassius, "has been repeatedly checked by the Romans, yet it has increased amazingly, so that it has assumed the greatest poldness." Josephus tells us that in Antioch a great multitude of Greeks were constantly coming forward as proselytes. Still further east, it was the same, for St. Luke records that proselytes thronged to the feasts at Jerusalean

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

ources, the of Persian he Jews of ted a deep nmon. he days of lf, more or over many no means

community to their Jerusalem

Temple as id received

Babylonian he Hebrews countries, like pure ad spread ie became a o the same number of

vas incredi-

, and othe; he words of

there was ght not be that, if we ke use of a repeat their

are numer-

alike give Greeks and ul supersti-Jews, trade ducements,

vish faith.

uered have sslus, "has ased amazsephus tells tantly come same, for Jerusalem from provinces of the empire, north of the Mediterranean, such as Pontus, Asia, Phrygia, Pamphylia, Cappadocia, and from Rome itself; from its southern territories, such as Egypt, Arabia, Crete, and the parts of Libys about Cyrene, and from its eastern extremities, and even from lands beyond—Mesopotamians, Partilians, Medes, and Elamites,—dwellers in the vast regions reaching from the Caspian Sea to the Persian Gulf, on the north and south, and even fur ther to the east. The influence of Judaism extended into all lands.

Among the Jewish ideas diffused far and near by this universal agency, none would, and so easy and wide a circulation as that which, above all others, filled the mind and heart of every Jew in that age—the expected appearance of a great prince, of whom they spoke as the Messiah or 'Anointed." No indication of popular feeling can be more sure than that supplied by the literature of a period; and Jewish literature, from the date of Daniel to the age of Christ, was more and more completely Messianic. The Book of Enoch, the Jewish Sibylline books, the Psalter of Solomon, the Ascension of Moses, the Ascension of Isalah, the Fourth Book of Esdras, the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, and other writings of later Judaism, strove to sustain and rouse the nation, in those dark days, by prophetic anticipations of Messianic deliverance. Burning hope glows through them, like fire through clouds, revealing the feverish contation.

The restlessness of Judea was only another symptom of this universal tension of the popular mind. Patriotic hatred of foreign rule, and religious zeal against the introduction of heathen manners, kept the country in a continual ferment. This was heightened at every festival by assurances of the Rubbis, priests, and fanatical "prophets," that Jehovah would not much longer endure the intrusion of the heathen into His own Land. This temper of the people forced Herod to erect five times as many fortresses in Judea as were required in Galilee; and yet, in spite of them, the robbers and bandits of the Judean hills never ceased to make war against the existing government, in the name of Jehovah. Blind superstition reigned. The bigoted masses were continually deceived by pretended Messiahs, who led them, at one time, to the Mount of Olives, to see the walls of the now heathen Jerusalem fall down at the word of the prophet; at another, to the Jordan, to pass through, dry-shod, like their fathers; at a third; as if nothing could warn them, into the wilderness, to walt for the signs of the Son of Man predicted by Daniel. What must have been the contagious effect of such a state of things on the multitudes of Jews and proselytes from every country, who yearly visited Jerusalem? Josephus, perhaps with some exaggeration, tells us that at many feasts, there were not less than three millions of pilgrims. How must they have spread over the whole earth the expectation of a great Jewish king who was to conquer the world for this the Messiah was to accomplish. It is no wonder that Josephus, Tacitus, and Systemius should record the fact, though the Jawish historian in mean flattery, and the others from the turn of affairs, applied it to Vespasian.

who st

the vio

indeed, only to position

fate or most in the Mes

it was i

seems o

Babylor Persia, only mr

We fin

by Nebi

and in the as

however than with under the

tige, froi

degenera

in the ca

"sorcere

report sp of Persia

a new-bo

the East.

tions of ancient S

they had

was, inde

the birth

stars, and

star shor

hour," ar Jerusalen

over the birth, a 1

Cochba-Jacob.

astrology

bodies.

Soon a lon.

This

the turn of affairs, applied it to Vespasian. It is, therefore, only what might have been expected, when St. Matthew tells us that strangers from the East came, soon after His birth, to visit the infant Jesus. Any real or fancied occasion, which might lead to the belief that the prince, so universally looked for, had actually appeared, was well-nigh certain to call forth such an incident.

The simple notice given us throws no further light on these earliest pilgrims from the great Gentile world; than is afforded by the title Magi, and the intimation that they were led to undertake their journey to Bethlehem by some mysterious appearances in the heavens.

ney to Bethlehem by some mysterious appearances in the heavens. The worship of the heavenly bodies had been established for immemorial ages in the East, where the transparent atmosphere reveals the splendours of the universe, both by night and day, with a glory unknown to duller regions. In ages when science was yet unknown, and motion was everywhere assumed as the result of inherent life. i was almost inevitable to regard the sun as the lord of day, and the moon and stars as ruling the night. From this it was only a single step to superstition. "Magic," as Professor Bastian observes. "Is the physics of the children of nature." It is the first step towards induction, and misleads, only by assuming that accidental, or independent, coincidence; or succession, is necessarily cause and effect Like children, men, in simple ages, jump to conclusions from isolated observations, nor is the power of slow and careful generalization, from a wide range of facts, attained, till very much later. The phenomena of the daily and nightly heavens thus led very early, in the East, to a belief in astrology; the patient scientific faculty being yet wanting which would, hereafter, develop that illusive science into astronomy, as, in a later age, it raised alchemy into chemistry The stars were supposed, then, as they have been till recent times, to exercise subreme influence over human life and the course of nature and from this belief a vast system of imaginary results was elaborated The special power of each star, alone or in conjunction with others, over health and sickness, prosperity or trouble, life or death, the affairs of nations, and the phenomena of nature, was supposed to have been discovered; and this power was believed to affect the future as well as the present. Diodorus Siculus, who lived in the generation before Christ, says of the astrologers of the East, "They think the noblest sindy is that of the five stars called planets, which they call interpreters of This name they give them, because other stars do not wander like them, fout have a fixed course, while these have paths of their own, and predict things to be, thus interpreting to men the will of the gods. For they say that they portend some things by their rising, others by their setting, and still others by their colour, to those who study them diligently." For, at one time, they say they foretell the violence of storms, at another the excess of rains or of heat the appearance of comets, eclipses of the sun or moon, earthquakes, and. indeed, every change in the sky, either fortunate or the reverse, not only to nations and districts, but to kings and common people." The position of the stars at a child's birth was held to determine its future. fate or fortune, and, hence, to cast nativities, early became one of the most important functions of astrologers. Talli "Belled out of i

1,0001

he fact,

rs from

hen St.

fter His

which ked for.

such an earliest the title

êir jour

evens. for im-

e reveals

a glory

nknown,

nt life, it

and the

a single

rves, 71

or inde-

nd effect.

from iso-

eneraliza-

ter. led very

ic faculty

ve science

hemistry

times, to

of nature

aborated

th others,

leath, the

pposed to the future

think the

they call ars do not e paths of

en the will

s by their ir, to those

This science was very early cultivated among the races inhabiting the Mesopotamian plains. Like all higher knowledge in simple times, it was in the hands of a priestly caste, known as Magi, s word which seems of Arvan derivation. This order flourished among the Medes. Babylonians, and Persians, but it is chiefly famous in connection with Persia, and seems as if it had risen among the Aryan races, and had only mingled as a foreign element in the Semitic civilization of Babystoreorbit steel in the East, where the transition lon.

We first meet the title as that of one of the Chaldean officials sent by Nebuchadnezzar to Jerusalem-the Rabmag, or head of the Magi; and in the Book of Daniel, we find the caste divided into five classes, as the astrologers and dream interpreters of Babylon. Their origin. however, identified them with the purer faith of Persia, much more than with a corrupt idolatry, and hence they especially flourished under the Persian rule. In later times the name lost its early prestige, from the growth of lower magical arts, practised as the order degenerated, so that, in the New Testament, it is applied, excepting in the case of those who came to visit the infant Saviour, only to two "sorcerers" Simon Magus, and one Bar Jesus. "On Photos todo Lore Soon after the presentation of our Lord in the Temple, a strange report spread through Jerusalem. Members of the old priestly caste of Persia had " come from the East," inquiring where they could find a new-born King of the Jews, whose star, they suid, they had seen in the East. It was quite in keeping with Jewish belief to find indications of great events in the appearances of the heavens, for their ancient Scriptures spoke of a star that should come out of Jacob, and they had long referred the prophecy to their expected Messiah. It was, indeed, universally believed that extraordinary events, especially the birth and death of great men, were heralded by appearances of stars, and still more of comets, or by conjunctions of the heavenly bodies. Thus Suctonius tells us that at the death of Cæsar "a hairy star shone continuously for seven days, rising about the eleventh hour," and Josephus relates that for a whole year before the fall of Jerusalem a star, in the shape of a sword-doubtless a comet-hung over the doomed city. A hundred and thirty years after Christ's birth, a false Messiah, in Hadrian's reign, assumed the title of Bar. "the son of the star" in allusion to the star to come out of Cochba- the son of the star - in allusion to the star, or dabbled in Jacob. The Jews had already, long before Christ's day, dabbled in astrology, and the various forms of magio which secure councies with it. They were skilled in mysterious combinations of latters and numbers, which they used as talianand and amulate, to heal the sick, to drive away evil spirits, and bring frightful curses when wished, and they even affirmed that some of their spells could draw the moon from heaven or open the abyss beneath the carth. Such practices cated among them as far back, as the time of Alexander the Great. They were much given to east horoscopes from the numerical value of a name. Everywhere through the whole Roman impire, Jewish registans, dream expounders, and sorcerars, were found. Josephus a cubes the banishment of the Jews from Rome to the acts of impostors of this kind. Nor did their superstition stor, here, They were skilled in the mysteries of astrology itself. "The planets give wisdom and riches," says the Talmud, and it adds, in other passages,— "The life and portion of children hang not on righteousness, but on their star." "The planet of the day has no virtue, but the planet of the hour (of nativity) has much. Those who are born under the sun are becautiful and noble-looking, frank, and open: those, born under Venus, rich and amatory; under Mercury, strong in memory and vise; under the moon, feeble and inconstant; under, Jupiter, just; under Mars, fortunate." "The calculation of the stars is the joy of the Rabbi, "says the Firke Aboth. In another passage, indeed, a Rabbi tells an inquirer that "there is no planet that rules Israel," but the explanation added shows a pride that only a Jew could expresen-"The sons of Israel are themselves stars." Many, Rabbis gave, themselves to astrology.

Belief in the influence of the stars over life and death, and in special, portents at the birth of great men, survived, indeed, to recent times. Chaucer abounds in allusions to it. He attributes the great rain and the pestilence of 1348 and 1350 to an extraordinary conjunction of Saturn with other planets, and in the Man of Lawes Tale he says ti In storres many a synter therbyforn, Was write the deth of Ector and Achilles, Of Pompe, Julius, er they were 1-bore; The stryf of Thebes, and of Ercules, of Sampson, Turnus, and of Scores The deth. Still later, Shakespere tells us and Bedford at Henry V.'s funeral is made to say. "Comets, importing change of time and states, Brandish your crystal tresses in the sky, And with them scourge the bad revolting stars That have consented unto Henry's death."

When beggars die there are no comets seen; The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of princes;"

The special phenomena that led the Magi to undertake their journey have been elsewhere stated. That successive conjunctions of three planets in the sign of the Zodiac, Pisces, which was believed by the Jews t birth c the Me motion Doubt by Jew caste, e cant fa prince. ing tha should the wo At th sinking afraid o the bloc flower ( William or Nero and now dour of hated an for his d covered sees, to t and their propheer that Her to make diction brother, of the co his conne youth na immoral. of the cor spiracy v tells us." news spre the Magi. to Jerusal Herod and was t of the pr them whe Jewish was to be the sick; wished; the moon practices

he Great.

cel value e, Jewish Josephus ets of im-

ce, They

anets give

er the sun orn under mory and oter, just; the loy of

d, a Rabbi

express

gave them-

d in special.

eent times.

unction of

in the summer

Start Branning

perint and the second s

(1)(试用)[值的]]

il at handly

UNITED ALARTY TOTAL

eir journey

ved by the

Jews to be that in which a similar conjunction happened before the birth of Moses, and In which another was to occur before the birth of the Messiah, should have roused the attention of men to whom the motions of the planets were revelations from heaven, was only natural. Doubtiess they had heard in their own country such a belief expressed by Jews, and traced to the prophecy of Balaam, one of their own caste, and from their own parts. When, in addition to such significant facts, at a time whon all men were looking for a great Jewish prince; a comet appeared soon after, nothing could be more in keeping than that men, to whom such phenomena were the voice of God, should set out to pay homage to the new born King who was to rule the world.

At the time when the Magi arrived, Herod, now an old man, was sinking into the last stages of disease, but was still as jealous and afraid of attempts against his throne as ever. Its steps were wet with the blood of his best-loved wife, his sons, his benefactor, and of the flower of the nation, murdered to make it secure. Like our own William the Conqueror, or Henry VIII., or like Alexander the Great, or Nero, or Tiberius, his character had grown darker in his later years, and now, in his old age, he sat alone in his new palace, amidst splendour of architecture greater if possible than that of the Temple, lonely, hated and hating, his subjects waiting impatiently, in veiled rebellion, for his death. In his own court, shortly before, a plot had been discovered which had filled all Jerusalem with commotion. The Pharisees. to the number of 6.000, had refused to take the oath of allegiance, and their leaders, whom the people believed gifted with the power of protheey, had gone the length of asserting, that God had determined that Herod and his family should be speedily driven from the throne. to make way for the Messiah. To secure the fulfilment of this prediction, the influence of their firm supporter, the wife of Pheroras, his brother, was used, to carry the plot inside the palace, among the ladies of the court. Bagoas, the eunuch, as most easily approached, from his connection with the barem, was made their tool, and, with him, a youth named Carus, the loveliest person of his day, but loathsomely immoral. Bagoas was won over to believe that he would be the father of the coming Messiah, but Herod found out the whole, and the conspiracy was quenched in blood. No wonder that, as St. Matthew tells us, "he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him," when the news spread of strangers having come on such an errand as that of the Magi. To Herod their arrival was a fresh cause of jealous terror: to Jerusalem a possible ground of hope.

Herod had often before shown the craft bred by habitual suspicion, and was too clever to take any rash steps now. Summoning the heads of the priesthood and the "scribes" to his palace, he demanded of them where Christ should be born. Jewish theology had shready determined, correctly, that the Messian was to be of the stock of Judan, which had from the first challenged

He pred plenty streams foretelli this, Rabbi, successo

tradition Havin would h Herod s that he, different not likel Asmone ever, for gifts to the great country

Balked half-mea thorough fore sent supposed slaughter of blood it alone i centuries

Joseph fied to t How lor under Ho but in H another had indu and of t Jews occ at Leont ferred to Bible, w original, efforts to it the fav new scho even Chr

It has the headship of the tribes, and had been supreme since Ephraim's captivity in Assyris. It boasted of David, the ancestor and the pac-totype of the Messiah, and the words of Jscob that the "sceptie" should "not depart from it, until Shiloh come," or as it may be trans-lated, from the Greek version, "till he comes to whom the dominion belongs," had long been understood to refer to the Messiah. "How fair is the King Messiah, "says the Targum on the passage, "who will rise from the house of Judah." The words of Zechariah. "The Lord of Hosts hath visited the house of Judah, and hath made them as his goodly horse in the battle," are also applied by another Targum to the Messiah. "A king will rise from the children of Jesse." says the same Targum elsewhere, "and the Messiah will spring from his children's children." Hence "the Son of David" was a constant name for this expected Prince.

As a descendant of David, Bethlehem, David's town, was naturally regarded as the place of his birth, and hence the passage in Micah adduced by the priests and scribes, is also quoted by the Targuns. An Arab said to a Jew at his plough, "says the Taimind," Your Messiah is born! What is his name? saked the Jew, Menabem.

Messiah is born! What is his name? asked the Jew Menabem the son of Hezekiah. Where was he born? asked the Jew again. 'In the king's castle at Bethlehem Judah, answered the Arab Long before the birth of Christ, it had been felt that the time for the advent of the Messiah was fulfilled, and lifs non appearance even led to the fanciful idea that he was slready born, but kept himself hidden in some unknown part. We know this man whence he is "said the Jews, long after, of Jesus," but when the Christ cometh inb man knoweth whence He is!" Thou O anointed one of Israel." the people of Zion, Thine shall be the kingdom!"

The prophecy of Balaam had led to the same belief among the Jews, as amongst the Eastern Magi—that π r reat star would appear in heaven when the Messiah came. "When the Messiah is to be revealed," says the book Sohar, 'a star will rise in the cast, shining in great brightness, and seven other stars round it will fight against if on every side." 'A star will rise in the east which is the star of the Messiah and will remain in the east fifteen days." The rising of Bar-Cochba, "the son of the star," was a terrible illustration of this belief.

To hear of Magi coming from the East-the country of Balaam, the reputed founder of the caste, announcing the appearance of the star of the Messiah, which they themselves expected, was, hence, fitted to rouse the Rabbinical world of Jerusalem to the highest excitement. They had already a wondrous estimate of the great southsayer, for Philo, a contemporary of Christ, speaks of him as 'famous for his gift of prophecy." 'He was skilled," says he, 'in every branch of the black art. He had learned the greatest names (names of angels and of God, to be used in magic, through his knowledge of the flight of birds, and did much that was wonderful by their means.

Ren) Traine d the pro

sceptre v be transdominion " " How who will

lah, The nade tliem er Targum esse, says

g from his a constant s naturally in Micah, Targums, A FILL BY OU Menahen

Jew again. rab.

he time for trance even by himself ince he is.

cometh. no

of Israel."

the sins of

g the Jews. ir in heaven revealed." ng in great it on every he Messiah Bar-Cochba, excitement.

thsaver, for ous for his y branch of a of angels edge of the dge of the letr means.

iller. Balaam, the of the star nence, fitted He predicted rain in the hottest time of summer; heat and drought in the midst of winter; unfruitrumess when the fields were greenest; plenty in years of famine, and the overflowing or drying up of streams, the removal of pestilence; and a thousand other things, the forciciling of which got him boundless fame, which spread even to this." The Rabhis believed, indeed, that Balaam himself was a Rabbi, who taught disciples the black art, and that the Magi, his successors, knew his prophecy of the star of the Messiah, through the tradition of his schools.

Having learned the expected birthplace of the Messiah, which he would himself have known, had he been a Jew and not an Idumean, Herod sent for the Magi and made every inquiry, under the pretext that hc, also, wished to do homage to the young child. But very different thoughts were in his heart. A descendant of David was not likely to be spared by the man who had murdered the last of the Asmoneans. The hope of the world was not to perish thus, how-ever, for the Magi having paid their visit to Bethlehem, and presented gifts to Him, as all Easterns do when they come before princes or the great, a dream, sent from above, led them to return to their own country without revisiting Jerusalem.

Balked in his, purpose so far. Herod was not the man to stop at half-measures. A few murders more were nothing. The most thorough precautions must be taken. A band of soldiers was there-fore sent to Bethlehem with orders to kill every male child near the supposed age of the infant he dreaded. Josephus is silent about this slaughter, but this needs not surprise us, for what was a single deed of blood, in a mountain village, among the crimes of Herod? Nor is it alone in the omissions of the historian, for his whole history of the centuries after the Return omits far more than it tells. Joseph and Mary had left Bethlehem before this tragedy, and had fied to the friendly shelter of Egypt, at a warning divinely given. How long they remained there is not known. All Palestine was under Herod, so that he could have reached them in any part of it, but in Egypt the fugitives were safe. It was, moreover, almost another Judea, for the favour shown to their race by the Ptolemies had induced as many as a million of Jews to settle in the Nile valley. and of the five quarters of Alexandria, with 300,000 free citizens, Jews occupied more than two. They had had a temple of their own at Leontopolis, in the Delta, for about 160 years, though they preferred to go up to that at Jerusalem; the Greek translation of the Bible, which had already widely taken the place of the Hebrew original, had been made in Egypt, and the Egyptian Rabbis, by their efforts to turn Judaism into a philosophic system which should win it the favour of the cultivated Romans and Greeks, had founded a new school of Jewish theology, which was, hereafter, to influence even Christianity. It has been usual to suppose that Herod died in the spring of the year 750 that is, within a few months after the birth of Christ

But there seem to be some reasons for believing that he lived till 753. Josephus says that he died shortly before the Passover; and that an eclipse of the moon happened not long before. In the year 750 such an eclipse happened on the 18th of March; but if he divd at the end of that month, dr in April, there must have been a crowding of events into the short interval, beyond what seems possible. It appears, however, that there was an eclipse of the motir on the night of January the 10th, in the year 758, and it is urged that this suits the facts much better, by giving three months instead of one for the incidents mentioned by Josephus, even if Christ were born three years later, and by leaving ample time for those related by Matthew and Luke. A passage has been found in a Calendar of the Feasts, in the Tahmud which seems to support this later date. I'' The 1st Shebet (or 24th of January) is a day of double) good fortune as the day of the death of Herod and of Janual, for it is joy before God when the wicked are taken from this world." If this be right, the eclipse happened on the 10th of January, Herod's death on the 24th, and there was ample time before April for the burial and all that followed, which must have required weeks. at fild antirol Bill shill feel they If, then, Herod had yet nearly three years to live after the birth of Christ, Joseph and Mary nust have stayed in Egypt that length of time. Nor would it be difficult for Joseph to find support, as the different classes of Jewish workmen in Egypt were associated in guilds, which maintained those out of employment, much arrades' unions do, now. The goldsmiths, the silversmiths, the nail-makers and needle-makers, the coppersmiths, and the weavers, are specially mentioned as being banded together in such associations, which supported any stranger of their respective crafts till he found work: The workers in wood, in all probability, had such a union as well; and Joseph, moreover, though called a carpenter in the Gospels, may have been more, for the word does not necessarily mean a worker in wood only, but a wagyou smith and other occupations as well. In its Hebrew sense, it may mean, indeed, any kind of trade which uses cutting instruments, and is used indifferently of workers in metal, wood or stone. Sman mider / in hersel har hersel? To and how of o Egypt, though thus filled with a Jewish population, was, however, no land for Joseph and Mary, nor, above all, for the infant Jesus. Neither the Greek inhabitants of the towns and cities, nor the Egyptian peasantry, were very friendly to the strangers who, in hundreds of thousands, intruded into the Nile valley. The old hatred between the land of Mizraim and the sons of Israel seemed still, in some measure, to survive on both sides. The Jews hated the Egyptian priesthood, with its worthless secrets and its ridiculous symbols and prided themselves, as the prophets had done of old, on their purer faith. They say, in Egypt, the incarnation of the most corrupt heathenism. The command, "Thou shalt make no dikeness relition not loc the slin which Roman kitchei istn in license of men; other h race by cahumni was said were le Greeks should against t very fac and that account Things h of Alexa It is no y soon as p The A by the in and Mar commonl variously The sta The cour are as ent later trad to be the His light Ethiopia, undeterm. though m and the A fire, and Messiah were only the three Africa. (f

COITCEDOD

OT STAT

ban ka

106

or graven image," was nowhere mocked to such an extent as on the hanks of the Nile. Even Philo makes the remark that the Egyptian religion is the most grovelling of all forms of idolatry, since it did not look to the beavens for objects of worship, but to the earth, and the slime of the Nile, with its creatures. Josephus derides the system which worshipped crocodiles and apes, vipers and cats; and even the Roman Juvenal scoffed at a race who grew their divinities in their kitchen garden. The Apostle Paul evidently had Egyptian heathenistn in his mind when he speaks of idolatry as running to the foul license of changing the image of the invisible God into the likeness of men, of birds, of four-footed beasts, and creeping things." On the other hand, the Jews suffered from the traditional hatred of their race by the Egyptians. In the repetition of scandals and shameful calumnies against them, which had survived since the Exodu. It was said that the children of Israel, whom Moses led out of Egypt. were lepers, whom Pharaoh had banished from the country; and Greeks and natives, catching at the bitter shander, strove which should turn it, and others equally contemptuous, with most effect, against their Jewish fellow-citizens, whom all equally disliked. The very fact that the Romans had, granted special favours to the Jews, and that they were rivals in trade, was, indeed, litself sufficient to account for such an attitude of acrid raillery and depreciation: Things had at last come to open rupture, and the Jewish community of Alexandria looked forward only to ultimate expulsion and ruin. It is no wonder, therefore, that Joseph and Mary sought to return as soon as possible to their own country the Malot and a them of remotion The Apocryphal Gospels are full of extraordinary miracles wrought by the infant Jesus while in Egypt, and of legends respecting him and Mary, but none of them are worth reproducing. Memphis is commonly given as the place where Joseph settled, and his stay is variously stated as having lasted three years, two, or only one of the The star and the Magi have naturally given rise to many legends. The country, the number, and the names of the illustrious visitors are as entirely passed over by the Apocrypha as by the Gospels, but later tradition abundantly atones for the omission."" They were said to be the kings of Sheba and Seba, in Arabia, come to offer gifts to His light and to the brightness of His rising, but Persia, Chaldea, Ethiopia, and India, have each had their advocates. It is equally undetermined in the legends, whether they were Jews of heathen. though most of the fathers favour the idea that they were the latter. and the Arabic Gospel of the Infancy represents them as worshipping fire, and as referring to a prophecy of Zoroaster respecting the Messiah. Their three gifts led to the fancy that they themselves were only three in number, which was supposed to correspond to the three divisions of the earth as then known, Europe, Asla, and Africa. Sometimes, however, they are spoken of as twelve, to correspond with the Apostles, and their names given, with the

of Christ dotill 758. d that an 750 such st the end wding of minn on the d that this of one for born three y Matthew Feasts, in 1st Shebet the day of i when the the eclipse 24th, and i followed, 13 30% 4497 the birth of t length of port, as the sociated in a antrades' nafi-makers re specially ons, which ound work. ion as well; ospels, may a worker in as well or In which uses rs in metal, 何20倍5 64 0 s, however, nfant Jesus. es, nor the ers who, in The old rael seemed ws hated the s ridiculous e of old, ou of the most e no disences special gift which each presented to Their kingdoms also are mentioned, and their very ages, which are made to represent youth, manhood, and grey hairs. Bede, indeed, is able to tell us that Melchior was an old man, with long white hair, and a sweeping heard, and that he gave the gold as to a king; that Caspar was a beardless youth with a ruddy face, and that he presented the frankincense, as a gift worthy the God; while Balthasar was a swarthy strong-bearded man, and gave the myrrh for the burial. In the cathedral at Cologne, visitors may yet see the supposed skulls of the three, set in jewels, and exhibited in a great gilded shrine. They are said to have been discovered by Bishop Reinald of Cologne in the twelfth century. Imagination has been equally busy with the star. The Arabic, Gospel of the Infancy says it was an angel in the form of a star, and several of the Fathers were of the same opinion. Origen believed it to have been a comet. One tradition is beautiful. In the farthest East, it says, lived a people who had a book which bore the name of Seth, and in this was written the appearance of the star of the Messiah, and the offering of gifts to Him. This book was handed down from father to son, generation after generation. Twelve men were chosen who should watch for the star, and when one died, another was chosen in his place. These men, in the speech of the land, were called Magi. They went, each year, after the wheat-harvest, to the top of a mountain, which was called the Mountain of Victory, 1 It had a cave in it, and was pleasant by its springs and trees. At last the star appeared, and in it the form of a little child, and over him the sign of the cross; and the star itself spoke to them and told them to go to Judea. For two years, which was the time of their journey, the star moved before them, and they wanted neither food nor drink. Gregory of Tours adds that the star sank, at last, into a spring at Bethlehem, where he himself had seen it, and where it still may be seen, but only by pure maidens, during

The Gospel of Matthew, which was written for the Jewish Christions of Palestine, has for its primary aim the proof that Jesus was the promised Messiah, and as nothing would weigh so much in the minds of men trained in Jewish ideas, as evidences from their own Scriptures, it abounds with quotations from them to show how prophecy was fulfilled in our Saviour. There are five such quotations in the first two chapters, some of which would, not perhaps have struck us, of themselves, as primarily bearing on the Messiah. In Christ's day, a system of allegorizing was in vogue with the Rabbis of the various Jewish schools, as it afterwards came to be in the Christian Church, and this, though familiar to those for whom the Gospel was first written, is not so much so to us. How far, in some cases, it is intended to be understood that the passages quoted, originally referred to the events to which they are applied, has been a subject of much controversy, for the secred writers themselves evidently intend. them to be understood, in some instances, as a divine fulfilment of prophec haps the "Where "from t tions or intention contrary, where th 'then." custom o Scripture for, and far, horse far, horse uance of

THE ex

Jesus Chr in heaven sin, is at c much diff human in The Etern see Him: In Jesus C tions whice explain, n frail as a f child on th given mon plied in £ presence a as united Christ Jest His divine and there i but the na human side It seems we have re reverence t mystery of beyond the earthly life Having Palestine, On resents prophecy, but, in others, only as an illustration and parallel. Perhaps the rule laid down by Tholuck is as nearly right as any. "Where parallels are adduced in the New Testament," says he, "from the Old, whether it be in words of the prophets, or in institutions or events, it is to be taken for granted, in general, that the intention was we should regard them as divinely designed. On the contrary, there are other cases, as for example, Mutthew ii. 17, where the phrase that it might be fulfilled is not used, but only then." In these the sacred writer is to be regarded as following the custom of his day, by expressing his own thoughts in the words of Scripture."

bue note a formed submit form an taw ti every defined and the second state of the second seco are men-

ith, man-

Melchior

ard, and

ss youth,

as a gift

ded man,

Cologne, n jewels,

have been tury. e Arabic, star, and believed it

e farthest

e name of ar of the

is handed

one died,

ech of the wheat-harountain of

rings and

ittle child,

e to them,

he time of

ed neither

k_at last,

and where

wish Chris-

Jesus was

uch in the

their own

show how quotations have struck

In Christ's obis of the e Christian Gospel was cases, if is

iginally resubject of ntly intend

lfilment of

The exceeding difficulty of telling the story of a life like that of Jesus Christ, a man and yet divine, one having all power given Him in heaven and in earth, and yet like other men in all respects except sin, is at once evident, on the least reflection. Indeed, it is not so much difficult as impossible, to tell it as such conditions demand, for human intellect can only comprehend the created, not the Creator. The Eternal still dwells in thick darkness; no eye hath seen or can see Him: His very attributes utterly transcend our comprehension. In Jesus Christ, as at once God and Man, we have opposite conceptions which we may humbly receive, but can neither harmonize. explain, nor adequately express. Man, as such, is not almighty, but frail as a flower; not omniscient, but, even at his highest wisdom; a child on the shore of the Infinite; not omnipresent, but fixed at any given moment to one minute spot." We cannot conceive what is implied in c nature of which almighty power, omniscience, and omnipresence are attributes; far less present them, adequately, in words, as united with human weakness and local limitation. The Man Christ Jesus may be realized. His acts and words may be related: His divine powers may be illustrated by their recorded exhibitions. and there may be the most sincere admission of His highest claims: but the narrative must still inevitably, as a whole, be that of the human side of His nature only. Intillar to corece troi

It seems necessary to remind the reader of this at the point which we have reached, to prevent misconceptions. We yield to none in reverence to Jesus. Christ as "God manifest in the flesh;" but the mystery of a nature which could be thus described must ever remain beyond the power of adequate presentation in any narrative of His earthly life.

Having heard of Herod's death, Joseph determined to return to Palesting, with the Intention of settling permanently at Bethlehem. On reterming Judca, however, and finding Archelaus had been appointed ethnarch, the dread of one who, of all the family, was believed to be the most like the hated tyrant, his father Herod,—the tumults and massacres in Jerusalem at his accession, and the chronic disturbance of the country, induced him to choose his former place of residence, in Galilee, instead.

, In Nazareth, he was still under the rule of another of Herod's sons, Herod Antipas—a man of no higher principle than his brother, as his shameless life abundantly proved, but less likely to be goaded into violent acts towards his people, from receiving less irritation at their hands, than Archelaus had to bear, at those of the fiercely orthodox population of Judea. With the exception of the dead Antipater, moreover, Archelaus was the most tyrannical and self-willed of the sons of Herod, and he was not at all unlikely to follow up the suspicious cruelty of his father, which had led to the Bethlehem massacre, should any hint betray the return of the supposed rival to his dominions. Herod Antipas, on the other hand, was far less likely to trouble himself about any claimant of the throne of Judea, a province unconnected with his government. Thus, Nazareth became, once more, a year or two before the commencement of our present era, the habitation of the infant Jesus. Here He was to spend all His future life, except part of its last few years.

Nazareth lies among the hills, which extend for about six miles between the plains of El Battauf on the north, and Esdraelon on the south. It is on the north side of the latter, and overlooks one of the numercus little folds or bays of the great plain, which are seen wherever the hills open. The village lies on the northern side of this green bay, and is reached by a narrow, steep, and rough, mountain path, over which the villagers have to bring their harvests laboriously from the plain beneath, on camels, mules, and donkeys. If the traveller ride up this path in March, when Palestine is at its best, he will be charmed by the bright green of the plains and the beauty of the flowers, everywhere lighting up the otherwise barren hills, which, at best, yield scanty pasture for sheep and goats. The red anemone and the pink phlox are the commonest; rock roses, white and yellow. are plentiful, with a few rink ones, the cytisus here and there covers the ground with golden flowers, and the pink convolvulus. marigold wild geranium, and red tulip, are varied by several kinds of orchis--the asphodel, the wild garlic, mignonette, salvia, pimpernel; and white or pink cyclamen. As the path ascends, the little fertile valley beneath, running east and west, gradually opens to about a quarter of a mile in breadth, covered, with fields and gardens, divided by cactus hedges, and running into the hills for about a mile. Near the village, beside the pathway, about an hour from Esdraelon, is a spring, from which the water pours from several taps in a slab of masonry, falling into a trough below, for camels, horses, asses, and cattle.

The distant view of the village itself, in spring, is beautiful. Its sireets r The hills it, in an and shut built of in the su trees, oli orange a large con church, a and dirty the narro are large to the pla Small gan break the coo, and the open. or the bul many bir stay be le also Britis with mel the hedge ble, on th the song-t beneath. home; th swallows and, in w over the goats dot brook rip and maid is the on which the rises unde the hill-sid is the thre oxen draw grain, in t have been perhaps th the unequ Later in flowers. with no co

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

streets rise, in terraces, on the hill-slopes, towards the north-west. The hills, here and there broken into perpendicular faces, rise above it, in an amphitheatre round, to a height of about five hundred feet, and shut it in from the bleak winds of winter. The flat-roofed houses, built of the vellowish-white limestone of the neighbourhood, shine in the sun with a dazzling brightness, from among gardens, and figtrees, olives, cypresses, and the white and scarlet blossoms of the orange and pomegranate. A mosque, with its graceful minaret, a large convent, from whose gardens rise tall cypresses, and a modest church, are the principal buildings. The streets are narrow, poor, and dirty, and the shops are mere recesses on each side of them, but the narrowness shuts out the heat of the sun, and the miniature shops are large enough for the local trade. Numbers of dogs which belong to the place, and have no owner, lie about, as in all Eastern towns. Small gardens, rich in green clumps of olive-trees and stately palms, break the monotonous yellow of the rocks and houses, while doves coo, and birds of many kinds twitter, in the branches, or flit across the open. The bright colours of the roller, the hoopoe, the sunbird, or the bulbul, catch the eye as one or other darts swiftly past, and many birds familiar in England are seen or heard, if the traveller's stay be lengthened, for of the 322 birds found in Palestine, 172 are also British. The song of the lark floods a thousand acres of sky with melody; the restless titmouse, the willow-wren, the blackcap, lon on the the hedge-sparrow, the whitethroat, or the nightingale, flit or warone of the ble, on the hill-side, or in the cactus hedges, while the rich notes of h are seen the song-thrush or blackbird rise from the green clumps in the valley side of this beneath. The wagtail runs over the pebbles of the brook as here at mountain home; the common sparrow haunts the streets and house-tops; vests laborswallows and swifts skim the hill-sides and the grassy meadows; cevs. If the and, in winter, the robin redbreast abounds. Great butterflies flit its best, he over the hill sides, amongst the flowers, while flocks of sheep and e beauty of goats dot the slopes and the little plain below. Through this a ills, which, brook ripples, the only one in the valley, and thither the women d anemone and maidens go to fetch water in tall jars, for household use. It and yellow, is the one spring of the town, and, hence, must have been that there covwhich the mothers and daughters of Christ's day frequented. It onvolvulus, rises under the choir of the present Greek church, and is led down veral kinds the hill-side in a covered channel. An open space near the church ia, pimperis the threshing-floor of the village, where, after harvest, the yoked he little feroxen draw the threshing-sledges slowly, round and round, over the is to about grain, in the open air. No wonder that in spring Nazareth should d gardens, have been thought a paradise, or that it should be spoken of as or about a perhaps the only spot in Palestine where the mind feels relief from ir from Esthe unequalled desolation that reigns nearly everywhere else. everal taps Later in the year, the hills around lose the charm of their spring els, horses, flowers. They are then grey and barren, divided by dry gullics, with no colour to relieve their tame and commonplace outlines, the utiful. Its

mily. was

erod, -the

he chronic

mer place of Herod's

is brother,

be goaded

ritation at fiercely or-

dead Anti-

lf-willed of

ow up the

ehem mas-

rival to his

ss likely to ea, a prov-

th became,

ur present

o spend all

ix miles be-

हामन

same on every side. But even then, the rich hues at sunset, with its tints reflected from the rocks, the long-drawn shadows of afternoon, and the contrasts of light and dark on a cloudy day, give frequent charms to a landscape in itself unattractive. Nazareth lies nearly twelve hundred feet above the sea, and some of the hills which cluster round, and shut it in, rise, as has been said, about five hundred feet higher. It is a mountain village, only to be reached from the plain by a tedious climb.

The Nazareth hills are of different kinds of white limestone. A thick bed of this rock-containing flints, and merging, above into the marl which is still found at Nablus, and into a more thinly bedded soft limestone beneath-originally covered the whole country, from Samaria to Nazareth. This stone, though hard when exposed to the air, is so soft, where fresh, that it can be cut like chalk. Beneath it lies hard dolomitic limestone. The hills are the remains of these different rocks, after denudation through a long geological period, their strata being more or less disturbed by volcanic upheaval and contortion. Three centres of cruptive outbursts are visible in the neighbourhood of Esdraelon-one in the range of Gilboa, on the south-east; another at Little Hermon, between Gilboa and Tabor; and the third in the south-eastern part of the Carmel range, at Jebel Iskander-no fewer than twenty-nine outbursts of basalt, on the east, west, and north of the plain, marking their former activity." The limestone beds are everywhere more or less tilted up by this volcanic energy. The rich dark soil of Esdraelon has been formed from the wearing down of the basalt which now forms part of some of the neighbouring hills, and from strata of volcanic mud derived from it. The smaller plains of Palestine are of a more cluyey soil, the hills round them being of limestone or basalt, presenting, at times, sudden and precipitous cliffs, and the original soft, chalky limestone remaining still on their tops. 4. 20 anore theraord, avila, back edang territer

The free air of their mountain home seems to have had its effect on the people of Nazareth. Its bright-eyed, happy children and comely women strike the traveller, and even their dress differs from that of other parts. Through Palestine generally, the frequent and excessive changes of climate expose the peasants, or fellahin, to rheumatism, coughs, and bronchitis; and, as a protection, the men in many parts wear a sheepskin coat, on warm days as well as cold? The women, however, make no change in their dress, which usually consists of nothing but a long blue garment tied in round the waist, a bonnet of red cloth, decorated with an edging or roll of silver coins, bordering the forehead and extending to the ears, reminding one of the crescent-shaped female head-dress worn by some of the Egyptian priestesses. Over this, a veil or shawl of coarse white cotton is thrown, which hangs down to the waist, serving to cover the mouth, while the bosom is left exposed, for Eastern and Western ideas of decorum differ in some things, and guois ellan agnot ofai a t with its afternoon. e frequent and some s has been illage, only estone. A abo vej into inly bedded intry, from posed to the Beneath it ns of these ical period, heaval and sible in the boa, on the and Tabor; ge, at Jebel on the east, tivity. The his volcanic ed from the some of the ved from it. oil, the hills mes, sudden tone remain-CISICTUS, 21 its effect on and comely from that of and excesto rheumanen in many cold. The usually conthe waist, a silver coins, ding one of he Egyptian te cotton is the mouth,

The people of the plain of Esdraelon are different. Their dark

ern ideas of skins, bright eyes, white teeth, and wonderful taste in the combination of the brightest colours, draw the attention. Nothing more picturesque could be desired than the women, in their red veils and long pointed sleeves, carrying water; the dark camel-drivers, in black head-dresses, and striped brown and white abbas, riding on diminutive donkeys, before the train of clumsy, swinging, dull-coloured camels: the rich sheikh, in a purple jacket, scarlet, boots, thin white cloak, and yellow head dress; his grey mare, with a scarlet saddle, with long brown tassels at its peaks; alternating with the herds of black goats and diminutive red oxen. in thirtus' first at display litered The various costumes which seem peculiar to Nazareth are not less striking b. The short abba or cloak of the men, and their gorgeous kefeyehs, or kerchiefs, folded triangularly, and thrown over the head, so as to fall over the neck and shoulders; the white yell, the silk dresses, the broad scarves, and many-coloured trousers, red, green, blue, and yellow, of the women, give a crowd a peculiarly picturesque appearance, and differ materially from the sordid dresses of the poorer. southern villages. In a country where nothing changes, through age after age, the dress of to-day is very likely, in most respects, the same as it was two thousand years ago, though the prevailing colour of the Hebrew dress, at least in the better classes, was the natural white of the materials employed, which the fuller made even whiter One characteristic of the hills round Nazareth existing already in Christ's day, and, indeed, much earlier, is a striking proof of the denseness of the population of Palestine in former times, and of its restless industry and energy. Many of them are honeycombed with countless excavations of various kinds. Cemeteries of over two hundred tombs, out in the soft rock, some of them large tunnelled vaults, with separate hollows for twelve bodies; large numbers of cisterns, grape and olive presses, store or dwelling caves, wells and quarries, are everywhere abundant, as, indeed, they are oven the whole country, but especially in the Shephelah, or Philistine plain. The cisterns are from twenty to thirty feet deep, shaped like a church bell or inverted funnel; about two and a half feet across at the mouth, and fifteen to twenty-five at the bottom, the whole cut out of the solid limestone, showing that Palestine must always have been, for a good , part of the year, a waterless country, needing to store up the rains of autumn and spring. It is not uncommon to find groups of from three to ten, or even more, of these fine excavations together. What must have been the density of the population, what its civilization and industry, to leave such remains in such numbers? dense added to include the second

The Nazareth hills are, for the most part, neglected now, but were utilized in Christ's day as the hill-sides along the Rhine or the limeslopes of Malta are at present, by terrace cultivation. Traces of these ancient terraces may still be seen. All the loose stones were gathered and built into rough walls along the sides of the hills, like so many steps, as at Bethlehem still. The tops of the strips thus gained, after being levelled, produced grapes and all kinds of fruit in great abund ance. The supporting walls, having been long neglected, have fallen down, and well-nigh disappeared; the earth once behind them has been washed away by the heavy rains, and the slopes, except in spring, when the flowers are in their glory, show little but barren rock. The view from Nazareth itself is limited, as might be expected from its nestling in an amphitheatre of hills, that shut in the little valley, except to the west, where it opens on Esdraelon. From the top of the hill at the back of the village, to the north, however, it is very different. Galilee lies spread out like a map at one's feet. The eve wanders over the plain of Esdraelon in its broad western sweep. Three hours to the east, it rests on the round outline of Tabor, with its woods of oaks and pistachios, and, beyond it, on the swelling mass of Jebel el Dahy, or little Hermon, which closes in the plain, at about the same height as Tabor. Ranging southwards, the mountains of Gllboa, four or five hundred feet lower, shut in the lowlands; while far beyond them, across the hidden course of the Jordan rise the mountains of Gilead. Looking to the south, across Escraelon, the hills of Samaria are seen, through the openings of the wooded heights of the Carmel range, reaching northward to join it. Turning slowly towards the west, the whole length of the Carmel hills, running thirty miles north-west to the coast, seem, in the pure air of these parts, as if close at hand. About twenty miles off, almost directly west, rises the headland of Carmel; its top crowned with woods of oaks and figtrees, its slopes varied with orchards, laurels, and olives, and its seaward face sinking abruptly into the Mediterranean waters. Nestling at the northern base of the hill, on the sea shore, the white houses of Haifa arrest the eye. The blue waters, specked with sails, stretch far away, beyond, to the distant horizon. The whole Bay of Acre is seen, though Acre itself lies too low to be visible. The brown sandy shores, sweeping far to the north, are hidden only here and there, by intervening hills. Leaving the coast, and looking from north-west to north, the panorama shows a sea of hills—the highlands of Galilee. broken by the fertile upland plain of Battauf, close at hand, with the ruins of the once famous Sepphoris, on a solitary hill at its southern edge, and beyond, on its northern slope, the cottages of Cana of Galilce. In the background, twenty miles away, tower the hills of Safed, 2,770 feet above the sea, rising above the ever-heightening summits of the highlands of Upper Galilee. But Safed itself is only midway in the landscape. Mountains rise beyond mountains, to the north, till they culminate more than sixty miles off, as the crow flies, in the highest peaks of Hermon, ten thousand feet above the sea-level. As the eye wanders round to the point from which it began its survey, hills beyond hills still meet the view, stretching away, with rounded tops, towards the Sea of Galilee, and rising again, beyond it, to a greater height on its castern shores. Ash Today he shares

In the most of up as a c for many the lands tain path which th below th to Him in pilgrim 1 faith, it i The in have been reth, on place fitte the surpa sky, and liearted a imaginati seclusion, The wond great, rich fortress, w a crown o high road sea"-ran Damascus Judea and meeting a plain: ATh Berytus, S Sepphoris, Nazareth v merce or bouring ra and where greater libe It has be with a do greatest Sc rude coarse has no hon a rough an clamation town; perh traffic on th other notid

114

In the town of Nazareth, then doubtless much larger, Jesus spent most of His life. Amidst these hills, in these streets, He was brought up as a child; and "grew," as a boy, "in wisdom and stature." Here, for many years, He laboured as a man for His daily bread. This was the landscape on which He daily gazed, and it was along these mountain paths He walked. He must often have stood on the hill top from which the whole country is seen, and the little bay of the great plain below the village, with its encircling heights, must have been familiar to Him in its least detail. If there be a spot to which a Christian pilgrim might, rightly turn, as the most sacred in the history of his faith, it is Nazareth.

The influence of such a home on the character of its people must have been marked. Less lovely, perhaps, than the plain of Gennesareth, on the other side of the hills on the north-east, it was, yet, a place fitted, alike by the dreamy quiet of its environment of heights, the surpassing view from the hill above it, the beauty of earth and sky, and the soul-inspiring purity of its mountain air, to form truehearted and generous children of nature, quick in intellect, bright in imagination, and noble in higher characteristics. Yet, with all its seclusion, the position of Nazareth checked any narrow onesidedness. The wonderful landscape from its hill-top made this impossible. The great, rich, Sepphoris, the capital of Galilee, at once a town and a fortress, was scarcely three hours distant, Tiberias was only eight, and a crown of populous villages rose on all sides, around. The great high road-known even in the days of Isaiah as "the way of the sea"-ran across the plain of El Battauf, just behind Nazareth, from Damascus to Ptolemais. Another caravan road, from Damascus to Judea and Egypt, crossed Esdraelon at the foot of the Nazareth hill. meeting a third, from the north, at Megiddo, on the other side of the plain: A The Roman road from Syria, moreover, after passing through Berytus, Sidon, Tyre, and Ptolemais, on the coast, ran, by way of Sepphoris, through Nazareth, to Samaria, Jerusalem, and the south, Nazareth was, thus, at the crossing-place of the nations, where commerce or military changes gave daily familiarity with all the neighbouring races, the Syrian, the Phenician, the Arab, and the Roman; and where there was so much intercourse, there must have been greater liberality than in other parts of Jewish territory.

It has been usual to think of Nazareth as a rough and fierce place, with a doubtful character even for morals. The rejection of its greatest Son by his fellow townsmen has been thought to show their rude coarseness; but Jesus offers a milder explanation—that a prophet has no honour in his own country. Yet, even in rejecting him, only a rough and coarse people would have acted so rudely. The exclamation of Nathanael seems to imply the doubtful morality of the town; perhaps from its position in the midst of constant heathen traffic on the great roads; and this appears to correspond with the other notices of it in the Gospels. If it were so, it would only it abund ve fallen them has except in ren rock. expected the little From the it is very The eye n sweep. bor. with lling mass , at about untains of ds; while n, rise the acton, the ed heights ing slowly ning thirty e parts, as west, rises ks and fignd its sea-Nestling e houses of ils, stretch of Acre is own sandy d there, by rth-west to Galilee,d, with the ts southern na of Gals of Safed, summits of midway in north, till lies, in the -level. As its survey, h rounded nd it, to a LANDIA MELLA ied; after

She is

She m Her hu of th

She m

Streng She op

mer

kind She lo bread Her so

her;-

Nó lị than thi

ared yes and Ror hill. T erbs, is successin design, i of years maiden Jewish 1 has ever industry, spect; of above, ar

dled high

believe th

tivities ar

developm

ing. If I

great gift

she given.

"for the

you may

your wife

Talmud.

without h

The re

'Many Gracefu fears Give he are th are heighten the wonder that such a shoot should grow from ground so dry!

Of the first thirty years of Christ's life we know nothing, except the one incident of His visit to Jerusalem, with Joseph and Mary, when a boy of twelve years old. It is not difficult, however, to imagine at least some of the influences which must have had their part in the development of that "wisdom" in which He "grew," as His childhood and boyhood passed away. "It must be granted," says Ewald, "that in no ancient people has

"It must be granted," says Ewald, "that in no ancient people has family life maintained itself so powerfully as in Larael, during the early days of the outward strength of the nation, or with so little weakening and deterioration as during the period of its gradual decline." In their patriarch Isaac and his wife Rebecca, they had an abiding ideal which it seemed the highest felicity to copy. Woman, among the Jews, was never so dependent and despised as among other Eastern races, for the Law proclaimed that she was bone of man's bone, and flesh of his flesh, and designed to be a helpmeet for him. In the picture of Eve as the one wife of Adam polygamy was indirectly censured, and it was no less so in the command given in Eden, that "a man should leave his father and mother and cleave unto his wife, and that they should be one flesh." Hence it was never in much favour among the Jews, and grandually gave place to the original law. Indeed, it was at any time "ather a feature of royal or princely ostentation than a characteristic of ordinary life.

The Book of Proverbs throws great light on the position of woman in Israel, and, incidentally, on her place and occupations in the household. "A gracious woman," we are told, "retaineth honour;" "a wise woman buildeth her house," that is, establishes her family; and "the price of a virtuous woman is set far above that of rubles." Instead of being the playthings or slaves of man, women are taught that they may be his helpers and noblest friends. "The heart of the husband of the virtuous woman," says King Lemuel. "Doth safely trust in her, so that he shall not want for gain. She will do him good and not harm all the days of her life. She seeketh wool, and flax, and worketh with diligent hands. She is like the merchant ships; she bringeth her food from afar. She riseth also while it is yet night, and giveth meat to her household, And the day's work to her maidens.

She considereth a field and buyeth it; with the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard.

She girdeth her loins with strength, and maketh strong her arms. She sees that her trading yields good profit: her lamp is kept burning by night.

She lays her hands on the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff. She stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

She is not afraid of the snow for her household; for all her children are clothed with scarlet wool.

round so

nd Mary,

er, to im-

their part

w." as His people has luring the

h so little

te gradual

ney had an

mong other

e of man's

my was ind given in and cleave

nce it was

gave place r a feature of ordinary n of woman

n the house-

fumily and of rubies."

heart of the r household,

er hands she kept burn-

e distaff.

th forth her

10.3

e."8

nds.

m afar.

Woman,

She maketh herself robes: her clothing is silk and purple. Her husband is known in the gates, when he sitteth among the elders of the land.

She make h fine linen, and selleth it; and delivereth girdles unto the merchant.

Strength and honour are her clothing; and she smiles at days to come. She openeth her month with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness.

She looketh well to the ordering of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness.

Her sons rise up and praise her; her husband also, and he extols her;

'Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all.' Gracefulness is deceitful, and beauty is a breath, but a woman that fears Jehoyah, she shall be praised.

Give her the honour that the fruit of her hands, deserves; her works are the praise of all, in the gates."

No literature of any age offers a finer ideal of the Wife and Mother than this Hebrew poem, written not less than two thousand five hunared years ago, when the history of Greece was still the era of fable, and Home was little more than a rude fort on the top of the Palatine hill. That it is a separate poem, inserted in this collection of Proverbs, is seen from its construction, each verse beginning with the successive letters of the Hebrew alphabet, in regular order, with the design, no doubt, of helping the memory to retain it. For hundreds of years before Mary's day it had been on the lips of every Jewish maiden, for the words of the sacred books were familiar to the whole Jewish race, as no part of any other literature, so far as we know, has ever been to any people. The picture of loving fidelity, ceaseless industry, prudence, management, charity, thrift, wisdom, self-respect; of noble reverence, rising from the husband on earth to God above, and of motherly virtues towards her children, must have kindled high aspirations in many a Jewish wife. It cannot be wrong to believe that, in her sphere, Mary realized this ideal, both in her activities and in her character, and that it had its share in the spiritual development of her wondrous child.

The relation of the Jewish husband to his wife was equally striking. If he were her Isaac, she was his Rebecca. "A good wife is a great gift of God," says the son of Sirach, "to him that fears God is she given." "Joy to the man who has such a wife," says he again, "for the number of his days is doubled." "Honour your wife that you may be rich in the joy of your home," says the Talmud. "Is your wife little?" says another Jewish proverb, also quoted in the Talmud, "then bow down to her and speak"—that is, do nothing without her advice. "In cating and drinking," says a Babbi, 'Let a man keep within his means; in his own Gress let him spend as his means allow; but let him honour his wife and children to the very edge of his power, for they are dependent on him, but he himself is dependent on God whose word made the world." The humour that marks the Jew in all ages made a butt of the man who, contrary to the better feeling of his people, ventured to take two wives. "Bald here, and bald there," says a Jewish proverb, in allusion to one who had two wives, one young and one old. The young one, said Jewish, wit, pulled out the white hairs, and the old one the black, till his head was as smooth as an ivory ball!

The reverence of children towards their parents was carried to the sublime in Hebrew families. The child found the ideal of his obedience in Isaac's willingly yielding himself to death at his father's command. Every Hebrew child heard, from its earliest years, how the finger of God Himself had written on the tables of stone. Honour thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee:" and this command they found repeated again and again in the sacred Law. Disobedience to a father or mother was made a public crime, which the community might publish with death. Unworthy children were luid under the host awful threatenings of divine displeasure. The child read how Joseph, "when he met his father fell on his neck and wept a good while." and "bowed himself to the earth before him." and how their great hwgiver "did obeisance to his father in-law and klased him." He linew the curse that fell on the son of Noah who failed in respect to his father, and read that the young were to "rise up before the hoary head, and honour the face of the old rann." The tender care of an aged parent was regarded by every Jey 75 a sacred duty. The son of Sirich only repetited the sentiment of all Scripture when he sorrows of thy inother. Remember that thou wast begotten of them, and how canst thou recompense them the things that they have done for thee?" That a father and a mother's blessing was prized as sacred, and its being withheld regarded as the suddest loss, shows how deeply such teaching had sunk into the Jewish mind.

Family life, resting thus on the hollest duty and reverence, has been nowhere, in any age, more beautiful than it was, and still is, among the Jews. In the parents, moreover, the passionate love of offspring, characteristic of the race, doubtless hallowed these lofty sanctions. The children of a Jewish household were the centre round which its life and love moved. Full of affection and sensibility, the heart of a Jew was not content with loving only those of his own generation, but yearned to extend itself to others who would inherit the future. A childless marriage was the bitterest trial. The Babbis went even so far as to say that childless parents were to be lamented as one would lament the dead. The purity of Jewish family life was proverbial even in antiquity.

the pical induction of the state " , and " in the strend had this holinea

elsewhe

fidelity its national lieving than in family J

Jewish principle

ander W

"Dare of 'love

no better parents.

peat the a and there tinues, " sion, its n all alike." who rock are the m than in a the mother in the chil '' It is not the develo only the a

in the cott

Provide The state

- Wheilers

Here Harris

That both education is that "her pi cording to th child, had k

TEL TIP 10 DULT LILL

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

E I LAS OUT AT MARKER SAL

l as his ne very ur that rary to

Bald

one who

Jewish

till his

ed to the

is obedi-

er's com-

how the Honour

the land

ey found

h father or ht pupish ost awful Joseph od while," their great ilm." He respect to

before the ender care luty. The e when he get not the n of them; have done

rized as sashows how

erence, has

and still is,

ate love of . these loft;

entre round

sibility, the

of his own linherit the The Rabbis be lamented

nlly life was the ancient

of first diff

o that palot

in the south It.

12 20 00 10 10

Scriptures, and the illustrations of ideal virtue presented by such mothers in Israel as Sarah, Rachel, Hannah, and Susanna, shed a holiness over household relationship in Israel that was unknown elsewhere." The Talmud hardly goes too far when it ascribes to the fidelity of the wives of the nation in Egypt, its first deliverance, and its national existence, and a modern Jew is, perhaps, justified in believing that the bond of family love among his people is stronger than in any other race. "From the inexhaustible spring of Jewish family love." says he. " rise the saviours of the human race." . "The Jewish women alone," says he justly, clsewhere, "have the sound principle to subordinate all other love to that of the mother." Alexander Weill puts into the mouth of the Jewish mother the words, "Dare any Jewish mother, worthy of the name, let the thought of 'love' in its ignoble sense, ever cross her mind? It seems to her no better than a vile apostasy. A Jewess dares love only God, her parents, her husband, and her children.". Kompert ventures to repeat the audacious Jewish saying—"God could not be everywhere, and therefore He made mothers." "The mother's love," he continues, "is the basis of all family life in Jewish romances; its passion, its mystery. The same type of the Jewish mother, is found, in all alike." It is true in all ages, as Douglas Jerrold put it, that she who rocks the cradle rules the world. The earliest years of a child are the most receptive. "It learns more in the first three or four than in all its after life," says Lord Brougham. The character of the mother, her care, her love, her looks, her soul, repeat themselves in the child while it is yet in her arms or at her knees.

It is not too much, then, to ascribe supreme influence to Mary, in the development of her wondrous child. Wordsworth's sonnet is only the adequate utterance of what must have been daily realized in the cottage at Nazareth :---

"Motherl whose virgin bosom was uncross'd With the least shade or thought to sin allied; Woman! above all women glorified; Our tainted Nature's solitary boast; Purer than foam on central ocean toss'd: Brighter than Eastern aldes at dearboard. Brighter than Eastern skies at daybreak strewn With fancied roses, than the unblemish d moon, with fancied roses, than the undemish a moon, Before her wane begins on heav'n's blue coast; Thy Image fails to earth. Yet some, I ween, Not unforgiven the suppliant knee might bend, As to a visible Power, in whom did blend All that was mix'd and reconciled in Thee Of mother's love with maiden purity, Of high with low, celestial with terrene!" Whit will be Chief

That both parents of a Jewish child took an active part in its early education is shown by the instance of Susanna, of whom we are told that "her parents also were righteous, and taught their daughter according to the law of Moses," and by that of Timothy, "who, from a child, had known the Holy Scriptures;" his grandmother, Lois, and his/mathers Ennice, having been 3 by implication, his teachers, But it was on the father, especially, that the obligation lay, to teach his children, of both sexes, the sacred Law and the other Scriptures, the knowledge of which constituted almost exclusively the sum of Jewish education. Abraham had found divine, fayour on the express ground that he would command his children and his household after him, and they should keep the way of Jehovah;" and express infunctions required every father to teach the sacred history of his nation, with the great deeds and varying fortunes of his ancestors, and the words of the Law, " diligently" to his children, and to talk of them while sitting in the house, or walking by the way, when they retired to rest, and when they rose for the day. It was, indeed, reouired by the Rabbis that a child should begin to learn the Law by heart. when five years old. As soon as it could speak it had in the same way to learn the lessons and petitions of the morning service. At the frequently recurring household religious feasts special rites. which should stir the child to ask their meaning, formed a regular part. The book of Proverbs abounds with proofs of the fidelity with which these commands were carried out by both fathers and mothers. In a virtuous home no opportunity was lost-rat the table. at home or abroad, evening or morning of instilling reverence for God's law into the minds of the family, and of teaching them its express words throughout, till they knew them by heart. ... When we remember that the festivals made labour unlawful for two months in each year in the aggregate, it is evident that the leisure thus secured would give great facilities for domestic instruction, did wold and he WSuch had been for ages, the rule in Israel, and it doubtless still prevailed in many households. Elementary schools, however, gradtally came to be felt a necessity for orphan children, and, in the docline of manners, even for those of many living parents. Whether they had been generally established in the days of Christ's childhood has, nevertheless, heen questioned. "If any man," says the Talmud. "deserves that his name should be handed down to posterity, it is Joshua, the son of Gamaliel. For, but for him the knowledge of the Law would have perished in Israel. In early times he who had a father was taught, but he who had not, did not learn the Law. For they were commanded in the words of the Law, 'you'-doubtless the fathers-' shall teach them.' At a later date it was ordered that schoolmasters should be appointed to teach the youth of Jerusalem, because it is written, 'The law shall go forth from Zion.' But this plan did not remedy the evil, for only the child that had a father was sent to school, while he who had none was not sent. It was therefore provided that higher teachers should be appointed in every district, and that the youth of sixteen or seventcen years of age should attend their schools But this plan failed, because any scholar whom the master chastised presently ran off. Then, at last, Joshua, the son of Gamaliel, ordained that teachers should be appointed, as in every district, no in e their a Mipple that bo The the wor to men mustope the child " Moses in the w they mig Law nor universal interest" about an rules of p lives, most more read the first l souls, "Mile without ve to proceed from the e he left no a and dispos the kind of bears simil luws as reve cifildliood, are taught, dling clothe and in the r and Creator so thorough men of the tion that a l cure, in a k not only as by the "trad he became moral and ri

1112

The age at

Mischna.

not take a bo

year receive

bears a heavi

190

But

ch ; his

es, the Jew-

usehold

of his

cestors,

to talk

leed, 19

Lew by

j in the service.

ial ritap

a regular fidelity

hera and

roncestor

om its ex

When we

months in us secured

i. Subaba

buless still over, gradt

in the do-

childhood

e Talmud,

terity, it is

edge of the

who had a Law. For ubtless the

that school-

m, because

is plan did was sent to prefore prolistrict, and attend their

the master

on of Gama ery district,

to in every town, to whom the boys from the sixth or seventh year of their age should be committed." But such a law must have been only supplementary to already existing customs, and it cannot be doubted that boys schools were already general in the time of Christ. The enthusiasm of the Jews for education, which, in their sense of the word, was the learning to read "the Law," and the committing it. to memory, was amazing. "A town in which there is no school must perish.""........Jerusalem was destroyed because the education of the children was neglected," says the Talmud. Josephus tells us that "Moses commanded that the children be taught to read, and to walk in the ways of the Law and to know the deeds of their fathers, that they might imitate them, and that they might neither transgress the Law nor have the excuse of ignorance." He repeatedly boasts of the iniversal zen! that prevailed for the education of the young! "We interest ourselves more about the education of our children than about anything else, and hold the observance of the laws, and the rules of plety they inculcate, as the weightiest business of our whole lives," If you ask a Jew any matter concerning the Law, he can more readily explain it than tell his own name. Since we learn it from the first beginning of intelligence, it is, as it were, graven on our souls."""" Our legislator neither left practical enforcement to go on without verbal instruction, nor did he permit the hearing of the Law to proceed without its illustration in practice; but beginning his laws from the earliest infancy, with the appointment of every one's dict. he left no act of life, of the very smallest consequence, at the pleasure and disposal of the person himself." This passage throws light on the kind of instruction imparted. Philo, a contemporary of Christ, bears similar testimony." Since the Jews," says he, "look on their laws as revelations from God, and are taught them from their earliest childhood, they bear the image of the Law on their souls."" "They are taught," says he elsewhere, "so to speak, from their very swaddling clothes, by their parents, masters, and teachers, in the holy laws, and in the unwritten customs, and to believe in God. the one Father and Creator of the world." Josephus boasts that at fourteen he had so thorough a knowledge of the Law, that the high priests and first men of the town sought his opinion. There can, indeed, be no question that a boy was trained, from the tenderest years, with sedulous care, in a knowledge of the moral and ceremonial laws of Judaism, not only as written in Cripture, but as explained, in endless detail, by the "traditions" and rules of the Rabbis. At the age of thirteen he became a "son of the Law," and was bound to practise all its noral and ritual requirements.

The age at which children were to be sent to school is fixed in the Mischna. Raf said to Samuel, the son of Schilath, a teacher. "Do not take a boy to be taught before he is six years old, but from that year receive him, and train him as you do the on, which, day by day, bears a heavier load." Even the number of scholars a teacher might

John.

ing. tuary

and wi mighty

childh

ment in His sou increase

O'C-

no ro" : Soalor i

stite an

THE

necessar

and we r this resp

being mu reflects tl

Rabbin

the Great

tion, with

to religion ten thousa

in Jewish in those v

life to obs

fore, shoel

their value

tions laid

private life

but it was.

wanting, w

there, an in

nacity. Ori

of any kin

tion. The

They are grattraction

dreamy tho

observances

delights,

through We

A devout

The East the idea of

123

take is rigidly fixed. "Rabbe (or Raf) has said, a schoolmaster may receive to the number of twenty-five scholars. If there be fifty, there must be two schoolmasters; if only forty, there must be an assistant, who is to be paid, half by the congregation, half by the schoolmaster." The few children who were not sent to school, from whatever cause, were called Am-ha-aretz, or boors—it being taken for granted that they must have lived in some rude district where schools were not easy of access. Neither unmarried men or women were allowed to be teachers. The Hazan or "minister" of the nearest synagogue was, in general, the master, and the synagogue itself, in a great many cases, served as the school-house.

In school the children, according to their age, sat on benches, or on the ground, as they still do in the East, the master sitting on a raised seat. The younger children had, as text-books, some simple passage from the Bible, carefully written out-for, of course, there were no books, in our sense, then-and they seem to have repeated it in a sing-song cadence till they learned it by heart. In Eastern schools, at this time, some of the lessons are written by each scholar, with chalk, on tablets of wood, like our slates in shape, and these are cleaned after each lesson. Some centuries after Christ, the boys, having had portions of the "Law" as their class-book till they were ten years old, began at that age to read the Mischns, or Rabbinical comments, and at fifteen entcred on the reading of the Gemara, or the collected comments on both the Law and the Mischna. In Christ's day, advanced education was, no doubt, much the same, but it must have been given by oral instruction, for the sayings of the Rabbis were not as yet committed to writing.

The carly years of Christ were, doubtless, spent in some such school, after He had passed from the first lessons of Mary, and the instructions of Joseph. Mysterious as it is to us, we must never forget that, as a child, He passed through the same stages as other children. The Apocryphal Goepels are full of miracles attributed to these opening years, describing the infant as already indefinitely beyond His age. There is no warrant for this in Scripture." Nothing was out of keeping in the life of our Lord. As Irenaus says, "He sanctified childhood by passing through it." Neither His words nor acts, His childish pleasures nor His tears, were different from those of His age. Evil alone had no growth in Him: His soul gave back to the heavens all their sacred brightness. The ideal of humanity from His birth, He never lost the innocence of childhood, but He was none the less completely like other children in all things else. We are told that "the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit;" that "the favour of God was upon Him," and that "He kept on increasing in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man;" and this can only mean that, with a sweet attractiveness of childish nature, He spoke, and understood, and thought, as simply as His playmates, in the fields, or on the hillsides, of Nazareth. The earlier words are the same as are used at

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

er may y, there

assist-

by the school,

it being district

men or ister" of

magogue les, or on a a raised e passage were no

d it in a

a schools,

olar, with these are the boys,

they were Rabbinical

nara, or the

In Christ's

hut it must tabbis were

uch school.

the instruc-

forget that,

ldren. The

ese opening

nd His age.

but of keep-

d childhood

His childish

s age. Evil

beavens all

is birth, He

he less com-

ld that "tha

of God was

and stature,

an that, with understood,

on the hill-

are used of all of a state John the Baptist in his childhood, and can bear only the same meaning. Both grew in the shade of a retired country life, in the sanctuary of home, apart from the great world, under the eyes of God, and with His grace upon them. It was only in later years that the mighty difference between them was seen, when the fresh leaves of childhood, much alike in all, passed into flower. There was no moment in Christ's life when the higher light began to reveal itself in His soul life and "grace" dawned together, and grew in a common the fieldest synthesis outs at print of the instant and construction its sector of the first in a sector of the first of the sector its character of the sector its character of the sector its character of the sector of the sec him the Billio way THE religious life of the home, the Church, and the community necessarily mould, more or less, the susceptible nature of children, and we may be certain that "the child Jesus" was no exception in this respect, more than in others, to the general law. His opening, being must have reflected all that was good around Him, as the dower, reflects the colours of the light.

Rabbinism was then in its full glory. The strong hand of Herod the Great had suppressed all political agitation for more than a generation, with the result of turning the attention of the Rabbis supremely, to religious questions, which alone were left for their discussion. The ten thousand legal definitions and decisions, which are now comprised in Jewish religious jurisprudence, were for the most part elaborated in those years, and every devout Israelite made it the labour of his life to observe them faithfully, as far as possible. It must not, therefore, shock us, accustomed as we are to feel that religious acts lose their value when not free and spontaneous, to find minute prescriptions laid down and observed in Judea, for every detail of public and private life and worship. The whole existence of a Jew was religious, but it was a religiousness which, while the right spirit might not be wanting, was yet elaborately mechanical at every step. a diffect mechanical

The East is essentially different in its spirit from the West Here, the idea of improvement and advancement leads to incessant changes; there, an intense conservatism retains the past with superstitious tenacity. Orientals cling, by nature, to the old, merely as such. Novelty of any kind is painful and approving. They resist the least innevation. The customs of their fathers are law; use and wont are sacred. They are graver and quieter than we. Noisy amusements have little, attraction for them; they seldom laugh or joke. The play of wit, dreamy thoughtfulness, attractive narrations and inventions, religious, observances, and the display of religious festivals, are their sufficing. delights. We must guard, therefore, against looking at Oriental life. through Western eyes. A devout Jew began his daily religious life with his first waking aller for termore moments. "Every Israelite." says Malmonides. "should be penetrated at all times by reverence for his Almighty Creator. "The central thought of the godly and devotit man is...'I have set the Lord continually before me.' As if he stood before a king of flesh and blood, he should never forget the requirements of right conduct and ceremonial purity." ... He was taught that his first thoughts, as soon as he waked should be directed to the worship of God. Sleep was regarded as a kind of death, in which the soul leaves the body, to return to it on its awaking, and hence the first words of revived conscious ness were an acknowledgment before "the living and everlasting King, of His having given back the soul for another day, in His great mercy and faithfulness." Thanks for new life thus granted followed in something like this form — "My God, the soul which Thou hast given me is clean. Thou hast created it, formed it, and breathed it into me, and Thou wilt take it from me, and restore it me again. While this soul lives in me, I thank Thee, O Eternal One, my God; and the God of my fathers! Lord of all works! King of all souls! Praised be Thon. O Eternal, Thou who puttest the souls again into dead bodies!" Allar Allot

Having risen from bed, it was not allowed to move four steps before washing the hands and face, which the Rabbis taught was needed to cleanse one from the defilement of sleep, as the image of death. It was unlawful to touch the face, or any other part of the body, till this was done, nor could it be done except in the form prescribed. Lifting the ewer, after dressing, with the right hand, it must be passed into the left, and clear cold water; Rabbinically clean, must be poured thrice over the right hand, the fingers of which must be open, and must point to the ground. The left hand must then be washed in the same way, with water poured on it from the right, and then the face must be washed three times. The palms of the hands must then be joined, with the thumbs and fingers outstretched, and the words must lie uttered-" Lift up your bands to the sanctuary, and praise the Lord !" Then followed the prayer, "Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God! King of the universe! Thou who hast sanctified us through Thy commandments, and hast required us to wash the hands. Blessed art Thou, O Eternal, our God, King of the universe: who hast formed man in wisdom, and hast made in him many vessels. If but one of these stood open, or was stopped, man could not live and remain before Thee. This is evident, and confessed before the throne of Thy majesty. Blessed art Thon, O Eternal One, maintainer of all flesh, who in Thy Creation doest wonders!"

With some such forms and words, the morning began in Joseph's house in Nazareth. But this was only the preparation for morning prayers. It was not lawful to do any work, or to eat any food, till these had been repeated, either at home, or more properly, in the synagogue, where they formed the daily morning service. I shall describe them when I come to speak of the synagogue worship. be pene-The centhe Lord flesh and duct and as'soon as p was re-, to return conscious everlasting 1 His great d followed Thou hast breathed it me again. e, my God; fall souls! again into Tilot four steps taught was he image of part of the ae form preght hand, it ically clean, which must must then be he right, and of the hands tretched, and le sanctuary, sed art Thou. ast sanctified to wash the the universe: many vessels. could not live ed before the ne, maintainer 1:4:0 411 1 n in Joseph's for morning any food, till operly, in the vice. [1 shall worship

The religiousness of the first moments of the day was only in keeping with the whole life of a devout Jew like Joseph. Lhave mentioned the morning first because our day begins then, but that of the Jew began in the evening. From the beginning of each day—that is, from the appearance of the first star-to its close, and from the first day of the week till the Sabbath; from the beginning of each month to its feasts and half-feasts; from each New Year's Day to the next; and from one Sabbath year—that is, each seventh year—till another. the attention of every Jew was fixed unintermittedly on the sacred usages which returned either daily, weekly, or at set times, and kept his religion continually in his mind, not only by symbolical rites, but by prescribed words. There was little leisure for the lighter pleasures of life, and little taste for them. Lengthened prayers in set forms had to be repeated three times each day, and also at all feasts, halffeasts, and fast days; each kind of day having its special prayers. In every week there was a preparation day for the Sabbath, and there were similar preparation days for each feast in the different months: public worship was held twice weekly, each Monday and Thursday, and on feast days and holy days. Three pilgrimages to Jerusalem were required yearly and others were often undertaken. A whole week was occupied by the Feast of Unleavened Bread, and by that of Tabernacles and by the Feast of the Dedication. Every Jew was. moreover, occupied to a large extent, through his connection with the Temple, by tithes, sacrifices, and yows. He visited the Holy Place as often as possible, for prayer, and to offer special gifts. He had to pay the most minute attention, continually, to permitted and forbidden food and clothing, and to the strict observance of all laws respecting the accessories of his public and private worship, his rolls of the Law. his phylacteries, the blowing of trumpets, the gathering of palm twigs at the right times, and much more. The endless rules respecting the cleanness and uncleanness of persons and things, demanded the great, est care every hour. Both men and women, as such, had many details to observe. Then, there were the ever-recurring usages, festivities, or events of family life-tcircumcisions, betrothals, marriages, divorces, deaths, and mourning; the laws of the Sabbath year, recurring periodically, and many other diversified occurrences, which had each its prolixity of religious form, not to be overlooked. Besides all, extraordinary solemnitics were appointed on special occasions, and these, again, made grave deniands on the thoughtful care of the whole population No wonder that the Law was almost the one thing in a Jew's mind, nor that a child brought up in such an atmosphere should, in most cases, be blindly conservative and narrow.

Opportunity will be taken hereafter to illustrate what life under the Law really was, but even without the statement of details, it is evident that a system which spread its close meshes over the whole of life, must have been a heavy burden on the conscientious, and a fruitful source of hypocrisy and dead formality to the mass. The hodge invented by Rabbinism was a unique expansion of a few written precepts to infinite detail. Artificial interpretations of Scripture, often contrary to the sense, and even to the letter of the Law, were invented as occasion required, and then enforced as of more authority than the Law itself. The Rabbi could "bind and loose;" no case escaped his casuistry: religion was turned into a lifelong slavery, so burdensome, that even the Talmud itself speaks of "the vexatious worry of the Pharisees," Ethics and theology were refined into an elaborate system of jurisprudence, till even where the requirements were right, their morality was poisoned in its principles, and deadened the fresh pulses of spiritual life."

Still there were many in Israel who retained more or less of the primitive godliness of the nation. If Rabbinism as a system had fallen from its earlier and nobler idea of binding the nation permanently to the true faith? if it had substituted teaching for a change of heart; legality for spontaneous fidelity; endless prescriptions for the life giving spirit, there were not a few, alike among the Rabbis and the people, to whom the external was not all. There may have been a Rabbi at Nazareth as self-righteous as Nechimza Ben Hakana, who, when he left his school, was wont to pray-"I thank Thee, O Lord, my God, that Thou hast given me my portion among those who frequent the House of Instruction, and not among those who are busy at the street corners, for I rise early, and they rise early; I apply myself early to the Law, and they to vain things; I work, and they work; I work and receive my reward, they work and receive nones. I run, and they run; I run after eternal life, and they to the pit. 1 But there may have been, also, another, like the Rabbi of Jammia, who told his scholars, "I am a creature of God, and my fellow-man is no less so. I have my calling in the town, he, his, in the field. I go early to my work, and he to his. As he is not made proud by his labour, I am not made proud by mine." If you think that I am busied with great matters and he with small, remember that true work, whether great or small, leads to the same end. and similar milk meals fruiter by proted: The child Jesus, must have often heard in the house of such a man as Joseph and in those of his neighbours of like mind with him. whom he visited, a healthy intelligent religiousness; beautiful in any age.". The popular proverbs and sayings which have come down to us may easily bring back many an evening scene in Nazareth, when friends or neighbours of Joseph's circle met for an hour's quiet gossip, when their day's toll was over the Quite true, neighbour," we may fancy one of such a group saying, "he who knows the Law and has no fear of God, is like the ruler of the synagogue who has only the key of the inner door, but not of the outer." ("Yes, Zecharyah, a God-fearing Rabbi is like a good player who has his harp with him, but a godless Rabbi is like one who has nothing on which to make music." You speak truly, Menahem a godly man isothe glory of town, its reward, and its ornament, if he leave it also glorywith resame measure with which a man measures to others iterall be me ward. tell m who n liar. th fifth, 4 stands of his l Good taught scholar fragran words and in Nazarit "A frie faults gold pi granted idolater. roses; o you fear of God none of lessonpfr Heldied was bein lieve the to the g fate as in passed of before G LIBUA Wise but wise Josephur "One sl mother. left hand wall:"ichf heart be The br wisdom you are y good or / keeploom follows same mes

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

word, and its ornament, leave it with him." "My father used to tell me;" chines in Hananyah Ben Hizkiyah, "that there are four who never have the face of God lifted upon them—the scoffer, the lint, the hypocrite, and the slanderer." "Rabbi Nathan," says the fifth, "is right, I think; I have heard him say that the man who stands firm in temptation, and the hour of whose death is like that of his birth, is the only man to be envied." Good counsels to the young were not wanting. The Hazan who taught the Nazareth school in the synagogue, may have told his scholars-"Get close to the seller of perfumes if you want to be fragrant." He may have given the groups of little ones at his feet words of wisdom such as these-that "grapes on vines are beautiful, and in their right place; but grapes among thorns are neither." "A Nazarite should go round about, rather than come near a vineyard." "A friend who, as often as he meets you, tells you, in secret, your faults, is better than one who, whenever he meets you, gives you a gold piece."" "If you see an humble man, you may almost take for granted that he fears God, but a proud man is no better than an idolater." Make the best of your childhood; youth is a crown of roses; old age of thorns. Yet do not fear death, it is only a kiss, if you fear God." "Truth is the seal of God." "Trust in the mercy of God, even if the sharp sword be at your throat; He forsakes none of His creatures to give them up to destruction." "Take a lesson from Jose Ben Joezer, who was the first Jew ever crucified. He died for his faith in the evil time of the Syrian kings. As he was being led to death, his sister's son, Alkim, tried to make him believe that God showed more favour to transgressors of the Law than to the godly. He could have saved Jose's life, if the martyr had vielded to him, But Jose only answered, Alf God prepares such a fate as mine for the godly, what will become of the wicked? - and passed on to the cross." "The humble man is he who is as reverent before God as if he saw Him with his eyes."

A wise teacher may have spoken thus to the children in the school, but wise counsels would not be wanting at home. Like all Orientals, Joseph was, doubtless, given to speak in proverbs and parables. "One slicep follows another," he might have said. "As is the mother, so is the daughter." "A man without friends is like the left hand without the right." "The road has ears, and so has the wall." "I' It is no matter whether a man have much or little, if his heart be set on heaven." "A good life is better than high birth." "The bread and the rod came from heaven together." "Seeking wisdom when you are old is like writing on water; seeking, it when you are young is like graving on stone," "Every word you speak, good or bad, light or serious, is written in a book." "Fire cannot keeploompany with flax without kindling it." "In this world a man follows his own will; in the next comes the judgment." With the same measure with which a man measures to others it will be measitten proure: often invented y than the caped his rdensome, rry of the orate sva vere right; dithe fresh Seren Dillight less of the vstem had on permachange of ons for the Rabbis and have been kana, who, ee. O.Lord, se who freare busy at pply myself ney work 1 at rungand Buththere told this i no less so: early to my abour, I am dinvithe great hether great but ore total such a man d with him, otiful in any ome down to zarethawhen r's quiet gosghbour," we the Law and vho has only 3. Zecharyah, rp with him, hich to make sthe glory of glorywith re-

vagent enusa

her th

peace: leader

she se

worth

Child.

great p and ca

up the trades

the sin

soiled v

less age synago

the tim

with th

Mary, t

learn its

Ata

Joseph .

cle, for national faith, w

The i

the Mac

readings

we can

dreds in

Synagog

offer the Jerusale

lifted the sacrifices

sented t spoke to

been we

summou

gressed.

belongs (

lic readir ple, and interpret

the publi

Jerusaler it, where

Sucl

ured to him again." "Patience, and silence in strife, are the sign of a noble mind." "He who makes the pleasures of this world his portion, loses those of the world to come, but he who seeks those of heaven, receives, also, those of earth." "He who humbles himself will be exalted by God; but he who exalts himself, him will God humble." "Whatever God does is right." "Speech is silver; silence is worth twice as much."". "Sin hardens the heart of man." "It is a shame for a plant to speak ill of him who planted it." "Two bits of dry wood set a moist one on fire." All these are Jewish sayings, which Jesus may well have heard in His childhood. Nazareth would, no doubt, have its finer spirits who, from time to time, shed the light of their higher nature over family gatherings. and none of this could be lost on such a child as Jesus." On some glorious night, when the moon was walking in brightness, a mind like this may have told the children round him some such fine Hebrew apologue as follows:-----

"The Eternal sent forth His creating voice, saying, 'Let two lights shine in the firmament, as kings of the earth, and dividers of the revolving year."

"He spake, and it was done. The sun rose as the first Light. As a bridegroom comes forth in the morning from his chamber; as a hero rejoices on his triumphal march, so rose he; clothed in the splendour of God. A crown of all hues encircled his head; the earth rejoiced, the plants sent up their odours to him, and the flowers put on their best array.

"The other Light looked on with envy, as it saw that it could not outvie the Glorious One in splendour. "What need is there," it asked, murmuring to itself, "of two kings on one throne? Why was I the second instead of the first?"

Forthwith its brightness faded, chased away by its inward chagrin. It flew from it high through the air, and became the Host of Stars.

"The Moon stood pale as the dead, ashamed before all the heavenly ones, and wept- Have, pity on me, Father of all creatures, have pity."

"Then the angel of God stood before the Sad One, and told her the decree of the Highest. Because thou has envied the light of the Sun, unhappy one, henceforth thou wilt only shine by his light, and when yonder earth comes between thee and him thou wilt stand darkened, in part, or entirely, as now.

Yet, Child of Error, weep not. The Merciful One has forgiven thy sin, and turned it to good for thee. "Go," said He, "speak comfortably to the Sorrowful One; she will be, at least, a queen, in her brightness. The tears of her sorrow will be a balm to quicken all living things, and renew the strength which the beams of the Sun have made faint."

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

the sign

world his

s those of s himself

will God

is silver;

of man?

anted it."

are Jew-

m time to

atherings,

On some ss, a mind

h fine He-

Let two dividers of

Light. As

mber; as a

hed in the

the earth

flowers put

t could not

s there,' it

Why was

nward cha-

the Host of all the heav-

l creatures,

nd told her

the light of

by his light,

a wilt stand

ne has for-

o," said He,

e, at least, a

e a balm to the beams of

med round

ald.

hood.

her that brightness in which she still shines she set forth on that peaceful path in which she still moves, as Queen of the Night and leader of the stars. Lamenting her sin, and pitying the tears of men, she seeks whom she can revive, and looks for any one she can cheer." Such, no doubt, would be some of the characteristics of Nazareth life Every one would know every one: industry and idleness; worth and vice; pleasure and sadness; would be around the growing Child., The oxen ploughing the little valley below the town and the great plain outside, would often arrest his eyes; the asses and mules, and camels laden with goods or produce, would pass then, as now, up the mountain track to the narrow Nazareth streets: the different trades of the village would be busy, as they are still. The wise and the simple; the clown and the scholar: the poor and the rich; the soiled workman and the proud squire: helpless infancy, and as helpless age; the school, the play-ground, the market, the court, the synagogue, and the cemetery, would each in turn be prominent for the time. But it would be under Joseph's roof, as in a silken nest, with the counsels of Joseph, and the gentle and lofty devoutness of Mary, that the young soul, destined one day to be so great, would learn its nichest lessons of childhood. ud finitions that

At a very early age, Jesus would be taken to the synagogue with Jeseph and Mary, and the other children of the Nazareth family circle, for even then that institution had become the banner of Jewish nationality, the centre of national life, and the ægis of the Jewish faith, whose services no Israelite would think of neglecting.

The importance of the Synagogue dates not later than the age of the Maccabees. It rose from the institution, by Ezra, of periodical readings of the Law in public. Its earliest history is not known, for we can hardly trust the Rabbinical traditions, that there were hundreds in Jerusalem under the second Temple. But the germ of the Synagogue doubtless existed in Babylon. The exiles could no longer offer their sacrifices, for this could be done only in the Temple at Jerusalem, Hence they naturally betook themselves to prayer, and lifted their hands, in their loneliness, to God, at the times when their sacrifices were wont to be consumed. Instead of these they presented their prayers, and prophets like Ezekiel; on the Sabbath, spoke to them of their duty. It would seem as if the Law itself had been well-nigh unknown during the exile, from the fact of Ezra summoring the people to hear it, as something which they had transgressed, from ignorance of its requirements. To him, apparently, belongs the signal honour of establishing the custom of constant publiq reading of the sacred books before the congregations of the people, and of taking care that, as Hebrew was no longer understood, interpreters should be provided, to translate the Scripture lessons, at the public services, into the spoken dialect. Established, first, in Jerusalem, synagogues soon spread over the land, and even beyond it, wherever Jews, had settled .... They gradually became the great

THELLIFE OF CHRIST.

churacteristic of the nation for though the services of the Templa were yet cherished where Synagogue, by its local convenience, the supreme influence in fixing Jewish religious opinion, and lite natural importance as the centre of each community, and the hasis of their social life, carried with it the seeds of the destruction of the strictly local Temple serviceo The priest, henceforth, was of less importance than the lay Rabbis for while the one touched life at only a few points, the other directed its every movement, the In Christ's day there were synagogues everywhere all In Jerusalem, alone, there gradually rose according to the Talmud, no fewer than 480. Therias had thirteen, Damascusten, and other cities and towns in proportion to their population. But the Mother Synagogue in the Temple still remained, as it were, the model after which all other synagogues were organized and adding out said Sunshmone Mall any human of a Wherever ten Jews were settled, it was incumbent on them to form themselves into a congregation, and have synagogue service. Open structures on the banks of rivers, or on the local shore were preferred, where the Jewish population was small, from their convenience for the necessary purifications; but, wherever it was possible, a synagogue was erected by the free contributions of the people. Sometimes, indeed, a rich man built one at his own expenses The ruins of those in Galilee, Christ's own country, chable us to learn many particulars respecting this locality at least. In selecting sites. the builders by no means always chose prominent positions and in in some dases the Rabbinical requirements were observed that the synagogue should be raised on the highest part of the town, and its entranch be on the western side, they were, seemingly more frequently neglected. The ruins of the old synagogues in the district on the fea of Galilee, and north of it, are sometimes in the lower part of the town, and at others have had a site excavated for them in the rocky side of a hill is Their entrances are almost always at the southern end an arrangement hardly to have been expected, as it required every Jew, on entering to turn his back to Jerus lem and out The building was always rectangular, with its longest dimension in a nearly south and north direction, and its interior divided into five aisles, by four rows of columns, unless it was very small, when two rows of columns were used, making only three ables of The walls were well and solidly built of native limestones the stones is the second device the second device without mortar, and, while finally dressed contside left rough on the inner side, for plastering, in The entrances were three in number; one large doorway, opening into the central aisle, and a smaller one on each side, though sometimes, in small synagogues, othere was i only rone entrance. "Folding doors, with an socket linges, sclosed by thirs on the hinside, gave them security. over the doors was more ornament that we might have expectedculptures of the golden candlestick or of the pot of manna or of whis paschablamics or the winco file floors wore payed with alaba of white Sin al colum Tinthi colum these vbear u sion in astbe ruins of aThe of the only t for so who days. town, specia marke The bithe m some, court congre form altar, the sa end w of the chamb wrapp as mea this sh provid shrine fire" branch we not inscrip the De kindlin cabæus up and ing ser also in où raie 10 shats?"

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

o Temple

lence, its

a of their ie strictly maimport-

nly astew

day there

gradually

erias had

e still re-

gues were

1.1. ( ) + 1 ( ) + 1 ( ) + 1 ( )

them to ie service.

hore were their con-

Was possi-

he neople.

meet 4The

in to learn

ting sites,

no. H. If. in.

hthat the

vn, and its

niore fre-

he district

the lower

vays at the

ected, as it

dimension

vided into mall, when

eles are The

thestones

ely dressed

entrances

the central

oors, with

hy security.

expected-

nna-or of

thuslabs of

Hetnaidt

white limestone, and the arrangement of the columns was the same a in tallout The ispaces between these were very small though the columns themselves were sometimes elaborately finished with Corinthian and Ionio capitals Blocks of stone laid from column to column received the wooden rafters, which were bedded deeply in these supports for strungth, and were very broad as well as thick, to bear up a flat roof, covered heavily with earth, which was the fash-5 ion in private houses also, as it still is in nearly all Arab dwellings, as best adapted for keeping out the intense heat of the sun. The ruins are too imperfect to show the arrangement of the windows. of The synagogues were open every day for three services; but as those of the afternoon and evening were always joined, there were, in reality, only two. It was the duty of every godly Jew to go to each service, for so sacred was daily attendance, that the Rabbis taught that the who practised it saved Israel from the heathen." The two market days. Monday and Thursday, when the country people came into town and when the courts were held, and the Sabbaths, were the - special times of public worship. Feast days, and fasts, were also marked by similar sacredness miable in a vression of trad another The interior of the synagogues was arranged, as far as possible, after the model of the Tabernacle or the Temple. Before the doors of some, a sunken space for a porch formed a counterpart to the forecourt of the sanctuary. The space immediately inside was for the congregation A little beyond the middle, a raised and enclosed platform, in the centre of the floor, in some measure corresponded to the altar. Here the official stood to conduct the services, by reading from - the sacred books and chanting the prayers. In the wall at the farther end was a recess, before which hung a veil; the reciss the equivalent of the Holy of Holies; the veil, of the one before that mysterious Schamber in the Temples In this shrine were kept the Secred Rolls; wrapped in several covers of linen and silk the outer one adorned; as means allowed, with gold and silver. The Rabbis required that this shrine should look towards Jerusalem, but this was not generally provided for in the Galilean synagorues of Christ's day in Before the shrine hung an ever-burning lamp-the representative of the freternal "fire" in the holy place in the Temple. Beside it stood a large eightbranched lamp, like the "golden candlestick" of the Temple, which we now see sculptured on the Arch of Titus ... It was adorned with inscriptions, and was kept for the illumination made at the Feast of " the Dedication, teach December, when the joy of the nation at the rekindling of the lamps in the Temple; after the triumph of Judas Maccabæus, was celebrated for eight days together. in Other lamps hung "up and down the synagogue to illuminate it during the Sabbath evening service, whether needed or not, in honour of the day, as was done also in private houses. Rabbis and the edders of the Synagogue sat on raised cushions next the shrine, facing the people, in the schief " sets"". The men of the congregation fille tithe open floor next these,

131

Ther

as all th

the pop

must ha

Galilee,

in man

came in

East; t

simple,

linen, o

hung o

loosely

their cl

with sle

and a lo sandals.

thin an

this sca

few ricl

or gold.

of a Jev

a-piece, superst

the Zizi of Mose all the c were th

was wo

years, a without

King o

ments, Tallith, covered

time to die lesso

Law, fo

eight th

way to always

other ti

as fema

they ha

bans, bu

On wee

The :

and instaall sympogues, the woman separated by a lattice, sit with their backs to the men. Where space allowed, however, a flat gallery was built for them, but, in any case, they were not visible to the other sex. Trumpets, for proclaiming the new moon, and for publishing sentences of excommunication, formed part of the furniture, but were kept in the house of the Hazan. In the porch was a tablet with provers for the reigning prince, and another with the names of any who had been excommunicated, while below them were boxes to receive the alms of the congregation, as they entered, for the poor.

The greatest reverence was paid by every Jew to his synagogue in It could not be built near a public bath, or a wash-bouse, or a tannery. and if it were taken down no one would on any account cross the ground on which it had stood op to the state with all all all and state. The chief authorities of the Synagogue were a council of elders, of whom one acted as head though only the first among equals. They pronounced excommunications, delivered sentences on offenders of various kinds, managed the charities of the congregation, and attended to the wants of strangers. They were a local counternart of the "elders of the people," who, through the whole history of Israel, formed a kind of national senate, and of those humbler telders" who constituted the raling body over towns and districts, as they formerly had also done over the different tribes. It marks the simple and healthy basis of society in Israel, that the one idea of the family and household, ruled by its head, thus lay at its root, as is indeed implied. in the very name. House of Israel-by which the nation, as a whole, was known The head ruler or elder of the Synagogue was formally consecrated by the laying on of bands. with anto him adout fringer The inferior offices were held by various officials. The Hazan, or "minister," had the charge of the building, of cleaning the lamps, opening and closing the doors, and doing any other necessary servile worke like a modern sexton, besides acting as messenger to the rulers. But heralso, in many cases, led the prayers and chants. It was his part to hand the roll of the Law to the Header for the time, pointing out the proper lesson of the day on The Reader, as representative of the congregation had to blow the trumpet at the new moon, and to strew ashes on his head on fast days. The alms of the congregation were collected and distributed by special officers, of whom two were required to act together in the receiving three in the distribution: There seems to have been no functionary for reading the prayers, which was done in the name of the congregation, and by its authority; by any one empowered for the time. "Any member of the congregation, unless herwere a minor, was qualified to do so, has a rule, how. ever, it is likely that the Hazan generally led the chanting, and read the ordinary lessons loA curious feature in the organization was that in each synagogue, ten men known as Batlanin, were hald to attend every service from its opening to its close, that there might never be fewer present than the Rabbis required to constitute a lawful service.

182

autowith

t gullery.

he other

blishing

but were let with es of any

gue. It

tannery,

cross the 377.4: 27 110

lders. of

. They

nders of

attended

t of the of Israel, ers'' who formerly

nple and

mily and implied

a whole.

formally

lazan, or e lamps, v servile

le rulers.

t was his pointing

tative of n, and to

regation

WO WETE

ribution:

prayers,

uthority:

oligrega-

ale. how.

and read

was that

to attend

never be service.

OOF

There seems to have been only one synagogue in Nazareth, so that, as all the Jews in the town doubtless attended it, a large proportion of the population must have been other than Israelites, or the town itself must have been small, to judge from the size of other synagorues of Galilee, whose ruins have been discovered. The congregation would, in many respects, be very different from Western notions The men came in the long, flowing, and, to us, feminine looking thress of the East; their heads covered with turbans of various colours—some simple, others costly-or with the plain keffiyeh, a kerchief of cotton, linen, or sllk, of various colours, folded so that three of the corners hung over the back and shoulders, leaving the face exposed, and loosely held round the head by a cord as is still the Arab enstom; their clothing, only a long white or striped tunic, of linen or cotton; with sleeves, next the body-bound at the loins by a sash or girdle,--and a loose abba or cloak thrown over it: their bare feet shod with sandals. "Over the abba some would wear a wide scarf of white wool." thin and light; with bars of red, purple, and blue; but with many, this scarf, enlarged to an abba, would be the only outer garment. A few rich men might, perhaps, weer one of silk, adorted with silver or gold. This was the Tallith, an indispensable purt of the clothing of a Jew, From its four corners hung four tassels of eight threads a piece, of hyacinth-blue, of wool alone, woven and made up with superstitious care, as a half religious art, by a Jew only." These were the Zizith, or fringes, worn in fulfilment of an express commandment of Moses, that the sight of them might make the weater " remember all the commandments of the Lord, and do them." So sacred, indeed. were they, that a smaller Tallith, as well, duly provided with them, was worn underneath the clothing by every Jew, from his carliest years, and he had been taught, even in childhood, never to put it on without repeating the prayer Blessed art Thou, O'Lord our God, King of the Universe, who hast sanctified us with Thy commandments, and given us the commandment of the fringes." The outer Tallith, indeed, was only worn because the fringes of this one were covered up, and could not be kissed, as the Rabbis required, from time to time, during one of the synagogue prayers. The right use of die lessons of the fringes a Jew believed equivalent to keeping the whole Law, for the Rabbis told him that, as the letters of the name Zizith. ised as figures, made up the number 600, they and the five knots and sight threads, are equal to the whole 618 precepts of the Law him in The Jewisn mothers and daughters of Nazareth, as they made their way to the synagogue, were not less Oriental and strange. They were always veiled in white at public worship, and not unfrequently at. other times. Their flowing mantles showed as great variety of colour as female dress does now, but they were much the same in shape as 🔹 tliey had been for centurles. Like many of the men, they wore turbans, but they showed a contrast to the other sex in their ornaments. On Week days they wore uces rings, but they were not allowed to which real the South readers of home studies and deer how with

Thy glo with the

Thee w

name, o

Lord, w

Eternal

all praye

a collect the last

with an

Scriptur of the R

responsi

Lord,"

people, b

eternally

day, mor known b

with the

God." T

with tren

the armie

heaven, G

the people

The other

ment. in. F.

ing Him

cially in d

for delive chanted b

help of Isi us, Eterna of Israel. Israel!"

towards th

gregation

the "pray

"The Pra

Synagogue

additional

spoken, by Reader, an

Now co

During

It was

Presen

Readi

wear these on the Sabbath, though they indulged in carrings, and metal armiets, and necklaces and leg rings, which tinkled as their wearers walked. Their feet, like those of the men, were shod with sandals. The males of a family might go to the synagogue any way they chose, but the women went only by back streets, to avoid the gaze of men. All, alike, were required to greet no one, and to make no reverence; whoever passed, nor to loiter by the way, lest it should distract their minds from thinking upon God. At the threshold alf laid aside their sandals, for it was unbecoming to enter even one's own house with shod feet, far less the house of God; but, for the same reason, all kept their heads covered during the whole service. Every man, on entering, prepared to put on his Tephillin or phylacteries, which must be worn every day during morning prayer. They consisted of two small parchment boxes, about an inch square, one divided into four parchment compartments, the other left undivided. On the two sides was stamped the letter m, as part of the word Shaddal-one of the names of the Almighty. Four slips of parchment, each about an inch wide and eight inches long, inscribed with the verses-Deut. vi. 4-9; Deut. ix. 13-21; Exod. xiii. 2-10; and Exod. xiii. 11-16. were placed in the different compartments of the one, a parchment lid enclosing the whole, with long leather thongs attached, to bind it on the forehead. The second box was exactly the same, except that its interior was not divided, and the verses of Scripture enclosed were written; in four columns, on one piece of parchment.

The former of these phylacteries, or amulets, was bound on the forehead exactly between the eyes, before morning prayer began; the other on the left arm, opposite the heart, its thongs being wound seven times round the arm and thrice round the middle finger. Their wearer was now ready to take part in the services. As in the case of the Tallith, the Tephillin were put on with words of prayer in the prevailing language of the country.

The worship of the synagogue was limited to prayer and reading the Law and the Prophets, for though a Rabbi or other person, if present, might be asked to speak, this was an addition to the prescribed forms. The service began with silent prayer by all present the congregation standing during this as during all the prayers." Then the Reader, wearing his Tallith, having entered the raised enclosure in the middle of the synagogue, recited a prayer of adoration from the desk- Blessed be Thou by whose word the world was created; blessed be Thou for ever! Blessed be Thou who hast made all out of nothing; blessed be He who orders and confirms; blessed be He who has pity on the earth; blessed be He who has pity on His creatures; blessed be He who richly rewards His saints; blessed be He who lives for ever, and is for ever the same; blessed be He, the Saviour and Redeemer! Blessed be Thy name! Blessed be Thou, O Eternal! Our God! King of the Universe! All-Merciful God and Father! Thy people utter Thy praise with their lips: Thy godly servants proclaim 128, 800

as their

lod with any way

vold the

to make it should

shold alt

ne's own

the same

Incteries.

hey con-

e divided

Idal-one

s—Deut. i. 11—16.

archment

to bind it

osed were

ad on the

egan; the ng wound r. Their he case of yer in the

d reading person, if the pre-

il present,

enclosure

s created; all out of

e He who creatures;

who lives

viour and

Eternall

her! Thy

proclam

rs,

Then

On the

Every

Thy glory and honour. We would praise Thee, Eternal Lord God, with the psalms of Thy servant David; we would laud and magnify Thee with songs of thanksgiving and praise. We do homage to Thy name, our King, our God, the only One, He who liveth for ever, O Lord, whose name is glorious for ever and ever! Blessed be Thou, O Eternalt Lord, blessed be Thou in songs of praise!" To this, as to all prayers, the congregation answered, Amen.

Readings from different parts of the Scripture then followed, in part a collection of separate verses, in part connected extracts, ending with the last six Psalms, this introductory portion of the service closing with another short but exalted prayer. A few verses more from Scripture followed, and then came the Song of Moses at the Passage of the Red Sca. and another short prayer.

Presently the Reader summoned the congregation to join in a short responsive utterance of praise known as the Kadish. "Praise the Lord," said he, "who is worthy to be praised," and to this the people, bowing, responded, "Praised be the Lord, who is ever and eternally worthy of praise!" and so, through several antiphonies. It was obligatory on every Jew to repeat certain verses twice every day, morning and evening. These were now read. They were known by the name of S'chma, or "Hear," from their beginning with the words, "Hear, O Israel, the Eternal, our God, is one Eternal God." Two prayers preceded them, the one, heard with joy and yet with trembling, exalting God for His Majesty in the heavens, amidst the armies of the angels. It was believed to be listened to by all heaven, God Himself and the angels responding, at its close-"Happy the people in such a case; happy the people whose God is Jehovah!" The other thanked God for. His love to Israel, and asked enlightenment in His holy law. Another short prayer was now read, thanking Him for the mighty works He had done for their fathers, especially in delivering, them from Egypt, and closing with supplication for delivery as a nation from their evil state. The closing words chanted by the Reader were striking-"Rock of Israel! up! to the help of Israel: save, for Thy promise sake, Judah and Israel! Save us, Eternal God, Eternal God of Hosts! whose name is the Holy One of Israel, Blessed be Thou, O Eternal, who of old didst redeem Israel!'

During all these prayers the congregation stood, with their faces towards the shrine of the Law. Only the Reader spoke: the congregation simply responded "Amen," except at the Kadish.

Now commenced the second part of the service—the repeating of the "prayers known as the eighteen Benedictions," or simply as "The Prayer." It was originally drawn up by the men of the Great Synagogue, but finally arranged in its present form, with one or two additional prayers, about the year 100 after Christ. The whole were spoken by the entire congregation softly, and then aloud by the Reader, and this was repeated at the evening service, it being required of every araelite that he should repeat them all for himself, three times every day, just as he was required to repeat the S'chma twice daily. During this series of prayers the whole congregation stood, immovable, with their faces towards the shrine, and their feet close together, in an attitude of fixed devotion. At the beginning and close of the first and sixteenth Benedictions all bent the knee, and bowed their heads to the earth. As in the case of the S'chma, these prayers were read without the change or addition of a word, After the congregation had recited them the Reader, still standing in the raised enclosure, took three steps backwards, then three forwards: stood quite still, and commenced, "Lord, open Thou our lips, that our mouth may show forth Thy praise!" "I will call upon the name of the Lord; ascribe ye greatness unto our God!". The first three prayers of the eighteen contained ascriptions of praise, the last three thanksgivings, and the twelve between, supplications for the nation and for individuals. As the Reader closed, he recited the words-"We, here below, would hallow Thy name, as it is hallowed in heaven, as is written in the prophets—'One cried to another, and the Reader began again: "They who stand before Him say, 'Blessed;" and the congregation answered, "Blessed be the glory of the Lord from His place." The Reader, once more, began: "In Thy holy Scripture it is written " and the congregation answered, "The Lord shall reign for ever, even Thy God, O Zion, unto all generations. Hallelujah!"

On Mondays and Thursdays, and on Sabbaths, the Law was now read. For the Sabbaths, the five Books of Moses were divided into fifty sections, of seven lessons each, and a complete section was repeated each Sabbath, so that the Law was read through in a year. At the end of each lesson, and at its beginning, a collect was read, and between each, the Expositor—a member of the congregation who had been invited for the purpose, and who stood in the desk beside the Reader while the lesson was being read-delivered a short address from it. A priest, if present, had the first invitation, then a Levite, and any one who seemed to know the Law came after. The roll of the Prophets was handed to him by the Reader after the closing collect of the lesson. At each service there was thus a series of short comments. One Expositor gave a general address on the Law embodied in the lesson; another an exhortation based on it, and a third expounded the allegorical mysteries it shadowed forth. Each was, however, expected to illustrate the three cardinal points of Jewish plety-the love of God, of virtue, and of one's neighbour, this last duty being additionally enforced by a collection in the boxes at the door, "for the land of Israel."

Very few relice of these synagogue addresses survive, but we are able even from these, as preserved in the Tellnud, to realize their general a proverbs, from our from the in the sy mented o vation."-

One, bles put on be Edom." and glory When He majesty, f When He says: Jel Himself." self in w When He ments of vengeance put on the clothe Him ness as a l will put or He clothe red in Thir Messiah wi As a brid And the's Blessed be which bore Him. For is rest to th speech of H smelling say 0 how bles 'How great fear Thee.' On Mond next Sundar each of whi A few pre with a parti if one were in the comm

general characteristics. Short, and in great measure made up of proverbs, natural imagery, and parables, they were very different from our sermons. One example will suffice. An ancient address from the same chapter of Isalah from which Jesus took His text in the synagogue of Nazareth, runs thus—the special words commented on being, "He hath clothed me with the garments of calvation."

"There are seven garments," says the speaker, "which the Holy One, blessed be His name, has put on since the world began, or will put on before the hour when He will visit with His wrath the godless Edom." When He created the world He clothed Himself in honour and glory, for it says: 'Thou art clothed with honour and glory." When He showed Himself at the Red Sea He clothed Himself in majesty; for it says: 'The Lord reigneth, He is clothed with majesty." When He gave the Law He clothed Himself with might, for it says: Jehovah is clothed with might, where with He hath girded Himself.' As often us He forgave Israel its sins He clothed Himself in white, for it says: "His garment was white as snov !! When He punishes the nations of the world He puts on the garments of vengeance, for it says: 'He put on the garments of vengeance for clothing and was clad with zeal as a cloak.' He will put on the sixth robe when the Messiah is revealed. Then will He clothe Himself in righteousness, for it says: "For He put on righteousness as a breastplate, and an helmet of salvation on His head. He will put on the seventh robe when He punishes Edom. Then will He clothe Himself in Adom (red), for it says: Wherefore art Thou red in Thine apparel?' But the robes with which He will clothe the Messiah will shine from one end of the world to the other, for it says: As a bridegroom who is crowned with his turban, like a priest." And the sons of Israel will rejoice in His light, and will say, "Blessed be the hour when the Messiah was born, blessed the womb which bore Him! blessed the eyes that were counted worthy to see Him. For the opening of His lips is blessing and peace, His speech is rest to the soul, the thoughts of His heart confidence and joy, the speech of His lips pardon and forgiveness, His prayer like the sweetsmelling sayour of a sacrifice. His supplications holiness and purity." 0 how blessed is Israel for whom such a lot is reserved, for it says: How great is Thy goodness which Thou hast laid up for them that fear Thee, " deep of pair Bus stirle Astributin questies rebuilding

On Mondays and Thursdays the first of the seven lessons for the next Sunday was read, but it was divided into three portions, before each of which one of the congregation was called up to the desk. A few prayers more from the Reader, and the service was ended, with a parting benediction delivered by a priest with uplifted hands, if one were present, if not, by the Reader. The prayers were repeated in the common dialect of Palestine as a rule, but in Greek towns, such as Cressren, they were also recited in Greek. The Hebrew of Onsi-

tion stood, e feet close nning and knee, and hma, these rd. After ding in the forwards: r lips, that in the name first three last three the nation he wordsallowed in nother, and holy, holy ry!" Then "Blessed;" of the Lord n Thy holy "The Lord generations. aw was now divided into section was ch in a year. ct was read, regation who desk beside hort address on a Levite, The roll of the closing eries of short on the Law on it, and a forth. Each al points of s neighbour, self, three

hma twice

but we are in the boxes

agogue.

or of lib

where th

called up the syna

of the sc

bigotry, of the S

great doc

of the k

would so

retain an

with the

in His pu

new Rabi

lects of I had, no d

His earlie

the marke

answer w

questions,

of the peo

the nation

except in .

free expre

favoured.

human na

DR94 BRWS

ENACH CACH

igor4-siti :

bun muitere

sed on the

AMONG

Nazareth,

no. doubt,

Jewish iii

whole tissu

The Jev

feasts and

mind, and

trated. T

that which

as "the ye

first of Elu

year was c

day of Tist

was held

dec of the Law or the Prophets was translated into the spoken language by an interpreter, who stood by the side of the Reader. Such was the morning service. In the afternoon the congregation met once more; heard a shorter service, and remained, frequently, listening to addresses, till lamplight in the evening. The "Amen" of the congregation, from time to time, was the only interruption sanctioned, but among Orientals it would have been hopeless to enforce silence. Ever and anon a hearer volunteered assistance if the speaker hesitated, or corrected a mistake if he supposed one made, and the whole congregation, at times, signified aloud their agreement, should a contradiction, or even ordered the speaker to sound in His satis Fachbard, hydalabeth siving Him ballos too When to the many prayers of the synagogue service we add those required in private life, the "vain repetitions" against which, Christ acautioned His hearers on the Mount may be understood. Besides the five daily renetitions of the S'chma and the Benedictions, every Jew gave thanks before and after every act of eating or drinking. before, and, often, after, each of the countless external rites and exercises required of him; and there were, besides, special pravers for new moons, new, years, feasts, half-feasts, and fasts, and many for special incidents of private or family life. Prayer, always prescribed in exact words, was in fact multiplied till it was in danger of becoming too often formal and mechanical-a mere outward act, of superstitious importance in itself, apart from the spirit in which it erwas offered. 1798. 217 . differ introduction of the side of a soll in the soll of the so it dSuch a circle of synagogue service, constantly repeated, we must e concive the child Jesus to have frequented from His earliest years, day by day, and week by week.

The influence of an institution in which the Law was read, throughout, every year, on the Sabbath, and, in part, twice each week, with extra readings on special/high days; in which the Prophcts and Psalms were constanly brought before the congregation, and in which multiplied prayers, always the same, impressed on the rind every emotion and thought of the national religion, in language often grand and solemn in the extreme-must have been great. The cynagogue was, in fact, the seed-bed of Judaism: its inspiring soul and its abiding nurture. ... It was in it that Jesus was first/drawn, into 3 love and sympathy, as a child, for His people, and that He heard the rights, duties, and prospects, of the suffering people of God, and drank in a deep knowledge of the Law and the Prophets, by which, as St. Luke tells us, "He kept on growing in wisdom." The lessons He learned in it can be traced through the whole Gospels. The addresses He heard were no doubt, for the most part, lifeless Rabbinical reinements, with a Pharisaic colouring, which His pure and sinless som, filled with the love of His heavenly Father, instincstively prized at their true value. His words in after life often show that He had been accustomed to see Pharisees and Scribes in the syn-

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

1.80

he spoken eader. inequently, e ''Amen" aterruption apelass to saistance if posed one aloud their speaker to add those bich Christ d. Besides tions, every r drinking, bes and excial prayers fasts, and yer, always as in danger utward act, in which it

d, we must rliest years, was read, twice each h the Prophegation, and ssed on the in language great. The spiring soul drawn into le heard the of God, and s, by which, The lesole Gospels. part, lifeless ch His pure ther, instince often show s in the syn"acorne" who made the Mondays and Thursdays, on which service was held, their days of fasting, who paraded a show of long prayers or of liberal alms; and eagerly pressed forward to the front seats, where they would be most in honour, and would be most likely to be called up to speak. As He grew older He would meet, in turn, in the synagogue, every shade of the religion of the day, -- the strictness of the school of Shammai, and the mildness of that of Hillel; Jewish bigotry, and Gallican freedom and tolerance; the latitudinarianism, of the Sadducee, or the puritanical strictness of the Essene. The great doctrines of ceremonial purity, of the righteousness of works, of the kingdom of God, and of the coming redemption of Israel. would sound in His ears Sabbath by Sabbath, giving Him much to retain and still more to reject. In the synagogue He came in contact with the religious life of His race, in its manifold aspects. We see, in His public life, how the crowds that gathered round Him, as the new Rabbi of Israel, entered into conversation with Him on the subjects of His discourse, or commented on them afterwards, and He had, no doubt, done much the same with the teachers. He beard in His earlier years." The Rabbis whom He met in the synagogues, in the markets, or at meals, were accustomed to exchange question and answer with all, and must often have had to reply to His searching questions, and deep insight into Scripture." Nor would the longing of the people at large, for the vengeance of God on the oppressors of the nation escape His notice. As a man in all things like other men, except in His sinlessness-the synagogue with its services, and the free expression of thought, both in public and private, which it favoured, must have been one of the chief agencies in developing His human nature. Mill, and the storm of dost-bus washed take

(** "The induced of an instanting in , which, the bawe was read, a throughout, every lean on the Sabouth, upd, in part, suice each proces, with exten reading VIX aNSTANO days; in which the Prophreis and Bahas increaces reading brought her on the family fegation, and in which radiublied as an up land, LAIOS same dimpaces of on the

Among the influences amidst which the child Jesus grew up at Nazareth, the Synagogue, with its constantly recurring services, was, no. doubt, one of the most important. It was a characteristic of Jewish life, however, that its religion was interwoven with the whole tissue of daily events, from the cradle to the grave. The Jewish ecclesiastical calendar, with its cycle of feasts, halffeasts and fasts, must have had a great effect in colouring the general mind, and perpetuating the system and sentiments which they illustrated. There were four different reckonings of the Hebrew year that which commenced with the first day of Nisan, and was known as "the year of kings and feasts;" a second, which dated from the first of Elul—that is, from the full moon of August—from which the year was calculated for the tithing of cattle; a third, from the first day of Tisri—that is, from the full moon of September—from which the years from the creation of the work were reckoned and a fourth. from the first day of the eleventh month. Schebet from which the age of trees was counted, for the payment of tithes, and for noting the time when it became lawful to eat the fruit, of the study of the "The stir made to catch the first glimpse of the new moon would be a great event each month, even in a retired place like Nazareth. Jesus would hear, how on the last day of each month, men were posted on all the heights round Jerusalem to watch for it how they hastened, at the utmost speed, to the Temple, with the news, even if it were Sabbath, and how the sacred trumpet sounded to announce it, and special sacrifices were offered. The appearance of the new moon had in all ages been a great day in Israel as it also was among the Greeks and Romans. The Rabbis affirmed the God Himself had spoken of it to Moses, and told him how to observe it. All over the land it was celebrated, monthly, by special religious solemnities, and by universal rejoicing in some months more than in others; every one in Jerusalem, who could, repairing to the Temple and all, elsewhere, making it a point to attend the synagogue on that day. In the fondly remembered times of the past, the day of the new moon had been that on which, especially, the people flocked to the prophets to receive instruction, and on which their ancestors, at some periods, had been wont to worship, from their roofs, the returning light, as that of the Queen of Heaven. Harden and the Market and the Many things would impress this event on the Nazareth children. They doubtless noticed how all the men of the willage watched from their doors, each month, for the new light, and they had often heard their fathers, with covered head, repeat the prayer still used by every pious Jew at first seeing it-" Blessed be Thou, Lord, our God! who; through Thy Word, didst create the heavens, and their whole host, by the breath of Thy mouth. He appointed them a law and time that they should not go back from their places. Joyfully and gladly they fulfil the will of their Creator, whose working and whose works are truth. He spoke to the moon, and commanded her that she should renew herself in glory and splendour, for those whom He has carried from their mother's breast, for they, too, will be one day renewed like her, and glorify their Creator after the honour of His kingdom. Blessed be Thou, O Lord, who enewest the moons Nor would the simple household feast that followed be unnoticed, with its invited guests, nor the Sabbath rest of all from their daily work, for it must have been a welcome monthly holiday to the school children of Nazareth. Fist the der ser this to the 199112 The great festival of the Hebrew year-the Passover and the feast of Unleavened Bread-began on the 15th day of Nisan, the first month, and lasted till the 22nd. It was one of the three yearly feasts which every Israelite, if he could, attended in Jerusalem Like circumcision, which, indeed, was hardly thought so sacred, its due bservance was esteemed a vital necessity, on no account to be neglected ish: nace sentedis erance was bel Every if he we Israelist feredion be thoas fatherof and sprin for the f in keepit Pious earliest my brought even the child was of steps if The Pa feast was: take their Joseph and took years old. and show the revela Samaria looked aw Only a: even in a than Meco "tholy," s born. or "holier." burial cou sacred cit Rabbinica even holy eaten in it of death. except etess; had things sho the walls. fires Vast ofourth. hich the r noting THE HARMON would be Vazaretir ien wero it; how he news. unded to trance of as it also med the oobserve l religious re than in e Temple; ue on that lay of the flocked to cestors, at the return-A AND AND A DAY children. ched from ften heard d by every God! who; hole host, and time and gladly nose works r that she m He has ne day reour of His oons. Nor ticed, with aily work, school chil-4414-14110 d the feast o, the first early feasts Like cird its due to be neg-ish race of The Passover lamb was the one offering which all presented spontaneously. It not only commemorated a national deliverance-the "passing over" of Israel by the destroying angel but was believed to secure the same mercy for themselves hereafter. Every one regarded it as a debt he owed, and must by all means pay, if he would be counted worthy of a part in the congregation of Israel 11 It was in fact, a household sacrifice, which each family offered on its own behalf, that its transgressions through the year might be "passed over." Even till the later ages of Jewish history the father of each household himself killed the male lamb or goat required, and sprinkled the blood on the lintel and doorposts, as an expiation for the family as a whole, and for any who might have joined them in keeping the feast. AK BASE AND F. OF THE MINDRE IS W. Pions Israelites were careful to accustom their children, from the earliest years, to the requirements of their religion, and hence often brought them with them to Jerusalem at the great feasts. Indeed, even the liberal school of Hillel made it binding to do so as soon as a child was able, with the help of its father's hand, to climb the flight of steps into the Temple courts. man and the fusion with and Bait m The Passover itself was eaten only by males, but the week of the feast was a time of universal rejoicing, so that husbands were wont to take their wives, as well as their sons, with them. Joseph and Mary went to Jerusalem, every year, to the Passover. and took Jesus with them, for the first time, when He was twelve years old Hike His cousin John. He had grown in mind and body. and showed a sweet religious spirit. The journey must have been the revelation of a new world, to Him-a world, beyond the hills of Samaria, which had hitherto seemed the limit of the earth as He looked away to them from the hill-top behind Nazareth. of Only a Jew could realize the feelings such a visit must have raised even in a child. Jerusalem, to the Israelite, was more, if possible, than Mecca is to the Mahommedan. The whole "land of Israel," was "tholy," since it, only, could offer to God the first-fruits, or the firstborn, or the "perpetual" shewbread. Its walled towns were still "holier." No leper was allowed in them, and a corpse carried out to burial could not be brought into a town again. But Jerusalem, the sacred city, the seat of the Temple, had a sanctity all its own, By Rabhinical laws, which, however, were, doubtless, often neglected, even holy offerings, of the lower kinds, and second tithes, might be eaten in it. The dead must be carried out before sunset of the day of death. No houses could be let for lodgings, and no sepulchres, except those of the house of David, and of Huldah, the prophetess, had been tolerated. No impurity was suffered, lest creeping things should defile the holy city; nor could scaffolds be set up against the walls, for a similar fear of defilement. Smoke from household fires tias forbidden; poultry were unlawful, because they scratched up the soil, and might defile passing offerings; no leper could enter the gates; gardens were prohibited, because the decaying leaves and the manure would make an offensive smell. Superstition had invented the most amazing fancies, as proofs of the passing holiness of the city in its whole extent, and these were, doubtless, universally and implicitly believed. It was maintained that no serpent or scorpion ever harmed any one in Jerusalem; that no fly was ever seen in the place for slaughtering the sacrifices; that no rain ever put out the fire of the altar, and that no wind ever blew aside the pillar of smoke over the altar. But the hospitality of the holy city was less open to question; for it was a common beast that no one had ever failed to find friendly entertainment, or a hearth on which to reast his passover. However churlish to all besides, the hospitality of the citizens to their own nation was unbounded.

But if the city were holy, it was mainly so because of the far greater holiness of the sanctuary within its bounds. The Temple mountain held the fourth place in local holiness. The ceremonially unclean could not enter it. The space between the court of the heathen and the inner courts—the Zwinger, or Chel—ranked next; none but Israelites could enter it, and not even they, if defiled by a dead body: The women's court came next. No unclean person, even after bathing, could enter it till sunset. The Forecourt of the Israelites was still holier. No one could go into it who needed explation to be made for him. Even the clean must bathe before entering, and any unclean person intruding, through oversight, must atone for his error by a trespass-offering. The Forecourt of the Priests was yet more sacred. None but the priests or Levites could cross its threshold, except on special occasions, specified by the Law. The space between the altar and the Temple had a still greater sanctity, for, into it, no priest with any bodily defect, or with his hair in disorder, or with a torn robe, or who had tasted wine, could enter. The Temple itself stood apart, in the tenth and highest degree of sanctity. Before entering it, every priest had to wash both hands and feet. In this revered centre, however, there was one spot more awful than all the rest-the Holy of Holies, which the high pricst alone could enter, and he only once a year, on the great Day of Atonement, in the performance of the rites of the day, which required his entering it four times.

Such a country and city could not fail to be the objects of abiding and passionate sentiment. Affection for their native land led to the unique historical phenomenon of the return of the exiles from Babylon. Many psalms of the period still record how the captives wept by the rivers of Babylon when they remembered Zion, and hung their harps on the willows of their Lanks; and the same intense longing for Palestine is illustrated even yet, by the fond fancy of the Targum that the bodies of the righteous Jews who die in foreign lands, make their way, under ground, to the Mount of Olives, to share in the restraction of the just, of which it is to be the scene. The value of the Jew the few is shared their fat from it. Love o linked t hood, an voluntari longing jects of a to the Te Their he closure. that of th after the thirsteth. before Go how I we house of G To the Je system. looked to to it in a Law, but over twee payment Temple ar great valu claimed b were doub Philo, "th are put. it to Jerus the Hope rests the h own at L stantly fro But it flow beyond th tection of protect it Thus Je all Israel, lived in ev anxiety. over Jerus the Jews of Jerusalem over their rulned Temple, as they lean against the few stones of it which yet remain, shows the same feeling, and it is shared by all the race so strongly, that some earth from the land of their fathers is sprinkled on the grave of every Jew that dies away from it, to make him rest in peace.

Love of their mother-land, however, was not especially that which linked the Jews of all countries in Christ's day into a great brotherhood, and attracted them continually to Jerusalem, for they were voluntarily settled, far and wide, in foreign lands. Nor was it their longing for freedom and independence, for they were contented subjects of all forms of government. Their eyes were everywhere turned to the Temple, and they found in it the centre of their national unity, Their heavenly and earthly fatherland seemed to meet in its sacred enclosure. From all the earth, wherever a Jew lived, rose the same cry as that of the exiles at the sources of the Jordan, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God; when shall I come and appear before God? I pour out my soul in me when I remember these thingshow I went with the pilgrim bands, and marched up with them to the house of God, with the voice of joy and praise; with the festive crowd!" To the Jews of every land it was the crown and glory of their religious system. In their scattered synagogues and houses of prayer they looked towards it at every service. Their gifts and offerings flowed to it in a golden stream, partly to satisfy the requirements of the Law, but even more to gratify their religious devotion. Every Jew over twenty throughout the world gave his didrachma yearly-in payment of the first-fruits required by the Law-to maintain the Temple and its sacrifices. Constant voluntary gifts, besides, often of great value, streamed into the holy treasury. Tithes, also, were claimed by the Rabbis from all Jews abroad as well as at home; and were doubtless given by the devout. "In almost every town," save Philo, "there is a chest for the sacred money, and into this the dues are put. At fixed times it is entrusted to the foremost men to carry it to Jerusalem. The noblest are chosen from every town to take up the Hope of all Jews, untouched, for on this payment of legal dues rests the hope of the devout," Egypt, though it had a Temple of its own at Leontopolis, sent this yearly tribute regularly; it came constantly from Rome and all the West; from Lesser Asia and all Syria. But it flowed in the richest stream from Babylonia and the countries beyond the Euphrates, from which it was brought up under the protection of thousands, who volunteered to escort it to Jerusalem, and protect it from plunder by the Parthians on the way.

Thus Jerusalem and the Temple were the grand religious centre of all Israel, to the remotest limits of its wanderings. The Sanctuary lived in every heart. To maintain it inviolate was the one common anxiety. Foreign rulers might hold sway over Palestine, and even over Jerusalem, and so long as the Temple was kert untouched, into ld'enter ves and had inliness of sally and scorpion en in the t the fire oke over to quesl to find passover. s to their ar greater mountain vinclean then and none but ead body. fter baths was still made for y unclean rror by a re sacred. except on n the altar priest with m robe, of d apart, in r it, every ntre, howie Holy of nly once a f the rites of abiding led to the rom Babytives wept hung their onging for e Targum inds, make in the res-

waiting of netted

around the valle

the eve

gardens.

As To

the nort

rising, to the wes

across th

overtop

hill by ground

reached

pilgtims

building and tho

Joab's W

The cou

below; a

the Gard

Jerusa

all sides

as its ov

town, by business

the Tyro

Moriah.

in Easte

hills, we square w

and gave the stree

climbing

and that

Camithi

Day of his clot

that lie d brother

On th

old, or u

shops of

Jerusale

through

this wal

castles

mission was paid them, as the will of fate of It, however, the haughtiness or greed of the enemy violated, or even only threatened, the Sanctuary, there ran through the whole Jewish world a feeling of indignation that roused them at once, and at the cry that the Temple was in danger, weapons were grasped and solemn prayers rose and one deep resolve pervaded all-to shed the last drop of their blood on the battle-field or at the Altar, for Jerusalem and the Sanctuary, It must have been a wonderful sight to the child Josus, to visit the Holy City at the season of the Passover. o The multitudes, who flocked to the feast from all countries were countless ....." Many thousands," says Philo, "from many thousand towns and cities, make a pilgrimage to the Temple at every feast; some by land, others by sea; from the east and the west, the north and the south. Even at Pentecost, which attracted a much smaller number, vast crowds of Jews and proselytes were present from every part of the Roman compire. which was nearly equivalent to the then known world Josephus reckoned the numbers attending a single Passover at 12,700,000. inclusive of the population of the city. Every house in the narrow limits of Jerusalem was crowded with pilgrims, and the whole land scape round covered with the tents or booths, of mat, and wickerwork and intervoven leaves, extemporized to serve at shelter-like the similar structures of the Easter pilgrims still-for those who could not be accommodated in any house. The routes by which they travelled to the Holy City from all lands must have been like those to Mecca, at certain seasons, even now: countless vessels laden with living freights of pilgrims: all the main lines of road thronged with huge caravans, every port of the Mediterranean, and overy city and town on the highways leading to the great centre, thronged as with the passage of armies. "The vast "dispersion"-Jewish by birth, sentiment, or adoption -- converged more and more densely on the one point, Jerr salem. Parthians, Medes, Elamites, and Mesonutamians. in the costume of the far East, with their long trains of camels and mules; crowds from every province of Lesser Asla-Cappadocia; Pontus, Phrygia, and Pampbylia, each band with the distinctive characteristics of its own district; swarthy multitudes, in long caravans, or afoot, -- after a sea voyage to Jopna or Clesaren-from Egypt; the headquarters of the foreign Jews, and from Libya and Cyrene; pilgrims even from imperial Rome; men from the slopes of Cretan Ida, and from the far-off cities and towns of sandy Arabla, met under the shadow of the Temple. The whole world, in a sense, was gathered to one spot, and this, itself, to a mind such as that of the boy Jesus. must have been rich in the most varied influence and knowledge. The appearance of the city would make an impression never to be forpotten. If there were no gardens in Jerusalem, there was a girdle of them reaching, from its very walls, down the valleys, and up the opposite hill sides; one of them so famous that the firs from it were sold for three or four assault cach. The garden walls and ditches

e haughtitened the ling of ine Temple roserand ielr blaod notuary. o visit the ucles, who any thour us, make a ers by sear at Rentes of Jews n empire: Josephus 00.000; inis narrow holeland d wickerelter-like hose who hich they like those aden with nged with y eity und ed aby with by birth. on the one otamians. mels and ppadocia. listingtive ong carain Egypt; d Cyrene: of Cretan mot under sgathered oy Jesus, edge: son ver to be as a girdle nd up the m it were duditaber netted over all the approaches to the city, on each side. On the hills around rose the mansions of the rich citizens, and at the bend where the valleys of Kidron and Hinnom met, beside the Pool of Siloan. the eye regaled itself with the wide and rich verdure of the royal gardens a reputh of duration united and a subdeam of such the rider "As Joseph, and Mary with her Son, came in sight of the city from the north, they would be on ground as high as Mount Zion and rising, to the north west of the city, even a few feet higher, while on the west, Zion rose, on an average, about 100 feet above the hills across the valley of Hinnom; and, on the east, the Mount of Olives overteoped the highest part of the city by 100 feet, and the Temple hill by no less than 800. Except on the north, however, the high ground was divided from Jerusalem by deep valleys, which could be reached from within the city only by steep streets and roads. The pligrims encamped in the valleys of Kidron or Hinnom, saw the buildings and towers of Mount Zion more than 500 feet above them; and those whose tents were pitched not far from the same place, at Joab's Well, were nearly 600 feet below the houses of the upper city. The court of the Priests looked over to the Peol of Siloam 370 feet below; and from Mount Zion it needed a descent of 264 feet to reach the Garden of Getlisemane, in the Valley of the Kidron, barrens and Jerusalem was thus, pre-eminently, a mountain city, surrounded on all sides by hills, and with hills, famous and sacred beyond all others. as its own site. The road from Nazareth entered the new lower town, by the Damascus gate, and passed through the most stirring business street in the bottom of the Valley of the Cheesemakers, or the Tyropicon a deep and narrow hollow between Mounts Zion and Moriah, then crowded with the narrow lanes which serve for streets In Eastern cities." In the new town, under the shadow of the two hills, were the shops of the braziers; the clothes' bazaar, and the square where the authorities received announcements of the new moon. and gave the public feasts that followed, monthly. In the Tyroppon, the streets ran, in terraces, up the steep sides of the hill side lanes climbing here and there, to the top, past the bazaar of the butchers. and that of the wool dealers, to the upper street, where Ismael Ben Camithi the high priest at the time having gone out on the great Day of Atonement, to speak with a heathen, a fleck of spittle fell on his clothes, from the lips of the uncircumcised, and defiled him, so that he could not perform the services of the day, and had to get his On the west of the Tyropœon, on the top of Mount Zion, rose the old, or upper city, known also as the City of David. In it were the shops of the goldsmiths, and the houses of the priests who lived in

Jernsalem. "The Wall of David ran along its north side, opening through the gate Gennath, to Akra, or the lower town... High above this wall, which was over fifty feet in height, rose, the three famous "castles" Hippikus, Phasaslus, and Marianne-built, by Herod, the Great, and then fresh from the builder's hands. Of these, Hippikus stern and massive, towered 120 feet above the wall, at its north-west corner: a great square of huge stones, in successive stories, the upper one surmounted by battlements and turrets. | Close by, and in a line with it, rose Phasaelus, the splendid memorial to Herod's brother Physical who had beaten out his brains against the walls of his dunch geon when a prisoner of the Parthians. It, also, was equare, for sixty feet of its height above the wall, but from amidst the breast-works and bulwarks of this lower fortress, rose a second tower about seventy feet higher, with magnificent battlements and turrets. Within this upper tower was like a palace, and it was, doubtless, intended as a refuge for the king in case of necessity." Marianne, the smallest of the three castles, was about thirty feet square, and about seventy-five in height, but its upper half was more highly finished than that of either of the others, as if to quiet its builder's conscience for the murder of her whose name it bore. All three fortresses, towering thus grandly aloft, above the high wall, --which itself rose along the crest of a high hill,-were of white marble: each stone thirty feet long, fifteen in breadth, and from seven to eight in thickness; and all squared so exactly that their joinings could hardly be seen. " "Each tower," to use the words of Josephus, "looked like a great natural rock which had been cut by the workman into shape, like the rock-liewn buildings of Edom, Sandar, it. I massle des yound, bud on the loo

Under the protection of these splendid atructures rose the new palate of Herod, about the centre of the northern half of Mount Zion, a great part of which was enclosed within its park walls, them selves a second line of defence, forty-five feet in height, with strong towers rising, at equal distances, from their broad tops. The palace iself was indescribably magnificent. Spaclous rooms, with elaborately carved walls and collings, many of them crusted with precious stones, displayed Oriental splendour to hundreds of guests at a time. Gold tand silver shore on every side. Round this sumptuous abode, portices with curious pillars of costly stone, effered shady retreats. Groves and gardens stretched on every side, intermingled with pools and artificial rivers, bordered by long, delightful walks, frequented, through the day, by all who could endure the desceration of Jerusalem by the countless statues which adorned them.

The theatre built by Herod, to the horror of the nation, was also, apparently, in this part of the city; and outside, at a little distance, was the amphitheatre, an object of still greater popular aversion, from its gladiatorial shows, in which men condenned to death fought with wild beasts. Inscriptions in honour of Augustus, and trophies of the nations Herod had conquered in his wars, adorned the exterior of the theatre; and the games in the circus, though shunned by the Jews, were celebrated with the greatest pomp, strangers from all the neighbouring countries being invited to them. The trophies round the theatre especially excited indignation, being supposed to cover images, an deed, had i ioy, he had presence o shapeless w no, Jew pas presence in . On the e kings, and, colonnade, Valley to the Xystus The main hill, others ley, with a raised pave allow passe unclean. I the better k were then, branch of c Looking pool, near a ley, slightly another of overawed. from its ba coast to bey Edom, on t itself, but s built by He The north interesting f presented. records offic double pool and its cour ond hill on contrasting fortress Ant arated by a exposed, so enclosures. originally b great magni rooms, to fit the quarters images, and hence being looked upon as heathen idols. So great, indeed, had the excitement become, in Herod's lifetime, that, for policy, he had caused the armour to be taken from some of them, in presence of the leading men, to show that there was nothing but shapeless wood beneath. Yet even this did not calm the people, and no lew passed the hated building without the bitterest feelings at its presence in the holy city.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST

On the eastern crest of Zion stood the old palace of the Asmoncan kings, and, north of it, an open space surrounded by a lofty covered colonnade, known as the Xystus. A bridge spanned the Tyropeon Valley to the south-west corner of the Temple enclosure, and near the Xystus rose a hall, known as the Hall of the King's Council. The main streets ran north and south—some along the brow of the hill, others lower down, but parallel, following the course of the valley, with side lanes or narrow streets connecting them. They had raised pavements, either because of the slope of the ground, or to allow passers by to avoid contact with persons or things ceremonially unclean. The upper city was mainly devoted to dwelling-houses of the better kind, but in the lower city, bazaars, or street-like markets were thea, as now, a prominent feature, each devoted to a special brauch of commerce.

Looking out at the Gennath gate on the north of Zion, the Almond pool, near at hand, refreshed the eye. Beyond it, across a little valicy, slightly to the north-west, near the Joppa road, was Psephinos, another, of the castles by which the city was at once defended and overawed. It rose in an octagon, high into the clear blue, showing from its battlements the whole sweep of the country, from the seacoast to beyond the Dead Sea, and from the far north, away towards Edom, on the south. In Christ's day, it stood outside the city, by itself, but soon after His death it was included in the line of wall built by Herod Agrippa.

The northern part of the lower town, known as Akra, was mainly interesting for the bustle of restless city life of every colour which it presented. The wood bazaar, the city council-house and public records office, were in it. Nor was it destitute of attractions, for the double pool of Bethesda lay at its north-east corner. The Temple and its courts occupied nearly the whole of Mount Moriah, the second hill on which the city was built, the only other building on it contrasting strangely in appearance and character. It was the great fortress Autonia, at the north-west corner, on an isolated rock, separated by a cleft from Mount Moriah, and cased with stone where exposed, so that no foe could scale it. The castle occupied, with its enclosures, nearly a third of the great Temple plateau, and was built originally by John Hyrcanus, but had been rebuilt by Herod with great magnificence, with baths, fountains, galleries, plazza, and great rooms, to fit it for a residence for princely guests. It served now as the quarters of the Roman garrison, sent from Gæsarea at the time of ded as a allest of enty-five of either nurder of grandly of a high g, fifteen uared so ower, "to" k which wn bulld-DOOL NORT the new of Mount lls, themth strong he palace nborately us stones. e. Gold ode, porretreats. ith pools quented. f Jerusawas also, distance, aversion, th fought trophies e exterior d by the m all the es round to cover

ippikus.

he upper

rth west

in a line

brother

his dunch

for sixty

st-works

seventy thin this

the great feasts, to keep peace in the city. In Christ's day the robes of the high priest were kept in it by the Romans, to prevent a seditious use of them. Covered ways led from the castle to the Temple area, to allow the soldiery free, access in case of tumult or disturbance. Such was the city to which Jesus now came for the first time. As He was led through its crowded streets, and saw its famous palaces. and towers, and marts, and above all, the Temple, what strange thoughts must have risen in the opening mind of the wondrous boy. The panorama spread before Him from the city at its different points, was no less filled with interest. From the Temple He looked eastward to Mount Olivet, then crowned by two great cedars, under neath which were booths for the sale of all things needed for ceremonial purifications, including the doves for the various offerings. He would no doubt hear how, in former times, heacon fires had been kindled on the hill top at each new moon, and how mountain after mountain, catching the sight, spread the news in an hour over the whole land. Some one would, doubtless, also, tell Him that it was the hated Samaritans who had brought the custom to an end by holding up lights at wrong times, and thus misleading Israelation The Valley of the Kidron, below, would be equally interesting. It was to it the pilgrims came down at the Feast of Tabernacles, to cut the long boughs of willow which they carried in procession to the Temple, and laid bending over the altar for On the eve of the first day of the feast, Jesus would see men sent by the Temple authorities-a great crowd following-to cut the sheaf of first-fruits. Perhaps He saw the three reapers, with hasket and sickle, step to spots previously marked out, asking, as they stood beside the new barley, " Hus the sun set yet? Is this the right sickle? Is this the right basket?' and, if it were Sabbath, "Is this the Sabbath?"-to be followed by another question, thrice repeated, "Ehall I cut?" which was answered with what seems, now, childish formality, but then thrilled all hearts, "Cut." Religious bitterness lay behind all this minute triviality, for did not the hated aristocratic Sadducees, maintain that the first sheaf should be cut only on the first week-day of the feast, which would have affected the date of Pentecost, fifty days later? The Child from Nazareth would follow, when the sheaf, thus reaped, was carried, amidst great rejoicings, to the forecourt of the Temple, and presented by the priest, as a heave-offering, then threshed, winnowed, and cleansed, dried over a sacred fire, and forthwith ground into flour, the finest of which was the new-harvest "meat-offering" before God. He knew that till this had been presented at the altar, no field could be cut, except to get fodder for cattle, or for other neces eary ends.

Looking into the Valley of Hinnom from the southern end of the Temple, with its magnificent Royal porch. His eyes must have turned from the sight one spot in it offered, the fires kept up, night and day, to burn all the garbage and offal of the temple, and the refuse of the city-the m this valley idolatrous t the part wh the name Himself, fo Between south-east . Mount, wo waters of S and after f themselves City and whole being the first th murmur of homage to

Ino

13 AM 8430 Will HALLY, I.M. 144 24 911:35 2. HANGE MARKEN STRA THE Was Jerusalem. of which the been a great nity. b. Sout the bridges All graves cither fience they might whom they The fields, over. to see them, which immediately had been he Rabbis had festival. T on the 10th. supply the pilgrims ar goats, of a were selecte pany of rela . The fourt

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

the robes

nt a sedi-

a Temple

sturbance.

time. As

s palaces,

t strange

He looked

irs, under

d for cere-

offerings.

s had been

tain after ar over the hat it was in end by

elatin Part resting. It

ion: to the

e first day

horities—a erhaps He previously ('Hus the

ket?' and.

by another wered with all bearts.

viality, for first sheaf

nich would

The Child

l, was care, and pre-

ound into

ering" bee altar, no.

her neces-

nd of the

ave turned

t and day.

use of the

ous boy. s different city—the symbol of the unquenchable fames of the Pit. It was in this valley that children had been burned alive to Moloch in the old idolatrous times, and the remembrance of this, with the foulness of the part where the perpetual fires now burned, had made Gehenna the name of the valley—the word used afterwards even by Jesus Himself, for the place of the lost.

Between Hinnom and Kidron, where the two valleys met at the south-east of the city, Hill eyes, looking down from the Temple Mount, would rest on the contrasted sweetness of the softly-flowing waters of Siloam, which bubbled up noiselessly at the foot of the hill; and after filling a double pool, glided on to the south, till they lost themselves in the king's gardens.

City and people: the past and the present, must have filled the whole being of the Child with awe and wonder, for He now stood, for the first time, under the shadow of His Father's Temple, and the murmur of countless languages that filled the air, was, in very truth, homage to that Father from all the world.

Hours in he show and the sor i guard set of sumailoud This sumin after of disable transformer was in the particular of THE PASSOVER VISIT TO JERUBALEM. ALTER JE Canada and a statistic to Antice and the state of The wast multitudes coming to the Passover arranged to reach Jerusalem, at the latest, on the 14th of Nisan, the day on the evening of which the feast, was celebrated. In the city, however, there had been a great stir for some days already, in anticipation of the solemnity. So far back as from the 15th of the preceding month, all the bridges and roads, far and near, had been begun to be repaired. All graves near the lines of travel, or round Jerusalem, had been cither fenced in, or the head-stones had been whitewashed, that they might be seen from a distance, and thus warn off the pilgrims, whom they might otherwise have defiled, and made unfit for the feast. The fields, throughout the whole country, had been anxiously gone over, to see if they were unclean by any plants growing together in them, which the Law forbade being allowed to do so, On the Sabbath immediately preceding the 14th—the Great Sabbath—special services had been held in all the synagogues and in the Temple itself, and the Rabbis had discoursed to the people on the laws and meaning of the festival, The lambs, or he goats, had been selected; in earlier times, on the 10th, from the vast flocks driven to the city at this season, to supply the Passover demand. But this was impossible now, as the pilgrims arrived, mostly, after that day. Only male lambs, or he goats, of a year old, and without blemish, could be used, and they were selected with the most scrupulous care by the head of each company of relatives or neighbours, who proposed to eat the feast together.

The fourteenth day, which began at sunset of the 13th, was also the of the Temple, by the bouds of the different house web first day of the feast of "Unleavened Bread," and was hence known preparation day." No particle of leaven could be left in any as the ' The head of each family, as the evening closed began the house. household purification with the prayer-"Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the universe, who hast sanctified us with Thy commandments, and requirest us to remove the leaven," and then proceeded, in rigorous silence, to search every room, gathering every crumb that could be found, and finally tying all up till the following morning. A further search, which must end before noon, was then made for any ilquid or solid product of fermented grain, and for all dishes or vessels that had held it. All were taken out of the house, and the crumbs and dough carefully burned, with a repetition of prescribed prayers. The house itself was then cleansed in every part, and no one could enter the unpurified house of a heathen, henceforth; during the feast, without being defiled. Nothing leavened could be eaten or permitted in the house during the next seven days, for defilement, bringing with it unfitness to eat the Passover, would follow in either case.) trouty whether a untel so T Loo of guiralte nalls

This purification of the house, however, was by no means all. Vessels of any kind, to be used at the feast, were cleansed with prescribed rites, in a settled mode. Metal dishes, &c., after being scoured, must be first dipped in boiling water in a pot used for no other purpose and then into cold. Iron vessels must be made red-hot; then washed in the same way. Iron mortars, for crushing grain for baking, were filled with red coals, till a thread, tied outside, was burned through. Wooden vessels, after being wetted, were rubbed with a red-hot stone. No clay dish could be used at all if not quite new, and it had to be first dipped thrice in running water, and conrecrated by a special prayer. Personal purity was as strictly enforced. Every one had to cut his hair and nails, and to take a batherin word. The baking of the unleavened bread was accompanied with equally formal care, On the evening of the 13th, "before the stars appeared," the head of each liousehold went out and drew water for the purpose, uttering the words as he did so, "This is the water for the unleavened bread," and covering the vessel that contained it, for fear of any defilement. In grinding the flour, the most auxious care was observed to keep all leaven from coming near the woman at the mill, and to take no grain that was at all damp, lest it might have began to ferment. After baking, one loaf, to be taken to the priest at the Temple, was laid aside, with another prescribed prayer. The afternoon of the 14th was a time of the intensest bustle, for the ram's horn trumpets would presently announce, from the Temple, the beginning of the feast. At the sound, every one took his lamb to the Temple, the court walls of which were gaily hung with many coloured carpets and tapestries, in honour of the day. The countless victims must be first, examined by the priests, to see if they were without blemith, then slaughtered and prepared for reasting, in the forecourts of the I deputed haste ar kill ah The exa from su killed in AS SOC within nounced goldiand to catch poured When th which where it Palestine nearest p as an off. of the ha was born be given ziti Not fer company. was not fourteen with the to be kille nineport courts of they migh Thonsand be roaste trussed cross, and allowed to burned of all who were now The fea the prepar penalty of if any fat off. The arranged clining on filled for (nrecuista)

150

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

of the Te

ce knows left in any beganlithe

u, O Lord,

Thy com-

then pro-

ring every

e following

and for all the house,

tion of pre-

every part, henceforth.

d could be

tould follow

allo na la

means all.

being scour-

or no other

og grain for

were rubbed

if not quite

er, and con-

tly enferced.

havin vaut.

with equally

he stars ap-

water: for the

dit, for fear

ous care was

n at the mill,

averbegun to priest at the

the preparat

Temple, the

s lamb to the

any-coloured

victims

were without

he forecourts

days, for

of the Temple, by the heads of the different households, or by ment deputed by them, for by the Levites in attendance, with indescribable haste and confusion, for there was more than work enough for all, for kill almost at the same time, the 250,000 lambs sometimes required. The exact time for killing the victums was "between the evenings," from sumset of the 14th till the stars appeared, though they might be killed in the three last hours of the day.

As soon as the courts were full, the gates were shut on the multitude within, each holding lis lamb. Three blasts of trum, ets then announced the beginning of the heavy task. Long rows of priests, with gold and silver bowls stood ranged between the altar and the victims. to catch the blood, and pass it on from one to the other, till the last poured it on the altar, from which it ran off, through pipes beneath. When the lamb had been drained of blood, the head of the family to which it belonged took it to the hooks on the walls and pillars round, where it was opened and skinned. The tail, which, in the sheep of Palestine, often weighs many pounds, and the fat, were handed to the nearest price, and passed on till they reached the alter, to be barned. as an offering to God. The lamb was killed without the usual laying of the handston its head. It was now ready to be carried away; and was borne off by the family head in its skin, which was afterwards to be given to the host in whose house the feast might be held. About this Not fewer than iten but as many as twenty, might mit down at a company. Women were allowed to join their households, though it was not required that they should eat the Passover: and lads from fourteen, and even slaves and foreigners. If circumcised, sat down with the rest. Bverything was hurried, for the lambs were required to be killed, roasted, and eaten, between three in the afternoon and nine or twelve at night. They were properly, to be caten in the courts of the Temple, but this, after a time, having become impossible. they might be eaten any where within the Rabbinical limits of the city. Thousands of fires in special ovens, prepared them; for they must be roasted only, not boiled, or cooked except in this way. It was trussed with spits of pomegranate wood, inserted in the form of a cross, and the whole creature roasted entire." None of the flesh was allowed to remain till morning any fragments left being forthwith burned, that they might not be defiled. The very dress and attitude of all who took part had been originally prescribed, but these details were now out of used had going and a second a day and a share the The feast itself must have impressed a child like Jesus no less than the preparations, Not a bone of the lamb must be broken, under a penalty of forty stripes, nor must any part of it touch the oven; and if any fat dropped back on it, the part on which it dropped was cut off. The company having assembled, after the lamps were lighted, arranged themselves in due order, on couches, round the tables, reclining on their left side. A cup of red wine, mixed with water, was filled for every one, and drunk, after a touching benediction, by the almosonal print in multipercent for foregoing has MURIA MOULT head man of the group. A basin of water and a towel were then brought in, that each might wash his hands, and then another blessing was pronounced.

of the I

remaine

the days

The la

necessar

Passove

first grea But a intereste Father's habits of the servi

and of th

whom th

on watch keys of 1 over. B duty_m sacrifices.

As the train befo

it were r

table on t

Temple b

for the ni

charge of

to sleep o

were now

the night.

alone; the

the highe

next mori

took the k

bearers, d

10 see tha

white rob

morning,

shed, whi

all stood

ber from place mud

Meanw

Toward

This b

out?

A table was then carried into the open space between the couches, and bitter herbs, and unleavened bread, with a dish-made of dates, raising, and other fruits, mixed with vinegar to the consistency of lime, in commemoration of the mortar with which their fathers worked in Egypt,-set on it, along with the paschal lamb. The head man then took some of the bitter herbs, dipped them in the dish, and after giving thanks to God for creating the fruits of the earth, ate h small piece; and gave one to each of the company. A second cup of wine and water was then poured out, and the son of the house, or the youngest boy present, asked the meaning of the feast, The questions to be put had been minutely fixed by the Rabbis, and were as formally and minutely answered in appointed words, the whole story of the deliverance from Egypt being thus repeated, year after year, at every Passover table, in the very same terms, throughout all Israel." The first part of the great Hallelujah-Psalms exili, and exiv, -was now chanted, and was followed by a prayer, beginning, "Blessed art Thou O Lord our God. King of the universe, who hast redeemed us and our forefathers from Egypt." A third cup was now poured out. and then came the grace after meals. A fourth and last cup followed, and then Psalms exv. cxvi., cxvii., and cxviii. which formed the rest of the Hallelwiah, and another prayer, closed the feast.

At midnight the gates of the Temple were once more opened, and the people, who seldom slept that night, poured through them, in their holdsy dress, with thank offerings, in obedience to the command that none should appear before the Lord empty. Of these gifts the priests took their rightful share, and gave back the rest to the officers, who had it cooked for them in the Court of the Women, and sat down to a second feast in the Temple cloisters, or in some part of the town, within the limits of which alone it was lawful to cat such food.

The whole week was full of interest. The 15th was kept like a Sabbath. It was one of the six days of the year on which the Law prohibited all service work. Only what was necessary for daily life might be done. It was a day for rest, and for the presentation of freewill offerings in the Temple.

It was on the third day that the first-fruits of the harvest were brought from the Kidron valley to the Temple, to be waved before God in solemn acknowledgment of His bounty in giving the kin fly fruits of the earth. This incident Jesus, duabtless, saw. He would notice, besides, how the sheaf had no sooner been offered than the streets were filled with sellers of bread made of new barley, parched ears of the young crop, and early growths and fruits of all kinds, which had been kept back till then. From the 17th to the 20th the days were only half holy, and many re then

r bless

ouches,

f dates.

ency of

worked

ad man

sh. and,

th, ate h d cup of

e. or the

mestions

e as for-

story of year, at Israel.

iv.-was lessed art

emed us

ured out,

followed.

d the rest

ened, and

n, in their

nand that gifts the

est to the.

men; and

ne part of

) eat such

ept like a

the Law

daily life

utation of vest were

ed before the kindly

He would than the y, parched

all kinds.

and many of the people had already begun to leave Jerusalem. Crowds still remained, however, to enjoy the great holiday time of the year, and the days and even the nights, with their bright moon, went merrily by. The last day, the 21st, like the first, was kept as a Sabbath. Only necessary work was permitted, and it closed with a rehearsal of the Passover supper, for the sake of those who could not come up on the first great day of the feast.

But amidst all the sights and wonders of the week one specially interested Jesus. His heart was already set supremely on "His Father's house," the Temple. Can we doubt that, with the early habits of the East, He found time to watch its daily service throughout?

This began, in reality, the night before. The priests required for the services of the next day, or to watch through the night, assembled in the evening in the great Fire Chamber. The keys of the Temple, and of the inner forecourts, were then handed them by their brethren whom they relieved, and hidden below the marble floor. The Levices on watch through the night, or to serve next day, also received the keys of the outer forecourts from their brethren whose duties were over. Besides these, twenty four representatives of the people, on duty,—men delegated by the nation to represent it,—at the duily sacrifices, were also present.

As the morning service began very early, everything was put in train beforehand. Ninety-three vessels and instruments needed for it were received from the retiring Levites, and carried to a silver table on the south of the Great Altar, to be ready. The gates of the Temple building itself, and of the inner forecourts, were locked up for the night, the key once more put in its place, the priest who had charge of it kissing the marble slab as he replaced it, and lying down to sleep over it through the night. The gates of the outer forecourts were now also shut, and the watches of priests and Levites set for the night. But the Temple was too sacred to be entrusted to them alone; the Representatives slept in it on behalf of the people; and some ecclesiastical dignitaries, deputed by the authorities, and one of the higher priests, who was to preside over the lots for daily offices next morning.

Towards dawn, the captain of the watch and some priests rose, took the keys, and passing into the inner forecourt, preceded by torch-t bearers, divided into two bands, which went round the Temple courts, to see that all was safe, and every vessel in its right place.

Meanwhile, the other priests had risen, bathed, and put on their white robes. The duties of each for the day were fixed by lot each morning, to prevent the unseemly quarrels, resulting even in bloodshed, which had formerly risen. Assembling in a special chamber, all stood in a circle, and the lot was taken by counting a given number from any part of the ring, the choice remaining with him whose place made up the figure. The anyhile, the Levites and Representatives waited the summons to gather. The priests for the day now once more washed their hands and feet in a brazen laver, which, itself, had been kept all night in water, for fear of its being defiled. The feet were left bare while the priests were on duty.

All the gates were presently opened by the Levites, and the priests. blew thrice on their trimpets to announce to the whole city that the worship of the day would soon begin. The Great Altar was forthwith cleansed by priests to whose lot this duty had fallen. The singers and invisicians of the day, and the priests to blow the trumpets at the morning sacrifice, were set apart; the instruments brought; the night-watchers dismissed, and then the day's service had begun. All this took place by torchlight, before dawn.

The morning sacrifice could not be slain before the distinct appearance of the morning light. A watcher, therefore, standing on the roof of the Temple; looked cut for the first glimpse of Hebron, far. cff, on the hills, as the sign of morning having come. When it was visible, the summons was given—"Priests, to your ministry! Lovites, to your places! Israelites, take your stations!" The priests then once more washed their feet and hands, and the service finally began.

Entering first the Temple, and then the Holy Place, with lowly reverence, a pricet now, after prayer, cleansed the altar of incense, gathered the ashes in his hands, and went out slowly, backwards. Another, meanwhile, had hid wood on the Great Altar, and a third brought a year-old lamb, selected four days before, from the pen in the Temple, to the north side of the altar. The Representatives having faid their hands on its head, it was slaughtered with the head to the west side of the Temple, and the blood caught in a bowl, and stirred continually to prevent its curdling and becoming unfit for sprinkling.

The incense offering was now hindled. At the tankling of a bell, the people in the inner forecourt began to pray, and the priests whose lot it was entered the Holy Place. The first brought out the canser list used, praying and walking backward as he retired. The blood of the lamb was sprinkled on the four sides of the Great Altar as soon as he reappeared.

A second priest having now extinguished five of the seven lamps of the golden candlestick in the Holy Place, a third took in a glowing censer and laid it on the altar, prayed, and retired backwards. A fourth now went in, handed the censer to an assistant who followed, shook incense on the coals, prayed, and retired. The two remaining lights were then extinguished, and the offering ended.

The skin was now stripped from the slain lamb, the bowels taken out and washed, the body cut in pieces, laid on a marble, table, and salted. The food or meat-offering of meal, mixed with oil, and strewed with incense, was then prepared, and a fixed measure of wine pointed into a costly cup for the drink-offering. It was now sunrise. As the priests, an sumed—t The meat and then to the prithe high p detail had wine of the which it r

The m sounded ti raised plat day to the priestly be make His lift up His Volunta pied the pi the afterno same detai the night. prayer offe left to burn and made This dai now, for th ministratio At early in Antonia Olives. T the slumbe had annou filled in the riser. She to the Cou the Xystus the Market countless's the Greek other natio With the prayer, wh who has pu stops, and forehead an

he is, in th

THE LINE OF CHRIST,T

YINOW

itself

priests

nat the s forth-

le 257-

umpets

rought:

begun

appear-

on the

ron far

it was:

This Low

priests

finally

h lowly

incense,

kwards.

a third

pen in ves hav-

head to

owl. and

unfit for

f a bell,

ts whose

e censer

he blood

Altar as

lamps of glowing ards. A

followed.

emaining

els taken

able, and

oil, and

e of wine

sunrise,

The

As the san rose, the nine pieces of the storifice were lifted by nine priests, and carried to the Great Altar, in order-laid on it and consumed—the other priests and the people repeating morning prayer. The meat-offering was then laid on the altar, salt and incense added, and then a handful of it was thrown on the altar fre, the rest falling to the priest as his perquisite. Twelve cakes, the bread-offering of the high priest, were next burned, after being strewn with salt. Every detail had occupied a separate priest, and new another poured the wine of the drink-offering into a silver funnel in the altar, through which it ran into a conduit underneath.

The morning sacrifice was now over. Forthwith two priests sounded their trumpets nine times, and twelve Levites, standing on a raised platform in the Court of the Priests, recited the psalms of the day to the music of their instruments, and then came the ancient priestly benediction—"The Lord bless thee and keep thee: the Lord make His face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee: the Lord lift up His countenance upon thee, and grant thee peace." Voluntary offerings, and those required on special grounds, occupied the priests, for a time, after the morning sacrifice. At three in the afternoon the evening sacrifice and incense offering presented the same details, the victim being left on the altar to burn away through the night. At sunset the Schma was read again, and the evening prover offered, the seven lamps in the Holy Place again kindled and left to burn till morning, and all the vessels cleaned by the Levices, and made ready for next day. If the brids brids are built of the seven in the seven is the seven in the seven is the seven in the seven is the seven is

This daily service was no doubt watched by the child Jesus, who now, for the first time, saw the priests in His Father's house at their ministrations. But the city itself would be sure to arrest his notice.

At early dawn He would hear the trumpots of the Roman garrison in Antonia, and see the booths open shortly after, on the Mount of Olives. Three trumpet blasts from the Temple had already wated the slumbering citizens, and pilgrims, and the first beams of the sun hid announced the hour of morning prayer. The streets had already filled in the twilight, for the Oriental, in all ages, has been an early riser. Sheep and cattle dealers, and money-changers, were furrying to the Court of the Heathen. Worshippers were thronging across the Xystus bridge from the Upper City to the Temple, and through the Market gate, from the Lower Town, along all the streets. The countless synagogues were open for morning service. Men wearing the Greek dress, and speaking Greek, had gathered in some, and other nationalities in others.

With the first sight of the risen sun every one bowed his head in prayer, wherever at the moment he might be. Yonder a Pharisce, who has purposely let the hour overtake him, in the street, suddenly stops, and ties his Tephillin, broader and larger than common, on his forchead and arm. The olive-gatherer, with his basket, prays where he is, in the tree. Pilgrins and citizens are alike bent in prayer. It was an unarry time when Jesus first visited Jerusalem. Archelaus had been builshed two years before, and the hateful race of the Edomites no longer reigned in the palace on Zion, but the hopes built on the change to direct government by a Roman Procurator had not been fulfilled. Judea was now only a part of a Roman province, and the first act of the direct imperial rule had been to make a census of the whole country for heathen taxes. Galilee and Judea, alike, had been in wild insurrection, which had been quenched in blood. The poke with bated breath, but were ut one in deadly hatred of the foreigner, and in the yearning hope that the Messiah might seen appear to drive him out.

"I'i he great bazaar in the Lower New Town was early full of bustle. It was a long street, crowded with stalls, booths, and shops, Fine Urcad of the wheat of Ephraim was sold after the second day of the least. Cakes of figs and raisins. lish of different kinds from the Sea of Tiberias; wood work of all kinds, filled the open stalls. Dibs -the syrup of grapes had many sellers, and there were booths for Egyptian lentiles, and even for cinnamon and pepper. Mechanics plied their trades in the streets, too busy to rise even when a great Rabbi passed. In the side streets trades of every kind filled the roadway. Potters were busy in their sheds; fruiterers offered choice Jerusalem ligs from gardens made rich with the blood of the sacrifices; flaxbeators pounded their flax in the streets. The numbers of passing priests showed that Jerusalem was the Holy City. Levites with their peculiar head-dress, and an outside pocket containing a small foll of the Law: Pharisdes, with broad phylacteries and great fringes; Essenes in white, with the air of old prophets; gorgeous officials of the governor's court, at present in the city-pilgrims in the costume of every land, and speaking a babel of languages passed and repassed in endless variety, chapping to black

The people of Jerusalem might well value the feasts, for they lived by the vast numbers of pllgrins. The money spent by individuals, though little compared to the wealth which flowed yearly into the Temple treasury, from the whole Dispersion, was great in the aggregate. Their gifts in money to the Temple might in part remain there; but they needed doves, lambs, and exen for sacrifices, wood for the altar, and liked to carry home memorials of Jerusalem. The countless priests and Levites, and officials connected with the Temple, caused a great circulation of money, and the building itself, and the requirements of its worship, involved constant expenditure. We need not, therefore, wonder that Jerusalem was wildly fanatical in its zeal for the Holy Place. It was bound to it not less by selfinterest than by religious bigotry.

Jerusalem, though by no means large, was the headquarters of the great religious institutions, as the capital of the theocracy. Countless scribes, rulers, presbyters, scholars, readers, and servanta were connected with its schools and synagogues. It was the scat of all the famo versity to the capits from its ] Delphi an such a tin But His outward a the myste even befo in her int in His be disine nat in their pi of the chil Physical Herod, H which in n tells us that Vespásian, that could and even in that marria Philo, in C ideas. at fourteen self; while, five years," (that is, in s teen to the to marriage The Rabb house when when he had some of his day fixed th manlier life Talmud, " on flie Day are to be pe day the pare Jesus, wh over, was th to perform. doubtless, a of Nazareth that He was

rche-

of the

hopes

r had vince.

consus

alike.

blood.

red c.

t scon

bustle.

Fine

of the m the

Dibs

the for

esplied

Rabbi

adway.

usalem

s. flax-

passing

s, with a small

fringes;

cials of

ostume

and re-

ey lived viduals,

nto the e aggre-

remain s, wood

n. The Temple,

and the

re. We

atical in

by self-

rs of the Count-

nts were

at of all the famous leachers of the Law, the focus of controversy, the university town of the Rabbis, the battle-ground of religious parties, -the capital of the Jewish pation, in short, in a measure only possible from its having in its midst the one Temple of the race. It was the Delphi and Olympia of Israel, and how much more! Such a city, at such a time, must have made lasting impressions on the boy Jesus. But His heart was set supremely on higher things than the merely outward and earthly. From His carliest years His mother's faith in the mysterious words spoken by saints and angels respecting Him, even before His birth, must have shown itself in a thousand ways in her intercourse with Him, and have kindled mysterious thoughts in His boyish mind., We cannot conceive the relations of His divine nature to the human, but it must be safe to follow the Gospels in their picture of Him as maturing year by year, from the simplicity of the child to the wisdom and strength of riper years. Physical and intellectual ripeness come early in the East. David, Herod, Hyrcanus, and Josephus showed, even is boyhood, traits which in more backward climates mark much later years. Josephus tells us that numbers of Jewish boys put to torture in Egypt, under Vespasian after the fall of Masada, bore unflinchingly the utmost that could be inflicted on them, rather than own Cesar as their lord, and even in our own day children in Palestine are so early matured that marriages of boys of thirteen and girls of eleven are not unknown. Philo, in Christ's day, notes different ages strangely enough to our ideas. "At seven." he says, "a man is a logician and grammarian; at fourteen mature, because able to be the father of a being like himself; while, at twenty-one, growth and bloom are over." "A son of five years," says Juda Ben Tema, "is to read the Scriptures aloud (that is, in school), one of ten to give himself to the Mischna, of thirteen to the Commandments, of fifteen to the Talmud, of cighteen to marriage." he shall biller Harry

The Rabbis, perhaps from the tradition that Moses left his father's house when twelve years old, that Samuel had begun to prophesy when he had finished his twelfth year, and that Solomon had delivered some of his famous judgments when as young, had already in Christ's day fixed that age as the close of boyhood and the opening of a manlier life. "After the completion of the welfth year," says the Talmud, "a boy is to be considered a youth and is to keep the fast on the Day of Atonement. Till he is thirteen his religious duties are to be performed for him by his father, but on his thirteenth birthday the parent is no longer answerable for his son's sins."

Jesus, who had ended His twelfth year when taken up to the Passover, was thus already a "Son of the Law," and, as such, required to perform all religious duties. The Tephillin or phylacteries had, doubtless, as was usual, been put on Him publicly in the synagogue of Nazareth, to mark the transition from boyhood, to remind Him that He was henceforth to wear them, to keep the fasts, to follow the laws of the Rabbia, and to think seriously of His future calling in life. He would be much freer, therefore, to go where He liked, without supervision, than a boy of the same age with us, and hence all Jerusalem, with its thousand wonders, lay before, Him, to study, as

He chose different monicipanta cound bour town all boundary alla twee The week of the feast ended, Joseph and Mary turned their faces towards home. The confusion and hustle around must have been indescribable. Any one who, has seen the motley crowds of Easter pilgrims returning from the Jordan at the present day may have some faint idea of the scene. The start is always made at night, to escape the great heat of the day, and in the darkness, lighted only by torches, it needs care not to be trampled under foot. At narrow or difficult parts of the road the noise and confusion are bewildering women in terror of being trampled down by a long file of camels, tiod one be-hind another; parents calling for lost children; friends shouting for friends; mulcteers and ass drivers beating and cursing their beasts; the whole wedged into a moving mass, all alike exclied, i diatanti As the distance from Jerusalem increased, and different divisions branched off to different roads, danger would coase, and, the scene become more picturesque. Veiled women and venerable men would pass, mounted on camels, mules, or perhaps horses; younger, men walking alongside, staff in hand ; children ; playing at the side of the path as the cavalcade slowly advanced , and the journey over and anon beguiled with tabret and pipe. Only when the pilgrims had thus got away from the first growd, would it be possible for each group to know if all its members, were safe, worders - ils of an the authorizabile Among many others, some one of whose family had for the time been separated from them in the confusion, were Josuph and Mary. On reaching their first night's encampment they discovered that the boy Jesus was not in the caravan. He had likely been missed earlier. but He might be with friends in some other part of the carevan After seeking diligently for Him, however, without success, they were greatly alarmed. Amidst such vast multitudes, He might be lost to them for ever, it bid full beautrest dividual all the prototo duration and ind on the evening of the second day. But they could learn nothing of Him till the day after, when, at last, they found Him in one of the schools of the Kabbis, held in the Temple courts, if the fut counter These schools were a characteristic of the times. They were open, and any one entering might answer or propose a question. The Rabbi sat on a high seat; his scholars on the ground, at his feet, in halfcircles: their one study the Law, with its Rabbinical comments. In the school in which Jesus was found, a number of Rabbis were present; perhaps because it was the Passover season. The gentle Hillel-the Looser-was perhaps still alive, and may possibly have been among them. The harsh and strict Shammal-the Bluder-his old rival, had been long dead, Hillel's son, Rebban Simeon, and

thout

cenal

idy as faces

gen, in-

Easter

e-some escape

orches,

ifficult

one being for

beasts;

Ivisions

e, scanp

1 would er, men

e of the

thus got group to the time

d Mary.

that the

l earlier,

oaravan,

ney were

be lost to athing of

ne of the

toratell

he Rabbi

in half-

he gentle

bly have

uder-his neon, and bhis were even his greater grandson. Gamaliel, the future teacher of St. Paul. may have been of the number, though Gamaliel would, then, like Jesus, be only a boy. Hanan, or Annas, son of Seth, had been just appointed high priest, but did not likely see Him, as a boy, whom he was afterwards to crucify. Apart from the bitter hostility between the priests and the Rabbis, he would be too busy with his monopoly of doves for the Temple, to care for the discussions of the schools, for he owned the shops for doves on Mount Olivet, and sold them for a piece of gold, though the Law had chosen them as offerings suited for the poorest from their commonness and cheapness. Among the famous men, then, apparently, living in Jerusalem, was Rabbi Jochanan Ben Zacchal, afterwards reputed a prophet, from his once crying out when the Tomple gate opened of itself-"Temple, Temple, why do you frighten us? We know that thou wilt shortly be destroyed, for it says- Open. Lebanon, thy gates, and let fire deyour thy cedars." Jonathan Ben Uzziel, the Targumist, revered by his nation; Rabbi Ben Buta, who; though of Shammai's school, was almost as mild as Hulel, and, like him, had a great reputation for Rabbinical sanctity; now blind these many years, for Herod had put out his eyes; Dosithal of Jethma, a zealous opponent of Herod; Zadok, who had taken part in the rising of Judas the Gaulonite; Boethus, father of one of Herod's wives-the second Mariamne-once high priest, and now the head of the courtly Herodian and Roman party, Nicodemus, who afterwards came to Jesus by night, and the rich Joseph of Arimathea, -in a grave given by whom Jesus was afterwards to lie, were all apparently, then alive. But we can only conjecture in whose presence Jesus sat, for dates are sadly wanting. One picture alone survives in Scripture, of Hebrew boyhood in its noblest beauty-that of David, with his lustrous eyes, auburn hair, and lovely features. It is no great stretch of fancy to believe that He who was at once David's heir and his lord-the Son of David in a sense higher than man had dreamed-realized the name not less in His personal beauty than in other respects. The passion of His soul -to learn more of His Father's business-had led Him naturally to the famed schools in His Father's house, where the wisest and most learned of His nation made the holy books, in which that Father's will was revealed, their lifelong study. The mystery of His own nature and of His relations to His Father in Heaven was dawning on Him more and more." His mother's words, from time to time, had daily a deeper and more wondrous significance, and His sinless spirit lived more and more in communion with unseen and eternal realities. He had naturally, therefore, sought those who could open for Him the fountains of Heavenly wisdom for which His whole being panted, and was the keenest listener, and the most eager in His questions, of all the group seated at their feet. The days would come when no further growth was possible, and then He would sit in the courts of the same Temple, as a teacher who needed no human help. As vet however, He could not honour His Father more than by seeking, as a child, to know His holy Word from its accredited expounders. Enthusiasm so pure and lofty in one so young, lighting up the beauty of such cyes and features, may well have filled the heart of the gravest Rabbi with wonder and delight.

In this school of the Rabbis Mary and Joseph found Him, sitting on the ground, with others, at the feet of the half-circle of "doctors. His whole soul so absorbed in the Law and the Prophets that He had forgotten all other thoughts: His family circle-the flight of time. It was no wonder to find Him in such a place, for as "a Son of the Law" it was only what a Jew expected, but it might well amaze them that He had been so engrossed with such matters as to be still there, after the feast was over, and not only Mary and Joseph, but the great throng of pilgrims, had left for home. As besitted her higher relationship. and with the greater zeal natural to a mother's love in such a case, she, not Joseph, spoke. "Son," said she, "why hast Thou thus dealt with us? Behold, Thy father and I have sought Thee sorrowing." It seemed so strange that one so gentle, docile, and loving, who had never given them an anxious thought by any childish frowardness, should cause them such pain and alarm. The answer, gentle and lofty, must have fallen on Mary's heart as a soft rebuke, though she could not understand its fulness of meaning: "How is it that ve sought met: There was no place where I could so surely be as in my Pather's house-there were no matters which could so rightfully fill my thoughts as His?" Her son was outgrowing His childhood: the light of a higher world was breaking in on His soul; the claims of the home of Nazareth fading before others infinitely greater and holier. A sinless childhood had made the past a long dream of peace and love in the home at Nazareth, and this only deepened as the simplicity of early years passed into the ripeness of a perfect manhood." Though He must have felt the growing distance between Himself and Joseph, or even Mary : their weakness and His own strength ; their simplicity and His own wisdom; their trail humanity, touched by dally sin, and His own pure and sinless nature. He remained subject to them, as if only like others. If ever there was a son who might have been expected to claim independence. it was He, and yet, to sanctify and enforce filial obedience for ever. He lived on, under their humble roof, exemplary in the implicit and far-reaching obedience of a Jewish youth to plary in the implicit and far-reaching obedience of a Jewish youth to his parents.

1. Viscolt JES VISTA JAL For near deep obscu the shephe world at la valley and ] manhood-There was ness. Like growth was are, doubtle child, and 1 themselves o they are unn running alou bright auilts as shelf for t ner; some h sweet herbs. entering by. brought, at n dish, round supply the p may be that a of the houses some variati ranged down or two colum which are sti were built of the volcanic limestone hil walls, and ea broad, But. though some In the she streets of Nu crossways he the town, be road-from water for th

s za Hable

160

SholdHI Liffr

a sea that is and not handle file pather more than by seed that as a

Enity of avest itting tors."

e had

e. It Law" n that after

hrong

nship, a case.

h thus

OTTOW-

g, who

oward-

gentle

though

that ye

in my ully fill

od: the

s of the

holier.

ce and

aplicity

Though

Joseph;

city and

and His

if only xpected

enforce

, exem-

youth to 11-12121211

distion

OPOSEWA

Not out

LTDROT

Willer, I

AC ILON

11 11 , 21991J2

For nearly eighteen years after the Passover visit to Jerusalem, a deep obscurity rests over the life of Jesus. Like His cousin John, or the shepherd Moses, or the youthful David, He came before the world at last, only after a long and humble seclusion. The quiet valley and hills of Nazareth saw Him gradually ripen into youth and manhood-as son, brother, citlzen, neighbour, friend-like others. There was no sudden or miraculous disclosure of His Divine greatness. Like the grain in the fields bencath His carly home, His growth was imperceptible. The white, flat-roofed houses of to day are, doubtless, much the same as those amidst which He played as a child, and lived as a man; vines shading the walls; doves sunning themselves on the flat roofs; the arrangements, within, as simple, as they are unpretending, without. A few mats on the floor, a built seat running along the wall, spread with some modest cushions, and the bright quilts on which the inmates sleep at night, and serving by day as shelf for the few dishes in common use; a painted chest in the corner; some large clay water jars, their mouths filled, perhaps, with sweet herbs, to keep the contents cool and fresh; the only light that entering by the open door; a low, round, painted, wooden stool, brought, at meals, into the middle of the room, to hold the tray and dish, round which the household sit, with crossed knees, on matssupply the picture of a house at Nazareth of the humbler type. It may be that differences in details were found in early times, for many of the houses of ancient Chorazin are yet tolerably perfect, and show some variations from present dwellings. Generally square, they ranged downwards in size, from about 80 feet each way, and had one or two columns in the centre, to support the flat roof. The walls, which are still, in some cases, six feet high, and about two feet thick. were built of masonry or of loose blocks of basalt, Chorazin being on the volcanic edge of the Sea of Galilee, and not, like Nazareth, on limestone hills. A low doorway opened in the centre of one of the walls, and each house had windows a foot high and about six inches broad. But, like the houses of to-day, most had only one chamber, though some were divided into four.

In the shelter of some such home, in one of the narrow, stony streets of Nazareth, Jesus grew up. On the hill-sides, in the little crossways between the houses, in the rude gardens, in the fields below the town, beside the bounteous fountain on the hill-side, near the road-from which the village mothers and daughters still bear the water for their households—He was a child among other children. As He grew, year by year, His great eyes would shine with a spirit-

be in .

the fee

harves

alsters,

oxen,

bands

sions a bearing

tal clo

The co

Way, a

for the towns

· Rise,

of first.

of gold and th

bound '

up, and they sai

hymns.

within a

on their

all burst

whole e

great Ki God is death."

rayed th

wreathe

as effect

the name

ity, prl

by a three

they san

glad wh

Our feet

at their

processi

where).

with gia

whared in

ended

fell into the Psal

praise H

for Those

ual brightness, and His mind would be filled with strange lonellness that would separate Him from most. He must inevitably, have, carly, seemed as if raised above everything earthly, and no impure word or thought would appear belitting in His presence. As a growing lad, He would already feel the isolation which, in His later years, became so extreme, for how could sinlessness be at home with sin and weakness? He would seek the society of the elders rather than of the young, and, while devoted to Joseph, would be altogether so to His mother. The habits of His later life let us imagine that, even in His youth, He often withdrow to the loneliest retreats in the mountains and valleys round, and we may fancy that Mary, knowing His ways, would cease, after a time, to wonder where He was. One height, we may be sure, was often visited: the mountain-top above the village, from which His eye could wander over the wondrous landscape.

The Passover, though the greatest religious solemnity of the year, was only one in a continually recurring series. Four times cach year, in July, October, January, and March, different events in the national history would be more or less strictly observed in the Jewish community at Nazaroth. Special fasts were, moreover, ordered, from time to time, in seasons of public danger or distress. These days, set apart for repentance and prayer, excited a general and deep religious feeling. At all times striking, they sometimes, in exceptional cases, were singularly impressive. On special public humiliations all the people covered themselves with sackcloth, and strewed ashes on their heads, as they stood before the Reader's desk, brought from the synagogue into some open place, and similarly draped in mourning. Jesus must have seen this, and how ashes were put on the heads of the local judges and rulers of the synagogue, on such a day, and He must have listened to the Rabbi calling on all present to repent, and to the prayers and ponitential psali is which followed, and to the trumpets wailing at the close of each. He may have gone with Joseph and all the congregation, when the service ended, to the burial-place of the village to lament.

But such sadness was by no means the characteristic of the national religion. Fifty days after the Passover, multitudes were once more in motion towards Jerusalem, to attend the Feast of Weeks, or First-Fruits. The vast numbers present at it are recorded in the second chapter of the Acts. It was one of the three great festivities of the year, and there can be little doubt that in His Nazareth life Jesus and the household of Joseph, as a whole, took part in so great and universal a rejoicing.

The intending pilgrims in Nazareth and the district round met in the lown, as a convenient centre, to arrange for the journey. As before the Passover, however, no one alept in any house immediately before starting; all going out into the open country and sleeping somewhere in the open air, lest a death might happen where they lodged, and doubt them, so that they could not keep the faces. They had to

neliness

e, carly,

word or ing lad,

became

nd weak-

n of the to His

en in His

ountains

lis ways,

eight, wo

e village, CADG.

the year,

ach year

o national

h commufrom time

, set apart

gious, feel-

ases, were

the people heir heads,

synagogue

csus must

the local

must have

the pray-

opeta wail-

and all the

of the vil-

he national

once more

s, or First-the second

ties of the

Jesus and at and uni-

ind met in

urney As mmediately

eping some-

ney lodged,

hey had to

168

be in Jerusalem before the 6th of Siwan (June), on which and the 7th the feast was held, and, therefore, set off some days before. The carly harvest was mostly over, so that many could go. Wives, unmarried sisters, and children, accompanied not a few. Flocks of sheep and oxen, for sacrifice and feasting, were driven gently along with the bands of pilgrims, and strings of asses and camels, laden with provisions and simple necessaries, or with free-will gifts to the Temple, or bearing the old or feeble, lengthened the train. Every one wore festal clothes, and not a few carried garlands and wreaths of flowers. The cool banks of streams, or some well, offered resting-places by the way, and the pure water, with melons, dates, or cucumbers, sufficed for their simple food. Different hands united as they passed fresh towns and villages. All were roused, each morning, with the cry, "Rise, let us go up to Zion, to the Eternal, our God!" The offerings of first fruits-the choicest of the year-in baskets of willows, or even of gold or silver; doves for burnt offerings, with their wings bound, and the ox, intended for a peace-offering,-its horns gilded, and bound with wreaths of olive, --went first. Flutes forthwith struck up, and the cavalcade moved on, to the chant, "I was glad when they said to me, We shall go into the house of the Lord." Similar Similar hymns cheered them ever and anon on each day's march. When within sight of Jerusalem, all was enthusiasm. Many threw themselves on their knecs in devotion, lifting their hands to heaven. Presently all burst into the grand ode, "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is Mount Zion, on the sides of the North, the city of the great King"-the excitement, culminating in the climax-"For this God is our God for ever and ever; He will be our guide even unto death." A hait was now made to get everything in order. All arrayed themselves to the best advantage. The wheatsheaves were wreathed with lilles and the first-fruits bedded in flowers, and set out as effectively as possible. Each company unrolled its banner, bearing the name of the town or village from which it came. When near the ity, priests in their white robes came out to meet them, accompanied by a throng of citizens in holiday dress; and as they entered the gates they sang aloud to the accompaniment of flutes, the Psalm, "I was glad when they said to me, Let us go into the house of the Lord. Our feet shall stand within thy gates. O Jerusalem." The workmen at their trades in the streets, or at their doors, rose in honour of the procession as it passed, with the greeting, "Men of Nazareth (or else-where), welcome!" a great crowd as they advanced, filling the air with gladness. At the Temple Inll, every one, rich and poor-for all hared in these processions-took his basket on his shoulder and asrended to the Court of the Men, where the Levites met them, and fell into the procession, singing, to the sound of their instruments, the Psalm, beginning, "Hallebujah! Praise God in His sanctuary; praise Him in the firmament of Lis power." "I thank Thee, O Lord, for Thou bast heard ar, and hast not let mine enemics rejoice over me." The doves hanging from the baskets were now handed to the priests for burnt offerings, and the first-fruits and gifts delivered, with the words prescribed by Moses; "I profess his day unto the Lord Thy God that I am come into the country which the Lord sware to our fathers to give us." And now, behold, I have brought the firstfruits of the land, which Thou, O Lord, hast given me.". The pitgrims then left the Temple, followed by a great throng, some to lodges with relations and friends, others with some of the many hosts in a viting them. The pit-followed by a great throng is be the lock in an

There can be little doubt that Jesus was more than once a spectator of such rejoicings; and often in His earlier years saw the vastencamp of ments of pilgrims from every part, round the city: the tents spread on each house top to lodge the overflowing visitors; the windows and doors decked with branches of trees, and garlands and festoons of flowers, the streets fluttering with banners wreathed with roses and lilies, and filled with gay throngs.

In the month of August another festivity drew many from Nazareth to Jerusalem. In the middle of that month the wood for the Temple: which all Jews had to contribute, was taken to the capital with great rejolcings." The 1st of October, which was celebrated as New Year's day, or the Feast of Trumpets, was the next event in the religious calendar of the months. As the day of the first new moon of the year, it was ushered in over the land, by a blast of trumpets, and special sacrifices were offered in Jerusalem No work was done. It was the day, in the eyes of the Jew, on which an account was taken by God of the acts of the past year; the day of judgment, on a which the destiny of every one for the coming year was written in a the Heavenly books, 1 It was a fast, therefore, rather than a festival. The synagogues were visited earlier than usual for a week before it; special prayors were offered, and no one ate till mid-day or even till sunset. In the synagogue of Nazareth, as elsewhere, its eve was like that of a Sabbath. It must have been a great event in a household like that of Joseph I' all the sus-bon binish latt d for salsunioda T

The ten days that followed were the Jewish Lent, in preparation for the Day of Atonement, a time so solemn and sacred that it was known as THE D.Y. It was a Sabbath of Sabbaths: a day of entire rest. The entire people fasted during the twenty four hours. Worldly and household affairs were neglected; no one even bathed. The whole day was spent in the synagogue, where each stood wrapped in the white shroud, and wearing the white cap in which he was hereafter to be burled. As was befitting, all disputes between friends and neighbours were required to be settled before it began. Each made a formal confession of his sins before God, in words duly prescribed. If was the most solemp day of the Jewish year.

In the Temple the high priest alone officiated. Jesus would carly hear how, for seven days before, he had gone through daily rehearsals of overgyrite, for tear of his introducing Saddycean innovations, and the nigh ing him after ner when He his dress eight tim and suns to offer i marcy se often hay bare feet intacher on t even the services o confession terious ha sprinkling themselve glorious a high pries seen and These h the East. accompan religious f hand. Th gay with t youths, w among the Five da Tabernack vals at w journey to tents, but the year. lived for th rose in eve of Jerusal of their fr as a sign o city; the u The 25th ing of the Syrians. through th

had been

had been cleansed by sprinklings of holy water ... He would hear how the night before the great day was spent in reading to him, or hearing him read aloud, to keep him awake, for he must not sleep till after next sunset, How must He have felt the puerility of Rabbinism. when He learned that the supreme pontiff of the nation had to change his dress, on the great day, six times, to wash his hands and feet eight times, and to bathe his whole body five times, between dawn and sunset 1/2 The high priest entered the Holy of Holies four times. to offer incense, to pray, to sprinkle the blood of a goat towards the marcy seat; and, at the close; to bring tout the censer. A Jesus. must often have seen him, clad in white, his golden robes laid aside, with bare feet and covered head, drawing aside the veil, and pessing alone into the awful darkness which no one but he ever invaded, and he y on this one day of the year. Rites so countless and intricate that 0 even the historian of Judaism will not attempt to recount them; the services of hundreds of priests, the whole culminating in a threefold confession of sin for the nation : the interance ten times of the mysterious name of God, and the formal absolution of Israel with the sprinkling of blood: the vast congregation of worshippers prostrating themselves on the earth three times, with the cry; "Blessed he His glorious name for ever," at each utterance of the awful name, the high priest responding after each shout, "Ye are clean!" were all seen and watched, again and again, by the future Saviour, the future These high solemnities over, the day ended in a reaction natural to the East No sooner had the exhausted high priest left the Temple, accompanied by throngs, to congratulate him on his safety, than a religious feast began at Jerusalem, and, we may be sure, over all the had. The gardens below Mount Zion, and round the walls, were gay with the maidens of the city, dressed in white, gone to meet the vonthe who were to choose their future wives, that evening, from among them. Spill rest an all russid to all popularity out at 1983

Five days later came the closing great feast of the year-that of Tabernacles, with its rejoicings-one of the three great annual festivals at which every Israelite was required, if possible, to make a journey to Jerusalen. It celebrated the Forty Years' Wandering in tents, but it was also the great harvest thanksgiving for the fruits of the year, now fully gathered. Like others, Jesus, doubtless, often lived for the week, at least by day, in booths of living twigs, which rose in every court, on every roof, and in the streets and open places of Jerusalen, -- and watched the crowds bearing offerings of the best of their fruit to the Temple: each carrying a palm or eitron branch as a sign of joy... The merry feasting in every house; the illuminated city; the universal joy, were familiar to Him.

The 25th of Chislew—our December—commemorated the re-opening of the Temple by Judas Maccabæus, after its profanation by the Syrinas. It brought another week of universal rejoicings. All through the landing people assembled in their syngagutes carrying camp-0 ad on sand ms of e bna te schrieces Nazaorthe capital ted as in the moon mpets. odone. nt was ent. On tten in estival. fore it: venttill Ve Was house-Tubeinn aration it was f entire : hours. bathed. rapped : herwas friends Each uly pre-110 Id early hearsals Das, and

o the

ered

o the

Ware

first-

epilid

todge o

1516 01

ctator

branches of palm and other trees in their hands, and held jubilant services. No fast or mourning could commence during the feast, and a blaze of lamps, lanterns, and torches illuminated every house, with in and without, each evening. In Jerusalem the Teruple itself was thus lighted up. The young of every household heard the stirring deeds of the Maccabees, to rouse them to noble emulation, and with these were linked the story of the heroic Judith and the Assyrian colofernes. There was no child in Nazareth that did not know them.

"The Feast of Purim brightened the interval between that of Tabernacies and the Passover. It was held on the 14th and 15th Adarpart of our February and March-- to embody the national joy at the deliverance, by Esther, of their forefathers in Persia, from the dealers of Haman. The whole book of Esther was read at the synage service of the evening before, to keep the meriory of the great event alive; the children raising their londest and angriest cries at every mention of the name of Haman; the congregation stamping on the fidor, with Eastern demonstrativeness; and imprecating, from every voice, the curse, "Let his name be blotted out. The name of the wiched shall rot." Year by year, in the Nazareth synagogue, Jesus must have seen and heard all this, and how the Reader tried to read in one breath, the verses in which Haman and his sons are jointly mentioned, to show that they were hanged together.

Such was the Jewish religions year, with its fifty-nine feast days and its background of fastings, as it passed before the eyes of Jesus. Each incident had its special religious colouring, and the aggregate influence, constantly recurring, impressed itself in a thousand ways on the national language, thoughts, and life. Religion and politics. moreover, ard identical in a theoraey, and thus the two principles which most powerfully move mankind constantly agitated every breast. In such an atmosphere Christ spent His whole earthly life. But neither the synagogue services, nor the feasts at Jerusalem, which the Galileans delighted to attend, were the supreme influences. humanly speaking, in the growth of Jesus in "wisdom," Like the teaching of the Rabbis, they were only so many aids to the understanding of that sacred book, in which His heavenly Father had revealed Himself to Israel. The Gospels show, in every page, that, like Timothy, Jesus, from a child, knew "the Holy Scriptures." In such a household as that of Joseph, we may be sure that they were in daily use, for there, if anywhere, the Rabbinical rule would be strictly observed, that "three who eat together without talking of the Law, are as if they were eating (heathen) sacrifices." The directness, joy, and naturalness of Christ's religion speak of the unconstrained and holy influences around Him in early years. A wise and tender guidance in the things of God, leading the way to heaven, as well as pointing it out, must have marked both Mary and Joseph. The fond pictures of home and childhood in the Gospels, speak of

rbifant

st, and

lfwas

tirring

d with

know

13 11 42 125

Taber-

Adar

y at the designs

agenue

it event

on the n every

of the e, Jesus tried to jointly

ast davs

f Jesus.

gregate

politics.

rinciples

d every

thly life.

rusalem,

Huences.

Like the e underhad re-

ge, that,

res." In iev were

rould be talking

the un-

Awise

heaven,

Joseph.

speak of

shittin.

nersonal recollections of The allusions to the innocent playing of children to their being nearest the Kingdom of Heaven: the picture of a father powerless against his child's entreaty and that touching outburst at His own homelessness, compared even with the birds and the foxes, show how Christ's mind went back, through life to the pure and happy memories of Nazareth, or disco depart will to evert Mary and Joseph, we can scarcely doubt, were, themselves, the carliest teachers of Jesus : At their knees He must have first learned to read the Scriptures. Pious Jewish parents took especial care to have a manuscript of the Law, in the old Hebrew characters as their especial domestic treasure. Even so early as the Asmonean kings, such rolls were so common in private houses, that the fury of the Syrian king, who wished to introduce the Greek customs and religion, was especially directed against them. In Joseph's day, the supreme influence of the Rabbis and Pharisees must have deepened into a passion the desire to possess such a symbol of loyalty to the faith of Israel. A Richer families would have a complete copy of the Old Testament, on parchment, or on Egyptian papyrus; humbler homes would boast a copy of the Law, or a Psalter, and all, alike; glosied in the verses on their door posts and in their phylacteries. Children had small rolls, containing the S'chman on the Hallel, or the history of Creation to the flood, or the first eight chapters of Leviticus. ni Lucardianant & marthanet weat dade not objeventite er From the modest, but priceless instructions of home. Jesus would, doubtless, pass to the school in the synagogue, where He would learn more of the Law, and be taught to write, or rather, to print, for His writing would be in the old Hebrew characters-the only ones then invise compost noising it and its bear fairment grant will be not be relien His deep knowledge of the Scriptures shows itself throughout the Gospels. 9) He, has a quotation ready to meet every hostile question: It was so profound that it forced even His enemies to recognize Him as a Rabbi. His frequent retort on the Rabbis themselves - 'Have ye not read?" and the deep insight into the spirit of Scripture which opposes to rubries and forms the quickening power of a higher life. prove how intensely He must have studied the sacred books, and that the zeal that drew Him, in His boyhood to the Temple school at Jerusalem, to hear them explained, was the sacred passion of His life. In the Gospels we find two quotations from Genesis, two from Exodus one from Numbers, two from Deuteronomy, seven from the Psalms, five from Isaiah, one from Hosea, one from Jonah, two from Malachi, two from Daniel, one from Micah, and one from Zechariah; respectively. The whole of the Old Testament was as familiar to Him as the Magnificat shows it to have been to His mother. Mary. It was from the clear fountain of the ancient oracles His childhood drank in the wisdom that cometh from above. They had been His only school-book, and they were the unwearying joy of His whole life. From them He taught the higher spiritual worship which contrasted so strongly with the worship of the letter. It was to them He appealed when He rejected what was worthless and trifling in the religious teaching of His day.

•

The long years of retired and humble life in Nazareth were passed in no ignoble idleness and dependence. The people of the town knew Jesus as, like Joseph, a carpenter, labouring for His daily bread at the occupations which offered themselves in His calling. Study and handiwork were familiarly associated in the Jewish mind, and carried with them no such ideas of incompatibility as with us. "Love handiwork" said Schemaia, a teacher of Hillel, and it was a proverbial saying in the family of Gamallel, that to unite the study of the Law with a trade kept away sin, whereas study alone was dangerous and disappointing. Rabbis who gave a third of the day to study, a third to prayer, and a third to labour, are mentioned with special lionour. Stories were fondly told of famous teachers carrying their work-stools to their schools, and how Rabbi Phinehas was working as a mason when chosen as high priest. Of the Rabbis in honour in Christ's day or later, some were millers, others carpenters, cobblers, tailors, bakers, surgeons, builders, surveyors, money-changers, scribes carriers, smiths, and even sextons. In a natian where no teacher could receive payment for his instruction the nonest industry which gained self-support brought no false shame.

The years at Nazareth must have been diligently used in the observation of the great book of nature, and of man, as well as of written revelation. The Gospels show, throughout, that nothing escaped the eve of Jesus. The lilies and the grass of the field, as He paints them in the Sermon on the Mount; the hen, as it gathers its young, in its mother's love, under its widespread wings; the birds of the air, as they cat and drink, without care, from the bounty around them; the lambs which run to follow the shepherd, but sometimes go astray and are lost in the wilderness; the dogs so familiar in Eastern cities; the foxes that make their holes in the thickets, the silent plants and flowers. the humble life of the creatures of the woods, the air, the fold, and the street, were all, alike, noticed in these early years of preparation. Nor was man neglected. The sports of childhood; the rejoicings of riper life; the bride and the bridegroom; the mourner and the dead; the castles and palaces of princes, and the silken robes of the great; the rich owners of field and vineyard; the steward, the travelling merchant, the beggar, the debtor; the toil of the sower and of the labourer in the vineyard, or of the fisher on the lake; the sweat of the worker; the sighs of those in chains, or in the dungeon, were seen, and heard, and remembered. Nor did He rest merely in superficial observation. "The possessions, joys, and sufferings of men, their words and acts, their customs, their pride or humility, pretence or sincerity, failings or merits, were treasured as materials from which, one day, to paint them to themselves. He had, moreover, the same keen eve to note the good in those round Him as their unworthy striving and planning, their a noblest chap all the impe the hidden g

Publicans covered a he Mary Magda er He welc ectual penet search of the warmest low seck and to infinite pity. The life of few lines by full and all-y great work o ceive of Hin in the world tion of the d should shine have been ma nature, and s human natur as in other m vance, made fellow towns which they at human tife n the same habi with mind; o home duties a upon God. H calm retreat o less landscap weakness of luman world s were the l around. Yes toil, because I parent blamel tender love an veiled in the divinity, thirt ning, their avarice, ambition, passion, or selfishness. It is, indeed, the noblest characteristic in this constant keen sightedness, that amidst all the imperfections and faults prevailing. He never failed to evoke the hidden good which He often saw even in the most hopeless.

em He

in the

passed

h knew lat the

iv and

nd car-

"Love

a pro-

y of the ngerous staidy, a special

ng their

king as

nour in obblers

scribes,

teacher

y which

e obser-

written

aped the

nts them

g, in its

, as they

he lambs

and are

he foxes

flowers,

fold, and paration.

icings of

he dead;

he great;

ravelling

id of the sweat of vere seen.

uperficial

eir words sincerity,

he day, to

ve to note

Publicans and sinners were not rejected. Even in them He discovered a better self. In Zaccheus He sees a son of Abraham; in Mary Magdalene He gains a weeping penitent, and in the dying rober He welcomes back a returning prodigal. Nor was it mere inteloctual penetration that thus laid bare the secrets of every heart. His search of the bosom is pervaded throughout with the breath of the warmest love. As the brother and friend of all, who has come to seek and to save that which was lost, He looks at men with eyes of infinite pity, whatever their race.

The life of Nazareth, in its quiet and obscurity, is passed over in a few lines by the Evangelists; but in the counsels of God it had its full and all-wise purpose, from first to last, as a preparation for the great work of the closing years of our Lord's life. We cannot conceive of Him otherwise than as furnished from His first appearance in the world with all that was needful in its Saviour: as the incarnation of the divine Word, though for a time silent; the Light which should shine in darkness, though still, for a time, concealed. He must have been marked out from all around Him by His higher spiritual. nature, and separated by it from all fellowship with evil. Yet, in His human nature, there must have been the same gradual development. as in other men; such a development as, by its even and steadfast advance, made His life apparently in nothing different from that of His fellow townsmen, clse they would not have felt the wonder at Him which they afterwards evinced. The laws and processes of ordinary human tife must have been left to mould and form His manhoodthe same habits of inquiry; the same need of the collision of mind. with mind; of patience during long expectation; of reconciliation to home duties and daily self-denials; of calm strength that leans only upon God. He must have looked out on the world of men from the calm retreat of those years as He, doubtless, often did on the matchless landscape from the hill above the village. The strength and weakness of the systems of the day; the lights and shadows of the human world, would be watched and noted with never-tiring survey. s were the hills and valleys, the clouds and sunshine of the scene. around. Year after year passed, and still found Him at His daily. toil, because His hour was not yet come. In gentle patience, in transparent blamelessness of life; in natural and ever-active goodness; in tender love and ready favour to all around; loved, honoured, but half veiled in the mysterious light of perfect mannood and kindling. divinity, thirty years passed quictly away.

is here or norme work treasured as main link from which dhe doy. It is a prime to the doy of the to the to

brings hir rying bur

not that o the Rabb common o Law. To great as to received a

ence requi

to accept right. A to live lon

universall

than those

I The tran

forming

tile Rabbis

b wa had ] their liter

began to

Many wer

the Rabbis

a great boo

the law of

by the pro

might be in particular.

though the

affected to

Uniform

of the four

the nation

tion from death-like established

its isolatin

apart. "Fo

cerned the jubilees, o

ship, civil mented on

of it whic daily relig

pations. in were brou

""hedge"

- Y, F.M.

The state of the second state of the second second

BESIDES the humbler schools of the towns and villages, there were others in Jerusalem, and in some of the larger centres of population, in the days of Christ, in which a higher education was given by the Rabbis--the learned class of the nation. There was nothing, however, to attract Jesus to such schools, though He had been so eager in His attendance during His first brief, visit to Jerusalem. It may be that even so short a trial was enough to show Him how little could be gained from them.

The wonderful revival of Judaism under Ezra and his associates had had the most lasting effect on the nation. An order known, indifferently, as "Scribes," "Teachers of the Law," or "Rabbis." gradually rose, who devoted themselves to the study of the Law ex-25 colusively, and became the recognized authorities in all matters connected with it. It had been a command of the Great Synagogue that those who were learned in the Law should zealously teach it to younger men; and, thus, schools rose, erelong, in which famous Rabbis gathered large numbers of students. The supreme distinction accorded to the Rabbi in society at large, in which he was, by far the foremost personage: the exaggerated reverence claimed for his office by his and order itself, and sanctioned by the superstitious homage of the people; the constant necessity for reference to its members, under a religion which prescribed rules for every detail of social or private life, and, not least, the fact that the dignity of a Rabbi was open to the humblest who acquired the necessary learning, made the schools very popular. As the son of a peasant, in the middle ages, if he entered the Church, might rise above the haughtiest noble, the son of a Jewish villager might ise above even the high priest, by becoming a Rabbl. It was, 1.548 doubtless, remembered, in Christ's day, that some sixty years before, when the high priest had been returning from the Temple after the service of the Day of Atonement, attended, according to custom, by a crowd, to congratulate him on his having come safely from the terrors of the Awful Presence, and to escort him to his dwelling-two Rabbis having chanced to pass by, the people left the high priest, greatly to his indignation, and paid reverence, instead, to the Teachers of the Law. The most abject prostrution of intellect and soul before any priesthood never surpassed that of the Jew before the Rabbi.

From their scholars the Rabbis demended the most profound reverence. "The honour," says the Talmud, "due to a Teacher borders on that due to God." If a choice were necessary between one's father and a Rabbi, the Rabbi must have the preference. A father has only internat him into the world, but the Rabbi who teaches him wisdom, brings him to the life hereafter. If one's father and a Rabbi be car rying burdens, the burden of the Rabbi must be carried for him, and not that of the father. If one's father and a Rabbi be both in prison, the Rabbi must first be redeemed, and only then, the father. The common discourse of a Rabbi was to be reverenced as much as the Law. To dispute with one, or murmur against him, was a crime as great as to do the same towards the Amighty. Their words must be received as words of the living God. As in the blind passive obedience required from the Jesuits, a scholar of the Rabbis was required to accept what his master taught, if he said that the left hand was the right. A scholar who did not rise up before his Rabbi could not hope to live long, because "he feareth not before God." It was a principle universally accepted that "the sayings of the Scribes were weightler than those of the Law."

The transmission of the as yet unwritten opinions of former Rabbis forming an ever-growing mass of tradition—was the special aim of tile Rabbis of each age. In the course of centuries many of the Mosaic by a had become inapplicable to the altered state of things, and as their literal observance had become impossible, new prescriptions began to be invented, after the Return, to perpetuate their spirit. Many were virtually obselete: others required careful exposition by the Rabbis. The comments thus delivered formed, as time rolled on, a great body of unwritten law, which claimed equal authority with the law of Moses, and was necessarily known in any full degree only by the professional Rabbis, who devoted their lives to its study. It might be increased, but could never be altered or superseded in any particular. Once uttered, a Rabbi's words remained law, for ever, though they might be explained away and virtually ignored, while affected to be followed.

Uniformity of belief and ritual practice was the one grand design of the founders of Judaism; the moulding the whole religious life of the nation to such a machine-like discipline as would make any variation from the customs of the past well-nigh impossible. A universal, death-like conservatism, permitting no change in successive ages, was established, as the grand security for a separate national existence, by its isolating the Jew from all other races, and keeping him for ever apart." For this end, not only was that part of the Law which concerned the common life of the people-their Sabbaths, feast days, jubilees, offerings, sacrifices, tithes, the Temple and Synagogue worship, civil and criminal law, marriage, and the like-explained, commented on, and minutely ordered by the Rabbis, but also that portion of it which related only to the private duties of individuals in their daily religious life. Their food, their clothes, their journeys, their occupations: indeed, every act of their lives, and almost their every thought, were brought under Rabbinical rules. To perpetuate the Law, a "hedge" of outlying commands was set round it, which, in Christ's the become to "heavy and shevous a burden that over the nere were pulation, in by the ing, howb cager in It may be a could be 110102 associates nown, in-"Rabbis." e Law exatters conogue that o younger bbis gathaccorded e foremost fice by his the people; a religion e life. and. e humblest y popular. he Church, sh villager I. It was, ars before, e after the eustom, by om the terelling-tw) igh pricst, e Teachers soul before Rabbi. ound reverier borders one's father er has only

m wisdom,

Taimud denounces it as a veratious oppression. Go yest had the accumulation of precepts become, by an endless rories of toilned deductions from the Scripturcs—often connected with them only by a very thin thread at best—that the Rabbis themselves have compared their laws on the proper keeping of the Sabbath to a mountain which hangs on a hair.

In the inter Grecian age, when heathen culture was patronized by the Saddweran high priests, and foreign customs were in increasing favour with the people, the Rabbis, who were the zealots or puritan, of Judiaism, sought to stem the flood of corruption, by enforcing increased strictness in the observance of the multitudinous precepts they had already established. From that time, unconditional obcdience was required to every Rabbinical law.

A system which admitted no change: in which the least originality of thought was heresy: which required the mechanical labour of a lifetime to master its details, and which occupied its, teachers with the most triffing casuistry, could have only one result—to degenerate, to a great extent, into puerilities and outward forms.

It would be wearisome and uninteresting to quote, at any great length, illustrations of the working of such a scheme of ecclesiastical tyranny, in daily life, but an example or two will show the system to which Jesus opposed the freedom of a spiritual religion. It is difficult to realize the condition of a people who had sutmitted to such mental and bodily bondage.

One of the great questions discussed by the Rabble was ceremonial purity and defilement, a subject so wide that it gave rise to countless rules. a Unclearness could be contracted in many ways; smong others, by the vessels used in cating, and hence it was a vital matter to know what might be used, and what must be avoided. In hollow dishes of clay or pottery, the inside and bottom contracted and caused uncleanness, but not the outside, and they could only be cleansed by breaking. The pieces however, might still defile, and hence it was keenly discussed how small the fragments must be to ensure safety. If a dish or vessel had contained a log of oil a fragment could still defile that held as much oil as would anoint the great toe; if it had held from a log to a seah, the fragment, to be dangerous, must hold the fourth of a log; if it had held from two or three seahs to five, a plece of it could defile if it held a log. As, however, holiow earthen vessels contracted uncleanness only on the inside, not on the out, some could not become unclean-as, for instance, a flat plate without a rim, an open coal shovel, a perforated roaster for wheat or grain, brick-moulds, and so on. On the other hand, a plate with a rim, a covered coal shovel, a dish with raised divisions inside, an earthen spice-box, or an inkstand with any divisions, may become unclean. Flat dishes of wood, leather, bone, or glass, do not contract uncleanness, but hollow ones might do so not only like earthen ones, inside, but also outside. If they are roken they are oken, but the broken part is unclose. If large enough to hold a p clean, what feet, is clea feet, and th the side be handbreadt outside of a if the goble has a specia hinge, or a may defile. key have m teeth of wo The rem kind of wa sprinkling t for the pers tinguished, the water in flows, and o has not bee dough, or f still flows m ing the hand may be used Fourth-A drawn is ad same as pur though ther warm, or in lastly, sixth have sores, d of purificati These ge casuistry. what circun spring, or fle directly. by immersion o drawn wate water in the falls or runs

water to do

vessels are h

drawn wate

same-wheth

but Hitlers

be ac-

deduc;

a very

hangs

zed by

reasing

uritan.

ing in

ts they

edlence

rinality

ur of a

rs with merate,

y great

slastical

stem to difficult

mental

emonial

ountless

others,

o know

ishes of inclean-

reaking.

nly dis-

f a dìsh

file that from a ourth of

lt could

ntracted

become

pen coal

, and so 1, a dish

ind with leather.

night do they are enough

to hold a pomegranate. If a chest, or cupboard, wants a footilities clean, whatever its size, and a three-footed table, wanting even two feet, is clean, but it may be made unclean if wanting the whole three feet, and the flat top be used as a dish A bench which wants one of the side boards, or even the two, is clean, but it a piece remain a handbreadth wide, it may defile. If the hands are clean, and the outside of a goblet unclean, the hands are not defiled by the outside. if the goblet be held by the proper part ... Everything of metal, that has a special name, may defile, except a door, a door bolt, a lock a hinge, or a door knocker. Straight blowing horns are clean: others may defile. If the mouthpiece is of metal, it may defile ... If a wooden key have metal teeth, it may defile, but if the key be of metal and the teeth of wood it is clean at a 1978 Houth duling on a britiserial or The removal of uncleanness was no less complicated. Even the kind of water to be used for the different kinds of cleansing for sprinkling the hands, for dipping vessels into, and for purifying baths for the person, caused no little dispute. Six kinds of water were distinguished, each of higher worth than the other, First-A pech or the water in a pit cistern or ditch, and hill water that no longer flows, and collected water, of not less quantity than dorty seales, if it has not been defiled, is suitable for preparing the heave-offering of dough, or, for the legal washing of the hands, Second - Water that still flows may be used for the heave-offering (Teruma), and for wathing the hands. Third—Collected water, to the amount of forty scalis, may be used for a bath for purification, and for dipping vessels into. Fourth-A spring with little water, to which water that hes been drawn is added, is fit for a bath, though it do not flow, and is the same as pure spring water, in so far that vessels may be cleansed in it, though there be only a little water. Fifth-Flowing water which is warm, or impregnated with minerals, cleanses by its flowing; and lastly, sixth—Pure spring water may be used as a bath by those who have sores, or for sprinkling a leper, and may be mixed with the ashes the fait had up an an an an an an an a daman by the tone as of purification. Acres 2

These general principles formed the basis of an endless detail of casuistry. Thus, the Mischna discourses, at wearisome length, under, what circumstances and conditions "collected water"—that is, rain, spring, or flowing water, that is not drawn, but is led into a reservoir directly, by pipes or channels—may be used for bathing, and for the immersion of vessels; and the great point is decided to be, that no drawn water shall have mixed with it. A fourth of a lôg of drawn water in the reservoir, beforehand, makes the water that afterwards fulls or runs into it unfit for a bath, but it requires three lôg of drawn water to do this, if there were water already in the reservoir. If any vessels are put under the pipe emptying itself into the bath, it becomes drawn water, and is unfit for a bath. Shammai's school made it the sime whether the vessel were set down on purpose, or only forgotten; bat Hitle's school decided that if it had have for the water might still be used for a bath ... If drawn water and rain water have mixed, in the court-yard, or in a hollow, or on the steps of the bathroom, the bath may be used, if most of the water he fitting, but not if the proportion be reversed. This however, only takes effect if they have mixed before entering the bath. If both flow into the bath. the bath may be taken, if it be known certainly that forty seahs of proper water ran in before three 10g of unsultable water, but otherwise it must not be taken. There was endless discussion. Jalso. whether snow, hail, hearfrost, ice, and the like, could be used to fill up a bath. So simple an act as the washing of one's hands before cating entailed the utmost care not to transgress some Rabbinical rule. The water could only be poured from certain kinds of vessels, it must be water of a special kind, only certain persons, in certain legal conditions, could pour it, and it was a momentous point that the water should be poured neither too far up the arm nor too low towards the hand." 1171 114 T * 1 12 1.1 1 1marticle in the first solution with

This ceremonial slavery owed its rise to the reaction from the Syrian attempts to overthrow the national faith. The Rabbis of the austere but noble puritan party, which had delivered their country. sought to widen the gulf for the future, between Judaism and all other creeds, by laying a fresh stress on legal purity and the reverse, and their scholars strove to keep their rules as strictly as possible. The dread of touching anything unclean and the consequent selfwithdrawal from the mass of the people, and from the ordinary intercourse of life, soon showed itself in the name-Parusch, or Phariseefor those thus "separated." In the hands of this party, cleanness and uncleanness steadily grew to a system of endless refinements. "Ceremonial purity had, at first, been strictly observed only by the priests, for the people at large were hardly in a position to attend to the many details required. After the Maccabean revival however. greater carefulness was demanded. A priest, or Levite, lost the privileges of his caste if he hesitated to fulfil any of the ritual obligations it entailed, and a proselyte was rejected who would not undertake all that was required from an Israelite. "For Israelites themselves, this ceremonial rules were greatly extended, and any neglect of them was noted unfavourably. The tithes, &c., were strictly demanded from all produce, and were either entirely forbidden to be eaten, or could be so only under fixed conditions, while a wide sweep of injunctions and rules was introduced as to the use of different kinds of food, and even in every detail of family life. I first out by subleader 1 3 arts - 12012 Those, including, of course, the Rabbis, who undertook to observe all these rules, henceforth formed a kind of union of "Comrades," or "Haberim," which any one might enter-all who did not join them being stigmatized as ignorant Am-ha-aretz, or boorish rabble. It was to this league that the amazing development of legalism was latterly due Careful inquiry was everywhere instituted to ascertain if all dues for priasts, Levites, or the poor were regularly paid. An indefinite au Levites, were produce: eve any kind, an these deman ritory: they countries in y a subordinat an organized and one then holm and to had, therefor paid from markets cam than Jews of bility to tithe en Tousavenh strictly separ paid by the b liad been tit trustworthing from it, was was to be tak might be tur sumed in Jer first titlie, or so the Levite regulationsist pitality from every fruit or the union of scesillan Itirec Rabbis. and a would hencef forthanot onl all the memb as no ground Slaves and the

The nation aretz—strict f course and ho circumscribed more exactin ascertain the scruples rose dues thow fa out tithing an er liave

he bath-

but not

effectiff

he bath.

seahs of it other-

n, also

ed to fill

ls before

ical rule.

"it must

egal con-

he water

ards the

numina

rom the

is of the country,

and all

reverse.

possible.

ient self-

ary inter-

harisee-

cleanness ients.ir be ly by the

attend to

however.

the privi-

ligations

ves. Il

hem was led from

or could junctions

fooduand

1121 -17972

o observe

rades." or

oin them

dism was

AL

adefinite due (Teruma) for the priests, and a tithe for them, and the Levites, were required each year from every kind of farm or garden produce, even the smallest, and from all live stock, and property of any kind, and a second tenth each third year for the poor. Nor were these demands confined to Israelites living in the strictly Jewish territory; they were, after a time, extended over those neighbouring countries in which Jews had settled. These material results were only a subordinate advantage of this widely extended claim; it established an organized system of all-pervading influence in social intercourse, and on the private life of every household. Part of the dues was hole, and to use anything holy was a mortal sin. Every purchaser had, therefore, to make certain beforehand whether they had been paid from what he proposed to buy, though many things in the markets came from abroad or had been grown or made by others than Jews, or were under other complications as regarded their liability to tithe and gift. a first maniful a form

o To save heavy loss it was conceded that the Teruma should be strictly separated, but the various tithes were apparently left to be paid by the buyer, though the assurance of an owner that everything liad been tithed could only be taken if the seller could prove his trustworthiness. (Failing this) all produce, and whatever was made from it was regarded as doubtful, and the Teruma, or holy portion was to be taken from it before it could be used. The second tithe might be turned into money, that it might be the more easily consumed in Jerusalem. It was not obligatory, however, to separate the first title, or that for the poor, since a doubt hung on the matter, and so the Levite or the poor must prove their claim. These harassing regulations shut off strict Jews from either buying or accepting hospitality from any but their own nation, and made it imperative on every fruit or food seller to establish his trustworthiness, by joining the union of the "Comrades," or "Separated"-that is, the "Pharisees."... It required for this, only a declaration before three of the Rabbis, and afterwards before three." trustworthy" persons, that one would henceforth abstain from all that had not been tithed. Henceforth, not only was personal trustworthiness established, but that of all the members of his family, and even of his descendants, so long as no ground of suspicion was raised against his wife, children, or Staves and the all state de la faite

The nation was thus gradually divided into Haberim and Am-haaretz--strict followers of the Rabbis and despised rabble, and intercourse and hospitality between the two classes became steadily more circumscribed, till it well-nigh ceased, as the laws of the Rabbis grew more exacting. It was difficult, for instance, when from home, to ascertain the conscientiousness of a host, companion, or tradesman; scruples rose whether produce that might be foreign was liable to dues; how far purchases not intended for eating might be used without tithing, and so on, till all social freedom was utterly hampered.

and these of conscience accumulated which afterwards filled whole I volumes and mean while gove constant an tiety of stantarowed, shoon ) be? This self isolation from the community at large of the members of the "League of the Law," procured them the name of Peruschini or Pharmers that is the separated and introduced different grader of purity even among them, according to the greater or less strictness in the observance of the multitudinous Rabbinical rules. Religiousness consisted, above everything, in swoiding ceremionial defilement or removing 4; if at any time contracted, by prescribed washings and bathing. Rules for preserving Mosaic parity multiplied the risks of o defilement as casuistry increased, and thus a graduated scale of " holidiess" was introduced rising to the harshest asceticism in its highest development. To particle of anything from which the due tithes had not been separated, or of the tithe itself, on the priest's portion the a hands must be washed. Hefore eating parts of sacrifices or offerings. a bath had to be taken, and a plunge bath was required before the sprinkling with water of purification, even if only the hands were unclean." But he who bathed in order to partake of what was as web untitlied had not the right to make use of the tithe; he who look a bath to qualify him to enjoy the tithe could not touch the priest's portion : he who could jouch that could not eat what was holy while he who might fouch it, must yet keep from water of purification. The higher grades, on the other hand, included the less hely o Even to touch the clothes of all common man? defiled a Pliarisee the clothes of an ordinary Pharises were unclean to one who could ent lithes those of an eater of titles to an eater of offerings and his. again, to one who enjoyed the sprinkling of the water of purification. Some gained one grade, some another, but few the highest, A mecial initiation, training, and time of trial was required for each grade! from thirty days for the lowest, to twelve months for the highest. Intos Hauns Auhennar a an portous uppet oral komeinned Religiousness was thus measured by the more or less complete observance of ten thousand Rabbinical rules of ceremonial purity. and fanatical observance of them was secured not less by religious pride, than by their appeal to a sparious patriotism, and to self interest. This severe and inflexible discipline which regulated every act of life foresaw every contingency land interfered with common liberty; at every step, from the cradle to the grave, had been slowly claborated by the Habbis to isolate the Jew from all other mations. His very words and thoughts were prescribed; he was less a man than a mechanical instrument. Any deviation in word or deed, or even in thought, from Rabbinical law, was regarded as implousated Theocracies have enforced in all ages a similar isolation on their adherents. ""The kings of Egypt," says Diedorus," coald not act is they would Everything was ruled by laws, not only in their nublic, but even in their most private life. The hours of the day and night at which special duties must be performed, were fixed by law.

Those f meals, fo TW88 nord whatian the same whole li monies how he bair, bol the iright hrs, Slie v imurvidua Dornethiat Hangy burst into Jewsowit died this abirth/ isil JooAnladd "Jewishada Sabbath bath be pr rest of the o tresso iTh whether or the macred by a hen k work begin On this the Were one in bath, and a On this poi disposed to of a hen it been laid Since the en itherefore of thoughitiw on a feast d Janly sacred gether, beda the second l ful food from caten; but m minitheref taking it tal that might p d whole

Rispon

abere /of

chim. or

maleniof

ctness in dousness

mentoior

ings land

riskalof

ofis holi-

highest

tiches had

rtionathe

offerings.

the the

iat was as

who took

he pries s ridication.

My 16 Erron

ariscetsihe

conid reat

sind his.

f pinifica-

ne diighust.

the for the bathniam

s complete

ymelinious

beverv act

nricommon

een slowly

or mations.

er decd. or

nion their

ld not act

ly in their

he day and

8397

a Those for sleep for rising for bathing, for secrifice, for reading for meals, for walking, and much beside, were inflexibly prescribed wilt twas no less rigidly settled what they were to eat at each meal and what amount of wine they were to drink.""The Brahmin is under the same rigid and all embracing tyranny of religious forms, His whole life is covered with the meshes of a vast net of rites and cerea monies dillbe law of Manu prescribes how be is to sat, and what. how he is to clothe himself, drink, wash his feet, out his nails and hair bath wand perform even the most private functions 44 It fixes the right and duties of each caste and subdivision of caste, the washhrs, the weavers, the tillers of the soil don' Such systems annihilate initividuality and reduce whole populations to a single type, which pornetuates itself with an unchanging and almost indestructible consitancy begetting besides a fanaticism which at any moment, may burst into flames, respecially when identified, as in the case of the Jews, with patriotism, Life under the Jewish law had already kindied this spirit of scarcely veiled revolution long before our Lond's with a log and the state who had a log a log a state of what a log a state of what a log a leoAn Inditional tillustration of the working of Rabbinical rules in Jewish daily life is afforded by those for the proper abservance of the Sabbath . In Exodus xvi. 5, it is commanded that food for the Sabbath be prepared on the sixth day no doubt with the design that the rest of the servant should be as sacred as that of her mater opiniso tresso The Rabbis pondering this command, raised the question. whether an egg which a hen had hid on a Sabbath could be eaten on the facred day, and decided it by a strict negative if it had been laid by a hen kept to lay crys: because, in that case, it was the result of work begin on a week day, and brought to an end on the Sabbath. On this the Rebbis were unanimous an But how would it be if the hen were one intended not to lay eggs, but for eating, and how, if a Babbath, and a feast day, observed as a Sabbath, should come together? On this point Shammais one of the two great Rabbis of the day, was disposed to be liberal, and decided that it was lawful to cat the org of a hen dtalf destined to be leaten on whichever day the erg had been laid. But Hiller, the other great Rabbi; argued as follows --Since the egg has come to maturity on a Sabbath or feast day, and is therefore of unlawful originatit is not allowed to make use of it, and though it would be lawful to make use of the egg of such a hen, laid on a feast day or Sabhath, not followed or preceded by another simiulanly sacred day, yet it must not be eaten if two such days come to regther, because, otherwise, there would be a temptation to use it on the second holy day of And since it is forbidden even to carry unlaw. ful food from one place to enother, such an egg must not only not be caten; but must not be touched, to put it away. The conscientious man, therefore, is not to put a finger on it, for that might lead to his taking it altogether into his hand, and is not even to look at it for that might possibly make him wish he could est it. Hillel's opinion carried the day for says the Talmud, ? There came a voice from These worthless puerilities were in keeping with the fantastic exaggerations in which many of the Rabbis delighted. What shall we say of a learned order which has treasured in that great repertory of its skyings and acts, the Tahmad, such wild Eastern inventions as that Adam, when created, was so tall that his head reached heaven, and so terrified the angels by his gigantic size, that they all ascended to the upper heavens, to God, and said, "Lord of the world two powers are in the earth!" and that, on this God put His hand on the head of Atlam, and reduced his height to only a thousand cubits over fifteen hundred feet. We are told that there were sixty thousand towns in the mountains of Judea, each with sixty thousand inhabitants that there is a bird so large that when it flies it intercepts the light of the san; that when the Messiah comes. Jerusalem will have ten thousand palaces and the same number of towers that there will be a hundred and eighty thousand shops of vendors of pertumes alone; that Adam had two faces and a tail; that from one shoulder to the other Solomon measured not less than sixty cubits and that at one blow of an axe David killed two hundred men. 1. 11

The form of teaching in the schools of the Rabbis was by question and answer. The teacher propounded questions of legal cashistry to the scholars, and let them give their opinions, adding his own if he thought fit. The scholars also could propose questions in their turn. They sut, during class time, on the ground, the teacher, on a faised seat, known as the scat of Moses. As all the knowledge of the Law was strictly traditional and oral, teacher and scholar alike had to depend entirely on memory, the one faculty of supreme importance to both. To attain high fame, a Rabbi must have the reputation of knowing the whole immense mass of tradition down to his day, by heart, so as to be able to did authorities for any possible question. Originality was suparstitiously dreaded, and nothing more shrinkingly avoided than the giving any opinion unsupported by that of some former Rabbi. To forget a single word he had heard from his teacher was an inexpiable crime on the part of a scholar.

The feats of memory produced by such a system were so amazing, that we may readily credit the tradition of the whole Tahnud having been learned by heart, in sections, by he disciples of a Persian Rabbi, who feared that all the copies of it would be destroyed, in a local persecution, in the seventh century. The mass of the Rabbis, to use a Jewish phrase, must have been mere book baskets; grown children, full of the opinions of others, but piously free from any of their own—the ideal of pedants.

The Rabbis were both jurists and preachers. They explained, defined, and taught the Law in their schools; gave judicial opinions and decisions on it in their official meetings, and delivered expositions Their syste statements chiefly, for precedents required bo on which a and triffes in ling in the s The interfancy. The plain whole tion, and wi the lotty sec cendental m provided for license preva struction that teaching, in numbers of Scriptur

In the first occurs six tim the Jews use that the word exchanged for Thus the stat had married as explained as letters of the added togethe more different therefore, the Another fut of a word in t number 310, i God will give

This strange that it occurs writings. In velled from co for its being so pher for the imagined that Abraham in t Greek letters, letter T, which

from

g God,

hic exhall we tory of lons as heaven, scended

i on the cubits

sand in-

em will

errumes shoulder and that question

snistry to wn if he

heir turn. a faised

the Law had to dentance to

itation of

s day, by question. e shrink-

y that of from his amazing,

nud havn Persian byed, in a e Rabbis,

s; grown

m any of ained, del opinions

positions

of Scripture, in their own style to the people in the synagogues. Their systems of interpretation were peculiar. The professional statement of Rabbinical law, on one point or other, occupied them chiefly. for every Rabbinical precept had to be justified, not only by precedents, but by some reference to the written hw, and this often required both tediousness and ingenuity. There was no end of points on which a legal opinion was voluncered from the synagogue pulpit, and triffes infinitesimal to any but Jews, served for censeless wrang ling in the schools.

The interpretation of Scripture gave ever more scope to Rabbinical fancy. Three modes were in vogne: the using single letters to explain whole words or chuses: what was called the protical exposition, and what bore the name of the "Mystery" an elucidation of the forty secrets of the "creation, the world of angels; and such transcendental matters, from the most improbable sources. Rines were provided for the treatment of these different methods, but the utmost license prevailed, notwithstanding. The nature and value of the instruction thus given may be judged from some illustrations of the teaching, in the days of our Lord, respecting the secret power of

In the first and last verses of the Bible the first letter, Aleph (K), occurs six times, and as six alephs are equal to our figures $,000 for the Jews used letters for figures it was held to be proved by this that the world would last 0,000 years. Words in a verse might be exchanged for others whose letters were of equal numerical value. Thus the statement, which greatly offended the Rabbis, that Moses had married an Ethiopian woman in violation of his own law was explained as a figure of speech which hid an orthodox meaning. The letters of the word. Cusifith" (T272), for "Ethiopian woman," when added together as figures, represented 786, and the letters of the much more flattering words, "fair of face," mide the same suin, and, therefore, they were clearly the true meaning.

This strange system was so much in vogue in the days of our Lord that it occurs even in the New Testament, and in early Christian writings. In the book of Revelation the name of "the Beast" is velled from common eyes by the mystical number 666, but the reason for its being so becomes very apparent when we find that it is a cypher for the letters of the name of NERO. The early Christians imagined that God had already revealed the doctrine of the Cross to Abraham in the number of his servants—318; for 18 is written in Greek letters, IH—the symbol of the word Jesus, and 300 is the letter T, which means the Cross! With the same liking for mystery. 801 was used as the symbol for Christ, because the Greek word for dove  $(\pi \epsilon \rho i \sigma \epsilon \rho \alpha)$  makes that cypher, and so do the letters Alpha and Omega

This love of the mystical prevailed in all Rabbinical teaching. Thus the account of the Creation and Ezekiel's vision of the Wheel were made the foundation of the wildest fancies. "Ten things," we , are told, "were created in the twilight of the first Sabhath eves The abyse below the earth (for Korah and his company). the mouth of the spring (of Miriam, which gave the tribes water in the wilderness); the month of Balaam's she as; the rainbow; the manna in the wilderness; the rod of Moses; the schamir (a worm which cleaves rocks); alphabetical characters; the characters of the Tables of the Law and the Tables of stone themselves. Some Rabbis and to these minite, the grave of Moses, and the ram that was cought in the thioket his and an in the of the first of the and the sublim Such was the teaching of the Rabbis as a whole thought even in such sandy wester there were not wanting specks of yerdure, as one still sees in the Talmud. Finer minds here and there, for a moment. gave a human interest to these teachings, or touched the heart by poetry, and simple feeling of But, as a rule, the "Law" to the study of which the youth of largel were summoned so carriest vit as a creary wilderness of worthless trifling. The spall of the sge was on of minds and bound them in intellectual slavery. On every side Christ, in His childhood and youth, heard such studies extolled as the sum of wisdom and as the one burnuit supremely pleasing to God. Yet He rose wholly above them, and with immense originality und force of mind valued them at their true worthlessness leaving no trace of their mirit in the Gospels, but breathing, instead, only that of the most perfect religious freedom. in It has been sometimes misinunted that He only followed the teachers of His nation that He was indebted to Hillel or to the Pharisees as a class: but enough has been said to show that the latter were the representatives of all that He most utterly opposed, and the distance between Him and Hillshinay be measured by their respective estimates of the sanctity of the marriage bond, which Hillel treated so lightly as to sanction divorce, if a

Nobuch the first of a string of a villagit of based with the based of a sin-Nobuch the base of a string of the string of the tring of the propheter and adding it to their or the base of the base of the propheter is and were and the string and tool in the base of the base of the propheter is and were a design with the base of the base of the block of the propheter is the based of the base of the base of the block of the propheter is the based of the base of the base of the block of the propheter is the based of the base of the base of the block of the propheter is the based of the base of the base of the block of the propheter is the based of the base of the the based of the base of the the based of the base of the the based of the based of the base of the the based of the based of the base of the

But I will send

tar Breyer

भागमाम भाग का भागमा जाभग

ord for pha and aching.

e Wheel The fourth of derniess); cleaves of the to these sught in autoular hieven in re, as one moment, hiart by the study ge was on every side. olled as the ig to God. inality land leaving no only that imes insinhat He was h has been di that He Hillel may of the marivorce, if a Nobeling Iter i prof Fr guides

His abia. Altaringhis im tableas

STOTE TOM

设出的 为UTP

Link Line

the fit has

हैगान् निगही

BUT AND TO TO TOPES UNDER ARCHELAUS AND BONE IS SHARANT The death of Hend removed the strong hand that for more than a generation had repressed alike the hatreds and the hopes of the nation. Fanaticism had mattered in secret, and had at last Durst out in the tumults of the Temple, just before he died; but when he was This reign had served the purpose, in providence, of delaying the breaking up of the Jewish people, and its being scattered among the nations, and made its dissolution easier in the end; and, on the other "hand it had called forth the sympathies of heathenism for Judaism more strongly and had conquered lasting rights for it among the nations, as in a sense the salt of the earth and as the forerunner of Christianity. 1916 APA 16 14 16 16 16 16 16 16 19 32 915 16 16 16 10 1 5 91 The rejoicings of the nation, that the scandal of an Bdomite sitting on the thrane of David was past knew no bounds. A negro con-queror at the White House in Washington, in the days of slavery, would scargely have raised such indignant hatred, or have been so re volting to the national instincts of the white population of America as an Edomite reigning on Mount Zion was to the Jews, "Even the foundars of the two mees had been mortal ensures; as the twin sons of Abraham and Jewish tradition embittered the story of Genesis by adding that at hat, Eau, killed Jacob with an arrow from his bow. When Israel was coming from Egypt, Edom had refused it a passage through its territory, and had entailed on H the dreary years of wantlering in the wilderness. The Edonites had been mortal sacrans of its five king. David had conquered them, and he and Solomon huil reigned over bicm. In the dechne of Israel under its later longs they had been its deadliest and most implacable fees They had joined the Chaldeans in the final conquest of Judea under Nebuchadnezzar, and lind rejoiced over the destruction of Jemisalem, in the hope of getting possession of its richer territory, and adding it to their own wild mountain land, The prophets, from desolate wilderness," cried Joel, "for their violence against the children of Judah, because they have shed innocent blood in the land." "For three transgressions of Edom, or for four, saith Jehovah," cried Amos, "I will not turn away the punishment thereof, because he did pursue his brother with the sword, and did cast off all pity, and his anger did tear perpetually, and he kept his wrath for ever. But I will send a fire upon Teman, which shall devour the palaces of both sons c

to Antipate

intrigues of ruthless end of Jammia s paim groves

As soon a summoned t death. The thestre at Je the soldiers to the to due acknow hailed Arche him. It was the night of I This over, All the mag

The body lay head a scept the couch Arso the most prec dred walked c ite regiments, death; the Th of Gauls all y the whole arm bravery. Fiv

sweet spices for martial, music, the new fortree dead king had pomp and pag part either of prepared all th succession on half-hour's stag Archelaus pa after the burial people. He th and having gon

throne of gold.

making great r

he ended but h

Bozrah." Obadiah, after the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchad, nezzar, taunted them with having been among the enemies of Israel, in the day when strangers carried away captive the force of the land, and foreigners entered its gates and cast lots on Jerusalem, and with having rejoiced over the children of Judah in the day of their destruction. Jerumiah is Dekklet had denotineed the wrath of God assing them and indeed every prophet had proclaimed them the former for your han and were only finally driven back by Nehm the conducted them is the track of passession of great part of the former for Judah and were only finally driven back by Nehm Hyrabin who conquered them is 0 years before. Christ, and compend them to submit to circumcision. The deady hatced of centuries was intensified by such a history. Thou batest me indiany sons for ever, and no brotherly love can be kept with the indithe book of Jubiles, thou hatest me and my sons for ever, and no brotherly love can be kept with the. Hear this my word, which I say—When I can change the skin and the bristles of a swine to wool, and when hore spring from its bend the or spoil them and when hore spring from its bend the bristles of a sheep, then will I have brotherly love to thes, and when wolves make peace with lambs, that they shall not devour them or spoil them and when hore spring from its bead the bristles of a sheep, then will I have brotherly love to thes, and when wolves make peace with lambs, that they shall not devour them or spoil them and when hore spring from its bead the poster good, then shall I be at peace with thee in my hearts; and when the flon is the friend of the ox, and goes in the yoke and ploughs with him, then will I have no peace. It is thus that a Jew peaks of Edom, apparently in the very days of Herod, and it is only the natural cultination, when he propheses, in the next shapted that the sons of Jacob will once more subdue and make bondslates of the hard cultination when he propheses in the part shap

Slaves of the hard race. Tet one of this execrated and despised people had for more than a generation ruled over Israel! His death was the removal of a national reproach, that had been bitter beyond words. The hope of the land now was that the abhorred usurper might prove the last of his race of the throng of Judah. Archelaus in his stead was even worse than to have had Herod, for he was not only of Idumean blood, but his mother was of the equally hated race of the Samaritans! Rome, rather than Idom or Samaria!

Palace artrigues, and especially the systematic whisperings of Antipater, who hated his brothers as rivals, had caused Herod to change his will once and again in his last years. In the end nothing seemed likely to put an end to the rivalries of his family but the breaking up of the Lingdom, which it had been the work of his life to create. His latest gained territories beyond the Jordan were left to Philip, the son of Cleopatra, a maiden of Jerusalem, whom Herod had married for her beauty. Galilee, with Perca, he left to his son Antipas, and Judga, Idnimea, and Samaria, with the title of king, to Archelaus,

ALA DA VEL

ichad Israel, e land, i with eir deof God a inter

pait of y lichn d comof cense, says and my Hear and the an oko and when the ball keep shall be at a Jew and it is ext chap

the bond

ore than a a national f the land his race of d, but his

s Rome,

gs of Anti-ng seemed reate. His lip, the son

narried for

tipus, and

Archelaus

both sons of Malthake. He had at one time intended to have left the whole kingdom to Herod, son of the set and Marianne, as successor to Antipater, but the complicity of the mother of that prince in the intrigues of the Rabbis was faral to him. Salome, Herod's stater, the ruthless enemy of the Maccabgen family, received the gift of the towns of Jampia and Ashdod in the Philistine plain, and of Phasselis, in the paim groves of the Jordan valley.

palm groves of the dordan valley As soon as Herod was dead his dater Salome and her husband set free a multitude of the leading men of the Jews, whom Herod had summoned to Jericho, that he might have them butchered at his own death. They next assembled the army and the people in the amphithourse at Jericho, and having read a letter left by the dead king for they soldlers, opened his will, which, with his ring, was to be carried forthwith to Casar, that the settlements might be confirmed, and the due acknowledgment of dependence made. Meanwhile, the soldlers hailed Archelaus as king, and forthwith took the oath of allegiance to him. It was noted however, that Archelaus held a grand feast on the night of his father's death. This over, the functal of Herod followed, after due preparation. All the magnificence of the palace had been laid in contribution, The body lay, on a conch of toyal, purple; a crown and diadem on its

This over, the funeral of Herod followed, after due preparation. All the magnificences of the palace had been laid in contribution. The body lay on a couch of royal purple; a drown and diadem on its head, a sceptre in its right hand, a purple, pall covering the rest; the couch their resting on a big of gold, set with a great display of the most precious stones. Herod's sons and a multitude of his limdred walked on each side, and followed. Next came Harod's favour, the regiments, the body guard given him by Augustus at Cleopatra's death; the Thinchan corns; the German regiment, and the regiment of Gauis all with their arms, standards, and full equipments. Lace the whyle army, horse and foot, in long succession, in their proudest prayery. Five hundred slaves and treedmen of the court carried sweet spices for the burish and so they ewept on amidst wallings of martial music, and doubless of hired mourners, by slow states, to the new fortress Herodium, for miles south of Jerusalem, where the dead king had built a grand tonth for himself. But if there yere pomp and pageantry to do him bonour, there was little love on the part, either, of the nation or of his family, for Archelaus, who had prepared all this magnificence, quarrelied with his relations about the succession on the way, and scarcely had the corpse reached the first and hour's stage, bafore disturbances broke out in Jernsalem. Archelaus paid the customary reverence of a seven days mourning after the burial, closing them with a magnificenf. funeral feast to the people. He then laid aside his robes of mourning and put on white, and having gone up to the Temple, harangued the multitude from a shrone of gold, thanking them for their ready submission to him, and making, great promises for the future, when he should be confirmed in the kingdom by Augustus. The prowals heard him peaceably till be ended, but he had no sooner done so, than some began to clamour trymen a

The peop Heroda

was, erelo

the nation

last touch

threw him

Jesus nee

whom He

clamoured rule over t

Archelat

ings, from quest of te

to Julia, his promising.

Idumes, Ju

ria, Cæsare Hippos, as His revenue £120.000.010

sixth. The furned to th

going on ve

the whole ni been like a s at once. Th theoeracy, wand such as trade and co

Roman proc

constitution,

gain before

growing part

From Ezra's

ished through

by a portion was their sac of the rights

had, in His n

now than th fathers to dr people, under

or kingly ful

for a lightening of the taxes, and others for the liberation of those in prison on account of the late religious insurrection. All this he readily promised, and retired to the palace. Towards evening, however, crowds gathered at the gates, and began lamenting the Habbir and the young men, put to death by Herod for cutting down the golden earlo over the Temple, in the late tumult, and demanding that the officials who had executed Herod's commands should be punished in clamouring, besides, for the deposition of Joazar, of the house of Boethos. whom Herod, in compliment for having married into the family, had appointed high priest in the place of Mattathins, a friend of the nr-tional cause. More dangerous still, they demanded that Archelaus should at once rise against the Romans, and drive them out of the His utmost efforts to appease them were vrin. Each country. day saw a greater tuinult, and, to make matters worse, the city, was filling with countless multitudes coming to the Passover, now at burd, Force alone could restors order, and this he was at last compelled, most reluctantly, to use. A bloody street battle, followed; in which 8,000 were slain, and the Passover guests were shut out of the city, and returned home without having been able to keep the feast IThe winds, long chained by Herod, had broken loose. Archelaus, forthwith set off for Rome, leaving Philip regent in his absence. Doris, Herod's wife, Salome, his sister, and other members of the family, went with him, ostensibly to support his claims, but in reality to oppose him, for the family hated him as the son of a Samaritan, and, even more, as a second Herod. Antipas, also, started for former will, and, as the ekler, was secretly supported in his enterprise, with refined treachery, even by those who escorted Archelaus. The family would have liked an oligarchy, in which all could share, better than any king, but preferred a Roman governor to either Archelaus or Antipas; but if one of these two must be chosen, they wished Antipas rather than his brother, whom they all hated. At Rome the two claimants canvassed cagerly among the Senators, in favour of their rival causes, and lowered their dignity by unseemly disputes. Meanwhile, a deputation of firty Jews arrived from Jerusalem to protest against Archelaus being made king, and to ask the incorporation of Judea with Syria, as part of a Roman province, under a Roman governor, in the idea that Rome would be content with their submission and tribute, and leave the nation independent in its religious affairs. The embassage was received with great enthusiasm by the Jews of Rome, eight thousand of whom escorted them to the Temple of Apollo, where Augustus gave them andience. All possible charges against Herod, though now dead, were detailed at length-lis wholesale proscriptions and confiscations; his adorning foreign citics, and neglecting those of his own kingdom; his excessive laxation, and much more: the petitioners adding that they had hoped for milder treatment from Archelaus, but had had to lament 8,000 of their counni opo in

MOVEL.

n caglo amour-

lotthos, lly, had the ncchelat.

t of the

Eac'ı

at burd.

Elected,

a) which the oily,

St. 11:0

nt in his members

as, but in a Samari-

arted for a ngth of a nterprise,

DE.M. OILS

all could

r to either

ated. At

nators; in eemly dis-Jerusalem the incor-

with their

in its re-

nthusiasm

iem to the

ength-his ign cities,

for milder

trymen slain by him at the Temple, at his very entrance on power. The people they said, wished only one thing, deliverance from the Herods, and annexation to Syrfs. The whole scepe of the suddence was, erelong, widely reported in Judea, and stamped itself deeply on the national memory, especially the fact that Archelaus, adding the last touch to the laumillation to which both brothers had stooped, threw himself at Casar's feet to implore his fayour. Many years after, Jesus needed to use no names, in His parable of the pounds to tell whom He meant, when He spoke of a king, against whom his people clamoured before a foreign thronc—" We will not have this man to rule over us."

Archelaus was only in part successful. A few days after the pleadings, from respect to Herod's will, and, doubtless, influenced by a bcquest of ten millions of drachma in it to bimself, a gift equal to about $275,000, besides jewels of gold and silver and very costly garments. to Julia, his wife, Cesar raised the suppliant from his feet, and appointed him ethnarch of the part of the kingdom left him by Herod; promising to make him king hereafter, if he were found worthy. Idumes, Judea, and Samaria, with the great cities, Jerusalem, Sama-ria, Casarea, and Joppa, were assigned him; but Gaza, Gadara, and Hippos, as Greek cities, were incorporated with the province of Syria. His revenue was the largest. for it amounted to 600 falents, or about £120,000 Antipas had only a third part as much, and Philip only a sixth. The immense sum of money left him by Herod, Cæsar returned to the sons, reserving only a few costly vessels, as mementoes. While these strange scenes were enacting at Rome, things were . going on very badly in Palestine. As soon as Archelaus had sailed, the whole nation was in uproar. The massacre at his accession had been like a spark in explosive air, and the flame of revolt burst out at once. The moment seemed auspicious for the re-crection of the theooracy, with God for the only king, as in early days. The rich, and such as had no higher wish than the material advantages of trade and commerce, which it would bring, desired government by a Roman procurator. They regarded religion, government, law, and constitution, with equal indifference, setting their personal case and gain before anything clac. But for generations, there had been a growing party in the land, whose ideas and aims were very different. From Ezra's time, the dream of a restored theocracy had been cherished, through all the vicissitudes of the nation, with undying tenacity, by a portion of the people. The political system of the Pentateuch was their sacred ideal. Kings over Israel were, in their cycs, usurpers of the rights of Jehovah, against whom Samuel, the great prophet, had, in His name, protested. The heathen could no more be tolerated now than the Canaanites of old, whom God had commanded their fathers' to drive out. The land was to be sacred to Jehováh and His people, under a high priesthood only, to the exclusion of all foreign or kingly full. The impossibility of restoring such a state of things.

after the changes of so many centuries, may have been felt, but was not acknowledged. It stood commanded in the Holy Books, and that was enough. Their fathers had murmured under Persian domina-tion, and had eagerly grasped at the promises of the Greek conqueror, demanding, however, that they should include the safety of their special institutions. When Grecian supremacy, in its turn, became corrupt, and threatened the distruction of the "Law," the "pious" revolted, and fought, under the Maccabees, for the true seligion, but still in the form of a theorety. They continued faithful to the great patries family, as long as it maintained the high priesthood as the highest dignity of the state, but they hid three up arms only to defend the faith, and as soon as they hid three up arms only to defend the faith, and as soon as they were able once more to practise its rites, and to give themselves up again to religious study, they for-sock the ranks of the Maccabaans, unwilling to take any part in the consolidation of a political power to which they attached no value. In the end, Judas had been well-night deserted, and could gather only a handful of 8,000 followers, and his brother, who succeeded him, had to flee, with a remnant of their adherents, to the fons and reed beds of Lake Merom, or the wilds of Gilcad. "The long peace which pro-valled in the reign of John Hyrcanus, after his wars were ended, was devoted by the Rabbis to the creation of the famous "hedge" round the Law, to prevent for ever the religious apostasy and decay which had almost ruleed Judaism under the Syro-Greek dynasty. From this time, we hear of the "unsociability" of the Jews towards other nations. Pharisaism, of separation, was erected into a system, and was pushed to its ultimate and most rigorous consequences with a zeal and functicism that excite wonder. The extreme party became known as the "Separation," while the courtly party round the king, who were contented to follow the Law as written, conscientiously and rigorously were called in irony the Baddouk or righteons, or as we call them, the Badducees. The indifference of the Pharisaic, or ultra, party to political affairs,

The indifference of the Pharisale, or ultra, party to political affairs, and their concentration on the observance and elaboration of the Law, became, in the end, the characteristic of the people at large. During the civil war between Hyrcanus and Aristobulus, the two Asmonean brothers, they stood its much as possible, aloof. The Jew is democratic by nature, and seeks equality, whether under a foreign of native government. "The holy nation." the kingdom of priests," recognized no other distinction than that of superior plety and knowledge of the Law, which are only personal virtues, and cannot be transmitted. The Asmoncan family, once on the throne, last much of the popular sympathy, and the priestly aristocracy which formed the court, became objects of aversion. From the last years of John Hyrcanus to the death of Jannaus, the Fabbis, living in retirement, attracted to themselves more and more the vital force of the nation; and during the nine sunny years of royal patronage, under Alexandra, instead of busying themselves in heaping up wealth and increasing their power, they labour umph of th had its row knew no li nothing to a Aristobulua bodies Rabb the five Ma meaning of The history scendentalist But even was an ultra sternness and and there app outside men such as the P edge neither ready, in the tentedly, and tried to crush came, as cond more, by their orous w In th princess but no political a themselves to Augustan age kindle the zea too effectively over, some ha histiusproation God no/The so been mather p but noble in th The foremost whom Herod. His son Judas of national lib Quintilius in Germanyaccount of th some executio Antioch, leavi legion instead been thought that!

Was

nina-

their

n, but

great is the lefend ise its

in the Value.

r doly

m. had

d beds

h pro-

round

which From

s other

m, and with a becamo

le king,

sly and

OW BB'T

offairs.

re Law.

During

monean e demo-

r native

" recog-

smitted.

popular ourt, be-

canus to

acted to

during

r power,

they laboured to found a legal system which should secure the triumph of their ideas. Disinterestedness is always attractive, and it had its reward in creating, a fanatical devotion to the Rabbio, which knew no limits. "Love work, keep apart from politics and have nothing to do with effice." was the maxim of Schemaiah, the successor of Simeon Reg Schetsch. The struggle between Hyrcanus and Aristobulus had no interest to the Pharisees. The Talmuid, which embodies Rabbinical feeling, never mentions even, the names of any of the five Maccabees not even that of Judas, --and the spelling and meaning of the word Maccabee were unlike unknown to its compilers. The history of the nation was utterly ignored by these dreamy transcendentalists, who recognized no carthly power whatever.

scendentalists, who recognized no earthly power whatever, Ruteven among the Rabbis, and the blindly fanatical people, there was an ultra party of Irreconcilables. From the first, even Rabbinical sternness and strictness were not stern and strict enough for some. and there appeared, at times within the circle of the Rabbis, at others, outside, men of extreme, views, who, would, tolerate no compromises such as the Pharisees were willing to accept. They would scknowledge neither prince nor king, far less any foreign heathen power. Al-ready, in the days of John Hyrcanus, they had begun to mutter discontentedly, and their voices rose louder under Alexander Janmeus, who tried to crush them by the flercest persecution. But when Pompey came, as conqueror, and arbiter of the national destiny, they once more, by their earnest protests, showed that their party was still vigorous of In the civil wars, many of them fought for the Asmonean princess but, under Herod, they were so mercilessly held down, that no political action on their part was possible, and they had to devote themselves to the eager study of the Law, which made his reign the Augustan age of Rabbinism. But in their schools they could at least kindle the zeal of the rising youth, and this some of them did only too effectively ... Even in the sternest days of Herod's reign, moreover, some had not been wanting to maintain a flerce protest against his usurpation of the throne, which they believed belonged only to God of The so-called robbers crushed by him at Arbela, seem to have been rather patriotic bands, wrong, it may be, in the means pursued. but noble in their aims, who sought to carry out the theocratic dream. The foremost leader of these fierce zealots had been that Hezekiah whom Herod, with much difficulty, had secured and put to death. His son Judas, the Galilæan, was now, in his turn, to raise the standard of national liberty and institutions

Quintilius Varus, the future victim, with his legions, of Arminius, in Germany, now governor of Syria—had come to Jerusalem, on account, of the disturbances at the accession of Archelaus. After some executions, supposing that he had restored order, he returned to Antioch, leaving behind him in Jerusalem, under Sabinus, a whole legion, instead, of the garrison, that, in peaceful times, would have been thought sufficient. He could hardly have one worse than put such a man as Sabinus in command, for, like Woman governors in renoral, in that day, he was a man of no principle, bent only on mak. ing a fortune even by the chest intens, while he had oppertune. He infuriated the J. ws. by forcing the surrender of the castles of Jerusalem into his hands to get possession of Herod's transmiss. which he at once appropriated to his own use. Plunder was his one thought, and, to secure it, to sec of lawless violence was too addactous. Extortion and rollbery drave the people to fury. Not only the ett, but the country everywhere, seethed with excitement. To seened a fitting moment to sittke for their long, lost national literty and to set up the theocracy again, under the Rabbis, after having driven out the heathen. Their fanaticism knew no caution or pridence."nor any calculation of the odds zgam t them. Minacles would be wrought. if heeded, to secure their triumph and was not the Messiah at hand? It was, moreover, the time of Peut, cost, and an immune body of men from Galilee. Idumes, Jericho, and Peres, but, above all from Judes. taking advantage of the feast, hurried up to Jerusilem to join issue with the greedy robber plundering the city. Dividing themselves into three camps, they forthwith thrested the city, and Pasinus, in terror, withdrew to the fort Phasaelis. But the storm scen Bursten kim. Crowding the roofs of the Temple cloisters, the Jews rained destroyed the cloisters, -the dry cedar of the roofs, and the warrin which the plates of gold that covered them were bedded, feeding the flames only too readily. The Temple itself was now at the mercy of the assailants, who averaged themselves by plundering its treasures; Subinus himself secaring 400 talents—about? £58,000—for its share. But this only infuriated the people still more, and even Herod's army was so outraged by it, that all the troops, except the Samarian regi-ments numbering 3,000 men went over to the popular side. Meanwhile, the flame of revolt spread over the whole country." The dis-charged soldiers of Herod began plundering in Judes, and $1000 of them got together in Idumea, and Lught stoutly against the new king's party, driving Herod's cousin, Achiab, who was sent against them to take refuge in the fortresses, while they held the open country. Across the Jordan, in Perca, one Simon, who had been a slave of Herod, but himself at the head of a great band, who acknowledged him as king, and doubtless hoped, by his means, to deliver their country, and restore its religious freedom." Betaking themselves to the defile between Jerusalem and Jertcho, they burned Herod's palace at the latter city, and carried flame and sword to the homes of all who did not favour them. A corps of Roman soldiers, sent out against Simon, soon, however, scattered his followers, and he himself was slain. al distribution en of the sector of the sect Further north. Athronges, a shepherd of the wild pastures beyond the Jordan, put himself at the head of the popular excitement. He Was a mai like blog emintry. fierce guer and was ab the people. Bit But the headquarte Judas, his the Galilan king, had b his rising fo nation, had ready to figh him in great the land was the gapi fortress, sitti took by stor thousands. a How long mane lost no. Varusnafraid officenthwar mente of cav required of t Beryins, that Arabia Petre of wild Arab woused at Pto strong divisid Esdraelon and it would have the bated Joy Varus pitchin auxiliaries set approached ... soldiers had h found deserte sult that had neighbourhoo dispersed, and simulation, th troubles on th besieged as B A 1. 1- 4462 4

125

HT Th

10 (85)

etites.

15 one

cious.

がわれた tricdly a

ha to en out

ellinor

ought.

hend?

of men

Juden.

h issue

inserves

thus in

ningpen

Fanied

19810dge nearly warin

ing the

herey of

ededres.

s share

T's army

tan regi-

Mean-

The dis-

2.000 of the new

Uagainst

en coun-

n a slave

swledged

es to the palace at

who

to against

viel n fine

beyond

ale tou

was a man of great size and strength, and with four brothers, all, like him, of lofty stature, strove in his own wild way to averge his emintry. Gethering a vust multitude of followers, he kept up a force guerills warfare against the troops sent out to put him down, and was able to keep the field for years, so well was he supported by the people.

But the most darming insurrection broke out in Galilee, the old headquarters of the zealois, under Hezekiah, in the last generation. Judas, histson; born on the other side of the Jordan, but known as the Galilson, had grown to manhood full of the spirit of his father. The same lofty ideal, of restoring the land to God as its rightful king, had become the dream of his life. The time seemed to favour his vising for "God and the Law," as his father, and the heroes of his nation had done in the past, The brave true-hearted Galilgeans, over ready to light at the cry that the Law was in danger, rallied round him in great numbers, and at their head he ventured on an enterprise which made him the here of the day, in every town, and village of the land: Sepphoris, a walled hill city, over the hills from Nazareth, was the capital of Galilee, and the great arsenal in the north. This fortress, sitting like a bird, as its name hints, on its height, Judas took by storm, and its capture out in his hands arms of all kinds for thousands, and a large sum of money

How long he was able to keep the field is not known. The Romane lost no time in taking steps to crush him and the other rebels. Warus, afraid of the safety of the legion he had left in Jerusalem, set off southward from Antioch with two more legions, and four regiments of cavalry, in addition to the auxiliary forces supplied, as was required of them, by the local princes round. As he passed through Beryins, that city added its quots of 1,500 men, and Aretas, king of Arabia Petron, sent him a large contingent of irregulars, in the shape of wild Arab horsemen and foot soldiers. The whole force rendezyouard at Ptolemais, and from this point Varus sent his son, with a strong division, into Galilee, while he himself marched, by way of Esdrazion and Samaria, to Jerusalem. Samaria had been loval, for it would have been the last thing its citizens would have done to join the bated Jews in a war for their Law, and was left untouched, Varus pitching his camp at a village called Ares, which the Arab auxiliaries set on fire as they left, out of hatred to Herod. As they approached Jerusalem. Emmaus at which a company of Roman soldiers had been attacked and partly massacred by Athronges, was found deserted, and was burned to the ground, in revenge for the insult that had been offered to the army of Rome. Reaching the neighbourhood of the capital, the besieging force of the Jews at once dispersed, and Varus marched in without a blow. With keen dissimulation, the Jerusalem Jews forthwith laid all the blame of the troubles on the Passover crowds, asserting that they had been as much besieged as Sabinns. Meanwhile, the troops scoured the country for fugitives, 2,000 of whom were crucified along the roadsides near Jerusalem. A Jewish force of 10,000 men. still afoot disbanded itself. and the revolt in Judea was for the moment suppressed, Several of the relations of Herod who had taken part in the rising, and had been sent prisoners to Rome, were the last victime for the times inter The force under the son of Yurus had meanwhile been busy in the north Sepphoris was retaken, its inhabitants sold as slaves, and the town itself burned to the ground, but Judas escaped for the present to begin a still more terrible insurrection a few years later. and a few dears Peace was thus, at length, restored, and the young princes entered on their inheritances, thanks once more to Rome by But the land had been desolated: the bravest of its youth had died on the battle field: cities and villages day, smouldering vin their, ashes of Samaria alone profited by the attempted revolution. for not only did it suffer nothing a third of its taxes were remitted and laid on Judea a new ground of haired towards the "tifoglish people" of Shechema manini The sensual, lawless, cruel nature of Archelaus, with his want of tact, which, togethen, had turned, both his family and his father's wisest counsellors against him, leave us little doubt of the character of his referent The general estimate of him was that he was most like his father of all his brothers. He returned from Rome degraded in his own eves by having had to beg his kingdom on his knees, and by the people, and all his relations, except the just and lionourable Philip, having tried to prevent his success with Augustus, and this one thought was revengen Jesus though an infant when Archelaus began his reign: must have often heard in later years of his journey to Rome and its humiliations and of the fierce roprisals on his return, for as d have said. He paints the story unmistakably in the parable of the great man who went into a far country, to neceive alkingdom ; whose citizens hated him, and sent after him, protesting that they would not have him to reign over them. The ficace revenge of Archelaus could not fail to rise in the minds of those who heard, in the parable, how the lords on his returns commanded his servants to be called, and rewarded the faithful richly, but stripped the doubtful of everything. and put to death those who had plotted against him alt such bed gole Micholaus began his reign by such a reckoning with his servants and onemics When he took possession of his monarchy, says Josephus, he used, not the Jews only, but the Samaritans, burbar ously. In Jerusalem he deposed the high priest of the Boethos family, on the charge of having conspired against him. (But though this might have pleased the Pharisees and the people, who counted the Boothos high priest unclean, he only roused their indignation by filling the office with two of his own creatures in succession. His treatment of his people concrative was so harsh, that Jews and Samaritans forget their mutual hatred in efforts to get him dethroued ... His crowning efforce, however, was marrying Glaphyra, the widow of his half-brother Alexander, to whom she had borne ohildrene (She had summons prooked no delay, and the vasial instally we cat for light

ides near le

tone back to death of her met her on with her. ma Jerusalem m her haughtin Herod's famil band's death manners, had Hage now in larity. But the return to vivid recolled dreamed that in marrying A ed, and in a fe Archelaus public games less an adept a he was wise on press on his co the balace bur western hill-sle lave after him the palm grove of his reign vice and drunk "IThe hatred o had striven to with time. T for nine years, and their factio things came to sion had, for t Rôme, to accus imperial mujes Archelaus was he dreamed the eaten by oxen." one Simon Van and marked th easy. The em nant, and order name, to sail at at Rome. Five und found Ar summons brook (190.

Je-

salf, Ierul

had

HAWAT

i the

sent.

tered

1 had

field:

alone

noth-

NACT

111 1213

ant of ther's

cter of

ke his in his

by the

hilip:

ought

reign;

Lihaye

great

se citi-

ld mot

e could

eichow

and re-

valuing)

ervants

Vin SOYS

burbar Boëthos

though

counted

tion by

n. His

Samar

din His dow of

She bed

Stitutid

000 of whom were eracified along the roadsides near legone back to her father, the friend of Herod and Antony, after the death of her second husband, King Jula, of Libya, when Archelans met her on his way back from Rome, and falling violently in love with her married her after divorcing his wife. Her former career in Jerusalem might have made him hesitate to bring her back again, for her haughtiness keen ongue and affected contempt for Salome, and Herod's family generally; had been one great cause of her first husband's death, while her training her children, as she did, in heathen manners, had made her hateful to the people. Her incestuous marriage: now involved both her and Archelaus in the bitterest unpopularity. But she did not live long to trouble any one. It seemed as if the return to the scene of her early marriage life had waked only too vivid recollections of her murdered husband. Soon after it she dreamed that he came to her and accused her of her infidelity to him in marrying Archelaus, and the dream so affected her that she sickened, and in a few days died. All out and the stand of the stand of the "Archelaus had not the same tasts for heathen architecture and public games as his father, and, perhaps to his own hurt, was much less an adept at public flattery of the Emperor and his ministers, and he was wise or timid enough to put no heather or objectionable impress on his coins. At Jericho he rebuilt, with great magnificence, the palace burned down by Simon, and he founded a town on the western hill-slopes of the Jordan valley, in Samaria, calling it Archeland after himself, and embellishing it with fine conduits; to water the pain groves in his gardens, but beyond this he left no monuments of his reign. His time and heart were too much engrossed with vice and drunkenness to leave much interest for anything else. "The hatred of the people and of their leaders, the Pharisees, which had striven to prevent his getting the throne at first, grew only fiercer with time. The struggle continued with true Jewish pertinacity. for nine years, fanned more or less openly by the ethnarch's relations, and their factions at court: At last, in the beginning of the year 6. things came to a crisis. Judes and Samaria, whom common oppression had, for the moment, made friendly, sent a joint embassy to Rome, to accuse the tyrant, before his master, of having affronted the imperial mujesty, by not observing the moderation commanded him. Archelaus was thoroughly alarmed. Superstitious, like his dead wife, he dreamed that he saw ten cars of wheat, perfectly ripe, presently eaten by oxen, and at once taking the dream as an omen, was told by one Simon, an Essene, that the ten heads of wheat were ten years. and marked the length of his reign. Such a forecast was only too easy. The embassy to Rome had done its work. Casar was indignant, and ordered the agent of Archelaus at Rome, a man of the same name, to sail at once for Palestine, and summon his master to appear at Rome. Five days after the dream the messenger reached Jerusalem. and found Archelaus feasting with his friends. The imperative summons brooked no delay, and the vassal instantly set out for Italy.

191

There his fate was speedily decided of Accuses and accused were brought face to face and Archelaus was sentenced to perpetual banishment, and the confiscation of all his property to the Emperor. The place of his exile was fixed at Vienna, in Gaul, a town on the Rhone: a little south of the modern Lyons, in what, long afterwards, became the province of Dauphine, h Here he lived in obscurity till his death, amid the vines of southern France, perhaps a wiser and the beginning of the end of Herod's kingdom, his dominions being forthwith incorporated with Syria, as part of that Roman province. The wish of the Jews was at last gratified, but they were soon to feel how bitterly they had deceived themselves in supposing that incorporation with Rome meant religious independence. The castle at Jericho, and the paim groves and buildings of Archelais, were the only memorials of the ethearch, except the bitterness written on everyheart by his cruelties and oppressions. (and shoes bon woah it adenad A man of unspeakably greater importance in his influence on the nation-Hilleh the gentle, the godly, the scholar of Ezra, appears to have passed away in these last months of excitement, at the age, it is said, of 120 Born among the Dispersion, in Bebylen, he had come to Jerusalem, long-years before to attend the famous schools of Abtalion and Schemaiah, which Herod's proscriptions would have well-nigh crushed in later years destroying Rabbinism with them. but for the genius who had been trained in their spirit Already a married man, he had no income but the deily pittance of half a denarius carned as a light porter or day labourer, shough his one brother was a great Rabbi and president of the school at Babylon and his other was growing to be a wealthy man in Jerusalem. But the rich one did not trouble himself about him, and affected to despise him, and the other, though eminent was very likely, himself poor. / Unable, one day, to pay the trifling fee for entrance, to the doorkeeper of the school. Hillel was yet determined to get the knowledge for which his soul thirsted. At way a Sabbath even in winter, and the classes met on the Friday evening continuing through the night, till the Sabbath morning of Too catch the instruction from which he was shut out. Hillel climbed into a window outside, and sat · there, in the cold for it) was bitter weather, and snow was falling heavily. In the morning, invest the stradition Schemaish said to Abtalion: of Brother Abtalion wit is usually light in our school by day; it must be cloudy this morning to be so dark." As he spoke he looked up, and saw a form in the window outside a It was Hillel, buried in the snow and almost dead is Carrying him in bathing and rubbing him with oil, and setting him near the hearth, he gradually revived .... "It was right even to profane the Sabbath for such an one," said the teachers and students. Joi support a dath avec off Jude to Five or six years after the beginning of Herod's reign. Hilled rose to be the head of the Rabbiniam of Jerusalem anthe only man to be found who time a rival Jow. had still tions: Scham spirit and as rivel. Thilithe for he too oft savings are D Epictetus or best known neighbour But like all 1 Its central p pense for eve Sceing a hum thou hast dro has drowned some way, he has gained (t) the life to con right action, i to all real mer The banish ten or twelve hillssilliwas nation, for its the way for the as a nation, and The trouble encined a very iome, under t tus! when Arc arrangement minage their cian cities wer would only in however, was left large oon pendent, thous logestogs all When Arch their house rea priests and th Rome. The e joy; but the might be calle Alladeforth to eror.

193

WOTE

the

ards.

y till

r and

1 W86

being on to

that castle

re the

every dividi

m the ans to

eome

ols of have

them,

eady a half

is one

by lon,

But

to de-

imself

to the mowl-

vinter

gh the

from

ndisati

falling

aid to oolby

okehei

Hillel,

ng and

adually

n one,

adi inoi

leb rosa

19 10 100

found who had studied under Abtallon and Schemaiah After a time a rival school rose under Schanmain Hillet though a strict Jew had still a leaning to charitable and liberal ideas in some directions; Schammai wie the embodiment of the marrow ultra-Pharisaic spirit and as such much more numerously followed than his milder rival, "Hitlel's weakness, as well as strength, lay in his love of peace, for he too often more up principle to maintain quiet. Many of his sayings are preserved, but most of them, are inferior to those left by Epictetus on Seneca: His summary of the Law, to a heathen, is the best known ...... What you would yourself dislike never do to your neighbour-that is the whole Law, all else is only its application." But like all the Rabbis, his religious system was radically unsound. Its central principle was the belief in strict retaliation or recompenset for every act, Like for like was the sum of his morality. Seeing a human skull floating on a stream, Hillel cried out, "Because thou hast drowned (some one), thou thyself art drowned, and he who has drowned thee will himself some day also be drowned." The same way he believed would it be at the final judgment. If He who has gained (the knowledge of) the Law," said he, "has also gained the life to come " Service and payment, his fundamental motive to right action, inevitably led to formalism and selfish calculation, fatal to all real meric put up tory a bornet, doin's domand be than up tout A The bunishment of Archelaus found Jesus a growing boy of about ten or twelve living quietly in the Galilean Nazareth, among the hills af It was a momentous event in the declining fortunes of the nation, for its results presently filled the land with terror, and proved the why for the final orisis, sixty years later, which destroyed Isracl and has other was growing to their treat of an interview under the end The troubles of Herod's time, and the dreams of the Rabbia had enoned a very general desire, at his death, for direct government by 100me, under the proconsul of Syria: The deputation sont to Auguatus, when Archelaus was seeking the throne, had prayed for such an arrangement, thinking they would be left under their high priests, to manage their national affairs after their own customs, as the Phenician cities were allowed to dounder their Archens, and that Rome would only interfere in taxation and military matters. Their wish, however, was the only ground of their expectation, for Rome never left large communities like the Jewish nation thus virtually independent, though they might indulge towns or cities with such a privilegeslogesplith this morning to the state of the shulles be should When Archelaus, at the entresty of the people, had been banished, their hopes revived of the restoration of the theoeracy under the high priests and the Rabble, with a nominal supremacy on the part of Rome. The exile of the tyrant, therefore, was greeted with universal joy: but the news that a procurator, or lieutenant-rovernor, as he might be called, had been appointed in his stead, and that Judea was hendelorsh to be incorporated into the province of Byria, with its pro-

laws with y

ba as the sa

Israel, He

and Judah

foretold the approaching

Bi Was a matte

o hend such a

19 The very fir

v conflict with

anif The syste

as tween the rune conomy of ochead to the

selaughtered

man, it was revolts, after Jewish law r and, accordin every field a

Temple: Ho ba heathen en these tithes a it was lawful

only by the s

attempt at re

town, or at

who honoure

This sullen

by the evils

owere two-a cmbraced by staus, and was

proporty of r

the Jewish

perial exched

bolifth part of lecting the t

publicant far

payment of

from this th

nation of th

consul, or governor-general, as supreme head, under the Emperor. soon dispelled their dreams of theogratic liberty o isomething all to not att The proconsul, or governor general, of Syria, at the time, was Publius Sulpicius Quirinius, a brave soldier, and faithful servant of the Emperor accustomed to command and to be obeyed Ordered to incorporate Judea with his province, no thought of consulting Jewish feelings in doing so crossed his mind. From comparative obscurity he had risen, through military and diplomatic service will Augustus had him made consul. He had made a evecessful camperen in Asia Minor, against some tribes of savage mountaineers, whom he succeeded in subduing by blockading the mountain rasses, and after starving them into submission, had secured their future ouler by carrying off all the men able to bear arms, tanishing some, and disiting the rest into his legions. For this he had gained the honcur of a triumph, When Calus, the young grandson of Augustur, was treacherously wounded in Armenia, he had managed affairs for him so much to the satisfaction of the Emperer, that he got the province of Syria as a reward, With all this, he boro a lad character with those who knew him, or were any way under lim, as not only malignant and grasping, but mean and revengeful. As a proof of this it was instanced, that he kept a charge of attempted potenting over his wife's head, for twenty years after he had divorced her all all of the procurator, or hereant governor, appeinted over Judga by Quitnius, was Coponius a Roman knight. Taknown except from this office. He and Quiffnius made their appearance in Jerusalem togetlier as soon as Archelaus had been condemmed, to take possession of his chects for Augustus. They lodged in the palace of Herod. which, henceforth, was called the Prætorium, and became the resi-dence of the procurators when they were in Jerusalem at the time of the feasts, for, except then, they lived in Casarea, of The Horod family had to content themselves with the old castle of the Maccabean kings, hear the Xystus, invelinging a dordustability a rontwoor Any colden dreams of a restored theocracy were soon dispelled.

Hardly had the inventory of the passessions of the crown been inished, than Quirifius announced that his next duty was to take a census of the people, and a return of their property and incomes, as the basis for introducing the Roman taxation common to all subject provinces of the empire. There could be no clearer proof that the inition had deceived liself. Rich and poor allke resented a measure which announced slavery instead of freedom, and ruinous extortion instead of prosperity. In every country the introduction of a new facal rystem, with its intrusion factor private affairs, its weathous interferences with life and commerce, its new and untried buildens, and the general disturbance of the order of things which custom has made familiar, is always unpopular. But in this case patriotic and religious feeling intensified the dislike. It was at once the direct and formal subjection of the country the heathen government, the abrogation of teror.

: intel:

of the Jewish

semity

ignitius in Alsia

he suc-

diafter

Carry-

lisiting

urcof a

ipo was .

for him

rovince

ler with plyma-

f this it

overthis

HORDE

udea by romuthis

alem to-

esession

Herod,

he resi-

time of

Herod

Macca-

LOW OF

ispelled.

been fin-

o take a

omes, as

I subject

that the measure

extortion

of a new

ous inter-

ens, and has made

religious

d formal in thing of

I laws with which religious ideas were blended, and the fancied profanation of the word of Jahovah and of His prophets, that Israel would be as the sand on the sea shore, which cannot be unablered. It was recalled to mind, moreover, that when the wrath of God turned against Israel, He moved David to give the command. "Go number Israel and Judah." It ran also from mouth to mouth that old prophecies forefold that the numbering of the people would be the sign of their approaching fall as a nation. To the fanaticism of the Jew the consus was a matter of life and death; to Quirinius, who could not comprehend such a state of feeling, it was the simplest matter in the work. The very first step in the Roman government of Judea brought it into conflict with the people.

anti The systematic and direct taxation of the country by Rome was from this time, an inextinguishable subject of hatred and strife beas tween the rulers and the ruled. The Romans smiled at the political meconomy of the Rabbis, who gravely levied a tax of half a shekel a head to the Temple, to avert a national pestilence, and proposed that a census of the people, calculated by the number of the lambs slaughtered in Jerusalem at the last Rassover, should be the basis of the Imperial fiscal registration. But if this was ridiculous to the Roman, it was a matter so sacred to the Jew, that it led to ever-fresh revolts, after thousands of patriots had died to maintain it. The Jewish law recognized taxes and free gifts only for religious objects. and, according to the Rabbis, the very holiness of the land rested on every field and tree contributing its tithe, or gift of wood, to the Temple: How; it was asked, could this sacredness be maintained, if a heathen emperor received taxes from the sources consecrated by these tithes and gifts to Jehovah? Hence the question rose, "whether it was lawful to pay tribute to Cæsar or not?"-a question to be solved only by the sword, but rising ever again, after each new despairing attempt at resistance. Every "receipt of custom" at the gate of a town, or at the end of a bridge, was a rock against which the Jew who honoured the Law felt his conscience wrecked, or a battle field marked by a deadly strife.

This sullen antipathy to imperial taxation was, moreover, intensified by the evils of the Roman system. The chief imposts demanded were two—a poll and a land tax, the former an income tax on all not embraced by the latter. The income tax was fixed by a special consus, and was rated, in Syria and Cilicia, at one per cent. All landed property of private individuals was subject to the ground tax, while the Jewish ground possessions were confiscated entirely to the imperial exchaquer. The tax amounted to a tenth of all grain, and a lifth part of wine and fruit, and was thus very oppressive. Both imposts were in the hands of "publicans," who hought the right of collecting the taxes for five years, from the consors at Rome. These publicant formed the revenue from the State, giving security for the payment of a fixed-sum for the province whose these these haughts. There were, however, extraordinary taxes and local imposts, besides the two great ones. If corn ran short in Italy the provinces had to supply it at fixed prices, and the procurator at Greares had the right to demand for himself and his attendants what supplies he required. The customs and excise duties, moreover, were levied for the imperial government, mand the tolls on hidges, and roads, the octroi at the gates of towns, and the custom houses at the boundaries of districts or provinces, which, also, were farmed by the publicani, gave additional room for arbitrary oppression. The whole system was radically had, like its counterparts under the Ancien Regime in France, and in Turkey, now. The Roman knights who took contracts for provinces, sub-let them, by districts, to others, and these again had sub-contractors to smaller and smaller amounts. The worst farmer and sub-farmer, of the revenue required a profit, which the helpless provincials had, in the end, to pay. The amount assessed by Rome was thus no measure of the ultimate extortion. The greed and opportunity of the collectors, in each descending grade, alone determined the demand from the taxpayer.

mined the demand from the taxpayer. Nor was there a remedy. The publicani were mostly Roman knights the order from which the judges were chosen. They were the capitalists of the empire, and formed companies to take up the larger contracts, and these companies. Ilke some even in the present day, were more concerned about the amount of their dividends than the means of obtaining them. Complaints could only be laid before an official who might himself intend to farm the same taxes at a future time, or who was a partner in the company, that farmed them at the moment. Thus safe from the law, the oppression and extortion practised by the collectors were incleable. The rural population were especially ground down by their chactions. A favourite plan was to advance money to those unable to pay demands, and thus make the borrowers private debtors, whose whole property was erelong confiscated by the usurlous interest required.

cated by the usurious interest, required. Cæsar has left us a vivid picture of the fate of a Roman province in matters of taxation. Speaking of Pius Scipio, the proconsul of Syria in B. c. 48, he tells us that he made large requisitions of money on the towns, and exacted from the farmers of the taxes the amount of two years' payment, then due to the Roman treasury, and also demanded as a loan, the sum which would be due for the next year. All this extortion, we may he sure, would have to be more than made up by the unfortunate provincials. Having brought his troops to Pergamum, one of the chief cities of the province of Asia, he guartered them for the winter in the richest cities, and quieted their discontent by great bounties, and by giving up the tewns to them to plunder. The money requisitions levied by him on the province were exacted with the utmost severity, and many devices were invented to satisfy the ancement's manedity. A head tax was imposed on all, both slave rowers, milit If snything c was nuposed. even over sm his power no and the best swarmed wit was due for t enormous inte had to borrow .all. Nor did for additional on the separat Cilicia, found he freed many ous usury and province had his predecesso more like that Romans thems provincials un degree for the Jesus grew t a system, the last the Senat sent Germanic towards calmin a deputation to by the crushin Falestine by t family, is incid of the most fre the creditor, at stroying the en like the Jews. king as bankru the steward. should drink is The creditor m him to prison, sells him, his w debt. Oil and by the rich ma want of means.

a single pearl, the ground, to and free: tax

an

e in

con-

hese vorst

Cách i the id by oman were p the resent

n the re an

iture

at, the

pracwere

vas to te the

confis-

vince

sul of noney

mount

so der. All ide up o Perrtered ontent ler

xacted satisfy slave

and free: taxes were laid on optimins and doors: corn, soldiers arms, rowers, military engines and conveyances, were taken by routistion. If anything could be thought of as a pretext for a new lax the tax was imposed. Men with military authority were set over crites, and even over small villages and petty fortified places; and he who used his power most harship and remorselessly, was thought the best man and the best criter. The province was full of lictors and barning; it swarmed with officials and extortioners, who demanded more than was due for the taxes, as gain for themselves." In addition to all this enormous interest was asked, as is usual in time of war, from all who had to borrow, which many needed to do, as the taxes were levied on all. Nor did these exactions save the Roman citizens of the province, for additional fixed sums were levied on the several communes, and on the separate towns. Cicero, on his entry on the proconsulate of Cilicia, found things equally sad in that province." He tells us that he freed many cities from the most crushing taxation, and from ruinous usury, and even from debts charged against them falsely. The province had been nearly runned by the oppressions and rapacity of his predecessor, whose conduct, he says, had been monstrous, and nore like that of a savage wild heast than a man. Such pletures, by Romans themselves, leave us to imagine the misery of the wretched provincials under proconsuls and procurators, and account in no small degree for the recklessness of Judea under the Roman yoke. Jesus grew up to manhood amidst universal murmuns against such system, the discontent becoming more serious year by year. At last the Senate, on the recommendation of the Emperor Therius, sent Germanicus, the Emperor's nephew, to Syria, as a necessary step towards calming the popular excitement. "The Jews'had already sent' a deputation to Rome, to represent the ruin brought on their country by the crushing weight of the taxes. The deepening exhaustion of Palestine by the fiscal oppression of the Romans, and of Herod's family, is incidentally implied in many passages of the Gospels. One of the most frequent allusions in Christ's discourses is to the debior. the creditor, and the prison. The blind misrule that was slowly destroying the empire full with special weight on an agricultural people like the Jews. In one parable, Jesus represents every one but the king as bankrupt. The steward owes the king and the servant owes the steward. The question what they should eat and what they should drink is assumed as the most pressing, with the common man. The creditor meets the debtor in the street, and straightway commits him to prison, till he pay the uttermost farthing, and, if that fails, sells him, his wife, his children, and all that he lias, to make up his debt." Oil and wheat, the first necessaries of life, are largely cluimed by the rich man's steward, Buildings have to be left unfinished for. want of means. The merchant invests his money, to make it sufe, in a single pearl which he can easily hide. Many bury then money in the ground, to save it from the oppressor. Speculators keep buck their grais from the market, and enlarge their barns. Instead of a field which needed the plough the spade suffices. What shall I do?" says the ruined householder. 'I cannot dig, I am schemed, to beg.' In the train of scarcity of money comes the usure, who slone is prosperous, speedily increasing his capital five or oven ten times. This state of things is constantly assumed in the Gospels, and it grew worse and worse through the whole life of our Lord, culminating in a great financial crisis, throughout the empire, a few years after the Crucilizion.

The material ruin which Rome had brought on the land, naturally increased the prevailing excitement, and the bands of florce religioninto which lurked in the hill-country constantly received additions from those whom the evil times had beggared. The popular mind was kept in permanent agitation by some tale of insuit to the Law on the part of the Romans. At one time they had 'defiled the feasts.' at another, a military standard had been shown in Jerusalem, or a heathen emblem brought into the Temple, or a votive tablet set, up on Mount Zion, or a heathen sculpture had been discovered on some new public building. Real or imagined offences were never, wanting. Now, it was heard with horror, that a procurater had plundered the Temple treasures; then a Roman soldier had torn a copy of the Law; or a heathen had passed into the forbidden caut of the Temple, or some Gentile child, in his-boylsh sport, had mocked some Jew. Tha most trifling rumours or incidents became grave from the passion they excited, and the handreds or thousands of lives lost in the tumults they kindled. The heart of the whole country glowed at while heat, and ominous flashes continually warned Cæsar of the catastrophe approaching.

The excitement caused by the inquisitorial census of persons and property by Quirinfus was intense. Herod and Archelaus had been careful to avoid direct similarity to the Temple teath in their latetion and possibly it was because the revenue had to be raised in any circuitous way; to prevent collision with the popular prejudices, that the imposts these princes had levied—tolls, house, tax, excise, market tax, head tax, salt tax, crown tax, and custom dues,—had pressed on the nation so heavily. Augustus had waived the introduction of the Roman modes of taxation, from similar motives of prudence, and Herod, while he had taxed produce, took care to avoid requiring a tenth. But Quirinius had no such scruples, and at once kindled the fiercest resistance. The whole nation saw in the tithe on grain, and the two tenths on wine and fruit, an encroachment on the rights of Jehovah. A leading Rabbi—Zadek—headed the opposition in his on the imagin prudence or p

he failed utter!

imperishable in Irrecoficilables and pitiless fan

frightful excess

The cry which in part, the im mingled with a 'No Lord but Zealot." It was dues to a heath to give tithes or them was the en ment if a Jaw

ANT

d to lone mes. grew ag in r the

Allin

FERTER

ioit or

(SNOD)

mind aw qu aaja a or a

HP QH

anting. ad the e Law;

ple of Tho n they imults

e heat, trophs

(inden)

ha and been taxain any

s, that

market

sed on

of the ring a

ed the

n, and his of in his urally igion-

class, and joined Judas, the Galliman, who again appeared in the field, calling on all to take arms. The Rabhis inveighed egenet the pro-posals of Quirinius, but he cared nothing for their theology, and as he had broken the mountaineers of Cilicis by starvation, he felt no doubt that he could keep order, in spite of resistance, among the Jews, Ambition, love of money, and military rule, were the only thought of the rough, coarse soldier. At first it seemed as if he would succeed. The high print, Joazer, a Herodian of the house of Boethos, openly took his side, and persuaded the people in Jerusalem to let the census and registration go on quietly. The Rabbis temporized, and seemed inclined to take the safer side. But this did not content the whole body. The more determined were weary of the endless discussions and trifling of the Synagogue, and broke away from their brethren, to found a new school-that of the "Zealota" which henceforth carried in its hand the fate of the ration. The fanatics of Judaism-their one sleepless thought was war with Rome. They were the counterpasts and reprorentatives of the stern puritans of the Maccabean times, and took their name, as well as their inspiration, from the words of the dying Mattathias—"He ZEALOTS, my sone, for the Law, and give your lives for the covenant of your fathers." The exhortations of their brethren, to submit quietly to the government, were answered in the words of the early patriots— Whoever takes on him the yoke of the Law is no longer under that of man, but he who casts off the Law, has man's yoke laid on him. Thus, the foreboding that this numbering of the people, like that of David, would bring death in its train, was not unaccomplished, The flerce ruin broke forth from Gamala, on the See of Gennesareth a district in which the census was not to be taken; and the destroying angel who passed through the land was Judas the Gailtean Judis is one of those ideal forms which have an abiding influence on the imagination: an enthusiast, raised above all calculations of prudence or possibility, but so grand in his enthusiasm, that while he failed atteriy in his immediate aim, he more than triumphed in the imperishable influence of his example. He was the first of the stem Irreconcilables of his nation, and from his initiative sprang the fierce and pitiless fanatics whose violence led, two generations later, to the frightful excesses of the great revolt, and to the ruin of the nation. The cry which drew round him the youth of the country, had been, in part, the inarticulate longing of countless poble souls, though mingled with a spirit of proscription they would have repudiated. "No Lord but Jehovah: no tax but to the Temple: no friend but a Zealot." It was idelatry to pay homage to Gesari idelatry to pays dues to a heathen government; it was defilement of what was pure.

to give tithes or custom from it to the Unclean, and he who demanded them was the enemy of God, and of Israel, worthy of double punishment if a Jew. War with Rome, and with their brethren willing to

of, which the

pcople, The tions, Altho East, the esti value of all t derived from gustus might The opposi suppressed, w

The Rabbis st heathen empe to the displeas · purity of the smell of the fi

that which had especially resp said they, th tion constantly tax should be The hatred under such ei publicani farm

The bitter relea bounds: As th the Jews had such as thx. "tax gatherers way tooblers" i publicans becar

The Pharisee st air poisoned wi who had sold h publican was sit at table, with the ideal of anc their money set them, or to acce demanded speci connect themsel munity, they to lived in reckless for the liatred a make as much a imposition at the

lessness in the co

a daily occurrent Wax against the s live at pasce with 16, were allier proclaimed." Fire and sword waged the land. The country house of the rich Sadducce, and the ricks inter-barns of the well-to-do friend of Rome, everywhere went up in flames, at the first conflict of the ride but fiercely brave patriots with the Roman soldiery. Like our own Fifth Monarchy men, they be-lieved that the kingdom of God could be set up only by the sword. In the stern spirit of the Old Testament, they thought only of hewing Agag in pieces before the Lord, believing themselves God's instruments to rid the land of His enemies, who were, in effect in their view, all, but themselves and their supporters. He was a jealous God, who would suffer no other lords in His inheritance, and His will was a war of extermination on the heathen invaders, like that of Joshua against the Canaanites.

From the Nazareth hills, Jesus, as a growing boy, saw, daily, the smoke of hurning villages, and in Joseph's cottage, as in all others in the land, every heart beat thick, for long weeks, at the hourly news of some fresh story of blood. But the insurrection was erelong suppressed; Judas dying in the struggle. The terrible story how over, was never forgotten. Many years after, Gamaliel could remind the authorities how, "the Galilean drew sway much people after him, but perished, and as many as obeyed him were dispersed." Even the Romans learned a lesson, and never attempted another census, the proconsul Cestus Gallus, even so late as the reign of Nero. being content to reckon in the Jewish manner, by the number of Passover lambs. To the people at large, Judas and his sons were a new race of Maccabasan heroes, for the sons Jacobus, Simon, Menn-hom, and Eleazar, in after years, carried out the work of their father with a splendid devotion. None of the four died in bed. They either fell in battle against Rome, or by their own hand, to prevent their being taken alive. When all Judea had been lost but the rock of Masada, it was a grandson of Judas who was in command of that last oltidel of his race, and boasted to his comrades that as his family were the first who rose against the heathen, so they were the last who continued to fight against them, and it was be, who, when all hope had perished, slew, by their own consent, the 900 men who were shut up with him, and set the fortress in flames, that Rome might find nothing over which to griumph but ashes and coppes. The grand self immolation of Judas became a deathless example, and kept Rome uneasy for sevenly years, nor is Josephus wrong in say. ing that though the insurrection lasted bardly two months, it kindled a spirit which reduced Palestine to a desert, destroyed the Temple, and scattered Israel over the earth. Galilee and Judea never showed their lofty idealism more strikingly than in producing such leaders, or in continuing to believe in them after their disastrous end.

Meanwhile Quininius had gained his point in a measure, and the poll and ground taxes were imposed on the Roman plan, by the close of the year. But nothing was done to lighten the previous burdens, of which the house and market taxes, especially, were hateful to the people. The fiscal result, however, was far below Roman expectations. Although Herod had been regarded as the richest king of the East, the estimate forwarded by Quirinius to the Emperor, of the value of all the taxes, smoonted to been than a twelfth part of the sum derived from Egypt. The computation was sent for each tax, that Augustus might sanction it, and let it be put up for sale to the publicant. The opposition to this heathen taxation, though thus outwardly suppressed, was only nursed the more closely in the hearts of all. The Habbia still taught that the land was defiled by dues paid to a heathen emperor, and attributed every real of fancied natural calamity to the displeasure of the Almighty for their being so. "Since the purity of the fruit are gone." The Roman tithe soon told fatally on that which had hitherto been paid to the Temple, and this the Rabbis especially resented. "Since the tithes are no longer regularly paid." said they, "the yield of the fields has grown less." Hence the question constantly passed from mouth to mouth, not whether the Roman tax should be paid, but whether it was lawful at all to pay it.

dod,

WAS

shua

news long

how atter Even

nsus;

Nero

ver of vere a

Menafather They revent if the and of

as his re the

when who

Rome

prpses.

le, and n say-

indled

howed eaders,

nd the e close

The hatred and contempt for those of their countrymen who, under such encumstances, took service under the associations of publicant farming the odious taxes, as collectors, may be imagined. The bitter relentles contempt and loathing towards them knew no bounds. As the Greeks spoke of "tax-gatherers and sycophants." the Jews had slways ready a similarly odious association of terms, such as "tax-gatherers and sinners," "tax-gatherers and heathen," "tax gatherers and prostitutes," "tax-gatherers, murderers, and high way roobers," in speaking of them. Driven from society, the local publicans became more and more the Pariahs of the Jewish world. The Pharisee stepped aside with pious horror, to avoid breathing the air poisoned with the breath of the lost son of the House of Israel, who had sold miniself to a calling so infamous. The testimony of a publican was not taken in a Jewish rourt. It was forbidden to sit at table with him, or to eat his bread. The gains of the class were the ideal of uncleanness, and were especially shunned, every piece of their money serving to mark a religious offence. To change coin for them, or to accept aims from them, defiled a whole household; and demanded special purifications. Only the dregs of the people would connect themselves with a calling so hated. Cast out by the community, they too often justified the bad repute of their order, and lived in rockless dissipation and profligacy. To revenge themselves for the hatred shown them, their only thought, not seldom, was to notice as much as they could from their office. The most shameless imposition at the "receipts of custom," and the most hardened reck-lessness in the collection of excessive or fraudulent charges, became a daily occurrence. They repaid the war against themselves by a worthy,

estine w

authority

among ro

desolate.

" The fir

comparat

maxim to safely do

procurato

cay of he

Roman ro

each cour

ions, and with inter

son, the 'j

Roman, w

where, he

On the co

of the Dis

tioned the

this, he ac

Rome; for

been so nu

on the fart

he acted w

ligion, the

Jewish Co

he ordered

offered at ]

and other

sels for the

This pol

Rome of b

among the

their religi

not conten

West, first

then by Ch

Bat, in s

their pecul

wient. Th

more boldh

the banish

consequenc

under them

he took, 1

Amidst such a state of feeling between rulers and ruled, Jesus grew up to manhood and spent His life. The sleepy East could not endure the systematic and restless ways of the West, now forced upon it, and, still less, the regular visit of the tax-gatherer, especially under such a vicious system as that of Rome. War, as far is possible, became the chronic state of things, if not in the open field, yet in never-ending, ever-beginning resistance, all over the land. Even the mild school of Hillel justified the use of any means of escape from the robbery of the "publicans," and the Rabbis a large made the subject a standing topic in their schools. Controversies sprang up in connection with it. The Irreconcilables, as I may call the Zealots, could not brook even the slightconcessions to Rome of the hitherto-popular Pharisees. It was made a matter of reproach to them that they put the name of the Emperor along with that of Moses in letters of divorce, and the dispute was ended only by Hillel's party reminding its opponents that this was already sanctioned by Scripture itself, which allowed the name of Pharoah to stand beside that of Jehovah.

Before Quirinius left Jerusalem, he made one concession to the people, by sacrificing to their hatred the instrument of his tyrannythe High Priest, Joazar. After helping to get the census carried out, and thus losing all popular respect, the time-serving priest was stripped of his dignity by the master who had despised even while he made use of him, and it was given to Annas, the son of Seth, in whose family it was held, at intervals, for over fifty years. But though his house was thus permanently ennobled, its taking office under the Romans, no less than its belonging to the party of the Sadducees, made it, henceforth, of no weight in the destiny of the nation The Zealots were steadily rising to be a great party in the land. The noblest spirits flocked to their banner most readily, as we may judge when we remember, that one of the Apostles had been a Zealot, and that the young Saul also joined them. The young men, especially, swelled their numbers, ""Our youth," laments Josephus, "brought the State to ruin, by their fanatical devotion to the ferocious creed this party adopted." Its principles were, indeed, destructive of all government, as things were. "He who was under the Law;" it was held, "was free from all other authority." Its members were pledged to honour Jehovah alone as King of Israel, and neither to shrink from death for themselves nor from the murder of their nearest kin, if it promised to serve the cause of liberty, as they understood it. The family of the fallen Judas remained at the head of these flerce patriots. Two of his sons were afterwards crucified for raising an insurrection, and while his third son, Menahem, by the taking of Masada, was the first to begin the final war against Florus, his grandson, Eleazar, was the last who fought against the Romans, burying himself, as has been told, and the wreck of the Zealots, boneath the runs of the fortress, rather than surrender. It is note worthy, moreover, that from the date of the census, no part of Palestine was less safe than that which was directly under Roman authority. If the traveller between Jericho and Jerusalem fell among robbers, what must have been the danger in the lonely and desolate valleys beyond Hebron? These measure autionant contribution The first seven years after the annexation were, notwithstanding, comparatively happy times for the Jews. Augustus made it his maxim to spare rather than destroy the provinces, so far hs he could safely do so; and he furthered this policy by frequent change of the procurators." As to the burning religious questions raised by the dccay of heathenism, and the spread of Eastern religions in the empire. he took, by advice of Meccenas, a middle course. He supported the Roman religion, but, at the same time, protected the special faith of each country. Hence, although he personally despised foreign religions, and offered no sacrifices when in Jerusalem, even while asking with interest about the Jewish God, and though he praised his grandson, the young Calus Gasar, for passing through Jerusalem like a Roman, without making an offering, yet, like Cæsar and Cicero, elsewhere, he would by no means do any violence to the Jewish religion. On the contrary, he yielded to the wish of Herod by taking the Jews of the Dispersion under his protection, as Cæsar had done, and sanctioned the remittance of the Temple money from all parts. Besides this, he acted with the greatest consideration towards the Jews in Rome; for since the campaigns of Pompey and Gabinius, they had been so numerous in the capital that they formed a great "quarter" on the farther side of the river. Treating them as clients of Oæsar, he acted with marked thoughtfulness in all connected with their religion, their morals, of their prosperity. He formally sanctioned the Jewish Council in Alexandria, and, after the annexation of Judea, he ordered a permanent daily sacrifice of an ox and two lambs to be offered at his expense, and, in conjunction with the Empress Livia, and other members of his house, sent gifts of precious jars and vessels for the use of the drink-offering of functions helie as relations of "This policy was not without its effect." Augustus got the fame, in Rome of being the patron of the Jews, and in the provinces, even among the Jews themselves, of being the magnanimous protector of their religion. His tolerance, moreover, served an end which he did not contemplate. It secured the slow but certain conquest of the West, first by Judaism, the pioneer of a new and higher faith, and then by Christianity—the faith for which it had prepared the way. But, in spite of every desire on the part of Augustus to humour their peculiarities, the Jews were still in a state of chronic excitement. The Sumaritans seeing their opportunity, raised their heads more boldly." They were no longer dependent on Jerusalem, since the banishment of Archelaus. Their elders rejoiced in political consequence long denied them. But the light and giddy people under them could not make thight use of literty. Under Coponius.

ed. Jesus could not w forced especially ar as posfield, yet d. Even of escape arge made es sprang y call the nne of the proach to th that of ly by Hilsanctioned stand benion to the tyrannyarried out, was strip-1 while he of Seth; in ears. But king office of the Sadof the naarty in the dily, as we had been a roung men, s Josephus, o the feroed. destrucunder the Its mem-Israel, and ty, as they at the head is crucified hem, by the inst Florus, ne Romans, he Zealots, -It is alle the first procurator after Archelaus was deposed, it was discovered a that they had defied the Temple at Jerusalem on the night before the Passover. The Temple doors, as was the custom, had been opened at midnight, before the feast, and some Samaritans, knowing this, and having previously snuggled themselves into Jerusalem, had crept up to the Temple in the darkness, and strewed human bones in the courts, so that the high priest Hannas had to turn away from the polluted sanctuary the worshippers who in the morning thronged the gates. Nothing remained for the vast multitudes but to go back embittered to their homes, leaving the Temple to be purified, but nothing is said of any punishment of the Samaritans. The procurator seems only to have told the Jews that they should have kept a before watch.

Little is known of the two procurators Marcus Ambivius and Annius Rufus, who followed Coponius except that Judea, exhausted by its burdens, implored their diminution, and that, under the first, Salome, Herod's sister, died, while Augustus, himself, died under the second and containing the diminution and that, and on the first,

The new emperor, Tiberius, on his accession, sent a fresh procurator, Valerius Gratus, whom, with his dislike of change, he retained in office for eleven years. Under him things went from had to worse. During his period of office he changed the high priests five times. deposing Hannas, and giving the office alternately to one of his family and to a rival house of the small band of Sadducean Temple nobility. Large sums no doubt filled his coffers at each transaction, but such a degradation of their highest dignitaries must have exasperated the Jews to the quick. After the crafty Hannas came, as his successor, one Ismael, but his reign was only one year long. Hannas' son Eleazer, next won the pontifical mitre for a year, then came Simon, but he, too, had to make way for a successor. Caiaphas, son, in law of Hannas, afterwards the judge of Jesus. Simon is famous in Rabbinical annals for a misfortune that befell him in the night. before the Day of Atonement. To while away the long hours, dure ing which he was not permitted to sleep, he amused himself by conversation with an Arab sheikh, but, to his dismay, the heathen, in his hasty utterance, let a speck of spittle fall on the priestly robe, and thus made its wearer unclean, so that his brother had to take his place in the rites of the approaching day. Changes so violent and corrupt had at last degraded the high priesthood so much, in the eyes of all, that the deposed Hannas, rather than his successors, was still regarded as the true high priest. J. Sall C. E. L. Januar in sull to be neisio Meanwhile, the load of the public taxes became so unendurable that a deputation was cent to Rome in the year 17, to entreat some alleviation of the misery. Syria as a whole, indeed, seemed on the brink of an insurrection, from the oppression of the publicans. Germanicus, the Emperor's nephew, one of the noblest men of his day, was sent to the East to quiet the troubles; but, unfortunately, with him was sent, as Governoi soon involve between the hatefulness ( but in proloa was wont to a short time render it he he can bulf ou will grow w has extorted campaigns,"3: wounded sold ing flesh to A thinking him begged him n flies away you full, and do hungry ones h from mer Brief far enough fre up the wound hated Jews. ness, and his he drove the J with this supe arms, were shi ber hordes. 11 I rest were requi customs by a pelled them t boasts that the to breaking th In Judea th hated favourit alarm that the jamuso was at recalled, and was worthy of ingraina blood, cision at critica in Judeam He people of Jerus left the orname Cæsarea, since by the presend which they im

reredes

e the

this, d

, had ies in

m the a

d the

noth-

irator

better.

s and

first,

ler the procu-

worse.

times of his i

action

elexas-

[annas]

came

8. SON-D

famous night,

rs, dur-) by con-

, in his be, and

ake his

he eyes was still

bi itolaio

allevia-

brink of hanicus.

s sent to tes dent

1: 2120

as Governor-General of Syria: Cnelus Piso his devily enemy, who soop involved him in personal disputes that well-nigh excited a war between them. Tiberius able and cautious, and not yet fallen to the hatefulness of his later years, saw no remedy for the state of things but in prolonging the reign of the procurators dath Every office," he was wont to say, "induces greed, and if the holder enjoy it only for a short time, without knowing at what moment he may have to surrender it he will naturally plunder his subjects to the utmost, while he can built on the other hand, he hold it for a longthened term, he will grow weary of oppression, and become moderate as soon as he has extorted for himself what he thinks enough." On one of my campaigns," he would add, by way of illustration, "I came upon a wounded soldier, lying on the road, with swarms of flies in his bleed. ing fleshuld A comrade pitying him; was about to drive them off, thinking him too weak to do it himself. But the wounded man begged him rather to let them alone, for, said he, if you drive these flies away you will do me harm instead of good. They are already full, and do not bite me as they did, but if you frighten them off. hungry ones will come in their stead, and suck the last drop of blood from mer Hill The heartless cynic in the purple had no pity and was far enough from a thought of blaying the Good Samaritan, by binding up the wounds of any of the races under him, far less those of the hated Jews In Rome itself he treated them with the bitterest harshness, and his example reacted on those in Palestine. In the year 19 he drove the Jews out of Rome! "Four thousand freedmen infected with this superstition" (Judaism), says Tacitus, "being able to carry arms, were shipped off to the island of Sardinia to put down the robber hordes. "If they perished from the climate it was little loss. The rest were required to leave Italy, if they did not forswear their unholy customs by a certain day." Suctonius says that Tiberius even compelled them to burn their sacred robes and utensils, but Josephus boasts that those drafted into the legions preferred dying as martyrs. to breaking the Law My Swo shift of This Head Add A HE THE ALL AND In Juden these measures were attributed to the influence of the hated favourite of Tiberius, Sejanus, A It was, doubtless, with no little, alarm that the news came in the year 26, when the influence of Sejanus was at its height, that Valerius Gratus had at length been recalled and Pontius Pilate appointed in his stead. The client was worthy of the patron, Venal, covetous, cruel, even to delightingting block without principle or remorse, and yet wanting decision at critical moments, his name soon became specially infamous in Judean He bore himself in the most offensive way towards the people of Jerusalem. The garrison of Antonia had hitherto always. left the ornaments of their military standards at the headquarters in Cæsarea, since the Jews would not suffer the Holy City to be profaned by the presence of the engles and the busts of the emperors of which they mainly consisted. But Pilate apparently on the first

pil pid Theorem vine mined wh change of the garrison, ordered the new regiments to enter the city by night with the offensive emblems on their standards, and Jerusalem awoke to see idolatrous symbols planted within sight of the Temple. Universal excitement spread through the city, and the Rabbis and people took mutual counsel how the outrage could be removed. The country soon began to pour in its multitudes. The violent party counselled force, but the more sensible prevailed as yet, and a multitude of the citizens hurried off to Pllate at Casarea, to entreat him to take away the cause of such bitter offence. But Pilate would not listen, and treated the request as an affront to the Emperor. Still the crowds continued their appeal. For five days and five nights they beset the palace of Herod in which Pilate resided, raising continually the same cry, that the standards might be removed. Determined to end the matter, he at last summoned them to meet him on the seventh day in the circus. Meanwhile, he had, filled the spaces round the arena with soldiers, and when the Jews began to raise their mutinous cries again, on his refusing to yield, he ordered the troops to enter with drawn swords. But he had miscounted their fanatical earnestness. Baring their throats, and kneeling as if to meet the sword, the multitude cried out that they would rather part with their life than their law. Pilate, dreading the anger of the Emperor if he commanded a wholesale massacre, had to yield, and the standards were withdrawn from Jorusalem sind of the how on the and press by the the mark the structure

The power of Pilate over the people was henceforth broken. They had conquered his will by stronger wills of their own. From this time they knew how to extort concessions from him. Persistent clamour, that would take no refusal, was, henceforward, their most trusted reliance, as we see only too strikingly in the last hours of Jesus, But Pilate could not learn by any lesson, however severe. Furious at his defeat he resolved to hide it by a fresh innovation, which he fancied he could carry out. The Rabbis had ogntended that their law did not allow the setting up of images, but there seemed nothing to prevent votive tablets being set up in Jerusalem, like those dedicated to the Emperor by other officials. He, therefore, hung up golden shields of this kind on the palace on Mount Zion, where he lived, inscribed simply with his own name and that of Tiberius, A terrible commotion was the result. At the next feast, the Jews, with the four sons of Herod, Philip, Antipas, Herod Boethos, and i hasael, at their head, declared that such symbols, which were equivalent to altars, were less endurable than the emblems on the standards. "Cease," cried they, as he fiercely dismissed them, "to stir up war and commotion. The Emperor is not honoured by insults offered to the Law. It is the will of Tiberius that our laws shall be respected, but if not, show us the edict, or new rescript, which says otherwise, that we may send an embassy respecting it to him." Pilate trembled when he heard of a complaint to Tiberius, for he was afraid, as Philo tells us, that a deputation to Rome would reveal all his crimes, "the venality on that the

BU BERY BALL

Allo cells us

VILLALION

206 he city

Jerusa-

e Tem-

Rabbis moved.

it party

multi-

him to

not lisstill the tinually ined to

seventh und the

utinous to enter

estness. e multiwholewn from

1. They

rom this

ersistent eir most hours of novation,

e seemed ike those hung up n, where Tiberius.

he Jews, thos, and re.equiv-tandards. ir up war offered to ected, but e, that we when he a tells us, e venality of his sentences, his rapacity, his having ruined whole families, and all the shameless deeds he had done, the numerous executions he had ordered, of persons who had not been condemned by any tribunal, and the excess of cruelties of every kind committed by him." He had gone too far, however, to retreat, and had to leave matters to the decision of the Emperor, but as Herod Antipas had the car of Tiberius. and willingly sided with the people, the procurator was defeated once more. The command of Tiberius was directly against him, and he wis ordered to take away the shields, and harg them up in the temple of Augustus, at Carsarea. The Jews consoled themselves that the Emperor was gravely offended at Pllate's folly. Henceforth, the clamour of the multitude nearly always succeeded Before long he found himself involved in another conflict with the people, in carrying out a work which was unquestionably of the highest value to Jerusalem, and for which he had already obtained the sanction of the Jewish authorities. The conduit which supplied the city and the Temple with water, had grown ruinous from age, and Filate undertook to build a grand new aqueduct, twenty-five miles in length, which should bring a full and pure supply for the Temple and the citizens. As the Temple was to be benefited, he naturally shought that he might defray the expense from its treasury forgetting that the money was Curban, or consecrated to God. Hardly had the news of his intention spread, than, at the next feast, a frantic cry rose that the Temple was to be plundered, and thousands, streamed to the palace, to repeat the tactics of Casarea. But the prochrator had this time prepared himself beforehand. He had scattered numbers of his soldiers, dressed as Jews, among the crowds, and no sooner had the tumultuous cries begun, than these assailed those round them with clubs, and speedily drove them off in wild terror, leaving many of then number, severely wounded, behind. Perhaps it was about this time, when the works had been pushed almost to the Pool of Siloam, that the tower, there, fell and killed eighteen men; a calamity attributed by the Rabbis so the wrath of God at the secularization of the Temple treasures. Pilate's squeduct suffered no more hindrance in its completion. Le level in a single singly with near the same internet of the formation of the level of the lev

007

tom sollings about facher Holmid did ridamirzigo associasi seria as solitaria bier solitari di successi seria di solitari di successi di solitari di s

On the death of his father Herod, Galilee fell to the lot of Herod Antipas, who ruled over it during nearly all the lifetime of our Lord, and for six years after His death. His mother was the Samaritan, Malthace, so that he was a full brother of Archelaus, who was about a year older. He had been sent to Rome, for his education, with Archelaus and his half-brother Philip, when a boy of about thirtcen, and the three had been entrusted there to the care of a private guar-dian. The avil genius of their house, their half-brother Antipater, who was much their senior, was already living in the imperial city. He had always hated Archelaus and Philip, as rivals in his hopes of the throne, and now took every opportunity to slander them to their i father, so that, perhaps in consequence of this, they were recalled to Judea in the year B.C. 5. But this only made Antipater the more deadly in his hatred, and he succeeded in so poisoning their father's mind against them, that they almost dreaded sharing the fate of the two sons of Marianne, who had fallen through the same fatal influence. Antipas, who had escaped Antipater's wiles, seemed likely to profit most by the misfortune, for, in his second will, made after the execution of Antipater, Herod, unable to clear his mind of the prejudice against them, had passed over both Archelaus and Philip, and named Antipas, the youngest, as his successor. Kindlier thoughts, however, returned before he actually died, and a third will was made, in which Archelaus was named king, and Antipas and Phillip te-trarchs, their father's dominions being divided between them. Antipas had received his name in honour of his paternal greatgrandfather, as Antipater, his half-brother, had received that of his grandfather. In Rome, by a strange fortune, he had for a companlop and fellow-scholar, one whose after-life was very different from his own-a lad named Menahem, who afterwards became a Christian teacher in Antioch. Antipas staid at school, in Rome, after Archelaus and Philip had been recalled to Judea, his quiet, peace-loving disposition having protected him, in some measure, from the slanders of Antipater, and from the distrust of his father. He was, however, by no means wanting in ability, else so shrewd a man as Herod would never have thought of making him his sole successor; nor could he, otherwise; have been supported, as he was, before Augustus, by Salome and the family, and by the leading men of Herod's government, in his suit for the crown, in preference to Archelaus. That prince, hated by nearly every one, found himself vigorously opposed by Antipas, and gained his cause only with mortifying abasements. Salome and Herod's counsellors may have put Antipas forward to serve their of his claim ful way.

When he about seven lee was in t the territory completely. that they ra Under the Ptolemy, the kingdom, w the wars, an of Galilee he which lay on made it his c protection a been taken Varus, who town, Ptolen insurrection to death whe cliffs of Arbe liabitants as Jesus, in His it lay, full in reth, to which Having thu site, outlying and was expe of the Dead that region, 1 and towers, defences, bui Romans in th nable, and A another of its to earn his d its walls. B theneighbou allied himsel empress-moth 13, had mad called Livias. She Dead Fica of Jamnia an Archelais in serve their own ends, but he had, himself, shown in the management of his claim, that, if quiet, he was none the less ambitious in a peaceful way.

neriya: Sinizo

a ar shuft

wFW.~..

100-377.001

Herod

r Lord,

naritan.

s about n, with hirtcen.

te guar-

tipater,

ial city.

lopes of

to their i

he more father's

e of the

tal influ-

likely to

after the ie preju-

ilip, and

houghts,

as made.

hillp' te-

al great-

at of his compan-

ent from

Christian

er Arche-

ce-loving

slanders

however,

od would

could he.

ustus, by

's govern-

1s. That

r opposed

asements.

prward to

When he entered on his government, in the year B.C. 4, he was about seventeen years old: His provinces were wide apart, for Galilee was in the north-west, and Perea in the south-east of the country, the territory of the free towns, known as Decapolis, separating them completely. They were both, however, so rich, especially Galilee, that they ranked as second in the paternal inheritance.

Under the wise guidance of his father's counsellors, Irenaus and Ptolemy, the care of Antipas was first turned to the repair of his kingdom, which had been sadly injured by the Romans and Arabs in the wars, and to the necessary security of his throne. In the south of Galilee he rebuilt and strongly fortified the town of Sepphoris,which lay on an isolated hill; only two hours north of Nazareth, -and made it his capital, and at once the ornament of his kingdom, and its protection against Syro-Phenician, or even Roman attack. It had been taken and burned to the ground by the son of the proconsul Varus, who had marched against it from the neighbouring garrison town, Ptolemais, in the summer of the year B.C. 4, on occasion of the insurrection of Judas, the son of that Hezekiah whom Herod had put to death when he routed his band in the caverns of the 800 feet high cliffs of Arbela, on the Sea of Gennesareth. Varus had sold the inliabitants as slaves, but Antipas brought others and repeopled it. Jesus. In His early childhood, must have seen the town building, for it lay, full in view, at a short distance from the hill-top behind Nazareth, to which He often wandered.

Having thus secured his northern frontier, he turned to the opposite, outlying, extremity, where Perea bordered the Nabatean kingdom and was exposed to the Arabs, about half-way down the eastern edge of the Dead Sea. Among the precipitous volcanic cliffs and peaks of that region, he strengthened the fortress of Machaerus by high walls and towers, adding a residence for himself within its circuit. The defences, built at first by Alexander Jannæus, but destroyed by the Romans in the old Asmonean wars, were now made almost impregnable, and Antipas could boast of having secured his kingdom at another of its weakest points. He little thought that he himself was to carn his darkest stain by the execution of a lonely prisoner within its walls. But he did not trust to strong walls alone. He dreaded the neighbouring Arab prince Aretas as his most probable enemy, and allied himself with him by marrying his daughter. To flatter the empress-mother, Livia, whom Salome, at her death, A.D. about 10-. 13, had made her helr, and his neighbour, he built a town which he called Livias, on the site of the old Beth Harum, at the upper end of Sie Dead Sea. From Salome Livia had obtained, besides, the town of Jamnia and its district, in the Philistine plain, and Phasaelis and Archelais in the valley of the Jordan, close to his own borders, so that he wished to be on good terms with her. I Besides Julia was at the time in favour with the Jews, for having given golden jars and dishes, and other costly offerings to the Temple is day all of prisming In the first part of his reign, under Augustus, from the year A.D. 4 to 14 Antipas maintained a predent pestraint, for ho had had no success in the single attempt he ventured towards a more intimate relation tion with the Emperor. On the hanishment of Archelaus he had sought to become his heir, and to get his father's dominions as at whole, as had been intended in the second wilk and seemingly had made himself chief accuser of his fallen brother, and of his govern ment. But the answer of Augustus was the annexation of Judes to Syria, leaving Antipas, as his one consolation, the thought that as he was now the only Herod, he might assume the name, as he seems by his coins to have done, from this date; data a fair and have done ability point Likis relations with Tiberius were more fattering to By countless proofs of dependence and obedient fidelity, shown, tioubtless, in partias later, in reports and espionage on the proconsuls, such as the suspicions and despotic emperor loved he succeeded at last, after a probation of a good many years in gaining great fayour with him in To show his gratitude, Antipus, who had grown thed of Sepphoris for his capital, far off among the hills of Galilee, on the borders of his tetrarchyi and among a proud and independent people; determined to build a new one on the Sca of Gennessreth, near the hot springs of Emmans of It was the finest part of his territory, alike for richness of soil and beauty of landscape of The city was of course planned in the Romanistyle, and as under the former emperor, every third town was called Cæsarea or Sebaste, the Greek equivalent of Augustus, the new metropolis was to be called Tiberias. The site chosen was one of the most beautiful on the lake; on a southerly bead of the shore washed on its eastern side by the waves. Yet it was not, for the time. a fortunate one for the ready strand made it unhealthy and still worse traces of an old burial-place were found as the streets were being laid out the discovery which at once brought forward the Rabbis with entreaties that the spot might be abandoned, as thus at once unclean and unholy in But Hered paid no attention to the clamour, and, as soon as some streets were ready, filled the houses with whatever strangers were willing to take them, an Erelong, however, he had to use force to get inhabitants, for no strict Jew would settle of his own accord in a place known to be polluted of He was even driven to give slaves and beggars building and garden ground, and to raise houses for them, and grant them special privileges, before he got his capital peopled. But a prejudice clung to it, which even in after years, made all unclean for seven days after visiting it, and required rites of purification before the defilement could be removed. "Tiberias is only once mentioned in the Gospels, and there is no trace of Jesus having even entered it. But, in spite of all opposition, Herod transferred his residence to it from Sepphoris, and lavishly decorated his palace, to th facade, which offensive to th perial splende gilded and metal dazzled the people, at brass, splendi carried of as horror of the cious enough sides, with Gr day, ruins of blocks of cost splendid villas Still, with a forgotten, A was built, appenditions lat were held dur province were and a castle in built for the ga disputed capita Palestine. Its terest in the n majority, for it for inhabitants. eighteen miles f days, only the s

Galilee has a of Jesus, and t was through its once and again, had most popul He, thus breath mingle, and by almost unconsci

The province partly its north from where Pb castern border. with the territor extent was incon twenty miles fr south, its whole

18:8C

Ditta

IT BEAU

D. 4

suc-

relail

had 10.9

Bagit

vern-

ed to

as he

B by 220011 atless

part

0 8118-

b pro-

Tb

is for

of this

ned to

10 Bac

less of ned in town

us, the us one

shore,

e time.

d. still

s were

e Rab-

at once

mour

what-

he had

of his

iven to o raise

got his in after

equired

liberias

f Jesus

d trans-

ted his palace, to the grief of the people with heathen ornaments, of The facade, which was adorned by sculptures of animals, was especially offensive to the Rabbis. The interior was furnished with almost imperial splendour, and it was long reported how the ceilings were gilded, and what wonderful candelabra and furniture of precious metal dazzled the eyes. When the palace and castle were stormed by the people, at the outbreak of the final war, lustres of Corinthian brass, splendid tables, and whole table services of solid silver, were carried of as plunder. Close to this castle palace to the additional horror of the Jews, he built an amphitheatre, still to be traced, spaclous chough for the greatest assemblies. The city was adorned, be sides with Grecian colonnades and marble statues and even at this day, ruins of fine buildings strow the beach granite columns and blocks of costly marble, porphyry, and syenite, the wreck of the splendid villas of the great ones of Herod's day, when no heathen luxury liad lieen, wantinging right and have bus paral moments should Still, with all this Roman magnificence, the Jewe were not quite forgotten. A synagogue large enough for the greatest congregation, was built, apparently by Herod, in the spacious hall of which, two generations later, the wild revolutionary gatherings of the Galileans were held during the great war with Rome. The archives of the province were transferred, with the seat of government, to Tiberias, and a castle in whose arsenals arms were stored for 20,000 men, was built for the garrison. For the next fifty years, Tiberias was the undisputed capital of Galilee, and, Casarea, exaceted, the finest city of Palestine. Its building was the great theme of local curiosity and interest in the north, for the five years after Jesus had reached Hismajority, for it was begin between A.D. 16 and 19, and was ready for inhabitants, at latest, by the year 22, and it lay only fifteen of eighteen miles from Nazareth. Sephoris was henceforth, till Nerely days, only the second town of the province.

Galilee has a surpassing interest as the special scene of the ministry of Jesus, and the district in which He spent nearly all His life. It was through its lites and villages that He is recorded to have passed, once and again, traching and preaching, and it was in Galilee that He had most popular support. To know something of a land whose air He thus breathed so long, amongst whose people He was wont to mingle, and by whose best characteristics He must have been affected, almost unconsciously, is essential to a vivid realization of His life.

The province lay wholly inland, with Phenicia as its western, and partly its northern neighbour, the small state of Ulatha reaching, from where Phenicia ended, to the Sea of Meron, on the northcastern border. The Jordan marked its eastern limit, and Decapolis, with the territory of Samaria, defined its southern border. Its whole extent was inconsiderable, for it measured little more than seven andtwenty miles from east to west, and five and twenty from north to south, its whole area being nearly, the same as that of Bedford. shire, one of the smallest of our English counties. Its boundaries varied, indeed, at different times, but, at the largest, it was rather like a moderate county than a province. The Tahmud includes Gazares Philippi, twelve and a half miles north of the Ses of Merom, in it, which would bring it in a line wild flie precipious mountain bed of the swift Leontes, where that river turns westward, at a right angle to its former course, and rushes straight to the ocean. In Christ's day, however, Casares Philippi seems to have belonged to the dominious of Philip, rather than those of Antipas, and this was the case, also, with the neighbouring district of Ulaths, though both form the natural boundary of the Galillean region.

Under these steep northern slopes extends a marshy plain, overgrown with tail reeds and swamp grass, and left uninhabited, from its pestilential sir. South of this the waters gather to form Lake Marom, or al Huleh, overgrown with thick reeds, through which the Jordan slowly makes its way. The people of Galilee came to this district at all, only to hunt the wild bear and the buffalo, which roamed through the reed beds, in troops. It was shonned on account of the robbers and fugitives; who were wont to hide among its inaccessible morasses, and reed forests. Population recommences only when this region is passed, increasing as the point is reached where the caravan road between Damascus and Acre crosses the Jordan, near the spot now called Jacob's bridge, and stretches southward towards Tiberias.

The Sea of Tiberias, on which that city stood, was rightly called the Eye of Galilee. In the days of Christ, even more than now, all the spleadour of nature in 'southern lands was poured on its shores. Culture, which left no spot improductive, encircled the blue waters, even yet so enchanting a contrast to the yellow chalk hills that mostly fringe them. The western shore is still bright with many coloured vegetation, while; on the east, the steep hills that sink to the water's edge are bare and gloomy volcanic rocks. The richest, spot on the lake is the plain of Gennesarcth, where, in our Lord's day, all the fruits of Palestine abounded. Even the hills were then covered with trees. Cypresses, oaks; almonds, firs, figs, cedars, citrons, olives, myrtles, palms, and balsams, are enumerated by a contemporary of Jesus as adorning the valleys or hills. The now bare landscaps was then a splendid garden. Oleander bushes, with flowers of the love, liest colours, figs, vines, grain-fields, and soft meadows fringed the banks, and, while fruit trees and olives covered the hills, the shores were dotted with waving palms.

The lake is shaped almost like a pear, the broad, end towards the north. Its greatest width is six and three-quarter miles, and its extreme length twelve and a quarter. In Ohrist's day, the western shore was thickly dotted with towns and villages, which the Gospels will, hereafter, bring repeatedly before us. The eastern side has always been less populous, but even it had towns at every opening of the dark basaltic hill close to the East of th a strip of i long, was in of the Lake, stretched ou other parts o and covered of our Lord. whole. Its soil the most ness. For a Nazareth, its milk and hon full of verdur of the Song of A region when where the up pastures, cult the palm grov The main pi were the fish which the who Galilleo, dwed of Esdradion, for its heavy of purt famous forme with noisy mar and villages, to Lake of Genues rifices; no fewe to their sale. then, as still. had eighty cloth the dyers. Ar noted for its cl women into the Hananlah-in, t province, and w jars for olive oil an oil country. Shut in from ages, the Galilor home of another arrot the dark

aries

ther

udes

ntain

right

n nd to n was both

Siv8

TOWN

pesti-

lordan

Istrict

oamed

of the en this aravan

he apot

rda Ti-

y called

now, all

waters.

oloured

water's on the all the

ed with olives,

orary of apa was

he love.

e shores

ards the

d its ex-

m shore bels will,

always.

the dark

basaltic hills, the outworks of the Gaulonitish range, which press DISING GALLAND "IL CONTRACTOR OF CONTRACTOR OF THE DECK close to the water's edge. East of the Jordan, and half-way down the eastern side of the Lake, a strip of upland plateau, about four miles in width, and thirteen long, was included in Gallier, but it was of little value. South-west of the Luke, between the northern uplands and the range of Carmel, stretched out the plain of Esdraelon, the market of Galilee. Beyond other parts of the province, this great, plain was crowded with life, and covered with fruitful fields, vineyards, and orchards, in the days of our Lord. Jewish writers are never tired of praising Galilee as a whole. Its climate, they said, was a well-nigh perpetual spring, its soil the most fertile in Palestine, its fruits renowned for their sweetness. For sixteen miles round Sepphoris, and, therefore, round Nazareth, its near neighbour, the land, it was boasted, flowed with milk and honey. The whole province, in fact, was, and is, even still, full of verdure, and rich in shade and pleasantness, the true country of the Song of Songs, and of the lays of the well-beloved. It was in a region where rich woods crowned the higher hills and mountains; where the uplands, gentle slopes, and broader valleys, were rich in pastures, cultivated fields, vineyards, olive groves, and orchards, and the pain groves of whose warmer parts were praised even by foreign-tra that Jesus spent His life The main products of this delightful province, in the days of Christ, were the fish of Gennesareth, and the wheat, wine, and olive oil, which the whole land yielded so richly, Gischala, atown in northern Galileo, owed its name to the "fat soil" of its district, and the plain of Esdracion, on part of which Nazareth looked down, was famous for its heavy crops of wheat. Jesus, indeed, lived in the centre of a part famous for its grain and oil. Farmers, and grape, and olive growers formed the richer classes around Him, and He was famillar with noisy market-days, when huyers came from all parts to the towns and villages, to trade for the teeming rural wealth. Magdala, on the Lake of Genuesareth, drove a flourishing trade, in doves, for the sacrifices; no fewor than three hundred shops, it is said, being devoted to their sale." There were indigo planters also in its neighbourhoed, then as still. Woollen clothmaking and dyeing throve in it; for it had eighty clothmakers, and a part of the town was known as that of the dyers. Arbela, not far off, beside the hill caves, was no less noted for its clothmaking. Flax was grown widely, and woven by women into the finest kinds of linen. Kefr Hananiah+the village of Hananiah-in the centre of Galilee, was the pottery district of the province, and was famous for its earthenware, and especially for its jars for olive oil, which were necessarily in great demand in so rich an oil country. at i sale strate live at all Alaba i to thistak

Shut in from the sea-coast, as the Jewish territory had been in all ages, the Galilæan looked down from his hills, towards the sea, on the home of another and a very different race. The glittering white sand on the shore, and the smoking chimneys of the glass manufactories rising from many points; the dingy buildings of Tyre, a contrast to the white walls of his own mountain house, and a sign of the busy industries, the weating, dyeing, and much else which there flourished : the ceaseless traffic, both by sea and land, to and from this great centre of commerce, reminded him that the Hebrew world ended with his hills, and that on the sen-coast plain beneath them that of the Grieco-Plicent-cian ruce began. Yet, there were many cities, and market towns, and villages, in his own hills and valleys-Gischals on the porthern slopes of the 4,000 feet high Djebel Djermak, and Rama on the southern; Sepanoris prowning its hill of 900 feet; the strong hill fortress of Jolapata, overlooking the plain of Battaut on the north side of the Nagareth ridge: with Cana of Galiles on its northern edge, and Rim--40M on its southern. All these, or the heights under which they nestled, were every day sights of Jesus from the round summit behind His own highland Nazareth, and they were only a few that might be named. | Looking south, over the plain of Esdracion, on its further edge lay Legio, the old Megiddo, where the good king Joslah fell in battle, amidst such slaughter and lamentation; that Zecharlah, more than a hundred years later, could find no better picture of "the land mourning, every family apart," than the "mourning in the valley of Megiddon," and that even the Apocalypse places the great final con-filet, in Armageddon,—the Hill of Megiddo. The windings of the torrent Kishon carried with it the memories of another great histori-cal battle, when the liest of Siscra, thrown helpless by a sudden flood, perished before Barak and Deborah. In the east of the philn rose, on its slope, the pleasant Jezreel, once Ahab's capital, where Naboth had his vineyard and the dogs licked the blood of the haughty Jezebel. Clustered round a spur of the hills of Gilboa, which rose 1,800 feet above the sen-level, half way between Jezreel and Tabor, lay, on the different sides, the village of Sunem, where Elisha lived with the Shunammite widow, and the birthplace of Abishag, the fairest maiden in the kingdom of David-Nain, where the young man was one day to tise up again, alive, from his bier-and Endor-"the fountain of the people round"-where Saul saw the shade of Samuel. Close to the hill, on its southern side, bubbling up in a hollow of the rock, was the Spring of Trembling, where Gideon's test sent away all but the stout-hearted three hundred who won the great "day of Miclian," the prophetic prototype of the triumph of the "Prince of 'Peace," On the south side of the ravine down which the spring flowed, rose the hills of Gilboa, where Saul and his three sons fell in battle. Where the rocky gorge, sinking steeply, opens a few miles beyond, to the east, into a pleasant mountain valley, watered by Harod, now swollen to a brook, lay the town of Bethshean or Scythopolis to the walls of which the bodies of Saul and of his three sons, Jonathan among them, were hung up in triumph by the victori the angle of the second second of the second s entry to star

The view fr but it embrace dred and forty Tabor, Sepphe district, and I view. St. Ma Galilean hill.s plough often t fields, as more to graze the me and the hill-slo yield of their hyperbolical w suffers from w trees of all kin return to the fa and not a spot moreover, has many of them sand inhabitan Galilean troop lions, and the g lierod raised a pared with Jud The pictures the scene is fu ploughs the fiel on vigorously: barns are filled along the terrad washed stones hedges, the blir are being hired homewards in t light hearted y the children pl knock at closed servant storms the hum of m crowds have no a field and mus and a third has To use our Lo sold, they plant in marriage, as pleasures, as if.

THE LIFE OF CHAINI.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

ories

st to

idus-

; the re o hills

iœni-

and

liopcs liern; css of of the fthu, they

enind

tht be

fell in more c'land lley of al con-

of the listori-

flood, ose, on

th had ezebel.

00 fect on the ith the fairest

an was

amuel.

of the

way all

day of

fince of spring s fell in

w miles

ered by

or Scy-

is three

victori

1337

The view from the Nazareth hills swept over all this landscape, but it embraced much more. Josephus says that there were two hundred and forty towns and villages in Galilee, and fifteen fortresses. Tabor, Sepphoris, and Jotapate, were, among them, in Christ's own district, and Safed and Cæsarea Philippi within the sweep of His view. St. Mark speaks of towns, villages, and farmhouses on the Galilgan hill sides Not a spot of ground was left idle, and the mi-nute division of the soil, from the dense population, had caused the plough often to give way to the spade. Pasture land was turned into fields, as more profitable than cattle or even flocks, which were left to graze the mountains of Syria, and the barren hills of Judea. The rich dark soil of Esdraelon, hore magnificent Indian corn and wheat, and the hill-slopes on its sides were noted for their wine, and the rich yield of their olive gardens and vineyards. The Rabbis, in their hyperbolical way, say that one waded in oil in Galilee. "It never suffers from want of people," says Josephus, " for its soil is rich, with trees of all kinds on it, and its surpassing fertility yields a splendid return to the farmer. The ground is worked with the greatest skill and not a spot left idle. The ease with which life is supported in it, moreover, has overspread it with towns and well-peopled villages. many of them strongly fortified. The smallest has over fifteen thou-sand inhabitants. The ease with which Josephus levied 100,000 Galilæan troops seems to indicate a population of, perhaps, two mil-lions, and the general prosperity is shown in the readiness with which Herod raised a Roman contribution of 100 talents in Galilee, as compared with Judea.

The pictures in the Gospels support this description. Everywhere the scene is full of life. Busy labour enlivens the vineyard, or ploughs the field, or digs the garden. In the towns, building is going on vigorously: the extra millstone lies ready beside the mill the barns are filled and new ones about to be built: vineyards stretch along the terraced hill-sides, and outside the town are seen the whitewashed stones of the cemeteries. On the roads, and beside the hedges, the blind and cripple await the gifts of passers by : labourers are being hired in the market-places, and the farm servant wends homewards in the evening with his plough: the songs and dance of light-hearted youth on the village green, are heard from a distance: the children play and strive in open laces of the towns: visitors knock at closed doors even late in the night: and the drunken upper servant storms at and maltreats, the maids. From morning to night the hum of many-coloured lusty life everywhere rises: the busy crowds have no time to think about higher things. One has bought a field and must go to see it, another has to prove a new yoke of oxen. and a third has some other business—a feast, a marriage, or a funeral. To use our Lord's words, they ate, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded, they married wives and were given in marriage, as full of the world in its ambitions, cares, labours and pleasures, as if the little moment of their lives were to last for ever.

han innitia

THE FALLEANS AND THE BORDER LANDS. CONTACT

GALMEE got its name as the circle or region of the heathen nations. and hence, to the southern Jews of Isaiah's days, it was "the heathen country." It included the districts assigned to Asher, Naphtali, Zebulon, and Issachar. But these tribes never obtained entire possession of their territories, and contented themselves with settling among the Canaanite population, whom they, in some cases, made tributary,-the Jewish colonies remaining centres of Judaism in places which retained their old heathen names. Kedesh in Naphtali. near Lake Meroin, the birthplace of Barak, with twenty small cities lying round it, was, originally, "the land of Galilee" in Joshua's time, and in the days of the kings, from the population mainly belonging to the neighbouring Phenicia, but the mixed character of the people, which was a necessary consequence of Galilee being a border-land, extended the name, in the end, to the whole of the Prov ince." Even in Solomon's time the population was mixed. The hilly district, called Cabul—"dry, sandy, unfruitful"—which he gave to Hiram, king of Tyre, as a niggardly return for service rendered in the ballding of the Temple, contained twenty towns, inhabited chiefly by Phenicians, but was so worthless' that Hiram, in contemptuous ridicule, playing on the name of the district, called it, in Phenician, Chabalon—"good for nothing." The separation from the House of David, and from Jerusalem, under the king of Israel, and the Assyrian captivity at a later date, further affected the northern popula-tion. To the prophet Isaiah they were the people "that walked in darkness and dwelt in the land of the shadow of death," alike from their separation from Jerusalem, their living among the heathen, and their national calamities, though he anticipates a bright future for them in the light of the Messiah. After the exile two great changes took place. Jewish colonists gradually spread over the land once more, and the name Galilee was extended to the whole north on this side of the Jordan, so that the territory of the tribe of Issachar, with the plain of Esdraelon; Zebulon, with the southern part of the Sea of Gennesareth; and Naphtali, and Asher, were included in it. The new Jewish settlers had no longer any political jealousy of Jerusalem, and once more frequented the Temple, while the fact that they were surrounded by heathen races made them, perhaps, more loyal to Judaism than they otherwise would have been; just as the Protestants of Ireland are more intensely Protestant because surrounded by Romanism. Still, though faithful, their land was "defiled" by heathen citizens and neighbours, and the narrow bigotry of Judea looked askance at it from this cause. Besides Jews, it had not a few Phenicians, Syrians,

Arabs, a Syrian co for ages, the Jew b Moreover. which ran lee, broug goods em labourers, were little scribed as Tyre, or S Herods, in had been rias, or the Judea, but fancy; nor by all his Jerusalem Judea, the soured by Jewish ort side influer exclusive a Jewish wor But thou Jews were feasts at J gogues, and Law" were equally wid held in sup In Jerusale the Galilæa edge of Sci dition, were Nor did t ways of tho ligion. In much, for e the sexes, w but it was a life. " Coward They are inu been wanting breathed ma

1 17. 10

Sellar P.

ABIETE: :

的自民的现在

和小小同时

nontroll:

A SIGM

nations,

heathen

laphtali, tire possettling es, made

laism in

Naphtali,

all cities

Joshua's

a mainly

aracter of

e being a

the Prov

The hilly

e gave to red in the chiefly by

uous ridi-

henician,

House of d the Asn populawalked in like from

then, and uture for t changes

and once

th on this

, with the he Sca of

The new

alem, and were sur-

Judaism

hts of Ire-

omanism.

n citizens

ance at it

, Syrians,

Arabs, and Greeks settled over it. Carmel had become almost a Syrian colony, and Kedesh retained the mixed population it had had for ages, while the eastern end of the Esdraelon valley was barred to the Jew by the heathen town of Scythopolis.—the ancient Bethshean. Moreover, the great caravan road, from Damascus to Ptolemais, which ran over the hills from Capernaum, through the heart of Galilee, brought many heathen into the country. The great transport of goods employed such numbers of heathen, as camel drivers, hostlers, labourers, conductors, and the like, that the towns facing the sea were little different from those of Phenicia. Thus Zebulon is de-scribed as "a town with many very fine houses, as good as those of Tyre, or Sidon, or Berytus." The places created or beautified by the Herods, in Roman style, could hardly have been so if the population had been strict Jews. The attempt to build heathen cities like Tiberins, or the restored Sepphoris, would have excited an insurrection in Judea, but the less parrow people of Galilee let Antipas please his fancy; nor was there ever, apparently, such a state of feeling caused by all his Roman innovations as was roused by the amphitheatre at Jerusalem alone. Separated by Samaria from the desolate hills of Judea, the home of the priests and Rabbis, the Galilæans were less soured by the sectarian spirit paramount there, and less hardened in Jewish orthodoxy, while, in many respects, they had caught the outside influences round them at home. Hence their Judaism was less exclusive and narrow than that of, perhaps, any other section of the Jewish world.

But though less bigoted than their southern brethren, the Galilæan Jews were none the less faithful to the Law. They frequented the feasts at Jerusalem in great numbers, and were true to their synagogues, and to the hopes of Israel. Pharisees, and "doctors of the Law" were settled in every town, and their presence implies an equally wide existence of synagogues. In the south, tradition was held in supreme honour, but in Galilee the people kept by the law. In Jerusalem the Rabbis introduced refinements and changes, but the Galilæans would not tolerate novelties. Our Lord's wide knowedge of Scripture, His reverence for the law, and His scorn of trudition, were traits of His countrymen as a race.

Nor did their forbearance, in the presence of heathen fashions and ways of thought, affect their morals for evil, any more than their religion. In many respects these were stricter than those of Judea; much, for example, was forbidden in Galilee, in the intercourse of the sexes, which was allowed at Jerusalem. Their religion was freer, but it was also deeper; they had less of the form, but more of the life.

"" Cowardice," says Josephus, "was never the fault of the Galilæans, They are inured to war from their infancy, nor has the country ever been wanting in great numbers of brave men." The mountain air they breathed made them patriots, but their patriotism was guided by zeal for their faith. While warmly loyal to Herod, in gratitude for his subduing the lawless bands who had wasted their country, after the civil wars, -and quiet and well-disposed to Antipas, during the fortythree years of his reign, they were none the less fixed in their abhorrence of Rome, the heathen tyrant of their race. In revolt after revolt they were the first to breast the Roman armies, and they were the last to defend the ruins of Jerusalem, stone by stone, like worthy sons of those ancestors who "jeopardised their lives unto the death in the high places of the field." There were families like that of the Zealot, Hezekiah, and Judas, the Galilæan, in whom the hatred of Rome was handed down from generation to generation, and which, In each generation, furnished martyrs to the national cause. A hundred and fifty thousand of the youth of Galilee fell in the last struggle with Rome, and few narratives are more stirring than the defence of the Galilean fortresses, one after another, in the face of all odds. Even Titus appealed to the magnificent heroism of these defenders of their freedom and their country, to rouse the ardour of his own army. Nor was their devotion to their leaders less admirable. Josephus boasts of the heartiness and trust the Galilæans reposed in him. Though their towns were destroyed in the war, and their wives and children carried off, they were more concerned for the safety of their general than for their own troubles.

The Jew of the south, wrapped in self-importance, as living in or near the holy city, amidst the schools of the Rabbis, and under the shadow of the Temple, and full of religious pride in his assumed superior knowledge of the Law, and greater purity as a member of a community nearly wholly Jewish, looked down on his Galilæan bréthren. The very ground he trod was more holy than the soil of Galilee, and the repugnance of the North to adopt the prescriptions of the Rabbis was, itself, a ground of estrangement and self-exaltation. He could not believe that the Messlah could come from a part so inferior, for "the Law was to go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." Jesus found willing hearers and many disciples in the cities and towns of Galilee, but He made little impression on Judea.

Yet, Galilee, from the earliest times, had vindicated its claims to honour for the intellectual vigour of its people. Not only physically and morally, but even in mental freshness and force, it was before the narrow and morbid south, which had given itself up to the childish triffing of Rabbinism. The carliest poetry of Israel rose among the Galilæan hills, when Barak of Naphtali had triumplied over the Canaanites. The Song of Songs was composed in Galilee by a poet of nature, whose heart and eyes drank in the inspiration of the bright sky and the opening flowers, and who could tell how the fig-tree put forth its leaves, and the vine sprouted, and the pomegranate opened its blossoms. Hosea, the prophet, belonged to Issachar; Jonah to Zebulon, Nahum came from Elkosh in Galilee, and in the Gospels a noble band of Galilæans group themselves round the central figure, Pete drew and I of the wom Christ of t family of t Cilicia, for stock origin "The Tal two provin The Rabbis were temper shown by t the hostile S that the Pa When Ohris His service. constant ref from the ray among them and it was to spread the G

The distric Galllee, in t scene, in par Jesus. De It wa the city of Pe Scythopolis, the Jordan t thus, about se though the be much less frn phus, "is a d of fruits than and produces of all sorts, th ted most. It flow from the wards the des hill fortress ai on the caravar considerable 1 Christ's day, and thirty pills -baths, theat arch, make it outer walls car the city, a long or his er the

forty abhorter re-

y were vorthy

eath in

of the red of

which,

A hun-

truggle

ence of

odds.

ders of

army.

sephus

n him.

ves and

of their

ng in or ader the

ed supe-

a com-

réthren.

lee, and

Rabbis

le could rior, for

rd from

s in the

Judea.

aims to ysically

before he child-

among

over the y a poet

e bright

fig-tree

granate

ssachar;

i in the e central

figure, Peter, the brave and tender-hearted James and John-Andrew and Philip—and Nathanacl, of Cana, not to speak of others, or of the women of Galilee, who honoured themselves by ministering to Christ of their substance. It was from Galilee, moreover, that the family of the great Apostle of the heathen emigrated to Tarsus in Cilicia, for they belonged to Gischala, a Galilæan town, though their stock originally was of the tribe of Benjaminist out bush "The Talmud sketches, in a few words, the contrast between the two provinces-""The Galilæan loves honour, and the Jew money." The Rabbis admit that the Galilæans, in their comparative poverty, were temperate, pure, and religious. Their fidelity to their faith was shown by their fond and constant visits to the Temple, in spite of the hostile Samaritan territory between, and it was through their zeal that the Passover was celebrated for eight days instead of seven. When Christ appeared, they threw the same ardour and fidelity into His service.' In their midst the Saviour, persecuted elsewhere, took constant refuge. They threw open their land to Him, as a safe shelter from the rage of the Jews, almost to the last. He went forth from among them; and gathered the first-fruits of His kingdom from them. and it was to a band of Galilæans that He delivered the commission to spread the Gospel, after His death, through the world.

The district of Perea, on the east of the Jordan, was included, with Galilee, in the section ruled over by Herod Antipas, and was the seene. In part of the ministry, first of John the Baptist, and then of Jesus. Fitwas larger than Galileo, extending, north and south, from the city of Pella to the fortress of Machaerus—that is, from opposito Scythopolis, half-way down the Dead Sea, and, east and west, from the Jordan to Philadelphia, the ancient Rabbath Ammon. It was thus, about seventy-five miles in length, by, perhaps, thirty in breadth, though the boundaries seem to have varied at different times. It was much less fruitful than Galilee. ""The greater part of it," says Joseplins, "is a desert, rough, and much less suitable for the finer kinds of fruits than Galilee. In other parts, however, it has a moist soil, and produces all kinds of fruits, and its plains are planted with trees of all sorts, though the olive, the vine, and the palm-tree are cultivated most. It is well watered in these parts with torrents, which flow from the mountains, and are never dry, even in summer." Towards the deserts, which hemmed it in along its eastern edge, lay the hill fortress and town Gerasa, 1,800 feet above the sea-level. It was on the caravan road through the mountains, from Bozra, a place of considerable trade; while its magnificent ruins still show that, in Christ's day, it was the finest city of the Decapolis. Two hundred and thirty pillars, still standing, and the wreck of its public buildings, baths, theatres, temples, circus, and forum, and of a triumphal arch, make it easy to recall its former splendour. The line of the outer walls can be easily traced for From the triumphal arch; outside the city, a long street passes through the city gate to the forum, still relations

local chu

every sic

Church y

looked; fi

shelter H

North

edge of th of Tiberia

sulphurou

for a time.

colonnade

style, amin

bourhood

devils N

striking fe

Gadara c

the mount

which stret

merge in th and valleys highlands,

terebintly

rich vegetat

stone hills

abundance

must often

vineyards,

forests, -- for stretches no

green Wady

Djebel Osch Zerka, the a Robad, whe Christ's eye end of the I

ing occasion be before Hi

Mount Tabo

tance, and see the hills

blue haze, tl

His road wo

side of which

of Esdraelor

With the inaccessible skirted by fifty seven Ionic columns. Colonnades adorned mile after mile of the streets, which crossed, at right angles, like those of an American town.

It must have been a gay, as well as a busy and splendid, scene, when Jesus passed through the country on His Perean journeys. But the tide of civilized life has ebbed, and left Gerasa without an inhabitant for many centuries.

About twenty five miles south of Gerasa, and, like it, between twenty and thirty miles east of the Jordan, lay Philadelphia. It was the old capital of Ammon, and in Christ's day, the southern frontier post against the Arabs. Though two thousand five hundred feet above the sea, it sheltered itself in two narrow valleys, each brightened by flowing streams; the upland "city of the waters," with hills rising on all sides round it. The main stream, faced with a long stone quay; terraces rising above it, lined with rows of pillars, the citadel, seen far and near, on a height between the two valleys, give us a glimpse of it. The old city which Joab besieged, and where Uriah fell, had given place to a Roman one. Fine temples, theatres, and public and private buildings, long ruined, were then alive with motley throngs, but the whole scene has been utterly deserted, now, for ages, and rank vegetation rises in its long silent streets, and in the courts of its temples and mansions.

Hesbon, about fifteen miles nearly south of Ammon, on the Roman road which ran from Damascus, through Bozra and Ammon,branching from Hesbon, west, to Jericho, and south, to Edom, was the third and last frontier town of Perea. It lay among the Pisgah mountains, three thousand feet above the level of the sea, amidst brown hills, fretted with bright green lines along the course of numerous streamlets, oozing from the limestone rocks. Its ruins lie in great confusion, and serve only to tell of wealth and prosperity long since passed away. In the valley below, a great volume of water gushing from the rock, once filled the famous pools of Hesbon, beloved. From Hesbon, the eve ranges over a wide table-land of undulating downs, bright with flowers, or rough with prickly shrubs, seamed with gorges sinking abruptly towards the Jordan, and noisy with foaming streams which leap from ledge to ledge in their swift descent, between banks hidden by rank vegetation.

These three towns lie on the outer edge of the lofty plateau, east of the Jordan, where the long wall of the limestone hills of Gilead and Ammon begins to sink towards the desert. On the western edge of the plateau itself, nearer the Jordan, and at the north of the district, lay Pella, on a low flat hill, only 250 feet above the sea-level, rich in living waters, and embosomed in other higher hills. Built as a military post, by veterans of Alexander's army, it bore the name of their own Macedonian capital. It was afterwards famous as the retreat of the Christians before the fall of Jerusalem', among others, of the relations of Christ, the last of whom died as fifteenth bishop of the local church. The storm of the great war, which wasted Peres on every side, passed harmlessly by Pella, leaving it and the infant Church untouched. With what fond regards must Jesus have often looked from across the Jordan, on the spot which one day was to shelter His servants.

220

North of Pelia, twelve hundred fect above the sea-level, on the edge of the deep cleft through which the Hieromax flows to the Sea of Tiberias, stood Gadara, a place famous in Christ's day for its hot sulphurous baths. It had been rebuilt by Pompey, after having lain for a time in ruins, and gloried in its streets paved with basalt, its colonnades of Corinthian pillars, and its massive buildings in Roman style, amidst which Jesus may have walked,—for it was in the neighbourhood of this town that He cured the two men possessed with devils. Numerous tombs hewn in the hills around, still illustrate a striking feature of the Gospel narratives.

Gadara and Pella are both on the western side of the long range of the mountains of Gilead-the old territory of Reuben and Gadwhich stretch along the eastern side of the Jordan valley, till they merge in the Pisgah range at the north of the Dead Sea. Rocky glens and valleys, whose lower slopes are often terraced for vines; rolling highlands, for the most part clothed with forests of ilex, oak, and terebinth; open plains and meadows; rushing streams, fringed with rich vegetation; still justify the choice of the two tribes. The limestone hills are identical with those of western Palestine, but the abundance of water makes the whole region much richer. Jesus must often have wandered amidst its wheat fields, olive grounds, vineyards, and fig and pomegranate orchards, and under its leafy forests,-for He once and again visited these districts. The road stretches north from the ford of the Jordan, near Jericho, up the green Wady Scha'lb to Ramoth Gilcad, 2,700 feet above the sea, past Djebel Oscha, the hill of the prophet Hosea, 800 feet higher, to Wady Zerka, the ancient river Jabbok-thence to the heights of Kala'at er Robad, where Saladin in after days built a castle. Resting here, Christ's eye would range over Palestine far and near, from the north end of the Dead Sea, along the whole Jordan valley, the river gleaming occasionally in its windings. Part of the Sea of Galilce would be before Him to the north, and, to the west, Ebal and Gerizim, with Mount Tabor, and the ridge of Carmel stretching into the far distance, and the wide plain of Esdraelon. Farther north, He would see the hills of Safed, beyond the Sea of Galilee, and far away, in the blue haze, the snow-sprinkled peaks of Hermon. From this point His road would lie through Pella, across the Jordan, on the farther side of which the steep gorge of the Wady Farrah led up to the plain And man samples with the of Esdraelon and His own district.

With the mountains of Pisgah, on the east of the Dead Sea, a wild inaccessible region begins, counting among its peaks Beth Peor, from

e after of an 714 49 scene, S. 22001 iout an MULL V. etween It was frontier ed feet brightith hills a long ars; the ys, give 1 where theatres, ive with ed. now, nd in the e Roman mmon, iom, was e Pisgah a, amidst course of ruins lie rosperity olume of Hesbon, ves of his e-land of ly shrubs, and noisy heir swift au, east of filcad and rn edge of e district, el, rich in as a milihe of their retreat of rs, of the which Balaam once blessed Israel, as it lay encamped below in the open meadows opposite Jericho, where Antipas, in Christ's day, built the town of Livias, in honour of the Empress-mother. Mount Nebo, where Moses was buried in an unknown grave, and the summit from which he surveyed the land he was not to enter, are in this range, and it was in a cave in their secluded valleys that Jewish tradition believed Jeremiah to have hidden the ark, and the sacred vessels of the Temple, till the coming of the Messiah, in a secrecy known only to God and the angels.

The Jewish population in Perea was only small; the heathen element greatly prevailing. In the northern parts, the Syrian races were in the majority; in the southern, the people were largely Arab.

The cities were in most cases independent, with a district belonging to each of them, and thus, though in the territories of Antipas, were not part of his dominions. Under the name of the Decapolis, — "the ten cities,"—Philadelphia, Gadara, Hippos, Damascus, Raphana; Dio, Pella, Gerasa, and Kanatha, were confederated, under direct Roman government, with Scythopolis, on the west side of the Jordan, in a league of peace and war against native robber bands and the Bedouin hordes; and this made them virtually a distinct state. Antipas, apparently, had only so much of the district as did not belong to these cities.

Above Perea, in Christ's day, the Tetrarchy of Philip reached to the slopes of Hermon on the north, and away to the desert on the east. It included the provinces of Gaulonitis, Iturea, Trachonitis, Auraritis, and Batanca.

Gaulonitis still known as Golân, r ached from Cæsarea Philippi, or Panias, on the slopes of Mount Hermon, to the Hieromax, at the south of the Sea of Galilee, stretching back twenty to thirty miles in barren uplands of volcanic origin, to the green pastures of Batanea or Bashan, the casis of the region, with the district of Iturea on its north-the lava plateau of Trachonitis on its east, and the equally waste tract of Auranitis, or the Hauran, on the south. Gaulonitis, which we know Jesus to have visited, looked over towards Galilee from a range of hills running parallel with the Jordan, north and south; a second and third ridge rising behind, in their highest peaks, to the height of 4,000 feet. Besides Cæsarea Philippi, at its extreme north, the province boasted the town of Bethsaida, rebuilt by Philip, and called Livias, after the daughter of Augustus. It lay in a green opening at the upper end of the Lake of Galilee. On the hills overlooking the lake, towards its southern end, lay the town of Gamala, and in the valley at the south extremity was Hippos, one of the cities of the Decapolis. Iturca-north of Gaulonitis, on the lower slopes of Hermon-was a region of inaccessible mountain fastnesses, and intricate defiles, which favoured and helped to perpetuate the lawlessness which the first settlers may have derived from their Arab ancestor. In the south it has a rich soil, watered by numerous streams from Hermon, but the north is a fusion, or plunder the mere robbe caravans pa "are inhal bers; the p dered by th Gathering i ditti organi the gates o riders, they skill became at them as like their fo Trachonit Iturea, thou for nearly th known as T chonitis bei was part of they entered It is about t cast to west, district. Tt able fissures impenetrable inaccessible thousand me Damascus. to the Decape by strong Ro region. "T a mad way, a times sharing has long been for they have some holes o together. Th granaries, and for the entran can enter at ' ground over while the rock did his utmos last he settled incessant patr

the

łay,

unt

mit

this

adi-

ssels

own

nent

re in long-

ipas,

lis,-

Rap-

ir der of the lands

stinct

is did

ned to

in the

onitis,

pi, cr

south

barren

shan,

the act of

know

nge of id and 4,000

ovince

livias,

at the lake,

valley

polis.

-wasa

which

e first

buth it

ut the north is a wild region of jagged rocks, heaped up in uttermost confusion, or yawning in rents and chasms. The Itureans, fonder of plunder than industry, had, till Herod tamed them, an evil name, as mere robbers, issuing from their savage retreats to prey upon the caravans passing from Damascus to the Sea.. "The hills," says Strabo, "are inhabited by Itureans and Arabs, who are mere hordes of robpers; the plains by a farming population, who are constantly plun-dered by the hill people, and thus always need help from outside. Gathering in the recesses of Lebanon and Hermon, the mountain banditti organized raids as far as Sidon and Berytus on the coast, and to the gates of Damascus on the east. Famous'as archers and bold riders, they were largely enrolled in the Roman army, in which their skill became proverbial; but the legions; nevertheless, looked askance at them as the worst set in the service. Their boundaries varied, like their fortune in war, and hence are seldom described alike. Trachonitis was the name given to the district east and south of Iturea, though the two seem, at times, to be interchangeable names for nearly the same region. Iturea often embraces the tract usually known as Trachonitis, the "Argob," or "Stony," of the Bible, Trachonitis being apparently a mere translation of this older name. It was part of the kingdom of Og, conquered by the Israelites before they entered Canaan, and was assigned to the half-tribe of Manasseh. It is about twenty-two miles from north to south, and fourteen from east to west, and marks the focus of ancient volcanic energy in the district. It is a vast ocean of basalt, cracked and rent into innumerable fissures in cooling, and offering in its countless chasms an almost impenetrable shelter to whole armies. "In its rough, and almost inaccessible rocks," says Strabo, "are hidden spaces from which a thousand men could assemble for a foray against the merchants of Damascus. The chief town, Kanatha, on the caravan route, belonged to the Decapolls, and was protected from the robber population around by strong Roman fortifications. As a whole, it was a terribly wild region. "The inhabitants of the country," says Josephus, "live in a mad way, and pillage the district of the Damascenes, their rulers at times sharing the plunder. It is hard to restrain them, for robbery has long been their profession, and they have no other way of living, for they have neither any city of their own, nor any lands, but only some holes or dens of the earth, where they and their cattle live together. They contrive, however, to secure water, and store corn in grauaries, and are able to make a great resistance by sudden sallies, for the entrances of their caves are so narrow, that only one person can enter at a time, though they are incredibly large within. The ground over their habitations is not very high, but rather a plain, while the rocks are very difficult of entrance without a guide." Herod did his utmost against them, but his success was only passing, till at last he settled several military colonies in the district, and by their incessant patrols managed to keep the robbers in check.

South of this fierce and lawless region lay Auranitis; now known as the Hauran, a high plateau of treeless downs, of the richest soil, stretching from Gilead to the Desert, and from the Ledja to the uplands of Moab on the south. Not a stong is to be seen, and the great caravans of well-fed camels, laden with corn and barley, constantly met with on the way to Damascus, show what it must have been in the days of Christ. Even yet, however, no one can travel through it safely, unarmed, and the fellahin, except close to towns, have to plough and sow with a musket slung at their back. It is the granary of Damascus, and the ruins of numerous towns, all of basalt, even to the doors of the houses, show that the population must have been great.

Batanea, the ancient Bashan, was a mountainous district of the richest type, abounding in forests of evergreen oaks, and extremely rich in its soft. The hills, which, in some cases, reach a height of 6,000 feet, and the cattle which fed in the rich meadows, are often alluded to in the Old Testament. Desolate now, it was densely peopled eighteen hundred years ago, as the ruins of towns and cities of basalt, thickly strewn over its surface, and still almost as perfect as when they were built, strikingly prove.

In the lifetime of Christ, a large Jewish, population lived in all these districts, in the midst of much larger numbers of Syrians, Arabs, Greeks, and Phenicians, under the rule of Philip, the son of Herod and of Cleopatra of Jerusalem. He was between Archelaus and Antipas in age, and had been educated with them in Rome, but kept entirely aloof from family intrigues, and was true-hearted enough to plead the cause of Arcnelaus before Augustus. The best of Herod's sons, he retained not only the good-will of his family, but was held in high esteem by the Romans, and the Jews especially honoured him as no son of a Samaritan, but sprung from a daughter of Zion. During a reign of thirty-seven years, he was no less gentle to his subjects than peaceful towards his neighbours. ""He showed himself." says Josephus, "moderate and quiet in his life and government. He constantly lived in the country subject to him, and used to travel through it, continually, to administer justice; his official seat-the sella curulis-accompanying him everywhere; always ready to be set down in the market place, or the road, to hear complaints, without any one suffering from delay." His court was formed by only a few friends, whom he seldom changed, and it is recorded of him that in his care for his people he levied almost fewer taxes than he needed. Modest in his ambitions, he cared more for the peaceful triumph of discovering the sources of the Jordan than for noisy fame. The neighbourhood of the romantic city he built on the edge of Hermon was the scene of the Transfiguration; but he is not mentioned in the Gospels, though it is a noble tribute to him that Jesus once and again took refuge in his territories, from the craft of His own ruler, Antipas, and the hate of the Galilæan Pharisees. He married his niece Salome.

daughter of well known our Lord, a fixion, in E in a tomb y On the so again into i across the east, while 1 Tih, or the west of the began at En Esdraelon, a bi-or, the network of east and west In these va Esarhaddon had, carried selves as esca Jews who ha Judea. The encroached g sirable land, The soft lin south, are not are not infre in the valleys, the slopes, an of many of th famous in Isr Such was th the hills of Ju future time.

ial control be set setting be set in quily a few in this the set in this the set of the bedge through in the set and again in the set again in the set again in the set again daughter of Herod-Philip, his uncrowned brother, and of the too well known Herodias. His reign continued through the whole life of our Lord, and he died childless, at last, a year or so after, the Crucifixion, in Bethsaida, or Livias, on the Lake of Galilee, and was laid in a tomb which he himself had built as his final resting-place.

224

OWE

soil.

up

reat

intly

n in

gh it

ough

ry of

en to

been

f the

mely

sht of

often

y peq-

ties of ect as in all Arabs,

Herod

is and it kept high to lerod's

as held

ed him Ziou.

is sub-

mself."

t. He travel at—the b be set vithout v a few that in needed. mph of . The Hermon d in the d again ntipas. Salome,

On the southern side of the Plain of Esdraelon, the country rises again into rounded hills, which extend from the great coast plain, across the deep chasm of the Jordan, till they sink away in the east, while towards the south they end only in the wilderness of el Tih, or the Wanderings. The northern part of these hills, on the west of the Jordan, was the land of the Samaritans. Their country began at En Gannim-the fountain of gardens-at the south end of Esdraelon, and ended, in the south, at the mountain pass of Akrab bi-or, the "Scorpions," north of Shiloh. The whole region is a network of countless valleys running in every direction, but mainly east and west.

In these valleys lived the descendants of the Assyrian tribes, whom Esarhaddon had sent to fill the room left by the ten tribes whom he had carried away, and the children of such of the ten tribes themselves as escaped deportation, or had found their way back, and of Jews who had fled thither from time to time, from any cause, from Judea. The growth of the new Jewish kingdom on the south had encroached greatly on the Samaritan tesritory, but it was still a desirable land, and far more fruitful than Judea itself.

The soft limestone or chalky hills of Samaria, unlike those farther south, are not without many springs. Fertile bottoms of black earth are not infrequent, and rich fields, gardens, and orchards, alternate in the valleys, while vineyards and trees of different kinds spread up the slopes, and woods of olives and walnuts crown the soft outline of many of the hills. The meadows and pasture land of Semaria were famous in Israel.

Such was the territory which lay between Christ, in Galilee, and the hills of Judea. Of the people, I shall have occasion to speak at a the hills of Judea. 10 the people, I shall have occasion to speak at a provided for hills of the second structure in the contract structure in the contract of the people of the people of the second structure in the contract of the second structure in the second structure is second structure is second structure in the second structure is structure in the second structure is second structure in the second structure in the second structure is structure in the second structur ef als man in a start is the start of the start is the start is the start of the st

No power ever showed so great a genius for assimilating conquered nations to itself as Rome. Its tributary provinces habitually merged their national life, crelong, in that of their conqueror. Her laws. language, and religion, more or less completely took root wherever her cagles were permanently planted, and have left the records of their triumphs in the wide extent of the so-called Latin race, even at this day. But it was very different in Palestine. There, Rome met a state of things unknown elsewhere; which she neither cared, nor was able to comprehend. The Spaniard or Gaul had given no trouble after he was once subdued, but readily accepted her arts, civilization, and laws. It was reserved for the mountaineers of Judea to refuse any peaceable relations to the mistress of the world; to treat her proudest sons with haughty contempt, and to regard their very presence in the country as a detilement. A structure to a blue of the second structure to a The discipline of the centuries before the Roman conquest of Palestine by Pompey, had formed a nation every way unique. The religious institutions of its ancestors had become the object of a passionate idolatry, which claimed; and willingly received, the whole of life for its service. The tragedy of the Exile, the teaching of the leaders of the Return, and of their successors, and the flerce puritanism kindled by the Syrian persecutions, and deepened by the Macoabeen struggle, had formed a people whose existence was woven into one with their law; who would endure any torture, or let themselves be thrown to beasts in the circus, rather than alter a word which their law forbade-whose women would bear the agonies of martyrdom rather than eat unclean food, and whose men would let themselves be cut down, withopt an attempt at resistance, rather than touch the sword on a Sabbath. Their whole life was a succession of rites and observances, as sacred in their eyes as the details of his caste to a Brahmin. Intercourse with other nations was possible only to the most limited extent. They shrank from all other races as from foulness or leprosy. The common Jew shunned a heathen or Samaritan; the Pharisec shrank from the common Jew; the Essene ascetic withdrew from mankind, into the desert." The dread of ceremonial defilement made solitude the only security, till the desire for it became morbid, like that of the Samaritan settlers of the islands of the Red Sea, who implored any stranger to keep at a distance. The very country consecrated by so many purifications was sacred, and hence there could be no greater shock to the feelings of the nation, than that any who were ceremonially unclean should pollute it by their presence. 'Even among themselves constant care was required to maintain or restore t daily defile horror of. 1 Priest alor purification the Prophe phemed ev in times lo heathen lar they defiled Buch a C vah on the agogues; th kindled age works, tha the hand o Israel.", Th dew of bles and taste, a could not less suprem Empire, the external or progress, ar mission, III but it was t anthority, a cared only ent. The the Jew, the Jews were Each despis sacred preju steps The Samaritaus, Procurators people to th bilities Juli India would every Hind faith in the the Roman coarse; whi creed of the less of their It was no beast of the 692.90

tellah A work

month

"here)

ierged

erever

rds of von at

namet

d, nor iviliza-

deatto

o treat

VULY

Lilven

of Pal-

10 The

a pas-

hole of

of the

Macua-

en into

mselves ch their

tyrdom

mselves

uch the

tes and ste to a

v to the s from or Sa-

Essene

of ceresire for lands of

he very

1 hence

ian that naintain

or restore their purity, but the presence of heathen among them, made daily defilement almost inevitable. What, then, must have been the horror of the nation, when even the Holy of Holies, which the High Priest alone could enter, and that only once a year, after endless purifications, was polluted by Pompey, and when, as in the days of the Prophet, that Name which a Jew dared not even utter, was blasphemed every day by the heathen soldiery? The cry of the Psalmist, in times long past, was once more that of every Jew, "O God, the heathen are come into Thine inheritance : Thy Holy Temple have they defiled."

Such a calamity could be regarded only as a judgment from Jehoval on the nation. In words, which were constantly, read in the synagogues, they sighed to hear that "The wrath of Jehovah was so kindled against His people; because they were defiled with their own works, that He abhorred His inheritance, and had given it into the hand of the heathen, and let them that hated them rule over Israel.", The very land seemed under a curse. It appeared as if the dew of blessing no longer fell; as if the fruits had lost their fragrance and taste, and the fields refused their harvests. The practical Roman could not understand such an idealistic race; with him law was no less supreme than it was with the Jew, but his law was that of the Empire, the Jew's the law of an unseen God; his had for its aim external order, and material civilization, the Jew's ignored material progress, and was at war with the first conditions of political submission. Like the Jew, the Roman started from the idea of duty, but it was the duty owed to the State: the Jew repudiated any earthly anthority, and owned allegiance only to a theocracy. The Roman cared only for the present life; to the Jew the present was indifferent. The one worshipped the Visible; the other the Unseen. To the Jew, the Roman was unclean and accursed; to the Romans, the Jews were ridiculous for their religion, and hateful for their pride. Each despised the other. Pompey had begun by freating their most sacred prejudices with contempt, and his successors followed in his steps: The murderer of their royal house, and the friend of the hated Samaritans, was made King in Jerusalem, and at a later day, Roman Brocurators sucked the very marrow from the land, oppressed the people to the uttormost, and paid no regard to their tenderest sensibilities. The government was as ruthless as that of England in India would be if it trampled under foot, in the pride of strength, every Hindoo prejudice it found in its way. Roman religion was fuith in the magic of the Roman name, and the irresistibleness of the Roman arms; a worship only of brute force, hard, unfceling, coarse; which could not understand anything transcendental like the creed of the Jaw, or the possibility of men caring for an idea, far, less of their dying for it. It was no wonder that the Rabbis saw, in such a power, the fourth.

beast of the Book of Daniel "" a beast diverse from all the others, exceeding dreadful, whose teeth were of iron and his nails of brase, which devoured, brake in pieces, and stamped the remnant of God's people with its feet." "Thou madest the world for our sakes," says one of the latest Jewish seers, who himself had seen the miseries of these times; "As for the other people"-the Romans and all man-kind hesides-" who also come from Adam, Thou hast said they are nothing, but are like spittle, or the droppings from a cask. And now, O Lord, behald these heathen, who have ever been counted as nothing, have begun to be lords over us, and to devour us. But we, Thy people, whom Thou hast called Thy first-born, Thy only begotten, and the object of Thy fervent love, are given into their hands. If the world now be made for our sakes, why do we not possess our inheritance over the world? How long shall this endure?" "Hear, thou, I will talk with thee," He makes the Messiah say to the Roman Eagle, "Art, thou not the last of the four beasts which I made to reign in my world, who hast overcome all the beasts that were past, and hast power over the world with great fearfulness, and much wicked oppression? For thou hast afflicted the meek, thou hast hurt the peaceable, thou hast loved the Faithless, and hated the Faithful." and destroyed the towns of those who brought forth fruit, and the walls of those who did thee no harm. Thy wrongful dealings have gone up to the Highest, and thy pride to the Mighty One. Therefore, O eagle, thou shalt perish, with thy fearful wings, thy baleful winglets, thy feroclous heads, thy tearing claws, and all thy foul body; that the earth may be refreshed, and be delivered from thy violence, and that she may hope in the justice and mercy of Him that made her.""

Such concentrated hatred and bitter contemptuous scorn from a people so feeble and, in many ways, to a Roman, so ridiculous, was naturally met by equal dislike, and, if possible, greater contempt. The Jews of Rome had been originally, for the most part, slaves, and their numbers were increased yearly by the sales of the slave market. But buyers had found that Jew slaves were more trouble in a household, about their law, than they were worth, and hence they were allowed to buy their own freedom at a very low price. A vast number of Jewish freedmen had thus gradually accumulated in Rome, to the horror of the Romans at large, by whom they were reckoned one of the greatest plagues of the city. The Acts of the Apostles show how frequent must have been the tumults they caused. Squalid, dirty, troublesome, repulsive, yet sneering at the gods and temples of their masters, and constantly aggressive in the hope of making proselytes, they were the special objects, by turns, of the ridicule, loathing, and hatred of the haughty Romans, and this hatred was intensified by the favour their religion had found with some of their own wives and daughters. The officials who went from Rome to Judea to rule the nation, carried with them, already, a scorn and abbe-rence for the nation; which found its expression in a ready belief of reports so revolving and incredible as that they worshipped the head of an ass, as God, in th Roman gover Speaking of down the ro climate it w Vespasian, In and told of 8 50,000 in an are you talk that?'" Ev credited with in its biting Quadit O S Egypt into F found a peop The feeling those of adm Judas Macca reign of Joh towards then a revulsion to the country defiled the H the royal fam tection, to gra the very nam pressions ma clang of the a great army, rolling hithe mighty warri against Jerus went out to in peace. march of the crowned the house of his Then he too for God had princes, and Jerusalem lil captivity. T their pride, h "In his ha throws light Christ, and o the strong w d's

ays a of anare

DW,

oth-

Thy

ten,

If

in-nan to ast.

uch

nurt

ful,"

the

ore,

lets,

that

and m a

Was

The heir

But old.

wed r of

the

e of how

rty,

heir

rtes, and

the

and

the

the 5 50

888,

as God, in their Temple. What treatment they might expect from Roman governors is shadowed in many utterances of different classes. Speaking of the Jews sent to the pestilent climate of Sardinia, to put down the robbers there, Tacitus adds, "If they perished by the climate it was no loss." Apollonius, of Tyana, is made to say to Vespasian, in Alexandria—"When one came from the scene of war and told of 80,000 Jews whom you had killed in one battle, and of 50,000 in another, I took the speaker aside, and asked him. What are you talking about; have you nothing more worth telling than that?" Even the calm and lofty Marcus Aurelius, at a later day, is credited with an expression of the common hatred of the Jews, which, in its biting contempt, surpasses all others. "O Marcomanni! O Quadi! O Sarmatians!" cried the Emperor, when he passed from Egypt into Palestine, and found himself among the Jews, "I have found a people, at last, who are lower than you!"

The feelings of the Jews towards the Romans had originally been those of admiration and respect, for their bravery and great deeds. Judas Maccabæus had sought their alliance, and, even so late as the reign of Johannes Hyrcanus, the nation retained kindly feelings towards them. It was the fault of Pompey that so great and sudden a revulsion took place. The treachery by which he got possession of the country and the capital; the insolent contempt with which he defiled the Holy of Holies, and the vanity which led him to carry off the royal family, who had put themselves confidingly under his protection, to grace his triumph, filled the race with an abiding hatred of the very name of Rome. A writer of the times has left us the impressions made by such acts :-- "My ear heard the sound of war, the clang of the trumpet which called to murder and ruin! The noise of a great army, as of a mighty rushing wind, like a great pillar of fire, rolling hitherward over the plains. Jehovan brings up hither a mighty warrior from the ends of the earth. He has determined war against Jerusalem and against His land! The princes of the land went out to him with joy, and said, 'Thou art welcome, come in peace.' They have made smooth the rough ways before the march of the stranger; they opened the gates of Jerusalem." They crowned the walls with garlands. He entered, as a father enters the house of his sons, in peace. He walked abroad, in perfect security Then he took possession of the towers and the walls of Jerusalem, for God had led him in safety, through her folly. He destroyed her princes, and every one wise in counsel, and poured out the blood of Jerusalem like unclean water. He led her sons and daughters into captivity. The strange people have gone up to the altar, and, in their pride, have not taken off their shoes in the holy places."

"In his haughty pride," cries the singer in his second psalm, which throws light on the corruption of Israel in the half century before Christ, and on Jewish thought at large, "the sinner has broken down the strong walls with the ram, and Thou hast not hindered." Heather aliens have gone up into Thy holy place; they have walked up and down in it, with their shoes, in contempt. Because the sons of Jerusalem have defiled the holy things of the Lord, and have profaned the gifts consecrated to God, by their transgressions of the Law. For this, He has said, 'Cast forth these things from me, I have no pleasure in them.' The beauty of holiness have they made vile; it has been profaned before God for ever!

"Your sons and your daughters are sold into woeful slavery; they are branded, as slaves, on their necks, in the sight of the heathen For your sins hath He done this! Therefore gave He them up into the hands of those that were stronger than they, for He turned away His face from pitying them,—youth, and old man, and child together because they all sinned, in not hearing His voice. The heaven scowled on them, and the earth loathed them, for no man on it had done as they.

"God has made the sons of Jerusalem a derision. Every one gave himself up to the sin of Sodom. They flaunted their wickedness before the sun. They committed their evil deeds before it. They made a show of their guilt. Even the daughters of Jerusalem are profane, according to Thy judgment, for they have defiled themselves shamelessly with the heathen. For all these things my heart mourns.

"I will justify Thee, O God, in uprightness of heart, for in Thy judgments, O God, is seen Thy righteousness. For Thou gives to the wicked according to their works, according to the great evil of their doings. Thou hast revealed their sins, that Thy judgment may be seen. Thou blottest out their memory from the earth. The Lord is a righteous judge, and regardeth no man's countenance. He has dragged down her beauty from the throne of glory. For Jerusalem has been put to shame by the heathen, when they trampled it under foot. Put on sackcloth for robes of beauty, a wreath of twisted rushes instead of a crown. God has taken away her mitre of glory, which he put on her brow. Her pride is cast down in dishonour on the earth.

"And I looked, and prayed before the face of the Lord, and said, Let it suffice Thee, O Lord, that Thou hast made heavy. Thy hand upon Jerusalem, in the coming against her of the heathen. Because they have treated her with scorn, and have not spared in their wrath and fury, and they will not bring this to an end, unless Thou, O Lord, reprovest them in Thy wrath. For they have not done it in zeal for Thee, but from the wish of their heart, to pour out their rage against us like furies. Delay not, O God, to smite them on the head, that the haughtiness of the dragon may sink down in dishonour.

"I had waited but a little till God showed me his haughty pride brought low, on the shores of Egypt, and his body set at nought by the least, alike on land and sea,—rotting upon the waves in pitiful contempt, and having he one to bury it. Because he had set God at nonght'an he'did non Lord of se and resistijudge of ki in cternal of Him."

Herod's thought th recollection Amidst : still kept a unique in predicted t Israel out o "prophesie liope was in In the second a profound destruction suprenie gl preted as ar under Antic and ultimat its short, br reign, The and tread it dominion, a be given to is an everla Him."" In seat of a un heathen, and head of this was to "con kingdom, th ever being with the and the deca of its later tion as contr -a copious Book of Da With the i gradually ce

the loss of t appeared af p and of Je-ofaned

For easure

s beer

; they

atlen

p int

away

gether

cavent it had

LABTS

They

em are

them-

y heart

in Thy

vest to evil of nt may

ne Lord He has

usalem

under.

twisted glory,

our on

d said,

y hand

fecause r wrath

O Lord,

zeal for against

that the y pride

ight by pitiful God at

cdness

nonght and dishonoured Him. He forgot that he was only a manhe did not think of what might be to come. He said, 'I shall be Lord of sea and land,' and he did not remember that God is creat and resistless in His great might. He is King of Heaven, and the judge of kings and rulers, exalting His servant, and stilling the proud in eternal dishonour and ruin because they have not acknowledged Him."

Herod's flattery of Rome, and his treachery, to what the patriots thought the national cause, only intensified the bitterness of such recollections.

Amidst all the troubles of the nation, however, their hopes were still kept alive by a belief which, like much else among the Jews, is unique in history." Their sacred books had from the earliest days predicted the appearance of a great deliverer, who should redeem Israel out of all his troubles. "All the prophets," says the Taimud, "prophesied only of the days of the Messiah.""In later days this liope was intensified by a new development of the national literature. In the second century before Christ, the Book of Daniel had created a profound sensation by its predictions, universally current, of the destruction of the heathen, and the elevation of the chosen people to suprenie glory, under the Messiah. These were, at that time, interpreted as applying to the disastrous period of religious persecution under Antiochus Epiphanes, which provoked the Maccabean revolt. and ultimately led to the temporary independence of the nation, with its short, bright glimpse of prosperity, as if heralding the Messianic reigh. The heathen were to "devour the whole earth for a time, and tread it down and break it in pieces." "But "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the rule under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominious shall serve and obey. Him." 'In such words, Israel read its future political glory, as the seat of a universal theocracy, which was to replace the kings of the heathen, and flourish in perpetual supremacy over all mankind. The head of this world-wide empire they saw in "the Son of Man." who was to "come in the clouds of heaven;" dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve Him for ever, being given Him by the Ancient of Days. Sub- an another the

With the paling of the Maccabean glory, after its short brightness, and the decay of religious enthusiasm under the corrupting influence of its later kings, —a reaction not unlike the license of the Restoration as contrasted with the severe Puritanism of the Commonwealth, —a copious literature sprang up, based on the model, which, in the Book of Daniel, had so profoundly affected the spirit of the age. With the independence of the nation, prophecy had, long ago, gradually ceased, for the sphere of the prophet was incompatible with the loss of the freedom of the nation. Zechariah and Malachi had appeared after the return from exile, but, with the latter, it was universally acknowledged, the grand roll of prophets had ended. The last of the order had, indeed, himself, virtually announced, its suspension, in pointing to the coming of Elijah, before the great and dreadful day of Jehovah, as its next appearance. From that time, it became fixed in the popular mind that Elijah, and perhaps, also, a "prophet like unto Moses," would herald the Messiah and his king dom. The peculiar constitution of the nation inevitably gave this glorious future a political, rather than a spiritual character, for their conception of the kingdom of God was that of a theocracy, such as God Himself had founded amongst them, under Moscs-an earthly state, with God as King, and His "anointed" as vicegerent, to carry out His written law. Their only idea of an "anointed one," that is, a Messiah, must have been derived from the illustrations offered by the earlier history of the nation. They knew of Moses, Joshua, the judges, and the kings. The patriarchs were spoken of in the Scrip-tures as the anointed of Jehovah, or His Messiahs, and so, also, were high priests and prophets, and their kings, and even the Perslan mon-arch, Cyrus. Among the later Jews, of the ages immediately before Christ, "The Messiah" had become the usual name of the Deliverer predicted by the prophets, and was almost exclusively restricted to him. But at no time had the spiritual been separated from the political, in its use. Indeed, the whole theory of their national government, inevitably joined the political and the religious. The State and the Church were, with it, identical, the former being only the outward embodiment of the latter. Jewish politics were only Jewish religion in its public relations, for God was the political as well as religious Head of the nation. It was, hence, all but impossible for a Jew to conceive of the Messiah, except as the divinely commissioned vicegerent of God, in his double sphere of carthly and heavenly kingship in Israel.

The long silence of prophets, and the keen politico-religious enthusiasm with which the advent of a Messiah was expected—an enthusiasm resting on Scripture throughout, but rekindled to a passionate and abiding fervour by the Book of Daniel—incited some nobler spirits to break the stillness, and keep alive the national faith and hope, by compositions conceived in the same spirit. To give then greater weight, they were ascribed to the most famous men of 1 ast ages, and sent abroad in their names. A Revelation of the future glory of Israel appeared in the name of the antediluvian Enoch, as one, of all men, worthy to have been favoured with divine communications. Another consisted of psalms ascribed to Solomon, and a third was said to have been written by the great Scribe, the second Moses— Ezra. Others are still preserved in the collection of "Apocrypha" till recently bound up with cur English Bibles. Of the whole, the first Book of the Maccabees, illustrates the fervent patriotism and stern puritanism of the war of liberty. The Wisdom of the Son of Sirach sets in a striking light the saying of Esdras, that, even in these dark days, though name according key to the relature. That more concern needed for h mon, and the heat of the ne

Nothing con of an Oriental ings-nothing themselves as all other natio which the earl Romans into Herod. In on sheep, while th dog, the black rayen, and the and swine. H the Grecian eas vulture, and th sheep of the H flock, the rod o quakes, and all the carth, which the beloved lan sealed books. kingdoms, and the heathen fro oppressors of Is pillars of fire." the midst of th the blood of the chariot axle," and the righteo - "the Elect," "Son of God"-"The plants ever and ever "throne of the universal adora The pictures empire, throw may seek in val any other peop for glorious will

The

spen

ireadme, it

ilso, a kinge this

their

ich-as arthly

carry hat is,

ied by na, the

Scripo, were

n mon-

before

liverer

cted to e polit-

govern-

ate and ntward religion eligious Jew to ed viceingship

s enthu-

ssionate

nobler

ith and

ve them of past e future noch, as mmuni-

crypha

hole, the

nd stern

f Sirach ese dark days, though many "walked feignedly before God, others feared His name according to His will, and taught His law nobly." No better key to the religious spirit of an age can be had than its religious literature. That of Israel, as the age of Christ drew near, was more and more concentrated on the expected Messlah, and the preparation needed for his coming. The Book of Enoch, the Psalms of Solomon, and the Fourth Book of Esdras, successively reveal the white heat of the national hopes of which they were the expression.

Nothing could be more fitted to influence the excitable imagination of an Oriental people, accustomed to such a style in their sacred writings-nothing more fitted to intensify a fanatical spiritual pride in themselves as the favourites of heaven, or to deepen their hatred of all other nations, than the mystic chapters of the Book of ENOCH, of which the earlier date, perhaps forty years before the entrance of the Romans into Palestine, while the whole are as old as the reign of, Herod. In one, Israel is painted under the figure of a flock of white sheep, while the nations round are the Egyptian wolf, the Phenician. dog, the black wild boar, Edom, the Arabian vulture, the Syrian rayen, and the Grecian eagle; or are branded as jackals, kites, foxes, and swine. Hyrcanus, the sheep with the great horn, drives away the Grecian eagles, the Syrian ravens, the Egyptian kites, the Arabian vulture, and the Philistine dogs, who were tearing the flesh of the sheep of the House of Isracl. The Lord of the sheep comes to His flock, the rod of His wrath in His hand, and strikes the earth till it quakes, and all the beasts and birds flee from the sheep, and sink in the earth, which closes over them. A great throne is then set up in the beloved land, and the Lord of the sheep sits on it, and opens the sealed books. He will then drive the kings from their thrones and kingdoms, and will break the teeth of sinners, and, finally, chase out the heathen from the congregation of His people, and cast down the oppressors of Israel into a deep place, "full of fire, flaming, and full of pillars of fire," A "great everlasting heaven" will spring forth from the midst of the angels, and the day of judgment will begin, "when the blood of the sinners will be as high as a horse's breast, and as a, chariot axle," and when legions of angels shall appear in the skies, and the righteous be raised from the grave. The days of the Messiah — the Elect," "the Anointed One," "the Son of Man," who is also "Son of God"—will then begin.

"The plants of righteousness" (the Jewish nation) will flourish for ever and ever under His reign, for He is to come forth from the, "throne of the majesty of God," and rule over all, as the object of universal adoration.

The pictures given of the blessedness of Isracl in its world-wide empire, throw light on the nobler side of the Jewish nature, for we may seek in value for anything so pure and lofty in the conceptions of any other people. "Blessed be ye, O ye righteous and elect ones, for glorious will be your lot! The righteous shall dwell in the light of the Sun, and the elect in the light of the Life Eternal; the days of their life shall have no end, and the days of the holy ones shall be countless. And they shall seek the light, and find righteousness beside the Lord of Spirits. The righteous shall have peace with the Lord of the World. They will dwell beside the Water of Life, in the gardens of righteousness, and shine like the light for ever and ever. Their hearts will rejoice, because the number of the righteous is fulfilled, and the blood of the righteous avenged."

The PSALMS OF SOLOMON, written at the time of Pompey's invasion, look forward confidently to the coming of the Messiah, and the setting up of the everlasting kingdom of God, when the sons and daughters of Jerusalem will be brought back again from the east and the west, because Jehovah has had compassion on her affliction. The 17th and 18th Psalms, especially, bring before us, with equal vividness and beauty, the hopes that glowed in the national breast in the days of Christ, and broke out into wild violence in the religious revolt of Judas, the Galilæan. Joseph, in his cottage at Nazareth, may often have listened to them, or read them, for they were familiar to every Jew, and many a group of Galilæan villagers gathered, from time to time, to hear them repeated, in Eastern fashion, by some reader or reciter. They ran thus:—

Lord, Thou alone art our King for ever and ever, and in Thee shall our souls make their boast. What is the span of man's life upon earth? According to the time fixed by the Lord, and man's hope upon Himi But we hope in God our Saviour, because the power of our God is with mercy, for ever, and the kingdom of our God is over the heathen, for judgment, for ever,

"Thou, O Lord, didst choose for Thyself David, to be king over Israel, and didst swear to him, respecting his seed for ever, that there would never fail a prince of his house before Thee, for ever. But for our sins, the wicked have risen up against us; they (the Asmonean party), whom Thou hast not sent forth, have done violence against us, and have gotten the power over us. They have put away Thy name with violence, and have not glorified it, though it be above all in majesty; they have set up a king over them. They have laid waste the throne of David, with a haughty shout of triumph. But Thou, O Lord, wilt cast them down, Thou wilt take away their seed from the earth, raising up against them an alien, who is hot of our nace. After their sins shalt Thou recompense them, O God, they will receive according to their works. According to their works will God show pity on them! He will hunt out their seed, and will not let them go. Faithful is the Lord, in all His judgments which He performs in the earth.

tants. He has made the youth, and the old man, and the child disappear together. In his fury he has sent away our sons to the west; and our princes he has made an open show, and has not spared.

Our enemy stranger to. heathen do covenant ha among heat shewed pity of the saint from their n be saved fro sight, in sav earth, by the de' Behold, David, at the And gird his the unjust ru from the hea from Thine ! gressora; sha shattered by mouth, the h the heathen f the thoughts race, and sha tribes of the suffer unright wicked man ] that they are tribes, over th among them the wisdom of "And He to serve Him earth. And was in the b parts of the e return; bearin has glorified taught of God in His days, b Lord. (o For H bow: neither. He shall not t self, is His ki all the heather by the word o Lord blessed. for the ruling

3

ays of

hall be usness

ith the

in the

d ever.

is ful-

s inva-

ind the

ns and

ast and

n. The vivid-

t in the

ious re-

th, may

iliar to

d, from

y some

Bill

n Thee

n's life .

l man's use the

of our

ing over

at there

r. But

Asmo-

violence

ut away

e above

ave laid

h. U But

eir seed

t of our

bd; they

brks will

will not

hich He

inhabi-

hild dis-

he west;

spared.

情况为后门丁

intoni

Our enemy has done haughtly in his alien pride, and his heart is a stranger to our God. And he did all things, in Jerusalem, as the heathen do with their idols, in their cities. And the sons of the covenant have been made to serve them, and have been mingled among heathen, nations. There was not one among them who shewed, pity or truth in Jerusalem. Those who loved the synagogues of the saints fled from them; they were driven away as sparrows from their nest. They wandered in deserts, that their souls might be saved from defilement; and the wilderness was lovely in their sight, in saving their souls. They were scattered over the whole earth, by those who have not the Law mathematicate will be an indiffer Behold, O Lord, and raise up to Israel, their king, the Son of David, at the time Thou, O God, knowest, to rule Israel. Thy child. And gird him, O Lord, with strength, that he may break in pieces the unjust rulers. Cleanse Jerusalem, in wisdom, and righteousness, from the heathen who tread it under foot. Thrust out the sinners from Thine inheritance; grind to dust the haughtiness of the transgressors; shatter in pieces all their strength, as a potter's vessel is shattered by a rod of iron. Destroy utterly, with the word of Thy mouth; the heathen that have broken Thy Law; at His coming let the heathen flee before His face, and confound Thou the sinners in the thoughts of their hearts. And He shall bring together the holy. race, and shall lead them in righteousness, and Ho shall judge the, tribes of the holy people, for the Lord, His God. And He will not suffer unrighteousness to dwell in the midst of them, nor will any wicked man be let dwell among them. For He will take knowledge. that they are all sons of God, and He will portion them out in their tribes, over the land. And the stranger and the foreigner will dwell. among them no more. He will judge the people and the heathen, in the wisdom of His righteousness, Lend to soning is hearing; and how a "And He will bring the peoples of the heathen under His yoke, to serve Him, and He will exalt the Lord exceedingly in all the earth and He will cleanse Jerusalem in righteousness, so that, as it was in the beginning, the heathen shall come from the uttermost parts of the earth, to see His glory, and her weary, wasted sons shall return; bearing gifts, to see the glory of the Lord, with which God has glorified her. And He shall be a righteous king over them, taught of God. And there shall be no unrighteousness in their midst in His days, because they are all holy, and their king is the Ohrist, the Lord, o For He shall not trust in the horse, or the chariot, or in the bow; neither shall He gather to Himself silver and gold for war, and He shall not trust in numbers, in the day of hattle. The Lord, Himself, is His king, and His trust, in the Mighty God, and HE shall set all the heathen in terror, before Him. For He shall rule all the earth, by the word of His mouth, for ever. He shall make the people of the Lord blessed, in wisdom and in joy. And He, being pure from sin, for the ruling of a great people; will rebuke kings, and will cut off transgressors by the might of His word. And He shall not want help from God, in His days. For the Lord shall make Him mighty in the Holy Spirit, and wise in counsel, and strong, and righteous. And the favour of the Lord shall be His strength, and He shall not be weak. His hope is in the Lord, and who can do anything against Him? Mighty in His doings, and strong in the fear of God; feeding, as a shepherd, the flock of the Lord, in faith and righteousness, He will let no one among them fail in the Law. He will lead them all in holiness, and there will be no haughty oppressing of them in His rule.

"This is the glorious excellence of the King of Israel, which is known to God. He shall raise Him over the house of Israel, to instruct it. His words are purer than the most pure gold. He will judge the people in the synagogues—the tribes of the saints. His words will be like words of the holy ones, in the midst of the holy multitudes. Blessed are those who shall live in those days, to see the good things which God shall do for Israel, in the gathering together of her tribes. God shall hasten His mercy towards Israel. He shall purge us from the defilement of the presence of our enemies, the profane. The Lord, He is King, for ever and ever!

"O Lord, Thy mercy is on the works of Thy hands for ever and ever! T, y goodness to Israel is a gift beyond price. This eyes look on, and nothing will fail of Thy promises. This ears will attend to the supplication of the needy who trusts in Thee. Thy judgments are in all the earth, in mercy, and Thy love is towards the seed of Abraham, the sons of Israel. Thou hast Thyself taught us, as Thy Son, This only begotten, Thy first-born, so that we may turn an obedient heart away from ignorance and sin.

"God st II purify Israel, against the day of mercy and blessing, against the day of the calling forth of His Christ (Anointed) to rule. Blessed are those who shall live in these days!"

In the FOURTH BOOK OF ESDRAS, which was circulating among the people at the birth of Christ, the ration found its strength and weakness, alike, reflected, and all its religious hopes flattered to the utmost. "If Thou for us hast created the world, wherefore is it that we do not possess our world?" asks the supposed Ezra. In the fifth of a series of "Visions of the Night," for which he had prepared by long fasting, he sees an angel rise from the sea, with twelve wings and three heads, the mystic symbol of the triumphant heathen power of the Syro- and Egypto-Macedonian kings, and of that of Rome, under Cæsar, Antony, and Octavian, with whom remained final victory, and universal monarchy. After a time, he, Octavian (Augustus) alone, as the one-headed cagle, remains. But now appears a mighty Lion—the Messiah—who calls to the cagle, with a human voice, "Art thou not he who remainest of the four beasts (the four heathen world-empires of Daniel), which I created that they might rule in my world, that the end of times might come through them?

Thou hast jud the peaceful; and hast over their walls, t ing has risen The Most Hig are closed, an eagle, and be s lets, thy feroe that the earth from thy viole Him who mad 'no more seen, pale with fea history, and in the earth by th persecutions m of the Messial the persecution world-turmoil proclaim His a in the reign of death of Hero the haughty Ro free His holy p

Nor was this posed Ezra, sea, and in it th were troubled. of lieaven, and trembled before the flame. Bu to make war word, a great n of it, and when He lifted again utterly with a f of the storm fre and aslies. Th called to Him a bound as capti whom He had syria, where ne pass over, and brethren there. To Esdras th securs a second want

ghty

eous.

I not

ainst

ding,

s, He

m all

n His

ich is to in-

will

holy

ee the gether

shall

s, the

er and

s look

attend

judge seed

us, as

r turn

essing,

o rule.

ng the

h, and

to the

e is it

In the

d pre-

twelve.

eathen

hat of,

nained

tavian.

ppears

human e four might

them?

His

Thou hast judged the earth, but not in truth, for thou hast troubled the peaceful; and wronged the unoffending; thou hast loved liars; and hast overthrown the cities of the industrious, and hast razed their walls, though they did thee no harm. Thy wrongful deal. ing has risen to the Highest, and thy pride to the Mighty One. The Most High, also, has remembered His times, and, behold, they are closed, and the ages are ended. Therefore, begone, O thou eagle, and be seen no more-with thy fearful wings, thy baleful winglets, thy ferocious heads, thy tearing claws, and all thy foul body that the earth may be refreshed, and may recover, itself, when freed from thy violence, and that she may hope in the justice and pity of Him who made her!" "And I looked, and, behold, the eagle was no more seen, and all its body was burned up, and the earth grew pale with fear." Rome, then just entering on its long imperial history, and in the height of its greatness, was to be blotted out from the earth by the Messiah. Past generations had thought the Syrian persecutions must be the tribulation which was to herald the coming of the Messiah, and to end heathen domination on the earth; then the persecutions and wars of the later Maccabees; then the huge world-turmoil of the Roman civil wars, in succession, seemed to proclaim His approach. But, now, the supposed Ezra looked for it in the reign of Augustus, as men, a little later, expected it on the death of Herod. The Lion, rising from the forest, would rebuke the haughty Roman eagle, and would sit in judgment on the heathen, free His holy people, and bless them till the coming of the end.

Nor was this the only vision of the Messiah, presented by the supposed Ezra. "Behold," says he, "a wind rose from the heart of the sea, and in it the form of a man" (the Son of God), "and all its waves were troubled. And I saw, and behold the man came on the clouds of licaven, and wheresoever he turned his face and looked, all things trembled before him, and all that heard His voice melted like wax in the flame. But a countless host from all parts of the earth came up to make war against Him. And He cut out for Himself, by His word, a great mountain—which is Mount Zion—and stood on the top of it, and when the multitude pressed with trembling against Him; He lifted against them neither hand nor weapon, but consumed them utterly with a flood of fire from His mouth, and the lightning flashes of the storm from His lips, and nothing remained of them but smoke and ashes. Then He rose and came down from the mountain, and called to Him a peaceful multitude, some glad and some sorry, some bound as captives, some bearing gifts; and these were the ten tribes, whom He had brought from their hiding-place in a land beyond Assyria, where never man else dwelt, cleaving the Euphrates to let them pass over, and gathering them to their own land again, that their brethren there, and they from afar, might rejoice evermore together." To Esdras the reign of the Idumean Herod over the Jewish people, seems a second note of the culmination of heathen rule and its speedy overthrow. "The end of this age," says he, "is Esau, and Jacob is the beginning of that which is to come;" the death of the Edomite was to mark the opening of the reign of the sons of Jacob. "During his life, or at his death," says another vision, "the Messias (or Son of God) will descend from heaven with those men who have not tasted of death, and the books will be opened before the face of the sky, and all shall see them, and the trumpet shall sound, and every cheek will grow pale at the hearing it. And friends will fight at that time against friends, and the earth shall tremble and all who dwell of it. and the springs and fountains shall cease running for three hours. And the hearts of the people shall be changed, and they will be turned into other men. For all sin and wickedness will be destroyed, and faith will fourish, and corruption shall be rooted out, and truth, which had been lost for a long time, will reign." Regions hitherto unknown and barren will be planted, to shame the heathen, by showing the greater glory of the kingdom of the Messiah than of theirs. Yet, this golden age is to last only 400 years, at the end of which the Messiah will die. The earth will then pass away. The dead will be raised, and the great judgment held, after which "the righteous shall go into the presence of God, and shine like the sun, and dwell in the midst of His everlasting light, and die no more, and a single day shall be as seventy years, and they shall live for ever and ever. But the wicked shall go to everlasting fire."

Such a literature, widely diffused, penetrated the nation with its spirit, and coloured its destiny. Nor were the books quoted the only writings of a similar tone that everywhere formed the reading, and fired the soul of the contemporaries of Jesus. A succession of these heralds of the Messiah perpetuated the theme. After the Psalms of Solomon and the Book of Esdras, we have the anticipations of the Targuns, and of Philo, and the pictures of the Book of Jubilees. In the Messiah's time we read in the latter, "the days will begin to lengthen, and the children of men will live longer, from generation to generation, and from day to day," till their lives come nigh to a thousand years. And there will be no more any old, or any weary of life, but they will all be like children and boys, and will fulfil all their days in peace and joy, and there will be no accuser amongst them, or any corrupter. For all their days will be days of blessing."

In an age so cold and practical as our own. A parallel may, perhaps, be found in the universal excitement which pervaded Christendom at the end of the tenth century, when the 1,000 years of the Book of Revelation were thought to be closing, and the end of the world was believed at hand. The consternation that then seized mankind made men give up everything to be ready for the descent of the judge. I was the one thought. Countless pilgrims sold all, and set off to the Holy Land to await the expected Saviour. Not less deep or universal was the expectation of the Messiah in the days of Christ, rousing unu, even agai of the Maccaba to execute venu to bind their ki to execute upon granted to all t The effect of riense Sprun of a hated fathe able to crush th King of Judea. were cruel and nature opposed after member o royal race, which the leading Rab he had defiled the pontificate them; he had v had burned the whom so much descent; he had slain many of th when dying, he collected elders selves, if not for Against such ducees,-notwit felt for the tim who were Herod of the day, and

The last martyr

thias, son of Ma

whose stirring a

the Temple was but men of the s multitudes who

their-hiding pl

times always p

have been won

however, in real

Judas, the Galil

men, even against hope, once and again, in the literal use of the words, of the Maccabsan psalm—to take a two-ciged sword in their hand, to execute vengeance on the heathen, and punishments on the nations; to bind their kings with chains, and their, nobles with links of iron; to execute upon them the judgments written. This was an honour, granted to all the Saints."

cob is omite

luring

son of

tasted

y, and

k will

time

on it.

hours.

urned

d. and

which

known

ng the Yet,

ch the

will be

is shall

in the

v shall

But the

with its

ne only

ng, and f these ilms of

of the

es. O'In

egin to

ation to a thou-

eary of all their

hem, or

1944, 1911

ination;

perhaps,

ndom at

Book of

orld was

nd made

dgesonf

f to the

niversa

rousing

The effect of the long reign of Herod on Jewish parties was immense. Sprung from a race which the Jews detested, and the son of a hated father, he had owed it to the Roman Senate that he was able to crush the national liberties under foot, and usurp the title of King of Judea, which no stranger before him had borne. His instincts were cruel and harsh; his life and tastes pagan and sensual; his whole nature opposed to everything Jewish. He had murdered member after member of his family, and among others the last of the native royal race, which the people venerated: he had put to death most of the leading Rabbis; he had filled the land with heathen architecture: he had defiled Jerusalem by a circus and theatre; he had degraded the pontificate by putting two high priests to death; after deposing them; he had violated the tomb of David, in search of treasure; he had burned the national registers, so essential to a people among whom so much in their priesthood and common life turned on their descent; he had burned alive, in his old age, two famous Rabbis, and slain many of the youth of Jerusalem, for their zeal for the Law; and when dying, he had left a command, to murder, in cold blood, the collected elders of the nation, to fill the land with sorrow for themselves, if not for him, when he was gone.

Against such a master the two great parties. Pharisees and Sadducees -- notwithstanding their differences, above all things Jews, -felt for the time drawn closer together. Except the high priests, who were Herod's creatures, the courtiers who worshipped the power of the day, and the soldiers loyal to a warlike king, few were for Herod The Sadducees forsook the Court; the High Priesthood was for the time taken from their party. An Alexandrian family into which Herod had married, received it to ennoble them,-men suspected of foreign views, royalists by alliance, and opposed to the people by their origin. For the first time we hear of preachers. The last martyrs under Herod-Judas, son of Saripheus, and Mattathias, son of Margalouth, -were in reality tribunes of the people; to whose stirring addresses, the great riot, in which the golden eagle in the Temple was thrown down, was due. They were burned alive, but men of the same mould took their place, allies and friends of the multitudes who fied to the hills, to emerge from time to time from their hiding places, to harass the troops of Herod. Revolutionary times always produce such men, whom time servers of their day have been wont to denounce as brigands or robbers. They were, however, in reality the Maccabees of their age, ..... The followers of Judas, the Galilæan," says Josephus, " in all their opinions are at one with the Pharisees, -- that is, with the nation, -- but they have an inextinguishable passion for liberty, and will own none but God as Master; they count any tortures that they may endure, however dread. man Master." It was for putting Hezekiah, the father of Judas, to death, in the beginning of his reign, that the Sanhedrim, then still extant, tried to bring Herod to trial, which they hever would have done had he been a mere "robber." What the nation thought of his son Judas is shown in the words of a Rabbi, "In the world to come, God will gather round Judas a multitude like him, and will set them before His face." Men cf the same type had appeared before Pompey at Damascus, pleading the cause neither of Hyrcanus or Aristobulus, but of the people of God, whose institutions had never favoured royalty. But it was under Herod, and immediately after his death. that these ideas first became the cry of any organized party. The people had tired of the dry and lifeless discussions of the Rabhis. Their subtleties and legal distinctions left their hearts untouched. But men had risen like Hezekiah, Judas of Galilee, Mattathias, and Judas. son of Saripheus, whose harangues set their souls on fire. These earnest spirits did not trouble with barren decisions; they preached and roused They did not dispute about some obscure chapter of Exodus or Leviticus; their texts were the inspired words of the prophets, the burning and eloquent exhortations of Isaiah and Jeremiah. These they recited, commented on, and enlarged, before multitudes eager to hear them. The voice of the Ancient Oracles had retained all its freshness, and suited the passing times as if written respecting them. For Jehoiakim men read Herod; Rome took the place of Babylon; and the gloomy prophecics of Jeremiah seemed about to be fulfilled anew on the second Temple. For the last time, the almost withered tree of Jewish nationality seemed to live again. In the soil of the Word of God it grew green once more, and pushed out some last branches, but all the prophets through whose impulse it thus revived, paid for the dangerous glory by a violent death.

In the lifetime of Jesus parties had thus become transformed. The Boëthusians, or Alexandrians, raised to the pontificate by Herod, became the royalists. They hoped to be able, under him and the Romans, to maintain ecclesiastical matters as they were, and keep hold of their privileges. They were the high-priestly families whose harshness and violence are handed down to us in the Talmud. "A curse on the family of Boëthos, a curse on their spears"—was the anametha muttered in the streets of Jerusalem—"a curse on the family of Hanan! a curse on their viper-like hissings! A curse on the family of Kanthera! a curse on their fine feathers! A curse on the family of Ismael Ben Phabi! a curse on their fists! They are high priests themselves, their sons keep the money, their sons-in-law are captains, and t approaches of four cries—'D the Eternal: of yourself, an gloves to prote comes the cry Phabi, the disc priestly ritest a let Johanan, th mands, enter, th last pupil of his be believed in i many casks of kitchen.

The luxury a so far, that it is tunic for him, t of Eliezer Ben credit it, at a co other priests wo its' transparency tune of this Pon faney, but such enough to arrest sunk to the ex Johanan, "do life?' To that o and ten years, a And to what tin wicked shall be stood four hund dred high priest reigns, less than priests."

The Pharisees completely from Law, and in attidiscussed. The Jacobins of the popular with the compromise, the help of God, for the mistress of devotion, no sac party, from the Thus, from ab 0. AN

d'as

read-

iends

aders

l'any

as, to

still

have

of his

come, them

mpey

bulus,

oured

death.

The

abus.

But

Judas,

These

eached

oter of

of the

1 Jerc-

e mules had written

ok the

seemied

time,

again.

pushed

pulse it

Herod,

ind the

d keep s whose

d: CA

was the

on the

urse on e on the

are high

law, are

The

captains, and their servants smite the people with their staves!" "The approaches of the sanctuary," continues the Talmud, "echo with four cries—'Depart hence, ye sons of Eli, you pollute the Temple of the Eternal: "Depart hence, Issachar Kefr Barkai, who think only of yourself, and profane the consecrated victims, —for he wore silken gloves to protect his hands in his ministrations. Then, is keen frony, comes the cry—'Open your gates, O Temple, and let Ismael Bon Phabi, the disciple of Phinehas, enter, that he may perform the highpriestly rites! and, finally, a fourth voice—'Open wide, ye gates! and let Johanan, the son of Nebedal, the disciple of gluttons and gourmands, enter, that he may gorge on the sacrifices!" No wonder this last pupil of his Roman masters won such a name, if the Talmud may be believed in its statement, that he had three hundred calves, and as many casks of wine, and forty scales of pigeons, set apart for his kitchen.

The luxury and audacity of some of the high priests were pushed so far, that it is related of Ismael Ben Phabi that his mother made a tunic for him, that cost a hundred mine-about £330. The mother of Eliezer Ben Harsom had a similar robe made for him, if we may credit it, at a cost of 20,000 minæ—£66,000, but it was so fine that the other priests would not let him wear it, because he seemed naked from its transparency. The exaggeration is, doubtless, great, for the fortune of this Pontifical millionaire is a favourite theme of Rabbinical fancy, but such exaggeration itself springs only from truth, striking enough to arrest the imagination. The high priesthood had, in fact, sunk to the extremest corruption. "To what time," asks Rabbi Johanan, "do the words refer-" The fear of the Lord prolongeth life?' To that of the first Temple, which stood about four hundred and ten years, and had only eighteen high priests from first to last? And to what time do the other words refer-'And the years of the wicked shall be shortened?' To that of the second Temple, which stood four hundred and twenty years, and had more than three hundred high priests: for, deducting eighty-five years for five exceptional reigns, less than a single year is left for each of all the other high priests."

The Pharisees and Sadducees, in these dark years, had to withdraw completely from political life, and seek consolation in the study of the Law, and in attracting the people to the schools where they taught or discussed. The extreme party among the former—the Zealots, the Jacobins of the age, or rather its Maccabees—were enthusiastically popular with the youth of the nation. Stern puritans, who knew no compromise, they dreamed of triumphing in their weakness, by the help of God, for whom they believed they fought, over the armies of the mistress of the world. No danger appalled their magnificent devotion, no sacrifice daunted their heroism. They were the rising party, from the time of Herod's death.

Thus, from about the time of Christ's birth, religion became, once more, the great factor of Jewish national life. The bloody king had died in the midst of rumours of the close approach of the Messiah The visit of the Magi, almost immediately before, must have fanned the popular excitement still more; por would the massacre at Bethlehem be without its influence on the public mind. The insurrection of Mattathias and Judas, at the head of the youth of the city, which. also, marked these eventful months, had only anticipated the theoretic movement, to be made, as all hoped, with success, as soon as the tyrant was dead. The wild outbreaks headed by Simon, the slave of Herod. Judas the Galilean, and Athronges, the Perean shepherd, were all. more or less, connected with religion. The deputation of fifty Jews. sent to Rome to petition Augustus to set aside the Herods, and permit the restoration of the old theocracy, had aroused the Jewish population of Rome itself. The Rabbis, martyred for destroying the golden cagle, and Judas and his colleague, Zadok, the Rabbi, had, moreover, by their inspiring harangues and appeals to Scripture, as well as by their heroism and the lefty grandeur of their nims, given such an impulse to religious enthusiasm, and created such an ideal of patricitic devotion, that the youth so the country, henceforth, pressed ever more zealously in their steps. Even the old looked on them as the glory of their age. Patriotism became more and more identified with flery zeal for the Law, and war with the heathen for its sake begame the religious creed of the multitude, is rank . anut service militerial " broul Triple a billy performed with beiltro aparticity transferation being with the base Plinol and the part of a part of the second of the part of the four as a second of the four of the part of the second of the part of the second of the secon BOD YOUR HUR THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN IS AT HAND. LA JED IN THE DESCRIPTION OF THE AVEN IS AT HAND. LA JED IN THE AVEN IS THIRTY years of the life of Christ had passed in the seclusion of Nazaroth, In early youth He had learned Joseph's trade; and had spont the long years that had intervened, in the duties of His humble calling for humble it must have been in a provincial town, where there could be no demand for the skill required in great communities, in that age of civic embellishment. It is well for mankind that He chose such a lowly lot. He could sympathise more keenly with the humble poor, from having Himself shared their burden. Nor could labour have been more supremely honoured than by the Saviour giving Himself to life-long toil. Work-the condition of health, the law of progress, the primal duty in Eden, and the safeguard of every virtue in all ages, is touched with a grand nobility by the spectacle of the Carpenter of Nazaroth. Idleness, in any rank, becomes doubly a vice from the remembrance of such a lesson,

How these thirty years of obscurity were passed is left untold, beyond the incidental mention of the calling Jesus pursued. Joseph, according to old tradition, died when Jesus was eighteen years old, and it seems certain, from the fact that he is not mentioned in the Gospola duri began. Fro Jesus suppo common wit grown up!w at least two Tamar: but! ried before J think that 8a deep was Man married Clor have died be have had two they had an circle of wh the outline of afterwards th from his chil Simon and Ju the Church o descendants kingly race o Lord," says 160, "the gr according to of David, and much alarme put the quest fessed that th or liow much they had bety dred pounds). piece of land raised their t They also be with daily to Christ, and, h ous silence, a The moments thus show us all in humble the Law, that Jewish Chris Communio lessons of lif hearts of mer a deep know

gabid band

ianned

Bethle-

tion of which.

ogratic

tyrant Herod.

ere all.

Jews, permit

jopulagolden

reover,

as by uchman

atrictic r more

lory of

h flery

me the

Local

ttild, 19 latenad

Ma Lio

a fautiti

11 1105

sion of

nd had

humble

, where

mmuni-

nd that dy with

Saviour

lth, the

f every tacle of loubly a untold, Joseph,

ars old, 1 in the

(Jospels during Christ's public life, that he died at least before that began. From the time of his death, we are told, doubticss correctly, Jesus supported His mother by the work of His hands, at least, in common with the others of the household. It is added that He had grown up with four brothers, James, Joseph, Simon, and Jude, and at least two sisters, whose names are said to have been Esther and Tamar: but Jude and Simon, and both the sisters, we are told, married before Joseph's death, and settled in the town of Nazareth. Some think that Salome, the mother of James and John, and wife of Zebedeed was Mary's eldest sister; others identify her with the Mary who married Clopas-Alphaeus, a' townsman, but he, like Joseph! seems to have died before Jesus began His ministry. This couple seem to have had two sons, James and Joses, but it is not told us whether they had any daughters. The two households formed the family circle of which Jesus was the wondrous centre. Tradition fills up the outline of one or two of those thus honoured-notably of James, afterwards the saintly head of the Church of Jerusalem-a Nazarite from his childhood, and a martyr in his old age. "Christ's brothers. Simon and Jude, are also mentioned incidentally; the one as head of the Church of Jerusalem after James' death; the other as having left descendants who were cited before Domitian, as belonging to the kingly race of David. "There were yet living of the family of our Lord." says Eusebius, from Hegesippus, who wrote about the year 160, "the grand-children of Judas, called the brother of our Lord, according to the flesh. These were reported as being of the family of David, and were brought to Domitian. For the emperor was as much alarmed at the appearance of Christ as Herod had been. He put the question, whether they were of David's race, and they confessed that they were. He then asked them what property they had, or how much money they owned. And both of them answered, that they had between them only nine thousand denarii (under three hundred pounds), and this they had, not in silver, but in the value of a place of land, containing only thirty-nine acres, from which they raised their taxes, and supported themselves by their own labour. They also began to show their hands, how they were hard and rough with daily toll." Domitian then asked them some questions about Christ, and, liter hearing their answers, dismissed them in contemptuous silence, as simple fools whom it was not worth while to trouble. The momentary glimpses still left us of the home circle of Nazareth thus show us a group of brothers, partly working a small farm, but all in humble life, and all, alike, marked by so strict an observance of the Law, that, even in their old age, the Jews themselves, and the Jewish Christians, held them in honour on this account.

Communion with His own heart; the quiet gathering in of all the lessons of life and nature around; deep study of the thoughts and hearts of men; a silent mastery of the religious ideas of the day, and a deep knowledge of the religious parties of the people, were daily betty theatre

to wider field

storms of pu

world. Eve

to begin His

must He hav

His fellow m

permitted rei

and frets at c

Jesus learned

was come" I

sanction. in c a few miles

begun, and H

than Jesus, th

Thus, altho

divine wisdo

especially wa

These unkno

yet be the m action, but th

our allotted s

that of publi

rather, where untroubled s

their agitatio

back fondly o

cloudless ligh

loveliness in a

of His own so

divine love of natural joy in whether in t

men of Naza

which urged

become more

His soul deve

Meanwhile

Israel Harris

Political or a great natio

Israel. But

the narrow b

the whole wo

that age pervi

With the g delight in the advancing with Josus in Lut in His spiritual life, in these years as to the end, solitary prayer and long continued communion with God. where no eye saw and no car heard Him, were, doubtless, His constant characteristics. The Scriptures read in the synagogues, or studied in the household, were His habitual study, till His intellect and heart were so saturated with their words and spirit, that He know them better than the Scribes and Pharisees, who claimed to make them their whole study, and in international the start in the damas a institution He must have been a mystery to His household. He had beer, so even to His mother from the time of the Temple visit, and He must have become more and more so as He went on His own way, joining no party, silent, thoughtful, self-contained, given to solitude, and with a light in His great eyes that seemed as if they saw into the very soul of those on whom they were turned. His brothers and sisters could not understand Him; even after He had become a public teacher. Alone in that beautiful world of Galilee, with its skies filled with light-its green plains and valleys, wooded hills, and shining, sea: amidst a brave, bright, fiery, noble people, and yet so different from them-a faithful son, a patient worker at His daily toil, a friend of children and of the poor and needy gentle, loving, pure, and yet so wholly apart by His very perfection-we may almost think He must have been avoided rather than sought. I will a distant a battoilighton Taught by Joseph and Mary, and in the Synagogue school. Jesus had learned the Hebrew, which had long ceased to be a spoken language, so as both to read and write it. Syro-Chaldaic was the language of the people, and thus His mother tongue; but He must also have gained knowledge enough of Greek, from its being spoken by so many in the different towns of the country, to converse with those who knew no other tongue used in Palestine-such as the centurion or Pilate, or the Greeks who sought an interview with Him in the last week of His life. The metal managements of life in such a sphere, year after year passed quietly and obscurely away. Events around, and in Judea were not wanting to keep tongues busy in the mark t place or in the streets, and thoughtful hearts grew daily more so, as to the

Judea, were not wanting to keep tongues busy in the mark ', place or in the streets, and thoughtful hearts grew daily more so, as to the issue of all that reached them from the great world outside their hills. Meanwhile, the house of Mary must have been the ideal of a happy home in its relations with her mysterious Son. His childlike humility, sunny contentment, stainless purity, watchful tenderness, and transparent simplicity of soul, would find expression in an ever-ready delight in pleasing, an infinite patience, an attractive meekness, and a constant industry. The discipline by which His human character was perfected was not confined to the closing years of His life, when He came before men at large, but began with His childhood and lasted to the end. We grow firm and strong to resist and to do; we gain the mastery of ourselves which brings superiority, by a patient use of the incidents of daily life. To rule one's own spirit on the as to sin or tellect

God, con-

know

malze

man

ep, so

must pining

d with

y soul

could acher.

with

gi sen;

from

end of

yct so

must

Jesus

n lan-

ie lan-

st also

n by so

those turion

helast

r after ind in lace or

to the r hills.

happy

humil-

s, and

r-ready

, and a aracter

when od, and do: we patient

on the

petty theatre of a private sphere, creates a power which goes with us to wider fields of action." The principles and graces which stand the storms of public life must have been trained in the school of our daily world. Even to have to wait for thirty years before the time came to begin His great work, was itself a discipline to a boly soul. How must He have signed over the evils of the times; over the sufferings of His fellow men; over the loss of apparent opportunities; over the longpermitted reign of evil. Enthusiasm burns to go out on its mission. and frets at delay, blaming itself if a moment appear to be lost." But Jesus learned at Nazareth to wait His Father's time. "Till." His hour was come" He could control His longings, and wait for the divine sanction, in obscurity so complete, that even Nathanael, at Cana, only a few miles off, never heard of Him till His public ministry had begun, and His fellow to wasmen had no suspicion of His being more than Jesus, the carpenter. Tombishing the rure during house the many abit Thus, although retired, these years were in no measure lost." The

Thus, annough reured, these years were in no measure lost. The divine wisdom, which marks out the life of all men; must have especially watched and planned that of the Perfect One of Nazareth. These unknown secluded years teach us that the noblest lives may yet be the most obscure; that life, in the highest sense, is not mere action, but the calm reign of love and duty, towards God and man, in our allotted sphere—that the truest and holiest joy is not necessarily that of public activity, far less that of excitement and noise, but, rather, where the calm around lets God and heaven be mirrored in an uptroubled spirit. Compared with the last years of His life, with their agitation and ceaseless labour, Jesus, doubtless, often looked back fondly on the quiet life of Nazareth, where the skies, filled with cloudless light, or the silent splendour of the stars, or the dream of loveliness in all nature, far and near, were only emblems of the heaven of His own soul.

With the growth in years, His riper faculties would find a growing delight in the highest knowledge. Even as a boy, He had shown a divine love of truth, and a supreme devotion to God, which found its natural joy in "seeking and asking" wherever He could hope to learn, whether in the school of the Rabbis, in the Temple, or from townsmen of Nazareth. He had doubtless a premonition of His calling, which urged Him on. Each day more loveable, He would each day become more thoughtful." He might gather much from without, but His soul developed itself mainly from within.

Political oppression, by a natural reaction, had waked the hopes of a great national future to an intensity unknown before, even in Israel. But while, at other times, similar hopes had affected only the narrow bounds of Judea, they now went beyond it, and agitated the whole world. They fell in with the instinctive feeling which in that age pervaded all countries, that the existing state of things could not continue.

The reign of evil throughout the world seemed to have reached its height In Rome, the infamous Sejanus, long the favourite of Tiberius, had at last fallen, but not till bis career had filled the world with horror. The enforcement of obsolete usury laws had spread financial ruin over the empire. Forced sales made property almost worthless Bankruptcy spread far and near. The courts were filled with men imploring a repeal of the obnoxious laws, and, meanwhile; the capitalists kept back their money. Business was paralyzed throughout the world. Many of the rich were reduced to beggary: and the misery of the poor became more intense. To add to the universal ruin, informers reigned supreme, at Rome, and even the forms of law were forgotten. Multitudes, both innocent and guilty, perished, in the Roman jails, men, women, and children their Tiberius, fraught with evil to the world, grew daily more monstrous. Old age and debauchery had bent his body, and covered his face with ugly blotches, but his taste for obscene pleasures steadily increased, and to indulge them, he shut himself up in loathsome retirement. Wirtue and life were alike at his mercy: no one was safe from infamous informers. A reign of terror prevailed. Legal murders and remorseless confiscations were increasing; immorality and crime held high carnival. The most distant countries trembled before Rome, but its rule may be judged by the guilt, cruelty, and corruption at the centre is pinoft amonthe sally theast used bad, nor The misgoverned East, was deeply agitated by the uneasy presentiment of an impending change. Not only Judea, but the neighbouring countries, were full of restless expectation. Way or and gave 3. Thus, in perhaps the very year in which John the Baptist appeared, the Egyptian priests announced that the bird known as the Pheenix had once more been seen. Originally the mythological emblem of the sun, it had gradually come to be regarded as a representative of the cycles of the history of the world, appearing at regular intervals. to consume itself, and rise anew from its ashes, in mystic indication of the end of one great period and the opening of another. It had appeared under Sesostris, under Amasis, and under Ptolemy, the third king of the Macedonian dynasty, an That it should appear now seemed strange, as the intervals of its return had hitherto been 1.461 and 500 years, but it was only 250 since Ptolemy. Meanwhile. the sacred colleges of the capital confirmed what was announced by the Egyptian priests. If the Egyptian consoled himself, amidst the oppressions of the dark Tiberius days, by the fond belief that the mysterious bird was about to bear away the expiring age, the priestly college of Rome reckoned that the great world-year was about to end, and the age of Saturn to return. According to the Augurs, the ninth world-month, and, with it, the reign of Diana, had closed with Cresar's death, and the last month; that of Apollo, had begun, As, moreover, the secular months were of unequal length, it seemed as if the end of al Christ, had the coming of the Jewis world. It's the child, of bring in a go year in which the death of happened in presentiment At that t becalmed. an a loud voice f him say, whe The Egyptian his message c rose, around. the passenger troubling the The oracles an of a coming age had long der and suici from the dag Even the prov tine, men saw straits for mo secretly offere very food on usurious credi recur so often realized by the universal doub men did not looked for the ancient society ruins of the n trium phs had where looked war between o ized life. Con dominion, and morality, and around them. indeed, before

246

11 1 1 1:5 1

doits

E.OI

vorld

read

most zhile.

lyzed

gary;

othe

n the uilty.

-their

trous.

s face

some

a sato

mur-

y and ad bed cor-

ML PR

y, preneigh-

1 03741

heared,

lem of

tive of

ervals,

ication It had ny, the

appear.

to been

awhile;

ced by

dst the hat the

oriestly

to end, ars, the

ed with

AS,

ed as if the end of all things were at hand. Virgil, 'n the generation before Christ, had already written his Fourth Eclogue, with its pictures of the coming golden age, borrowed from Isaiah, through the medium of the Jewish Sibylline poems, then widely circulated through the world. It seems a satire on his visions of future happy years, that the child, of whom he wrote in such lofty strains, not only failed to bring in a golden age, but died of hunger, under Tiberius, in the very year in which, it would seem, Jesus was crucified. The legend of the death of the great god, Pan, which, according to Plutarh. happened in the days of Tiberius, shows the same deep and boding presentiment, in the ancient world, that a great change was at hand. "At that time," it relates, "a ship, when off Corfu, was strangely becalmed, and, forthwith, the Egyptian helmsman, Thampus, heard a loud voice from the Echinadian Islands call him by name, and bid him say, when he got to Palodes, that the great god, Pan, was dead. The Egyptian did as he was bidden, but scarcely had he called out his message over the shore that had been named to him, when there rose, around, a great sighing; and a sound as of wonder, that filled the passengers with awe; the story, when it was told in Rome, troubling the Emperor Tiberius and the people not a little," The great Pan was, indeed, dead, and the other gods walled over his bler. The oracles and sacred utterances of the time breathe a dark dread of a coming world-catastrophe." The bright day of the Augustan age had long passed. The air over Rome smelt of blood." Mur der and suicide were the fashion, and even women were not safe from the dagger. Financial distress brought want to the mass. Even the provinces suffered by the awful monetary crisis." In Pales tine, men saw their future king, Agrippa, reduced to the greatest straits for money, borrowing where he could, glad to accept funds secretly offered to gain his influence, -for a time dependent for his very food on Herod Antipas, and, in the end, a fugitive from his usurious creditors. The debtor, the creditor, and the jail, which recur so often in the parables, were illustrations only too vividly realized by the people at large.<sup>1</sup> It was a time of change, transition, universal doubt, uncertainty, and expectation. In the heathen world, men did not know what to think of the future; in Judea, they looked for the sudden appearance of the Messiah. The drama of ancient society had been played out; a vast empire had risen on the ruins of the nationalities that had, hitherto, kept men apart, and its trium phy had discredited the local gods, to whom men had everywhere looked for protection. A calm had followed ages of universal war between city and city, and State and State, and had revolutionized life. Corruption and oppression had followed in the wake of dominion, and had filled the world with vague longings for a higher morality, and the hopes of a nobler religion than the decayed systems around them. The very triumph of one power over all others had, indeed before all things besides, opened the way for the new faith of

baned. wi

Levices, v

court, to t

fond exag

splendent

and affect the influen

Judaism.

in the cent

whose Gali

servatism o

But thou

a strict and

birth, than

both rightee

blametessnes

1. mong the

divine requir bly with the Even from c a priest, he u the enjoymen

the heroes of

under the in fervent enthu

with his race,

hood than in spiritual excit

pondering the self up, thong devoted his li to the revival of his parents

that he should out as one for

The Nazarite.

God as peculi

ment. in carne

by fasts and the practised in Ta as a recognized

people.

Christ: The isolation of hostile races had been broken down, and the dim but magnificent conception of a brotherhood of men, though, as yet, only as subjects of a universal despotism, had risen in the mind of all peoples. The highways of Rome invited communication with all lands; her government and laws guaranteed order and safety, wherever they obtained; but, above all, she had prepared the world for a religion which should address all humanity, by levelling the innumerable barriers of rival nationality—with their jealousies and impenetrable prejudices, and linking all races into a single grand federation, with common sympathies, and as fellow-citizens of the same great dominion.

It was amidst such a state of things, when the fabric of society seemed dissolving, and the new world had not yet risen from the chaos of the old, that the destined herald of a new moral order was born, apparently, in Hebron. The son of a pure and worthy priest, John, the future Baptist, was, from his birth, surrounded by the influences most fitted to develope a saintly character. Of priestly descent on his mother's side as well as his father's, he began life with all the advantages of an ancient ancestry, every link of which, in the eyes of his race, was noble. In the society of Hebron, his parents would have a prominent position, and their young son must have been surrounded, on their account, with the respect which insensibly educates and refines. His carly education, received, at the hands of his father and mother, would take the colour of their position and training. The child would hear, from his infancy, the history of his people, and of the great priestly race whose blood ran in his veins. His genealogy was no doubtful conjecture, but clear and well estab-lished through fourteen centuries, lighted up, at intervals, by traditions of famous names, and as famous deeds. The child of strict observers of the Law, he would grow up with a religiou reverence for its minutest prescriptions, its feasts and fasts, its Sabba bs, and new moons, its ten thousand rules on meats and drinks, dress, jurniture, dishes, conversation, reading, travelling, meeting, parting, buying, selling, cooking, the washing of pots, cups, tables, and person-that slavery of ritualism to which pious Jews gave a trembling and anxious obedience. From his earliest years he would feel that he could not cat, drink, clothe himself, wash his hands or feet, hathe, of perform the most secret function, except by set rules. He would grow up in the ideas of the system into which he had been born. which mapped out his every act, and word, and thought, and denounced every deviation from the all-embracing rules of Rabbinism as a sin, fatal to his caste as a Jew.

As the son of a priest, and, as such, himself a destined priest hereafter, John would early learn all the details of the Temple service, and doubtless, often went with his parents to the Temple, the glitter ing pinnacies of which he could see from Hebron. The countless pilgrims at the great feasts: the solemnities of the altar, with its turbaned, white-robed, bare-footed priests: the swelling music of the Levites, who, each morning, sang the psalms of the day, in the inner court, to the accompaniment of citterns, harps, and cymbals, and the deep roll of the great Temple organ, whose music the Habbis, with fond exaggeration, spoke of as heard at Jericho, —would be familiar and dear to him, and the spiendour of the newly built Temple, respiendent in snowy marble and gold, would kindle at once his pride and affection. He would, necessarily, rise to manhood coloured by the influences around him, and these all tended to the narrowest Judaism. Living almost under the shadow of the Temple, he was in the centre of all that was most rigid and intolerant; unlike Jesus, whose Galilizan home kept Him in a freer air, far from the dead conservatism of the Temple city, and from the bigotry of its schools and people.

the

ing

and the

ciety

the

Was

riest,

y the

iestly with in the

arents have

nsibly

nds of m and

of his

veins. estabtradit strict rerence bs, and

jurnig buy-

erson

ng and that be

athe, ol

would

n born, and de-

obinism

st heres service. glitter puntless is tur

But though thus, by birth, education, and circumstances, naturally, a strict and rigid Jew, higher influences surrounded John, from his birth, than those of mere formalism. His father and mother were both rightcous before God, in a higher sense than that of Rabbinical blamelessness. Their religion was deep and sincere, for they were i moug the remnant in Israel who fulfilled the sacred ideal of the divine requirements: they did justly, loved mercy, and walked hum-bly with their God. Their son inherited their finest characteristics. Even from childhood he showed his religious bias. The only son of a priest, he might have passed through life with flattering respect, in the enjoyment of a modest plenty, but he early caught the spirit of the heroes of his race, of whom he heard and read so much in the ancient Scriptures. Disdaining self-indulgent ease, his soul kindled under the influences of home, of the times, and of religion, into a fervent enthusiasm, which formed its loftiest conception of life in asceticism and joyful self-sacrifice. Always more or less in favour with his race, this tendency was more frequent in the Jewish, priesthood than in any other of antiquity. Feeling the pulses of the spiritual excitement which through through the people around him: pondering their sufferings, their sins, and their hopes, John gave himself up, though born a priest, to the higher mission of a prophet, and devoted his life to the reform of the evils he so deeply deplored, and to the revival of the 1 digion of his fathers.

His course was, doubtless, in some measure, determined by an act of his parents, before lifs birth. They had made a vow in his name that he should be a Nazarite all his life, and had thus marked him out as one formally devoted to God, and he freely adopted the vow. The Nazarite, among the Jews, was one, of either sex, consecrated to God as peculiarly His. The conception was the natural development, in carnest spirit, of the self-mortification, for religious ends, by fasts and the like, common to all Eastern races. It had been practised in Tsrael from the carliest times, and is already formulated as a recognized institution in the Book of Numbers. The Nazarite auch as t the highe

ing protecting kind at la The tin of the Jud aritism, w

beginning

reign of L hawever, if. Yet T the duplic sacrifices r

Yow, was the neus. Ev

must have

at Luat tin Once, howe Nazarite vo and his hair

do you wish longer? I as town where saw, my like began to lay creature! you to be no mor that I shall c Simeon, "I e arites like the

The insting

to adopt an denial and th attend to its tification, and the renunciati

with the Sup

seek to subdu coul by conte their novitiate The priests temple, as it is Helios (the, su

They have m

continuously

Reaction fr

natural in a pe

was required to abstain altogether from wine and intoxicating drinks. even from vinegar, or any syrup or preparation of the grape, and from grapes themselves, and raisins. All the days of his Nazariteship he was to ear nothing made of the vine, from the kernels to the husk. "No razor was to come upon his head;" he was to "be holy, and to let the locks of the hair of his head grow. To guard against any legal defilement from a corpse, he was to go near no dead body, even if it were that of his father, mother, brother, or sister, because the consecration of God was on his head; and if, by chance, death came where he was, the defilement could only be removed by a seven days' "uncleanness," to be followed by shaving his head, and pre-senting a special trespass-offering. His yow was, moreover, regarded as broken, and he had to begin its fulfilment again.

A Nazarite vow was commonly made for a fixed time, but parents might vow for their infant, or even unborn children, that they should be Nazarites for life. It was thus in the case of John; it had been so with Samuel and Samson, and, according to tradition, in the case of James the Just, the brother of our Lord. But though consecrated to God, and marked as such by special signs, the Nazarite was not a monk, who withdrew wholly from family; social, or civil life, and thus shut himself out from all useful activity. The sound sense of early antiquity had no conception of such selfish devotion. He only shunned certain aspects or parts of common life, though some, of their own accord, carried self-denial farther. Not a few retired into the desolation of the hills of southern Judea, and fived rudely in caves, allowing themselves only the rough fare of the wilderness, and the coarsest clothing. Others, like James the Just, used no oil for anointing, though almost a necessary of life in warm countries and ate no liesh. The shrinking avoidance of all levitical defilement. which dictated such mortifications, was held due to their special consecration to God, whom such rigid ceremonial purity was supposed to honour. The shunning the sight of the dead was but a repetition of what was required from the levitically holiest man of the nationthe high priest." The abstaining from wine and strong drink guarded against an offence doubly evil in one who had given himself to God. and was a security for vigour and clearness of mind in His service, The uncut liair was, perhaps, a visible sign of the sacred and inviolable surrender of the whole man to Jehovah. The hair was the symbol of manly vigour, its crown and ornament; and its untouched locks thus symbolized the consecration of the reason and higher powers to God. Thus especially "holy," the life-long Nazarite stood on an equality with a priest, and might enter the inner Temple, as we see in the instance of James the Just.

The Mazarite vow was often taken to attain some wish-for health. safety, or success-from God. But where it was for life, no such selfish aims could be cherished. In lower cases, like that of Samson, there might be a vague craving for special favour from God, but in à.

250

the y,"

nst

dy,

1180

ath

ven preded

ents

ould

bcen

case

not a ise of

e only

me, of d into

ely m ss, and oil for

and

ement,

al con-

eposed etition

tion-

uarded

o God.

service,

invio-

vas the ouched

higher te stood

e, as we

health

no such

Samson,

But in

was required to abstalm altom they fro such as that of John, the impelling motive was intense desire after the highest religious attainments. It was in him a visible and enduring protest against the worldliness and spiritual indifference of mankind at large protocol broden a correction address to set of the period of the Judges, seems to have been that of the greatest glony of Nezgritism, which prepared the way for the grander era of the prophets, beginning with Samuel, and for the great spiritual movement of the reign of the first kings. Less than two hundred years after David, however, Amos laments the mockery with which the people treated if. Yet Netarites must always have been numerous in Israel for the duplicity of the Rabbi Simeon Ben Schelach, in regard to the sacrifices required to discharge three hundred Nazarites from their yow, was the first cause of his disastrous quarrel with Alexander Jannæus. Even two hundred years before, the vitality of the institution must have declined. "I never, through life," said Simeon the Just, at fust time, "liked to taste the tresposs-offering of a Nazerite. Once, however, a man of the South came to me who had made the Nazarite yow. I looked at him. He had glorious eyes, a noble face. and his hair fell over his shoulders in great waving masses. II Why do you wish to cut off this magnificent hair, and be a Nazarite no longer?' Lasked him. 'I am shepherd to my father,' said he, 'in the town where I live. One day, in drawing water from the spring, I saw, my likeness below, and felt a secret pride. An evil thought began to lay hold on me and destroy me. Then, I said Wicked creature! you would fain be proud of what is not yours, and ought to be no more to you than dust and worthlessness; I vow to my God that I shall cut off my hair, for His glory." "Forthwith," continued. Simeon, "I embraced him and said, "Would that we had many Nezarites like thee in Israel. "Onorgo Linis in hus most where on a citation and in all ages." to adopt, an ascetic, life, doubtless springs from the belief, that selfdenial and the subjugation of the body leave the soul more free to attend to its special interests. Buddhism is a system of self-mortification, and Brahmanism has its. Yogus, or devotees, who aspire, by the renunciation of all that can make life pleasant, to attain union with the Supreme Spirit. Mohammedanism has its fakirs, who seek to subdue the flesh by their austerities, and to strengthen the soul by contemplation and prayer. The Egyptian priests passed their novitiate in the deserts, where, like John, they lived in caves "The priests in Heliopolis," says Plutarch, "bring no wine into the temple, as it is not seemly to drink by day, whilst the Lord and King, Helios (the sun) looks on ; the others drink wine but very little. They have many fasts, during which they refrain from wine, and continuously meditate on divine things; learn, and teach, them." Reaction from the corruption around, the weariness of the world, natural in a period of universal unquiet and uncertainty, and the wish to follow out the letter of the law exactly, had led to the adoption of an austere life by many in Palestine. As the Nazarites strove to attain Ideal ceremonial purity in rude isolation, others sought, it in brotherhoods. Josephus classes as one of the four great parties of his day, the Essenes, an order numbering about 4,000 members, in Syria and Palestine, more or less devoted to an ascetic life. Like the Pharisees they were a development of the zeal for the Law which had first marked the Hasidim, in the Maccabæan wars. The feverish anxiety to avoid levitical defilement, which had already given rise to Pharisaism, found its extreme expression in these ultra rigid legalists, who hoped, by isolation, to attain ceremonial righteousness impossible in the open world. The strictness and asceticism of others, appeared only a hypocritical effeminacy in their severer eyes. But, even with them, there were grades of strictness, for only the most rigid withdrew from society. The Pharisees had had brotherhoods and unions for generations, and in Egypt there were colonies of "Therapeute," who lived a lonely, contemplative, idle life, in the desert, coming together only for common worship and holy meals. But the Escones were as far from the saintly idleness of the one, as from the restless demagogue activity of the others. The Pharisees, as years passed on, had become constantly less entitled to the name of the Separated, since they eagerly courted the multitude, and compassed sea and land to make a proselyte, and frequented the corners and public places, to make a show of their piety. Ideal legal purity could not be attained by such a life, and hence members who aspired to a higher standard, withdrew, to form facred colonies by themselves.

The rise of these desert colonies is not known, but the wanderer over the district between Jerus lem and the Dead Sea, in the days of John, came, every here and there, on such settlements, in the narrow, shady wadys, sometimes green in their hollows, which sink, in great numbers from the high stony plateau, towards the Dead Set. Their sad appearance, their life strictly regulated by the law, in the least detail, gave them the air of people weary of life, who had withdrawn from the world to prepare for death. They seemed to have given themselves up to a life-long penance, in hope of gaining heaven. The upper valley of Engedi, where Pliny tells us most of the Essenes had settled, was exactly suited for the monkish life they had chosen. A zigzag path leads from the wilderness of Judes, about three hours north of Masada, by a steep descent of fully 1,500 feet, over loose rocks and stones, to a rich spring, which makes its way under a luxuriant growth of shrubs and bushes, to the Dead Sea. The name Eaged! the goat's spring, may well have been given from the wild goats having first found out and used the steep path. A tropical vegetation supplies the simple wants of life almost without labour. In the upper parts of the wady, and in others running parallel with it, the Essence found exactly the localities that suited them. Each colony had i and its p settlers, th springs; to their breth cursors of hill-sides, l disciples, y formed in the same r accommod seems as if only gradu defilement Their wh cattle, or in provided n besides, thre among them hardly use c P. The supre solitary hern ness. They other reading was the high Books was a the agonies of The supers platters of o another, was priestly meah pulously excl before and a all who were The dining ha parified with meals was cou and it was ea the order, gav obtained, adde shared by all; The earnest novices had man, to injure accord, to hat especially thos to keep the h a of stt in

s of a, in a the bich

erish

ise to lists,

possi-

s, ap-

But, most hoods

ies of

in the

meals. one, as

ame of

d com-

purity

aspired them-

anderer

days of

in great

least de-

hdrawn

re given

en. the Es-

hey had a, about

500 feet,

wayun-

ea. The

from the

tropical labour. with it,

Each col-

Their

ony had its own synagogue, its common hall for meals and assemblies, and its provision for daily baths in running water. Besides these settlers, there were lonely hermits, living beside solitary mountain aprings, to be able to secure their ceremonial purity still better illan their brethren, by more frequent bathing. These anchorets, the precursors of the Christian monks, lived solely on the wild plants of the hill-sides, but, yet, were frequently surrounded by large numbers of disciples, who adopted their painful discipline. Colonies were also formed in various outlying towns of Judea, the members maintaining the same rites as their brethren, and having always ceremonially pure accommodation for them when they wandered from the hills. It seems as if the order had originally lived wholly among men, and had only gradually retired to more or less complete sectusion, as dread of defilement grew more intense.

Their whole day was spent in labour in the field, or in the care of cattle, or in that of bees, and in other useful industries. They thus provided nearly all they wanted, buying what little they required besides, through a special officer. They neither bought nor sold among themselves, but exchanged as each required, and they would havily use coin, from its bearing an image.

The supreme end of their reinement, either in associations of as solitary hermits, was to keep the Mosaic law with all possible strictness. They read it hot only on Sabbath, but day and night, all other reading being forbidden. To biaspheme the name of Moses was the highest crime, punishable with death, and to give up his Books was a treachery which no Essene would commit, even under the agonies of torture or death.

The superstitious dread of defilement, which required the cups and platters of one company of Pharisees to be cleaned for the use of another, was carried even farther by the Essenes. In imitation of the priestly means in the Temple, from which the "unclean" were scruoulously excluded, they had common meals, morning and evening before and after the day's work; all novices till the third year, and all who were not of the order, being excluded as levitically unclean. The dining hall was as sacred as a synagogue, the vessels and dishes parified with sleepless care, and even the clothing worn during the meals was counted holy. Priests invoked a blessing over the food, and it was eaten in reverent silence. Whoever became members of the order, gave up all they possessed to it, and the common stock thus obtained, added to the fruit and earnings of the general labour, were shared by all, the old and sick receiving the tenderest care. The earnestness of the order showed itself in its principles. The novices had to promise "to honour God, to be righteous towards man, to infore no one; either at the bidding of another or of their own accord, to hate evil, to promote good, to be faithful to every one, especially those in authority, to love the truth, to unmask liars, and to keep the hand from theft, and the conscience from unrighteous

with the

of unben

SEITHe Es

to metapl

fantastic

Alexandr

Persia and periods, i

imagined,

by a fell p

It was the

storms we

west wind

the Law, 1

there for e

and they w

cally uncle

The com

of life, sind

It had the sleeves, wa

prophet-lik

made mone

at each reat

brother.

but that of

The gran

durance is t

childhood.

the Holy B

into the fut

their proph

attain direc

mystic con

dental visio

the supreme denial

means of pr

powers.

weeks, AI

mouth, neit

by the side

eyes, and lo loins were prepared h

pen. where fulfilled.

gain." Slavery was forbidden, and no oaths permitted, save those by which members were admitted to the order. War and even the manufacture of weapons; was held unlawful, nor would they oven use animal food since the Law said . Thou shalt not kill. " Trade, ezcept so far as their slipple wants required, was discountenanced. But if their morality, drawn from the Old Testament, was pure and lofty, their slavish devotion to ceremonial observances marked them as the most superstitious of their nation. Wa There were, four grades of levitical "cleanness," through which the novice rose only by a long and stern probation, and it was defilement that needed to be washed away by a bath for the member of a higher grade to be touched by one of a lower. Priests washed their hands and feet before any sacred rite, but the Essenes bathed their whole body in cold water before every meal, and all they ate must be prepared by one of their own number. They bathed, also, each morning, before uttering the name of God. On Sabbaths, they would not even move any vessel from its place, and they prepared all their food on Friday, to avoid kindling a fire on the sacred day. an They refused to eat flesh or wine, partly from fear of defilement, partly because they wished to reproduce in their whole lives the strictness of the Nazarites, of the priests during their ministrations, and of the old Rechabites. Thus, their only food was that prescribed to others for fasts. They kept aloof from the Temple, though they sent the usual gifts for the presentation of an offering involved partaking in a sacrificial meal, which would have defiled them. In some of their colonies women were not suffered. from the same dread of uncleanness, and though they did not wholly forbid marriage, the wife was required to undergo even more scremonial cleansings than the brethren in They kept a watchful guard that no one was defiled by the spittle of another, and that it did not fall on the right side. The anointing oil, which was to other sews a festal luxury, in which the Psalmist had gloried as dropping from Aaron's beard, was to the Essene an uncleanness which needed to be washed away: a brother, expelled from the order, would rather starve to death, than touch food prepared by a common Jew, nor would any Roman torture force him to lose his caste. The whole life of an Essene was a long terror of defilement. The work of the colony began before sunrise, with pasims and hymns, followed by prayer and washings They then went to their day's work of At eleven-the fifth. hour the scattered labourers gathered again for a common bath in cold water of The woollens dress in which they worked was now laid aside and the consecrated dress of the order put on in preparation for their eating together, and their meal, which consisted only of bread and a single kind of vegetable, was eaten with prayer, in solemn stillness, The holy dress was then laid aside, and work resumed. In the evening, the second meal was taken, with the same solemnities and rites, and worship closed the day, that only pure thoughts might fill their souls as they retired to rest ... One day followed another,

254

105

1190

and

iem

$. OI

ong

hed

L by

cred

fore

own

ame

its

dling

artly

do in uring

food n the

of an

havo

fered.

vholly

BCI'C-

guard id not

Jewa a

from ied, to rather

w, nor ole life

colony

ver and he fifth in ow laid

aration

only of solemn ned. In mnities

a might

another,

with the monotony of pendulum heats, in precisely the same round of unbending forms. I a fill at he heligite area main and the second sec to metaphysical speculations, and, like the Babbis, they revalled in fantastic allegorizing of Scripture. From the philosophic Judaism of Alexandria, they borrowed notions on free will and fate, and from Persia and Greece, with both of which their race, had been, for long periods, in contact, they adopted various dogmas, The soul, they imagined, was a subtle other, of heavenly origin, drawn down to earth by a fell necessity; and imprisoned in the body till set free at death. It was then borne away, if pure, beyond the ocean, to a region where storms were unknown, and where the heat was tempered by a gentle west wind, perpetually blowing from the ocean. If it had neglected the Law, however, it was carried off to a dark, wintry abyes, to dwell there for ever, Every morning, the Essenes paid homage to the Sun, and they would not, at any time, let its beams fall on anything levitically unclean 'n' year 'n mounos, post prout the pommost wint has used The community of goods among them was a necessity of their mode of life, since the order alone could supply the wants of its members. It had the result of enforcing simplicity. An under germent, without sleeves, was their only clothing in summer, and a rough mantle their prophet-like winter garb. The inter-relation of the different colonies made money useless in travelling, for there was no need of it when, at each reating place, their frugal wants were freely supplied by any brother. They had no servants, and, as they recognized no distinction but that of " clean and unclean," they could have no slaves, in man The grand and of this amazing system of self-denial and ascetic endurance is told by Josephus, in a brief sentence. it "Consecrated, from childhood, by many purifications, and familiar, beyond thought, with the Holy Books, and the ulterances of the prophets, they claim to see into the future, and, in truth, there is scarcely in, instance in which their prophecies have been found fake." The belief that they could attain direct communion with God, by intense legal purification and mystic contemplation, and even pass, in the end, to such transcendental vision as would reveal to them the secrets of the future, was the supreme motive to endure a life of so much privation and selfdenial. A similar course had been followed before their day, as a means of preparation for divine visions, and communion with higher powers. "In those days," says Daniel, "I was mourning three full weeks. I ate no pleasant bread, neither came flesh or wine in my mouth, neither did I anoint myself at all, till three whole weeks were fulfilled. And on the four-and-twentieth day of the month, as I was by the side of the great river, which is Hiddekel, then I lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and behold a certain man clothed in linen, whose toins were girded with fine gold of Uphaz." .) In the same way, Esdras prepared himself, beforehand, for his visions ... "Go to the flowery open, where there is no house," said the angel to him, "and cat only the herbs of the field, taste no flesh, drink no winc, but est herbs only, and pray unto the Highest continually; then will I come and talk with thee." It was universally believed that the future was open before the aged.

members of the order, who had laboured after "purity" through life. Their souls were supposed to be well-nigh freed from the bonds of the flesh, and able to wander forth to the world beyond. Thus an Es sene was said to have prophesied his miserable death to the brother of the first Aristobulus; and another to have predicted to the box Herod that he would be king, and that he would have a long reign after he had gained the crown. This gift of prophecy was believed by Herod and his sons, no less than among the people, and hence an Essene was often sent for when a bad dream disturbed royaly, or anxiety for the future troubled it. With such mystic claims, the expectations of Israel must have been their chief thought. Their old men dreamed dreams, their young men saw visions, and their sons and daughters prophesied, as if in fulfilment of the prophet's signs of the coming of the Messiah. Yet we have no proof that they anticipated it as near, or applied themselves in any practical way to a preparation of Israel for it. It was only a fond and airy vision of the ideal future. They were rigid Predestinarians, believing that all things, in the course of nature and in the life of man, are fixed by fate. Where there was no moral freedom, it was idle either to preach or teach, and so they did neither. As was natural with minds occupied mainly with subjects above human grasp, the speculations of the order became wild, and often monstrous. The novice was required by a fearful oath to conceal the secret names of the angels, which were known to the brotherhood, and gave him who learned them power, by pronouncing them, to draw down these awful beings from heaven. The Apocryphal litera-ture of the day boasted of long lists of the names of angels, with their powers and offices; and the Essenes, like the Rabbis; believed that by secret spells, in which these names played a foremost part, they could command their services for good or evil, as the services of the genii are at the command of the magicians in the Arabian Nights. They believed also, in common with the age, in the secret magic powers of plants and stones, and they had much, besides, the disclosure of which was the greatest of orimes. Secrecy was, indeed, a characteristic of the order. The neophyte bound himself by a terrible oath, "neither to conceal anything from the brotherhood, nor to discover any of their doctrines to others, even if he should have to die for his refusal. He had, moreover, to swear that he would communicate their doctrines to no one, except as he himself had received them, and that he would keep inviolably secret the books of the order, and the names of the angels."

The influence of Essenism on the age, however, was small, for its members were few in proportion to the teeming population, and made no attempt at propagandism, but lived entirely apart from mon. The natural pro after legal with heath drawing a glory, and the Messial came in co preters, and exercises an attempt to the Baptist. countryman tact with h unclean: sh ness; set lig discarded fa meals, and r His disciple the past, doc From their among the s no claim. I prophets rath herald of Ch austerity, and ized, to a larg they surpasse ish life. It g was not, like reward, but a and thus pre-sacred calm t For the first soul was dec tracted the ag another kind which bore b a New Birth, racy, the Ten exists in Esse meditative fra seriousness an Sabbath" whi These charact to those who, although its d to Christianit natural product of the times, with its Messianic hopes, its striving after legal righteousness, its glorification of the past, and its contact with heathen superstition, it served the purpose, in some measure, of drawing away the thoughts from the dream of national political glory, and of preparing the soil for the more spiritual conception of the Messiah, which John and Jesus were to introduce. The Essenes came in contact with the people as healers, prophets, dream-inter, preters, and exorcists, not as teachers or preachers. Their religious exercises and pure ideas were cherished in the community without an attempt to spread them through the nation ;- in marked contrast to the Baptist, whose life was a fervent ministry to the masses of his countryman, and, still more, to Jesus, -for he lived in constant contact with men, even those shunned alike by Essene and Rabbi, as unclean: showed the most perfect superiority to all ritual narrow ness; set light by ceremonial purity, or superstitious Sabbath laws discarded fasting, took part in the social enjoyment of feasts, and meals, and marriages, and left a new code of rules and maxims for His disciples. Essenism was, at best, only the vivid culmination of the past, doomed to pass away, and wholly unit to create.

fe.

the Esher boy

Ved

e an

iety

ions

med

ters

g of

1 for

were

doral

ther.

bove

often 1 the

nood, m, to Itera-

with ieved

part, ces of ights.

magic

e dis-

ecd, a scrible to disto die muni

them.

r. and

for its

The

From their lofty morality, the Essence have been assigned a rank among the spiritual forces of their age, to which in reality they had If their moral purity and spiritual depth, breathed of the no claim. prophets rather than the theocracy, and made their order, in so far, a herald of Christianity, their exaggerated ceremonialism, their harsh austarity, and their fantastic and half-heathen superstitions neutralized, to a large extent, this healthy influence. Still, in some directions, they surpassed in true morality anything in the last centuries of Jewish life. It gives even their harsh asceticism a higher dignity, that it was not, like that of the Pharlsees, a mercenary service for external reward, but a self-denying attempt to keep out evil from the soul. and thus prepare it for that high communion with God, in whose sacred calm the still small voice of divine revelations grows audible. For the first time since the prophets, the spiritual condition of the soul was declared to be the end of religion. While the Rabbis distracted the age with their flerce party strifes about the merely external. another kind of life ripened in the seclusion of the colonies of Essenes which bore better fruit, because it concerned itself with the need of a New Birth, and the circumcision of the heart, not with the theocracy, the Temple, or politics. The likeness to Curistianity, where it exists in Essenism, was not in its institutions, but in the quiet and meditative frame that breathed through the community in its religious seriousness and priestly consecration of life-the "daily keeping of Sabbath" which was also the ideal of the first Christian communions. These characteristics of the order were, in some degree, common also to those who, after them, were "the quiet and peaceful in the land," although its doctrines and ideas offered, otherwise, rather a contrast in strempt at propagandism, hut lived entroit spart from the valley in some parts stern and terrible libe vokalenettant mainted by altitled at and contribional into whith and getyes comatimed a blockad test in Stroke yinxx servery of convent with d others stretching out in hore could dime tub of caracter in with the field between the out in hore could dime tub of caracter in with the field between the store could dime tub of caracter in with field bound the server out in marking store to be store in the store of the field bound the server out in bour and at server in the store of the field bound the server out in the server of the store of the store of the store of the server of the store of th

No one is unaffected by the spirit of his age. It is not surprising. therefore, that at a time when religious carnestness found expression in the ascetic self-denial and retirement from the world of Mazaritea, Essence, and even of others, not connected with either, the young enthusiast of Hebron withdrew from his family and mankind, to the caves of the wilderness stretching away from his native town. In an >age so troubled in politics and religion, the peaceful simplicity of such a hermit life was irresistible, and in its calm retirement men could work out their salvation by prayer, fasts, washings, and rigid zeal for the Law, with no one to make them afraid. The wears heart found repose in a solitude, where the great world, with its dis-cord, turnoil, and confusion, its crucity, selishness, and treachery, was that out. The psain singing, the ceremonies, and the quiet in-dustry of the colonies of Essence, sont strange emotions of gentleness and awe into men's hearts, in an age when, everywhere clse, wickedness reigned triumphant. In such dark days these spots shone with a holy light." Having fied, in horror, from prevalent violence and sin, -by the natural law of reaction, the fugitives sought to extinguish in themselves the simplest instincts of human nature. It was thus, afterwards, in the awful times of the dissolution of the Roman empire. The deserts of Egypt and Syria were filled with a strange population, ficeing from the wild tumuit and commotion under which the earth recled. It was thus, also, in the fierce and lawless middle ages, when the cloister was like a speck of blue in a heaven of storm. Asceticism, in these different periods, as in that of the Gospel history, was the only protest which told with sufficient force against the rampant evil around. Eleven centuries after Christ, a similar state of society made the ascetic life the ideal of the noblest souls, even where they did not withdraw from the world. Et. Bernard's saintly mother, the model of Christian charity and lowliness, could not rest satisfied vith these graces. By scantiness of food, by simplicity of dress, by the avoidance of worldly pleasures, by fasting, prayer, and vigils, she strove after that vision of self-sacrifice and humility, which alone was attractive in that age. Asceticism is not needed now. Its place has been more nobly filled by the claims of Christian work for others, but in John the Baptist's day, and for long centuries after, it was a natural tendency.

The wilderness to which John withdrew stretches, far and near, over the whole castern part of Judea, beginning almost at Jerusalers, and reaching away, under different names, to the Dead Sea and the southern desert, as its distant limits. It is a dreary waste of rocky valleys; in by earthqu thousand others, str flint-bound reservoir. destitute than the d and fleshy the valleys which blos the slope o point of n valley of at appalling ( a more des On the no Dead Sea. ther south ular gorges in some pla great torre Sea. The openingat goats, aboy row, serper named by t loaded beas ing in the s the rocks, the limesto visit this re or This "S rock on a l below the t antly warm steep face o low bushes yellow berr thorny Day hopping th wings, and every side, a large terr perhaps, a magnificent water of th

156

ŵE.

ston

itea

ung

i the

nad

y of men

rigid

earr

diss

ierv

st in

ntle

clse.

hone

lenco

o.ex-

Wa3

sman.

range

iddlo

histe

st the nte of

where other.

dsfied

38, by

s, she

e was

e has s, bût

a nat-

near,

alers.

nd the rocky

17:51

valleys; in some parts stern and terrible-the rocks cleft and shattered by earthquakes and convulsions, into rifts and gorges sometimes a thousand feet in depth, though only thirty or forty in width; in others, stretching out in bare chalk hills full of caves, or in white, flint-bound ridges, and winding, muddy wadys, with an occasional reservoir, hewn in the hard limestone, to supply water in a country destitute of springs. One may travel all day, and see no other life than the desert partridge, and a chance fox or vulture. , Only the dry and fleshy plants, which require no water, grow on the hills, and in the valleys the most luxuriant vegetation is the white broom bushes, which blossom in March and April. The whole district is, in fact, the slope of the midland chalk and limestone hills, from their highest point of nearly 3,000 feet, near Hebron, to 1,000 or 1,500 feet, at the valley of the Dead Sea. The Hebrews fitly call it Jeahimon-"the appalling desclation," or "herror"-for it is not possible to conceive a more desolate region, Parts of it are deserted even by the Arabs. On the northern side, valleys of great depth, sinking towards the Dead Sea, almost preclude travelling except in their troughs, and farther south, the country is absolutely impassable. Huge perpendicular gorges, of from a thousand to fifteen hundred feet in depth, and in some places nearly a mile in width, have been hollowed out by the great torrents, rushing in winter over the precipices, towards the Dead Seady The only natural site for a town, in the whole district, is the opening at the foot of the pass of Engedi, the spring of the wild goats, above the shores of the sea, and this is reached only by a narrow, serpent-like path, down cliffs twelve hundred feet high,-well named by the Hebrews, the rocks of the wild goats, -- which only unloaded beasts, by an hour's slow care, can descend in safety. Excepting in the spring, at this spot, water is to be found only in hollows of the rocks or in the very rare water-cistorus, hewn in past ages in the limestone, which catch some of the few passing showers which visit this region.

This "Spring of Engedi"—or "Ain Jidy," gushes from beneath a rock on a little plateau, 500 feet above the Dead Sea, and 1,200 feet below the top of the cliffs. The water is sweet and clear, but unpleasantly warm to the taste. The stream flows in a long cascade over the steep face of the cliff, and is lost in channels for irrigation, beneath, low bushes, bending rushes, and the gigantic leaves of the osher, the yellow berries of the apple of Sodom, and the flat cedar-like tops of the thorny Darda'ra, rising in a thicket along its course. Bulbuls and hopping thrushes court this shelter, and black grakles, with golden wings, and melodious note, flit to and fro on the cliffs above. On every side, below the spring, ruined garden walls, and terraces, and a large terraced mound, show the site of an ancient town, which had, perhaps, a thousand inhabitants. The scenery along the shore is magnificent in its wild and desolate grandeur. Beneath, is the blue water of the Dead Sea; above, rise the tall orags and castellated precipices of the great rock wall, which mus, ever higher, and steeper, in nearly to the fortness of Masada, the square isolated mass of which, more than 1,500 feet above, the Dead Sea, forms a great plateau, cut off on every side by deep gorges, and vertical walls of rock, and scen from/Engedi. On the east, beyond the deep gorges of the Arnon, ard, lessen streams of the Blue Mountains, the white towers of Kerck, look down from a great cliff, which seems to defy approach.

The town of Engedi was the one minute living spot in the whole region for the only human habitations in the wild region above were. the hill caves in which hermits sought a miserable shelter. Some where in the gorge leading down to the spring, the Essence had their. little colony in John's day, but their strict isolation left the lonely, anchorite in a deeper solitude. In the neighbouring wilderness, where the venomous desert viper glided among the stones, and the scorpion, the fox the vulture, or the raven, were almost the only signs of life; where drought reigned, and the waterless bills and stony, valleys were symbols of utter desolation, —in some cave, perhaps, in the depth of a deep and narrow gorge, that at least gave shelter from the pitiless heat and glare of an eastern sun, John took up his abode, to be alone with God and his own soul, and, thus, the better able to fulfil the life. long vow which separated him from men, Bred up a strict Jew, and trained, like St. Paul, in the perfect knowledge and observance of the Law he was doubtless, like him, a zealot towards God, in all things. respecting it. At what age he retired from Hebron to this hermit life, we have no means of knowing, but he had, apparently, lived for, many years apart from men before his public appearance. The Gospels. furnish us with vivid glimpses of his appearance and mode of life. His. hair hung long about him, like Sampson's, for it had never been cut from his hirth. His only food was the locusts which leaped or flew on the bare hills, and the honey of wild bees which he found, here and there, in the clefts of the rocks, and his only drink a draught of water. from some rocky hollow. Locusts are still the food of the poor in many. parts of the East. "All the Bedouins of Arabia, and the inhabitants of towns in Nedj and Hedjaz, are accustomed to cat them," says Burckhardt. I have seen at Medina and Tayf, locust shops, where they are sold by measure. In Egypt and Nubia they are eaten only by the poorest begans. The Arabs, in preparing them for eating. throw them alive into boiling water, with which a good deal of salt has been mixed, taking them out after a few minutes, and drying them in the sun. The head, feet, and wings, are then torn off, the bodies cleansed from the salt, and perfectly dried. They are some times eaten boiled in butter, or spread on unleavened bread mixed with butter?" In Palestine, they are eaten only by the Arabs on the extreme frontiers; elsewhere they are looked on with disgust and loathing, and only the very poorest use them. Tristram, however, speaks of them as "very palatable." " I found them very good, says has set when leaten after the Arab fashion, stewed with butter.

They taste wilderness up with a bright hind brown, nec saic Law, a wild bees in and the gre tained from for bees. ing largely crocuses in recesses of protection 1 more nume day, part of combs and John's dr nouse of r the Bedouir ern girdle only clothin head-cloth, the Arabs, a he had had home, lovin easy outlool heavy on hi The cnemie hated them rose to Go deliver the the heathen their countr the homage sat in darkn seemed to ta way of peac But If the also, did the was through saken them His Temple 1 of the multi blind leader holiest of the unworthines

2603

Der

ich,

CLE

ICC 1

ardi

rek

dibfity

hole

Vere

merol

heir

nely

here.

ion, ic

life;

were h

hot

lona

life.

and

f the

lings

mit

d for

spels,

His

n cut

WOR

and

vater

nany)) tants

says

here only

ting.

salt

ying

the

omen

hixed.

n the

ever,

ood,"

itter.

iless

They tasted somewhat like shrimps, but with less flavour." In the wilderness of Judea, various kinds abound at all seasons, and spring up with a drumming sound, at every step, suddenly spreading their bright hind wings, of scarlet, crimson, blue, yellow, white, green, or brown, according to the species. They were "clean," under the Mosaic Law, and hence could be eaten by John without offence. " The wild bees in Palestine are far more numerous than those kept in hives, and the greater part of the honey sold in the southern districts is obtained from wild swarms. Few countries, indeed, are better adapted for bees. The dry climate, and the stunted but varied flora, consisting largely of aromatic thymes, mints, and other similar plants, with crocuses in the spring, are very favourable to them, while the dry recesses of the limestone rocks everywhere afford them shelter and protection for their combs. In the wilderness of Judea, bees are far more numerous than in any other part of Palestine, and it is, to this day, part of the homely diet of the Bedouins, who squeeze it from the the action the combs and store it in skins.

John's dress was in keeping with the austerity of his life. A burnouse of rough, rudely woven cloth of coarse camels hair, such as the Bedouins still wear, bound round his body by the common leathern girdle still in use among the very poor, was apparently his only clothing. His head dress, if he had any, was the triangular head cloth, kept in its place by a cord, as is still the custom among the Arabs, and his feet were shod with coarse sandals. In Hebron he had had around him all that could make life pleasant a saintly home, loving patents; social consideration, modest comforts, and an easy outlook for the future. But the burden of life had weighed heavy on him, and his heart was sad, and drove him forth from men. The enemies of his people were strong, and the hand of them that hated them lay sore upon them. The cry of the faithful in the land rose to God, that He would remember His holy covenant and deliver them. They sighed to be free from the presence of the heathen, that once more under God as their only king, with their country to themselves, they might serve Him without fear, in the homage of the Temple, and the rites of the Law. Israel had long sat in darkness, with no break of light from heaven. The promises seemed to tarry. The godly sighed to have their feet guided into the way of peace, but no Messiah had appeared to lead them. " model we

But if the sorrows of the nation pressed on the heart of John, so, also, did their sins. If the "shadow of death" thus lay on them, it was through their own sins and degeneracy, for God had only forsaken them because they had first forsaken Him. The courts of His Temple had been turned into a den of thieves; the spiritual guides of the multitude were deceitful and deadly as the viper of the desert; blind leaders of a blind people. They who should have been the holiest of the holy—God's priests—were a scorn and derision for their unworthiness. Before John reached his majority, he had seen the sacred mitre changed ning times, at the will of Archelaus, or of a heathen governor from Rome, and the puppet high priests had desecrated it's awful dignity by personal vice, or time-serving policy, or indifference to its highest obligations, or shameful luxury and haughty pride. Two of the family of Boethos of Alexandria, raised by Herod to dignify his marriage into the house, had worn the high priests' robes, but the people muttered curses on them, for having surrounded themselves with courtly show and military violence, Ismael, the son of Phabi, had worn them, but the clubs of his retainers had become a by-word in Jerusalem, as had his own shameful personal luxury. Three members of the family of Hannas had worn them-Hannas himself, Eleazar, his son, and, now, Caiaphas, his sonin-law, --- and Hannas was still the foremost man in Jerusalem, but they hated the people, and the people hated them, and maintained that they his ed at them like vipers, in their proud malignity, or glided to their evil ends, like the snake. Their families were branded as Sons of Eli. Iniquity filled the high places of the Hill of God. Nor were the people themselves innocent, for He who was meek and lowly in spirit denounced them, a year or two later, as an evil, and adulterous generation, more hardened and hopeless than Nineveh, or Sodom and Gomorrah, which God had cursed. Earnest souls, in such circum. stances, with the earth dark around them, and no light in the heavens: feeling that hope could only come with national contrition, and awakened spiritual life, might well, in loving, sad despair, withdraw themselves from mankind.

But with John there was also a conviction that the Messlah, long expected, must be near at hand, and that the fit preparation for His advent was a self-denial and humiliation, which surrendered the whole present, and gave itself up to prayer and watching, in desert solitudes. It was the idea of his age, and John could be satisfied with nothing less. A great sorrow and a great ideal alike drove him to "keep his body under," as if the least pleasure were sin, and the flesh the enemy of the soul.

Josephus gives us a sketch of one of the recluses of the desert, with whom he himself lived for three years. "His name was Panus, his home the desert, his only clothing the leaves or bark of trees, his only food what grew of its own accord, his only drink the brook and his daily and nightly practice, to bathe in cold water." Not a few such, no doubt, buried themselves in the dens and caves of the lonely hills round John, weary of the world, as Pliny says, and seeking, by a life of penitence, as he calls it, to cleanse away the defilements of the flesh.

With many, the great motive might be to save themselves in the shipwreck of all besides, but no such unworthy impulse actuated John. He sought the wilderness, at once to secure perfect levitical purity, for he was a strict Jew-to ponder over the mysteries of the long-delayed kingdom of God, and to aid in bringing about its ac-complishm new Messi nothing of selfish med unspeakab him pleadi ing, that G people. V up prayers sighed deer the desert. measure, th taught that had prepar to rouse m embodied been idle, h unreality o Meninvolu be no ques Religion ha round of e and propri showed the an everlast A soul lo may well h dinary wan record of h trod in his Egypt, was but often, to setting of t but water. content with would not young men which softe efresh, took ally, the Ar forth to what Lord liveth ascetic ough Elias, as fro lars, but as aspect, it m rough wilds

or sof

d des-

cyo or and raised

high

aving

a Isainers

l per-

worn

is sonit they

t they

o their

ons of

r were

wly in iterous

m and

ircum in the

espair,

12,004

n, long

on for ndered

ipg, in uld be

l alike

ere sin,

milton.

desert.

ne was bark of

drink

water."

d caves

y says,

away

in the ctuated

evitical

of the

its accomplishment of Histlife, so earnestly striving for meetness for the new Messianic kingdom, was no vacant and idle solitude. He had nothing of the Eastern mystic, whose cell witnesses only dreamy and solfish meditation. The struggles of soul, in all natures like his, were unspeakably real, and we cannot doubt that his days and nights saw him pleading, by long earnest prayer, with many tcars and sore fasting, that God, in His mercy, would, at last, send the Messiah to His people. We know how even Christ, "in the days of His flesh, offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears;" how He sighed deeply in this spirit, and spent whole nights in the hills, or in the desert, in lonely prayer, and His herald must have felt, in his measure, the same all-absorbing zeal. The prophets and Rabbis, alike, taught that the "Kingdom of Heaven" could only come when Israel had prepared itself by humiliation and repentance, and John sought to rouse men at large to feel this, by the protest against their sins. embodied in his example. To rebuke love of riches would have been idle, had he lived in comfort; to condemn the hollowness and unreality of life, he must be clear of all suspicion of them himself. Men involuntarily do homage to self-denying sincerity, and there could be no question as to that of John. It was felt that he was real. Religion had become a thing of forms. Men had settled into a round of externals, as if all religion centred in these. Decencies and proprieties formed the substance of human life. But John showed that there was, at least, one man with whom religion was 2 . in their spill p. 10 an everlasting reality.

A soul lost in the greatness of eternal truths, like that of John. may well have risen to an indifference to the comforts, or even ordinary wants of the body, otherwise almost impossible. We have no record of his daily life, but that of one who, in saintliness of spirit, trod in his steps, it still preserved. Saint Antony, in the deserts of Egypt, was wont to pass whole nights in prayer, and that not once, but often, to the astonishment of men. He ate once a day, after the setting of the sun; his food was bread with salt, his drink nothing but water. Flosh and wine he never tasted. When he slept, he was content with a rush mat, but mostly he lay on the bare ground. He would not anoint himself with oil, saying that it was more fit for young men to be earnest in subduing the body, than to seek things which softened it. Forgetting the past, he, daily, as if beginning efresh, took more pains to improve, saying over to himself, continually, the Apostle's words-"Forgetting what is behind; stretching forth to what is before;" and mindful, too, of Elijah's saying,""The Lord liveth, before whom I stand"-he said, in himself, that the ascetic ought ever to be learning his own life from that of the great Elias, as from a mirror. The picture may not suit in some particulars, but as a glimpse of the mortified life of the desert, in its best aspect, it may serve to realize that of John, in the loneliness of the rough wilderpess of Judes ... ... in inter an a file during the start the start of the

In its rugged solitudes, his soul gradually rose to the consciouaness of a great mission. He believed that the wrath of God was near at hand, to take vengessive on the unrighteousness of men, but he knew that the God of Abraham, even in wrath, remembers mercy, and that, with the judgments, there would come the long-promised deliverer. His impetuous nature, and a heart that never feared the face of min, raised him to the level of the old prophets, and impelled him, like them, to address his generation. Instinct with the deepest religions feeling; of a transparent simplicity, and reverend truthfulness of word and bearing; glowing with energy: a living embodiment of sincerity and self-denial, and in the best position, from his earliest years, to know the age, he was, above all men, fitted to rouse the sleeping conscience of Israel, and to lay bare the self-deceptions and sins of even the religionists of the day. Though a hereditary priest, he had stood abof from the Temple service, for its mechanical rites gave him no inner peace.

From the Temple aristocracy he shrank with a special aversion. for the guilt of the nation culminated in them." Under the manife of legal purity, and behind the cheap popular sanctity of the Pharisees, his quick eye saw, at a giance, hateful ambition, greed, and hypocrisy. The nation itself stirred his soul, as he saw it, in a time so earnest, contenting itself with Pharisaic righteousness, and trusting, with insane self-complacency, to its being the people of God.<sup>9</sup> In his loneliness, his soul had communed much with the prophets of the Old Covenant, and found in their holy zeal for Israel and God; in their demand for a higher righteousness of the heart and life, instead of sacrifices of beasts; in their lofty announcement of a divine future for his nation, if it prepared itself for it, the prophetic longing and prophecy of his own spirit. That he never names Moses, shows that he must have passed beyond the Law, to the prophets. Isaiah, especially, had excited in him a faith so deep and intelligent that Jesus rebuked his fears, when perplexed and doubting, by a quotation from that propher's Messianic predictions. The few fragments left of his preaching abound in figures borrowed from this, his favourite Bookthe viper brood, the trees of God's vineyard, the felling that which was barren, the consuming fire, the threshing floor and the winnowing shovel, and the giving bread and clothing to the poor. 10, 11, 10 Then

John's life in the wilderness seems to have been no short retirement. His whole later bearing, his mode of life, his sad passionate earnestness, and even his lofty resolve to come forth as a prophet, imply a long abode in the solemn freedom of the desert, far from the distracting and enfeebling tumult of life. But, though in the same wilderness, he was no Essene. His relation to the people at large, his conception of a kingdom of God in their midst, his later preaching to them, his sympathy even for publicans and sinnets, from whom the Essenes and Pharisces shrank as pollution; even his food, which, though simple, was still, in part, of flesh, show that he was in ho way connected. like them, like grande settlements live free an an impulse ism, with n The fund the reverse men, to see ness, John the voice of seemed pos had not rise strong, all-e by its self-i culture, wit war against privations discipline b lamented, a Yet he was his very clo he carried the crowd t accordance holy fasts, f This reve times, were Rome had pelled every misery in t drenched th pression as 1 of the natio Rapacious s their own fo burdens on faithfully co the Holy C

mere sport o

had been m

Pilate had

Florus, the

the war of c himself to in to study the

usnes

near at

knew

d that

f man

n, like

ligious

hess of

nent of earliest

ise the

entions

editary

hanical

OP. BIL W

rersion,

mantle

Phari-

ed, and

r a time

d trust-

lod. In

s of the

Fod; in instead

e future

ng and

ws that

lah, es-

at Jesus

on from

f of his

Book-

twhich

vinnow-

HONO TIOU

t retire-

ssionate

brophet,

rom the

he same

t'large

eaching

a whom

which.

ho way

connected, with that order, Like its members, he was unmarried; like them, he denied himself all indulgence, and showed a prophetlike grandeur in his standard of aim and practice. But though their settlements were close at hand, and were open to him, he chose to live free and alone. It was well he did so, for this freedom created an impulse, before which the nation trembled, and lived, while Essen; ism, with no vital power, beyond itself, left it to lie dead.

The fundamental principle in John's seclusion was, in fact, exactly the reverse of that of the recluses of his day. They dwelt apart from. men, to seek their own spiritual good with a pious and cynical selfishness, John sought the wilderness by an impulse which seemed like the voice of God, to seek, in its loneliness, a loftier spiritual life than seemed possible amidst the religious decay of the time. As a Jew, he had not risen above the external and material in religion. An earnest, strong, all-embracing heroism of self-denial, which proved its depth by its self-inflictions; a rejection of all temptations of society and culture, with their threatening possibilities of defilement; a strenuous war against nature, in every appetite, to, the extent of enduring the privations of hunger, homelessness, and exposure, were, at once, the discipline by which he struggled against the "uncleanness" he still. lamented, and the aids by which he hoped to attain nearness to God, Yet he was far from caring only for himself. His future career, and, his very clothing, which was that of an ancient prophet, showed that he carried the burden of his people on his soul, and had fled from the crowd to entreat God for them, by prayer and penitence, and, in accordance with the ideas of his time, to prepare, on behalf of all, by holy fasts, for gracious revelations from heaven;

This revelation, he, in fact, received. He already saw that the times were ripe for the judgments of God. The slavery to heathen Rome had followed the agony of the days of Herod, and had dispelled every hope. For nearly a generation he had seen nothing but, misery in the land. In his boyhood, the census of Quirinius had drenched the country in blood, and had been followed by such oppression as had, already, in his early manhood, exhausted the resources of the nation, and caused a despairing appeal to Rome for relief. Rapacious and unjust governors, true Roman, knights, seeking only w their own fortune, and rioting in the abuse of their power, had added burdens on their own account; the officials and soldiers had only too faithfully copied their lawless violence; heathen garrisons occupied the Holy City and the Temple; the high-priesthood had become a mere sport of those in power, and all the sanctities of the national life had been mocked and outraged in turn. Since the year 26, Pontius Pilate had been governor, a man to be compared only to Gessius Florus, the last Roman Procurator, whose enormities at last roused the war of despair in which Jerusalem perished. Pilate wilfully set himself to insult and violate the sacred customs. It was beneath him to study the people he ruled. Not merely harsh, and hot headed carrying matters haughtly even towards Antipas and the sons of Herod-he was malevolent, and ever on the watch to gratify, by cunning and venomous threats, the hatred rankling in his breast against a race he did not understand, and who defied him. The people of Jerusalem suffered at his hands a series of provocations without end of maticious injuries, brawls, and massacres. "So envenomed was he. indeed, that even when he saw his mistake and trembled before Tiberlus, he would not yield, because he could not consent to do his subjects a pleasure. Philo, his contemporary, charges him with accepting bribes, with acts of wanton violence, with robberies, with shameful treatment of many, wanton insults and threats continual executions contrary to law, and aimless and grievous crocities. "He was a malicious and furious man," says Philo, "unwilling to de any thing that he thought would please his subjects. The nation looked back even on Herod's days with regret, so much worse had become its state, now that it was trodden under foot by the Romans, and saw no hope of relief. John had noted all this ! Living close to Jerusa; lem he had been umidet it all; unlike Jesus, who had lived far off in Galifeet He had shuddered at the spectacle of infidely high priority mere Sadduccees, culminating now in Galaphas, whom the prople listed but Filate liked, or, at least, endured. He had learned to despise the bulk of the Rabbis, who tamely bowed to the shameful yoke they had invoked, and aubmitted to it from interest. Nor were the people better than their leaders. They lived in the day dreams of a merely outward piety, with proud and mercenary hopes of a rich earthly reward for it from the Messiah,

Amidst such mingled crime, wickedness and corruption, the soul of John was filled with humiliation and grief. The Holy Law, given at Sinai, had sunk to a superstitions creed, and was only tolerated by Rome: the sceptre of the nation was broken in pieces, though it had been promised that it would be everlasting: the holy hill had become the cliadel of an uncircumcised soldiery, and the streets, which had cchoed to the ministrelsy of David and his sacred choir, were invaded by the ensigns and music of a Gentile nation. It seemed as if God must presently appear. He had never before remained for centuries without baring His Mighty Arm; He had never before endured, thus, the derision of the heathen, or the sin of His people: He had never before left them, to perish as now. For His own name sake He would assuredly appear. The prophecies of Daniel had predicted only a short triumph to the iron kingdom, Rome, and it had now lasted for a generation. But even in these last days, had not the curse on the house of the Idumean, the destruction of Antipater, Phasael, Herod, Archelaus, and many others of the hated race, shown that the wrath of God was kindled, and that His avenging judgments were on the way? The judgments of God, foretold by the prophets, must speedly fall, allke on apostate Israel, and on her enemiesciel in What John had lorsboded in Hebron or Jerusalem became a cer-. In his boyhood, Jw. 18, the Goliland, itsd in the same way, appealed to force, for the same and, but had only covered the land with tainty to hi auxious con which migh The solemi daily and h soul with t bandbreadt Maker of appeared nic And did ni laden with and heating John's own His pravers devoted to:0 he had foun he had felt to resolve, to bring down and the light on their foes Israel would revealed eve in the spirit the Lord. forth and pro injudgment the Divine S turned inwa long exposur invincibility pliances, but at length, fel into which a herald predic Messiah of mountains a rough places the humble and ways of repentance, The kingd grander that of Saripheus Messiah by In his boyh to force, for

y cun

grainet

plo of

t end

as bea

re Ti

double

ith ac-

s, with

atinual

He He

lo any looked nd saw

Jerusa-

off in riests ---

proplo

med to iameful

r were

ms. of a

of ont

the soul

rated by

n'it had become nich had invaded

if God

centuries

d, thus,

ad never

sake He

bad no v

1 not the

atipater,

e, shown

prophets,

neiascer-

a airl al

10101 of

tainty to him in the wilderness of The lonely vastness raised him above auxious contrasts of the weakness of Israel and the might of Rome, which might have paralyzed resolution; and bidden hope despair. The sciemn stillness of the hills, and the boundless sweep of the daily and nightly heavens, effaced the thought of man, and filled his soul with the majesty of God What was man, whose days were a bandbreadth; and whose foundation was in the dust, before the Mighty Maker of Heaven and Earth-the rock of Israel ( He had often appeared to deliver His people when their case seemed hopeless. And did not the judgments of God, in the prophets, always come laden with hidden good ? Were not cursing and blessing, smiting. and hearing, death and resurrection, always joined in His visitations? John's own history in the wilderness gave him hope for his race. His prayers; his benitence, his renunciation of the world, his life devoted to God, had removed the burden and agony of his soul, and he had found peace; and rest, and grace; and heavenly light. What he had felt was possible for all Israel. If they could only be brought to resolve, to turn to repent, to live a new life, their repentance would bring down showers of blessings as it had always done in the past. and the lightnings and thunders of judgment would break in wrath on their foes, but in heavenly help to themselves. The repentance of Israel would bring the Messiah. He knew He was near. "It had been revealed even before his birth that he himself was to go before Him,. in the spirit and power of Elias, to make ready a people prepared for the Lord. The call of God rang in his soul like a trumpet, to go forth and preach to the people the coming of the expected Deliverer. in judgment to the impenitent, and grace to the contrite. Led by the Divine Spirit, through long years of spiritual struggle-his soul turned inward on itself and upward to God-his body subdued by long exposure and privation, and his whole being raised to a lofty invincibility of purpose, untained by customs, unweakened by compliances, but filled with meditation and high religious life-he had, at length, felt equal to taking the sublimest and most terrible position into which a frail man could be raised by the Almighty-that of the herald predicted by his favourite Isaiah, to pioneer the way for the Messiah of God. He was to fill up the valleys, and make low the mountains and hills, to make the crooked places straight, and the rough places even; that is, to rebuke the lofty and proud, to raise up the humble and oppressed; to spare none of the crooked policies and ways of men, and to smooth down their roughness by a hearty repentance, so as to fit them for the peaceful entrance of the Christ. The kingdom of God, as thus realized by John, was far higher and grander than previous conceptions. In his infancy, Judas, the son of Saripheus, and Mattathias, had sought to bring in the reign of the Messiah by a political rising, which had been quenched in blood. In his boyhood, Judas, the Galilæan, had, in the same way, appealed to force, for the same end, but had only covered the land with mourning. Yet the perty with whom a religious war with Rome had . become a fanatical creed, was daily increasing. Even in Semarie, it was problaimed that the kingdom of God was about to come, and that it would take an outward political form. The misery that had roused Judea had also pressed heavily on the Samaritans, and their national jealousy of the Jewa anticipated a share in the expected Messianio glory of In their opinion, they, and not the Jews, held the real Holy Land promised to Abraham-the land where the patriarcha had fed their flocks: they had the true Temple Mount, and the true Law, free from the corruptions of the prophets; upon their holy mountain Moses had buried the true vessels of the Tabernacle; which the Jews claimed to have possessed under the Temple of Solomon. and which, they asserted, had been miraculously hidden, after the Temple had been destroyed by the Chaldeans. The possession of these vessels was all important, for, with the fondness for outward embodiments of belief common to the East, it was held that the place where they were hidden would be the scene of the proclamation of the Messiah. A cherished promise, they avowed, announced that when the kingdom of the Messiah was set up, the Ark, and these sacred vessels, would be again brought forth. Jeremiah, so ran the Jewish tradition, being, warned of God, commanded the Tabernacle and the Ark to go with him to Mount Nebo, and there he hid them and the altar of incense in a hollow cave, and stopped the door, which none who went with him could afterwards find. Jeremiah thereon told them that it would be "unknown till the time when God gathers. His people again together, and receives them to mercy. Then shall the Lord show them these things again, and the glory of the Lord shall appear, and the cloud also, as it was shown unto Mckes." fuller version of this tradition introduced an angel as the chief actor, instead of Jeremiah. Shortly before the destruction of Jerusalem, it. went on, this heavenly being descended to Jerusalem, alighting on the Temple, to save it. If Having prepared the Tabernacle, the Ephod of the High Priest; the Ark, the Two Tables of Stone from Sinal, the Golden Robes of the High Priest, the Altar of Incense, the Urim and Thummim, and the holy vessels, for removal, he carried them to a secret place, and cried with a loud voice, "O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the mighty Lord, and receive what I commit to thee, and keep it to the end of the times, to restore it again when thou art commanded, that the stranger get not possession of these things. For the time will come when Jerusalem shall arise again, to endure for ever!" Then the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up all i A third version, used figuratively in the Apocaly ise, supposes the holy vessels to have been taken to heaven and hidden there. He who overcomes is to eat of the manna which is hidden in Heaven; and when the Temple of God was opened above, there was seen in it the Ark of the Covenant," side astak mathandad when it out not may have The Samaritans, treasuring these fancies no less warmly than the Jews, gave the true pla Gerizim, ber Israel had so into Canann

2018-

How inter Samaritana sion had clo for what the pent up. " hood, and the them," had like that of . hope," most Sending abro prophet wou where Moses uncontrollab dom of God remain hidde to Samaria th making open of the Law in between Ebal numbers to dezvous, till t since the " el ment. Pilate led from a sea liad, in fact, a the pilgrimag to Gerizim, to many of who their way to disperse them the rest taking during or afte This tragici ance, but it w Messianic kin John kept en that Israel wo for future dis and spiritual. Judas the Gal at least for the had 10, 11,

(And

had

their

d the archs

true

holy

which

mon

r the

these abodi-

where.

of the

when.

sacred

ewish

ad the

nd the n told

athers:

a shall

Lord

actor,

em, it,

ng on f

Ephod

Sinai, m

Urim

nom to earth!

mit to

when these ain, to

lowed.

B. sup.

there.

eaven;

seen.in,T

an the

Jews, gave them a local colour, and had persuaded themselves that the true place of the mysteriously hidden treasures was the top of Gerizim, beside their own city—the hill from whose top the tribes of Israel had sounded the blessings of the Law, on the entrance of Joshua into Canaan.

How intensely such thoughts were fermenting in the minds of the Samaritana in these years was shown a little later, when John's mission had closed without bringing them the results they had expected; for what then took place was only the final outburst of feelings long pent up. "" A man," says Josephus, "who made nothing of false hood, and tickled the multitude by whatever seemed likely to please them," had determined, if he could, to raise a popular movement, like that of John's, which had swept over Judea and Galilee, with the hope, most probably, of being able to turn it to political account. Sending abroad a report through the valleys of Samaria, that a new prophet would reveal, on a fixed day, on Mount Gerizim, the place where Moses had hidden the vessels of the Tabernacle, he raised an uncontrollable excitement. The announcement implied that the kingdom of God would on that day appear, for the sacred vessels were to remain hidden till it was to begin. It was a crafty scheme, to transfer to Samaria the boastful hopes which had been the glory of Judea, by making open claim to the possession of the mysterious treasures, and of the Law in its purity. Thousands gathered on the day appointed, between Ebal and Gerizim.' New caravans continually brought fresh numbers to Tirubatha, the village named by the prophet as the rendezvous, till the matter became serious in its possible political results, since the "elders" of the people identified themselves with the movement. Pllate was alarmed, fearing that the multitude might be easily led from a search for the sacred vessels to open sedition. His brutality liad, in fact, already made them ready for it. He therefore forbade the pilgrimage, and placed posts of foot and horse at all the approaches to Gerizim, to prevent them ascending it. But the vast multitude, many of whom were armed, would not be baulked, and tried to force their way to the sacred spot." Pilate, on this, ordered the troops to disperse them: flerce fighting followed, in which many were killed, the rest taking to flight, the principal men among the prisoners, taken during or after the battle, being put to death. It od; he brow sittens

This tragical incident took place a few years after John's appearance, but it was of a piece with the popular feeling respecting the Messianic kingdom, which was mixed up with the politics of the day. John kept entirely aloof from such views. If, as a Jew, he hoped that Israel would hereafter be exaited under the Messiah, he left that for future disclosure, and confined himself exclusively to the moral and spiritual. He was no political agitator, no revolutionary, like Judas the Galilson: his Messianic kingdom, like that of Jesus was, at least for the time, a kingdom not of this world.

Herod had sace hud a law summers with the dentities the traces of The many created by a many set to derive the start has a the bernon. THE NEW PROPHET IN THE WILDERNESS, had dired In the fifteenth year of Tiberius, which fell between Angust, A.D. 98, and August, A.D. 29, the Roman empire lay under the shadow of the darkest years of the tyrant, now an old man of seventy one. Among those alive at the time, and remembered since, for good br evil, the cider Pliny, -afterwards, when a Roman admiral, killed at the first eruption, in historical times, of Mount Vesuvius-was a child of four. Vespasian, hereafter, with his son Titus, to orush Jenusalenz, was full of the ambitions and dreams of a youth of 18, Caligula one day to horrify the world by the spectacle of an insane despot at the head of the empire, was a lad of 16; Claudius, one day to be emperor. was a poor lame, trembling man of 38, and among the marriages of the year was that of the daughter of the ill-fated Germanicus, from which, nine years later, was born NERO. Things were very peaceful through the empire, for the only wars at the moment were with the Thracians, on the east of Europe, and with the Frisians, in the Llutch swamps on the north-west. Pontius Pilate had been two years procurator of Samaria, Judea, and Idumes, Herod Antipas had been telgning for about thirty-two years over Galilee and Sengaria, and was now a man of about 50, and Philip, his brother, about the same age, and of the same standing as a ruler, was still tetrarch of the rest of the land, beyond the Jordan, living a quiet life, usefully and worthily. ono has subra lateraisly. an Excepting the religious rising of Judas and the other confusions after Herod's death, and at the time of the census by Quirinaus, Palestine had enjoyed nominal peace for nearly sixty years. Allew vities and towns, with all the elegancies and splendour of Roman civilization, had riser all over the land Casarea, with its decks, piers, warehouses, and broad streets, on which a splendid temple to Augustus, seen far off at sea, looked down. In Jerusalem, the great Temple, four huge castles, the theatre, the circus, and Herod's new palace, had risen. Samaria had been rebuilt with great splendour, and re-named Sebaste, the Greek equivalent of Augusta, after the Emperer. The old Kaphar Saba, on the inner edge of the see plain, behind Jopps, Thad a been rebuilt, and re-named Antipatristafter Herod's father. of Near Jericho, two towns-Kypros, named after Henod's mother, and Rhasaelis after his brother, had been created. Anthedon, close to Gaza, on the scar coast, had been raiseds from the rinks, and called Agrippeion, after Agrippe, the sontin-law of Angustus Two great fortresses had risen, called after Herod, Herodion,-one in the hills on the south border, the other, three hours from Jemission, at the head of the descent to the Jordan valley, where Herod had pursued ht the great flattered by by their he death, had called to C north east and ve name Herod Ant strong wall of the Acad as bivias. within the shores of th emperor. extent his side of the calledafter ANTINA RO Christianity fusing the wealth had was silently in profound out the agen the cross it. plains of Pa phone to das held in reser Bubhrates military you sufficed to a they had ins StraJohn, fo vangels bound thelthird par obluceand bri river-bed, at guestionably Thistorians SWATIDS OF e lienstaltand - thandery the -ninghtheir h thesoldiers their forebe

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

Eeroc

DIRING.

TA jorit,

Andars

hy<sub>o</sub>taci

death

stak.D.

dowoof

ty-one.

illed at schild.

usalens.

ula one

t sat the

mperor.

is ges 7 of

as, from

vith the

e Dutch

STATE DEC-

ad been

sia.sand

he reame

hoof the ally and

previala

atanious nirinius, Roman

addela.

nipleito

he great

d'in new fter the

s plain, isteafter

ed after created.

Fromoits

Augus-

dion.

rom Je-

Trhere

Herod had once had a sore struggle with the rebellious Jews who pursued him. The passion of Augustus for obliterating the traces of the great civil wars throughout the empire, had every where been flattered by creations which it once beautified the land, and defiled it by their heathen accessories. In the far north, Philip, after his father's death had re-built Paneas, in the green hp of Mount Hermon, and called it Cusarea Rhilippiating flattery of the emperor and on the northeast of the Sea of Galilee, he had embellished the old Setherida. and remanded Julias aften the daughter of Augustus. In Galilee, Herod Antipas had re-built Sepphoris, and surrounded its hill with strong walls, in the sheltered green plain opposite Jericho, the valley of the Acacias of the days of Joshua- hehad built a fine town known as kiviat incompliment to the winworthy wife of Augustus, and within the last ten years he had built the splendid new capital on the abores of the Lake of Galilee and called it Tiberias, after the new emperor. dEven the gross and sensual Archelaus had copied to some textent his father's example, for a new town had risen on the west aide of the Fordand amildst palm groves elaborately irrigated, and called after hissoff, Archelais and the monther work to the shown own the term and The " Roman peace" which was destined to prepare the way for Christianity, by breaking down the barriers between instions and fusing the civilized world, for the time, into one mighty commonweilth had thus borne finite on all sides, though mis-government was silently undermining the whole imperial system of The East was improfound sease of The Parthian cavalry hosts, who were the terror of the age had not watered, their horses in the Eunhrates or dared the cross it, for two generations in But they still swarmed over the plains of Parthia and only waited the orders of the court of famiphon: to dashin on the exposed territory of Palestine . Four legions. held in teserve in Syria, and a strong line of military posts along the Buthrates at the thought of beings ordered to which the Roman military youth shuddered as a banishment from the world barely sufficed to hold these fierce Cossacks of the age in check a The ferror they had inspired in their last invasion was still unabated for even Sta John, forty years later, in the Apocalypse caw four destroying vangels bound in the great river. Euphrates who were loosed to slav the third part of mension Two hundred thousand horsemen in fiery. sliuesand brimstone coloured mail rode forth through the dried mp river-bed, an army of hell, to destroy mankind symbols taken unadestionably from the remembrance of the Parthians of The Roman historians use language handly less striking of the endless rushing swarms of wild cavalry their terrible shouts like the bellowing of e lieasta and the hideous clamour of countless drams like the noise of thunder their breastplates and helmets of steel dittering like light--ningitheir horses covered with brass and steel trappings, the faces of the soldiers painted; and their shagey hap gathered in a mass upon stheir fortheada after the Scythian fashion. O Their dreadful Lines.

on he est sand fee

Anner of the state of the state rast to the immediate does to the doer to the after of the finent it was in hills anutit harrow fin hextifiance John of w on the rive

Mi me rye Very trach. 5 prophet-God's Ano iseli shiito meastr ion shiry, ini mars of N

CORTES leat DEODACUS DITED THE

slah in er gran, wear the Synago baireloth in class II y to me assoc guin and a priestnood,

their feigned retreate, their resistion survey, the clouds of dust ther hised by their charges, hiding the heitle deld, their meets dust high, their blowing boundary glowing with gold and beyond their high, their blowing boundary glowing with gold and beyond their the mean of the generation before them, now brase swith boundaries in and and another blow how brase swith boundaries howes is shown beyond before them, now brase swith boundaries in and the generation before them, now brase swith boundaries howes all the generation before them. Now brase swith boundaries is and plundering, for their squadrons of immortants and marine and plundering, for their squadrons of immortants and frammer canectally, remained the terron of after man is, the armor of reachery graced, and rathers brutality If was in such a state of things that ions at asso came forth from he verses, are prophet ballies being from sume to the wilder report of a bermit of special sand in the from sume to the forth invasibily stracked many to tee alm and beeting herein. They be they blow the wreathed village which is the forther invasibily stracked many to tee alm and beeting herein if we hours east of the wreathed village which is the forther invasibily attracked many to tee alm and be denoted by blow the made his dest pathlic appearance on the Lover Jordin. They bours east of the wreathed village which is the forther of a bernit of a bernit of special sanctive living in any particular district. They bours east of the wreathed village which is the forther was able to intere hours from the alter of the district is and and signt or mine hours from the alter of the district is bound if the and signt or mine hours from the alter of the district is and the interest towards the Dead Sea, which is in sight, close at hand Histories the issues of Lebacon and generation the sight of the forther issues the issues of Lebacon and generation is the sight of the forther the issues the issues of Lebacon and generics of the wilder is nucleon of the second stress from Jennstein the Jonan flows with a function of the spore of Lengton in and gathering it thing to be added and introduce it is a spore of Lengton in and gathering it there is one of the spore of the second second it is stress which it is a spore of the second second it is stress in the spore of the second second it is stress in the spore of the second se

市村村村 ちゃう ちゅう いちゃう

THE DIFE OF CHART. In Join a dry the birth of the former in Join a dry the former in the valley is only the former in the former in the valley is only the former in the valley is only if the former is the former in the former is the former is the former in the former in the former is the former foes to the rich fringe of vegetation skirting the waters on the eastern offe of the river, but variating like a dream at only a few puces from hemaning

Change and inten ito too trom vilder Tade: or the ATACKY UNITED He

of the ALC AN

R Links hand.

TATI NA is dast ALL DE set its titwo: Nen Welly y lexe dor. wa in - the titis? inter denne His of

a the

1.01 DDer The of the fiver, but vanishing like a dream at only a few paces from them. It was in this region, beam the flowing stream, while the while stony bills doubing in the view of both sides. In a handwaye where the harrow limits of the yearly floods drew a sharp the between tropical lavorance and the scorched and desert barrenness beyond, that John, of whom Jesus could say, in allusion of the waving case beds on the river's adar, that he was no reed maken in the which but in very truth. Filas who was to come a prophet, and much mot. Man a prophet—lifted up his voice as the messenger before the face of god's Anointed to prepare file way. The appearance of John's was uself sufficient to arrest attention. This spare form attenuated by meagne food and austerity his bright Jewish eyes, full of the fiving energy that burned within this long han, uncut for thirty years—the mark of Mazartle consecration this rough harcloth gamment, and his Graps leather girdle, made him the pleture of one of the ancient prophets. The Scriptures described the greatest of the prophets— high the Tishbute whom all expected to reappear before the Mes-stan—in exactly such a guise as John presented— "a long-haired man, wearing a leather girdle" and they knew from the lessons in the Synagogue if they had not read it for the bar the rough haireloth mantle had been the common dress of the old prophets as a The synagopie if they had not read it for themselves that the rough baireloth mantle had been the common dress of the old prophets as a class. If was also that of grief and continuon even then, and added to the associations of the secred past an appeal to their own sense of guilt and need of contrition The idea of the wilderness was secred to the Jews. From it " any the happing " came the Law the Tabernack, the Sannedrin, the priesthood, and the office of the Levites. Even the kingship, and, indeed, every good gift which God granted Israel, came from the desert straight in the desert a highway for our God." In connection with the expectation of the Messiah, its influence was immense of It was by relying on its weight with the people, that Theudas a wild vision. ary, who assumed the role of a prophet some years after the Crucifixion, persuaded the multitudes to follow sim, as a second Mases." miracles, and assured them that God would appear to deliver his people. Josephus speaks also of others who persuaded the people to follow them into the desert, "where, through the help of God, the would work open signs and wonders," and Jesus Hunself through it necessary, before leaving His disciples, to warn them that "when it was said the Christ was in the wilderness, they were not to go out thither," The nation was daily expecting the appearance of "" the wise and perfect prophet." who should bring back the lost Urim and Thummim, " restore the tribes of Israel, turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, reprove the times and appease the wrath of God! before it broke out in fury." Since Ezra's days the feeling had s grown even deeper, that repentance alche could save Israel. The travel repented but one day." said the Rabbis, "the Messiah would appear "du He was to lead all, men back to God by repentance. W As long as of Israel does not repent, it cannot expect the Saviour " said Rabbilit Juda. But this repentance would not happen till Elijah had come. [113 in fulfilment of the prediction of Malachi, and he was not to do so till three days before the appearance of the Messiah, when his voice would proclaim from one end of the earth to the other Salvation ecmeth into the world, "vonau asy ad

A prophet, in the Jewish point of view, was less a seer than a lear less, preacher, from, whom, to, use, the words of Clement, of Alex. andria, the truth shown forth, as the light streams from the sun. "He might reveal the future, but his great characteristic was that he was the mouthpiece of God, to utten, by resistless impulse, the rebulkes or commands of the Almighty, as His ambassador, and the interpreter of His will to men. John realized this ideal. He startled the beople by demanding repentance, if they would escape the close approaching wrath of God. The Kingdom of Heaven-a phrase familiar to them from the language of Daniel, of the Psalms of Selomon, and of other books, then in wide circulation-was at hand, and would bring with it the terrors of heaven. The consciance of the masses was roused. It had sunk to sleep under Pharisaic formalism, Roman oppression, and Sadducean, indifference, a John's voice sounded like a trumper to alarm them. The popular excitement spread. Though he kept aloof from Jerusalem and the thickly peopled districts, the note he had struck vibrated through the whole land, Crowds gathered in dally greater, numbers from Jerusalem, Judes, and the wide uplands of

THEIDIFEIOFICHRIST

TUAL

U Way

islon.

Druci

Idses:

rforinfil

ple to

theton

ght it ien it to out !!!

iss these

n and

sthers

Genion

Bill B

Dear 19 di

RED MI

someina

do so di

ation

0701099

Alex-

e was kes or

preter beople ching

them

other vith it

aloof<sup>11</sup>

dally

de lor

A PUTT

Persa, It seemed indeed as if he were the provised Eline, the herald of the Messiah in Intensely real, he spoke nothing of levilicid rice. sacrifices, or of the Rabbis, but demanded that the Law should be applied to the conscience, and carried out in the life. A spiritual presidention mould alone avert the coming with: A second Elijah in spirit, no well as outward appearance, and, like him, witnessing in in # evil times he came to shrow down not to build; to startle, not lo instruct, to use the are not the trowel. The approach of the judg ments of which the last of the prophets had spoken; when the indig on of God would beam as an oven, and the proud and the wicked nat should be as stubble, and be burned up till there was left neither root nor branch was his great theme. He added however the comforting assurance of the prophet, that to those who feared the name of the Lord of Hosts, the Sun of Righteousness should rise, with healing in His wing like beams. d. The whole strain of Malachi was, indeed only an anticipations of John's preaching and The Lord, whom ve seek, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in, shall come, such the Lord of Hosts, But who may abide the day of His coming to And who shall stand when He appeareth? For He is like a refiner's fire, and like fulier's soan. And He shall sit as a refiner and putifier of silver; and He shall purify the sons of Levi, and burge them as gold and blyer, and He will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and the adulterers, and the false swearers, and against those that oppress the hiteling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless and that surn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of Hosts," Like all the prophets, his message was one of wrath, and yet, like theirs, it had a conditional promise of divine love and pity As benitted his office he seemed ordained. like Elijah, to reprove his times, for like him, "he was unmoved before the face of man meither could any bring him into subjection 25 901 m Johnor With the call to repent, John united assignificant rite for all who were willing to own their sing and promise amendment of life." It was the new and striking requirement of baptism, which John had been sent by divine appointment to introduce ?! The Mosaic ritual had indeed required; washings, and apurifications, but they were mostly personal agts for cleansing from ceremonial defilements, and were repeated as often as new uncleanness demanded. But baptism was performed only once, and those who sought it had to receive it from the hands of John of The old rites and requirements of the Pharisees would not content him A new symbol was needed, striking enough to express the vastness of the change he demanded, and to form its fit beginning, and yet simple enough to be easily applied to the whole people, for all, alike needed to break with the past, and to enter on the life of spiriteel effort he prochimedio Washing had. in all ages BLS been used as a religious symbol, and significant rite. Naaman's leprosy had been cleaned away in the waters of the Jordan. The priests in the Temple practised constant ablutions and others were required daily from the people at large, to remove ceremonial imparity. David had prayed "With me from thise informaty." Tasiah had orded. "Wash 'te make you clean but sway the cill of yous doings." Ezektel had told his countrymen to "wash their hearts from wisked, ness. Ablution in the East 'to indeed, of inself, shout a religious duty. The dust and heat weigh upon the spirits and heart like a head his removal is refreshment and happiness. It was heart like a head his removal is refreshment and happiness. It was heart like a head his removal is refreshment and happiness. It was heart like a head his removal is refreshment and happiness. It was heart like a head his removal is refreshment and happiness. It was heart like a head with dust, and after disappearing for a moment, emerge pure and fresh without feeling that the symbol suited and interpreted a strong craving of the human heart. It was he formal rite with like heart He was a good man." Buy Josephus. He was a good man, "says Josephus, "and urged the Jewa who were willing to live worthilly, and so show uprightness one to shother. and piety towards God, to be baptized." For baptisen was approved of by him, not as a means of obtaining pardon for some sine call, but for the purity of the whole body, when the soul had been cleaused heroremand by righteousness." On baptism, in itself, he set no mysferious sacramental value. It was only water a more emplem of the purification required in the life and heart, and needed an uffer hap. tism by the Holy Spirit. No one could receive it this had proved his sincerity, by an humble public confession of his sins. Baptism then became a moral vow, to show, by a better life, that the change of heart was genuine. Bathing in Jordan had been a sacred symbol, at least, since the days of Naaman, but immersion by one like John with suriet and humof Mamai, but innersion of vows of amendment, and hope of forgiveness if they proved listing, and all this in preparation for the Messiah, was something wholly new in Israel. It marked in the most striking way, the wonderful moral revolution which insid taken place in the hearts of the people. If, as a school of the Rabbis conlend, it was even then the custom to Daptize proselytes on their forsaking heathenism, and seeking admission to the communion of Israel, the attitude of John towards the nation was even stattling, and their submission to the rite a still greater proof of his power over the popular mind. In this case, it was no less than the treatment of Isrnel as if it had become heathen and needed to seek intrance again, on no higher footing than a Gentile convert to the But he did not leave them to their own analded efforts after purity. Had he merely summoned them to "flee from the wrath to come. he would have driven them to despair. Had he invited them to baptism, and then left them to their own efforts after holiness he would have mocked them by all impossible task. for man, boking in higher than himself, can never become pure. A vowing this, he gave meaning and promise to his command and invitation by pointing them to the coming Messiah, the Linuth of God, who should take away

The sins of the world. Internation that the provint stand that a start

It must A-men clo sudden app the bouse startle the li classos first local, g districts excitable G caught the VADS, with and Jewish work or the the native a sented AL and the wor the friends ( cilious Rab) dignified his people the of the Tetra the Roman the Jordan and bated, a themselves t among them All sought I interested in Pharisees;an only to look. to Everythin the stream, five hundred present in the past, univ hand, the ver good effected licans and he From the ri bitthe Baptis othataplogPro Elias but his to be "from the Deople carpings of t

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

parity: orted barga/2 the for the f eted Za

illohn.

REWHO

proved

leansed

no mys-

ter happroved Baptism change the days d humof forlot the hor the hor the hor formor of taxling, power to4.seek to4.seek tito othe

come."

to bapie would king io

heigave

pointing away

bootta's

It must have been a strange scene, and it remained long in the popular memory. What went yo out into the wilderness to see A man clothed in soft raiment?" asked Jesus in later months. This suddles apparition of a saint, whose life for years, and been spent in "the house of thirst, where demons and dragons how!" was fitted to startle the whole community, already excited to the utternost. Men of all classes gathered to listen to the new prophet. The movement at first local, gradually spread through "the whole nation." The neither districts for letters, before through "the whole nation." The neither districts for letters as far as Lebanon and the flast. Eact long the excitable Gailleans as far as Lebanon and the flast. excitable Galilmans, as far as Lebanon and the East Jordan country caught the enthusiasm, and moved, towards the Jordan valley. Cara vans, with their numerous beasts, must have covered the Galilie and Jewish roads all wending to the one centre. Men left their work or their calling: the keen trader, the Roman tax-collector, and the native and foreign soldier among them. Every rank was repre-sented, All that was noble, and all that was base in Israel, the holy and the worldly; the pure and the corrupt; the carnest and the false the friends of. Rome and its enemics, mingled in the throng. Supercilious Rabbis, long-robed Pharusces, cold and courtly Saddu ees, dignified high pricets, circumspect. Levites, grey-haired, elders of the people; the rich farmer with full barns, and the poor peasant; soldiers of the Tetrarch Antipas, from Peres; perhaps, also, proceeves from the Roman garrison at Jerusalem, more disposed to accept baptism in the Roman garrison at Jerusalem, more disposed to accept baptism in the Jordan than circumcision; publicans — born Jews, but despised and bated, slike, for their calling and their unjust exactions. — found themselves together, Jaraclitish women, also, were not wanting, and among them, not a few ontcasts of the community — servants of vice. All sought, part in the salvation of Israel, or, at least, wished to seem interested in it—even, the classes thrust back as unclean by the Pharisees and Essenes. Some langed to lay hold of it, others came only to look, criticize, and gossip, or report to the authorities. Isverything was so new, so startling, so impressive — the wilderness, the stream, the solemn, hills ran prophet appearing after more than five hundred years. — His, right to reject and denounce the whole present in the name of God, was now, as always with prophets in present, in the name of God, was now, as always with prophets in the past universally acknowledged. His words, his baptismal symbol, the kingdom he preached, the Messias whom he announced as at, hand, the very multitudes assembled, the visible emotion, the evident good effected, the contrition of the most sunken classes the pub-From the rife advanced with such prominence, he was known ea-the Baptist, "Just many gave him the name of Teacher, and even that no Prophet of He, did, not claim, to, perform miracles, like Elias but his word had a wonderful power his very baptism seemed. to be," from heaven" and, aven after his imprisonment and death, the people maintained, with passionate lengity, against the petty carpings of the priesthood, that he was, indeed, a prophet of an and

Many even questioned whether he were not the Messiah, pr. icent, "The prophet fike Moses," whom they expected." He invited the masses by his words at this will, and might have made iny political use of them he chose had he been so minided "As the influence of the movement spread in ever widening circles over the nation, it became impossible for the self sufficient authorities at Jerustiem to ignore it. The religious instruction of the people was their prerogative. They claimed to sit in the sext of Moser and to have the key of knowledge, and it was against the rule for any ano to teach who lad not their authority, confirmed by formal ordination A deputation of priests and Levites of the Pharisee party was, thenefore, deputed to go to the Jordan, and interrogate this new leader of the people as to his claims. Was he the Christ? or was ad Elias from was he the expected prophet ? Without a momentary hesitation of vanity or ambition, at the possibility, with his vast popular support, of playing a great part, his many truthfulness repediated the right to any of these names. With the whole mation under his influence, and regarded by them with the reverend awa which such questions and suggestions hint, his lofty son retained its grand simplicity. He was only the voice of one crying in the will derness, make straight the way of the Lord, as saith the prophet Esaits. Nor, is it wonderful that his mission, had such anazing success. Men honour a lofty and fearless soul, seeking no selfish object but braving all opposition for the poblest ends John had nothing to tose but his life, and cared for nothing but the faithful discharge of his high commission from the Almighty. Hunger and thirst and maked niss had been his familiar friends, and he who had faded the ferrors of the deserts so long, could have little to alarm him in any human soldier, on a riotous mob? These were jocund, cheerful sights, to one who had roamed amongst the wild beasts of the desert and in the midst of them laid down his head under no canopy, and with no defence but the canopy and defence of the providence of the Most High. Around a man who can despise accommodations and conveniences, and deal with nature in ancient simplicity and independence, and move amongst her social and religious institutions. like a traveller from another world, free to judge, and censure, and approve, as having himself nothing at stake around such a man there is a moral grandeur and suthority to which none but the narrowest and most bigoted minds will refuse a certain awe and reverence. And when such a personage assumes to himself Divine commission and publishes new with with Divine authority, and rebuilder an wicked ness and scorns all consequences he takes by the natural fight of the wiser, the bolder, and the better man, a high place above those who feel themselves ensleved and enshackled by customs which they despise ogni 12319 540.4780 Halt 484.3841.4000 Latur pruche Flautters wested in the renoved and I instruct an era in the morel history

Such M whole pe waters, be less blue before hla read the hypocrisp who migh of the ne found thei his grand ins claim, is hi tences strik of judgmen drawn from free ready Timely rep stroke, othe fire. The p nowing show be gathered able fire, V the Mightie esteem to pe his sandals,fire-the Hol fire, to consu wrath rolled hope broke i fram despair. or The annou QE no means elect of John mands The gift from abo work, which t expectancy, as busy triffing o trust to their outside of the promised king higher plane, h forth, be pract outward forms pressed home heaven is in the

THE LIFE OF CHRIST. THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

incles wittes

copic and

1 11

ormal

artisee

12. 6. ....

st? or

othen.

HIVAST

ces re-

d'awe

tied 'Its

Disales.

uteres!

ect, but to lose

of his

naked.

VOTTOTS

human

owling

h reugh

"to one

inthe

Most

d con-

depén-

pprove,

est and

by And

on, and ricked ight of

e those

门机研制和

137.3.4

Such was the mighty movement that filled all minds, and drew the whole people, by turns, to the banks of the Jordan: Beside the living waters, between the solemn hills on both sides, and under the cloud less blue of an Eastern sky, stood the strange figure of the prophet before his no less striking audience. I Like all great lesders, he could read the characters of those he addressed. The smooth vurnished hypocrisy of the Pharisee or Sadducee could not deceive him. Thee who might have come to him in the hope to gain the inviting promises of the new life by an easy lip confession, and a momentary rite, soon found their error. Like Luther, or Latimer, or Knox, he forget will in his grand fidelity, in Cold prudence or timid caution had no place in a soul so intensely in carnest THE TRUTH, which the comes to proclaim, is higher than man and alone commands his homage. His sentences strike, swift and glittering, like lightning flashes, umidst the roll of judgment day thunders. Each sentence is vivid with bold pictures drawn from nature and life. He compares Israel to a barren fruit tree ready for felling, and points to the axe already laid at its roots. Timely repentance, and the bringing forth good fruit, may avert the stroke otherwise it must presently fall and the tree be cast into the fire. The next moment Israel is a great threshing floor, and the wisnowing shovel is at hand to cleanse it thoroughly, that the wheat may be gathered into the garner, and the chaff burned up with unquesch able fire. With perfect humility he points all away from himself: to the Mightier One at hand, for whom he was unworthy, in this lown esteem, to perform the slave boy's service of unbosing and removing his modals. He would baptize them with the Holy Ghost and with fire-the Holy Ghost to kindle in them heavenly prace, if penitent,ire to consume them, if the reverse in The terrors of the day of wrath rolled over his hearets, as his foremost thought; sounds of hope broke in like soft music, only at intervals, to keep the contrite from despair desp and to eleved blive add bandonin bounded ban our on he announcement of divine judgments on a rebellious people was by no means new in Israel and of Helf hardly explains the immense effect of John's preaching. Its power lay in its depth and its demands. The kingdom of heaven, which was at hand was not a mere gift from above, which they might passively receive, but a human work, which they must themselves carry out. Merely to wait in idle expectancy, as in the past, would not suffice. Nor would the tillybuey triffing of legal rites and observances. They must no longer trust to their descent from Abraham nor to the cleansing of the outside of the platter by Pharisaic strictness. The coming of the promised kingdom to each hearer, meant his lifting his own life to a higher blane, by steady resolve and effort Religion must hence forth, be practical and earnests in the heart and life, not in worthless outward forms or privileges. For the first time, the great truth was pressed home to the conscience of men that the true kingdom at heaven is in the renewed soul. It marked an era in the moral history

THE LIFE OF CHRIST;

togethe

the Me

Nor proofs, Sudduce than to tism of 1 to fice in rejected bepuized him as h quidditie

and they full blown courts, to priests, or glance and

tence. Jo

court! In crowds the

pentance.

the kingdo

righteousn find favour

"kingdom

being exclusion enabled the selves, we

able of thes

trug childre dren; from words of th

tude, with fell once ma the part of this man tr

would be lil

found him a his own rou kings' palace The contra have had no various inqu had, apparent what must b his words to their sincerit of the world, and Christ Himself has recognized its momentous greatness. "Among them that are born of women," said He, "there has not risen a greater than John the Baptist. For all the prophets and the Law prophesed, until John. "Till then it was future and distant; the object of passive expectation only. But, from his days, the kingdom of heaven is gained by earnest violence, and men who struggle carnestly take it for themselves." John proclaimed the great truth to a generation that had overlooked it, that "the kingdom" was no mere external blessedness, but the reign of God in the soul of man, and that we must strive, if we would enter into it, or, to use the figure employed by Jesus,—like a city to be taken by storm, it was to be won only by the utmost earnestness. Repentance, with John, was no mere formal confession, but a change of mind; it included not only regret for the past, but a new life for the future; and this he urged so prominently, that even Josephus, a generation afterwards, makes it a characteristic of his preaching. To the frank confession of sins there was added an annihilation of all self-righteousness, whether refting or Abrahamic descent, or attainments in Pharisaic holiness, and a pledge was demanded of a higher spiritual life towards God and man, involving life-long effort.

His whole conception of preparation for the Messianic kingdom was new in his age. The Samaritan prophet, who soon after summoned the multitudes to Gerizim, relied on the wholly external act of secur-ing the vessels of the old Tabernacle, as an inauguration of the day of the Messiah. The Galilseans were disposed to demand the kingdom from the Romans, sword in hand, in the belief that Jehovah would not desert His people, in arms for His cause. John, on the contrary, sought to prepare for it by a moral regeneration of the community. munity. The kingdom of God, with him, was, like that of Isalah, a kingdom of righteousness and holiness. He had sat at the feet of the prophets, not of the Rabbis. He had sought the knowledge of the preparation needed, not, like the Rabbis, from the Book of Leviticus; not, like the Zealots, from the warlike records of the Maccabees; nor, like the Essenes, from mystic revelations, but from Istish." His whole preaching was only a variation of that of the great prophet, in the opening of his book-"Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil, learn to do well: seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow." He says nothing of an earthly kingdom, or political glory., The sins that had separated between them and God must be removed, and their place filled with "fruits meet for repentance," if the divine kingdom was to be established among them. Pharisees and Essenes had sought to propitiate God by their legal rites. Neither know of confession of sins, or repentance. The Pharlece, only boasted of his virtues, and the Essenes praised right-cousness, without a word about penitence. John trusted, not to external forms, but to broken-hearted contrition. Man must work

and

ing-

100 buth

s no

man

e the was John,

luded

vards, ession

ISDC88,

arisaic

wards

m was nioned securthe day ie kingchoveh

on the

be com-

Isaiah, feet of edge of

Leviti-

ccabees;

h!0. His

phet, in way the

learn to

therless, dom, or

and God

r repentg them.

eir legal The

ed right-

not to ust work

together with God to bring about the fulfilment of the prophecies of the Metalah's reign. Nor did he content himself with vague or general appeals or reproofs; "Ye brood of vipers," cried he to a crowd of Pharisées and Sudducess, who had come to his baptism, to scoff and outicize, rather than to contess and repent, and who opposed him with the conservatism of lawyers, and the bigotry of priests, -- "who hath warned you to nee from the wrath to come?" In the words of St. Luke. "they rejected the counsel of God towards themselves, not having been heptized by John," and, so far from accepting his mission, denounced him as having a devil. He brushed them aside, with their endloss quiddities, and quillets, and casuistical cases, and legal converbery. and they hated him in return. They had come from Jerusalem in full-blown official dignity, as a deputation from the ecclesiastical courts, to ask his credentials, and test his soundness. But whether priests, or Levites, or Rabbis, they shrivelled before the indignant glance and nery words which exposed their insincerity and incompetence. John held his authority, not from them, but from a higher court! Instead of flattering them, he told them, as he had told the crowds they despised, that they must bring forth fruits worthy of rucourt pentance. In their narrow pedantic pride they felt sure of a part in the kingdom of the Messiah, simply as descendants of Abraham, his righteousness being reakoned as theirs. Israel, alone, could please or find favour with God, and it did so on the footing of its descent. The "kingdom of Heaven" was to be strictly Jewish, all other nations being excluded, and "it was Jewish by hereditary right." But Join shattered this wretched immorality. " Begin not to say within yourselves, we have Abraham for father: for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones of the desert, lying countless around, to false up true children to Abraham, and will exclude you, his pretended chil-dren, from the kingdom, unless you repent!" The storn, featless words of the old prophets, which made them be hated by the multitude, with the exception of Daniel, the prophet of pleasant things, fell once more from the lips of John, with the same result, at least on the part of the Rabbis. They received homage from all others, but this man treated them with withering scorn. They had fancied he would be like a reed moved in the wind, before them, but they had found him an oak. Flattery and fear were as strange to his soul, as his own rough mantle would have been among the soft clothing of kings' palaces.

The contrast between John's teaching and that of the Rabbis, could have had no more striking illustration than his recorded answers to various inquirers, whom his stern language to their religious leaders had, apparently, alarmed. If the Rabbis were in danger of the fire, what must be required of common men? But no harshness marked his words to honest anxiety. He demanded simply that they show their sincerity by their unselfishness. They were to not on their pro-

the ho

in suc

religio

the m knowl

strong

Who ho

conscio sacrileg dicted was his that 't even the to it, fro mission.

19. him th

self-sacri

the lowli

shine out

sad with repentant to the Jor

and full c

along the mations, e

even when wished to

they now citizen, an

them their

ternalism on neighbour.

to come, w

But Joh

oeptions of

of its purit dent in his

of the theo

moral refor

above the

their Maste

dom Jesus

his magnific

out by Jeho of the need sin from

fessions of desire to, lead a new life. "He that hath two coats, let. him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise," If they ministered to the naked and hungry, as a loving duty, they proved their discipleship genuine. John's wide human sympathies embraced all classes. Like Jesus, he cast out none who came to him. The abhorred publicans, from whom the Pharisecs shrank as accursed, were cheered by the assurance that they, too, might share in the kingdom, if their repentance were sincere. Exact no more," said the prophet, "than that which is appointed you." Even the soldiers were welcome, and had a fitting counsel-"Do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely, and be content with your wages."" That the publican should do his duty houss'ly, as in the sight of God, and that the soldier should deny kinself the license of his calling, and be faithful to his standard, from a sense of obligation before God, were practical tests of loyalty to conscience, which would carry with them the Divine favour. In all cases, moral re-generation was the grand aim, and the man himself must work to carry out the reformation.

But, while John thus demanded practical results, by human effort, he was far from teaching that the most carnest wish to change the life, would, of itself, suffice. He brought the hope of forgiveness in the day of the wrath of God, to bear on all classes, and made them feel that salvation could not come, after all, from their own acts, though these must be rendered, but only by pardon from God. He proclaimed, besides, the need of the Spirit of God to perfect the inner revolution. "He that cometh after me will baptize you with the Holy Qhost, and with fire." For the hardened there would, indeed, be a paptism of fire, but, for the contrite, the heavenly gift of a higher will, and a greater power, a deeper knowledge of God, and a closer communion with Him. Feeling the want of the times, and filled with the spirit of the prophets, he could not forget how they had announced, as a sign of the coming of the Messiah, that Jchovah 'would pour out His spirit upon all flesh,"""that He would pour water upon him that was thirsty, and floods on the dry ground," and "His spirit upon the offspring of Jacob." He could not doubt, therefore, that He, before whom he was only a herald's voice, the Mighty One, whose sandals it was too great an honour for him to unloose, would come, not only to avenge, but to bless. But, to do this, He must bring with Him a higher, quickening spiritual power-the power of the Holy Ghost. In the bestewal of this heavenly influence, to carry out the new creation, begun by the forgiveness of sins, was summed up John's message to his age. 27000 h

It was a mark of the surprising greatness of John's whole spiritual nature, that he had realized the need of action on the part of man, to secure the fulfilment of the divine promise of the kingdom; but it was no less so, that he realized the limitations of human effort, and proclaimed the necessity of a Divine, new-creating power, to secure

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

the holy transformation of the will and heart. To be real and earnest in such an age, to unveil, its true spiritual wants, to wake it to new religious life, were transcendent merits, but it is even stander to see the mighty man—full of humility, with deep self-knowledge, and knowledge of his fellow-men,—pointing to God in heaven, who, stronger, than human will or effort, alone could break the cligins of sin from the soul, and lead it to the light, consult of measured with the state.

ing

who

secs

toô.

xact

ou."

Do

with as in

cense oliga-

yhich

al re-

effort,

iess in them them acts,

PCHe

inner

th the

ndeed,

higher closer

d with

unced.

d pour

on him

it upon

at He,

whose come,

ng with

e Holy

out the

John's

piritual

man, to but it

ort. and secure

Wholly self-oblitious, tainted by no stain of human pride, self consciousness, or low ambition, John had felt, it no usurpation, or sacrilegious assumption, to constitute himself "the messenger," pre-dicted by Malachi, "sent to prepare the way before the Lord." Nor was his preaching more than an expansion of the prophet's words that," the Lord, whom we seek, shall suddenly come to His Temple. even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in." He had requived the commission, from no human lips, but had been set apart to it, from above, before his birth. Filled with the grandeur of his mission, nothing arrested him, or turned him aside. The crowds saw in him the most unbending strength, united with the most complete self-sacrifice: a type of grand fidelity to God and His truth, and of the lowliest self-denial. The sorrows and hopes of Israel seemed to shine out from his eyes, --bright with the inspiration of his soul, but sad with the greatness of his work, --as he summoned the growds to repentance, alarmed them by words of terror, or led them, in groups, to the Jordan, and immersed each singly in the waters, after earnest and full confession of their sins. The newly baptized knelt in prayer along the banks, many, doubtless, with tears, loud sighs, and exclamations, as is still the manner with the emotional races of the East, even when far less excit. I than John's heavers must have been. All wished to begin a new life, and eraved counsel from one in whom they now implicitly believed, and each, in turn-publican, soldier, citizen, and open sinner-heard a few words which pointed out to them their future safety. The narrow separatism and worthless externalism of the Law were to be forsaken, and love to God and their neighbour, and a future baptism of the Holy Ghost, by Him who was to come, were to take their place. But John, with all his grandeur, was still a Jew. What his conceptions of the kingdom of the Messiah were, beyond his realization of its purity, we have few grounds of judging. From an after incident in his life, it would seem that he thought of it as the restoration of the theocracy, amidst a people prepared for it by repentance and moral reformation. It would be to set him above his times, and eyen above the apostles, as they remained during the whole lifetime of their Master, to conceive him as realizing the purely spiritual kingdom Jesus was to establish. He was greater than all the prophets, in his magnificent faith that the work he had begun would be carried out by Jehovah Himself, through His Messiah, and in his realization of the need of human action, in repentance and a new life, to the establishment of the Messiah's kingdom. Others had left God to do all at some future time, limiting themselves to prophecy. "John alone taught that the kingdom of God had already come in the contrite soul which proved its penitence by holy fruits. Bat he was also less than the least in that kingdom, in his inadequate realization of it in its full greatness." He " came neither eating nor drinking,"--- o type of Jewish asceticism, and his teaching bore, throughout, the true Jewish stamp. Perhaps he rose above the thought, universal in his day, that the outer act had, in itself, an intrinsic worth, if not, even, a spiritual power, but the importance he attached to outward expressions of penitence was entirely Jewish. Like the Rabbis, he laid stress on fasting, and on the "making prayers," in the Jewish sense, and his disciples, in these and other external exercises of religion, found themselves nearer the disciples of the Pharisees than those of Jesus. 'As a Nazarite and an ascetic, the dread of defilement must have kept him apart from the great mass of his audience; for he daved not touch any but "the clean," even in baptizing them. In this aspect of it, the work of John was, in the eyes of Christ,

THE LIFE OF CHRIST. THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

284

In this aspect of it, the work of John was, in the eyes of Christ, only the sewing a new patch on an old garment, or new wine put into old bottles. The great movement he set on foot, while an immense advance on the past in Judaism, was yet, in its essence, Jewish. The ascetic spirit of its origin perpetuated itself in John's disciples, and marked his whole conceptions as imperfect and passing the morning red heralding the day, but as yet mingled with the night.

John formed no separate communion. He taught his disciples to pray, and it would seem as if he had ultimately gathered a special band round him as the apostles were gathered round Jesus. But he came, not to found a new sect." His far grander aim was to raise the nation from spiritual death and direct it to the coming Messiah. 1995 of the success of the sect of the sector and the sector and the nation from spiritual death, and direct it to the coming Messiah. 1995 of the success of the sector and the sector and the sector and the nation from spiritual death and direct it to the coming Messiah. 1995 of the success of the sector and the sector and the sector and the sector instant success of the sector and the sector and the sector and the sector instant to another sector and the sector and the sector and the sector instant. The BAPTIEN OF JESUS AND THE DEATH OF JOHN, showing the

The great wave of religious excitement produced by the preaching of John had set the whole land in motion. Foulque de Nouilly, the famous monkish preacher of the thirteenth century, whose discourses moved all classes of society, from the highest to the lowest, so that people rushed in crowds from distant countries to hear him, or Whitfield, in the last century, who stirred the whole nation in his day, help us to realize the sensation produced by John's ministrations. To a people sunk for the time in religious apathy, and corrupted in morals, but loyal to the voice of their Exciptores, and the lofty spiritual ideals of the past, his voice came like a trumpet, rousing them to new life. His bronzed, wasted features, his prophet's dress and bearing, tiear He their were ignoi the ] rigor nance impos Rabbi thing their i a grai revelat The ve ings, f ance," when H proach Ever as at he rolling 1 clared w demand must w symboli confessio carry his SilfMeanv ecclesias easy at h afterwar him by seemed t ing beyo including to the sm where G eastern ei chose a s Bethabar baptism. south, an field, fron great as villages their tiens

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

te

198

in pe

UD

his

en,

res-

aid

090, ion.

e of

aust

ared

STRIKE

rist,

el an

ence;

ohn's

sing h the

lesto

necial

ut be so the alobail

mp135.

istis :

min

St-City

inchi

-inghi-

ching

y, the

DUTECS

othat

Wbit-

s day.

ations,

ted in

Vispirhem to l bear

PINT) ing, his fearless boldness for God, and the response of their own hearts to his denunciations and demands, made him a mighty power. He gave utterance to their deepest desires and aspirations, fanned their national hopes, and roused their enthusiasm. As a people, they were not in favour of asceticism. The Rabbis had a saying, that the ignorant did not know how to keep themselves from transgressions of the Law, nor the common people how to become "the Pious," or rigorous Jews. Even one so famous as Simeon the Just discountenanced Nazarite vows, with the rigid abstinence and self-denial they imposed. The worldly Sadducee laughed at the austerities of the Rabbis, "who tormented themselves in this life without gaining anything by it in the other," and the mass of the people were no doubt of their mind. But the vision of a true Nazarite, in whom all could see a grand superiority to the worthless ambitions of life, was like a revelation of eternal realities, which no one could turn lightly aside. The very power of his words seemed to imply the truth of his warnings, for the Rabbis had already told them that "universal repentance," such as they seemed to see round them, "would only happen when Elias had come," and his coming was the sure sign of the approach of the kingdom of God. Everthing was fitted to startle. The proclamation of the Messiah as at hand—the call to repentance—the announcement of the swift rolling towards them of the thunders of the wrath of God—the declared worklessness of distinctions of race, blood, or position—the demand for fruits meet for repentance, or, in other words, that a man must work out his own salvation in co-operation with God—the symbolical rite, to which he required submission, and the humbling confession of sin before the world, which he added—all combined to carry his name and work to the utmost limits of the land.

Meanwhile, the authorities at Jerusalem, with the jealousy of all ecclesiastical bodies towards those outside their own pale, grew uneasy at his success, and plotted to get him into their toils, as they did afterwards in the case of our Lord. The ensnaring questions put to him by the deputation of priestly Pharisees sent from Jerusalem, seemed to have made John think it necessary to seek safety by removing beyond the bounds of Judea. From the "circle of Jordan,' including both sides of the stream, he passed upwards, apparently, to the small sunken plain which borders it, just beneath Scythopolis, where Gitleon's Brook of Trembling makes its steep way from the eastern end of Esdraelon, down the Wady Jalud, to the Jordan. He chose a spot near this, on the eastern side, known in those days as Bethabara, where a ford crossed the river, and gave facilities for baptism. He had been preaching and baptizing for some time in the south, and his removal to a more northern position opened a new field, from its nearness to Galilee. The excitement still continued as great as ever. The towns on the lake of Galilee, and even the villages north of Esdraclon, poured forth to the new prophet. this the one stadegard of marined but one beauty

Weeks passed, and it must now have been the late summer, for, before long, John had to leave the Jordan, as too shallow, at its accessible parts for baptism, and go to another place-Enon, near Salem an unknown locality, where pools more suitable were yet to be had. But, as yet, there was no sign of the advent of the expected Messiah. The assembling of the nation, and the great work on the banks of the Jordan, were necessary preliminaries, in the Divine Counsels, to dignify the ultimate Advent of the Redeemer. Jesus had been waiting the fit moment for leaving His thirty years' obscurity in Nazareth, and presenting Himself, before the herald who had been unconsciously proclaiming Him. Though cousins, the Baptist and the Son of Mary had never seen each other, for they lived at opposite ends of the country, and John had spent we do not know how many years of his life in hermit sectusion. far from man. But if John did not know His person, he had yet, doubtless, heard the wondrous circumstances attending His birth, and must have been daily expecting Him to put forth His claims. At last, Jesus left Nazareth and came to Jordan, and presented Himself before him. His appearance, wholly different from that of all who had thronged to his ministry, at once arrested the prophet's eye. The holy devotion and heavenly repose which marked Him as He stood in prayer, spoke of a purity and greatness before which the soul of John did instant reverence. He might have stern words for the proud and self-righteous, but, in the presence of such a vision as that before him, he has only those of lowliest homage. The light, as of other worlds, shining from the depths of those calm eyes; the radiance of a soul free from all stain of sin, transfiguring the pale face,---full, at once, of highest beauty, tenderest love, and deepest sadness, was hereafter, even when dimly seen by the light of midnight torches and lanterns, to make accusers shrink backwards and fall, overcome, to the ground, and Simon Peter pray- Depart from me. for I am a sinful man, O Lord!" The soul has an instinctive recognition of goodness, and feels its awfulness. Spiritual greatness wears a kingly crown which compels instant reverence. Had He been an earthly king, John would have remained the stern, fearless prophet; had He been the highest of the earthly priesthood, he would have borne himself as His superior, in the consciousness of his high mission. But the royalty before him was not of this world, and the priesthood was higher than that of Aaron. Jesus had come to be baptized, but John, for the first and last time, with any one of all the crowds that had gathered round him, hesitated, and drew back "I have need to be baptized of Thee," said he, "and comest Thou to me?" He might not know by name, or open, intimation, whom he had before him, but unerring instinct taught him that he addressed a greater than himself. He was longing for the revelation of the Messiah, and knew that God could manifest Him at any. moment, clothing Him whom He had designated for the high dignity.

with great an en himse truth with s the M den o the de expect ness, a and gr only, e toward In such recogni showed lineame being l not go his arde within object o not," sa my worl to me. b Unknow thought pose of ( bad, alre firm con provided In his gra one amon been amo neither th will not r Him, He before me "He shall man of m the Messie to dwell God in th spiritual g sense, the Messiah li

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

be

éd

no

rty

the

ùgh her,

jent

ion,

yet,

irth,

lim

fall

eye.

s He

n the ls for

on as light.

; the pale

epest night fall.

a me.

ogni

earsa

n an

phet:

have

d the

to be ofall

back

Thou

hom

the

ation

any mity.

with divine might, to carry out His work. It is indeed, the especial greatness of the Baptist that he not only rose to the level of so great an enterprise as the spiritual regeneration of his country, and devoted himself to it with gigantic energy, and that he was a man of spotless truth and dauntless courage, but that, with all this, he was filled with a splendid enthusiasm, and unfaltering faith in the nearness of the Messiah. This alone could have supported him; under the burden of his work. No one, till then, had stood, like him, between the dead past and the dimly rising future, in hopeful and confident expectation. He had led the people from the corruption, wickedness, and confusion of their decayed religiousness, and stood calmly and grandly at their head, in the firm belief that the Messiah, who, only, could realize the promises he had made them, of divine help towards a higher life, would emerge from the darkness before him. In such an attitude of intensest expectancy, he must at once have recognized the marks of the possible Messiah in any one who showed them. He might look for no outward signs; the divine lineaments of a nature fit for such an office would suffice, the future being left to God, to whom he entrusted his own work. He could not go abroad to search for one who might be what he desired, but his ardent, yet keen, soul, could not fail to discover Him if He came within his sphere. No wonder, then, he felt, that, in Jesus, the object of his longings seemed to have been found. "I knew Him not," said he, some time later, "and had not in any measure begun my work because I knew Him, or that He might at my request come to me, but I have been baptizing and rousing Israel, that He, though unknown to me, drawn indeed by my work, but without design or thought on my part, and, therefore, only by the clear leading and pur-pose of God,—should be revealed to Israel as the true Messiah." Ho had, already, before Jesus had presented Himself, made known his firm conviction that God had heard the cry of His people, and had provided the Messiah, though as yet He had not disclosed Him. In his grand trust in God, he had told the multitudes, "there standeth one among you, whom you know not-the true Messiah," who has been among you, and you have not dreamed of it, because you knew noither the marks nor nature of God's Anointed, and, indeed, you will not recognize Him, even when He appears. That ye may know Him, He is He who cometh after me, and yet shall be preferred before me-the true Messiah, whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose. "He shall be preferred before me, for He was before me. He is no man of mortal birth, for scripture and Rabbi unite in recognizing the Messiah as the uncreated Word of God, sent down from heaven, to dwell for a time among men." John's long communion with God in the wilderness, his prayers and tears, had raised him to a spiritual grandeur which anticipated, with a higher than human same, the yet unrevealed. Lifted above earth, the advent of the Messiah had become to him a living truth, which only waited God's

THE MER OF CHRIST

715157

to got word in formed and bat

28 time for its disclosure, and at last stood visibly before him, in Him who sought baptism at his hands.

No wonder he shrank from assuming to such a being the relation in which he stood to other men! He knew that only one who was wholly free from sin could be the Messiah, and such an One he felt was before him. The meekness, gentleness, and purity, which overawed him, spoke of nothing less, and the heart of John, on the instant, could express its overpowering emotion in no more fitting thought than that he "beheld the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the World." In such words he embodied a conception which he had lieard from the Rabbis since his childhood, for the daily sacrifice, on whose head the sins of Israel were laid by a formal act, was their favourite type of the Messiah, who was hence known by the endearing name of the "Lamb of God," The sublime picture in Isaiah of Him on whom Jehovah had laid the injouities of His people, and who was led as a Lamb to the slaughter, had already been applied to the Messiah, and John might well think of Him in this His highest aspect, -oppressed in soul, as he himself was, by the weight of the sins of his race lord with a baid of gloring off of " The hesitation of the Baptist, however, was not allowed to prevail, for Jesus still repeated His desire to be haptized. " " Suffer it now." said He, for thus it becomes us to fulfil all righteousness. From whatever God has required of Isruel as a duty, I cannot withhold myself." Baptism was an ordinance of God, required by His prophet as the introduction of the new dispensation. It was a part of "rightcousness," that is, it was a part of God's commandments, which Jesus came into the world to show us the example of fulfilling, both in the letter and the spirit. Moreover, He had not yet received the consecration of the Spirit, abiding on Him, and had not yet assumed the awful dignity of the Messich, but had hitherto been only the unknown villager of Nazareth. No subject is more mysterious than the "increase in wisdom" which marked the Saviour, as it does all other men, nor can we conjecture when it was that the full realization of His divine mission first rose before Him. As yet there had been no indication of its having done so, for He had not yet "manifested His glory," or appeared at all before men. Is it too much to believe that His baptism was the formal consecration, which marked His entrance on His great office? ST 301 (Raunable and by bander diversed bad

John resisted no longer, and leading Jesus into the stream, the rite was performed. Can we question that such an act was a crisis in the life of our Lord? His perfect manhood, like that of other men, in all things, except sin, forbids our doubting it. Holy and pure before sinking under the waters. He must yet have risen from them with the light of a higher glory in His countenance. His past, life was closed; a new era had opened. Hitherto the humble villager, weiled from the world. He was honceforth the Messiah, openly working amongst men. It was the true moment of His entrance on a new life. entere Chris ao No throw pathy tized. of suc Weakn the fa Ghost. purity nent of utterin pleased should wisdon of know fulfilled to the n Captive proclair of Godas such, nationa The son to their, clothed : Want a c made wi for the b heaven. rightenu anointing tion, lear baptize y balief, the long Hen had fort temptatio od The gr secrated t of the pro different standing characteri long enou W.M. 2 80 life Past years had been buried in the waters of Jordan. He entered them as Jesus, the Son of Man; He race from them. The Christ of God.

2111

Tim

K 1124

tion

was felt

)ver-

the

tting

Wat

otion

rthe

by

hence

blime

vities

had nk of

WES.

11:01

revail

now,"

From

thnold

rophet

'right-

Jesus

in the

G COL-

cd the

known

e "inother

tion of

een no

ed His

ve that trance

h . bRI

he rite

in the

ien) in hefore

n with

fewas

veiled

orking

a new

Nor is it wonderful that, at a moment when He was passing through such a supreme spiritual crisis, there should have been sympathy with it in the distant, regions of the Universe, "Being baptized," says St. Luke, "and praying,"-in the overpowering emotion . of such a time-the heaven was opened all hindrances of human weakness withdrawing, so that the eye seemed to pierce the sky, to the far-off heavenly splendours. And now a vision as of the Holy Ghost descending in the "bodily form" of a dove, the symbol of purity and peace, and resting over the newly baptized as in permanent consecration, revealed itself to John and Jesus; a heavenly voice uttering as it did so, "This is My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." Isaiah had, long before; foretold how the Spirit of Jehovah should rest upon the Branch from the roots of Jesse-the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge, and of fear of the Lord, and the prediction was now fulfilled, It was the divine anointing of Jesus, to preach good tidings to the meek, to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim Aberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of God-the consecration from on high to the office of Messiah, and, as such the true birth-hour of Christianity. It was His solemn designation as the Great High Priest of the new and abiding Dispensation. The sons of Aaron were required by the Levitical Law to be set apart to their, high office by washing and anointing, and He who was to be clothed with an infinitely loftier pricethood, could not be allowed to want a correspondingly grander inauguration. Instead of the Temple made with hands. He had around Him the great Femple of nature: for the brazen laver. He had the flowing river, reflecting the vault of heaven. If He had no golden robes, He had the robe of a sinless righteousness, and if there were no sacred oil. He had, instead, the anginting of the Holy Ghost. John had already, by Divine intimation, learned that the Spirit should thus descend on Him who was to baptize with the Holy Ghost, and thus saw the confirmation of his belief, that Jesus was, indeed, the Lamb of God, and His Son. How long He remained with John is not told us, but it would seem as if He had forthwith retired to the wilderness, to return only after His temptation. was soit our sand, readined than might da fisister addit of The great work of John was now over. As Samuel had, once consecrated the earthly David king over the outward theocracy, the last of the prophets had consecrated a greater king, who should rule, by different means, over a kingdom wholly different, though John, standing as he did, outside, could at best only dimly conjecture these characteristics of the new Messianic reign. He lived and worked long enough after this crowning moment, to rejoice over the first adwinth too has entire affille incoron, easy with a will stem tennoore enough to show that he did not comprehend its spirit, as he would have done, had he lived later. His days were numbered Those in power feared his words and work, which gave him supreme influence among the people. The priests and Rabbis had failed in their plots against him, but what they could not themselves do, they were erelong able to effect through one of greater nower for evil. John seems latterly to have moved from place to place along both hanks of the Jordan, both north and south. How long he continued to labour is not known, but he was still baptizing after Jesus had begun His ministry, at the marriage feast of Cana. The popularity of Jesus had roused the jealousy of the disciples of the Baptist and had even led to angry feeling. A dispute with a Jew-likely a disciple of Jesus-respecting baptism, brought matters to a crisis. He had, apparently, claimed for that of Jesus a higher power of cleansing from the guilt of sin than that of their master. Irritated and annoyed, John's followers returned and told him how He "t who had been with him beyond Jordan, to whom he had borne witness, was baptizing, and that all men were now coming to Him." The news only seemed to bring the grand humility of the Baptist more prominently than ever into view, and showed him to be above any selfish or petty thought; a man to whom the will of God was the abiding law. 16 "He must increase," said he, "but I must decrease, for He is the Christ the Brides groom. J rejoice greatly to hear His voice. He is from above, and therefore, above all. Lam only of the earth, and speak as such .... He has received the testimony of heaven; He has the power of life and death: Ho is the heloved son, into whose hand the Father has comit mitted all things." ... With this grand utterance, John disappears into the gloom of a prison. He had been a "lamp," as Jesus calls him? burning brightly in his day, but the hight of the world had now risen and his light must grow, dim and expire. A state heself off at 1881 John owed his imprisonment to Herod Antipas, in whose territories he liad sought safety, and the opportunity of carrying on his work. in peace. The cause assigned before the people for his arrest was: tgat dohn had ventured to reprove Herod for his unlawful marriage with Herodias, but political fears had, probably, in reality, more to do with it. Herod, with the crafty cunning for which Jesus afterwards. spoke of him as "the fox," was afraid that John might turn his wide popularity to political account, and head a religious rising, perhaps? like that of Judas the Galilæan, for all men seemed ready for anything he might advise. He held it, therefore, better, says Josephus, to any ticipate any attempt at revolution, by imprisoning him, and, if needs were, by putting him to death, rather than lament a disturbance after. it had broken out.

Antipas, it seems, passed his time, now, in Tiberias, then, in Machaerus, on his southern border, in Perea. In him, the hierarchyand Rubbis at Jerusalem, impotent themselves, found an instrument, to eru had popula that a hensio bando from s when hurrled b:This the loft Dead strongh norther that of southing Abarim memori to the n warmb met his the bott the icies with min scending tuff; rus theoupla distance: gorge, w cleaving feet, to th of which rhoe, and this ravin up confus this, when of Macha profound fortress not quite ering more of the Sur have had r allowed to The first was afterw

When Her

×

18 in 106 ots

TC

oth

ued

had rity.

and

dis-

He

sing

yed;

with

and

d to ever

ight;

must

nide

andy

He

and

comit

into) bim(3

risen

1 3533

tories)

work:

TRAS

riago

10 100

vards.

wide

rhaps]

thing

o ansa needso

afterd

n, in rchy5

ment

to crush the unlicensed teacher who so freely condemned them, and had ro great a hold upon the people. Pilate, ever fearful of any popular movement, may have demanded, at their crafty instigation. that action should be taken, and these influences, added to the apprehensions of Antipas himself, brought matters to a crisis. Sending a band of soldiers and police northwards to the Jordan, a distance of from six to eight hours, they apprehended the Baptist, likely by night, when the people were not astir, and, binding the defenceless man, hurried him off to the fortress Machaerus. . This castle, known as "' the diadem." from its crown-like seat on the lofty rocks, and as "the black tower," lay on the east side of the Dead Sea, almost on a line with Bethlehem. It was the southern stronghold of Perea, as the Macedonian colony of Pella was the northern. Nature, herself, had here raised a stronghold, as she had that of Masada, on the other side of the Dead Sea, a little further south at It lay above the deep gorge that divides the mountains of Abarim from the range of Pisgah, in the wild region where, from immemorial tradition, the Jews sought the grave of Moses. A few miles to the north, in a deep, rugged valley, lay Callirhöe, famous for its warm baths, where the dying Herod had sought relief, and had nearly met his death. Its hot springs burst at one spot, from the rocks in the bottom of the gorge, and, near them, others poured forth water of the iciest coldness, while the hills round were in those days pierced with mines of sulphur and alum. The torrent of Zerka Ma'in, deseending between walls of basalt, and red; brown, and black, volcanic tiff: rushes through the ravine, over a chauncl of huge rocks, from the uplands of Perea to the cast shore of the Dead Sea. At a short distance south the Wady Z'gara runs east and west, in a profound gorge, with precipitous sides, at some parts cight hundred feet high, cleaving its wild way, by leaps, down three thousand eight hundred fect, to the Dead Sea. A parallel valley succeeds, along the hollow of which ran the old Roman road, joining Machaerus with Callirrhoe, and with the great road from Petra to Damascus. Rising from this ravine, the long mountain ridge of Attaroth stretches, in heapedup confusion, ten miles to the south-west, and on the highest point of this, where it sinks sheer down towards the Zerka Ma'in, the ruins of Machaerus, in great masses of squared stone, still overhang the profound depth below. At the foot of the isolated cliff on which the fortress was built, and separated from it by a deep and narrow valley, not quite a mile across, lie the ruins of the town of Machaerus, covering more than a square mile, showing in the remains of a Temple of the Sun, that, along with the fanatical Jewish population, it must have had many heathen, that is, Greek or Roman citizens, who were allowed to practise their idolatry in peace.

The first fortress had been built here by Alexander Jannæus, but it was afterwards destroyed by Gabinius, in his war against Aristobulus. When Herod came to be king, however, his keen eye saw the strength

A 124125 11155550197 of the position and he determined to rebuild the castle as a frontier defence against the Arabs. Surrounding a large space with walls and towers he built a city from which a path led up to the citadel, on the top, of the ridge. The citadel itself was at one end of a narrow ridge, nearly a mile in length from cast to west, and formed a last retreat in case of attack, but it was not enough for his magnificent ideas. At the other end of the ridge, he built a great wall, enclosing the summit of the hill, with towers two hundred feet high at the cor ners, and in the space thus gained built a grand palace, with rows of columns of a single stone a-piece, halls lined with many-coloured marbles, magnificent baths, and all the details of Roman luxiny, not omitting huge cisterns, barracks, and storehouses, with everything needed for defence in case of siege. The detached citadel was the scene of John's imprisonment; a stern and gloomy keep, with underground dangeons, still visible, hewn down into the living rock." The fortress-nelace, at the other end of the fortifications, at the time the residence of Antipas and his retainers, was merry with their revelry but the dungeon of John lay in midnight darkness. From his with dows Antipas had a magnificent view of the Dead Sea, the whole course of the Jordan, Jerusalem, Hebron, the frowning fortress of Massdai the nircle of Jordan, and the cliffs of Engedi, on the west and of the mountains of Gilcad, rising beyond the wild heights of Pisgah, on the north: but his captive, the child of the boundless wildemess pined in perpetual night.

Beneath this stronghold, verched on the top of the highest summit of the wild region, the valleys sank in unscalable precipices, on three sides, to such a depth that Jorephus is well-nigh excused for thinking that the eye could not reach their bottom. The fourth side was only a little less tersible. Wild desolation reigned far and near, but the hidden hollows of some of the gorges were luxuriant with palms. oliver and vines, and superstition believed that, among other wonders, there grew in them a plant, flery red in colour, and shedding rave of flame in the evening, which had power to expel demons and heal diseases, though only to be pulled at the cost of life. Section, a German traveller who re-discovered the site in 1807, has left a vivid picture of the landscape round. Masses of lava, brown, red, and black, are varied with pumice stone, or black basalt, in huge broken masses or perpendicular cliffs, resting on white limestone; and then, The rush again, dark brown rocks-the iron mountain of Josephus. ing stream beneath is overgrown with oleanders and date-palms, willows, poplars, and tall reeds, while hot supplur springs gush from the clefts of the rocks, sending up a thick mist of steam.

In this wild, warlike place, lay John, cut off from the world, from Israel and from the grand work of national regeneration of which he was the soul-in the midst of a population of soldiers, barbarians, Araba Idumeans campritos and Moabites; who ran no risk of being infected by his words. Perhaps he was favoured beyond other prisoners by some cell look from Jordan, of his gr the past, him: no 1 there was regret hir three side numerou to have populatio promises wentout or lounge Herodias the hot s top. gave them from from pol well be fe for a hun the Dead from ever bustle, for with it. John were and the at gorgeousl courts of outside th among the Antipas to death, day's life, for a time. lem, after tion, for 1 refinement whatsoeve and ill-trea

brought f

was still in goodness,

before Ant

But Joh

itier 10

and

1 the tow

last

Icent

sing

COL

vs of

ured , not hing

s the

nder-

The

a' the

elry win

whole

io as west.

hts of s wil:

mmit

three oking

s only ut the

alms,

won-

dding

s and

zen, a vivid

, and roken

then,

rush

, wil-

m the

from

which

rians,

being

r pris oners by being brought from his underground vault, after a time, to some cell of the corner towers, to be near his captor. If so, he could look from his lonely height over the regions of the Dead Sea, and the Jordan, where the years of his desert consecration, and the months of his great work, had been spent. Yet he was no mere shadow of the past, but still a living power. No strong hand had protected him; no miracle had been vouchsafed by God for his deliverance, and there was no hope of a rescue by the people, however they might regret him, or murmur at his fate. His prison, unapproachable on three sides, and reached, on the fourth, only by a bridle path, through a numerous fortified gates, made escape impossible. "Nor could he hope to have support from any within the castle itself, for its motley population of Arabs, Edomites, and Moabites, cared nothing for the provaises of Israel. The sheikhs of the wandering tribes around went out and in, the troops of the garrison were reviewed and drilled, or lounged round the battlements, and the courtiers of the haughty Herodias flashed hither and thither in their bravery, through the town : the hot springs of the valley, and the bracing air of the mountaintop, gave new tone to the nerves of the health-seekers frequenting them from all parts, but the Baptist lay unheeded and helpless." Apart from political reasons, it was so healthy a place that Antipas might well be fond of it. "Provisions," says Josephus, "remained good for a hundred years in the fortress of Masada, on the other side of the Dead Sea, for the air, at the great height of the castle, is purified from every earthy or hurtful .cxhalation." Yet there was no great bustle, for the place was too out of the way for much intercourse. with it. Ten thousand people lived in the town below, but round John were only rough soldiery, drafted from the neighbouring tribes. and the attendants on Herod, of whom Jesus speaks as "the people" gorgeously appareled, who lived delicately," as became those in the courts of kings. Yet the nation, with unbroken faith, kept watch outside the gates of the prison, and the breath of God still moved among them like the soft wind through the leaves of summer all all the Antipas had laid hands on John with the intention of putting him goodness; that, for a time, hedged; him round from death: Brought? before Antipas; once and again; to be shown affe to the crowd at his infected by his verds. Pechaja he was not offerd be vond office pris-

table, he remained so completely himself, that the tyrant, for the moment, became the conquest of the helpless prisoner. Feeling how awful goodness is, he "feared John, knowing that he was a rightcous and holy man, and kept him closely; and when he heard him, he was a very anxious and heard him gladly." Even he, for the instant, looked towards God and heaven! Uneasy conscience, superstition, at natural indisposition to violence, and the slow, cruel delays of Eastern justice. left John alive. He was even allowed to have intercoursed with some of his people, whose love braved personal danger, and brought them to his prison to visit him to Perhaps, as with St. Paul, when a prisoner at Casarea, thirty years later, it was formally permitted that "he should have liberty, and that none of his acquaint.) ance should be forbidden to minister or come unto him;"for, very likely, the loose ways of the East, so different from strict Roman practice, left access to him possible. His disciples came and winter brought him news from the outer world, and told him of the presching of the kingdom that had begun in Galilee-perhaps shared his imprise oncent. in turn, listened to his instructions, and wept forth on metha sages connected with his great work. Antipus had, however, nothing to fear in all this, and the Baptist had as little to hope. His disciples. had held bedly together, since their head was taken from them. They clung firmly only to the external, ascetic side of his teaching, as might have been expected, striving to outdo, the Pharisees in washinter and fasts, and they went about sad, because the Bridgeroom was taken from them. Perhaps, some of them still preached the comings. of the kingdom, and baptized penitents, but the crowds fell off, int great part, after John's imprisonment, and flocked to the new propheta whom he had himself baptized. and or feddled hidden to the model of the "To men trained in Jewish ideas, there was much that seemed! strange and doubtful in the teaching that had thus superseded that of John. The works of Jesus were mighty, but His disciples did not fast. The Elijah sternness of the preaching in the wilderness of Judge, was not found in that of the shores of the Lake of Tiberias. There was no word of any open assumption of the office of Messiah nor any signs of the approaching erection of a purified theocrapy There were no preparations, for the triumph, of Israel, and no symptom toms of the wrath of God breaking forth on their oppressors. As a Jew. John must have shared, more or less, m the universal belief of his nation, that, however pure, the kingdom of the Messiah was to be an earthly dominion over Israel, when it had been delivered from the polluting presence of the heathen, and had been marked, once more, as the people of God, under Him alone. The news brought him seems to have made him almost waver in his belief in Jesus, as the Messiah thus expected, for the human mind, in loneliness, disaping pointment and imperfect knowledge, is prone to read things by their dull light of the present, rather than by the evidence of the pest. furlat momonte of weakness and despondency, it is easy to think that out whole lif The Gosp mind of ] heard fro Now, w for they h the centur bier at No through t One, or m said, Joh Coming O many of d Hegrante tell John lame walk and the p added, as whoseever asfultime must have was an ant it was wri ofstheblin stopped? 9 the dumb ubon me; unto the m the captive to proclaim given him This Was approachin as well, ha great a par made him "setting H brought Agrippa II presence, ] uncourtly sight of hi something kings cour flatteries or it was far repentance

-1

BO-77.

OW

OUNT

WAS

ant, h

p, At

uree it

and aul,) Der.s

lint)

VENYIC

maili

ientos bing l

DINNE

metha

iples. Cheyn

g, 1881

ming a

fi ini

pheta

t obtin

medi

thait

inot sin of

LIGALE

sishes

BOY IT

As a's

as to

from

oncer ughtin

B1(88)1)

isapra di the la

in Ini

QUE

whole life has been a dream, and our fondest hope more illusions. The Gospels seem to point at such a momentary depression in the mind of John. "As if he had been lost in thought over what he had heard from his visitors, he sent to Jesus for a solution of his doubted "Now, when John heard in the prison of the works of the Ohrist." for they had told him concerning all these things,"-the miracle of the centurion's servant, and of the young man just raised from the bier at Nain-"having called unto him two of his disciples, he sent." through them, to the Lord, and said to Him, Art Thou the Coming One or must we look for another?" And the men came to Him, and said, 'John the Baptist has sent us unto Thee, saying, "Art Thou the" Coming One, or must we look for another ???! (In that hour 1. healed many of diseases, and plagues, and evil apirits; and unto many blind He granted sight, And He answered, and said unto them, "Go and" tell John what ye saw and heard, that the blind receive sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, and the poor have the Gospel preached unto them !!" and then He. added, as if to bring John back from his doubts, "and blessed is hen? whoseever shall not be offended at me." "The whole answer showed a fulfilment of the words of Isaiah, respecting the Messiah, which must have sunk deep into the heart of one to whom that great prophet was an anticipatory Gospel of John would remember that in one place of of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unit stopped. Then shall the lame man leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing?" and in another "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; to bind up the broken-hearted to proclaim liberty to" the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord & Desus could have given him no proof more touching, that He was, indeed, the Messiah.<sup>10</sup> "This was the summer of John's captivity," but the winter was fast approaching. Antipas, and perhaps, Herodias, and the local court as well, had been curious to see and hear the man who had played so great a part. At first, more idle curiosity, like that which afterwards made him anxious to see Jesus, -- though he ended his interview by "setting film at nought and mocking Him." made him have John brought before him. Perhaps the mingled motives which led Agrippa IL, Berenice, and Drusilla, to have Paul brought into their presence, led to his being called into the palace. To hear anything uncourtly from one in their power was not to be imagined. The sight of him would break the monotony of an afternoon, and give something to talk about for the evening. But John was no man for kings, courts. Life was too real for him to deal in smooth tongued flatteries and deceits. He made an impression on the court, though it was far too proud and triffing to think of anything so vulgar as repentance."Like St. Paul before Felix and Drusilla but in duite another mode, he was a preacher of righteousness, temperance, and judgment, though in bonds. "It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife," said the fearless man, -in the grand superiority of religious zeal,-to him who had his life in his hands. Perhaps Antipas had wished to know what he must do to secure an interest in the approaching political kingdom of God, and was thus told to prove his sincerity by breaking off a life of sin. In the reproof, John set himself. on the firm footing of the Mosaic Law, which bound Herod, as a Jew, ish prince; though the cowardly silence of the hierarchy had allowed him to trample it under foot at his will, without censure. "Hercdias," says Josephus, "took upon her to confound the laws of our country, and, having divorced herself from her husband while he was alive, married Herod (Antipas), her father's brother, by the father's side." The Law had repeatedly forbidden marriage with a living brother's wife, as a scandal against which childlessness was threatened, and it made no difference between brothers and, half-brothers. In the case of Antipas the transgression of the Law was the greater, as John saw and pointed out, for his marriage had only been effected by adultery. on the part of both wife and husband. Moreover, it had been brought about by the most heartless outrage on the hospitality of a brother. To make the whole still more revolting, it was not needed that John should touch on the relationship between Antipas and Herodias, for the Law did not take notice of this, and the Herod family had long disregarded such objections. · · · · ·

The disgraceful story dated back to the first or second year of Pilate. In the year 26, or, more probably, 27, the whole family of the Herods had gathered together to a feast in Jerusalem. To this act of piety, as it was held, they had given a still higher value, in popular opinion, by their action in a matter which lav near the heart of a population zealous for the Law. Pilate, to prevent an insurrection, had reluctantly withdrawn the standards, with their supposed idolatrous emblems, set up in the year 26, before the Castle Antonia. But his offended pride had not forgotten the humiliation, and he. now, to efface the remembrance of it, had hung votive tablets on the palace in Zion. They were golden shields, dedicated to Tiberius, like those everywhere hung up in the temples, in honour of the gods, as acknowledgment of some deliverance, or signal blessing in health or fortune, received at their hands. They got their name from having been vowed beforehand, in case a divine favour, earnestly desired, should be vouchsafed. On those he now hung up, Pilate inscribed only his own name and that of Tiberius, but the Jews denounced them as idolatrous, and raised a great clamour to have them removed.... The letter of the Law might not condemn them, but they had homage paid them, like altars, and, hence, were an abomination. The four sons of Herod took up the defence of the Law, thus outraged in spirit, and on Pilate referring the matter to the Emperor, to escape a second humiliation, a deputation was sent

ce, and

ve thy

rity of s Anti-

in the

ove his nimself

a Jew.

llowed

cdias," ountry,

alive,

side.

rother's

and it

he case

hn saw

dultery

orought

prother.

at John

lias, for

ad long

year of mily of

To this

alue, in

he heart

hsurrec.

ipposed

ntonia.

ind he,

on the

berius.

of the

plessing

r name

favour,

w hurg

us, but lamour

rdemn

were

of the

tter to

as sent off to Rome. It happened that Antipas, also, had business at Rome at the time, and as he set out on it presently, the people saw in his journey a further proof of his piety, as they never doubted he had gone in support of their cause. But he had adultery in his heart while affecting zeal for religion.

Among the members of the Herod family present at the family feast was Herod Boethos, the son of Herod the Great and the second Marianne, the famous Jerusalem beauty of her day, whose father, an Alexandrian Jew, Herod had raised to the high priesthood, in honour of the alliance with his daughter. This Herod Boethos had married Herodias, the grand-daughter of his father and the first Marianne, and daughter of Aristobulus, one of Marianne's murdered sons. The uncle had thus married the niece, but this was nothing strange in the Herods. When Antipas came to Jerusalem, to the feast, Herod Boethos made him his guest, as his half-brother. Never was hospitality worse repaid.

The fair, impetuous, ambitious, Herodias presently made a complete conquest of the weak, unprincipled, Antipas. He soon found himself entangled in an intrigue with the wife of his hospitable brother, though he had long been married to the daughter of a powerful neighbour, Aretas, king of the Nabateans, whose dominions were conterminous with his own, on the south, with Petra for capital. Herodias had been married, by her grandfather Herod, to Herod Boethos, or Herod Philip, as he was also called, now a man approaching fifty,-to mitigate the misfortunes of her family, left fatherless by his cruel murder of his son Aristobulus. She had had, as her only child, a daughter, Salome, now married to Philip, tetrarch of Iturea, the brother of Antipas, who was now in middle life. Herodias, herself, being a woman of thirty-four or thirtyfive, or perhaps, some years older. Divine and human laws have seldom been more shamelessly violated than by Antipas, while hewas playing the part, in public, of a zealous defender of religion. The vice in Herodias ran in her veins with the blood of Herod and of his sister Salome, for their worst qualities were revived in her nature. Her husband, who had once been named as Herod's heir, but had been blotted from the will when his mother was detected in the plot of Bagoas, the eunuch, seems to have led an idle and insignificant life as a private man, much to the discontent of his imperious, ambitious wife. She was ready, therefore, to intrigue with a crowned prince, though her brother-in-law, and promised to come to him, as soon as he returned from Rome. It was agreed, however, that Antipas should first divorce his wife, the daughter of Aretas. and Antipas set off to Rome with this arrangement. It was to be carried out as soon as he came back again to his palace at Tiberias, though he, doubtless, looked for trouble in effecting his divorce from the daughter of the Nabatean king," To lifs satisfaction, however, she had spared him any difficulty. The treachery which, from of old, had prevailed in the courts of the Herods, had revealed her husband's relations to Herodias, and she resolved to leave him. She asked no more than permission to visit the border fortress, Machadrus, which had formerly belonged to the Herods, but, at the time, was in her father's hands, perhaps as the purchase price, in Eastern fashion, of his daughter. Its hot springs were in great repute as a health resort. Arotas at once took steps to carry her farther off. Conducted by Arab shells, she was led to her family palace at Petra, and her father declared the marriage annulled. Antipas received Machaerus back; whether by treaty, craft, or force, is not known. Perhaps the Arab feared the tetrarch, as one high in the Emperor's favour; perhaps Antipas exchanged the fortress for other concessions. In any case, the peace was not disturbed for the time, and Herodias left her husband, and came to the palace of Tiberias.

The whole shameful transaction had been carried out in the very region of John's carlier ministrations, and had, doubtless, created a great sensation in the districts nearest the Arab kingdom. Public policy felt it a mistake to have repudiated the daughter of a dangerous neighbour; the Law and its representatives denounced as a crimo the marriage with a brother's wife. Even in his own family, the hateful marriage, with its double adultery, wrought division, cutting Antipas off from all his blood. It was the weak point of his otherwise cautions reign, which had guarded against offending the religious sensitiveness of the people, and it left his frontiers exposed to the anger of Arctas, in revenge for the insult.

It is possible that John may have spoken of a matter so widely mooted among the people, before he was carried off to Machaerus. But the Gospels expressly inform us, that the fearless man reproved Herod respecting it, face to face, perhaps before all his court. If he had been brought for a show, and let loose this shaft at the sleeping conscience of Antipas, before his partner in guilt and the gay parasites round, no scene could have been more dramatic. But the man who had spoken such words could not be allowed to live. Herodias was determined he should pay for his rashness with his life, and lost no opportunity of working on Antipas to give the command for his execution.

The bitter fruits of the marriage were already springing up, to poison the tetrarch's remaining years. The curse of childlessness, denounced by the Law on such a crime, was fulfilling itself. The father of his repudiated wife threatened war for the insult to his daughter, and Antipas was engrossed by efforts to prepare for it, if he could not prevent it. Long, fierce wrangling passed, after a time, into open hostility, and Antipas was so shamefully beaten that he had to appeal to the Emperor for aid, and kept his throne, for the time, only by his support. Perhaps Jesus referred to this uneasy time when He asked," What king, going to make war against another king, will not first sit down and consult whether he is able, with 10,000, to while he. ditions of had touch put him t who wore through t kept alive and fear. for John 1 the ghastl she now 1 way to the life, prote even made no friendly tary homa grandeur o tremble he that it was powers of "Herod feared him mighty, an offendings, crime and whose wor remorse, men, an en physical an first James, Welsh's par 'The daugl a fearful co 'No, only sons,' said brinked' (er he will con consent to (catch as it out the mat That Anti thirsted for district whe to the great

such an im

whose priso

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

band's

ced no

which

in her

ion. of resort.

ted by

nd her

haerus

aps the ir; per-

In any left her

he very

eated a

Public

danger-

a crimo

ily, the cutting

s other-

he relig

osed to widely

chaerus.

eproved If he sleeping

ay para-

tlie man Icrodits and lost

l for his

g up, to

essness,

f. The

t to his

for it, if

r a time,

t he had

he time,

asy timo

another

ble, with

10,000, to meet him that comes against him with 20,000? Otherwise, while he is yet a great way off, having sent an embassy, he asks conditions of peace." To make his condition still more unhappy, John had touched his conscience to the quick by his reproofs. Should he put him to death, and thus, at once, avenge such a liberty with one who wore the purple, and put an end to all fear of political trouble, through the bold man's influence on the people? Herodias sedulously kept alive the struggle in her husband's breast, between conscience and fear, and passion and pride. She herself was doubly touched, for John had recalled her violation of her first duty as a wife, and the ghastly fact that she had been the virtual seducer of him whom she now had in her power. But Antipas, for once, would not give way to the murderous wish of Herodias. He spared the Baptist's life, protected him from the snares of his unscrupulous enemy, and even made his imprisonment bearable, as far as was possible. It was no friendly feeling, however, that moved him thus, but the involuntary homage of even a bad nature to the unbending truth and moral grandeur of his prisoner—a homage, akin to fear—which made him tremble hereafter at the report of the miracles of Jesus, in the belief that it was John risen from the grave, clothed with the supernatural powers of the other world.

"Herod, though in his palace, surrounded with his royal guards, feared him. He knew the Baptist was stronger than he, for truth is mighty, and mightily prevaileth; and being already conscious of his offendings, and having enough to do to keep down the voices of crime and transgression within him, he feared this righteous man, whose words gave such edge to his self-accusations, such point to his remorse. Unarmed, the Baptist daunted him more than an army of men, an embattled city, or a fenced tower, or any other source of physical and outward force. It reminds me of the saying of the first James, when Knox's daughter came to petition for her husband Weish's pardon. The monarch asked her who she was; she replied, 'The daughter of John Knox.' 'Knox and Welsh,' said he, 'that is a fearful conjunction of bloods. And had your father any sons?' 'No, only three daughters.' 'Had his three daughters been three sons,' said the conscience-stricken monarch, 'I would ill have brinked' (enjoyed) 'my three kingdoms in peace. He may return, if he will consent never to preach again.' Sooner than he should consent to that,' said the godly and heroic woman, 'I would kep' (catch as it fell from the block) 'his bloody head here,'--stretching out the matronal apron in which she was attired."

That Antipas thus stood between his prisoner and the Jezebel who thirsted for his death, and, even protected him, in a wild border district where human life was held in no regard, was a noble tribute to the greatness of John, for none but a lofty soul could have made such an impression on the weak, selfish, sensual, knavish, being, in whose prison he lay, or could have waked, even in such a nature, whatever it had of good, to a struggle with overpowering evil. It was, almost, the raising of a Son of Abraham from the stones of the wilderness. The tyrant's alarm and want of resolution, his consciousness, of guilt, and involuntary awe, fenced round the life of the Baptist for the time, till the furious woman whose dismissal John had demanded, after value trying to gain her end by wild revenge, reached it, at last, by craft.

Antipas had had the good fortune, by no means common with the vassals of Tiberius, to keep his throne for over thirty years, at d, like his father, had been accustomed to celebrate the anniversary if his accession, each summer, by a banquet. The time for this had now returned, and an invitation to a grand festivity on the occasion was given to the officers in attendance at Machaerus, the sheikhs of the neighbouring tribes, and the high society within reach, including the lords, chief captains, and first men of Galilec. Persius, the Roman satirist, has left us a notice of such a feast on the "Her-od's day," of some of the family, perhaps, of Antipas. He shows us the palace windows brilliantly illuminated and hung with garlands of flowers; the tables spread with every ostentation of luxpry, and the wine flowing freely. On this occasion, the mirth and rejoicing ran high. Herodias herself, was not present, for it is not the custom, even now, in the East, for the women to take part in the festivities of men. But to do honour to the day, and to the company, her daughter Salome, the childless wife of the tetrarch Philip, had broken through the rule of strict seclusion from the other sex, and had condescended, though a princess, and the daughter of kings, to dance before Antipas and his guests. The dancing then in vogue both in Rome and the provinces, from its popularity under Augustus, was very like that of our modern ballet. The dancer did not speak, but acted some story by gestures, movements, and attitudes, to the sound of music. Masks were used in all cases, to conceat the fea-tures, but all other parts of the body, especially the hands and arms, were called into action, and a skilful pantomimist could express feelings, passions, and acts, with surprising effect. The subjects of the dance were always mythological, and thus, an abhorrence to strict Jews, as essentially heathen. The dress of the performer, like that of the dancers in our ballet, was planned to show the beauty of the figure to the greatest advantage, though it varied with the characters represented. In the days of Antipas there never was more than one dancer at a time, even when the piece introduced both sexes. Women never performed thus in public, in these earlier times of the empire, but, as in the case of Salome, they did not scruple to act at the private parties of the great. Salome's ballet was a great success.

Salome's ballet was a great success. The revellers were charmed, and the weak head of Antipas, likely made weaker by wine, was fairly turned. He could not give away the humblest village without permission from Tiberius, but, forgetful of this, he vowed, in true

Kastern ei give her h cautious t dias, clute Ask the the bloody alarmed a refuse it. himself in fore, to a head, T was the si on a salve present to ciples, was It is a w almost gro courts of Herodotus Xerxes, on the wife of he fancied fortunate. having onc grim paral Xerxes we rival to pie In the ye Orodes, wa actor who brought in chorus rej strophe oc fa' strict oft. to the

Nor was I torture befor heading, an brought in public feas hands of a the couches with his han board being After the il. it. It

of the scious-

of the

hn had

eached 0.0 911

th the

d, like of his id Low on was

of the

luding

the Ro-

"Her

shows

th gar-

of lux-

and re-

is not

t in the

mpany.

lip, had sex, and

ings, to n vogue

igustus; t speak, s, to the the fead arms, ess feel-

s of the o strict

ke that

of the

aracters

han one

Women empire,

private

harmed.

ine. was without

in true

HEE that

ant to attribut

Eastern exaggeration, to do anything the dancer asked, if it were to give her half of his kingdom. Seizing the chance, she was yet too cautious to speak off hand, but retired to consult her mother. Herodias, clutching the opportunity, had no hesitation in her answer-"Ask the head of John the Baptist." Returning at once, she made the bloody request. Chagrined at the advantage taken of him, and alarmed at its probable results, he yet had not the moral courage to refuse it. His honour, he fancied, was compromised, for he had put himself in Salome's power, before the company. Motioning, therefore, to a soldier of the guard, he commanded him to bring John's head, There was no warning given: the entrance of the messenger was the signal for execution, and the head was presently brought in on a salver and given to Salome, who took it out as a welcome present to her mother. The mutilated body, cared for by loving disciples, was, perhaps the same night, laid in a tomb.

It is a weird and ghastly story, but one quite in keeping with the almost grotesquely horrible incidents recorded of the half barbarous courts of the East, and even of that of Rome, in this savage age. Herodotus tells the story of the demand made by Amestris, wife of Xerxes, on a birthday festival of her husband, that he should give up the wife of Masistes to her jealous rage, and how, on her persisting, he fancied he could not, on that day, refuse. No entreaty of the unfortunate prince could avail for his wife, whom he loved; Xerxes having once commanded her to be given up to her rival. Nor is the grim parallel to the fury of Herodias wanting, for the spearmen of Xerxes were forthwith sent by the frantic Amestris, and cut her rival to pieces, throwing her, in fragments, to the dogs.

In the year B.C. 53, after the battle of Karrha, the Parthian King, Orodes, was celebrating the marriage of his son Pacorus, when the actor who played the part of Agave, in the Bacchae of Euripides, brought in the half wasted head of Crassus on the stage, and the chorus, repeated, with loud, triumphant rejoicing, the well-known ileftérica JULICE, TRASSICE bitte bt bolismod "We bring from the mountain, an avait to usw " Jonah, Borne to our home, The royal booty, the bleeding sport. Thursd'is ref-flue, daugers in our parking

Nor was Rome itself less savage. Caligula often had men put to torture before his guests at his feasts, and swordsmen, skilled in beheading, amused the table by striking off the heads of prisoners brought in from their dungeons, to let them show their skill." If At a public feast at Rome, he ordered the executioner to strike off the hands of a slave accused of having taken a silver plate from one of the couches, and made the poor wretch go round and round the tables with his hands hanging on his breast, from a string round his neck, a board being carried before him, inscribed with his offence. After the death of the Baptist, Antipas returned to Tiberias, haunted by the rememberance of his victim. Salome went back to her elderfy kusband, who had already built a tomb for himself, in Julias Bethsaida, and did not long survive his marriage. Salome, left a widow, once more returned to her mother. The marriage had been a speculation of Herodias, who hoped thus to get hold of the territory of her neighbour and somin-law. Built the scheme failed, for the terrarchy was forthwith incorporated with the province of Syria. Antipas, however, still hankered after it, and turned wistful eyes towards it, from his palace at Tiberias, till, at last, it lured him and Herodias to ruin, her all built built and the scheme failed him and Herodias to ruin.

The Baptist had done the Almighty good service-he had not turned back, on any occasion, from his perilous duty he had kept his Nazarite ritual, both in body and spirit, sustaining the one upon the simplest meat, and the other upon the hardest conditions.""The Almighty heard the voice which be spoke always for His Wellbeloved. Son; He saw, that he spoke truth and held his integrity steadfast unto the end, And, perceiving in His servant such noble and excellent qualities. He resolved to perfect him for a high place in heaven, and so directed his footsteps to the flery furnate of a court, that the temper of his truth and plety might be purified manifold. And in the tiery furnace He walked with His servant, so that his spirit was not harmed; and having thus annealed his nature to the utmost which this earth could do, He took him hastily away, and placed him among the glorified in heaven. "It shears have a within the fonn was inmolitating itre conferres near the different the different to the fulness of trails and thading reason heres. The lipered little as revealed a new velation of the destruction of the second of th

The state of the second s The baptism of Jesus in the Jordan, and His consecration immediately after, by the Holy Spirit, were the close of His private, and the inauguration of His public life. Hitherto He had been the unknown and obscure villager of Nazareth: henceforth He entered on His divine mission as the Messiah, or "Anointed" of God. The beginning of His ministry, and the heavenly equipment needed to sustain Him in it, are always referred, by the apostles, themselves, to this critical moment. With them, His commission and special endowment for His mighty work, dated from His baptism says St. Peter, "what was spoken of throughout all Judea, beginning from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached, concerning Jesus of Nazareth, that God anointed Him with the Hely Spirit, and with power; who went about doing good, and curing all that were overpowered by the devil, for God was with Him?" A mysterious dignity imparted by this heavenly "anointing," filled Him; conscious ly, with supernatural powers He had not, hitherto, displayed, and raised Him from the subordinate and passive life of Nazareth to the high offic to the fat In the miracles, teacher. studied of that no on villager H The bar the heaver His life. the Messis spiritual h expanded can mean mind, but for His the Holy S fancy Him preaching viction for channel of of the Spin this convict John was i fulness of th revealed a r and in the h wrath had t -a vivid le troubled sou influence of as God's and of earth and had, till now kingdom of but had alres kingly autho superhuman Father's Hou even took to derived from universally a rank, His taking His pl and displayin siah of God-

derfy Beth-dow.

mirac

i thus

But

with

t, and

till, at id not

1 kept

upon

The

Well?

tegrity

noble

lace in court.

nifold.

hat his

to the y, and

1913 CO.U

STY LEILO

a second

revealed

il ni bris

AL ALTERTY

1717 8-

mmedi-

and the

known

on His begin-

sustain

to this endow-

know."

rinning

berning

rit, and at were

seious

d, and to the high affice of "Messenger of the Covenant," "the Messiah promised to the fathers." In the thirty years of His life in Nazareth, Jesus had done no miracles, and had assumed no authority or public standing as a teacher. On the contrary, He had so withdrawn into the shade of a studied obscurity, and conformed to the daily life of those around, that no one, apparently, suspected Him to be more than the humble villager He seemed.

The baptism in the Jordan, with its mysterious accompaniments. the heavenly dove and the voice of God-marked the dividing line in His life. With such credentials, and such endowments, His call as the Messiah was no longer doubtful. We know nothing of His spiritual history while at Nazareth beyond the fact that His thoughts expanded with His years, for His "keeping on increasing in wisdom" can mean nothing less. Presentiments must have often risen in His mind, but He may have had no assurance that they were trustworthy, for His Divine nature is a mystery till formally ** anointed with the Holy Spirit, and with power." After His baptism, we can readily fancy Him, during His stay at the Jordan, listening intently to the preaching of John, and watching the excited multitudes, till the conviction forced itself upon Him, that the Law could no longer be the channel of salvation to the sin-stricken, repentant crowds. The gift of the Spirit, and the words of the heavenly voice, would confirm this conviction, and make it for ever certain that the path into which John was introducing his converts, could not, by itself, lead to the fulness of truth, and abiding peace of heart. The opened heavens revealed a new relation of God to man, which must be proclaimed; and in the holy symbol of the dove-the pledge in Noah's day that wrath had turned to mercy-the chosen emblem of the Spirit of God, -a vivid lesson was given that peace could be won back to the troubled soul, and the soul itself renewed, only by the soft and gentle influence of heavenly graces bet apart, by so angust a consecration. as God's anointed, the regeneration of the race, and the reconciliation of carth and heaven, were henceforth entrusted to His hands. He had, till now, been silent; but forthwith began to proclaim that the kingdom of God was no longer as John had taught, near at hand. but had already come, and at once assumed and exercised the highest kingly authority, as its Head, working miracles as a proof of His superhuman dignity; bearing Himself in the Temple as in His Father's House; discoursing, as the Messiah, with Nicodemus. He even took to Himself, from this time, the name of " The Son of Man." derived from the vision of the Messiah in the Book of Daniel, and universally accepted, from that source, as the symbol of Messianic rank, His baptismal consecration was presently followed by His taking His place as king in the new theocracy; ruling, and legislating, and displaying all kingly power and dignity, henceforth, as the Mes-siah of God Himself Divine. Sof har standardus but at the Mes-

His baptism was, thus, the birth-hour of Christianity. Crowds. sunk in national and spiritual degradation, thronged the banks of the Jordan, roused by the new Ehas to a sense of their wants, but left to expectancy for their future satisfaction. They longed for a last needful word, but John was unable to add it. He could speak of the approach of the Kingdom of God, but he was only its herald, and could not act as its head. The Messiah, who was to give it life and form, was yet to come. His work was a mighty movement, with no adequate end: his converts a mighty host, without a watchword; his exhortations excited a deep yearning, which they left unsatisfied. Such a spectacle must have stirred the soul of Jesus to its lowest depths. Even before His consecration as the Messiah. He must have pondered the condition of His people, and longed, with all the love of His Divine nature, to heal their troubles. It must have been so even in The consecration at the Jordan only stamped with Nazareth. heavenly approval the purposes that had been ripening in His breast from His earliest years. We cannot think of one like Jesus, so profoundly religious, and so divinely compassionate! as at any time indifferent to the supreme question of the reconciliation of man to God. The days and nights passed, in later years, in solitary prayer, in the wilderness, or in the mountains, were, doubtless, only the repetition of far earlier communings with His Father, and with His own soul. But the divine certainty; the imperative signal, that He should arise and gird Himself to the mighty task of winning back the world to God: the awful summons for which He waited with hushed stillness, He first read in the sights and revelations of the Jordan baptism. The heavenly consecration was the divine sanction of His long-cherished but dimly realized purpose. The accompaniments of His baptism made Him the head of the new spiritual theocracy, and laid on Him the burden of giving Himself wholly to its establishment. The such Everything around corroborated the indications of the heavenly vision. The events predicted as inaugurating the advent of the Messiah, were realizing themselves before Him, for had not Elias come again, in the person of John, and had not the nation consecrated itself, in preparation for the Messiah? He, only, was wanting, whom the times themselves could not give: the COMING ONE; who should set up, in its fulness, the Divine Kingdom already begun. No wonder that John, as he daily announced both the Kingdom and the Messiah; with unwavering faith, and searched each group that came before him, in hopes of finding, at last, the chosen of God, fixed his eyes with a settled and clear conviction on Jesus, as He for whom he was looking. The attitude of the Baptist towards Him, was a corroboration of all the rest. His own consciousness of being the Eternal Son of God; the spectacle before Him; the longings of His pity and holy love; the wants of the times; and, above all, the voice and sign from Heaven, made it clear, that "lowly in heart" as He was, He was 如今,0天地市,0五,40日,根山市,11,410,19,14,440,19 nevertheless the Messiah.

The ca ness and sion. n Re place, from limitations beginning scattering heart, raisi and bearin It is of raised by s committed bear the sin the opposit conception, last to die t an awful in might well tenderness, was driven collect itsel planning its any great e It is in retir soul, that we solitudes of of creating to enter on L sion, withdr make ready its sacred qu Jesus,

To what p the vivid no the idea of ev chamber of r tense concen was to have plead for in He escape gr less, attempte points like as be put to the clearness, por imply that th triumph. W entertained w

OWUS.

of the left to

he ap

could

form

io ade-

his ex-

Such

lepths.

ndered

of His

ven in

d with

s breast

time in

to God.

petition jul. But rise and to God: ness, He

m. The

herished

baptism

on Him

12:177 ,0101.

heavenly

the Mes-

ias come

hsecrated

g, whom o should

o wonder

Messiah

ne before

his eyes

n he was orrobora-

ernal Son

and holy

He was

: ALLAND TO

C. 11: 14-4 . .

The earliest chapters of the Gospels show with what majestic fulness and dignity the Saviour rose to the height of this great commission. Recognizing John as a noble servant of God. He yet took His place, from the first, above him. John stayed behind in his Jewish limitations, leaving the great work imperfect, but Jesus from the beginning stood a King over the souls of men, dispensing promises, scattering heavenly gifts, calming fears, satisfying the cravings of the heart, raising an invisible and deathless kingdom in the human spirit, and bearing Himself as, at once, God and man.

It is, of course, wholly beyond us to conceive the mental struggle raised by such a position, when it first opened before our Lord. "It committed Him to meet and overcome the Prince of Darkness, to bear the sins of the world; as the spotless Lamb of God, to withstand the opposition and hatred of men, their indifference mockery, misconception, and insensibility of heart; to endure, in fact, the life, and at last to die the death, of a martyr. Still more, it opened before Him an awful isolation as the one Holy Being in a world, and this alone, might well fill a nature like His, of trembling sensibility, and loving tenderness, with overpowering emotion. No wonder it is said He was driven by the Spirit into the wilderness. The mind needs to collect itself to survey the ground, and gird itself up to its task, planning its efforts, and guarding against failure, before entering on any great enterprise, and He was in all things like His brethren. It is in retirement, and sacred communion with God and one's own soul, that we refresh ourselves for our greatest tasks. It was in the solitudes of the mountains that Moses prepared himself for the work of creating a people for God. The Baptist came from the wilderness to enter on his work as a Reformer; and St. Paul, after his conversion, withdrew himself for three years, no one knows whither, to make ready for his commission to the nations. The wilderness, with its sacred quiet and seclusion, was alone fitted for the retirement of Jesus.

To what part He withdrew Himself is not stated, but St. Mark adds the vivid note that He was "with the wild beasts," which excludes the idea of even scattered human population. In this vast and lonely chamber of meditation and prayer He remained for forty days, in intense concentration of soul on the work before Him. To be alone was to have every thought rise in turn: to have human weakness plead for indulgence, and human fears counsel safety. Nor could He escape graver trials. The Prince of Darkness had often, doubtless, attempted before to overcome Him, for "He was tempted in all points like as we are." It was meet that the Anointed of God should be put to the test. The struggles through which the soul comes to clearness, power, and decision, are themselves temptations, for they imply that the mind has not yet emerged into the calmness of settled triumph. We cannot conceive of Jesus escaping suggestions, to have entertained which would have been fatal. Temptations must needs

though

for the 1017 In th

must he selves,

themsel

in ingh in

by the

of God.

world w

of Israe

its Temp a chosen

of life an Was, not

Hero, wh

and as a

turbance

utterly fr

regarded

Jewish s Himself i struggle v

take a pos

His, which and of wi

one hand.

and hono

be brand

poverty, a

sun, held

scatter the

be made

Religion I

spiritual a

Instead of the grand

which the holiness, H

earth into breast, inst

It was

day, and enter the firmest and hollest soul, else it cannot be said to be tempted at all. They are the more inevitable the greater the task to be undertaken, and serve the high end of separating it from possible error. To let Satan do his worst was the needful preliminary to the final overthrow of his kingdom, for success or failure at the first step determined the future.

The specific temptations recorded in the Gospels belong to the last days of our Lord's seclusion, for, as the culmination of Satan's assaults, they were subtilely reserved till nature was well nigh exhausted, and the power of resistance weakest. But, though critical hours in life may justly be regarded as especially times of temptation, an existence, like ours, which is a constant choice between good and evil, is, throughout, a probation. We know little of the spiritual world, and cannot say how far our actions are determined for cvil by ourselves, or how far active Satanic influences may affect us, for, as in our better, so in our guilty, acts, the mind is conscious of a deliberate freedom of will. Like Adam, we feel that we are "sufficient to have stood, though free to fall." Our character is but the stamp on our souls of the free choice of good or evil we have mule through life. From childhood to the grave, the road is open to us all, on either side, from the straight path of right. Nor are the only fallures those of open act. The soul is, in itself, a world, and cvil thoughts count as acts with the Eternal, if not at once repelled. Yet they must rise at every moment, for the choice of right implies freedom to choose the opposite. Milton is true to nature when he makes Satan tell the Saviour that he had heard the engels song at Bethlehem, and

"He was a child, and grew in the grace and faculties of His nature, like another child, into mature manhood, struggling with the temptations, and spoiling the tempters of each stage of life;" The probation of the desert was only an outburst, more than usually violent, of that which had attended Him, all through, as a condition of His humanity. There are, however, supreme moments of trial, victory in which decides the colour of our life, and breaks the force of future temptations in the same directions, and such was that of the wilderness retirement. It is part of the discipline of God, to make His servants perfect through suffering, and the Son of Man, the ideal of humanity, could not be made an exception. Retirement was indispensable for preparation. He needed to survey His great commission in all its aspects, to determine the course to be pursued in carrying it out, and realize the difficulties and dangers He had to expect. The transition from the life of Nazareth-private, calm, contemplative, unknown, industrious in a lowly vocation-to that of a public teacher, and, still more, of the Messiah, sent from God, raised a multitude of 0.008

15 PETT

mpted

undererror.

ic final

step de-

the last

Satan's

igh ex-

critical

ptation.

ood and

piritual for evil

us. for.

of a de-

ufficient

ie stamp

through

s all, on failures

thoughts

Yet they

freedom

e makes thieliem,

struge

is bight

W BIT

s nature,

e tempta-

probation

t, of that umanity.

in which

e temptaerness re-

servants

umanity.

sable for

in all its

out, and transition

inknown,

her. and,

titude of

thoughts which hurried Him away to solitude, and made Him forget, for the time, even the wants of nature must have readily commended themselves. In the Scriptures themselves, opposite characteristics of the Messiah might seem to present themselves. The future Saviour was pictured in one page as triumphing; in another, as lowly and suffering. ... Man was to carn his bread by the sweat of his brow, but Israel had been fed with manna, miraculously supplied. Angels were promised to protect the servents of God, but it was forbidden to tempt the divine goodness. The world was promised to the friend of God, and, on the other hand, the mark of true godliness was humility, inition cannot still ounstainth their Moreover, had not Moses been appointed by God as the Law giver of Israel? had not the constitution of the nation as a theoracy, with its Temple service and sacrifices, been divinely instituted? I lad not a chosen priesthood been set apart by God, and were not the promises of life and prosperity linked with the observance of the Mosaic Law? Was, not the promised Saviour described in Scripture as a Royal Here, who would restore the glory and power of the House of David, and as a conqueror and ruler of the nations? poorthan . gott . shills. Such thoughts must not only have raised temptations and disturbance in the mind of Jesus: they necessitated His breaking away utterly from the traditional interpretation of Scripture current in His day, and forced Him to take a position of direct antagonism, as regarded it, to the whole body of the Rabbis, and of the dominant Jewish schools. There was, thus, no other way than to separate Himself in spirit from the theocracy, and prepare for a life and death struggle with the ecclesiastical authorities of the nation. He must take a position, inconceivably painful to a lowly and pure soul like His, which exposed Him to the appearance of sinning against God. and of wilful disobedience to His ordained representatives. On the one hand, He had before. Him the allurements of a career of success and honour, with wealth, power, and fame: on the other. He would be branded as criminal and blasphemous, and gain only shame. poverty, and death. But through all these clouds, His spirit, like the sun, held on in its triumphant course, to emerge in full glory, and scatter them from its path. It was clear that the theoracy had served its day, and could not be made the vehicle of the great work Jesus was to inaugurate.

Religion had outgrown it, and demanded something loftier, more spiritual and more universal, and this Jesus had come to supply. Instead of forms and outward precepts, He was about to announce the grand conception of a new kingdom of God—a kingdom in which the heart would be supreme. Winning it over to God and holiness, He would, by it, transform man into the image of God, and earth into that of heaven. It was to be a reign of holy love in the breast, instead of a worthless service of rites and forms. The grandeun of such an bloal it is impossible adequately to realize." This then, outward priesthoods, local temples, the slaving of sacrifices, pompous rites and coromonial law had been deemed essential, But the consecration of Jesus as the Messlah, not of the Jews alone, but of mankind, made the whole obsolety, as incompatible with a universal religion. No wonder His soul was well-nigh overpowered. He must stand alone against the world a must pass sentence on all its religious wisdom. and must create a new world of spiritual thought. The grand originality of soul which this required, if we may use the word without irreverence, has nothing approaching it in the history of our race. 31 So wast a conception must have raised endless questions, doubts. and struggles, the more it was pondered, and the more all it involved was perceived. But a lofty spiritual nature like His must have raised Him wholly above all the human littlenesses, which turn the soul from great undertakings. The thought of self-preservation, in who forgot hunger and thirst, in communion with God, and taught that to be ready to lose one's life was a fundamental condition of interest in the divine kingdom, had no craven thoughts of His own safety. me to to that all to their the all the all the all a bounder blind bill

He was infinitely above every consideration of personal interest. Neither the pleasures of life, nor the delights or duties of His great work, could make Him value life for the sake of enjoying them. Even at the approach of death, the only regret that escapes Him is that He leaves His disciples. The tenderly human shadow that passed over His soul at Gethsemane and Calvary, was only the inevitable tribute to human weakness, which all must yield. The greatness of His task alone weighed Him down. He stood single against spiritual and worldly powers, against a people who; from the days of Moses to the last prophet, had shown themselves lukewarm, obstinate, and slow to move, capricious, fretful, and spiritually dead. The revival, under John like many before, promised to be a mere fire of thorns.

Even what we may call the details of His great work must have weighed heavily on Jesus, in these momentous weeks. Milton makes Him wander far into the depths of the desert of the difference does of the weight heat of the depths of the desert of the difference does of the weight of the depths of the desert of the difference does of the weight of the depths of the desert of the difference does of the weight of the desert of the desert of the difference does of the desert of the desert of the desert of the desert of the the desert of the desert of the desert of the desert of the of Saviour to mankind, and which way first function does the difference of the desert of th

The popular Jewish belief that the Messiah would be an earthly king, found no response in His bosom, and this, in itself, darkened His future. He had seen the pressure put by the Rabbis on John, to force him to their side. Would not His own opposition to them cause, at least, indifference and neglect, perhaps, even hatred? He could only be a spiritual Saviour: they wished a political. He had no ambition and contena must sti by hum think it Rome, dom by tions; ho part amo the small by the co If was to Individue work lay the incar charms, 8:0 This w He had s own thou world age the name ual or hu the the intense. b powers of this only the direct personalit evil, from than hims destroy the out all H devils from Satan him es:It is not the arch er saw him tempts us, and there our Lord, upon the Christias w The thre Gospels, ill Christ is a what He cl suffer as H of the des

then.

pour

kind,

gion.

stand

origi-

ce. vil

rolyed

have n the

ion. in

He

taught

of in-

BOWN

terest.

s great

them.

Him is passed

ness of oiritual

loses to

nd slow

14 01913

st have makes

11 dr 82

and the

5:F 75:0

? NGAY'

earthly

rkened

rce him

at least.

alv be a

on, and

contemned tearthly power: Even if the people refused to hear, He must still witness to the truth to Then, should His kingdom be raised by human agency, or by the arm of God? Might not the Almighty think it meet to overthrow all opposition of the Prince of Darkness, Rome, and the Jewish hierarchy, and establish the new divine kingdom by irresistible force? But He was not led away by such suggestions, however specious." Discarding all thought of playing a great part among men, He chose lowliness and obscurity for Himself, and the mallest beginnings for His kingdom, letting it win its way slowly by the conquest of single souls, as was demanded by its very nature. It was to rest on loyalty and love, which must rise spontaneously in individual breasts. Success and results were only subordinate. His work lay clear before Him: to live and to die as the Lamb of Godthe incarnation of infinite love, attracting humanity by its holy charms, His life an example, His death an atonement with summary This was the great result of His long, still, wilderness retirement, He had surveyed the whole ground: had communed much with His own thoughts, and, above all, with His Father, and came back to the world again in victorious screnity, to proclaim Himself as coming in the name of God. with no lingering fear of His task, or of any spiritnation human opposition." stall and words a separation was after The mental struggle of these weeks must, in any case, have been intense, but it became unspeakably harder by the presence of the powers of evil, who sought to overcome Him face to face. Nor is this only metaphor. Jesus, Himself, always assigns temptation to the direct action of evil spirits on the soul. A subtle and mighty personality is always presupposed, ruling a mysterious kingdom of evil, from which he can only be cast out when bound by one stronger than himself. As the Messiah. Jesus proclaimed Himself come to destroy the power of this great enemy of God and man; and, throughout all His ministry, constantly assailed his kingdom casting out devils from the possessed, as, at this time, He bound and subduell Satan himself. Monarty ella for elistable .... - is and to be through a 29: It is not necessary to suppose an outward and corporeal presence of the arch enemy. He is never spoken of as visible, except when Jesus saw him fall, as lightning, from heaven. He is invisible when he tempts us, which we know he does, for he deceives the whole world, and there is no n d to suppose that he was present otherwise with our Lord, than by raising suggestions in His sinless mind. To act upon the thoughts may have been the mode of Satan's attack, with Christias with ourselves. online to the faired , sive an aport with The three instances of the great enemy's attempts, recorded in the Gospels, illustrate the subtlety of his advances. Worn with hunger, Christ is approached with the suggestion that if, indeed. He were what He claimed to be, the Son of God, it was surely unnecessary to suffer as He did, when by a word He might command that the stones of the desert around. Him should be made bread. To possess unlimited power for specific ends, and refrain from using it to our own advantage, even in a pressing and apparently innocent case, is an ideal of virtue which it would be vain to expect in any ordinary man. No temptation is more difficult to resist than the prompting to do what seems needful for self-preservation, when abundant means are in our hands. But Jesus did not, for a moment, allow Himself to question His duty. The miraculous gifts newly conferred on Him, had been given, not for His private use, but for the glory of His Father; not as a human convenience; but as spiritual aids in His work as the Messiah. As a man, He was dependent on the care and love of His Heavenly Father, and to use His miraculous powers as the Messiah, for His personal benefit, would be to take Himself out of His Father's hands, and to show distrust of His loving care. But His sublime trust in the infinite goodness and power of God repelled the temptation. God had brought Him hither, and would bring Him thence. Bread was not the only means by which HE could support Him. His word could create what means He pleased. Others had been preserved by Him in unforeseen ways. The tribes in the wikderness had been fed by manna. Moses and Elijah had been sustained in the desert, though bread was wanting. It was not for Him to think Himself forgotten, and to take His life into His own hands, as if unsafe in God's. He would wait till HE gave Him what He chose, in the way that pleased Him in consists they conducted of daubt remember. The second temptation, following the order in the third Gospel, was no less subtle. The Kingdom of the Messiah as then understood, and as Jesus, no doubt, had from youth been taught, was to be an universal temporal dominion. II In the solitude of the desert, His mind filled with the thought of His mysterious consecration as God's Anointed, the thought was insinuated by the great enemy, that He might well ponder what course to pursue. (On one hand, the path led to supreme honour, and unequalled glory. Had not the Psalmist himself spoken of the princes of the earth as subject to the Messiah, and did not the prophet say that the Gentiles should come to His light, and kings to the brightness of His rising, and that the wealth of the world would be brought to Him? On the other hand, the way led through shame, poverty, neglect, derision, insult, and suffering, in all probability to an ignominious death. The dream of ambition and splendour would have shone with inconceivable attractions to ordinary minds, against such a background. But it was not left to mere vague suggestions. By that mysterious power which spirit has of acting upon spirit, the adversary raised, within the soul of Jesus, a vision the most seductive, to enforce his subtlety. It seemed as if the desert vanished from around Him, and that the tempter and tempted One stood together on a high mountain, from whose top the kindled fancy appeared to see all the kingdoms of the world, and their glory. Milton paints the vision with matchless power. Fair rivers, winding through rich pastures, and fortile corn-fields; huge cities, hig the conqu Did not th God's Mes But if wideremp cousness, of God, to unknown, and brelli at the head played Hi divine poy the seapar propliet? promised t stool, and His wrath; of many la ult astim Feeling tha and consci supportedi in using for with miraci seent as if had risen t But Satan self-restrain vision. De force; with rather than o come, not to miraculous Father, trus His unfailin be used only As a man, H Messiah wou Milton, w Est Villas and to the second

n neo ricijen Rizevenici

READER DERMO

Propiet Billy

· pra

19 1 30 50 58 83 ·

FOWN

15 8D

man.

to do

ns are self to

Him,

of His

in His

ne and vers as effout

But

epelled

g Him

support.

ars had wilder-

stained

Him to

nds, as

e chose,

· CATHEREN ...

Gospel,

erstood,

to be an lis mind s' God's

that He

the path

Psalmist

lessiah,

e to His wealth

the way

affering,

mbition

tions to

left: to

pirit has

of Jesus, ned as if oter and rld, and r. Fair ls; huge 811 cities, high towered, the seats of mightiest monarchies; regions beyond the conquests of Alexander to the east, and far as Rome to the west. Did not the prophets say that the rightful Sovereign of all this was God's Messiah?

But if so,—the foul suggestion continued,—how was this world, wide empire, in which, as God's Andinted, He might reign in rightcousness, blessing the nations, and filling the earth with the knowledge of God, to be gained? Great interprises need great means. He was unknown, without friends, of humble birth, the son of a carpenter, and bre hup in poverty in a Galikean village. Why not put Himself at the head of His nation, which was ready to follow Him if He displayed His glory, and lead them against the heathen, using, His divine power to shatter all opposition? Had not God of old divided the sea and the rivers, to make a path for His people, led by His prophet? Had He not rebuked kings for their sake? Had. He not promised that the enemies of His Anointed should be made His footstool, and that He Himself would be at His right hand, in the day of His wrath, to make Him reign over the heathen, and smite the people of many lands?

It is impossible to conceive a temptation more difficult to resist. Feeling that, as the Messiah, He was destined to universal monarchy, and conscious that His rule would be the happiness of the world; supported, apparently, by the voice of prophets, speaking for God, in using force to establish this licavenly empire, and Himself instinct with miraculous power, which would make resistance vain, it might seen as if He could hardly fail to yield to it. Judas the Galilean had risen thus a few years before; and his memory was revered. But Satan had spread his subtlest temptations in vain. With the self-restraint becoming a sinless nature. He resisted, the dazzling vision. Deliberately rejecting the thought of basing His empire on force; with a lofty grandeur of soul, He chose to found it on the love, rather than on the fears, or compelled submission of mankind. Having come, not to destroy men's lives, but to save them, He would use His miniculous power only for good to man, and for the glory of His. Father, trusting Himself to Him, without other defence or care than His unfailing wisdom and love. The heavenly gifts He held should be used only where they brought no personal advantage to Himself. As a man, He was, and would remain; meek and lowly; His gifts as Messiah would be used only for spiritual ends.

Milton, with striking force, has made Him say-

Victorious deeds Flamed in thy heart, heroic acts—one while To rescue Israel from the Roman yoke: Men to subdue, and quell, o'er all the earth, Brute violence and proud tyrannic power: Till truth were freed, and equity restored: Tet held it more hum use, more heavenly, first By winning words to conquer willing hearts, And make persuasion do the work of fear.

GH 141 110

earth.

office, an seem nat

it should

height, to

It is not 1

roof: the

a momen

hand, for

cerning

Shakespe

110

Bassanio'

MARIA CLARKER

But whate

was vain.

ostentatio

extreme o

using mire

to employ

He dream

not the sai

safed aid a prescribed

lessly as:th

soul of Jes down: is i brief sent tempt the Mysteric with its fir an inevita

ourselves,

victory in

alim Nor

Him as the

His brethr

tions as n

Him, or as

From first to last, Jesus refused to exercise His supernatural power to establish His kingdom by outward means, and, indeed, it was because of His persistent refusal to do so that His nation rejected Him? Assent to the temptation seemed to Him like an act of homage to the Prince of this world, His adversary, for force and violence are characteristics of his sway. As the Prince of Peace, He would have nothing to do with strife. The temptation lost its power as He uttered the words "Get thee behind me, Satan, for it is written; Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve." "He had now been tempted by hunger and by ambition: there remained another possible opening for the enemy; through the avenue of spiritual pride. Earthly glory had had no attractions for Him. but He might be vain of His newly acquired Messialiship, and willing to display His supernatural powers for mere empty effect, and to flatter His own self-love. To disguise the aim, a sacred gloss was at hand. Instead of evil,—compliance would only show, in another form, that absolute dependence upon God, by which He had repelled the appeal to His natural wants. The Arch Magician had brought before the cye of His mind, perhaps also of His body, the pomp and glory of the world. He had, before, wrought upon the natural desire there is in all men for fame and dignity; but the vast illusion had been treated as an idle show, unworthy of regard. Would a proposal, however, to inaugurate His Messiahship by what would justify His utmost claims, be as firmly turned aside? Jesus was no angel, or mere spirit without human desires. It was of the very essence of His being to be touched and moved by all that influences men at large, and nothing could be more natural than at once to vindicate His rank and anthority, and open the way for His ministrations, by some startling miracle. No place was so well fitted for such a demonstration as Jerusalem, the holy city, and no spot in it so suited as the Temple, the centre of the national religion, and the chosen dwellingplace of God. Milton makes Satan bear our Lord entroit hereofeicher meser find lisevil the full over the wildeness, and o'er the plain; enough the second seco

Some famous spire of the Temple buildings must be intended, though we are no longer able to explain the allusion. It may be it was some pinnacle of the great three-aisled Royal Porch, which ran along the southern side of the Temple area, overlooking the valley of Hinnom, from a dizzy height. Perhaps it was the season of one of the great feasts, when countless pilgrims were gathered in Jerusalem, who would carry the report of any miraculous display throughout the

l power

was be-

ed Him.

re to the re char-

ld have

r as He

n. Thou

rve. willis

here rc-

avenus

or Him,

d willing

, and to

s was at another repelled brought omp and al desire

ision had proposal, stify His angel, or

ce of Ilis

nt large,

His rank

by some

emonstra-

ted as the dwelling-

[juossag]

103414201

20 1108

Linweb bricf, se

tempt th

with fla

intended,

may be it

which ran valley of

of one of

erusalem,

ighout the 15716

f Thing" 5 2001 2201 1110 213 a stand france in the stand of at Time Siz Dr. In Little . F. ... earth. That the suggestion raised in the mind of Jesus to glorify His office, and lighten His great work, by an astounding miracle, might seem natural and specious, is only to suppose Him human; and that it should take the form of His casting. Himself down from an airy height, to alight in the distant valley beneath, might seem no less so, It is not necessary to conceive of a bodily translation to the Temple roof: the true place of temptation is the soul, in which all the scenery and accessories of any prospect can be created by the magination in a moment. To make it more attractive, a text of Scripture was at hand, for had not God said, "He shall give His angels charge concerning Thee, and in their hands they shall bear Thee up?" So, Shakespere makes Richard of Gloucester twist the sacred text-

But then I sigh, and with a piece of Scripture. Tell them, that God bids us do good for evil. And thus I clothe my naked villany With old odd ends; stolen forth of Holy Writ; And seem a saint when most I play the devil.

Bassanio's words never had a more fitting application -- I words out.

oble preat. "In religion day of the rolad What damned error, but some sober brow with a solution in the will bless it, and approve it with a text, Hiding the grossness with fair ornament?"

But whatever hope the great enemy may have had in this last attempt was vain. To the perfect humility of Jesus, any idea of display or ostentation had no charms; nor could He, who would rather bear the extreme of hunger than seem to distrust His Heavenly Father, by using miraculous power in His own behalf, be for a moment tempted to employ it for any mere personal honour. Nor, moreover, would He dream of claiming miraculous aid from God for that which had not the sanction of His command. His promise of protection vouchsafed aid only when the danger to be averted rose in the discharge of prescribed duty. The appeal to spiritual pride or vanity fell as harmlessly as the temptations already tried. It had been whispered to the down: is it not written that the angels shall bear Thee up?" But one brief sentence turned the wizard gold to dross." Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."

Mysterious in some aspects, the wildcrness retirement of our Lord. with its fires of temptation, putting Him to the utmost proof, becomes an inevitable passage in His life, when we think of Him as a man like ourselves, though sinless. His soul could reveal its beauty only by victory in a life-long struggle with temptation, such as happens to us align Nor can we think of a Messiah, who should draw all men to Him as the ideal of Lumanity, except as treading the Rune path as His brethren. It is a vital error, therefore, to represent these temptations as more outward pictures of the imagination, playing before Him, or as mere emotions of pleasure or aversion, which last His will unassailed, and were dissipated or quenched in a moment, on their rising. It is no less so to regard them as mere illusions of the senses, passing like clouds over His mind, and leaving Hisinner being wholly undisturbed out of an HTTY XX states. HIS how has been being wholly

. mphaliping

Hister His s

Jesns. 'n

Lis lager.

S the resp

come be sins of t

baro Can w

at this m

It is fa

in the gl

of image

form.

and the e

back on its found

been an il

doubtless

dark year

form as!

liave had

Him as w

and almo

human be

He was "

His only

however, heathen a

paintings, crowned

said to ha

been taker

and more,

the Greek

the third d

private ch

and emper

lonius, and

of Jesus,

nobler con

The triu

Clement (

If there had been no more than this, there could have been no struggle, no pause and agony of soul-that is, no real temptation. The Gospels know nothing of such an unreal probation. They show us temptations throughout, plying His wilk, and seeking to paralyze it, even to the length of suggesting a withdrawal from His work as the Messiah. What else can have caused His prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, or the touching outburst, "Now is My soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father, save Me from this hour: but for this cause came I unto this hour." He was proved and tried, from His youth to Gethsemane, and, like us, might have yielded, though, in fact, offering a transcendent contrast, in His unbroken victory over all temptation.

The episode in the wilderness was, indeed, subtler in its seductions than is needed for grosser natures like ours. He had to repel, as evil, what to others might have seemed the ideal of good. It was no irresolution, from pride, or vanity, or fear, that troubled Him; His soul was oppressed by the greatness of His divine office; His lowly humility was like to sink under its burden. With us, there needs a distinct prohibition to make acts sinful, and at very step we hesitate to reject where there seems room to doubt. With Jusus there was no such waving line of compromise. To deviate from the direct command of God, for any end, however holy, was, to Him, a sing The contrast of Divine and human, or Satanic, rose before Him with such a clear decision, that the least divergence from the express letter of His Father's will was instantly rejected. He turned away from what the noblest souls before Him had cherished as holy visions, as from temptations of the Prince of Darkness. He not only triumphed, but showed, in His perfect obedience to His Heavenly Father, an image of the ideal and stainless holiness required from us all see the bound

This divine purity, inflexible, unswerving, moving ever directly forward, acknowledging only THE RIGHT,—rejecting all else; and finding peace only in complete, loving submission to the will of God, rests with unique glory over all the life of Jesus, but especially over His temptation in the desert. It gives the supreme beauty to His life, and was its strength and power. There could be no hesitation where all was thus simplified: where only God, or the world and the devil, beckoned onwards.

Through life, as in the wilderness, His choice was instinctive and instantaneous, between God and sin. Good and evil were, to Him, light and darkness, and it was vain to tempt Him even to approach the cloudy, doubtful, dividing line. The desert had served its purpose. The crisis had passed. Yielding Himself into the hands of God, it was exchanged for the joys of angel ministration.

1 3 6 1941 C. 3 11 1. 1.

their enses. rholly

IT.

en no ation. show ralyze ork as oplica-Now from proved t have lis unuctions epel, as WASEDO m: His s lowly needs a sitate to Wasuno ect comnove The ith such etter. of miwhat as from ned, but n Image b:non directly ise: and of God, lly over His life, n where he devil, to un : tive and to Him, pproach its purhandsiof SALL - vilon with biros and the state state state of the state o THE REFURN FROM THE WILDERNESS.

1- 11-1

1 11 91 - 91 1 P at in an an an Boddron - Though all it.

His seclusion in the desert had been the turning point in the life of Jesus, He had left Nazareth to visit John, an humble Galilæan villager. He returned, the consecrated Messiah, no longer oppressed by the responsibilities and difficulties of His great office, but ready to come before Israel as the Lamb of God, who should take away the is sins of the world.

baro Can we picture to ourselves the personal appearance of the Saviour at this momentous point in His career? We know that He was still in the glory of early manhood, but can we realize Him more closely?

It is fatal to the hope of a reliable portrait, that the Jewish horror of images as idolatrous, extended to the likeness of the human face or form. No hint is given of Christ's appearance in the New Testament; and the early Church, in the absence of all guiding facts, had to fall -i back on imagination. Itself sorely oppressed, it naturally pictured its founder through the medium of its own despondency. Had he been an illustrious Roman or Greek, the Grecian love of beauty would, doubtless, have created an ideal of faultless perfection, but in its first, dark years, the sorely-tried Church fancied their Lord's visage and form as!"marred more than those of other men," and that He must liave had no attractions of personal beauty. Justin Martyr speaks of Him as without beauty or attractiveness, and of mean appearance. o Clement of Alexandria describes Him as of an uninviting appearance, and almost repulsive. Tertullian says He had not even ordinary human beauty, far less heavenly. Origen went so far as to say that He was "small in body and deformed, as well as low-born," and that "His only beauty was in His soul and life." About the same time, however, the Christian Gnostics, who had not such an antipathy to heathen art, began to make likenesses of Him of another type, in paintings, gems, or metal, and small statues of Him, which they crowned and honoured in the heathen fashion. The features were said to have been copied from a portrait, fancifully thought to have been taken by order of Pilate. The ideal, however, prevailed more and more, for the half-heathen sects who used these likenesses had the Greek feeling that the gods must needs be divinely beautiful. In the third century the conception thus invented found its way into the private chapel of the emperor Severus, by the side of illustrious kings and emperors, and of "the holy souls," of Abraham, Orpheus, Apollonius, and other worthies. It is possible that degrading caricatures of Jesus, which had become common among the heathen, led to this nobler conception of His beauty.

The triumph of Christianity over heathenism found a partial revenge is a I think a grad build allow for bound and dill a specie we and the second of the second in the footing gained in the Church for a more kindly estimate of what had now lost its religious power. The first Christian art bearing on Jesus-that of the catacombs-was, however, purely symbolical. The figure of a fish stood for His name, from the significance of the Greek letters in the word that expressed the idea, or He was represented by the symbol of a lamb, or of a shepherd. After a time, the further ideal of a teacher of mankind was added, and, gradually, in the fourth century, He was pictured as a child, after which it was an easy step to portray Him on the Cross, With the general introduction of such likenesses, the idea of any repulsive appearance was necessarily irreconcilable. Eusebius, of Cæsarea, describes a statue which he himself saw at Panias, or Cæsarea Philippi, the reputed birthplace and At residence of the woman who was healed of the issue of blood. the gates of her house," says he, "on a raised pedestal, stands a brazen image of a woman on her bended knee, with her hands stretched out before her like one entreating. Opposite her is an image of a man, erect, of the same materials, in a full pallium, stretching out his hand to the woman." "Before her feet," he adds, "and on the same pedestal, a strange kind of plant grows, which rises as high as the hem of the brazen garment, and is an antidote to all kinds of diseases. This statue, they say, is a statue of Jesus Christ." Unfortunately, the credulity which believed in the miraculous plant is a poor guarantee for the worth of a vague, popular fancy as to the statue. It was, doubtless, a relic of Greelan art, transformed by a fond reverence into a memorial of Jesus. There can be no doubt, however, that paintings, claiming to be actual resemblances of our Lord, of Peter, and of Paul, were to be found in the time of Eusebius, for he says that he himself had seen them, and thought them old thanks-memorials of devout heathen who had reverenced Christ and honoured Him in this way, as they were accustomed to honour their own gods. The old conception of the appearance of Jesus, borrowed from the words of Isaiah, had now finally given place to one which exalted His beauty to the utmost, as the natural outward expression of the divine purity and perfection of His inner being. Gregory of Nyssa applies the imagery of the Song of Solomon to His person, no less than to His doctrine. Jerome embodies in his words the glorious ideal which Christian art was afterwards to develop, basing the thought of Him, no longer on the description of the suffering "servant of God," in Isaiah, but on the words of the forty-fifth Psalm-"Thou art fairer than the children of men." "Assuredly," says he, "that splendour and majesty of the hidden divinity, which shone even in His human countenance, could not but attract, at first sight, all beholders. Unless he had had something heavenly in His appearance, the apostles would Unless not immediately have followed Him." Chrysostom tells us that "the Heavenly Father poured out on Him, in full streams, that personal beauty which is distilled only drop by drop upon mortal man;" and Augustine, with his wonted vigorous eloquence, says, that "He was beautif beautif glowing words are who ing to t distinct perfecti did not, ously, a painting andria y beyond. then pr which to appeara Image it seeme human first to in brought sanction legends the Savi troversy iconoclas legend w garus, ki portrait. Saviour spirit that cloth wit garus. Abgarus, Justin M only as a Not to this wond who, seci with the ban and said, the of her Lo saddened whole bo had been into the p

what

ig on

Freck

cd by irther

ourth

r step

such

ily ir-

him-

c and

nds a etched

c of a

out his

e same

e hem seases.

ly, the

rantee

t was,

ce into

paint-

and of

that he

rials of

in this om the

exalted of the Nyssa

no less

is ideal

ight of

God,"

t fairer

endour

human

Unless

would

at "the ersonal

" and

He was

The

beautiful in His mother's bosom, beautiful in the arms of His parents, beautiful on the cross, and beautiful in the sepulchre." But that this glowing language was only metaphor is beyond dispute, from the words of Augustine himself. "Of His appearance," says he, "wo are wholly ignorant, for the likenesses of Him vary entirely, according to the fancy of the artist." Different races had already created distinct and different ideals, in harmony with their local standards of perfection. The old conception of His being without form or beauty did not; he vever, at once loce its power. St. Basil clung to it strenuously, and the monks of his order are said to have reproduced it in paintings so fate as the eighth century. The austere Cyril of Alexandria went so far as to maintain that He was "mean in appearance beyond all the sons of men," a proof, in its very contrast with the then prevailing conception, that there was no distorical portrait to which to appeal, nor even a traditional ideal respecting our Lord's appearance.

<sup>31</sup>Images of Christ met at first with earnest opposition, partly because it seemed impossible adequately to represent the glorified Saviour in human form, and partly, no doubt, because heretic sects were the first to introduce them. Cyril of Alexandria is credited with having brought them into the service of the Church. Once in some measure sanctioned, their use, especially in the East, spread far and wide, and legends were invented to support their authenticity as likenesses of the Saviour. John of Damascus, in his fiery zeal in the great controversy on the use of images, sought to paralyze the opposition of the iconoclast emperor Constantine Copronymus, by bringing forward a legend which we first meet at the close of the fifth century, that Abgarus, king of Edessa, had once sent a painter to Jesus to take His portrait, but the artist failed, from the dazzling brightness of the Saviour's features. Jesus, the legend went on to say, honouring the spirit that had prompted the attempt, impressed His likeness on the cloth with which He was wont to wipe His brow, and sent it to Abgarus. But, though a letter of Abgarus to Jesus, and of Jesus to Abgarus, are noticed as early as the middle of the second century, by Justin Martyr, this wondrous story of the miraculous portrait appears only as an addition of centuries later.

Not to be outdone, the Western Church created its own version of this wondrous legend in that of Veronica, a fabled saint of Jerusalem, who, seeing Jesus pass, on His way to Calvary, His face streaming with the blood of the crown of thorns, unwound the cloth of her turban and gave it Him that He might wipe His brow. In return, it is said, the loving disciple received, on the cloth, an imprinted likeness of her Lord, not calm and peaceful, however, like that of Edessa, but saddened by pain and sorrow. A third miraculous likeness of Christ's whole body was averred to have been left on the linen in which He had been wrapped in the sepulchre, and it was said that this passed into the possession of Niccdemus, and then to the Christians of Jerusalem, from whom, after passing through wonderful fortunes, it was brought at last, in the year 1578, to Turin, where it now is. Veronica's cloth is now in St. Peter's, at Rome, though Milan, in northern Italy, and Jaen, in Spain, both boast that they have the authentic relic!

The earliest images of Christ, as has been said, were those introduced among the Gnostics, and of these two, at least, with some claim to authenticity, are still extant. Like the images of Pythagoras, Plato, Aristotle, and other sages, which these strange sects consecrated along with that of the Saviour, they are small, and rather medallions than busts. The one is of stone, with a head of Christ, young and beardless, in profile-the name xpibros (Christos) in Greek characters, and the symbolical fish, below. The other is a kind of medal, representing Christ with His hair parted over His forehead, covering the ears, and falling down on the shoulders. It has the name of Jesus, in Hebrew, below it. Perhaps it was the work of some Jewish Chris-tian. In the fifteenth century, the historian Nicephorus ventured on a fuller sketch of the person of Christ than had been previously given, and it may be well to quote it, if only to reproduce the concep-tion formed by the Church of the Middle Ages. "I shall describe," says Nicephorus, "the appearance of our Lord, as handed down to us from antiquity. He was very beautiful. His height was fully seven spans; His hair bright auburn, and not too thick, and was inclined to wave in soft curls. His eyebrows were black and arched, and His eyes seemed to shed from them a gentle golden light. They were very beautiful. His nose was prominent; His beard lovely, but not very long. He wore His hair, on the contrary, very long for no scissors had ever touched it, nor any human hand, except that of His mother when she played with it in His childhood. He stooped a little, but His body was well formed. His complexion was that of the ripe brown wheat, and His face like His mother's, rather oval than round, with only a little red in it, but through it there shone dignity, intelligence of soul, gentleness, and a calmness of spirit never disturbed. Altogether, He was very like His divine and immaculate mother."

What the imaginary description of Christ by Nicephorus has been in the Eastern Church, that of the flotitious letter of Lentulus to the Roman Senate has been to the Western. It first appeared at the close of the fiftcenth century, when the works of Anselm were collected and printed, and is the forgery of some monk who sought a good end by one of the pious frauds then very widely in favour. The internal evidence alone shows that it is a mere fabrication, and as even Nicephorus makes no allusion to it, its date may safely be assumed as later than his lifetime. "There has appeared," says Lentulus, "and still lives, a man of great virtue, called Jesus Christ, and, by His disciples, the Son of God. He raises the dead, and heals the sick. He is a min tall in stature, holde in "appearance, with a reverend countena heholdin richer bi divided rites). have no cheeks b ruddy be His eyes He is ter and love saw Him fect. H sons of n It may of the pr says Deli of the gr the court robes, lik squa squa shoulder. it in its p wrists and tassels, of under ga His feet s as He wal "He w face and His count was fairer bronze co the white wanting. if that an while it a Ilis eyes l as if by p muning w affectation grace, like robes.' Weowe Temptatio others, T overshado Was

roni-

hern

entic

ntro-

laim

oras,

rated

lions

r and

cters.

epre

g the us, in

hris-

d on

ously

ncep-

ribe,

wn to fully I was ched.

Thev

y, but

or no

of His

ped a

nat of

oval

shone

never

culate

M . D(1)

s been

to the e close lected

d end

ternal

Niceled as

" and y His sick.

rend

127070

countenance, which at once attracts and keeps at a distance those beholding it. His hair is waying and curly; a little darker and of richer brightness, where it flows down from the shoulders. It is divided in the middle, after the custom of the Nazarenes (or Nazarites). His brow is smooth, and wondrously serene, and His features have no wrinkles, nor any blemish, while a red glow makes His checks beautiful. His nose and mouth are perfect. He has a full ruddy beard, the colour of His hair, not long, but divided into two. His ages are bright, and seem of different colours at different times. He is terrible in His threatenings; calm in His admonitions; loving and loved; and cheerful, but with an abiding gravity. No one ever saw Him smile, but He often weeps. His hands and limbs are perfect. He is gravely eloquent, retiring, and modest, the fairest of the sons of men."

It may be interesting to add to these older ideals that of a writer, of the present day. "Our eyes were restlessly attracted to Ilim," says Delitzsch, in one of his beautiful stories, "for He was the centre of the group. He was not in soft clothing of byssus and silk, like the courtiers of Tiberias or Jerusalem, nor did He wear long trailing robes, like some of the Pharisees. On His head was a white keffiyeh was square of linen doubled so that a corner fell down on each shoulder, and on the back; a fillet or agbul round the head, keeping it in its place. On His body He wore a tunic, which reached to His wrists and to His feet, and over this a blue tallith, with the prescribed tassels, of blue and white, at the four corners, hung down so that the under garment, which was grey, striped with red, was little seen. His feet shod with sandals, not shoes, were only visible now and then, as He walked or moved."

"He was a man of middle size, with youthful beauty, still, in His face and form. The purity and charm of early manhood blended in His countenance with the ripeness of mature years. His complexion was fairer than that of those around Him, for they had more of the bronze colour of their nation. He seemed, indeed, even pale, under the white sudar, for the ruddy glow of health usual at His years was wanting. The type of His features was hardly Jewish, but rather as if that and the Greek types blended into a perfect beauty, which, while it awakened reverence, filled the heart, still more, with love. His eyes looked on you with light which seemed broken and softened, as if by passing through tears. He stooped a little, and seemed communing with His own thoughts, and when He moved there was no affectation as with some of the Rabbis, but a natural dignity and grace, like one who feels himself a king, though dressed in lowly robes."

We owe our knowledge of the period immediately following the Temptation to the narrative of the fourth Gospel, written after the others. The splendour of the later ministry in Galilee seems to have evershadowed the humbler beginnings, of the earlier period, in the other Gospels, so that they are almost passed over by them. Happily, however, John preserves for us, in comparative detail, the incidents of these silent months, in which the public life of Jesus was slowly opening into full flower. How much would have been lost had his record not been given? There is a peculiar charm in the glimpses they supply of the early spring-time of the Saviour's ministry; a tender fragrance all their own.

820

The first great crisis of His life being over, with its forty days of temptation and proof, its long fasting, its great victory, and its ministrations of angels, Jesus returned to the Jordan, and mingled, unnoticed and unknown, in the crowd round the Baptisto, It was apparently the early spring; at least, a fine tradition of the early Church would have it so, perhaps to link together the opening spiritual year with the beauty of the reviving year of nature. He may have held communion once and again with John, but He lived apart from him, silently passing to and fro among the multitudes. Only the day before His arrival, John had renewed his homage to Him in His absence, before a deputation from the ecclesiastical authorities of the Temple, sent to investigate his own teaching and authority.""Was he the Christ? or Elijah? or the expected prophet, Isaiah, Jeremiah, or some other?" The nobly humble man though at the height of his glory, with the nation looking up to him, in reverence, as a prophet, had no thought of hesitation in his answer. Jesus was unknown, but John yields Him the first place, and proclaims himself unworthy to perform the lowliest offices for One so exalted." "I am only he of whom Isaiah speaks, as a voice crying in the wilderness, 'Make straight the way of the Lord. [[ I only baptize with water, but there stands among you One whom ye know not-He who is to come after me; I am not worthy to kneel before Him to loose the thong of His sandal." The symbol of servitude and subjection offered by a slave to a new master was to untie his shoe and bind it again, but even this was too great an honour, in John's opinion, to be permitted him to pay to Christ. 一个,如何你们们也还是1.13°小时们的的时间。

He had often borne similar testimony, lifting up his voice and crying aloud, in his addresses to the people, to make known the speedy manifestation of the Great Expected One, but, now, he was able to bear witness to Him in His presence. As he was standing the next day among his followers, Jesus Himself approached, doubtess to speak with him on the affairs of the kingdom of God, in which both were so entirely engrossed. He was still unknown, unrecognized, and unnoticed, and He would not reveal Himself by any act of selfassertion on His own part. But the very end of John's mission from God was that "He should be made manifest to Israel," and the hour had now come to draw aside the veil. Pointing to Him while He was yet at a distance, he proclaims His glory in words which must have thrilled those who heard them: "Behold the Lamb of God, and takes away the sin of the world. This is He of whom I said, "After me con And I manife seen th Him. to bap shalt so baptize that thi -tiltris for the Perea, suggest Church Jesus w in the prophet to him, had so Ben Uz the Se His suff which s and rais by assu Joseph, should. Zecharia in the w Messiah. hundred the Mes dying in with by baJohn, his spiri 84 Servar St bearin transgre referred from the Before t hand, ar withfire pure, an to "take coase in X) L'

me comes a Man who is preferred before me, for He was before me.' And I knew Him not (as the Messiah); but, that He should be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water. I have seen the Spirit descending as a dove out of heaven, and it abode upon Him. And I knew Him not (as the Messiah); but He that sent me to baptize with water, the Same said unto me, 'Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on Him. He it is who baptizes with the Holy Spirit.' And I have seen and borne witness that this is the Son of God."

dents

owly d his

npses

ry:da http:// ys.of ninis-d, un-

early

ening He lived

udes.

ge to stical g and

ophet, hough

im, in swer.

1 prone so

ing in

aptize

t-He im to

abjec-

l bind

on to

SUT W

e and

n the

e was ng the btless

which

nized,

self-

from

bour

le He must

After

It is possible, as Milman suggests, that flocks of lambs, intended for the Temple sacrifices, then passing, from the rich pastures of Perea, to the ford beside which John was baptizing, may have suggested the name "Lanib of God," by which he consecrated to the Church, for ever, that most cherished symbol of the Redeemer. Jesus was meek and gentle like the lamb, but there was much more in the use of such a name by the son of a priest-a Nazarite, and a prophet, like John. The idea of sacrifice was natural and inevitable to him, in connection with it. The nation, indeed, in Christ's day, had so little idea of a suffering and dying Messiah, that Jonathan Ben Uzziel, the contemporary of Christ, while he sees the Messiah in the "Servant of God," of Isliah's prophecies, ingeniously explains His sufferings as meaning those of Israel. But the number of passages which spoke of the Messiah as suffering, even then arrested attention, and raised the difficulty which the Rabbis of a later day tried to solve, by assuming that there would be two Messiahs one, the son of Joseph, who should suffer and die: the other, the son of David, who should live and reign. Even then, the Rabbis saw in the words of Zechariah, "They shall look on Him whom they have pierced," and in the words of Isaiah, in his fifty-third chapter, a reference to the Messiah, and, hence, the Jew, in Justin's dialogue, written about a hundred years after Christ, saw nothing surprising in the idea of the Messiah suffering, though he revolted from the thought of His dying in a way cursed by the Law, like crucifixion, a difficulty met with by St. Paul himself. be permitted bit to pay be

• John, who had studied Isaiah so deeply, and was so penetrated by his spirit, could not have overlooked those verses which speak of the "Servant of God," as "brought like a lamb to the slaughter," and as "bearing the iniquities of many," and "making intercession for the transgressors." nor the words of Zechariah, which even the Rabbis referred to the Messiah. But his language, after the return of Jesus from the wilderness, shows a striking contrast to his previous tone. Before that, he spoke of the Messiah only as having the fan in His hand, and as laying the axe at the root of the tree, and as baptizing with fire as well as the Spirit. Now, he sees in Him only the meek, pure, and patient Lamb, destined by God to sacrifice. That He was to "take away the sin of the world," leaves no question as to the sense in which John saw in Him the "Lamb of God." Issiah had painted "the Servant of God" as making peace for the people, by His vicarious sufferings for them, and this "Servant" John sees in Jesus. Fitly typified by "The Lamb," from His gentle patience, He is still more so, as the Antitype of Old Testament sacrifice. To exclude the idea of explatory suffering, is to trifle with the words of the Baptist, and the ingenious fancy that finds an allusion to the pastoral imagery of the twenty-third Psalm, is even more arbitrary. John saw in Jesus the propitiation, which was, even then, bearing and carrying away the sin of the world.

How was it that John realized so much more clearly than any around him the true ideal of the Messiah, as the sacrificial Lamb, appointed of God, on whom had been laid the sins of a guilty world? It can be explained only by remembering that his very mission was to reveal Him to the world. For this, he tells us, he had been sent, and his commission; therefore, implied a disclosure to him, not only of the person, but the true work of the Messiah. We know that 9 revelation from above pointed out Jesus to him by a heavenly sign," and, from the same source, we may assume, he learned the great truth that, as the Messiah, He would explate the sin of the world by His sufferings. It may be that Jesus Himself talked with him of "His decease, which He should accomplish at Jerusalem." But this, itself, would be a revelation. Only, however, by communication from a higher source, could the idea have been formed of a suffering Messial - an idea so alien to the conceptions of the day, though dimly 0.0 realized by individuals, like the aged Simeon, or Zacharias, to whom of a prophetic insight had been, for the moment, given. We have heard out of the Law," said the people to Jesus Himself, "that the of Christ ablde h for ever"-that is, should never die-" and how sayes: Thou, The Son of Man must be lifted up?" Who is this Son of Man?" It was in the face of such a universal contrast of thought, it. that John announced the great truth, with clear and precise distinct ness, noting even its having already begun, and its future world embracing greatness. The more novel the conception of a suffering up Messiah to the nation; the more difficult it proved to bring it home of even to the disciples themselves; the more it needed to be slowly ( developed by the facts of Christ's life and death, to secure its being understood; the more justified is the thought of a special revelation, 101 throwing light into the Baptist's soul, on the full meaning of ancient prophecy. in vorte one

It must not be thought, however, that, with all these heavenly revelations, the knowledge of John was as minute and defined as that of those whose minds the teachings of Jesus afterwards "illuminated" from above. A generation later, some disciples of John, living at Ephesus, when asked by Paul, "If they had received the Holy Ghost since they believed?" answered that they had not so much as heard of there being any Holy Ghost at all. The Jews of John's day thought of the Holy Spirit only vaguely, as the "Spirit of Jehoval"—the eniuence and the John doubtles with a s to a title which h nation-Sibylline had for thus, the heard it appointed It seem heard it, some heat John was was again on Him, God," I the name. was given and they John, to f Jesus, L to receive of Nazare

1110

The tea able, in, so absence, it undertakin dutics of it the myster mysteries a group of for a Babl and even it one study Talandy, i the subjec is written the custom

The two of such a group of assistants might gat efficience of the divine power and grace, and we owe it to the Gospels and the Epistles that we now have clearer conceptions. 197 6416

111

He

To

s'of

the

ary,

ring

any amb,

orld?

WHS

sent, only

that sign,"

truth

His

"His

this.

ation

erings

whom!

have

t the

ayest

on of

ught?) (i.s

tinet: 0.8

orldhu

ering

home 91

lowly (10

being ??

tion, 101

cientDilli

me stud

venlylai

s that 20

hated'

gat ou

eard

ughtrom

1111111 host

Hthe !

timly) 0.0

John had pointed to Jesus as "the Lamb of God," and had thus, doubtless, fixed the attention of those around him on one associated with a symbol so sacred and tender. But he did not confine himself to a title not yet familiar, as addressed to the Messiah, and added one which had already been appropriated to Him in the literature of the nation—"I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God." The Sibylline verses, the Book of Enoch, and the Fourth Book of Esdras, had, for generations, applied this title to the expected Messiah, and, thus, there could be no misapprehension in the mind of any who heard, it given to Jesus. It was His formal proclamation by the appointed herald

It seemed as if this wondrous testimony had been lost on those who heard it, but though the multitude took little heed of it, there were some hearts in which it found a worthy response. The next day, as John was standing with two of his disciples, Jesus again passed, and was again proclaimed in the same words. Fixing his eyes carnestly on Him, John called on his companions to "behold the Lamb of God,", It was enough. They might not realize the full import of the name, but they felt the divine attractiveness of Him to whom it was given. They were waiting with anxious hearts for the Messiah, and they heard John proclaim that Jesus was He, and, forthwith, left John, to follow Him whom he thus honoured.

Jesus, Himself, now about to begin His public ministry, was ready to receive disciples. He had permanently abandoned His obscure life of Nazareth, and was, henceforth, to be a Rabbi in Israel.

The teachers of the day had round them an inner circle of disciples, able; in some measure, to represent them in public; in their own absence, by speaking in the synagogues, answering questions, or undertaking missionary journeys, and these were to be the special duties of the disciples of Jesus. They were to be trained by Him in the mysteries of the Kingdom, as those of the Rabbis were in the mysteries of the Law. No teacher assumed his office in Israel without a group of such followers round him, for it was reckoned a grave sin for a kabbi to be at any time without some one to instruct in the Law, and even their scholars were required to converse habitually on this one study of their lives. "When two scholars of the wise," says the Taland, "are making a journey together, and do not make the Law the subject of their conversation, they deserve to be burned alive, as is written in 2 Kings ii: 11." It was, therefore, only an adoption of the gustom of the day which Jesus now followed.

The two who now joined Him seem to have hitherto formed part of such an inner circle round John, and were the beginning of a group of trusted friends, with whom He could associate, and of assistants in His creat work, while, also a centre round which others might gather. He drew them to Him, however, in a way new and significant, for Ho did not wait till they asked leave to follow Him, and did not court their aid, but called on them to follow Him, retaining, thus, a relation of superiority even in this detail.

He could, hence, more freely admit them to the most endering and familiar intimacy; and speak of them, before long, as His friends, Hisbrethren, and even His children and little ones, though, also, His scrvants. He had chosen them, not they Him; and thus He could the better train them to be teachers in His own society, alluring the world to it by the example of their lives, or spreading it by their ministrations. Standing towards them in a relation so dignified, they were at once His friends, and the servants whom He could employ as diligent fishers of men, and labourers in the great vineyard of the kingdom of God.

Though, like the Rabbis, a teacher of the nation, in the streets, in the houses, and in the synugogues, as the custom of the day required, Jesus did not try to gain His immediate followers from their order, or from their disciples, for He had little sympathy with them. He rather sought simple children of the people, free, as far as possible, from prejudice and self-sufficiency, and marked only by their sincerity, hundlity, intellectual shrewdness, and religious sensibility. The less they knew of the schools, the less they would have to unlearn, the more they derived from Him, the more undoubting their loyalty to Him. He found the class He wanted, mostly in lowly fishermen and countryment.

Of the first two disciples, the one was Andrew, a fisherman, from Bethsaida on the Lake of Galilee: the other doubtless was John himself, a native of the same town-though, with his wonted modesty, he withholds his name. No wonder he remembered every incident of his introduction to Christ, so minutely, after many years, for it was the birth-hour of his religious life. Very probably the proposal to foin the new teacher came from him, and if so, he was the first to follow Jesus, as he was the last to leave Him. The two had heard Him announced as the Lamb of God, and as such they sought Him. Can we wonder that the name became such a favourite with him, who, hereafter, was the beloved disciple, that we find it in his writings alone, or that he repeats it in the Apocalypse more than thirty times? The two followed Jesus, anxious to speak to Him, but in modest difficulty how to approach Him. Their embarrassment, however, was brief, for Jesus, hearing their footsteps behind Him, and judging, with the quick-instinct of sympathy, that He was being sought for the first time turned and spoke to them. Asking them what they seek. He is answered in their confusion, by the counter-question, "Rabbi, where dwellest Thou?" The multitudes attending such gatherings as John's preaching, were wont to run up temporary booths of wattled boughs, with a striped abba, or outer cloak, thrown over, for cover, and some one had given Jesus a share in such a shelter, for it is not likely that there were houses near. Rabbis on Lin the dealer that the star was been and the

their jou garded as even to J Jerusalen and the them on evident 1 Jewish tr schools of tine, the title of R but even The sin open the more of ] The day stretched discourse. thoughts, away, B nized in neither w All day l tened to ] Fatherna puteTit contained had a bro therefore. a matter o of discipl othen tha there long character, all the fu hear Him any shoul steadfastl characteri firmness ( Galilæan which ma found in man who, all chang would ney son of Jo

824 -

FIIm.

retain-

114 110770

ngand

19. Hij

is fer-

dothe.

ng the

v their?

1, they

en volc

ofsthe

ets ino

uired,

order.

1/SHC3

sible.

ir sin-3

to un-

y tish-

T Lougi

from

John

dasty;) cident

it was

irst to

heard Him.

owno,

ritings

times? nodest wever?

iging?

htfor

thev

ion !!

such

hrown

uchra

dis con

. ....

their journeys were always welcome to hospitality, and He was regarded as one, by at least a few, already. The title had been given even to John, as it now, was to Jesus, for although the authorities at Jerusalem discountenanced those who had not studied in the schools, and the people half distrusted any teaching which did not address them on school authority, the recognition was never withheld where evident knowledge of the Law, or worthinoss to teach, was seen. Jewish traders and Galilean teachers, who had no diploma from the schools of Jerusalem, were accepted as Rabbis in Rome; and in Paleztine, the dignity and wisdom of Jesus drow forth towards Him the title of Rabbi and Teacher, not only from the people and the disciples, but even from the Phariseps and Rabbis themselves.

The simple words of invitation, "Come and see," were enough to open the relationship between Jesus and hearts so eager to know more of Him, and, presently, they were with Him, where He dwelt. The day passed quickly, for they did not mark the hours, as they stretched on from noon, when they had come, till towards night. His discourse, His teaching, and His whole Being, excluded all other thoughts. If any doubt respecting Him had remained, it soon passed away, Both were, henceforth, His followers, and both equally recognized in Him the promised Messiah, (The night approached, but neither was willing to leave They had found rest to their souls. All day long, and into the quiet watches of the night, they had listened to His first opening of His great message of mercy from the Father and they would fain hear still more. But, as Jeremy Taylor puts it machidents of the greatest pleasure, our joys cannot be contained within the limits of the possessor's thoughts." Andrew had a brother, Simon, and longed to bring him to Jesus. Retiring, therefore, for a time, he soon returned with him in company. It was a matter of the gravest moment, on the one side, that a right choice. of disciples should be made, and it was no less momentous on the othen that there should be no self-deception; but on neither side was there long hesitation, or cautious inquiry, or demand for evidence of character, or crafty wariness. Everything was simple and direct, in all the fulness of mutual confidence and trust. To see Jesus, and hear Him speak was enough, and He, on His part, "needed not that any should testify of man; for He knew what was in man," Looking steadfastly at Simon, He saw in him, as in John and Andrew, the characteristics He required in His followers. The rare unbending. firmness of purpose, the tenacious fidelity, the swift decisiveness, the Galizzan fire and manhiness, and the tender religiousness of spirit, which marked him to the end of his life, were read at once. Jesus had found in him His firmest, most rock-like servant and confessor; the man who, from this first moment-except for one sail instant-amidst all changes and trials; and the ever-growing storms of the world, would never beguntrue to bim: "Thou art Simon," said He, "the son of Jonas. Henceforth thou shalt be called 'The Rock.'

wonder that he is best known as Cephas, or Peter, the Aramaic and Greek equivalents of this honourable distinction. The Christian Church was already founded in these three disciples. With the fine modesty of his nature, John says nothing of himself in relation to a day so eventful in his history. The kingly soul of Jesus evidently enchained him at once. Henceforth, he was altogether His, though, for a time, dismissed to his home. But, once more permitted to follow Him, he is ever found at His side, forgetting himself in his love for his Master, and lost in the contemplation of His life and words. We do not know the stages by which, from this moment, onwards, his faith in the Saviour grew, till it reached that blending of soul with soul, in inmost love, which made him, to the end of his long life, the ideal disciple. Writing last of all, he allows himself to be seen only twice in the story of his Master-now, when he came with Andrew, as the first to join Christ, and at the close, on Calvary, when he lifts the veil for a moment from the unique relation Power with the Miner of History And Antin 1990 in which he stood to his Lord.

The earliest traditions join his brother James with John, as one of the very first disciples, for though John, from the same delicacy as shrank from speaking of himself, does not mention his brother's name, the other three Gospels always number him with the earliest auberents of Jesus. There can be little question that, as Andrew went to seek his brother Simon, John, also, brought James to Jesus. The intimation that Andrew went first on his errand of love, seems to leave us to infer that he himself went next.

The four disciples had it in common that they belonged to the same town, Bethsaida, that they were of the fisher population, and that both families were in a comparatively prosperous position. We know noth of of the father of Andrew and Simon, but James and Johns were the sons of one Zabdai, and we know, from comparison of texts, that their mother was Salome, so honourably mentioned in the Gospels. Writers so acute as Ewald have seen in her a sister of Mary. the mother of Jesus, and, if so, John and James were cousins of their Master. If it be correct to honour Salome thus, she was present with Mary at the crucifixion. In any case, she belonged to the number of pious souls ready to accept a Messiah such as Jesus, and hence her sons must have received the priceless blessing of a godly training and example. It seems as if we could almost trace the beloved disciple in the character of a mother, who "ministered to Jesus of her substance" while He lived, and did not forsake Him even when He hung on the and the state of the second with the second with the little Cross. UD THUE 1. . . .

To begin His public career in a way so humble and un stentations, was in strict keeping with the work and character of Christ. It was casier for Him to train a rew, and gradually raise them to the high standard required or His immediate followers. That His first adherents were attracted only by religious considerations, tended to guard against any seeking to join Him who were not moved to do not by a true spir To have natural have fou therefore once mo A fifth di · man of t can be n to whom as they t "Follow to the otl The fa Josephtime to h few miles hills behi was to Ca lay upon land of th some imp Jesus a full:of na out a frier that he ha wrote-Je few miles new to Na "Can any Jesus h that, by a him, befo superhum proached, was no gu whose sin of the tru wondered more, and the fig-tre from all, thee," said The first gone, who ing the m tust his b ic and

ristian

matura

nimself

s alto.

t. once getting

tion of

m this

to the

allows

, when

ose, on elation?

one of

cacv as other's earliest

ndrew

Jesus.

ems to 11:500

e same

d that

know

John

texts,

Maryan

f their

t with a ber of ce her

plein

ance"

on the

1. Tilling

lious

t was

high

dhene

Distaur.

by sta

127

true spiritual sympathy—itself the pledge of their fitness for disciples. To have drawn around Him great multitudes, by a display of supernatural powers, would have destroyed all 'His plans,' for He could have found no such sympathy' in crowds thus gathered. Having, therefore, begun with the lowly band of four, He turned His thoughts once more towards home, and set out, with them, to Galilee, next day. A fifth disciple joined Him on the homeward journey—Phillip, a townsman of the others! Nothing is told of the circumstances, though there can be no doubt that he had heard of Jesus, either from the Baptist, to whom, like the others, he seems to have gone out; or from the four, as they travelled with him on his 'own' return. The simple words "Follow me," so often intered afterwards, were enough to add him to the others.

The family of Mary, in which we no longer hear any mention of Joseph-now, apparently, dead for a number of years seem at this time to have left Nazareth for a short sojourn at Cana, a village a few miles directly north of their own town, on the other side of the hills behind it. A little later, Capernaum was chosen instead, but it was to Cana, not Nazareth, that Jesus returned from the Jordan. It lay upon an almost isolated hill, rising proudly above the pastureland of the little valley of El Battauf, and was afterwards a place of some importance, in the last Jewish war, from its strong position.

Jesus and His companions had scarcely reached it, before Philip, full of natural joy at his discovery of the Messiah, in Jesus, sought out a friend who lived in Cana, Nathanael by name, to let him know that he had found Him "of whom Moses in the Law, and the prophets whote—Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of Joseph," Nazareth was only a few miles off, but so privately had Jesus lived in it that the name was new to Nathanael, and the town, besides, had a questionable name. "Can any good thing," asked he "come out of Nazareth?"

Jesus had won Peter by the greeting which had made him feel. that, by a knowledge beyond human, He had already fixed His eye on him, before His coming, as a future disciple. A similar display of superhuman knowledge now kindled faith in Nathanael. As he approached, Jesus greeted him as "an Israelite indeed, in whom there was no guile." A glance had been enough to show that he was one whose simplicity and uprightness of spirit marked him as a member of the true Israel of God. Nathanael felt that he was known, but wondered how Jesus could have learned about him. A few words more, and he was won for ever. He had been sitting alone, under the fig-tree before his house, or in his garden, hidden, as he thought; from all, when Philip spoke to him. "Before that Philip called thee," said Jesus, "when thou wast under the fig-tree, I saw thee." The first words had struck him, but these, recalling the moments just gone, when, very likely, in his fancied seclusion, he had been pondering the misery of Israel, and longing for the Great Deliverer, -showed that his immost soul had been, all the while, open to the eve of Jesus.

and completed the conquest of his soul. "Rabbi," said he, "Thou art the Son of God; Thou art the King of Israel." He felt that the heart of the Messiah of God had turned tenderly towards him, even before they had met.

The simple, prompt, faith of Nathanael was no less pleasing to Jesus than honouring to himself. There was something so fresh, so fervent, so full hearted in the words, now at the very beginning of Christ's public work, that they won a reply alike gracious and sublime. "Bccause I said unto thee, I saw, thee under the fig-tree, believest thou? Thou shalt see greater things than these." Far higher grounds of faith would, henceforth, be granted, for, from this time, "the heavens would be seen, as it were, open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man,"-the name consecrated to the Messigh from the days of Daniel-and now permanently chosen as His own. When He begins His work in its full activity, there will be no longer a momentary opening of heaven, as lately on the Jordan, but a constant intercourse between it and earth, as of old in the vision of Jacob; heavenly ministrations bringing countless blessings down, and bearing back the tidings of the work of mercy, in reconciling man to Ged. Language like this is, of course, metaphorical. It may be understood literally, in one or two cases, in the Saviour's history, but He cannot have referred to these. He, rather, spoke of the connection between earth and heaven, which He had opened. They would be no longer isolated from each other. Intercourse between themo was henceforth renewed, never again to cease; intercourse, at first, between Him and His Father, but gradually spreading over the earth, as men caught His image, and reproduced His spirit. The angels descending from heaven with gifts for the Son of Man to dispense to His brethren, would be visible to all who saw the results, in His kingdom over the earth. NOTO CO. END OF

Nathanael's name does not occur in the list of the apostles, but it has been assumed from the earliest times that he was Hartholomaw, who is always hamed next to Philip. It was a Jewish custom to change the name when a public profession of religion was made. "Four things," says R. Isaac, "have power to change a man's destiny—alms, prayer, change of heart, and change of name." We have instances of such change of name in Simon, who is flao indifferently, mentioned as Peter, and as the son of Jonas, and in Barnabas, whose proper name was Joses. Nathanael may have been the personal name, while Bartholonicw was simply an allusion to him as the son of Talmai. Thou Hist dial Hist even forvent.

THE DI

Cana, nov

sea; emba

the white

the hill be

tower of

from the n the water water. col fint roofs wands and shltry sum booths of which the roofs in Je -Theoplai two and th capital of ( rouds, whit androlives hill on whi loads of ric cronned off has caught is, aven sti western and antiquity, c pleasant la fringing it. east, and, t a southern fubidyllic p tine statt ou a Cana th plain below desolate that even leopard wild boar a coppice, on limestone, a last fifty yea

-renarro al actual antes

AUSOL THE OPENING OF CHRIST'S PUBLIC MINISTRY.

Thou it the even cord 1169 Jesus rvent.

hrist's "Bc-

thou?

nds of avens

gand

e Me.Jis His

be no n, but

ion of

n, and

nan to

beun

ry, but onnec-

would

them

t first. earth

rels deto His

ngdom

uno éeri

but it

omaw,

tom to made. o's des-

e have

erontly

whose

ersonal

the son

d sitsly Islueuli -

even ic

J DUVI

SIGGOO He suriil Th Jeel

The plain of El Battauf, on a hill in which rose the village of Cana, now utterly forsaken, stretches out in a pleasant rolling green sea; embayed in a framework of softer or steeper hills. On the south, the whitewashed tomb of a Mohammedan saint marks the top of the hill behind Mazareth, and a little to the west of this, the ruined tower of Sepphoris rises from a lower ridge. Entering the plain from the north, the first village is Kefr Menda, with its deep spring, the water of which is carefully kept for use in the hot summer; rain water, collected in an open pool, being used at other times. The fint roofs of many of the poor cottages show frail shelters of wattled wands and twigs, the sleeping places of the inmates below, in the suftry summer nights. They are, doubtless, the counterparts of the booths of branches of olives, pines, myrtles, paims, and other trees, which the ancient Jews, in Nehemiah's day, made on their houseroofs in Jerusalem, at the Feast of Tabernacles,

The plain undulates in alternate grass and grain fields, between two and three miles, from Kefr Menda to Sefuriyeh, the ancient capital of Galilee, the "bird-like" Sepphoris. Several broad caravan roads, which lead to the fords of the Jordan, cross it; groves of figs. and olives fringe the southern edge, and parts of the slopes, of the hill on which Sefuriyeh stands. One overtakes asses bearing heavy. loads of rich grass to the village, some of them, perhaps, with an ear cropped off: the penalty allowed to be inflicted by any peasant who has caught it feeding in his unprotected patch of grain. Sefuriyeh is, even still, a large and prosperous village, stretching out on the western and southern slopes of its hill. A half-fallen tower, of great antiquity, crowns the height, and from its top the eye ranges over a pleasant landscape-the soft green plain; the fig and blive groves fringing it, Kefr Menda to the north, Cana of Galilee a little further east, and, to the south east, the white tomb on the hill of Nazareth; a southern sky, with its deep blue, overarching all. It is a delightful idyllic picture, on the small scale that marks everything in Paleshave been the personal White, 196

"Cana—the reedy place—as, no doubt the first settlers found the plain below it, before it was drained and cultivated, is now so utterly desolate that it is the favourite hunting ground of the neighbourhood; even leopards being shot at times among its broken houses, while the wild boar and the jackal find haunts in the thick jungle of oak coppice, on the slopes of the wadys around. The houses are built of limestone, and some of them may have been inhabited within the last fifty years. Sepp found the whole space on which the village THUMAN constant that at he is seemed to have stood, only about a hundred paces, each way, d'd met," says he, "not a living soul; not even a dog: the watchman one never misses in Palestine was not there to give a sound. My step echoed through the deserted little street and open square, as if in the dead of night; only files held their marriage rejokings in the sunshine, while a splendid rainbow stretched over the ruined tower of Sepphoris."

It was very different in the days when Jesus came to it from His visit to the preaching of John, on the Jordan. A marriage was afoot in the circle of Mary's friends; possibly of her connections. That Mary and Jesus were invited to the usual rejoicings, and that they accepted the invitation, marks the worth of those who had given it, for the presence of the saintly mother and her Son at such a time, are a pledge that all that was innocent and beautiful characterized the festivities.

A marriage in the East has always been a, time of great rejoicing. The bridegroom, adorned and anointed, and attended by his groomsmen, "the sons of the bridechamber," went, of old, as now, on the marriage day, to the house of the bride, who awaited him, veiled from head to foot, alike from Eastern ideas of propriety, and as a symbol of her subjection as a wife. A peculiar girdle the "attire" which a bride could not forget was always part of her dress, and a wreath of myrtle leaves, either real, or of gold, or gilded work-like our wreath of orange blossoms was so indispensable that it came to be used as a term for the bride herself. B. Her hair, if she had not been married before, was left flowing; her whole dress was perfumed, and she glittered with as, many jewels as the family boasted, or if poor, could borrow for the occasion. Her bridal dress, her special. ornaments, the ointment and perfumes for her person, and presents of fruit and other things, had been sent in the earlier part of the day: by the bridegroom; the bride, on her part, sending him, as her prescribed gift, a shroud; which he kept and wore, as she did hers, on cach New Year's Day and Day of Atonement. The Rabbis had fixed Wednesday as the day on which maidens should be married, and Friday for widows, so that, if the bride at Cana was now married for the first time, we know the day of the week on which the ceremony took place. She might be very young, for girls become wives. in the East when twelve or fourteen, or even younger. The bridegroom and bride both fasted all day before the marriage, and confessed their sins in prayer, as on the Day of Atonement. When the bride reached the house of her future husband's father, in which the marriage was celebrated, the bridegroom received her, still deeplyveiled, and conducted her within, with great rejoicings. [Indeed, he generally set out from his father's house in the evening to meet her, with flute-players or singers before him; his groomsmen, and others, with flaring torches or lamps, escorting him amidst loud rejoicing. which rose still higher as he led her back. Neighbours thronged into the proce friends of The Talm bridesman the brideg this:—

rom His

in the line provided, was an ess day, if to celebration The brid among the unseen, as in the festi wife were provided at seven days. often of flo is said . . h the day of priest, in h "adorned riddtes, and while the itself but, t It was to five disciple be spread y all bright a rejoicings in followers. to harmless er ascetic-the He had sper sion a had di apart from ] ideahof reli ual ze the h 80 25 to Enh into the streets. Flutes and drums and shrill cries filled the air, and the procession was swelled as it passed on, by a train of maidens, friends of the bride and bridegroom, who had been waiting for it. The Talmud has preserved a snatch of one of the songs sung by the bridesmaids and girls as they danced before the bride, on the way to the bridegroom's house. In a free translation it runs something like this:—

Meanwhi

"Her cyclids are not stained with blue, Her red cheeks are her own; Indff Her hair hangs waving as it grew, Her grace were weath, alone!"

ndi 6In

chman

e. as if

s in the

litower

om His as afoot That at they iven it,

atime

cterized

idicing.or

on the

d as a

fattine"

s, and a

it came

had not of fumed,

d. or if

special.

presents the day her pre-hers, on bis had married

ie cere-

e wives

e bride.

nd con-

lich the deeply

eed, he

others.

ioicing.

ronged ....

--: 210

In the house of the bridegroom's father, which was, for a time, the home of the young couple, things went merrily, for a feast was provided, to which all the friends and neighbours were invited. It was an essential part of the ceremony, for even so early as Jacob's day, "to make a feast" had become the common expression for the celebration of a marriage.

The bride did not sit at this feast, however, but remained apart, among the women, shrouded in the long white veil of betrothal; unseen, as yet, even by her husband. Nor did she take any part in the festivities, or appear at all. It was only when husband and, wife were finally alone, that the veil was, for the first time, removed.

Meanwhile, the family rejolcings went on apace. The feast was provided at the cost of the bridegroom, and continued, usually, for seven days, with the greatest mirth. The bridegroom wore a crown, often of flowers—the crown with which, in the Song of Solomon, it is said, "his mother crowned him in the day of his espousals, in the day of the gladness of his heart,"—and sat "decked, like a priest, in his ornaments;" the bride sitting apart among the women, "adorned with her jewels." Singing, music, and dancing, merry riddles, and the play of wit, amused the house, night after night, while the feast was prolonged; and it was only after it had worn itself but, that life settled down again into colourless monotony.

It was to some such festivity that Jesus had been invited with His five disciples. The earthen floor and the ledge round the wall would be spread with carpets, the walls hung with garlands; the spirits of all bright and cheerful as the decorated chamber, and the modest rejoicings in no way clouded by the presence of Mary's Son and His followers. There was no excess, we may be sure, but the flow of harmless entertainment brightened all faces. John had been an ascetic—the highest form of religious life hitherto known in Israel. He had spent his days in penitential austerity and wilderness sectasion; had drunk no wine, had eaten no pleasant food, and had kept apart from human affairs and relationships. But a new and higher ideal of religion was now to be introduced. Jesus came to spirit ual ze the humblest duties of life, and sanctify its simplest incidents, so as to ennoble it as a whole. Henceforth, pleasures and enjoyments were not to be shunned as unholy; religion was not to thrive on the mortification of every human instinct, and the repression of every cheerful emotion. It would mix with the crowd of men, affect no singularity, take part in the innocent festivities of life, interest itself in all that interested men at large, and yet, amidst all, remain consecrated and pure; in the world, by sympathy and active brotherhood, but not of it; human in its outward form, but heavenly in its elevation and spirit.

The rejoicings had continued for some evenings, when a misfortune happened that threatened to disgrace the bridegroom and his family for life in the eyes of their neighbours. The supply of wine ran out. As in all wine-growing countries, the population were not only temperate, but simple in their whole living, beyond what the natives of a colder climate can imagine. Yet wine was their symbol of joy. and festivity." Jotham; in the far-back days of the Judges, had praised it as "cheering God and man," and among other passages, a Psalm had spoken of it as making glad the heart, though its immederate use had been condemned in many Scriptures. "Wine is the best of all medicines," said a Hebrew proverb: "where wine is want, ing, doctors thrive." "May there be always wine and life in the mouth of the Rabbi," was one of the toasts at their festivities. But, withal, this referred only to its moderate use. Among the parables in which the people delighted, one ran thus-" When Noah planted his vineyard, Batan came and asked him what he was doing? Plant, ing a vineward," was the reply."" What is it for?' "Its fruits, green or dry, are sweet and pleasant: we make wine of it, which gladdens the heart." I should like to have a hand in the planting,' said Satan; 'Good," replied Noah. Satan then brought a lamb, a lion, a sow, and an ape, killed them in the vineyard, and let their blood run into the roots of the vines. From this it comes that a man, before he has taken wine, is simple as a lamb, which knows nothing, and is durab before its shearers; when he has drunk moderately, he grows a lion, and thinks there is not his like; if he drink too much, he turns a swipe, and wallows in the mire; if he drink still more, he becomes a fifthy ape, falling hither and thither, and knowing nothing of what he does. AS WAS ALL

The good and the evil of wine were thus familiar, but we may be certain that only its better side, as enjoyed among a people at once simple and sober, who held excess in abhorrence, and in a household where license was not to be thought of—was seen at the marriage in Cana, and this temperate use of it Jesus cheerfully sanctioned. Mary, with her gentle womanly feeling for the shame of seeming inhospitality that threatened the host, indulged the hope that He whose mysterious birth, honoured by a special star, and the songs of angels, and whose changed look and bearing, since His Jordan visit, could not have escaped her, would now put forth the hidden powers she might well believe Him to have, to brighten the family circle, in whose Hie gentle rebu lost in a hi age in the implied sol Mine hour "woman," last tender lle apart. am much n call of my all the worl Whatsper answer-fo The sup Jews, made stant wash washing th for sandals a host's flo as the Tal jars of ston the door, or green leave water pots filled them of the least His mother and the fre chief man of the gue the brideg S The gl see it, in th it in a new as was fitti brighten th sympathy ships. He phases, ma smile of G To Bauor or as in a famed thr His higher the many,

unknown

this feast

gentle rebuke, that His human relation to her was now merged and lost in a higher. Using an every day form of words, of immemorial age in the nation, with a look of love and tenderness, He waived her implied solicitation aside------ Woman, what is there to me and thee? Mine hour is not yet come." There was no disrespect, in the word

"woman," for He used it afterwards to her, when on the cross, in His last tender offices of love. It was as if He had said, "Our spheres, lie apart. Hitherto you have known me as your Son. Henceforth, I am much more. My divine powers are only for divine ends: at the call of my Father alone, for His glory only. He fixes my hour for all the works He wills me to do, and in this case it has not yet come."

"Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it," said Mary, on hearing His

"The superstitious dread of ceremonial uncleanness, among the answer-for it had no harshness to her. A prati and commune ho to thrive ression of en, affect li, interest brothernly in its 19/10/91 12:

a misforand his wine ran not only ie natives ol of joy. iges, had assages, a s immodne is the e is want: fe in the es. But, parables h planted ? Plant. its, green gladdens id Satan; sow, and into the e he has is dumb is a lion, turns a ecomies a of what 1, 28W. 82 may be at once ousehold rriage in 1. Mary, inhospiose mysrels, and

ould not ie might lose life

Jews, made ample provision necessary in every household, for constant washings of vessels, or of the person. No one atc without washing the hands; each guest had his feet washed on his arrival, for sandals were left outside and only naked feet allowed to touch a host's floor; and the washing of "cups, and jugs, and bottles," as the Talmud tells us; "went on the whole day;" Six great jars of stone, therefore, for such purifications, stood ranged outside the door, or in the chamber; their narrow mouths likely filled with green leaves, as is still the custom, to keep the water cool. ... Fill the water pots with water," said Jesus, adding, when they had carefully filled them to the brim, "Draw out, and take supplies to the governor of the feast." But the water was now glowing wine. His words to His mother and the servants had been unnoticed, by the company, and the fresh supply, when tasted first, as the fashion was, by the chief man of the feast, on whom it fell to see to the entertainment of the guests, was found so good, that he goodhumouredly ralled the bridegroom on keeping the best to the last. <sup>3</sup> The "glory" of Jesus had always shone, to those who had eyes to see it in the spotless beauty of His life, but this was a revelation of if in a new form. It was the "beginning" of His miracles, wrought, as was fitting, in stillness and privacy, without display,-to cheer and brighten those around Him. His presence at such a feast showed His sympathy with human joys, human connections, and human relationships.<sup>11</sup>He taught by it, for the first time, that common life in all its phases, may be raised to a religious dignity, and that the loving mile of God, like the tender blue above, looks down on the whole round of existence. He had not been invited as the chief guest. or as in any way distinguished, for He was not yet The Teacher, famed throughout the land, nor had His miracles begun to reveal His higher claims. But He took the place assigned Him as one among the many, as naturally as the lowliest of the company, and remained unknown till His divine glory, revealed Him van of aniH evolod ferr of the one

the Son of

as a whole.

An India had been with earth

the doubter still stood t the Brahmi

does more

drunk from gifts of frie elaboration

earth, none

which Jesu

wonderful its being fa is well to re exercise, in

ing perhap

at work aro

the stone t

sleeplessly,

each other,

but how my

may offer e

command g

embracing with conste

on the bou

create, but

Suns and p

round sky

mountains,

of their in that they s

ture of fre

intercalatio

are no mor

mystery of joyful as a

fitly marke

ing with w

different fi

outward I

The begi

His miraculous power, indeed, was only one aspect of this "glory. In a far higher sense it was "manifested" in His Person. It was doubtless, amazing to possess such powers, but, that One whose word, or mere will, could command the obedience of nature, should mingle as a friend in an humble marriage festivity, a man amongst men, was still more wonderful. Nothing could better illustrate His perfect manhood, than His identifying Himself thus with the humble incidents of a private circle." He had grown up under the common ordinances of human existence, as a child, a son, a brother, a friend, and a neighbour. As a Jew, He had shared in the social, civil, and religious life of His nation. His presence at this marriage, showed that He continued the same familiar relations to His fellow-men, after His consegration as before it. Neither His nationality, nor education, nor mental characteristics, nor natural' temperament, narrowed His sympathies. Though burdened with the high commission of the Messiah, He retained a vivid interest in all things human. With us, any supreme pre-occupation leaves only apathy for other things. But in Christ, no one faculty or emotion appeared in excess. His fulness of nature suited itself to every occasion. Strength and grace, wisdom and love, courage and purity, which are the one side of our being, were never displayed so harmoniously, and so perfectly, as in Him, but the incidents of this marriage feast show that the other side, the feminine gentleness and purity, which are the ideal virtues of woman. were no less His characteristics. They throw light on the words of St. Paul, "In Him is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, male nor female." He could sublue Pilate by His calm dignity, but He also ministered to the happiness of a village festival. He could withstand the struggle with the Prince of Darkness in the wilderness, and through life, but He wept over the grave of Lazarus. He could let the rich young ruler go his way to perish, if he would, but He sighed as He healed the man that was dumb. He pronounced the coun of Jerusalem, with a lofty sterniess, but He wept as He thought how it had neglected the things of its peace. He craved sympathy, and He showed it with equal tenderness: He was calm amidst the wildest popular tumult, but He sought the lonely mountain for midnight prayer. He sternly rebuked Peter for hinting a temptation, but He blamed His sleep in Gethsemane on the weakness of the flesh. He save away a crown when on the cross, but He was exceedingly sorrowful unto death in the garden. He never used His miraculous powers to relieve Himself, but He provided for the multitude in the wilderness. His judges quailed before Him, but He forgot His dying agonies, to commend His mother to the lifelong care of a friend.<sup>31</sup> He rebuked death, that He might give her son back to the widow; and He took part in the rejoicings of an humble marriage, that He might clevate and sanctify human joys. In the fullest sense He was a man. but not in the sense in which manly virtues are opposed to those of woman, for He showed no less the gentleness, purity, and tenderness glory."

ta It was

bse word.

d mingle

men, was

s perfect

able inci-

non ordiiend, and religious

that He

after His

ation, nor

His sym-Messiah,

us, any But in

fulness of

, wisdom

ur being.

s in Him.

side, the woman,

words of

male nor

He also

ild with-

ness, and

could let

le sighed

dooin of

ht how it

and He

e wildest midmight

, but He

sh. He

ngly sorraculous

e in the

is dying nd. He bw; and le might s a man,

those of

idefness

of the one sex, than the strength and nobility of the other. He was the Son of Man, in the grand sense of being representative of humanity as a whole. Man and woman, alike, have in Him their perfect ideal. An Indian apologue tells us that a Brahmin, one of whose disciples had been perplexed respecting miracles, ordered a flower pot filled with earth to be brought him, and having put a seed into it before the doubter, caused it to spring up, blossom, and bear fruit, while he still stood by, "A miracle," cried the young man. "Son," replied, the Brahmin, "what else do you see done here in an hour than nature, does more slowly round the year?" The wine which the guests had. drunk from the bridegroom's bounty, and possibly from the added gifts of friends, had been slowly matured from the vine by mysterious elaboration, from light, and heat, and moisture, and the salts of the earth, none of which had more apparent affinity to it than the water, which Jesus transformed The miracle in nature was not less real or wonderful than that of the marriage feast, and strikes us less, only by its being familiar. At the threshold of Christ's miraculous works it is well to realize a fact so easily overlooked, A miracle is only an exercise, in a new way, of the Almighty power we see daily producing perhaps, the same results in nature. Infinitely varied forces are at work around us every moment. From the sun to the atom, from the stone to the thinking brain and beating heart, they circulate sleeplessly, through all things, for ever. As they act and react on each other, the amazing result is produced which we know as nature. but how many mysterious inter-relations, of which we know nothing. may offer endlessly varied means for producing specific ends, at the command of God? Nor is there anything more amazing in the works of Christ than in the daily phenomena of nature. The vast universe, embracing heavens above heavens, stretching out into the Infinitewith constellations anchored on the vast expanse like tiny islet clusters on the boundless ocean, is one great miracle. It was wonderful to create, but to sustain creation is, itself, to create anew, each moment. Suns and planets, living creatures in their endless races, all that the round sky of each planet covers—seas, air, sweeping valleys, lofty mountains, and the million wonders of the brain and heart, and life, of their innumerable populations, have no security, each moment, that they shall commence another, except in the continued expenditure of fresh creative energy. Miracles are only the momentary intercalation of unsuspected laws which startle by their novelty, but are no more miraculous than the most common incident of the great mystery of nature. 1 1 mol

The beginning of the public career of Jesus as Messiah at a time so joyful as a household festival was appropriate. His bounteous gift fitly marked the opening of His kingly work, like the fountains flowing with wing at the coronation of earthly kings. But a king very different from earthly monarchs was now entering on His reign. No outward, preparation is made: He has no worldly wealth or rich

Galilee

The moro

and affect

Elisha, H

had been (

for their s a broad p contemned

though the

and of man

Zealot, had

apostle Pa

But hatred

arose, but,

must rather

of the Hou

round him

Jerusalem,

David, and by the hand

for the sins

took a defin

in the New.

may have be from the pro

that the Gal

high-spirited

than other J

rekindled th

of John, had expectation

had aunoun

for His earl

spite of all lo

claimed by t

the prophet

tion for Chr

drawback of humble priv

wards expres

out honour,

fellow towns

one whose lo

them through greater degre

Nazareth,

It is hard

provision to lavish away. Yet, though He has no wine, water itself, at His word, becomes wine, rich as the finest vintage. Till His hour has come, He remains passive and self-restrained, awaiting the moment divinely appointed for His glory shining out among men. Once come, the slumbering power, till now unrevealed, breaks forth, rever to cease its gracious work of blessing and healing, till the kingdem He came to found is triumphant in His death.

The age of Jesus at His entrance on His public work has been very variously estimated." Ewald supposes that He was about thirty-four, fixing His birth three years before the death of Herod. Wieseler, on the contrary, supposes Him to have been in His thirty-first year. setting His birth a few months before Herod's death. Bunsch, Anger, Winer, Schurer, and Renan agree with this: Lichtenstein makes Him thirty-two. Hausrath and Keim, on the other hand, think that He began His ministry in the year A.D. 34, but they do not give any supposed date for His birth, though if that of Ewald be taken as a medium, He must now have been forty years old, while, if Wieseler's date be preferred. He would only have been thirty seven. The statement of the Gospel, that He was " about thirty years of age when Ho began" His public work, is so indefinite as to allow free conjecture. In any case, He must have been thirty-one at His baptism, from His having been born before Herod's death. It was even supposed by Irenaus, from the saying of the Jews, "" They art not yet fifty years old," and from His allusion to the forty six years during which the Temple, had been building, that He was between forty and fifty at His death. Amidst such difference, exactness is impossible, and it scems safest to keep to the generality of St. Luke, by thinking of Jesus as about thirty-though not younger-at His baptism. The stay at Cana seems to have been short." It may have been only a family visit, or it may have been, that, from some cause, Mary had gone for a time to live there, but, in either case, Jesus very soon removed from a locality so little suited to His work, from its isolation, and remoteness from the centres of life and population." He had resolved to make Galilee, in which He was at nome, the chief scene of His labours. He was, moreover, safer there, than either in Judea or Perca. for the hierarchy could reach Him more easily in the one, and the tyranny of Antipas was less restrained in the wild territory of the other. The kingdom He came to set up must grow silently, and by slow, peaceful degrees, like the mustard seed, to which he compared it, and it could not do so in any part so well as in Galilce. Far away from turbulent Judea, He escaped the excitements, more or less political, the insurrections, and wild dreams of national supremacy; ever fermenting at Jerusalem, and avoided exciting suspicion, or having 'His spiritual' aims' perverted by the revolutionary violence of the masses. His kingdom was not of this world. like the Messianic dominion fondly expected by the nation, but the fat mightier reign of "The Truth." The West and the analysis in the renten degreganicania magnices, and and mailthe

Galilee was, however, in some respects, an unfavourable centre. The morose and self-sufficient Jarusalemites ridiculed its population, and affected to think that no prophet had risen in it, though Elijah, Elisha, Hosea, and Nahum,—the first, the greatest of the prophets, had been Galilæans. The wits of the capital, moreover, ridiculed them for their speech, for they substituted one letter for another, and had a broad pronunciation. Their culture, and even their capacity were contemned, though so many prophets had risen amongst them, though they could brast of Barak, the conqueror of the Canaanites, and of many famous Rabbis, and though the high minded Judas, the Zealot, had shed honour on them, in Christ's own day, as the great apostle Paul, sprung, from a Gischala family, was to do hereafter.

It is hard to know how early the Rabbinical fancy of two Messiahs arose, but, if it had already taken any shape in Christ's lifetime, it must rather have hindered than helped His great work. The Messiah of the House of Joseph was to appear in Galilee, and, after gathering round him the long-lost ten tribes, was to march, at their head, to Jerusalem, to receive the submission of the Messiah of the House of David, and, having united the whole kingdom once more, was to die by the hands of Gog and Magog, the northern heathen, as a sacrifice for the sins of Jeroboam, and of the nation at large. But these fancies took a definite form only in a later age, and we find no trace of them in the New Testament, Who can tell, however, how old their germs may have been? They show, at least, what the application of passages from the prophets to Christ's first appearing in Galilee also implies. that the Galileans cherished the great promise of the Messiah. Frank, high spirited, and comparatively unprejudiced, they were more ready than other Jews to listen to a new teacher, and the thousands who had rekindled their zeal on the banks of the Jordan, under the preaching of John, had already on their return, spread around them the excited expectation of an immediate advent of the Messiah, which the Baptist had announced. But though the soil was thus specially favourable for His earlier work, the fame of Jesus was hereafter to spread, in spite of all local prejudices, till, at last, He should hear Himself proclaimed by the multitude, even in the streets of Jerusalem; as (Jesus,) the prophet of Nazareth of Galilee. And I self the mire out to pour

Nazareth, itself, like Cana, lay too far from the centres of population for Christ's great work, and there was, besides, the inevitable drawback of its having known Him during the long years of His humble privacy. He, doubtless, felt, from the first, what He afterwords expressed with so much feeling, that "a prophet is not without honour, save in his own country, and in his own house." His fellow townsmen, and even His own family, could not realize that one whose lowly position and upmarked career, they had, had before them through life, could be so much above them. It was, in infinitely, greater degree, the same pettiness, and inability to estimate the

but the

itself,

noment

110 Onco

rever

ingdom

en very ty-four,

seler, on st year,

Anger, kes Him

that He

give any ken as a

l'ieseler's

n. The

igd when ofecture.

rom His

posed by

fty years

hich the

d fifty at le and it

nking of

been only

Mary had

rery soon

its isola-

ion. Og He

the chief

either in

ily in the wild ter-

ist grow seed, to e excite-

reams of

ed excit-

revolu-

is world

At the

limestone labour in ground, la apparentl by too nei Caperni

"highway

but still k

through it

kets of the

and viney The town see in the charge of erous ente on its ster the ruin w It was h fisher-peor

classes and

traffic. It

well as Je

centurion, lousness in after a tin

circle; the daily affair An hour in April, a From their

the Lake i

ture groun

black buff places, up

masters, th

seen these are not use

in shape, t

indeed, it

from the a six and th

twelve. 7

lofty prec

Tarichaa,

Merom.

familiar justly, that, in our own age, made John Wilson write, that as "the northern Highlanders do not admire 'Waverley,' so I presume, the south Highlanders despise 'Guy Mannering.' The Westimoreland peasants think Wordsworth a fool. In Borrowdale, Southey is not known to exist.' I met ten men in Hawick who do not think Hogg a poet, and the whole city of Glasgow think me a madman." With such counteracting prejudices, Nazareth was altogether unsuited for the longer residence of Jesus, and hence He seems never to have returned to it, after His baptism, except for a passing visit.

He chose for His future home the shores of the Lake of Galilee, at that time the most populous, as they are still the most delightful, part of Palestine. Henceforth, the "jewel" of its banks—Capernaum. —became "His own city," and for a time, at least, His mother and His "brethren" seem also to have made it their home, though a little later, we find Jesus living permanently as a guest in the house of Peter, as if they had once more left it, and returned to Nazareth. From this centre His future work was carried on. From it He set out on His missionary journeys, and He returned to it from them to find a welcome and a home.

Capernaum lay on the western shore of the Sea of Galilce, at the spot, a little way from the head of the Lake, where the shore recedes in a more westerly arc, forming a small cape, from which the view embraces the whole coast, in every direction. It could never have been very large, for Josephus only once mentions it, as a village to which he was carried by his soldiers, when hurt by a fall from his torse, which had stuck in the marsh at the head of the Lake. The name does not occur in the Old Testament. Capernaum, was the boundary town between the territory of Philip and Antipas, and, as tuch, had a custom house and a garrison. One of the officers stationed for a time in it, a foreigner, and, doubtless, a proselyte, had, in Christ's day, built a fine synagogue, as a mark, at once of his friendly feeling to the Jewish nation, and of homage to Jehovah. The whitewashed houses were built of black basalt or lava, which still lies in boulders, here and there, over the heighbourhood, and gives the ground a dark appearance when the tall spring grass has withered and left it bare. The synagogue, however, was of white limestone. Great blocks of chiselled stone, finely carved, once its frieze, archi-trave, and cornices, still lie among the waving thistles, where the town once stood. The walls are now nearly level with the surface, most of the pillars and stones having been carried off to build into house walls, or burn for lime, though some of its once double row of columns, hewn in one block, and of their Corinthian capitals, and massy pedestals, still speak of its former splendour. Bound the synagogue, and stretching up the gentle slope behind, stretched the streets and squares, covering an area of half-a-mile in length, and a quarter in breadth, the main street running north, to the neighbourit r degree, the same perimes and making to estimate

At the north end of the town, two tombs yet remain; one built of limestone, underground, in an excavation hollowed out with great labour in the hard basalt; the other, a rectangular building, above ground, large enough to hold a great number of bodies, and once, apparently, whitewashed, to warn passers by not to defile themselves by too near an approach to the dead.

rite, that so, I pre-

he West-

Southey

not think

adman."

unsuited

r to have

lalilce, at alightful,

pernaum.

ther and

ch a little house of Nazareth.

it He set

them to

ee, at the e recedes

the view

ver have village to from his ke. The was the s, and, as icers stayte, had,

e of his

Jehovah. hich still

nd gives withered

mestone.

ze, archihere the surface,

uild into

e row of

tals, and the syn-

ched the

th, and a ighbour-

Capernaum, in Christ's day, was a thriving, busy town. The "highway to the Sea," from Damascus to Ptolerais,—now Acre, but still known by the former name, in the seventeenth century,—ran through it, bringing no little local traffic, and also opening the markets of the coast to the rich yield of the neighbouring farms, orchards, and vineyards, and the abundant returns of the fisheries of the Lake. The townsfolk, thus, as a rule, enjoyed the comfort and plenty we see in the houses of Peter and Matthew, and were even open to the charge of being "winebibbers and gluttonous," which implied generous entertainment. They were proud of their town, and counted on its steady growth and unbounded prosperity, little dreaming of the ruin which would one day make even its site a question.

It was in this town that Jesus settled, amidst a mixed population of fisher-people, grain and fruit agents, local tradesmen, and the many classes and occupations of a thriving station on a great line of caravan traffic. It was a point that brought Him in contact with Gentile as well as Jewish life. Households like that of Peter, proselytes like the centurion, and the need of a large synagogue, imply a healthy religlousness in not a few, but the wee pronounced on the town by Jesus, after a time, shows that whatever influence He may have had on a circle, the citizens as a whole were too much engrossed with their daily affairs to pay much heed to Him.

An hour's walk behind the town leads to gentle hill slopes, which, in April, are thinly covered with crisp grasses, and stalks of weeds: From their top, the eye follows the course of the Jordan as it enters the Lake in two streams, through a marshy delta, the favourite pasture ground for herds of huge, ungainly, fierce, and often dangerous black buffaloes, which delight to wallow by day in such marshy places, up to the neck in water or mud, and return at night to their masters, the Arabs of the Jordan valley. Jesus must often have seen these herds luxuriating idly in this swampy paradise, for they are not used for labour in the district round the Lake, though they are sometimes set to drag the plough in the parts near the Waters of Merom. The Lake itself, stretched out, north and south, like a pear in shape, the broad end towards the north; or like a lyre, from which, indeed, it got its ancient name of Chinneroth. Its greatest width, from the apcient Magdala on the west side, to Gergesa on the east, is six and three-quarter miles, and its extreme length, a little over twelve. There are no pine-clad mountains, no bold headlands, no lofty precipices; the hills,-except at Khan Minyeh, the ancient Tarichala, a little below Capernaum, where there is a small cliff,the much state on it is nd and the first reasons down and the first and the rise gradually in a dull uniform brown from the Lake or from a fringe of plain; on the south and east to about 1,000 feet on the north-west to about 500. 10 No prominent peak breaks the outline, but the ever-changing lights, and the rich tints of sunrise and sunset, prevent monotony. From the south of the Lake, the top of Hermon. often white with snow, stands out sharp and clear, in the bright sky, as if close at hand, and, towards the north, the twin peaks of Hattin crown a wild gorge, a little way below Capernaum. On the eastern side the hills rise in a barren well, seamed with a few deep ravines. black basalt predominating, though varied here and there by the lighter grey limestone. No trees, no village, no spots of cultivated land break the desolation which spreads like a living death over the landscape, except along the narrow stripe of green, about a quarter of a mile in breadth, that fringes the Lake. It was among these waste and lonely hills that Jesus often retired to escape the crowds which often oppressed Him. The hills on the western side slope more gently, and rise and fall in rounded tops, such as mark the softer limestone. The line of the shore, in the upper part of the Lake is broken into a series of little bays of exquisite beauty on old out bas in The Rabbis were wont to say that God had made seven seas in the land of Canaan, but had chosen only one for Himself-the sea of Galilee Josephus rightly called the land on its borders, "the crown" of Balestine ... The plain of Gennesareth begins at Khan Minych. about two miles below Canernaum, filling in the bow-like recess. which the hills make from that point to Magdala. III, is as romantic as beautiful for the ravine at its southern end leads, at a short distance to the towering limestone cliffs of Arbela on whose heights numerous eagles now build, among the airy caverns, once the fortrees alternately of robbers and patriots, to whom the valley offered a way to the Lake. Gonnesareth was the richest spot in Palestine: five streamlets from the neighbouring hills quickening its rich dark volcanic soil, into amazing) fertility. ... It measures only about two and a half miles from north to south, by about a mile in depth, but, in the days of Christ, it must have been enchantingly beautiful ""Its soil" says Josephus, "is so fruitful that all kinds of trees grow in it. Walnuts flourish in great plenty; there are palm-trees also, which require heat, and figs and olives, which require a more temperate air. Nature seems, as it were, to have done violence to herself, to cause the plants of different lands to grow together. . Grapes and figs ripen for ten months in the year, and other fruits fill up the other months." No wonder the fruits of Gennesarcth put to shame all else in the markets of Jerusalem. Its soil is still fertile in the extreme, and it lies between five and six hundred feet below the Mediterranean. which makes it very warm, Wheat, barley, millet, rice, melons, grapes, the common yegetables, tobacco, and indigo fourish, and date nalms, figs, citrons, and oranges, are not wanting, Gennessreth melons are exported to Damascus and Acre, and are greatly prized.

The ole rank lu swhen th would h is so mi the othe Gennesa out the summer sleep in months. ous, and liarvest j charming moist he and some various k The sh E.which th and the s each May whole lan the shore fisheries. South of Town,"the Roma a had to see arefuge in Tiberias y and Beths south ros God"-no Then cam liuge arser motley, bu To the nor named, it: sephus as on the oth robuilt, an the hands alay Gerges The lands almost des small and white town and helter

动的机

BT mon

nithe

e; but t, pre-

rmor.

it ekv.

Hattan

wince,

byothe

tivatod

ver the rter of

maste

which

softer

li buar s in the

esea Tot

crown"

Hinyeh,

recess, omantic

ort dis-

heights

fortrees

d a way ae: fixe ark volo and a t, in the ts soil," voin git.

hich) re-

rate air.

o cause s ripen onths:"

inothe

, and it ranean,

melons, sh. and

esareth

prized.

The oleanders, and wild figs, palms, &c., rise, here and there, in rank luxuriance, and the re-can be no doubt that, in former times, when the whole soil was carefully tilled; few semi-tropical plants would have failed to grow. The climate of the lake shore, generally, is so mild even in winter, that snow seldom falls. In summer, on the other hand, it is oppressively hot, for, except at the plain of Gennesareth, which enjoys cool breezes from Lebanon, the hills shut out the west wind, which almost alone abates the intensity of the summer in Palestine, and hence the people of Tiberlas are glad to sleep in shelters of straw or leaves on their roofs, during the hot months. Melons ripen four weeks earlier than at Acre and Damasous, and though wheat is not so early ripe as at Jericho, where the harvest is in May, it is ready for the sickle in June. A spot so moist heat causes, along the marshy lake edge, a prevalence of fever. and sometimes brings the pestilence, and ophthalmia and sickness of avarious kinds are only too common at this all such the second with the The shores of the plain are white with myriads of little shells, over Ewhich the transparent, crystal-like waters rise and fall with the wind. and the side next the hills is shut in by a fringe of cleanders rich. each May, in red and white blossom. In the days of Christ the whole landscape was full of life. Busy towns and villages crowded the shores, and the waters swarmed with boats, employed in the fisheries, which even gave their names to several of the towns. South of Capernaum lay the busy city of Tarichæa or Pickling the Romans, a generation later, in a deadly sea-fight on the Lake, and a had to see eight thousand of its citizens, and of those who had taken refuge in it, slain, and nearly forty thousand sold as slaves? It and Tiberias were the two ports in which the fishermen of Capernaum and Bethsaida found a ready sale for their freights. A little further south rose the houses of Magdala; or Migdal-El-"the Tower of "God"-now Medschel, -the home of the Mary who bears its name. Then came Tiberias, with its splendid palace, grand public buildings, huge arsenal, and famous baths, glittering in the bright sunshine; its motley, busy population; and, beyond, rose, still, town beyond town. To the north, on the slope of the hills a short way off, lay Chorazin, named, it might seem, from the "Coracin" fish mentioned by Josephus as found in its neighbourhood. At the head of the Lake. on the other side of the Jordan, Bethsaida-"the Fisher's Town"rebuilt, and re-named Julias, by the tetrarch Philip, was fresh from othe hands of the masons and sculptors, and along the eastern shore lay Gergesa Gamala, Hippos, and other swarming hives of men: The landscape is now very different. The thickly peopled shore is almost deserted. Tiberias, then so magnificent, has shrunk into a small and decaying town, like every place under Turkish rule; the white towns and villages, once reflected in the waters, have disap-为为为值任 经内部中国的中国的 经估计 化力和率 经约约的 网络为 机力力和 网络小子 化合物化合金

peared; the fleets of fishing boats are now replaced by one solitary crazy boat; the richly wooded hills are bare; the paradise-like plains are overgrown with thorns and thistles. The shore, varied by stretches of sand, intervals of white tiny shells, shingle with larger shells, here and there, and great beds of black basait, which show the volcanic nature of the district, as do, also, the warm baths at Tiberias, is silent. Next the water, reeds and rushes grow in long reaches, in the flatter swampy parts—a favourite haunt of the pelican, and many other birds, but, above all, of the turtle dove—the bird dearest from of old to the Jew. The whole must have been beautiful, however, in former days, to make the Emperor Titus compare it with the Lake of Neufchatel, in Switzerland, though, nowadays, the comparison seems fanciful.

It was in Capernaum that Jesus chose His home, in the midst of this life and heauty, beside the gleaming Lake, embosomed deep on this, its western shore, in soft terraced hills, laughing with fruitfulness; the higher hills of Upper Galilee rising beyond, and the majestic Hermon closing the glorious landscape. The view over the waters showed the steep slopes, now yellow limestone, now black basalt, which led up to the Gaulonitis country. Capernaum was the town of His three chief apostles Peter, John, and James, and also of Andrew. Here He healed the centurion's slave, and raised the daughter of Jairus; called Matthew from the booth where he took the customs dues, and healed the mother-in-law of Peter. From a boat near the shore, close by, He preached to the crowds, and it was in the waters off the town that He vouchsafed to Peter and his brother the miraculous draught of fishes.

The whole neighbourhood, indeed, is sacred to the memory of Jesus The Lake of Galilee had been closen by God for Himself. and honoured above all seas of the earth, in a sense which the Rabbis little dreamed. The men, the fields, the valleys round it, are immortalized by their association with the Saviour. There were the vineyards, on the hill slopes, round which their lord planted a hedge, and in which he built a watch-tower, and dug a wine-press. There were the suary hills, on which the old wine had grown, and the new was growing, for which the householder would take care to provide the new leather bottles. The plain of Gennesareth was the enamelled meadow, on which, in spring, ten thousand lilles were robed in more than the glory of Solomon, and where, in winter, the grass was cast into the oven. It was on such pastures as those around, that the shepherd left the ninety-and-nine sheep, to seek, in the mountains, the one that was lost, and bring it back, when found, on his shoulders; rejoicing. The ravens, that have neither storehouse nor barn, daily sailed over from the cliffs of Arbela, to seek their food on the shore of the Lake, and from the same cliffs, from time to time, flew forth the hawks, to make the terrified hen gather her chickens under her wings The orchards were there in which the fig-tree grew, on which the dresse which the fowls of t hills of G the weath text for th sky is red glowing, b ing from would be seen drivin bours warn sailing nor of coming many of th of Jesus. the rich tra lonian carp way to the and dresser in Julias, berias, at tl be called . Salome live and the int the all-obse It was th Antipas, or of the Lak Jesus select with His r already gat ently set on return, He th. town, i and his mo shore of the

March 12/210

et attitute die die die the die the die die the fraid the solution die we die die we we fisherman's

Dall Somerly all

THE LEFT OF CHURCH

THE LIFE OF CHRIST. 843

2 200

litary

plains

ed by larger

show

ths at long

s peli-

e-the

been

coni-

nowa-

idst of

ep on uitful-

d the

er the black

n was

s, and raised

ere he

From

it was

nd his

pry of

mself,

Rabbis

mmor-

vine-

e, and

e were

w was

le the melled

ed in s was at the

itains, ilders, daily shore forth r her

which

the dresser of the vineyard, in three years, found no fruit, and in which the grain of mustard seed grew into so great a tree that the fowls of the air lodged in its branches. Across the Lake, rose the hills of Gaulonitis, which the idly busy Rabbis watched for signs of the weather. A murky red, seen above them in the morning, was a text for these sky-prophets to predict "foul weather to-day, for the sky is red and lowering," and it was when the sun sank, sed and glowing, behind the hills in the west, that the solemn gossios, returning from their many prayers in the synagogue, made sure that it would be "fair weather to morrow." It was when the sea-cloud was seen driving over the hill-tops from Ptolemais and Carmel that neighbours warned each other that a shower was coming, and the clouds sailing north, towards Safed and Hermon, were the accepted earnest of coming heat. The daily business of Capernaum, itself, supplied many of the illustrations so frequently introduced into the discourses of Jesus. He might see in the bazaar of the town, or on the street, the rich travelling merchant, who exchanged a heavy load of Babylonian carpets for the one lustrous pearl that had, perhaps, found its way to the Lake from distant Ceylon. Fishermen; and publicans, and dressers of vineyards passed and re-passed each moment. Over in Julias, the favourite town of the tetrarch Philip; below, in Tiberias, at the court of Antipas, lived the magnates, who delighted to be called "gracious lords," and walked in silk robes. The young Salome lived in the one town; her mother, Herodias, in the other; and the intercourse between the two courts could not have escaped the all-observing eye of Jesus, as He moved about in Capernaum. It was this town, on the border between the districts of Philip and Antipas, on the great highway of commerce and travel, by the shore of the Lake, in the midst of thickly sown towns and villages, that Jesus selected as His future home. He seems, at first, to have lived with His mother and His brethren, and the few disciples He had already gathered, but His stay, at this time, was short, for He presently set out on His first Passover journey to Jerusalem. On His return, He appears to have made His abode, as often as He was in th. town, in the house of Peter, who lived with his brother Andrew and his mother-in-law. It had a courtyard before it, and was on the shore of the Lake, but it was, at best, only the home of a rough-handed fisherman's household.

いうすずたう すび エモン よどう・

1.056

ar <sup>11</sup> 180 18 bit 199 fullt it of it with an annih of the action of the second second of the second bits on bit

VISIT TO JERUSALEM. Accounting S. Harris Mainting of THE choice of Capernaum by Jesus as His future centre was significant. John had chosen the "terrible wilderness," with its "vipers and scorpions, and drought." Jesus selected the district spoken of as "the garden of God," and "Paradise." John had lived amidst the silence of desolation: Jesus came to a centre of business and travel, to live amidst men .... John kept equally aloof from priest, prince, or governor, from Rome and from Jerusalem: Jesus settled in a garrison town, noted for business, and near Tiberias, with its Idumean prince, the future murderer of the Baptist, and its gay courtiers. The contrast marked the vital difference between His work and that of His herald. He was to wear no prophet's mantle like John; but the simple dress of other men: to lay no stress on fasts, to enforce no isolation from any class, for He came to all men irrespective of class or nation. JITCH the train and the train the transferred the train and the the

Jesus had come, in fact, to preach a Gospel of which the glorious panorama around Him was the fit emblem. The "old wine" of Judaism, which had in a measure characterized the spirit of John was to te replaced by the "new wine of the kingdom of God." John had sought to establish that kingdom anew on a Jewish foundation, by trying to blend together the spiritual and the external. While breaking away in some respects from the old theocracy, he had sought to build up a new outward constitution for Israel alone, and had imposed it, with its burden of fastings, washings, and endless legal requirements, in part, on the nation at large, and in all its severity, on himself and his disciples. He had proposed to heal the wounds of mankind by an unnatural withdrawal from the world, and by the austerities of ascetic observance. For this religion of endless, hopeless, struggle after legal purity, which carried with it no balm for the heart, and enforced morbid isolation, Jesus, by His settling in Capennaum, substituted that of peace and joy, and of a healthy intercourse with mankind, and citizenship in the great world. The religion of John was national, local, and unsatisfying, and marked by the spirit of caste: that of Jesus offered the splendid contrast of a faith which rose high over all that had hitherto been known; Suited alike for the peasant and the prince, it cared nothing for outward position, or the changes of states or nationality, but sought only to meet the wants and longings of man, in the inner infinite world of the heart and spirit, which no Herod could reach. Recognizing all good, wherever found, it gladly drew to itself all that was true and pure, and rejoiced to ally itself with the gifts which dignify human nature. 'The friend of man, it saw in every soul a pearl, hidden or visible, and ennobled every Tonour lifted n it was ural sel reconci religion trouble religion the plec guese I terrors, hushed of the s in the s Star of 185 The s had reso to do so could he lections message the town this resu fitted be to be op now, at centre ar commiss capital, a The m was eater covered in hills lit u volvulus. glories. f here, was off at the in the lan air, and t Jerusalen sheep, go the Jorda from "th Mount of ing away. charge sat alone, we innon.

Luitrel .

13:29: 31 3

alterir

monn

vas sig-

oken of amidst

ess and priest,

its Idu-

urtiers.

and that

bn; but

force no

of class

glorious

of Juda-

ohn had

tion, by te break-

ought to

imposed

require-

on him-

of man-

steritics

struggle

art, and

th manohn was

of caste:

ose high

peasant

changes nd long-

t, which

bund, lit

to ally

of man, d every Nonourable human calling by enlisting it in the service of God. It hifted men above care for the world or inclination to seek it, because it was not a religion of outward forms, of harsh legalities, or unnatural self-infliction and isolation, but the religion of peace and joy in reconciliation with God, and the calm of jarring nature within—a religion which gave calm is amidst all want, and reflected the untroubled image of heaven ... the soul, amidst suffering and trial—a religion which laid the agitations and cares of the bosom to rest, by the pledge of divine love and pity. The sweet fancy of the Portuguese mariner, who, after rounding Cape Horn, amidst storm and terrors, found that the ocean on which he had entered, lay, as if hushed asleep before him, and ascribed its calm to the glittering form of the southern cross shining down on it, was to be turned into fact, in the stillness of the hitherto troubled soul under the light of the Star of Bethlehem.

The stay of Jesus in Capernaum at this time was very short. He had resolved to attend the Passover, and only waited till it was time to do so. No details have been left us of this carliest ministry, but it could hardly have been encouraging, for even at a later date its recollections waked painful thoughts. The determination to carry His message beyond the narrow and ungracious circle of Capernaum, and the towns around, to a wider sphere, would be only strengthened by this result. Jerusalem, with its schools and Temple, was the place fitted beyond all others for His working with effect. He did not wish to be openly recognized as the Messiah as yet, but it was imperative now, at the opening of His ministry, that He should visit the great centre and heart of the nation, and unostentatiously open His great commission. The whole country looked to Jerusalem as its religious capital, and an impression made there would react everywhere.

The month of April, on the eve of the 15th of which the Passover was eaten, was the bright spring month of the year. "The plains were covered with rich green, for it was the "earing month," and the grey hills lit up with red anemones, rock roses, red and yellow,—the convolvulus, marigold, wild geranium, red tulip, and a hundred other glories, for it was the "month of flowers." The cuckoo, unseen, as here, was heard around: our thrush and sweet-voiced blackbird flew off at the approach of a passer by: the voice of the turtle was heard in the land: the song of the lark flooded a thousand acres of upper air, and the pastures were alive with flocks and herds. The roads to Jerusalem were already crowded when the month began. Flocks of sheep, goats, and cattle from Bashan, daily passed over the fords of the Jordan, towards the Holy City, and shepherds with their flocks, from "the pastures of the wilderness," between Bethany, on the Mount of Olives, and the Dead-Sea, or from the south country stretoning away from Bethlehem, were in great excitement to bring their charge safely to the Temple market, for one hundred thousand lambs, alone, were needed, besides thousands of sheep and oxen. The roads and bridges on the main lines of travel through the whole country had been repaired; all tombs whitewashed, to gn ard those coming to the feast from defilement, by unconscious approach to them: the fields examined, to weed out whatever illegal mixtures of plants defiled the land: and the springs and wells cleansed for the wants of apprending and the pilgrims, no less than to secure their legal purity. Jerusalem was in its glory." The whole population was astir from the earliest morning, to enjoy the cool of the day and the excitements of the season. The hills of Moab were hardly purple with the dawn before the Temple courts were crowded, and by the time the sun rose from behind the Mount of Olives, leaving the morning clouds to float off and lose themselves in the deep valley of the Dead Sea, the business of the day had fully begun. The golden roofs and marble walls of the Temple reflected a dazzling brightness; the King's Pool, beyond the Tyropcon, seemed molten silver, and the palms, cypresses, olives, and figs, of the palace gardens, and among the mansions of the rich, on Zion and round the city, bent in the soft air. The concourse at the hour of morning prayer was immense, but it grew even greater as the day advanced. The streets were blocked by the crowds from all parts, who had to make their way to the Temple, past flocks of sheep, and droves of cattle, pressing on in the sunken middle part of each street reserved for them, to prevent contact and defilement; Sellers of all possible wares beset the pilgrims, for the great feasts were, as has been said, the harvest time of all trades at Jerusalem, just as, at Mecca, even at this day, the time of the great concourse of worshippers at the tomb of the Prophet, is that of the busiest trade among the merchant pilgrims, who form the caravans from all parts of the Mohammedan world, I anatus a structure barrot or hereof

Inside the Tomple' space, the noise and pressure were, if possible, worse. Directions were posted up to keep the right or the left, as in the densest thoroughfares of London. The outer court, which others than Jews might enter, and which was, therefore, known as the Court of the Heathen, was in part, covered with pens for sheep, goats, and cattle, for the feast and the thank-offerings. Sellers shouted the merits of their beasts, sheep bleated, and oxen lowed. It was, in fact, the great yearly fair of Jerusalem, and the crowds added to the din and tumult, till the services in the neighbouring courts were sadly disturbed. Sellers of doves, for poor women coming for purification, from all parts of the country, and for others, had a space set apart for them. "Indeed, the sale of doves was, in great measure, secretly, in the hands of the priests themselves: Hannas, the high priest, especially, gaining great profits from his dove cots on Mount Olivet." The rents of the sheep and cattle pens, and the profits on the doves, had led the priests to sanction the incongruity of thus turning the Temple itself into a noisy market." Nor was this all. Potters pressed on the pilgrims their clay dishes and ovens for the Passover Lamb; hundreds of traders recommended their wares aloud; shops for wine, oil, salt, and all persons their jo paying to the d for gen the fifte to set ur dava be Purchas to an of they go over, we teen che ter how about ei support. native co rent. stra at the st trade, gav per cent. by tricks bad a nai before a Jesus Father's He had n were und so holy, space, and

could no

cords, an manded t

drove the weretallo

The mon

were ove

the Temp

of That or been due.

His eyes,"

but it is n ness of a supreme e

spell for t

Maccabæu

untry

ing to

: the

its de-

nts of 10 24

from

ments

dawn

ie sin

iuds to

ea. the

narble

Pool.

resses

of the course greater

s from

cks of

part of

ement.

feasts

m, just irse of t trade

l parts

16(1)011

ossible.

toas in others

e Court

ts, and

ed the

was, in

to the

sadly

cation

bart for

in the

ecially.

e rents

led the e itself

the pill-

ndrcds

il, salt.

and all else needed for sacrifices, invited customers, and, in addition. persons going across the city, with all kinds of burdens, shortened their journey by crossing the Temple grounds. The provision for paying the tribute, levied on all, for the support of the Temple, added to the distraction. On both sides of the east Temple gate, stalls had for generations been permitted for changing foreign money. From the fifteenth of the preceding month money-changers had been allowed to set up their tables in the city, and from the twenty-first, --- or twenty days before the Passover, to ply their trade in the Temple itself. Purchasers of materials for offerings paid the amount at special stalls, to an officer of the Temple, and received a leaden cheque for which they got what they had bought, from the seller. Large sums, moreover, were changed, to be cast, as free offerings, into one of the thirteen chests which formed the Temple treasury. Every Jew, no matter how poor, was, in addition, required to pay yearly a half shekelabout eighteen pencemas atonement money for his soul, and for the support of the Temple. As this would not be received except in a native coin, called the Temple shekel, which was not generally current, strangers had to change their Roman, Greek, or Eastern money, at the stalls of the money changers, to get the coin required. The trade gave ready means for fraud, which was only too common. Five per cent. exchange was charged, but this was indefinitely increased by tricks and chicanery, for which the class had everywhere earned so bad a name, that, like the publicans, their witness would not be taken before a court sing but its huntrady training in a management to an Jesus was greatly troubled by this monstrous desecration of His Father's house. He was a young unknown man, and a Galilman: He had no formal authority to interfere, for the Temple arrangements were under the priests alone, but the sight of such abuses, in a place so holy, roused His inmost spirit. Entering the polluted Temple space, and gazing round on the tumult, and manifold defilements. He could not remain impassive. Hastily tying together some small cords, and advancing to the sellers of the sheep and oxen. He commanded them to leave the Temple, with their property at once, and drove them and their beasts out of the gates. The sellers of doves were allowed to take their cages away, but they, too, had to leave. The money-changers fared worst, as they deserved. Their tables were overturned, and they themselves expelled. After long years the Temple was once more sacred to God. Terran act to strend the market That one man should have effected such an amazing act may have been due, as St. Jerome says, "to the starry light which shone from His eyes, and to the divine majesty which beamed from His features." but it is not necessary to suppose such a miraculous aid. The weakness of a guilty conscience on the one side, and the grandeur of a supreme enthusiasm on the other, account for it. All were under a spell for the moment. It was an act such as Mattathias or Judas

Maccabæus might have done, and prophet-like as it was, in such a place, and in such a cause, its unique heroism secured its trimph. The authorities, who were responsible for the abuse so astoundingly corrected, were no less paralyzed than the multitude at large, by the lofty zeal for God shown thus strangely. Rules of a strictness hitherto unknown were erelong announced, and, for the moment, put in force, though, three years later, things had become as bad as ever. No one could henceforth go up to "the hill of the Lord" with a staff in his hard, or with his shoes on his feet, or with money in his girdle, or with a sack on his shoulder, or even with dust on his feet, and no one might carry a burden of any kind through the Temple, or even spit within the holy precincts. It was felt that religion had received a deadly injury by the evils against which the Galilean stranger had thus signally protested, and a vain effort was made to restore the prestige they had themselves so fatally injured.

It was wholly in keeping with His office to act as Jesus had done, As His) Father's House, the (Temple was supremely under His care, and He only exercised His rights and duties, as the Messiah, in cleansing it as He did: It was a sign and commencement of the spiritual cleansing He came to inaugurate: a note struck which disclosed the character of His future work. Zechariah had said that in the days of the Messiah "the trader would no more be in the House of Jehovah," and thus even the prophets, whom the nation honoured, seemed to endorse His act.

The priests could say nothing condemnatory, but could only raise the question why He should have taken it upon Him to assume authority which they claimed. They were irritated beyond bounds, and doubtless indulged their scorn at a "prophet," who took on Himself the duties of the Temple police. Yet the people, by their silence, showed that they approved the act, though it implied condemnation of the high priest and his colleagues, and had attacked a custom sanctioned by age, established by formal authority, and identified with the interests of the Temple and its services. The crowds of pilgrims also honoured the act of the young Galilæan, of whom strange rumours had reached them from the Jordan, instinctively feeling that it was right. Jesus had made His entrance on public notice, in a way that struck the popular imagination, -as a true prophet, who witnessed fearlessly for God. against the desecration of His house. The feeling towards Him was half enthusiastic, half respectful; His enemies were confused and paralyzed. He was the valiant soldier of the Lord of Hosts, and it might have seemed as if the way to an easy triumph were to be expected forthwith. Links int alle the thirt at a

But He and the people had wholly different conceptions of the office of the Messiah. He had acted as He had done from no personal end. His disciples saw that it was consuming zeal for His Father's glory, that had animated Him; a welling up of holy indignation. He had exercised the prophet's office, of striking for the true, and the purc;

a right tuted n corrup carnest times. It was streets. have le have be were, p had He old ami aom of tentatio opening enough glorify to attra or inau the heat of truth The a selves w divine a if. percl raised t and inv things h the Tem If they sanctuar answere enigmat " Destro His pers and a Jew, a standing ing; ami above te equal n sanctuar and Cori istence o ple. It yet finis ta tri.

lingly

y the

therto

force,

o ono

in his

r with

might

in the injury

ly pro-

y had done, s care,

cleans-

iritual

sed the

lays of

ovah,'

ned to

ise the

thority

doubt-

elf the

howed

e high

ned by

terests

ioured

eached.

Jesus

poru-

r God.

m was

d and

and it

to be e office

hlend.

glory,

e had

pure;

right which has been used in all ages, by lofty natures, when instituted means, and the low morality of the times, fail to stem growing corruption Such an act could not be done, without overpowering, upreflecting carnestness, and zeal kindled into a flame, but this divine earnest zeal was not unworthy of the purest, for without it, in fallen times, nothing great can be done. Yet He was the Prince of Peace. It was not His nature to strive, or to make His voice heard in the streets. To have taken the tide of popular feeling at the full, would have led Him to triumphs for which He had no desire, and would have been fatal to His views, instead of "advancing them!""Numbers were, perhaps, willing to have believed that He might be the Messlah, had He announced Himself as such, but the Law had been given of old amidst thunderings and lightnings, and they expected the Kingaom of the Messiah to be proclaimed with equal sublimity." Unostentatious illustrations of divine power, such as healing the sick, opening the eyes of the blind, or the ears of the deaf, were not enough. They desired public and national miracles, which would glorify Israel, and astonish the world. But is was no part of Hisplan to attract the wonder of the crowd, or to minister to national pride, or inaugurate a dispensation of fear or force. His Kingdom was in the hearts of men, not in their outward suffrages; in the calm realms of truth, not in those of political strife, 3104. Asydul and to reported The authorities could take no violent measures, and contented themselves with asking Him for some "sign," to justify His act by its divine authority, and incidentally reveal His claim on their homage, if, perchance, He might prove the Messiah. The question must have raised the sense of His supreme right as consecrated Son of God, and involved the condemnation of those by whom such a state of things had been allowed. Why had they, the appointed guardians of the Temple, been so powerless or negligent against such desceration? If they had thus failed, who but the Messiah alone, could cleanse the sanctuary, not partly, and for a time, but perfectly, and for evert He answered them, therefore, as their Rabbis were wont to do, with an enigmatical sentence, which He left them to unriddle as they could. "Destroy this Temple," said He, doubtless pointing as He did so, to His person,-that Temple of God, pure and sacred beyond all others, " and in three days I will raise it up." The sound of the words to a Jew, and their apparent meaning, were alike audacious. He was standing amid the long and lofty marble arcades of the sacred building; amidst its courts, paved with costliest stones, and rising terrace above terrace; its vast spaces, built up with incredible labour, and equal magnificence, from the valley, hundreds of feet below; its sanctuary, ablaze with gold; its wonderful gates of silver and gold, and Corinthian brass, which were the national pride. The very existence of the nation was identified with the inviolability of the Temple. It had been already building for forty six years, and was not yct finished, for eighteen thousand workmen were still employed on Serviced the prophet's affice, or

1000 t

fanatio

in flar

strine.

silentl

eterna

of His

sense t

the l true S in thes

than an

of His

OJ With

was, by

greatne

wonder

into th

pressed.

townsm

trust H

He had

this cau

Juden,

licans to

favoura

and exc

schools!

was pre-

with Hi

were, do

who fel

priestly

a Roma

many, p

recogniz

Bat Joh

made or

tious ep

"He did

because

as man."

welcome

hearts.

human k

and the

some incomplete parts of it, thirty years after this, and were paid off when their work was done, only a few years before the destruction of the city. The passionate fanaticism for a structure so splendid, and so bound up with the hopes and pride of the nation, was incredible. It seemed to them under the special protection of Jehovah. Antiochus Epiphanes, its great enemy, had perished miscrably and abamefully in Persia. Crassus, who had plundered its treasures, had fallen with his army, amidst the thirsty sands of the desert. Pompey, who had intruded into the Holy of Holies, had been murdered by an Egyptian centurion, and his headless trunk had, been left exposed on the strand of Egypt. To touch the Temple was, in the eyes of the Jew, to incur the vengeance of the Almighty. Perverting the answer of Jesus, therefore, into an allusion to the building which they revered with such a zealous idolatry, they tauntingly reminded Him of the years it had taken to build, and scouted His supposed proposal to destroy and restore it so quickly.

No utterance ever fell from the lips of Jesus, of which He did not forsee the full effect, and this answer, as He knew, was a veiled anticipation of His earthly end. The cry that the Temple was in danger would at any moment rouse the whole race to revenge the insult with the fury of despair, or perish in the attempt. The resentment felt at such words, may therefore be judged. Three years later it was by their perversion that the high priests sought His death, and they were coarsely flung as a taunt against Him, when He hung on the Cross. Nor were they forgotten even afterwards, for they were made an aggravation of the charges against the first martyr, Stephen, as His follower.

But they meant something of deepest significance to the Jews themselves." Though, doubtless, in their direct import a concealed announcement of His own death and resurrection, they had wider applications. " Your whole religion," they implied, "in as far as it rests on this Temple, is corrupt and sunken, but He is already here, who, when that Temple passes away, as pass away it must, will restore it in unspeakably greater glory, and His doing so will be the sign He gives." All this lay in His veiled sentence. "Do you really wish a sign from me, of my divine authority over this Temple? You shall have the highest. Destroy this Temple, which will surely one day, fall, though, while it stands, I wish it to be pure and worthy: destroy it, if you choose, and with it let all your corrupted religion perish: I shall, presently, rebuild it again, with far greater glory than it can now boast, for this Temple is the desecrated and fallen work of men's hands, but mine will be pure: a Temple of the religion of Spirit and truth, which will be established by my resurrection, on the third day, and will be immortal and indestructible.

In the answer of Jesus, indeed, lay, already, the whole future of His Church. The history of His life and of His work is linked to this corliest uterance. The magnificent Temple He that day cleansed was soon to be destroyed, mainly through the guilt of those who sought so n of ened.

vah.

and

had Pom-

od by

osed

of the

swer

y re-

imal

to to 12:0717

d not

nticianger

elt at

as by

crosa.

de an

s His

Jews

cealed

er ap-

who,

ore it n He ish a

shall

day

stroy

sh:

can men's > and day,

f His

this

l was

fanatically to preserve it, with all its abuses. But, even before it rose in flames from the torch of the Roman soldier, or fell, stone from stone, before his tools, another temple, far more wonderful, had risen silently, in the spirits of men, to take its place-a temple pure and eternal; which He had now dimly foreshadowed, at this first moment of His public career. Yet, even the Church was in no such high sense the Temple of God as the mysterious person of Jesus Himself the holiest tabernacle of God amongst men ever vouchsafed-the true Shekinah-the visible Incarnation of the Divine. After the crucifixion and the resurrection, the exact fulfilment of His words. in these two great events, struck the imagination of the disciples more than any other meaning they might have. "He spoke of the Temple of His body." True in other senses, it was pre-eminently so in this. With such an old-prophet-like first appearance, followed up, as it was, by acts of miraculous power, equal, no doubt, in character and greatness, to the examples clsewhere recorded in the Gospels it is no wonder to learn that many believed on Him. Yet He received no one into the circle of His closer personal following from those thus impressed." No Scribe or Rabbi, no wealthy citizen, not even a common townsman of Jerusalem, was called to follow Him. "He did not trust Himself to them," nor honour any of them with the confidence He had shown in some of His Galilæan disciples. Nor did He relax this caution at any future time, for though He gained many friends in Judea, as we discover incidentally, He surrounded Himself with Galilicans to the end of His life. The people of Jerusalem contrasted unfavourably with the simpler peasants of the north : they were curious and excitable, rather than deep and earnest, and the wisdom of the schools, which flourished especially under the shadow of the Temple. was pre-eminently unfitted to understand. Him, or ally itself closely with Him." The keen glance of Jesus saw this from the first. There were, doubtless, many of the rich and influential men of Jerusalem who felt the shortcomings of the prevailing school-wisdom and priestly system, and, fretting uneasily under the rule of a Herod, or of a Roman governor, were well inclined to join a true Israelitish king; many, possibly, who even secretly admired Jesus, and were ready to recognize Him as the Messiah, as soon as they could do so safely. But John who was himself a Galilean, and knew that Jesus had made only Galilæans His confidential friends, reveals, in his sententious epigrammatical way, His estimate of such doubtful support. "He did not trust Himself to them, because He knew all men, and because He needed not that any should bear witness respecting Him, as man." A cheerful witness to Him as the Son of God He always welcomed, when it came freely; but as to the other-He knew men's hearts. He could see that they were willing to honour Him as a human king, and that, only from His wonderful works and miracles. and they, unmistakably, expected a human kingdom at His hands

AUD 70 3414 THE LIFE OF CHRIST. edged to be a Rabble he offened the integrate by a compliment, in-

To rule as a man, over men, it would have been needful to seek the support of the powerful, who would lend themselves for personal ends, and act on mere human maxims. But such men would be no counsellors, helpers, or servants in founding and spreading the Kingdom of Bruthall a basels of bittorna basels halo helpening for the Among the upper class of citizens, however, there was one, the representative of many whose names are unrecorded, who was deeply moved by the words and acts of the young Galilean. He bore the Greek name Nicodemus and was a ruler, or foremost man in the religious world of Jerusalem, a member of its governing class, and, in sentiment and party, a Pharisee. He was, moreover, wealthy, and, thus, in many respects, one whose support, at such a time, would have been carerly grasped at, had Jesus proposed to found a kingdom in which the aids of human expediency were admitted as in political systems. He was a man of advanced years and high position, and might, no doubt, have done good service to Christ's worldly interests among the influential classes, and have even helped towards a coalition of the priests and Pharisees with Him, had His aims been national. and religio-political, like theirs. (a There was inevitably, a strong prejs udice in Jerusalem against a movement which had begun in Galilee. and was supported by Galilæans, and Nicodemus might have beiped to counteract it. It was a condition of his connection with Jesus however, that it should be secret. Constitutionally timid he could not brave the social proscription and ridicule, which would follow (an) open adherence; for, though no overt hostility to the New/Tenchers had yet broken out in the class to which he belonged, it was clear that its doing so was only a question of time. He was honest, and carnest, but could not vet make the sacrifice an open alliance demanded. Indeed, his caution clung to him to the end of Christ's life, for in the only two instances in which his name reappears, his weak indirectness is plainly shown. At a later period, when the rulers had determined to use violence against Jesus; we find him trying to turn them aside from their purpose, by a general question which did not commit: himself, and when all was over, it was not till he had caught spirit. erough from the example of one of his own class. Joseph of Arimathea that he ventured to lown his reverence for the dead Saviour, by bringing his bountiful gift of spices to embalm Him. WAt his first interview, he did not venture to visit Jesus openly, but came to Him by night (1/9, out 1/1) style out to be presented in the travellation becauteone . As a Rabbi, Nicodemus was, necessarily, skilled in the subtle expositions of the Law for which his order was famous, and must have been familiar with the Scriptures throughout, but he had been trained in the artificial explanations of the schools, and was profoundly unconscious of their deeper meaning. Like others, he supposed that the Messiah would set up a theorracy distinguished by zealous fulfilment of the Law; every Israelite, as such, forming a member of it. Greeting Jesus as one whom he, and others in his position, acknowledged t tended own)adı The trac nations Day of . a part al iu the ki self for love and Angels o Hence, h ber of th God to is So far fi demands. so advant thrown h being a J thinking and incre met by an most exac great, as God 70 He somo new whatever, hope to e exact equi both here had a righ gates on th Jostisubi mentally y bornjagain question of idea of bei a Jewish H is like a cl "creating that must 1 and the Ps the prevail In his perp Way connec an unquest Jesus saw

Ar Sugar

12/19

the

onal

e no

ing-

Wise ]

the

eply

the

the

d'in

and,

dom!

itical

rand

coali-

onal.

prej

diles, ciped

could ow an)

acher-

rnest

: d. In- ;

n the lirect-

deter+1

them mmit:

spirit

rima-

ar. by

s first:

Him

SSUM2

expo-

have ained

y un-

fulfil-2

ofeit.

now-

15月17日 頃の 留住日 頃

858

edged to be a Rabbi, he opened the interview by a compliment, intended to lead to the point he had at heart. Any question as to his own admission to the Messiah's kingdom had not crossed his mind. The traditions of his brother Rabbis had taught him that while "the nations of the world would be as the burning of a furnace in the great Day of Judgment, Israel, as such, would be saved;" that "there was a part allotted to all Israel in the world to come," or in other words, in the kingdom of the Messiahan "God had sanctified Israel to Himself for ever," and made every Jew, as such, on a footing, as to His love and favour, with "all the Angels of the Presence, and all the Angels of Praise, and with all the Holy Angels that stand before Him." Hence, he only wished to know the duties required of him as a member of the Messianic kingdom, which Jesus appeared to be sent from God to set upue Christ, in an instant, saw into the speaker's hearti So far from making any attempt to win him or from abating His demands as a compromise in favour of one whose support might be so advantageous, He cut him short by a statement which must have thrown his whole thoughts into confusion." Trusting implicitly to his being a Jew, as a divine title to citizenship in the new theoracy, and thinking only of formal acts by which he might show his avotion. and increase his claim to the favour of God, here and hereafter, he is met by an announcement, that neither national descent, nor the uttermost exactness of Pharisaic observance, nor any good works however great, as such, availed at all to secure entrance into the kingdom of God#oHe had supposed Jesus a Rabbi, and had expected to hear some new legal precepts, but he is told that not only has he no title whatever, as a Jew, to share in the new kingdom; but that he cannot hoperto earn one d Jewish theology knew nothing higher than an exact equivalent in good or evil, for every act. "An eyelfor an eye," both here and hereafter, was its only conception of A legal precision had a right to heaven; the neglect of Levitical rightcousness shut its gates on the soul, reduced a more gradel a Me concile diried a sterne "Jesus broadly told him that this whole conceptions were fundamentally wrong. In the Every man, whatever his legal standing, must be born again, if he would see the kingdom of God. To do so is not at question of outward acts, legal, or moral, but of their motive." ["The idea of dising "thorn again" should not have been incomprehensible to a Jewish Rabbi, for it was a saying of the Scribes that "a proselyte! is like a child new born," and " circumcision of the heart," a.d the "creating a clean heart and renewing a right spirit," are expressions. that must have been familiar to him in the Law, and the Prophets. and the Psalms. But the full meaning of such terms had been lost in the prevailing externalism. He took the words in their literal sensed In his perplexity, he supposed that what was demanded was in some way connected with his nationality, which, he assumed, already opened an inquestioned entrance for him into the theoracy, is we dola all out Jesus saw his embarrassment, and forthwith explained His meaning

As M

belie

have

God's

He w

peace

have

indee

come

darkn

Ged, 1

and to

but he

the ev

At Hi

sanctio

the sel as alto

Lawgi

of that ditions

the nev

offer b

He mo

demand

and pr claims.

seeking His des alone, a royalty

Rabbi.

must co

highest

sympath

Man, w

eternity

eternal

human presence

a higher man am

215 as an o The

-27

13

 $\mathbf{O}^{\dagger}$

futur

.....

-tha

more fully. "The kingdom of God," He told him, "was none the less a true kingdom that it stood aloof from politics, and had none of the outward characteristics of earthly states. It had no civil judges, but it had its laws, and by these all its subjects would hereafter be tried, beyond the grave. It had its conditions of acceptance, also, and these were belief in Himself as its Founder, Legislator, and future Judge, and open confession of that belief by the rite of Baptism, with which Nicodemus was already familiar, from the ministry of John. There could be no admission of any one, high or low, at a secret interview, to be followed by concealment of the relation thus formed with Himself. There must be personal homage and submission to . Him, but it must also be frankly and publicly avowed."

Nor was Nicodemus left to suppose that any outward and formal act, even if inclusive of these demands, would alone suffice. Baptism was but the symbol of a spiritual revolution so complete that it might well be described as a new birth. All men were by nature sinful, and needed a moral transformation, which would make them as naturally seek the pure and holy as they had sought the opposite. Citizenship in His kingdom was a gift of God Himself; the re-creation of the moral nature by His Spirit, as the result of which the soul hungered after good, as, before, after sin.

Nor was Nicodemus to wonder at such a statement. God's influence on the heart was like the flowing wind-free, felt, and yet mysterious. It came as it listed, its presence was felt by its results, but all besides was beyond our knowledge.

Teaching so fundamentally different from all his previous ideas, and involving conceptions so unique and sublime, was for the time incomprehensible. 'The startled listener could only mutter, "How can these things be?" Nicodemus, it seems very probable, was one of the chief men of the religious world in Jerusalem, for the three officers of the Sanhedrim, while it existed, were the President, the Vice-President, and the "Master," or wise man, and Jesus appears to address him as "Master," in subdued reproach at his perplexity. "Art thou," He asked, "the teacher,"-well known and recognized as such-the wise man-even by title, "and dost not know these things? I speak only what I know and have seen, in the eternal world, and you hesitate to believe Me. If I have told you thus of what is matter of experience, and runs its course in the human heart during this earthly life, and you think it incomprehensible, how will you believe if I tell you the higher truths of the kingdom-those heavenly mysteries which concern the plan of God for the salvation of man? No other can reveal such matters, for no man has ever ascended to heaven to learn them; but I am He-the Messiah, foretold, as the Son of Man, by your prophet Daniel,-who have come down from heaven, and, even now, have there my peculiar home and seat." Let Mc vouchsafe you some glimpses of the true nature of 'my. kingdom. I come not as a triumphant earthly monarch, but to suffer.

As Moses lifted up the scrpent in the wilderness, to save those who believed in it, so must I be lifted up—how, you shall know hereafter —that all who believe in Me may not perish, but have eternal life. I have come to carry out, as a suffering Messiah, the high purpose of God's eternal love for the salvation of man."

e the

ne of

dges,

er be

also,

uture

with

John.

et in-rmed

ormal

ptism

might

inful:

em as posite.

e-crea-

ch the 11335 ....

influ-

t mys-

lts, but

ideas,

e time

"How

as one

e three nt, the

ears to lexity.

gnized

these

eternal

thus of

h heart

bw will

-those

lvation

as ever

h. fore-

e come

me and

of my suffer.

213

on to .

"You seek eternal life: it can be had only by believing on Me. He who does so, has his reward even here, in the love, light, and peace which flow from the gift of the Spirit, and are the earnest of future glory. I have not come to judge men, for to judge would have been to condemn. I come to save. They who reject Me are, indeed, judged and condemned already, for when I, the Light, have come to them, they have shown their character by preferring the darkness of sin. Men separate themselves into good and evil, before God, by their bearing towards Me. The evil wish not to be disturbed, and to be let stay in moral darkness, to follow out their sinful desires, but he who seeks the truth comes to Me to have more light. Thus, the evil stand self-condemned: the good rejoice in their growing light, as an earnest of heaven."

The astonishing originality of such language is altogether unique. At His first appearance, though still a young man, without the sanction of success, or the weight of position, or the countenance of the schools, Jesus bears Himself, with calm unconsciousness of effort, as altogether superior to His visitor. A born Jew, He speaks as the Lawgiver of a new theocracy which He has come to found, in place 10 of that of Moses, whom they almost worshipped. He lays down conditions of unbending strictness as indispensable to an entrance into the new community thus to be established, though He has nothing to offer but privation and self-denial, as the earthly result of joining it. He moves at His ease amidst subjects the most august and mysterious: demands the personal homage of those who would enter His kingdom; and promises eternal life as the reward of sincere acceptance of His claims. Repudiating the aids to which others might have looked, seeking no support from the powerful, or from the crowd, to facilitate His design; He speaks of Himself, even now, when obscure and alone, as a king, and shows a serene composure in extending His royalty over even the souls of men. In the presence of a famous Rabbi, He claims to be the light to which all men, without exception, must come, who love the truth. His first utterance anticipates the highest claims of His last. An humble Galilæan, easy of access, sympathetic, obscure, He calmly announces Himself as the Son of Man, whose home is heaven: as knowing the counsels of God from 111 eternity: as the only-begotten Son of the Eternal, and the arbiter of eternal life or death to the world. It is idle to speak of any merely human utterances, even of the greatest and best of our race, in the presence of such thoughts and words as these: they are the voice of a higher sphere, though falling from the lips of one who walked as a inorthen found as a triumphant earlier man is group and astanie) 32 due dulle order of 1916 Evancelle's sua Puer Chrenistin r ramificium wolder dus fadirel induced indenieus ther it not only bagand r with the optimity of orders was sub the universitiered, involutional III r the chois. "We both et. We IXXXV FETPAHOCHORD chains the company

Another lie and FROM JERUSALEM TO SAMARIA. OR STORE TO THE MOLINE

The stay of Jesus in Jerusalem was short; for He had come up only to attend the Passover, and to open His Great Commission in the religious centre of the nation, before the vast throngs of pilgrims frequenting the feast. Nor were the results disappointing, for "many believed in His name, when they saw the miracles which Hed". did? during the week. With the departure of the multitudes, however, He, also, left, to enter with His disciples on His first wide circuit of preaching and teaching, for, though a beginning had already been made in Galilee, it had been on a much smaller scale.

The district thus favoured embraced the whole of Judea, which extended, on the south, to the edge of the wilderness at Beersheba, far south of Hebron, to the lowlands of the Phillistine plain, on the west; to the line of the Jordan and the Dead Sea, on the cast, and, on the north; to Akrabbin, the frontier village of Samaria, which lay to among the hills, twenty-five miles, as the crow flies, from Jerusalem. We have the authority of the Apostle Peter, who very likely shared the journey, that it extended '' throughout all Judea," but we have no record of the towns and villages thus early favoured with the Message of the New Kingdom.

How long the tour lasted we do not know, but it must have occupied some months, for He "tarried" from time to time, at different points. He Himself preaching and teaching, and His disciples baptized ing the converts gained. It was not fitting that Jesus should Himself administer the rite which admitted citizens to His spiritual kingdom Baptism, which had been introduced by John as a symbol of repention. ance and spiritual renewal, in expectation of the coming Messiah, to had now acquired the far grander significance of a profession of faithment in Jesus, as the Messiah already come John's baptism had implied a vow to live in the strict and painful Jewish asceticism of washings [19] fasts, and legal observances; that of Jesus transformed this life into the one of divine liberty and loving joy. "The material baptism, more lob over was but the symbol, and might well be left to His disciples. Himself retaining the far grander ministry of the dispensation of the law Spirit, which cleansed the moral nature, as water did the body. They do had the emblem: He, as became a King, kept in His own hands the mass substance and reality. To preach the Gospel, not to baptize, was hereafter, even in St. Paul's view, the special commission of an Apostle, Humbler agencies could be left to perform the rite to the higher office. Jesus devoted His higher rank, such think a advance The introduction of baptism at the beginning of our Lord's ministry, is mentioned only by St. John. It may be that this is only an in instance of examinatin with the of the close. given by J without an custom, ra in abeyand have been but; more which broi grew popu disarm opt

The ecc had rejecte attended h they had against the with the 1 offence wa authorities their theole nationality had gone e His acts ar course wit assumed g whole nation fate of Joh underoffic Judea: or of the aut handed over the Jordan Pilate's tre and Rabbis deliver hir With such calm prude the publici early bapti It is a made any a did not, als communion could be pr gained, as nater:

imaza-Filio

ili odi

hove.

odii niyan

the site

ims sei

Hed. .

)Wide

ich the ba; edi the Ba

tontive layite

em. Jula

redout

ave and the ad

11: 0 :

entas

tiz-dw

self minute

entani.

ah, 10 ahhrad

lied out

igs, [i9] nto

bre-lob

tes, i Vi the lup

iey oil;

theres

thebro

namon nis-non

antisg

vas 1 andutor

uadi' Ju had instance of the omissions of the Evangelists, and that careful examination would find indirect indications that it not only began with the opening of Christ's ministry, but continued, throughout, till the close. Yet, both St. Matthew and St. Mark mention the command given by Jesus immediately before His ascension, to baptize all nations, without any indication of its being the continuance of an existing custom, rather than the re-introduction of what had been for a time in abeyance. Possibly, the extension of the rite to all nations, may have been the special reason of its being thus prominently noticed, but, more probably, the opposition of the ecclesiastical authorities, which broke out into active hostility as soon as the new movement grew popular, and forced Jesus to leave Judea, made it necessary to disarm opposition by suspending the practice.

The ecclesiastical world of the day-priests, elders, and scribeshad rejected the mission of John. They had inquired into his claims. attended his preaching, and held intercourse with his disciples, but they had not been baptized. They "rejected the counsel of God against themselves," and even went so far, in order to discredit John with the multitude, as to insinuate that he "had a devil." His real offence was having stood aloof from them—the established religious authorities—and he had shocked their self-complacency, and impeached their theology, by declaring the worthlessness, before God, of mere nationality. But Jesus was already treading in the same steps, and had gone even further in independence of the priests and Rabbis, in His acts and teachings; in His cleansing the Temple, and in His discourse, with Nicodemus." Before long, moreover, His movement assumed greater importance than John's, and threatened to draw the whole nation from allegiance to the dignitaries of Jerusalem. The fate of John, moreover, was, probably, in great part, due to his being under official censure, and it is not improbable, if Salim were in Judea, or even in Samaria, as many suppose, that the machinations of the authorities had contributed to his arrest, and to his being handed over to Antipas. He had fled for safety to the west side of the Jordan, to be under Roman law, but it is wholly in keeping with Pilate's treacherous nature to believe, that in his dread of the priests and Rabbis, the Roman governor consented to seize the prophet, and deliver him up to death, as he afterwards did with Jesus Himself. With such a catastrophe in mind, it would have been opposed to the calm prudence with which Jesus at all times acted, to have sought the publicity and excitement soon developed in connection with His 20 58 1 Fee yel 0 4 4 1 Spt. Ja Valli early baptismal gatherings.

It is a question, besides, whether the official opposition which made any action inexpedient that tended to agitate the public mind, did not, also, compel delay in the outward organization of the new communion which Jesus came to found. 'His spiritual kingdom could be proclaimed, its laws and privileges made known, and citizens gained, as disciples, in detail, but their final enrolment as a distinct society would likely have resulted in the instant arrest of their leader. The air was too full of political rumours, in connection with a national Messiah, to have made that organization practicable, while Jesus lived, which was at once announced after His death. If this were so, baptism, as the symbol of entrance into the new society, might be well deferred till that society was actually begun, on the day of Pentecost.

day of Pentecost, Christ's preaching, while journeying throughout Judea, was, no doubt, the same as that of His Galilæan ministry a little later, and as that of John's-"Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." The time had not yet come for His openly pro-claiming Himself as the Messiah, though He acted from the first as such, without formally assuming the title. To have done so would have arrested His work at once, while His acts and words, without compromising Him with the authorities, were such as forced men, and even the spirits. He cast out, to own His true dignity. Indeed, the very nature of a spiritual kingdom like His, founded necessarily only on the free convictions of men, not on assertion or authority, demanded this reticence. The heart of man, which was to be the seat of His empire, could be won only by the spiritual attractions of His life and words. Faith and loving obedience could only spring from sympathy with the truth and goodness His life and words displayed, and this sympathy must be spontaneous in each new disciple, and was often of slow attainment. The kingdom, to use His own illustrations, must grow from almost unperceived beginnings, in slow development, like the mustard seed, and spread by silent and slow advance, like leaven. It was, in its very natu . to come "without observation," unmarked, for it was not political, like earthly kingdoms, but the invisible reign of truth in the souls of men-a growth of opinion --- a kingdom not of this world. In this opening period John still continued his great preparatory

In this opening period John still continued his great preparatory work. He had crossed from the eastern to the western side of Jordan, and was baptizing at Enon, near Salim—a place, the position of which is not positively known. He had, apparently, expected Jesus to begin His work as the Messiah, by an open assumption of the title, and seems to have been at a loss to account for a comparative privacy, so different from his anticipations. The idea of a great national movement, with Jesus at its head, was natural to him, nor does he seem to have realized that the sublimest self-proclamation our Lord could make was by the still small voice of His divine life and words. He was waiting calmly for a signal to retire, which had not yet been given. Nor was it a superfluous work to continue to point the multitudes to the Lamb of God, and thus prepare them, by the weight of a testimony so revered, for accepting Him to whom he thus directed them.

Human nature, however, is always the same: ready to show its weakness, even in connection with what is most sacred. The grand humility to be a n cessor. sion soon had, app shown th some of ] buptism, cally, as between indeed, il ters as a assumed. abundant resulting champion rival. In relieve th Jordan, to given a st peared as John h as, former The gr strikingly sonal sens of Him t Him from given him 'I am not by the nat greatly, th Jesus by clothed w he had ret the people human. humility n kingly sho but He is leads her 1 companior her lord. and Jesus told the es kingdom o promise.

a

der. tha

vhile this iety,

the

hout

try a n of

pro-

st as rould thout

men, deed,

sarily

ority,

e sent His from

ayed, e, and illus-

slow

slow

thout

king-

rowth

ratory

ordan,

on of Jesus title, ivacy, tional

eshe

Lord vords.

, been

multiveight

thus

w its grand

humility of John-inaccessible to a jealous thought-was contented to be a mere voice, sending men away from himself to his great successor." But his followers were not, in all cases, so lowly, and occa-sion soon offered which gave their feelings expression. A Jew, who had, apparently, attended the ministry of both John and Jesus, had shown the common bias of his race by getting into a discussion with some of John's disciples, about the comparative value of their master's baptism, as a means of purification, perhaps both morally and levitically as compared with that of Jesus. A theological controversy between Jews, as between Christians, is dangerous to the temper, and, indeed, the Rabbis denounced quietness and composure in such matters as a sign of religious indifference. Warmth and bitterness were assumed to prove zeal for the Law. Hence, no doubt, there was abundant heat and wrangling on an occasion like this, the whole resulting in a feeling of irritation and jealousy on the part of the champions of John, against One who had thus been set up as his rival. In this spirit they returned to their master, and proceeded to relieve their minds by telling him that He who was with him beyond Jordan, to whom he had borne witness, and to whom he had thus given a standing and influence, had Himself begun to baptize. It e peared like unfair rivalry, and was creating just such a sensation as John had caused at first, for now all were flocking to the new Rabbl, as, formerly, to the banks of the Jordan.

"The greatness of the Baptist could not have been shown more strikingly than in his reply to a complaint so fitted to touch his personal sensibilities. "You are wrong," said he, "in thinking thus of Him to whom you refer. If He meet such success, it is given Him from God, for a man can receive nothing except it have been given him from heaven. You can yourselves bear witness that I said, 'I am not the Christ, but am sent before Him.'" John was regarded by the nation at large as a prophet, and, as such, he was venerated so greatly, that, even after his death, many explained the miracles of Jesus by supposing that He was John, risen again from the dead, clothed with the transcendent powers of the spirit world from which he had returned. . Later still, the ecclesiastical authorities were afraid the people would stone them if they spoke of his baptism as merely human. He was now the foremost man in the land, but his splendid humility never for a moment deserted him."""He may make no kingly show," he continued, "and may have raised no excitement, but He is far above me. You know how the friend of the bride leads her home to the bridegroom-how he goes before the choir of companions that escort her, and brings her, with loud rejoicings, to her lord. I am only that friend, the Kingdom of God is the bride, and Jesus the Heavely Bridegroom. The prophets of old have foretold the espousals of heaven and earth: they are fast approaching; the kingdom of the Messiah is even now at hand, and will fulfil the promise. Let us be glad, and rejoice, and give honour to Him, for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and His wife has made herself ready. The friend listens for the bridegroom's voice, to obey his commands, and promote his joy, and rejoices to hear it, when he has led the bride to him. My joy is fulfilled, in having stirred up the multitude to flock to the ministrations of the Lamb of God, and I rejoice in His being so near me that I seem to catch His volce." He must increase; I must decrease. I am but the morning star; He, the rising sun. He comes from above, and is, thus, above all; I am only a man like yourselves, of the earth, and speak as a man, what I have been sent by God to utter. He is the Messiah from heaven, and speaks what He has seen and heard in the cternal world-speaks from His. own direct knowledge. I only repeat what may be revealed to me, here below. My mission is well nigh over, and I now only finish my testimony before I finally venish. But, flough thus worthy of all honour, few receive His witness: it is an evil generation that seeks a Messiah very different from the holy Messiah of God. Her who believes in Him glorifies the faithfulness of God in fulfilling His promises to send salvation to man. For the Gospel He proclaims is but, the utterance of the precious words of God the Father to our race, and, thus, in believing His Son, we honour Him who sent Him. Prophets and even I, the Baptist, receive the Spirit only in the measure God is pleased to grant, but God pours out His gifts on Him without measure." infolkerno?

Such thoughts filled the speaker's heart with tender adoration, which embodied itself in closing words of wondrous sublimity. "You may well believe on Him," said he, "for the Father has given all things into His hand, — eternal life and outer darkness. He has not only the divine anointing of the Messiah, but the awful power. To be saved by the works of the Law is, moreover, hopeless: faith in Him is the one Salvation. It is momentous, therefore, that you receive Him, for to reject Him is to perish. Blessed is he who believes in Him: he has, even now, the beginnings in his soul of the divine life which survives death and never dies. Woe to him who will not hear His voice. He shall never see life; but the wrath of God will burn against him abidingly!"

Jesus had now remained in Judea about nine months, from the Passover, in April, to the winter sowing time, in December or January. The crowds that came to hear Him, though rarely to receive His "witness," grew dally larger, and His fame spread far and near, even to Galilee. His very success, however, in attracting numbers, made His retirement to another district necessary, for in Judea He was under the keen and unfriendly eyes of the bigoted religious world of Jerusa'em, who saw in Him a second rival, more dangerous than the Baptist. His bearing towards them had been seen in the cleansing of the Temple, and His miracles were likely to give Him even more, power over the people than John had had, and to lead them to a revolt from the legal slavery to Rabbinical rules, in which the, as yet, been spirit of Je and to bray have been called Him but to Jeras

But, apar thomselves Galileo. H curlosity the He had nun regarded res the stony ph disciples, thi gained migh locality on H but by the p The direct Samaria, and generally pre through the Jerusalem, r hand, and of of the beauti of Mounts 6 morning, to: boundary to day. The r cither returni the border di most fiercely. Samaria, had for they were border march been dangero before, but it fensts were oft with more or reprisals from side; and of G as most easily cottages, and

The country more inviting Josephus, if he the great plain reelf

his -

has

multo

oice

nust'

sing

been

His .

me.

1 my seeks

who

"His

ns is

Him.

lithe

Him

o Berrin

ation.

mity.

has

He

ower."

faith

you

who

fitlie

who th of 1 10 11

n the

r or

ly to dofat

cting

orin

goted

more

been

ely to

, and es; in a

) our

fall

man

which the Jerusalem Scribes and Pharisees held them. There had, as yet, been no open hostility, but it was not in keeping with the spirit of Jesus to provoke persecution. His hour had not yet come, and to brave danger at present, when duty did not demand it, would have been contrary to His whole nature. Hereafter, when duty called Him to do so, He would voluntarily come, not to Judea alone, but to Jerusalem, though He knew it meant His death.

But, apart from the kindling jealousy of the Pharisees, the people themselves were sufficient explanation of the return of Jesus to Galileo. He was no mere popularity hunter, flattered by the idle curlosity that drew crowds to see what wonder He might perform. He had numbers, but yet His mission, in the only light in which He regarded results, had been little better than sowing on the wayside, or the stony place, or among thistles and thorns. He had made so few disciples, that John could speak of them as none. The fame He had gained might serve Him elsewhere, but He measured the claims of a locality on His ministrations, not by the numbers who came to Him, but by the proportion won to God.

The direct road to Galilee ran through the half-heathen country of Samaria, and this Jesus resolved to take, though men of His nation generally preferred the circuitous route by Perea, rather than pass through the territory of a race they hated. It ran north from a Jerusalem, past Bethel, between the height of Libona on the left w hand, and of Shiloh on the right, entering Samaria at the south end of the beautiful valley, which, further north, stretches past the foot of Mounts Gerizim and Ebal. He must have started in the early morning, to reach Sychar by noon, and must have been near the in boundary to have done so at all, in the short morning of a winter's set day The road was proverbially unsafe for Jewish passengers, cither returning from Jerusalem or going to it, for it passed through a the border districts where the feuds of the two rival peoples riged most fiercely. The paths among the hills of Akrabbim, leading into Samaria had often been wet with the blood of Jew or Samaritan, for they were the scene of constant raids and forays, like our own border marches between Wales or Scotland, in former days, I It had been dangerous even in the days of Hosea, eight hundred years before, but it was worse now. The pilgrims from Galilee to the feasts were often molested, and sometimes even attacked and scattered; i.t. with more or less slaughter; each act of violence bringing speedy reprisals from the population of Jerusalem and Judea, on the one ca side, and of Galilee on the other; the villages of the border districts, as most easily reached, bearing the brunt of the feud, in smoking of cottages, and indiscriminate massacre of young and old. strem pusicilla

The country, as He approached Samaritan territory, was gradually more inviting than the hills of Southern Judea. "Samaria," says Josephus, "Hes between Judea and Galilee. It begins at a village in the great plain (of Esdraelon) called Ginea (Engannim), and ends at the district, or 'toparch,' of Akrabbim, and is of the same character as Judea. A Both countries are made up of hills and valleys, and are moist for agriculture, and very fruitful. They have abundance of trees (mostly long since cut down), and are full of autumnal fruit, both wild and cultivated. They are not naturally watered by many rivers, but derive their chief, moisture from the rains, of which they have no want. As to the rivers they have, their waters are exceedingly sweet. By reason, also, of the excellent grass, their cattle yield more milk than those of other places, and both countries show that greatest proof of excellence and plenty-they are each very full of people.". In our days, Samaria is more pleasant than Judea. The limestone hills do not drink in the waters that fall on them like those of the south. Rich level stretches of black soil, overflowed in the wet season, form splendid pastures, which alternate, in the valleys, with fertile tracts of corn-land, gardens, and orchards. Grape-vines, and many kinds of fruit-trees, cover the warm slopes of the limestone hills; and groves of olives and walnuts crown their rounded tops. The meadows of Samaria have always been famous. In The prophets, already, speak of the pastures on its downs, and of the thickets of its hill-forests. As Josephus tells us, the supply of rain was abundant on the hills, and made them wrichly, wooded. The climate was so good and healthy, that the Romans greatly preferred the military stations in Samaria to those of Judea. Yet the landscape is tame and monotonous compared to that of Galilee. Its flat valleys, and straight lines of hills, all rounded atop, and nearly of a height, contrast unfavourably with the bold scenery of the Galilæan highlands the er home of Jesus and I days a moustain by but shile but hornig da Having reached the top of the steep hill, up which the path stretches, the large and fertile plain of Mukhna, running north and south, lay beneath Mounts Ebal and Gerizim, the giants of the mountains of Ephraim, which rose midway on its western side, while low chains of gently sloping hills enclosed it, as a whole of the path descends towards the hills which skirt the western side of the plain, and runs along their base, rising and falling in long undulations. Picturesque clumps of trees still dot the hill-sides, and bare, precipitous faces of rock rise above the green fields and olive-yards, which, more or less, cover the slopes, mingling, at last, with trees above. Half-way up the plain, a small valley opens to the west, between Ebal and Gerizim, which rise, steep and precipitous on the side next the plain, to the height, respectively, of 1,250 and 1,100 feet, both, as seen from below, equally sterile. The path enters the valley by a gentle rise, and a brook of fresh, clear water, which turns a million its way, flows out with a pleasant murmur, into the plain. On the left, Gerizim rises in rugged and bold masses; on the right, Ebal, which, though steep, is terraced to a considerable height, with garordens fenced by the fig cactus; other terraces, planted with corn. e rising, in some parts, even to the summit. a fule of and orithanolla.

alternative

The town of Nablas-the ancient Shechem-is about a mile and a-half from the mouth of this side valley, in which it stands. Luxuriant gardens, richly watered, girdle it round outside its old and dilapidated walls, whose gates, hanging off their hinges, are an emblem of all things else, at this day, in Palestine. The valley, at the town, is so narrow, that a strong man might almost shoot an arrow from the one hill to the other. 7. The houses of Nablus are stone-a number of them of several stories-with small windows and balconies, and of low doors, over which texts of the Koran are often painted, as a sign that the householder has made the pilgrimage to Mecca. It is a very small place, stretching from east to west; with narrow covered streets, running north and south from the two principal ones. Their sides are raised, so as to leave a filthy, sunken path, in the middle, for cattle; - but, as a set-off to this, many copious fountains and clear rivulets, flow through those on the west of the town and in shart distant for the To this ancient town, then in its glory, and very different from its present condition-along this path-Jesus was coming, ino doubt agreeably impressed by the beauties of a spot unequalled in Palestine for its landscape. Clumps of lofty walnut trees, thick groves of almond, pomegranate, olive, pear, and plum trees adorned the outskirts, and 'ran towards the opening of the valley: The weather was bright and warm; and the brightness would fill the many-coloured woods and verdure, with the melodious songs of birds. The clear, sweet notes of our own blackbird; the loud thrill of the lark, high overhead, and the chirping of finches, in each copse, rose then as now. "The brooks of clear mountain water then, as to-day, played, and splashed, and murmured, past. Thousands of flowers enamelled the grass on the slopes, for the " blessings of Joseph" reached their highest in the valley of Shechem. "The land of Syria," said Mahomet, " is beloved by Allah beyond all lands, and the part of Syria which He loveth most is the district of Jerusalem, and the place which He loveth most in the district of Jerusalem is the Mountain of Nablûs." The contrast with nature was only an anticipation of the brighter spiritual prospect. But before Jesus came to in the town, He halted for a time to rest. south the Age of a reproduction Close under the eastern foot of Gerizim, at the opening of the side valley from the wide plain, on a slight knoll, a mile and a half from the town, surrounded, now, by stones and broken pillars, is Jacob's wellow The ruins are those of an old church, which stood over the well as early as the fifth century, but has long ago perished in the storms of the times. Over the well, a few years since, were still to be seen the remains of an alcove, such as is built beside most Eastern wells, to give a seat and shelter to the tired wayfarer. There is no question that the name of the ancient patriarch is rightly given.

Thirty or forty springs are found in the neighbourhood, but they were, doubtless, already, in Jacob's day, private property, so that he had no alternative but to sink a well for himself 10 Nor was it a slight unith garhicorn,

aracter

nce lof

fruit.

many

ch they exceed cattle

s show

hisvery

Judea.

em) like

wed in valleys,

c-vines.

nestone

d tops.

rophets,

kets of undant

was: so nilitary

ame and

straight

rast un-

ds-dthe

hespath

rth and of sthe e, while he path

e plain,

lations.

precipi-

which.

above.

between ide next

t, both,

ley by a

millon

On the

t. Ebal,

ormic:

R64

dertaking, for it is dug through the alluvial soil, to an unknown depth, and lined, throughout, with strong rough masonry. It is still about seventy-five feet deep, but so recently as 1838 it was thirty feet? deeper, each year helping to fill it up, from the practice of all who visit it, both natives and travellers, to throw in stones, to hear their rebound: This custom, which may be recent adding to the accumulations of over two thousand years, has filled it up perhaps one half. The shaft is seven and a half feet in diameter, and the whole work must have been the labour of years. It is exactly on the water shed of the district, but as it depends on rain-water only, it is now often dry, though, perhaps, when of a greater depth, always more or loss full. Lieut. Anderson descended it in 1866 and found it auffe dry, but an unbroken pitcher at the bottom showed that there was water in it at some seasons. Latterly, it has been buried under a great heap of stones, hiding its mouth, which Lieut. Anderson found in a sunken chamber twenty feet deep, the opening being just large enough to admit/a man's body substant the look in how mis of mailing "Tired with His long mountain walk, and by the heat of noon-for it was midday, and noon in Palestine, even in December, is often warm Jesus was glad to turn aside and rest by Jacob's well. It was moreover, the hour for refreshment, and He resolved to stay in the grateful shade of the trees and the alcove, till His disciples went up the little valley to the town to buy food. The funds supplied by friends, who delighted to minister to Him, provided the ready means.

"While thus resting, a Samaritan woman, from Sychar, which may have been the same place as Shechem, or, perhaps, was the village near the well, now known as Askar, approached, with a water jar on her. head, as is the custom, and a long cord in her hand, with which to let the jar down the well. Few sought the place at that hour, for evening was the common time for drawing water, and thus Jesus and she were alone. To ask a draught of water is a request no one in the East thinks of refusing, for the hot climate makes all feel its value. Hence, under ordinary circumstances, it might have been expected. on Jesus asking this favour, that it would be granted as a matter of course. His dress, or dialect, however, had shown the woman that He was a Jew, and the relations between Jews and Samaritans made His? sceking even such a triffing courtesy from her seem strange, for the two initions were mortal enemies. After the deportation of the ten tribes to Assyria, Samaria had been repeopled by heathen colonists from various provinces of the Assyrian empire, by fugitives from the authorities of Judes, and by stragglers of one or other of the ten tribes," who found their way home again. The first heathen settlers, terrified at the increase of wild animals, especially lions, and attributing it to their not knowing the proper worship of the God of the country, sent for one of the exlled pricats, and, under his instructions, added the worship of Jehovah to that of their idols an incident in their listory? and been raised in the territory. The Roman 1270.133 from W elvtes of with the more ris Anxious ing the tanism d blood of this affr Christ's logical The San Jerusale also leve tain a g adding t and prid favoured and the vitiate th feasts in the very Nor h the Sama that I ha people w Jehovah. Taberna SCOTI tiochus I mands of they wer WAS, Baid they wor that the daughter country, quietaaf that a fo dens of mans quiet on the intro new imp Shechen court: a

-had b

nknown

t is strit

rty feet

all who

ar their

eu accu-

pe one

e whole

e water.

s. now

more or it quile

under a

i found

oni-for

s'often

It wasts

in the

vent un

icady

ch may!

genear

on her

hichoto

ur ofors

bres and

in the

Valuel

ected.

tter.of

hat He de His

of the

he ten

onists

m theo

ribes

it to

d she

Storypo

hed

from which inter Jewish hatred and deriston taunted them as "proselytes of the lions," as it branded them, from their Assyrian origin. with the name of Cuthites. Ultimately, however, they became even more rigidly attached to the Law of Moses than the Jews themselves Anxious to be recognized as Israelites, they set their hearts on join ing the two tribes, on their return from captivity, but the stern puri tanism of Ezra and Nehemiah admitted no alliance between the pure blood of Jerusalam and the tainted race of the north. Resentment a this affront was natural, and excited resentment in return, till, in Christ's day, centuries of strife and mutual injury, intensified by theory logical hatred on both sides, had made them implacable enemies The Samaritans had built a temple on Mount Gerizim, to rival that of Jerusalam, but it had been destroyed by John Hyrcanus, who had also levelled Samaria to the ground. They claimed for their mountain a greater holiness, than that of Moriah; accused the Jews of adding to the word of God, by receiving the writings of the prophets, and prided themselves on owning only the Pentateuch as inspired: favoured Herod, because the Jews hated him, and were loyal to him and the equally hated Roman: had kindled false lights on the hills, to vitiate the Jewish reckoning by the new moons, and thus throw their feasts into confusion, and, in the early youth of Jesus, had even defiled the very Temple itself; by strewing human hones in it, at the Passover. Nor had hatred slumbered on the side of the Jews, They knew the Samaritans only as Cuthites, or heathen from Cuth. "The race that I hate is no race," tays the son of Sirach. It was held that a people who once had worshipped five gods could have no part in Jehovah. The claim of the Samaritans that Moses had buried the Tabernacle and its vessels on the top of Gerizim, was laughed to scorn. It was said that they had dedicated their temple, under Antiochus Epiphanes, to the Greek Jupiter. Their keeping the commands of Moses even more strictly than the Jews, that it might seem they were really of Israel, was not denied; but their heathenism, it was said, had been proved by the discovery of a brazen dove, which they worshipped, on the top of Gerizim. It would have been enough that they boasted of Herod as their good king, who had married a daughter of their people; that he had been free to follow, in their country, his Roman tastos, so hated in Judea: that they had remained quiet, after his death, when Judea and Galilee were in uprogr. and that a fourth of their taxes had been remitted and added to the burdens of Judea, for their peacefulness. , Their friendliness to the Romans was an additional provocation. While the Jews were kept quiet only by the sternest severity, and strove to the utmost against the introduction of anything foreign, the Samaritans rejoiced in the new importance which their loyalty to the empire had given them. Shechem flourished: close by, in Casarea, the procurator held, his court: a division of cavalry, in barracks at Sebaste-the old Samaria -had been raised in the territory. The Roman strangers were more than welcome to while away the summer in their umbrageous valleys. The for the stand of the stand the stand of the stand of the stand of the stand The illimitable hatred, rising from so many sources, found went in the tradition that a special curse had been uttered against the Samaitans, by Ezra, Serubbabel, and Joshua ... It was said that these great ones assembled the whole congregation of Israel in the Tem: ple, and that three hundred priests, with three hundred trumpets, and three hundred books of the Law, and three hundred scholars of the Law; had been employed to repeat, amidst the most solemn ceremonial, all the curses of the Law against the Samar itans. They had been subjected to every form of excommunication: by the incommunicable name of Jehovah; by the Tables of the Law, and by the heavenly and earthly synagogues. "The very and hast a devil," said the Jews, to Jesus, in Jerusalem of There may be friendliness between Samaria and Jerusalem," said a young Rabbi, summing up the points in dispute between his nation and the Samaritans, "when the Cuthites have no more to do with Mount Gerizin; when they praise Israel, and believe in the resurrection of the dead-but not till then." No Israelite could lawfully eat even a mouthful of food that had been touched by a Samaritan, for the do so was as if he ate the flesh of swine." No Samaritan was allowed to become a proselyte, nor could he have any part in the resurrection of the dead. A Jew might be friendly with a heathen but never with a Samaritan, and all bargains made with one were invalid to The testimony of a Samaritan could not be taken in a Jewish court, and to receive one into one's house would bring down the curse of God. It had even become a subject of warm controversy how far a Jew might use food or fruit grown on Samaritan soil. What grows on trees or in fields was reckoned clean, but it was doubtful respecting flour or wine. A Samaritan eggi as the hen laid it, could not be unclean, but what of a boiled cgg? Yet interest and convenience strove, by subtle casuistry, to invent excuses for what intercourse was unavoidable. The country of the Cuthites was clean, so that Jew might without scruple, gather and eat its produce. The waters of Samaria were clean, so that a Jew might drink them or wash in them. Their dwellings were clean, so that he might enter them, and est or lodge in them. Their roads were clean, so that the dust of them did not defile a Jew's feet. The Rabbis even went so far in their contridictory utterances, as to say that the victuals of the Outhites were allowed, if none of their wine or vinegar were mixed with them, and even their unleavened bread was to be reckoned fit for use at the Passover. Opinions thus wavered but, as a rule, harsher feeling prevailed in the first with both this which the double southin -- moinsaw Jesus was infinitely above such unworthy strifes and praindices, and His disciples had caught something of His calm elevation for they had already set off to the city for food, when He spoke to the

WORDERTHIE that Thou, Woman Mich Lis wondre to lead to it matters dnf transition to give ----who spoke drink, He Him to the autekening a metaphor demus ahe mean the w that for w Whence, th Are you gre goodienoug had other a the gift of -toora Sama ciriosity wa dentourAtTh who drinks Ingivetwill soul, spring thewoman thirst, nor n only of com Butdnow moment) she of her life, penitence none. misty bands land had either a slid was not The light "My lerd," doubtless, th dred though must be the versation—v above themand ye say, wethip, 200

LICONIE

"Evanit

ist the

these

Tem

mpets,

st sob-

Samar

unice-

blesiof

le wery

There

young

Mount

tiohof

even a

tite do

restion

. never

tab The

f God.

a Jew

DWSHOR

beuin-

mience

ise was

Jew

ters of

eat or em/did

SWATO

n, and at the feeling

dices.

on for

toithe

woman She could only in her wonder, ask, in reply, "How is it that Thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, who am a Samaritan woman?" Her frankness and kindly bearing had its reward. With His wondrous skill in using even the smallest and commonest trifics to lead to the highest and worthiest truths. He lifts her thoughts to matters infinitely above the mere wants of the body. By an easy transition. He tells her of living water, the gift of God, which He has who spoke with her, she, in her turn, would ask Him to allow her to drink. He meant, of course, the divine grace and truth given by Him to those who sought it, the true living water, ever fresh in its quickening power, and efficacy to satisfy the thirst of the soul! Such a metaphor was exactly fitted to arrest her attention, but, like Nicodemus she rises no higher than the literal sense. "You cannot mean the water in the well here," says she: "you cannot give me that; for you have nothing to draw with, and the well is deep, Whence, then, can you get this living water of which you speak? Are you greater than our father Jacob, who gave us the well? It was good shough for him and his to drink from, and you speak as if you had other and better!" Samaritan tradition had traced the well to the gift of Jacob, though it is not mentioned in Genesis; and Jacob -tora Samaritan, as to a Jew-was almost more than a man. Her cfiviosity was now fairly roused, and her willingness to hear was evidents at "This water is, no doubt, good," replied Jesus. "but any one who drinks it will thirst again, whereas he who drinks the water that Ingive will never thirst, but will find it like a well of water in his soul, springing up into everlasting life." More and more interested, the woman craves some of this miraculous water, that she may not thirst, nor need to come all the way thither to draw. She still thinks only tof common water. Av i sud , anals buno log any shon al to ever

The light, half bold mood of the woman was now entirely past. "My lerd," said she, "I behold that Thou art a prophet," and, doubtlass, the conviction flashed with it through her breast the kin dred thought, that the Jewish religion, which He seemed to represent, must be the true one." Then, perhaps half wishing to turn the conversation—with a glance at the holy hill, towering eight hundred feet above them—she added, "Our fathers worshipped in this mountain, and ye say, that in Jerusalem is the place where mon ought to worship, "loop of your out of the second between the best of the best of the second best of the best of

To the Camaritans, Gerizim was the most sacred spot on earth. It was their sacred mountain, and had been, as they believed the seat of Paradise, while all the streams that water the earth were supposed to flow from it. Adam had been formed of its dust, and had lived on it. The few Samaritans still surviving, show, even at this day, the spot on which he built his first altar, and that on which afterwards, the ultar of Seth, also, was raised. They fancied that Gerishit was Ararat, lifteen cubits higher than the next highest and next hollest mountain on carth-Mount Ebal, and that it was the one pure and sacred spot in the world, which, having risen above the waters of the flood, no corpse had defiled. 'Every Eamaritan child of the neighbourhood could point out the places on it where Noah came out from the ark, and where he built his alfar, and show the seven altar steps, on each of which Noah offered a facrifice. The altar on which Abraham bound Isaac, and the spot where the ram was caught in the thicket. were amongst its wonders. In the centre of the summit was the broad stone on which Jacob rested his head when he saw the mystic ladder, and, near it, the spot where Joshua built the first altar in the land, after its conquest, and the twelve stones he set up, on the under side of which, they believed, the Law of Moses had been written. On this sacred ground their Temple had stood for two bundred vears till destroyed by the Jews a hundred and twenty-nine years before Christ. Towards Gerizim every Samaritan turned his face when he prayed, and it was believed the Messiah would first appear on its top! to bring from their hiding place in it the sacred vessels of the Pabernacle of Moses. It was unspeakably sacred to the nation, as the one spot on earth where man was nearest his Maker. The simple Samaritan woman, with whom Jesus talked, had been trained up in the undoubting belief of all these legends, and her very mention of Jerusalem, respectfully, as a place sacred in the eyes of the Jew, showed a spirit ready to be taught and a stand of the standard standard and the She was only a humble woman, and withal, of poor antecedents, but it was the characteristic of Jesus to recognize the better self. future of His kingdom rose in His soul as He discoursed with her. No narrow intolerance had place in His breast; no haughty Jewish nationality prejudiced Him against man as man. Away from the

No narrow intolerance had place in His breast; no haughty Jewish nationality prejudiced Him against man as man. Away from the close stifling bigotry, and fierce self-righteousness of Judea, He breathed more freely. To the Samaritans He always seems to have felt kindly, for it is a Samaritan whom He chose to illustrate the law of neighbourly love in His immortal parable; it was a Samaritan who, alone, of the ten lepers He healed, returned to give glory to God; and, now, it was a Samaritan woman who, by opening her heart to His words, first cheered His spirit, after the cold unbelief of Judea. The influences of the spot, moreover, had, doubtless, their effect on one so much in communion with nature. The towering hills on each side—steep—well nigh precipitous, and, as seen from the well where

ITTIS MO He sat, na its bubbli in gardens as broad. spread far whole floo delicate se The very a spiration, which this and here, his father's the Law fr of judges a before Hin now He, th true "Prin the spiritua Truth and of the sacre when the lo away befor He, "an ho Jerusalem, Him-igno still worse, have rejecte are not in li God; have God has re natural in a gods, along received the His saivatio the firm, pu in the propl Jehovah alo Jews be right past, both an An hour con the Father i Him thus. in spirit and Words lil world; a rev Maker. Th before God,

earth."

e soat

posed

red on

withe

wards,

n'was

hollest'

re and

of the

hbour-

om the

DS. OH

raham

hicket.

as the

mystic

in the under

n. On

vears,

before

hen he

its top;

Taber-

the one

Samar-

in the

of Jeru-

showed

2th 00 c

edents!

er self.

mphant

ith her.

Jewish

om the

lea. He

to have

the law

maritan

to God;

ieart to

Judea.

ffect on

on each

where

1000

He sat naked and sterile: the undulating valley between them, with its bubbling brook; the busy and prosperous Shechem, embowered in gardens and orchards: the great plain, ten miles in length and half as broad, outside, with its cornfields, vineyards, and olive groves, spread far and near; the framework of hills enclosing it round; the whole flooded by the bright Eastern noon, must have touched His delicate sensibility, as they could not have affected duller natures. The very associations of the scene must have breathed a sacred inspiration, for, here, Jacob had wandered; for the very ground on which this well had been dug, he had paid a hundred pieces of money: and here, Joseph, his famous son, lay buried, within the bounds of his father's purchase. Here Joshua had gathered the tribes to hear the Law from the rounded hill-tops above, and Gideon, and a long roll of judges and kings, had made it the centre of their rule. The plain before Him had been the gathering place of the hosts of Israel, and now He, the greater Joshua, a mightier judge than Gidcon, and the true "Prince of God," was about to summon the peaceful soldiers of the spiritual Israel to a loftier struggle than ever earth had seen-for Truth and God. A divine enthusiasm filled His soul, and the vision of the sacred future. He came to inaugurate for man rose before Him. when the local, national, and transitory in religion, should have passed away before the universal, spiritual, and eternal. "Believe me," said He. I an hour comes, when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor in Jerusalem, worship the Father. Ye worship God without knowing Him-ignorantly. Your Temple, when it stood, was without a name: still worse, your forefathers, after a time, dedicated it to idols. You have rejected the prophets and all the Scriptures after Moses, and, thus, are not in living connection with the earlier history of the kingdom of God; have no intelligent knowledge of the advancing steps by which God has revealed Himself, but rest on dark traditions and fancies, natural in a people whose religion began with the worship of strange gods, along with Jehovah. We, Jews, worship that which our having received the Scriptures, has taught us to know. The Messiah and His salvation must come from among the Jews. They have cherished the firm, pure, and living hope of Him, revealed more and more fully in the prophets, and their Temple, which has always been sacred to Jehovah alone, has kept this hope ever before them. But, though the Jews be right, as against, the Samaritans, in so far as relates to the past, both are on equal footing as to the far more glorious future. An hour comes, and now is, when the true worshippers will worship the Father in spirit and truth, for the Father seeketh such as worship Him thus God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship in spirit and truth."

Words like these marked an epoch in the spiritual history of the world; a revolution in all previous ideas of the relation of man to his Maker. They are the proclamation of the essential equality of man before God, and show the loftiest superiority to innate human preju-

Man; the representative of the whole race. The bitter controversy between race and race is only touched, in passing, with a divine mildness, "Rising high, not only above His own age, but even above the prejudices of all ages since, He gives mankind, their, charter, o spiritual liberty for evermore. Jerusalem and Gerizim are only local and subordinate considerations. The worth of man's homage to God does not depend on the place where it is paid. The true wor ship has its temple in the inmost soul, in the spirit and heart. It is the life of the soul; it is communion with God; the reverend espousal of our nature to truth. It is spiritual and moral, not outward and ritual, springing from the great truth, rightly apprehended, which Jesus had first uttered, that God is a Spirithan The revelation of this. in the wide application now given it, was the foundation of the New Religion of all Humanity. The isolation and exclusiveness of former creeds were swept away by it for ever. Religion was henceforth no tribal privilege jealously kept within the narrow bounds of mere nationality in The universal presence of a spiritual God made the whole world alike His shrine. The veil of the Temple was first rent at Jacob's Well, and He Who, till then, had, as men thought, dwelt only in the narrow limits of the chamber it shrouded, went forth thence, from that hour, to consecrate all the earth as one great Holy of Holies. Samaritans, Heathen, Jews, were, henceforth, proclaimed children of a common heavenly Father, and Jesus, when He, presently, claimed to be the Messiah, announced Himself as the SAVIOUR of the WORLD. Perplexed to understand words so lofty, the simple-minded woman was fain to put off any attempt to solve them, till. He came, for whom, in common with the Jews, she waited. She felt hardly convinced, and wished to leave the question about Gerizim and Jerusalem till the Great Prophet appeared. bill know that Messiah comes, who is called Christ; when He shall come, He will tell us all things. Even the Samaritans had their hopes of a great deliverer, expecting Him to restore the kingdom of Israel, and renow, the worship at Mount Gerizim, but they thought of Him only as acting by human agencies for inferior ends, daugater anothed to his a daimant Jesus was far from recognizing her, as right in all she meant by such an answer, but she had shown a modest and docile spirit, such as He always loved. She had acknowledged Him as a prophet, had listened eagerly to His words, and shown how she hoped that the Messiah, when He came, would set the long controversy to rest. Her honest wish to know the truth; her interest in the standing of her people to God and the Law, and her anxious yearning for the coming of the Messiah, revealed a frame of mind fitted to receive further light. "You need not wait," said He, "I that speak unto thee am Hr. "..... The first great revelation of the Saviour, was, to humble shepherds. The first direct disclosure of Himself as the Messiah was to an humble Samaritan woman!

of the chi to speak v degree? fit speak with It was for things," w be seen in he must n (which in lawful to he must sl the Law. that would he must higher in nations, w zer, Tath daughter But He w parity, inc and treate to humble an age, bi equality w reth. To still to re truth. W rior judgi is it foun no blemist times, as t opinions o Strange and revere any expre pitcher, hu

Meanw

to find H

in commo

That a w

immodest

was almo

his bride.

even this sexes in a

nounmari

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

Son, of

roversy

e mild.

ove the

rter, of

y local

age to

ue wor

It is spousal

ard and

which

of this,

he New

former

orth no

of mere ade the

rst rent

t, dwelt

thence,

Holies.

dren of

imed to

ORLD.

woman

me, for

rusalem

es, who

things,

pecting

rship at

human eant by

it, such het, had

hat the

to rest.

iding of

for the

receive

ak unto was to

f as the

R. HEALS

Meanwhile, the disciples had returned from the city, and wondered to find Him taking with a woman." The relations of the sexes, even in common life. were very narrow and suspicious among the Jews. That a woman should allow herself to be seen unveiled was held immodest, and for any woman to let herself he heard singing a song was almost unchaste. In Judea a bridegroom might be alone with his bride. for the first time, 'an hour before marriage, but in Galilee even this was thought unbecoming ..... Trades which brought the two scxes in any measure into contact were regarded with suspicion, and no unmarried person of either sex could be a teacher, lest the parents of the children might visit the school. In Rabbis especially, even to speak with a woman in public was held indecorous in the highest degree. ""No one" (that is, no Rabbi), says the Talmud, "is to speak with a woman, even if she be his wife, in the public street." It was forbidden to greet a woman, or take any notice of her. "Six things," we are told," are to be shunned by a Rabbi. He must not be seen in the street dripping with oil (which would imply vanity): he must not go out at night alone: he is not to wear patched shoes (which in certain cases would be carrying a burden, when it was unlawful to do so): he must not speak with a woman in a public place: he must shun all intercourse with common people (for, not knowing the Law, they might be "unclean "): he must not take long steps (for that would show that he was not sunk in the study of the Law); and he must not walk creet (for that would betray pride).". Though higher in position and respect among the Jews than in other Eastern nations, woman, at the time of Christ, was treated as wholly inferior to man. " Let the words of the Law be burned," says Rabbi Eleazer, "Tather than committed to women." He who instructs his daughter in the Law," says the Talmud, "instructs her in folly." But He who came to raise mankind to spiritual freedom and moral parity, included woman, as well as man, in His grand philanthropy, and treated with silent contempt the prudery by which it was sought to humble the one sex to exalt the other. He was a teacher not for an age, but for all time, and woman owes her elevation to social equality with man to the lofty respect shown her by Jesus of Nazareth."To have the courage of one's opinions is rare, and it is rarer still to retain, with it, a modest humility, and simple worship of truth."With most of us it is, rather, supercilious contempt of inferior judgments than lowly homage to conviction. In Jesus alone is it found as an instinctive and never-failing characteristic, with no blemish or qualification of attendant weakness. He acts, at all times, as before God alone, and as if unconscious of the presence or opinions of man, man, in our a Dalagrar deites the adt to when the Strange as the incident must have seemed to the disciples, the awe and reverence which Jesus had already excited in their minds checked any expression of surprise. Meanwhile the woman leaving her pitcher, hurried off to the city, to make known the presence of the

Thus,

come the The well

whose w

embittere

Ahro Listri

off: bird

adad Me.

ingo and the hornsod a

ANATI

the please tion by t hearers in dom had to heart. happiness

pressed b

larity, for conviction

Yet, in each hear

-its 17 ws new adhe nature, w highest bl for in the aud joy the bright the oright filled with or such a But He other peop years, by o the one gr alone, of they, alon they were

religion, w

the old. After a went on n

chem, to S

the north-

longer the pliment to

wonderful stranger, and urge as many as she could, to go to Him. and see if He were not the expected Messiah. In her absence, the disciples, once and again invited Jesus to take some refreshment. But His soul was too full of other thoughts, which drove away all sense of hunger. "I have food to eat," said He, "that ye know not of,"-words, which to their dull material range of mind, seemed only to refer to food brought in their absence. "My meat," said He, seeing their misconception, "is to do the will of Him that sent Me. and to finish His work." Then, lifting His eyes, and looking up the stretching valley, or round the wide sweep of the plain, in both of which, doubtless, the busy peasants were scattering the seed for the harvest, then four months distant, He caught sight of a multitude coming, under the guidance of the woman, to hear. His words. Fired at the sight, He went on, -- "You say, 'After four months will come the harvest." But I say, look yender at the throng coming towards us. They are the noblest harvest, and their coming shows that you have not to wait to reap it, as they have to reap the seed now sowing, for their souls, like autumn fields, are already white for the sickle. And how rich the reward for you, my disciples, who will be the reapers! You will gather fruit, not like the harvest of earth, but fruit unto life eternal. You and I, the Sower and the reapers, may well rejoice together in the parts assigned us by God. Think of the final harvest home, when Heaven, the great garner, shall have the last sheaf carried thither! The sower and the reaper are indeed distinct, as the proverb has it, speaking of common life. I have prepared and sown the field; you shall, hcreafter, do the labour that is needed as it grows, and reap the sheaves as they ripen. Your work will be real of its kind, but to break up the soil, and cast in the seed, is harder than to watch the rising green. I send you to enter on the fruit of my toil."

Judea had yielded no harvest, but the despised people of Shechem were better spiritual soil. There was no idle thronging around, as in Judea, in hopes of seeing miracles: none were asked, and none were wrought. The simpler and healthier natures, with which He here came in contact, were satisfied in many cases, by the words of the woman alone. Gathering to hear, His words deepened the convictions of those impressed already, and roused the hearts of others. At their request, two days were spent in teaching. To have stayed longer might, perhaps, have compromised the future, by raising Jewish prejudice. Meanwhile, the work, thus auspiciously begun, could not fail to spread. ""We believe," said the new converts, after the two days' intercourse with Jesus, "not because of the woman's saying, for we have heard Him ourselves, and know that this is, indeed, the Saviour of the world." Jews might have acknowledged Him as the Messiah, but only Samaritans, with their far more generous conceptions of the Messianic Kingdom, could have thought of Him as the Saviour of mankind. and start

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

Thus, naturally, from the most indifferent trifle of daily life, had come the disclosure of the highest truths, as a legacy to all ages. The well of Jacob had become the seat of the Great Teacher, before whose words, then spoken to an humble woman of Samaria, the most embittered enmittee of nations and religions will, one day, pass away.

should be a structure of the second state of t to Hod ai LEOPENING OF THE MINISTRY IN GALILER, 83 PHIL Stille

Him.

ce, the hment.

way all ow not ed only

id He,

nt Me, up the

both of

for the altitude words. ths will coming shows he seed

white es, who rvest of

ind the y God. garner,

reaper

on life.

do the

ripen. nd cast you to iechem

d, as in

e were le here

of the convic-

others

stayed raising

begun,

s, after oman's

this is,

ledged more

hought

A NATURE like that of Jesus, as scheitive as strong, must have felt the pleasure which only first successes can give, at Ills hearty reception by the Samaritans. Rejected in Judea, He hal found willing hearers in the despised people of Shechem. A nucleus of His kingdom had been formed, and it must, by its nature, spread from heart to heart. Intensely human in His sensibility, He now enjoyed the happiness He had called forth in others, as, before, He had been depressed by its absence. He neither expected nor desired noisy popularity, for He knew that His kingdom could grow only by the secret conviction of soul after soul.

Yet, in one sense, it was already complete in each new disciple, for each heart that received Him was a spot in which it was fully set up —its 1/ ws accepted, and the will and affections entirely His. To each new adherent He was more than king, for He reigned over their whole nature, with a majesty such as no other king could command. The highest bliss of each was to have no thought or wish apart from His, for in the measure of likeness to Him, lay their spiritual purity, peace; and joy. They felt that to become His disciples, was to anticipate the brightest hopes of the eternal world, for it was to have their bosoms filled with the light and love of God. Earth never saw such a king, or such a kingdom.

But He could not stay in Samaria. His work lay in Israel. No other people were so fitted for it, by the training of two thousand years, by cherished hopes, and by the possession of the oracles of God, the one grand treasure of eternal truth in the hands of man. They, alone, of all mankind realized the idea of a true kingdom of God; they, alone, were a-glow for its advent. Misconceptions removed, they were fitted above all other races, to be the apostles of the new religion, which, in reality, was only the completing and perfecting of the old.

After a stay of two days, therefore, at Shechem, or near it, Jesus went on northwards, towards Galilee. The road passes through Shechem, to Samaria, which lies on its hill, at three hours' distance, on the north west. It was then in its glory, as Herod had left it; no longer the old Samaria, but the splendid Sebaste, named thus in compliment to Augustus. Its grand public buildings, its magnificent temple, dedicated in blasphemous flattery of Augustus, its colonnades. triumphal arches, baths, and theatres, and its. famous wall, twenty stadia in circuit, with its elaborate gates, enclosing the whole-were before Him as He passed on. At Engannim the Fountain of Gardens-on the southern slope of the great plain of Eadracion, He crossed the Samaritan border, and was once more in Galilee. bo Avoiding Nazareth, with a wise in tinct that a prophet had no honour in his own country, He continued His journey to Cana, across the green pastures and comfields of the plain of Battauf. He had. indeed, felt, before leaving Samaria, that a district where He had been familiarly known in His earlier life would be less disposed to receive Him than others in which He was a stranger, but this could only apply to the immediate bounds of Nazareth or Capernaum. On the other hand, the news of His popularity in Judea, and of His miracles and discourses in Jerusalem, had been carried back to Gullice, by pligrims who had returned from the feast, and had, doubtices, secured Him a much better reception in the province at large than, as Himself a Gallizan, He would otherwise have found. But even had He felt that He would be rejected in Galilee as He had been in Judes. His homage to duty, and grand self-sacrifice to its demands, would have so much the more impelled Him to carry His great message thither, Personal feelings had no place in His soul TIt would have been only one more, added to His life-long conflicts with human perversity and evil, to brave foreboded indifference and neglect, and offer even to those who slighted Him the proofs of His divine dignity and worth. The prophet had foretold that the Great Light of the Kingdom of God would shine in Galilee of the Gentiles, and amidat whatever humiliation and pain of heart in anticipated rejection, He, its King, would have gone thither to proclaim it, and honour the divine prediction, The first return of Jesus to Galilee, from the Jordan, had been marked by the miracle at the wedding feast at Cana, as if to rouse the general mind, and now. His second return was proclaimed in the same way. He perhaps, had gone to live for a time with the friends for whom He had turned the water into wine, or, it may be, He was a guest of Nathanael, as, in Capernaum, of Peter. His reception, as He passed on His way to Cana, had been cheering in the extreme, for the reports from the south had raised Him to an undefined greatness in the popular eyes. They had learned to be proud of Him as their countryman, when they found Him so famous claewhere, That crowds had followed Him in Judea, secured Him favour, so far, among the multitude in the north. His return had risen to the dignity of a public event, and passed from lip to lip through the whole district. How will bey it you age for work all white

11 It had thus speedily become known in Capernaum that He was once more in Cana, after His nine or ten months' absence from Galilee. His miraculous power over sickness and physical cvil, as shown in derusalem, had become a subject of universal report, finding its way how th Manae Jesus. manage female casily f new w Lake o temper now w certain still a c by the apparen the hop thither death. Ther showed and wo credent was its despise body. w of Him overcon ceptanc cles had was utte needed asked H and beli you no pathy prepara belief in ception the mon blessing give the needed only the down er son wer even i

others.

was in

Were

Gar.

n, He ad no

ACTORS

le had,

d been receive

donly

On the limcles

lee, by

eeured

limself

He jelt

ca, His

haveso

Per-

nly one

nd evil,

o those

nf God

umilfa-

would id lieen

o rouse

i in the friends

He was

tion, as

me, for

reatness

as their

That

so far,

dignity

ole dis-

Galilee.

own in te way

as once

tion,

even into the gilded seclusion of mansions and palaces. Among others, a high officer of the court of Herod Antipas, whose mansion was in Capernaum, had heard of the wonderful Teacher. We know how the miracles of Christ reached the ears of Antipas himself: that Manaen, his foster-brother, actually became an humble follower of Jesus, and that Johunna, the wife of Choudza, the house steward or manager of the private affairs of Antipas, was one of many devoted female disciples and friends, of the richer classes, -and can thus. easily fancy how such a dignified official had learned respecting the new wonder-working Rabbi. The close heat of the borders of the Lake of Galilee, with their fringe of reeds and marsh, though then tempered by the shade of countless orchards, and wooded clumps. now wholly wanting, has in all ages induced a prevalence of fever, at certain seasons, and the malady had now seized his only ison, who was still'a child! He had been led to look on Jesus as a wonderful Healer. by the cares reported to have been wrought by Him, but he had not. apparently, thought of Him as more. Hearing of His arrival at Cana, the hope that He might save his son, instantly determined him to go thither and ask His aid. The child, he said, was at the point of death, would Jesus come down and heat him? First Market for manufact There was something in the poor man's bearing, however, that showed the superficial conception he had formed of Christ's character and work at Miracles, with Jesus, were only means to; a higher end. credentials to enforce the reception of spiritual truth. That truth was its own witness, and had sufficed to win a ready homage from the despised people of Sychar. To be the Healer of souls, not of the body was His great mission, but the nobleman had, as yet, no idea of Him except as a Hakim or Ropha, who had proved His power to overcome disease.) He had been led to Him not by the report and acceptance of the great truths He taught: only the rumour of His miracles had created interest enough to pass through the land. That he was utterly unconscious of the spiritual death from which he himself needed to be rescued, touched the sympathy of Jesus. "How is it." asked He, in effect, "that you come to me only for outward healing. and believe on me only as a worker of signs and wonders? Have you no sense of sin: no craving for spiritual healing: no inner sympathy with the teaching of my life and words?" Without moral preparation in his own mind, the healing of his son might confirm belief in the power of the Healer; but would bring no spiritual reception of the truth, to heal the soul. "Apparently repelling him for the moment, Jesus was, in fact, opening his eyes to the far greater blessings he might freely obtain. With royal bounty He wished to give the greater while He gave the less, for it was His wont, after needed reproof, to give more than had been asked .... Meanwhile, the only thought of the parent's heart was his dying boy. "Sir, come down ero my child die." Jesus knew that he would believe if his son were healed, but wished to raise a higher moral frame, which would do so from kindled sympathy with spiritual truth without snep an outward ground. To believe His word, from its own internal evidence, showed higher faith than that which only followed miracles. It showed a recognition of the truth from interest in it: a sensibility of soul to what was pure and holy. But belief as the result of miracles was not discountenanced: it was only held inferior.

aln

of

and

and

Diu

bý

2.1

aut

nac at J

to 1

pres

Gal

bloc

the

Ron

of J

the p

of G

like fana

such

thou

fierce

asig

to Je

Peret

kinge

to ta

theat

in the

amida

blasts

the ve

slieph

thoug

how 3

seeme

Jeruse

loud u

Jesus.

more

own c

ages b

of the

regions

Fins

The nobleman had assumed that Jesus would go back with him to Capernaum, and heal the child, but he was before One to whose power distance offered no hindrance. With the easy, unaffected dignity of conscious superiority, he is told to 'go his way; his son lived?" words few and simple, but enough to let him know that the Speaker had, on the instant, healed the child. Nor could he doubt it. To have spoken with Jesus assured him that he might believe. His word. Forthwith he addressed himself to return.

It was about twenty miles from Cana to Capernaum, and the miracle had been wrought an hour after noon. Resting by the way, at early nightfall, as he well might on a road so insecure, he set out again next morning, but erelong met some of his own slaves; sent to tell him the good news that the boy was convalescent, and to prevent his bringing Jesus any further. "Your son," said they, "is not dead, but is getting better. The fever has left him." "When," asked the father, "did he begin to amend?" "Yesterday, about one o'clock "In fever broke." It was the very time when Jesus had told him that the boy would live. What could he do but accept Him as what he now knew He claimed to be—the Messiah. "Himself believed and his whole house."

How long Jesus remained in Cana is not known, but that He was for a time unattended by the small band of disciples who had accompanied Him to the Passover, is certain. They had remained with Him, in Judea, and had returned with Him, through Sychar, to Galilee, but, after so long an absence from home, He had let them go back to the Lake of Galilee, to their occupations, till He should once more call them finally to His service. I better find a sufficient entroned standard He had retired to the north before the rising signs of opposition from the Pharisees, who had at last found means to get John imprisoned, by their intrigues with Antipas, and might, at any moment, have effected His own arrest. An interval of some months now elapsed, perhaps in stillness and privacy, the time not having yet come, for some reasons unknown to us, for His final and permanent entrance on His public work. His mother and the family had returned to Nazareth from their short stay at Capernaum, and, it is most probable, therefore, that He, once more, sought the seclusion of His early home, to await the decisive moment of His reappearance. The fate of the Baptist may have made it necessary to avoid for a time giving any pretext of political alarm to Herod by His at once taking Join's place. That one so venerated had been thrown into the dun. reons of Machaerus doubtless spread to the farthest valleys. Men

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

such

levi-

cles.

bility

mita-

WENTA LA

im to

whose fected

at the

doubt

elieve

straich

iracle

cearly

again

all him

nt his dead,

ed the

o'elock

im that hat he ed and

He was

accom-

barato

hem go d once

photost

osition

hn im-

oment, s now

ng yet

nanent

is most of His

The

a time

e dan.

Men

almost hoped that the mighty preacher would soften the heart even of Antipas, and, in any case, could not credit that a man so cowardly and politic would dare to take the life of the honoured prophet. This and that measure of the tyrant were attributed by the credulous multitude to John's influence. The whole country was agitated, day by day, by rumours respecting him.

Nor were other subjects of popular excitement wanting. In the autumn of the vor the year before, apparently at the Feast of Tabernacles, there had been a flerce struggle between the Roman garrison at Jerusalem and the pilgrims from Galilee, ever excitable and ready. to fight." In the heat of the contest the soldiers from Antonia had pressed into the very courts of the Temple, and had hewn down the Galikeans at the great altar, beside their sacrifices, mingling their blood with that of the slain beasts. The sons of Judas the Galilæan. the famous leader of the Zealots in their first great insurrection against Rome, had, moreover, grown up to manhood in the neighbourhood of Jesus, and cherished in their own breasts, and kept alive among the people, their father's fierce scheme for the erection of the kingdom of God by the sword, a fatal inheritance for which they were one day. like Christ, to be crucified. The whole land heaved with religious fanaticism like an ever threatening volcano. Above all the tumult of such a state of things, however, the imprisoned prophet was the one thought of the country. Laments over him, mingled, doubtless, with fierce mutterings, filled every market-place and every home. It was a sign of the glowing religious sensibility of the times, and a summons to Jesus to take up the great work thus interrupted. The tyrant in Perea had silenced the voice that had proclaimed the coming of the kingdom of God, but He, whose herald John had been, was at hand to take it up again, with grander emphasis, on a more commanding theatre. Isaiah, the son of Amoz, had once seen a vision of Jehovah in the Temple, and had recognized his summons as a prophet, when, amidst the chants of the Levites and the clouds of incense, and the blasts of the sacred trumpets, the house was filled with smoke, and the very earth seemed to tremble. The Spirit came on Amos, the shepherd, as he followed his flocks on the lonely pastures, when he thought how the Syrians had threshed Gilead with iron sledges, and how Tyre had sold the sons of Israel to Edom as slaves; and he seemed to hear Jely vah call to him from Zion, and thunder from Jerusalem, and forsook his hills, to be a shepherd to Israel. The loud universal lamentations over John were such a final divine call to Jesus: I li li la man

Finally leaving His carly home, therefore, He bent His steps once more towards Capernaum, which was henceforth, to become "His own city," and the centre of His future work. The prophet had, ages before, painted the joyous times that should efface the memory of the Assyrian invasion, and in the appearance of Christ in these regions, their full realization had now come. The land of Zebulon.

877 and the land of Naphtali; the country towards the Sea of Galilee; the districts beyond the Jordan; and Galilee of the Gentiles, in the far north, towards Tyre and Syria-the people that sat in darkness, -saw a great light, and to them that sat in the region and shadow of death, a light sprang up. Galilee was to be pre-eminently the scene of the ministry of Jesus, and it is curious that even the Rabbis, in their earliest traditions, express the belief that it would be that of the manifestation of the Messiah. To this day, Jews gather in Tiberias, one of their four holy cities, from all parts of the earth, to wait for the coming of the Messiah, or, at least, to be buried there, in expectation of His advent. Dat gre bad

He

dar cold

hop His only

pure Y

all n the

com

••'bli trees God.

seek

Th

WORS He a

Befor

suffer

one is

don. call th

thoug nniqu tinctly

sists v

distan

fore E the ba He pro but, co God, a dom

Not

sionary

and vi

Galilee

ceded ]

He was

fisherm

hood at

from th

entals,

Jesus

It would seem as if Jesus had, for a time, been alone. The country was densely peopled, and He may have passed on, slowly, from village to village, opening His mission. The burden of His preaching was the same as that of John's. "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent and believe in the Gospel." But though alike in form, the import of the words in the mouth of Jesus was very different from that of their earlier utterance by His herald. John had striven to reform Israel by demanding strict outward observances, as well as morals, but Jesus went deeper, and required a revolution of the will and affections, flowing from changed relations to God. He would have no new pieces on old garments; no new wine in old bottles, no religious reform on the basis of a compromise with formal Judaism. Israel had sunk into spiritual death, in spite of its zeal for the precepts of the Rabbis, and the letter of the Scriptures: its piety had degenerated largely into hypocritical affectation. and merely lip and outward assent to the requirements of God's law. Its mission to the great heathen world had become a failure. A wholly new principle was needed to take the place of the now decayed and obsolete dispensation of Moses: the principle of direct personal responsibility to God, and spiritual freedom, instead of priestly mediation, and theocratic slavery. The Baptist was, throughout, an upholder of the ceremonial law, and had no adequate conception of a purely spiritual religion. It was reserved to Jesus to teach that only a religious and moral new-birth of Israel and of humanity could avail. He was the first who founded a religion, not on external precepts, or on a priesthood, or on sacrificial rites, but in the living spirit; in individual personal conviction; in the free, loving surrender of the will to God, as the eternal Truth and Good: a religion which looked first, not at mere acts, but at what men were, and set no value on acts apart from the motive from which they sprang.

Hence, the call to repentance was addressed to all without exception. He recognized the difference between man and man, and acknowledged the existence of possible good even in the apparently hopeless. He spoke of the good and evil, the righteous and unrightcous, the just and unjust, those who had gone astray and those who had not; of the sound and the sick; of the pure and the impure; of green frees and dry; of a good and an evil eye, and of good soil and bad. 'Surveying men, as a whole, with a caim and searching insight, He rejoiced in the light which shone in some souls, in the midst of darkness around and within them, and acknowledged its worth. No cold fear of compromise damped His ardour; frank joy and radiant hopefulness, that detected good with instinctive quickness, cheered His spirit to greater effort. It is, indeed, His glory that He led not only the humble and penitent, but the openly evil, to a higher and purer life.

۵.

01

me

in

the ias, for )ec-

itry

ing the

But

esus

ald.

vard

red a

lions

new mise

spite

crip-

tion,

laW.

holly

and

sonal

lestly

t, an n of ouly

ts, or

it: in

fthe

oked

n acts

xcep

d ac-

ently

right-

who

e; of

Yet, though thus wide in His charity, He had a standard by which all men alike were pronounced sinful, and in need of repentance. In the highest sense, God alone was good. Tried by this awful test of comparison with Him, all men were "unclean," "corrupt," "dark," "blind," 'lustful," "selfish," worldly in thought, word, and act, dry trees, dead and lost. All are pronounced in danger of the wrath of God. They may be more or less sinful in degree; but all alike must seek forgiveness; all must repent and be changed, or perish. Thus, when comparing men with men, He recognized better and worse, but before God, and in relation to citizenship in His kingdom. He acknowledged no difference, but condemned all alike as sinners. Before the One who alone is pure and holy, He humbles all. He will suffer no empty pride in the presence of the Creator.<sup>11</sup> In His sight no one is to be called good. All are guilty, and even the best need par? don. In this view of man. He declared that He had not come to call the rightcous but sinners to repentance. Even the best of men, though righteous before their fellows, are guilty before God. It is the unique characteristic of the teaching of Jesus, that while He distinctly proclaims the moral differences between man and man; He insists with supreme and unchangeable earnestness on the infinite moral distance and contrast between the creature and the Creator. All before Him are cvil, or have evil in them. There may be good among the bad, but sin is not wanting even in the best."" The repentance He preached was the child-like humility which has no claim to merit. but, conscious of its own weakness, resigns its will to the guidance of God, and seeks His forgiveness. It has already entered His King dom.

Nothing is told respecting the extent of this first northern missionary tour, beyond the incidental remark that it embraced the towns and villages thickly studded round the western shore of the Lake of Galilee. The fame of His doings at Jerusalem had everywhere preceded Him, and attracted large crowds wherever He came. As yet He was alone, for His early followers had returned to their calling of fishermen, at Bethsaida and Capernaum. Reaching this neighbourhood after a time, an incident occurred which once more drew them from their nets, and transformed them into future apostles.

Jesus had risen early in the morning, as is the custom with Orientals, and had gone out to the shore of the Lake, which was close at

cid woi

mai

at t

me, asto

sim

spir

man fron

to tl

give

effec

The

had.

their

once

their

more

ently

any the k

cere

for c

ing it

hithe

fishin place

Hims

famil

them

but b loyalt

acter

germ But i

huma

of po

with it, we

thems

and n

last J

Sappl

palac

Th

T

The stillness of the morning promised temporary relief from hand. the crowds who daily thronged Him, and a much needed interval for peaceful solitude. But there was, henceforth, no rest for the Son of Man. The people were already afoot, and had hurried out to the beach, in numbers, "to hear the Word of God," for they recognized Him as speaking with divine authority, like John, or one of the prophets. Unable to go on, and willing to feed these "sheep of the House of Israel," He turned towards two boats drawn up on the white beach; the fishermen having come ashore, after a fruitless night's labour, to wash and mend their nets. The one boat was that of His old disciples Peter and Andrew, the other, that of James and John, who, with their father Zebedee; and some hired men, were busy preparing for the next evening's venture. To meet again must have been as pleasant to their Master as themselves, and their lowly occupation must have lost its charm at the recollection of the time when they had shared His society. Entering into Peter's boat, and asking him to thrust out a little from the land, that He might have freedom to address the people, He sat down, as was usual with the Rabbis when they taught, and spoke to the crowd standing on the shore. The clear rippling water playing gently round the boat; the fields, and vineyards, and olive groves behind; the eager listeners, with their varied and picturesque Eastern dress; the wondrous Preacher; the calmness and delicious coolness of morning, and, over all, the cloudless Syrian sky, must have made the scene striking in the extreme. The public addresses of the Rabbis were always very short, and so doubtless, were those of Jesus. The people were soon dismissed, and wandered off, to discuss, as Jewish congregations always did, the sayings they had heard. But Jesus had received a service in the use of His strange pulpit, and wished to repay it, as only He could. Telling Peter, the steersman of the boat, to push off into the deep water. He bade him and his brother let down the uet. It was a circular one, cast from the boat, and then dragged slowly behind, towards the shore. The fish in the Sea of Galilee must always have been very abundant, even when the fisheries were so active, for, at this day, their number can scarcely be conceived by those who have not been on the spot. The shoals frequently cover an acre of the surface, or even more, and the fish, as they slowly move along the surface, with their back fins just seen on the level of the water, are so crowded, that it looks, a short way off, like a heavy shower of rain. But Simon and his brother had had no success though they had spent the night. when fishing is best, in fruitless efforts. There was no hesitation, however, in obeying the command, and they had hardly done so, when they swept into a shoal, and had to beckon to James and John, their partners, to come quickly, and save their net from breaking with the catch. Even then, however, the two boats were loaded to the water's edge, and seemed as if they would sink. Peter, ever impulsive, could not restrain his feelings at such an inrom

for

n of

the

the

the

the

tless

that

and

busy

have

ccu-

vhen

king

dom

abbis

hore.

lelds.

their

the loud-

10190

nd so

1. and

e say-

use of elling

er. He

one,

s the

very

their

on the

even

their

hat it

n and night,

ation,

when

their

th the

vater's

an incident-so unexpected, so grateful. He who had wrought so great a wonder must have unknown and inconceivable powers, before which man, guilty as he feels, himself, might well be afraid. Falling down at the feet of Jesus, he could only utter the words-" Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord." Nor were his companions less astonished at the miracle. But Jesus had a high purpose with these simple, open-hearted friends. They had shown their sympathy of spirit with Him already, and now He designed to attach them permanently to His service. "Fear not," said He, "come after me; from henceforth I will make you fishers of men... You catch the fish to their death; you will take men alive, to save them from death, and give them eternal life." It was enough. Words 'so apt had their effect. From that moment the four were His devoted followers. The rich gain they would have prized so highly, but an hour before, had lost its charm. Called to decide, there and then, as a proof of their fitness for discipleship, they forsook all, and followed Him at once.

The few who had first joined Christ, and by doing so had shown their fitness for His special intimacy and confidence, were thus, once more gathered round Him, and lived with Him henceforth, apparently in the same dwelling, on a closer and more tender footing than any He afterwards received. They had often heard Him speak of the kingdom of God; of the need of faith in Himself and of a sincere religious spirit, as the conditions of entering it, and they yearned for closer intercourse with Him, that they might learn more respecting it. Their instant obedience showed their devotion. All that had hitherto engaged their thoughts and care, their boats, their nets, their fishing gear, their daily toil for daily bread, were left behind. They placed themselves, henceforth, under the higher authority of God Himself: ready at any time to separate themselves even from their families, in the interest of the new Kingdom. Jesus had drawn them to Himself, as they were to draw others, not by craft or force, but by the power of His living words and the spirit of love. Their loyalty was free and spontaneous. The calm greatness of the character of Jesus shines out in such an unpretending beginning, as the germ and centre of a movement which is to revolutionize the world. But insignificant as it might seem, it was only so when judged by a human standard. Tainted by no selfishness, weak ambition, or love of power, the four simple, child-like, uncorrupted natures, touched with the love of Heavenly Truth, and eager to win others to embrace it, were living spiritual forces, destined by a law of nature to repeat themselves in ever wider circles, through successive generations. The fishermen and sailors of the Lake of Galilee were a numerous and redoubted class, with something of the feeling of a clan. In the last Jewish war we find them, under the leadership of Jesus, son of Sapphias, seizing Tiberias, and burning, and plundering the great palace of Antipas. Of the four who had now definitely cast in their

fou

new

and

the"

anno

syna son, warn cease their

Sabb was t

itis

gone

house

what a list

moon

dismi

and t

Fathe

Him.

Danor

moon

pressi

out H

Hims

Etern

plead

and te

as 1f

Fathe

holy i

per, E from

broke

devoti

passin

The

news

· every it by

Sabba

their

congr

might

lot with Jesus, Peter and Andrew were apparently poor: James and John, in a better position. For the convenience of trade, both families had left the neighbouring town of Bethsaida, and had settled in Capernaum, one of the centres of the local fisheries, and of the occupations connected with them. Peter alone seems to have been married, and in his house Jesus henceforth found a home, as perhaps he had done on His former short stay.

THE final "call" addressed to Peter and his brother, and to James and John, at the Lake of Galilce, apparently insignificant as an event. proved to have been, in reality, one of the turning points in the history of the world. The "call" of Abraham had given the world, as an everlasting inheritance, the grand truth of a Living Personal God; that of Moses had created a nation, in which the active government of human affairs by one God was to be illustrated, and His will made known directly to mankind; but that of the poor Galilæan fishermen was the foundation of a society, for which all that had preceded it was only the preparation; a society in which all that was merely outward and temporary in the relations of God to man, should be laid aside, and all that was imperfect and material replaced by the perfect, spiritual, and abiding, The true theocracy, towards which mankind had been slowly advancing, through ages, had received its first overt establishment, when Peter heard, on his knees, the summons of Jesus to follow Him, and had, with the others, at once, from the heart, obeyed. Henceforth, it only remained to extend the kingdom thus founded, by winning the consciences of men to the same devotion, by the announcement of the Fatherhood of God; the need of sceking His favour by repentance; and faith in His divine Son, leading to a holy life, of which that of Jesus, as the Saviour-Messiah, was the realized ideal : The sunthis and data some of the surface

From the shores of the Lake, Christ went to the house of Peter, accepting his invitation to share his hospitality.

The little town itself, with its two or three thousand inhabitants, was surrounded by a wall, and lay partly along the shore; some of the houses close to the water; others with a garden between it and them. The black lava, or basalt, of which all were built, was universally whitewashed, so that the town was seen to fine effect, from a distance, through the green of its numerous trees and gardens. Peter's household consisted of his wife, and her mother—doubtless a widow—whom his kindly nature had brought to this second home, Andrew, his brother, and, now, of Jesus, his guest. James and John, likely, still lived with their father, in Capernaum, and the whole four still followed their calling in the intervals of attending their new Master.

Sec.

382

he en

1ps

STZ.

sòn wa

çea the

1.pP

moş

ent,

ory

an

lod;

aent ade

men

d it

out-

laid

fect,

kind

vert

esus

eart,

thus

n, by

king

g to

s the

eter,

ac of

and hiver-

ona

dens.

ess a lome,

John,

whole

ford

<sup>b</sup> It appears to have been on a Friday that Jesus summoned Peter and his companions. The day passed, doubtless, in further work for the kingdom. "As the sun set, the beginning of the Sabbath was announced by three blasts of a trumpet, from the roof of the spacious synage que of the town, which the devout commandant of the garrison, though not a Jew, had built for the people. The first blast warned the peasants, in the far-stretching vineyards and gardens, to cease their toil; the second was the signal for the townsfolks to close their business for the week, and the third, for all to kindle the holy Sabbath light, which was to burn till the sacred day was past. It was the early spring, and the days were still short, for even in summer it is hardly morning twilight, in Palestine, at four, and the light is gone by eight. Jesus did not, however, go that night to Peter's house, but spent the hours in solitary devotion." We can fancy, from what is elsewhere told us, that the day closed while He still spoke to a listening crowd, under some palm-tree, or by the wayside. As the moon rose beyond the hills, on the other side of the Lake. He would dismiss His hearers, with words of comfort, and a greeting of peace, and then turn to the silent hills behind, to be alone with His Heavenly Father. On their lonely heights, the noise of men lay far beneath Him, and He could find rest, after the toils of the day. A wide panorama of land and water stretched away on all sides, in the white moonlight. He was Himself its centre, and gazed on it with inexpressible sympathy and emotion. We can imagine Him, spreading out His arms, as if to take it all to His heart, and then prostrating Himself, as it were with it, before God, to intercede for it with the Eternal, His brow touching the earth in lowly abasement, while He pleaded for man as His friend and brother, in words of infinite love and tenderness." "Rising, erelong, in strong emotion, it would seem as if He held up the world in His lifted hands to offer it to His Father.<sup>60</sup> He spoke, was silent, then spoke again. His prayer was holy inter-communion with God. At first low, and almost in a whisper, His voice gradually became loud and joyous, till it echoed back from the rocks around Him. Thus the night passed, till morning broke and found Him, once more prostrate as if overcome, in silent devotion, but the dawn of day was the signal for His rising, and passing down again to the abodes of men." and as you as here or and any The morning service in the synagogue began at nine, and as the news of the great Rabbi being in the neighbourhood had spread, • every one strove to attend, in hopes of seeing Him. Women came to it by back streets, as was required of them; the men, with slow. Sablath steps, gathered in great numbers, The elders had taken their seats, and the Reader had recited the Eighteen Prayers-the congregation answering with their Amen, for though the prayers might be abridged on other days, they could not be shortened on the

ĩ

Sabbath. The first lesson for the day followed, the people rising and turning reverently towards the Shrine, and chanting the words after the Reader. Another lesson them followed, and the Reader, at its close, called on Jesus, as a Rabbi present in the congregation, to speak from it to the people.

His words must have sounded strangely new and attractive, for apart, from their vividness and force, they spoke of matters of the most vital interest, which the Rabbis left wholly untouched. He had founded the kingdom of God, and now sought to build it up by realizing its conditions in the souls of men, who should each, forthwith, be living centres of influence on others. But a course so retired, and unknown to the world at large as that which He followed of speaking to modest assemblies in local synagogues, makes it easy to understand how His life might be overlooked by the public writers. of the age. Yet, in the little world in which He moved, the noiseless words by which He carried on His work created an intense impression. He gave old truths an unwonted freshness of presentation, and added much that sounded entirely new, on His own authority, instead of confining. Himself, like the Rabbis, to lifeless repetitions of traditional commonplaces, delivered with a dread of the least deviation or: originality. They claimed no power to say a word of their own: He spoke with a startling independence. Their synagogue sermons, as we see in the Book of Jubilees, were a tiresome iteration of the minutest Rabbinical rules, with a serious importance which regarded them as the basis of all moral order. The kind, and quality of wood! for the altar; the infinite details of the law of tithes; the moral deadliness of the use of blood; or the indispensableness of circumcision on the eighth day, were urged with passionate zeal as momentous and fundamental truths, The morality and religion of the age had sunk thus low, and hence, the fervid words of Jcsus, stirring the depths of the heart, created profound excitement in Capernaum. Men were amazed at the phenomenon of novelty, in a religious sphere so unchangeably conservative as that of the synagogue. and New teaching," said one to the other, "and with authority-not like other Rabbis They only repeat the old; this man takes on Him to speak without reference to the past." But if they were astonished at His teaching, I they were still more so at the power which He revealed in connectiond with it. Among those who had gone to the synagogue that morning was an unhappy man, the victim of a calamity incident apparently to the age of Christ and the Apostles only. A He was " possessed by a spirit of an unclean demon," Our utter ignorance of the spiritual world leaves the significance of such words a mystery, though the popular idea of the time is handed down by the Rabbis. An unclean demon, in the language of Christ's day, was an evil spirit that drove the person possessed, to haunt burial places, and other spots most unclean in the eyes of Jews. There were men who affected the blackart, pretending, like the witch of Endor, to raise the dead, and for that tos into disr of t pers 911 bega Risi frén hörr The The Jesu of H indig that mids wild fitted teach its w 080 Jesus But mode anvio a not espec fever locali by his night be the ofal The a hint forth the di hand, ever, streng her h The all. bu signal the ru that end, lodging in tombs, and macerating themselves with fasting, to secure the fuller aid and inspiration of such evil spirits; and others into whom the demons entered, driving them involuntarily to these dismal habitations. Both classes were regarded as under the power of this order of beings, but it is not told us to which of the two the person present in the synagogue belonged.

ind

ter

its

to

01.11

fer

the

had

by

rth-

red,

loof

y to

itera

eless

pres-

and

stead

radia

n-or

1 He

15, 88

the

rded

wood

dead a

s and

NS OF

were biun-

ing

bbis.

thouto

hing,

ction

ming

ly to

bya

ritual 9

clean:

Irove

most black.

t for

nathes.

The service had gone on apparently without interruption, till Jesus began to speak." Then, however, a paroxysm seized the unhappy man. Rising in the midst of the congregation, a wild howl of demoniacal frenzy burst from him, that must have frozen the blood of all with horror: "Ha!" yelled the demon." What have we to do with Thee. Jesus, the Nazarene? Thou comest to destroy us! I know Thee, who Thou art, the Holy One of God!" Among the crowd Jesus alone remained calm. "He would not have acknowledgment of His Messiahship from such a source." "Hold thy peace," said He, indignantly; "and come out of him." The spirit felt its Master, and that it must obey, but, demon to the last, threw the man down in the midst of the congregation, tearing him as it did so, and, then, with a wild howl, fied out of him. Nothing could have happened better fitted to impress the audience favourably towards Jesus. This new teaching, said they amongst themselves, is with authority. It earries solution a startig of the solution of the its warrant with it.

So startling an incident had broken up the service for the time, and Jesus left, with His four disciples, and the rest of the congregation. But His day's work of mercy had only begun. Arriving at His modest home, he found the mother of Peter's wife struck down with a violent attack of the local fever for which Capernaum had so bad a notoriety: "The quantity of marshy land in the neighbourhood, especially at the entrance of the Jordan into the Lake, has made fever of a very malignant type at times the characteristic of the locality, so that the physicians would not allow Josephus, when hurt by his horse sinking in the neighbouring marsh, to sleep even a single night in Capernaum, but hurried him on to Taricheta. It was not to be thought that He who had just sent joy and healing into the heart. of a stranger, would withhold His aid when a friend required it. The anxious relatives forthwith besought His help, but the gentlest hint would have sufficed. It mattered not that it was fever: He was forthwith in the chamber, bending over the sick woman, and rebuking the disease as if it had been an evil personality. He took her by the hand, doubtless with a look, and with words, which made her His for ever, and gently raising her, she found the fever gone and health and strength returned, so that she could prepare their midday meal for her household and their wondrous guest han the net these is detraption

The strict laws of the Jewish Sabbath gave a few hours of rest to all, but the blast of the trumpet which announced its close was the signal for a renewal of the popular excitement, now increased by the rumour of a second miracle. With the setting of the sun it

Its

the

shy

joy Th

for

vig

wei

the film

and

orol

ing

ren

the

whi

Hin

hea

the:

not

bod

thou

sect

bfelt

noble

Jipur

leou

bly

- daot,

mig

.90f7

.sto f

resi

POW

befavo

to wit

jenu ng

tii deu

borefu

28:ems

odthe

oTcan

Ttoom

nati

of

was once more lawful to move beyond the two thousand paces of a Sabbath Day's journey, and to carry whatever burdens one pleased: Forthwith, began to gather from every street, and from the thickly sown towns and villages round, the strangest assemblage. "The child led its blind father as near the enclosure of Simon's house as the throng permitted; the father came carrying the sick child; men bore the helpless in swinging hammocks; "all that had any sick with whatever disease," brought them to the Great Healer. The whole town was in motion, and crowded before the house. What the sick of even a small town implied may be imagined. Fevers, convulsions, asthma, wasting consumption, swollen dropsy, shaking paley, the deaf, the dumb, the brain-affected, and, besides all,"" many that were possessed with devils," that last, worst, symptom of the despairing rentle influence of the misery and dark confusion of the times. Would He leave them as they were? They had taken it for granted that He would pity them, for was He not a Prophet of God, and was it not natural that, like Elijah or Elisha, the greatest of the prophets, the power of God might be present to heal those who were brought to Him? Already, moreover, His characteristics had won the confidence of the simple crowd. There must have been a mysterious sympathy and goodness in His looks, and words, and even in His bearing, that seemed to beckon the wretched to Him as their friend. and that conquered all uncorrupted hearts." It had drawn His disciples from the interests of gain, to follow Him in His poverty; it melted the woman that was a sinner into tears; it softened the liard nature of publicans; and drew hundreds of weary and heavy-laden to Him for rest. These who could, gathered wherever they might hope to find Him, and as it was this evening, those who could not come, had themselves carried into His presence. As many as could, strove to touch, if it were possible, even His clothes; others con-fessed aloud their sins, and owned that their illness was the punishment from God. One would not venture to ask Him to come to his house; another brought Him in that He might be, as it were, constrained to help. The blind cried out to Him from the road-side, and the woman of Canaan followed Him in spite of His hard words. When He came near, even those possessed felt His divine greatness. Trembling in every limb, they would fain have fied, but felt rooted to the spot, the evil spirits owning, in wild shrieks, the presence of one whose goodness was torment, and before whose will they must yield up their prey. of His driving missic

The sight of so much misery crowding for relief touched Jesus at once, and, erelong, He appeared at the open door, before the excited crowd. With a command, "Hold thy peace, and come out of him," a poor demoniac was presently in his right mind. The helpless lame stood up at the words "I say unto thee, Arise." (The paralytic left his couch, at the sound of "Take up thy bed and walk." To some, He had a word of comfort, that dispelled alarm and drove off 8 81

sed:

bild the

bore

with hole

sick

onii, leaf.

were

ring

1194 nted

was hets.

utht

iond-

His

iend.

y; it liard

adeu

night

l not ould,

con-

nish-

nento

were, side,

ords.

mess.

ooted

cer of

must ccited

him,' lpless

alytic

160To

veooff

lo ...

its secret cause. "Be it to thee according to thy fuith." "Woman, thou art loosed from thise infirmity." "Be of good cheer, my son, thy sins are forgiven thee," was enough to turn sorrow and pain into joy and health. Erelong He had spoken to all some word of mercy. The blind left with their sight restored; the possessed thanked God for their restoration: the fever-stricken felt the glow of returning vigour; the dumb shouted His praises; and thus the strange crowd went off one by one, leaving the house once more in the silence of the night. No wonder the Evangelist saw in such an evening a fulfilment of the words of the prophet, "Himself took our infirmities and byre our diseases."

It was not, however, by popular excitement and mere outward healing that the kingdom of God was to be spread, but by the still and gentle influence of the Truth, working conviction in individual souls. The noisy crowd, the thronging numbers of diseased and suffering; the carlosity that, ran after excitement, and the yearning for help which looked only to outward healing, troubled, and almost alarmed Him. He had come to found a Spiritual Society, of men changed in heart towards God, and filled with faith in Himself as its Head; and the merely external and mostly selfish notions of the multitude, could not escape His keen eyes. His divine love and pity sighed over the bodily and mental distress around. But, as a rule, the sufferers thought only of their outward misery, in melancholy ignorance of its secret source in their own sin and guilt before God, and had all their felt wants relieved when their bodily troubles were removed.

In one aspect, indeed, these miraculous cures furthered the great purpose of Jesus. They might prove no doctrine, for mere power could not establish moral and spiritual truth. Miracles might possibly be wrought by other influences than divine, and left religious teaching to stand on its own merits, for they appealed to the senses; not, like truth, to the soul. The display or overwhelming power might almost seem to endanger, rather than promote, the higher aim of Jesus, to win those whom He addressed. It awes and repels men to find themselves in the presence of forces which they can neither resist nor understand. In nature, untutored races tremble before powers which may be used to destroy them, and seek to win their favour by the flattery of worship, surrounding even human despotism to with awful attributes, before which they cower in terror.

Jesus, however, could appeal to His miraculous powers as evidences of His divine mission, and often did so. Their value lay in the grandeur they added to His character. Even in the wilderness, He had berefused to exert them, under any circumstances, either for His natural wants, or for His personal ends, and He adhered to this amazing self-restraint through His whole career. It was seen from the first, that His awful powers were uniformly beneficent; that He or came, not to destroy men's lives, but to save them; that He used momnipotence to bless, but never to hurt. His words, His bearing, and T

CONVE

the tr

lasting

for: an

ron, Sal

soul th

Hisic

dawn

noione

behind

fig and

witht

glory.

which

He co

alone

tlie pu

and m lived.

Why

whole

means

the gr

ible gi

in har

maine

His F

selfig

the ris

loss w

ofves

which

at last.

that th

than (

have! 1

spread

therefo

domio

He be

alread

ging H

ited ev

each to the bri

The

Pete

His looks of divine love and tenderness, doubtless predisposed mento expect this, and His uniform course soon confirmed it. They saw that nothing could disturb His absolute patience, or rouse Him ite vindictiveness. They heard Him endure meekly the most contemptuous incers, the bitterest driticism, and the most rancorous hostility. No one denied His 'miraculous' powers, though some affected to call them demoniac; in direct contradiction to their habitual exercise for the hollest ends. But they were so invariably devoted to the good of others, and so entirely held in restraint, as regarded personal ends, that men dame, erelong, to treat Him with the reckless boldness of hatred, notwithstanding such awful endowment.

Round one so transcendentally meek, self-interest found no motive for gathering. He who would do nothing with such possibilities, for Himself, could not be expected to do more for the personal ends of others. Hypocrisy had nothing to gain by seeking His favour. Only sincerity found Him attractive. But, on the other hand, with the uncorrupted and worthy, this characteristic gave Him unlimited moral elevation. No more sublime spectacle can be conceived than boundless power, kept in perfect control, for ends wholly unselfish and noble. Condescension wins admiration when it is only from man to man: when it showed itself in veiled omnipotence, ever ready to bless others, but never used on its own hehalf, it became a divine ideal. Men saw Him clothed with power over disease, and even over death: able to cast forth spirits, or to still the sea, and yet accessible, full of sympathy, the lofty patriot, the tender friend, the patient counsellor: shedding tears, at times, from a full heart, and ever ready with a wise and gentle word for all; so unaffected and gentle that children drew round Him with a natural instinct, and even worldly hardness and vice were softened before Him; and this contrast of transcendent power, and perfect humility, made them feel that He was indeed the Head of the Kingdom of God amongst men. The secret of His amazing success, as the founder of a new religious constitution for mankind lay in the recognition of this perfect sacrifice of one some transcendentally great, culminating in "the death of the cross," telt a was the perfect realization, in Himself, of the life He urged on others. It implied the ideal fulfilment of all human duties, and no less so, of all divine, for the heavenly love which alone could dictate and sustain such a career, was, in litself, the most perfect transcript of the mature of God. is A life in which every step showed kingly grace and divinely boundless love, condescending to the lowlest self-denia for the good of man, proclaimed Him the rightful Head of the New! Kingdom of God will fill and share started in the concer month

The night which followed this busy and eventful Sabbath brough no repose to His body or mind. The excitement around agitated and disturbed Him. It was His first triumphant success, for, in the south, He had met with little sympathy, though He had attracted crowds. But curiosity was not progress, and excitement was not mon -

n ite

npt-

lity.

call

nfor

d of that -

red,

tive

for

is of

only.

ioral

und-

and n to / bless deal.

sth:

il of

llor

wise

Itew:

and

dent!

His

for

U BOH

PAID

lon

tate it

racal

ninoi

New

alren. ehdat

Maria

then:

cotit

tije

conversion Lowliness and concealment, not noisy throngs, were the true conditions of His work, and of its firmost establishment, and lasting glory: "More popularity was, moreover, a renewed temptation," for, as a man, He was susceptible of the same seductions as His breth. ren He might be drawn aside to think of Himself, and to His holy soul the faintest approach to this was a surrender to evil. Rising from His couch therefore, while the deep durkness which precedes the dawn still rested on hill and valley. He left the house so quietly that no one heard. Him, and went, once more, to the solitudes of the hills behind the town. Passing through groves of paims, and orchards of fig and olive trees, intermixed with vineyards and grassy meadows. with their tinkling brooks, so delightful in the East, and their unseen glory of lifes and varied flowers. He soon reached the h. ghts, amongst which, at no great distance from the town, were lonely ravines where He could enjoy perfect seclusion In the stillness of nature He was alone with His Father, and far from the temptations which troubled the pure simplicity of His soul, and His lowly meckness before God and man. We, now, see the glory of the path He chose, but while He lived, even His disciples would have planned a very different course. Why not take advantage of the excitement of the people to rouse the whole nation as John had done? Was not His miraculous power a means of endless benefit to men, and should it not, therefore, be made the great feature of His work? Vanity would have suggested plausible grounds for His using His gifts in a way; that, in reality, was not in harmony with the great end of His mission. But His soul remained unsullied, like the stainless light. He came to do the will of His Father, and nothing could make Him for a moment think of Himself. In lonely communion with His own soul, and earnest prayer, the rising breath of temptation passed once more away sellor grow and Peter and Andrew, finding Him gone when they awoke, were at a loss what to think. "More sick persons were gathering, and the crowds of vesterday promised to be larger to-day. Hasting to the hills, to. which they rightly supposed He had retired, and having found Him at last, they fancied He would at once return with them, on hearing that the whole people were seeking Him. But He had a wider sphere than Capernaum, and higher duties than mere bodily healing. with have not come to heal the sick," said He, "but to announce and spread the kingdom of God. All I do is subordinate to this. Let us, therefore, go to the neighbouring towns, for I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities, as well as to Capernaum." Nor would He be persuaded to return for a time, though some of the people had already found out His retreat, and joined with the disciples in begging Him to do so. Un down order and sidt housed of his family of a bit

The circuit now begun was the first of a series, in which Jesus visited every part of Galilee, preaching and teaching in the synagogue of each town that had one, and often, doubtless, in the open air. It was the bright and sunny time of the year, when the harvest was quickly ٦ ripening. The heat was already oppressive at noon, but the mornings and evenings permitted more easy travelling. As It was a time of intense labour for the Saviour of which the day's work in Capernaum was only a sample "The bounds of Galilee embraced the many villages and towns of the Plain of Esdraelon, and the whole of the hilly country north of it, almost to Lebanon. Day by day brought its march from one village or town to others, over the thirsty limestone uplands, where the wanderer thankfully received the cup of cold water, as a gift to be recompensed in the kingdom of God, or through glowing vineyards, or among the corn-fields whitening to the harvest, or falling under the sickle of the reaper. "Every day," said Jesus to His disciples, "has its own troubles;" for weariness; possibly, at times, hunger; the dependence on hospitality for shelter; the pressure of crowds; the stolid indifference of too many; the idle curiosity of more; the ever-present misery of disease in all its forms; and, it may be, even thus early, the opposition of some, must have borne heavily on a nature like His. The news of His miracles had spread like running fire through the whole country, and attracted crowds from all parts. Beyond Palestine, on the north, they had become the common talk of Syria; on the east, they had stirred the population of the wide district of the ten cities, and of Perea, and on the south, His name was on all lips in Jerusalem and Judeabli Erelong, it seemed as if the scenes of John's preaching were returning, for numbers gathered to Him from all these parts, and followed Him, day by day, in His movements through the land. His progress was, indeed, worthy of such an attendance, for no king ever celebrated such a triumph. Conquerors returning from victory over kingdoms and empires had led trains of trembling captives in their train. But, at every resting-place, a sad crowd of sufferers from all diseases and painful affections, and of demoniacs, lunatics, and paralytics, was gathered in the path of Jesus, and He healed them by a word or a touch. Escorted into each town by those whom He had thus restored, the lately sick and dying whom He had instantaneously cured, -- it is no wonder that the whole land rang with the story. The enemies over whom He triumphed were pain, and sickness, and death, and the rejoicings that greeted Him were shouts of gratitude and blessing as the Prince of Life of " Ind an east of some about a real of allive I'

Only one incident of this wondrous journey is recorded at any length.<sup>11</sup> In one of the cities He visited, He was suddenly met by a man "full of leprosy," a disease at all times terrible, but aggravated, in the opinion of that day, by the belief that it was a direct, "stroke of God," as a punishment for special sins. It began with little specks on the cyclids, and on the palms of the hand, and gradually spread over different parts of the body, bleaching the hair white wherever it showed itself, crusting the affected parts with shining scales, and causing swellings and sores. From the skin it slowly ate its way through the tissues, to the bones and joints and even to the marrow, morn-

nica-

d the ole of

ought

io qu

od, or

to the

; pos-

eidle

orms;

have shad

racted

ad bed the

adson

i Ere-

rning;

Him.

s was, brated

doms But.

es and

gathtouch.

the

is no sover

d the

ing as

11 1 20

t any t by a

vated, stroke

specks

pread

ever it s, and

way

ITOW;

rotting the whole body piecemeal. The lungs, the organs of speech and hearing, and the eyes were attacked in turn, till, at last, consumption or dropsy brought welcome death. The dread of infection kept men aloof from the sufferer, and the Law proscribed him, as, above all men unclean. The disease was hereditary to the fourth generation. No one thus afflicted could remain in a walled town, though he might live in a village. "There were different varieties of leprosy, but all were dreaded as the saddest calamity of life. The leper was required to rend his outer garment, to go bareheaded, and to cover his mouth so as to hide his beard, as was done in lamentation for the dead. He had, further, to warn passers by away from him by the cry of " Unclean, unclean;" not without the thought that the sound would call forth a prayer for the sufferer, and less from the fear of infection than to prevent contact with one thus visited by God and unclean ...... He could not speak to any one, or receive or return a salutation. In the lapse of ages, however, these rules had been in some degree relaxed. A leper might live in an open village, with any one willing to receive him and to become unclean for his sake. and he might even enter the synagogue, if he had a part specially partitioned off for himself, and was the first to enter the building, and the last to leave. He even at times ventured to enter a town, though forbidden under the penalty of forty stripes. But it was a living death, in the slow advance of which a man became daily more loathsome to himself, and even to his dearest friends. ""These four are counted as dead," says the Talmud, "the blind, the leper, the poor, and the childless. "it is not some and the costs of with a ball of an The news of the wondrous cures wrought on so many had reached the unfortunate man, who now dared the Law, to make his way to the healer. Falling at His feet in humble reverence, he delighted the spirit of Jesus by, perhaps, the first open confession of a simple and lowly faith-" Lord, if Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean." His kneeling before Him, and addressing Him by such a title, was, indeed, only what he would have done to any one greatly above him, but his frank belief in His power, and his implicit submission to His will, touched a heart so tender. Moved with compassion for the unfortunate, there was no delay-a touch of the hand, and the words, "I will: be thou clean," and he rose, a leper no longer. To have touched him, was, in the eyes of a Jew, to have made Himself unclean, but He had come to break through the deadly externalism that had taken the place of true religion, and could have shown no more strikingly how He looked on mere Rabbinical precepts than by making a touch which, till then, had entailed the worst uncleanness, the means of cleansing. Slight though it seemed, the touch of the leper was the proclamation that Judaism was abrogated henceforthin tare

The popular excitement had already extended widely, and a cure like this was certain to raise it still higher. With the Baptist in prison on a pretended political charge, and the people full of political

otherin

whileth

and his

the lepe dipped

as often before l

with th

through

as a sin

blood b

poured

a burnt

and the

was fit

"sweet-

and oil

rest, will formed

that the

had bee

restored

intercou

tenderly

ments a

It appea

represse

tudes ar

miracle.

by tellin

him. 1

so great

avail the

Himself

Him ou

diseases

But, wh

craved

that, du

night, i

Ed & ich & lit

tilites 1.

Nill. . L

In suc

Of the

The

dreams in connection with the expected Messiah all that might fan the flame was to be dreaded. Excitement, moreover, was unfavourable to the great work of Jesus. He needed a thoughtful calm in the mind, for lasting effects. The kingdom of God which He proclaimed was no mere appeal to the feelings, but sought the understanding and heart. Turning to the newly cured, therefore, He spoke carnestly to him, not to tell any one what had, happened, threatening him with His anger, if he should disobey. "Go to Jerusalem," said He, "and show yourself to the priest, and make the offerings for your cleansing, required by the Law, as a proof to your neighbours, to the priests, the scribes, and the people at large, that you are really clean."

A certificate of the recovery of a leper could only be given at Jerusalem, by a priest, after a lengthened examination, and tedious rites, and, no doubt, these were duly undergone and performed. It will illustrate the "bondage" of the ccremonial law, as then in force, to describe them. With his heart full of the first joy of a cure so amazing, for no one had ever before heard of the recovery of a man "full of leprosy," he set off to the Temple for the requisite papers to authorize his return, once more, to the roll of Israel. A tent had to be pitched outside the city, and in this the priest examined the leper. cutting off, all his hair with the utmost care, for if only two hairs were left, the ceremony was invalid. Two sparrows had to be brought at this first stage of the cleansing; the one, to be killed over a small earthen pan of water, into which its blood must drop: the other, after being sprinkled with the blood of its mate,  $\rightarrow a$  cedar twig, to which scarlet wool and a piece of hyssop were bound, being used to do so,---was let free in such a direction that it should fly to the open country. After the scrutiny by the priest, the leper put on clean clothes, and carried away those he had worn to a running stream, to wash them thoroughly, and to cleanse himself by a bath. He could now enter the city, but for seven days more could not enter his own house. On the eighth day after, he once more submitted to the scissors of the priest, who cut off whatever hair might have grown in the interval. Then followed a second bath, and now he had only carefully to avoid any defilement, so as to be fit to attend in the Temple next morning, and complete his cleansing. The first step in this final purification was to offer three lambs, two males and a female, none of which must be under a year old. Standing at the outer edge of the court of the men, which he was not yet worthy to enter, the leper waited the longed-for rites. These began by the priest taking one of the male. lambs destined to be slain as an atonement for the leper, and leading. it to each point of the compass in turn, and by his swinging a vessel of oil on all sides, in the same way, as if to present both to the universally present God. He then led the lamb to the leper, who laid his hands on its head, and gave it over as a sacrifice for his guilt, which he now confessed. It was forthwith killed at the north side of the altar, two priests catching its blood; the one in a vessel, the other in his hand. The first now sprinkled the altar with the blood, while the other went to the leper and anomted his ears, his right thumb, and his right toe with it. The one priest then poured some oil of the leper's offering into the teft hand of the other, who, in his turn, dipped his finger seven times into the oil thus held, and sprinkled it as often towards the Holy of Holes. Each part of the leper which before had been touched with the blood, was then further anointed with the oil, what remained being stroked on his head.

The lever could now enter the men's court, and did so, passing through it to that of the priests. The female lamb was next killed, as a sin-offering, after he had put his hands on its head, part of its blood being smeared on the horns of the altar, while the rest was poured out at the altar base. The other male lamb was then slain for a burnt sacrifice; the leper once more laying his hands on its head, and the priest sprinkling its blood on the altar. The fat, and all that was fit for an offering, was now laid on the altar, and burned as a "sweet-smelling savour" to God. A meat-offering of fine wheat meal and oil ended the whole; a portion being laid on the altar, while the rest, with the two lambs, of which only a small part had been burned; formed the dues of the priest. It was not till all this had been done that the full ceremony of cleansing, or showing himself to the priest, had been carried out, and that the cheering words, "Thou art pure." restored the sufferer once more to the rights of citizenship and of intercourse with men. No wonder that even a man like St. Peter, so tenderly minded to his ancestral religion, should speak of its requirements as a yoke which "neither our fathers nor we are able to bear."

Of the after-history of the leper thus cleansed we are not informed. It appears, however, that his joy at being healed was too great to be repressed even by Christ's grave imposition of silence. The multitudes around Jesus would soon, of themselves, spread news of the miracle, but the healed man widened and heightened the excitement by telling everywhere on his road to Jerusalem what had befallen him. The result was that Jesus could no longer enter a town or city, so great was the commotion His presence excited. Nor was it of any avail that He retired to the open country, for even when He betook Himself to the upland solitudes, great multitudes continually sought Him out, either to hear His words, or to be healed of their various diseases.

In such busy and exhausting scenes the days of early autumn passed. But, whatever the returning toils of each morning, the Saviour still craved and secured hours of lonely calm, for we read in St. Luke that, during all these weeks, He was wont to withdraw, doubtless by night, into lonely places to pray.

lit-fan avourin the aimed ig and stly to with fand. nsing, riests, at Jcedions d. It force, ure so a man ers to had to . leper. hairs ought small , after which SO, --intry. s, and them enter on. f the erval. avoid ning, ation vhich irt of d the male ading vessel e unib laid guilt, side .the nant religious parties, io conformal the gravifusion of the viores passions with low it to them billoc. Perhaps desus had hoped that in Capernaum, so least, he would find an interval of repovixxx is structed bar have been expected to have allayed the conform it. No spot in Falestine scence dese likely to be disturated an AA to A A to A A THELLOIC In decusaism.

THE cure of the leper seems to have resulted in Jesus returning, for a moment, to Capernaum. He had acted with the greatest caution during His mission, to avoid giving offence, and thus raising opposition, which would be fatal at the very opening of His ministry. From many a hill-top on His journeyings, He and His disciples had, doubtless, often looked to the mountains in the south-east, amidst which John lay, a helpless prisoner; and they must have felt that the prince who had thus cut short the work of the great Reformer, might be readily moved to the same violence towards themselves. Jesus had, therefore, shunned notoriety; and though He never hesitated to accept homage, where it was sincere and spontaneous, He had never demanded it, and had kept even His miraculous powers in strict subordination to the great work of proclaiming the advent of the kingdom of God. The appeals of pain and misery had, indeed, constrained Him to relieve them, but He had accompanied His miracles by a strict prohibition of their being made publicly known, further Capernauna the charge of route that the Estimate ante austrante

In spite of every precaution, however, the report of His wonderful doings spread far and wide, and drew ever increasing attention. Political circles, as yet, did not condescend to notice Him, but the sicepless eyes of the ecclesiastical authorities were already watching Him, It was enough that He acted independently of them. Not to be with them was, in their eyes, to be against them, for they claimed, as the spiritual leaders of the nation, the sole direction of its religious teaching." The more wonderful His works, the greater their excitement, and the keener their jealousy. In any case, therefore, the words which accompanied such extraordinary manifestations, would have been watched with the closest scrutiny, for any chance of vindi cating their care of the religious interests entrusted to them. (I In a age of such rigid literalism and unchanging conservatism, no teacher with the least individuality of thought or expression could hope to escape, where the determination to condemn was already fixed by Far less was it possible for one like Jesus—so sincere amidst general insincerity; so intense and real amidst what was hollow and outward; so pure and elevated anidst what was gross and worldly; so tenderly human amidst what was harsh and exclusive-to avoid giving pretext for censure. The priests and Rabbis, through the whole land, felt instinctively that their influence was imperilled by His lightest word. They, already, were coldly suspicious. The next step would be to blame, and they would seek, before long, to destroy Him, for it has, in all ages, been the sad characteristic of the leaders of dominant n sions v Perl find an to hav likely men-le slaves, allin hateful and its tablew Helha mouth gather There garden wonde He had tempta neighb Him or Capern beset H new sp healthy men be claims. ers, sim to the Tho:ve the self the cur healed, Hisapp silence, Herwa urged Ton ing:vt/ attracto Jerusal north from e hear an came if possi nant religious parties, to confound the gratification of the worst passions with loyalty to their office.

Perhaps Jesus had hoped that in Capernaum, at least, He would find an interval of repose, for His absence might have been expected to have allayed the excitement. No spot in Palestine seemed less likely to be disturbed by the hostility of the schools. In Jerusalem, men looked back to a past dating from Melchisedek, and were its slaves, but Capernaum was so new that its name does not occur at all in the Old Testament. But He soon found that the dark and hateful genius of Rabbinism, with its puerile customs and formulas, and its fierce bigotry, was abroad through the whole land. tab It was vain to expect that a "city set on a hill" could be hidden. He had scarcely re-entered the town, before it ran from mouth to mouth that He had returned, and was at home. Crowds presently gathered, and filled not only the house, but the space before it. There was to be no rest for the Son of Man, till He found it in the garden grave of Joseph of Arimathea. The applause, the gaping wonder, the huge concourse of people, were only a grief to Him. He had broken away from them before, and sought refuge from the temptations they tended to excite, in lonely prayer by night, on the neighbouring hills, under the pure and silent stars. They had followed Him on His journey from town to town, and, now, on His return to Capernaum, the clamour of voices, and the pressure of throngs. beset Him more than ever. Had anxiety to hear the truths of the new spiritual kingdom caused this excitement, it would have been healthy, but it had been already shown only too clearly that, while men believed in His power to heal, they cared little for His higher. claims. Regret for bodily illness, or ready sympathy with the sufferers, simply as under physical trouble, were evidently the only thought, to the exclusion of any sense of graver spiritual disease in all alike. The very maladies often revealed moral impurity as their cause; and the selfish struggle for His favour, and the too frequent ingratitude of the cured, saddened His soul of the multitudes whom He had healed, most had disappeared, without any signs of having heeded His appeals and warnings. Even the leper, who had at least promised silence, was hardly out of His presence before he forgot his pledge. He was already the Man of Sorrows, but divine compassion still unged Him to heal and and but of anti-man the station report To make the trial greater, it was evident that mischief, was brewing wi The Rabbis were astir. They had heard of the multitudes attracted from the other side of the Jordan on the east; from as far as Jerusalem, and even Idumea, on the south, and from Phenicia on the north; and had followed the crowds, and gathered in Capernaum from every town of Galilee and Judea, and from Jerusalem itself, to hear and see the new wonder ... Sensitive in their own interest, they came with no friendly motive, but cold and hostile; to criticize, and, if possible sto condemn. Diemeto and the salt whe goan and the ser. A niant ie slops w Perh find au to have likely t urning. greatest raising inistry. les had. amidst that the , might Jesus esitated He had in strict of the d, conniracles further Capera nderful tention. but the atching Not to laimed. eligious excitebre, the would f vindi Inas teache hope to 159 Far general itward: enderly ng preedland, ightest would im, for

domi-

Even in Galilee the influence of the order was great. It had done immense service to the nation in earlier days in kindling an intense feeling of nationality, and an enthusiasm, at first healthy and beneficial, though now perverted, for their faith. The Rabbis were the heads of the nation, in the widest sense, for the religion of the people was also their politics. They were the theologians, the jurists, the legislators, the politicians, and, indeed, the soul of Israel. The priests had sunk to a subordinate place in the public regard. The venerate tion which the people felt for their Law was willingly extended to its teachers. They were greeted reverently in the street and in the maxket-place, men rising up before them as they passed; the title of Rabbi was universally accorded them; the front seats of the synagogues were set apart for them; and they took the place of honour at all family rejoicings, that they might discourse, incidentally, to the company, on the Law. Wise in their generation, they fostered this homage by external aids. Their long robes, their broad phylacteries, or prayer fillets, on their forchead and arm, their conspicuous Tephilling with the sacred tassels dangling from each corner, were part of themselves, without which they were never seen. The people gloried in them as the crown of Israel, and its distinguishing honour above all other nations. "Learn where is wisdom," says Baruch, "where is strength, where is understanding. It has not been heard of in Caruan, nor seen in Teman. The Hagarenes seek wisdom, and the trader of Meran and Teman, and the poets and philosophers, but they have not found out the way of wisdom, or discovered her path. God has found out the whole way of wisdom, and hath given it to His servant Jacob, and to Israel. His beloved." Jerusalem was, naturally, while the Temple worship continued, the headquarters of the wisdom of the Rabbis, but they were found in all the synagogue towns both of Judea and Galilee. They formed the members of the local, ecclesiastical, and criminal courts over the country, and at Jerusalem, virtually controlled the authorities, and thus framed the religious and general law for the nation at large, so far as allowed by the Romans. Their activity never rested. Whether as guests from the Holy City. or as residents, they pervaded the land, visiting every school and synagogue, to extend their influence by teaching and exhortations. A Rabbi, indeed, could move from place to place with little trouble, for, in most cases, he lived by trade or handicraft, and could thus unite business and religion in his missionary journeys. Multiless circuits are painted in the Targum on Deborah's song. It makes the prophetess say-"I am sent to praise the Scribes of Israel, who ceased not, in the evil times, to expound the Law. It was beautiful to see how they sath in the synagogues, and taught the people the. words of the Law; how they uttered the blessings, and confessed the truth before God. They neglected their own affairs, and rode on asses round the whole land, and sat for judgment." "The paraphrase is an anachronism when applied to the age of the Judges, but it vividly illustrates Rabbinical zeal in the days of Christ.

Soo to the The c only t Amon unite take)n ofsthe flat ro haves the cre ever./t have b likely often to their dow, so Fron audien lastain on a ha paralyz went ro come fi great H a soluti the feet able to afterith like ste Their Eastern none m laidon

short st

a thick

coat of

on this

Many ro

down, p

the own

grass gr

made by heavy le

and it is

and the size is m

896

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

i done ntense benere tho people its, the: priests venera d to its ie man Rabbi es were family mpany, age by prayer ngewith nselves, nthem ll other rength or seen ran and und out und out Jacob, hile the of the both: of ecclesi+ usalem. ousand lomans. ly City, pole and tations. trouble ld thus r ceasemakes el; who eautiful ple the sed the rode on aphrase butit

Soon after His return to Capernaum, an incident occurred which led to the first open difference between Jesus and this all-powerful order. The crowds had gathered in such numbers at Peter's house, that not only the house itself, but the space before it, was once more full. Among the audience were Scribes from all parts, to see if they should unite with the new movement, and turn it to their own purposes, or take measures against it. . If we may judge from the ruins on the site of the town, the house was only a single very low story high, with a flat roof, reached by a stairway from the yard or court, and Jesus may have stood near the door, in such a position as to be able to address the crowd outside, as well: as those in the chamber. Possibly, however, there were two stories in this particular house, as there must have been in some in the town, and in that case the upper one would likely be a large room-the "upper" and best chamber-such as was often used elsewhere by Rabbis, for reading and expounding the Law to their disciples, and Jesus may have have stood near the open window, so as to be heard both outside and within a drotte attend and

From some favourable spot He was addressing the thickly crowded audience about the kingdom of God, so long prophesied, and now, at last, in their midst, when four men approached bearing a sick person, on a hammock slung between them. It proved to be a man entirely paralyzed. Unable to make their way through the throng, the bearers went round the house to see what should be done. They had likely come from a distance, and thus were too late to get at once near the great Healer. The outside stairs to the roof, however, offered them a solution of their difficulty. The sick man was bent on getting to the feet of Jesus, and willingly let them raise him, which they were able to do by fastening cords to the hammock, and pulling it up, after they themselves had got to the top by the narrow and ladderlike steps, and will the set of the top by the narrow and ladder-

Their trembling burden once safely on the roof, the rest was easy. Eastern houses are in many ways, very different from ours, but in none more strikingly than in the lightness of the roof. Rafters are laid on the top of the side walls, about three feet apart, and on these short sticks are put, till the whole space is covered. Over these, again, a thick coating of brushwood, or of some common bush, is spread. A coat of mortar comes next, burying and levelling all beneath it, and on this again is spread marl or earth, which is rolled flat and hard. Many roofs, indeed, are much slighter-earth closely rolled or beaten down, perhaps mixed with ashes, lime, and chopped straw, —being all the owners can afford, and thus, even at this day, it is common to see grass growing on the house-top after the rains, and repairs of cracks made by the sun's rays are often needed in the hot season, to prevent heavy leakage. It is thus easy to break up a roof when necessary. and it is often done. The earth is merely scraped back from a part; and the thorns and short sticks removed, till an opening of the required size is made much much to the well of the alter that and the of the

Through some such simple roofing the four bearers now opened a space large enough to let down the sick man into the chamber where Jesus stood. Cords tied to the couch made the rest easy, and the paralytic was presently at the feet of Jesus. He lay there, the living dead, but his outward troubles were not his greatest. Looking on his calamity as a punishment from God for past sins, - perhaps feeling that it had been brought upon him by a vicious life.—he was even more sorely stricken in spirit than in body. No one he felt, could help him but He to reach whom had been his deepest wish. To be healed within, was even more with him than to be restored to outward health. He had nothing to say; perhaps he could not speak. for palsy often hinders articulation. But his eyes told his whole story, and He before whom he had thus strangely come read it at a glance: He was still a young man; which in itself awakened sympathy, but he had, besides, in his anxiety to get near, by whatever means, and the humility which sought cleansing from guilt more than restoration to health, shown a recognition of Christ's higher dignity as the dispenser of spiritual blessings. With an endearing word used by teachers to disciples, or by superiors in age or rank. Jesus flashed the light of hope on his troubled spirit." "My child." said He, "thy sins are forgiven thee." Control and the Mary about It was a wondrous utterance, and must have sounded still more strangely, when thus first heard, than to us, who have been familiar with it from childhood. No one had ever heard Him admit, even by a passing word. His own sinfulness: He showed no humility before God as a sinner; never sought pardon at His hands. Yet no Rabbi approached Him in opposition to all that was wrong, for He went even beyond the act to the sinful desire. The standard He demanded was no less than the awful perfection of God." But those round Him heard Him now rise above any mere tacit assumption of this sinless purity by His setting Himself in open contrast to sinners, in His claim not only to announce the forgiveness of sins by God, but, Himself, to dispense it. He pardons the sins of the repentant creature before Him on His own authority, as a King, which it would be contradictory to have done had He Himself been conscious of having sin and guilt of His own. It was clear that He could have ventured on no such assumption of the prerogative of God, had He not felt in Himself an absolute harmony of spiritual nature with Him, so that He only uttered what He knew was the divine will. It was at once a proclamation of His own sinlessness, and of His kingly dignity as the Messiah, in whose hands had been placed the rule over the new theocracy was det the second second second at straig . " while a but of the The Rabbis felt, in a moment, all that such words implied.<sup>191</sup>Their only idea of a religious teacher was that he should never venture a word on his own authority, but slavishly follow other earlier Rabbis. They had all the conservatism of lawyers. One Beth-din could not put aside the decision of another, unless it was superior in wisdom andanu any deo for any hesitate than, to caught when J almost i cal rules him fav The typ Hillel, a It was n through he, had law and baby mi The lo the watc Nothing indeed, e The Lay lution transgree bia guilt before G altar, and ered" his But that pronoun should n name, of lad spok red by *k*hispers ions of ent him t is bla divineri his body forgive s It was blasphen the begin and He lo that o the Rabb

THE LIFE OF CHRIST:

and numbers, and how little likely it was that even in such a case any decision should be superseded, may be judged from the fact that for any one to dispute with a Rabbi or muraur against him, or to hesitate in accepting and obeying his every word, was no less a crime than to do the same towards God Himself. Even the people had caught the spirit of changeless conservatism from their teachers, for, when John Hyrcanus, with a kindly view to relieve them from an almost intolerable burden, ventured to prohibit some trifling Rabbinical rules of the Pharisees, his well-meant liberality, instead of gaining him favour, excited hatred against him as an intruder and innovator; The type of a strict Rabbi found its ideal in Schammäi, the rival of Hillel, and founder of the school which was most bitter against Jesus, It was not enough that he sought to make even young children fast through the whole day of Pardon: during the Feast of Tabernacles he, had the roof taken from the room in which lay his daughter inlaw and her new-born son, to have a tent raised over them, that the baby might be able to keep the feast out diand second constraint The lofty words of Jesus at once caught the ears of the lawyers on the watch. They sounded new, and to be new was to be dangerous, Nothing in Judaism had been left unfixed; every religious act, and indeed, every act whatever, must follow minutely prescribed rules. The Law knew no such form as an official forgiving of sins, or absolution. The leper might be pronounced clean by the priest, and a transgressor might present a sin offering at the Temple, and transfer his guilt to it, by laying his hands on its head and owning his fault before God, and the blood sprinkled by the priest on the horns of the altar, and towards the Holy of Holies, was an atonement that "covered" his sins from the eyes of Jehovah, and pledged his forgiveness. But that forgiveness was the direct act of God: no human lips dared pronounce it. It was a special prerogative of the Almighty, and even should mortal man venture to declare it, he could only do so in the name of Jehovah; and by His immediate authorization. But Jesus had spoken in His own name. He had not hinted at being empowred by God to act for Him. The Scribes were greatly excited; chispers, ominous head-shakings, dark looks, and pious gesticulaions of alarm, showed that they were ill at ease. ""He should have ent him to the priest to present his sin-offering, and have it accepted: at is blasphemy to speak of forgiving sins. He is intruding on the divine rights," The blasphemer was to be put to death by stoning, his body hung on a tree, and then buried with shame of "Who can forgive sins, but One, God?" a word bort stand bout a mi, dates in oil

It was the turning-point in the life of Jesus, for the accusation of blasphemy, now muttered in the hearts of the Rabbis present, was the beginning of the process which ended, after a time, on Calvary; and He knew it, if The genius of Rabbinism was in direct antagonism to that of His "new teaching." Christ required a change of heart; the Rabbis, instruction; He looked at the motive of an act; they at the new

Their

enture'a

Rabbis.

ould not

wisdom

15 11 14

its strict accordance to legal forms; He contented Himself with implanting a principle of pure and loving obedience in the breast, which should make men a law to themselves: they taught that every detail of religious observance, from the cradle to the grave, --- to the very particular. He promised the Divine Spirit to aid His followers to a perfect obedience; the Rabbis enforced obedience by the terrors of the Church courts, which they controlled. Resting thus on wholly different conceptions; the Rabbi, self-satisfied in the observance of external rites and requirements; Jesus repudiating merit, and basing His kingdom on the willing service of humble and grateful love, the only question was how long; in an intollerant theoracy, active hostility might be averted. The lowly, wandering, Galilæan teacher. who despised long robes and phylacteries, and associated with the rude and ignorant, from whom the Rabbis shrank as accursed for not knowing the Rabbinical law; who had no license as teacher from any Beth-din: who had attended no Beth-ha-Midrasch, or Rabbis' School of the Law, and was thus a mere untrained layman, usurping clerical functions, was instinctively suspected and hated, though they could not affect to despise Him. The kingdom of God which He preached was, moreover, something new and irregular. In the words of Baruch, they expected that all who kept the Law in their sense, would. in return, have eternal life as a right, as indeed, one of their proverbs ing life." (Esteeming themselves blamelessly righteous, they not only despised others, but claimed Heaven, as the special favourites of God. It must, therefore, have been galling in the extreme, to hear Jesus damand humility and repentance, and faith in Himself, as the universal conditions of entrance into the new kingdom of God; to be confounded with the crowd on whom they looked as Brahmins on Sudras; and to be stripped of their boasting, and even of their hopes of future political glory, by the proclamation of a new and purely spiritual theocracy, in the place of the national restoration of which they dreamed, with themselves at its head. Only a spark was wanting to set their hostility ablaze, and this had now been supplied, in the For the time they were helpless, in the presence of so much enthusiasm for Jesus, but this only increased their bitterness, on their finding that He had kept His eyes on them, and knew their thoughts. They were now still more confused by His openly asking them, "Why they were thinking evil in their hearts?" He had long felt that He could not hope to make any healthy impression on a class who affected to regard Him as half beside Himself on religious matters. and as one who had set Himself up as a Rabbi, and excited the people against their teachers. He knew that they put the worst construction on all He said, and were laying up matter for future open attack. But no passing thought of fear disturbed Him. He had come to witness to the truth, and at once accepted the challenge which their hostile He sud Thy si There tell if respect withou cutionthe ear you ha power: lost the Slowly, eves fix sink at allowed look, m still fixe awe-stri The comfite never sa monstra power 1 at heart .b(A) nu differen follower Another naum, a of Phili between house of landed to pay d direction and at e while a the min or even Latives liowever and seri come at later, N though of the p

400

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

hostile looks and bearings implied. Without waiting to be assailed. He suddenly asked them, MW hich is easier? To say to this paralytic, Thy sing are forgiven, or to say, Rise, and take up thy bed and go?" There might be deception about the forgiveness, for no one could tell if the absolution were of any avail, but there could be none. respecting the cure of a helpless living corpse. Turning to the bed without waiting an answer, He continued—in irresistible self-vindication-" That ye may know that the Son of Man has authority on the earth to forgive sins, --Rise, poor man, take up the mat on which you have been lying, and go home." It was enough; sensibility and power of motion returned to the helpless limbs; muscles and nerves lost their torpor; strength poured once more through the veine. Slowly, scarce realizing what it meant, he rose, little by little, his eyes fixed on his deliverer, till, at last, he stood crect before Him, to sink at His knecs again in grateful adoration. But he could not be allowed to stay. Stepping back, without saying a word, Jesus, by a look, motioned him to retire, and lifting the mat, he did so, his eyes still fixed on his helper, as he made his way backward through the awe-stricken growd granning astrang hip was file a super a super astrong of receiving astrong was astrong astr

The effect was electric. The Scribes were, for the time, dis-never saw it thus," cried some, while others, with true Eastern demonstrativeness, broke out into praise of God who had given such power to men. " Meanwhile, Jesus glided out of the apartment, sad : at heart, for the shadow of the cross had fallen on His soul. A historic A number of disciples must, by this time, have been gained in different parts, but the inner circle gathered by Jesus, as His personal followers, was as yet limited to the few whom He had first "called?" Another was now, however, to be added to their number. Capernaum, as a busy trading town, on the marches between the dominions of Philip and those of Antipas, and, from its being on the high road between Damascus and Ptolemais, had a strong staff of customhouse officers, or publicans, to use the common name. The traffic landed at Capernaum from across the Lake, or shipped from it, had to pay dues, and so had all that entered or left the town in other directions. If There were tolls on the highways, and on the bridges, and at each place the humbler grades of publicans were required. while a few of a higher rank had charge of the aggregate receipts of the minor offices of the district. These officials were often freemen, or even slaves of the larger farmers of the local imposts; sometimes natives of the part, and even poor Roman citizens. The whole class, however, had a bad name for greed and exaction. So loud, indeed, and serious, did the remonstrances of the whole Roman world become at the tyranny and plunderings thus suffered, that, a generation later, Nero proposed to the Senate to do away with taxes altogether, though the idea resulted only in an official admission that the "greed of the publicans must be repressed, lest they should at last, by new.

with imt, which ry detail the very y formal vers to a errors of n-wholly vance, of d basing love. the tive hosteacher. with the d for not from any s' School clerical ey could preached is of Bae would. proverbs everlastnot only s of God. ear Jesus the unidi to be mine on eir hopes d purely of which vas wapt lied. in hi renthusiir finding s. They Why that He lass who matters, he people construcen attack. come to aich their

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

vexations, render the public burdens intolerable." The underlings, especially, sought to enrich themselves by grinding the peoplet and the checks they caused to commerce, the trouble they gave by reckless examination of goods, and by tedious delays; by false entries, and illegal duties; made them intensely hated. "Bears and lions," said a proverb, "might be the flercest wild beasts in the forests, but publicans and informers were the worst in the olties." The Jews, who, here the Roman yoke with more impatience than any other nation, and shunned all contact with foreigners, excommunicated gvery Israelite who became a publican, and declared him incompetent to bear witness in their courts, and the disgrace extended to his whole family. Nobody was allowed to take aims from one, or to ask him to change money for them. They were even classed with highway robbers and murderers, or with harlots, heathen, and sinners. No strict Jew would eat, or even hold intercourse, with them, for

With a supreme indifference to the prejudices of the day! Jesus resolved to receive one of this proscribed order into the inner group of His followers. With a wide and generous charity He refused to condemn a whole class. That they were outcasts from society was a special reason why He, the Son of Man, should seek to win them to: a better life. He refused to admit anything wrong in paying tribute! to Casar, and hence saw no sin in its collection. There was no new cessity for a publican not being just and faithful, allke to the people and to the State, and He had seen for Himself that there were some against whom nothing could be justly urged; at was, moreover, a fundamental principle with Him, that the worst of men, if they sincerely repented, and turned to God, should be gladly received, as predigal sons who sought to regain the favour of their Father in heaven. He had come to seek and to save that which was lost, and He cought to proclaim to mankind that He despaired of none, by in the most hopeless, the possibility of good. Looking: difference or calling, He designed to show, at its very birth, that the bingdom He came to establish was open to all humanity, and that the only condition of citizenship was spiritual fitness. detrie utest.

Among the publicans, at one of the posts for collecting duties, at Capernaum, was one whom his name, Levi, marked as belonging to the old priestly tribe, though, perhaps, born in Galilee, and now sunk to so questionable a position. He had another name, Matthew, however, by which he is better known as one of the Apostles, and the author of the first Gospel. His business was to examine the goods passing either way on the great high road between the territories of the two neighbouring tetrarchs, to enter them on the official record, to take the duties and credit them in his books, in order, finally, to pay over the gross proceeds, at given times, to the local tax-farmer. He seems to have been in comfortable circumstances, and it is, perhaps, due to his clerkly habits as a publican, that we owerito Alphéu howeve inon: on two call Doub Teacher quick e a public whichin Oriental on the y the thro andaw in his lo and foll haveito settle hi forth, h headisil licanias But He welcome saw the udices of fellow the choi ners: an in the m 7An a tooimon the open righteou and had Jesus w Abrahan moned o The "'ca hensive that all v ever thei Caste wa such. w Accuston the mag astoundi and illus ower to him the carliest of the Gospels. He was the son of one Alpheus, the name of the father of James the Less. They may, however, have been different persons, as the name was a very common one; and we know that there were two Judes, two Simons, and two called James, in the narrow circle of Jesus.

orlings.

let and

y reck.

ontries;

lions,"

sts; but

-JOWN!

r other

nicated incom

ided (to)

e, or to inners.

Jesus:

used to ety was

them to:

people

re:some:

eover, a

ived; ad

ather in

ost, and

Looking

new no

lty, and

in sied uties.att

nd now!

lattheway

leshand

ning; the

he terri-

e official

n: order, A

he local

stances

that we

el eir tti .

Doubtless Levi, or Matthew, had shown an interest in the new Teacher, and had been among the crowds that thronged Him. The quick eye of Jesus had read his heart, and seen his sincerity. Though a publican; he was a Jew, and showed repentance and hopeful trust, which made him a true son of Abraham. The booth in which, in Oriental fashion, he sat at his duties, was at the harbour of the town. on the way to the shore where Jesus was in the habit of addressing the throngs who now always followed Him, and it needed only a look and a word of the Master, to make him throw up his office, and cast in his lot with Him. At the command of Jesus he "left all, rose up. and followed Him;" not, of course, on the moment, for he would have to take formal steps to release himself, and would require to settle his accounts with his superior, before he was free. Hence forth, however, he attended Him who soon had not where to lay His head of It was a critical time for Jesus, and His admission of a publican as a disciple could not fail to irritate His enemies still more. But He had no hesitation in His course. Sent to the lost, He gladly welcomed, to His inmost circle, one of their number in whom He saw the germs of true spiritual life, in calm disregard of all the prejudices of the time, and all the false religious narrowness of His fellow countrymen, and their ecclesiastical leaders. He desired in the choice of a publican as apostle, to embody visibly His love for sinners, and show the quickening virtue of the kingdom of God, even in the most unlikely. John vas at tom aboa premios, her 11

"An act so entirely new and revolutionary, in the best sense, was too momentous in the eyes of Matthew to pass unnoticed. It was the opening of a new day for the multitudes whom the narrow selfrighteousness of the Rabbis had branded as under the curse of God, and had condemned as hopeless before Him. " The new " call" of Jesus was in vivid contrast to that of Abraham and Moses, for Abraham had been separated even from his tribe, and Moses summoned only the Jews to found the theocracy he proposed to establish. The "call" which Matthew had obeyed was as infinitely comprehensive as the earlier ones had been rigidly exclusive. It showed admitted to the society Jesus was setting up, whatthat all would ever their social position, if they had spiritual fitness for membership. Caste was utterly disallowed : before the great Teacher, all men, as such, were recognized as equally sons of the Heavenly Father. Accustomed from infancy to take this for granted, we cannot realize the magnitude of the gift this new principle inaugurated, or its astounding novelty. A Brahmin, who should proclaim it in India, and illustrate the social enfranchisement he taught, by raising a despised Pariali to his intimate intercourse and friendship, would be the only counterpart we can imagine at this day.

It was natural, therefore, that Matthew should celebrate an event so unique as his call, by a "great feast in his house," in honour of Jesus; and no less so that he should invite a large number of his class, to rejoice with him at the new era opened to them, or that he should extend the invitation to his friends of the proscribed classes generally. A number of persons in bad odour with their more correct fellowcitizens were, hence, brought together by him, along with the pub-I cans of the locality, to do Jesus honour: persons branded by public cpinion as ""sinners," a name given indiscriminately to usurers, gamblers, thieves, publicans, shepherds, and sellers of fruit grown in. the sabbath years. It might have seemed doubtful whether Jesus would sit down with such a company, for, even with us, it would be a hold step for any public teacher to join a gathering of persons in had repute. The admission of Matthew to the discipleship must have seemed to many a great mistake. Nothing could more certainly damage the prospects of Jesus with the influential classes, or create a wider or deeper prejudice and distrust. But nothing weighed for a moment with Him against truth and right. His soul was filled with a grand enthusiasm for humanity, and no false or narrow exclusiveness of the day could be allowed to stand in its way. He accepted the invitation with the readiest cheerfulness, and spent the evening in the pleasures of friendly social intercourse with the strange assembly. I . USAL

The Rabbis had hardly as yet made up their minds how to act respecting Him. They had attended John's preaching, though they did not submit to his baptism, which would have been to own his sweeping charges against their order, as a brood of serpents.<sup>111</sup>But Jesus had not as yet attacked them. He would fain have won them, as well as the people, to the kingdom of God. He had preached this kingdom, and the need of righteousness: had honoured Moses and the prophets: had pressed, as His great precepts, the love of God and our neighbour; and in all these matters the Pharisees could support Him. He had enforced moderation on His disciples, and had sought intercourse with the Rabbis, rather than shunned it. His reply to their earlier opposition was gentle, though unanswerable. No doubt He knew from the first that they would reject His overtures, but it was none the less right to seek to woo them to friendship, that they might enter His kingdom if they would. Had they joined Him, their influence would have aided His work: if they refused. He had done His part. He did, indeed, win some. Here and there a Rabbi humbled himself to follow Him though He did not belong to the schools, and was the deadly opponent of their cherished traditions. Others hesitated, but some even of the leading Pharisees, as at Capernaum, invited Him to their houses and tables, listened to His teaching, reasoned modestly with Him, and treated Him, every way, with respect. He was looked upon by them as a

frien Him Bu betw need and dema

unbe feast. religi Tace, looke media Their Public a Pha shranl he da misery he sus :'Aml to con them t or, ind them. calling ofone touch o one of of anot Itm idea : of Sudras reclinin sinners They and co the disc soverei a religi but to j a new / sinners! Peter, a imaging friend of the nation, and the title of Rabbi was willingly given Him.

404

But it became clearer, each day, that there could be no alliance between views so opposed as His and theirs. Where action was needed He would not for a moment conceal His difference from them, and Matthew's feast was an occasion on which a great principle demanded decisive expression.

To the Rabbis, and the Pharisees at large, nothing could be more unbecoming and irregular than the presence of Jesus at Matthew's feast. To be Levitically "clean," was the supreme necessity of their religious lives. They regarded themselves as true friends of their race, and they were, in fact, the leaders of the nation. But they looked at men not simply as such, but through the cold superficial medium of an artificial theology, which dried up their sympathy: Their philanthropy was narrowed to the limits of Levitical purity. Publicans and sinners, and the mass of the lower classes, were, to a Pharisee, hopelessly lost, because of their "uncleanness," and he shrank from all contact with them. He might wish to save, but he dared not touch, or come near them, and so left them to their misery and sin. No Pharisee would receive a person as a guest if he suspected that he was a "sinner." He would not let one of the "Amhaaretz"-the common people-touch him. It was unlawful to come into their company, even with the holy design of inducing them to read the Law, and it was defilement to take food from them, or, indeed, from any stranger, or even to touch a knife belonging to them. The thousands "unclean" from mere ignorance, or from their callings, or from carelessness, were an "abomination," "vermin," "unclean beasts," and "twice accursed." And as to touch the clothes of one of the "common people," defiled every Pharisee alike, the touch of those of a Pharisee of a lower grade of Levitical purity defiled one of a higher: " Like the Essenes, one Pharisee avoided the contact of another less strict; and, therefore, of a lower rank of holiness. It must, therefore, have been as if a Brahmin had outraged every idea of Hindoo religion and morals, by sitting down at a meal with Sudras, when the Rabbis at Capernaum saw and heard of Jesus reclining at table among a promiscuous gathering of publicans and sinners.

They had not yet, however, come to open controversy with Him, and contented themselves with contemptuous taunts about Him to the disciples, who, as Jews, must have at least formerly shared the sovereign contempt felt for such hated social outcasts. Even to hold a religious service with them would have been a breach of the Law, but to join them on a footing of friendly intercourse! "Founder of a new holy kingdom of God, and recline at table with publicans and sinners!" How, keenly such words must have wounded men like Peter, and the small knot of disciples as yet round Jesus, may be imagined. They had been taught in the school of the Baptist, an event our of s class, should ierally. fellowie pubpublic isurers, rown in r Jesus ould be sons in ast have ly dama wider moment a grand ss of the vitation leasures w to act ugh they own his ts. But ave won preached d Moses love of ees could ples, and inned it. swerable. His overo friend-Had they if they e. # Here h He did of their e leading nd tables, d treated hem as a

uld be

M STAR BULLED THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

or the start of the start of some of earnest Jew, who had enforced ultra-Pharisaic Judaism. The early scruples of Peter survived even to apostolic times. James was a Maniful if we can trust tradition, till his death, and even Matthew. the to sty publican, for his name Levi shows him to have been of priestly race, is said to have eaten, through life, only fruit, vegetables, and bread, but no flesh. In their perplexity and distress they appealed

The start of Elitan

to Jesus, alt was well they did so, for their distress procured for all ages an answer of divine sweetness and grandeur. "To whom should I go but to such as these? The whole have no need of a physician, but they that are sick. Turn to the prophets whom you revere, and think what the words of Hosea mean, 'I desire mercy and not sacriilce, '----acts rather than offerings---practical godliness, not legal forms -divine sympathy with the lost, rather than only the empty show of outward worship-for I have not come to call the righteous, but to call sinners to repentance. I expect nothing from men who think they are righteous and despise others. They feel no need of me. My Jesus had not, of course, the bodily sick in His thoughts. He spoke of the mass of the people of the middle and lower ranks; too sadly marked by religious shortcomings and unworthiness. The guests at Matthew's table were, doubtless, more or less open to accusations of covetousness; impurity, indifference to morality and religion; and troublesomeness as citizens. John would have kept himself aloof from them, unless they came as penitents, for baptism. He had lived in wildernesses, apart from men, shrinking from the turmoil of the great world. He had even forbidden lawful enjoyments and pleasures. "He had sought to build up the Kingdom of Heaven on the lonely banks of the Jordan, far from men, by sternly commanding the broken hearts that sought peace and consolation from him, to live lives of Jewish austerity and repentance. Jesus required a change of heart no less than he, but He did not lead men out of the world to secure it, or burden life with the anxiety and disquiet of an outward purity.

He came trustfully to them into their little world, bringing with Him a heart full of divine benevolence and tender gentleness. In His eyes they were "sick," and He treated them like a true physician, entering. into all their interests, sympathizing with their cares and sorows, realizing their special wants, and bearing Himself as a friend among friends. They were men, and, as such, capable of sorrow for sin, and efforts towards a nobler life. They had hearts to recognize goodness, and might thus be won to faith in Himself, as the ideal of the highest spiritual life. Nothing can mark the grandeur of His enthusiasm for humanity, more than that He thus proposed to lay the foundation of His kingdom in a class on which the priests and theologians, and the higher ranks of the day, looked down with haughty contempt and moral aversion. It shows how deeply He looked into things, that He

Rabbis other c a friend the har rules fo ciples, a Him for fast in t many, b tion of, connecte Captivit lation of calamity the authorithe was mad fasted y respectiv receive th the secon to obtain looked o fasted als self-inflici theology heighten from a fa latter cou icism was laid no si "righteou Even pi

406

. W. .

11 200 31 e early s was a atthew. been of retables, ppealed ages an uld I go cian, but vere, and iot sacrial forms show of is, but to ho think me. My e leave to

He spoke too sadly he guests cusations igion, and self aloof d lived in the great ures. He ely banks he broken re lives of e of heart secure it, purity. with Him h His eyes entering. ws, realizg friends. nd efforts iness, and e highest athusiasm bundation rians, and tempt and s, that He recognized the greater openness for the Truth, of castes thus discredited; their franker and more decisive bearing towards the startling innovations of His teaching: their deeper longing for peace of conscience and reconciliation to God. It was the sense of this that had led to the choice of His first disciples from the ranks of the people; and it was this, in part, that led to that of Matthew. In his case, however, there was, also, the proclamation of His indifference to outward distinctions, or rules, afterwards formulated by Peter, who had never forgotten the lesson, into the memorable words-"Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but, in every nation, he that feareth. Him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted of Him." A truth evident enough to-day, but carrying with it, when inaugurated by Jesus, an entire revolution in the religious history of mankind. with the state of the state in sight

The divine charity that ran so counter to the narrow pride of the Rabbis was no less startling to the disciples of John, but there were other difficulties to both. No open breach had yet taken place, and a friendly conference might explain, much. Jesus had silently left the harsh discipline of fasting behind, and had prescribed no formal rules for prayer, such as were common to the Rabbis and their disciples, and to those of the Baptist; and now a deputation came to ask Him for, an explanation. The law of Moses had appointed only one fast in the year, on the Day of Atonement, but the Rabbis had added many, both public and private. They enjoined one for the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, and others for various incidents connected with the siege, or the troubles of the first period after the Captivity. There was another to lament the day on which the translation of the Scriptures into Greek had been finished, and every public. calamity or emergency was signalized by a fast specially enjoined by the authorities. It was rather to private fasts, however, that allusion was made. Strict Pharisees, aiming at the highest degree of merit, fasted voluntarily every Monday and Thursday, to commemorate, respectively, the going up of Moses to the Mount on the fifth day, to receive the renewed tables of the Commandments, and his descent onthe second. They often added other fasts, to have lucky dreams, and to obtain their interpretation, for, like the Essenes, the Pharisees looked on fasts as a preparation for receiving revelations. They fasted also to avert evil, or to procure some good. Mortification and self-infliction had become a formal religious merit, in the mercenary theology of the day, and was paraded before the world by some, to heighten their reputation for holiness. The idea had, at first, risen from a fancied opposition between the body and the soul; as if the latter could only be duly raised by depressing the former. But asceticism was contrary to the genius of the new kingdom of God, which kid no stress on meat, or drink, or abstinence from them, but on "righteousness, peace, and joy, in the Holy Ghost."

Even prayer, had been reduced to a mechanical system, as part of The Works

STREEPING THUS IN CO.

th

the

sel

wh

ing

do

ine

5521

Lor

Hiu

shad

tillf

ficd.

Mes

Rom

throu

selfic

that

finit

end

tellad

with same

thatta

Here

selves.

discip

extren

may n soon b

of dell

the we

nid trad

Manor's

'o'dint'

the out

All' STELL

11:65 4

Half li

16165

01 ž

1020

"the hedge of the Law," invented by the Habbis. No one could have greater stress on it than Jesus, when divier as the utterance of contrite humility; but, us a part of a system of merit like the Rubbinleal theology of the day; He held it lightly. No precepts could he more worthy than many found, even yet, in the Rabbis, respecting the true worth of prayer; but, in practice; these higher teachings had fallen into wide disuse. It had come to be tedious for length, and shounded In repetitions. Fixed rules for correct prayer were taught, with fixed hours, and prescribed forms, and superstitious power was assigned to the mere words. The householder was to repeat the Schima in his house each evening, to drive away evil spirits. To say it when in bed was like grasping a two-edged sword, to slav the assulling demons." The more form of prayer, if repeated rightly and often. was counted as merit laid up in heaven? To repeat the Schmewis, in fact, in the phrase of the Rabbis," to make the kingdom of Heaven one's own," Didn't ple for both out hor mean insertion shall of ton "It could not be doubtful how Jesus would bear Himself to views soopposed to inner and spiritual religion. "Silently emitting any reference to the objection respecting prayer, He addressed Himselfito the question of fasting." "His presence with His disciples was like that of a bridggroom with His companions, during the marriage refolcings. Could He ask them to fast while He was with them? bit would be time for them to do so when He was taken away from them." They would fast then " Seizing the opportunity, and ad. dressing the disciples of John especially, He went even further. "John had sought to do what was worse than hopeless to renew the edd theocracy, by merely external reform; to patch up the old and torn robe of Judaism, and make it serve a new agout. It was as whin as a man's sewing a piece of raw unteazled cloth on the rent of amoid garment? the patch could only tear off so much more, and make the rent worse, while the patch would itself be a mere shred. ... On howas like putting new wine into old skins, which must burst which the wine fermented. New teaching, like His, must be publicte new bottles; the forms and rites that had served till now were of no more use; a new dispensation had come, which these forms would only cumber. New forms were needed for the new religious life He came to introduce."

Words so fatal to cherished prejudices must have struck deep, but the hearts He had unavoidably wounded were not left without tender soothing. "It was no wonder that John had clung to the faith of his fathers, even in its outward accidents." He had drunk of the old wine, and would not change it for new, contented to know that 'the old was good."" Henceforth, however, the position of Jesus to the worn-out forms of the past was unnistakable. He had chosen His path, and would lead mankind from the bondage of the letter to the freedom of the spirit, and the worshippers of the letter arrayed themselves against Him. As became the founder of the first religion of ould lby of conibbinies! The inorg the true ad sallen bohnded with fixed signed to ma in lis t. waten in nesuulting and loften, L'misewies, of Heaven not to the to views so any reler-Hinselfito es was like affiareirerahena (bilt (a way from traindiaden further. o renews the the old and was as whin bio tre hostin nd make the On Howas st wlieb the Wine ound of no more would only ife He came . 110 ck deep, but thout tender thout tender the faith of k of the old ow that the Jesus to the I chosen His letter to the rayed them t religion of the spirit alone, the world had seen; He henceforth silenfly ignored the ceremonial law, avoiding open condemnation, but bearing Himself towards it throughout, as He did in the matter of circumcison, which He never enforced on His disciples, or demanded from believing heathen, and never commended, though He never, in words, condemned it. The whole ritual system, of which it was the most prominent feature, was treated as merely indifferent. I

Lord's public life, that even when He uses so joyous an image of Himself as that of a bridegroom, He dashes in the picture with ihadow. He had begun His course by the Temptation, but from it till the close. His path lay through struggle, suffering, and self-sacrifed, to a far other glory than that which the world expected in the Messian He would, indeed, have known His nation, and their Roman masters; the dominant Pharisees, and the priesthood, badly, not to have foreseen, from the first, that He would have to pass through the Bercest conflict, only to, reach a tragic end, on Thoughts of self denial, self-sacrifice, even to the surrender of life; of losing life that He might glin it, of the corn dying that it might bring forth finite run like a dark thread through all His discourses, to the very end. He sends His abostles forth like sheep amongst wolves; foretells their suffering the bitterest persecution; and consoles them only with the one thought that it should content the disciple to be on the same footing with Himself. In the sermon on the Mount, He predicts that call who believe in Him will suffer hatred and evil treatment. He recognizes those only as His true followers who, denying themselves, take up His cross and bear it. He has nothing to promise His disciples but that they should be servants, submitting patiently to the extremest wrong and has no higher vision even for Hunself. He may rejoice as the bridegroom with His friends, for a time, but will soon be taken away from them. A kingdom founded on such a besis of deliberate self-denial and self-sacrifice, is unique in the history of truse: a name structure action neal competition in these round with the came

19 intercluteral a. Wordshood and the chartebook productions a fractic struct deep, but the heats for and the chartebook productions affined struct deep, but the heats for and the chartebook producted average not struct deep able but even if the way now order that for head ching to the faith of able but even strong the inset of the mark form had ching to the faith of able but even work, and denote the new, contributed to the faith of elements are of the past of the new, and the local to the faith of the but even is now of the past were the faith of the faith of the but works are of the past were the faith and the local to the test and works and the past were the faith and the local to the transfer forme of the past were the faith and the local to the transfer forme of the past were the faith and the local to the transfer forme of the past were the faith and the local to the transfer forme of the past were the faith and the local to the transfer forme of the past were the faith and the local to the transfer forme of the past were the faith and the local to the transfer forme of the past were faith and the faith and the transfer forme of the past were the faith and the faith and the transfer forme of the faith and the faith of the faith of the transfer were the faith of the transfer were the faith of the transfer were the faith of the transfer were the faith of the transfer were the faith of the transfer were the faith of t wit

nev

up

wit war

self

sho

othe

ness T

or si yet liest

silen mus socie foun

of th

wide whic

His when out t when sick :

cond His u

appea truth love a joy o as of:

less lo

low H

to the

sion,

neces

comp

go foi

Hims

such

would

tollow

Th

"The choice of the twelve, and the service of the west in the service of the serv

How long Jesus remained at Capernaum is not told us, but we may readily believe that He was glad to leave it, with its gathering oppo-sition, as soon as possible. It was His centre of action, but the kingdom needed to be proclaimed over the whole land. Preaching was the special agency on which He relied, far more than on any displays of supernatural power. It was by it He designed to work the stupendous spiritual miracle of the new birth of Israel and of Humanity. As the first founder of a religion which had no code of laws, and repudiated force, addressing itself solely to the free con-victions of men, the living word and its illustration in His own life, were alone open to Him as means for its diffusion. The hearts and souls must be won over to the highest truth, by persuading the con-science, and thus influencing the will. In these earlier months He took advantage of the facilities of the Synagogue service, to gain the car of the people, but His preaching was very different from the storeotyped lifelessness of the Rabhis, and excited universal astonishment by its originality, power, and resistless enthusiasm. At a later time, when His "new doctrine" had roused the opposition of the authorities, the use of the synagogues was no longer permitted Him. But, even from the first, He did not confine Himself to fixed times or places. He addressed the people on the shores of the lake, on the lonely slopes and valleys of the hills, in the streets and market-places of towns and villages, at the crossing points of the public roads, and even in houses; any place, indeed, that offered an audience, was alike to Him. The burden and spirit of His preaching may be gathered from the Gospels throughout. He proclaimed Himself the Good Shepherd seeking to bring back the lost sheep to the heavenly fold. to quicken and turn towards God the weak, sinful human will, and to breathe into the soul aspirations after a higher spiritual life, from the fullness of His own perfect example.

To win all, He moved as a man among men, a friend among friends; a helper amongst all who needed help, declining every outward honour or flattery, or even the appearance of either. While advancing the most amazing pretensions as His kingly prerogative, He was, personally, so meek and lowly that He coold make this gentle humility a ground for the trust and unembarrassed approach of all who were troubled. Content with obscurity, and leaving to others the struggle for distinction or place, He chose a life so humble that the poorest had no awe of His dignity, but gathered round Him as their special friend. His tastes were in keeping with this simplicity, for He delighted in the society of the lowly, and children clustered in His steps with the natural instinct that detects one who loves them. He was never engrossed by His own affairs, but ever ready to give Himself up to those of others—to counsel them in difficulties, to sympathize with them in their sorrows or joys, and to relieve their sickness or wants. It is His grand peculiarity, that there is a total oblivion of self in His whole life. The enthusiasm of a divine love, in the pure light of which no selfish thought could live, filled His whole soul. He showed abiding sympathy for human weakness, and to cheer the outcast and hopeless, He announced that He came to seek such as to others seemed lost. In ris joy over a sinner won back to righteousness He hears even the angels of God rejoicing.

There had never appeared in any age such a man, such a friend, or such a helper. He seemed the contrast of a king or prince, and yet all His words were kingly; all His acts a succession of the kingliest deeds, decisions, and commands, and His whole public life, the silent and yet truest foundation of an everlasting kingdom. He must, indeed, have seemed anything rather than the founder of a new society, or of a new empire, and it must have startled men when they found that He had, by His works and life, established in the midst of the old theocracy the framework of the most imperishable and the widest-reaching empire this earth has ever seen; an empire before which all former religious systems were to fade away. But though His absolute self-control was never intermitted, there were times when the claims of the truth, or the service of His kingdom, brought ont the full grandeur of His power and kingly greatness. It was thus when He had to meet and confute prejudice and error, or to heat the sick and discased. At times we shall see Him forced to blame and condemn, but this was only a passing shadow on the clear heaven of His unvarying grace and love. It is impossible to realize such an appearance, but we can imagine it in some measure. The stainless truth and uprightness which filled. His whole nature; the exhaustless love and pity, which were the very breath of His spirit; the radiant joy of the bridegroom wedding redeemed humanity; the calm light as of other worlds in His every look, may well account for the deathless love and devotion He inspired in those whom He suffered to follow Him.

The widening success of His work had already required an addition to the small circle of His immediate attendants. But a single accession, like that of Matthew, was, crelong, not enough. It soon became necessary to select a larger number who might be constantly in His company, and receive His instructions, that they might, in due time, go forth to proclaim the kingdom over a wider area than He could Himself reach. Its laws, its morality, its relations to the Old Dispensation, must be taught them, and they must catch His enthusiasm by such a lengthened intercourse in the familiarity of private life, as would kindle in their souls the ideal He presented. That they should rollow Him at all would be left to themselves, but the choice would

(ildiwî?) Statan Statan Statiwa Ustatiwa

MOUNT.

t we may

ng oppo-

be made by Himself, of such as, on various grounds, He saw fittest. They were to be Apostles, or missionaries, and would have, for their high commission, the organization of the new kingdom of God, first in Israel, and then through the world.

10

CE

W

W

tm

to

of wo fų

Hi

sec

nev Wo

the

be spe pre

den I mac

cipl

witl

men exte

cust

to p hills whice appa spok prec

show Fath

His

town

ing d Ilim,

twelv

forth

ber,

have lectio

had

III.

To accept such an invitation implied no little enthusiasm. No earthly reward was held out, but, on the contrary, the sacrifice of all personal claims was demanded. They were to abandon their former calling, whatever it might be, with all its present or proside to 6 vantages, to give up all family ties, to heat the worst indignities and ill-treatment, and yet repress even just resentment. They were to hold. their lives at His service, and willingly yield them, if it required the sacrifice. A measure of self-restriction is implied as the basis of any state, for no society could flourish where its interests, as a whole, are, not spontaneously considered before those of the individual citizen. But the self-abnegation required by Jesus in those admitted to that which He was now founding, was without a parallel, for while earthly states return an equivalent, in many ways, for the self-surrender they impose. He proclaimed from the first that those who joined His kingdom must do so "hoping for nothing again" to compensate for any self-sacrifice, even the greatest. In the case of the "Apostles," the self-surrender was not merely contingent, but present and final, for He held before them no prospect through life butp rivation and persecu-tion, and even possible martyrdom. In the next world, indeed, He promised rewards, but He precluded mere mercenary hopes even of these, by making them conditional on unfeigned sincerity in the obedience to His laws and love of His person. The mere hypocrite-or actor-could have no object in joining Him, and was indignantly denounced. The truest honesty in word and deed were alone accepted. and the want of it, in any degree, was the one fatal moral defect, It is not surprising, therefore, that all who offered themselves as His followers were not accepted. Where He saw unitness, He re-pelled advances. To a Rabbi who came saluting Him as "Teacher." and professing his willingness to follow Him as His disciple, He re-turned the discouraging answer, that the foxes had holes, and the birds of the air nests, but the Son of Man-the Messiah-had not where to lay His head. It might have seemed of moment to secure the support of a Rabbi, but Jesus had seen the worldly bent of his thoughts, and thus turned him aside, by blasting any hopes of advantage or honour in joining Him. Even indecision or hesitation, whatever the ground, was fatal to admittance to His fayour. The request of a disciple to go first and bury his father, before finally following Him, was only met by the command to follow Him at once, and leave the spiritually dead to bury the corporeally dead: to put off decision, even for so worthy a cause as desire to perform the last offices to a father, was dangerous! "Go, thou, and preach the kingdom of God. The devotion due to it, unreservedly, could not be shared, even, by the claims of affection and earthly duties. A request to be allowed ittest.

their first

of all

former

76 8 1-ies and to hold

red the

of any

ole, are citizen.

to that earthly.

ler they

is king-

for any

the self-

for Ho

persecu-

lecd, Ho

even of the obe-

crite-or

ignantly

ccepted,

selves as He reeacher."

e, He re-

and the had not

o secure

t of his

f advan-

n, whate request

ollowing

nd leave

decision,

ices to a

of God."

even, by

allower

fect.

No

to hid his household farewell, before finally leaving them, was met by a similar answer —"No man having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." The indispensable condition of admittance into the inner circle who followed and lived with Him, was an engrossing enthusiasm for Himself and His work, which permitted concern for no second interest whatever.

He had determined to surround Himself with a small body of such trustworthy followers, limiting the number, by an association natural to His race, to twelve. They were to form the closest, inmost circle of His disciples, and to be, in fact, His friends and companions. He would give them His fullest confidence: open His mind to them more fully than to others: and, by living among them, inspire them with His own fervour, and mould them to His own likeness. They would see how His soul never unbent from its grand enthusiasm: how He never wearied in His transcendent devotion of body and spirit to His work. In seeing and hearing Him, they would gain experience: in the opposition and trials they met in His company their fidelity would be put to the test, and, in the end, they would be qualified for the special work for which they had been chosen—to be sent forth to preach, and to repeat the miraculous works of their Master, as evidence of His divine authority.

It is not stated definitely where the selection of the Apostle was made. His preaching had already gained a" great multitude" of disciples who followed Him in His journey from town to town, along with a vast crowd drawn after Him by various motives. The movement was rapidly assuming an importance like that of John's; it was extending over the nation. Withdrawing Himself, as was His frequent custom, from the throng, by night, He retired once more into the hills to pray, and continued in devotion till morning. Brought up imong hills. He was ever fond of their solitude, their pure air and open sky. which seemed to bring. Him nearer His Father. It was somewhere apparently, in the hilly background of the Sea of Galilee, for though spoken of as "the mountain," there are no means of deciding the precise locality. When the day broke, instead of seeking rest, He showed the subject of His night-long communion with His Heavenly Father, by proceeding to select His future Apostles. The crowd of His disciples had returned with the new day, from the neighouring towns and villages where they had spent the night, when Jesus, coming down from His solitary devotions, gathered them once more round 11im. and "calling to Him whom He Himself would," "appointed twelve, that they might be with Him, and that He should send them forth to preach—to heal sicknesses, and to cast out devils."

Ilis choice was necessarily made from a comparatively small number, for the majority must have lately joined Him, and must thus have been, as yet, little known. So far as possible He made His se lection from those who had been longest with Him, and whom He had, in some measure, proved; but they were as a whole, simple, up

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

pr

off

in ma

the

dra

cas

ash

of 'i

Car

the

and

and

tem

crav

befc

to d

Gali

first

røbn

he d

we thro

for f

his h

to th

odIn

Mast

this :

divin

Yet,

and t

of the

in sh

In th

fect it

friend

lower

heart

he pr

trust

m Jan

They

new 1

thusia

learned, plastic men of the people, for Jesus had already seen that the spiritual regeneration of Israel must rise from the humbler classes, He knew that the educated men of the nation, the Rabbis and priests, were perverted and prejudiced, and He could not look to the officials, or authorities of any grade, or to the prevailing religious schools. The commonalty were sounder, freer from the errors of the age, more open to the eternal truths He came to announce, and more ready to accept the spiritual kingdom He came to found of Yet it may be that had the choice been wider, some one might have been available. from the trained intellects of the nation, with results it would be vain. to conjecture. Had Paul been one of the twelve, now chosen by Christ, how much might the genius, the Rabbinical training, the breadth of mind, and the grand loving enthusiasm which almost founded Western Christianity, have changed, in the history told by the Gospels? He laid no stress on their former social position, or religious party, for they included, on the one side a publican, who was also a Levite, and on the other, one who had belonged to the ultra-puritan Zealots, the fanatical party of Judas the Galilæan. - Nor did He require them to be unmarried, for Peter, we know, had a wife, and if we may trust the tradition of the Armenian Church, the only Apostles who were single were the sons of Zebedee, and Thomas, The Capernaum circle yielded Him no fewer than seven of the twelves -Peter, and his brother Andrew, who lived with him; two sons from the house of Zabdai, -James and John; two sons of Alphæus, --James the Little, and Jude, who is commonly distinguished as Lebbæus, the stout-hearted, ---or Thaddaus, the brave. The publican Matthew was also from Capernaum, and was the third from the household of Alphæus, if the name refer to the father of James the Little and Jude; and Philip belonged to the village of Bethsaida in its immediate neighbourhood, making in all, eight of the twelve, virtually from the same favoured place. Of the remaining four, Nathanael, the son of Talmai, the Bartholomew of our version, was from Cana, on the north side of the plain of El Battauf, on which Jesus had so often looked down from the Nazareth hill-top.of Thomas-ready to die, but slow to believe: manly and full of grave tenderness, --whose Hebrew name was sometimes turned into the Greek equivalent Didymus, the twin, --was the same person, --one tradition says, --as Judas, the brother of Jesus, as if Mary had had a double birth, after bearing her eldest son if is so one of the household amongst whom our Saviour had grown up, one son of His mother, redeemed the general coldness of the rest. The name of Simon the Zealot, another Galilæan, and that of the only Apostle from Judea, Judas, the traitor, of the village of Kerioth, in the south of Juda-close the list. rost ad Such was the band which Jesus now gathered round Him. At least four,-James and John, and James the Little and Jude,-seem to have been His relations, or connections, to whom, if we accept the tradition I have quoted, we must add Thomas. One, at least, was of produces of and a strike and the strike with the second strike the strike strike the strike stri

414

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

pricatly race, - the degenerate Levite, Matthew, who had sunk to an office held so utterly infamous as a publican's. He and the sons of Zebedee seem to have been in a fair position, but Peter, whom we see in the forty days after the Resurrection, once more busy as a fisherman, in his boat on the Lake of Galilee; naked, perhaps literally, as the fishermen there still often are; that he might the better, like them; drag the net after him through the water, as he swam with it; or casting his fisher's coat round him, and leaping into the Lake to swim ashore to Jesus, is, it may be, a fair illustration of the social position of most of His brethren in the Apostolate. The Hit Pit or utogeners of In the lists given in the Gospels, Peter, the host of His Lord, at Capernaum, always holds the first place, but there are variations in the order assigned to others. "A true Galilæan-Peter was energetic and flery, rather than self-contained and reflective. Warm-hearted and impulsive, he had at once the strength and weakness of such a temperament. He is always the first to speak for his brethren; he craves earnestly one moment what he as earnestly refused the moment before: he is the first to draw the sword for Jesus, but also the first to deny Him. John recognizes his risen Master first at the Lake of Galilee, but Peter throws himself forthwith into the Lake, and is the first to reach Jesus' feet; he acts on the moment, and has even to be rebuked for being too ready with his counsel. Though for a moment he denies Christ, a look melts him, and tradition only fills up what we feel a true picture, when it tells us that he rose each night, through life, at the hour at which he had sinned so weakly, to pray for forgiveness; or when it speaks of him, at last, as crucified with his head downwards, thinking himself unworthy of a nearer approach to the death of his Lord: This is shown in the death of his Lord: In Peter, Jesus had an apostle who gave up his whole being to his Master. No one was more receptive of lofty impressions, and with this moral sensibility, there was a ready, quick, happy insight, which divined the significance of his Master's words with swift intelligence. Yet, with this delicacy of forecast, and true conception of the inner and the expressed thoughts of Jesus; with his quick eye for the signs of the times, and his zeal to act on their indications, he was deficient in sharp logical power of thought, and in tenacious strength of will, In this combination of strength and weakness, he was the most parflict type of the Galilean in the Apostolate, and became a special friend of Jesus, who found in him the most enthusiastic of His followers; the reflection, in some respects, of His own nature, and a heart than which none beat truer, though in the most decisive momenta he proved no firm support, but a bending reed, weak from momentary trust in himself rather than on his Lord, drinw when well and diga James and John, the sons of Zabdai; were men of a different mould. They supplied what was wanting in Peter, Ready to accept the new ideas, and reproducing them for themselves, with mingled enthusiasm and freshness of conception, they had the same intense devo-

hat the lasees. riests, ficials chools. age, TT a ready nay be, ailable be vain sen by ng, tho almost. told by tion. or an, who 1 to the n. SyNor d a wife, the only Thomas. twelve: ons from James geus, the hewiwas ld of Alnd Jude: nmediato from the he son of , on the spooften o die, but Hebrew mus, the idas, the bearing hom our e general her Galie traitor. C. 7030 90 Him. At e, seem ccept the n, was of maniatudi

٩

120.15 1 2.234

THE LIFE OF CHRISP.

b

m

th

be

131 ha

m

Na

thi

hu

on slia

10

10 tria

that

ffibi

drei

frie

tow

nėss

The

follo

ask ]

and

syste

self t

of th

brese

polar

their

befor

of the

to the

spent

SCa.

saw

their

for st

them

RIOFE

ments

of the

immed

andth

from

tion to their Master as Peter, with something, at times, of the same articss and unconscious self-prominence. Their energy of will, and quick flaming up at any opposition, were marked features of both. and obtained for them, from Jesus, the name of "the Bons of Thun. der." In their zeal for their Master they would have called down judgment from heaven against an inhospitable village, and wished to silence an unknown worker who spoke in the name of Christ, without belonging to the twelve. In James, the Apostles had their first martyr, but John lived to be the last survivor of them all. Hot zeal, based on intense devotion, was, however, only a passing characteristic; at least of John.y He, of all the twelve, drank deepest into his Master's Spirit, and realized it most. Self-contained, meditative, tender, he thought less of Christ's acts, than of the words which were the rovelations of His inner Being. His whole spiritual nature gave itself up to loving contemplation of the wondrous life passing before him: We owe to him, in his Gospel, an image of the higher nature of our Lord: such as only one to whom He was all in all could have painted. If perfect love beget love in return, it was inevitable that John should win the supreme place in Christ's affection. If the disciple leaned on the Master's bosom, it was because he had shown the love that at the last brought him, alone, of the twelve, to the foot of the Cross, Of Andrew, the brother of Peter, we know very little. We have to trust to tradition, alone, for his history, ofter Christ's death, He is said, by one legend, to have gone among the Scythians, and, on this ground, the Russians have made him their national Saint. Another assigns Greece, and afterwards Asia Minor and Thrace, as the scene of his work, and speaks of him as put to death in Achaia, on a cross of the form since known by his name. The incidental notices of the others, in the Gospels, are very slight, and need not be anticipated. Philip is said, in the occlesiastical legends, to have been a charlot driver; Bartholomew, a shepherd, or gardener. But no name is more striking in the list than that of Simon the Zealot, for to none of the twelve could the contrast be so vivid between their former and their new position. What revolution of thought and heart could be greater than that which had thus changed into a follower of Jesus one of the fierce war party of the day, which looked on the presence of Rome in the Holy Land as treason against the Majesty of Jchovah -a party who were fanatical in their Jewish strictness and exclusive. ness?" Like many others of the twelve, he is little more than a name. Indeed, even in the second century, the vaguest traditions were all that survived of any but two or three of them. They were men of no high commanding powers, to make their names rise on all men's tongues, but they, doubtless, in every case but that of the betrayer, did their work faithfully, and effected results of permanent value in the spread of the Kingdom. Still more, they displayed before the world, for the first time, the then unazing spectacle and teaching of a Christian life. That we know so little of men who were such signal

416

and

hoth.

Chun!

down

ied to

lthout

mart

zent,

ristic.

aster's

ler, be

o rove-

self up

e liim:

of our

should

leaned

that at

TOBSICO

le have thould

on this

Another

he scene

A & CTOSS

s of the

cipated.

charlot

is more

e of the nd their

ould be of Jesus presence

Jehovah

aname

were all e men of

hlli men's betrayer.

value in

efore the aching of

ch sigon

benefactors of the race, is only what we have to ponder in the cases of those to whom the world has owed most. It is the law, in the moral as in the physical world, that one sows and another reaps, and the seed which bears the golden cars has long died away unremembered, before the gathering of the autumn sheaves.

"It is touching to think of Jesus surrounded by the little band He had thus chosen—simple, true-hearted men, indeed, but needing so much to fit them for their amazing honour, and momentous dutics. No wonder they were timid and reverent before Him; no wonder that He was so sorely tried with their dull apprehension and weak human shortcomings, us to speak sternly or sadly to them at times; once indeed, with the words, "O unbelieving generation, how long shall I be with you, how long shall I suffer you?" He calls them "of hittle understanding," " hardened," "fearful," "worldly," and "of little faith." But amidst all, they " continued with Him in His trials" till the end, and He forgot their failings in the tender thought, that if their flesh was weak; their spirit was willing. They were His "brethren," His "servants," His "fellow-workers," His " little children," His "little ones," and, even, as the end approached, "His friends," He might, at times, have to reprove them, but His bearing towards them, day by day, was a loving condescension to their weakness, and a patient effort to draw them to Himself, as far as possible. There is no trace of such formal instruction as the Rabbis gave their followers: they had rather to listen to His words to the people, and ask Him in private for explanation where needed. He rather trained and developed their spiritual character, than indoctrinated them in systematic theology: Above all, He lived before them, and was Himself their great lesson. Nor can there be a more striking illustration of the completeness with which they forgot their own being in the presence of their Master, than the silence of the writers of the Gospois respecting themselves in their records of Jesus. He alone, filled their eye, their thoughts, their hearts, They had been like children before Him, while He was with them, and in the hallowed reverence of their remembered intercourse, His image filled the whole retrospect, to the utter subordination of all things else. The months they had spent in His company under the palm-trees, or on the hills, or by the sea; when they breathed the same air with Him; heard His voice; saw His life; and wondered at His mighty acts,-raised them, in their own belief, above the prophets and the kings, who had longed for such a vision of the Messiah, but had not had it vouchsafed them a staw you that the hereit

Of the preaching of Jesus, the Gospel preserves numerous fragments, but no lengthened abstract of any single discourse, except that of the "Sermon on the Mount," It seems to have been delivered immediately after the choice of the twelve, to the disciples at large and the multitude who thronged to hear the new Rabbi. Descending from the higher point to which He had called up His Apostles, Ho

đi

mi

in

of

th

CO

tes

SO.

fin

mu

Is.

gat

ski

mu

org

live

19[1

unk

spol

Hin

circ

He

they

to/a

otate

and

who

od In

repu aiki

strik

Rabl

riter

⊾ em mora

now,

80 100

The

and

outwa

oldt

of ch believ

Even

under

pleas

Conce

came towards the crowd, which waited for Him at a level place below. There were numbers from every part-from Judea and Jerusalem in the south, and even from the sea-coast of Type and Sidon a some to hear Him, others to be cured of their diseases, and many to be delivered from unclean spirits. The commotion and excitement were great at His appearance, for it had been found that to touch Him was to be cured, and hence, all sought, either by their own efforts, or with the help of friends, to get near enough to Him to do so. After a time, however, the tumult was stayed, all having been healed. and He proceeded, before they broke up, to care for their spiritual, as He had already for their physical wants. bout he nation denial Tradition has chosen the hill known as the "Horns of Hatting" two horn-like, heights, rising sixty feet above the plain between themtwo hours west of Tiberias, at the mouth of the gorge which opens, past Magdala, into the wild cliffs of Arbela, famous in the history of the Zealots as their hiding place, and famous also for Herod's battles in mid-air at the mouths of their caves, by means of great cages filled with soldiers let down the precipices. It is greatly in favour of this site, to find such a writer as Dean Stanley saying, that the situation so strikingly coincides with the intimations of the Gospel narrative. as almost to force the inference, that, in this instance, the eye of those who selected the spot was rightly guided. The plain on which the hill stands is easily accessible from the Lake, and it is only a few minutes' walk from it to the summit, before reaching which, a broad "level place" has to be crossed—exactly suited for the gathering of a multitude together. It was to this, apparently, that Jesus came down, from one of the higher horns, to address the people in Seated on some slightly elevated rock-for the teacher always sat while he taught—the people and the disciples sitting at His feet, on the grass; the cloudless Syrian sky over them; the blue Lake, with its moving life, on the one hand, and, in the far north, the grand form of Hermon, glittering in the upper air; He began what is to us the Magna Charta of our faith, and to the hearers must have been the formal inauguration of the new kingdom of Godol ( all formations a

The choice of the twelve Apostles and the Sermon on the Mount mark a turning point in the public life of Jesus. A crisis in the development of His work had arrived. He had, till now, taken no steps towards a formal and open separation from Judaism, but had contented Himself with gathering converts, whom He left to follow the new life He taught, without any organization as a distinct communion. The symptoms of an approaching rupture with the pricests and Rabbis had, however, forced on Him more decisive action. He had met the murmurs at the healing of the paralytic, by the triumphant vindication of the language which had given offence of the triumchoice of a publican as a disciple immediately after, had been a further expression of the fundamental opposition between His ideas and those of the schools and the Temple, and His justification of the disuse by His disciples, of the ontward rites and forms which were wital in the eyes of the orthodoxy of the day, had been another step in the same divergent path. He had openly sanctioned the omission of fasts, and of mechanical rules for prayer, which were sacred with the Rebbis. He had even set the old and new order of things in contrast, and had thus assumed independent authority as a religious teacher; the sum of all offence in a rigid theoeracy of The choice of the twelve, and the Sermon on the Mount, were the final and distinct proclamation of His new position. The Apostles must have seemed, to a Jew, the twelve patriarchs of a new spiritual Is ael, to be substituted for the old; the heads of new tribes, to be rathered by their teaching, as the future people of God. The old skins had been proved unfit for the new wine; henceforth, new skins must be provided; new forms, for a new faith. The society thus organized needed a promulgation of the laws under which it was to live, and this it received in the Sermon on the Mount. an a burn Nour be The audience addressed consisted of the newly chosen twelve; the unknown crowd who heard Him with favour, and were hence, spoken of as His disciples; and the promiscuous multitude drawn to Him: for the time, by various motives, Jesus had no outer and inner circle, for public and secret doctrines, like the Rabbis, for, though He explained to the twelve, in private, any points in His discourses they had not understood, the discourses themselves, were delivered to all who onme to hear them, This Sermon, which is the fullest statement we have of the nature of His kingdom, and of the condition and duties of its citizenship, was spoken under the open sky, to all who happened to form His audience. and and out he entry instit any obl In this great declaration of the principles and laws of the Christian republic-a republic in the relations of its citizens to each othera kingdom, in their relations to Jesus, the omissions are no less striking than the demands. There is no reference to the priests or Rabbis-till then the undisputed authorities in religion-nor is the ariter of circumvision even mentioned, though it made the Jew a ember of the Old Covenant as a mere theocratic form, apart from moral requirements all is not condemned, but it is ignored. Till now, a vital condition of entrance into the kingdom of God, it is so no more Norfare any other outward forms more in favour. The new kingdom is to be founded only on righteousness and love, and contrasts with the old by its spiritual freedom, untrammeled by outward rules. It opposes to the nationality and limitation of the old theocracy a universal invitation, with no restriction except that of character and conduct. Citizenship is offered to all who sincerely believe in Jesus as the Messiah, and honestly repent before God. Even the few opening sentences mark the revolution in religious conceptions which the new faith involves. Temporal evil, which, under the former dispensation had been the mark of divine displeasure became, in the teaching of Jesus, the mark of fellowship below. nisalem someto vito be ent werd lim was efforts. o doi so. a healed, piritual. Istach, t tin latwo n them ch opens, istory of l's battles ages filled ur of this asituation narrative, e of those which the nly a few h, a broad thering of esus came e. Seated t while he the grass; ts moving d form of toiussthe been the w. Children. the Mount isis in the ataken no n, but had to follow tinet comthe pricets otionis He the triumence.19 The s cnood the n His ideas tion of the

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

frien

have

WOUN

casu

oence

mora

the q pôpu

tary

have

Free

His F

thesy

and vealli

andin

of the nearly

tratio

of Jes

by the

senten

design

point

teachib

heaver

hearer

that H at othe

more

evens

at time

thus in

was ve

painfu

addres

butst

though

itself.

minute

shows.

WUS Ifs

fervou

claime

Heled

Seripu

Thi

om Jeruselem, or resident in Galilee, must and pledge of heavenly reward. The opinion of the day regarded poverty, hunger, trouble, and persecution as punishments for sin He enumerates them as blessings. Throughout the whole Sermon, no. political or theocratic ideas find place, but only piritual. For the first time in the history of religion, a cummunion is founded without a priesthood, or offerings, or a Temple, or ceremonial services; without symbolical worship, or a visible sanctuary, There is an utter absence. of everything external or sensuous; the grand spiritual truths of alisolute religious freedom, love, and righteousness, alone are heard, Nor is the kingdom, thus founded in itself visible, or corporate, in any ordinary sense; it is manifested only by the witness of the Spirit in the heart, and by the power going forth from it in the life. In the fine words of Herder, Christianity was founded in direct opposition to the stupid dependance on customs; formulæ, and empty usages. It humbled the Jewish, and even the Roman national pride; the moribund Levitical worship and idolatry, however fanatically defended, were wounded to death death white wounded to death

Nothing can be more certain than that Jesus had never studied. under the Sopherim, or Scribes. His contemporaries, the Rabbis of Jerusalem bleave no doubt of this for they frankly avowed their wonder at His knowledge of their theology, and power of Scriptural exposition, though He had never learned theological science in their. schools. The same minute acquaintance with the opinions and teachings of the day is seen through the whole of the Hill Sermon. Apart. from His mysterious divinity. He was a man like ourselves, "growing." in wisdom" with His years, and therefore, indebted in a measure, at, least to the influences and means around Him, for His human knowled and opinions at it speaks volumes for His early training by His mother and Joseph, that He should have known the Scriptures as He did for it is in childhood that the memory gets the bent which marks its strength in manhood The synagogue school, and constantly recurring services, must, however, have, been the great seminary of the wondrous Boy. Passages of the Law had been His only schoolbook, wand, "doubtless," the svillage teacher, steeped, in reflected Rubbinism, had often flattered his harmless vanity by a display before his young charge, of his knowledge of the traditions and glosses, which won so much honour to the Scribes. The Sabbath and week-day homilies of the Synagogue had made Him a constant listener to local or travelling Rabbis, till, in the thirty years of His Nazareth life, His mind and memory had, doubtless, been saturated with their modes of thought, and the opinions of all the different schools. Theology, moreover, was the staple of village conversation in Nazareth, as elsewhere, for his religion was also the politics of the Jew, and the ustification of his haughty national pride. Doubtless, also, in Josep's cottage there was a manuscript of the Law, and a soul filled with devotion to His Heavenly Father, like that of Jesus, would find some of the Prophets, either there or among His family

420

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

garded

in He

101, 10

for the

without

without

absence

uths of.

heard.

rate. in

e Spirit

In the position .

usages.

ide: the defend-studied

abbis of

ed their

criptural

in their.

d teach-

Apart.

growing

asure, at,

n knowl-

g by His

res as Hen

ch marks

onstantly

ninary of

y school-

reflected display

ions and

Sabbath

constant

rs of His saturated

different

versation

ics of the

Doubtless,

aw, and

of Jesus, lis family friends Rabbis from Jerusalem, or resident in Galilee, must often; have come in His way, during the thirty private years, and how much would such a mind and heart learn of their "wisdom," even in such casual Intercourse? His clearness of intellect, His transparent innocence of sould His freedom of spirit) and transcendent loftiness of morals were all His own, but they must have used; for their high ends, the facilities around Him. The very neighbourhood of a heathen population may have had its influence in breaking down the liereditary narrowness of His race, and who can tell what ardours may have been kindled by the wondrous view from the hill top of Nazaveth? Free from all thought of Himself: filled with a divine enthusiasm for His Father above and for humanity, these mountains, that azure sky, the sweeping table land beyond the Jordan, the wide glory of heaven and earth, veiling, above, the eternal kingdoms, and, at His feet, revealing the enclianting homes of wide populations differing in blood and in faith, but all allke His brethren, may have coloured not a few of the sacred utterances of the Sermon on the Mount, stroll prunirout

This unique example of our Saviour's teaching displays in one view nearly all the characteristics presented by the more detached illustrations preserved in the Gospols. Never systematic, the discourses of Jesus were rather pointed atterances of special truths demanded. by the occasion. In perfect inner harmony with each other, these sententious leachings at times appear to conflict, for they are often a designed to present opposite sides of the same truth, as the distinct point to be met required. The external and sensuous in the Hist teachings, however, was always made the vehicle of an inner and heaven to kesson the heessarily followed the mode to which His hearers were used, and taught them as their own Rabbis were wont, that He might engage attention. At times He puts direct questions; at others He is rhetorical or polemic, or speaks in proverbs, or in ... more lengthened discourse. He often uses parables, and sometimes. even symbolical actions; is always spontaneous and ready; and even; at times, points His words by friendly or cutting irony. But while, thus in many ways adopting the style of the Rabbis. His teaching was very different even in outward characteristics. They delivered, painfully, what they had learned like children, overlaying every address with citations, in their fear of saying a word of their own; but the teaching of Christ was the free expression of His own thoughts and feelings, and this, with the weight of the teaching itself, gave Him power over the hearts of His audience. With a minute and exact knowledge of the teaching of the schools, He shows, by repeated use of Rabbinical proofs and arguments, that How wis familiar, also, with the current modes of controversy, His fervour His orginality, and the grandeur of the truths. He proclaimed, were enough in themselves to commend His words, but. He" constant wi supports them by the supreme cauthority of a those Scriptures, which were familiar to Him hyollis mether speeches

Simple, as a rule, in all He says, He yet often opens, glimpees into the infinite heights, where no human thought can follow Him. The spirit of His preaching is as transcendent as its matter. Tenderness and yearning love prevail, but there is not wanting, when needed, the sternness of the righteous judge. Throughout the whole of His ministry, and notably, in the Sermon on the Mount. He bears Himself with a kingly grandeur, dispensing the rewards and punishments of the world to come; opening the kingdom of heaven to those only who fulfil His requirements, and resting the future prospects of men on the reception they give His words. Even to read His utterances forces from all the confession of those who heard Him, that "Never man spake like this." CHAPTER XXXVI.

clû

WO

Go

me

the

her who WOR

wor it, s thei Hen beat the ger; The

which

are runs and

abov

and joyfi

that?

Cliri highe

is to self-s

mano

the te

happ in Ch and s

It Jesus

result

at the

the ea

and y Jesus

for H

memb requir

Foi active

The opening verses of the Sermon on the Mount mark the contrast between the New Kingdom of God and the Old." There is no mention of forms, for the whole life of Jesus was one unbroken service of God. The Temple Service, and the burdensome laws of sacrifices, are passed over, for the Sermon was delivered in Galilee, far from the splendour of the one, or the vexatious minuteness and materialism of the other. The great question of clean and unclean, which divided the nation within itself; made life a slavery to rules; and isolated the Jew from all brotherhood with humanity at large, is left to sink into indifference before the grand spiritual truths enunciated. The Law came with threats, prohibitions, and commands; the "Sermon" opens with benedictions, and moves in an atmosphere of promises and enticements. Its first sentences are a succession of lofty congratulations of those whose spirit and bearing already proclaim them fit for the new society.

The virtues thus praised are not the active only, but the passive; not those of doing alone, but of bearing. "Blessed are the poor in" spirit, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven: blessed the meek for they will inherit the earth; blessed they that mourn, for they will be comforted: blessed they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they will be satisfied; blessed the merciful, for they will find mercy; blessed the peace-makers, for they will be called sons of God, blessed they that have been persecuted for righteousness sake, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven. Blessed are ye, when they shall reproach and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you faisely. for My sake." Rejoice and exult, for your reward is great in Heaven; for so did they persecute the prophets that were before you." The mission of Chilist was said by Himself, in a quotation from Isaiah, to be to profen to the yoor, and hence it is with no surprise ees into n. The aderness ded, the

of His Himself nents of ose only

of men tterances

NG: 31

11941

no reoll

l eatitud

the pr

S . 751

contrast

mention

ervice of acrifices.

from the rialism of a divided sink into

The Law.

m "opens

nises and

ongratula-

em fit for passive:

e poor in k, for they I be com-

isness, for d mercy; d, blessed neirs is the roach and

ou falsely, n Heaven; u

tion from

o surprise

that we find St. Enke substitute simply "the poor" for the "poor in apirit," for both are right. The first disciples were won almost ex-clusively from among the lowly. "The contented poor," Jesus would here say, "who bear their burden meekly, since it comes from God, those—that is, who are 'poor in spirit, —have, in their very meekness, the sign and proof that, though poor in outward things, they are rich in higher, for they will, so much the more surely, be, hereafter, the opposite of what they are here. They are the poor who have nothing and yet have all. They have nothing of this world's possessions, and have not yet received the blessing in the world to come. But the very longing for the future, and hope of it, are virtually a present possession. Their devout poverty is their wealth, for it secures treasures hereafter. The Kingdom of Heaven "is theirs already." This principle runs through all the beatitudes. As Christ's disciples, the future will be the contrast to the present; riches for poverty; joy for mourning; plenty for hunger; a heavenly crown for earthly suffering for the Master's sake. The contrast of sin and pardon; the lowly sense of needed salvation. which already has in itself the assurance that salvation is granted, are implied in all the states of heart recounted. Through all, there runs the deepest sense of the sinfulness and troubles of the present. and springing from this, the loftlest religious aspirations, rising far above the earth, to eternal realities. They thus disclose the immost and central principle of the new Kingdom; the willing and even joyful surrender of the present, in lowly hope of the future-and that from no lower motive than loving obedience and fidelity to Christ, Immediate self-interest is to be disregarded, for the infinitely higher prospects of the future world. The one passion of the heart is to be for greater righteousness, -that is, for an ever more complete self-surrender to the will of God, and active fulfilment of its demands. For Himself Jesus claims the most loyal devotion, even to the endurance of "all manner of evil," for His sake. To seek happiness is to fail to obtain it, but self-surrender to God, and faith in Christ as the Messiah, in themselves bring it, when disinterested and sincere.

It is striking to note the anticipations of suffering associated by Jesus with true discipleship. Suffering is assumed as its inevitable result. He holds out no attractions to insincerity or worldliness, but at the very outset, fans the chaff from the wheat, and repels all but the earnest and devoted.

Four benedictions are bestowed on the passive virtues; four on the active. To bear poverty with lowly resignation to God; to mourn, and yet taust that all is for the best; to reproduce the meckness which Jesus Himself displayed, and to endure trials and persecutions loyally for His sake, are the negative graces demanded as conditions of membership of the New Kingdom. But active virtues are no less required; the hungering and thirsting after tighteousness, which finds

bilg plac

feel

stur

WAR

coif

not l

Ifyc

ness

cienc

nð ló

it wi

it? as

make

Worth

lute.

am<sup>7</sup>tl you

hidde

drive

men,

city s Pas

cede:

ocracy

Him

them

glory

Script

to fulf

but no

clotlie

not the which

grown

the spi

served

and ra

from s forms, Law, a

in my

shall b

if of H

If food in fresh joyful | continuous sacts of goodness; the menoy which delights to bless the wretched the purity of heart, which strives to realize in the sout the image of God, and the gentleness which spreads peace around it. four ni attrand billing ionify and fisherers "Tho hey-note of all the utterances of Christ reveals itself, in these few sontences of His kingdom is at once present and future; present by the undoubting faith in His assurances that it would hereafter ast suredly be attained: future in the fact that the realization of its joya was reserved for the life to come. Unlike John, He proclaims that the time of expectation is over; that the New Kingdom has already come; as a living power in the soul. diffusing its blessings, at once within and around its members. It is established in its rights and duties, to develop and advance, henceforth, till its glory cover the earth. In one aspect, it is incomplete till its full realization in the distant future: in another, it is already perfect, for, it reigns in every single souliwhich has humbly accepted Jesus as its King. Johd couper origin After this introduction. He proceeds to enforce on His disciples, the duties of their now relation to Him, and to cheer them, by recall, ing the dignity it confers. "You have, indeed, good cause to reasing joice," says He. "and to be brave of heart, for you are the sait of, the earth; the light of the world; a city set on a hill." Mere osten: tation or insincere parade of virtue, were abhorrent to Him, and formed His great charge against the acted religion of the day, But the enthusiasm of true goodness, He tells them, must of necessity be seen and felt. Life is shown by its energy; where there is no active vital power, there is only death. He prescribes no lengthened code of duties, but trusts to the ardour and devotion of loyalty to Him, self, as a perfect equivalent. Drawn to Him by grateful and lowly affection. He leaves it to the love of His followers to exceed all precise directions, and outstrip all formal requirements. His, kingdom is an strictly under law as any other, but, for the endless statutes of earthly monarchies, and the equally unnumbered prescriptions of the old theocracy, He substitutes a single all sufficing law-the law of love, which makes each member of His kingdom a law to him, self. All are to give themselves up to Him as unreservedly as He has given Himself up for them in this and physical difference of the line of the line of the line of the second and His own personal example their standard and pattern. To be the light of the world, they must needs look to Him, for He had especially applied that name to Himself. They had the immense advantage of example, so much more effective, than precept. The New Kingdom. was only the reflection of His own character, and, thus, His commands were best carried out by imitating His life; for He, Himself, was the one perfect illustration of complete fulfilment of its laws. No grudging or partial devotion would suffice. They must heartily conform their inmost being to His image, and shed round them, in their respective, othe spiritual blessings which besmed

BROECH

which

Johnes 120

1 these

ter, ant

ta joya

hat tho

within ties, to th. In distant singlo

isciples

recall

4 10 FATE

usalt of

e ostenti im, and y., But essity be

o active

ed code

to Him; d lowly all pre-

kingdom

statutes ptions ut

-the law

to him.

lly as He

and His

the light

specially

antage of

Kingdom

His com

Himself

its laws

heartily

. main and a section

them, in

brightest from Himself." Thus calminy, and as His natural right and place. He constitutes Himself the grand ideal of humanity, and men feel that there is no rashness or incongruity in His assumption of the I humorif hubble shoches from a stupendous dignity." of ailure, however, is human, and hence a few solemn words of warming are added. "Salt keeps and makes sound what would else corrupt." But impure salt may lose its saltness, and once lost it cannot be restored." What was before of blessed use, is, henceforth, worthless, and may be cast out upon the road to be trodden under foot. If you, the shit of the earth, lose your spiritual worth, by faint-heartedness, or sloth, or dark unfaithfulness, your needed energy and efficlency are irreparably gone." Who will take your place? You will be no longer fit for the work I have assigned you. If the salt be pure. it will not lose its power; it is the earth and impurities mixed with it, that make it worthless; and so you must put away all that might make you go back; if you would be true disciples. Your lasting worth depends on your devotion to me being unqualified and absolute. You are to enlighten men as the sun enlightens the world. I am the light of the world: you shine by my light: see that, in turn, you illumine the darkness round you." A light is to shine, not to be hidden. "Like a lamp on its stand, it is your office to shed light, and drive off darkness. The beams of your good works must shine before nich, that they may honour God, your Father, in Heaven. Like a city set on a nill, you are to draw on you all eyes?? to menter dros but Passing from general principles to specific details, Jesus now proceded to show the relations of His new kingdom to the old theocracy of The charge of hostility to the Law had been brought against Him, and would be urged against His disciples. He would show. them that the new roots itself in the old, and is its completion and glory Abt its destruction up at tampor. He up late of bus shows still show the 291 Phink not." said He, " that I came to supersede your ancient Scriptures-the Law and the Propliets." I came not to destroy. but to fulfil. Worthless forms, worn out with age, may perish and must, but not the least jot or tittle of the sacred truths they for a time have clothed, shall pass, while heaven or earth endure. The forms are not the Law. Rites and ceremonies are only helps, for simple ages, which need material symbols. The kingdom of God has now outgrown them. The truth must henceforth stand alone, appealing to the spirit without such outward aids. Local and national, they have served their day, but the new kingdom of God, which is for all times and races, knows only a worship in spirit and in truth. So far any I from slighting or destroying the truth hidden under these outward forms, that he who breaks one of the least spiritual demands of the Law, and teaches men to copy him in doing so, shall be called least in my kingdom: while he who obeys and teaches them as a whole, shall be called great in it." The Law is for ever sacred. "I only strip it of its outward accidents, to reveal the better its divine glory.

ques conc triffe

The vital indif

winc

it un critic word

the si the R binic make Relig refere

depra

mand ings a

the L requir

Rabhi

comm

thorns right

deman an equ A b

ideas d

fact th who to

ing to the ha

books least, t retort

and th

kind o cees.

"Just

Scripti

while.

ceived

as the they h

Spoken by God, it is eternal. I come to do it honour; to confirm but also to clear it from human additions and corruptions." Jesus, in thus speaking, had a very different conception of the Law from that of the Rabbis. To Him it meant the sacred moral commands given from Shai. The whole apparatus of ceremony and rite at first connected with them, were only rude external accommodations to the childhood of religion, to aid the simple and gross ideas of early ages. Looking beneath the symbol to the essential truth, it was a loity, religious, moral, and social legislation, far deeper, wiser, holier, and more complete than the highest human system. He knew how the prophets had drawn from it the pure and exalted conceptions they had enforced, anticipating in their spirituality His own teaching. But centuries lay between Him and the prophets, and Judaism had sunk to a painful idolatry of the letter and outward form of the Law, to the neglect of its spirit and substance. The Exile had weakened and perverted the national conscience, and a burning zeal for rigid external observance of the letter had followed the just belief that their national, troubles had been a punishment for previous shortcomings.

The Pharisees, who gave the tone to the people, filled up their life with a weary round of offerings, ceremonies, and purifications; and, not content with the prescriptions of Moses, had added a tedicus system of meritorious works; fasts, washings, alms, and prayers. The Essenes, and still more John, had turned oack to the purer air of the prophets, from this barren, mechanical piety, and had taught that righteousness, love, and human sympathy, were the highest requirements of the Law. But the vell was still on their eyes; their reforms were partial. The Essenes had even more washings than the Pharisees; they esshewed marriage, property, and the world, and the Baptist fasted, and required Pharisaic forms. Jesus pierced to the heart of the truth. Stripping off all obsolete wrappings of rite and symbol, and repudiating all human additions. He proclaimed the Law in its divine ideal, as binding for ever, in its least part; on all ages.

His supreme loyalty to the Law could not fail, in a spirit so divinely sincere, to involve a condemnation of its corruption by the religious teachers of the day. It followed presently: "Except your righteouness exceed that of the Scribes and Pharisees," He continued, "yo will not enter into the kingdom of heaven." He charges them, not only with themselves breaking the commandments, by their casuler, and their immoral additions, but with leading men at large in the same evil path.

The fundamental principle of the Pharisale conception of righteousness which Jesus thus strenuously opposed, was their idea that strict observance of the traditions and commands of their schools, in itself satisfied the requirements of God. Fulfilment of what was written in the Lay and its habbinical empositions, was, in their opinion, only a question of punctilious outward observance. They weakened the conception of moral evil by subtle discriminations of casulstry. In trifles the most exect minuteness was required, but in greater matters the principles of morality were boldly undermined or surrendered. The tithing of mint, dill, and cummin—mere garden herbs—was vital, but grave questions of right and wrong were treated with indifference. This moral prudery and pedantry, which strained the wine before drinking it, lest a fly might have fallen into it and made it unclean, but made no trouble of swallowing a camel, was the hypo-critical righteousness against which Jesus directed His bitterest words. With all their lip veneration for it, they set little value on the study of the Law itself, but much on that of the commentaries of the Rabbis, now embodied in the Mischna and Gemara. The Rabbinical tradition so amplified and twisted the words of the Law, as to make it express, in many cases, the opposite of its natural meaning. Religion had become almost wholly a mechanical service, without reference to flic heart. As in other theoretic communities, a man might be eminently religious, in the Pharisaic sense; and yet utterly deprayed and immoral. The teaching of the prophets, which de-manded internal godliness, was slighted, and the study of their writ-ings almost entirely put aside for that of the legal traditions and of the Law. The desire to define, to the smallest detail, what the Law required, had led, in the course of ages, to a mass of conflicting Rabhinical opinions, which darkened rather than explained each command. The "hedge" round the Law had proved a hedge of thorns, for Rabbis and people alike. The question was, not what was right or wrong, but what the Law, as expounded by the Rabbis, demanded, and zeal was stimulated by the mercenary expectation of an equivalent reward, for scrupulous exactness in fulfilment. A better illustration of the moral worthlessness of the Pharisaic ideas of righteousness could hardly, perhaps, be found, than in the fact that, with all their ostentatious reverence for the Scriptures, he who touched a copy of them was, thereby, made unclean. According to you," said the Sadducees of their rivals, "the Scriptures defile the hands, while Homer does not." The skins on which the sacred books were written might have been those of an unclean beast, or, at least, they were part of a dead body. But the Pharisees had their retort ready. "Why," asked they, "are the bones of an ass clean and those of the high priest, John Hyrcanus, unclean?" "It is the kind of, bone that determines the uncleanness," answered the Saddacees, "else we would make spoons of the bones of our relatives!" "Just so," retorted the Pharisees, "it is the value we attach to the Scriptures which has made us decide that they defile the hands, while Homer does not." They worshipped the letter, but misconceived the essence of Scripture: treated morality as a trifle, and triffes as the only religion. In their early days, fired by a true zeal for God; they had degenerated, as a body, into mere "actors." "There were

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

confirm noisesup

the Law

ral com-

ony and ommodaoss ideas truth, it er, wiser,

He knew

teaching.

the Law.

weakcned

for rigid belief that their life ions, and, a tedicus

1 prayers.

urer air of aught that st require-

the Phari-

and the

ced to the

f rite and

aimed the art, on all

o divinci c religious righteousnued, as ye them, net r casuistr, irge in the righteousthat strict ls, in itself written in ion, only a

This have a hence have in ment o it to b

altar: and, th

man o instant

with a judge,

prison.

will no

unspar the Lat

divorce Rabbis

affect i moralit

and co

crime i day, bu

ness un

be carr right ey

lead, yo

and cut share in meant, t

strict, p

The

one, s may dis ity to ji held the

Eastern

Rabbis held th

Josephi not ples

tained t

or over-

she wer divorce

plenty of Pharisecs," says even Jost, himself a Jew, "who used the appearance of piety as a cloalt for shameful ends," Nor did this escape the people, especially as these hypocrites sought to attract attention by exaggerated displays, and contemptuous by manes were presently given them. The name of Pharisee came to be like that of Jesuit in the mouth of friends or opponents. Even Philo does not mention it, and it soon died out of the mouth of the people, and survived only as a term of the schools.

With a system so utterly hollow, and yet so deeply rooted in popular favour, Jesus could hold no terms. With the better side of Pharisaism He had much in common, but, as it showed fiself, in its growing corruption, He could only condemn it. Zealots for words and forms; lofty in abstract views; the mouthplece of the nation at harge, in its religious and political aspirations, there must have been little real soundness in a body at large, of which a spirit so gentle as that of Christ could speak as whited sepulchres and a generation of vipers. To illustrate His meaning, Jesus proceeds to give examples of Pharisaic abuse of the Law, holding up what is implied in its due observance, that He may show how it was broken by its professed zealous defenders. The sublime morality of the New Kingdom, with its lofty spiritualization of the Law, is, He implies, the true conservation—it is His opponents who are undermining it.

The Mosaic prohibition of murder had been limited by the Rabbis to literal homicide, and they had added to the brief words of the Law, that the criminal was in danger of, the judgment of God, in some cases, and of the Sanhedrim in others." But this did not satisfy the high spirituality of the New Kingdom. It included in the brief utterance of God, through Moses, a condemnation even of angry words or thoughts. " I say unto you, that every one who is angry with his brother will be liable to the judgment of God; and whose ever shall express contempt for his brother, will be liable to the Sanhedrim; and whosoever shall say, Thou worthless one, will be hable to hell fire. I go beyond the Scribes, for I declare, as the fulfiller of the Law, that unrighteous anger is worthy of the full punishment they attach to its overt result in homicide; nay, more, I declare the expression of such anger in hitter words as incurring the danger of hell. Not to love one's 'brother' is, with me, the essence of the crime condemned by the Law: the lesser expressions of anger I denounce as worthy of divine, though temporal punishment; in the worst cases, as worthy of punishment in the world to come." Anger with a brother entails the anger and judgment of God: public reproach merits a public penalty, but he who would consign another to hell is himself in danger of being sent to it. He does not suppose His disciples could possibly commit the crime of murder, or even break into open violence, but He ranks under an equal guilt the bastions which lead to them in others. He charges the murder, not against the hand that strikes, but the heart that hates.

This was startling enough, but the application made of it must have sounded no less so. Unly the pure in heart can see God, and hence it is vain for you to seek His presence by an offering, if you have in any way thus offended. If you have, and in the solemn moment of appearing before God remember it, -evil though men think it to break off-or interrupt a sucrifice, -leave your offering before the altar; seek him whom you have wronged, and be reconciled to him, and, then, come and offer your gift. You have wronged God, not man only. Beware lest, if you do not make peace with Him, by instant atonement to your brother. He act, to you as a creditor does with a debtor he meets in the street-whom he delivers up to the judge, and whom the judge hands over to the officer to cast into prison. I tell you, if God thus let His anger kindle upon you, you will not come out till you have paid the last farthing!" The Pharisaic doctrine of marriage offences and divorce was next unsparingly condemned, as an inadequate expression of the spirit of the Law. It restricted adultery to the crime fiself, and it sanctioned divorce at the mere whim of the husband. Doubtless individual Rabbis represented healthier views than others, but they did not affect the prevailing tone. As with homicide, so, in adultery, the morality of the New Kingdom traced the crime home to the heart, and condemned the unclean glance as a virtual commission of the crime itself. The thoughts were nothing, in the loose morality of the day, but Jesus arraigns the secret lusts of the breast, with an earnest-ness unknown to the Rabbis. Unconditional self-mortification is to be carried out, when guilty thoughts imperil the soul." If your right eye," says He, "or your right hand, your sight or your touch lead you into temptation, it is better for you to pluck out the one, and cut off the other, rather than be led astray, and not only lose a share in my kingdom, but be cast into hell hereafter." Not that He meant this in a hard and literal sense. The sin is with Him, in the heart, but the senses are its instruments, and no guard can be too strict, so self-restraint too great, if they endanger spiritual purity. The Pharisaic laws of divorce were shamefully loose. "If any said the Rabbis, "see a woman handsomer than his wife, he one. may dismiss his wife and marry that woman," and they had the audacity to justify this by a text of Scripture. Even the strict Schammal held that if a wife went out without being shrouded in the vell which Eastern women still wear, she might be divorced, and hence many Rabbis locked up their wives when they went out! While some held that divorce should be lawful only for adultery, others, like Josephus, claimed the right to send away their wives if they were not pleased with their behaviour. The school of Hillel even maintained that, if a wife cooked her husband's food badly, by over-salting or over-roasting it, he might put her away, and he might also do so if she were stricken by any grievous bodily affliction! The facility of divorce among the Jews, had, indeed, become so great a scandal, used the did this to attract uncs wero like that o does not and surrooted in ter side of self. in its for words nation at have been itle as that of vipers. amples of in its duc professed dom, with conservaand could he Rabbis ds of the of God, in not satisfy n the brief of angry o is angr nd whosoo the San-I be liable he fulfiller unishment teclare the danger of ice of the nger I dent; in the Anger public ren another of suppose er, or even ilt the pasurder, not even smong their heathen neighbours, that the Rabbis were fain to boast of it as a privilege granted to Isruel, but not to other hations! evil only a The

the ve with t

abund

taking pected tions, forth t the N the nat after, a

to gain To n the Ne

former

reward nothing

cared a whom Patienc

terize tl

of form

New K little va

As a His foll

with the

the prin

and hea like wit

had no'l ness, an

was wro

was wor

would n

Plato ha

of Greek

the work

not love

ical justi

of kindn

virtue th

had the

hand, for

stripe, ar

"The woman divorced was at once free to marry, her letter of dismissal, signed by witnesses, expressly granting her the liberty to do so. Rising high above all this festering hypocrisy, the law of the New Kingdom sounded out, clear and decisive. "It has been said ly Moses," continued Jesus, "Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a bill of divorce. But I say unto you, that whosever shall put away his wife, except for fornication, causes her to be the occasion of adultery if she marry again, for she is still a wife; and whosever marries her, when put away, thus commits adultery. The use of oaths was no less prevalent in Christ's day than it still is in the East, and the Rabbis had sanctioned the practice by laying down must rules for its regulation. The law of Moses had absolutely forbidden perjury, but the casuistry of the Rabbis had so dark. ened the whole subject of oaths, that they had, in effect, become utterly worthless." They were formally classed under different heads, in Rabbinical jurisprudence, and endless refinements opened facilities for any one to break them who wished. Their number was endless: men swore by heaven, by the earth, by the sun, by the prophets, by the Temple, by Jerusalem, by the altar, by the wood used for it, by the sacrifices, by the Temple vessels, by their own heads, By joining a second text, from a different part, to the prohibition of perjury, the Scribes had, in effect, opened the door to every abuse. To the prohibition of Moses, "Thou shalt not swear falsely," they had added the charge, "but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oatha and from this it was argued that no oath was binding, either on one's self or towards others, which had no vow of sacrifice as a part of it. or if the yow had been punctually fulfilled." Any oath, any decep-tion towards God or man, and even perjury itself, was thus sanctioned, if it were only consecrated and purified by an offering. The garrulous; exaggerating, crafty lew needed to be checked, rather than helped in his untruthfulness, but the guardians of the purity of the Law had invented endless baths, with minute discriminations, and verbal shades and catches, which did not expressly name God, or the Temple, or the altar, and these the people might use, without scruple, mock oaths, harmless to themselves and of no binding force! Against such equivocation and consecrated hypocrisy Jesus lifted His voice." "I say unito you, swear not at all, neither by heaven, for it is God's throne: neither by the earth, for it is His footstool nor by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the Great King. You would tremble to swear by God, but when you swear by anything conflected with His works or His worship, you swear, in reality, by Himself. Nor shall you swear by your head, for you cannot make a hair of it white or black; and, thus, your oaths by it are idle words. But let your speech be simply yes and no, for what exceeds these is from the

450

'evil one.' As my disciples, your word is enough: you will speak only an ever in the presence of God." and an and the beautrant potent The theory of hie under the Now Kingdom, as we have seen, was the very opposite of that held by the schools of the day. Prosperity, with them, was an unbroken enjoyment of life to extreme old age abundance of worldly comforts, and continuous success in all undertakings, and triumphant victory over all enemies. All this was expected as the just reward of a strict obedience to Rabbinical prescriptions, which constituted the "righteousness of the Law." Jesus held forth the very opposite of all this as the blessedness to be sought in the New Kingdom. Poverty, sorrow, and persecution, were to be the natural lot of His followers, but their transcendent reward, hereafter, and the love which inspired such devotion, transfigured them to gain and honour, and demanded the highest joy. Har hat the state the To make the contrast more vivid between the Old Kingdom and the New. He had added "woes" in connection with all that the formet lind praised as specially blessed. The rich, who, have their reward in their earthly possessions; the prosperous, who eared for nothing except this world, would suffer hunger bereafter; these who cafed only for present joy; would one day mourn and weepy these whom men praised, would find the praise only deceiving flatteny. Patience, humility, gentleness, resignation, and love, were to characterize the New Israel; the virtues and rewards of the soul; the piety of form and rewards in this world, were discountenanced. The New Kingdom was to win hearts by spiritual attractions, till now little valued. at the western in property of As a practical application of the ideal, thus sketched. He required His followers to repudiate the Old Testament doctrine of retaliation, with the endless refinements of the Rabbis, and to adopt, in its place, the principle of overcoming evil with good. Antiquity, both Jewish and heathen, cherished the idea of revenge for injuries. To requite like with like was assumed as both just and righteous. "Even Socrates had no higher idea of virtue than to surpass friends in showing kindness, and enemies in inflicting hurt. Plato, indeed, held that revenge was wrong, and that no one should do evil on any ground; that it was worse to do wrong than to suffer it, and that the virtuous man would not injure any one, because to do so injured himself. But Plato had only in his mind, in these noble sentiments, the relations, of Greek citizens to each other, to the exclusion of slaves, and of all the world but his own race; and the motive for his magnanimity was not love for the individual man, or for ideal humanity, but only political justice and right. Roman stoicism rose higher, but its injunctions of kindness to enemies were rather the expression of self-approving virtue than of loving moral conviction. Among the Jews, retaliation

Himself. had the sanction of Moses. Eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe, are required by him. The stern Badduces party clung to the

vero faln

other ha-

to do so.

the New

a said by whosoever

to be the wife; and tery.

han it still by laying

had abso-

d so dark-

t, become ent heads, d facilities

as endless:

ophets, by

for it, by orohibition

ery abuse.

ely," they

r on one's

part of it,

any decep-

thus sanc-

ing. The ather than rity of the ations, and

lod, or the

ut scruple,

osus lifted

by heaven,

Tootstool

You would connected

et

ne oatha

10:01

a' Thi

TIRA

1905te

M: th

JE

est of

Th

lews Fathe

large.

uiged.

Luougi

genera tions, j

ducee 1 Temple

in the a

alike lo

could h

from th learned

Prophet

the digr

Jehovah

They ha

because

looked

would se

Jews, ma

as a fathe Him. B

performa

good, or

and at the Still, abo vant-the sense, gre Jew was

truth.

The hes for its pro gods and 1 friend, the sincere age

letter of the Law, but the milder Pharisees had invented a scale of money payments instead. As in our own middle ages, a tariff of fines was constructed for each personal injury; for tearing the hair, for a cuff on the ear, a blow on the back, spitting on the person, taking away an under garment, uncovering a woman's head, and the like." The value of a hand, or foot, or an eye, was computed by the depreciation il would have made in the value of a slave. A blow on the ear was variously set at the fine of a shilling or a pound; a blow on the one cheek at two hundred zuzees; on both cheeks, at double. To tear out haif, to spit on the person, to take away one's coat, or to uncover's woman's head, was compensated by a payment of jour hundred zuzees. <sup>302</sup> This rude and often mercenary softening of the harshness of the old Law fell wholly below the requirements of the New Kingdom. Its members must suffer wrong patiently, that the conscience of the wrong doer, -- become its own accuser, -- might be won to repentance, by the lesson of unresisting meekness. Christ's own divine charity and forgiveness was to be repeated by His followers. Sin was to be conquered by being made to feel the power of goodness. The present was, at best, only a discipline for the future, and the patient endurance of wrong, from Christ-like love and gentleness, was part of the preparation for the pure joys of the Messianic kingdom. Ye have fieurd," said He, " that it was said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth. But I say unto you, that ye resist not the evil man; but whoseever smites thee on the right check, turn to him the other also. And to him who desires to contend with thee and take thy coat, leave him thy cloak also." And whoseever shall press thee one mile, go with him two. To him that asks thee, give, and from tim that desires to borrow of thee, turn not away." The spirit of such infunctions is evident. Hasty retaliation ; readiness to stand on one's rights In all cases; deliberate revenge rather than pity, are unworthy a member of the New Kingdom. It is for him to teach by bearing, yielding, and giving, and not by words only. The virtues he commends he is to illustrate. But it is far from the teaching of Christ that law is to cease, or that the evil-doer is to have everything at his mercy. Only, as far as possible, the principle of his kingdom is to be the purcst, deepest, self-sacrificing love. If a first and the same is a low of the provident of the sacrificing love of a first of the state of the sta 's ditter Equilibrit Piero Base fend, the followields in the evanation, the Son, of Goord, I undersiner incore age, when the words were used in more independ flow minute Bellist of the Law but the stiller, Pharieldes states for cared a scale to the bellist of the Law but the state of the second of JESUS, had led His audience step by step to higher and higher conceptions, and now, by an easy transition, raised them to the highest of all.

The character of any religion depends on its idea of God. The Jews had no loftier thought of Him than as a national deity, the Father of Israel and of its proselytes, but not the God of the world at large. They looked on Him also as a jealous God, and the Pharisee urged himself to a painful zeal in his fulfilment of the Law by the thought that the sins of the father were visited on the third and fourth generation. If he agonized to carry out a thousand minute prescriptions, if the Essene secluded himself in hurtful loneliness, if the Sadducee toiled to discharge all that was required in the service of the Temple, and in the presentation of offerings, if the people mourned in the apprehension that God had forsaken them, it was because all alike looked up to a Being who, as they believed, required what they could hardly render. They should have drawn other conceptious from their ancient, Scriptures, but they did not. They had always learned much that was true and sublime from the Law and the Prophets-the Majesty of God and the dependence of the creaturethe dignity of man as the divine image, and the kingly relation of Jehovah to Isrsel-His son, His first-born, His bride, His spouse. They had never lost the conviction that their nation could not perish. because the honour of God was pledged to defend it, and they even looked forward, with a frenzied earnestness, to a future when He would send His Messiah, and raise them above all the nations. As Jews, many doubtless drew comfort from the divine words, that, like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him. But their theology had sunk to a mere mercenary relation of performance and reward. The ides of a strict return of good for good, or evil for evil, extended to the next world as well as this and at the best, God was only the Father of Israel, not of mankind, Still, above all, the Master, looking for service from man as the servant-the fond thought of His fatherhood, even in its limited national sense, grew more and more common as Christ's day grew near. The Jew was being educated for the divine announcement of the whole truth. Is placed at 1 million in a solar so the off with the

The heathen world, also, had long been unconsciously preparing for its proclamation. Greek philosophy had spoken of the Father of gods and men. Man was the divine image and of divine origin—the friend, the fellow-citizen, the emanation, the Son, of God. In an insincere age, when fine words were used as mere rhetorical flourishes.

scale, of tariff of he hair, person, and the d by the blow on a blow t double. bat, or to t of iour ss of the Kingdom. ice of the pentance, ne charity was to be 'he present ent endur. part of the Ye have nd a tooth l man; but other also. e thy coat, e one mile, n tim that uch injunc-one's rights thy a memwing, yieldcommends ist that law his mercy. s tr be the otole lit it wilt-rute ense, grenin was be 11 1111 The licar I it's the proof da and m. riend, the f neere zee. 1 :5 1 2

springing from no conviction or carnestness, Seneca, a generation later, was able to speak almost like a Christian. ""The gods," said he, "are full of pity and friendliness-do everything for our good," and for our benefit have created all kinds of blessings, with exhaustless bounty, and prepared everything for us beforehand. "What they have they make over to us: that is how they use things; and they are unwearied, day and night, dispensing their benefits as the protectors of the human race. We are loved by them as childern of their bosom, and, like loving parents, they smile at the faults of their children, and cease not to bestow kindness on kindness to us; give us before we ask, and continue to do so, although we do not thank them, and even though we cry out defiantly, 'I shall take nothing from them; let them keep what they have for themselves!"" The sun rises over the unjust, and the seas spread out even for sea robbers." The 2. ds are easily appeased, never unforgiving: how unfortunate were we'ff they were not so!" Thus also "The way of man, in which the godlike walks, goes upwards to the gods, who reach out the hand to us without pride or jealousy, to help us to rise. We need no temple, nor even to lift up our hands to heaven: God is near thee, the Holy Spirit, the Watcher over good or evil, who ever, unwearledly, leads us to God." Words like these sound Christian, though we know that they were only artificial rhetoric, composed to turn aside the charge of worshipping stocks and stones. Faith in the divinity often gives way, in Seneca, before haughty pride in humanity, and that pride in turn, sinks before the dark future. The fancy played over the dark abyss with empty words of comfort, respecting the father-like gods and god-like man, but even prosperity could hardly amuse itself with them, and the hour of trial repeated them with hollow laughter and self-murder. Yet they were there to use for the highest good, had men chosen. The religous education of the world had gradually, through long ages, become ready for the teachings of Jesus. House Part The Sermon on the Mount was spoken while every sign of the wrath of God with the nation lay like a burden on all, and perplexed the masters in Israel. Yet it was then that Jesus revealed that God was the Father of men, and had loved them from the beginning of the world, appealing for proof even to the lilies of the field and the birds of the air. For the first time, men heard that the whole race were the sons of the great heavenly Father; that the world lay in the sunshine of His eternal love, and that all alike were invited to seek His face. It was the first proclamation of a universal religion, and, as such, an event unique in the history of mankind." In the early ages of the world, war was perpetual. Even after men had long adopted city life and its civilization, a stranger and an enemy were synonymous. Thus, in the first ages of Rome, a stranger who had not put himself formally under the protection of some Roman, had no rights and no protection. What the Roman citizen took from him was as lawful gain as the shell which no one owned, picked up on the sea shore oue eithe work he la and J plund indiy Ast Secur the in even nation their more Bef the di united spread thems ofelett from t But, there. nothin before, for the equalit spect t witht was the become passed. age, la the wor indulge sion, no sible, b nationa ance. With with th the heat to all re raised s priest, t common shore. He was like a wild beast, to be hunted and preyed on at any one's will. To use Mommsen's figure, a tribe or people must be either the anvil or the hammer. Ulysses was only the type of the world at large in his da, when, in the early part of his wanderings, he landed in Thrace, and having found a city, instantly sacked it and killed, all the inhabitants. Where there was no express treaty, plunder and murder were always to be dreaded. The only safety of individuals or communities was their own capacity of self-defence. As tribes and clans expanded to nations, the blood connection secured peace, more or less, in the area they occupied, and, ultimately, the interests of commerce, or the impulse of self-perservation, joined even states of different nationalities in peaceful alliances. Isolated nations, like the Jews, still kept up the intense aversion to all but their own race, but the progress of the world made them more and more exceptional.

484

Before the age of Christ, the conquests of Rome had broken down the dividing walls of nationality over the civilized earth, and had united all races under a common government, which secured a widespread peace, hitherto unknown. Men of races living far apart found themselves free to compete for the highest honours of public life or of letters, and Rome accepted emperors and men of genius, alike, from the obscure populations of the provinces.

But though conquest had forced the nations into an outward unity. there was no real fusion or brotherhood. Man, as man, had gained nothing. The barbarian and the slave were no less despised than before, and had gained no more rights. The Romans had been forced, for their own sakes, to raise the conquered to more or less political equality with themselves, but they did so from no sentiment of respect to them as fellow-men, and still bore themselves towards them with the same haughty superiority and ill-concealed aversion. It was the peace of political and even moral death. All mankind had become the slaves of the despot on the Tiber. Ancient virtues had passed away, and vice and corruption, unequalled, perhaps, in any age, lay like a deadly miasma over universal society. The union of the world was regretted, as superseding the times when Rome could indulge its tastes in war and plunder. It was a political comprehension, not a moral federation. The hostility of the past was impossible, but the world had only become a mob, not a brotherhood, of nations, and had sunk in morality, as it had advanced in outward alliance.

With the Jews, the old hatred of all races but their own had grown with the calamities of the nation. It seemed to them a duty to hate the heathen and the Samaritan, but their cynicism extended, besides, to all respecting whom the jealousy for the honour of the Law had raised suspicion. They hated the publicans; the Rabbi hated the priest, the Pharisee the Sudduces, and both loathed and hated the common people, who did not know the ten thousand injunctions of s." said r good, exhaust. hat they they are rötectors r Losom, hildren, s before em, and m them; ses over The gods ere we if the godind to us litemple, the Holy leads us now that he charge ften gives pride, in the dark like gods tself with phter and good, had Fradually. gn of the perplexed that God inning of d the birds race were the sunb seek His n, and, as early ages g adopted e synonyd not put no rights im was as n the sea-

neration

don

ycu in w

and that citiz and

ness To

Gód'

king

in co

form

which

again

cabæ

heave

a Sta

was a

claim

filial

thoug God Ic

and te

and ba

the we

selves

day we longer

scrupu His per

to the i ideal of

The iso

were th

was do

were s: empty s c cation

new ki

A warn

duties.

meritori

Were, in poor, s

Alms

Jesus

the schools. They had forgotten what the Old Testament taught of the love of God towards men, and of the love due by man to his fellow. They remembered that they had been commanded to show no favour to the sunken nations of Canaan, but they forgot that they had not been told to hate them. The Law had said "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself;" but their neighbour, they assumed, meant only a Jew or a proselyte, and they had added that they should "hate their enemics." "If a Jew see a Gentile fall into the sen," wrote Maimonides, still cherishing the old feeling centuries later, "let him by no means take him out; for it is written, 'Thou shalt no, rise up against the blood of thy neighbour,' but this is not thy neighbour," The spirit of rovenge which prevailed, embittered even private life among the Jews themselves. Each had his own enomies, whom he felt free to hate and to injure, and all, alike, hated whole classes of their own nation, and the whole heathen races.

Jesus was, now, by a simple utterance, to create n new religious ora. "Ye have heard," said He, "that it was said, Thou shalt love thy, neighbour and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, and pray for them who persecute you; that ye may become sons of your Father, who is in heaven; for He makes His sun to rise on the cvil and good, and sends rain on the rightcous and unrightcous. For if ye love them that love yon, what reward have ye? (in my kingdom). Do not even the (hated) publicans the same? And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye that exceeds? Do not even the (heathen) Gentiles the same thing? Be ye, therefore, perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect."

"It was a new era for man. Heathenism had fine sentiments, but they were supported by no high morality, and no living hopes. The Old Testament often commended kindness and mercy, but it also sanctioned revenge and triumph over the fall of an enemy, and, even in the most attractive passages, it seemed as if piety were expected to make the anger of God on one's adversaries the more certain. But Jesus throws down the dividing prejudices of nationality, and teaches universal love without distinction of race, merit, or rank. A man's neighbour, henceforth, was every one who needed help, even an enemy. All men, from the slave to the highest, were sons of one Father in heaven, and should feel and act towards each other, as brethren. No human standard of virtue would suffice: no imitation of the loftiest examples among men. Moral perfection had been recognized, alike by heathen and Jews, as found only in likeness to the divine, and that Jesus proclaims as, henceforth, the one ideal for all humanity. With a sublime entlusiasm and brotherly love for the race. He rises above His age, and announces a common Father of all mankind, and one grand spiritual ideal in resemblance to Him.

With this grand truth of Christianity the relation of man to His maker was entirely changed. The love of a child to a father took the place of fear, as a motive to His service. A new spiritual king-

486 aught

to his show

t they

shalt

nmed,

should

sen,

r. flet

ici risc

bour,"

ate life

iom he

sses of

ous ora.

ove thy

ve your become

orise on

(in my

nd if ve

even the

as your

ents, but es, The t it also nd, oven

expected in. But i teaches

A man's even an

s of one

other, as itation of

en recog-

ss to the al for all the race, all mann to His

ther took

ual king-

Som of filial love and obedience was called juto being, with filial yearnings after Him, and childlike devotion to His will, a kingdom in which the humble, the meek, and the merciful found their heaven, and in which all who hungered and thirsted after righteousness felt that they could be satisfied. The pure in heart were, as such, its citizens; the souls who love the things of peace were called its children, and those who here presecution and sorrow for the sake of righteousness were to inherit it.

To be "perfect as the great Father in heaven is perfect," is to do God's will on earth as the angels do it above, and; hence, the new kingdom is thus spoken of elsewhere. It was to be wholly spiritual, in contrast to the political dreams of the Pharisees. They had transformed the predictions of the prophets to a political programme, which should be realized by war against Rome, and zealous agitation against the Sadducean aristocracy. They thought of another Maccabæan war, to be followed by a revelation of the Messiah from heaven. The kingdom of Jesus, on the contrary, was not to rise like a State, so that men could say it was here, or there, because it was already in their midst. It could not be otherwise. He had proclaimed that God was the great Father, and, as such, the loving, fillial desire that they might be His children thrust uside the cold thought of reward, which had hitherto ruled. He proclaimed that God loved them, not in return for their services, but from the love and tenderness of a Father's heart, which sent forth His sun over good and bad alike, and rejoiced more over a sinner's repentance than over the weary exactness in Rabbinical rules of fifty who thought themselves righteous. The fundamental principle of the Judaism of the day was undermined by the new doctrine. What need was there longer for offerings, for Temple ritual, for washings or fastings, or scrupulous tithings, when the great Father sought only the heart of His penitent child? The hope of the Rabbis that they could hold God to the fulfilment of what they thought His promises, if only the Mosaic ideal of the theorney, in their sense, was restored, fell to the ground. The isolation of the Jews, and their glory as the chosen people of God, were things of the past. One part of the theorracy after the other was doomed to fall before this grand proclamation, for its foundations were sapped. The Fatherhood of God, which now falls like an empty sound on the car of the multitude, was, at its utterance; the c sation of a new world.

Jesus had, now, set forth the characteristics of citizenship in His new kingdom, and the new law; He passed, next, to the new life. A warning was needed to guard His followers, in their religious duties, from the abuses of the Rabbinical party.

Almsgiving had been exalted by the Scribes to an act in itself meritorious before God. The words "alms," and "righteousness," were, indeed, used interchangeably. "For one farthing given to the poor," said the Rabbis, "a man will receive heaven." The words, "I shall behold Thy face in righteousness," were rendered in the gloss "because of alms." ""This money," said others, "goes for alms, that my sons may live, and that I may obtain the world to come."...."A man's table now explates by alms, as the altar, heretofore, did by sacrifice." . "He who gives alms will be kept from all evil.". In an age when the religious spirit was dead, outward acts of religion were ostentatiously practised, at once to earn a reward from God, and to secure honour for holiness from men. Religion was acted for gain; either present or future: Against such hopocrisy Jesus warns His followers. "Take heed that ye do not your righteous ness before men, to be seen by them, otherwise you have no reward with your Father who is in heaven." They were to draw no attention to their charity, by having it proclaimed in the synagogue, or by ostentatiously giving it in the streets, to earn praise of men, but were to hide it as if they would not even let their left hand know what their right hand was doing. Sincerity only, gave charity value. The amount was not essential: the spirit was all. Insincerity had no. reward but the empty honour from men, got by deceit; sincerity was rewarded by their Father in Heaven, who saw the secret deed. Even prayer had become a formal mechanical act, prescribed by exact rules. The hours, the matter, the manner, were all laid down. A rigid Pharisee prayed many times a day, and too many took care to have the hours of prayer overtake them, decked in their broad phylacteries, at the street corners, that they might publicly show their. devoutness,-or went to the synagogue that the congregation might see it. Nor were they content with short prayers, but lengthened their devotions as if to make a merit of their duration. Instead of this, the members of the new kingdom were to retire to strict secrecy when they prayed, and address their Father who sees in secret, and would reward them hereafter, in the future world, for their sincerity. Nor were they to use the foolish repetitions in yogue with the heathen, who thought they would be heard for their much speaking. The great Father knows what we need before we ask. Him, and requires no lengthened petitions. Prayer in the congregation is not forbidden, for Jesus Himself frequented the synagogue, and joined in public, devotions, But private prayer must be private, to guard against human weakness corrupting it into worthless parade. The simplest, shortest prayer, unheard by human ear, is accepted of God, if it rise from the heart: if the heart be wanting, all prayer is mere former mail statistic for and divised with a findered by a street to alter set assel

It is always much eaiser, however, to follow a pattern than a precept, and, hence, Jesus proceeded to set before them a model prayer. "After this manner, therefore, pray ye, Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so also on earth. Give us this day our daily bread." And forgive us our debts (to Thee), as we, also, have forgiven our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from the cyll one."

ALL N. CO. I. MEDRICL

1158 J. 13 13 15 8

. 1

3/13 Hea our f TIL. pray done mode and tion c The l is off is in ] with. by he stand ness t for he clause filled : no ex so rich rent in alonei childli known Fast Saviou -that others. on whi their h nor trir themse the dea tion, til the tim stage. " Becau but are thus tal before g that his rent to said He, disfigure I say un fastest,

appear

488

THEED TO MELLING

THE LIFE OF CHRIST. Reading the state and the second and had bele

shi at brailings wave He added that our being forgiven our trespasses by God depended on our forgiving men theirs against us. Co and a d in the goes for world to the altar,

kept from ward acts

a reward

Religion hopocrisy

righteous ward with tention to

by osten-

t were to what their lue The ty had no

cerity was

eed. to light scribed by laid down.

took care their broad

show their

tion might lengthened

Instead of rict secrecy secret, and

r sincerity.

e with the a speaking.

m, and re-

is not for-

joined in to guard

rade. The

ted of God,

ver is mere

alt. at all

n'a precept, er. After

in heaven,

e done, as

read. And

bur debtors.

evil one."

1 11 11 11 JULY

It was the custom of every Rabbi to teach his disciples a form of prayer, and in "The Lord's Prayer," Jesus, as John already had done, followed the example. But what a difference between His model and that of other teachers! He had created a new heaven. and a new earth, for the soul, and in this prayer the mighty revelation of the Fatherhood of God shines, like a sun, over all humanity. The highest conceivable ideal of perfection and felicity for the race, is offered in the will of the Eternal Father being done on earth as it. is in heaven. Of Childlike trust and dependence ask, and are contented with, daily bounty from that Father's hand. His mercy is pleaded by hearts that already have learned to show it to others. The spirit stands before Him clothed in humility, and full of love and tenderness towards its fellows." Conscious weakness stretches out its hand for heavenly help, distrusting itself, but strong in a Higher. Each clause, almost each word, is full of the deepest significance. Each is filled with divine light. After eighteen centuries, Christendom knows no expression of thoughts and feelings so full in so small a compass. so rich, so majestic in praise and petition. Hallowed phrases, current in His day, may be quoted as parallels of single parts, but Ho alone united them to words of His own with a breadth and solidity, a childlike simplicity and wisdom, a strength and lowliness wholly unknown in Jewish literature. 13 pute that to but of anot

Fasting had become one of the prominent religious usages of our Saviour's day. Though only one fast had been appointed by Moses -that of the Day of Atonement-the Pharisees had added numerous others, especially on the two days of the week. Monday and Thursday, on which synagogue worship was held. When fasting, they strewed their heads with ashes, and neither washed nor anointed themselves nor trimmed their beards, but put on wretched clothing, and showed themselves in all the outward signs of mourning and sadness used for the dead. Insincerity made capital of feigned humiliation and contrition, till even the Roman theatre noticed it. In one of the plays of the time, a camel, covered with a mourning cloth, was led on the stage. "Why is the camel in mourning?" asked one of the players. "Because the Jews are keeping the Sabbath year, and grow nothing, but are living on thistles. The camel is mourning because its food is thus taken from it." Rabbis were forbidden to anoint themselves before going out, and it was recorded of a specially famous doctor, that his face was always black with fasting. All pretence was abhorrent to the soul of Jesus, especially in religion. ""When ye fast," said He." be not as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance; for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fact. Verily I say unto you. They have their reward. But do thou, when thou fastest, anoint thine head and wash thy face; that thou mayest not appear unto men to fast, but to thy Father who is in secret, and thy Tather, who sees in secret, will reward thee." To seek effect, applause, credit, or gain, by a show of godliness, must be shunned by members of the New Kingdom. It would be better to let men think evfl of them, than to be tempted to use religion for ulterior ends. True pain and true sorrow hide from the eye of strangers; they withdraw to the secrecy of the breast.

ow no ca cit

Fa life

uns

of 44 the con wer

ia il lifefana ritu to p coul ing (

gent

illus not,

For after

dowr

For the chari may and f is a the t

the b

yours to the more teach

above Uhen, Essay

your Why

broth ness, s first c to cas

He had already spoken of the need of carc in the right use of the blessings of life, but He knew our proneness to forget, and returns to the subject once more. "Heap not up for yourselves," said He, "treasures on carth, where moth and rust consume, and where thieves break through and steal. But treasure up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust consumes, and where thieves do not break through nor steal. For, if your treasure is on carth, your heart must needs be careless of heaven. But if it be in heaven, your hearts will be there also. To have it there, you must have the inner light in your souls,—your mind and heart—by which your perceive and cherish the truth—unclouded. If they be darkened, it will turn your heart away from the right and divine. The body without the eye is in darkness; for light enters only by the eye, is from a lamp. When your cye is sound, your body is full of light; when it is darkened, all within is night. So is it with the eye of the soul."

it is darkened, all within is night. So is it with the eye of the soul." "Do not fancy," He continued, "that you can join the striving for riches and for the kingdom of God. "They are absolutely opposed. No man can serve two masters whose interests are opposite." Either he will hate the one and love the other, or he will hold to the one and despise the other. You cannot worship the God of heaven, and Mammon, the god of riches. To serve God, and yet make money your idol, is impossible! They are opposites!" "An undivided heart, which worships God alone, and trusts Him

An undivided heart, which worships God alone, and trusts Him as it thould, is raised above anxiety for earthly wants. Therefore, I say into you. Be not anxious for your life, what ye shall eat, nor yot for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than the food, and the body than the raiment? Behold the birds of the air, they sow not, neither reap, nor gather into barns, and yet your Heavenly Father feeds them. Are ye not much better than they? Which of you, by anxious thought; can add one cubit to the length of his life? And about raiment why are ye anxious? Consider the lilies of the field, how fair and beautiful they grow. They toil not, neither do they spin, and yet Solomon, in his royal robes, was not arrayed like one of these. And if God so clothe the grass of the field, which to day is, and to morrow is cast into an oven, will He not much more clothe you. O ye of little faith? He not, therefore, unxious; saying, What shall we eat, or what shall we drink, or what shall we put on? For the Gentlies seek after all these things. But your Heavenly Father knows that ye have need of them. Seek, first, His kingdom and righteousness, and they shall all be added to you. Be not, therefore, anxious for the morrow. The morrow will have its own carge. Each day's evil is sufficient for the day." He enjoins not idle indifference and casiness of temper, but the freedom from care of a soul which firmly trusts in the Providence of God. The citizens of the New Kingdom might well confide in their Heavenly Father, and amidst all the trials and straits even of such a martyr life as had been predicted for them, might and should retain cahn and unshaken confidence in the sustaining and guiding wisdom and love of God. As His children, they had an express right to look for His autsufficient care.

shunned

let men

ior chas.

hey with

se of the returns to

said He

nd where

vourselve

and where

ure is on

f it be in you must -by which darkened

The bod

he eye. a ight; whe

the soul

triving for

y opposed, te. Either he one and caven, and

ake mone

trusts Him

Therefore, all eat, not more than birds of the nd yet your than they? the length

consider the ey toil not,

bes, was not of the field

le not much

re, anxious;

hat shall we

But your ek, first, His to you. Bo vill have ha No vice was more rank among the Jews, through the influence of their priestly and Rabbinical leaders, than narrow bigotry, which condemned all opinions varying in the least from their own. They were trained to take it for granted that their whole religious system, is its minutest, forms and rules—their religious thought, faith, and life—had been revealed by God from heaven. They were a nation of fanatics, ready to fight to the death for any one of the ten, thousand ritual injunctions of their religious teachers. A discourse designed to proclaim the advent, character, and laws of the new theocracy, could not close without touching on the duties of social life, and laying down principles for guidance. He had enjoined the broad law of gentle love, as the rule for intercourse with men at large. He now illustrates it in additional applications.

"Judge not," said He, "that ye be not judged (by God); condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned; forgive, and ye shall be forgiven. For with what judgment ye judge (men) ye shall be judged (hereafter). Give, and it will be given to you; good measure, pressed down, shaken together, running over, will they give into your hosom For with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to yon. Be charitable respecting the errors and shortcomings of others, that you nay not have your own sins brought against you at the great day, and find there the condemnation you have yourself, shown here. It is a fearful thing for you, who are to teach men, to fall away from the truth, for how, then, will you instruct sinful men aright? If the blind attempt to lead the blind both fall into a ditch, and if you yourselves be wrong you cannot lead others, who know nothing of it to the salvation of the New Kingdom. You will both go more and more hopelessly wrong, till, at last, you sink into Gehenna. Those you teach cannot be wiser than you, their teachers, for a disciple is not above his master, but comes, at best, in the end, to be like him. If, then, you would not be blind leaders of the blind, take care, before you essay to judge and better the religious state of others, to examine your own spiritual condition, and reform whatever is wrong in it. Why should you mark the atom of straw or dust that is in your brother's eye-his petty fault-if you do not, in your self-righteousness, see the beam that is in your own eye? Self-blinded hypocrite! lirst cast the beam out of your own cyc, and then you will see clearly to cast the mole out of your brother's eye. "otherbille runninged alans

love

with

supr

mor

ourc

mak

all ou

ours.

religi

allth

secon

light

stand

warni

the na

self-de

find it.

to dest

false te

will'co

wolves

fruits

figs off

corrupt

ure of

out of t

of the l

fruit; n

to do w not fort their fr

not all'

of the Father,

Lord di

and by

power,

ing thro

'I never

warning

things w in the sc

or the po

scendent

That o

Noi Noi

He

You will meet with men," He continued, who, when the divine truth is offered them, will only profane it-men utterly ungodly and hardened, who wilfully reject the counsel of God, with blasphemy, mocking; and slandering. Do not put it in their power to dishonour it. To do so is like casting a holy thing to the street dogs, or throwing. pearls before wild swine, who would only trample them as worthless under their feet, and turn against yourselves and rend you.""" You will need help from God in your great task; for your own spiritual welfare, and for success in your work. Ask, therefore, and it will be given you; seek, and ye will find; knock, and it will be opened to you: "For every one that asks receives; and he that seeks finds; and to him that knocks it shall be opened. If your son ask bread, do you mock him by giving him a stone? or, if he ask a fish, do you mock him by giving him a serpent? or, if he ask an egg, will you give him a scorpion? You need, then, have no fear of refusal of w spiritual help from your Heavenly Father, for if you who are sinful, though members of the New Kingdom, would not think of refusing to supply the wants of your children, far less will your Father above refuse you. His spiritual children, what you need." but installing the Jesus had now come to the close of His exposition of the nature and duties of His kingdom, and ended His statement of them by a brief recapitulation and summary of all He had said of the latter, in their relation to men at large. All things, therefore, whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye also so to them, for this is the law and the prophets." The Law had said, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself," but it had meant by neighbour a Jew or a proselyte, and had commanded the extirpation of the Canaanites, and sanctioned merciless war with the heathen around. These grand words were, therefore, a rule for the nation towards its own members. but no great law for mankind. But Jesus ignores, this narrowness, and proclaims all men brethren, as common children of one Father in Heaven. This golden rule had been proclaimed more or less fully before. It is found in Socrates and Monander, and even in the Chinese classics. Philo quotes, as an old Jewish saying, "Do not to others what you would be unwilling to suffer;" and the book of Tobit enjoins. "Do that to no man which thou hatest." In the generation before Jesus it had been repeated by Hillel to a heathen, who mockingly asked him if he could teach him the whole Law while he stood on one foot. "What you would not like done to yourself, do not to thy neighbour," replied the Rabbi-"this is the whole Law: all the rest is a commentary on it-go learn this." But, as Hillel gave it, this noble answer was only mislcading. It was striking to find a Rabbi with such enlightened insight into the essence of the Law as to see that all its ordinances and rites had a moral end, but the Law was much more than a mere code of morals between man and man. Its fitting summary is much rather that central requirement repeated 49.

e divine odly and sphemy, anour it. " throwing worthless and mobilis OUT OWN fore, and be opened eks finds; bread, do sh, do you will you refusal of are sinful, f refusing ther above the nature them by A e latter, in whatsoever , for this is alt love thy a Jew or a aanites, and . hese grand n members, narrowness, one Father or less fully even in the "Do not to ook of Tobit e generation who mockhile he stood elf, do not to Law: all the illel gave it, ng to find a the Law as but the Law an and man. ent repeated "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart; and with all thy soul and with all thy might." "Morality, apart from its religious basis and supreme enforcement, degrades the Law to a level with the common morality of the world at large. It was reserved for Jesus to announce our duty to man in its subordination to our higher relation to God; to make it only part of that fillal love which reflects the tenderness on all our brethrep which it feels supremely towards their Father and ours, in Heaven. With Him, love of universal humanity has its deep religious ground in the love of God whom we are to resemble. - towards all the race, as His children. The love of man, He tells us, is the second great commandment; not the first; it is the moon shining by light borrowed from that Sun. The highest of the Rabbis (cannot stand in the presence of the Son of Marylett control buildent his atter "He had reached His peroration. "It remained only to add solemn warnings, and these He now gave. ""Enter in," said He, " through the narrow gate, for narrow is the gate and straitened is the way of self-denial and struggle that leads to life, and few there are that find it. But wide is the gate and broad is the way of sin that leads to destruction, and those who enter through it are many. Beware of false teachers, who would turn you aside from the safe road. They will come to you affecting to be my followers, but they will be only wolves in sheep's clothing. You will know them fully by their fruits that is, by their lives. Do men gather grapes off thorns, or figs off thistles? So, every good tree brings forth good fruit; but the corrupt tree brings forth evil fruit. The good, out of the good treas. ure of the heart, bring forth that which is good; and the evil man, out of the evil, brings forth that which is evil; for out of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaks. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit; neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. Have nothing to do with them, and do not follow them, for every tree that brings not forth good fruit is cut down, and cast into the fire. So, then, by their fruits ye will know them fully. The lot of their paul partition by the "Nor is the danger of being led astray by false teachers light, for

"Nor is the danger of being led astray by false teachers light, for not all who acknowledge me as their Master will enter into the glory of the neavenly Kingdom, but those only who do the will of my Father, who is in heaven." Many will say to me in that day, 'Lord, Lord, did we not teach in Thy name confessing Thee as Jesus Messias, and by the power of Thy name cast out devils, and, by the same power, did we not do many mighty works, owning Thee, and working through Thee, in all things?" And then shall I say unto them, 'I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity." Take warning, for even some of you call me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say."

That one in the position of Jesus, an unknown Galilæan; untrained in the schools; in early manhood; with no support from the learned or the powerful, should have used such words in a discourse so transcendently lofty in its teachings, is to be explained only on the ground

WRS R

on or

His d

words

an ide

the at

says H fore G

unkno

distrac

stained ous, w God is image (

ror had

is the s in Jesus

Keim,

meet an truths w

mon to a

lar form

WING IT

.bain of

The TURY

JESUS

great fea Him whe

the news

of pilgri Jerusaler

perhaps l

the band.

up to "t

a devotio

psalms th

and even

nor are t

the Passo

nacles, ha

is such co

unsettled

Leavin

Rei Hei

He

The

that He spoke with a divine consciousness of being the Messiah, who should hereafter be the Judge of mankind. He calmly founds a kingdom in which the only rewards and punishments are those of the conscience here, and those of eternity, giter death. He bears Himself, and speaks, as a King; supersedes or perfects the laws of the existing theocracy as He thinks best; invites adherents, but warns off all except the truly godly and sincere, by holding out the most discouraging prospects through his; keeps aloof from the civil or ecclesistical authorities, and acts independently of both. Finally, as the one law of His invisible kingdom in the souls of men. He requires supreme love and devotion to Himself, and demands that this be shown by humble and continuous efforts after likeness to God, and by the imitation of His own pure and universal love to mankind. To have conceived a spiritual empire so unique in the history of religion, is to have proved His title to His highest claims.

His concluding words are in keeping with these. He had announced that He would judge the world at the great day, and now makes hearty acceptance and performance of His commands the condition of future salvation or ruin. "Every one, therefore (now, or hereafter), who hears these sayings of mine and obeys them, is like a man, who, in building a house, digged deep, and laid a foundation upon the rock. And the winter rains fell, and the torrents rose, and the storms blew, and beat upon that house, and did not shake it, because it was well built, and had been founded upon the rock. But every one who hears them, and does not obey them, is like a foolish man, who, without a foundation, built his house upon the sandy earth. And the rain descended, and the torrents rushed down, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house, and straightway it fell, and the ruin of that house was great."

No wonder that when He had finished such an address, the multitudes were astonished, at His teaching. They had been accustomed to the tame and slavish servility of the Rabbis, with their dread of varying a word from precedent and authority; their cobwebbery of endless sophistries and verbal trifling; their laborious dissertations on the infinitely little: their unconscious oversight of all that could affect the heart: their industrious trackings through the jungles of tradition and prescription; and felt that in the preaching of Jesus, they, for the first time, had something that stirred their souls, and came home to their consciences. One of the Rabbis had boasted that every verse of the Bible was capable of six hundred thousand different explanations, and there were seventy different modes of interpretation current, but the vast mass of explanations and interpretations were no better than pedantic folly, concerning itself with mere insignificant minutize which had no bearing on religion or morals. Instead of this, Jesus had spoken as a legislator, vested with greater authority then Moses. To transmit, unchanged, the traditions received from the past, was the one idea of all other teachers; but He, while reverent, which, who y founds, a hose of the bears Himaws of the at warns off ne most disvil or ccclepally, as the He ycquircs that this be God, and by ankind. To y of religion, d announced i now makes he condition or hereafter), a man, who, on upon the rose, and the rose, and the ke it, because k. But every a foolish man, sandy earth. and the winds and the ruin ess, the multin accustomed their dread of obwebbery of issertations on at could affect es of tradition s, they, for the came home to at every verse erent explanarpretation curtions were no e insignificant s. Instead of ater authority received from while reverent, was not atraid to criticize, to reject, and to supplement. " To venture on originality, and independence was something hitherto unknowning

The life of Josus, in all its aspects, is the great losson of humanity: His death is its hope. But there lies a wondrous treasure in His words. What but a pure and sinless soul could have conceived such an idea of God as the Father of mankind, drawing us to Himself by the attraction of holy and exhaustless love? "It could only rise, says Hausrath," in a spirit that stood pure, guiltless, and sinless before God a spirit in which all human unrest and disturbance were unknown, on which there lay no sense of the littleness of life, no distracting feeling of disappointed ambition. Sinful man with a stained or even uneasy conscience, will always think of God as jealous, wrathful, and about to avenge Himself." The revelation that God is the Father of men could rise only in a mind in which the image of God mirrored itself in calm completeness, because the mirror had no specks to mar it. The revelation of God as the Father is the strongest proof of the absolute perfection of the human nature sentition for a contract port of the property of the senties of th in Jesus." "He has left us not only a life, but a rich world of thoughts," says Keim, "in which all the best inspirations and longings of mankind meet and dre reflected. It is the expression of the purest and directest truths which rise in the depths of the soul, and they are made common to all mankind by being uttered in the simplest and most popular form." Show all is the soul of the soul and they are made comtion form." Show all is the soul of the soul of the simplest and most popular form." Show all is the soul of the soul of the simplest and most popution form." Show all is the soul of the soul but of the soul of th great feasts had returned. It was meet that Judea, which had rejected Him when He first preached in it, should be once more visited, and the news of the Kingdom once more sent abroad among the throngs of pilgrims from every part of the world, attracted at such times to Jerusalem.

OPEN CONFLICT.

•

Leaving the north, therefore, for a time, He again journeyed south; perhaps by short stages, preaching as He went; perhaps with one of the bands of pilgrims which gathered from each neighbourhood to go up to "the House of the Lord." No voice would join with so rapt a devotion in the joyful solemnities of such a journey,—in the psalms that enlivened the way,—or the formal devotions of morning and evening. But what feast it was He thus honoured is not told, nor are there means for deciding. That of Purim, a month before the Passover, the Passover itself, Pentecost, and the Feast of Tabernacles, have each found favour on plausible grounds, but where there is such contrariety of opinion, the safest course is to leave the matter unsettled.

these

the '.

direc

show

tion,

winte

and e eveni

ascrit

Popu

for th

ebbin

drago

woke.

that a

gave t

report

appear

hurt tl

townst

water

demon

powers

multitu

atrophy

ment a round'

steps le steps of rheuma

hope t

himself

and, he

crowd'

pitying

in Jeri

authori

plight

pathy

notions

sleeping

have fo

hearty

The d

Jesus

Amo

Som

of the visit we know only one incident, but it was the turningpoint in the life of our Lord. may man and to without , Valuating tro to Jerusalem in those days was a contrast in its water supply, as in much else, to the fallen glory of its present condition. Several natural springs seemed to have flowed in the city or near it, in ancient times. but they have long been choked up, with the exception of the single "Fountain of the Virgin," still found in the Kedron valley. There is now, besides, only a single well-that of Joab, at the junction of the Kedron and Hinnom valleys, near-Siloam, south-east from the town. If It was doubtless used in Christ's day, and it is still one of the principal sources of summer supply for Jerusalem, though, like everything else, under the withering spell of Turkish rule, it is in such disrepair that its water, drawn from a depth of 125 feet, is tainted with sewage. The ancient supply, however, seems to have been mainly obtained by collecting the rain water in pools and cisterns, and by aqueducts which drained distant hills, and brought abundance into the various public pools and reservoirs of the city and Temple, the space beneath which was honeycombed by immense rock-hewn cisterns. Many houses, also, had cisterns, hewn in the rock, in the shape of an inverted funnel, to collect the rain, but it was from the numerous "pools" that the public supply was mainly derived. Eight still remain, in greater or less extreme decay, and there appear to have been

One of the most famous of these, in Christ's day, was known as the Pool of Bethesda, which recent explorations appear to have rediscovered at the north-west corner of the Temple enclosure. If the identification he valid, the pool was a great reservoir, 165 fect in length hewn in the limestone rock to a breadth of 48 feet, and divided in halves by a pier of masonry 5 feet thick, built across it. Water still enters it from the north-west corner, and is probably an abundant spring, though now so mixed with drainage as to be unfit for drinking. Eusebius speaks of the Bethesda of his day as "twin pools, one of which is filled by the rains of the year, but the other has water tinged in an extraordinary way with red." This effect was likely produced by the rapid influx of water through underground channels, after heavy rains. It is said by St. John to have been close to the "Sheep Gate"—the entrance, doubtless, of the numerous flocks for the Temple market.

Bathing in mineral waters has, in all ages, been regarded as one of the most potent aids to recovery from various diseases, and in the East, where water is everything, this belief has always prevailed. The Pool of Bethesda, from whatever cause, was in especial favour for its curative powers, which were supposed to be most effective when the waters were "troubled," either by the discoloration after heavy rains, or by periodical flowing after intermission, as is, still the case with the Fountain of the Virgin, near Siloam, Natural explanations of ordinary phenomena were unknown in e turning

DED STORAD oply, as in ralmatural ent times. the single y. There unction of from the one of the like everyn such disinted with en mainly ns, and by idance into remple, the k-hewn cisin the shape the numer-Eight still to have been

s known as to have rcure. If the 165 fect in and divided it. Water an abundant it for dinktwin pools, it other has s effect was inderground ve been close herous flocks led as one of s, and in the ys prevailed. pecial favour ost effective oration after as is still the unknown in these simple times, for there was no such thing as science. Among the Jews, as among other races, everything was attributed to the direct action of supernatural beings. In the Book of Jubilees, which shows the popular ideas of Christ's day, there are angels of adoration, of fire, whid, clouds, hail, hoar frost, valleys, thunder, lightning, winter, spring, summer, and autumn, and of "all things in the heavens and earth, and in all valleys; of darkness, of light, of dawn, and of evening." The healing powers of the Bethesda waters were, hence, ascribed to periodical visits of an angel, who "troubled the water." Popular fancy had, indeed, created a complicated legend to account for the wonder. At least as far back as the days of Nehemiah, the ebbing and flowing of some springs had been ascribed to a great dragon which lived at the source, and drank up the waters when it woke, leaving them to flow only while it was asleep. It was even said that a good angel dwelt beside healing springs, and each morning gave them their virtue afresh, and a Rabbi had gone so far as to report that, as he sat by a fountain, the good angel who dwelt in it appeared to him, and said that a demon was trying to get into it, to hurt those who frequented it." He was, therefore, to go and tell the townsfolks to come with hammers, or iron rods or bars, and beat the water till it grew red with thick drops of blood-the sign that the demon was conquered and slain. White a Just it stream in the land when

Some such fanciful notions, based, very probably, on real curative powers in the water at certain seasons, attracted daily to Bethesda a multitude of unfortunates who hoped to be healed of blindness, atrophy, lameness, and other infirmities, by bathing at the right moment a sufficient number of times. Charity had built five porches round the pool, to afford the crowd a shelter, and these, and the great steps leading down to the waters, were constantly thronged, like the steps of a sacred bathing place to-day, on the Ganges.

Among the sufferers was one who had been helplessly crippled by rheumatism or paralysis for thirty-eight years, but still clung to the hope that he would, one day, be healed. He had, apparently, had himself brought from a distant part, for he had no friends on the spot, and, hence, had the pain of many times seeing others, less helpless, crowd into the waters, while he lay on his mat for want of some pitying aid.

Jesus had every motive, at this time, to avoid attracting attention in Jerusalem, for it might rouse the open hostility of the Church authorities, which already only waited an opportunity. The pitiful plight of the sufferer, however, awoke His compassion, and in sympathy for his story, though without committing Himself to his notions, he healed him by a word, telling him to "rise, take up his sleeping mat, and walk."

The common feelings of humanity, one might have thought, would have followed an act so tender and beautiful, with admiration and hearty approval. But there is no crime that may not be dene by funatieism allied to religious opinions; no deadness to true religion too profound for the championship of fancied orthodoxy. Pity, charity, recognition of worth, or nobleness of act or word, give place to remorseless hatred and bloodthirsty vengeance where there is religious hatrod a Inquisitors who sent thousands to the stake for an abstract proposition; or immured them in dungeons; and feasted on their torture for incapacity to repeat some wretched Shibboleth. have been amiable and gentle in all other relations. The hierarchical party in Jerusalem comprised men of all dispositions, and of every whate of sincerity, and its opposite. But it had been touched in its tenderest susceptibilities by the preaching of the Baptist; for it had been called to account, and had had its shortcomings held, up before the nation. The instinct of self-preservation, and the conservatism of a priestly and legal order, were instantly roused, and assailed the Reformer with the cry that the Law and the Temple were in danger. The Baptist had already fallen; most likely by their help; but a successor more to be dreaded, had risen in Jesus. They had watched His course in Galilee with anxiety, which had already shown itself during His first short visit to Jerusalem at the Passover before, and in His subsequent circuits through Judea. Spies, sent from Jerusalem, dogged His steps and noted His words and acts, to report them duly to the ecclesiastical authorities, who had seen more clearly, day by day, that a mortal struggle was inevitable between the old Theocracy and the Innovator. Everything was in their favour. They were in power, and could at any moment bring Him before their own courts on trial, even for life. But they dreaded overt hostility, and for a time preferred to undermine Him secretly, by mooting suspicions among the people of His being a heretic, or affecting to think Him a mere crazed enthusiast. His most innocent sayings were perverted to evil; His purest aims, purposely misconstrued of Only the favour of the people, and His own moderation, prudence, and wisdom, warded off open violence. I to that an intersel add TION DIL. He had now, however, given a pretext for more decided action than they had yet taken. No feature of the Jewish system was so marked as their extraordinary strictness in the outward observance of the Sabbath, as a day of entire rest. The Scribes had elaborated from the command of Moses, a vast array of prohibitions and injunctions. covering the whole of social, individual, and public life, and carried it to the extreme of ridiculous caricature. Lengthened rules were prescribed as to the kinds of knots which might legally be tied on Sabbath. The camel driver's knot and the sailor's were unlawful, and it was equally illegal to tic or to loose them. A knot which could be untied with one hand might be undone. A shoe or sandal, a woman's cup, a wine or oil-skin; or a flesh-pot might be tred. A pitcher at a spring might be tied to the body-sash, but not with a

It was forbidden to write two letters, either with the right hand or cord) to obtain the past term willing, and an all a spat the le fetent ruddl write twork write: fluid in whi hand elbow. other 1 and ( one on they: co through in the t ainong The placento dried flg water, a be put i To kin tion of rules. broken t more lib law void mightiliv might be where he The h sunset of mark of in a valle The beg trumpet decline o work wh done in th and all 1 taken off, of the Si with a ne bath oper see that the

2012 21312 20

448

the left, whether of the same size or of different sizes of with different inks, or in different languages, or with any pigment; with ruddle, gum, vitriol, or anything that can make marks; or even to write two letters, one on each side of a corner of two walls, or on two leaves of a writing tablet, if they could be read together, or to write them on the body. But they might be written on any dark fluid, on the sap of a fruit-tree, on road-dust, on sand, or on anything in which the writing did not remain. If they were written with that hand turned upside down, or with the foot, or the mouth or the elbow, or if one letter were added to another previously made, or other letters traced over, or if a person designed to write the letter and only wrote two , or if he wrote one letter on the ground and one on the wall, or on two walls, or on two pages of a book, so that they could not be read together, it was not illegal. If a person, through forgetfulness, wrote two characters at different times, one in the morning, the other, perhaps towards evening, it was a question among the Rabbis whether he had or had not broken the Sabbath. on The quantity of food that might be carried on Sabbath from one place to another was duly settled. It must be less in bulk than a dried fig: if of honey; only as much as would anoint a wound; if water, as much as would make eye salve; if paper, as much as would be put in a phylactery; if ink, as much as would form two letters.

To kindle or extinguish a fire on the Sabbath was a great desceration of the day, nor was even sickness allowed to violate Rabbinical rules. It was forbidden to give an emetic on Sabbath—to set a broken bone, or put back a dislocated joint, though some Rabbis, more liberal, held that whatever endangered life made the Sabbath law void, "for the commands were given to Israel only that they might live by them." One who was buried under rulns on Sabbath, might be dug for and taken out, if alive, but, if dead, he was to be left where he was, till the Sabbath was over.

The holy day begin with sunset on Friday, and ended with the sunset of Saturday, but as the disappearance of the sun was the only mark of the time, its commencement was different on a hill top and in a valley. If it were cloudy, the hens going to roost was the signal. The beginning and close of the Sabbath were announced by a trumpet from the Temple; and in the different towns. From the decline of the sun on Friday, to its setting, was Sabbath-eve, and no work which would continue into the hours of Sabbath, could be done in this interval. All food must be prepared, all vessels washed. and all lights kindled, before sunset. The money gridle must be taken off, and all tools laid aside. " "On Friday, before the beginning of the Sabbath," said one law, " no one must go out of his house. with a needle or a pen, lest he forget to lay them aside before the Sabbath opens. In Every one must also search his pockets at that time, to see that there is nothing left in them with which it is forbidden to go out on the Sabbath." The refinements of Rabbinical casuistry were,

oo or sandal,

be tied. i A

at not with a

ight hand or

1117 21.110 11

when

nam

after

It It

"sin

had lafter

fact

that

Rabh

forth

and a

later.

In Jes

the at

judge

answe

ious f it wa

Sabba

be fet

The a

desect

equal

ment.

ings,

with t

in the

their e

Jesus

in a m

charge

they r

was ii

cnly d

with 1

produ

ever d

does.

man,

repeat

as not

105 🖬 🕹

In you

1 quick

He

indeed, endless. To wear one kind of sandals was carrying a burden, while to wear another kind was not. One might carry a burden on his shoulder, but it must not be slung between two. It was unlawful to go out with wooden sandals or shoes which had nails in the soles, or with a shoe and a slipper, unless one foot were hurt. It was unlawful for any one to carry a loaf on the public street, but if two carried it, it was not unlawful. The Sabbath was believed to prevail in all its strictness, from eternity, throughout the universe. All the Rabbinical precepts respecting it had been revealed to Jacob from the originals on the tablets of heaven. Even in hell the lost had rest from their torments on its sacred hours, and the waters of Bethesda might be troubled on other days, but were still and unmoved on this.

In an insincere age such excessive strictness led to constant evasions by Pharisees and Sadducees alike. To escape the restrictions which limited a journey on Sabbath to 2,000 cubits from a town or city, they carried food on Friday evening to a spot that distance beyoud the walls, and assumed, by a fiction, that this made that spot also their dwelling. They could thus on the Sabbath walk the full distance to it, and an equal distance beyond it, this journey being only the legal distance from the fictitious place of residence! In To make it lawful to eat together on the Sabbath the Rabbis put chains across the two ends of a street, in which the members of a special fraternity lived, and called it a single dwelling, while to excuse their varrying the materials of their Sabbath repast to the common hall, they each laid some food in it on Friday evening, to create the fiction of its being part of the common dwelling. The priestly Sadducees, on the other hand, made no scruple to have even the beasts destined for their kitchen driven to their shambles on the Sabbath, on the pretext that their common meals were only a continuation of the Temple service, by which the rest of the Sabbath was not legally broken federates and

Nor were such equivocations the only liberties taken with the sacred day, for, however uncompromising with others, the Pharisees were disposed to violate the Sabbath laws when occasion demanded. They had one maxim, timidly applied it is true, but still theirs: "The Sabbath is for you, but you are not for the Sabbath;" and another, still bolder, "Make a common day of your Sabbath rather than go to your neighbour for help."

The pricess and Rabbis, thus secretly indulgent to themselves, but austerely strict before the world, found an opportunity in the cure at Bethesda for parading their hollow puritanism, and at the same time raising a charge against Jesus, for the man had been healed on the Sabbath, and had been told to carry his sleeping-mat with him to his home. This was enough. Met in the street, carrying his pallet, by one of these purists, he had been reprimanded for doing so as contrary to the Law, and had shielded himself by the command of Him who had mirace outly oured him. It was not till some time after, when Jesus had come upon him in the Temple, that he knew the name of his benefactor, for Jesus had hurried away from the pool, after curing him, to avoid exciting the multitude round, a bunden,

burden on

ils in the

to prevail

All the

b from the

t had rest Bethesda moved on

101.19181 m

estrictions

a town or listance bee that spot

being only To make it

ains across.

l fraternity

ir carrying

, they each ction of its

cees, on the

ed for their pretext, that ple service, n with the

e Pharisees

demanded.

still thens: obath; l'and bath rather

nselves, but the cure at a same time

iled on the

him to his

is pallet, by g so as conind of Him

time after,

27. 18 6 11 11

It seems from the caution given him at this second meeting to "sin no more, lest something worse should befall him," as if the man had brought his infirmity on himself by misconduct. Nor did his after conduct do him much credit. He had no sooner discovered the fact than he went to the officials and told who had healed him. From that moment the doom of Jesus was fixed. Pharisee and Sadducee, Rabbi and priest, forgetting their mutual hatreds, caballed, henceforth, to fasten such accusations upon Him as would secure His death, and never faitered in their resolve till they carried it out, two years later, on Calvary.

1070 Jesus seems forthwith to have been for the first time cited before. the authorities, on the formal charge of Sabbath-breaking; but His judges were little prepared for the tone of His defence. Left to answer for Himself. He threw the assembly into a paroxysm of religious fury by claiming to work at all times for the good of men, since it was only what God; His Father, had done, notwithstanding the Sabbath Law, from the beginning As His Son, He was as little to be fettered by that Law or subject to it, and was Lord of the Sabbath. The assembly saw what this implied. He had added to His Sabbath desecration the higher crime of blasphemously "making Himself equal with God, by calling Him specially His Father." The excitement must have been great, for Orientals give free vent to their feelings, under any circumstances. Some years after, the same tribunal, with the crowd of spectators, gnashed their teeth at the martyr Stephen in their infuriated bigotry, and cried out with loud voices, and stopped their ears at his words. In all probability a similar storm rose around Jesus now. But He remained perfectly calm, and when silence was in a measure restored, proceeded with His defence against this second charge. and st

He did not for a moment deny that they were right in the meaning they put on His words, but stated more fully why He used them. It was impossible for Him to act independently of His Father; He could enly do so if He were not His Son. There was absolute openess in the spirit and aim of the works of both, as in those of a son who looks with reverence at the acts of a father, and has no thought but to reproduce them. "My Father, God, in His love for me, the Son, lays ever open before me, in direct self-disclosure, all that He Himself, does, that I may do the same. You marvel at my healing the lame man, but the Father will show me greater works than this, that I may repeat them here on earth, and that you may wonder, not in curiosity as now, but in shame at your unbelief."

In your Law it is the special prerogative of the Father to awaken and up quicken the dead, but it is mine also, for I, the Son, quicken whom I

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

fore;

will

to wi

dictor

for I

the g hearts

He he

repres

believ

you w

is it p ing th

to the praise

with C

accuse

self. ir believe

But if

how w

Luew

defeat.

moned

enjoye

forth,

even in

of the Free

Galilee

fierce r

more fi

is bevo

priests

step.

had lef

after th

new ch

it was

mile_t

Passov

first ea

A fre

This

The

fr Y

Per T

will. And as to judging men here (as to their spiritual state), it is left to me alone by my Father, that all men may honour me as Hisrepresentative, as they honour Him. He who does not honour me, the Son, does not honour the Father who sent me. If you wish to know whom I spiritually quicken, they are those who hear my word, and believe Him who sent me, for they have everlasting life even here, and are not under condemnation, but have passed from death to life. Verily, verily, I say unto you. The hour is coming, and now; is, when the (spiritually) dead will hear my voice—the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear it shall live. I thus wake them to life, because the Father has made me the divine fountain of life, as He Himself, the living God, is. He has also given me authority to judge men, because I am the Son of man.

"But marvel not at what I have said of waking and judging the, apiritually dead, for I will do yet greater works. I shall one day raise the actually dead from their graves, and will judge them at the great day, raising those that did good in this world to the resurrection of life, and those that did evil to a resurrection of judgment. Nor is, there a fear of error, for I can do nothing of myself. I judge as I hear from God, who, in His abiding communion with me, makes known His divine judgment, which, alone, I utter. Hence my judgment cannot err, because I speak only that of God.

You may say that I am bearing witness respecting myself, and that, therefore, it is of no value, but, if you think thus, there is another that bears witness to me, and ye know that His testimony is true—I mean God, Himself. You sent to John, and he bore witness to the truth. But the testimony I receive is not that of man. I only say these things that you may be saved, by taking John's testimony to heart, and being waked by it to faith in me, and a share in the salvation which, as the Messiah, I offer you. What a wondrous appearance. John was! He was a burning and shining lamp, and you wished for a time to rejoice in his light, but when you found that he called you to reper ance rather than to national glory and worldly presperity; you forsook him and became his enemics. The light he shed was not of the kind you desired.

"But I have a witness which is greater than that of John. The work which the Father has given me to bring to completion—the work of founding and raising the new kingdom of God, as His Messiah,—this, in all that it implies of outward and spiritual wonders, bears vitness that the Father has sent me. And not only does God Himself testify of me indirectly, by my work as His Messiah He does so directly, in your Scriptures. But ye have not recognized the voice of this testimony, nor realized the image of me it presents. You are spiritually deaf to the one, and blind to the other. Ye have not the three sente of God's word in your consciences, for you do not be lieve in Hie Messiah, whom He has sent, and of whom these Scriptures testify. They witness to me as the mediator of eternal life, and, there forc, every one who humbly studies them as the guide to that life, will be pointed by them to me. You search the Scriptures professing to wish to find life, and yet refuse to accept me! How self-contradictory and self-condemning!

e), it is

as His

ur me,

wish to word,

e even

i death

nd now

of the

them to

life, as

ority to ring the

one day

n at the

rrection

dge as I

, makes

iy judg-

self, and another

true-I ss to the only say.

nony to he salva-

pearance

shed for

fled you

osperity

waspot

ion-the

His Mes-vonders,

loes Gud

siah He

nized the

ts. You have not

o not be:

criptures

hd, there-

n.,

The

Noris

"I do not reproach you thus, from any feeling of wounded pride, for I care nothing for the applause of men. I do it because I know the ground of your disbelief—you have not the love of God in your hearts. If you had, you would recognize and receive His Son whom He has sent. I have come in my Father's name, as His commissioned representative—the true Messiah—and you have rejected me with unbelieving contempt, but when a false Messiah comes in his own name, you will receive him! It is no wonder you have rejected me, for how is it possible that such as you could believe, who have no higher craving than to give and accept empty earthly honours, and are indifferent to the only true honour that comes from being acknowledged and praised of God?

You trust in Moses, who, you think, has promised you favour with God, here and hereafter. Beware! there is no need that I should accuse you before my Father, for your unbelief in me. Moses, himself, in the books in which you trust, is your accuser, for if ye had believed His writings ye would have believed me, for he wrote of me. But if ye be so blinded as neither to see, nor to believe his writings, how will ye believe my words?"

The authorities had never had such a prisoner before them. They have not what to do with Him, and, in their confusion and utter defeat, could only let Him depart unharmed. They had not yet summoned courage to proceed to open violence.

This was the turning point in the life of Jesus. Till poy, He had enjoyed a measure of toleration and even of acceptance, but, henceforth, all was changed. Jerusalem was no longer safe for Him, and, even in Galilee, He was dogged by determined enmity. The shadow of the Cross darkened His whole future career.

Free from His enemies, Jesus appears to have returned at once to Galilee, in the hope, perhaps, that there, far from Jerusalem, with its fierce religious fanaticism and malevolent hypocrisy, He could breathe more freely, in the still and clear air of the hills. But religious hatred is beyond all others intense and persistent. There were Rabbis and priests there, as well as in the south, and they watched His every step.

A fresh occasion for accusation could not be long of rising. He had left Jerusalem immediately after the Passover, and on the Sabbath after the second day of the Feast—or, it may be, a Sabbath later—a new charge was brought against Him. In the short distance which it was lawful to walk on a Sabbath—less than three-quarters of a mile—the path lay through ripening fields of barley—for Nisan, the Passover month, was the ancient Abib, or month of earing, and the first early sheaf was offered on the second day of the Passover, 11 was by the Law, and by Eastern custom, free to all to pluck ears enough in a corn-field, or grapes enough from a vine, to supply hun ger, and the disciples, as every Oriental still does in the same circumstances, availed themselves of this liberty, plucking some ears of the barley, and rubbing them with their hands as they went on. The field must have been near some town, most likely Capernaum, for a number of people were about, and among others, some spies. It was no wonder both He and the disciples were hungry, for no Jew could break his fast till after the morning service at the synagogue, or take supper till after the evening service, but He had sanctioned two offences against the Sabbath laws. The plucking the ears was a kind of reaping, and the rubbing was a kind of grinding or threshing. Besides, it was required that all food should be prepared on Friday. before sunset, and the rubbing was a preparation. On any other day there would have been no cause of blame, but to break the Sabbath rather than suffer hunger for a few hours, was guilt worthy of stoning. Was it not their boast that Jews were known, over the world, by their readiness to die rather than break the holy day? Every one had stories of grand fidelity to it. The Jewish sailor had refused, even when threatened with death, to touch the helm a moment after the sun had set on Friday, though a storm was raging; and had not thousands let themselves be butchered rather than touch a weapon in self-defence on the Sabbath? The "new doctrine" of Jesus would turn the world upside down if not stopped!

-The spies of the hierarchical party, who had seen the offence, at once accused Him for allowing it, but His answer only made matters worse. He reminded them how David, when pressed by hunger, in his flight from Saul, had eaten the holy bread and given it to his followers, though it was not lawful for any but priests to eat it. Did that not show that the claims of nature overrode those of a ceremonial rule? that the necessity of David and his followers was to be considered before the observance of a tradition? The law of nature came from God, the theocratic prohibition was of man. "And have you not read in the Law," added He, " how the priests work at their duties on the Sabbath, and yet are held blameless, though they are in fact breaking the holy day, if your traditions and rules are to be the unbending standard? What is lawful for the servants of the Temple to do on Sabbath must much more be lawful for my servants to do on that day, for I am greater than the Temple. You condemn my disciples because your thoughts are so fixed on outward rites that you have forgotten how God thinks less of them than of acts of mercy. Does He not say, 'I will have mercy and not sacrifice?' It is in your want of mercy that you accuse my followers. They have, besides, acted under my authority. The Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath, as even the Pharisees allow, and therefore, in any case, its laws must give way before human necessities. But I, the Son of Man-the representative of man as man-the Messiah

ing local

side. M

454 of God—am still higher than any individual man and above all your Sabbath laws."

Such a retort and such transcendent claims may well have startled His accusers, but they only deepened their hatred, for bigotry is blind and deaf to any reason. Charge was being added to charge, accusation to accusation. He had claimed the power to forgive sins; He had associated with publicans and sinners; He had shown no zeal for washings or fasts, and, now, He had, a second time, openly descented the Sabbath.

His defence had only made His position towards the Pharisaic laws more antagonistic than ever, for it had denied that they were unconditionally binding. Their authority depended on circumstances: they were not owned as directly divine. God had planted a higher law in the human breast, and the system of the Rabbis must vield before it. He had virtually alleged that the time was come to free Israel from the voke of traditional observance, and to raise a new spiritual kingdom on the imperishable basis of truly divine law. UBy their system man was subordinated to the Sabbath, not the Sabbath to man. This harshness was not the design or will of God. The Sabbath had been given by Him for the good of man, and was to be a day of refreshment, peace, and joy, not of pain, sorrow, and terror. Jesus, therefore, proclaimed expressly that man is greater than the Sabbath, in direct contradiction to the Pharisaic teaching, which made the Sabbath of immeasurably greater worth than man. Man, and still more Himself, as the representative of humanity, in its abiding dignity and rights-the Son of Man-is the Lord of the Sabbath. It was a proclamation of spiritual freedom. In Danitation off

The lowering schoolmen of the day, and the priestly party, felt themselves threatened in their most cherished hopes, wishes, and interests. The breach between them and Jesus had been final, since His half-contemptuous words about the old garment and the old bottles. They had marked Him, definitely, as opposed to traditional Rabbinism, as a dangerous agitator, and an enemy of the venerated "Hedge of the Law," the glory of successive generations of Rabbis. The hierarchy would at once have indicted Him publicly, but for His wide popularity; the devotion felt for Him by the multitudes He had healed or comforted; the transparent singleness of His aims and labours; the gentleness and dignity of His character, which enforced reverence; and His divine humility and lowliness of heart, which made Him so unassailable.

The synagogues were, as yet, open to Him, and He still frequented them, for the facilities they offered of teaching the people. Another violation of the Pharisaic laws of the Sabbath soon followed; in one of the services. He had gone to the synagogue, and was teaching in it, when He noticed a man whose right hand, withered by long-standing local paralysis and, its, consequent atrophy, hung helpless by his side. Meanwhile, the Scribes and other Pharisees, now constantly op pluck ears pply hun ie circumears of the on. The um, for a s. It was Jew could ie. or take ioned two was a kind threshing. on Friday, y other day e Sabbath of stoning. world, by Every one d refused, ment after nd had not weapon in esus would offence, at ade matters hunger, in t to his folat it. Did of a ceres was to be w of nature 'And have ork at their they are in re to be the the Temple rvants to do ondemn my tes that you s of mercy. ?" It is in They have, de for man, d therefore, sities. But the Messiah the watch against Him, sat with keen eyes to see if He would venture to break their Sabbath laws once more, by healing the sufferer, who could claim no help till the sacred day was over, as he was in no immediate danger of life. Their fine-spun casuistry had claborated andless rules for the treatment of all maladies on the sacred day. A person in health was not to take medicine on the Sabbath. For the toothache, vinegar might be put in the mouth, if it were afterwards swallowed, but it must not be spat out again. A sore throat must not be gargled with oil, but the oil might be swallowed. It was unlawful to rub the teeth with sweet spice for a cure, but, if it were done to sweeten the breath, it was permitted. No fomentations, &c., could be put to affected parts of the body. One prohibition I must give in Latin. "Qui pediculum occidit sabb. idem est ac st occideret camelum." The school of Schammal held it unlawful to comfort the sick, or visit the mourner on the Sabbath, but the school of Hillel permitted it.

It was clear, therefore, that, if any cure of the withered hand were attempted, there would be ground for another formal charge of Sabbath-breaking, which brought with it death by stoning.

But Jesus never feared to do right. No thought of self ever came between Him and H is witness to the truth. Looking over at His enemics, as they sat on the chief seats, He read their hearts, and felt that fidelity to the very law which H is expected action would be held to have broken, demanded that that act be done.

His whole soul was kindled with righteous anger and sorrow at the hardness which forced conscience to be silent, rather than confess the truth. It was needful that such hollowness and wilful perversity should be exposed. As the Son of God-the Messiah-sent to found a kingdom of pure spiritual religion, He felt that the wisdom of the schools, priestly mediation, sacrifices, Temple rites, and Sabbath laws. were only a glittering veil, which shut out the knowledge of eternal truth, alike towards God and towards man. He had taught and healed, announced the kingdom of spirit and truth, cheered the poor, reproved sinners, lifted the humble from the dust, and gathered the godly round Himself. Dull, mechanical obedience to worthless forms; or love, from the fulness of the heart; was now the question, in religion and morals. Should true religion be spread, or error con-Should He silently let blinded men fancy their blind firmed? leaders right, or should He brave all, to open their eyes and lead them into the true ways of His Father? Looking at the paralyzed man, He bade him rise from the floor, on which, with the rest of the congregation, he had been sitting, and stand forth in the midst, and, on his doing so, in ready obedience to one so famous, turned once more to the scowling Rabbis on the dais. "Is it lawful on the Sabbath days," He asked them, "to do good, or to do evil, to save life or to destroy it?" But they held their peace, fearing they might committhemselves by answering without careful reflection. "It is allowable, is it i into a pit a man bet Sabbath." ferer :----an at his side

Jesus fe of His acc had shut i the leaders They had His destruminor hatr zeal for Hi nationalist. Herod Ant death. The in addition suspicion of State had I the way as

It had b Jerusalem ditional res from the st the contra intensified crush Rom any one wh who, while spiritual gr hoped. He ship was the announced and more he the Scriptu national dei most startlin The Rabbis of Scripture freedom Jes a hindrance promised th claimed a no with which uld venture inferer, who is in no imelaborated ed day. A h. For the afterwards hroat must it was unif it were tations, &e., tion I must ac st occivful to comne school of

d hand were arge of Sab-

If ever came over at His cts, and felt ould be held orrow at the n confess the ul perversity ent to found isdom of the abbath laws, re of eternal taught and red the poor, gathered the to worthless the question, or error con-their blind nd lead them alyzed man, t of the conhidst, and, on ed once more the Sabbath ve life, or to hight commit. It is allowable, is it not," He resumed, "to lay hold on a sheep which has fallen into a pit on the Sabbath day, and help it out? How much then, is a man better than a sheep? Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath." "Stretch forth thy hand," said He, continuing, to the sufferer;—and the hand which, till then, had hung wasted and lifeless at his side, was healthy and strong as the other.

Jesus felt the significance of the moment. He felt that the silence of His accusers was not from conviction, but sullen obstinacy, which had shut its ears against the truth. He felt that, between Him and the leaders of the nation, there was henceforth a hopeless separation. They had finally rejected Him, and could henceforward only seek His destruction. Their fanaticism, now fairly roused, forgot all minor hatreds, and united the hostile factions of the nation in common zeal for His destruction. No parties could be more opposed than the nationalists or Pharisees, and the Friends of Rome gathered round Herod Antipas at Tiberias, but they now united to hunt Jesus to the death. The alliance boded the greatest dauger, for it showed that, in addition to religious fanaticism, He had now to encounter the suspicion of designing political revolution. The Church and the State had banded together to put, "the deceiver of the people" out of the way as soon as possible.

It had been inevitable from the first that it should be so. The Jerusalem party expected the "Salvation of Israel" from the unconditional restoration of the theorracy, with themselves at its head, and from the strictest enforcement of outward legal observances. While the contrast between Judaism and heathenism was, meanwhile, intensified and embittered to the utmost, they hoped before long to crush Rome, or perish in the attempt. They would have greeted any one who proved able to impose their law, in all its strictness, on mankind, -as a deliverer, as the stem from the root of David, as the Saviour and Messiah. In Jesus, on the contrary, there appeared one who, while constraining their wonder at His lofty morality and spiritual greatness, was the very opposite of all they wished and hoped. He claimed to be the Messiah, but IIis ideal of the Messiahship was the antithesis of that of the Rabbis and priesthood. He had announced Himself as the founder of a new theocracy more spiritual and more holy than that of Moses. He had thrown a new light on the Scriptures: had revealed God in a new aspect—as no mere national deity, but the Father of all mankind, and He had taught the most startling novelties as to the freedom of the individual conscience. The Rabbis had enjoyed, as their exclusive prerogative, the exposition of Scripture, but now found themselves dethroned by the religious freedom Jesus had proclaimed, and He had even spoken of them as a hindrance of true knowledge. The spirit of His teaching com-promised the whole state of things in the religious world. He proclaimed a new future: the vested rights of the day clung to the past, with which their interests and their passions were identified.

intere

His c

Him.

the g trales

when

of spi

verv

eiastic

a Sam

a sma

'comm

day, h idolati genero

buildin

ruins

affecti

infinite

in the

Jesus,

once

centur

DiaBut A

Jesusia

cate H

express

of such

followe

except

not Th

roof

but say

man se

have so

another

does it.

the den

sick ma

mine.

I Faith

the hear

lips of the lim

Samaria

received

through

10-Linempro

W. Dist. 7.66

The new wine was thus already bursting, the old bottles, and the result could not be doubtful. Conservatism felt itself imperilled, for it had been weighed, and found wanting. The priesthood had become a dividing wall between God and Israel. The religious decay of the nation found in it its expression. The sacrifices were mere outward forms; the Temple not withstanding the glory with which Herod's love of magnificence and hypocritical piety had adorned it. was a symbol of exclusiveness, intolerance, and hatred of humanity at large; the high officialism of the day, a dam against every reform, every breath of fresh religious thought, and every attempt at a purer ALE GARAGE spiritual life. HARY I'LL BUILDING a small earnistic and

CHAPTER XXXIX VI VIIII VIII ANTA GALILEE.

ont to up light to the fai n-in the massive

THE opposition of the Rabbis and priests, however malignant and fixed, was as yet confined to secret plottings. With the people at large. Jesus continued even increasingly popular. It was advisable, however, to avoid any pretext for overt hostility, and hence He withdrew from Capernaum for a time, on another mission to the towns and villages on the edge of the Lake till the storm in a measure, blew over. To the chagrin of His enemies, the multitudes attracted to see and hear Him were larger than ever. The excitement was evidently spreading through all Palestine, for numbers still continued to come from Jerusalem and Idumea on the south; from Perca and Decapolis and other parts on the east, and even from the heathen district round Tyre and Sidon on the north. There were many Jews settled in every part of the land, and the concourse was no doubt of such almost exclusively. It was even found necessary v that a boat should attend Him, as He journeyed along the shore, that He might betake Himself to it when the throng grew oppressive. Miraculous cases in great number increased the excitement, many 13 who crowded round Him finding relief by touching even His clothes. and unclean spirits falling down before Him in involuntary confession of His being the Son of God. But though His pity would not refuse to heal any who came. He still sought to avoid the offence of too great notoriety, by requiring secrecy. His gentle and unostentatious progress was in such vivid contrast to the noisy and disputatious ways of the Rabbis, that St. Matthew saw in it a fulfilment of the Messianic in visions of Isaiah, for He did not strive, nor cry aloud, nor was His o voice heard in the streets, and in His tender gentleness He would not break a bruised reed, or quench even the smoking flax, and shall The Gospels do not enable us to follow any chronological sequence s in the incidents recorded by them, of these months of our Lord's b ministry, but it must have been about this time, perhaps on His return

1 to Capernaum, from this mission, that we must date one of the most tles, and the operilled, for esthood had ligious decay es were mere y with which d adorned it, of humanity every reform, apt at a purer

a simall entry

Collemand 1 Bird - Jac

The laloba

genery)us sid malignant and the people at was advisable, ind hence He nission to the ie storm in a the multitudes The excitement bers still con. e south; from even from the h. There were concourse was und necessary the shore, that rew oppressive. itement, many en His clothes, tary confession ould not refuse offence of too unostentatious putatious way! f the Messianic d, nor was His He would not of our Lord's of Hisreturn ne of the most interesting of their narratives. He had scarcely reached home, after His circuit, when a deputation of "the elders of the Jews" waited on Him. They were the foremost men in the Caperaaum communitythe governing body of the synagogue, and, as such, the Jewish magistrates of the town. It is the habit in the East to send such embassies when any request is to be made or invitation given with circumstances of special respect, but there was a feature in this case that made it very unusual. The members of the deputation, though Jewish ecclesiastical officials, came as the representatives of a heathen, possibly of a Samaritan. Lying on the edge of his territory, Herod Antipas kept a small garrison in Capernaum, and this, at that time, was under command of a centurion, who, like many of the better heathen of the day, had been drawn towards Judaism by its favourable contrast with idolatry. He had shown his sympathy with the nation, and his generous spirit, in a way then not uncommon among the wealthy, by building a synagogue in the town-perhaps that of which the massive ruins still remain. One of his slaves had been struck with a paralytic affection, and was fast sinking; and with a tenderness that did him infinite honour in an age, when a slave, with many masters, and even in the eye of the Roman law, was treated as a mere chattel, he prayed Jesus, through the Jewish elders, to heal him. Their request was at once complied with and Jesus forthwith set out with them to the centurion's quarters. mover out of the other

But the zeal of the messengers had outrun their commission, for, as Jesus approached the house, a second deputation met Him, to deprecate His being put to so much trouble, and to apologize, by an humble expression of the centurion's sense of his unworthiness of the honour of such an One coming, under his roof. He, himself, appears to have followed as if it had been too great a liberty to approach Jesus except at the distance of two mediations. "Lord," said he, "trouble not Thyself: for I am not worthy that Thou shouldst enter under my roof. Wherefore, neither thought I myself worthy to come to Thee; but say in a word, and my servant shall be healed. For I. also, am a man set under authority (and render obedience to my superiors), and have soldiers under me, and I say to this one, Go, and he goes: to another, Come, and he comes; and to my servant, Do this, and he does it. If therefore, You indicate Your pleasure only by a word, the demons who cause diseases will at once obey You and leave the sick man, for they are under Your authority as my servants are under 标管 位用 使用 马克肉瓜 mine? 3771 SYAMP + in

Faith so clear, undoubting, and humble, had never before cheered the heart of Jesus, even from a Jew, and, coming as it did from the lips of a heathen, it seemed the first-fruits of a vast harvest, outside the limits of the Ancient People. He had found a welcome in Samaria when rejected in Judea; and now it was from a heathen He received this lowly homage. The clouds that had lain over the world through the past seemed to break away, and a new barth spread itself

inst mee tow soft

less he c

once

say and It

.very

the 1

of Je even

wido No p

mind

place

scene alive.

rose o

uplan

to the

For

-the lain a expec

own f Antip from t

still su to rec one so reache great

clung

moven

Why H

His su

discipi

He wa

for and were to and Je

Tos

out before His soul. The kingdom of God, rejected by Isnel, would be welcomed by the despised Gentile nations. "Verily," said Hc, "I tell you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel. And I say unto you that many shall come from the east and the west, and lie down at the table of God in the kingdom of the Messiah, as honoured guests, with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, while the Jew, who prided himself on being, by birth, the child of the heavenly kingdom, and despised all others, as doomed to sit in the darkness outside the banquet hall of the Messiah, will have to change places with them?" To His hearers such language would speak with a force to be measured only by their flerce pride and intolerance. To share a grand banquet with the patriarchs in the Messianic kingdom, was a favourite mode with the Jews of picturing the blessedness that kingdom would bring. "In the future world," they made God say, in one of their Robbinical lessons, "I shall spread for you Jews a great table, which the Gentiles will see and be ashamed." But now the rejection and despair are to be theirs! The contrast between Jesus and the Rabbis was daily becoming more marked, for now He adds to all else a grand vision of a universal religion, and of a kingdom of the Messiah, no longer national, but sending a welcome to all hulmanity who will submit to its laws.

"Go thy way," added He, to the centurion, " and as thou hast believed, so he it done to thee." And his slave was healed in that very hour.

He had apparently left Capernaum the same day, for we find Him, the next, at a village called Nain, twenty five miles to the south west, on the northern slope of Little Hermon, a clump of hills at the eastern end of the great plain of Esdraelon. It was still the early and popular time of His ministry, and crowds followed Him wherever He appeared. Nain, which is now a poor and miserable hamlet. in habited only by a few fanatical Mahometans, may then have deserved its name—the beautiful. The only antiquities about it are some tombs hewn in the hills, seen as you approach, beside the road, which winds up, to the village. The presence of the Prince of Life, with throng of disciples and followers, might well have banished thought of sadness, but shadows everywhere lie side by side with the light. As He came near, another procession met Him, descending from Nain, the dismal sounds rising from it, even at a distance, telling too plainly what it was. Death had been busy under these blue summer skies, and its prey was now being borne, amidst the wall of the mourner, to its last resting-place. A colder heart than that of Jesus would have been touched, for it was a case so sad that the whole town had poured forth to show its sympathy with the broken heart that followed next the bier. It was the funeral of a young man, the only son as a widow, now left in that saddest of all positions to a Jew-to mourn alone in the desolated home in which he had died doubtless only a very lew hours before. Moved with the pity at all times an

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

would

said He

tacl. And west, and lessiah, as the Jew

e heavenly

ie darkness ange places with a force To share ngdom, was edness that le God say, you Jews a But now tween Jesus

v He adds to kingdom of e to all hu

is thou hast

ealed in tha

ve find Him,

south-west, hills at the

the early and

wherever He

hamlet. in. ave deserved it are some road, which Life, with a hed thoughts

th the light.

ending from e, telling too olue summer

wail of the hat of Jesus

e whole town

n heart that han, the only to a Jew-to ed. doubtless

all times

instinct with Him, Jesus could not let the train sweep on. It was not meet that death should reap its triumph in His presence. Stepping towards the poor mother. He dried up the fountain of her tears by a soft appeal. ""Weep not," said He, and then moved to the bler, careless of the defilement which would have made a Rabbi pass as far as he could from the dead. Touching it, those who bore the body at once stood still. It was, doubtless, a mere open frame, like that still used for such purposes in Palestine. "Young man," said He, "I say unto thee, Arise." It was enough. "He that was dead sat up and began to speak. And He delivered him to his mother." It was at Shunem, now Solani, a village on the other side of the very hill on which Nain stood, that Elisha had raised the only son of the lady who had hospitably entertained him; and the luxuriant plain of Jezreel, stretching out beneath, had been the scene of the greatest events in the life of Elijah, who had raised to life the son of the widow in the Phenician village of Sarepta, on the far northern coast. No prouder sign of their greatness as prophets had lingered in the mind of the nation, than such triumphs over the grave, and in no place could such associations have been more rife than in the very scene of the life of both." At the sight of the young man once more alive, the memory of Elijah and Elisha was on every lip, and cries rose on all sides that a great prophet had again risen, and that God had visited His people. Nor did the report confine itself to these upland regions. It flow far and near to Judea in the south, and even to the remote Perca.

For now, six months; it may be for more than a year, the Baptist -the one man hitherto recognized, in these days, as a prophet, had lain a prisoner in the dungeons of Machaerus-doubtless, in hourly expectation of death-a man, young in years, but wasted with his own flery zeal, and now by the shadows of his prison-house. But Antipas had not yet determined what to do with him. Shielding him from the fury of Herodias, and yet dreading to let him go free, he still suffered him, as Felix permitted Paul long afterwards, at Cæsaren, to receive visits from his disciples, as if almost ashamed to contine one so blameless. The rumours of Christ's doings had thus, all along, reached the lofty castle where he lay, and, doubtless, were the one great subject of his thought and conversation. As a Jew, he had clung to Jewish ideas of the Messiah, expecting, apparently, a national movement which would establish a pure theocracy; under Jesus. Why had He left him to languish in prison? Why had He not used His superbatural powers to advance the kingdom of God?". his attact To solve such questions, which could not be repressed, two of his disciples were deputed to visit Jesus, and learn from Himself whether He was, indeed, the Messiah, or whether the nation should still look for another? From first to last, more than sixty claimants of the title were to rise. John might well wonder if the past were not a dream, and Jeans only a herald like himself." He had everything to depress

Pas

His g

procee

joyed

indeed

Kingd

which

citizen

he rou

Messia

receive

coming

the Eli

Elijah the son torch, he took heaven

thou m

that he from the

to destr

to nuni

revenge in a flar

for the

Judgme

and to

behold

porate i

no great

feeling,

Messiah

of a Jey

stroying

the divi

home to no highe

of God.,

of its br

How lor

portiona

throngs

Him, an

The 1

To e

him. A child of the desert, accustomed to its wild freedom, he was no. caged in a dismal fortress, with no outlook except black lavacrags, and deep gorges, yawning in scenningly bottomless depths. Burning with zeal, he found himself set aside as if forgotten of God, or of no use in His kingdom. Even the people appeared to have forgotten him, for their fickle applause had begun to lessen, even before his imprisonment. His work seemed to have been without results; a momentary excitement which had already died sway. He could not hope for visits from Jesus which could only have given a second prisoner to Machaerus—"the Black Castle."

The reaction from the sense of boundless liberty in the desert to the forced inaction and close walls of a prison, and from the stir and enthusiasm of the great assemblies at the fords of the Jordan, affected even the strong and firm soul of the hero, as similar influences have affected even the bravest hearts since his day. Moses and Elijah had had their times of profound despondency, and it was no wonder that a passing cloud threw its shadow even over the Baptist. The answer of Jesus was full of calm dignity. Isaiah, the special favourite of John, had given the marks, ages before, by which the Messiah should be known, and these Jesus proceeded at once to display to the disciples sent from Machaerus. Among the crowds around Him, there were always many who had been attracted by the hope of a miraculous cure of their diseases or infirmities, and these He forthwith summoned to His presence, and healed. John would understand the significance of such an answer, and it left undisturbed the delicacy which shrank from verbal self-assertion. His acts, and, doubtless, the words that accompanied them, were left to speak for Him. It was enough that He should refer them to Isaiah, and to what they had seen. "Go your way, and tell John what you have seen and heard. The blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed. the doaf hear, the dead are raised, and the poor have the Gospel preached to them." "Tell him, moreover, that I know how he is tempted: but let him comfort himself with the thought that he who holds fast his faith in spite of all flery trials, and does not reject the kingdom of God because of its small beginnings, and still, spiritual gentleness, so different from the worldly power and glory expected, already has the blessings it is sent to bring."

The messengers had hardly departed, when His full heart broke out into a culogy on John, tender, lofty, and fervent. "It was no weak and wavering man," said He, "bending this way and that, like the tall Jordan reeds, that ye went out in bands to the desert banks of the Jordan to see! No soft and silken man, tricked out in splendid dress, and living on dainty fare, like the glittering courtiers at Tiberlas! John was a prophet of God—aye, the last and the greatest of prophets, for he was sent as the herald to prepare the way for Me, the Messiah! I tell you, among all that have been born of women, a greater and more honoured than John the Baptist has not risen!"

2.007

the desert to the stir and dian, affected fluences have id klijah had s no wonder ptist. a, the special by which the it once to disrowds around by the hope and these He hn would unt undisturbed His acts, and, t to speak for Isaiah, and 'to hat you have s are cleansed, ve the Gospel ow how he is it that he who not reject the still, 'spiritual lory expected, i heart broke It was no and that, like e desert banks d'out in spleng courtlers at id the greatest e way for Me, n of women, a not rised.!" Passing from this tender tribute, which He had already paid to His great forerunner, even before the authorities at Jerusalem, He proceeded, as was meet, to point out the greater privileges enjoyed by His hearers, than even by one so famous. "He was great indeed in the surpassing dignity of his office, as the herald of the Kingdom; yet one far less, but still a member of that Kingdom, which is now set up among you, is greater in the honour of his citizenship than he, for he stood outside. But he did a mighty work; he roused the land to a grand carnestness for the kingdom of the Messiah, and they who were thus stirred by him, are those now being received into it. The prophets and the I aw only prophesied of my coming: John announced Me as having come. Believe Me, he was the Elias who was to appear."

To a Jewish audience, no honour could be so great as this, for Elijah was the greatest of all the prophets. "Elijah appeared," says the son of Sirach, "a prophet like fire, and his words burned like a torch. He brought down famine on Israel, and by his stormy zeal, he took it away. Through the Word of the Lord he shut up the heavens, and thrice brought down, fire from them. O! how wert thou magnified, O Elijah, by thy mighty deeds, and who can boast that he is thine equal! He raised the dead to life, and brought them from the under world by the word of the Highest. He cast kings to destruction, and the noble from their seats. He received power to punish, on Sinal, and judgments on Horeb. He anointed kings to revenge guilt, and prophets to be his successors. He was carried up in a flaming storm, in a charlot with horses of fire; he is appointed for the correction of times to come, to abate God's wrath before judgment be let loose, to turn the heart of the father to the sons, and to restore the tribes of Jacob. It is well for those who shall behold thee!" All the majesty of the prophetic office seemed incorporate in the Tisbute, and yet this did not seem enough to Jesus to express the dignity of John, for he was more than a prophet, and no greater had ever risen among all the sons of men.

The message from John was only the expression of the general feeling, which, by its want of spiritual elevation, questioned the Messiahship of Jesus, because He had not realized the national idea of a Jewish hero-king, at the head of a great revolt from Rome, destroying the heathen, and establishing the theocracy by wonders like the dividing of the Red Sea, or the thunderings of Sinai. It struck home to the heart of the Saviour, that even His herald should have no higher or worthier conception of the true nature of the kingdom of God,—that even he, so near the light,—should have caught so little of its brightness. No wonder the people, as a mass, rejected Him. How long had He taught in the towns of Gillee, and yet how disproportionately small was the number. He had really won, in spite of the throngs who had pressed with eager curiosity and wonder mund Him, and the respect He had excited by His teachings! His heart

a Na

table

say 1 of th

dom

hono

yout

as, we

and t

toHe

quen

Herw

light, done,

Chor

made

& voic nound

unto 1

been o

they.

say w

Day o heave

Hades

in the day.

Sodon

Him b

of som

preach

bearin

heaver from qualifi

reveale

I than

The N

of the

Churc

faith a

the po

It was

its una

It w

was bowed with sorrow. He had come to His own, and His own did not receive Him. Infinite love and pity for them filled His soul for He was Himself a son of Israel, and would fain have led His brethren into the New Kingdom, as the first-fruits of the nations. But they refused to let themselves be delivered from the spiritual and inoral slavery under which they had long sunk. The yoke of the Romans was not their greatest misformine. That of the dead letter, and of frozen forms and formulæ, which chilled every nobler aspiration; and shut up the heart against true repentance, and practical holiness; was a far greater calamity. Even their highest ident the conception of the Messiah-had become a heated fantastic dream of universal dominion, apart from religious reform! A glimpse of other fields, which promised a richer harvest, had, however, lifted His spirit to consoling thoughts, for the heathen centurion had shown the faith which was wanting in Israel. His homage had been like the waveoffering before God, of the first sheaf of the Gentile world! Heathenism might be sunk in error and sin, crime and lust, and all moral confusion might reign widely in it; there was more hope of repentance and a return to a better life, from heathen indifference or guilt, than from Jewish insane, self-righteous pride. 22 3 111002 #1990 The crowd of despised common people and publicans, to whom Jesus had addressed His eulogy of John, received it with delight, for they had themselves been baptized by the now imprisoned prophet. There were not wanting others, however, whom it greatly offended the Pharisees and Scribes present for no friendly purpose. With the instinct of monopoly, they condemned at once whatever had not come through the legitimate channels of authorized teaching. They had gone out to John, but with the foregone conclusion to hear, criticize. and reject him with supercilious contempt, as only fit for the vulgar. Though a priest's son, he was virtually a layman, for he had not been duly ordained. He might be good enough in his way, but he was not a Rabbi. He was almost guilty of schism, like Korah. He was not licensed by the authorities, and yet preached, as, indeed, for that matter, was the case with Jesus Himself. The bitter hostility both John and He had met, rose the more in the Saviour's mind at the sight of the Rabbis on the skirts of the crowd, and the sadness and indignation of His heart broke out in stern denunciation." To what shall I liken the men of this generation?. They are like children in the empty market-places, playing at marriages and mournings; some making music on the flute for the one; some acting like mourners for the other; but neither the cheerful piping, nor the sad beating on the breast, pleasing the companion audience. John the Baptist came upholding the traditions and customs of you Rabbis: for he fasted, and paid attention to washings, and set prayers, and enjoined these on his disciples; but you said he was too strict, and would have nothing to do with him, and that he spoke in so strange a way because he had a devil. I came eating and drinking - neither

Is own did

is soul for

But they

and 'moral

e Romans

er, and of

ration, and

Tiness! tras

nception of universal

ther fields.

is spirit to n the faith

e the wave-

ist, and all

ore hope of fference or

1701au 1910

to whom delight, for ed prophet,

With the

ad not come

They had

ar criticize.

ad not been

but he was

h. He was ed, for that ostility both nind at the sadness and

tion. To To ike children

mournings;

lie sad beat-

John the

vou Rabbis;

prayers, and

o strict, and in so strange

ing-neither

like moura-

the vulgar.

• Nexerite like John, nor requiring fasts like him; nor avoiding the table of all but the ceremonially pure, like the Pharisees; and you say, I am too fond of cating and of wine, and still worse, am a friend of the publicans and sinners you despise. But the true divine wisdom which both he and I have proclaimed is justified by those who honour and follow it, for they know its surpassing worth, though you treat it as folly! The divine wisdom of both his and my coming as we have come, is vindicated by all who humbly seek to be wise, and the folly of men is seen in their fancied wisdom."

He would fain have led all to whom He had preached in His frequent journeys, into the ways of peace. But tender though He was, He was also stern, when stolid obduracy shut its eyes on the sacred light, He had brought to them. Most of His mighty works had been done, and, most of His no less mighty words had been spoken. in Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum, the district which He had made His home; But they had led to no general penitence. With a voice of unspeakable sadness, mingled with holy wrath, He denounced such wilful perversity. "Woe unto thee, Choruzin, woe unto thee, Bethsuida, for if the mighty works I have done in you had been done even in Tyre and Sidon, the types of besotted heathenism, they would have repented long ago, in suckcloth and ashes. But I say unto you, It will be more tolerable for Tyre and Bidon in the Day of Judgment than for you. And thou, Capernaum, exalted to heaven by my dwelling and working in you, shalt be thrust down to Hades, at the Day of Judgment; for if the mighty works I have done in thes had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day. But I say unto you, It will be more tolerable for the land of Sodom, in the Day of Judgment, than for thee!"

It would seem as if at this point, some communication that pleased Him had been made to Jesus. Perhaps His disciples had told Him of some success obtained among the simple crowds to whom they had preached the New Kingdom. Whatever it was, He broke forth on hearing it into thanksgiving: "I praise Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that Thou hast hid the things of Thy Kingdom from those who are thought, and who think themselves wise, and qualified to judge-the Rabbis, and Priests; and Pharisces-and hast revealed them to simple souls, unskilled in the wisdom of the schools. I thank Thee that what is well-pleasing to Thee has happened thus!" The New Kingdom was not to rest on the theology of the schoolmen of the day, or on official authority, or on the sanction of a corrupt Church, or on the support of privileged classes, but upon child-like faith and humble love. It was not to spread downwards, from among the powerful and influential, but to rise from among the weak and ignoble, the poor and lowly, who would receive it in love and himility. It was to spread upwards by no artificial aids, but by the attractions of its own heavenly worth alone. It was a vital condition of its nature that it should, for it can only be received in sincerity, where its unaided spiritual beauty wins the heart.

ye ahal I requi

borne.

is the L

reverent from th

nature a

the high

without give the speak of meek an

dignity_

speak of would da

and an ir

we are fa

.07B.Y.9

III 'POILI

ST HARSING.

2001.00

anichter.

as to prev some of i

about this and had b

to eat with a party so

whom he ized long-

it lurked,

and interc

member of

ality in a

already ex

cepted the descension

honour by

on mats, w

East-rour

foreign cus

In the ca

A Phar social pos

THERU

Lang

Among the "habes" were doubtless included the confessors to be won from the world at large, and not from Israel alone, for the law of growth from below upwards, is that of religious movements in all ages and countries. All reformations begin with the laity, and with the obscure. Jesus had nothing to hope but everything to fear from the privileged classes, the learned guilds, the ecclesiastical authorities, and the officials of the Church generally." It sounds startling to read of His thanking God that these all-powerful classes showed neither sympathy for the New Kingdom founded by Him, nor even the power of comprehending it, and that it was left to the simple and child-like minds of the common people, in their freedom from prejudice, to embrace it with eagerness. It was because He saw in the fact, the divine law of all moral and religious progress. New epochs in the spiritual history of the world always spring like seeds, in durkness and obscurity, and only show themselves when they have already struck root in the soil." The moral and religious life, finds an unnoticed welcome in the mass of the people, when the higher ranks of lay, and even of ecclesiastical society, are morally and spiritually effete, that to introduce a reform, and bound by their interests to things as they are. The overflowing fulness of heart, which had found utterance in prayer, added a few sentences more, of undying interest and beauty. It might be feared that, if old guides were forsaken, those who took Him for their leader might find Him unequal to direct them aright. To dispel any such apprehension He draws aside the yeil from some of the awful mysteries of His nature and His relation to the Eternal, in words which must have strangely comforted the simple souls who heard them first; and which still carry with them a spiritual support. intensified by their awful sublimity as the words of one; in outward scenning, a man like ourselves. The notated to the answer the standard "All things concerning the New Kingdom are delivered unto me of my Father-its founding, its establishment, its spread. I am therefore, the king and leader of the new people of God-the head of the new Theocracy, divinely commissioned to rule over it. If All that I teach I have received from my Father. I speak, in all things, the mind of God, and thus you are for ever safe. No one knows fully what I am, and what measure of gifts I have received as Mossiah, but the Father, who has commissioned and sent me forth-Me. His Son. Nor does any man know the Father, in His counsels for the salvation of man, as I His Son do, and those to whom I make Him known I I am the true Light, who alone can lighten men, the one true Teacher. who cannot mislead of one a transferration ben drass - uside the unstituted "Come unto me, therefore, all ye that labour and are heavy-laden with the burden of rites and traditions of men, which your teachers lay on you—you, who can find no deliverance from the misery of your souls, by all these observances, and I will give your spirits rest. Cast off their heavy yoke and take mine, and learn of me, for I am not hard and haughty like your Rabbis, but meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find yest for your souls. For the yoke I lay on you—the law I require you to honour—is not like that which you have hitherto borne, but brings health to the spirit, and my burden is light; for it is the Law of love,"

Language like this, briefly expanded, for greater clearness, demands reverent thought. Who does not feel that such words could not fall from the lips, of a sinful man, but only from those of one whose nature and life lay far above all human imperfection? Who, even of the highest, or wisest, or best, of human teachers, could invite all, without exception, to come to Him, with the promise that He would give them true rest for their souls? And who, in doing so, could speak of it as a thing apparent to all who heard Him, that He was meek and lowly in heart? Who would think of claiming the stately dignity of sole representative of the Unseen God, and who could speak of God as his Father, in the same way as Jesus? And who would dare to link Hunself with the Eternal in a Communion so awful and an inter-revelation so absolute? He makes us feel that as we listen we are face to face with the Incarnate Divine.

marginal as equilated a standard and an analysis and and a standard and and an and an and and and the dynamic put and early a many high had found materance in anne to be for the law

nents in all

, and with

b feat from

authorities. ing to read wed neither the power

d child like tejudice, to he fact, the

ochs in the

in durkness

ave 'alteady

in unnoticed

s of lay, and

lete, unfit to s as they are.

utterance in and beauty.

se who took

hem aright. il from some

the Eternal.

le souls who

ual support,

in outward differentiatella, 1.

d unto me of

I am there-

head of the

I All that I

1 things, the

knows fully

Mossiah, but

Me. His Son.

the salvation

n known. I rue Teacher.

Hadronil. (D)

heavy-laden

your teachers

isery of your

s rest. Cast for I am not in beart and heinigens all interior and the second second

JICTIS UNDARRENING SHADOWS. -LIFE IN GALILER.

THE rupture with the hierarchical party was not as yet so prynounced as to prevent a, more or less friendly intercourse; between Jesus, and some of its members. An incident connected with one happened

A Pharisee of the name of Simon, who seems to have been in good social position, had met with Jesus in some of the Galilæan towns. and had been so attracted by Him that he invited Him to his house. to eat with him, This was a mark of high consideration from one of or a party so strict, for a Pharisee was as careful as a Brahmin, is, with whom he ate. Defilement was temporary loss of caste, and neutralized long-continued effort to attain a higher grade of legal purity, and the it lurked, in a thousand forms, behind the simplest acts of daily life at and intercourse. To, invite, one who was neither a Pharisee, nor a th member of even the lowest grade of legal guilds, was amazing liberality in a Jewish precisian. It would seem as if the courtesy had already excited timid fear of having gone too far, when Jesus accepted the invitation, -and had given place to a cold patronizing condescension, which fancied it had conferred, rather than received, an honour by His, presence.

In the earlier ages of the nation it had been the habit to sit at meals on mats, with the feet crossed beneath the body, as at present in the East-round a low table-now, only about a foot in height. But the foreign custom of reclining on cushions, long in use among the Per-

HULL

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

sians. Greeks, and Romans, had been introduced into Palestine apparently as early as the days of 'Amos, and had become general in those of Christ, Raised divans, or table couches, provided with cushions and arranged on three sides of a square, supplied a rest for guests, and on these they lay on their left arm, with their feet at case behind them, outside." The place of lionour was at the upper end of the right side, which had no one above it, while all below could easily lean back on the bosom of the person immediately behind. Hospitality among the poor was prefaced by various courtesies and attentions to the guest, more or less peculiar to the nation. To enter a house except with bare feet was much the sume as our doing so without removing the hat, and, therefore, all shoes and sandals were taken off, and left at the threshold, "A kiss on the check, from the master of the house, with the invocation "The Lord be with you," conveyed a formal welcome, and was followed, on the guest taking his place on the couch, by a servant bringing water and washing the feet, to cool and refresh them, as well as to remove the dust of the road and give ceremonial cleanness. The bost himself, or one of his servants, next anointed the head and beard of the guests with fragrant oil, attention to the hair being a great point with Orientals. Before eating, water was again brought to wash the hands, as the requirements of legal purity demanded, and from the fact that the food was taken by dipping the fingers, or a piece of bread, into a common dish. . . . To wash the hands before a meal," says the Talmud, this a command: to do so during eating is left matter of choice; but; to wash them after it, is a duty.

With all Jews, but especially with scrupulous formalists like the Pharisees, religious observances formed a marked feature in every entertainment, however humble, and, as these were duly prescribed by the Rabbis, we are able to picture a meal like that given to Jesus by Simon.

Houses in the East are far from enjoying the privacy we prize so highly. Even at this time, strangers pass in and out at their pleasure, to see the guests, and join in conversation with them and with the host. Among those who did so, in Simon's house, was one at whose presence in his dwelling; under any circumstances, he must have been equally astonished and disturbed. Silently gliding into the chamber, perhaps to the seat round the wall, came a woman, though women could not with propriety make their appearance at such entertain She was, moreover, unveiled, which, in itself, was contrary ments. to recognized rules. In the little town every one was known, and Simon saw, at the first glance, that she was no other than one known to the community as a poor fallen woman. She was evidently a distress, but he had no eves or heart for such a consideration. She had compromised his respectability, and his frigid self-righteousness could think only of itself. To eat with publicans or sinners was the sup of all evils to a Pharisce. It was the approach of one under more the of the state o

he was

A ter case, an Jesus, j come to contritie till now found in the most hope ha fallen, gi bosom. retrace h of mind. won her gratitude possibilit The ob

ing down ointment. that she v tress, had course, bu only mak which Sin only of he covering calmed en to her low The Phi woman, or the traditi regarded ' showed his known wh sinner, " Jesus' sa quested an said Heoric pence, the forgave the most?" Ut the Pharise itor forgave replied Jes the parable

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

quarantine, whose very neighbourhood was disastrous, and yet, here

A tenderer heart than his, however, knew the deeper aspects of her case, and welcomed her approach. She had listened to the words of Jesus," perhaps to His invitation to the weary and heavy-laden to come to Him for rest, and was bowed down with penicent shame and contrition, which were the promise of a new and purer life. Lost, till now, to self-respect, an outcast for whom no one cared, she had found in Him that there was a friend of sinners, who beckoned even the most hopeless to take sliciter by His side. In Him and His words hope had returned, and in His respect for her womanhood, though failen, quickening self-respect had been once more awakened in her bosom. She might yet be saved from her degradation; might ves retrace her steps from pollution and sorrow, to a pure life and peace of mind." What could she do but seek the presence of One who had won her back from ruin? What could she do but express her lowly gratitude for the sympathy He alone had shown; the belief in the possibility of her restoration that had itself restored her!

The object of her visit was not, however, long a mystery. Knealing down behind Jesus, she proceeded to anoint His feet with fragrant ointment, but as she was about to do so; her tears fell on them so fast that she was fain to wipe them with her long hair, which, in her distress, had escaped its fastenings. To anoint the head was the usual course, but she would not venture on such an honour, and would only make bold to anoint His feet. Unmindful of her disorder, which Simon coldly noted as an additional shame, she could think only of her benefactor. Weeping and wiping away the tears, and covering the feet with kisses, her heart gave itself vent till it was calmed enough to let her anoint them, and, meanwhile, Jesus left her to her lowly, loving will.

The Pharises was horrified. That a Rabbi should allow such a woman, or, indeed, any woman, to approach him, was contrary to all the traditions, but it was incredibly worse in one whom the people regarded as a prophet. He would not speak aloud, but his looks showed his thoughts. "This man, if He were a prophet, would have known what kind of woman this is that touches Him, for she is a sinner."

Jesus saw what was passing in his mind, and turning to him requested an answer to a question. "There was a certain creditor," said He, "who had two debtors. The one owed him five hundred pence, the other fifty. And when they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Tell me, therefore, which of them will love him most?" Utterly unconscious of the bearing of these words on himself, the Pharises readily answered that he supposed he to whom the creditor forgave most, would love him most. "Thou hast rightly judged," replied Jesus. "Then like Nathan with David, He proceeded to bring the parable home to his conscience.

lestine apparneral in those with cushions at for guests, t case behind d of the right ld easily lean Hospitality ind attentions enter & house eo without rerere taken off, the master of u," conveyed a ng bis place on he feet, to cool road and give s servants; next at oil, attention e eating, water ments of logal s taken by dipsh. ..... To wash mand: to do so icm after it, is a malists like the cature in every duly prescribed given to Jesus

acy we prize so t their pleasure, m and with the as one at whose must have, been to the chamber, though women such entertainlf, was contrary was known, and than one known vas evidently in ration. She had liteousness could ers was the sum ne under moral A Strater in

Turning to the weeping, penitent woman at His feet, and pointing to her. He continued, "Simon seest thou this woman? I entered into thime house; thou gayest me no water for my feet, as even courtesy demanded; but she has washed my feet with tears, and wiped them with her hair. Thou gayest me no kiss; but this woman, since the time I entered, has not ceased to kiss my feet tenderly. Thou didst not anoint my head with oil; but she has anointed my feet with ointment. I say unto thee, therefore, her sins, which are many, are forgiven, for she loved, much, but one to whom little is forgives, loves little." Then addressing the sobbing woman herself; He told her, "Thy sins are forgiven. Thy faith has saved thee: go in peace!"

That He should claim to forgive sins had already raised a charge of blasphemy against Him, and it did not pass unnoticed now. But the time had not yet come for open hostility, and Jis words, in the meanwhile, were only treasured up to be used against Him hereafter. We are indebted to a notice in St. Luke for a glimpse of the mode of life of Jesus in, these months. He seems to have spent them in successive circuits, from Capernaum as a centre, through all the towns and villages of Galilee, very much as the Rabbis were accustomed to do over the country at large. In these journeys He was attended by the Twelve, and by a group of loving women, attracted to Him by relationship, or by His having healed them of various diseases; who provided, in part, at least, for His wants, and those of His followers. That He was not absolutely poor, in the sense of suffering from want, is implied in His recognition as a Rabbi, and even as a prophet, which secured Him hospitality and welcome, as an act of supreme religious merit, wherever He went. To entertain a Rabbi was to secure the favour of God, and it was coveted as a special honour. Thus, though He had no home He could call His own, He would never want ready welcome in the homes of others wherever He went, so long as popular prejudice was not excited against Him. The cottage of Lazarus at Bethany was only one of many that opened its doors to Him, and He could even reckon on a cheerful reception so confidently, as to invite Himself, to houses like that of Zaccheus, or that of him in whose upper room He instituted the Last Supper. Many disciples, or persons favourably inclined, were scattered over the land. The simplicity of Eastern life favoured such kindly relations, and hence His personal support would be freely supplied, except in desert parts, or when He was journeying through Samaria, or distant places on the frontiers of Galilee. The willing gifts of friends, thrown into a common fund, supplied so fully all that was needed in such cases. that there was always a surplus from which even to give to the poor. The names of some of the group of wemen who thus attended Jesus have been handed down as a fitting tribute to their devotion, while those of the men who followed Him, with the exception of the twelve apostles, are lost. The religious enthusiasm of the age, always champ deman drew t attenda no grou Of th Miriam devils: in the p the nan Joses, a James sister of also tho had cure Magdale who did nothing what the think of fered fro utterly b nect with word has penitent. Mary a —the To edge, at t represent village of trace of t embower caves, ove ravine at which it c oleanders,

2

Who Man injustice.

to her, as above all the extern

religion w

The cire

paird

Been 1

wome

It wa

devoti

470

d pointing I entered even courand wiped pinan, since rly. Thou ed my feet which are om little is han herself, ed thee: go sed a charge now. But words, in the m hereafter. of the mode ent them in all the towns customed to attended by d to Him by liseases; who Is followers. g from want, rophet, which eme religious to secure the Thus, though er want ready ong as popular of Lazarus at Him. and He y, as to invite him in whose ciples, or pernd. The simnd hence His lesert parts, or places on the thrown into a in such cases, ve to the poor. thus attended their devotion, ception of the he age, always seen most in the gentler scx, had already spread among all Jewish women, for the Pharisces found them their most earnest supporters. It was only natural, therefore, that Jesus should attract a similar devotion. His purity of soul, His reverend courtesy to the sex, His championship of their equal dignity with man, before God, and His demand for supreme zeal in all, in the spread of the New Kingdom, drew them after Him. But so accustomed were all classes to such attendance on their own Rabbis, that even the enemies of Jesus found no ground for censure in their ministrations.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

Of these earliest mothers of the Church, five are named. Mary, or Miriam, of the town of Magdala, from whom Jesus had cast seven devils: Johanna, the wife, not the widow, of Chuoza, a high official in the palace of Herod Antipas, at Tiberias; Susanna, of whom only the name is known; Mary, the mother of James the Less and of Joses, and wife of Klopas; and Schelamith, or Salome, mother of James and John, and wife of Zebedce or Zabdai, perhaps, also, the sister of Mary, the mother of Jesus, as Mary, the wife of Klopas, is also thought by many to have been. Of the other three, whom Jesus had cured of various diseases, a, surpassing interest attaches to Mary Magdalene, from her unfounded identification with the fallen penitent who did Jesus honour in the house of the Pharisee Simon. There is nothing whatever to connect her with that narrative, for it confounds what the New Testament distinguishes by the clearest language, to think of her having led a sinful life from the fact of her having suffered from demoniacal possession. Never, perhaps, has a figment so utterly baseless obtained so wide an acceptance as that which we connect with her name. But it is hopeless to try to explode it, for the word has passed into the vocabularies of Europe as a synonym of penitent frailty.

Mary appears to have, belonged to the village of Magdala, or Migdol —the Tower—about three miles north of Tiberias, on the water's edge, at the south-east corner of the plain of Gennesareth. It is now represented by the few wretched hovels which form the Mohammedan village of El-Mejdel, with a solitary thorn-bush beside it, as the last trace of the rich groves and orchards, amidst which it was, doubtless, embowered, in the days of our Lord. A high limestone rock, full of caves, overhangs it on the south-west, and beneath this, out of a deep ravine at the back of the plain, a clear stream rushes past to the sea, which it enters through a tangled thicket of thorn, and willows, and oleanders, covered in their season with clouds of varied blossoms. Who Mary was, or what, no one can tell, but legend, with a cruel injustice, has associated her name for ever with the spot now sacred to her, as the lost one reclaimed by Jesus.

The circle which thus attended Him on His journeys was peculiar, above all things, in an age of intense ritualism, by its slight care for the external observances and mortifications, which formed the sum of religion with so many. This simplicity was made the great accusation against Jesus, as, in after times, the absence of sacrifices and temples led the heathen to charge Christianity with atheism. 12 Even the initiatory rite of baptism had fallen into abevance, and fasting, and the established rules for prayer and ceremonial purifications were deed, great reason for the belief of some, that Jesus and His followers differed, alike in dress, demeanour, mode of life, and customs, from the teachers of the day and their followers. The simple tunic and upper garment may have had the Tallith worn by all other Jews, but we may be certain that the tassels at its corners were in contrast to the huge ostentatious size affected by the Rabbis. Nor can we imagine that either Jesus, or the Twelve, sanctioned by their use the superstitious leathern phylacteries which others bound, with long fillets, on their left arm and their forchead, at prayers. The count-less rules, then, as now, in force for the length of the straps, for the size of the leather cells to hold the prescribed texts-for their shape, manufacture, &c., and even for the exact mode of winding the straps round the aim, or tying them on the forehead-marked too strongly the cold, mechanical conceptions of prayer then prevailing, to let us imagine that our Lord or the disciples wore them. There was no such aeglect of His person as many of His contemporaries thought identical with holiness, for He did not decline the abointing of His head or heard, or the washing of His feet, at each resting-place. Nor did He require ascetic restrictions at table, for we find Him permitting the use of wine, bread, and honey, and of fish, flesh, and fowl. In Peter's house He invited others to eat with Him, and He readily accepted invitations, with all the customary refinements of the kiss of salutation, and foot-washing, and anointing even with the costliest perfume. The Pharisee atoned for his occasional entertainments by fasting on Mondays and Thursdays, but Jesus exposed Himself to the charge of indulgence, because He never practised even such inter-mittent austerities. Expense was, however, the exception and not the rule, for, He praised the Baptist for having nothing costly or effeminate in his dress, and He enjoined the strictest moderation, both in dress and living, on His disciples, which would be placed the former It is the great characteristic of Jesus that He elevated the common details of life to the lofticst uses, and ennobled even the familiar and simple. In His company, the evening meal, when not forgotten in the press of overwhelming labours, was an opportunity always gladly embraced for informal instruction, not only to the Twelve, but to the many strangers whom the easy manners of the East permitted to gather in the apartment. "After evening devotions, the family group invited the familiar and unconstrained exchange of thought, in which Jesus so much delighted. As the Father and Head of the circle, He would, doubtless, use the form of thanks and of blessing hallowed by the custom of His nation, opening the meal by the bread and wise passed round to be tasted by each, after acknowledgment of the bount turn: viewe hope, the tal Himse they b His he and ah His las be and withit bread! fonder strife o these h the lap their de In thi munism into a c had not tained f still kep self, He left to t were pro tality, no were pe have rec gifts of

was the

lee. B. Fre

cepted p

only use

tribute c

expressly

His pr

terval, in

son, or in time, in ]

were only

salutatio

setting or poor.

sm. 161 Even ind fasting, ations were There is, inis followers stoms, from le tunic and er Jews, but contrast to Nor can we their use the d. with long The counttraps, for the r their shape, ng the straps too strongly ling, to let us There was no aries thought inting of His g-place. Nor Him permitsh, and fowl. d He readily ts of the kiss h the costliest rtainments by limself to the n such intertion and not ing costly or moderation, the common familiar and forgotten in always gladly welve, but to t permitted to family group ight, in which the circle, He g hallowed by end and wine gment of the

crifices and bounty of God and His gifts. Then would follow a word to all in turn: the story of the day, and each one's share in it, would be reviewed with tender blame, or praise, or counsel; and the faith, and hope, and love of all would be refreshed by their very meeting round the table. How dear these hours of quict home life were to Jesus Himself, is seen in the tenderness with which He saw, in the group they brought around Him, His "children,"-as if they replaced in His heart the household affections of the family; and in the pain, and almost womanly fondness, with which He hesitated to pronounce His last farewell to them. To the disciples themselves, they grew to be an imperishable memory, which they were fain, in compliance with their Master's wish to prepetuate daily, in their breaking of bread! The greatness and condescension, the loving familiarity and fond endearments of close intercourse, the peace and quiet after the strife of the day, the feeling of security under His eye and care, made these hours a recollection that grew brighter and more sacred with the lapse of years, and deepened the longing for His return, or for their departure to be with Him.

In this delightful family life there was, however, nothing like communism, for there is not a trace of the property of each being thrown into a common fund. His disciples had, indeed, left all; but they had not sold it, to help the general treasury. Some of them still retained funds of their own, and the women who accompanied their still kept their property. When Jesus paid the Temple tax for Hinself, He did not think of doing so for His disciples as well. It was left to them to pay for themselves. The simple wants of each day were provided by free contributions, when not proffered by hospitality, nor did He receive even these from His disciples, though Rabbis were permitted to accept a honorarium from their scholars. Ye have received for nothing" said He, "give for nothing." He took no gifts of money from the people, nor did He let His disciples collect alms, as the Rabbis did their scholars. The only bounty He accepted was the hospitality and shelter always ready for Him in friendly Galilee. From the generous women who followed Him, He, indeed, accepted passing support, but, in contrast to the greed of the Rabbis; He only used their liberality for the need of the moment. His little circle was never allowed to suffer want, but was always able to distribute charity, and, though He seems to have carried no money. He expressly distinguishes both Himself and His disciples from the Door. ....

His presence among His disciples was seldom, even for a brief interval, interrupted. He might be summoned to heal some sick person, or invited to some meal; or He might wish to be alone, for a time, in His chamber or among the hills, while He prayed, but these were only absences of a few hours. It would seem as if the kiss of salutation in such cases greeted His return. He gave the word for tetting out on a journey, or for going by boat, and the disciples proeured what was needed by the way, if by land, and plied the oar, if on the Lake.

sick w

mistal

"O J

Mercit

name.

Peter :

oars re

the on knees;

and to

boatm

arms, v child.

"Whe

added,

"Woe

The ric

says,

they wi added

bent ov

howeve mother

demons

that you

be to hi

put our yourself

opposin

her face violent

out the

now bec

ceased, t passed o

her tear

on the s

subdued

is the do

daughter

wicked;

temple of broke ou went on.

Jesus, away, ai the seve

He always travelled on foot, and was often thankful for a draught of water, as He toiled along the hot sides of the white hills, or for a plece of bread, procured in some village through which He passed. Sometimes He went with His disciples, sometimes before them; leaving them to their own conversation, but noting and reproving, at once, their misunderstandings, or momentary misconceptions.

When a resting place had to be found for the night. He was wont to send on some of His disciples before, or He awaited an invitation on His arrival; His disciples sharing the proffered hospitality, or distributing themselves in other houses. The entertainment must have varied in different dwellings, from the simplicity of the prophets chamber where the Shunamite had provided a bed, a table, a stool, and a lamp, to the friendship, and busy womanly ministrations, and homage of lowly discipleship, of homes like the cottage of Bethany. Where He was welcomed, He entered with the invocation, "Peace be to this house"-but, unlike the Pharisees-without asking any questions as to the levitical cleanness of the house, or its tables, or benches, or vessels. It was very rarely, one would suppose, that He was not gladly received, but when at any time He met inhospitality He only went on to the next village. Sometimes He bore His rejec-tion silently, but at others, moved at their hardness, He shock the very dust of the town from His fect on leaving it, as a protest. When meekness could be shown He showed it, but where the circumstances demanded, He was as stern as commonly He was gentle.

It is not easy to realize the daily life of one so different from ourselves as Jesus, but a fine poetical mind has imagined the scene of the healing of Mary Magdalene, and the appearance and acts of Christ so finely, that I borrow some passages from his pen.

The landing-place at Capernaum was at the south side of the town. Thither the boats came that brought over wood from the forests of Gaulonitis, and thither the boat steered that bore Jesus, His four carliest disciples acting as boatmen. He had been on the other side of the Lake, and had returned now, in the evening. The sun was just setting, but a few beams seemed to have lingered to die away on His face, and the full moon rose, as if to see Him from behind the brown hills still bathed in purple. The soft evening wind had risen to cool His brow, and the waters, sparkling in the moonlight, rose and fell round the boat, and gently rocked it. As it touched the shore there were few people about, but a boat from Magdata lay near, with a sick person in it, whom it had taken her mother's utmost strength to hold, and keep from uttering loud cries of distress. She had been brought in the hope of finding Jesus, that He might cure her.

"Master," said John, "there is work yonder for you already." "I must always be doing the work of Him that sent me," replied Jesus; "the night cometh when no man can work." The mother of the sick woman had recognized Him at the first glance, for no one could mistake Him, and forth with cried out with a heart-rending voice, "O Jesus, our helper, and teacher, Thou messenger of the All-Merciful, help my poor child, -for the Holy One, plessed be His name, has heard my prayer that we should find Thee, and Thou us." Peter forthwith, with the help of the other two, who had let their oars rest idly on the water, turned the boat, so that it lay alongside the one from Magdala. Jesus now rose; the mother sank on her knees; but the sick woman tried with all her might to break away, and to throw herself into the water, on the fer side of the boat. The boatman, liowever, and John, who had sprung over, held her by the arms, while her mother buried her face in the long plaited hair of her child. Her tears had ceased to flow; she was lost in silent prayer. "Where are these people from?" asked Jesus of the boatman, and added, to His disciples, when He heard that she came from Magdala, "Woe to this Magdala, for it will become a ruin for its wickedness! The rich gifts it sends to Jerusalem will not help it, for, as the prophet says, 'They are bought with the wages of uncleanness, and to that they will again return.'" 'Turn her face to me that I may see her.' added He. It was not easy to do this, for the sick one held her face. bent over, as far as possible, towards the water. John managed it, however, by kind words. "Mary," said he, for he had asked her mother her name, "do you wish to be for ever under the power of demons? See, the conqueror of demons is before thee, look on Him, that you may be healed. We are all praying for you, as Moses, peace be to him, once prayed for his sister, — O God, heal her. Do not put our prayer to share; now is the moment when you can make yourself and your mother happy." These words told; and no louger opposing strength to strength, she let them raise her head, and turn her face to Jesus. But when she saw Him, her whole body was so violently convulsed, that the boat swayed to and fro, and she shrieked out the most piercing wails, which sounded far over the Lake.

Jesus, however, fixed His eyes on hers, and kept them from turning away, and as He gazed, His look seemed to enter her soul, and break the sevenfold chain in which it lay bound. The poor raving creature now became quiet and did not need to be held; her convulsions ceased, the contortions of her features, and the wildness of her eyes, passed off, and profuse sweat burst from her brow, and mingled with her tears. Her mother stepped back, and the healed one sank down on the spot where her mother had been praying, and muttered, with subdued trembling words, to Jesus,—"O Lord, I am a great sinner; is the door of repentance still open for me?" "Be comforted, my daughter," answered He, "God has no pleasure in the death of the wicked; thou hast been a habitation of evil spirits, become now a temple of the living God." The mother, unable to restrain herself, broke out—"Thanks' to Thee, Thou Consolation of Israel," but He went on,—"Return now, quickly, to Magdala, and be calm, and give

1 the oar, if

r a draught ills, or for a He passed. them; leaveproving, at tions. ont e was wont n invitation ality, or disit must have he prophet's able, a stool, trations, and of Bethany. ion, "Peace asking any its tables, or pose, that He inhospitality, ore His rejecle shook the rotest. When circumstances ent from ourthe scene of acts of Christ

c of the town. the forests of sus, His four the other side The sun was to dle away m behind the ind had risen ight, rose and hed the shore lay near, with nost strength She had been re her. already." "T replied Jesus; other of the thanks to God in silence." John stepped back into the boat to Jesns, and the other boat shot out into the Lake, on the way-home. The two women sat on the middle seat. Mary held her mother in her arms in grateful thanks, and neither spoke, but both kept their eyes fixed on Jesus, till the shore, jutting out westwards, hid Him from their sight.

When the boat with the women was gone, Peter bound his to the post to which the other had been tied, but Jesus sat still in deep thought, without looking round, and the disciples remained motionless beside Him, for reverence forbade them to ask Him to go ashore. Meanwhile, the people of Capernaum, men, women, and children, streamed down in bands; some soldiers of the Roman-Herodian garrison, and some strange faces from Perea, Decapolis, and Syria, among them.

The open space had filled, and now Peter ventured to whisper, in: a low voice which concealed his impatience. "Maranu we Rabbinu-Our Lord and Master-the people have assembled and wait for Thee." On this Jesus rose. Peter made a bridge from the boat to the shore with a plank, hastening across to make it secure, and to open the way; for the crowd was very dense at the edge of the water. Christ now left the boat, followed by the three other disciples and, when He had stepped ashore, said to Peter,-"Schim'on Kefa"-for thus He addressed him when He had need of his faithful and zealous service in the things of the kingdom of God-11 shall take my stand under the palm-tree yonder." It was hard, however, to make way through the crowd, for those who had set themselves nearest the water were mostly sick people, to whom the others, from compassion, had given the front place. Indeed, Jesus had scarcely landed, before cries for help rose, in different dialects, and in every form of appeal. Rabbi, Rabboni," "Holy One of the Must Hight" "Son of David!" "Son of God1" mingled one with the other. Jesus, however, waving them back with His hand, said, "Let me pass! to night is not to be for the healing of your bodily troubles, but that you may hear the word of life, for the good of your souls." On hearing this they pressed towards flim, that they might at least touch Him. When, at last, with the help of His disciples, He made His way to the palm, He motioned to the people to sit down on the grass. The knoll from which the palm rose was only a slight one, but when the crowd had sat down in rows, it sufficed to raise Him sufficiently above them. The men sat on the ground, leaving any better spots for the women and children.

It is a mistake to think of Jesus standing while He taught. He stood in the synagogue at Nazareth while the Prophets were being read, but He sat down to teach. He sat as He taught in the Temple, and when He addressed the multitude whom He had miraculously fed; and when He spoke from Simon Peter's boat, He did so sitting. Under the palm lay a large stone, on which many had sat before,

The I was n made simple sudar. which prescri require grey had moved became the rip As H on His The pe ing a C Rabban Sons. and the Moses, Lord ye shall ve Amen, No man but the louder v heavy-la learn of for your drawing ofcheav and the have wh money a ears to h nori fion DEL DAY to en

oli dan niod yu alquist yhuchu,m yhuchu,m anising ordiat e then

COLLER , IVOLUGE

476

to enjoy the view over the Lake, or the shade of the branches above. The Rabbis often chose such open air spots for their addresses. There was nothing extraordinary, therefore, when Jesus sat down on it, and made it His pulpit. His dress was clean and carefully chosen, but simple. On His head, held in its place by a cord, He wore a white sudar, the ends of which hung down His shoulders. Over His tunic, which reached to the hands and feet, was a blue Tallith, with the prescribed tassels at the four corners, but only as large as Moses required. It was so thrown over Him, and so held together, that the grey red strip d under garment was little seen, and His feet, which had sandals, not shoes, were only noticed occasionally, when He moved. When He had sat down and looked over the people, they became stiller and stiller, till nothing was heard but the soft plash of the ripple on the beach.

the ripple on the beach. As He sat on the stone, Simon and Andrew, the sons of Jonas, stood on His right and left hand, with James and John, the sons of Zabdai. The people stood around the slope, for as yet Rabbis were heard, standing "Sickness came into the world," says the Talmud, "when Rabban Gamaliel died, and it became the rule to hear the Law sitting." "Sons of Israel, Men of Galilee," He began, "the time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God has come: repent, and believe the Gospel. Moses, your teacher, peace be to him, has said A prophet willt he Lord your God raise unto you from your brethren, like unto me. Him shall ye hear i But he who will not hear this prophet shall die! Amen I say unto you: He who believes on me has everlasting life. No man knows the Father but the Son, and no man knows the Son but the Father, and he to whom the Son reveals Him," Then, with a louder voice, He continued, "Come to me, all ye that labour and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest for your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Then, drawing to a close, He added, "Take on you, the yoke of the kingdom of heaven, for the kingdom of heaven is the fulfilling of the Law and the Prophets. Give, up that which is worth little, that you may have what is of great price. Become wise changers who value holy money above all other, and the pearl of price above all. He that has ears to hear, let him hear in stigent beth nost the plan mail for mail The motional institution and the aten and an an an an an an and an and bud, by one with a still with an end of the sector of the address of the sector of the confidence win rout - it arrithman rear and an arrowing a line of their approve and the story as son Messager and the solution of the table of the

And this may any any angle of the second solution, which there is the second of the se me. The ner in her their eyes Him from his to the l in deep d motiongo ashore. l children, rodian garand Syria, t to Jesus.

whisper, in Rabbinu t for Thee." o the shore o open the ter. Christ , and, when "-for thus and zealous Il take my er to make s nearest the compassion, nded, before m of appeal. n of David!" ever, waving t is not to be nay hear the ig this they n. When, at to the palm, he knoll from e crowd had above them. the women taught. He is were being in the Temple, miraculously did so sitting ad sat before, to the second se was la

lenged Even suspec stance

superh

Rabbis

the sha of then

were di

had cu

sides w

tion, fai not the

pected a on beha

"When

has don

just been ous to the sistence. The I whether to super

He cast exorcists

ferer was spells, an tions of t of the se which sto

and angel

had been

pressed in

Nights in

The cal doubtful

all agencie vah"-cal

exorcists-

number, o

secret may brought or the holy o

And he sai

secret nam

THE summer passed in a succession of excitements and an unbroken recurrence of exhausting toil. Wherever Jesus appeared He was sur-rounded by crowds, anxious to see and to hear. The sick everywhere pressed in His way, and friends brought the bed-ridden and helpless to Him, from all quarters. From easy morning till night, day by day, without respite, there was a strain on mind, heart, and body, alike, Even the retirement of the house in which He might be resting could not save Him from intruding crowds, and time or free space for meals was hardly to be had. Such tension of His whole nature must have told on Him, and must have affected His whole ner vous and physical system. To be continually surrounded by misery, in every form, is itself distressing; but, in addition to this, to be kept on the strain by the higher spiritual excitement of a great religious crisis, and to be overtaxed in mere physical demands, could not fail to show results, in careworn features, feverishness of the brain. and the need of temporary quiet and rest. "Yet sympathy was felt for Him only by a few. The thoughtless crowds did not realize that they were consuming in the fires of its own devotion the nature they intended to honour, and His enemies, seeing everything only through the disturbing light of their hatred, invented a theory for it all that was sinister enough. Will Tobilt hill data wirt, blokkanstizen Bubolistani The continued and increasing support Jesus received from the people.

was a daily growing evil in the eyes of the ecclesiastical authorities. They were in danger of losing their authority, which they identified with the interests of orthodoxy, and national favour with God. They had let Him choose four or five disciples, without feeling alarmed, for a movement as yet so insignificant was almost beneath their notice. The choice of a publican as one of this handful had, indeed, apparently neutralized any possible danger, by the shock it gave to public feel. ing. The further choice of the Twelve was, however, more serious. It seemed like consolidation, and progress towards open schism" There were, already, parties in Judaism, but there were no sects, for all were alike fanatically loyal to the Law, the Temple, and the Scribes, and ready to unite against any one who was not as much so as themselves. in their own sense. Criticism was utterly proscribed: blind worship of things as they were was imperatively required, and, hence, Jesus, with His free examination of received opinions, provoked the bitterest hostility. As long, however, as He had no following He was little dreaded, but signs of organization and permanence, such as the choice of the Twelve, and the growing enthusiasm of the people towards Him, determined the authorities on vigorous action." Information ad he said to the holy Michnel that he should be wait to them that as not it are thighter and that in, it and that this many it for the content there it for a

to enjoy t The Labor was hiddan ienaidanat ishyter, a susper, a unbroken le was surverywhere theipless to ay by day, body, alike. be resting, free space hole nature whole ner led by misto this, to be great religls, could not of the brain, thy was felt t realizo that nature they only through for it all that UTHIO STREET

m the people. l authorities ey identified God. They alarmed, for their hotice. d, apparently o public feelmore serious. histi There . , for all were Scribes, and is themselves, lind worship hence, Jesus, d the bitterest He was little as the choice eople towards Information t of bies on bi ret pagam, the

was laid against Him at Jerusalem, where He had already been challenged, and Rabbis were sent down to investigate the whole question,

Every movement which did not rise in the Rabbinical schools was suspected by the Rabbis and their disciples, and there were circumstances in that of Jesus, which were especially formidable. The superhuman powers. He displayed could not be questioned, and the Rabbia could boast of nothing as imposing. They were falling into the shade. Respect was growing for Jesus among the people, in spite of them. His claims were daily urged more frankly, and the masses were disposed to assent to, them. On His return to Capernaum Ho had cured a man who was blind, dumb, and mad, and possessed besides with a devil; and so astounding a miracle had raised the question, far and wide, whether, in spite of their former ideas, He were not the Son, of David, the Messiah, after all. Men had, indeed, expected an outward political kingdom, with a blaze of miracle wrought on behalf of the nation at large, but they began to ask each other, "When the Christ cometh will He do more miracles than this man has done?" It could not be endured. The movement of John had just been crushed, and, now, in restless Galilee, one far more dangerous to the Jerusalem authorities was rapidly taking shape and consistence. It must be put down at any cost.

The Rabbis from the capital, reverend and grey, did not know whether to be more bitter at the discredit thrown on their own claims to supernatural powers, or at the popular favour shown to Jesus. He cast out devils, indeed, but so did they, and their disciples, the exorcists. It was enough for Him, however, to speak, and the sufferer was cured of all ailments alike, while they used adjurations, spells, and magic formulæ which were dangerously like the superstitions of the despised heathens. They laid stress on their knowledge of the secret, names of God, and the angels. To utter the cipher which stood for these, was, in their belief, to set in motion the diving and angelic powers themselves, and a whole science of the black art had been invented, defining how and for what ends they could be pressed into the service of their invoker, like the genii of the Arabian Nights into that of a magician.

The calm dignity and simplicity of Jesus, contrasted with their, doubtful rites, was, indeed, humiliating to them. The mightiest of all agencies at their command was the unutterable name of "Jehovah"—called in the Book of Enoch, in the jargen of the Rabbinical exorcists—the oath Akâl and "the number of Kesbeel." By this number, or oath, it was held, all that is has its being. It had also a secret magical power. It was made known to men by the wicked angels—t", the sons of God"—who allied themselves with women, and brought on the flood; "It was revealed by the Head of the Oath to the holy ones who dwell above in majesty; and his name is Beqa. And he said to the holy Michael that he should reveal to them that secret name, that they might see it, and that they might use it for an

FLUEN, 11

terro of de Th

that widel and fi that t

amon

took o words

out de the we in varj

file; th god,"-

him wa

of all k him, in win the not adn

necessar that light

contract them, an enemy o They devil; E demon mad."

into His

Jesus

them, in life was Was it 1 of the d

moral ar

after all. He only

Could He What a r.

coming e

the weap

dom is in in process

had still n

480 THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

12th

oath, that they who reveal to the sons of men all that is hidden, may shrink away before that name and that onth. And this is the rower of that oath, and these are its secret works, and these things were established by the swearing of it. The heaven was hung up for ever and ever (by il), before the world was created. By it the earth was founded above the water, and the fair streams come by it for the use of the living, from the hidden places of the hills, from the foundation of the earth, for ever. And by that oath was the sea made, and underneath it He spread the sand, to restrain it in the time of its rage, and it dare not overstep this bound from the creation of the world to cternity. And through that oath the abysses are confirmed, and stand, and move not from their place, from eternity to eternity. And through that oath the sun and the moon fulfil their course, and turn not aside from the path assigned them, for ever and ever. And through that oath the stars fulfil their course, and He calls their names, and they answer, from eternity to eternity. And even so the spirits of the waters, of the winds, of all airs, and their ways, accord-ing to all the combinations of the spirits. And by that oath are the treasuries of the voice of the thunder and of the brightness of the lightning maintained, and the treasuries of the rain, and of the hoar frost, and of the clouds, and of the rain, and of the dew. And over them all this oath is mighty."

Possessing spells so mighty as they believed the secret names of the higher powers thus to be, the Rabbis had created a vast science of magic, as fantastic as that of mediaeval superstition, to bring these awful powers to bear on the mysteries of the future, and the diseases and troubles of the present. Combinations of humbers of lines, or of letters based on them, were believed to put them at the service of the secr, or the exorcist. Resistless talismans, protecting amulets, fright ful curses, by which miracles could be wrought, the sick healed, and demons put to flight, were formed in this way. Armed with a mystic text from the opening of Genesis, or the visions of 'Ezekiel, or the secret name of God, or of some of the angels, or with secret mysterious unjons of letters, the Rabbis who dealt in the dark arts had the power to draw the moon from heaven, or to open the abysses of the earth! The uninitiated saw only unmeaning signs in their most awful formulae, but he who could reckon their mystic value aright was master of angelic or even divine attributes.

The appearance of Jesus as a miracle-worker so different from themselves, must have excited the Rabbinical schools greatly. They made no little gain from their exorcisms, and now they were in danger of being wholly discredited. At a loss what to do, they determined to slander what they could not deny, and attribute the miracles of Jesus to a league with the devil. They had, indeed, for some time back been whispering this insinuation about, to poison the minds of the people against Him, as an emissary of Satan, and thus, necessarily, a disguised enemy of Israel, and of man. It would raise superstitious terror, if they could brand Him as a mere instrument of the kingdom of darkness

FITOR. IP 7

iden, may

hings were up for ever

earth was

for the use foundation de and unof its tage

the world to firmed, and to eternity.

course, and

e calls their

d even so the ways, accord. t oath are the htness of the i of the hoar w. And over cret names of vast science of

o bring these

d the diseases

of lines, or of service of the

mulets, fright

ck healed, and with a mystic Ezekiel, or the secret mystek arts had the abysses of the eir most awful ue aright was different from greatly. They ey were in dan-

do, they deter-

ute the miracles

for some time

on the minds of

hus, necessarily,

isc superstitious

The cure of a map, blind, dumb, and possessed, was so astounding, that the Rabbis ventured to spread their malignant slanders more widely than heretofore. Jesus had retired to Peter's house, wearied and faint, after the miracle, but the multitude were so greatly excited that they crowded into the room, so that He could not even cat, and among them the Jerusulem Scribes, who were so bitter against Him, took care to find themselves. He read their faces, and knew their words. This fellow, unauthorized and uneducated as He is, casts out devils, under Beelzebub, as their prince." They believed that the world of evil spirits, like that of the angels, formed a great army, in various divisions, each with its head and subordinates, its rank and file: the whole under the command of Satan. Beelzebub-the "fifth god,"-was the name given by Jewish wit and contempt to Beelzebul. -"the lord of the (royal) habitation"-a god of the Phenicians. To him was assigned the control of that division which inflicted disease of all kinds on man, and Jesus, they hinted, was playing a part under him, in pretending to drive out devils from the sick, that He might win the people to listen to His pestiferous teaching. They would not admit that His power was divine, and the ideas of the times necessarily assumed that it must be the opposite. It was of no avail that light streamed in on them; for bigotry, like the pupil of the eye, contracts in proportion to the outward brightness. He was, with them, an emissary and champion of the kingdom of the devil, and an enemy of God.

They even went farther. Not only was He in league with the devil; He Himself was possessed with an unclean spirit, and the demon in Him had turned His brain; "He had a devil, and was They had spread this far and wide, and yet, ventured, now mad."

into His presence. Jesus at once challenged them for their slanders, and brought them, in the presence of the multitude, to an account. "His whole life was before the world. The aim and spirit of it were transparent. Was it not expressly to fight against the evil and confused spirit of the day; to overthrow all wickedness and all evil; to restore moral and spiritual soundness in the people; did He not strive after all this, with the fulness of His power? Who could deny that He only sought good, and spent all His energy to advance it? And could He league Himself with the prince of darkness to do good? What a ridiculous, self-contradictory charge! To think of Him overcoming evil by evil; fighting against the kingdom of darkness, with the weapons of darkness, was almost too foolish to repeat! No kingdom is in conflict with itself, or if there be division in it, it is already in process of dissolution, for it needs nothing more to bring it quickly to run.". There was no answering such an argument. But Jesus had still more to say a mouth a statistic me a statistic still be a statistic statisti

111

that I

and j judg

tho d castin

word

and th

selves

good i

blasph

evil,

the lip

lips of

But, b

the be

Spinit.

Messial

will the

: At th

blies, H

demand

agent of iu supp

every pe

their lea

and Jos

claimant

Fadus,

Israol w prophet did those of Olives

into the signs of temptati

by a mir

of His o

resting of larity or power on the scdu

wildernes —"unfai

sign, gran

predictin

given it,

"If I," said He, "cast out devile by the power of Beelzebuh, by whom do your disciples cast them out? You do not attribute their works to the prince of devils, why do you do so with mine? But if I do these things by the power of God, I prove myself to be sent from Him, and to be His Messiah, and where the Messiah is, there also is His Kingdom. Do you still hesitate to draw this conclusion? Ask yourselves, then, how I can invade the kingdom of Satan, and take from him his servants, instruments, and victims, the sick, and the possessed, without having first overcome himself? The strong man's palace can only be spoiled when he, himself, is first bound. It is no light matter to put yourselves in the position you take towards me. He who is not with me, is, as may be seen in your case, my enemy No neutrality between the Messiah and the devil is possible. If you do not help, with me, to gather in the harvest, you scatter it, and hinder its being gathered!"

The arguments of Jesus were so irresistible that the Rabbis, taken in the spares they had set for Him, could say nothing, and, now while they were silenced before the people they had striven to pervert. He advanced from defence to attack. They claimed to be the rightcous of the land, but had no idea of what true righteousness meant. Jesus had come to offer forgiveness to sinners, not to judge them. He desired rather to deliver them from their guilt. But He saw that His enemies, the theologians and clergy of the day, and the privileged classes generally, had determined to reject Him, whatever proofs of His divine mission He might advance. Their prejudices and selfinterest had blinded them till their religious faculty was destroyed. They had deliberately refused to be convinced, and conscience grows dead if its convictions are slighted. The heart gets incapable of see ing the truth against which it has closed itself. They dared to speak of the Holy Spirit of God who inspired the New Kingdom, and in whose fulness Jesus wrestled against selfishness and ambition, soothed the woes of the people, opened a pure and heavenly future, and sought to win men to eternal life, as a spirit of evil. Light was to them darkness, and darkness light. They even sought to quench the light in its source by plotting against His life. This He told them, was blasphemy against the Divine Spirit. They had wilfully rejected the clear revelation of His presence and power, and had shown deliberate and conscious enmity against Him. "This awful sin," said He. "cannot be forgiven, because, when it occurs, the religious faculty has been voluntarily destroyed, and wilful, declared opposition to heavenly truth has possessed the soul as with a devil." "To speak against me as a man," He continued, "and not recognize me as the Messiah, is not a hopeless sin, for better knowledge, a change of heart, and faith, may come, and I may be acknowledged. But it is different when the truth itself is blasphemed; when the Holy Spirit, by whom alone the heart can be changed, is contemned as evil. The soul has then shut out the light, and has chosen darkness as its portion.

188

lzebub, ty ibute their T But If I e sent from here also is sion? Ask a, and take ck; and the trong man's diu It Is no towards me. my enemy blo. If you atter it, and But, Butterry labbis, taken g, and, now, en to pervert, be the rightsness meant. judge them. He saw that the privileged ver proots of lices and selfas destroyed. science grows apable of see lared to speak gdom, and in bition, soothed Light was to to quench the He told' them, ilfully rejected d had shown is awful sin?" s, the religious red opposition nize me as the a change of red. But it is he Holy Spirit, d as evilor The s as its portion. "I warn you to heware of speaking thus any longer. Either decide that the tree is good and its fruit consequently good, or that it is bad and its fruit bad, but do not act so foolishly as you have done in your judgment on me; by calling the tree bad-that is, calling me a tool of the devil, and yet ascribing good fruit to me-such, I mean, as the casting out devils. Do not think what you say is mere words, for words rise from the heart, as if from the root of the man: as the tree and the stem, such is the fruit. See that you do your duty by yourselves, that the tree of your own spiritual being be good and bear good fruit. The tree is known by its fruits. It is no wonder you blaspheme as you have done; a generation of vipers, your hearts are evil, and you are morally incapable of acknowledging the truth, for the lips speak as the heart feels. Witness to the truth flo " from the lips of the good; such language as yours, from the lips of the evil. But, beware, for I tell you that, as such words are the utterance of the heart and show how you are affected towards God and His Spirit, you will have to give account of them when I come as the Messiah, to judgment. The Nour words respecting me and my Kingdom will then justify or condemn you?" atte at the rest is the most becautary [ At this point, as was common in the most solemn Jewish assemblies. He was interrupted by some of the Rabbis present. They demanded in strange contradiction to the theory that He was a secret agent of Beelzebub, some astounding miracle; as a sign from heaven in support of His claims as the Messiah: as hereafter they did, in every part of the world, from the Apostles. The masses, and even their leaders, expected the repetition of all the great deeds of Moses and Joshua; to inaugurate the coming of the Messiah, and other claimants did not venture to resist the demand. Under the Procurator Fadus, a certain Theudas drew out the people to the Jordan to see Israel walk through, once more, on dry ground. Under Felix, a prophet promised to throw down the walls of Jerusalem, as Joshua did those of Jericho, and gathered thirty thousand men on the Mount of Olives to see them fall Others invited the nation to follow them into the wilderness, where they promised to show them stupendous signs of the kingdom of God having come. It might have seemed a temptation to One possessing supernatural power, to silence all cavil by a miracle of irresistible grandeur. But outward acknowledgment of His olaims was of no worth in a kingdom like that of Christ's. resting on love, and homage to holiness. He cared nothing for popularity or fame, and lived in unbroken self-restraint, using His mighty power only to further spiritual ends. It was easy, therefore, to repel the seduction, which He had already overcome in His first great wilderness struggle in the and adulterous generation," said He -"unfaithful to God, who chose Israel for His bride asks for a sign, grand beyond all I have given, that I am the Messiah." Then, predicting His violent death, He went on-"There shall be no sign given it, but that of the prophet Jonah. For, as he was three days

1 2-3512413

2 2 2

84

nue poil i terme en-oi, toris t and three nights in the belly of the fish, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the kingdom of the dead,", The spiritual miracle of His life and words were the only signs He could vouchsafe while He lived, for at no time did He lay stress on miracles alone as a means of gaining disciples, but subordinated them to His proclamation of the Truth. His preaching would itself be a sign like that of the preaching of Jonah to the Ninevites, ""The men of that city," said He, "would rise in the judgment day, to witness against this generation, for they repented at the preaching of Jonah, and He was greater than that prophet. The Queen of the South, who came from Sheba to hear the wisdom of Solomon, would then condomn them, for she came from the uttermost parts of the earth, and great as they thought the glory of Solomon, they had one greater than he before them, in Himself. Vast multitudes had gone out to hear John. and had professed repentance; vast multitudes had followed Himself, and, yet, the result had been only temporary and superficial. It would prove with this generation as with a man from whom an unclean spirit has for a time gone out. Meeting no suiting rest elsewhere, it returns, and finding its former dwelling in the man's soul ready for it, it allies itself with seven demons still worse than itself. and with their help enters the man once more. The Reformation under John, and under Himself, was only temporary; the nation would fall back again to its old sinful ways, and become worse than ever." He foresaw His rejection, and thus foretold it, sie wolf he are He had silenced the Rabbis, and no doubt by doing so had intensified their hatred, but a new trial awaited Him. The insinuation. that His brain was affected had reached His family, who still lived at Nazareth. The effects of the exhausting toil, and constant excitement of these months, had, apparently, led even His friends to fear that He would give way under such tension, and, now, the hints of the Rabbis that He was possessed, and spoke and acted as He did, under demoniacal influence, raised the fear that judicial action would be begun against Him, on the part of the Jerusalem authorities. Very possibly the simple household at Nazareth, who, like other Jews, must have looked on the Rabbis with superstitious reverence, and have shrunk from questioning anything they said, had innocently, accepted the insinuation, that He was really out of His mind, as a result of being possessed. Prejudiced in favour of the common idea of the Messiah as a national hero, at the head of Jewish armies, they had not risen to any higher conception, and felt impelled by every motive to interfere, and, if possible, put a stop to what seemed to them an unaccountable course of action on His part. It was only about ten hours' distance from Nazareth to Capernaum, over the hills; they would go and see for themselves; and so, Mary, and the brothers and sisters of Jesus-the whole household, for Joseph was dead-set out for Peter's nouse. For if the MEW best to entan all many They arrived while the crowd, excited by the miracle they had fust see stillfille overawe Him fr Him, th the Rab Him ho for a tin hoped. It is wo -especi as He d things a on the e

On co way thre know th any moi relations but muc supreme had hard its great deathless asked He towards my bret Heaven, same ans a woman aloud he nursed I hear the It was to Himse did: It even of ] out the p moreover Head, an supreme and the shadowe nations. was no l the earth open the just seen, and half believing that Jesus must be the expected Messiah, still filled the house and thronged the courtyard, so that the Rabbis, overawed, could do nothing against Him, Anxious to withdraw Him from His dangerous course, and unable as yet to understand Him, they had come to the conclusion, perhaps at the instigation of the Rabbis, that the best plan would be to lay hold on Him, and take Him home by force, as one beside Himself. If they could keep Him for a time at Nazareth; if necessary, under restraint; the quiet, they hoped, would calm His mind and free Him from His hallucinations. It is wonderful that they could argue with themselves in such a way, —especially that Mary could have fancied it madness that He acted as He did and called Himself the Messiah; but vision, in spiritual things as in nature, depends, not on the flood of light around us, but on the eye on which it falls.

of Man be lead."; The

as He could

on miracles

hem to His

e a sign like

men of that

ness against

nah, and He

1, who came

en condemn

h, and great

ater than he

o hear John,

ved Himself,

perficial. It

m whom an

ing rest else-

e man's soul

than itself.

Reformation

; the nation

e worse than

Attender Franch

so had inten-

e insinuation.

ho still lived

istant.excite-

iends to fear.

the hints of.

1 as He did,

action would orities. Very

other Jews,

verence, and

d innocently.

is mind, as a common idea

armies, they

lled by every

at seemed to.

It was only

um, over the

Iary, and the

r Joseph was cle they had.

On coming near, however, they found they could not make their, way through the crowd, and had to request those near to let Him know their presence, and that they wished to speak with Him. At, any moment when busy with the work of the Kingdom, all lower, relations, bonds, and cares; of His earlier life, ceased to engage Him, but much more was it so at a time like this, when engrossed with its supreme interests, and with the victory over its enemies which He. had hardly as yet completed. The most sacred of earthly ties lost its greatness before the grandeur of spiritual kinship in the new, deathless communion He was founding. "Who is my mother?" asked He, "and who are my brethren?". Then, stretching His hands towards those around Him-" Behold," said He, "my mother and my brethren! For whosoever shall do the will of my Father in Heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother.". It was the same answer, in effect, as He had, perhaps before this, given, when, a woman in the crowd, unable to restrain herself, had expressed aloud her sense of the surpassing honour of her who had borne and nursed Him. " Yea," replied He, "rather, blessed are they that hear the Word of God and keep it."

It was from no want of tenderness Jesus thus spoke. A holy duty to Hinself, His honour, and His calling, demanded His acting as He did. It was imperative that He should keep Himself from the hands even of His nearest friends, to prevent their unconsciously carrying out the plans of His enemies, by violently restraining Him. He had, moreover, founded a new family of which He was the Spiritual Head, and this, henceforth, as it spread among men, was to be His supreme earthly relationship. The ready faith of the Samaritans, and the surpassing example of the heathen centurion, had foreshadowed the extension of the New Kingdom, beyond Israel, to all nations. To do the will of mere men, whether priests, or Rabbis, was no longer the condition of heavenly favour. Henceforth, over the earth, to do the will of God was the one condition required to open the gates of the way of life.

you h

vour

both t

(chari

a prov

for a s

Pharis

truello

eiples

mint,

wrong

herbs,

much

hypoci

the sy

in the

tations

vou! v

thinkin

Men th

you is

C A R

said he

but us.

"lawy

ye bur

selves.

should create

not aff

unto ye

in who

so migl

no shar

while i

the dec

reveren

you ar

these to

when I

apostle

blood o

may be of Zacl

I sav 1

guidan

did!7 .X

Folled in their attempt to brand Jesus publicly as in league with the devil, the Pharisees resolved to try the subtler plan of pretending friendliness, and inviting Him to partake of their hospitality, that they might watch, what He said, and, if possible, provoke Him to commit Himself in some way that would bring Him within the reach of the Law. It was yet early, and one of them asked Him, with this treacherous object, to join the light morning meal, then lately introduced into Palestine by the Romans. He accepted the invitation. with a full knowledge of the spirit in which it had been given. It had been expected, perhaps, that the honour of entertainment in a circle of Rabbis, would awe a layman of humble standing like Jesus, but He took care to show His true bearing towards them from the moment He reclined at table. Washing the hands before eating was, in all cases, a vital requirement of Pharisaic duty. A Rabbi would rather have suffered death than eat before he had done so. "It is better," said Rabbi Akiba, "in a time of persecution, to die of thirst than to break the commandment, and thus die eternally,""and proceeded to wash his hands before touching food, with the allowance of drinking water brought him by his jailor. But observance of Pharisaic rules required much more. Christ had just come from among a crowd, and had, besides, cast out a devil, and, thus doubly defiled, ought to have purified Himself by a bath, before coming to table with those who were Levitically clean. A Pharise always bathed himself before eating, on coming from the market-place, to wash away the defilement of contact with the unclean multitude, and it was to have been expected that Jesus would have been equally scrupulous. He had committed Himself, however, to uncompromising opposition to a system which substituted forms for true spiritual religion, and took His place on the couch without any ceremonial purification. The host and his guests were astonished, and betrayed, at least in their looks, their real feelings towards Him; bitter enough before, but now fiercer than ever, at this deliant affront to their cherished usages, the table to the probability of the plat the bring of Roused by their uncourteous hostility, He instantly took His position of calm independence and superiority, for He feared no human face, nor any combination of human violence. Knowing perfectly that He was alone against the world. He felt that the Truth required Him to witness for it, come what might to Himself.

"I see," said He, "what you are thinking. You Pharisees clean the outside of the cup and the platter, but you fill both, within, with the gains of hypocritical robbery and wickedness; you cleanse the outside of a cup, and think nothing of your own souls being, full of all evil. Fools! did not He who made the outside of a cup make the inside as well? As He made all outward and visible things, has He not also made all inward and spiritual? How absurd to take so much care of the one, and to neglect the other! Let me tell you how you may attain true purification. Give with willing, loving hearts, what league with f pretending pitality, that oke Him to in the reach m. with this lately introe invitation. n given. It inment in a g like Jesus, em from the e cating was, Rabbi would so. infit is die of thirst y "and prohe allowance bservance of t come from thus doubly re coming to risee always rket-place, to ultitude, and been equally ncompromistrue spiritual ceremonial and betrayed, bitter enough ront to their ent til out on ook His posied no human ing perfectly ruth required THAT OIL 1-19 aricees clean within, with u cleanse the u cleanse the being full of cup make the nings, has Ha take so much you how you hearts, what you have in your cups and platters, as alms, and this will make all your ceremonial washings of the outside superfluous, and cleanse both the vessels and your hearts. The Rabbis have told you that charity is worth all other virtues together,' but your covetousness is a proverb, for you devour widows' houses, and have invented excuses for a son robbing even his father for your good." But wee to you, Pharisees! for it is vain to expect this of you, who know nothing of true love. You lay stress on external trifles, and neglect the principles and duties of the inner life-you tithe petty garden herbs, like mint, and rue, and all kinds besides, and are indifferent to right and wrong, and to the love of God." If you wish to tithe the garden herbs, it is well to do so, but you should be as zealous for what is much more important." Your vanity is as great as your grasping hypocrisy! Woe unto you, Phar isces! for ye love the chief seats in the synagogues, and to be flattered by men rising up as you pass in the crowded market place, and greeting you with reverend salutations of Rabbi Rabbi, your reverence, your reverence. So Woe unto you! you are like graves sunk in the earth, over which men walk? thinking the ground clean, and are defiled when they least suspect it; Men think themselves with saints if in your company, but to be near you is to be near pollution !" of the second but but the same a same A Rabbi among the guests here interrupted Him. " Teacher," said he, "you are condemning not only the common lay Pharisees, but us, the Rabbis." The interruption only directed Jesus against the "lawyers" specially. Woe to you, lawyers, also ?? said He. " for ye burden men with burdens grievous to be borne, while ye, your selves, touch not these burdens with one of your fingers to help the shoulders to bear them. Ye sit in your chambers and schools, and create legal rules, endless, harassing, intolerable, for the people, but not affecting yourselves, -shut out as you are from busy life. Woe unto you! for ye build the tombs of the prophets, but your fathers. in whose acts you glory, killed them. Shame for their having done so might make you wish those sacred tombs forgotten; but you have no shame, and rebuild these tombs to win favour with the people. while in your hearts you are ready to repeat to the prophets of to-day the deeds of your fathers towards those of old! "Your pretended reverence for these martyrs, shown in restoring their sepulchres, while you are ready to repeat the wickedness of their murderers, makes these tombs a witness against you. The Holy Spirit had this in view, when He said by Me, sometime since, "I will send them prophets and aposties, and some of them they will persecute and kill; that the blood of all the prophets, shed from the foundation of the world? may be required of this generation-from the blood of Abel to that . of Zachariah, who perished between the altar and the Temple." Yes, I say unto you, it will be required of this generation." Under the guidance of you lawyers it was, that the people treated them as they did! Whe to you! you have taken away from the nation the key to the temple of heavenly knowledge—have made them incapable of recognizing the truth,—by your teaching. You, yourselves, have not entered, and you have hindered those from entering who were on the point of doing so!"

The die was finally cast, Henceforth Jesus stood consciously alone, the rejected of the leaders of His nation. There was before Him only a weary path of persecution, and, at its end, the Cross. An incident, recorded by St, Luke, seems to belong to this period, The multitudes thronging to hear the new teaching were daily greater, in spite of the hostility of the Rabbis, for their calumnies and insinuations had not yet abated the general excitement. "An innumerable multitude" waited for the reappearance of Jesus, and hung on His lins to catch every word. He might be attacked and slandered in the house of the Pharisee, but, as yet, the crowd looked on Him with astonishment and respect. Opinions differed only as to the scope of His action: that He was a great Rabbi, was felt by all. It was the custom to refer questions of all kinds to the Rabbis for their counsel and decision, which carried great weight, though it might be informal and extra-judicial. Their words were virtually law, for to dispute or oppose them was well-nigh criminal. To get the support of one so great as Jesus, therefore, in any matter, would, as it seemed, decide a point at once in his favour whom He supported.

One of the crowd, reasoning thus, chose an opportunity to solicit His weighty interference in a question of inheritance, in which there was a strife with a brother. "Teacher," said he, "speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me." But he had utterly misconceived Christ's spirit and sphere. In the briefest and most direct words, the idea that He had anything to do with "judging" or "dividing" in worldly affairs was repudiated. It was not His province.

The question, however, gave an occasion for solemn warning against the unworthy greed and selfishness which lie at the root of all such strife, on one side or the other. Addressing the crowd, who had heard the request, He gave them a caution against all forms of covetousness, or excessive desire of worldly possessions, in the following parable.

"Watch," said He, "and keep yourselves from all covetousness. For, though a man may abound in riches, his life does not depend on his wealth, but on the will of God, who can lengthen or shorten his existence, and make it happy or sad, at His pleasure. Let me show you what I mean.

"The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully. And he reasoned within himself, saying, 'What shall I do, because I have no room to stow away my crops?' And he said, 'This will I do. I will pull down my barns and build greater, and I will gatt or together into them all my crops and my property, and will say to my sou thine ea "Bu thee; an

"So, and is latest, so this won treasure these, al

Sec. 23

THE I life of J open ra Rabbis, Him to vast cro against J ed its hi

With

not let t

of God. that He did not, left but instructi and hea force th throng, ting dow venient woudrou His teac The F to Israel stant use moral ar mere pre some ind to be giv

and mad

familiar

188

my spul, Soul, thou hast much property laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry.'

"But God said unto him, 'Fool, this night thy soul is required of thee, and whose will those things be which thou hast prepared?"

"So," added Jesus, "is he who heaps up treasures for himself, and is not rich towards God. Death, coming unexpectedly, and, at, latest, soon strips him of all, if he has only thought of himself and of this world. The true wisdom is to use what we have so as to lay up. treasures, by its right employment, in heaven, that God may give us these, after death, in the kingdom of the Messiah."" and and a solution nese, and a second seco

AFTER THE STORM, MALL TO MOON, MILLIN

THE meal in the house of the Pharisee was a turning point in the life of Jesus. The flerceness of His enemies had broken out into open rage, so that, as He left, He was followed by the infuriated Rabbis, gesticulating, as they pressed round Him, and provoking Him to commit Himself by words of which they might lay hold. A vast crowd had meanwhile gathered, partly on His side, partly turned against Him by the arts of His accusers. The excitement had reached its highest.

With such a multitude before Him, it was certain that He would not let the opportunity pass of proclaiming afresh the New Kingdom of God. It had been called a kingdom of the devil, and it was meet that He should turn aside the calumny. His past mode of teaching did not, however, seem suited for the new circumstances. It had left but small permanent results; and a new and still simpler style of instruction, specially adapted to their dulness and untrained minds and hearts, would at least arrest their attention more surely, and force them to a measure of reflection. Pressing through the vast throng, to the shore of the Lake, He entered a fishing-boat, and, sitting down at its prow, the highest part of it, began, from this convenient pulpit, as it lightly rocked on the waters, the first of those wondrous parables, in which He henceforth so frequently embodied His teachings.

The Parable or Mashal was a mode of instruction already familiar to Israel since the days of the Judges, and was in familiar and constant use among the Rabbis. Its characteristic is the presentation of moral and religious truth in a more vivid form than is possible by mere precept, or abstract statement, use being made for this end of some incident drawn from life or nature, by which the lesson sought to be given is pictured to the eye, and thus imprinted on the memory, and made more emphatic. Analogies hitherto unsuspected between familiar natural facts and spiritual phenomena; lessons of duty ncapable of elves, have ho were on consciously was before , the Cross. this period. were daily · calumnies nert. "An f Jesus, and ttacked and rowd looked ered only as s felt by all. e Rabbis for t, though it ere virtually nal. To get any matter, ur whom He

ity to solicit which there peak to my e had utterly st and most h "judging" vas not His mn warning the root of crowd, who all forms of n the follow-ovetousness. ot depend on shorten his Let me show plentifully. lo, because I This will I I will gat: r will say to drawn

ished

howev

seek tl

indeed

for the

receiv

Him

show

"itcis

they.a

truth.

plain i

music

religio

came 1

men

like th

Inmat

the mo

of dea

darkno

interes

the tru

higher

show

and it

receiv

shut t

which

and ri

not se

hear t

Suc

really

pound

which

and an

was, h

from t

So ent

the ex

wardl

on the

which

nit Y

dering

enforced by some simple imaginary narrative or incident: striking parallels and comparisons, which made the homeliest trifles symbols of the highest truths, abound in all the discourses of Jesus, but are still more frequent from this time. Nothing was henceforth left unused, of The light, the darkness, the houses around, the games of childhood, the sightless wayside beggar, the foxes of the hills, the leathern bottles hung up from every rafter, the patched or new garment, and even the noisy hen amidst her chickens, served, in turn, to illustrate some lofty truth. The sower on the hill-side at hand. the flaming weeds among the corn, the common mustard plant; the leaven in the woman's dough, the treasure disclosed by the passing ploughshare, the pearl brought by the travelling merchant from distant lands for sale at Bethsaida or Tiberias, -- at Philip's court or that of Antipas, -- the draw-net seen daily on the Lake, the pitiless servant, the labourers in the vineyards around—any detail of every-day life was elevated, as occasion demanded, to be the vehicle of the sublimest lessons. Others have uttered parables, but Josus so far transeends them, that He may justly be called the creator of this mode of instruction up figure on a provident of a condition of the production The first of the wondrous series was, fitly, that of the Sower, for the planting of the New Kingdom must needs be the first stage towards further truths respecting it. In a country like Galilee no illustration could be more easily intelligible, and it is no wonder that Jesus often uses it. As He sat in the boat, with the multitude standing on the shore, each feature of the parable would be before Him,the sower going out from the neighbouring town or village to sow his patch on the unenclosed hill-side, with its varied soil; here warm and deep; there a mere skin over the limestone rock; invaded at some spots by thorns, then, as now, so plentiful in Palestine, and crossed by the bridle path, along which men and beasts were passing constantly. The seed was good, and the sower faithfully did his work, but it depended on the soll itself, what would be the result, for the rain, and the light, and the heat, came equally on all Part fell on the trodden path, ---which, itself, though now beaten hard, was once as soft and yielding as any part of the field,-and was crushed under foot, or picked up by the birds hovering near. Some fell on spots in which the springing thistles had already taken root, and were about to shoot up in rank vigour; some on the shallow skin of earth over the rock, where the hot sun hastened the growth, while the hard rock hindered the root from striking down; and only a part fell on good soil, and yielded a return for the sower's toil arous fine This parable, apparently so self-illustrative only troubled the minds of the Twelve, and of the wider circle in His bearers who had any interest in His words. The mode of teaching was new to them from Jesus, and the conceptions embodied in what they had h ard were directly opposite to all they had been accustomed, as Jews, to associate with the Messianic kingdom. The careless multitude,

THE LIFE OF CHRIST. drawn together only by curiosity, had scattered when Jesus had finished His address, and He had returned to Peter's house. Thither, dent: striking rifles symbols Jesus, but are eforth left unthe games of the hills, the d or new garrved, ingtuin. side at hand. ard plant; the y the passing hant from discourt or that itiless servant. ery-day lifee of the subis so far tranf this mode of like the c.re he Sower, for he first stage ke Galilce no o wonder that iltitude standpefore Him,village to sow il; here warm k: invaded at Palestine, and were passing fully, did his be the result. on all. Part ten hard, was wasscrushed Some fell on ken root, and allow skin of growth, while id only a part and athardic troubled the rers who had new to them ey had heard d, as Jews, to s multitude.

however, a number of graver spirits followed, with the Twelve, to seek the explanation they felt assured would be vouchsafed. It was, indeed, precisely what Jesus desired, for it afforded an opportunity for the fuller instruction of all whose state of heart fitted them to receive it, and it drew them into closer personal intercourse with Hima: He received them with frank delight. "Unto you, who thus show your interest in the mysteries of the kingdom of God," said He. "it is given to know them, but to the indifferent outside multitude. they are designedly left veiled in parable." To understand spiritual truth, the heart must be in sympathy with it; otherwise, to try to explain it, would be as idle as to speak of colours to the blind, or of music to the deaf. When the religious faculty was dead or dormant, religious truth was necessarily incomprehensible and undesired. "He came to be a Light to men, and to reveal the truth, not to hide it, but men must have willing ears, and take heed to what they hear, pondering over it in their hearts. To listen only with the outward ear, like the careless multitude, is to draw down the punishment of God. In natures thus wilfully indifferent, hardness only grows the worse the more they near. To such, the very word of life becomes a word of death. Rejecting me, the Light, they are given up by God to the darkness they have chosen, and lose, erelong, even the superficial ""Ye, on the other hand," He continued, " who really have received whe truth into a willing heart, have thereby proved your fitness for higher disclosures, and shall have them. The honest interest you show determines the measure of knowledge you are able to receive, and it will be given you. He who has opened his soul to Me will receive continually richer insight into the truth. Alas for those who shut their eyes and stop then ears! But blessed are your eyes, into which you have let the truth enter, and blessed are your ears, into which you have let it sink, Amen! I say to you, many prophets and righteous men longed to see those things which ye see, and did not see them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and did not hear them." It will die call a filled bill a face faith and the face Such, in brief explanatory paraphrase, was the welcome to those really anxious to understand the parable, which Jesus forthwith expounded to them, disclosing, as He did so, conceptions and principles which required a complete revolution in their minds to understand and appropriate. He announced that the ancient kingdom of God was, henceforth, spiritualized, so that the only relation of man to it, from this time, was a moral one; not, as heretofore, in part, a political. So entirely, indeed, was this the case, that He did not even speak of the external agencies or organization by which men should be outwardly received as its citizens, but assumed that acceptance depended on the man himself; on his will and his sympathy with what the

New Kingdom offered. "The Word is the only Seed of the Gospel." As the embodiment of all truth, it is by following it that the Will of God is realized by men, and the one grand law of the kingdom thus obeyed. It is given to men, as the seed to the ground, and they can hear and understand it if they choose, but all depends on their doing so. As the strewn seed neither springs nor bears fruit on much of the ground, and fails except where it sinks into good soil, so the relations of men to the Word of God are very various. Few, it may be, receive it aright, but it is always the fault of men themselves if it be not living seed in their hearts. Worldly indifference may have made the soil impenetrable as the trodden path, or have left only a skin of sentiment over hidden callousness; or worldly cares or pleasures may be let spring up, and choke the better growth; in all cases it is the man, not the seed, or the sower, on whom the result turns. Before all things, this is to be felt, so that no one may imagine that entrance into the New Kingdom depends on any but moral conditions. Every merely outward claim to citizenship must be laid aside; it is a matter strictly between God and the soul. The more completely this is done, the greater the fitness for entrance. He must be willing simply to receive, without a thought of merit, or right, what God is pleased to give, of His free bounty. The New Kingdom is, in truth, altogether spiritual. It works directly on the soul, by spiritual truth. It advances in the individual and the world, not by outward power, or political glory, or by miracles, but by the Word sown in the heart, and its aim, like its nature, is spiritual; to make the heart and life visibly fruitful in all heavenly grace."

As the parable of the Sower described the planting of the New Kingdom in the heart, others set forth the secret invisible energy of the Word, by the indestructible vigour of which the New Kingdom unfolds itself in the individual and in the world. It was compared to the silent and mysterious growth of seed, which springs up by unperceived development, first into the blade, then into the ear, and, finally, into the ripened corn. The triumphant future found an analogy in the growth of a grain of mustard-seed-which, though among the smallest, grows to be the greatest amongst herbs, shooting out wide branches, and becoming a tree, in the shade of which the birds of the air come and lodge. It found another in the silent leavening of three measures of meal by a spot of yeast, hidden in them. As surely as the seed will spring, or the mustard-seed become a tree, or the yeast spread through all the three measures of meal, -as certainly as the spark spreads to a flame,-the New Kingdom will grow and expand to world-wide glory. It needs no battles to be won, as the hearers fancied it did; no violent revolutions. Jesus knew that the living force of truth in each single heart must spread, and that, as soul after soul was won, it would silently revolutionize the world, and leaven all humanity.

That there should be hindrances was only natural, and these He shad-1411. owed man's fruit till the and th afterw it. till them i be, me implie again Augus ord' So into th is drav are cas The separa when wenta might chant he had it, as t one in either things all hur bo It is though should illustre the eve and ag no lòn rage of with th DOSSess to get had pe possibl wider round strengt the pro The deer g f the Gospel. t the Will of ingdom thus and they can n their doing t on much of il. so the relaw, it may be, elves if it be ay have made only a skin of leasures may ases it is the irns. Before that entrance itions. Every it is a matter y this is done, ng simply to is pleased to th, altogether truth. It adurd power, or in the heart. eart and life of the New ble energy of ew Kingdom was compared ngs up by unthe ear, and, re found an which, though erbs, shooting of which the he silent leavden in them. ecome a tree, neal, -as cerm will grow to be won, as us knew that ead, and that, ze the world, hese He shad-

owed out in the parable of the Tares secretly sown by an enemy in a man's field, and undistinguishable from the grain till both had come to fruit. For the sake of the wheat both were left, by the householder, till the harvest, but, in the end, the tares would be gathered for burning, and the wheat for the barn. The full meaning of this parable was given afterwards by Jesus Himself. The visible Church would include in it, till the last day, many who were not true members. To separate them is not the part of man, but of the Judge. But this is, and could be, meant only in a general sense, for the whole spirit of the Gospels implies the rejection of the openly unworthy, and their reception again on their repentance. "Those who to day are thorns," says Augustine, "may be wheat to-morrow."

""So," said He, also, "my kingdom may be likened to a net cast into the lake; which gathers in it good fish and bad, and, when full, is drawn to shore, and the good gathered into vessels while the bad are cast away."

The supreme worth of citizenship in His kingdom He set forth in separate parables. It was like a treasure hidden in a field, which, when found, so filled the heart of the discoverer, that, for joy, he went away, and sold all he had, and bought the field, that the treasure might be his. Or, it was like a priceless pearl met with by a merchant seeking such a treasure, and secured by him at the cost of all he had. The kingdom might be found by some without their seeking it, as the treasure by the peasant in the field; or it might be met by one in earnest search for it, like him who found the costly pearl. In either case, it could only be obtained by joyful self-sacrifice of all things else for its sake, and by the realization of the worthlessness of all human possessions in comparison with it.

It is not certain that all these parables were spoken the same day, though there is nothing improbable in the supposition that Jesus should have given such a free utterance to the wealth of imagery and illustration which flowed from His lips with no mental effort. But the evening came at last, and found Him wearied out with the work and agitations of such an eventful day. Capernaum could, however, no longer be the quict home for Him which it had been. The fierce rage of the priests and schoolmen in the morning, and their intrigue with the household of Nazareth to lay hold on Him as a madman. possessed with a devil, showed that they would stop at no wickedness to get Him into their power. The controversy respecting Him had penetrated every humble cottage, and quiet work was no longer possible. Moreover, it was necessary to introduce His disciples to a wider sphere of life and work than Capernaum and the little districts round it, in preparation for their independent action, and to form and strengthen their character and power of self-reliance by putting it to the proof, and revealing to them the weaknesses yet to be overcome. The wall of lonely hills on the east side of the Lake, seamed by deep gorges through which the path led to the vast upland plains of

leave the

self up o

were the

dition of

had to a sincerity

and bid

one havi

kingdom

must do

tract him

scattered

He went company

be abroa

and bodil

ing sleep.

as His, u

disease, n

boss of t

low, and of the day

ful, was d

bed amon

at times r

the water

bare table

beyond, p ages by st

to incredi

the Medite

over it til

vacuum c

Such a presently

was all bu

ing torren

which blo

over them

their prese

the wind.

down. T

however,

hausted.

The sai

He ha

A thir

the eastern Jordan—a region little known to the busy population of Galilee, and in bad reputation with most, as more heathen than Jewish —offered Him a secure retreat. Instead of returning to Peter's house, where new troubles might have awaited Him. He ordered His disciples to carry Him to the opposite shore, that He might escape from all painful scenes, and enjoy peace and rest for a time. His enomies would not be likely to seek a Rabbi like Him in such an unclean district; least of all, in the neighbourhood He first visited—that of the heathen city, Gadara.

But the incidents of the day were not yet over. The streets on the way to the boat were full with the evening gossips, glad to talk with their neighbours in the gathering twilight, now their day's work was done; and, with others lingering about, in the hope of seeing the great Rahbi. A number of these soon gathered round Christ and His disciples as they made towards the shore, and at last the silence was broken by one of them, strange to say, himself a Rabbi, offering to follow Him as His scholar. " Teacher," said he, " I will follow Thee wherever you go." It might have seemed a great thing for one in the position of Jesus to have a Rabbi among His disciples, but He never courted human aid, or acted on mere expediency. The highest, no. less than the humblest, could only be received on the condition of absolute self-sacrifice and sincerity. Nor did He readily accept these who offered themselves, but chose rather to summon such as He wished, to His immediate circle. "Ye have not chosen me," said He, on a future occasion, "but I have chosen you." He returned, therefore, only an answer which should test the applicant's motives to the uttermost. Whet' The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay His head." Virtually driven from the one dwelling at Capernaum He could regard as His home, and rejected from Nazareth, He was, henceforth, a wanderer, with no fixed dwelling. From this time He was almost a fugitive less and houseless man. A statistica

To a second applicant, who professed himself willing to follow Him as soon as he had discharged the pious duty of burying his father, the startling answer was returned, "Let the (spiritually) dead bury their dead, but go thou and preach the kingdom of God." Under other circumstances Christ would have commended such filial love; but it was necessary now, to show, by a supreme example, that those who sought to follow Him must deny natural feelings, otherwise entirely sacred, when the interests of the kingdom of God required it. He had in mind, doubtless, the thirty days' mourning that were virtually implied, and knew the results of indecision in a matter so paramount. It was, moreover, a requirement of the Rabbis, in similar cases, that if any one who wished to be a scholar of the Law, had to choose between burying even his nearest relation—his parent, or his brother, or sister—and devoting himself; at once to his sacred duties, he should leave the burial to others, as the less important duty, and give himsolf up on the moment, undividedly to the other. The words of Jesus were the familiar and well-known expression of this recognized condition of even Rabbinical discipleship. The applicant would have had to act thus had he chosen to follow a Rabbi, and less devotion and sincerity could not be demanded in the service of the New Kingdom.

A third, who asked leave before finally following Christ, to go home and bid his family circle farewell, received a similar answer—"No one having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God; he who gives himself up to the kingdom of God, must do so with an undivided heart, suffering no earthly cares to distract him."

He had set out for the Lake side as soon as the multitudes had scattered sufficiently to open the way; and now, having reached it, He went into a fishing-boat, just as He was, and they pushed off in company with some other boats. It was already late for Orientals to be abroad, and the rest in the open air, after such continuous mental and bodily excitement, soon brought the sweet relief of deep refreshing sleep. We never hear of Jesus being ill; and, indeed, such a life as His, utterly free from all disturbing causes which might induce disease, may well have been exceptionally healthy. The coarse leather boss of the steersman's seat, at the end of the boat, sufficed for a pillow, and presently He forgot in deep slumber the cares and labours of the day.

The sail across, however, though usually so refreshing and delightful, was destined to be rudely disturbed. The Lake lies this deep bed among the hills, ordinarily, smooth as a mirror, but sudden storms at times rush down every wady on the north-east and east, and lash the waters into furious roughness. The winds sweeping over the vast bare table-land of Gaulonitis and the Hauran, and the boundless desert beyond, pour down the deep ravines and gorges, cut in the course of ages by streams and torrents, on their way to the Lake, and lash it into incredible commotion. Its position, about six hundred feet below, the Mediterranean, induces such sudden hurricanes, by heating the air over it till the colder atmosphere of the hills rushes down to fill the vacuum caused by the rarefaction:

Such a storm now burst on the calm bosom of the waters, and presently raised the waves to such a height, that the unprotected boat was all but swamped. In the wild roaring of the wind; amidst blinding torrents of rain, and the thick darkness of the hurricanc cloud, which blotted out the stars; and the dashing of the sea, which broke over them each moment; even bronzed sailors like the Twelve lost their presence of mind, and were filled with dismay. Driven before the wind, they were fast filling, and, as it seemed, must presently go down. Through all the wild tumult of wind, darkness, rain, and sea, however, Jesus lay peacefully asleep, so profoundly had He been exhausted. It seemed as if He were indifferent to their fate. In their ulation of an Jewish er's house, ed His disscape from lis enemies nclean disthat of the cets on the o talk with s work was ig the great nd His dissilence was offering to ollow Thee r one in the it He never highest, no ondition of ccept these such as He n me," said e returned, nt's motives s of the air Virtually gard as His wanderer. t a fugitive e,—a home-follow Him father, the bury their Inder other ove; but it those who ise entirely ed it, He re virtually paramount. ases, that if choose bebrother, or the should natural reverence they long hesitated to rouse Him, but at last did so, and appealed to Him to save them. Amidst the terror around, He was entirely self-possessed. Rising, He gently rebuked the feat that had so unnerved them, and then, with an awful sublimity, rebuked the wind as if it had been a living power, and bade the angry sea be still; and both wind and sea at once obeyed Him. A great calm spread over the Lake. "Why are ye fearful," said He, "O ye of little faith?" They had seen Him control disease, cast out devils, and even raise the dead; could they not have felt assured that neither winds nor waves could harm them when He was there? "What manner of man is this?" muttered the awe-struck apostles, "for He commandeth even the winds and water, and they obey Him!"

The boat had been driven to the southern end of the Lake, and Christ consequently landed in the territory of the city of Gadara, a half-heathen town on the table-land, twelve hundred feet above the shore, and at some distance from it. It was then in its glory, and lay round the top of the hill, looking far over the country. Long avenues of marble pillars lined its streets; fine buildings of squared stones abounded. Two great amphitheatres of black basalt adorned the west and north sides, and there was a third theatre near its slpendid public baths. It was the proud home of a great trading community, to whom life was bright and warm when Jesus landed that morning, on the shore beneath, and looked up towards its walls.

The hill on which Gadara stands is of soft limestone, full, like the limestone of Palestine generally, of larger and smaller caves, many of which had been enlarged by the poorer classes and turned into dwelling-places, for which they are used even yet, while others had been converted into tombs, with massy stone doors. The roadside is still strewn with a number of sarcophagi of basalt, sculptured with low reliefs of genil, garlands, wreaths of flowers, and human faces, in good preservation, though long emptied of their dead.

Madness, in every form has, in all ages, been treated by the rude therapeutics of the East as a supernatural visitation, with which it is unsafe to interfere more than is needed, and, hence, even at this day, furious and dangerous manlacs may, from time to time, be seen in the towns of Palestine, in some cases, absolutely naked. Others, equally furious, often betake themselves to the mountains, and sleep in tombs and caves. In their paroxysms they become terribly dangerous, for the mental excitement gives them prodigious strength, and, hence, one is sometimes a terror to a whole neighbourhood.

Two such madmen, it seems, had taken up their abode in the caves and tombs, by the side of the road from the Lake to Gadara, and had made it almost impassable, from their flerceness. Jesus had hardly set His foot on shore before they salled out towards Him, shrieking amidat the wild howls of their frenzy, as they approached; in deprecation of His interference with them. From some reason, now unknown, St. Mark and St. Luke speak only of one of these two sufferers Both we and cons presence. Both had recognize before th St. Luke Eastern 1 for he wo live only but neith Night and by the my with his h his frenzy enslaved v could not conscious which dro from him; to the dem many," F true to dia ing. On t hateful abo owned by great dema 'Send us the abyss,' whole herd were drow with all th tion, and t the world. an act of New King It is idle culties. a of the fou violence to ever myste

The terr

could rely

mighty po had been

S.....

round, He e fear that y, rebuked gry sea be great calm O ve of devils, and hat neither ? dura What s, "for He mp Fillis Jut Lake, and f Gadara, a t above the ory, and lay ong avenues ared stones dorned the its slpendid community, at morning, the dealers:

ast did so.

ull, like the caves, many turned into others had he roadside lotured with uman faces, by the rude with which it even at this time, be seen ed. Others, ns, and sleep terribly danous strength, ourhood. e in the caves dara, and had s had hardly im, shrieking ied; in deprereason, now of these two that a start which THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

sufferers, and as their account is the fuller, it is better to keep to it. Both were more than merely insauc: they were possessed with devils, and conscious that they were so. As in similar cases, the demoniac presence controlled the human will, and spoke in its own name. Both had already shown their terror at the coming of one whom they recognized as the Son of God, and adjured Him not to torment them before the time. But now the one of whom especially St. Mark and St. Luke speak, ran and fell down before Jesus, in the manner of Eastern reverence. He had been a terror to the whole country side, for he would wear no clothes, but roamed the hills naked, and would live only in the tombs. Efforts had been made to put him in restraint, but neither ropes, nor the chains used, had sufficed to hold him. Night and day he wandered the mountains, driven hither and thither by the mysterious possession, that had him in its power, filling the air with his howls and shricks, and cutting himself with sharp stones in his frenzy. But a greater than the strong man by whom he was enslaved was now here. Though dreading His presence, the demon could not keep away from it. It may be that, in the confused human consciousness, there was yet a glimmer of reason and moral health which drove him to the Saviour, but, if so, the spirit took the word from him, and spoke in his stead. "What is thy name?" said Jesus to the demon, -and the mysterious answer was, "Legion, for we are many," Forthwith came the command to come out of the man. But, true to diabolical instinct, the spirits would fain injure, even in leaving. On the slopes of the hill, a great herd of swine, the unclean and hateful abomination of the Jew, were feeding. They were, doubtless, owned by some of the heathen citizens of Gadara, for swine were in great demand as sacrifices and food among the foreign population." "Send us into the swine," cried the devils, "and do not drive us into the abyss," and the request was granted, to the destruction of the whole herd, which ran violently down the slope into the Lake and were drowned. Jesus, as Son of God, was free to act at His will with all things, for they were all His by the supreme right of creation, and this right is continually used in the moral government of the world. There is no ground for a moment's discussion respecting an act of One to whom all things were committed, as Head of the New Kingdom, by the Father.

It is idle, in our utter ignorance of the spirit world, to raise difficulties, a one have done, at this incident. It is recorded in three of the four Gospels, and cannot be explained away except by doing violence to the concurrent language of the three evangelists. However mysterious, it is no more so than many facts in the life of Jesus, and must be taken simply as it stands.

The terror of the Apostles in the storm had shown how little Jesus could rely on them in the far worse trials of future years, but the mighty power He had shown in stilling the tunult of the elements, had been a lesson of confidence in Him, which they could hardly

"Be not

of relativ

Palestine

lamentat

burden to and, as p

body, the

tomary v

The no

intended.

tered, it's doubtless mocked a to themse of Peace

fore caus

and the n John, we

Taking th

His peopl returned

naum, at obscurity

miracle.

in the vai wonder t

practice :

Lightfoot

such a c

Alexandr

the same given in y

not benefi

wine and does not

her hold

behind, ar

that do n

handful fennel). and say,

over ten

dig seven

not yet f

On the troubled suffered n forget. It was a further step in their training to trust in Him, when they now saw Him perform the still more wonderful miracle of stilling the inward tempest of a human soul. In neither case could they say a word. They stood silent and ashamed. They were far, as yet, from having grown to the spiritual manhood of their great office.

The new teaching of Jesus had excited, for a time, a wide popularity that had even besieged His dwelling and thronged His person. The people had given Him their unhesitating confidence. But His collisions with the priests and Rabbis, and His disturbed relations to His family-with the whisperings of calumny on all sides-had chilled the enthusiasm of many. Distrust and suspicion had been sown in hitherto trustful minds, and these reports had penetrated even to the east of the Jordan. Their first open results were seen at Gadara, for it was here He first met with open want of sympathy with His person and work. The incident of the destruction of the swine, infuriating the owners, was enough, with what they had before heard, to turn the people against Him. The insinuation that He cast out devils by a league with their chief, filled weak minds with terror. He had hardly landed, and was in sore need of rest, but was at once forced to leave. For the first time, the disciples had an example of that invincible unbelief they were, hereafter, to meet so often. But, if Jesus were hindered from preaching in Decapolis, He had the satisfaction of leaving behind Him the former maniac, now clothed and in his right mind, to spread the fact of his de liverance. The poor man would fain have followed his Benefactor, but Jesus had other work for him. Contrary to His rule hitherto, He dismissed him, with directions to go home to his friends, and tell them the great things the Lord had done for him, and how He had had compassion on him. His preaching, however simple, was a seed of future good in these regions.

Forced to return to Capernaum, Jesus had scarcely landed, when a demand was made on His sympathy which He could not resist. One of the rulers, or chief men of the Synagogue, a local dignitary, named Jairus, had an only daughter, a rising girl of about twelve, at the point of death. After all that had passed between. Jesus and the Rabbis in the town, it must have been a great effort for one in the position, and with the inevitable prejudices of Jairus, to seek His aid; but distress humbles pride, and often quickens faith. Pressing towards Him, and regardless of a crowd around, he fell at His feet, as inferiors then did, and still do, in the East, before those greatly above them, and besought Him to come and lay His hand on his child, and restore her to health. A heart that sympathized with all sorrow could not resist such an appeal, and, forthwith, He set out, through the throng that attended all His appearances, to the ruler's house. Before arriving there, however, a message came that the sufferer was dead, and that there was no need of further trouble. They little knew who was on His way to them.

"Be not afraid," said He to the ruler, "only believe." The crowd of relatives and friends that always throng the chamber of death in Palestine, had already begun the pitiful wails and cries of Eastern lamentations, and the dirge-flutes had already begun to add their sad burden to the tumult. Jesus had likely been delayed before starting, and, as preparations for burial commence as soon as breath leaves the body, the corpse had likely been washed, and laid out in the customary way for the grave, before He came.

The noise and confusion were not in keeping with the work Jesus intended. "Why make ye this ado and weep?" said He, as He entered, "The damsel is not dead, but sleepeth." He used the word, doubtless, just as He afterwards did in the case of Lazarus, but they mocked at His pretended knowledge, which seemed to impute error to themselves, for they knew that she was dead. He was the Prince of Peace, and would have no such disturbing excitement, and therefore caused the crowd to leave the chamber of death. Only the father and the mother of the girl, and the three disciples, Peter, James, and John, were allowed to see His triumph over the King of Terrors. Taking the damsel by the hand, and using words of the language of His people,—Talitha cumi—Damsel, I say unto thee, arise—the spirit returned to the pale form, and she rose and walked. But in Capernaum, at a time when His exemies were so keenly afoot, cautious obscurity was needed, and He therefore enjoined silence as to the miracle.

On the way a touching incident had happened. A woman, troubled for many years with an internal ailment, after "having suffered many things of many physicians, and having spent her all," in the vain hope of cure, resolved to seek help from Jesus. It is no wonder that she had given up the faculty of the day, for their practice was in keeping with the scientific ignorance of the times. Lightfoot quotes from the Talmud the Jewish medical treatment of such a complaint. It was as follows: "Take of the gum of Alexandria the weight of a zuzes. (a fractional silver coin); of alum the same; of crocus the same. Let them be bruised together, and given in wine to the woman that has an issue of blood. If this does not benefit, take of Persian onions three logs (piats); boil them in wine and give her to drink, and say, 'Arise from thy flux,' If this does not cure her, set her in a place where two ways meet, and let her hold a cup of wine in her right hand, and let some one come behind and frighten her, and say, 'Arise from thy flux.' But it that do no good, take a handful of cummin (a kind of fennel), a handful of crocus, and a handful of fenegreek (another kind of fennel). Let these be boiled in wine, and give them her to drink, and say, 'Arise from thy flux.'" If these do no good, other doses, over ten in number, are prescribed; among them, this-"Let them dig seven ditches, in which let them burn some cuttings of vines, not yet four years old. Let her take in her hand a cup of wine, and let them lead her away from this ditch, and make her sit down over that. And let them remove her from that, and make her sit down over another, saying to her at each remove, m' Arise from thy flux ?? woor but shedered but he humping she by heating and But these were only a few of the more harmless prescriptions in vogue. The condition of medical science in the East may be judged from its character at the centre of civilization and progress in the West. Pliny's Natural History gives us some eurious glimpses of this. Ashes of burnt wolf's skull, stags' horns, the heads of mice, the eyes of crabs, owls' brains, the livers of frogs, vipers' fat, grasshoppers, bats, &c., supplied the alkalis which were prescribed. Physicians were wont to order doses of the gall of wild swine, of horses' foam, of woman's milk; the laying a piece of serpent's skin on an affected part, mixtures of the urine of cows that had not been sucked, the fat of bears, the juice of boiled bucks horns, and other similar abominations. For colic. they prescribed the dung of swine or hares, for dysentery powdered horses' teeth, for affections of the bladder, the urine of wild swine, or asses' kidneys, or plasters of mice-dung. It was a great assistance in child-birth if the mother, or any of her circle. ate wolf's flesh. Cold in the head was oured by kissing a mulo's nose." Sore throat was removed by embrocations of snails' stime, and the inhalation of the fumes of snails slowly burnt. Quinsy was cured with the brain of the marsh owl; diseases of the lunga with mouse-flesh, disorders of the stomach with boiled snails, of which, however, only an odd number must be taken; weakness of the bowels, with powdered bats; miscarriages were prevented by carrying about with one a living amphishena, a small snake which was believed to be able to go either backwards or forwards; frogs' eyes were useful for contusions, if the eyes were taken out at the conjunction of the moon, and kept in an egg-shell. Frogs boiled in vinegar were sovereign for toothache; for cough, the slime of frogs which had been hung up by the feet; for rupture, sea hedgehogsthe cchinus-dissolved in asses' milk; for diseases of the glands, scorpions boiled in wine; for ague or intermittent fever, the stone from the head of sea-ecls, but it must be taken out at the full moon. The poor woman who now determined to seek help from Jesus had endured all the tortures of such medical treatment for twelve years, and, of course, was hurt rather than healed. She could not, however, venture to speak to Jesus; perhaps womanly shame to tell her disease in public kept her back; perhaps reverence for one so mysteriously above other men. Besides, she was unclean, and had to stand aloof from society. Joining the crowd following Him to the house of Jairus, she could only dare to touch the zizith, or tassel, that hung on the corner of His outer garment, as on those of all other Jews. The touch at once healed her, but it did not pass unnoticed. To have let it pass, might have seemed to give countenance t selves could no be punish healed, fe enough go in pea

AMONG the super sooner ha Peter's ho "Have me dition of ] should cor any higher eagerly as asked, and "Accordin charge not had lately they could Another n from one. freely. T monstratio that had ev embittered only mutt prince." sented as unclean, s blind, the stricken of vet He ass they must L'It was n on any ind circuits ro seen Him preserving the careles tenance to a superstitious fancy that His clothes had virtue in themselves. Turning round, He at once asked who touched Him. She could no longer hide her act, and, alarmed lest her boldness shoul be punished by the renewal of the trouble she now felt to have been healed, fell down before Him, and told Him all the truth. It was enough. "Daughter," said He, "thy faith hath made thee whole, go in peace, and be whole of thy plague."

500

CHAPTER XLIII.

DARK AND BRIGHT.

Among the crowd that had gathered round the house of Jairus. the supernatural powers of Jesus found renewed exercise. No sooner had He reappeared than two blind men followed Him to Peter's house, appealing to Him as the long-expected Messiah-"Have mercy upon us, Son of David." It was an invariable condition of His granting His miraculous aid that those who sought it should come with sincere and trustful hearts, for to such only could any higher good be gained by mere outward relief. The poor men eagerly assured Him that they believed He could do what they asked, and with a touch of His hand their eves were opened. "According to your faith," said He, "be it unto you." The prudent charge not to speak of their restored sight, so necessary after all that had lately passed, was heard only to be forgotten, for, in their joy, they could not refrain from publishing it wherever they went. Another miracle of these days is recorded-the casting out a devil from one who was dumb, so that the sufferer, henceforth, spoke freely. The multitudes were greatly moved by such repeated demonstrations of transcendent power, which seemed to surpass all that had ever been seen in Israel, but this popularity only the more embittered His enemies. Repeating their old blasphemy, they could only mutter. "He casts out devils by being in league with their prince." That He should thus recognize classes whom they represented as accursed, and from whom they withdrew themselves as unclean, seemed a reflection on their teaching and conduct. The blind, the leper, the poor, and the childless, were alike accounted stricken of God, and "dead," by the hard Judaism of the day, and yet He associated freely with all who sought Him. Either He or they must be vitally wrong.

It was now late in the year, and the Twelve had not yet gone out on any independent mission. He had taken them with Him on His circuits round Capernaum, to train them for wider fields. They had seen Him scattering the first seed, and caring for it in its growth, preserving what had been won; strengthening the weak, and calling the earliess to repentance. On a narrow theatre they had had a ake her sit and make ve. Arise ing fill forener unt rescriptions ast may be ad progress me curious horns, the rs of frogs, which were the gall of ing a piece he urine of he juice of For colic. dysentery the urine of It was a f. her circle, ng a mule's nails' shime, nt. 7. Quinsy f the lungs, ed snails, of weakness of revented by make which rards; frogs' i out at the ogs boiled in me of frogs hedgehogsthe glands, er, the stone e full moon. from Jesus t for twelve e could not, shame to tell a for one so ean, and had wing Him to ith, or tassel, those of all did not pass o give coun-widely varied experience. More lately they had had examples of unbelief in the Gadarenes, of weak faith in themselves, and of strong in the woman who had touched Jesus, and even in the two blind men. Another lesson, however, was needed—that of fierce opposition, which they were destined to meet so often hereafter.

Silt

Jesus had never visited Nazareth since His leaving it, and His heart, doubtless, yearned to proclaim the New Kingdom to the population among whom He had lived so long." The visit of Mary, and of His sisters and brothers, to Capernaum, to take Him away with them, however mistaken, had, doubtless, been prompted by the tenderest motives. Simple country people, they had heard from their holy Rabbis that He whom they so loyed had overstrained His mind and body till His reason had failed, and that there was ground to fear that the Evil One had secretly taken advantage of His enthusiasm to work miracles by His hands. What could it be, indeed, but serving the Prince of Darkness, to slight the sacred traditions by acts like mixing with the common people without bathing afterwards, or breaking the Sabbath by healing on it, or by letting the disciples pluck corn and rub it in their hands on the holy day, or letting a leper come near Him, or cating with unclean publicans and sinners? He was a revolutionist: He was turning the world upside down: He was questioning the wisdom and authority of the Rabbis, and who but the devil or his emissary could do that?

It was a grave matter, however, to revisit Nazareth. If His nearest relatives had given way to such fears respecting Him, what could He expect from the multitude, who had known Him only in His humble obscurity? He must seem to them, at the least, a dangerous disturber of the religion of the land; a fanatic who was stirring up confusion in Israel. But, where duty called, He never knew fear. In company with His disciples He set out from Capernaum, taking the road along the hills by the Lake, to Magdala, turning westward from it, through the valley of doves, by Arbela, with its high cliffs and robber caves, and the Horns of Hattin, past Tabor, south-westerly to Nazareth. It was only a journey of seven hours, and could easily be made in a day. He stayed in Nazareth several days, no doubt in His mothers house.

The sword had already begun to pierce the Virgin's heart. Tender, humble, patient, and loving, she had trials we cannot realize Knowing that her Son was the Messiah, her faith was 'sorely perplexed by His past course, for her ideas were those of her nation, and His were wholly the opposite. Her intimate knowledge of the sacred 'oracles of His people had shown itself in the Magnificat; her simple trust in God, her happy thankfulness of soul, her musing thoughtfulness, her modest humility, her strength of mind and energy of purpose, had all been seen in carlier days, and, no doubt, as she grew older, the light of a higher world was reflected with ever-increasing glory from her soul. - But she was, and must have been, in sore trouble at the When,

stead o

from h

Him go

that "At ]

tell me

and His

and grie

know, th world?' whitenes and if y

by the fc

hatred o sworn y

great par

the way might of

at Jerusa

your mir people is as soon.'

'most of

other bur sake me,

does not

counsels to deep; d

of my Fa

countenar

transfigur

and Miria

mortal jo

Was, as a

her soul,

fairer tha

the King

feelings to

to attend

80, 1n, spi

therefore,

It had

xamples of ad of strong two blind erce opposiit, and His to the popuf Mary, and 1 away with by the ten-1 from their ed His mind ound to fear nthusiasm to , but serving by acts like fterwards, or the disciples or letting a and sinners? pside down: bbis, and who TON TO LOUGH

If His nearest that could He in His humble rous disturber up confusion In company the road along om it, through robber caves, Nazareth. It be made in a n His mothers heart. Tender, calize Knowy perplexed by and His were sacred oracles simple trust in ightfulness, her if purpose, hed grew older, the sing glory from trouble at the position of her Son. His first interview with her has been conceived thus:-"Refreshment over, and thanks returned with covered head by Jesus, we may fancy how Mary followed Him to His own chamber. When, at last, she thus had Him alone, she fell on His neck, but instead of kissing Him, as she had done a thousand times, secretly, in spirit, she hid her face on His shoulder, and a stream of tears, fell from her eyes. She wept without speaking, and would not let Him go.

Him go. "At last, Jesus said, 'Mother, be calm, and sit down by me, and tell me why you weep?' She did so, and began, —her, hand in His. and His eyes fixed on hers-'I rejoice that at last I have you again, and grieve that we shall soon have once more to part.' Do you know, then,' asked Jesus 'how soon or how late I shall leave this world?' 'Oh, my child,' replied Miriam, 'does not the deathly whiteness of your face tell me, that you are wearing yourself out? and if you do not wear yourself out, though I am a woman, shut in by the four corners of my house, how can I help sceing that the hatred of your enemies increases daily, and that they have long sworn your death?' Granted,' broke in Jesus, but has not a great part of the people banded round me, and does not this stand in the way of the plots against me?' ..... Indeed,' replied Miriam, 'the might of your preaching, your independence towards those in power at Jerusalem, the novelty of your whole appearance, and, above all, your miracles, have won many to your side, but the favour of the people is like a rain-torrent, which swells quickly, only to pass away as soon.' ... You are right, O blessed among women,' answered Jesus: most of this people seek not salvation, from sin, but from quite other burdens, and when the decisivo moment comes, they will forsike me, faint-heartedly and ungratefully. Your look into the future does not deceive you, but even the enmity and evil of men serve the counsels of God, which I came to fulfil. My way goes downwards to deep darkness, from which my soul shrinks, but I follow the will of my Father, whether the road be up or down.' As He spoke, His countenance, which had been clouded for a moment, was, as it were, transfigured, as the divine in His nature shone through the human; and Miriam, drinking, in all these beams, thrilled with a more than mortal joy. There was a long pause. Miriam was silent, but she was a always, wrapt in prayer. 'Fair,' said she, in the thoughts of her soul, 'is the rising sun, fair the green vine, fair the blue sea, but fairer than all is He. What an hour is this! My eyes have beheld the King in His beauty.'" The picture is beautiful, but it ascribes feelings to Mary which sprang only later. The shat as

It had been the instinctive practice of Jesus, from early childhood, to attend all the synagogue services, and He was still suffered to do so, in spite of the opposition He had excited. When Sabbath came: therefore, He went to morning worship, and, after the reading of the

Thorah, stood up in silent offer to read the Haphtara of the day from the Prophets. He was forthwith called to the reading desk, when the Shellach Tsibbur, or Hazan, handed Him the rolling The lesson for the day could not have been more appropriate, for it contained the passage of Isaiah which spoke of the Messiah-" The spirit of the Lord is upon me, because He anointed me to preach the Gospel to the poor. He has sent me to proclaim deliverance to the captives. and recovery of sight to the blind: to set at liberty the oppressed: to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord." Then, sitting down He began His Midrasch, or explanation, commenting on the parsage in language which astonished the hearers, and applying the predictions of the prophets to Hinself the instant little and will be the and But the honest wonder and delight at His words soon gave way to less friendly feeling. Whispers soon ran through the congregation respecting Him. How came He by such wisdom? He belonged to no school: claimed no place in the succession of Rabbis: spoke on His own authority, without ordination or sanction from the doctors: Is not this the carpenter, the son of Miriam and Joseph, the brother of James and Joses, and of Juda and Simon? and are not His sisters here, with us? They could not realize One with whom, and with whose circle, they had been on familiar relations of citizenship, as a prophet. Perhaps His freedom towards the traditions had affended the strict notions of some of His brothers, and the petty jealous of a country village could not acknowledge a superior in one whom they had long treated as an equal, or even an inferior. His humble origin, His position as a carpenter, a trade He had learned among thein, the absence of anything special in His family, and the fact that even they did not acknowledge. His claims, were all remembered, Perhaps jealousy of Capernaum mingled with other thoughts, for He had done miracles there, and none in Nazareth. Moreover, if He did not belong to the schools. He could not speak or act by inspiration from above, for the Rabbis were the teachers appointed by God. He must do His miracles, as the Rabbis said, by the help of the devik He could not, they began to think, have come by His knowledge and eloquence by fair means, or in the usual way. He must have un Arthous & An To the WEAK HUR DOT DOT BURDED TH holy aid.

This was enough to turn the Synagogue against Him, and His own words intensified the revolution of feeling, and brought it to a crisis. He frankly told them that He knew they thought "that He should help Himself before helping them, and remove the suspicion and disrespect they growingly felt, by miracles like those of Capernaum, as the only way to convince them of His claimst. But He would not do in Nazareth what He had done there, for He well knew that no prophet had any honour in his own country. Had not Elijah confined his miraculous power to strangers, and they heathen, and with drawn it from Israel? Their hardness of heart enforced the same on Him, and if Israel, as a whole, showed a like spirit, it also would see

His mig could st in wild to throw spell cas through 26 This d Jesus Hi for the a few sic towards fect. T Hissuper orindiffe of moral noBut the neighbour of Esdrae ever, in th conception um; and J and from e sevenio English co cover the c The apo experience. words and moral defic and want d modest self before then and simple and that no hard trodde In Gadara e aspects of and harsho After long in their Mu selves in spi the interest hear the n wherever H whole popu Galilee, the day from esk. when ho lesson contained spirit of he Gospel captives. oppressed: ing down. 10 parsage he predicteet, II The ave way to ngregation elonged to : spoke lon he doctors. the brother His sisters n and with enship as a ad affended jealousy of one whom His humble med among the fact that emembered. houghts for eover, if He vinspiration by God He of the devil: owledge and ist have un ar. Habbel El and His own it to a crisis: at He should cion and dis apernaum; 188 would not do new sthat and t Elijah conen and with the same on loo would see

sation or R. O.

1

His mighty works withdrawn and shown among the heathen of They could stand no more The whole synagorue rose in commotion, and in wild uproar hustled Him towards the steep wall of rock hard by. to throw Him from it, headlong But His time was not yet come. A. spell cast on the fierce mobil opened a way for Him, and He passed through them, and left the town unhurtranset with in her wick i day This disastrous result so far exceeded all previous experience, that Jesus Himself marvelled at their unbellef diteven fettered Hisaction. for "He could do no mighty work, save that He laid His hands upon a few sick and healed them." He exerted His miraculous power only tawards those in whom He found moral sympathy, however imperfect. The human will, mysteriously independent, needed to meet His supernatural might and give it entrance, as if the soul, opposed or indifferent, were wayside soil, on which the seeds of physical, as of moral blessing, fell without fruitall bib of webr brown had therefore noBut, though He left Nazareth never to return. He remained in the neighbourhood for a time, preaching in the villages of the great plain of Esdraelon, faniand near of The whole theatre of His activity however, in this circuit, as in previous ones, was limited beyond ordinary conception. From north to south, between Chorazin, above Capernaum and lezreel, in the great plain, was only a distance of ten hours. and from east to west, from Chorazin to Cana, or Nazareth, only six or seven His whole life was spent in a space represented by one or two English counties, but the seed sown on this speck of ground is yet to cover the iearth formanif as now out in the destination which have set "The apostles had now passed through a lengthened and varied" experience, and besides the constant instruction of their Master's words and life, had learned from their own hearts how great their moral deficiencies still were. Their faint-heartedness, irresoluteness, and want of faith, were evident, and they were thus brought to that modest self distrust which alone could fit them for the heavier duties before them. They were now to rise from the position of dependent and simple followers and scholars, and become co-workers with Jesus, and that not only on the good soil already sown, but, rather, on the hard trodden paths, the stony ground, and that pre-occupied by thorns. In Gadara and Nazareth, they had learned to distinguish the opposite aspects of unbelief; in the one that of common natural selfishness and harshness in the other that of proud perverted fanaticism. After long wanderings and continuous trials, the Twelve were now, in their Master's opinion, in a measure prepared to work by themselves in spreading the New Kingdom. In spite of the opposition of the interested professional classes, the enthusiasm of the people to hear the new teaching was unabated. Multitudes followed Jesus wherever He appeared; the synagogues still offered access to the whole population each Salbath and in all the cities, and villages of Galilee, the "Gospel of the Kingdom" was the great topic of conversationuo wioaia mitimovieli subikanay, sharroch estimatel is mhe annisi

806

The times moreover, were exciting: The whole country rang with the story of a massacre of Galikeans by Pilate, at the last Feast of Tabernacles perhaps, at the same tumult in which Joseph Barabbas was arrested as a ringleader, to be afterwards freed instead of Jesus. Pilate was always ready to shed the blood of a people he hated, and the the hot-blooded Galileans, ever ready to take affront at the hated infidels, gave him only too many excuses for violence of They had a d standing grievance in the sacrifices offered dail yfor the Empire and a the Emperor, and at the presence of a Roman garrison and Roman pickets at the Temple, during the feasts, to keep the peace, as Turkish. soldiers do at this day, during Easter, at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre! But Pilate had given special offence, at this time, by appropriating part of the treasures of the Temple, derived from the Temple tax devied on all Jews over the world, and mounting to vast sums in the aggregate-to defray the cost of great conduits he had began for the better supply of Jerusalem with water. Stirred up by the priests and Rabbis, the people had besieged the government house when Pilate came up to the city at the feast, and with loud continue ous cries fad demanded that the works be given up. Seditious words against himself, the representative of the Emperor, had not been wanting. He had more than once been forced to yield to such clame a our, but this time determined to put it down. Numbers of soldiers. in plain clothes, and armed only with clubs, surrounded the yast mob. and used their cudgels so remorselessly that many both of the innocent and guilty, were left dead on the spot of The very precincts of the Temple were invaded by the legionaries, and some pilgrims who were so poor that they were slaving their own sacrifices, were struck. down while doing so, their blood mingling with that of the beasts they were preparing for the priests, and thus polluting the House of Goding It was an unprecedented outrage, and filled every breast in a Judea and Galilee with the wildest indignation, though such brawls. were of frequent occurrence. The excitement had even penetrated the palace at Tiberias, and kindled bitter ill-feeling in Antipas towards Pilate for the men slain were Galilæan subjects about of rivert e lade

Another misfortune had happened in Jerusslem a short time before. A tower, sparently on the top of Ophel, near the Fountain of the Virgin opposite Siloam, had fallen-perhaps one of the buildings connected with Filate's public-spirited steps to bring water to the Holy City-and eighteen men had been buried beneath it; in the opinion of the people, as a judgment of God, for their having helped the sacrilegious undertaking.

The cry for a national rising to avenge the murdered pilgrims doubtless rose on every side, but Jesus did not sanction it for a moment of He saw the arm of God even in the hated Romans, and in the fall of the tower, and, instead of sympathizing with them for the one, and joining in a cry for insurrection for the other, told His astonished hearers that the same horrors were like to fall on the whole nation.

" Suppo all the you nay. those eig suppose Jerusale the same by a mar ied by its and it wa another fruit vear of m and work dream. th it trusted revolution repentance the vine-d frame. H to their do the only es were more ecclesiastic selfireform they now would crete

There we keep up the oner, in the each day n death. Under an touched a h siasin made woli to the the Good & with none; he no

"Suppose ye." He asked. "that these Galilzans were sinners above all the Galileans, because they have suffered such things? I tell you nay, but, except ye repent, ye shall all perish in like manner. "Or those eighteen upon whom the tower in Siloam fell and killed them. suppose ye that they were sinners above all the men that dwell in Jerusalem? I tell you nay: but except ye repent, ye will all perish in the same manner?" Israel," He added, at is like a fig tree, planted by a man in his vineyard, which year after year bore no fruit. Wear ied by its barrenness, the householder was determined to cut it down. and it was now spared at the intercession of the vine-dresser, only for another year, to give it a last respite. After that, if it still bore no fruit he would out it down, as merely cumbering the ground. That vear of merciful delay was the passing moment of His own presence and work among them. The nation had given itself up to a wild drenn, that would end in its run i Led by the priests and Rabbis it trusted that God would appear on its behalf, and by a political revolution overthrow the hated foreign domination. MThe fruits of repentance and faith, which God required, were still wanting. As the vine-dresser, Jesus, had done all possible to win them to a better framed He had warned besought, counselled; but they were wedded to their does and their sinful pride. His peaceful kingdom offered them the only escape from ruin, here and hereafter, but as a nation, they were more and more turning towards the worldly schemes of their ecclesiastical leaders, and lent a deaf ear to all proposals of spiritual to self reform? Continuance in this course would bring the fate of those they now lamented on the whole race. If they rejected Him. God would cretong destroy them as a people,"Many survey out stall noor estero a

There was still another matter agitating all minds, and helping to obkeep up the volcanic excitainent of the country. "John lay still a prisoner, in the black fortress of Machaerus, almost within sight, and o each day men wondered if Antipas had yet dared to put him too death. Decogno you best doorn how of Conservation how period of the part of the second

Under any circumstances, the crowds following Jesus would have touched a heart so tender, but their wild despair and religious enthus siash made the sight of them doubly affecting. Might they not be won to the peace and joy of the glad tidings? They seemed to Him, the Good Shepherd, like a great flock needing many shepherds, but with not: footsofe with long travel, wandering they knew not wither, with no one to lead them to the still waters and green pass tures. The harvest," said He to His disciples, "is plenteous, but the labourers are few; pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest," that He will send forth labourers into His harvest." There were multitudes to be won for the New Kingdom, multitudes prepared to hear, for their spirits were broken under personal and national sorrow. But the number of right teachers was small.

Feast of Barabbus of Jesus. hated, and us the bated of hey had a () mpire and ad nd Roman Hoi as Turkish Holy Sep in by approa the Tem. or ng to vast ns uits he had irred up by h ment house ud continunin tious words. d not been such clam; of of soldiers, ne vast mob of the innoprecincts of ilgrims who were struck of the beasts the House of ry breast in such brawls n penetrated ipas towards richell a lieura time before. ntain of the uildings.con r to the Holy the opinion elped the sach cigmodal or ered pilgrims nit for a mo ne; and in the n for the one lisrastonished whole nation

rang with

508

carry it out. As a proof of their mission from Him, He invested them with authority over spirits, and gave them power to heal diseases. They were to confine themselves for the present to Jewish districts. avoiding Samaritan towns, and not entering on the road to heathen parts. Galilee itself was thus virtually their field of labour. for heathenism had a footing in every place round it, and within a few miles of them, lay Gadara, Hippos, Pella, Scythopolis, and even Sepphorie, with heathen worship, in their midst Judea, and Jerusa. lem were not to be thought of. The simple Galileans would be a better beginning for the Apostles than the dark bigoted population of the south. One day they would be free to visit Samaria, as He Himself had already. Meanwhile they must not stir up Jewish hatred by going to either Samaritans or heathens. Moreover, their, own Jewish prejudices unfitted them for a mission to any but Jews, for, even after this the first signs of hostility made John wish to call down fire from heaven on a Samaritan village, and they were not fit as yet to handle aright the many questions such a journey would elicit. Besides, Israel must have another year in which to bring forth fruit; and withal, it was their first independent journey aplestore when

The burden of their preaching was to be the repetition of that of John, and of Jesus Himself, when He began, "The Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." Like John, they were heralds, to prepare the way. "Heal the sick," said He, "raise the dead, cleanse lepers, cast out demons." They had received their miraculous gifts freely. and must dispense them as freely. Their equipment was to be of the simplest, for superfluity diverted the mind from their great object. and made an extra burden which would only hinder them on their journeys. It became them, also, by their bumble guise, to disarm the suspicion of worldliness, and to show their implicit trust in God. They were to take not money; not even any copper coin, in their gitdles, the usual Eastern purse; nor a wallet for their food by the way; nor two under garments, but were to wear only one; nor were they to have shoes, which looked like luxury, but only the sandals of the common people, and they were to have only one staff. They were to go as the peasants of Palestine often do yet, trusting to hospitality for food and shelter, offering in their simplicity a striking contrast to the flowing robes and bright colours of the population at large. But they were not to go alone. Each must have a companion, to accustom them to brotherly communion, to give counsel, and hep to each other in difficulties, and to cheer each other on the way. We may fancy that Peter was sent with Andrew, James with John, Philip with Bartholomew, the grave Thomas with the practical Mat thew, James the Small with Judas the Brave-hearted, and Simon the Zealot with Judas Iscariot; the brother with the brother; the friend with the friend; the zealous with the cold and on we sell of most No mention is made of the synagogues in their instructions; it may be because the Apostles were not yet confident enough to come forward so publicly. It was to be a house to house mission. While every traveller, according to the custom of the country, greeted his acquaintances with laborious formality, raising the hand from the heart to the forehead, and then laying it in the right hand of the person met; even, according to circumstances, bowing thrice, or as miny as seven times; they were forbidden to indulge in any greetings by the way. Time was too precious, and their mission too earnest for empty courtesies. On entering a town or village, they were to make inquiries, to guard against their seeking hospitality. from the unworthy, but having once become guests, they were to stay in the same family till they left the place. They were to enter the dwelling which heartily welcomed them, with a prayer for its peace. Any house or city, however, that refused to receive them, was to be treated openly as heathen, by their shaking off its dust from their feet as they left it. But woe to such as brought down this wrath; it would be better at the last day for Sodom and Gomornah than for the Galilæan village in such a case! To these directions for the way Jesus added warnings that might have well filled with dismay men less devoted. He predicted for them only persecution and universal hatred, jails, public whipping, and eyen death, but cheered them by the promise that their brave and faithful confession of faith in Him, before governors and kings, would serve His cause, and that endurance to the end would secure their eternal salvation. They would be like helpless sheep in the midst of treacherous wolves. Even their work would be different from what they might expect. To-day it was an olive-branch; tomorrow it would be a sword. Instead of peace, it would divide liouscholds and communities, and turn the closest relations into deadly enemies. They would need to labour diligently, for before they had gone over all the towns of Israel. He Himself would come to their aid as the risen and glorified Messiah. They might expect slander, for He Himself had been charged with being in league with the devil, and they could not hope to fare better. They were, however, to be stout of heart, for the Providence that watches the birds of the air would keep them safe. He had nothing to offer in this world, but if they confessed Him here He would confess them, in the great day, before His Father. If, on the other hand, they denied Him, He would, on that day, deny them. He frankly demanded a lovalty so supreme and undivided, that the most sacred claims of blood were to be subordinated to it. Instead of receiving honours, He told them that they might expect to be crucified, as He would be. To save this life by denying Him would be to lose the life to come: but to lose it by fidelity to Him, was to find life eternal. Amidst all this dark anticipation, they need not fear for their bodily wants, for the greater the danger braved the greater would be the reward in His kingdom to those who showed them favour, and this would always the start hour is usade of the synapping in the shart in the structure to come al diseases. h. districts, to heathen labour, for ithin a few and even and Jerusawould be a opulation of as He Him, sh hatred by own Jewish vs, for, even to call down not fit as yet would elicit. forth fruit; on of that of Kingdom of prepare the eanse lepers, gifts freely. s to be of the great object. hem on their se, to disarm trust in God. coin, in their food by the ne; nor were y the sandals staff. They isting to hoscity a striking population at a companion, nsel and help the way. We s with John, oractical Mat nd Simon the er; the friend astructions; 1 ough to come

le invested

Buch an address, under such circumstances, was assuredly never given before or since. To propose to found a kingdoin by the services of men, who, as their reward, would meet only shame, forture, and death; to claim from them an absolute devotion, from more personal reverence and love, with no prospects of reward except those of another world; and to launch an enterprise thus supported only by moral influences, in the face of the opposition of all the authority of the day, simply to win men to rightcousness by the display of pure, unselfish devotion to their good, astounds us by the sublime grandeur of the conception.

No details are given of the mission, except that the Twelve, went on a lengthened circuit through the towns and villages of Galilee, preaching the need of repentance, and the glad tidings of the New Kingdom; and that their ministry was accompanied by miraculous works of mercy-the casting out devils, and the anointing many sick with oil, and healing them which were themselves proofs of them higher success, since such wonders were, doubtless, as in the case of their Master, wrought only when there was a measure of faith. stola weeks, or have extended over months, though, as the first journey of the Twelve, alone, it is not likely to have been very protracted. The success must have been unusual, for, as they appeared, two by two: in the villages of Galilee, the name of Jesus was on every tongue. and penetrated even the gilded saloons of the hated Roman palace of Antipas, at Tiberias. Jesus, Himself, had not been idle while His followers were away, for their departure was the signal for a new, solitary journey, to preach and teach in the various cities. His name was thus spread abroad everywhere, and His claims and character discussed by an. He had been nearly two years before the world, and had steadily risen in popular, favour; in spite of the hierarchical party. His claims became the engrossing topic of the day. Hitherto, the most opposite views had perplexed all alke. More than all mon. Antipas felt his eyes irresistibly fixed on Him, for his conscience was ill at ease. He had at last put John to death, and, true to his superstitious and weak nature, concluded that Jesus was no other than the murdered Baptist risen from the dead, and clothed with the awful powers of the invisible world. Since that dear head had fallen, the weak and crafty worldling had hoped for peace and security, but an awful echo of the voice he had silenced sounded louder and more terrible, from the lips of Jesus, at his very doors. He was now again in Tiberias, and the wide dispersion of a whole band of preachers of the same apparently revolutionary Kingdom, in his immediate territory, seemed a designed deflance of his violence at Machaerus, and its counterstroke. It was certain that, when he gained courses enough, he would t + to repeat the murder of the first prophet by that of the second. Suspicion and crafty foresight were his characteristics. Jesus readily, however, learned all that passed respecting ad secure a cafe retreat in the quiet globs with their rick press isvon ish Himself 4 the wife a and He'w SecWhile ?? others for Him for a work, wer men liwhoclaimed, e devoted H was neares threw a in failed to re The new the same t prediction before His announced struck the told, more violent dea pride, and combined 4 prophets, as against the religious ec deliberately tradition : H leaders of th and death m own blood t The meeti returned to th to effect it. had evidently Him again, a poured out it increased by lerusalem, fo was much to either the res had no leisure o be in the herefore, He he Lake, goin he shadow of nd secure a

THE LET OF CHIRST

ivon dibourses and a milling OF, CHRIST. profile on der 511.

Himself in the palace, for He had followers in it, such as Johanns, the wife of Chouza, and Menahem, the foster-brother of the tetrarch, and He was on His guard. While Antipas thus interpreted the rumours respecting Jesus.

others formed an opinion hardly more acute or thoughtful, who took Him for a second Elias. John and Elijah, In their whole spirit and work, were men devoted to the traditional and outward theoeracy: men who looked to the past. Jesus, on the other, hand, had proclaimed, even in His consecration sermon on the mountain, that Ho devoted His life to the founding of a New, Covenant, Their, opinion was nearer the truth who believed Him a prophet, though distance threw a inysterious glory round the prophets of the past, which they failed to realize of one in their midst. no. or iten off-ivoron lo estron, "The news of the death of John seems to have reached Jesus about the same time as the Apostles returned, and, doubtless, seemed the prediction of His own fate. The prospect of the cross had been before His mind from the first, for even at the Jordan He had licen announced as the Lamb of God. The Sermon on the Mount had struck the key-note of self-sacrifice, and He had once and again foretold, more or less clearly, that He felt His path would be towards a violent death. It was inevitable that one whom the interest, the pride, and the reputation of the existing ecclesiastical authorities combined to proscribe, must fall before their hostility. Even the prophets, as a rule, had suffered violent deaths, though their protest against the corruption of their day involved no condemnation of the religious economy of the nation. But He had committed Himself deliberately to principles fatel to the theorney; for He had violated tradition; He had eaten with publicans, and He had denounced the leaders of the people as hypocrites, blind, and wicked. It was a life and death matter for the hierarchical party to try to quench in His own blood the fire He had kindled. A milisperni envy end wat ergitate The meeting with the Apostles was likely pre-arranged, and Jesus returned to the neighbourhood of Capernaum, or, perhaps, of Tiberias, to effect it. He had been away for a length of time, and His absence had evidently been deeply felt, for multitudes at once gathered round lim again, as soon as He re-appeared. Every village, far and near, poured out its population to hear Him once more, and the throng was increased by the countless passing bands of pilgrims to the Feast at levusalem, for Passover was near at hand. He needed rest, and there was much to hear from the Twelve, but it was impossible to have either the rest or the quiet intercourse amidst such crowds. They had no leisure even to eat. It was, moreover, no longer safe for Him o be in the territories of Antipas. Taking the Twelve with Him, herefore, He crossed over to the tetrarchy of Philip, at the head of he lake, going by water, and landing at the Plain of Batiha, under he shadow of Bethsaida, or Julias, where He could hope for privacy, nd secure a safe retreat in the quiet gleus, with their rich green uithority of lay of pure, ac grandeur Glaibler welve, went s of Galilee. of the New miraculous g many sick oofs of their n the case of f. faith. 910196 ve embraced st journey of tracted. The two by two; very tongue, nan palage of lle while His al for a new, nd character re the world. e hierarchical ay, Hitherto than all men. onscience was to his supero other than hed with the ad had failen security, but der and more vas now again f preachers of mmediate ter achaerus, and ined courage st prophet by re his charac

edly never

by the set-

ac, torture,

cept those ted only by

sed respecting

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

slopes, passing gradually into the marshes round the entrance, of the Jordan into the Lake. The base of the instance of the

512

512

But it was vain to hope for escape. Some had seen Him put off. and watched the direction of the boat till they knew that He was making for Batiha, which was known as one of His resorts. It was only six miles across the water from Capernaum The news soon spread, and crowds of those most anxious to see and hear Him set out by land for the spot. The distance was farther than by the Lake. but they ran afoot out of all the villages, and were waiting for Him when He arrived. He had come for rest, but it was denied Him now as at other times. Looking up as the boat touched the shore, the slopes were alive with multitudes who showed by their very presence that they felt themselves like sheep without a shepherd. The evil times, the restless uncasiness of all, the high religious excitement, the darkness of their spiritual condition, and the equal misery of their national prospects, combined to touch His soul with pity. They had brought all the sick who could be carried, or who could come, and as He bassed through the crowds He healed them by a word or touch. They had greater wants, however, than bodily healing, and He could not let them go away uncomforted. Ascending the hill-side, and gathering the vast throng before Him. He "spake unto them of the kingdom of God, and taught them many things." The day was spent in this arduous labour, but the people still linzered. They had been fed with the bread of truth, and seemed in different, for the time, to anything besides. Poor shepherdicss sheet It was His delight, as the Good Sheph crd, to lead them to rich pastures, and as they sat and stood round Him, they forgot their bodily wants in the beauty and power of His words. Internetion ( It was now towards evening, and the company showed no signs of dispersing. Food could not be had in that lonely place, and the Twelve, afraid on this and perhaps other grounds, anxiously urged Jesus to send them away, that they might buy bread in the country round. To their astonishment, ho wever, He told them they mus themselves supply them; it would never do to dismiss them hunging they might faint by the way. No more impossible request could have been made. Between thirty and forty pounds' worth of breed at the value of money in those days, would be needed to give each even an insufficient share. They could not understand Him. An drew, perhaps the provider for the band; could only demonstrate their helplessness by saying that the lad in attendance on them had only five loaves of common barley bread-the food of the poor-and two small fishes, but what, he added, were they among so many? Make the men sit down," said Jesus. It was in Nisan, "h month of flowers." and the slopes were rich with the soft green of the spring grass that simplest and most touching lesson of the care God for all nature. The Twelve presently divided the vast multitud into companies of fifties and hundreds, reminding St. Peter, log after, 1 beds of This

Jesus

While vis

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

THE LIPIC OF LEHING

efter, from the bright colours of their Eastern dresses, of the flowerbeds of a great garden up nonfermin all or all with methods a special work

This done; like the great Father of the far-stretching household. Jesus took the bread and the fishes, and looking up to Heaven, invoked the blessing of God on their use, and giving thanks for them, as was customary before all meals; proceeded to hand portions to the disciples, who, in turn, gave them to the crowd." Elisha had once fed a hundred men with twenty loaves, and increased the oil in the widow's cruse, and Elijah had made the bread and the oil of the widow of Sarepta endure till the Lord sent rain on the earth. But Christ, from three loaves and two small fishes, not only satisfied the hunger of five thousand men, besides women and children, but did it so royally that the fragments that remained were enough to fill twelve of the little baskets in which Passover pilgrims and other Jows were wont to carry their provisions for the way. More was left than there had been at first a supproup ib unique things destruct there is an Jesus had thus supplied the wants of the needy, in a way the full significance of which was as yet far beyond what the disciples either understood of dreamed, for He had shown how there dwelt in Hini a virtue sufficient to meet all higher wants, as well as the lower, so that none who believed in Him would ever have either hunger or thirst of soul any longer, but would find in Him their all. Had they known it. He had shown them that He Himself was the Bread of Life, that came down from Heaven. But they at least knew how much they came short of a lofty faith; which, in loving trust, despairs least when the need is greatest, and in the strength of which all is doubled by joyful imparting, while abundance remains instead of want

The effect on the multitude was in keeping with the ideas of the time. Murmurs ran through the excited throng, that Jesus must be the expected prophet—the Messiah Like Moses, He had fed Israel by a miracle, in the wiklerness, which the Rabbis said the Messiah would do Surely He would manifest Himself now, if they put Him at their head? They had no higher idea of the Messianic Kingdom than the outward and political, and would hasten its advent by forcing Him, if possible, to proclaim Himself King, and thus open the longed for war with the hatred Romans, in which God would appear on their behalf.

Material power, not moral preparation, was the national conception of the path to the Messianic triumph. The Rabbis and the people had decided for themselves the way in which the salvation of Israel was to show itself, but between their views and those of Jesus there was a great gulf. He would not use force, and they were bent on it. His refusal to carry out their plan made opposition inevitable, and it necessarily grew deeper each day as that refusal became more clearly final.

While visions of national splendour dazzled the thoughts of His countryinen, the ideal of greatness for Himself and them lay with ace, of the im put off, hat He was ts. It was news soon ear Him set y the Lake, ing for Him ed Him now e shore, the ery presence d. The evil citement, the isery of their They had come, and as ord or touch. and He could hill-side, and o them of the beople still linind seemed inherdicss sheep m to, rich pastheir bodily wed no signs of place, and the Bxiously urged in the country hem they mus s them hungiy: e request could worth of bread ed to give each and Him. An alvi demonstraid nce on them had f the poor-and g SO many? in Nisan, "the soft green of the n, of the care of e vast multitude s. St. Peter, lon

94 Hitle fa

The they

their os

TY OLIKE

miracle

the onn

of have ex

amagen

DB cated 1

stolid v

loaves h

this new

sion, lik

reverenc

age in w

art the S

of bring and to

sent off. the

Dent Cauch

will for thim

WHEN

ing befo

warm sr

that Jesu

on their

usually c districts.

the same

finding t

to Caperi

worship-

synagoge

was at its

His way

sick to 1

healing t

The in

for the h

pect from

der, and

kind, and

the Gaul

bad wort

Transcen

they we

DBI

broadly

Jesus in humiliation. His path was in the lowly valleys not on the high places of the earth. He aimed only to and the humble and needy, to seek the lost, to serve rather than to be served Hiding His glory in outward lowliness, and never seeking honour from men. He had, throughout, identified His with with that of God, with a self-restraint which showed the grandest force of will. The outward and material were indifferent to Himy and utterly opposed to the divine purpose, if made an aim in connection with His work. The reign of God in His own soul was the perfect realization of the only kingdom He sought to found in the souls of men at large, and it had nothing in common with the vulgar parade of an earthly royalty. As soon, therefore, as He perceived the design of the crowd to force Him to act as their leader, and to instal Him at Jerusalem at the head of a national insurrection, He hurriedly left them, and went into the bosom of the hills, beyond their reach But that He had declined to be led by them to the throne of David, in their way, was in reality, a step towards the Cross. The very proposal was a foreshadowing of His final rejection and violent death. The solitude of the mountains was His fittest retreat, to strengthen Himself against this new assault of the temptation He had so often repelled, and to gird up His soul for the trials that lay in His path. Autod of a

At the first signs of tumult among the people, He had sent off the Twelve to cross the Lake again at once, to the Bethsaida near Capernaum, while He dismissed the multitudes. They had waited for Him till night fell, but, at last, as He did not come they set off without Him?" As they rowed however, a sudden squal, blowing every way. struck down on the bake from the hills around, and caught their boat. It was the last watch of the night-between three and six o'clock in the wild morning, and the weary boatmen had been toiling at their cars since the night before, but though the whole distance to be rowed was only six miles, they had only made two-thirds of the way Jesus was not with them tonstill the wind, and their own strength and skill had availed little. on But suddenly, close to the boat they saw through the gleam of the water and the broken light of the stars, a human form walking on the sea. The sight would have troubled men less superstitious than simple fishermen, and made them cry out in their terror. But it was only momentary, for close at hand, so that it was heard above the wind and the wayes, came the words, "Be of good cheer; it is I: be not afraid," in a voice which they knew was that of Jesus. Always impulsive, the warmhearted Peter could not wait till the Deliverer came among them. "Would not his Master suffer him to como to Him on the water?" Then followed that touching incident which has supplied a lesson for all ages; the safe footing on the waves while the apostle kept his eyes fixed on his Lord, and the instant sinking when his faith gave way-an image of this whole nature, and of all his future life, But the saving hand was near, and with the gentle rebuke ..... O, thou a ind on the humble and ed. Hiding (frommen, God, with a Phejoutward posed, to the work. The of the only e, and it had royalty.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

515

he crowd to Jerusalem at m, and went that He had eir way, was, h was a forehe colitude of meelf against pelled, and to

d sent off the a near Caperaited for Him et off without og every way, caught their three and six d been toiling ole distance to -thirds of the nd their own se to the bont, en light of the t would have an, and made tary, for close e waves; came id," in a voice ive, the warm e among them. n the water?" ed a lesson for postle kept his his faith gave ture life. But so, "O thou of "Hitle faith, wherefore didst thou doubt 2" they were in the boat, and his they entered the wind ceased so that, presently, with easy sweeps, "their oars carried them to the shore series in colleged stars of the source of the shore series in the

The Like the mass of men, the Twelve were slow at reasoning or applying broadly the plainest lesson. Had they realized the greatness of the miracle they had seen the day before, even the walking on the see, and d the calming of the wind, would have seened only what they might od have expected, di But their minds were duli and unreflecting, and their manient knew no bounds. At is the characteristic of the uncdube cated, that they think without continuity, and forthwith relapse into stolid vacuity after the strongest excitement. The miracle of the loaves had ceased to be a wonder, for it was some hours old. But <sup>18</sup> His new Illustration of the superhuman power of their Master was so transcendent, that their wonder passed into worship. The impression, like many before, might soor lose its force; but for the moment they were so awed that, approaching Him, they kneeled in lowliest "reverence, and, through Peter, even their spokesnian, paid, Him homage in words then first heard from human lips -" Of a truth Thou b the mountains was I list fittest relicat, toy step" of the maintainter off warm spring night, still remained on the spot. They had noticed that Jesus did not cross with the Twelve, and fancied that He was still on their side of the Lake. Meanwhile, a number of the boats which usually carried over wood or other commodities, from these eastern. districts, had come from Tiberias; blown roughly on their way by the same wind that had been against the discribes. In these, many, finding that Jesus and left the neighbourhood, fook passage, and came to Capernaum, seeking for Himal. It was one of the days of synagogue worship-Monday or Thursday wand they not Him on His way to the synagogue, to which they accordingly went with Him, Excitement was at its height. News of His arrival had spread far and near, and His way was hindered by crowds, who had, as usual, brought their sick to the streets through which He was passing, in hope of His healing thein and a vient of the test and want with a lotter The incidents of the preceding day might well have raised designs, for the higher spiritual food which even the Rabbis taught them to ex. pect from the Messiah. But they felt nothing higher than yulgar wonder and came after Jesus in hopes of further advantages of the same kind, and, above all, that they would still find in Him a second Judas the Gaulonite, to lead them against the Romans. A few, doubtless, bad worthier thoughts, but, to the main, the Messiah's kingdom was as gross as Mahomet's paradise. They were to be gathered together into the garden of Eden, to est, and drink, and satisfy themselves all their days, with houses of precious stones, beds of silk, and rivers flowing with wine, and spicy oil for all. It was that He might gain all this for them that they had wished to set Him up as king. Feeling how utterly He and they were at variance, Jesus resolved to enter into no irrelevant conversation with them, and waiving aside a question as to His crossing the Lake, at once pointed out their misapprehension respecting Him, and urged them not to set their hearts on the perishable food of the body, but to seek earnestly for that food of the soul which secures eternal life. So long as they did not seek this beyond all things else, they missed their highest rdvantage. As the Son of Man-the Messiah-accredited from God the Father by His wondrous works, He was appointed to give them this heavenly food, and would do so if they showed a sincere desire for it by becoming His disciples.

The Rabbis were accustomed to teach by metaphors, and the people saw at once that He alluded to some religious duty. What it was, however, they did not understand, but fancied He referred to some special works appointed by God. As Jews, they had been painfully keeping all the Rabbinical precepts, in the belief that their doing so gave them a claim above. Yet, if He had some additional injunctions, they were willing to add them to the rest, that they might legally qualify themselves for a share in the New Kingdom of God, as a right. But, instead of multiplied observances, He startled them by announcing that citizenship in the New Theorracy required no more than their believing in Him, as sent from the Father. In this lay, all, for the manifold "works of God" would spring naturally from it.

Those of the crowd around who had not seen the miracle of the day before had, doubtless, ere this, heard of it. It had been an amazing proof of supernatural power, but, their craving for wonders demanded something still more astounding, as a justification of His claim to be "the Sent of the Father." A voice, perhaps that of some open opponent—for the Rabbis had taken care to be present—therefore broke in apparently half mocking, with the question, "What 'sign' He had to show, that they might see it, and believe Him? Moses proved his authority by stupendous 'signs.' What sign worthy the name do you do, to show your right to introduce new laws, in addition to his, or in their room? Our fathers ate the manna in the wilderness, as it is written, 'He gave them bread from heaven to eat.' What youcher as great as this do you offer?"

The miracle of the manna had become a subject of the proudest remembrances and fondest legends of the nation. "God," says the Talmud, "made manna to descend for them, in which were all manner of tastes. Every Israelite found in it what best pleased him. The young tasted bread, the old honey, and the children oil." It had even become nalize H the first Rabbis, Saviouronce mo land, ''' God cou he was h The low entrance and the a fore, him. liberty fr done had

It was Jesus was miracles human n outward expectation they saw mand for to be the whose, on tirely con But Je fer any pe wonders. not the tr merely or ing befor

in the off

could only

and perisl

sky, not th

a figure.

Father co

true Brea

He might

gives life

were spiri "Maste life." L Florida, tl immortal, the mere l ed togethur insolves all and rivers might gain dg.

us resolved ving aside a their misapir hearts on or that food lid not seek antage. As Father by is heavenly or it by bed the people Vhat it was, red to some en painfully cir doing so onal injuncthey might lom of God, tartled them required no er. In this bg naturally iracle of the sen an amazwonders deation of His that of some scat—theretion, "What eliev, Him? What sign troduce new is the manna from heaven the proudest od," says the vere all man d him. The It had even become a fixed belief that the Messiah, when He came, would signalize His advent by a repetition of this stupendous miracle. "As the first Saviont—the deliverer from Egyptian bondage," said the Rabbis, "caused manna to fall for Israel from heaven, so the second Saviour—the Messiah—will also cause manna to descend for them once more, for it is written. 'There will be abundance of corn in the land," Moses had gradually been half deified. It was taught that God counted him of as much value as all Israel. Most believed that he was five grades in knowledge above all creatures, even angels. The lower part of his lody was human; the upper divine. 'On his entrance to paradise, God left the upper heavens and came to him, and the angels also came and ministered to him, and sang hymns before him. Even the sun, the moon, and the stars came, and craved liberty from him to shine on the world, which they could not have done had he refused.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

It was thus only an expression of the public feeling of the day when Jesus was asked to repeat the descent of manna—the greatest of the miracles of Moses. It is in human nature, but above all, in Eastern human nature, to associate high office and dignity with display and outward circumstance, and what must hence have been the popular expectations of external grandeur and majesty in the Messiah, when they saw a demigod in Moses, whom He was to resemble? No demand for overpowering "signs" of the divine approval of a claim to be the Messiah could, in this point of view, be too great, from one whose autward appearance, and whole life, in other respects, so entirely contradicted the general Messianic anticipations.

But Jesus, at all times resolute in withholding miraculous action fer any personal end, had no thought of satisfying their craving for wonders. "Moses, indeed," said He, "gave you manna, but it was not the true Bread of Heaven." He wished to draw them from the merely outward miracle to that far higher wonder, even then enacting before their eyes, the free offer of the true Bread of Heaven, in the offer of Himself as their Saviour. The manna, He implied, could only by a figure be called bread of Heaven, for it was material and perishable; and the heaven from which it fell was only the visible sky, not that in which God dwells. Moses gave what was called by a figure, "Bread of Heaven," but the true Bread of Heaven only His Father could give, and He was giving it now. That only can be the true Bread of God, which comes down from the highest heaven,-He might have said, from the pure heaven of His own soul,-and gives life to the world; for with Jesus, those who had not this bread were spiritually dead. were spiritually dead.

"Master," cried many voices, "give us this bread henceforth, for life." Like Ponce de Leon, with the spring of Unfading Youth in Florida, they thought that the new gift would literally make them immortal, and eagerly clamoured to have a boon so far in advance of the mere harley loaves of the day before spoken.

wilderne

Heaven

his soul.

"Lam

Living E

eats this live for a

that is n

understo

ceptions.

Heimpl

for so, Di

Hislife

life: the

was fami

expressio

InIsaiah

by the

down as food or d

worksort

the larae

ina meta

said Hil

received

ventional

tikinah. Pse

nressly s

-iparable s

dur But inc

dreams -

e with thei

Cases Wo

tion, oth

ni aInstead

o rose, ho

to carry

meat His f

His viole

syland, an

gross out

contendit

"I am the Bread of Life," replied Jesus; in a moment scattering to the winds their visions of material plenty and endless natural life. Then, explaining Himself, He added, He that comes to me shall never hunger, and he that believes on me shall never thirst. But, as I said a moment ago, you have not only heard of me, but have also seen me, and been eye-witnesses of my deeds as the Messiah, and yet you do not believe. All whom the Father gives me will come to me. You may resist my invitations or yield, but he who resists is not given me by my Father. Belleve me, no hunger. ing and thirsting soul that comes to me will I cast out of my King-dont when it is erected. How could I, indeed, when I have come down from heaven, not to act on my own human will but only to carry out the will of my Father in Heaven, which is, in this matter that, of all-not Jews alone, but all, without exception-whom He has given me I should lose none, but should raise them up in the last day-or, in other words, should give them eternal life." MULDUIT shift These words, spoken in the synagogue at Capernaum, created a great sensation. The congregation, comprising some Rabbis and other enemies, had, from time to time, in Jewish fashion, freely expressed their feelings, and had taken such offence at His claim to be the Bread that came down from heaven, that their whispers and murmurs now ran through the whole building. "" How can He say He has come down from heaven? We know His father and nother. He is from Nazareth, and would have us believe He is from God above. He is mad. He has a devil. When the Messiah comes, no one will know whence He is." All devide some some set a contract of the set of the "Do not murmur among yourselves," said Jesus. "Natural sense is worth nothing in this matter-it will never help you to understand how I am the True Bread come down from heaven." If you wish to know how I can say so, you must submit yourself to the teach ing and influence of God: must hear and learn what God says, for it tells us in the prophets- They shall be all taught of God. Only those thus taught come to me or believe in me. The yielding your souls to God and your rising thus to communion with Him by spiritual oneness, can alone lead to the faith that recognizes the truth respecting memore vidances of bas protoclancian to causib "Perhaps you think," He continued, to paraphrase His words, "that to hear and learn of God, you must yourselves see Him or commune directly with Him? If so, you greatly err. To see God immediately face to face, is given to no mortal man, but only to Him who is from God. No one but His only begotten Son, who was in beaven and has come down thence, has seen, and now sees, the Father, and reveals Him to man. Him, therefore the Son-that is, ME, must you hear; from ME must you learn; if you would hear and learn from God. Amen, amen, I say to you, He that believes on me thus the Word and Revealer of the Father, has everlasting Tife." I myself, am, as such, that Bread of Life of which have t scattering less natural omes to me never thirst. eard of me. v dueds as Father gives or yield, but no hungerof my King. have come but only to his matter, whom He in the last figlous solil

m, created a Rabbis and m, freely exsclaim to he hispers and can He say and mother. is from God uh comes, no storica (d) Natural sense

o understand you wish to outhen teach disays, for it God, an Only ielding your Him by spirteso the truth to constb

His words, see Him, or To see God only to Him, who was in ow sees, the Son—that is, uld hear and lieves on me s everlasting lick L. we spoken. Your forefathers ate the manna which Moses gave in the wilderness, and died; but it is the grand virture of the true Bread of Heaven, that if a man cat of it—that is, if he receive my words into his soul, he shall not die, but shall have everlasting life."

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

"I am not only the Life-giving Bread." He continued, "but the Living Bread, and as all that is living communicates life, so whoever eats this only true Bread of Heaven—whoever believes in me-shall live for ever. As the Living Bread I will give myself—my flesh that is, my life—for the life of the world."

He pointed thus—in language which His hearers could have readily understood, had their minds not been blinded by opposite preconceptions—to His death, as the "Lamb of God," for mankind. This, He implied, must, above all, be received, to secure everlasting life, for so, only, could His claims and authority be felt. He would give His life for the spiritual life of men, as bread is given for their bodily life: the one to be taken by the soul, the other by the body.

The idea of eating, as a metaphor for receiving spiritual benefit, was familiar to Christ's hearers, and was as readily understood as our expressions of "devouring a book," or "drinking in" instruction. In Isaiah iii. 1, the words if the whole stay of bread," were explained by the Rabbis as referring to their own teaching, and they laid it down as a rule, that wherever, in Ecclesiastes, allusion was made to food or drink, it meant study of the Law, and the practice of good works of It was a saving among them-"In the time of the Messiah the Israelites will be fed by Him." Nothing was more common in the schools and synagogues than the phrases of eating and drinking, in a metaphorical sense "Messiah is not likely to come to Israel. said Hilleh, "for they have already eaten Him"-that is, greedily received His words-" in the days of Hezekiah." A current conwentionalism in the synngogues was that the just would "eat the Shekinah." It was peculiar to the Jews to be taught in such metaphorical (language.) Their Rabbis never spoke in plain words, and it is expressly said that Jesus submitted to the popular taste, for "without a -iparable spake He not unto them."

its But nothing blinds the mind so much as preconceived ideas, and dreams of national glory had so inseparably associated themselves with their conception of the Messiah, that a figure, which in other cases would have created no difficulty, led to violent discussion, some contending for the literal sense, which they held as a self-contradiction, others favouring a metaphorical explanation.

Instead; however, of answering the eager questions which now rose, how this could be, Jesus, resolved to break finally with the gross outward ideas of His kingdom which prevailed, only proceeded to carry out the paradox farther, by adding that they must not only eat His flesh, but drink, His blood—thus intimating still more clearly His violent death and its mysterious virtue for the salvation of manwind, as He was hereafter to do still more vividly by the abiding

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

symbols of the Last Supper, anOn no other condition than by making the leasons and merits of that death their own could they have eterned life, or be raised up at the last day of Without this they were spiritually 'dead.' a) His flesh and blood were true spiritual food a the teavenly bread of the soul; the neurisliment of the divine life within The hearty recognition and reception of this great truth would create an abiding and intimate communich between Him and those who thus, as it were, fed on Him as their inner life. Living in Him, He would live and reign in them. Nay, as a further result of this intimate spiritual union this oneness of will and cheart with Him, divine dife would go forth from Him I to those in whom the found it, as it came forth to Himself from the Father Then with a repetition of the original figure of His beings the bread that come down from heaven; not the manna of which those who ate weight long since dead; but the bread, to eat which gave eternal life. He closed His address. That balls Busif bar said safet sout and as parte at The Baptist had spoken of the fan in the hand of his great successor: this discourse was the realization of the figure, in Those who hed hoped to find a popular political leader in Him saw their dreams nick away: those who had no true sympathy for His life and words had an excuse for leaving Him. or None who were not bound to Him by sincere loyalty and devotion had any longer a motive for following Him at Fierce patriotism burning for insurrection mean self. interest seeking wouldly advantage, and vulgar ouriosity craving excitement, were equally disappointed. It was attie first wivid instance of "the offence of the Cross"-henceforth to become the special stumbling-block of the nation. The wishes and hopes of the crowds who had called themselves disciples had proved self-deceptions They expected from the Messiah quite other favours than the identity of spiritual nature symbolized by the eating His flesh and drinking His blood, "The bloody death implied in the metaphor was ing direct contradiction to sall their sideas. A lowly and suffering Messial thus unmistakably set before them was revolting to their national pride and gross material tastes. off We have heard out of the Law," said some, a little later, " that the Christ abideth for even and how sayest thou the Son of man must be lifted up?-that is, crucified ?" That be far from Thee, Lorda this shall not be unto Thee, "spid even Beter almost at the last, when he heard from his Master's lips of the Cross, so near at hand. The Messiah of popular conception would use force to establish His kingdom but Jesus while claiming the Messiahship, spoke only of self-sactifice. Outward glory and material wealth were the national dream : He spoke only of inward purity. If He would not head them with Almighty power, to get Judea for the Jews, they would not have Hun ... Their idea of the kingdom of God was the exact opposite of His. A. honor The discourse had been interrupted in its progress and now, at is closed the murmuring and whispering grew mere calment that

020

undeceiv

everite

THE LIFE OF CHRIST. ever. W This is a hard soving "was the general feeling, the who can a by making have eternal were spif. tufood al the sodivine life ugreat struth en Him and Livingin hor result of b hearth with nawhom He Then, with disthat came ho ate weite nal life. He outs the har too s great suc-Those who their dreams e land words und to Him e for followmean self. sityacraving stuvivid inbecome the hopes of the l self-decepurs than the is flesh and etaphor was dosuffering ing to their eand out of th for ever. . that is; ot be unto d from his of popular but Jesus. ifice. Out-:He spoke Almighty m. Their Sub Librin nd, now, at tinest that bear it?" of No one could submit to such self denial," said one. I fill don't understande it, " said another. Hat Blasphemy, "sisid av third! "He claims to be God." of He is not the Messiahi for me," said a fourth . Jesus, now on His way out of the synagogue, noticed all. A Does what I have said offend you?" said He. at If. now, while I am with you, you think my words hard, and stumble at them what will you say when I tell you that when I have returned to heaven; whence I came, you will still have to eat my desh and drink my blood to become, through me, partakers of eternal diferent Do you not see from this that I speak in metaphor, and that you are not to ake my words literally, but in their spirit and inner meaning? I It is not my flesh you are to eat, but my words, which you have just heard. These you must receive into your hearts, and they will quicken you into spiritual life, for they are spirit and life. If you do not believe on me as the true Messiah, by His death the life of the world-but expect only a national salvation from my visible bodily presence as one who will live on earth for ever, and reign in deathless splendour -you must find what I have said an offence !! But he who desires from me, as the Messiah, only the hidden life of the soul, its renewal in the holy image of God, and His reign within, will find no offence in any of my words. The truths I have told you are spirit and life. and quicken the soul that receives them into a heavenly life as bread auickens the body. My mere outward natural life, as such profits you nothing. If my words have been hard to any, it is because they do not believe in me, for only the believing heart can realize their truth any obtain a second and a second and a second consistent and a second and a second a s In the Sermon on the Mount, which inaugurated His public ministry Jesus had contrasted the theocratic forms of pupilage and the letter, with the Law of the New Kingdom a law of the spirit and liberty In this address to the people He contrasted with the theocratic life in its mere outwardness and its slavery to forms, the new life from God which He made known-a life kindled and maintained by the Spirit from above-the gift of the Heavenly Father. The dead letter, the outward material flesh, He told them, profited nothing: the form, the rite, the dogma the institution, however venerable in itself-even. His own flesh, as the symbol of mere material life, had no magic virtue. Only the inward essence, the truth embodied, the living principle, the quickening spirit received into the hearth availed with God, or sustained the heavenly life in the soul. The life giving Spirit as it flows from the infinite fulness of God, and reproduces itself in the heart, was the true manna of humanity in the wilderness of the worldatable of blace blace , 9 gain fraite mit to wine The false enthusiasm which had hitherto gathered the masses round Jesus was henceforth at an end, now that their worldly hopes of Him as the Messiah were exploded His discourse had finally undeceived them. If He was founding a mysterious spiritual kingdom:

in the no

Teacher

follo We

tions' +

cial eccle

of Judai

the bigo

Medina.

Caperna

their atte

Himself

and blas

news fro

appeared

novator

further

Instie

freedom

Kingdon

of bondage

was qui freedom

h their m

how har

prejudio

aniti The'r

awayifr

tion to

of the n

hionism

withere

though

refenders

hethe firs

h and fea

withe new

anchec

vr-danger

To some t

tinually Jewish

they only cared for a kingdom of this world. If became for the first time clear that no worldly rewards or honours were to be had by following Him, but only spiritual gifts and benefits, for which most of them cared nothing. They wanted to see wonders, to eat bread from heaven that would protect them from dying, and to get places and wealth in the new kingdom when finally set up. They had looked on Jesus as a miracle-worker rather than a spiritual Saviour. and wished to be healed rather by touching His gaments than by sympathy and communion with His Spirit. But He had come to save sinners, not to work miracles, even of healing: to be a physician of souls, not of bodies. He had disenchanted the insincere and scliish who had hitherto flocked after Him? and they forthwith showed their altered feelings. From the moment of this address the crowds that had thronged Him began to disappear, returning to their homes, doubtless in angry disappointment. "It seemed as if He would be entirely forsaken. Could it be that even the Twelve would leave Him? He knew them too thoroughly to look for any answer but an carnest assurance of their loyalty. Yet it was well to put them to the test, and strengthen their faith by trying it. "Do you, also, wish to leave me?" asked He. ""To whom, Lord, shall we go haway?" answered Peter, ever the first to speak, ..... Thou hast words of eternal life, and we have believed and known that Thou art the Holy One of God."" But even in the Twelve, as Jesus knew, the fan had chaff to separate from the wheat. " Did not I myself choose you Twelve to be specially my own, and one (even) of you is a devil? Beware of self-confidence. If you think you stand, take heed lest you fall!" Eleven, as we know, refused to leave Him. Did the first thought of treachery rise in the mind of Judas with the blasting of worldly hopes entertained; almost unconciously, till new 11 His Master had never before spoken so plainly." Henceforth, to follow Him clearly meant to give up all worldry aims or prospects, and woluntarily choose allife, and it might be a death, of self denial and self sacrifice for the nation and the world-or act the hypocrite with a faint hope tof ulferior advantage sponsorous fundations strates or on a selling of the second sec Jesus had not gone to the Passover, for it would have been ansafe to have shown Himself in Jerusalem. His disciples however, doubtless went up, for no Jew neglected to do so if possible? He had now been publicly teaching for some months over a year in Galilee and had not revisited Judea, except for a few days at the Passover before. since His first discouraging circuit in the south. The north had received Him with a warmth and frankness that had won His heart by the contrast with the cold self-righteous bigotry of Judea. It had given Him the Twelve, and the ready audience He had found had enabled Him to make a small but healthy beginning of the New Kingdom. The impulsive, excitable Galilgans seemed for a time. indeed, likely, almost as a whole, to leave the Rabbis for His new terching, a Hus the movement had been checked, and the popular to be had by r which Bmost to eat bread to get places teat Saviour. ients than by had come to e a physician insincere and ey forthwith s'address. the roing to their s if He would would leave nswer but fan out them to ou, also, wish "gollaway?" rds of elemal Holy One of had chaft to ou Twelve to Beware of stovou fall!" st thought of of worldly Master had Him clearly voluntanity self-serifice a faint hope a relievait been ansafe ever, doubt-He had now Galilee, and over before, orth had re-His heart by ea: It had found had found had for a time, or His new for a time, or His new davour chilled by the restless efforts of the party threatened. Weak in the north, they had sent word to Jerusalem of the success of the Teacher from Nazareth, whom the orthodoxy of Judea had refused to follow. The Rabbis of the capital-known variously as "the Phari-Law,"-and "disputers" of the Gospels and the Epistles; and the offirial ecclesiastical world at large-the priests, canonists, and preachers of Judaism had their stronghold in the Temple courts, and rivalled the bigotry of the more modern Mollahs and Softas of Mecca and Medina, At the first hint of danger, a deputation had been, sent to Capernaum, but they had failed to carry the people with them in their attempts to fix charges on the new Teacher. He had defended Himself so dexterously against their allegations of Sabbath breaking and blasphemy, that for the time they retired discomfited. Fresh news from the north, however, had again roused them, More Rabbis nappeared, sent by the authorities in Jerusalem, to see, if the rash Innevator could not be crushed, and their presence speedily led to a sturther conflict, is which is the in the instance the states in the second states in the sec

In the training of the Twelve for their future work it was necessary, above all, things, to create and foster, the conception of moral freedom; for the central point in the contrast between the New Kingdom and the old Theocracy was its liberty, as opposed to the bondage to the letter that had prevailed. The deep, and, pure religiousness Christ(demanded could only flourish where, the conscience was quickened, and made responsible by a sense of perfect spiritual freedom. He had already announced this great, principle in the Sermon on the Mount. The Twelve had heen disciplined in it by their mission journeys, but new illustrations showed, day, by day. Thew hard it was for them to emancipate themselves from hereditary prejudices and from Babbinical authority.

Boil The very foundation of the new Society was in itself a breaking away from the established theoracy, and it necessarily led to continually more decisive acts of independence and separation (... The Jewish theologians of the Pharisaic party, with their pedantic devo--ition to precedent and form and their claim to direct, the conscience w of the people had to a great extent produced a mere outward religbionism which had weakened the moral sense of the nation, and withered up all aspirations for spiritual, manhood, and liberty of -thought the They were very popular as the reverend and zealous derefenders of the holy Law handed down from the Fathers, almost from both dirst. on They, had recognized in Jesus, still more than in His hated hand feared predecessor; the Baptist, a deadly foe, and the success of w the new teaching in Galilee imperilled their influence if it remained annchecked. With keen foresight they had sought to anticipate the w danger, but hitherto had failed so ignominiously, that they had for resome time past refrained from opin attack, contenting themselves

Schibta 1

mark of

purificati

Rabbin

Hillel an veloped i

when he

they agre

that ...an

purificat

evening

cat bread

The tips

water ra

run off were lif

itself wa

the other held up

not run

the right

the righ repeated

the hand

the han

be laid

cleared

part of

enough

fore eat

be dipp

holy of before observe

To tou

before

The oc

be dor

water

hand-v

one ha

one co

water.

This

It was

clean.

with a secret hostility of dark hints suspicions, and blasphemies, to polson the minds of the people. Till now, however, Jesus had made no direct attack on them, but, while watched and assailed, had kept strictly on the defensive. Henceforth, He took a different course. To expose their innuendoes and calumnies was no longer enough. He felt constrained, for the future, to show that not He but His accusers were really obnoxious to the charges made against Him so recklessly; that not He but they were leading the people from the right way, and acting under unholy influence, and that their zeal for God was blind, not His.

A new attack by them led to this change. Reports of the popular readiness to accept Him as Messianic King, and of His resolute refusal to head such a political movement, which alone could meet their own wishes, had doubtless reached Jerusalem, and this, coupled with rumours of His innovations and independence as a religious reformer, had thoroughly alarmed the authorities at Jerusalem. Discarding invective, craft, or indirect approach, their deputies now came, no longer to the disciples, but to Himself, with specific complaints, which the freedom of Eastern manners, permitting free access to private life, had enabled them to establish. The disciples had already given offence by plucking and rubbing ears of barley on the Sabbath, and thus, as it was held, reaping and threshing on the sacred day; but a still graver scandal in Pharisaic eyes had been detected in their sitting down to eat without ceremonially washing their hands. The Law of Moses required purifications in certain cases. but the Rabbis had perverted the spirit of Leviticus in this, as in other things, for they taught that food and drink could not be taken with a good conscience when there was the possibility of ceremonial defilement d If every conceivable precaution had not been taken. the person or the vessel used might have contracted impurity, which would thus be conveyed to the food, and through the food to the body, and by it to the soul. Hence it had been long a custom, and latterly a strict law, that before every meal not only the bands but even the dishes, couches, and tables should be scrupulously washed. The legal washing of the hands before eating was especially sacred to the Rabbinist; not to do so was a crime as great as to eat the flesh of swine. "He who neglects hand-washing," says the book Sohar, "descrives to be punished here and hereafter." "He is to be destroyed out of the world, for in hand-washing is contained the secret of the ten commandments." "He is guilty of death." "Three sins bring poverty after them," says the Mischna, "and to slight hand washing is one." "He who eats bread without hand-washing," says Rabbi Jose, "is as if he went in to a harlot." The later Schulchan Aruch. enumerates twenty-six rules for this rite in the morning alone. "It is better to go four miles to water than to incur guilt by neglecting hand-washing," says the Talmud. "He who does not wash his hands after eating," it says, "is as bad, as a murderer." The devil sphemies, to as had made ed, had kept rent course ger enough but His acinst Him so ble from the heir zeal for the popular resolute re. could meet his, coupled a religious salem. Diseputies now pecific comnitting free he disciples of barley on hing on the ad been deashing their rtain cases, this, as in ot be taken ceremonial een taken. rity, which ood to the ustom, and bands but y washed. ally sacred t the flesh ok Sohar, destroyed ret of the sins bring 1-washing ys Rabbi in Aruch. ne. . . It eglecting wash his

the devil

Schibts sits on unwashed hands and on the bread. It was a special mark of the Pharisees that "they ate their daily bread with due purification." and to neglect doing so was to be despised as unclean.

Rabbinism was now in its highest glory, for the great teachers Hillel and Schammal, who were hardly a generation dead, had developed it b) the uttermost. They had disputed so flercely, indeed, on many trifling details, that it was often said that Elias himself. when he came, would hardly be able to decide between them. But they agreed respecting hand washing, so that the Talmud maintains that 'any one living in the land of Israel, eating his daily food in purification, speaking the Hebrew of the day, and morning and evening praying duly with the phylacteries, is certain that he will cat bread in the kingdom of God."

It was laid down that the hands were first to be washed clean. The tips of the ten fingers were then joined and lifted up so that the water ran down to the elbows, then turned down so that it might run off to the ground. Fresh water was poured on them as they were lifted up, and twice again as they hung down. The washing itself was to be done by rubbing the fist of one hand in the hollow of the other. When the hands were washed before eating they must be held upwards; when after it, downwards, but so that the water should not run beyond the knuckles." The vessel used must be held first in the right, then in the left hand; the water was to be poured first on the right, then on the left hand; and at every third time the words repeated "Blessed art Thou who hast given us the command to wash the hands." It was keenly disputed whether the cup of blessing or the hand-washing should come first; whether the towel used should be laid on the table or on the couch; and whether the table was to be cleared before the final washing or after it." iscontant to moving anto This anxious triffing over the infinitely little was, however, only part of a system. If a Pharisee proposed to eat common food, it was. enough that the hands were washed by water poured on them. Before eating Terumah-the holy tithes and the shew bread-they must be dipped completely in the water, and before the portions of the holy offerings could be tasted, a bath must be taken. Hand washing before prayer, or touching anything in the morning, was as rigidly observed, for cvil spirits might have defiled the hands in the night. To touch the mouth, nose, ear, eyes, or the one hand with the other, before the rite, was to incur the risk of disease in the part touched. The occasions that demanded the observance were countless :: it must be done even after cutting the nails, or killing a fica. The more water used, the more plety. .... He who uses abundant water for hand-washing," says R. Chasda,"" will have abundant riches." If one had not been out it was enough to pour water on the lands; but one coming in from without needed to phonge his hands into the water. for he knew not what uncleasings might have been near him while in the streets, and this plunging could not be done, except in a spot where there were not less than sixty gallons of water. The same scrupulous, superstitious minuteness extended to possible defilements of all the household details of daily life." Dishes, hollow or flat, of whatever material, knives, tables, and couches, were constantly subjected to purifications, lest they should have contracted any Levitical defilement by being used by some one unclean, This ritual exaggeration was, apparently, a result of the jealousy between the democratic Pharisees and the lordly Sadducees. The latter attached supreme importance to the ceremonial sanctity of the officiating priests, to exalt themselves as the clerical aristocracy. The Pharisees, to humble them, laid the stress, as far as possible, on the vessels used, and the exactness of the act." In keeping with their, endless washings in private, they demanded that all the vessels of the Temple itself should be purified after each feast, lest some unclean person might have defiled them-a refinement which drew down on a Pharisee who was carrying out even the golden candlestick itself to wash it, after a feast, the mocking gibe from a Sadducee, that he expected before long the Pharisees would give the sun a washing. The authority for this endless, mechanical religionism was the commands or "traditions" of the Fathers, handed down from the days of the Great Synagogue, but ascribed with pious exaggeration to the Almighty, who, it was said, had delivered them orally to Moses on Mount Singland Interpretations, expositions, and discussions of all kinds were based, not only on every separate word, or on every letter. but even on every comma and semicolon, to create new laws and observances, and where these were not enough, oral traditions, said to have been delivered by God to Moses on Sinai, were invented to justify new refinements. "These "traditions" were constantly increased, and formed a NHW LAW, which passed from mouth to mouth, and from generation to generation, till, at last, public schools rose for its study and development, of which the most famous were those of Hillel and Schammai, in the generation before Jesus, and even, perhaps, in Hispearly childlood. In His lifetime it was still a fundamental rule that they should not be committed to writing. It was left to Rabbi Judah, the Holy, to commence the collection and formal engrossing of the almost countless fragments of which it consisted, and from his weary labour ultimately rose the huge folics of the Talmud in the most between la dicerti.

ture itsel

xcept in a

to possible

es, hollow were con-

contracted

e jealousy

cees. The

tity of the racy. The ble, on the

with their

sels of the ie unclean

down on

ck itself to e, that he ashing.

s the com-

the days.

tion to the

Moses on

ons of all ery letter,

laws and

tions, said

vented to tantly inmouth to ic schools ious were

esus, and vas still a iting. It ction and ch it con-folics of

of Judca

s schools

er Scrip-

d as the set itself,

the great

to teach

let Scrip

ture itself. He who says, contrary to Scripture, 'It is not lawful to wear the Tephillin'"-the little leather boxes containing texts of Scripture, bound, during prayer, on the forehead and on the arm-<sup>34</sup> is not to be punished as a troubler. But he who says there should be five divisions in the Totaphoth"—another name for the Tephillin, or phylacteries—"and thus teaches differently from the Rabbis, is guilty." "He who expounds the Scriptures in opposition to the Tradition," says R. Eleazar, "has no share in the world to come." The mass of Rabbinical prescriptions-not the Scripture-was regarded as the basis of religion, "for the Covenant of God was declared to have been made with Israel on account of the oral Law, as it is written, After the tenor of these words I have made a covenant, "Sec." For God knew that, in after ages, Israel would be carried away among strange people, who would copy off the written Law, and, therefore, He gave them the oral Law, that His will might be kept secret among tliemselves." Those who gave themselves to the knowledge of the Traditions "saw a great light," for God enlightened their eyes, and showed them how they ought to act in relation to lawful and unlaw. ful things, clean and unclean, which are not told thus fully and clearly in Scripture. It was, perhaps, good to give one's self to the reading of the Scripture, but he who reads diligently the Traditions receives a reward from God, and he who gives himself to the Com mentaries on these traditions has the greatest reward of all. ""The Bille was like water, the Traditions like wine, the Commentaries on them like spiced wine,", "My son," suys the Talmud, "give more heed to the words of the Rabbis than to the words of the Law." So czactly alike is Ultramontanism in every age, and in all religions! Jesus had no sympathy, with a system which thus ignored con-science, and found the essence of religion in the slavery of outward forms. The New Kingdom was in the heart; in the loving sonship of the Father in Heaven, and all outward observances had value only as expressions of this tender relationship: The Pharisees had refined the Law into a microscopic casuistry which prescribed for every isolated act, but Jesus brought it into the compass of a living principle in the soul. From the outer particular requirement, He passed to the spirit it was intended to express. Special enactments were suf-fered to fall aside, if the vital idea they embodied were honoured, A lifetime was hardly enough to learn the Rabbinical precepts respecting offerings, but Jesus virtually abrogated them all by the short utterance that "mercy was better than sacrifice." The schools had added to the simple distinctions of the Law between clean and unclean beasts, endless distinctions respecting different parts of each, and the necessary rites; the simple rule of Jesus was-It is not what enters the mouth that defiles a man, but what comes from the heart." The Rabbis contended after what uses vessels should be purified in running, after what in drawn water, and how wooden and metal dishes were to be minutely, discriminated. Jesus waived aside this trilling and

10 .7 3RH

duty to th

come to

A few yea

selves, the

no remissi

saw forty presently

measure

equal to Josephus.

relentlessl

disciple of

of the alta

wheat and

Represe

Jesus, (and sanctity t

eustom in

by every p

before eat

Jesus; 126b

command

com 33 it t

you set as example s

death for

then hars

which abs

fif any o

gift, or he

that very

him furth

you thus break it, a ni MYechy

denouncin

when he

in words.

me. The

only hum

You put a

which onl

deadly pedantry, and told His hearers to take care to have what was within clean, and then the outside would be clean also." Even the Sabbath laws, with their countless enactments, were as briefly condensed. "It is lawful to do good on the Sabbath day." "The Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath" Such teaching was unheard of in Israel. It was revolutionary in the grandest sense. The deputation of Rabbis now sent to Capernaum were determined to bring matters to a crisis. Their spies, and, perhaps, themselves, had carefully gathered evidence whether Jesus and His disciples observed the traditions, and carried them out with the minuteness of a recognized religious duty; whether He and they dipped their hands duly before eating; whether they held them up or down in doing so, whether they wetted them to the elbows or to the knuckles, or wetted only the finger-tips, as the school of Schammai prescribed for certain cases; and they had found, to their horror, that neither He nor His disciples washed their hands thus ceremonially at all. The next Passover would show how formally they had laid their information against Him, before the Sanhedrim, with its leaders, the high priest Calaphas and the powerful Hannas, for such independence and audacity.

Meanwhile, their demand for an explanation gave Jesus the desired opportunity to break, finally, with their whole party. A casuistry worthy of Suarez or Escobar, had sapped the fundamental principles of morality in the name of religion. With a keen eye to the interests of their caste, the Rabbis had trifled with the subject of oaths and vows in such a way that the treasury of the Temple was not only sacred from all public appeals, but was continually emiched by money, which ought, rightfully, to have gone to the support of families and relations, and even of aged or poor parents. The utterance of the word "Corban"—"I have vowed it to sacred uses"+ requestrated anything, absolutely and Irreversibly, to the Temple. It might be spoken under the influence of death bed terror, or in the weakness of superstitious fear, but if once uttered, the Church threw round the money or property thus secured the impassable barrier of her ghostly claims.

To honour one's parents was one of the "Ten Words" of Sinal, and no duty was held more sacred by a Jew unperverted by Rabbinical sophistry. It was not forgotten that it was the one commandment to which a promise of reward was attached. "A child is bound to maintain his parents when old and helpless," says one passage in the Talmud, "even if he have to beg to do so" But this, unfortunately, was not the uniform teaching of Christ's day. If one Rabbi had put filial duty before the right to vow for one's own advantage, others had taught that it was a duty to honour God before honouring human relationships—a smooth phrase for legalizing gifts to the Church at the expense even of father and mother. The hierarchical party ignored all interests but their own, and subordinated natural

638

ve what was Even the briefly con-The Sab. ich teaching indest sense. determined themselves. His disciples inuteness of their hands in doing so, es. or wetted d for certain He nor His The next ir formation high priest endence and s the desired A casuistry at principles the interests of oaths and as not only entiched by support of The uttercred uses"+ the Temple. or or in the hurch threw e barrier of is" of Sinai, ted by Rabe commandiild is bound e passage in this, unfor-If one Rabbi advantage. re honouring gifts to the hierarchical ated natural rinn right duty to their own anrichment. Pharisaism, in its moral decay, had come to be a spiritual death, corrupting the springs of national life. A few years later, in the time of the great famine of the year A.p. 45, under. Glaudius, the theorentic party so heartlessly cared for themselves, that while the people were perishing of hunger by hundreds, no remission of Temple dues was permitted, and the Passover alone saw forty one attic bushels of wheat presented at the altar, to be presently removed for the use of the priests, though the issurion—a measure of three and a half pints—sold for four drachmes, a sum equal to about twenty-six shillings at the present value of money. Josephus, indeed, boasts that no priest ate a crumb of the grain thus relentlessly hoarded, but when even a high priest was known as ' the disciple of gluttons," rioting in great feasts on the sacrifices and wine of the altar, the mass of his order would not be fastidious about the wheat and the bread.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

Representatives of this smooth hypocrisy had now gathered round Jesus, and proceeded to inquire into His alleged unlawful acts. "How comes it," asked they, "that a teacher who claims a higher sanctity than others can quietly permit His disciples to neglect a custom imposed by our, wise forefathers, and so carefully observed by every plous Israelite? How is it that they do not wash their hands before eating?"

They neglect only a ceremony introduced by men," retorted Jesus; it but how comes it, that you, who know the Law, transgress commands which are not of man, but from God Himself? How comes it that, for the sake of traditions invented by the Rabbis, you set aside the most explicit commands of God? He has, for example, said that we must honour our father and mother, and support and care for them in old age. He has declared it worthy of death for any one to deny his parents due reverence, or to treat then harshly or with neglect. But you have invented a doctrine which absolves children, in many cases, from this commandment. If any one,' says your 'tradition,' is asked by his parents for a gift, or help, for their benefit, he has only to say that he has vowed that very part of his means to the Temple, and they cannot press him further to contribute to their support.' How cunningly have you thus circumvented God's law! How easy is it for any one to break it, and affect a zeal for religion in doing sol

"Ye hypocrites!-acting, religion"-now for the first time thus denouncing, them and their party-" well has Isaiah painted you when he introduces God as saying, 'This nation has its worship in words, and its religion is of the lips, while its heart is far from me. Their service of me is worthless, for it is not my Law, but only human invention.' These words describe you to the letter, You put aside what God has commanded, and has enforced by promises and threats, and yet keep, superstitiously, 'traditions' which only custom, and homage to human teachers, have introduced. Of this kind are your hand washings, and many similar usages."

R.

580

Such a defence was an open declaration of war against Pharisaism. and the hierarchy closely indentified with it. His words struck at the insincerity and false-heartedness of the party as a whole, at its fundamental principles, its practice, its modes of thought, its whole ideas and aims. They are pious, very pious, He tells them, in outward seeming. They keep the traditions fastidiously, but their piety is from the lips, not the heart; obedience to the Rabbis, not God. They wash pots and cups, and care for gifts, as their religion, and ignore the commands of Jehovah. No irony could be more keep or annihilating. What flames of rage must it have kindled in the hearts of the great party so mortally assailed! They could not challenge. His loyalty to the higher law, for He spoke as its Champion, against, their human additions and perversions. They could not but feel, that, far from destroying either the Law or the Prophets, He was ennobling and exalting them. But the very light He poured on the oracles of God showed so much the more the worthlessness of their cherished system, and their misconception of their office as the teachers of the people. He had virtually condemned not only their. setting washings above duty to parents; He had denounced them for laying more stress on the Temple worship and ritual than on such filial piety. Hence washings, sacrifices, alms, and fasts; all the loved boastful, pretentious worship and outward practice on which they rested, were of no value compared with the great eternal commands of God, and were even crimes and impiety, when they proudly set themselves in their room. He arraigned Pharisaism, the dominant orthodoxy, as a whole. The system, so famous, so arrogant, so intensely Jewish, was only an invention of man; a subversion of the Law it claimed to represent, an au agonism to the prophets as well as to Moses, the spiritual ruin of the nation

The die was finally cast. All that it involved had been long weighed, but He who had come into the world to witness to the Truth could let no prudent regard for self restrain His testimony. It. was vital that the people who followed the Rabbis and priests should know what the religion and morals thus taught by them were worth. The truth could not find open cars while men's hearts were misled and prejudiced by such instructors. No one would seek inward renewal who had been taught to care only for externals, and to ignore the sin and corruption within. Phari aism was a creed of moral cosmetics and religious masks, as all ritual systems must ever be. With Jesus the only true religion was purity of heart and absolute sincerity to truth. Leaving the Rabbis, therefore, and calling round Him the crowd which was lingering near, He proclaimed aloud the great principle He had laid down-"Hear me, all of you," cried He, " and understand. There is nothing from without the man that, entering into him, can defile him; but the things which come out of the man are those the grand beyon -heard no national div observances, spirit and tr unclean, hol only to the religion: the ever was at to the life of

Even the In common with a supe deeply the w simple Galli thought. B Heavenly F they are blin followers mu divine plant -the 'hedg there was a New Kingdo

But the m ciples, their nation. No. familiarize t the influence external and was well-nig tions. Au e forth an am man was tra hands, it was as alleged b breasts of th from the sla good and evi an artificial require the l > eat prin- " ie. ''and entering... the man

·ci vition

Eline the

are those that defile him." Words clear enough to us, perhaps, but grand beyond thought when uttered, for they were the knell of caste heard now, for the first time, in the history of the world; of national divisions and hatreds, and of the religious worth of external observances, as such, and the inauguration of a universal religion of spirit and truth! Nothing external, they proclaimed, made clean or unclean, holy of unholy. Purity and impurity were words apolicable only to the soul and its utterances and acts. The charter of spiritual religion: the abrogation of the supremacy of forms and formula for ever, was at last proclaimed; the leaven of religious freedom cast into the life of humanity, in the end, to leaven it throughout!

Even the disciples were alarmed at an attitude so revolutionary. In common with the nation at large, they looked on the Rabbis with a superstitious reverence, and now hastened to tell Jesus how deeply the whole class was offended by His words. It was hard for simple Galilæan peasants to break away from hereditary habits of thought. But Christ's answer was ready. "Every plant which my Heavenly Father has not planted, shall be rooted out. Leave them they are blind leaders of the blind, and, as such, both they and their followers must stumble on to destruction!" The plants of human, not divine planting, were the "traditions" and "commandments of men" -the "hedge of the Law," in which the Rabbis gloried. Henceforth, there was a breach for ever between the men of the Schools and the New Kingdom.

But the mind is slow to realize great spiritual truths. To the disciples, their Master's words were dark and strange, demanding explanation. Nor was it possible, either then, or even to the very last, to familiarize them with the new ideas they involved, or free them from the influence of past modes of thought. The tendency to regard the external and formal as a vital and leading characteristic of religion, was well nigh unconquerable, in minds habituated to Jewish conceptions. An earnest request of Peter, for further explanation, only drew forth an amplification of what had been already said. The evil in man was traced directly to the thoughts; but to eat with unwashed hands, it was repeated, made a man in no way "common" or polluted, as alleged by the Pharisees. Yet the truth had to lie long in the breasts of the Twelve before it wrought their spiritual emancipation from the slavery of the past. The natural and eternal distinction of good and evil was proclaimed, after having been obscured for ages by an artificial morality, but to fully unlearn inveterate prejudice would require the lapse of generations.

and religive the line of the restance and the set of set of situations and the set of set of ed them for an on such ll the loved which they commands proudly set e dominant gant, so insion of the s as well as been long ness, to the timony. It iests should vere worth. vere misled inward reo ignore the al cosmetics With Jesus sincerity to d Him the great prin-He: " and at, entering of the man ny similar

Pharisaism.

s struck at

hole, at its

t, its whole

em, in out-

their piety

, not God.

eligion, and

ore keen or

n the hearts

t challenge.

ion, against

iot but feel.

He was en-

ired on the

iess of their

flice as the tonly their.

indication of the contract of the second of JESUS had now, apparently, been two years before the world as a religious teacher, and had had the usual lot of those who seek to reform entrenched and prosperous abuses. "A brief and dazzling popularity had roused the litter hostility of threatened interests, and they, had at last banded together for His destruction. For months past He had seen the death-flouds gathering over more threateningly over 11m, and had devoted Himself with calm anticipation of the end to the task of training the Twelve to continue His work when He had perished. He had taken the utmost care to avoid open collision with His enemies, and to confine Himself to the instruction of the little circle round Him; but the priests and Rabbis had been quick to see in this very quiet and retirement their greatest danger, for open confilct might destroy what peaceful seclusion would give opportunity to take root."""The world," as Ho Himself expressed it, "hated Him, because He witnessed of it that its works were evil." Not only His formal accusations and the spirit of His teaching, but His whole life and actions, and even His gentlest words, arraigned things as they were. 1 2 1 1 1 1 V 24 4 4 8 57 1 4

"Rumours of possible action against Him by Antipas increased the difficulty of the situation. Every one knew that He and many of His followers had come from the school of the Baptist, whom Antipas had just murdered, and it was evident that His aim was more or less stilliar to John's, though His acts were more wonderful. Hence speculation was rife respecting Himker Was He the promised Elias? or, at least, Jeremiah, risen from the dead? or was He some special prophet seat from God? Many, indeed, were questioning if He might not even be the Messiah, and were willing to accept Him as such if He would only head a national revolt, in alliance with the Rabbis and priests, against the Romans: " To Antipus His appearance was doubly alarming, for it seemed as if the fancied revolutionary movement of John had broken out afresh more fiercely than ever, and superstition working in an uneasy conscience, easily saw in Him a resurrection of the murdered Baptist, endowed, now, with the awful power of the cternal world from which he had returned. A second murder scened needed to make the first effective, and to avoid this additional danger Jesus for a time sought concealment. Telling with The Ist

But the craft and violence of the half-heathen Antipas, was a slight evil compared with the hatred which glowed ever more intensely in the breasts of the Rabbis and priests of Jerusalem, and in those of the Pharisees, and other disciples of the schools, scattered over the country. The demands of Jesus were far beyond the mere summary of the Pap immediate the domin nunciation. which, whi feeling agai intermitten as the cent religion on fatally by I He were to arrayed age ages, of the by the pride had been as recent years the Baptist this Galilæa -a peasan power so co to scatter 'a despised per The first had, appare of Jesus to had then bro excommuni gogues of quence of it self to the n same senten gogues of G ing in them loose on Hir charges, eve This dead forescen fro innocence. foundation preparation' and neutral to ward off the great wo He had estal adequate sp But the grot residence in

1127

Sug a thought and in incor out 计算机的新有方用用 STIP W. Anism History Driftenst world as a seek to rezzling popusts, and they nths past He mingly over of the end, to hen He had ollision with of the little quick to see or open conportunity to thated Him. Not only His is whole life ings as they it stands increased the many of His Antipas had more or less ful. Hence mised Elias? some special if He might m as such, if e Rabbis and e was doubly novement of superstition surrection of. cower of the arder scemed

我们会影动时的

was a slight intensely in in those of ercd over the erc summons tional danger of the Paptist, to prepare for a new and better time. He required immediate submission to a new Theocracy. He excited the fury of the dominant party, not like the Baptist, by isolated bursts of denunciation, but by working quietly, as a King in His own kingdom, which, while in the world, was something far higher. Hence, the feeling against Him was very different from the partial, cautious, and intermittent hatred of the Baptist. The hierarchy and the Rabbis, as the centre of that which, with all its corruptions, was the only true religion on earth as yet, felt themselves compromised directly and fatally by Him, and could not maintain themselves as they were, if He were tolerated. The whole spiritual power of Israel was thus arrayed against Him; a force slowly created by the possession, for ages, of the grandest religious truthe known to the ancient world, and by the pride of a long and incomparably sublime national history. It had been assailed in the past, at long intervals, from without, but in recent years it had been for the first time attacked from within, by the Baptist, and now felt itself still more dangerously assaulted by this Galilean." To crush such an apparently insignificant opponent 2 peasant of Nazareth, rising, singly and unsupported, against a power so colossal-seemed easy; nor could it be fancied more difficult to scatter and destroy His small band of followers, as yet, mostly, despised beasants. Tourisants built of san san the state of the san the state of the san the The first official step towards the repression of the new movement had, apparently, been already taken, on the occasion of the last visit of Jesus to Jerusalem. His cure of the blind man on the Sabbath. had then brought down on Him the warning punishment of the lesser. excommunication, which entailed formal exclusion from the synagogues of Judea, and was all they dared as yet inflict. In consequence of it, He had never returned to the south, but confined Himself to the north, where the synagogues were still open to Him. The same sentence seems now to have been gradually extended to the synagogues of Galileo, for we cease to read of His entering them or teaching in them." But as this measure evidently failed, spies were let loose on Him, to dog His steps constantly; and find ground for fresh charges, even by invading the privacy of His home life, and a substantiation of the second seco This deadly hatred, with all that it involved in the future, had been foreseen from the first; and His utmost care. His seclusion, and His innocence, had only delayed the crisis that had now come. The foundation of His new kingdom on a firm basis, by the choice and preparation of the Twelve, had, however, lightened the thought of it, and neutralized its worst consequences. Yet it was still necessary. to ward off the catastrophe as long as possible, in order to advance the great work of building up, as far as might be, the infant society He had established; for it was slow work to ripen vigorous faith and adequate spirituality; even in those under His personal influence. But the growing hatred and ill-will of His enemies made lengthened residence in any one place henceforth undesirable, and He had from this time to take more frequent, as well as wider circuits, to escape them. Yet there were compensating benefits even in this wandering life, for it made it easier, amidst the many unforeseen incidents of each day, to raise the Twelve to that higher faith and greater stad. fastness which yet failed them, and it enabled Him to help many in outlying parts, who were fitted to receive good at His hands. The gracious purpose of God was thus leading Him to visit in peace all the chief places of the land, which it was His great mission to sum. mon to enter His kingdom.

One inevitable result was that the nearer the end came, the more nocessary was it to make clear to the Twelve the causes of this hatred ahown towards Him, and the divine necessity of His approaching death. Hence, He took every opportunity from this time to impress both thoughts more and more clearly on His followers. His warnings against the corruptions of the hierarchical party became more frequent, and constantly keener, until, at last, the Twelve understood, in some measure, the whole situation.

Deaving the shores of the Sea of Galilee. He now turned to the far north, with the Twelve as companions of His flight. His way led Him over the rough uplands towards Safed, with its near view of the snowy summits of Lebanon. Then, leaving Gischala on the right the road passed through one of the many woody valleys of these highland regions, till, at the distance of two days' journey from the Lake, it reached the slope at the foot of which lay the plains of Tyre. A yellow strip of beach and sand divides the hills from the sea, into which the insular tongue of land on which Tyre was built stretched far. He looked down, perhaps for the first time so closely, on the smoking chimneys of the glass works of Sidon and of the dye works at Tyrepon the long rows of warehouses filled with the merchandise of the world; on the mansions, monuments, public buildings, palaces, and temples of the two cities, and their harbours and moles crowded with shipping. The busy scene before Him was the land of the accursed Ganaanite; the seat of the worship of Baal and Ashtaroth, which had of old so often corrupted Israel; a region, with all its wealth and splendour, and surpassing beauty of palm groves, and gardens, and embowering green, so depraved and polluted, that the Hebrew had adopted the name of Beelzebub-one of its idols-as the name for the Prince of Devils. Yet, even here, Jesus felt a pity and charity unknown to His nation, and the great sea beyond, whitened with wing-like sails, would be like a dream of the future, when distant lands, washed by the waves over which these vessels sped, would gladly receive the message He came to deliver. A state

Whether He passed into heathen territory is a question. He may only have gone as far as the border of the alien district. The whole region was more or less thickly settled by Jews, drawn by commerce, or through long historic association with the district, which had been assigned to Asshur, though never won by that tribe. So far back as

563 51 the days, o Jewish. Israel had thus deba traders of nossess the but Jesus v covered, fo tricts, to se His miss self, as only narrow exc journey thi had predict new Societ with the or precepts wi been as dis made even new Societ God was th round the for His ow going forth. the new Th people, for fact, have b It was va language a Syro-Phenic of Syria-p heart, heard before sprea were every them, and r account. S at once cam child. The Tyre, and w cant. He w forthwith en She had mad time when ] tarbing, for cause, He to and persister along, till th

584

的现在分词的 包裹起于包括部门 THE LIFE OF CHRIST. A not determined meners, secondly V + Constant of the part dame of weather first

ts, to escape

is wandering

incidents of

reater stead.

help many in

hands. The

in peace all

ssion to sum.

me, the more

of this hatred

approaching

ne to impress

s. His warn-

became more

e understood.

ned to the far

His way led

ar view of the

on the right,

llevs of these

rney from the plains of Tyre.

n the sea, into

built strotched

closely, on the

edve worksat

nerchandise of

lings, palaces,

noles crowded

e land of the

nd Ashtaroth,

n, with all its

n groves, and

uted, that the

s idols-as the

felt a pity and

ond, whitened

re, when dis-

s sped, would ion, in He may

by commerce,

hich had been

Bo far back a 14

The whole

TON, WARK Y

the days of the judges, the population had been half heathen, half Jewishin, Kept, back, through all their history, from the sea-coast, Israel had come to hate the life of a sailor from which they were thus debarred; and hence were contented to settle amidst the busy traders of Phenicia, without attempting; after the first failure, to dispossess them. No retreat could have promised more safe retirement, but Jesus was now too universally known to remain anywhere undiscovered, for numbers had come to Galileo, even from these very districts to see and hear Himmen with all new neur ordelived way. His mission, during His life, had been repeatedly defined by Himself, as only to the lost sheep of the House of Israel. That He felt no narrow exclusiveness had been already shown by the incidents of His journey through Samaria, and by the prophetic joy with which He had predicted the entrance of many from the leathen world into His new Society. / Even His sympathy with publicans and sinners, and with the outcast sunken multitude, whose ignorance of Rabbinical precepts was held to mark them as accursed of God had in fact. been as distinct protests againt Pharisaic bigotry as He could have made even by the formal recognition of heathens as citizens of His new Society. And had He not proclaimed the supreme truth that God was the Great Father of all mankind, and that the human race round the world were brethren in His great household? But pity for His own nation-the Israel of the Old Covenant-forbade His going forth, for the time, to all races, with the open invitation to join the new Theocracy. It would at once have sealed the fate of His people, for what was offered to the heathen would, from that very fact, have been instantly rejected by the fanatical Jew. aido wallows It was vain for Him to seek rest. A woman of the country, by language a Greek, by nationality a Canaanite, and by residence a Syro-Phenician-for Phenicia was attached to the Roman province of Syria-perhaps a heathen, but, in any case, of an humble religious heart, heard that He was in the neighbourhood. His fame had long before spread so widely, that the wondrous cures He had performed were everywhere known. Among others, this woman had heard of them, and maternal love was quick to turn them to its own unselfish account. She had a daughter "grievously vexed with a devil," and at once came over the border to implore Jesus to have mercy on her child The half belief that He was the Messiah had spread even to Tyre, and was accepted in her poor unenlightened way by the supplicant. He was abroad with the Twelve when she found Him, and forthwith entreated Him-"Lord, son of David, have mercy on me." She had made her child's trouble her own. Such an incident, at a time when He sought to remain unknown, must have been very disturbing, for it might put His enemies on His track. From whatever cause. He took no notice of her prayers. But she would not be denied. and persistently followed Him with her wailing petitions, as He went along, till the Twelve, filled with harsh Jewish prejudice, and mis-

58.5

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

taking the reason of their Master's silence, grew indignant at her pertinacity, and begged Him to send her away and stop her crying after them. That a foreigner, and, above all, a Canaanite, accursed of God, should share His mercies, was, as yet, far too liberal a con. ception for them. Did not the Rabbis teach that the race built their houses in the name of their idols, so that evil spirits came and dwelt in them? and was not Beelzebub, the Prince of the Devils, their chief god? The answer of Jesus'seemed to favour this bitter exclusive. ness-"He was not sent except to the lost sheep of the House of Israel!" They little knew that His help was kept back only in pity for His own nation, whom mercy to abhorred unclean Canaanites would embitter against Him to their own destruction. It was vain. however, to try to weary out a mother's love." Following Him into the house, though He would fain have remained unknown, she cast herself at His feet and renewed her prayer." To the Twelve she was only a "dog," as the Jews regarded all heathen. Veiling the tenderness of His heart in affected roughness of speech, softened, doubtless. by the trembling sympathy of His voice and His gentle looks, He told lies that the children-Israel, the sons of God-must first be fed before others could be noticed." "It is not right," said He, "to take the children's bread and cast it to the dogs." Then, as now, the travcller, entering or leaving a town or village, had only too much reason to notice the troops of lean, sharp-nosed masterless dogs, which filled the air with their cries as he passed, and no one could sit at a meal without the chance of some of them coming in at the ever-open door to pick up the fragments, always to be found where only the fingers were used at table. And the adverter bat the adverter bat they and as and

With a woman's quickness, and a mother's invincible love, deep ened by irrepressible trust in Him whose face and tones so contradicted His words, even this scening harshness was turned to a resistless appeal. "Yes, Lord," said she, "it is true: still the dogs are allowed to eat the fragments that fall from the children's table." She had conquered. "O woman," said Jesus, "great is thy faith; be fi unto thee as thou wilt." His word was enough, and going her way she found, on reaching her house, that her daughter, no longer raving, was perfectly cured, and lay calmly in bed, once more herself. The Twelve had learned, at last, that even heathen "dogs" were not to be sent, unheard, away.

How long Jesus stayed in these parts is unknown. It would seen as if this incident had forced Him to leave sooner than He had proposed. He did not, however, return at once to Capernaum, but set out north-eastwards, through the territory of Sidon, to the country east of Jordan. The Roman road which ran over the richly wooldd hills, almost straight eastward, from Tyre to Cæsarea Philippi, was too far to the south. He must have taken the caravan road, which still runs from Sidon on the south side of the mountain stream Bostrenus, climbing the spurs of Lebanon, with their woods and hoble mountain scenery, at the n now, do Hermon iong, at view of Galilee, on the Lebanon through was to re brought.] the ten al These o in re-cond remained served dis alliance, o offence, an of the nat of busy lif public bui fore anoth Even he Jews settle and cities. The cripple ously afflict more force quiet. TI They sough only the be of His teacl been brough ticulately; not, told, H multitude. great, excite put His fing finger moist were intend without the Looking up man to the H then, at las "Ephphatha injunction t

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

scenery, till it crosses the range amidst peaks six thousand feet high, at the natural rock-bridge over the deep, rushing Leontes. Turning, now, down the valley of the Upper Jordan, under the shadow of the Hermon range, rising 9,500 feet high in their highest peak. He, ereiong, at Casarea Philippi, reached the open country, with a wide view of the broad reedy marshes of Ulatha and Merom, the hills of Galilee, and the wide uplands of Gaulonitis. How long He spent on the journey is not told. Perhaps He stopped by the way, for Lebanon was full then, as now, of villages; perhaps He only passed through them on His way. His final purpose by this wide circuit, was to reach His old haunts without passing through Galilee, and this brought Him, apparently for the first time, to the wide territory of the ten allied free cities—the Decapolis.

These cities were simply places which the Jews had not succeeded in re-conquering, after their return from Babylon. They had thus remained in the hands of the heathen, though in Palestine; had preserved distinct municipal government, and had joined in a political alliance, offensive and defensive. To the Jews they were a continuaoffence, and they were the first to suffer from the frenzied fanaticism of the nation when it rose in its last great revolt. Most of them, full of busy life, and adorned with splendid temples, baths, theatres, and public buildings, when Jesus passed through them, were destined, before another generation, to perish amidst fire and sword.

Even here the fame of the great Teacher attracted multitudes of Jews settled all over the half-foreign district, especially in its towns and cities, and revived for a time the cheering scenes of the past. The cripple, the blind, the dumb, the deformed, and many others, variously afflicted, were either brought to Him, or came; till He was once more forced, as of old, to retreat to the hills, in the vain effort to gain quict. The popular excitement, however, made rest impossible. They sought and found Him wherever He might be, and enjoyed not only the benefits of His supernatural power, but the richer blessings of His teaching. Only one incident is given in detail. A man had been brought to Him who was deaf, and could only stammer inarticulately; and He was besought to heal him. From what motive is not told, He varied His usual course. Taking him aside from the multitude, perhaps to have more freedom, perhaps to avoid their too great excitement and its possibly hurtful political consequences, He put His fingers into the man's ears, and touched his tongue with a inger moistened on His own lips. It may be that these simple forms were intended to waken faith in one who could hear no words, for, without the fitting spirit, the miracle would not have been wrought. Looking up to heaven, as if to lift the thoughts of the unfortunate man to the Eternal Father, whose power alone could heat him, Jesus then, at last, intered the single word of the popular dialect. "Ephphatha" "Be opened"—and he was perfectly cured. An injunction to keep the miracle private was of no avail: the whole t would seem He had probaum, but set the country ichly wooled Philippi, was ad, which still am Bostrenus, bble mountain 038 country was presently filled with reports of it, and of other similar wonders.

The vast concourse attracted by such scenes may be imagined; for in the East especially, it is easy for the population, with their simple wants, and the mildness of the sky, which in the warm months invites sleeping in the open air by night, to camp out as they think fit. But, as often happens, even in our own day, with the Easter pilgrims at Jerusalem, many found their provisions run short, and as in these strange and motley crowds numbers of tendie of want, many of those following Jesus might have sunk by the way but for His thoughtful care, for numbers had come far. Once more the crowds were caused to sit on the ground, and were fed from the scanty provision found on the spot, which was no more than seven of the round loaves of the country, and a few small dried fishes from the Lake of Galilee. Four thousand men, besides women and children, were supplied from this scanty store, and seven baskets of fragments, afterwards gathered, attested that they had suffered no stint. Interference

Leaving the eastern side of the Lake, to which His wanderings had led Him, Jesus now, once more, crossed to the neighbourhood of Magdala, at the lower end of the Plain of Gennesareth, and close to Capernaum. He had hardly reappeared before His enemies were once more in motion. The Pharisees had already stiffed their dislike of the Herodians, and had formed an alliance with them, that they might the more easily crush Him. It marked the growing malignity of feeling that a class fanatically proud of their ceremonial and moral purity—a class from whose midst had sprung the Zealots for the Law, who abhorred all rule except that of a restored theocracy should have banded themselves with a party of moral indifferentists, partial to monarchy, and guilty of flattering even the hated family of Herod. But a still more ominous sign of increasing danger showed itself in even Sadducces joining the Pharisees to make new attempts to compromise Jesus with the authorities.

The Sadducees, few, but haughty and powerful, held the highest posts in the Jewish state, and represented the Law. They were of the pricetly caste, and held the chief offices in the hierarchy. Their name was perhaps derived from the famous ancient family of Zadok, of whom Ezekiel speaks as having the charge of the altar, and as, alone, of the sons of Levi, appointed to come before the Eternal, to serve Him. Joshua, the son of Jozedek, the comrade of Zerubbabel, was of this House, so that, after the Return, as before it, it seems to have been the foremost among the priestly families. In any case, the Sadducees of the times of Josephus and the Apostles not only held the highest Temple offices, but represented the purest Jewish blood.

But this priestly aristocracy were by no means the most zealous for the sanctuary from which they drew their honours and wealth. They counted in their ancestry not only high priests like Joshua and Simon the you they he been fo to turn hadico Ptolem irreligic bæan si half her please ] the fatl which make ro mission The r represen of religi treacher descent 1 fled offic historica like by t concessio

lence.dor

ple, and opposed.

by the Ra

only be re

of which intensity

tion to be rejected

taking for this were

the highe

which had to be taug

refinement

stantly in stolidly op

creed was

was, perha

instinctive

stand on

Theolog

The sti

the Ju

er similar

gined; for eir simple n months y think fit. Easter pilort, and as yant, many ut for His the crowds acanty prothe round he Lake of dren, were nents, afterderings had ourhood of and close to as were once r dislike of n, that they g malignity monial and s Zealots for theocracydifferentists, ed family of nger showed ew attempts the highest hey were of chy. Their ly of Zadok, ltar, and as, e Eternal, to Zerubbabcl, t, it seems to In any case, tles not only urest Jewish st zealous for ealth. They na and Simon

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

the Just, but traitors to their country like Manasseh, Menclaus, and the younger Onias. Already, in the time of Ezra and Nehemiah, they had given occasion for the charge that the highest officials had been foremost in breaking the theocratic laws, and had even sought to turn parts of the Temple into a splendid family mansion. They had coquetted and debased their offices to win favour with the Ptolemies and the Syrian kings; they had held back, in half Greek irreligiousness, from taking a vigorous part in the glorious Maccabeen struggie, and now truckled to heathen procurators, or with a . half heathen king, to preserve their honours and vested interests. To please Herod, they had admitted Simon Boethus, the Alexandrian, the father of the king's youn; wife, to the high priesthood, from which a strict Jew, Jesus the son of Phabi, had been expelled to make room for him. They had even shown frank and hearty sub-Compart Pursenant' month included. mission and loyalty to Rome:

The nation, with its chosen religious leaders, the Pharisees—the representatives of the "Saints" who had conquered in the great war of religious independence—never forgot the faint-heartedness and treachery of the priestly nobility in that magnificent straggle. Their descent might secure its members hereditary possession of the dignified offices of the Church, and there might still be a charm in their historical names; but they were regarded with open distrust and dislike by the nation and the Pharisees alike, and had to make many concessions to Pharisaic rules to protect themselves from actual violence.

The strict fanatical heads of the Synagogue and leaders of the people, and the cold and polished Temple aristocracy, were thus bitterly opposed, and it added to the keenest of the dislike that the dreams by the Rabbinical, or Pharisaic party, of a restored theoeracy, could only be realized through the existing organization of the priesthood, of which the indifferent Sadducees had the control.

Theological hatred, the bitterest of all passions, added additional intensity to this political opposition. The Sadducees had no inclination to be taught their duty by the Rabbis of village synagogues, and rejected the whole body of Pharisaic tradition and jurisprudence. taking for their only authority the written law of Moses, though to this were generally added some traditions of their own. Holding the highest offices of the theorney, and the members of families which had officiated in the Temple of Solomon itself, they disdained to be taught what was lawful in Israel, or to accept the hair-splitting refinements of the democratic and puritan Pharisees. To the constantly increasing decisions and requirements of the Rabbis, they stolidly opposed the venerable letter of the ancient Law. That their creed was cold and rationalistic, compared to that of the Rabbis, was, perhaps, the result of this attitude, but was not its cause. The instinctive conservatism of "the first in rank," inevitably took its stand on the original documents of the Law in opposition to the

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

the ] fied

chan

seem

The 1

delive

ward

the pr

that 1

raised

nation

should

would full'th

traditi

and ri

The m servand

they fu

hard to righteo

The zea

with all

insepara

contem

of the w

duce, th

which t

ideas, ar

Pharisai

endless

the Mess

"The S

the bod

was to

kingdom

says Rab

pride, bi

though "

come, th

be not ar

not be pr of invent

rection of in angel,

To th

Bu

heated exaggerations of the plebeian schoolmen. Both sides vaunted their orthodoxy. The Sadducees were as deeply committed to support the theocrocy as their popular rivals, for it was the basis of their dignities, their wealth, and even their existence. Fierce controversies, often culminating in bloodshed, marked the devotion of both alike to their opinions, and these opinions themselves illustrated, the position of the two parties. The Sadducees uniformly fell back on the letter of the Law, the prescriptive rights of the Temple, and the glory of the priesthood; the Pharisees, on the other hand, took their stand on the authority of the Rabbinical traditions, the value of sacred acts apart from the interposition of the priest, and advocated popular interests generally.

The contrast between the spirit of the two parties showed itself prominently in the harsh tenacity with which the Temple aristocracy held to the letter of the Mosaic Law in its penalties, as opposed to the milder spirit in which the Pharisees interpreted them, in accordance with the spirit of the times. The Pharisecs, for example, explained the Mosaic demand-an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth-metaphorically, and allowed recompense to be made in money, but the Sadducees required exact compliance. The Sadducees required that the widow should literally spit in the face of the brotherin-law who refused her the levirate maining rights, but it was enough for the Pharisees that she spat on the ground before him. The Pharisees permitted the carcass of a beast that had died to be used for any other purpose than food, to save loss to the owner, but the Sadducees denounced the penalties of uncleanness on so lax a practice. They eternly required that a false witness be put to death, according to the letter of the Law, even if his testimony had done the accused no injury, and many did not even shrink from carrying out the reasoning of the Rabbis, that, as two witnesses were always required to condenin the accused, both witnesses should always be executed when any perjury had been committed in the case.

This blind insistance on the letter of laws which ages had made obsolete, fixed on the Sadducees the name of "The Condemning Judges," and Josephus testifies that they were more ruthless in their judicial decisions than any other Jews. The Pharisees, on the other hand, had for their axiom the saying of Joshua Ben Perachia— "Judge everything on the presumption of innocence;" or that of Hillel—"Put yourself in your neighbour's place before you judge him." Hence, a prisoner blessed himself when he saw opposite him, on his judges, the broad phylactery of the Pharisee, and not the white robe of the priestly Sadducee. Both our Lord and St. Paul had the multitude stirred up against them by the Pharisees, but they were condenned by Sadducee judges, and it was Sadducee judges who murdered St. James.

This releatless ferocity of priestly houses, who rested on the favour of the rich and titled few, was dictated only by the class interests of the Temple nobility, whose claims and privileges could not be justified except by the blind maintenance of things as they were. Unchanging conservatism was their only safety; the least innovation seemed an omen of revolution.

540

But there were even deeper grounds of dislike and opposition. The Pharisees, as the hereditary representatives of puritans who had delivered the nation in the great struggle against Syria, looked for-ward with touching though fanatical yearning, to the realization of the prophecies of Daniel, which, as they understood them, promised that Israel, under the Messiah, and with it, themselves, should be raised "to dominion, and glory, and a kingdom; that all peoples, nations, and languages should serve Him, and that His kingdom should be everlasting." They believed that this national triumph would be inaugurated so soon as Israel, on its part, carried out to the full the requirements of the ceremonial laws, as expounded in their traditions. It was a matter of formal covenant, in which the truth and righteousness—that is, the justice, of Jehovah were involved. The morals they demanded might be only mechanical, and their observances slavery to rites and ceremonies, but they believed that if they fulfilled their part, God must needs fulfil His, and they strove hard to make the nation, like themselves, "blameless," touching this righteousness; that they might claim divine interposition as a right. The zeal of the Pharisee for the Law was, thus, a mere hired service. with all the restlessness, exaggeration, emulation, and moral impurity, inseparable from a mercenary spirit.

To this dream of the future, the Sadducees opposed a stolid and contemptuous indifference. Enjoying the honours and good things of the world, they had no taste for a revolution which should introduce, they knew not what, in the place of a state of things with which they were quite contented. Their fathers had had no such ideas, and the sons ridiculed them." They not only laughed aside the Pharisalc idea of righteousness, as identified with a life of minute and endless observance, but fell back on the Mosaic Law, and mocked at the Messianic hope from which the zeal of their rivals had sprung. "The Sadducees," says Josephus, "believe that the soul dies with the body, and recognize no authority but that of the Law. Good was to be done for its own sake, not for reward in the Messianic kingdom, or at the resurrection of the dead." "The Sadducees," says Rabbi Nathan, "use, daily, vessels of gold and silver, not for pride, but because the Pharisees torment themselves in this life, though they will have nothing in the next." As to the world to come, they left it doubtful, maintaining, if the words in the Talmud be not an interpolation, in opposition to the Pharisees, that it could not be proved from the Books of Moses. They even went the length of inventing difficulties which they supposed involved in the resurrection of the dead. "They believe neither in the resurrection, nor in angel, nor spirit, but the Pharisees confess both," says St. Luke.

vaunted to supof their ntroverof both ated the back on , and the pok their value of dvocated ved itself ristocracy posed to n accordmple, exoth for a in money, ducees reie brotheras enough The Phared for any Sadducees ice. They ding to the used no inreasoning ed to conuted when had made ondemning ess in their n the other Perachia or that of you judge posite him, nd not the nd St. Paul es, but they ucee judges the favour interests of 8

To all this was added the embitterment of opposite views on the great subject of human freedom and divine foreknowledge. Like all puritans, the Pharisees exalted the latter though they did not deny the former. They had a profound belief in Providence, understanding by it that they themselves were the 'favourites of Jehovah, and could count on His taking their side. "The Sadducees," says Josephus, "maintain that there is no such thing as predestination, and deny that human affairs are regulated by it, maintaining that our destiny rests with ourselves; that we are the cause of our own good fortune, and bring evil on us by our own folly. The Sadducee was, in fact, a mere man of the world, believing only in the present: the Pharisee, a mystic, to whom the future and the supernatural were all.

The nation zealously supported the Pharisees. The spirit of the age was against the Sadducees. The multitude disliked to hear that what the Maccabæans had defended with their blocd was uncanonical. They yielded cheerfully to the heavy yoke of the Fharisaic Rabbis, for, the more burdensome the duties required, the greater the future reward for performance. The Pharisees, moreover, were part of the people, mingled habitually with them as their spiritual guides, and were the examples of exact obedience to their own precepts. Their Messianic dreams were of national glory, and thus the crowd saw in them the representatives of their own fondest aspirations. The Sadducees—isolated, haughty, harsh, and unnational—were hated: their rivals honoured and followed. The extravagances and the hypocrisy of some might be ridiculed, but they were the accepted popular leaders.

Indeed, apart from all other considerations, the fact that the Sadducees supported zealously every government in turn, was enough to set the people against them.' Instead of this, the Pharisees shared and fostered the patriotic and religious abhorrence of the Roman supremacy, and were sworn enemies of the hated Herodian family. The result was that, in the words of Josephus, "the Pharisees had such an influence with the people, that nothing could be done about divine worship, prayers, or sacrifices, except according to their wishes and rules, for the community believed they sought only the loftiest and worthicst aims alike in word and deed. The Sacducees were few in number; and though they belonged to the highest ranks, had so little influence, that when elected to office, they were forced to comply with the ritual of the Pharisees from fear of the people."

Ea Jerus forth come miraq worth demo meni time a darl our fa did, f tions. power like th the K begins a rain bread Joshua like El Bath L But no com long be power should will, it his spi tion. only to where. pealed by its o proofs With tences. heavens and tal the sky is red an

say, tt

you say

smoke

hates

of th

of th

hated vulgar Pharisee of the Synagogue to accomplish the destruction of the new Teacher. It was the most ominous sign of the beginning of the end that had yet appeared. Eager for a fresh dispute, the strange allies, very likely fresh from

on the

Like

ot deny erstandah, and

ys Jose-

on, and our des-

ood for-

was. in

ent: the

were all.

it of the

iear that

incancii-

harisaic

eater the vere part

l guides.

precepts.

he crowd

oirations.

al-were

nces and accepted

the Sad-

noughto

es shared

e Roman

n family.

isees had

ine about

eir wishes

he loftlest

cees were anks, had F

forced to

ecs-men

living in

in the dis-

ic priests;

after His

the fierce he Saddu-

with the

ople."

Jerusalem, no sooner found that He had returned, than they sallied forth to open a discussion. "You claim," said they, "to be a teacher come from God, and have given many 'signs' that you are so in the miracles you have performed. But all these signs have been untrustworthy, for we know that the earth and even the air are filled with demons. It is quite possible that the prince of the devils, to deceive men into supporting your claims, may have given you power for a time over these demons, and thus all that you have done may be only a dark plot to undo us. The Egyptian magicians did miracles, and our fathers did not believe even. Moses for the common wonders he did, for they might have been wrought only by magic and incantations. A sign from heaven, however, is different. It is beyond the power of devils: they can neither shine like the sun, nor give light like the moon, nor give rain unto men.' Our Rabbis tell us that when the King-Messias comes, and the great war between Gog and Magog begins, signs from heaven will appear. We are not to expect Him till a rainbow has spanned the world and filled it with light. Give us bread from heaven, as Moses did, or signs in the sun and moon like Joshua, or call down thunder and hail like Samuel, or fire and rain like Elijah, or make the sun turn back like. Isaiah, or let us hear the Bath Kol which came to Simon the Just-that we may believe you."

But Jesus knew the men with whom He had to do, and would hold no communication with them beyond the shortest. The tempter had long before urged Him to make a vain display of His supernatural power in support of His claims, but as it was monstrous that miracles should be thrown away on the Prince of Darkness, or wrought at his will, it was no less so to work them at the bidding of men tilled with his spirit. The worth of proof depends on the openness to conviction. He had already said that to cast pearls before wild swine, was only to invite them to turn and rend you. No "sign" could avail where there was no sympathy. The truth He came to proclaim appealed to the heart, and must be its own evidence, winning its way by its own divine beauty into humble and ready breasts. External proofs could only establish external facts.

With biting irony He turned on them in a few brief incisive sentences. "How is it that ye, who are so skilled in the signs of the heavens, are so dull to read those around you? You watch the sky, and talk of signs in it. In the evening you say, 'Fair weather, for the sky is red;' and in the morning, 'Foul weather to-day, for the sky is red and lowering.' When you see a cloud rising in the west, you say, 'there comes a shower;' when you see a south wind blowing, you say, 'There will be heat.' You pretend to tell, by the way the smoke blows on the last evening of the Feast of Tabernacles, what weather there will be for the year. If it turn northward, you say there will be much rain, and the poor will rejoice; if it turn south, you say the rich will rejoice and the poor mourn, for there will be little rain; if it turn eastward, all rejoice: if westward, all mourn. If God have been so gracious to men as to give signs of fair weather, of wind, and of rain, how much more must He have given signs of the near approach of the Messiah? You are diligent to excess in studying the sky, but you ask signs of my being the Messiah as if none had been given, when many unmistakable ones invite you in your own Scriptures, in the events of the day, the preaching of John, and in my own miracles, teaching, and life. An evil and adulterous generation sceks after a sign of the approach of the kingdom of God to suit it. while it is blind to the signs around, that the Messiah must come, if the nation is not to perish. I will give you no sign but that of the prophet Jonah, for as the warning of his words, was the only one given to the Ninevites, my preaching will be the only sign given to you. It is its own evidence. Apart from my miracles; my life, and the divine and heavenly truth I preach, are sufficient proof that I am sent by God. Hereafter, indeed, Jonah will become a sign in another sense, for as he was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so I, when put to death, shall be the same time in the grave."

So saying, He left them. It was clearly unsafe to stay in their neighbourhood. Henceforth He could only lead a fugitive outlawed life, and with a deep sigh at the hopelessness of winning over men blinded by prejuice, and hardened in heart, He entered the boat once more, and crossed the Lake to the lonely and secure eastern side.

su aller di solori de mort as anti-instation protection mort as anti-s anci il plunci de CHAPTER (XLVI, se stata di alleri in FLIGHT ONCE MORE, Plunci di alleri de la solori IN FLIGHT ONCE MORE, Plunci di alleri de la solori in flight once more, plunci di alleri de la solori in flight once more, plunci di alleri de la solori in flight once more, plunci di alleri di alleri

THE renewed attempt to involve Jesus in a damaging dispute had failed. He had not made an ostentatious display of supernatural power at the bidding of His enemies, but had turned sharply on them, and had left them discomfited before the multitude. They had hoped to have depreciated Him as a mere unauthorized intruder into the office of Rabbi, and to have had an easy triumph, but His modest, yet dignified and keen retort had put them to shame. Their bitterness against one, now hated and feared more than ever, was so much the greater.

His departure that autumn evening might well have saddened His heart. It was His final rejection on the very spot where He had laboured most, and He was leaving it, to return, indeed, for a passing visit, but aever to appear again publicly, or to teach, or work miracles. As the loat swept out into the Lake, and the whole scene opened before Him-the white beach, the green plain, the wooded hills behind. stately a mighty down b and the As He thought not seen Many h specious they sho

Take Pharisee hened; h lay in p the child referred they had meat of t His flesh only of n Reflection ing. in Th They mis feelings c with ther thoughtfu peasants, they whis ducee, the Samaritan had to cre "O ye o behind, the white houses reflected in the water, and over them the stately synagogue, in which He had taught so often, and done such mighty acts,—it was no wonder that He sighed deeply in spirit, borne down by the thought of the darkened mind, the perverted conscience, and the stony heart that had rejected the things of their peace.

there

ou say

e rain:

d have

d; and

ear ap-

ing the d been

Scrip-

in my

eration

suit it, come, if t of the

nly one

given to ny life,

oof that

whate's

rave." ir neigh-

wed life.

blinded

ce more,

bute had

ernatural

on them,

d hoped

into the

dest, yet

bitterness huch the

ened His

He had a passing

miracles:

ded hills

As He sat in the boat amidst His disciples He was still full of such thoughts. They had heard His words to His enemies, but they did not seem to have realized all the danger implied in the incident. Many had been led away from Him by the deceitful slanders, or specious arguments of the hierarchical party, and it was well that they should be put on their guard.

"Take heed, beware," said He solemnly, "of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees, and of the party of Herod." It so hap-hened; however, that in their hurried flight, having had no time to lay in provisions, there was only one loaf in the boat, and with the childishness of uneducated minds, they at once fancied He referred to their having come without bread. At the well of Samaria they had thought He referred to common food when He spoke of the meat of the soul; they had been as dull in catching the metaphor of His flesh being the bread of life, and hereafter they were to think only of natural rest when He spoke of the dead Lazarus as sleeping. Reflection, like continuity of thought, comes only with mental training." The uncultured mind, whether old or young, learns slowly. They might have remembered from the twice repeated miraculous feelings of the multitude, that it was indifferent how little they had with them when their Master was in their midst, but it needs a thoughtfulness and depth beyond that of average fishermen and peasants, such as they were, to reason and reflect. "He tells us," they whispered, "that if we buy bread from a Pharisee or a Sadducee, the bread would defile us, as it would if we bought it from a Samaritan." So rude was the spiritual material from which Jesus had to create the founders of Christianity law

"O ye of little faith," interrupted He, "why do ye reason among yourselves because ye have no loaves? Are your hearts hardened that you cannot understand? Have you forgotten when I broke the five loaves among the five thousand, and the seven among the four thousand, how many baskets and wallets full of fragments ye took up? How could you think you would ever want after that, whether we had bread with us or not? Do you not see that when I spoke of loaves I was thinking not of loaves, but of instruction? Beware of the teaching of the Pharisees, Sadducees, and Herodians, about me or about religion. They would gladly fill your minds with slanders and misleading fancies; draw you away from me; and corrupt your hearts by their superstition, and religious acting, and self-righteous pride, or by their world liness and unbelief."

The course of the boat was directed to the head of the Lake, to Bethsaida, newly renamed Julias by the tetrarch Philip, in honour of the daughter of Augustus, his patron. The old name of the village had not yet been lost, however. It was on the route to the district to which Jesus was hurrying, and might well have detained Him as a resting place, under other circumstances. Lying on the green hill. above the plain of Batiha-the scene of the mitaculous feeding-it overlooked, at a short distance, the entrance of the Jordan into the Liake. To the west stretched the wide tract of black basalt, rough and barren, reaching from the marshes of Jordan, dotted with buffaloes luxuriating in the mire, to Chorazin and Capernaum. To the south rose the hare table-land on the east of the Lake, and the town itself, boasting the splendid tomb just built by Philip, for his own use, was not wanting in beauty. But Jesus had no leisure to stay. ror was there an inducement in any kindly bearing of the population towards Him. THe had often taught in their streets and synagogue. and had lived in their houses, and done many mighty works before them, yet, like the people of Chorazin and Capernaum, they had listened to their Rabbis rather than to Him, and had refused to repent. There still, however, were some who had better thoughts, and these, seeing Him enter the town, hurriedly brought a blind man; and besought Him to touch him. Even in a place that would not hear Him His tender heart could not withhold its pity. It would have attracted notice when He most sought to avoid it, had He healed the sufferer in the public street, and, therefore, taking him by the hand, He led him into the fields outside. He might have wrought the cure by a word, but He chose to use the same simple form as in the case of the dumb man in the Decapolis. Touching the blind eyes with His moistened finger, perhaps to arrest the wandering thoughtsand predispose him to trust in the Healer, He asked the blind man "if he saw aught?" The supernatural power of the touch had had due effect is With upturned eyes, the hitherto blind could see indistinctly. Hen moved before him, in undefined haze, like trees. The partial cure must have strengthened his faith, and thus prepared him for perfect restoration. Another touch, and he could see clearly, far and near staff Gosto your home," said Jesus, "without returning to the town, and tell no one about it." The less publicity given to His acts or words, the safer for Christ. with chiefs to Hudelda al

The retreat to which Jesus was making was the town of Cæsarea Philippi. It lay on the north-east of the reedy and marshy plain of El Hulch. It was close to Dan, the extreme north of the bounds of ancient Israel, as Beersheba was the extreme south. It was almost on a line with Tyre, and thus, far out of the reach of the Rabbis and High Priests. A town, Baal-Gad—named from the Canoanite god of fortune—had occupied the site from immemorial antiquity, but Philip had rebuilt it splendidly, three years before Christ's birth, and, in accordance with the prevailing flattery of the Emperor, had called it Cæsarea, in honour of Augustus. It had been the pleasure of his peaceful reign to adorn it with altars, votive images, and statues, and had come

Israel, in 544

his own name had been added by the people, to distinguish it from the Cæsarea on the sea-coast. Herod the Great, Philip's father, had already, ninetcen years before Christ, in grateful acknowledgment of the gift of the districts of Panias and Ulatha, adorned the spot with a grand temple of white marble, in heathen flattery of the Emperor, deified, thus, while still alive, by the king of the Jews. The worship of the shepherd god Pan, to whom a cave out of which burst the waters of the Jordan, was sacred, had given its second name-Panias-now, Banias-to the place. It was one of the loveliest spots in the Holy Land, built on a terrace of rock, part of the range of Hermon, which rose behind it seven or eight thousand feet. Countless streams murmured down the slopes, amidst a unique richness and variety of flower, and shrub, and tree. The chief source of the Jordan, still bursts in a full silver-clear stream from a bottomless depth of water, in the old cave of Pan, at the foot of the mountain. from beneath a high perpendicular wall of rock, adorned with niches once filled with marble Naiads of the stream and Satyrs of the woods; and with countless votive tablets; but now strewn round with the ruins of the shepherd god's ancient temple. Thick woods still shade the channel of the young river. Oaks and olive groves alternate with pastures and fields of grain, and high over all rises the old castle of Banias, perhaps the "Tower of Lebanon that looketh towards Damascus," of the song of Solomon. Seven in the sub-state that the world . To this scene Jesus had now come, and might have found in the charms of nature a balm for His tired and stricken heart, had He been free to think of such outward charms. From the hill on which the town stood-one of the lower spurs of Hermon-the view ranged over all northern Palestine, from the plains of Phenicia, to the hills of Samaria. In the north-west rose the dark gigantic mountain forms of Lebanon; to the south stretched out the rich table-land of the Hauran. From Hermon, not from Zion, or the Mount of Olives. one beholds "the good land, the land of brooks, of waters, of fountains of depths that spring out of the valleys and hills; a land of tains, of depths that spring out of the valleys and hills; a land of wheat and barley, and vines, and fig-trees, and pomegranates; a land of oil olive; and honey." Far and near the surpassingly fruitful landscape was watered by sparkling brooks flowing into the main stream of Jordan, here only twenty steps broad, So far back as the days of the Judges, the children of Dan, wandering hither from the south, had found it to want nothing that earth could give. Wheat fields alternated with fields of barley, maize, sesame, and rice, olive orchards, meadows, and flowery pastures, the delight of countless bees; and the slopes were covered with woods, vocal with the songs of birds.

But even Jesus had few thoughts, at such a time, for such natural charms. He was a fugitive and outlaw, rejected by the nation He had come to save; safe only because He was outside the bounds of Israel; in a heathen region. It was clear that His public work was

e village istrict to lim as a reen hill eding-it into the lt, rough with buf-To the the town his own to stay, opulation: nagogue, ks before they had efused to thoughts, lind man; yould not It would He healed m by the rought the as in the blind eyes. thoughtsblind man had had see indisees. The bared him learly, far urning to ren to His Contraction of Casarea plain of bounds, of almost on

abbis and

anite god

uity, but

birth, and,

ad called

tucs, and

hre of his

virtually over, for even in Galilee, where multitudes had followed Him, His popularity had waned under the calumnies of the Rabhis, and His steady refusal to sanction the popular conception of the Messiah. From the moment they had seen that He sought only spiritual aims, and was not a second Judas the Galilæan, they had gone back to their own teachers, who favoured the national views, and instead of demanding repentance and a new life, recognized them as the favourites of Jehovah, and the predestined heirs of the Messiah's Kingdom. The death of the Baptist foretold His own fate. The crisis of His life had come. If He had won few true followers, He had securely founded the New Kingdom of God. It might indeed, as yet, be but a seed in the great field of the world, or a speck of leaven in the vast mass of humanity; but the seed would multiply itself to the ends of the earth, and the leaven would slowly but surely spread, age after age, through the whole race of man. His own death would now no longer be fatal to the New Society; the germ of its fullest development would survive in the little circle of the Twelve, and of the few other faithful souls who had received Him.

But it was necessary that the band to whom the spread of His Kingdom after His death would be entrusted should be confirmed in their faith, and enlightened by explicit disclosures of His relations to themselves and to it. There was much, even in their humble and honest hearts, that needed correction and elevation. They were Jews, trained in the theology of His enemies, and still unconsciously influenced by it to a great extent.

Jesus had utterly different conceptions of His kingdom from theirs, and, therefore, had not, as yet, claimed the title of Messiah in any formal way, even in the circle of the Twelve, though He had never hesitated to accept homage, as such, when it was offered. Once, to the Samaritan woman, and once, by silent assent, to the Twelve, He had assumed the awful dignity, and the whole spirit of His teaching and life implied His claim to it. But, even to the Twelve, there had been a reticence and caution, that He might not anticipate the development of their religious nature, and disclose a mystery they were, as yet, unable to receive. Before the people at large He had never assumed the Messiahship, for, with their gross political ideas, to have done so would have been to bring Himself. into collision with the State at once. He had even, as far as possible, kept His supernatural work in the background, shunning publicity as a worker of miracles, and leaving the progress of His kingdom rather to the divine beauty of His teaching and life. To have put Himself forward, from the first, as the Messiah, would have closed at once all avenues of influence, for He was in every way the very opposite of the national ideal. They expected their race to be exalted to supreme honour and power. He sought to humble them to the lowliest contrition. They expected that, under the Messiah, the 1 - FI-heathen w were to ha expected t ances, wer nounced t nant of 'fil with a sin convulsion precedente the history be brough Spirit of C only by a nation, but of the past How diffic mother of edged thei the high p throne.

In the co

the Twelve now that t His true di and be for John, to th have left th the future centre rour away with life, and th necessarily for its func towards H the transce limited su poverty, ob durance of a divine at claimed H He had for of His foll to endure that would dience to words of a all others' followed Rabhis. n of the ght only they had I views. zed them the Mesown fate. ollowers, It might r a speck multiply owly but an. His iety; the le circle received

t of His firmed in relations mble and ere Jews, iously inom from essiah in He had offered. t, to the spirit of n to the ight not isclose a eople at eir gross Himself possible, publicity kingdom have put closed at very opexalted n to the siah, the heathen would bow before Israel; He proclaimed that the heathen were to have equal rank and rights with "the people of God." They expected that the traditions of the Rabbis, with their infinite observances, were to be made the law for all countries and ages; He announced their utter abrogation, and the establishment of a new covenant of filial liberty with men at large, in place of the old covenant with a single people. They expected a sudden and violent political convulsion, heralded by a disturbance of the order of nature by unprecedented signs and wonders in the heavens, and on earth, and of the history of nations. He taught that the Messianic kingdom would be brought about only by the silent might of words, and of the Spirit of God, renewing all natural and moral relations of men, but only by a slow and well-nigh imperceptible advance. Not only the nation, but even the Twelve, had utterly to unlearn the fixed ideas of the past, before a spiritual Messiahship could be welcome to them. How difficult that was, is shown by the request of Saloine, the mother of James and John, after the disciples had formally acknowledged their Leader as the Messiah, that her two sons should sit in the high places of honour, on the right and left of the Messianic throne.

In the conscious divinity of His nature, Jesus had never yet asked the Twelve any question respecting Himself, but it was necessary, now that the end was approaching, that they should know Him in His true dignity. He must reveal Himself definitely as the Messiah, and be formally accepted as such. To have confined Himself, like John, to the announcement of the kingdom of God as at hand, would have left that kingdom incomplete, and have created expectations of the future advent of some other as its Head. Without a personal centre round which to gather, the work of His life would have faded away with His death. He Himself, in the deathless beauty of His life, and the infinite attractiveness of His self-sacrificing death, must, necessarily be the abiding soul of the new Society through all ages, for its fundamental principle, from the first, had been personal love towards Him. His words, His whole life, His voluntary humiliation; the transcendent self-restraint and self-denial which had used unlimited supernatural power only for others; and had submitted to poverty, obscurity, and opposition, erelong to culminate in the endurance of a violent death for the good of mankind, raised Him to a divine and perfect ideal of love and goodness, which, of itself, proclaimed Him the King-that is, the Messiah-in the new kingdom He had founded. "The love of Christ" was to be the watchword of His followers in all ages: the sentiment that would nerve them to endure triumphantly the bitterest persecutions, and even death: that would constrain them to life-long devotion to His cause; in obedience to His commands, and in imitation of His example. The words of a future disciple, St. Paul, would be only the utterance of all others worthy the name, in every age. "The love of Christ constraineth us." With St. John, they would "love Him because He first loved us." He had founded a kingdom, for the first and only time in history, on personal love to the founder, and, as such, He must definitely reveal Himself in Yis spiritual relation to it as, henceforth, its recognized Messiah-King.

A crisis so momentous in the development of His great work must have profoundly affected a nature, sensitive and holy, like His. His whole life was an unbroken communion with His Father in Heaven, but there were moments when this passion of the soul appeared to grow more intense. His human weakness, though unstaned by evil, was fain to strengthen itself by the near presence of His Father above, with whom every beat of His thoughts moved in undisturbed and awful harmony. In all His temptations, Ye had ever betaken Himself, to prayer, and, now, when Israel had rejected Him, and there rose before Him only the vision of the Cross; when His kingdom, more clearly than ever, was to go forth to conquer the world only from the gates of His opened grave; when He had, therefore, while yet with them, to take His seat among those in whom that kingdom had its first subjects,—as its Messiah-King—the moment was one of unspeakable sublimity.

He had, thus, been absorbed in thought and separated in fervent prayer, as they passed from town to town on His northward journey, until at last they had reached the neighbourhood of Cæsarea Philippi. There, He once more went aside, in some lonely spot among the rich wooded valleys, for solitary prayer. Before He returned to the Twelve, He had determined to clear no longer a full self-revelation; to throw aside the veil, and openly assume the Messiahship which had long been silently ascribed to Him in His little circle, and as silently accepted, without a formal and definite assumption.

"Whom do men say that I, the Son of Man, am?" sufficed to introduce the momentous topic. The answer showed how little He had been understood, and how utterly the fixed national idea of a Messiah had darkened the general mind. ""Some say with Antipas, the spirit of John the Baptist has entered Thee, and that Thou work. est through it, or that Thou art John himself, risen from the dead, and appearing under another name; some that Thou art Elias, who, like Enoch, has never died, but was taken up bodily to heaven, and has now returned in the body as Malachi predicted, to prepare for the Messiah; some that Thou art Jeremiah, come to reveal the Ark and the sacred vessels which he hid in Mount Nebo, and thus inaugurate the approaching reign of the Messiah; or one of the prophets sent from the other world by God, as a herald of the Coming One." (They) could not add that any regarded Him as the Messiah. His refusal to appeal to force, and head a political revolution, had caused an almost universal repudiation of the thought. hast it sow it Think of Ling failure to recognize Him in His true character. He had been the subject of to the Exp His follow clearer co whom He He had no special wit which He gladly. Simon Pe all that the ter and L Christ-Ar outskirtsof was procla a small ci Israel: her of thorns. Messiah of The grea in the name advance to clear intelli of the heat "Son of M those who ment of the works, the deathless or deed; at the

Him as the

form walki

loving Mas

obey Him!

tion as Mess

His troubled

at Caperna

Philippi, bu

formally ac

hour had co

""Blessed

hath not rev

lowly outwe

ing; My Fa

vealed to yo

had been th

His life, Hi

ccause He t and only s such, He t as, hence-

01: 111

work must His. Ilis in Heaven, ppeared to led by evil, His Father indisturbed er betaken Him, and h His kingthe world I, therefore, whom that he moment in fervent ard journey, ea Philippi: ong the rich ned fo the -revelation: aship which rele, and as on. fliced to inw little He

l idea of a th Antipas, Thou work a the dead, Elias, who, neaven, and pare for the ne Ark and inaugurate ophets, sent ne." They is refusal to d, an almost ch an utter

d been the

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

subject of the keenest interest and discussion, from II is feit relation to the Expected One, and this, of itself, promised a rich result, when His followers, after His departure, directed the minds of men to a clearer conception of the Messianic Kingdom. He Himself knew whom He was, and was unaffected by any popular judgment. But He had now to obtain from the lips of the Twelve themselves,-the special witnesses of His life and daily words, -a higher coufession, which He knew they only needed a question from Him to utter gladly. "But whom say ye that I am?" Instantly from the lips of Simon Peter, the impulsive, tender, loving, rock-like disciple, came all that the full heart of his Master waited to hear. "Thou, my Master and Lord," said he, doubtless with beaming joy, "Thou art the Christ-Antah Meschicha-the Son of the living God." Thus, in the outskirts of the heathen town dedicated to the deified Augustus, Jesus was proclaimed, with no preparatory circumstance, in the privacy of a small circle of Galilæan fishermen, as the King of the Universal Israel: here, a fugitive whose only earthly crown was to be the one of thorns, He assumed publicly the empire of all the world, as the Messiah of God.

The greatness and significance of this confession of Peter's, made in the name of the Twelve, cannot be exaggerated. It was a striking advance towards realizing the great truth of the Incarnation, and the clear intelligence would one day follow the open and ardent atterance of the heart." Hitherto Jesus had revealed Himself chiefly as the "Son of Man," and "the Son of God;" but He now received from those who had been constantly with Him, as a faint acknowledg ment of the conviction wrought by His life; and words, and mighty works, the formal inauguration as the Messiah-King of a spiritual and deathless empire. Nathanael had anticipated the great confession, indeed, at the opening of His ministry, and the disciples had recognized Him as the Sou of God, on that wild night when they found that the form walking on the waves was not the spirit of the storm, but their loving Master, and when the very winds and waves were seen to obey Him But the time was not then ripe for His definite installation as Messiah, and the incidents passed off. Simon, also, had cheered His troubled soul, when the great secession of the disciples took place at Capernaum, by an anticipation of His confession at Cæsarea Philippi, but He had waived it, as it were, aside. Now, however, He formally accepted what, hitherto, He had silently allowed; for the hour had coments were of all worked of and a light of allows between

"Blessed art Thou, Simon Barjona," said He; "Flesh and blood hath not revealed this to you, for you have not learned it from my lowly outward form, and it has come to you from no human teaching; My Father in Heaven has thought you worthy to have it revealed to you." It was, indeed, an amazing utterance. The Twelve had been the daily witnesses of the human simplicity and poverty of His life, His homelessness, His weary wanderings afoot, and all the worthy, bot think unfit.

pline of its kingdom, or by me, myse its welfare, mitted it, fr recognized entry into m permitted, as cised this ho

when he rose

when he spol tude, and by tles. Jesus authority to in recognition creation, by vast structure

need no notic

The New S

made for its Henceforth.

Messiah of w

But the app

old. Jerusa could be com

The Temple

vere in the H lessiah be de he new spirit

rork in Galil

opelessly par

wail nothing

a Jerusalem

o to the Capi

le had assun

penly before

eath awaited

ounsels of G

It would ha

ous incident o

e preached as al this could

Th

orld.

lessiah. nultitude mus circumstances of Tils constant humiliation, which might have counterbalanced the great memories which their privileged intimacy had afforded, and obscured their spiritual significance." These last months had, moreover, surrounded Him with all the depreciations of a fugitive life. Yet they had broken through the hereditary national prejudice of their race, with whom tradition and absolute uniformity in religious things had an inconceivable power, -- they had disregarded the judgment of their spiritual rulers and leaders; riscn above the utmost ideas of those around; and had seen, in their lowly refected Master, the true Lord of the new kingdom of God. Nor is the fact less wonderful that the life and words of Jesus, seen thus closely, should have created such a lofty and holy conception of His. spiritual greatness, amidst all the counteractions of outward fact and daily familiarity. In spite of all, He was the Malka Meschicha-the King Messiah—to those who had known Him best. The ardent, immovable devotion of Peter, the first to own his Master as Messiah, as he had been first in all other utterances of trust and reverence, won for itself an illustrious tribute from Jesus. The weary, sad heart, that had so much to grieve it, had been filled for the time with a pure and kingly joy at the proof thus given, that, at last, a true and solid beginning had been made. He had, doubt less, long yearhed for a time when the Twelve would be advanced enough in spiritual things to let Him disclose His utmost thoughts and ultimate designs, and this time had now come. He had never yet spoken of the future government or organization of the New Kingdom, as a visible communion, and did not propose to lay down any detailed laws even now. He hastened to tell Peter, however, that this society,-His Church or congregation, "called out" from the world at large, would be entrusted, after His decease, to him. As buildings in the country around were founded on a rock, that the floods and storms might not overthrow them, so it would be raised on the rock-like fidelity shown by him in his great confession.

Turning to him. He continued, "I have something to say that concerns thee, Thou art to me, as when I first saw you,-Petros;-the the rock (petra) which I will make the foundation stone, when my Church, in which my followers will be enrolled, is to be built. In its building you will do me the greatest service, like the stone on which all others rest, itself resting on the firm rock beneath-which is Myself. On you and such rock-like souls, it will rise, but on you first; and the gates of death will be powerless against it, for it shall outlive the grave and reach on into eternity. Unopening though the gates of the grave be, they shall open wide to let forth my followers to the resurrection of the just, nor shall the powers of evil be able to over-turn the new society thus gathered. I have called you the rock on which I shall raise my Church—I call you also the steward, to whom the charge of it is entrusted. As such I shall give you after my ascent to heaven, the keys of it, to admit such as you think have counntimacy had These last reclations of tary national a uniformity had disrerisen above heir lowly relod. Nor is is, seen thus ption of Hisvard fact and schicha—the

to own his utterances of from Jesus. d been filled s given, that, e had, doubt be advanced lost thoughts Ie had never of the New to lay down ter, however, ed out' from to him. As ock, that the uld be raised ession. say that con--Petros;-the ne, when my e built: In its one on which which is Myon you first; t shall outlive igh the gates llowers to the able to overthe rock on ard, to whom you, after my as you think worthy, both, Jews and heathen, and to shut out those whom you think unfit. I commit to you, moreover, the government and disciline of its membership: whatever you forbid as unbecoming my ingdom, or as unfitting for membership in it, shall be as if forbidden hyme, myself, in heaven; and whatever you permit, as not contrary to its welfare, or not excluding from it, shall be as if I, myself, permitted it, from above. It will be left to your decision, which will be recognized before God, what may be forbidden, as a hindrance to entry into my Church on earth, or unworthy of it; and what may be permitted, as not barring from its membership." 'How Peter exercised this honour in the Apostolic Church was hereafter to be seen. when he rose as spokesman of the eleven in the election of a twelfth: when he spoke for them on the Day of Pentecost, before the multitude, and by his constant mention as chief and foremost of the Apostles. Jesus was almost immediately to extend the same dignity and authority to the whole of the twelve, but Peter had just precedence in recognition of his worth and character. The figments of Roman creation, by which, from this tribute to his love and enthusiasm, a vast structure of priestly arrogance and usurpation has been raised, need no notice in this place.

The New Society was at last formally constituted, and provision made for its government and continuance after its founder's death. Henceforth, He moved in the circle of the Twelve as the recognized Messiah of whom they were the future designated heralds,

But the approaching end of the great drama could not be left unold. 'Jerusalem was the one spot in which alone the work of Jesus could be completed. Galilee had been only the place of preparation. The Temple and its ministering priests, the Rabbis and the schools, were in the Holy City. David had reigned there, and there must the design be declared, to vindicate the honour of God, and proclaim he new spiritual theoracy in the centre of the religious world. His work in Galilee was virtually over, for though not finished, it was isoplessly paralyzed and checked. He might return, but it would wall nothing against the conspiracy that everywhere faced Him. But a Jerusalem His work was both to begin and to complete. He must to to the Capital, for Galilee was in great measure closed against Him. It had assumed the Messiahship, and He must needs proclaim it penly before His enemies in their stronghold. He knew that only eath awaited Him, but that death had been foreseen in the eternal ounsels of God as the mysterious atonement for the sins of the rold.

If would have been premature to have spread abroad the momenous incident of the ascription and formal acceptance of the title of . lessiah. The Twelve must needs know the great truth, but the ultitude must, for a time, be left to their own fancies. He was to e preached as a crucified and risen Saylour, not as a Jewish Messiab. In this could not be till the end had come. Nor did the Twelve as D yet understand the divine plan of salvation clearly chough, and the Jews, moreover, might have taken advantage of the preaching for seditious movements. So importative was temporary secrecy; indeed, that He gave the strictest injunctions that no man slicuid be told what had happened.

? The idea of a suffering Messiah was, however, so wholly foreign to all prevailing conceptions, that it was indispensible that the catas, trophe at Jerusalem, forescen by Jesus from the first, but now near at hand, should be made familiar to the Twelve, as part of the all. wise purpose of God in the development of the new spiritual kingdom. It has been a disputed point whether any of the Rabbis of Christ's day had thought of the Mossiah as destined to suffer and die. Ba yond question some had applied to Him the passages of Isaiah, which speak of the servant of God as wounded for our transgressions, but it is equally certain that the idea had not only found no general accept. ance, but was entirely opposed to the feeling of the nation." From this time, therefore, Jesus began systematically to prepare the Twelve for His approaching violent death, returning to the sad topic at every opportunity; that a truth, so disagreeable and so contrary to their life-long ideas, might gradually become familiar to them; and that they might come to feel that it was in accordance with the divine plan of His kingdom. He had spoken of it before, but now threw aside all vagueness, and impressed it on them with the utmost dis tinctness; doubtless, explaining from their own Scriptures, as He did afterwards to the disciples at Emmaus, how thit was necessary that Christ should suffer these things, and then enter into His glory." To revolutionize fixed belief is never easy, for the will has to be persuaded as well as the understanding." Hitherto, their minds had not been prepared for such a shock, and even yet, as we shall often see, they were very slow to give up their preconceptions, and realize what seemed so contradictory. Sold of board any bravers love define It was impossible, however, to mistake the warnings of the Master, however hard it might be to reconcile them with their own ideas. "He must go to Jerusalem," He said, "and suffer many thing of the elders, and chief priests, and scribes, and be killed, and after three days, rise again." But so far were the Twelve from comprehending such an announcement, that Peter, too impulsive to wait for opportunity of telling how much it distressed him, could not restrain his feelings. True to his character, he forthwith took Him by the hand, and led Him side, to remonstrate with Him, and dissuade Him from a journey thich would have such results. "God keep this evil far from Thee, my Lord and Muster," said he. "You must not let such things happen. They will utterly ruin the prospects of your kingdom, for they match ill with the dignity of the Messiah. If there be any danger such as you fear, why not use your supernatural power to preserve yourself and us." It is not to be endured that you should suffer such indignities." It was the very same temptated in a state and indignities."

enemy had power for I surrender hefore, it w made Peter my sight, th shew that in of God, but their dream that Jesus w to take, und had yet to le by suffering It was a n and their ve ing Jesus as not reconcil the temptati the case and sorrow and but was His away from power in th truth, in all ever, that the for He would embrace a li fice of life, f ward Nor N spirit, to suff though such alisolute rateful, spot Even ings numbers of t -had gather noment. T hese: the ff Il self-decep Without gi him to the s Twelve round un to speak. "I must ne o must all w ny disciple. nd sorrow. ough, and the preaching for ccrecy, indeed, ad be told what wholly foreign that the catas. but now near part of the all. ritual kingdom. bis of Christ's r and die. Be of Isoiah, which gressions, but it general accent. nation. From pare the Twelve id topic at every ntrary to their them; and that with the divine but now threw the utmost dis tures, as He did s necessary that His glory." To has to be perminds had not shall often see. and realize what bough such a re rnings of their with their own ffor many things killed, and after e from compreive to wait for an uld not restrain lim by the hand, suade Him from. eep this evil far nust not let such f vour kingdom, If there be any atural power to that you should n as the arch enemy had set before Him in the wilderness: to employ His divine power for His own advantage, instead of using it, with absolute selfsurrender, only to carry out the will of His Father. But, as ever before, it was instantly repelled. His quick, stern answer must have made Peter recoil afraid. "Get thee behind me," said He, "out of my sight, thou tempter, thou art laying a snare for me; thy words shew that in these things thou enterest not into the thoughts and plans of God, but considerest all things only from the ideas of men, with their dreams of ambition and human advantage." Peter still fancied that Jesus would be an earthly monarch, and that the proper course to take, under the circumstances, was to oppose force with force. He had yet to learn that the kingdom of his Master was to be established by suffering a.d self-denial.

It was a moment unspeakably solemn. Even the few faithful ones. and their very Coryphæus, -- their leader and mouthpiece-while hailing Jesus as the Messiah, clung to the old national ideas, and could not reconcile them with His suffering and dying. He had rebuked the temptation which appealed to Him as a man, so strongly, to take the case and glory which invited Him, and to abandon the path of sorrow and lowliness, which might be the spiritual life of the world, but was His own humiliation and martyrdom. It had been driven away from His stainless soul, like darkness from the sun, but its power in the minds even of the Twelve, was only too clear. The inith, in all its repugnancy, must be forced on them more clearly than ever, that they might no longer continue with Him if it offended them; for He would receive none as His disciples who did not cheerfully embrace a life of self-denial and absolute devotion, even to the sacrifice of life, for His sake; with no prospect whatever of earthly reward. Nor would He even accept any one willing, from a mercenary mirit, to suffer here that, He might receive a reward hereafter; for though such a reward was promised to those who were faithful to the end absolute sincerity was required in His service. It must be the grateful, spontaneous expression of true love and devotion of motion Even in such an outlying district as that of Cæsarea Philippi, numbers of the population—for there were many Jews in the region. had gathered to hear and see Him and were near at hand at the moment. The test required of the Twelve was no less imperative for bese: the "floor" must be thoroughly "fanned and cleansed" from all self-deception or designed hypocrisy.

Without giving Peter time, therefore, to excuse himself, and leaving in to the shame of his reproof, Jesus called the people and the Iwelve round Him, and continued the subject on which He had betunto speak. The appropriate shared built would be shared a said

"I must needs suffer," said He. "before I enter into my glory, but o must all who would be my followers. If any man propose to be hydisciple, he must literally follow me in my path of humiliation ad sorrow. Whatever would hinder absolute devotion and self-sacrifice must be given up. He must make Me his one aim. All that stands in the way of undivided loyalty to Me-the love of ease, of pleasure, and even of life-must be surrendered. The hopes and prospects which engage other men must be abandoned, and in their stead he must daily take up the sufferings and self-denials which come on him for my sake, and bear them as a man condemned to death bears the cross on which he is to die. I have set, and shall set him the example I require him to follow. Any one who thinks he can be my disciple, and enter into my kingdom hereafter, and vet bear himself so in this evil time as to escape suffering and enjoy life and its comforts, deceives himself. If he seek this life by denying my name, as he must needs do in this age to escape persocution he will lose life eternal. But he who is willing, for my sake, to sacrifice his natural desire for pleasure and ease, and even to give up life itself. if required, for my name, will receive everlasting life when I comein my kingdom. Hard though this seem, it is the wisest and best thing you can do to comply heartily with it. What has a man in the end if, by denying me for his worldly interests, he gain even the whole world, and lose that life which alone is worthy the name? Unprepared for the eternal life of my kingdom, and without a share in it: with his breath he loses not only all that he has, but himself as well. What gain here will repay him for the loss of the life hereafter?

"I say this on good grounds, and with absolute truth For. though now only a man like yourselves, I shall one day return in a very different form, with the majesty of my Father in heaven, and accompanied by legions of angels, to recompense every one according to his works. In that day each true disciple will be rewarded according to his loving devotion and self-sacrifice for my sake, and will be received by me, as the Messiah, into my kingdom: But I shall be ashamed of any one, and count him unfit to enter that kingdom, who for love of life and ease, or for fear of man, or from shame of my present lowly estate, or of my cross, has wanted courage and heart to confess me openly, and separate himself, in my name, from this sinful generation. It may be hard for you to think, as you see me standing here before you, that I shall one day come in heavenly majesty; but that you may know how surely it will be so, I shall grant to some of you, now present, a glimpse of this majesty, not after my death, but while I am still with you, that they may see me, the Son of Man, in the glory in which I will come when I return to enter on my kingdom." Is black to a brut over he do manned all is an according to a second and the second and t antrite ratter still all

The appointement that Ho westo notes into His giver as Messial suffering shame and death, not only shocked all their preconcepas they could not fund related it, and whee sorely discontaged by needed to be choosed in their despondency, and led gratually accept the disclosure of His approaching fundibilition. His prom-

JESUS had slowly ec d His great mprejudice mificant acts bbis, and le m daily exam owever, for c timate of H nceforth free nothing had Hiskingdo ethren, was m death, an ture. The e immediate e circle with li humiliation epest though erts by visio rough the Go ert and mind His gladness res, been ten welve, and sa mception of eexpectation d human sati inded the na tionship-low familiar inter de, that had b em, in the pr te themselves d, like His F The announc suffering sha ons; they cou

hey needed to accept the di

that some

Millin But

1.4819 13.

103 小用用的 G

ind'ai. bur

Philve Bach

A Louis Franking

De Maila Luda

aim. All that ove of ease, of the hopes and d. and in their denials which condemned to t, and shall set who thinks he eafter, and yet and enjoy life fe by denying persecution, he ke, to sacrifice e up life itself. when I come in and best thing. man in the end ven the whole ame? Unpreit a share in it: imself as well. hercafter? .om: truth. DeFor. day return in a in heaven, and ry one accord-1 be rewarded my sake, and gdom. But I nter that king. or from shame. d courage and ny name, from nk, as you see ne in heavenly berso, I shall is majesty, not evimay see me, nen I return to ical in the rites: ethenised ves ter per all The ARDON PROCESS unrie viniotur a Laura had the THE TEANSFIGURATION. Car, bet mini life say 108 URILA LANGE TIDA 6 Jusus had now utterly broken with the past. Hitherto He had en slowly educating the Twelve to right conceptions of Himself His great work, and in doing so had had to oppose their stubm prejudice, enlighten their ignorance, illustrate His meaning by mificant acts, resist the sophistry and superficial literalism of the abbis, and lead the way to a higher spiritual ideal and life by His m daily example and words. They had now been in His society, wever, for over two years, and, at last, had risen to a more just timate of His dignity and of the nature of His work. He was enceforth free from the anxiety which had been inevitable so long nothing had been definitely accomplished towards the perpetuity His kingdom; for the confession of Peter, in the name of his ethren, was the assurance that that kingdom would outlive His in death, and spread ever more widely through an unending ture. The joy of victory filled His soul, though the cross lay in e immediate future. Henceforth He bore Himself as soon to leave ecircle with whom He had dwelt so long; now, preparing them for is humiliation by showing its divine necessity; now, uttering His epest thoughts on the things of His kingdom; now, kindling their arts by visions of the joy that would spread over all nations rough the Gospel they were to preach. The future alone filled His eart and mind. grid. fill

His gladness of soul at Peter's confession had, like all human raprest been tempered by shadow. He had read the hearts of the welve, and saw that, though they had approached the truth in their inception of the Messiah, they were still Jews, in linking with it e expectation of an earthly political kingdom, with its ambitions in human satisfactions. They had risen above the difficulties that inded the nation;—the thought of Nazareth—Galilee—human retionship—lowly position—human wants—rejection by the Rabbis familiar intercourse with the "unclean" multitude, and much bede, that had been a stumbling-block to others; but it was hard for em, in the presence of one who, to outward appearance, was a man te themselves, to realize that He was the only-begotten Son of God, id, like His Father, divine.

The announcement that He was to enter into His glory as Messiah, mente gatoffizet y suffering shame and death, not only shocked all their preconcepbluos your rest in the conduction of the stand it, and were sorely discouraged. dot hobban rest hey needed to be cheered in their despondency, and led gradually table aft these society the disclosure of His approaching humiliation. His promte that some of them, before their death, should see His kingdom D come with power, was doubtless treasured in their hearts; but the little thought its fulfilment was so near. w with out of of malless

Six days passed; or eight, including the first and last days ful dcubtless, of sad and grave, as well as joyous, thoughts: sad the their Master spoke of suffering violence, and death: grave that H should not only have dashed all their hopes of a national regenen tion, but should have painted their own future in colours so sombre yet joyous, amidst all, in vague anticipations of the predicted spirual glory of the New Kingdom, of which they were to be here Little by little they would be sure to catch more of His spirit, findaily intercourse with Him, and learn imperceptibly how the pure joy and the noblest glory come from self-sacrificing love; how the highest sense, it is more blessed to give than to receive. We m told nothing of this sacred interval, but may well conjecture how passed.

The scene of the Transfiguration, like that of nearly all other in dents in the life of our Lord, is not minutely stated. St. Luk indeed, calls it "The Mountain," but gives it no closer name. seems, however, certain, that the tradition which from the days St. Jerome his pointed to Mount Tabor as the locality, is income The summit of that hill—an irregular platform, embracing a circu of half an hour's walk, was apparently from the carliest ages fortifie and Josephus mentions, about A.D. 60, that he strengthened the fences of a city built on it. Picturesque, therefore, though the looks, as the traveller approaches it over the wide Plain of Esdraed it could not have been the spot where Jesus revealed His glory, for could not offer the seclusion and isolation indicated in the gospe Nor is there any reason to think that the Twelvo and their Mas had left the neighbourhood of Cæsarea Philippi, for St. Mark pressly mentions, that they did not start for Galilee till at least day after.

It was, doubtless, therefore, on one of the spurs of Hermon, " lofty mountain," near which He then found Himself, that Transfiguration took place. Brought up among the hills, such region; with distant summits, white in spots with snow, even summer; its pure air; and the solitude of woody slopes and sh valleys, must have breathed an ethereal calm and deep peaceful jo seldom felt amidst the abodes of men, on the wearied and troub spirit of our Lord.

Taking the three of His little band, most closely in sympathy w Him, and most able to receive the disclosures that might be made them. He ascended into the hills towards evening, for silent pay The favoured friends were Peter—the rock-like—His host at Car naum from the first; and the two Sons of Thunder, John and Jan loved disciples both, but John, the younger, nearest his Made heart of all the Twelve, as most like Himself in spirit. They been singled out, already, for similar especial honour, for they Evening fe

th His Fat

tions, had wi

mass, to slee mayer, His v ad taken the nd repugnan rengthen th o give them le left then nore than ev onsecration the prospe lis nature, n hrunk from a death so ttimes; but, nust have lai e made an o His people hough innoc ougli the be bemer? As prows. Dri ivinity with indled to the n the peaks a midst such a oused by th hen lo! two: lis side Mon the Old Di d to fulfil. ispensation; rough death, youd mortal Him as the salein, and oke of the g ijah, dispelka man weakne

d dicered H

hearts; but the last days full sughts: and the sgrave that H ational regenen lours so sombre (predicted spirit redicted spirit to be heraid His spirit, from y how the pure ag love; how, i receive. We m conjecture how rly all other ind ated. St. Luk closer name. from the days lity, is incorrect nbracing a circu iest ages fortifie engthened the d e, though the h lain of Esdraelo d His glory, for ed in the gospe and their Mast for St. Mark e e till at least l of Hermon, " Himself, that t the hills, such th snow, even slopes and she deep peaceful jo ried and troub in sympathy winight be made for silent pray His host at Cap John and Jap arest his Mase spirit. They our; for they s had entered the death-chamber in the house of Jairus, and they were, hereafter, to be the only witnesses of the awful sorrow of Gethemanc.

Evening fell while Jesus poured out His soul in high communion with His Father, and the three, having finished their nightly devotions had wrapped themselves in their abbas and lain down on the mas, to sleep till called. Meanwhile their Master continued in myer, His whole soul filled with the crisis so fast approaching. He ad taken the three with Him, to overcome their dread of His death nd repugnance to the thought of it, as unbefitting the Messiah; to trengthen them to bear the sight of His humiliation hereafter; and give them an earnest of the glory into which He would enter when He left them, and thus teach them that, though unseen, He was. more than ever, nlighty to help. He was about to receive a solemn onsecration for the cross, but, with it, a strong support to His soul a the prospect of such a death. He was a man like ourselves, and His nature, now in its high prime, and delighting in life, must have hrunk from the thought of dying. The prolonged agony and shame a death so painful and ignominious, must have clouded His spirit times; but, above all, who can conceive the moral suffering that mist have lain in the thought that, though the Holy One. He was to e made an offering for sin; that, though filled with unutterable love His people. He was to die at their hands as their enemy: that, hough innocent and stainless, He was to suffer as a criminal; that, ough the beloved Son of God, He was to be condemned as a blashemer? As He continued praying, His soul rose above all earthly prows. Drawn forth by the nearness of His Heavenly Father, the white within shone through the veiling flesh till His raiment indled to the dazzling brightness of light, or of the glittering snow n the peaks above Him, and His face glowed with a sunlike matesty. midst such an effulgence it was impossible the three could sleep. oused by the splendour, they gazed, awe-struck, at the wonder. hen lo! two human forms, in glory like that of the angels, stood by is side-Moses and Elijah-the founder, and the great defender the Old Dispensation, which He had come at once to supersede d to fulfil. Their presence from the upper world was a symbol at the Law and the Prophets henceforth gave place to a higher spensation; but they had also another mission. They had passed rough death, or at least, from life, and knew the triumph that lay would mortality to the faithful servants of God. Who could speak Him as they of His decease, which He should accomplish at Jesalem, and temper the gloom of its anticipation? Their presence ake of the grave conquered, and of the eternal glory beyond." The pty tomb under Mount Abarim, and the horses and charlot of ligh, dispelled all fears of the future, and instantly banished all man weakness. That His Eternal Father should have honoured d dieered Him by such an embassy at such a time, girt His soul to the joyful acceptance of the awful task of redemption. Human agitation and spiritual conflict passed away, to return no more in their bitterness till the night before Calvary. His whole nature row to the height of His great enterprise. Henceforth His one thought was to finish the work His Father, had given Him to do.

P

Meanwhile, the three Apostles, dazzled, confused, and lost in wonder, gazed silently on the amazing sight, and listened. But it is not given to earth to have more than brief glimpses of heaven," More and Elijah had erelong finished their mission, and were about to m turn to the presence of God. Could they not be induced to she awhile? Peter, ever first to speak, and hardly knowing, in his confusion, what he suid, would at least try to prolong such an interview "Master," said he, to amplify his words, "it is good for us to h here; let us gather some branches from the slopes around, and put un three booths, like those of the Feast of Tabernacles; one for The one for Moses, and one for Elijah." The cares and troubles of h wandering life, and all his gloomy forebodings for his Master and himself, had faded away before such brightness and joy, and, in h fond child-like simplicity, he dreamed of lengthening out the delight The Almighty had come down of old, to Mount Sinal, in blackness and darkness, and tempest; but now, a bright cloud descended from the clear sky, like that from which He had of old spoken to Moses at the door of the Tabernacle, and overshadowed Jesus and the two heavent visitors, filling the three Apostles with fear, as they saw it spread roun and over their Master, and those with Him. It was the symbold the presence of God, for He, also, had drawn nigh to bear witness His Eternal Son. It was not enough that Moses and Elijah had he oured Him—a voice from the midst of the cloud added a still high testimony-"This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased hear ye Him," Such a confirmation of the great confession of Peter was never to be forgotten. Almost a generation later, when he was his second Epistle, the remembrance of this night was as vivid ever. "We were eye-witnesses," says he, "of His Majesty," For H received from God the Father honour and glory, when there can such a voice to Him from the excellent glory, This is my below Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye Him, And this von which came from heaven, we heard, when we were with Him in the holy mount." The brightness of a vision so amazing lingered in memory of those who beheld it to the intest day of their lives. · Sore afraid, the three fell on their faces, for who could stand befor God? But the Voice had come and gone, and, with it, the Cloudan the visitors from the eternal world; and Jesus was once more alone Calming their fears by a gentle touch. He bade them "arise and a be afraid," and they found themselves once more alone. Master m followers, with the stars over them, and the silent hills around. The divine glory had faded from His countenance, and His robes we once more like their own, but they could never forget in what Maje they had a heard Him elf; nor oo Moses and I draw before the Presence nress words beavenly di ed lowliness bosom of t forth receive hear Him or It was not Master and ad the three There was, o o with a str had seen and the wonders were so littl hat the visi den from th It illustrat linous ideas le continuo he resurrecti elf, they we med them, old the Jew hould raise it guration, on most the v hrice repeate The resurre ent Jewish th bree found i mage of Jesu ynagogues, t ection would ommands giv utside the h

ing conten

either the Sa

ld not obser

surrection.

rain, there w

ways heard

tion. Human no more in ole nature rom His one thought lo.' and lost in won-1. But it is not heaven. Mose ere about to m induced to stay ing, in his conch an interview, od for us to be und, and put un ; one for The troubles of his his Master and joy, and, in his cout the delight aai, in blackness scended from th n to Moses at the the two heavenly w it sprend round s the symbol o o bear witness Elijah had hon ded a still higher am well pleased nfession of Peter r. when he wrold was as vivid Iajesty. For H when there cam his is my belove And this vold with Him in th g lingered in the heir lives. uld stand befor it the Cloud an once more alone arise and 20 lone, Master an ils around in The d His robes wer in what Majos and "Villen" 8

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

MUSTERIOSDAFT" 1 BASS OF bey had seen Him; never forget, in His humiliation, that they bad hard Him called "the beloved Son," by the lips of the Eternal Rimelf; nor could they ever hesitate whom to obey when they had seen Moses and Elias-representatives of the Law and the Prophets-withdraw before Him, and had heard Him proclaimed from the Cloud of the Presence as far higher than they. God Himself had said, in express words, or in effect, "He who is now, with you alone, whose eavenly dignity you have seen, He whom you daily see in His wontd lowliness, is the same, even in this humiliation, as when in the beem of the Father-'My Son, who pleases me always.' Honceforth receive the Law from His lips alone; henceforth, let, all men hear Him only; He is the Living Voice of the unseen God." It was now morning, and the nine were awaiting the return of their Vaster and His friends. What the conversation was between Jesus and the three, as they descended from the mountain, is not told us. There was, once more, freedom to speak, though, doubtless, they did with a strange reverence, hardly venturing to talk of what they had seen and heard. Nor, could they relieve their minds by telling the wonders of the night to the others of the Twelve, for even they were so little prepared for such disclosures, that Jesus commanded hat the vision should be told "to no man, till the Son of Man be isen from the dead." 2300 5 - 341 1819 : Mas h diese Press health

It illustrates the difficulty Jesus had to overcome, before new regious ideas could be familiarized to the minds even of those under his continuous teaching, that, though the three had often heard of he resurrection of the dead directly or indirectly from Jesus Himelf, they were at a loss to know what the words meant, as He now and them, and disputed among themselves about them. He had old the Jews that if they destroyed the Temple of His body, He hould raise it again the third day; and only a week before the Transguration, on the day of Peter's memorable utterance. He had used most the very words which perplexed them now, But though lice repeated, they were still dark and mysterious. From horizon The resurrection from the dead was, indeed, an article of the curent Jewish theology, but it was so taught by the Rabbis, that the hree found it hard to reconcile their previous ideas with the lanmage of Jesus. They had heard from some of the preachers in the magogues, that Israel alone would rise; from others, that the resurection would include godly heathen also, who had kept the seven ommands given to the sons of Noah; from some, that all the heathen uiside the holy land would be raised, but only to shame and everwing contempt before Israel; while still others maintained, that either the Samaritans, nor the great mass of their own nation, who id not observe the precepts of the Rabbis, would have part in the surrection. But if there was confusion as to who should rise gain, there was still more contradiction between what they had ways heard before, of the occasion and time of the resurrection;

P

heside the mountain

The night.

now return

bouring h

Cæsarea P

from vario sooner was

tude move

was oppor

exciting no

Jew in the

from birth

ioined wit

the hope th

before wro

try, had tr

was indeed

sions, in w

and these L

when he w

near. Al His influence.

hThe failu

the exciter

in their nar

been sadly

His repeate

a similar f

spiritual st

though He trial. The

He had spo

their devoti

and falterin

all their rela

they had no

their first in

vielded to th

the mortific

bear the cav

seize a mon

Meanwhil

port of His was visible

were impati

His followe

and the words that had fallen from Jesus. They had been trained in believe that all Israel would be gathered from the four quarters of the earth at the coming of the Messinh; and that the dead would h raised immediately after." But before this resurrection, which would thus inaugurate the reign of the Messiah, Elias was first to come, and they still clung to this idea, in spite of all that Jesus had said to re move it. They had always, moreover, heard the synagegue preach ers say that the holy dead, when thus raised, were to take part in th kingdom of the Messiah, at Jerusalem, and once more become fellow. citizens with the living. In Jam 'hall' and fierell n.f. Commonida say At the mention of the resurrection, therefore, the thought instantion rose in their minds, how it could take place when Elias had not ve appeared, and how Jesus could speak of Himself alone as rising from the grave, and that on the third day." It was clear there must h some contradiction between His words and what they had alway been taught. What could He mean by this rising from the dead Only He could answer. To solve the point they asked Him, "How is it our Rabbis say that Elias must come before the dead shall h raised-that is, before the opening of the reign of the Messiah, which the resurrection is to announce? You speak of yourself rising, alone from the dead, and that on the third day, and say nothing about the reappearance of Elias, which our Rabbis say is to be three days being the coming of the Messiah. Is it wrong when they tell us that h will stand and weep and lament on the hills of Israel, over the dea late and forsaken land, till his voice is heard through the world and that he will then cry to the mountains, " Peace and blessing com into the world, peace and blessing come into the world!"+-" Salvation cometh, salvation cometh!" and gather all the scattered sons of Jacob, and restore all things in Israel as in ancient times? They say that Elias will turn the hearts of all Israel to receive the Messi gladly; how is this to be reconciled with your saying that the Messia must suffer many things of the high priests and rulers, and be jected and put to death?" . Driving all and hulf hulf historie hul off You are right," replied Jesus, "when you say that Ellas mu come before me, the Messiah. The purpose of God, and ancie prophecy require it. , But, as I, the Son of Man, now when I have come, have to suffer many things, and be set at nought and rejected as the prophets have forctold, although I have given so many prod of my heavenly mission; so has it already happened with him w was the Elias sent by my Father to prepare my way. He, like m self, has already come, but they knew him as little as they have known Me, and they have done to him as their hearts wished a has suffered even to death, as I, the Messiah, must also suffer Words so precise could not be misunderstood. They saw that spoke of John the Baptist. "" South 1 2 South yaya no sidiary and Our moments of exaltation and rapture are only passing, and often thrown into vivid contrast by the shadows that constantly list a land of the call the ball of the been trained to four quarters of e dead would be on, which would rst to come, and s had said to m. nagegue preach take part in the become fellow. Humfristic spor hought instantly Has had not ve ne as rising from r tliere must be they had always from the dead ed Him, "How e dead shall be Messiah, which self rising, alone, thing about this three days befor ey tell us that he el, over the deso h the world, and diblessing com di"-" Salvation attered sous of imes? They say cive the Messia that the Messial ulers, and be re Gildes heal off that Elias mus od, and ancien ow when I have ght and rejected so many proof d with him wh y. 5 He, like my tle as they have arts wished with ust also suffer. hey saw that H of sidier enn passing, and an constantly lig heside the light. Jesus had left the other disciples at the foot of the mountain when He ascended it with Peter and the sons of Zebedee. The night, with its wondrous vision, had passed away, and He was now returning to His little band, who waited for Him in a neighbouring hamlet or village. The Jewish population scattered round Gesarea Philippi had already heard of His arrival in their parts, and from various motives had gathered to see and hear Him. Hence no moner was He noticed descending the slopes, than the whole multitude moved in His direction to meet Him. His sudden appearance was opportune. An incident had just taken place, which was still exciting no little dispute between some scribes and the disciples. Jew in the crowd had a son-his only child-who had been afflicted from birth with the form of demoniac possession shown by epilepsy. joined with madness and want of speech. He had brought him in the hope that Jesus would heal him, and the disciples, who had often before wrought similar miracles when sent on tours through the country, had tried, in His absence, to heal the boy, and had failed of It was, indeed, a special case, for the lad was subject to violent convulsions, in which he foamed at the mouth, and gnashed with his teeth, and these had often endangered his life, by coming on him at times when he would have been drowned or burned had not help been near, of His whole body, moreover, was withering away under their . Hickory influence of ther order substrict of

The failure of the disciples had, apparently, been connected with the excitement and agitations of the last week. Peter's confession in their name that they believed their Master to be the Messiah, had been sadly overcast by the shock to all their previous ideas given by His repeated intimations of His approaching violent death, and that a similar fate might overtake themselves. If had been a week of spifitual struggle, which Jesus designedly left them to undergo, though He knew, throughout, that one of them would yield to the trial. The nearer the time came for the journey to Judea of which He had spoken, and the less they could conceal from themselves that their devotion to Him was perilous to themselves, the more troubled and faltering grow their minds, and this inevitably affected them in all their relations. In such a hesitating and half-dispirited frame, they had no such triumphant faith as when they had gone out on their first independent apostolic mission and diseases and evil spirits yielded to their commands, in their Leader's name. Hence, they had the mortification not only of failing to work a cure, but of baving to bear the cavils and sneers of the Rabbis, who were only too glad to seize a momentary triumph at their expense.

Meanwhile, the crowd showed Jesus all outward respect. The report of His wonderful deeds elsewhere had raised an excitement that was visible on every face. They greeted and welcomed Him, and were impatient to hear what He should say in this matter between His followers, and their own doctors, not have and the state. Ì

Turning to these, now in the flush of victory, Jesus disconceried them by the simple demand to know the matter in dispute. But though they had been bold enough before the simple disciples, they were silent in the commanding presence of their Master.

Presently, the father of the unfortunate boy pressed through the crowd, catching fresh hope that the Teacher could, perhaps, do what the disciples could not. Kneeling before Him, he told all that had happened: how the disciples had been willing to help, but had failed. The whole story kindled Christ's sad indignation. He had been long with both disciples and people, and after all His mighty acts and unwearied teaching, the former had at best a dack and wavering faith, and the latter were ready to reject. Him, entirely, "O faithless and perverse generation," cried He, "have ye, then, no faith at all? Must I be always present with you? Are all the proofs you have had of my help, when absent from you in body, forgotten? Have not I given you power over demons, and to cure diseases, and promised to be with you, that you might do such wonders? How could you show such want of faith as to doubt my promises, and think anything too difficult either to attempt or do, whether I am present with you or not? Will you never conquer your unbelief? How long shall I suffer you? Where is the boy? Bring him to me."

The boy was brought at once; but his eyes no sooner met those of Jesus than he was seized with a paroxysm of his malady, and fell on the ground, in violent convulsions and foaming at the mouth. Insane, dumb, and writhing on the earth: no sadder speciacle of the kind could well have been seen.

It was desirable that the crowd should have the whole incident impressed on their minds, and it was necessary for the permanent good of the agonized father himself that his faith should be strengthened.

"How long has he suffered in this way?" asked Jesus. "From childhood, and often the spirit casts him into the water and into the fire, to kill him. But if Thou canst do anything at all, have compassion on me and him, and help us."

"If Thou cunst?" replied Jesus, repeating his words in gentle rebuke.—" All things are possible to him that believes."

The intense emotion of the father could restrain itself no longer. His son's cure had been made to turn on his own confidence in the Healer, and that, even if felt, might not be deep enough to secure the favour so unspeakably wished. In his distress he could only break out into the pitiful cry which has risen from unnumbered hearts since his day, "Yes. I believe: help Thou mine unhelief, if my failt is too weak."

The crowd had been closing in from all sides on Jesus and the unhappy father and son, and further delay was to be avoided. Turning, therefore, to the boy, Jesus addressed the demon: "Speechless and deaf spirit, I charge thee, come out of him, and enter no more into him." A wild shrick and a dreadful convulsion followed, and then the boy la deed, said ing him u wonder of The dis deception, ing privac simply," a yeur want ing faith, io difficul how mep c yeu that n one which God, be me "you had demands st faith as con needs of th greatness stands in y

Jesus did long turned Dan, across Huleh mar masses of L of upland y of Galilee by by the ordin of so great a that He cou days gone b The time H devoted ma approaching He was as repeat the v but He usu Mark. that places, and meet few a home, Caper as He had d would have accusation. fate, but He might lead t the boy lay still and motionless, so that he seemed dead. Many, indeed, said he was dead. But Jesus took him by the hand, and, lifting him up, delivered him to his father, amidst the loudy expressed wonder of the multitude at the mighty power of God.

The disciples, humbled by their failure, and unable, in their selfdeception, to account for it, took the first opportunity, on their gaining privacy to ask their Master to what it was owing. "It was simply," said Jesus, 'because of your little faith; indeed, I may say your want of faith, for I assure you if you had steadfast, unwavering faith, though ever so small, in my help, and in the power of God, no difficulty would seem too great for you to remove. You know how men call overcoming difficulties 'removing a mountain;' I tell you that no mountain of difficulty would be so great—far less this one which folled you-that it would not, at the word of firm trust in God, be moved out of your way." "As regards this cure," He added, "you had to do with a kind of demoniac possession, which especially demands strong faith, for every attempt to overcome it without such faith as comes through prayer, so persistent that it neglects even the needs of the body for the time, must be fruitless. It never is the greatness of the difficulty, but only the weakness of your faith, that stands in your way. Remember this in years to come." Jesus did not stay long in the district of Cæsares Philippi, but ere-long turned once more towards Galilee, probably taking the road by Dan, across the slopes of Lebanon, with the wild reed forests of the Huleh marshes on its south side, and on its north the huge mountain masses of Lebanon and Hermon, and the broad, well-watered sweep of upland valley between. He would thus most easily reach the hills of Galilee by an unusual route, and escape the publicity of an approach by the ordinary roads. It was the last time He was to visit the scene of so great a part of His public life, and He felt, as He journeyed on, that He could no more pass from village to village as openly as in days gone by, for the eyes of His enemies were everywhere on Him. The time He had previously given to teaching and healing was now devoted mainly to the special preparation of His disciples for the approaching end." Now and then, when special occasion demanded, He was as ready as ever to relieve the wretched, or to justify and repeat the words which He had so often delivered in the synagogues; but He usually shunned notice, not wishing, in the words of St. Mark, that any man should know. Avoiding the more populous places, and seeking by-paths among the hills, where He would meet few and be little known, He made His way towards His old home, Capernaum. But He could no longer show Himself anywhere as He had done in the days of His popularity, for every word, or act would have created new excitement, and given a fresh ground for accusation. He had resolved to go to Jerusalem and there meet His fate, but He could only do this by guarding against anything which might lead to His arrest in Galilec, for in that case He would be tried s disconcerted dispute. But disciples, they d through the haps, do what d all that had but had failed. had been long ty acts and unwavering faith ) faithless and h at all? Must u have had of Have not I nd promised to ould you show k anything too nt with you or w long shall I er met those of dy, and fell on he mouth. Ispectacle of the le incident imermanent good strengthened. Is b the water and ing at all, have

s in gentle re-

self no longer. ifidence in the h to secure the uld only break mbered hearts ief, if my faith us and the mled. Turning, peochless and r no more into wed, and then with som

lately, H

He seem friendshi

All this, but for th

Himself a

ical kingd

any mark

in the exp

from all th

have the c was abun

that prom they natur

the great of as Monarc

In this d

did they w

He might, what occu

ing and spi

for the mo

501 63 11576

bus 'rfort' H

bing 's first

bilizaling" fff

Capernaum

and He wa familiar spo had so ofte yards, rich

summer mo ling waters,

had gathere

These He

them for eve

by the local

Master. Mo

nacle, by the able at the :

Captivity, h

about one a

Fim Our

His entra

"Tab bil

THERE I

and condemned by a local court. Jerusalem alone must see the catastrophe, for it was the centre of the nation, the headquarters of the priesthood and Rabbis—His cnemics—and Els death then would be distinctly their work: their open and formal rejection, as representatives of the nation, of the New Kingdom, and of Himself as the Messiah.

He staved in Galilee, therefore, only so long as His purpose to go to Jerusalem permitted, and meanwhile withdrew from public life, to devote Himself especially to the Twelve and prepare them, for His death, of which He seems to have spoken very often. One of the fragments of His intercourse with them, while slowly-journeying onwards to His own town, has been preserved to us." You have heard," said He, "how the multitudes express their amazement at the mighty power of God shown in the miracles they have seen me perform, as in the case of the cure of the boy, after my descent from the mount. Let their words, in which they have thus acknowledged and magnified my acts as not less than divine, sink into your memories. and strengthen and confirm your faith in me as the Messiah. For I the Son of Man-the Messiah-whose mighty works you have heard extolled so greatly, might easily have set myself at the head of the people, and, led them by supernatural power, as they and their chief men wish, to outward national glory. But I will assuredly be delivcred up and abandoned by these very crowds, and given over to the authorities, because I will not use my power for any but holy and spiritual ends. I will be betrayed into the hands of my enemies, and they will put me to death, but I shall rise again on the third day."

They were too full of their worldly hopes, which still mingled strangely with their vague recognition of their Master as the Sor of God; too unwilling also to think earnestly on a subject so unpleasant and so opposed to their ideas of the Messiah, to understand what He meant by these sad forebodings. He needed only speak the word and the people would follow Him, and He might, by His miraculous power, which it seemed to them could not be used for a nobler end, set up the theocracy, as even John, apparently, had expected He would. Such language seemed part of His dark sayings, with a secret meaning which He would some day explain. They would fain have wishe this explanation, indeed, at once, to calm their minds, but they heatated to ask Him for it. He might, perhaps, if they did so, tell then something still more unpleasant, as He had done lately to Peter, in a similar case. Besides, they did not like to think about what they so much disrelished, and turned from matters which only filed then with gloom to others more in keeping with their wishes and hopes. These offered themselves in the distinction Jesus often seemed to make in His bearing to one or other of their number. Human nature is always the same, and jealousy was as rife in those days as now. However impartially He might treat them, their own characteristics made it impossible that He should be as intimate and confidential lately. He had thought fit to take only a few of them with Him, and with some as with others. In some cases, as in the Transfiguration.

He seemed lately to have put especial honour on Peter, while His friendship, for John was closer and more tender than for any other. All this, however, would have troubled the less favoured ones little but for their almost invincible belief that He would soon proclaim Himself as the Messiah in the Jewish sense, and found a great palitical kingdom. Everything was seen through this preconception, and any marks of preference were taken as indications of future position in the expected revolution. They assumed that, having been chosen from all their countrymen by Jesus as His closest followers, they would have the chief places in the new empire He was to found, but there was abundant room for jealousy in their individual claims to this or that prominent dignity. Accustomed to discuss everything openly. they naturally fell into warm controversy as to the just distribution of the great offices of state among them, when Jesus should be installed as Monarch of the world at Jerneslem. A month of the state of the stat In this dispute, however, their Master took no part. Nor, indeed, did they wish Him to do so, for they had fallen behind, in order that He might not hear them, They were ashamed to have Him know what occupied their thoughts, so little in harmony with His teaching and spirit. But He had noticed it all, though He said nothing for the moment. Meanwhile they once more entered Capernaum. And With Astro how Burn borring on Wall with bering them an more unitarities, under the first and the second bar and bar and the first and The bud the bulle CHAPTER XLVIII. Store of the bull the bull harding Hill daly BEFORETTHE FEAST of built viethile when a it with the in the with recht THERE is something intensely human in the return of Jesus to Capernaum in the face of imminent danger. It had been His home, and He was in all sinless regards a man. He longed to see the old familiar spots once more; the hills behind the town, among which He had so often wandered; the shady woods, and orchards, and vineyards, rich in foliage, or glowing with their ripening fruit in these summer months. He had often looked out from them on the sparkling waters, and, above all, had met among them the few whom He had gathered round Him in His long sojourn as their fellow-citizen. These He would now fain strengthen in their faith, before leaving them for ever.

His entrance into the town was marked by an application to Peter by the local collectors of the Temple tax, for its payment by his Master. Mose's had provided funds for' the erection of the Tabernacle, by the imposition of a tax of half a shekel on each male, payable at the "numbering of the people," and this, since the Babylonish Captivity, had been required yearly. It was equal, nominally, to about one and threepence of our money, but really to at least six mself as the pose to go to ublic life, to hem for his One of the - journeying You have zement at the seen me percent from the owledged and ur memories. siah. For L n have heard head of the nd their chief edly be deliv. en over to the but holy and r enemies, and third day." still mingled as the Sop of so unpleasant, tand what He the word and culous power, end, set up the would. Such ecret meaning have wished but they here d so, tell them to Peter, in a t what they so

ly filled them

s and hopes.

ten seemed to

Human nature

days as now,

characteristics

d confidential

DEUCA Stim

see the ca

arters of the en would be s represent-

10 The e

from Ca

all arrea

of Taber

insignifi

even wh

his errar

kings let or only

2924 Lthi

of course

Hewis

leave the

God." an

might, th

large, bu

a king's s

the Son

God-the

10 But, wl

He was to the Son o

an Israeli

Law. It

had He he

dufy, Tol .

Pitt Wo

" to seem saying to wait till

the first il

stater, whi

me and for

hand secu

more suite

that, thous

from labou

repose on

They re

have a glin

ture of mai

discussion

ov st Tel! m disputing a

no answer

and amuiti

The resu

times as much, and was dumanded from every Israelite of the age of twenty-even the poorest; brower of the first the striperio (al) dia It was mainly from this heavy tax, paid as a sacred duty by every Jew, in whatever country, that the Temple treasury was filled with the millions of silver coins which were so strong a temptation to lawless greed, Crassus, Sabinus, and Pilate, in succession, had laid violent hands on this unmeasured wealth, and the reckless greed of Florus in its plunder was the proximate cause of the last great war. which destroyed both Temple and city. set date here in the the The Shelihim, or "messengers," who collected this tax in Judea. visited each town at fixed times. In foreign countries places were appointed for its collection in every city or district where there were Jews and where were they not?- the chief men of their community in each acting as treasurer, and conveying the amounts in due course to Jerusalem. Three huge chests, carefully guarded in a particular chamber in the Temple, held the yearly receipts, which served, besides providing the beasts for sacrifice, to pay the Rabbis, inspectors of victims, copyists, bakers, judges, and others connected with the Temple service, and numerous women who wove or washed the Temple linen. It supplied, also, the costs of the water supply, and of the repairs of the yast Temple buildings. and al mathematical any senter The collection began in the Holy Land on the 1st of Adar-part of our February and March-the month of the freturning sun," and the next before that of the Passover. By the middle of it the official exchangers in each town had set up their tables, and opened their two chests for the tax of the current and of the past year, for many paid the tax for two years, together. They supplied the old sacred shekel, coined by Simon the Maccabee, for a trifling charge, to all who required it. for only that coin was received by the Temple authorities in homage to Pharisaic and national sentiment. At first everything was left to the good will of the people, but after the 25th, prompt payment was required, and securities, such as an under gar ment or the like, were taken even from the pilgrims coming up to the feast soft white up on of des shall and nevie tou er It was very likely, therefore, that the time of grace had expired before Jesus reached Capernaum so that the collectors apparently respectable citizens-felt themselves justified in Proaching the question to Peter-whether his Teacher did not pay the two drachmas? Perhaps they fancied He was of the irreconcilable school of Judas the Galilman, who would pay no Temple tax so long as the Holy City was polluted by the heathen Roman. His enemies, indeed, very likely had insinuated that this was the case, to bring Him into suspicion with government. Hear

Peter, ever zealous for his Master's honour, and, as usual, impulsive, no sconer, heard the application than he answered affirmatively on his own authority, and forthwith set off to find Jesus and report the matter to Him.

basD=ation ty by every filled with tion to lawn, had laid ss greed of great war. x in Judea, places were there were community due course a particular hich served, is, inspectors ted with the washed the upply, and of 胡尔西部 Adar-part of ing sun," and it the official opened their ear, for many he old sacred charge, to all the Temple ent. At first fter the 25th, an under gar. coming up to the age of

had expired s apparently ing the queswo drachmas? nool of Judas the Holy City ed, very likely into, suspleion hal, impulsive, armatively, on nd report the 10 The exact time for payment had passed while Christ had been away from Capernaum, and the collectors were, doubtless, anxious to gather all arrears, to take with them to Jerusalem at the approaching Feast of Tabernaeles in September. As if to show that not even the most insignificant matter that concerned His disciples escaped His notice. even when not bodily present with them. Peter no sooner appeared than his errand was anticipated by asking him his opinion, whether, when kings levy taxes of tolls, they exacted them from their own children, or only from their subjects? . The busin upper hotor borontach doidw think " replied Peter, "that only the subjects pay." Then, of course," replied Jesus, "the king's children are free." DES DUITES He wished to show that it would have been no failure of duty to leave the tax unpaid. Peter had already owned Him as the "Son of God," and it was for the Temple of God the impost was levied. It might therefore; be just and proper to collect it from the nation at large, but it was not fitting to ask it from Him. "I am a king and a king's son; far more than any Roman or Herodian prince-for I am the Son of God, as thou hast said, and this tax is for my Father-God-the Great King; for His Temple, and thus I should be free." 10 But, while thus maintaining to His apostle His rightful immunity. He was too prudent to urge it in public. He was not recognized as the Son of God outside the little circle of His disciples, but was only an Israelite, like others, to men at large, and, as such, was under the Law? It would have given ground of accusation and misconception had He hesitated to pay what all Jews phid cheerfully as a religious duty. 101 (1994, 1886, 50, 70) bus means and to an out not also over "It would not do for me, nevertheless," continued He, therefore, "to seem to refuse. They would not understand what I have been saying to you, Take your line, and go to the lake; you need not wait till you catch a number of fish to make up the amount ? Take the first that comes to your hook, and you will find in its mouth a stater. which is twice as much as is needed! With it you can ouv for me and for yourself we and more novo anoshie, or the bull to trem The result is not given, but there can be no question that the com-

The result is not given, but there can be no question that the comhand secured its own fulfilment. No lesson could have been given more suited to benefit Peter and his companions. It taught them that, though they were His apostles, they could not claim exemption from labour for their own support, but yet quickened them to a firm repose on His watchful care, which could help them in any extremity. They remained for a short time in Capernaum, and, happily, we have a glimpse of their quict private intercourse; doubtless the picture of multy such occasions. He had gelayed allusion to their hot discussion on the way till the quiet of evening and home. Tell me," said He, turning to one of them, " about what were you disputing among yourselves on the road?" But the question received no answer for all were alike ashamed of their unworthy jealousies and ambitions, and sat humbled and sile: t.

preoccu

the most least arg

them: p Their fu

disputes

Philippi.

what had

could no

the first

They r

Jesus I

ting the Rabbi al

His first

before the

to all the

by doing

find his g

worldly,

rather tha

selfish eas

often told

resolved t

rather tha

unpalatab

than their

also, at ti

though th

gone so fa each, that nounceme

and pressi

nearer suc

tance roun

and of the eyes, was a

overweeni

tions in li

lowliest an

embodimer

looking wi

Calling t

Such la

of all."

"Who

It was an opportunity for impressing on them, once more, the fundamental characteristic of His kingdom. Their daily work, as dis ciples, reminded them continually of their relations to it, and it already engrossed their thoughts, but they still failed to realize its purely spiritual character. The trials waiting them rendered it, thus the more necessary to strengthen and support them beforehand, by correcting their misapprehensions, and elevating their tone. In the Sermon on the Mount they had heard, if they could have understood it, how utterly His kingdom contrasted with all their previous ideas. They had been told, in effect, that moral fitness alone secured entrance to it, and that every external claim; whether the fulfilment of legal duties, or national privilege, or sacred callingwhatever had, hitherto, been supposed to give a title to membership in the old Theocracy, must be abandoned as worthless. The reign of God, now proclaimed, was, in fact, only the homage of the soul, which had prepared itself, like a purified Temple, by humble repentance and holy life, to be a habitation of His Heavenly Father. Man must only receive from Ged: not pretend to give to Him: 30000 100 Doug Citizenship in the new kingdom of the Messiah was possible, only when no thought of claim obtruded. Note that of the the It was thus, in effect, simply a reproduction of the spirit of Jesus Himself that was demanded, for the great characteristic which gave His life its matchless beauty, was His perfect divine humility. His lowly meekness had protected Him at the opening of His ministry, when tempted to self-exaltation: it had subordinated His own will. as by a law of His being, to that of God; it had opened His heart to the poor of His nation, cast out and despised by the religious pride of the day; it had made Him, throughout, the friend of the oppressed, the lowly, and the wretched; it had led Him, of His free choice, to despise all worldly honour, and it was now bearing Him. with a kingly grandeur, to the abasement of the Cross, that He might open to His nation, and to mankind, the way to peace with their Father in Heaven, and found a kingdom of holiness, truth, and love. to ennoble and bless the present, and expand into eternal felicity in the world to come nationale antipolo way will must det of the It was vital, therefore, for His disciples, then, as now, that they should have the same heavenly temper. Without it, they could neither be efficient instruments in spreading His kingdom, nor have any share in it themselves, for it was, itself, the Kingdom-the reign of God, in the soul. The danger of self-elevation had been greatly increased from the moment when Jesus had accepted from them their formal ascription of the Messianic dignity, at Cesarca Philippi. What seductive dreams lay for Galilæan fishermen in their being commissioned by the Messiah, as His confidential friends, and the first dignitaries of His kingdom! They had, indeed, heard Jesus speak of suffering a shameful death, as the immediate result of His proclaiming Himself as the Messiah, but when the mind is already 11.11 11.11.1 TURNEL S 1

s. the funork as dis it, and it realize its ed it, thus, rehand, by could have Il their preitness alone vhether the d. callingmembership The reign of soul, which 'repentance Man must

ostille; only

irit of Jesus which gave mility. His lis ministry, lis own will, His heart to igious pride of the opof His free earing Him, hat He might the with their th, and love; h. felicity in w, that they they could im, nor have n—the reign been greatly in them their cal Phillippi. their being nds, and the heard Jesus result of His id is already preoccupied by its own views, it is incredibly hard to turn it. Even the most discouraging incidents are transformed into supports, or at least argued aside. "Perhaps Jesus had only spoken thus to try them: perhaps it was one of the dark sayings He used so often." Their future dignity in the kingdom had been the topic of constant disputes and discussions, ever since the eventful day at Creasera Philippi. Had they not received spiritual graces and powers? For what had they gone through so much toil and danger? The reward could not be far distant. When it came, which of them should have the first place, and be the Minister of the New Reign?

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

They must be taught how utterly they deceived themselves. Jesus had sat down in the house and called the Twelve before putting the question. As they stood round Him,—for disciples of a Rabbi always stood when their masters sat down to teach them,— His first words scattered the whole unworthy dream of their hearts. "Whoever of you," said He, "it matters not which, seeks to be before the other, and would distinguish himself in my Kingdom, can only do so by cheerfully stooping to rander even the humblest services to all the rest. He must show himself the willing servant of all, by doing, whatever he can to serve the others. He must seek and find his greatness in being the humblest, and, therefore, the servant of all."

Such language was well-nigh incomprehensible to men misled by worldly pride and ambition. They were thinking of themselves rather than of their Master; of receiving rather than rendering; of selfish ease and honour, rather than loving self-sacrifice, which He had often told them was the condition of their discipleship. Do, therefore, resolved to bring them to a better frame, and this by an illustration rather than words. They knew, by experience, that even His most unpalatable and His darkest, words, had a greater fulness of truth than their imperfect insight could realize. They had, doubtless, also, at times, misgivings respecting their dreams of the future, though they could not as yet lay these aside. Some of them had even gone so far as to ask Him the particular dignities He intended for each, that all future strife might be checked by an authoritative announcement.

Calling to Him a little boy of the household; lifting him in His arms, and pressing him fondly to His breast,—as if to show how much nearer such an one was to Him than the Twelve standing at a distance round,—He drew their attention to the child. Love of children and of their childish traits, had always marked Him. A child, in His eyes, was a type of the grace so dear to Him—humility. It raises no overweening claims such as men advance, and accepts all its relations in life as it finds them; it adapts itself unconsciously to the lowliest and most ungenial lot, and finds happiness in it. It is the embodiment of dependence and need; of having nothing, and yet looking with simple trust to a higher than itself.

chrcle, throu

chang from 1

tience.

He w

name,

dignity

differe

the Ho

proach

haught

eves or

them'

shown devotio It was hearted

friendly

continu

ciety, fo

in relig

whethe

you the

of cold

given b God as a

So preciposed to such sou of doing

name; it hung ro

that her

call then will jud

my kinge

man wil

awful the

of life!

should le

thus brin

at any co you to si

"I hay

'Alas

" No

The Twelve noted His act with wonder, not knowing, what it meant. He now proceeded to explain it. "You see this child," said He: "I tell you solemnly, that, unless you abandon your present worldly ideas and ambitious thoughts, and become as simple and humble as it, and as lovingly dependent on God as it is on man, you shall not even enter my Kingdom, far less hold a high place in it. You see how this child has no thought but ( perfect loving trust towards me; how it does not, pretend to give t worth of what it receives, but opens its whole soul to me with arth. innocence. Such sweet humility must be found in him who woul. ccek to be greatest in my New Kingdom. To have the heart of a child is the fixed abiding condition of admission, of accepted service. or of honour." This child is willing to be the least of you all, and to serve you all, and, as I have said, whoever of you is like it in this. is the greatest among you. Your ambition must guide itself by this rule. Your strife shows that you have not yet rightly grasped the true nature of my Kingdom. It has no external dignities of power and rank, for it is a reign of principles, not a worldly dominion. All its members are therefore, brethren; on a footing of perfect equality. Any one may, indeed, distinguish himself beyond others, but not as in the Old Testament Kingdom, or as in that of the Messiah expected by the nation at large, by external honour and dignity. The honours of my Kingdom are won only by spiritual likeness to myself, your oxample and Master. Self-denial, soff-sacrifice; the surrender of person and goods for the sake of the brotherhood; unselfish love-are the only path to the highest place."

He had now answered the question; but the sight of the child kindled another thought of no less moment. "You are looking for great events, and thinking with weak -pride, of your claims as my followers, and may be tempted to slight and despise any one as spiritless, and beneath you, who is humble and unassuming, like this child on my knee. But let me tell you, that any one who honours and receives to his heart even a single child-like soul which delights in meekness and humility, as learned from me, has done, the same in spirit, and will receive a like reward, as if he had received me myself, and done me personal honour. And since all that is done to me from an honest heart, is homage done to my Father who sent me, He Himself will show His approval, for even the humblest that lives, if he be my disciple, is great and honoured before Him."

The use of the words "in my name" had, meanwhile, recalled an incident of their recent journey to John, "the Son of Thunder." The Twelve had met, in their way, one casting out devils in the name of Jesus, though he was not one of their company, and instead of "receiving" him, had charged him to desist, because he was not of their own number. John now reported the matter, as if struck by the contrast between his own conduct and the counsel just given. "Forbid him not," replied Jesus,—"One who, though not of my g what lt

nat. unless

ughts, and

ent on God

c less hold

ht but ch

who would

heart of a

ted service,

all, and to

e it in this,

self by this

grasped the s of power

inion. All

et equality.

but not as

ah expected

The honours

nyself, your ender of per-

ove-are the

ne child kining for great s my follow-

his child on delights in the same in ved me my.

s done to me

sent me, He

that lives, if recalled an

f Thunder."

in the name

d instead of

was not of

if struck by just given.

h not of my

to give 1

vith artl.

circle, has yet attained so strong a faith in me that he works miracles through my name, needs not be feared as likely, by any sudden change, to speak against me." The want of forbearance had sprung from the want of humility, for pride is the special source of impatience. "He who is not against us," continued Jesus, "is for us." He whom John had treated so harshly had, at least, acted in His name, though, perhaps, with a very imperfect conception of His true dignity, or of the scope and greatness of His work. But he was very different from the blasphemers who did not shrink from speaking of the Holy Spirit as a spirit of evil. Moreover, the nearer the end approached, the more needful it was to root out any signs of selfish or haughty feelings in the Twelve, and to lead them to look with kindly eyes on even a partial, if friendly relationship to Him. He wished them to realize that worthiness to rank in the New Society was shown by the goodwill, and trustful, child-like spirit, which led to devotion to Him, rather than by the measure of knowledge evinced. It was of great moment, at this time, to wake kindly and broadhearted feelings towards any, who, while acting apart, were yet friendly. Were He once gone, it would be left to His disciples to continue His work, and it would depend upon them whether the Society, founded by Him, would be really the beginning of a new epoch in religion, or only a piece of new cloth sewed on an old garment; whether it would be a Jewish sect or a faith for mankind. 'No one is to be lightly esteemed," continued Jesus, "who shows. you the slightest mark of goodwill or friendship, were it only a drink of cold water, which all give so readily in these sultry lands-when given because you are my disciples. Even this will be rewarded by God as an act worthy His favour. Nor are you only thus honoured. So precious to Me is the humble child-like spirit which you are disposed to despise, that if any one, by words or deeds, cause even one such soul who believes, to turn away from me; as you were in danger of doing when you forbade the stranger to cast out devils in my name, it would be better for him that a huge ass-mill-stone were hung round his neck and he drowned in the depths of the lake. that he might be saved from so great a sin.

"Alas for the world-wide sorrow which the sins of many who will call themselves mine will cause, by keeping men from me! They will judge of me by these unworthy followers, and keep aloof from my kingdom. It cannot, indeed, be otherwise, for the evil that is in man will make even the name of religion a scandal. But how awful the judgment that awaits him who leads another from the way of life!

"I have said that it would be better for a man to die than that he should lead another intray. So, whatever may lead you to sin, and thus bring scandal on my name, had much better be put from you, at any cost. If anything, therefore, however dear to you, incites you to sin, or keeps you from a godly life, thrust it from you. If the most precious members of the body—a foot or a hand—be cut off, to prevent death of the whole; how much rather, at any sacrifice, whatever sins of thought or act, which, by misleading others, would cause us to lose eternal life, and be cast into hell-fire, where their worm never dies, and the fire is not quenched!

dered? he reje

that ev Heaver sorely (

my dis

ment of envy, se

thus in:

yoursel

get him

of diffe

my Nev

refusing good, no less of J

persuasi

with yo had not porting

testimon

he mak

listen an

the Asse

private :

to hear

second v

forgivene

I require humility,

"You

rivate an

in the sc

Israel—th

guilty one

tion, and

sentatives

after all,

further relationsh

from the

"The has injur

"Every one cast into the fire, which the prophet thus calls unquenchable-every one, that is, who gives himself up to sin, shall certainly suffer the wrath of God, and be salted with fire, as the victims on the altar are salted with salt. But every one whose humble and steadfast faith in me has shown him to be, as it were, a pure and worthy sacrifice, fit to be laid on the altar of God, will, on his entrance into the heavenly kingdom of the Messiah, be salted, not with fire, but with the gift of higher grace, that he may endure unto life Salt is of value to prevent corruption, and I have, before eternal, now, called you 'the sait of the earth;' because, if you are my true disciples, you will arrest the corruption that prevails among men, and make the community sound. How dreadful, however, if you, the salt, lose your savour. How will you regain it? If you turn to evil, and, through sloth or faint-heartedness, be untrue to your calling, how can your needful energy and efficiency be restored? You wish to be accepted at last as pure and worthy offerings to God. and to receive the gift of heavenly wisdom, which is everlasting life. To attain it take care to guard the salt of true wisdom which has • been already given you—the grace bestowed on you to be my disciples. Remember, moreover, that salt is the symbol of peace; he at peace among yourselves, and do not dispute and argue as you have been doing, lest you lose the power and fruits of my teaching." Jesus had for the time digressed from His original subject-the humble and child-like among His followers-but now returned to it. "Respecting those little ones of whom I was speaking-lowly. self-distrustful; as weak, yet, it may be, in faith, as little children in strength-I would further say: Take heed that ye do not slight or contemn any one of them, for I tell you so greatly honoured and so dear are they in the sight of God, that the humblest of them. for their very humility, are placed by Him under the loving care of the highest angels, who stand before Him, and see His face continually. Glorious though all angels be, only such exalted spirits the princes of heaven, -are thought worthy by God to minister to them and protect them.

"To slight or despise even one such would, indeed, be to undo, so far, the very end for which I have come as the Messiah. You may, by doing so, turn him away from me, and so cause his soul to be lost. Much rather, if you meet with an humble spirit, still weak in the faith, which has gone astray, should you do your utmost to bring it back. For what shepherd feeding, it may be, a hundred sheep, in our upland pastures, if one of them stray, does not leave the ninety and nine, and set off into the hills to seek for the one that has wan-

d-be cht.

sacrifice.

ers, would

here their

s calls un-

sin, shall

as the vic-

be humble

a pure and on his en-

d. not with

e unto life

ave, before

on are my

ails among

however, if it? If you

untrue to be restored?

ngs to God.

lasting life.

which has

be my dis-

beace; be at

is you have

ching. "LURI

ubject-the

turned to it.

ing-lowly,

children in ot slight or

uned and so

m, for their

f the highest

Glorious

es of heaven and protect

to undo, so

You may,

ul to be lost.

weak in the

t to bring it

red sheep, in

e the ninety

lat has wan-

dcred? And if he be so happy as to find it, I tell you, beyond doubt, he rejoices more over the one thus saved than over the ninety and nine that had not strayed. In the same way as it grieves the shepherd that even one of his sheep should be lost, so it grieves my Father in Heaven that one of these feeble, simple souls should perish, and it sorely displeases Him if it perish by the neglect or fault of any of my disciples.

"Let me pass to a distinct, yet related subject—the proper treatment of a brother in the faith who does you any wrong, by anger, envy, selfishness, or in any other way. Do not wait till he who has thus injured you comes to you to make amends, but go to him by yourself, and tell him his fault in private; that, if possible, you may get him to own it between you and him alone, and thus the scandal of difference between disciples spread no farther, and he be won for my New Kingdom, from which he would have been shut out, if, by refusing to be reconciled, he had shown no repentance. Seek his good, not your own justification merely: however wronged, think less of yourself than of his eternal salvation.

"If, however, he will not listen to your kindly remonstrance and persuasion, go a second time to him, taking two or three witnesses with you, as Moses directed in other cases; if, perchance, though he had not been moved by your single appeal, that of two or three supporting you, may lead him to see and acknowledge his fault. Their testimony, besides, will prevent his denial of his confession, should he make one, and afterwards repudiate it; while, if he refuse to listen and to admit his fault, and the matter must be brought before the Assembly, it will support and confirm at once the fact of your private visit for attempted reconciliation, and his stubborn refusal to hear even the two or three brethren you took with you on the second visit.

"The Rabbis enjoin that the offender shall go to him whom he has injured, and own his fault, and that if he cannot thus procure forgiveness, he shall take others with him and seek to obtain it; but I require that he who is wronged do this, that he may show his humility, and his patient love for a guilty brother.

"You know, moreover, how a stubborn offender, who refuses rivate amends, is at last proclaimed as such, in the Synagogue and in the schools. In my New Society, the congregation of the new Israel—the Kahal, or assembly of my followers, which will, hereafter, be called the Church, is to make a third final attempt to win the guilty one to repentance. You are to tell the facts to the 'congregation,' and ask their godly offices, and they, through appointed representatives, will then seek to bring him to a right frame of mind. If, after all, he refuse to hear even the congregation, you are freed from further responsibility, and are absolved from all further religious relationship to him, as you have hitherto thought yourselves to be from the heathen, and from men of vicious life, such as the publi-

370

17(1)

with his wife and children, and all that he had, in payment of the cans. Not that you are to despise him, or refuse him; the common. offices of humanity, as your countrymen do to such classes, for you, are still to love and seek to win him back, even till the very last as your Heavenly Father does with the anthankful and evil anthing but "Let every offender think how solemn his position will be if thus obdurate before the congregation. Thave already given Peter-as the key-bearer of my spiritual Temple-the New Society, I have founded-power to forbid and allow to enact and define, what is needed for its future government and discipline, and have told you. that what he ordains so far as it is in harmony with the mind of the Spirit of God, will be confirmed by me in heaven, as if I were still with you on earth. This power I now extend to you all, my twelve faithful followers, and I give you, as a body, the same assure ance of my confirmation of what you appoint for the government of my Society. Peter is, thus, only the first among equals. If the remedy I have pointed out be insufficient, as my Society extends, to meet such offences, I leave it to you to devise and apply what other, means may seem needed as the occasion demands, And that you may feel how formally and solemnly I now, before my departure, depute this power to you. I tell you, further, that if two of you shall. agree on any matter, thus affecting the salvation of souls by the right, discipline of my Society, or for other good ends, and shall ask my Father in Heaven to grant your desire, He will do so. For where two or three of you are gathered together in my name. I am in their midet, so that you need not doubt my promise that what even so few agree to ask my Father, in matters pertaining to my kingdom, will be granted." And the body to their Master in reverent silence, but now the ever self-asserting Peter, still intensely Jewish in feeling, interrupted Him by a question conceived in the narrow and formal, spirit of Rr bbinism. Sold all discover the narrow and formal, "Lord." said he, " our teachers, tell us that if a person do us wrong we are to forgive him, a first second, and third time, but not a fourth." What sayest Thou? Would seven times be enough?"

"I am far from limiting iny requirement to seven times," replied Jesus "So far from that, if you be of a truly humble and child-like spirit, as you ought, you will forgive to seventy times seven that is, any number of times." Let me show you my thoughts on this point by a parable "integrated an integration of the seven of the seven integration of the seven integration

"The subjects of my kingdom are like the servants of a certain ruler, with whom their lord would make a reckoning. So he called, before him his revenue collectors—the gatherers of his taxes and tolls, and demanded a settlement from them. Among others, one was brought to him who owed him ten thousand talents, that, is, thirty, millions of shekels—a sum it was hopeless for him to think of verpaying. When the king heard how much he owed, hu cried out that, 'he would be paid,' and commanded him to be sold as a slave. with his debt. him, "L his lord unbound could no one of

than' the

and laid

owe.' those of will pay should done, we of the po Then th wicked cause yo Should n pity on y to the to fit. till be . 81 So. 1 to Him. lead vou any num do not f great day The tr through personal lowliness. no higher shown to any of Hi sive hone dom of G instance 4 to the le Neither n all were to little band holiestijo and enco rest, and

areanud;

THE LIFE OF CHRIST: TRIAND TO DALL AN

iw and dia

ry last, as

be if thus

Peter-as

ty, I have

e, what is told you

e mind of

if I were

ou all, my

une assurt

ernment of

s. m.If. the

extends, to what other

d that you

arture, de-

you shall

y the right

For where am in their

at even so

kingdom,

ilence, but,

feeling, in-

and formal

son do us

ne, but not pugh?" und

es," replied

d child-like

in that is,

h this point

fa certain

o he called

es and tolls,

s, one was at is thirty

hink of ren

cried ort

as a slave.

with his wife and children, and all that he had, in payment of the debt. On hearing this, the aervant fell down before him, beseeching him. 'Lordy have patience with me, and I will pay the all.' At this his lord was moved with compassion, and having ordered him to be unbound, not only gave him time, as he had asked, but, knowing he could never pay, forgave him the debt altogether.

"This servant, however, thus freely forgiven, went out and found. one of his fellow-servants who owed him a hundred denarii-less than the seven hundreth-thousandth of what he had himself owedand laid hold of him by the throat, saying flercely, " Pay what you owe.' The debtor thereupon fell down at his feet, as he ...ad fallen at those of his lord, and besought him, Have patience with me, and I will pay thee. "But he had no pity, and cast him into prison, till he should pay the debt. His fellow-servants, seeing what was being done! were troubled at such hard-heartedness, and at the ill-treatment of the poor man, and came and told their lord all that had happened. Then the lord, having called the offender, said to him, 'O thou wicked servant. I forgave you all the great debt you owed me, because you asked me, though you sought only time, not forgiveness. Should not you, also, have had pity on your fellow-servant, as I had pity on you? And his lord was indignant, and delivered him over to the torturers, to deal with him in the prison house as they thought ft till he should pay all that was due to him. White yas ito onligiogi er So, the forgiveness God has granted you, of your great debt to Him, which you could never pay-the guilt of your sins-must lead you from your heart to forgive your brother man, not seven, but any number of times, the far smaller debt he may owe you; for if you do not forgive him, the wrath of God will burn upon you at the great day, and you will be cast into everlasting punishment." The transcendent loftingss of Christ's spiritual nature shines out through this whole episode. In His perfect humility He makes no personal claims. As, on every occasion, He declares simplicity and lowliness. like that of childhood, the mark of true discipleship; asks no higher or more signal acknowledgment, as a man, than was to be shown to all others; and ranks the friendly and kind treatment of any of His followers as if done to Himself. He demands no exclusive honour, but, on the contrary, every childlike spirit in the king dom of God has in His sight a priceless value, however, slight the instance by which its character was shown. The good deed done to the least of His people, is considered as personal to Himself. Neither now, nor at any time, does He bear Himself as one to whom all were to bow as servants: He takes His place in the midst of the little band round Him, as one who shares with them, the highest and holiest love Within this circle we ever find Him strengthening and encouraging each to surrender himself for the good of the rest, and to clicer and honour especially, the humblest, the least enteened, the most unpresentious; or it may be, the more workers hat the reputed be vaid, and commanded him to be sold as a slate.

fernsa

Holy

asked.

oecom

port F

nation Messia

were to

Galilee

the peo

even y

very nu

wind, e

to keep

Himsel

Jerusal

mit Yo

said Jes

my doin

because

reason

but the

siah-o

that the

Law an

ruption

spiritual

me to go

lighest

to nothin

The o caravan.

would b

the time

licity an

those in

His wor

He need

the Twel

ater, an losing v

later, He felt towa

He saw

Served,2

who could not push themselves into notice. "Dieck and lowly in heart, He was no less of an infinite pity. The New Society, taught by His example and words, learned that they were to reproduce the spirit of little children in that hitherto unimagined grandeur of humility which almost rejoices to suffer because it gives an opportinity to forgive to sist of all district fait and platter astist motion soff entering and the prophet, and third in the balance of the villent of the second the second and a fraction of the in the OFIAPTER XLIX of the bill of the state of the The seventh month, Tisri, part of our September and October-"the month of the full streams," and the autumnal equinor, had now come. Nisan, "the flower month," known of old as Abib, "the earing month," had seen the Passover pass without the presence of Jesus. Itiar. " the beautiful month." with its blossoming trees: Siwan. " the bright;" Tammuz; Ab, "the fruit month;" and Elul, "the month of wine:" had gone by in the journey to Tyre and Sidon, and to Clesarea. Philippi." Jesus had now been well-high half a year little better than an ontlawed fugitive, hiding, in unsuspected districts, from His (enemies. The fifteenth day of Tisri was the first of the great harvest feast of the year-that of Tabernacles a time all the more joyful from its coming only four days after the Day of Atonement-the close of the Jewish Lent. Galilee was no longer open to Him, and the Kingdom was yet to be proclaimed in Jerusalem, the haughty city of the Temple, and of David. He knew that to go there would be. sooner or later, to die; but, with this clearly before Him, He calmly resolved, at the summons of duty, to transfer the sphere of His activity from the remote and secluded security of the morth to the headquarters of the Rabbis and priests. He had come into the world to be the Lamb of God, bringing salvation to His people and mankind by the proclamation of the New Kingdom, sealed with Hist blood: and Jerusalem alone, the seat of the dispensation He came to supersede, was the fitting scene for inaugurating the economy that was to take Its place. Whit and hits of all the owner of theme <sup>11</sup>He was still in Capernaum when the great caravan of pilgrims began to pass to the feast. His relations, who, as yet, had declared neither for nor against Him, had apparently, come over from Nazareth to get Him to go up to Jerusalem with them. They could not have felt any hostility to One whose holy life had passed under their cycs, but, like the nation at large, they clung to what they had always been taught by the Rabbis, that the Messiah was to restore Israel to national glory, and to transfer the sceptre of universal power from Rome to Jerusalem. In their worldly wisdom they could not understandHim. It seemed to them unwise that He should stay in a corner of the land, if He wished to establish the kingdom of the Mesinh. The Rabbis, as He knew, mught that it was to be ast up in nd lowly in eiety, taught Froduce the grandeur of s an oppor-THE PHILIPPINE in theatold Winto Division Modelination national bar Towart' hugh d Octobernoz, had now the euring ice of Jesus. Siwan. "the the month of d to Clesarea e better than om His lenereat harvest more joyful ent-the close Him, and the re would be, n. He calmly of His activto the headthe world to and mankind h His blood; ame to superv that was to why set the press pilgrims behad declared r from Nazahey could not d under their ey had always tore Israel to power from ald not underuld stay in a n of the Mesbe act up in fernsalem and it was clear that it could be extended best from the Holy City as a centre. Why did He not go up with them now, they asked to the feast, that all who were friendly to Him or who might become so, might see His miracles, and thus be constrained to support Him? "Nobody," they urged, 5 who aimed at being a great national leader, as they fancied He did, by His claiming to be the Messiah, could hope for success if He wrought all the "signs" which were to rally the people round Him, in an out-of-the-way place like Galilee. He had not been at the last Passover, or at Pentecost, when the people were gathered in the Holy City from all the land, and, indeed, from all the world; but He might, perhaps, repair this error even yet, if He went up now, and showed His power before the assembled myriads of Israel If they accepted Him as Messiah their very numbers would sweep away the heathen like chaff before the wind, especially when supported by miraculous help, It was unwise to keep back in this obscure and hidden district: He should show Himself openly to the Jewish world, which He could only do in Bergisalen had hanne berintine follivie the Det Bre und Sideh and minne "" You think the present the fit moment for carrying out my plans." said Jesus off You err. It is not yet the divinely appointed time for my doing this. "You may go up openly before all Israel, at any time," because you and they are at one in not receiving me. They have no reason to hate you, nor have the priests and Rabbis, their leaders; but they hate me, because I, the Light of the world-the true Messiah on whom all should believe, am a standing protest against them. that they sin in hating and persecuting me, as a transgressor of the Law and a blasphomer, because I have witnessed against their corruption and hypocrisy. They wish a political Messiah I seek only spiritual ends." Go up, yourselves. "The present time does not suit rie to go with you." Their hope that He would lift the family to the ighest honour, by heading a national Messianic movement, had come to nothing white bollen another A in the walk to dividuance white act, fills The object of His delay was to avoid going with the great Galilæan caravan, which entered the Holy City with public rejoicings. He would be recognized at once, and the multitude, in the excitement of the time might again try to force Him into political action. Publicity and popular enthusiasm would have drawn the attention of those in power, and this He at present earnestly wished to avoid. His work was not to be rashly broken off by any imprudent act, for He needed all the opportunities that remained, to devote Himself to the Twelve, and to His other followers. He could go up a few days ater, and thus avoid the caravan. The feast lasted seven days. closing with the eighth as the greatest, and thus, even if He started later, He could mingle with the multitudes and find out how men felt towards Him and His work, and proclaim the New Kingdom as He saw fit." The danger would be averted, and His great end better served." It was more in keeping with His spirit to avoid all appearance of courting popularity, and to deliver His great message of love in stillness, leaving its reception to its own charms, and to the lowly hum?ity, self-denial, and gentleness, with which it was delivered.

Waiting, therefore, for some days, till things were quict, He started with the Twelve, and a number of disciples, for Jerusalem, Crossing Esdraelon, now stripped of its harvest, Engannim, the "fountain of gardens," saw Him once more on Samaritan soil. The caravans had perhaps gone over the Jordan, to travel down its castern bank, and thus avoid the pollution of the direct route through hated Samaria.

He had been kindly received in the alien district on His former passage through it, northwards, but He was now going towards Jerusalem instead of leaving it, and this was enough to rouse the bitterness of the Samaritans. As was His custom, He had sent on messengers before Him to secure hospitality for the night, but it was at once refused. John and James-"the Sons of Thunder"-who had perhaps been the messengers, were especially indignant, and showed how little they had profited by the lessons of meekness they had so long been receiving. With the harsh Jewish feeling which regarded every one except a Jew as accursed, and hateful to God. and sought to establish the New Kingdom, not by mildness and love, but by force, they would fain have had fire called down from heaven a to consume the unfriendly village. They had likely spoken of Jesus as the Messiah, or, perhaps, His fame as such, may have already crossed the border. But the Samaritans expected from the Messiah that He would restore the Temple on Mount Gerizim, and instead of that, Jesus was going up to a feast in Jerusalem. John and James, however, could make no allowance. Elias had once called fire from heaven in his own honour: how much more should men perish who had rejected the Messiah. The teaching of Jesus had not as yet soft." ened the fierce Jewish spirit of the Twelve. Fanatical bitterness had struck its roots into their deepest nature. How utterly were they o still wanting in patience towards the erring, and filled only with the thought of wrath and destruction! They had not yet realized that the kingdom of Jesus is one of faith alone: that it cannot be spread by compulsion and violence, but must spring from humility and love; that it must rest on free and honest conviction, and can grow strong and abiding only when a child-like spirit obeys and advances it. 941001

Deeply troubled, and no less offended, Jesus turned towards the fierce zealots, and rebuked their foolish and cruel harshness. They had heard Him say that He came to serve, not to reign; to suffer for others, not to inflict suffering on any; and He had but lately told them, once and again, how He was about to give Himself up to death for the good of the world. But though their ears had heard, and their conscience approved, their hearts had not willingly accepted the intimation, and hence they were ever exposed to fall back into Jewish fanaticism. Rebuking them sternly, He taught them a needed lesson, by merely passing to another village. It way Jesus, 1 God, an lingerin explicit when fr more fr cost bef follow H treated what hi told him He had air, and

Historic The se maritans facts. privation now that Him had mind to t authority The most were reau ing of th to bury h whose wa request to could not shake you God?" bas It was r their first to strictly fective sy now, how leaders of dices; the above all. full grand should be be no poss to proclain around H labours of larger num ge of love

the lowly:

He started

n, Cross-

fountain

e caravans

bank, and in

Samaria.

lis former

g towards rouse the ad sent on

but it was

der"-who

gnant, and

ling which

ful to God,

s and love,

com heaven

en of Jesus

we already

the Messiah

a instead of

and James

ed fire from perish who

as vet soft.

y were they

nly with the realized that ot be spread

ty and love; grow strong nces it. 2010 towards the ness. They

to suffer for t lately told

mself up to

s had heard, gly accepted

all back into em a needed

10.800138-01 di

isdauth husful

kness they ivered.

It was hard for the disciples to realize that, to be followers of Jesus, they must surrender themselves unconditionally to the will of God, and devote themselves to the work of the Kingdom, without a lingering tie to the world they had left. The circumstances demanded explicit statements of what discipleship thus involved, and hence, when fresh applicants for the honour presented themselves, Jesus was more frank and earnest, if possible, than ever before, in setting the cost before them. A Samaritan had come forward asking leave to follow Him; as if to show that all were not like the villagers who had treated Him so unkindly. It may be he had very imperfect ideas of what his wish implied, but Jesus did not leave him in doubt. He told him all His own position, and all that awaited His disciples: that He had forsaken house and home for ever, and that the birds of the air, and the beasts of the field, had a lot to be envied compared with His.

The seeming harshness of His replies to two others, perhaps Samaritans, who also asked leave to follow Him, is explained by these facts. From the first He had held out no rewards, but predicted only privation and suffering to His disciples, but these were closer at hand now than they had been when He called the Twelve. To follow Him had come to mean, literally, to leave all, and to make up one's mind to the worst. He was a mark for the flercest hatred of those in authority, and His circle could not escape suffering with their Master. The most utter, unqualified devotion, the purest spirit of self-sacrifice, were required. ...... Let the dead; those who will not receive the preaching of the Kingdom, bury their dead," said He, to one who wished to bury his father, M. Surrender yourself utterly to God." Another, whose want of the supreme resolution demanded, showed itself in a request to be allowed to bid farewell to his friends, was told that it could not be. If The prayers, the tears of your circle at home, might shake your decision to consecrate yourself wholly to the kingdom of Godi' bevilser ser tog bee

It was now many months since the sending out of the Twelve on their first missionary journey. It had been necessary to confine them to strictly Jewish ground, to avoid offence, and from their own defective sympathy with other populations. Both difficulties were new, however, in part, removed: the openly hostile attitude of the leaders of the nation made it unnecessary to consider their prejudices; the Apostles had, in some degree, gained broader charity, and, above all, the near approach of the end made it desirable that the full grandeur of the New Kingdom, as intended for all men alke, should be clearly shown hefore its founder's death, that there might be no possible misconception afterwards. Jesus had always yearned to proclaim the words of life to the different races whom He saw around Him. A boundless field opened itself for the missionary labours of any number of disciples, and He now had round Him a larger number than before, whom He could thus send out.

termined: therefore, to send out no fewer than seventy disciples: in the Jewish opinion, the number of the nations of the world. The lesson could not be doubtful. It was a significant announcement that, for the first time in the history of man, a universal religion was being proclaimed, and of entitie shall fills ferson adramad day wolfens of Samaria, through which He was passing, had, naturally, the first claim on the new enterprise, and that all the more from the proof of its need of spiritual light, furnished by the inhospitali y shown to Him who was bringing that light to its borders, sadely do which anothe The Seventy, separated into pairs, were detailed to carry the message of peace to all the habitations of the race they had formerly, as Jews, so hated. They had grown up from childhood in the narrowest Pharisaic spirit, and were still, in some measure, under its spelle The Rabbis did not permit any close intercourse of Jews with head then or Samaritans; they were forbidden to enter their houses, or return their greetings, and, still more, to join them in a common meal But the grand maxims of charity and love which Jesus had so often taught, were now to be put in practice. Jewish exclusiveness was to be done away for ever, by the proclamation of a SAVIOUR or MANKIND: His messengers, therefore, while losing no time on the wey by long and formal salutations, were to bear themselves with loving trust even among hostile populations, taking neither purse, nor wallet, and wearing only the sandals of the poor-to show their lowly bearing, and humble personal claims. The instructions given for merly to the Twelve, were, in fact, repeated; instructions then as amazing as if Hindoo Brahmins of to-day were sent forth with orders to care nothing for caste, and associate freely, and even eat, with ab horred Pariahs and Sudras. I The Seventy were to join, without hesitation or reserve, in the household life of the hated Samaritans, and eat with them at their tables No other condition of spiritual brotherhood was to be required than that of a believing reception of the salvation through Jesus. I harmon that odw sno view out fina Only one incident of the journey of Jesus Himself is recorded, but it is wondrously significant. His repulse at the border village had changed His route, for now, instead of going straight south, He turned eastwards, and followed the road that runs between Samaria and Galilee, down the ravines, to the fertile meadows of Bethshean or Scythopolis, where a ford or bridge led over the Jordan. The route stretched thence, southwards, to Jericholadyalitatest add .Tulls

The calm rebuke of John and James for their anger and revenge ful spirit, and the return of good for evil in the sending forth the Seventy to preach the Kingdom throughout the Samaritan region, had shown that the rudeness He had received had not ruffled His spirit. He was now to add another proof of His serene and lov g nature. As they approached a border village, a dismall spectacle was presented. Ten men, hideous with leprosy, ranged themselves at distance from the road, as similar sufferers still do, before their huts at no leper accosted broken d even Jew lem and cures. He than they clean, un that migh which st where---or heads. itself, gon more or covered w smitten with their waiting to vourselve for no one moved off himself to rusalem fo the least e cure, to re deliveranc concentral itan. show the feet of him. 110 11 W nine? Th Samuritan Arise, go had receiv The Fea

every Jew

Tisri to the latter "the tent-life of

of thanks f and vineys of olive, 1

houses, on carried in

of palm wo

feast days

lisciples: in vorld. The nouncement religion was our anglanging lly, the first the proof of) y shown to clean, marging my the mes formerly, as he narrowest der its spell! ws with heair houses, or mmon meal. had so often siveness was SAVIOUR OF time on the mselves with er purse, nor w their lowly ns given for tions then as h with orders eat, with abwithout hesnaritans, and of spiritual reception of to ou'l' 'l'ina recorded, but r village had ht south, He veen Samaria of Bethshean Jordan. . The atter " the stro and revenge

ing forth the ritan region, ot ruffled His he and lov g nal spectacle d themselves before their huts at the Zion Gate at Jerusalem. IIIt was a law in Samaria that no leper could enter a town, and hence the unfortunate creatures accosted Jesus while He was still outside the village. Misery had broken down all prejudice of race or faith, and had brought together even Jew and Samaritan, as it still does in the leper haunts of Jerusalem and Nablous and The ten had heard of Jesus, and the wonderful cures. He had performed on such as they, and no sooner saw Him than they broke out with the common cry-" Tamél Tamél Unclean. unclean! Jesus. Master, have mercy on us." It was a sight that might have touched any heart, for it must have been like that which still repeats itself to passers by at the leper quarters elsewhere a crowd of baggins without evebrows, or hair on their faces or heads, the nails of their hands and feet, and even a hand or a foot itself, gone from some; the nose, the eyes, the tongue, the palate, more or less wanting in others. As they stood afar off, their lips covered with their abbas, like mourners for the dead; for they were smitten with a living death, which yout them off from intercourse with their fellows; the pity of Jesus was excited, and without even waiting to come near, sent hope to them in the words, "Go, show vourselves to the priests." They knew what the command meant, for no one who was not cleansed could approach a priest, and as they moved off, the disease left them. The Samaritan would have to show himself to a Samaritan priest; the nine Jews needed to go up to Je rusalem for an official certificate of health, at the Temple; but it wa the least either the one or the others could do, when they felt their cure, to return, if only for a moment, to thank their benefactor for a deliverance from worse than death. But the nine Jews were too much concentrated on themselves to think of this. Only one, the Samaritan, showed natural gratitude, and came back and threw himself at the feet of Jesus, in humble acknowledgment of the goodness shown nine? The only one who has returned to give glory to God is this Samaritan, whom: Jews call a heathen, and an alien from Israel. Arise, go thy way, thy faith hath made the whole." The Twelve had received another lesson of universal charity, about all, lagrande

The Feast of Tabernacles was one of the three great feasts which every Jew was required to attend. It was held from the fifteenth of Tisri to the twenty-second, the first and last days being Sabbaths—the latter "the great day of the feast." It commemorated, in part, the tent-life of Israel in the wilderness, but was also, still more, a feast of thanks for the harvest, which was now ended even in the orchards and vineyards. Every one lived in booths of living twigs, branches of olive, myrtle, fir, and the like,—raised in the open courts of houses, on roofs, and in the streets and open places of the city. All carried in the left hand a citron, and in the right the lulab—a branch of palm woven round with willow and myrtle. On each of the seven feast days the priests went out with music and the choir of Levites.

3127.0.04 amidst the shouts of vast multitudes, to draw water in a golden ves. sel, from the spring of Siloah; to be poured out at the time of the morning offering as a libation, on the west side of the great altar. amidst great joy, singing and dancing, such as was not all the year besides. On the evening of the first day a grand illumination, from huge candelabra which shed light far and near over the city, began in the Court of the Women, and torch dances of men were kept up, in the court, with music and songs, till the Temple gates closed, particular The Jewish authorities kept looking for Jesus, for they had counted on His attending the great national holiday, and thus coming within their reach, but, to their disappointment, He appeared not to be in Jerusalem. So their officers reported. His absence had, indeed, been noted by the multitude, and everywhere He was the subject of conversation and discussion. The Rabbis and higher Temple dignitaries had shown themselves so hostile to Him that no one dared to mention His name except in whispers, for fear of excommunication, but He was more or less the one engrossing topic of the bazaars and the booths of the feast. Opinions were divided. Some, who judged for themselves, maintained that He was a good man, and that it would be well for all to follow what He taught: others, and they, no doubt the great majority, who took their opinions from their religious leaders, hotly and loudly denounced Him as unsafe and dangerous. a breaker of the Sabbath; for had He not, on His last visit, healed a blind man on the holy day?

Meanwhile, when the feast was at its height, Jesus suddonly made His appearance in the Temple porch, where the Rabbis taught, and calmly taking His seat, began to teach the crowd that soon gathered round Him. It is not told us when He had arrived, or whether He lived for the week, like the crowds, in a succah or booth of His own, or of a friend: or whether He carried the lulab and citron, as others did, round the great altar, or attended only to the graver matters of His New Kingdom. We only know that He showed Himself openly in the city and in the Temple courts, under the very eyes of His enemies. Loyalty to His work had demanded His delay in coming, for His life was still needed to proclaim the New Kingdom in Jerusalem as well as in Galilee, if it were permitted Him. He had lived mostly in the latter, but Jerusalem was the religious centre of the nation, and all that happened, or was spoken publicly during one of the great feasts, would be wafted, like seeds, to every land, As a Jew, moreover. He had a tender love for the City of David and of a still greater, His Heavenly Father a spot dear then, as new, beyond expression, to every Israelite. Before it was for ever too late. He would fain bring its children to listen to the things of their peace, which the alone could tell them.

The Jewish authorities were ustounded; and hardly knew what conize to take. Coming, themselves, to listen to the fearless intrude; they were still more amazed at what they heard. They could now understa who had never sp great a p Ilis disec were wai words! I ness, con merely quickenit its nature it, as its self, and i His addre Himself, e bursts, no péace resta most amaz consciousu said was o

But with nity, the fu intlinately honoured e of the Rabi ture; He I with the ke scope and the simples Law and th The auth could have Where coul a great Ra Teacher. God," and i Him as one, knew the eff common ma a Rabbi, po sciences, the Had they perhaps, ha rying to exc s it was cle eputation f understand how it had been said of Him, that He bore Himself as one who had authority direct from, God; and not like the Rabbis, who never spoke without quoting an authority; and how He had made so great a popular impression. Art and study of effect had no place in His discourses; for the copiousness and finish of a mere rhetorician were wanting. His resistless power lay as much in Himself as in His words! His calm diguity, and His look of mingled purity and tenderness, confirming all He said, as by a holy sanction. He did not merely treat of general religious and moral truths, but spoke of ouickening facts and realities. The advent of the Kingdom of God. its nature, and its glorious future, but above all, His own position in. it as its Head and King, as He in whom the Father revealed Himself, and in whom men were to find salvation, were the substance of His addresses They were, in fact, essentially a testimony respecting Himself, and a self-revelation. There were no sudden and violent bursts, no brilliant flashes, but an atmosphere of more than earthly peace rested over both speaker and words, from first to last. The most amazing claims were uttered, not only without a trace of selfconsciousness, but with the lowliest humility. It seemed as if all He said was only what became Him,

But with all His humility, and in addition to His transcendent dignity, the fulness of His knowledge was no less remarkable. He was intinately familiar with all the sacred books, and even with the henoured extra canonical writings. He met and confuted opinions of the Rabbis by the subtlest and most original references to Scripture; He plerced beneath its letter to the spirit; He distinguished with the keenest acuteness between the Law, as given by God, in its scope and essence, and the Pharisaic traditions; and He clothed in the simplest language, the profoundest spiritual truths of both the Law and the Prophets. Such a phenomenon was inexplicable.

The authorities, in amazement, could only ask themselves how He could have such learning, when He has never studied in the schools. Where could He have got this power of handling the Scriptures like a great Rabbi? He was a Galilean, and had never attended any Teacher. Like the old prophets He must have been "taught of God," and it was evident that the people did not hesitate to recognize Him as one, though the official classes were fain to decry Him, and knew the effect of a harsh and contemptuous name." "How could a common man like this," said they, "who has never been educated as a Rabbi, possibly understand the Scriptures?" Against their consciences, they tried to depreciate both Him and His teaching. Had they shown only curious or friendly wonder, Jesus would, perhaps, have remained silent. But it was different when they were rying to excite doubt and suspicion against Himself and His words, s it was clear they were doing from what He saw and heard. A eputation from the authorities having at last given the opportunity I septy by a direct interrogation. He seized it at once. Beyond great altar, all the year nation, from e city, began ere kept up. s closed, Pater had counted ming within not to be in indeed, been abject of conle dignitaries ed to mention ation, but He sars and the ho judged for that it would ev. no doubt heir religious ad dangerous, visit, healed a AF16344 654 他们打扮 uddenly made is taught, and soon gathered or whether Ile b of His own. tron, as others ver matters of limself openly y eyes of His in coming, for n in Jerusalem d lived mostly of the nation, ne of the great s a Jew, morea still greater, nd expression, He would fain ace, which He lly knew what arless intruder, ney could now

ENC. 8127 -014

golden ves-

time of the crowd at

of mercy

your sym

on account

instice of

in regard though it

at the pre

even on tl ticular be

Sinai, and

Or have y

of the Sab

the saying

Bat, if you

the Sabba

if I broke

as the mak

but look b

But nov

authorities

be allowed

bearing ha

the author

Messiah, an shape of a

logians so'l

Messiah wi

by spirits a

the second

we know t

they choose

ling what w He broke o

had hithert

your own s

sense you k

self; I am s

cling to you the right a

sending me.

from Him, a

His heare than a claim

asserting di

orembodied

Jesus wa

doubt," said He, to paraphrase His words slightly, "I have not learned in your schools what I teach. But my doctrine is not a mere invention of my own: it is not mine at all, but His who has sent me I only repeat what He instructs me to make known in His name. You speak as if religious truth were a mere matter of tedious study But it is to be learned by obedience, rather than from books, as your own Wisdom of Sirach tells you, "He that keepeth the law of the Lord getteth the understanding thereof.' It needs a heart willing to be taught of God to comprehend it; a heart at one with God, and cager to do His will, however contrary to one's own. He whose soul has no love of truth, no oneness with God, cannot recognize His truth even when he hears it. If you had true love to God and desired to know His revealed will, and to carry it out in your lives, you would know from whom I have received the doctrine I teach, by its power to purify and calm the heart, and by the hopes it gives for the world to come. That I do not advance a doctrine of my own invention is, moreover, clear from this, that if I did so I should seek my own honour and advantage. But if I seek no honour for myself, but only for Him by whom I have been sent, it shows that I am worthy of trust. To strive only for the glory of God is in itself a proof of being His true mouthpiece and messenger, and I leave you to say whether this does not apply to me. Have I ever sought honour from men and not rather the honour of my Father alone? Have I not always professed to have received all from my Father? I have had no personal end, and it is, therefore, incredible that I should be a deceiver, seeking to lead men astray.

The cavil of the Rabbis thus answered, Jesus forthwith took the offensive, "Hou charge me," said He, "with not knowing the Law; you do not keep it. You boast of your zeal for it, and affect indignation for my having, as you assert, broken it by healing a blind man on the Sabbath; an indignation so real that you would put me to death if you could. But this, itself, is a violation of the Law, for the Law commands love to our neighbour above even the Sabbath, and that should be my perfect defence." He knew that the authorities had never forgiven Him His answer, at His former visit, to their charge of having broken the Sabbath by the miracle at the pool of Bethesda, and that they were plotting His death, even now, on account of it.

Meanwhile, the crowd, perhaps knowing less than He of the secret designs of the hierarchy, or affecting to deny them; believed, or feigned to believe Him in no danger, and broke out in angry repudation of such a charge. They had heard the Rabbis often ascribe His works to Beelzebub, and fell back on the blasphemous slander as an explanation of His language. He must have a devil. The Rabbis were right. He was enzed. The evil spirit that spoke through Him was trying to stir them up against their spiritual guides.

Without noticing the interruption) Jesus continued, addressing he

. I have not is not a mere b has sent me. in His name. tedious study. books, as your he law of the eart willing to with God, and He whose soul recognize His od and desired our lives, you I teach, by its it gives for the my own invennould seek my for myself, but at I am worthy self a proof of we you to say ht honour from ? Have I not r? I have had I should be a h with took the owing the Law: I affect indignag a blind man ould put me to he Law, for the is Sabbath, and the authorities r visit, to their a the pool of yen now, on ac-

He of the secret n; believed, or angry repudisften ascribe His is slander as an iI. The Rabbis ic through Him es. growd at large, "Your leaders are plotting to kill me for doing an act of mercy on the Sabbath. But all of you are in a measure guilty by your sympathy with them; shown in your unrighteous anger at me on account of it, on the same ground. But that you may see the ininstice of your charge, let me remind you of what often takes place in regard to circumcision. That rite was commanded by Moses, though it dates from Abraham, and you are so strict in performing it at the prescribed time, the eighth day, that you circumcise a child even on the Sabbath, if necessary, that the law of Moses in this particular be not broken. Do you think the Sabbath was first given on Sinai, and hence give the older law of circumcision the preference? Or have you, of your own accord, decided that in some cases the law of the Sabbath must give way to other parts of the law? You accept the saying of the Rabbis, that "circumcision drives away the Sabbath," Bat, if you perform circumcision, with all the work it involves, on the Sabbath, without breaking the day, how can you be angry at me, if I broke it by a work of mercy so much more beneficial to its object as the making a blind man whole on it? Never judge by appearance. but look beneath the surface and judge righteously.

But now some joined the crowd who knew of the plots of the authorities against His life, and could not understand how He should be allowed to teach thus openly without interference. His words and bearing had softened their prejudice, and made it seem possible that the authorities had become convinced that He was, in reality, the Messiah, and sanctioned this course. But the mere suggestion, in the shape of a question, was enough to raise a hot dispute among theologians so keen. "Do not the Rabbis tell us," said some, "that the Messiah will be born at Bethlehem, but that He will be snatched away by spirits and tempests soon after His birth, and that when Hereturns the second time no one will know from whence He has come? But we know that this man comes from Nazareth. Our chief men, if they choose, may accept Him as the Messiah; we will not." Jesus was still sitting in the Temple porch, teaching, but, on hearing what was thus openly said in disparagement of His Messiahship; He broke of His discourse, and called out in a louder voice than He had hitherto used, to the noisy disputants-"You do certainly, in your own sense, know who I am, and whence I come, but in a higher sense you know neither. I come forward as the Messiah, not of myself; I am sent by One whom you cannot truly know, so long as you cling to your worldly ideas of the Messiah-by One who, alone, has the right and power to send forth the Messiah, and has done so in sending me. I know Him, though you do not, for I have come forth from Him, and no other than He has sent me." His hearers at once saw what was implied in this. It was no less than a claim to have come forth from God, and was equivalent to asserting divine dignity, for He said nothing of being only an angel crembodied heavenly spirit, or prophet raised from the deed. He had once be ore, after the very mirecle for which He had been so assailed justified Himself by saying-"My Father worketh hitherto, and I work:" and the words had sounded so blasphemous, that the authorities had sought to kill Him, because He had not only broken the Sab bath, but had said that God was His Father, making Himself equal with God. The hostile part of the crowd rightly saw a similar claim repeated now, and with the wild fanaticism of their race in that age, proposed to lay hold of Him, and hurry Him outside the city on the instant, to stone Him, as the Law against blasphemy enjoined. But His hour had not yet come, and whether from fear of the Galilmans at the feast, or from other reasons, their rege died away in words. The fame of His miracles in the north had preceded Him to Jerusalem, and was, now, further spread by the reports of the Galilgan pilgrims, and deepened the effect of His cure of the blind man at His last visit-the very bitterness of His enemics having kept it from he ing forgotten. Numbers had thus been impressed in His favour. even before His appearance at the feast, and not a few of these were now so far won over by the still higher evidence of His wondrous words, and whole air and bearing, that many felt constrained to admit His claim to be the Messiah. Miracles had always been held a chame teristic of the Messiali's advent, and even the bitterest onemies of Jesus did not deny His supernatural power. It was evident that He was rapidly gaining ground, and the hierarchy knew that if He me they must fall. If they could arrest Him, while His adherents had not as yet ventured on an open movement in His support, all might be well. The Pharisees, therefore, and the Sadducean chief pricesmortal enemies at all other times hustily issued a warrant to apprehend Him, and sent some of the Temple police to carry it out. The sight of the well-known dress of these officials, on the outskirts of His audience, told the whole story to the quick intelligence of Jesus and with that readiness which always marked. Him, He, forth with, began a calm and clear anticipation of His near death. "I shall be with you," said He, "only a short time longer, for I shall soon return to my Father in Heaven, who sent me. Then the days will come when sore distress will fall upon this city and land for rejecting me, and you will seek help and deliverance from the Messiah, that is, from me, but ye will not find me then .... Persecuted and put to death now, ye will then long for me in vain, when for ever gone from you, for where I shall then be you cannot go, to fetch mo from thence as your Saviour. 26, 100 as with and out winner the "their fal dame "What does He mean?" asked those round; "will He go to out Greek speaking brethren-the Hellenists in Dgypt, or Asia Minor, or some other of the lands of the Gentiles?" sturgato do that for The day passed without any attempt to apprehend. Him, nor was He disturbed again during the week. The last day of the Feast known as "the Hosanna Rabba," and the "Great Day," found Him. as each day before, doubtless, had done, in the Temple, arcades, ... He ad gone tl prayer. It pilgrims ma music, and shouts of H first city in Other multi and Levites. the water. bud chantin come ye to wells of salv water drawn amidst the was, apparen Rising, as enthusiasm, ceremony for un had for longed for as at all times i this moment words more . throng, with "If any m him the livir you have not type. He th from a fount bring life to heart, as the shall flow for eaing the th ibis' quickeni after the desc llis glory. would go fo fulness in the The whole were various. bours that th Messiah." C opinion led t

Nazareth ?" 18

lure say that

lehem, the vi

was the safe

penso assailed itherto, and I hat the author. roken the Sab. Himself equal a similar claim co in that ago, he city on the mioined. But the Galilmans y in words. l Him to Jeru. t the Galilgan ind man at His opt it from ben His favour. of those were His wondrous rained to admit a held a chameest onemies of vident that He that if He rose adherents had port, all might chief pricats Frant to apprey it out ls, on the out ekintelligence rked Him, He, near doath. fin longer, for I me. Then the city and land ance from the Persecuted , when for ever go, to fetch me

Him, nor was difference of the freed of the Freed found Him. ad gone thither early, to meet the crowds assembled for morning payer. It was a day of special rejoicing. A great procession of pigrims marched seven times round the city, with their lulabs, music, and loud-voiced choirs preceding, and the air was rent with abouts of Hossana, in commemoration of the taking of Jericho, the first city in the Hely Land that fell into the hands of their Fathers. Other multitudes streamed to the brook of Siloah, after the priests and Levites, bearing the golden vessels, with which to draw some of the water. At many as could get near the stream drank of it amidst bud chanting of the words of Isaiah—"Ho, every one that thirstefth, come ye to the waters," "With joy shall we draw water from the wells of salvation,"—rising in jubilant chants on every side. The water drawn by the priests, was, meanwhile, borne up to the Temple, midst the boundless excitement of a vast throng. Such a crowd was, apparently, passing at this moment.

Rising, as the throng went by, His Spirit was moved at such honest enhusiasm, yet saddened at the moral decay which mistook a mere commony for religion. It was burning autumn weather, when the un had for months shone in a cloudless sky, and the early rains were larged for as the monsoons in India after the summer heat. Water at all times is a magio word in a sultry climate, like Palestine, but at this moment it had a double power. Standing, therefore, to give His words more solemnity. His voice now sounded, far and near over the throng, with soft clearness, which arrested all and the summer heat.

"If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink, for I will give him the living waters of God's heavenly grace, of, which the water you have now drawn from Sildah is only, as your, Rabbis tell you, a type. He that believes in me drinks into his soul from my fulness, as from a fountain, the riches of divine grace and truth. Nor do they bring life to him alone who thus drinks. They become in his own heart, as the whole burden of Scripture tells, a living spring, which shall flow forth from his lips and life in holy words and deeds, quickening the thirsty around him." He meant, adds St. John, that this quickening missionary zeal and power would first show itself after the descent of the Holy Spirit, when He Himself had entered on lis glory. Streams of holy influence, like rivers of living water, would go forth from His Apostles through the Spirit's overflowing falses in their souls.

"The whole discourse was now ended. The impressions it had left were various. Many who had listened to it, whispered to their neighbours that they were sure "This was the Prophet to come before the Messiah." Others maintained He was the Messiah Himself, but this opinion led to hot dispute. "Does the Messiah, then, come out of Mazareth?" asked the incredulous Rabbinists. "Does not the Scripture say that the Christ comes of the seed of David, and from Beththem, the village where David was?" But the division in the crowd was the safety of Jesus, for those (who were flercest to lay hands on Him as a blasphemer and Sabbath-breaker were afraid to do so, so strong did the party seem which supported Him.

The Temple police sent to arrest Him had remained near, to the close, to watch their opportunity. But the power and majesty of His discourse, which had spell-bound so many others, had overawed and impressed even them, so that they dared not touch Him, and went back to their masters empty handed. To the angry demand for an explanation, they could only answer, "Never man spake as this man speaks." The Pharisees in the Council-the special guardians of the public orthodoxy professed themselves shocked at such disloyalty on the part of men entrusted with the commission of the high eccle. sinstical court. "How can you be so led away? Do you not see that only some of the ignorant rabble believe in Him? Have any men of position-any members of the Council, or any Habbis-done so? They are qualified to judge on such matters; but as for the rabble, who have accepted such a transgressor as the Messiah, it shows that they do not know the Law, and are therefore accursed of God." One faint voice only was heard in the Council in hesitating defense of Jesus. It was that of Nicodemus His visitor by night on His first appearance. "I know, sirs, you are zealous for the Law, and rightly condemn those who are ignorant of it. But does the Law sanction our thus condemning a man before it has heard him, and found 'exactly what he has done?" He had not moral courage to take s side, but could not withhold a timid word." Like all weak men, he found little favour for his faint-hearted caution. ""Are von also, like Jesus, out of Galilee," they asked, "that you believe in Him; only ignorant Galilæans do so? Search the Scriptures, and you will see that no Galilæan was ever inspired as a prophet by God: the race is despised of the Highest, and is it likely it should give In their blind rage they forgot that, at least, Jonah, and Hoses, and Nahum, were Galilæans, and they ignored the fact that if the followers of Jesus were mostly from the illiterate north, He had also not a few even from the sons of bigoted Jerusalem. but of a sub find simple distances in they that produce successful reveal with a second with a second by we in it was said, formally bunning. To condensa how to death, worki, The house in the unit of the density of an in the internet will prove the entry of the reaction of the second state of the second reaction of the second state of the second s biedize fans, folio man or sain presidence goal bas was raised before the group of merrous bitteress decradation in The white Toman-live set Mar before 1 - 418, and as and as in I wrin dominal the Li "Teacher, this wound, day, he magnify of shalled and free live he hav, charged as think made should be stand, and an is rely philos?" Freque care it cat rea?" Its the division in the crowle "Knowing their smooth disc as shallori, its maniferty with Gravele."

ALL wh in the city distance of sccustome little symp confusion, freedom, a sleep in th that of the this. The the Temple women, th The vast excitement Pilgrimage fluence on : exception. A large n a commotio to teach. rality, and for the hat husband, to divorce, if 1 tom, howev advantage. Him to adju that she sh of the peopl from the ve simply dism for it was st moreover. L right of the Leading 1 before the woman-the "Teacher the Law, ch opinion?"

Knowing

afraid to do so, ed of 32 .

ned near, to the d majesty of His d overawed and Him, and went y. demand for an pake as this man guardians of the t such disloyalty f the high eccle. Do you not see Him? Have any ny Rabbis-done s; but as for the Messiah, it shows coursed of God." esitating defence by night on His for the Law, and but does the Law s heard him, and noral courage to Like all weak ion. Are you, t you believe in Scriptures, and prophiet by God: ly it should give

nah, and Hoses. fact that if the orth, He had also al the people, for from the very ca simply distance rights of Higa agentical moneover, bring STATOL RATERA before the crown 15+, 70111 --- 11.11107 "T.acher., this De La Man, Charger opinion Stroinigo "Krowing which an in this of his and i sold the head the bart in alce were straid to an and the former of the CHAPTER L. or the state of the stat

ALL who attended the Feast of Tabernacles were required to sleep in the city the first night at least, but were free afterwards to go any distance outside, within the limit of a Sabbath day's journey. Jeaus. ecustomed to the pure air of the hills and open country, and with little sympathy for the noise and merriment, or for the crowds and confusion, of the great holiday, was glad to avail Himself of this freedom, and went out, each night, after leaving the Temple, to seek sleep in the house of some friend on the Mount of Olives; perhaps to that of the family of Bethany, of which we hear so much soon after this. The early morning, however, saw Him always at His post in the Temple courts; now in the royal porch; now in the court of the women, through which the men passed to their own. The vast concourse of people from all countries, and the general excitement and relaxation of the season, had gradually led to abuses. Pilgrimages, in all ages, have had an indifferent name for their infuence on morals, and the yearly feasts at Jerusalem were likely no exception. CONTRACTORICS TRACKS OF

A large number of people had already gathered round Jesus, when a commotion was seen in the women's court, where He had sat down to teach. A woman of the humbler class had been guilty of immorality, and the Scribes, on the moment, saw in her sin a possible snare for the hated. Galilæan. It was not their business, but that of her husband, to accuse her; nor could she be legally punished, except by divorce, if he, himself, were not a man of pure life, HI, was the custom, however, in cases of difficulty, to consult a famous Rabbi, and advantage, was taken of this, to entrap Jesus, if possible, by asking Him to adjudicate on the case. If He condemned her, and insisted that she should be stoned to death, it would injure Him in the eyes of the people, for the Law, in this particular, had long been obsolete, from the very commonness of the offence. If, on the other hand, He simply dismissed her, they could charge Him with slighting the Law, for it was still form 'v binding. To condemn her to death, would, moreover, bring Him under the Roman law, as an invasion of the right of the governor.

Leading forward their trembling prisoner—unveiled, and exposed before the crowd of men-the bitterest degradation to an Eastern woman—they set her before Jesus, and asked with feigned humility---

"Teacher, this woman has been guilty of sin. Now Moses, in the Law, charged us that such should be stoned. What is your opinion?" of a colo, epitett of is hauthe shoething:

Knowing their smooth dissimulation, He instinctively felt that this mock respect was a mere cloak for sinister designs. Yet the incident threw Him into a moment's confusion. His soul shrank from the spectacle thus brought before Him, and in His stainless purity H could not bear to look on the fallen one. Stooping down, therefore at once to hide the blush He could not prevent, and to show that He would have nothing to do with such a matter. He began to write m i the dust before Him-most likely the very words He was present the utter that they chosen to read them, they might have spare themselves the open exposure that followed. But they were the e occupied with their, plot to read the warning, and again and again prepeated the question, to force Him to answer. At last, raising His eface for a moment and looking straight at them, He said-190" Let him, among you, who is free from sin of a like kind, cast the o first stone at her; as is required of the chief witness, by Moses." not It was an age of deep immorality, and the words of Jesus went to their consciences. He had again stooped and begun to write, as soon as He had spoken, perhaps to remind them how sin, when followed by penitence, is effaced for ever, like characters written in due Meanwhile, their own bosoms became their judges. One after an other, beginning at the oldest among them, moved off, to the ven last and Jesus was left alone, with the woman, in the midst of the crowd. annallisiger Ph. H HAVE SHALF DEPENDENT OF THE WORLD' THE of Rising once more, and finding only the woman left, He asked herwhere are thine accusers? Did no one condemn the by casting a stone at thee?" 11936.2 anth No one. Lord." And ANTH DELIGITATION

net Neither," said He, "shall I. I come not to condemn, but to save, I am no criminal judge, either to sentence or acquit. [ Goine pent of thy guilt, and sin no more." 高品品 百姓 自知的 His enemies had often murmured at the pity and favour He had shown to the fallen and outcast. They knew how He had let on sinful woman wash His feet with her tears, and wipe them with he loose hair; how He had eaten with publicans and sinners; and how He even had a publican among His disciples. They had hoped to use all this against Him, but, once more, their schemes had all turned to their own shame. He had given no opinion for the own lete law, or against it: their own consciences had set the offende tree manual with superior in the dentities of the ware of the second of This incident past, He began His discourse again to those round Him. He still sat in the court of the women, or, as it was sometime called, "the treasury," from the thirteen brazen chests for offering with their trumpet-like mouths, opening through the wall of it -buildings. The court was the great thoroughfare to that of the Israelites, which was reached from it by the fifteen steps leading the great gate. - FIFF INTPARENT. NODE HA In the address of the day before, He had spoken of Himself as alon the water of life for the thirst of the soul of To give with

to drink,"

Law, and I

all His hea

life, and fl

loy and pr

first-born c

to that of t

else alike 1

make every

and illustra

the golden

on the livir

the great c

feasts were brightness t

He now use

Pointing

over the Ma

the white he walls and ga

the lips of a

"I am the

nee of man

skiowledge command, y

advantage, a and poorest i

cahn dignity

truth," He co

o all mankin incerely, wi which is the

iven to the

Some parti lim, listened

ailure of the

which was fa

elf, deepened

You make

equire us to man's with "I do not n

Your rule de ut as the mo all soon retu

receive His

Merore you r

To give with

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

to drink," was a common phrase for teaching and explaining the law, and hence its meaning, when used by our Lord, was familiar to Il His hearers. Water, in such a climate, was the first necessary of life, and flowing, or living, waters pictured, at once, every image of lov and prosperity. But the mighty light, filling the heavens-the first-born creation of God-lifts the thoughts from individual benefit to that of the whole race, for light is the condition and source of all else, alike to nature and man. It was the characteristic of Jesus to make everything round Him, in creation or common life, His texts and illustrations. The shouts of the multitude, as they brought up the golden vessel of water from Siloam, had introduced the discourse on the living waters. "Round the court in which He now sat, rose the great candelabra, in whose huge cups the illuminations of the feasts were kindled, that banished night from the city, and in whose bightness the multitudes found darkness, changed to day, and these He now used as a text,

Pointing to them, and, from them, to the glorious sun, just risen over the Mount of Olives, and shining with dazzling splendour, on the white houses of the city and the marble and gold, of the Temple walls and gates. He began a new discourse, in language, which, from the lips of a Jew, was a direct claim to be the Messiah.

"I am the Light of the World," said He—"that is, of the whole net of man!" Buch words from One who was humility itself—One whowledged by all to have unbounded supernatural power at His command, yet so self-restrained that He neves used it for His own advantage, and was so unassuming and lowly that even the weakest and poorest felt perfectly free to approach Him—were uttered with a sain dignity which vouched their truth. "In me dwells divine ruth," He continued, "and from me it shines forth, like the light, b all mankind. He who becomes my true disciple, and follows me incerely, will no longer walk in the darkness of ignorance and sin, which is the death of the soul, but in the light of everlasting life, jven to the children of the Messish's kingdom;"

Some partisans of the Rabbinical party, who remained to watch im, listened with eager attention to every word. Enraged at the alure of the last attempt to entrap him, what they 'ad now heard, which was far beyond what any prophet had ever daimed for himelf, deepened their bitterness.

"You make yourself judge in your own favour," said they. "You equire us to believe you, on your own word." It is too much to ask, man's witness on his own behalf is worthless."

"I do not make myself witness in my own favour," replied Jesus. Your rule does not apply to me, for I speak not for myself alone, at as the mouthplece of Him from whom T came, and to whom I all soon return. If you knew who He was, you would be forced neceve His testimony to me. But you do not know Him, and metore you reject it. for you know heither whence I came nor whither I shall return. I know, and must know, best, whose messenger I am. and what commission He has given me. You have no right to accuse me as a deceiver, for you are not in a position to judge of me, since you know nothing of my mission. You look at me with jaundiced eyes, and judge only by my lowly, outward appearance, and are thus misled. I, by myself, judge neither in my own favour, nor against any one, for I have come not to condemn, but to save. If, indeed in any case, I seem to judge, as in this instance respecting my commission, it is not I, alone, who do so, but I and my Father who has sent me judge together, and thus the judgment must be true. I am not alone; the Father who sent me is with me, and thus, even by your own Law, by which the testimony of two men is received as true, that which I offer for myself is more than sufficient, for I offer you my own word, and no one can convict me of untruthfulness! and also the witness of my Father. He witnesses for me by the very truths I utter, and by the miracles you admit I perform."Remember "Where is, then, this second witness. Thy Father?" retorted His adversaries. "We do not see Him." He must be here, if, as you say He is a witness for you?" He had too often spoken of God as His Father to permit of any mistake as to His meaning, but they affected to misunderstand Him. With perfect calmness, Jesus replied, "You ask who is my Father, and do not know me, myself. I cannot in. swer you till you have juster conceptions of me. If you looked at me, my teaching, and my deeds, in a right light, you would know who my Father is, for He reveals Himself in me. But your hearts are now so prejudiced, that you would not understand what I might tell you, either of myself or of Him, were I to attempt it."Id at all These were bold words in such a place; the very stronghold of His enemies; but as He finished and rose to depart, no one laid hands on Him: His hour was not yet coment and still had theil beillo catenned

A fragment of another discourse delivered like this in the Temple on one of the following days, has been preserved i The immediate circumstances preceding are not recorded, but there must have been another dispute with His enemies. A fresh attempt to win them, followed; with solemn warnings of the results of their finally rejecting Him.

The time approaches," said He, in effect, "when I shall leave you, and when I am gone you will seek me, that is, you will ery ou for the Messiah, but in vain, and will look for Him without success you will fain be delivered from the calamities that will come on you; but you will die, unpardoned and unsanctified, with your sits on your souls, --die here, and die for ever; for your seeking me, that is, the Messiah, will not be from faith and repentance, but only despairing cry for deliverance from temporal distress. You cannot hope to be able to go up to heaven, to find and bring me down a your Saviour. I shall be gone from you forever." Will He kill Himself?" asked one of the bitterest among the by danders. w not be able Taking i point out, they did or ings, comin from heave are without of God. Y of the New that you we can raise th born only o If you do no sins." oilf raf "I am H Old Testam Jesus, of H question of of all His he come, were The Rabb edge that th Thou; then? att I am wh how can you cially to bla mission, ---- to who'sent me terms so ofte once, His he 3 Seeing the meas the M my Father m Heland from my Fa will be revea referred to t rection,—the the judgmen clouds of her continued, ave before ver with me These lofty hole air, and m, insteadud essenger I am. ight to accuse re of me, since vith jaundiced e, and are thus ur, nor against e.alf, indeed. ecting my com-Father who has be true. I am thus, even by is received as ient, for I offer untruthfulness! me by the very m. Marrise Pre ?'eretorted His if, as you sav! of God as His ut they affected s replied, "You f. I cannot an. f you looked at ou would know But your hearts id what I might otoitalid of what ronghold of His ne laid hands on terringtave official ti s in the Temple, The immediate must have been to win them, folfinally rejecting from usy inot ien I shall leave you will cry out without success; at will come on with your sins seeking me, that tance, but only ss. of ou cannot ing me down's 1 St Lutiel Try 6 loff st among the by tanders, with blasphomous irony. 16 In that case, certainly, we shall not be able to follow Him, or willing, either, to where He will go !! Taking ho notice of the coarse insulting jest. Jesus went, on to mint out, calmly, and with surpassing dignity, that they spake as they did only because they could not comprehend Him or His sayings, coming as He did from above. 11 You spring from the earth, I from heaven; your natures and hearts, in keeping with your origin, are without the higher wisdom and divine life of those who are born. of God. You have the thoughts and ideas of this age; I speak those of the New Kingdom of God. It was on this ground I said to you, that you would die in your sins, for only faith in me, as the Messiah. can raise those who are not born from above, gross fleshly souls, bom only of the flesh, to higher divine life, in time and eternity. If you do not believe that I am He, you shall certainly die in your ens off reliains and an and the south of the suble of the suble of the second "I am He," was the sum of Jehovah's self-proclamation in the old Testament, and it was now repeated, in its lofty majesty, by Jeans of His own Messianic dignity. He could assume that the mestion of the Messiah was the ever-present and supreme thought of all His hearers. The one point was whether He, or another yet to come, were the Expected One strategies doubt for the first strategies of The Rabbinists perfectly understood Him, but would not acknowl. edge that they did so, and asked Him contemptuously. "Who art Thou then ?" no guardair ment bening baris you donne while have our an what Thave said from the beginning of my ministry L was, how can you still ask ? I have much to say respecting you, much especially to blame; but I refrain, and confine myself to my immediate mission, 12 to proclaim to mankind what I have received from Him who sent me." Strange as it might seem, though He had used similar terms so often that the allusion to God was generally recognized at mee His hearers did not in this instance understand Him. neas the Messiah, you would have understood what I have said of my Father. But when you have crucified me, you will know that I m He and that I never act alone, but speak only what I have heard from my Father, before I came into the world. My glory, which will be revealed after 10 die, will force you to realize this." THe referred to the future descent of the Holy Spirit after His resurrection, the miracles of the Apostles, the spread of His kingdon. the judgment of God on the nation, and His final return in the clouds of heaven at the last day, "10" My Father who sent me," He continued, "has not left me alone, though you do not see Him, but have before you only a lowly man, in the midst of enemies; He is ver with me, for I do always the things that please Him." These lofty words must have been wondrously borne out by His whole air, and by the calm truth and heavenliness of His tone and looks; w, instead of revolting Hischearers by the contradiction between

596

They out it will What do you mean ?? claims so awful, and Him who made them, which we instinctively feel there must have been, had they been uttered by sinful men like ourselves, they won many to believe in Him, there and then, as the Messiah and berth Manguingmoor stagion aldred server bentation and an Tt is impossible not to feel that such words were a distinct claim of absolute sinlessness, on which no mere man could for a moment venture." Yet in His mouth they seemed only the fitting expression of evident truth. Nor is it possible to exaggerate their importance. When we remember how entirely His whole life was devoted to the enforcement of the purest morals even in the domain of thought and conscience, they acquire a significance that awes the mind. Such an absolute purity implied the keenest discrimination between good and evil holiness and sint "To please God," was with Him no empty phrase; but implied a divine holiness in the very fountains of being: pure as the light of a morning without clouds. Yet His language respecting Himself was always the same The greatest saints are most ready to be all their unworthings, but He never for moment humbles Himself before God for sin; never asks pardon for it; and not only makes no approach to expressing a sense of needing repentance and forgiveness, but calmly takes on Himself the divine prerogative of forgiving the sins of men. The Ideal of humility, and truth, and holy life. He must have known His own spiritual state with exact fidelity, for the passing of even an unworthy thought over such a soul, would have instantly clouded its peace and joy, Yet, with this perfect self-knowledge, He could calmly claim that His Father saw in Him only His own image of perfect holiness, which alone can please Him and of aligned and another by manual by bright moundained arise The overpowering impression produced on His hearers, was, how. ever, too sudden and superficial for permanence, and boll and infinite Resuming His discourse, therefore, He continued, addressing those who, for the noment, in spite of themselves, believed on Him, permanently in the same mind: acknowledging me as the Messiah and carrying out my teaching in your hearts and lives, you will be my disciples indeed. You will then, by experience, know the power and worth of the divine truths of my Person and teaching, for my words are the truth; and the truth will make you free manner if that He spoke of course of spiritual freedom: of emancipation from sinful life by the elevating and purifying influence of their new faith but, like Nicodemus with the new birth, or the Samaritan woman with the living water, or the Twelve with the leaven of the Pharisees. they understood the word only of political liberty, and in a moment showed how little they understood their new Master's spirit. The fierce Jewish pride was instantly in a blaze, in A unt bull aver in dust "Freel what do you mean?" said they. ""We are the descendant of Abraham; the race to whom God gave, the promise of being h first of nations—His chosen people. We have never been in bond their own was an o another a a foreign Universe. But Jes every one that of hi have need vourself f inclination God, not s household out him of sinners, an they can c God. He them out But I, the ever, and, I you, I free wardly only Son, in the power, or ever gives, and abiding is only in a believe in n liave turned till me. N no real hold I was still w your father. "Our fat that He mea plied Jesusyou would i of worth be spoken to y good: becau

ham would

truth as reve

have made it

you act as yo

to any.

sodes of liberty th

e instinctively inful men like id then, as the Wills ON CHEN distinct claim for a moment ing expression. ir importance. devoted to the of thought, and nind. Such an ween good and Him no empty tains of, being; t His language atest saints are er for a moment don for it; and needing repent the divine pref humility, and iritual state with ought over such joy, Yet, with that His Father which alone can arers, was, how.

ted, addressing alieved on Him, and, you continue as the Messiah ivos, you will be know, the power teaching, for my e,", neipation from a their new faith, amaritan woma of the Pharisees and in a momen or's, spirit. The e the descendant ise: of. being the been in bondar to any. "What do you mean?" They conveniently forgot the epiodes of Egypt and Babyion, and thought of the shadow of political there they enjoyed under the prudent Romans, by the retention of their own laws, its in the protected States of India under Britain. It was an offence punishable with excommunication for one Jew to call another a slave, and part of their morning prayer, even when under a foreign yoke, ran thus Blessed be the Lord our God, King of the Universe, who has made me a free man "Award state of Lander Show. every one who commits sin is under the power of sin-a slave under that of his master. I speak of spiritual liberty, not of political. You have need of the help I can and will give you, if you desire to free vonself from this moral slavery-the bondage to your own sinful inclinations and habits. You are slaves in the great household of God, not sons, and the slave has no claim to remain always in the household: it is in the power of his lord to sell him to another, or to put him out, when he pleases. All men, whether Jews or others, are sinners, and as such, slaves of their sin, and must be made free, before they can claim, as you do, to belong of right to the household of God. He will not treat the slaves of sin as His sons, but will turn them out of His kingdom as a lord drives out an unworthy slave. But I, the Son of God, abide in God's household, as His Son, for ever, and, hence, if, by the truth I proclaim, and the grace I secure you, I free you from slavery to sin, you will be really free; not outwardly only, and in name, as now. Were I not to be always, as His son, in the household of God, my Father-you might doubt my power, or fear because of my absence; but my presence there for ever gives, you perfect security that the freedom I offer will be real and abiding. I know that you are descended from Abraham but it is only in a bodily sense. If you were his spiritual sons, you would believe in me, but, now, in spite of your passing belief, I see that you have turned against me already, and gone back to those who would kill me. "Need I say that you act thus only because my teaching had no real hold on your hearts? I have told you what I have seen when I was still with my Father; but you act according to the teaching of wir father with strangents and half man her is broken askupsion

""Our father," interrupted some, "Is Abraham,"—for they saw that He meant something else. "If ye were in the true sense," replied Jesus—" not in mere outward descent—the sons of Abraham, you would imitate Abraham; to do so is the only descent from him of worth before God. But you seek to kill me—s man who has spoken to you the truth, which I have received from God for your good: because it humbles your pride and self-righteousness. Abraham would never have acted thus. He received and rejoiced in the truth as revealed to him, though it was far less clear than my words have made it to you. The fact is, I repeat, with unutterable sadness, you act as your father teaches you?"

101

derstoo

that He never di

prophet

all men

nor coul

gi"If I being gr

said tend

by whos

whom y

does so.

vou hav

If I wer

should. b

keep all

"But t

-the Fri

with suc

race, and from Her

abode in earthly if alive so h

"" It is

voice, ** a

have seen

me tell vo

IAM. "But

This wa

self to Isr

beginning Eternal.

Himself,

His hea

Truth. m

Utterly tu

fanaticism

phemer.

still incon

self amon

confusion

11771

"I mea

The er

"What do you mean?" cried out a number at a time. "You say that Abraham is not our father—who is our father then?" Do you mean that Sarah, our mother, was unfaithful to Abraham, and that he was only in name our father, not in fact? We have only one father, not two, as they have who are born from adultery, and if you deny it is Abraham, it must be God."

"If God were your father, you would love me," quietly replied Jesus, "for I am the Very Son of God, proceeding, in my Being, from Him, and descending from heaven to mankind I have no come from any personal and private act of my own; but as the Mes siah sent forth by the Father. You cannot understand what I say because your hearts are so gross that you have no ears for my teach. ing lit is dark to you because you are morally blind. So far from being the spiritual children of Abraham, far less of God, you are children of the devil; and, true to your nature, ye copy your father. From the beginning of the human race he was a murderer, and put away the truth from him, because there is no truth in him. The devit is a liar by nature, and lives in lies, and knows nothing, in his heart; of truth and his children are liars like their father that is they thrust away the truth from them, as you are doing now. Because I speak the truth, and do not seek, like Saten, to win you to evil, by flattering your self-deception and sins, you do not be lieve me. Yet, would I deceive you? Who of you can convict me of sin? But if I be sinless. I can have no untruthfulness-no licin me, and, therefore, what I speak must be truth and truth only. Hence I am right in saying you cannot be the children of God, for he that is of God hears God's words—that is hears me, for I speak the words of God. That you are not really the children of God. though you call yourselves such, explains why you do not believe tolin men approximate and the anent. Solling of the band for

"That proves what we said of you," interrupted some of the crowd. "Such language about your own nation shows that we were right in saying that you were a Samaritan an enemy of the true people of God, and possessed with a devil," struct mine the bet the "I have not a devil," replied Jesus; "I honour my Father by these very words, for they tend to the glory of God. As He has taught me, so I teach you, when I say that the wicked are servants and children of the devil. Yet though I speak not from my own authority, but that of God, you do me; His messenger, the great dis honour of saying I have a devil. But I shall not attempt to refute the slander, for I care nothing for either your approval or preise There is one here my Father who cares for my honour, and will judge those who contemn me. Would that none of you expose vourselves to His wrath! May you rather receive from Him life eternal Once more, leto me repeat, He that believes in me, and

As usual, the hearers put a material sense on these words, and us

derstood them of natural death; taking it as a proof of their assertion that He had a devil—that He could promise any one that he should never die. "Even Abraham died," they continued, "and so did the prophets: Whom do you make yourself? You put yourself above all men, even the greatest. Abraham could not ward off death, nor could the prophets. Do you claim to be greater than they?"

"If I, for mere desire of glory," replied Jesus, "were to boast of being greater than Abraham, such glory would be idle. If what I have said tends to exait me, it is not I who honour myself, but my Father, by whose authority I act and speak that honours me—iny Father, of whom you say He is your God. If you fail to see how He constantly does so, it is because, in spite of your calling yourselves His people, you have not known Him. But I know Him, as only His Son can. If I were to say that I did not know Him, and speak His Words, I should be like yourselves, untruthful; but I both know Him, and keep all His commands, for my whole life is obedience to Him.

"But that you may know that I really am greater than even Abraham —the Friend of God—let me tell you that Abraham, when he received, with such joy, the promise that the Messiah should come from his race, and bless all nations, was rejoicing that he would, hereafter, from Heaven, see my day, and he has seen my appearing, from his abode in Paradise, and exulted at it."

The erowd, gross as usual, understood these words of Abraham's earthly life, and fancied that Jesus was now claiming to have been alive so long ago as the time of Abraham, and to have known him. "It is two thousand years ago since Abraham's day," broke in a voice, "and you are not fifty years old yet; do you mean to say you liave seen Abraham?"

"I mean to say," replied Jesus, "far more than even that. Let me tell you, with the utmost solemnity, —before Abraham was born, IAM."

This was the very phrase in which Jehovah had announced Himself to Isreal in Egypt. It implied a continuous existence from the beginning, as if the speaker had claimed to be, Himself, the Uncreated Eternat. Abraham had come into being, but HE had existence in Himself, without a beginning.

His hearers instantly took it in this august meaning, and Jesus, the Truth, made no attempt, then or afterwards, to undeceive them. Utterly turned against Him, they rushed hither and thither, in wild fanaticism, for stones, with which to put Him to death as a blasphemer. Many of those used in the building of parts of the Temple, still incomplete, lay in piles at different parts. But Jesus hid Himself among the crowd, some of whom were less hostile, and, in the confusion, passed out of the sacred precincts, to safety.

In the sequenced spot, on he does the press wilder a me e Saten, to win eyou do not becan convict me dinesson o lieand truth only. a of God, for he ne, for I speak aildren of God, do not believe father that is.

d some of the ws that we were emy of the true my Father by As He has taught re servants and from my own r, the great distempt to refute proval or preise. honour, and will of you expose from Him life eves in me, and

e words, and un

here the transport of the property will be dependent beit all relation of the the beauty to a second to a second THE WERE WERE BEITS SEEN ALTERNAL THE REPORT OF species, as properlying producing in property in property of private a fistion of the second end for particing sail and construction in the sain of algorith sail to particing algorith sail to particing algorithm in the said of the VIO THIN SHIT THE LAST MONTH OF THE YEAR COTHER THE ALL OF PRODENCE demanded that Jesus should for a time withdraw from Jerusalem after the outbreak of murderous fanaticism in the Temple courts, and He would be the more inclined to this because Judea had. as yet, had so small a share in His ministry. The unmeasured religlous, pride which had resisted any impression in His first lengthened visit, might possibly yield, in some cases, after the incidents of His work in Galilee and Jerusalem, and doubtless did so; perhaps in more instances than we suspect. But whatever the success, He could not leave the special home, land of Israel without one more attempt to win it to the New Kingdom of God. Hence the next months, till after the Feast of Dedication, in December, were spent either in Jerusalem or Judea that why lounded with a wall of each wards off. In these last weeks of His life Jesus found a home, from time to time, in the bosom of a village family in Bethany, on the east side of the Mount of Olives. When He first came to know them is not told: nerhans they were among the few fruits of His former solourn in Judea: possibly the family of him who, is known in the Gospels as Simon the Leper; one of the converts of the early Judean labours, in gratitude for his miraculous cure. Bethany is easily reached from Jerusalem., The flight of steps on the east side of the Temple, before the Golden Gate, led to the quiet valley of the Kedron. A bridge over the sometimes dry channel of the stream opened into a canci path, rising, past Gethsemane, in a slow and gentle ascent over the brow of the hill which lies between the Mount of Olives and that which Pompey had defiled by his camp; called, from this, the Hill of Offence. To save distance, however, a footway ran from Gethsemane over the top of Olivet, and this, travellers a foot, like Jesus, for the most part preferred to the other easier but more circuitous road. Descending the eastern slope, a few steps led from the bare hill-side, with its scattered, prickly shrubs, to a sweet dell, rich in fig. almond, and olive trees, through which wound a road, here and there cut out in the side of the hill. Ascending the east end of the dell, Bethany lay close in sight, only three-quarters of an hour's distance from Jerusalem, but hidden from it by a spur of the Mount of Olives. The ruins of a tower rise, now, over the highest point of the village, but they are of later date than the days of our Lord. The houses, whitewashed and flat-roofed, lie bidden among the surrounding heights. amidst green fields and trees of many kinds; all the more charming, as the eastern side of Mount Olivet, the background to the picture, is much more barren and dreary than the western we for sold add at In this sequestered spot, on the edge of the great wilderness of Judea, J Martha always c of the 7 wider so that He the swee mathersh Mary. ar the times of slady brew . to Darroy themfand so fondly Judea doubtless their con b Martha may have to have h are in ci vividly in fails, at fi nity of th practical ablyanx detail of Mary sits The busy nassingje word to ] impatient Lord; M the wo to imply The ger tendernes "Martha besides b suprem be taken 1 his spirit : manner, I Aninci Lord's jou in the Mos derness of

WHE APPAULS ALLE DATISTIC risho avis alis ALL'S & S. Sould In Hall Operation ive APPRELIMA LING. CS . thdraw from a the Temple se Judea had. easured religst lengthened idents of His ; perhaps, in cess. He could more attempt t months, till teither in Je-HI WARDSTRIE. from time to he east side of

m is not told: er sojourn in he Gospels as an labours, in reached from Cemple, before on. A bridge into a camel scent over the lives and that his, the Hill of m Gethsemane Jesus, for the cuitous, road. bare hill-side, n fig, almond, there cut out dell, Bethany tance from Je-Olives. The he village, but houses, whiteding heights, ore charming, o the picture, in the Mostic wilderness of Judea, Jesus found a delightful retreat in the vine-covered cottage of Martha and Mary and their brother Lazarus. Loving and beloved, it always offered a peaceful retirement from the confusion and danger. of the Temple courts, or the still more exhausting circuits of His wider southern journeys. It was the one spot, so far as we know. that He could call home in these last months, but, it was apparently the sweetest, and most like home. He had ever had. m The household consisted of two sisters, and or brother-Martha Mary, and Lazarus-names which mark the transition character of the times; for, while " Martha" was the unchanged native equivalent of "lady,"""" and "Lazarus" were Greek forms of the old Hebrew "Miriam" and "Eleazer." May we trace in this superiority to narrow conservatism, a liberality in their parents, which led both them and their children to receive the Galilæan teacher so readily and so fondly? They had evidently been disciples before this last stay in Judea: likely from the time of their now dead father, who had, doubtless, often talked over his doubts or reasons for loving trust, in their companying mow connecting an application to see Trait total Martha appears to have been the head of the little household, and hay have been as many have believed, a widow. The family seems to have had a good social position, and to have been above the average in circumstance. The character of the two sisters shows itself. vividly in the first notice. Martha shares the plety of her sister, but fails) at first, to rise to such a ligh conception of the nature and dignity of their wondrous Friend as her sister, and is busied with the practical cares of life to an extent that seems to Him excessive. Amiably anxious for the comfort of her guest, she is absorbed in overy detail of hospitality which she thinks likely to please Him, while Mary site at His feet, to listen to His words and watch His every look. The bisy motherly Martha, seeing Mary thus seemingly idle, feels a passing jealousy and annoyance, unworthy of her calmer self-for a impatiently with a complaint to Jesus, not free from irreverence. "Lord," says she, " do you not chre that my sister has left me to do H the work alone an If you speak to her, she will help me !! As if to imply that she would pay no attention to Martha's words. (1971) The gentle calmness of Jesus, too grateful to both for their loving tenderness to overlook the good in each had only the tenderest reply. "Martha, Martha," said He, "my wants are easily satisfied, and it is, besides, better, like Mary, to choose the one thing needful above all supreme concern for the things of God-for they alone can never be taken from us.""Of Lazarus, before his death, we only know that his spirit and temper were such that Jesus made him, in an especial manner, His friend 12; will, within a worked, of holdor tall how orders. "An incident of this period is preserved by St. Luke." In one of our Lord's journeys in the neighbourhood of Jerusalem, a Rabbi, skilled in the Mosaic Law; and, as such, a public teacher and interpreter of in this sequestred spor on the edge of the great wildemess of the Rabbinical rules, rising from his seat among his students, as Jesus passed, resolved to show his wisdom at the expense of the hated Galilean; and trap Him, if possible, into some doubtful utterance. "Teacher," asked he, "what shall I do to inherit eternal life? We know what the Rabbis enjoin, but what sayest Thou?"

What is written in the Law?" replied Jesus, "how readest thou? For the law of God alone can determine such a matter."

Quoting a passage which every Jew repeated in each morning and evening's prayer, and wore in the little text-boxes of his phylactery/ he answered glibly, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy sonl, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind, and thy neighbour as thyself."

The answer hardly left room for anything further; but the questioner would not be balked of an opportunity of showing his acuteness, and, perhaps, of drawing Jesus into a difficulty. No commandwas so plain as not to furnish subjects for dispute to hair-splitting theologians of his class; and, in this case, there had been endless wrangling in the Rabbinical schools on the definition of the word. "heighbour." Jesus, moreover, as was well known, held very broad views on the subject; views utterly heterodox in the eyes of the schools. Determined not to let conversation drop, the questioner, therefore, opened it afresh?

"But you have not told me," said he; "who is my neighbour." Pray do so, elso I may fail in my duty."

Instead of answering him directly, Jesus replied, in the fashion of the Rabbis themselves, by a parable, which I amplify; for its clearen understanding. We as a distributed of the state of the state of the ""A certain man," said He, "went down from Jerusalem to Jericho You know the way, so steep, wild, and dangerous; well called the Bloody Road, for who can tell how many robberies and murders have happened on it in these unsettled times, when the country is full of men driven from their homes by oppression and misery? As he went on, a band of robbers from the wild gorges through which the road sinks, rushed out upon him; stripped him, for he was a poor man with only his clothes to take from him; beat him when he resisted; and then made off, leaving him half dead.

As he lay, bleeding, insensible, and naked, on the rough stones, a priest, who lived at Jericho, like so many more, and had finished his course at the Temple, went past. He was busy reading the copy of the Law, which all priests carry with them; but as he came near and saw the wounded and seemingly dying man, he hastily crossed over, and passed, on the other side of the road, afraid of defiling himself by blood, or by the touch of one perhaps unclean. "Soon after, a Levite, also from the Temple, came by, and he, when he saw the injured man, stepped over to him, and stood for a time looking at him, but presently crossed the road again as if he had been pen to hi But lay, and misery; wounds. pain, and never th heathen. and brow side, ami There he him throu next day; gave him that if me "Whic fell amom The Ra word, ft

"Go an humbled a A fragm

Jesus daily lad, at an model of r of the late Rabbis, an tition we recited the request, to from God varied His "You ki a friend, an the door. come to m not start ti have nothin turb will's locked for cannot wal Yet, if you in the end, to your im "If, now in to Jericho. all called the murders have try is full of Ashe went ich the road a poor mun; "ho resisted: L. Manasa Dispirit B ugh stones, a d finished his s the copy of ame near and crossed over, alingthimself CAMPOC P. : WEG. L by, and he, nd stood for a gaing as if he

It. now, se

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

had been polluted, and went on in all haste, lest the like should happen to himself.

"But a Samaritan, travelling that way, came where the poor man lay, and, when he saw him, was moved with compassion at his misery; and went to him, and, lighting from his ass, bound up his wounds, after pouring oil mixed with wine on them, to assuage the pain, and soften the injured parts; and set him on his own beast, never thinking who he might be he was helping; whether Jew, heathen, or fellow-countryman; or of his own danger in such a spot; and brought him to the khan, which, you know, stands at the roadside, amidst the hare walls of rocks, three hours from Jerusalem. There he had every care taken of him, and stayed with him, tending him through the night. His own business forced him to leave him next day; but before doing so, he went to the keeper of the khan, and gave him two denarii, telling him to take care of him, and adding, that if more were needed, he would give it when he came back.

"Which of these three, do you think, was neighbour to him that fell among the robbers?"

The Rabbi, true to his national hatred, would not utter the hated word, "the Samaritan." "He that had mercy on him, no doubt," said he.

"Go and do thou in like manner," replied Jesus, and left him; if humbled and mortified; it is to be hoped, a wiser and better man

A fragment of the familiar instructions of these months, by which Jesus daily trained His disciples, is preserved to us by St. Luke, He had, at an earlier period, given the Twelve and His other hearers, a model of prayer in the Sermon on the Mount, but now, one, perhaps of the later disciples, asked for a form of prayer such as other Rabbis, and as John, gave their followers. With the gentle renetition we so often find in the Gospels, Jesus, forthwith, once more recited the model. He had already given, and took advantage of the request, to enforce the value of prayer by similar assurances of answer from God as He had given before. In one detail, however, He varied His language, by adding a brief and pointed parable. "You know," said He, "how it is with men. If any of you have a friend, and go to him in the middle of the night, and call through the door, "Friend, lend me three loaves, for a friend of mine has just come to my house from a journey; the weather was so hot, he could not start till the cool of the day; this has made him so lato; and I have nothing to set before him;' most likely he whom you thus disturb will say to you from within, 'Trouble me not; the door is locked for the night, and my children are with me in bed, and I cannot wake them. I cannot get up and give you what you ask. Yet, if you refuse to leave and keep renewing your request, he will, in the end, rise and give you as many loaves as you need, yielding to your importunity; what he would not do for you as his friend. 'If, now, selfish men listen to those who thus will not take a denial.

how much more surely will the God of love listen to humble and persistent prayer? Be sure, therefore, that they who, with earnest, believing, souls, seek the supply of spiritual wants for themselves, or others, will assuredly have their petitions heard."

While He was still in Jerusalem and its neighbourhood, the Seventy, having fulfilled their mission, made their way back to Him. Like the Twelve, they returned in great joy at their success, and reported that even the devils had been subject to them, through their Master's name, though they had received no special power over them, such as He had given to the Twelve. It was a moment of calm triumph to Jesus, as the sure anticipation of infinitely greater results hereafter. His spirit caught the contagion of their gladness, and gloom and despondency were forgotten in the vision of the future triumph of the New Kingdom—His one all absorbing thought. But there was a danger lest their very success might injure them. The consideration it had won them might, tend to unworthy pride. It was needful to warn them, and moderate their self confidence.

"You need not wonder," said He, "that Satan is not able to withstand you, Long ere now, I foresaw, in spirit, that he would fall like a lightning-flash from the height of his power, at my coming, and the putting forth of my might. He has fallen, now, to the earth, where his craft and designs can be seen and met. His sway is already broken by the new-begun Kingdom of God. It has struck him down, as it were, from the sky, with its secrecy and sudden surprises; and he is, now, as if seen, and easy to shun. I have broken his sceptre. and made it possible for you to do what you have done., Take heed, therefore, not to think the much of yourselves, as if the success were your own. I now give you far greater power than any you have yet enjoyed You will, hereafter, tread all satanic powers-the scrpents and scorpions of hell-under your feet, as victors tread under foot their conquered foes, and nothing will be suffered to hinder your triumph as my servants. You need not, therefore, fear Satan. At Yet success over the enemy of souls is not that in which you should rejoice most. It may raise pride, and make you too secure. Rather, rejoice that your names, as my disciples, are in the roll of citizens of the Kingdom of Heaven. It is an infinitely greater honour than any outward respect these wonders could bring you." Some sould The murderous outburst, from which Jesus had fled, was pow a thing of the past so that He could once more venture into Jerusalem, and even into the Temple: The spacious porches were a favourite haunt of the afflicted poor, and among these, of a poor man, blind from his birth. Surrounded and followed, as usual, by a number of disciples, Jesus was, one day, passing, when this man attracted His notices of It is not said that He spoke to him, but the mere fact of His paving any heed to him, suggested a question to some of those round Him ..... Rabbi," they asked .... we have been taught that children ate born lame crooked, maimed, blind, or otherwise defective-for iomé si before that he That the pres been th however was sup tion to t in every heredita theories. one of th if prospe tunate g wicked 1 unfortur further b question souls, to existence Whit The neither b blind offe goodness the migh His servi works. this day, his task t coming en the work T'must'b drawn." He mig great less once more ance of S of the hol the office party der from him

It was

ing was d

suffered fr

of this? at some of th

humble and with earnest, themselves, ourhood, the back to Him. ccess, and rethrough their er over them. nent of calm rreater results gladness, and of the future hought. But e them. The thy pride. It fidence. t able to with. he would fall at my coming, v, to the earth. way is already ick him down. surprises; and n his sceptre, Take heed. e success were you have yet the serpents ad under foot a hinder your r. Satan. W. orije in which you ou too secure. in the roll of greater honour un a orione anadi ed, was now a nto Jerusalem, ere a favourite bor man, blund y a number of attracted His ere fact of His t that children defective-for tione sin of their parents, or for some sin committed by themselves before birth. Who sinned; in this case this man or his parentsthat he was born blind?

That there was a strict system of rewards and punishments during the present life, according to the merits or sins of individuals, had been the original doctrine of Jewish theology. It had gradually. however, been modified, though still held by the multitude; and it was superseded in the New Kingdom by the transfer of final retribution to the future world. The Rabbinical theology, sedulously taught in every synagogue, sought to reconcile the contradiction between the hereditary belief and the facts of life, by laboured and unsatisfactory theories." The words were put into the mouth of God Himself, in the of the current apologues so much in vogue, that! " the good man, if prosperous, was so, as the son of a righteous man; while the unfortunate good man suffered as the son of a sinful parent. So, also, the wicked man might be prosperous, if the son of a godly parent; but if unfortunate, it showed that his parents had been sinners." It was further believed that a child might sin before its birth, though it is a question whether there was any general idea of the transmigration of souls, to account for suffering as the punishment of sin in some earlier existence. Worth which when I and the and the date punished as the existence.

The affliction of this man," replied Jesus, "has been caused neither by his own sin, nor by that of his parents; but his being born blind offers an opportunity for the display of the divine power and goodness in his person. It is on such sufferers as he that I must show the mighty works which God has given me, as the Messiah, to do. In His service I must work unweatedly, as 'He, 'my Father, Himself works.' Like Him with 'His work, I cannot intermit mine even on this day, though it be a Sabbath.' I am like one who cannot leave his task till the night comes, when no one can work.' The night is coming erelong to me, when I shall cease from all such labours, as the workman does at the close of day.' As long as I am in the world, I must be the light of men: when I depart, the light will be withdrawn."

He might have opened the eyes of the poor man by a word, but a great lesson was to be taught His enemies. He wished to protest once more against the hypotritical strictness of the Rabbinical observance of Sabbath, which so entirely destroyed the true significance of the holy day. He would show that it was in full accordance with the office of the Messiah, not only Himself, to do what the dominant party denounced as Work, on the Sabbath, but to require it also from him whom He cured. It was the belief, in antiquity, that the saliva of one who was fasting was of benefit to weak eyes, and that clay relieved those who suffered from fumours on the cyclids. It may be that Jesus thought of this: at any rate, stooping to the ground and mixing saliva with some of the dust, He touched the eyes of the blind man with it, and the par

acknow

blind!

caution

Jesus punish

It was.

but mi

contrit

he ente

dead, a

no one

The

"He m have to

fess wh

by givin

this ma

dragooi

sions.

Him so.

that wh

it, you

But the

"I told

do you

become

and awe

got both

they sto

bar. A branded

we are spoke t

Him—i

either p

"You s

my eyes from Go give pov

only the

an insta been he

from th

Unab

The c

Foile

then sent him to wash it off, in the pool of Siloam, filt was impossible that the clay or the water could restore the sysight, but lesus had once more asserted His right to do works of mercy on the Sabbath, in opposition to the narrow pretences of the Rharisess; and the faith of the man himself was put to the test. He, forthwith, did as commanded, and his sight was at once made perfect.

Full of childish delight at the possession of the new amazing sense, the man must have attracted attention, even where the change wrought in his appearance prevented his being recognized. He was well known in the city as a beggar, blind from his birth. Presently, some äsked, doubting their senses, "if this were not he who sat every day begging?" "It is he," said one. "It is some one like him," said others. "I am he," said the man. "How did you get your sight, then?" asked a number at once. The man told them. "Where is this Jesus?" they asked again; but he could not tell. It was clear that another great miracle had been performed by the Teacher whom the authorities denounced; and hence, from whatever motive, the man was taken before them.!! The sight of him might change their feelings towards Jesus, for even they did not, pretend to deny the supernatural power of their hated opponent, though they tried to attribute it to the help of the Prince of devils.

Brought before the dignitaries of the Law and Temple, the man had to repeat the story of his cure. The mirecle could not be denied; but the character of Jesus might, at least, be disordited, for it appeared that He had dared to break the Sabbath both in act and word. "This man is not of God," said some of the Council, "for does not the Law expressly forbid the anointing of the eyes with saliva on the Sabbath, as work? And, besides, no healing is permitted on the Sabbath except when life is in danger."

"How could a man that does wrong, work such miracles?" replied some of the more liberal-minded. God would never give such power to such a person. There is something special that needs looking into, in this case of what you call Sabbath-breaking before you decide so confidently."

They were hopelessly divided, and at last, like Orientals, resolved to get the opinion of the man himself. They asked him, therefore, what he thought of Him who had cured him. "I think Him a prophet," answered the sturdy confessor. But it would never do to admit this, for even the Rabbis owned that a prophet, might dispense with the laws of the Sabbath.

The hostile party in the Council were in a strait, and would fain deny the fact of the miracle altogether. They would, at least, renuire more evidence than the man's own word. Sending the officers for his parents, therefore, they had them brought before them, and asked them.

It was imposht; but, Jesus y, on the Sabisees; and the thwith, did as mazing sense, re, the change ized. He was h. Presently, who sat every one like him," you get your hem. "Where formed by the from whatever of him might not pretend to t, though they mple, the man not be denied; ited, for it apact and word. 'for does not b saliva on the ted on the Sab acles?" replied ive such power is looking into, a you decide so ntals, resolved him, therefore, I think Him a id never do to might dispense and would fain dd, at least, reting the officers fore them, and

1? How comes at no relief, for the parents shrewdly refused to commit themselves beyond the bare acknowledgment that he was their son, and that he had been born. blind." "He is of age-ask himself," added they. Nor was their caution unfustified, for they had heard that if any one acknowledged Jesus as the Messiah he would be to put out of the synagogue." a nunishment involving the direct consequences socially and religiously. It was in fact, the lesser excommunication ; which lasted thirty days. but might be lengthened for continued impenitence, or curtailed by contrition. It shut a person utterly from the synagogue, for even if he entered it, he was reckoned as not present; no mourning for the dead, and no rite of circumcision, could take place in his house; and no one but his wife or child could come within four cubits of him. The discomfited Council could only fall back on the man himself. ""He must," they told him, "take care of himself, else they would have to deal with him. He had better tell the whole truth, and confess what he knew about this Jesus; and thus show that he feared God, by giving Him the glory; for we know very well, said they, that this man is a sinner." But he was neither to be brow beaten nor dragooned, and would not yield an inch to either threats or persuasions. "It is a very strange thing," said he, "that you talk about I can say nothing about His being a sinner; Lonly know Him so. that whereas I was blind, now I see, "histophishur pinted" stonion

The court was not accustomed to be treated with so little deference and awe; their pride and dignity were sadly flustered, and they forgot both in their excitement. With the passionate heat of Orientals, they stooped to insult and wrangle with the numble creature at their bar. As they could get nothing against Jesus from him, they branded him as His disciple—" You are a disciple of this Galileau: we are the disciples of Moses, the man of God: we know that God spoke to Moses, but as for this fellow, we know not who has sent Him—it must have been Beelzebub, at best."

Unabashed, and true hearted, the man was not to be put down by either priest or Rabbi. "Well, this is very strange," retorted he. "You say you don't know who has sent Him, and yet He has opened my eyes! "A man who has done that, must, as you know, have come from God, and be no sinner; for every one knows that God alone can give power to work such a miracle, and He does not hear sinners, but only those who worship Him truly, and do His will. So wonderful an instance of the power of God being granted to any man has never been heard of, as that which has been granted to this Jesus, for, from the beginning of the world, such a thing was never knows, as the rel

The

chanic shephe so mu

panion

the Eas

the dis

drawn to ther.

the mo brave p thirst, o

Orienta the tho Highlan Nothi like Pa herd life 'Tha into a g

is a true

are not who clin "Who tends he

And whi shephero know hi

by a floo

so, while

pretende

this par

whom it

declared

thought,

just deli

nity; I a teachers

so, befor

fold over

my enem

have reje

have not

Jesus.

"T see the opening of the eves of a man horn blind; even by the greatest of the prophets. There is no such thing in any part of the Law or the Prophets. If this man were not from God, He could do nothing. What!" screamed several voices at once. "You, a creature tainted in your very core with sin, before your birth, and born with its miserable punishment on you,-you, an out-and-out worthless wretch,do you venture to teach us? You are excommunicated. And so they cast him out of the synagogue, there and then. The report of this incident soon reached Jesus. The blind bergar was the first confessor in the New Kingdom, and its Lord lost no time in acknowledging and strengthening one who had owned Him fearlessly before the very Council itself. Seeking him out, and telling him He had heard of His grateful fidelity, He added-"You believe on the Son of God, do you not?". The name, as that of Jesus. Himself; had not reached him, but he knew it as one of the titles of the expected Messiah. "Who is He, Lord," asked he, instantly "that I may believe on Him?" "Thou hast seen Him, even how answered Josus, "and it is He who talks with thee." It was chough The healed one had before him the mysterious Being whose power towards himself had shown Him to be "the messenger sent of God,"-Him whom he had only now confessed. "Lord," said he

God, — Hun whom he had only now concessed. . . Lord, said he, "I believe," and rendered Him, forthwith, the worship due to the Messiah God's anointed.

Meanwhile, a crowd had gathered, as the beggar, now seeing not only with bodily but spiritual eyes, threw himself at His feet. It was a moment of deep emotion. Addressing Himself to those around, smong whom, as usual, were some of the ever-watchful Rabhis, Jesus seized the opportunity for a few more words of warning. "I am come into the world," said He, "fan in hand, to separate the wheat from the chaff, and to bring a judgment-like division among men. The pool in spirit who feel their need of divine truth, and mourn their spiritual blindness, are enlightened by me, but those who think they see, and fancy they know the truth, are shown to be blind, and are shut out from my kingdom, to the blindness they have chosen."

"Are we blind, then?" asked some of the Rabbis in the crowd. He had classed them as those who fancied they alone saw, and then pride was roused by His venturing to speak of them, the teachers of the nation, as blind—language so opposed to the servility shown them as a rule.

"Blind?" replied Jesus—" it would be well if you were so, for, in that case, your disbelief in me would not be sinful. It would not show a wilful resistance to divine truth, but only that you had not yet attained the knowledge of it. But since you claim to see, it makes your unbelief criminal, and deepens your guilt, for it is your spiritual pride which leads you to reject me, and thus keeps you from believing, and so receiving pardon."

In the East, as in lonely mountainous districts of our own country, the relation of a shepherd to his flock is very different from the mechanical and indifferent one of some other parts. The longuess of shepherd life in these countries throws man and the creatures he tends so much together—binds them so to each other by a sense of companionship, of dangers shared, and pleasures mutually enjoyed—that the Eastern shepherd, like the shepherd of our own mountains, forgets the distance between himself and his flock, and becomes their friend. Nor is the sense of dependence only on his side. The sheep are drawn to their shepherd as much as he to them. They are all to each other. They share in common the silence and lonely magnificence of the mountains, or the desert. We learn to love that for which we brave peril; and the dangers of torrents, of robbers, of wolves, of thirst, or of straying endear the flock for which they are borne, to the Oriental; as the dangers of winter storms, or mountain mists, and the thousand incidents of pastoral life in wild districts, do with our Highland shepherds.

Highland shepherds. Nothing, therefore, could be more touching, in a pastoral country like Palestine, than images of care or tenderness drawn from shepherd life, and such Jesus now introduced with surpassing beauty, "I have come into the world," said He, in effect, "to gather together into a great fold the new Israel of Goid. He who enters by the door is a true and authorized under-shepherd, but any who enter otherwise are not true leaders and shepherds, but are like thickes and robbers who climb over the wall for evil ends.

"When the frue shepherd thus enters by the door, the sheep he tends hear his voice, and he calls them by name, and leads them out. And when he has led forth all his own, he goes before them, as the shepherds before their sheep, and his flock follow him, because they know his voice. And, as a stranger, who is not the shepherd known by a flock, as soon as the sheep hear his voice, scatters it in alarm, so, while true shepherds are recognized as such by the spiritual Israel, pretenders are known by their words, and shunned." The drift of this parable, or allegory, was sufficiently transparent, but those at whom it was pointed were too self-satisfied to recognize it. They declared it unintelligible.

Jesus, therefore, felt Himself necessitated to repeat the main thought, and thus enforce it on their attention.

"I see," said He, "that you do not understand the parable I have just delivered; let me explain it. I tell you with the utmost solemnity; I am the one only Door of the fold of the flock of God. Other teachers have sought to lead you in your day, but all who have done so before my coming, are like the thieves and robbers who enter a fold over the wall. I frankly tell you I mean the priests and Rabbia, my enemies. They have refused to enter, through Me, the Door, and have rejected me. But the true sheep of God—the spiritual Israelhave not listened to them. Note well, as I repeat it. I, alone, am the ord lost no owned Him t, and telling You believe at of Jesus, the titles of ne, instantly, even how," was chough whose power inger sent of ord," said he, p due to the ow seeing not His feet. It self to those vatchful Rabof warning. I, to separate like division divine truth, me, but those e shown to be hess they have in the crowd. aw, and their he teachers of rvility shown vere so, for, in Tt would not you had not o see, it makes your spiritual u from believ bayer the lists

610

door of the true fold of the flock of God. If any one easer by me into the fold, as a shepherd or teacher and leader of the flock, he, himself, will be saved in the world to come, and preserved to life eternal, and will have free entrance to the sheep here, to lead them out to pasture. He who does not thus enter through me, seeks the sheep only for selfish and evil ends; like the thief, who, avoiding the door, climbs over into the fold, to steal, kill, and destroy. I may call myself, in opposition to such false shepherds, not only the door, but the Good Shepherd, for I have come, not to destroy the flock of God, but to give them true abiding life in my kingdom, and that with all fulness and delight of spiritual joys.

"I am, indeed, the Good Shepherd, for I come to lay down my life for the sheep. But he who is a hireling and not a true shepherd—he who seeks to lead and teach the flock of God, not from love and selfsacrifice, but for gain—the hypocrite who pretends to be a shepherd sees the powers of evil coming like a ravening wolf, to tear the flock by persecutions; and flees, and leaves it to its fate, so that they snatch off many, and scatter all. He thus flees because he is only a hireling, thinking of himself and caring nothing for the sheep.

I, once more, am the Good Shepherd, and no hireling, for I know my sheep, and they know me with such deep communion of love and spiritual life, as there is between my heavenly Father and myself; and I shall presently lay down my life for them. Yet, not for those of Israel alone. I have other sheep, of other lands, and them also I must lead into the one fold, that there may be but one flock, under me, the one shepherd.

"But this triumphal issue can be reached only by my death and resurrection; yet I rejoice to die thus for the sheep, since the love of my heavenly Father rests on me, because I give myself for them. I die freely, of my own choice, a willing self sacrifice. No one takes my life from me, but I lay it down of myself. I am sent forth by my Father, as the Messiah, and, as such, lay down my life and take it again; not to carry out any purpose of my own, but to complete the great plan of salvation God has designed. It is in obedience to His divine command I thus freely give myself up to death, and it is to complete the gracious plan of mercy towards the flock which my death will redeem, that I shall rise again from the grave as their Great Shepherd, to guide them to heaven."

Had the bigoted crowd known the full significance of some of these words, they would have risen against Jesus once more; for the future admission of the heathen into the New Kingdom of God was more distinctly intimated than ever before. As the end of His work drew nearer, the narrow prejudices even of the Twelve were ever more constantly kept in view, and the thought that the kingdom He was founding must embrace all nations, daily enforced. But neither this wide catholicity, which a Jew would have held as Treason to his nation, nor the mysterious allusions to His own future.

n the cr h words h doubting h so ben h blind h a ban -the ban -the ban -the ban -the ban were r

was n from t

cembe for the Templ bawas he Mas Jesu copport I of the To He ha

nearly

finale

to par

month

orcin con

wand be

anot Fil

and the

arthusia

speak

e cater by me the flock, he, served to life , to lead them me, seeks the , avoiding the y. I may call the door, but flock of God, I that with all dow a my life shepherd—he love and selfe a shepherd tear the flock at they snatch mly a bireling, ng, for I know on of love and or and myself; , not for those and them also I are flock, under my death and ace the love of for them. I No one takes nt forth by my fe and take it o complete the edience to His th, and it is to ck which my grave as their

f some of these for the future God was more His work drew ere ever more gdom He was d have held as is own future, were rightly understood. The old slander that "He had a devil, and was mad in consequence, and not worthy to be listened to," rose from the lips of some, and the best that even the most liberal among the crowd could say, was the negative praise—"These are not the words of one who is possessed." Besides, though a devil might, doubtless, work some miracles through man as its instrument, it was impossible to believe that it either would or could work one so beneficest and stupendous as the opening of the eyes of the born blind.

sill an avoid of a second temperature of the second of the

It was now near the end of Khislev—the cold month—equivalent to part of our November and December. The twenty fifth of the month, which, according to Wieseler, fall, this year, on the 20th December, was, with the next seven days, a time of universal rejoicing: for the Dedication Festival, in commemoration of the renewal of the Temple worship, after its suspension under Antiochus Epiphanes, was held through the week;

Jesus, ever pleased to mingle in innocent joys, and glad to seize the opportunity for proclaiming the New Kingdom, which the gatherings of the season afforded, once more returned to Jerusalem to attend it. The had been in the neighbourhood since the Feast of Tabernacles, nearly three months before, and this visit would be the last, till His final entry, to die

The weather had been wet and rough, so that He was fain to avail Himself, like the crowds, of the shelter of the arcade running along the cust side of the Temple enclosure; known as Solomon's porch, from a fragment of the first Temple, left standing by Nebuchadnezzar.

The rain drove the people from the open courts, and Jesus, like others, was in the Porch, apparently without His disciples. The time was fitted to wake the old temptation of ambition, had it had any charms. How easily might He eclipse the hero of all this rejoicing, and by His supernatural power achieve victorics, compared with which those of Judas Maccabaus would be nothing! But He had far nobler aims: The Pharisaic party, themselves, may have had such secret thoughts on The Pharisaic party, themselves, may have had such secret thoughts on connection with Him. Be this as it may, they now suddenly came and began to ask, Him if He would not, at last, relieve their minds by some direct and express declaration whether He were the Messiah or a not. It may be, He could read in their looks that He needed only to speak a word to have their support, and He knew that both they and the nation, at such a time, were ready to fiame into universal enables and the nation, at such a time, were ready to fiame into universal enables and the maximum for any leader who would undertake to lead them against Rome, But carthly ambition had no attractions for His purespirit. "We have weited long and anxiously," said they, "for some decisive word. If Thou art the Messiah, tell us openly! "I have already told you," answered Jesus, "both by the witness of the miracles I have done in my Father's name, and in words; but you have not believed me, because, as I said not long ago, you are not my disciples, or, as I love to call them, my sheep. If you had been, you would have believed in me. You may, yourselves, see that you are not of my flock, for those who are so listen to my voice, and I know them, and they follow me, as sheep know and listen to the voice. of their shepherd, and are known by him, and follow him. Nothing indeed, can be more close and abiding than my relations to them, for I lead them not to mere earthly good, but give them eternal life, and am their shepherd hereafter as well, as here; taking care that they shall never perish, and that no one, even beyond death, shall snatchthem out of my hand. Moreover, being in my hand, they are, in, effect, in that of my Father, for He is ever with me, and works by me. He gave them to me at first, and He still guards them, nor can any one snatch them from His hands, for He is greater than all the powers of earth and hell. Wonder not that I speak of their being/ both in my Father's hands and in mine, for I and the Father are One." The excitable, fanatical, crowd had listened patiently till the last words, which seemed the most audacious blasphemy-a claim of essential onchess with the Almighty. In a moment they were once more scattered in search of stones, with which to kill Him, for what they deemed His crime, and presently gathered round Him again with them, to fell Him to the earth. But Jesus remained undismayed. "I have done many great works of mercy," said He, calmly, "which show that the Father is with me, because they could only come from the the presence of His power. They are enough to show you that He thinks me no blasphemer. For which of these mighty works will you stone me?"

"We would not think of stoning Thee for a good work," answered the crowd; "it is for your blasphemy—that you, a man, should make yourself God."

"Is it not written in your Law," replied Jesus, "of the rulers of Israel, the representatives and earthly embodiments of the majesty of Jehovah, your invisible King, 'I said ye are gods?' If God Himself called them gods, to whon this utterance of His came, —and you cannot deny the authority of Scripture, —how can you say of me, whom the Father has consecrated to a far higher office than ruler, or even prophet—to that of Messiah; and whom He has not only thus set apart to this great office, but sent into the world clothed with the mighty powers I have shown, and the fulness of grave and truth you now see in me, —that I blaspheme, because I have said I am God's Son? Your unbelief in me, which is the ground of the charge, v prove me then beli learn and me, and

They 1 stantly, 1 lead Him into the Jerusa had been measure The eccl cepting I ily more all attem remained which Jo hopeful pérhaps a Here. New Kir crowds of ciples. but his te was grea the word show Hir the postli The au family of been in 1 from the still toucl Lazarus.-The mes with then on'a diffe He dismi really end by disclos difference in obedies The m other for disappoin

Martha ar

His pure

for some de-

y the witness

words; but

, you are not

u had been,

voice, and I n to the voice

a. Nothing to them, for

rnal life, and

ire that they shall snatch-

they are, in

ind works by

hem, nor can

r than all the

of their being her are One."

till the last

-a claim of

ev were once

lim, for what

m again with

smayed. "I

y come from }

you that He

y works will

man, should

the majesty

If God Him-

ne,—and you say of me,— e than ruler, b

has not only

orld clothed

e I thave said

hess of grace

round of the

the rulers of

d) zodonot iluz k," answered I

mly, "which

see that you

The sti

charge, would have some excuse if I did not perform such works as prove me to have been sent by my Father. But It I do such works, then believe them, if you will not believe me; that you may thus learn and know that what I have said is true—that the Father is in me, and I in the Father."

They had waited for a retractation, but had heard a defence. Instantly, hands were thrust out on every side, to lay hold on Him, and lead Him outside the Temple to stone Him; but He shrank back into the crowd, and passing through it, escuped.

Jerusalem and Judea were evidently closed against Him, as Galilee had been for some time past. There seemed only one district in any measure safe, —the half-heathen territory of Perea, across the Jordan. The ecclesiastical authorities and the people at large, instead of ac cepting Him, and the spiritual salvation He offered, had become stealily more obdurate and hostile. It was necessary at last to give up all attempts to win them, and to retire, for the short time that yet remained to Him, to this safer district. He chose the part of it in which John had begun his ministrations; perhaps in hopes of a more hopeful soil, from the cherished remembrance of His predecessor; perhaps as a spot sacred to holy associations of His own.

Here, with His wonted earnestness, He once more proclaimed the New Kingdom, and was cheered by a last flicker of success; for crowds once more resorted to Him, many of whom became His disciples. ""John," said they, "did no miracles, great though he was, but his testimony to this Man, who was to come after him, —that He was greater than himself, —is true; for not only does He teach us the words of truth; He confirms them by mighty wonders, which show Him to be the Messiah." Jesus was reaping, as Bengel says; the posthumous fruit of the Baptist's work.

The quiet retreat of Perea was, however, soon to be broken. The family of Bethany, to whom Jesus owed so many happy hours, had been in health when He left, but a message suddenly reached Him from the two sisters. Mary and Martha, the very simplicity of which still touches the heart: "Lord, he whom Thou lovest, --our brother Lazarus,-is sick." His love they felt would need nothing more. The messengers doubtless expected that He would have returned with them at once, but He saw things in a higher light, and moved on a different spiritual plane. Instead of going with them therefore, He dismissed them with the intimation that the sickness would not really end in deatli; but would be overruled by God to His own glory, by disclosing that of His Son-Jesus Himself. It was from no indifference that He thus delayed, though it left His friends to bitter disappointment, and Himself to the suspicion of neglect. " "He loved Martha and her sister, and Lazarus," says John. But still He delayed, in obedience to a higher counsel than man's.

The messengers had taken a day to come, and it would take another for Jesus to go to Bethany, but though He knew this, He remained two days more, in the place where the said nows had reached Him. On the third day, however, He surprised His disciple, who had, fancied that He hesitated from fear of His enemics, by telling them that He was about to return to Judea.

"The Rabbis and priests were seeking only the other day to stone Thee, Rabbi," said they in amazement—"and art Thon really going back into the very jaws of danger?"

"The time allotted me by God for my work," reptied Jesus, "in not yet, done, and so long as it lasts no one can harm me. The time appointed for a man, is like the bours of light given to a traveller for his journey. There is no fear of his stumbling in the day, because he sees the sun; but as he stumbles when it has set, so man, though he walk safely till the appointed time ends, can do so no longer when it is over. Till mine is over, I am safe."

Pausing a few minutes. He went on to tell them why He was going to Bethany, in spite of all danger. "Our friend Lazarus," said He "has fallen askep, but I go that I may awake him out of sleep." Unwilling to expose themselves or their Master to unnecessary peril, their wishes read in these words a cause for remaining where they were. "To sleep is good for the sick," said they, thinking He spoke of natural sleep. But their hopes were speedily dashed. "Lazarus," said He, now openly, "is dead, and I am glad for your sakes, that I was not there to heal him from mere sickness. The far greater proof of my divine glory, which you will see in my raising him from the grave, would not have been given, and thus you would have lost the aid to still firmer trust in me, which is so necessary now I am so soon to leave you."

Such words might have at once quieted their fears and kindled their zeal, but they still saw in His return to Judea, only a journey to His own death. Thomas the Twin, at last broke shence—"It becomes us to do all that our Master commands, even when He asks us to risk our lives. Let us go with Him, that we may show our love and fidelity by dying with Him." A true hearted but sad man!

It is clear that Jesus feared violence, for as He approached Beth any, He lingered outside the village, as if to learn how matters stood before venturing farther. Nor was it without cause, for notwillstanding their friendship with Jesus, the family of Lazarus, moving in good society as they did, had many friends and connections amongst those hostile to him, and a number of these had come to pay the customary visit of condolence to the two sisters.

The four days since the death had been sad ones in the little household. They had fasted all the day after it, and had since eaten nothing but an occasional egg, or some lentiles; for that was the only food allowed mourners, for the first seven days. The corpse, which had had a lamp burning beside it from the moment of death, as a symbol of the immortality of the soul, had been borne to the grave after a few hours, an egg had been broken as a symbol of mortality; and the cotta been such the two and frie attend (a chauted in long prothe way) the berea ye, comfr Come to part in th

Once i even in t the earth. mourners till the be followed of the mo for four. rusalem t Word w and, forth the two s sitting, at veiled, to notheard "Lord. here, my did He th and she ad you your the dead.' Your uons, word higher the at the last and had J vague an say, with Jesus had

It was w to turn he uttered the to millions and morta had reached lisciples, who lies, by telling

r day to stone n really going ed Jesus, "is he. The time a traveller for e day, because man, though o longer when

He was going trus," said He, out of sleep." eccessary peril, ng where they king He spoke "Lazarus," ir sakes, that I r greater procf him from the d have lost the y I am so soop a and kindled only a journey e slience—"li when He ash show our love sad man!" proached Bethmatters stood, e, for notwillizarus, moving ctions amongst to pay the cu-

he little house ice eaten noth s the only food nse, which had th, as a symbol grave after a mortality: and

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

Once more in their desolate home, the sisters, with veiled heads, even in their own chamber, and with unsandaled feet, sat down on the earth, in the midst of a circle of at least ten friends or professional mourners; with rent clothes and dust on their heads. None spoke till the bereaved ones had flore so, but every sentence of theirs was followed by some word of sympathy and comfort, and by the waits of the mourners. And thus it would be for seven days, and had been for four, before Jesus arrived, for many friends had come from Jeusalem to comfort the two sisters. And house, that Jesus had come, and, forthwith, Martha, true to her character as the more active of the two sisters, rose from the ground, where she and Mary had been sitting, and went out, wrapped in her mourning dress and deeply veiled, to go to Him; but Mary remained where she was, for she had not heard the good news.

"Lord," said Martha when she saw Him, "if Thou hadst been here, my brother would not have died," as if she thought, "Why did He then delay?" But as she looked at Him her faith revived, and she added, "Net though he be dead. I know that God will grant you your utmost prayer, even if it be to receive back Lazarus from the dead," monormal and she added at the second state that the second state of the second state of the second state.

"Your brother will rise again," replied Jesus, in designedly ambiguous words, to lead Martha's faith from mere personal interest to higher thoughts. Martha understood Him only of the resurrection at the last day, in which she felt assured Lazarus would have part, and had hoped for something so much nearer and greater, that so vague an answer disappointed her. She could only find words to say, with sad resignation, that "she know that he would rise," as Jesus had seemed to say; " at the last day."

It was well she answered thus, for Jesus presently used her words to turn her from more personal interests, to Himself, and, in doing so, uttered that wondrous sentence which has carried hope and triumph to millions of the dying and the bereaved, and will do so while time and mortality endure. I. I. and no other but I am the Resur-

11 Yea, Lord, "sobbed out the stricken heart, ant I believe that Then art the King-Messiah, the Son of God, who was to come into the world;" and having made this great confession, she want away to call her sister secretly, for fear of those hostile to Him among her own friends. Mary, whispered she ft the Teacher is here, and calls for thee:" She would not mention the name for caution ..... It was enough a The next instant Mary was on the road to Jesus who was still cutside the village, in the place where Martha had met Him. The way to the grave was in that direction, and the friends. concluding she had gone thither to weep, kindly rose and followed her that she might not be left to her lonely grief. . Jesus could not lorger remain hidden, but the presence of hostile witnesses confirmed the more strikingly the great miracle that was to follow, during autob Falling in tears at the feet of Jesus, and embracing them. Mary full heart overflowed in the same lament as her sister's for they had often spoken the same words to each other; "Lord, if Thou hads been there, my brother had not died." The presence of her friends who she knew were not friends of His, hindered more." It was a moment fitted to move even a strong heart, for those around, with true Oriental demonstrativeness, wept and lamented aloud, along with Mary But the sight of men who were filled with the bitterest enmity to Himself, joining in lamentations with Mary. His true-hearted friend —men with no sympathy for the highest goodness, but ready to chase it, in His person, from the earth, because, it condemned their cold re-was in their hearts—roused His indignation, so that He visibly shud dered with emotion, and had to restrain Himself by an earnest effort. Yet the cloud of righteous anger passed off in a moment, and sorrow. for His friend, and for the grief of the loved one at His feet, asserted itself. Silent tears trickled down His cheeks, for, though He was the Son of God, He was no less truly than ourselves a man, moved by the sight of human sorrow signature of the sub- unit for work the sight of human sorrow sorrow and the sub-The group of mourners were variously affected; the most kindy remarking how dearly He must have loved the dead man; that He should now weep so at His death But the more malicious and bardened only saw in His tears a welcome proof of His belplesnes TO SHOLD IN THE ALL IN THE IS A STATE STORE OF for had it of his ill man must come to B sick friend row, He re Like mo recess cut fitted into : 'In' this 'I loose linen '' Take a But' Mar words, 'for hastening 't hastening t taken away and she wo gentle reprite His will, thou would they took a

Jesus had with the Fa might be r heaven. He thank thee me always, I thank The may be con am'assured) What foll when He h COME FORT foot with gr napkin-(th death). Jes and he who returned in from which Of the aft know nothi respecting hi when he was atter; to hav of Jerusaler were said to

616

he were dend, mont me shull He He alive for everwill yet con. e resurrection. o will ontor op. still alive, and re death of the nnL Believest nited data warned lieve that Then come into the went away to lim among her er is here, and cautionainored e road to Jesus Martha had met nd the friends se and followed Jeaus could no esses confirmed Jeduko heini iWc ag them, Marya ris for they had , if Thou hadst of her friends. nore." It was a ae around, with loud, along with bitterest enmily e-hearted friend t ready to chase ed their cold resuch malignity He visibly shud n earnest effort. ent, and sortow. His feet, asserted ugh He was the man, moved by now nothing. to the most kindly doman: that He malicious and His helplessnes is that bell of the range though no were the motion wou the Lite. for had it been otherwise; could He not as well have cured Lazarus of his illness as give sight to the blind?" The healing of the blind man must surely have been a cheat; for certainly He would have come to Bethany sooner, had He been able to do anything for His sick friend. The muttered words reached the cars of Jesus, and mused anew His indignation; and thus, with mingled anger and sorlike most graves in the limestone districts of Palestine, it was a recess cut in the side of a natural cave, and closed by a huge stone fited into a groove. allow a all as has a second a second a stanting ficher

In this gloomy niche lay Lazarus, swathed from head to foot in loose linen wrappings, and now four days dead. Heleball the Mende and "Take away the stone," said Jusus till' dhent hand har "dilner-

But Martha with her wonted matter of fact nature, shrank at the words, for she thought of the awful spectacle of her brother, now hastening to corruption. Christ's words about the resurrection had uken away any hope of seeing Lazarus alive again till the great day, and she would rather the sacred remains were left undisturbed. A centle reproof from Jesus was, however, enough to let her leave Him His will. Did not I send word to thee by thy messenger that if they wouldst only believe thou shouldst see the glory of God?" So they took away the stone of the state of the store of the state to the

Jesus had already, in the stillness of His own breast, communed with the Father, and knew, in Himself that His prayer that Lazards might be restored to life had been heard. [Lifting up His eyes to]. heaven. He now uttered His thanks that it had been so. "Father, I. thank thee that Thou hast heard me-yet I knew that Thou hearest me always, for Thy will is ever mine, and mine is ever Thine. But I thank Thee thus, for the sake of those who stand around, that they may be convinced that what I do is done in Thy power, and that I an assuredly sent forth from Thee." od a viol 10 1 his ant full this

What followed is best given in the words of St. John. MAnd when He had thus spoken. He cried with a loud voice, LAZARUS, come FORTH! And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave-clothes; and his face had been bound about with a napkin (that had tied up his jaw four days before, when it fell, in deatily. Jesus saith unto them. Loose him, and let him go (home):" and he who had been dead, now freed from his grave-clothes, himself nturned in the fulness of youthful strength and health to the cottage which he had been carried forth on a bier four days before. Of the after history of Lazarus, with one momentary exception, we know nothing, for none of the numerous traditions and legends. respecting him are reliable. He is said to have been thirty years old when he was raised from the dead, and to have lived for thirty years ater; to have been of royal descent; to have owned a whole quarter of Isrusalem, and to have been, by profession, a soldier. His bones were said to have been found in the year A.D. 890, with those of Mary

Magdalene, in the island of Cyprust and the remains thus honoured were carried to Constantinople. Other traditions take him to Marseilles, and speak of him as the first Christian Bishop of that city. But the very extravagance of these legends shows their worthlessness as history. The results of the miracle were momentous to Jesus Himself. Many of the party of the Rabbis who had come to comfort the sisters, found themselves constrained to believe in one whose claims were attested by an act so transcendent, and so indisputable. But some justified all that Jesus had said of their malignity by not only shutting their eyes to what they were determined not to admit, but by playing the informer to the ecclesiastical authorities.

The great ecclesiastical court of the nation, known in the Talmud as the "Sanhedrim," had been in abevance for many years, for there is no trace of it during the whole period of the Herods, or of the Romans. The name, indeed, occurs in the New Testament, but it is simply as the Greek word for "an assembly," which was adopted by the Rabbis, at a later period. Herod had broken up the great Rab binical council, and, henceforth, the only authorities recognized as the fountains of Jewish Law were the schools of such Rabbis as Hild and Schammai, There was no such thing as a legal Jewish court. which had power to enforce its decisions. The authority granted to the leading schools was only a tribute of confidence in their sound ness and wisdom. Hence, in the days of Christ, there was no lead Jewish court in existence, and the criminal processes mentioned in connection with Him, were only acts of assemblies which the him priest for the time, the only representative of the old Theocracy reognized by the supreme Roman authority, called together in any haste, informally, and which acted by no judicial rules of procedure. such an illegal gathering was summoned by the Sadducean chie priests and the leading Pharisaic Rabbis, to discuss what should he done respecting Jesus, now that the incontestable fact of the resur rection of Lazarus had crowned all His preceding miracles. Have ing no idea of a Messiah apart from political revolution, to be into gurated by Him, it seemed likely that, if something were not done put Him out of the way, the excitement of the people, through Hi miracles, would become irresistible, and lead to a national rising fiercer even than that of Judas the Galilæan. To the, popular party represented by the Pharisees present, this would be no undesirable issue; but the courtly Sadducees shrank from any disturbance, fer ing that, in the end, the Romans would crush it with their legion and, as a punishment, abolish the hierarchical constitution, which and them their wealth and position: and with it, the ecclesiastical and civil laws which flattered the nation with an illusory independence The Temple, and all the far-reaching vested interests bound with it, had long existed only on sufferance, and would at once per in the storm of a national insurrection; and the nation, stripped of

Rising irresolute his opinio I "You k much que is expedied that this o struction t for in tha tome with dence by a There a distinct way to sav and State. might well untary ext the suprem From this opportunit kept stead enemies, th Their office any momen Himself city called been in the between th known as E whole caste Dead Sea, thought by privacy, an beyond, Only a fe to spend as the him to Marop of that city, in worthlessness

Jeaus Himself. mfort the sisters, nose claims were able. But some by not only shutto admit, but, by n in the Talmud y years, for there lerods, or of the stament, but it is was adopted by p the great Rab es recognized as h Rabbis as Hillel al Jewish court. hority granted to e in their soundrere was no legal ses mentioned in s which the high ld Theocracy rectogether in angr les of procedure. Sadducean chief s what should be fact of the resurmiracles. Hav ution, to be insu were not done to ople, through Hi a national rising he popular party be, no undesirable disturbance, fer vith their, legions ution, which gave ecclesiastical and v independence aterests bound p buld at once peris on, stripped of it beal laws, so vital to a theocracy, would be secularized into a part of Rome, with the hated imperial heathen law, instead of the laws of God and the Rabbia. The acting high priest at this time was Joseph Caiaphas. He had been appointed by the procurator Valerius Gratus, shortly before that Governor left the province, in A.D. 25-when Jesus was about twenty years of age: and he continued to hold his great office till the year A.D. 26, when he was removed by the proconsul Vitellius, shortly after the recall of Pilate. He was, in every way, a creature of the Romans, and, as such, received little respect from the hation, though his dignity secured him official authority.

Rising in the meeting, which had been hitherto very divided, and presolute as to the wisest course to be taken, Calaphas begged to give his opinion - and relations and a take a take the sale activity shares tools an "You know nothing at all," said he, "else you would not have so much questioning and discussing. You have not considered that it is expedient for you, in view of your interests as priests and Rabbis, that this one man should die, to save Israel, as such, from the destruction that threatens it; if you let Him stir up a Messianic revolt; for in that case, the whole nation must perish. The Romans will tome with their legions and close our Temple, annul our independence by abolishing our laws, and waste us with fire and sword." There could be no misconception of words so plain. They were a distinct advice to those present to put Jesus to death, as the one way to save themselves, and maintain things as they were in Church and State." Words so momentous, for they decided the fate of Jesus, night well seem to St. John no mere human atterance, but the involuntary expression through unworthy lips, of the near approach of the supreme act in the divine plan of mercy to mankind shink about From that day the death of Jesus was only a question of time and opportunity W Henceforth, the Jewish primate and his suffragans kept steadily in view-in concert with their hereditary and deadly enemies, the Rabbis-the arrest of Jesus, and His subsequent death. Their officers, or any one hostile to Him, might apprehend Him at my moment. It was clearly no longer possible for Him to show Himself openly, and He, therefore, retired with His disciples to a city called Ephraim, now difficult of identification. It seems to have been in the wild uncultivated hill-country, north-east of Jerusalem, between the central towns and the Jordan valley. A village now mown as El Taivibeh, on a conical hill; commanding a view of the whole eastern slope of the country, the valley of the Jordan, and the Dead Sea, though only sixteen miles from Jerusalem, has been thought by Dr. Robinson the site. It answers at least in its secluded privacy, and the ready access it offers to the still wilder regions beyond. Realistic being and an area to obtain the same of statistical fi Only a few weeks remained of our Saviour's life, and these He had wspend as a fugitive, to whom no place was safe. He had, however, the joy of seeing the old enthusiasm of the multitudes revived, for Matthew and Mark both speak of the vast numbers who followed Him in this closing period, attracted, doubtless, more by the fame of His past miracles, and by continuous displays of the same supernatu. ral power towards the diseased of every kind, than by His teaching Yet there must have been not a few "sheep" in such vast gatherings The clouds were parting as the day closed, and were being lighted with sunset colours, before the night darkened all.

From Ephraim He soon passed over the Jordan, to what, for the moment, seemed a safer retreat. The lesser excommunication, which had driven Him from the synagogues of Galilee and Judea, had perhaps expired, or the bann may not have been effective in Perea; for He once more had access to these assemblies on the Sabbaths, and was allowed, as before, to teach the people, who were thus most easily reached. It was impossible, however, that He could long avoid collision with some or other of the countless Rabbinical laws, which fettered every movement of free spiritual life, and, as in the past the fanatical Sabbath laws offered the first occasions of trouble. Two instances are recorded by St. Luke.

As He was teaching on a Sabbath in the synagogue of one of the outlying towns of Perea-half Jewish, half heathen-He noticed in the audience, behind the lattice which separated the women from the men. a poor creature drawn together by a rheumatic affection, which had bowed her frame so terribly that she could not raise herself erect. As she painfully struggled into her place, Jesus saw her, and doubt less read, in her supplicating looks, and in the very fact that she had come to the House of God in spite of such physical infirmity, an evidence that she was a fit subject for His pitying help. Rising, and calling across the congregation to her, the welcome words fell on her instantaneous. In a moment she was once more straight and whole, after eighteen years of deformity, and her irrepressible thanks to God for the mercy vouchsafed her, rang through the synagogue, and made, a great commotion.

The head of the congregation, however, was a cold Rabbinical pedant. Intensely professional, he could see nothing but an irregu larity. It was the Sabbath day, and the Rabbis had decided that no cure was lawful on the Sabbath except where death was imminent. "Silence," cried he, indignantly, "there are six days in which men ought to work; it would be much more becoming if this person were to remember that; and if you, for your part, want to be healed by Him, see that you come on a week day, so that He have no excuse for breaking the holy Sabbath, by doing the work of curing you on it reff Indignation finshed from the eyes of Jesus, and turning to the speaker, He denounced his heartless formalism, so utterly opposed to the true religion of which He was the official representative. "You manger, w water them ham, and, greater won Sabbath, fr eighteen ye There con narty were dience. Th 'A second leading Pha as the day bis, -with those in aut. vited to met a man, ill v others who about. In h might attrac for fear of t of His own at him, Jesu before, in si bath, or is i not, but few sentiment ru a virtual affi as the public fore, to the fused and ba

appeal simila healed short even only his

him out, on a

nothing furth

The couch

o as to form

ow the serva

eckoned the

mectively, an ame way, fr

t were, in

two. Th

and the w said He

daily condu

es revived, fer who followed by the fame of ame supernatu. It is teaching ast gatherings being lighted o what, for the nication, which Judea, had pere in Perea; for bbaths, and was iu; most easily long avoid colcal laws, which in the past, the trouble. Two te of one of the -He noticed in vomen from the affection, which ise herself erect, her, and doubtact that she had affirmity, an evip. Rising, and, rords fell on her "The cure was ight and whole, le thanks to God rogue, and made cold Rabbinical g but an irregu decided that no h was imminent s in which men this person wer to be healed by have no excuse s of curing you turning to the utterly opposed entative. You and the whole class who think with you, are hypocritical actors," and the whole class who think with you, are hypocritical actors," all He; "your words prove it, for they are contradicted by your daily conduct." Do you not loose your asses, or your oxen, from the manger, where they are tied, on the Sabbath, and lead them away to water them? And if so, ought not this woman, a daughter of Abraham, and, as such, one of God's own people—who is of unspeakably, greater worth than any ox or ass, to be loosed to day, hough it be the Subbath, from this bond, with which Satan has chained her, for now, eighteen years?"

There could be no reply to such a vindication. The ruler and his party were silenced, and put to shame before the quick-witted audence. The worship of the letter had received another deadly blow. "A second incident, very similar, occurred soon after. One of the leading Pharisees had invited Jesus to dine with him on the Sabbath. is the day specially devoted to social entertainments by the Rabhis, with the sinister design of watching Him and reporting to hose in authority. A number of Rabbis and Pharisees had been inrited to meet Him, but they had not yet lain down to their meal, when a man, ill with dropsy, entered the open door of the house, with others who dropped in, with Oriental freedom, to look on, and stand about. In his case, no doubt, the motive of his coming was that he might attract the notice of Jesus. He was afraid; however, to speak, for fear of those present, and patiently waited to see if Jesus would. of His own accord, cure him. He had not long to wait. Looking a him, Jesus turned to the guests with the question He had asked hefore, in similar circumstances +"Is it lawful to heal on the Sabhath, or is it not?" In their consciences they could not say it was not, but few men have the courage of their opinions, when current enument runs the other way; so they were silent. But silence was avirtual affirmative, for, if it were wrong, it was their bounden duty, as the public guardians of religion, to say so." Passing over, therefore, to the swollen and wretched being, He put His hand on him; cued him at once, and sent him away. Then, turning to the confused and baffied company, He completed their discomuture by an appeal similar to that which He had made in the case of the woman healed shortly before. "Which of you, let me ask, if his son, or even only his cx, had fallen into a pit, would not immediately draw in out, on discovering it even on the Sabbath?" No wonder that pothing further was said on the subject without out, and, inf and easy orac The couches on which the guests reclined at meals were arranged as to form three sides of a square, the fourth being left open to alw the servants to bring in the dishes. The right-hand couch was rekoned the highest, and the others, the middle, and the lowest, repectively, and the places on each couch were distinguished in the ame way, from the fact that the guest who reclined with his head, it were, in the bosom of him behind, seemed to be the lower of he two. The highest place on the highest couch, was, thus, the

"c. ief place," and human nature, the same in all ages, inevitably made it be eagerly coveted, and as precedence was marked by dis tance from it, there was an almost equal anxiety to get as near it as With the vanity and self-righteousness of a moribund possible. caste, there was no little scheming among the Rabbis for the best place, and much anxiety on the part of the host not to give offence: for to place a Rabbi below any one not a Rabbi, or below a fellow Rabbi of lower standing, or younger, was an unpardonable affront and a discredit to religion itself. The intolerable pride that had made one of their order; in the days of Alexander Jannæus, seat him. self between Alexander and his queen, on the ground that "wisdom" made its scholars sit among princes, remained unchanged. Such. petty ambition, so unworthy in public teachers of morals and relig. ion, and so entirely in contrast with His own instructions to His dis ciples, to seek no distinction but that of the deepest humility, did not fail to strike the GREAT GUEST, who had calmly taken the place as signed Him. Addressing the company-"You are wrong," said He " in revealing your wishes, and obtruding your self-assertion in such a way. Let me counsel you how to act. If invited to a marriage feast never take the chief place on the couches, lest some one of higher standing for learning or piety come, and your bost ask you to go down to a lower place, to make room for the more honoured guest Take, rather, the lowest place, when you enter, that your host, when he comes in, may invite you to take a higher, and thus honour you before all. Pride is its own punishment, in this, as in far graver matters, for, whether before God or man, he who exalts himself will be humbled, and he who humbles himself will be exalted."

It was an old custom in Israel to invite the poorer neighbours to be special meals on the consecrated flesh of offerings not used at the altar, and on similar half-religious occasions, to brighten their povery for the moment, by kindly hospitality. This beautiful usage was a the time of Jesus, among the things of the past, for the priest of Rabbi of His day would have trembled at the thought of being defiled by contact with people whose position made it impossible be as scrupulous in the observance of the endless legal injunction demanded, as themselves.

The meal at which Jesus was now present was very possibly on to which, in old times, such very different guests would have been asked. Or, it may be, the luxury displayed drew the attention a one so simple in His habits. Not a few neighbours, in very different circumstances from the guests, had, likely entered, to look on an listen, but caste looked at them askance, as if they were an inferin race. Noticing this, our Lord addressed Eimself to the host in friendly way.

"Have you ever thought what hospitality would yield you no pleasure? When you wish on special occasions to give a dinner supper, let me tell you what you would always look back upon wh the pures or kinsme and this v recompen invite the vou enter and if you Himself w One of resurrectio raised the ed to follo eat bread a rection. I Thou hast to come." This ren which mus pany. Th and their u abhorrent ious and m would neve been offered He was fre held back, equal terms specially ne prominent, pared for a therefore, n tions of the God, were t the religion for the WHO tory of the derstand Hi "A certai made a gro bey might nom other. came, he sen my that all v had had amp rd unconce ment, each i pought a fiel ages, inevitably marked by dis. get as near it as of a moribund bis for the best to give offence; below a fellow donable affront. pride that had nnæus, seat himthat "wisdom" changed. Such norals and religtions to His disumility, did not ken the place aswrong," said He, assertion in such a marriage feast, ne one of higher st ask you to go honoured guest. your host, when thus honour you as in far graver xalts himself will salted." neighbours to the neighbours to de not used at the nten their povery iful usage was h for the priest of hought of being le it impossible to legal injunction very possibly one would have been the attention of in very different d, to look on an vere an inferior to the host in d yield you mos o give a dinner k back upon with the purest joy. Do not invite your rich friends to it, or your family or kinsmen, or well-to-do neighbours. They will invite you in return. and this will destroy the worth of your act, for which you expect a recompense from God at the resurrection. Instead of such guests. invite the poor, the hungry, the lame, the maimed, and the blind. If rou entertain such, they will reward you richly by their gratitude. and if you have invited them from an honest heart, as a duty, God Himself will remember it at the resurrection of the righteous. One of the guests had listened attentively. The mention of the resurrection of the righteous, naturally, under the circumstances, raised the thought of the heavenly banquet which the Rabbis expected to follow that event. ""Blessed are those," said he, "who shall eat bread at the great feast in the Kingdom of God. after the resurrection. It would, indeed, be well to give such entertainments as Thou hast named, which would be thus so richly repaid in the world to come."

This remark gave Jesus an opportunity of delivering a parable which must have run terribly counter to the prejudices of the company. The spirit of caste that prevailed in the hierarchical party, and their utter want of sympathy for the down-trodden masses, were abhorrent to His whole nature. It was daily clearer that the religjous and moral impulse by which He was to revolutionize the world. would never come from Israel as a nation. The opportunity had been offered and even pressed, but it had been rejected, and hence He was free to proclaim the great truth, which, for a time, He had held back, that the Heathen, as well as the Jew, was invited, on equal terms, to the privileges of the New Kingdom of God. It was specially necessary in these last months of His life to make this nominent, that the minds of the disciples, above all, might be prepared for a revolution of thought so momentous and signal. He. herefore, now, took every opportunity of showing that the invitations of the New Kingdom, in fulfilment of the eternal purpose of God, were to be addressed as freely to heathen as to Israel, and that the religion He was founding was one of spirit, and truth, and liberty, for the WHOLE WORLD. This revelation, so transcendent in the hisbry of the race. He once more disclosed, had they been able to unterstand Him, at the Pharisee's table. "A certain man," said He, as if in answer to the last speaker,

"A certain man," said He, as if in answer to the last speaker, "made a great supper, and invited many guests; doing so early, that they might have ample time to prepare, and keep themselves free nom other engagements. When the hour fixed for the banquet mane, he sent his servant—as is usual—once more to those invited, to say that all was ready, and to pray them to come. But though they had had ample time to make all arrangements, they were still alike busy and had ample time to make all arrangements, they were still alike busy and unconcerned about the invitation, and, as if by common agreement, each in turn excused himself from accepting it. 'I have just wught a field,' said one, 'and must go and see it—I beg your master will hold me excused '--- and went off to his land. ' It is impossible for me to come,' said another, 'for I have just bought five yoke of oxen, and am on the point of starting to try them." A third begged to be excused because he had only just married, and therefore could not come, as he had a feast of his own his feating but abort all a

aldiszoga

10.9207.8

hannad L

bluon'en

THE in had occu

lem. He

llis death was alrea

future of

John, in s

by the ha deliberate

to them th Yet He and He ac villages at anywhere. which He

in Herod,

him to im

In spite. damping e

Him, and national r that he ma

with His

before the army of pa

authorities

He, ther

their home

sritual n

cointed th

demands fr

now that H

refused to render and ever to offe

and a rewa solutely sin

Himself.

"Consid

sire no one

me and my

"The servant had, therefore, to return to his master with this sorry list of excuses, each of which was a marked affront. 'I shall see that my feast has not been prepared for nothing,' said he to the servant-'go out, at once, to the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in all the poor, the maimed, the blind, and the lame you can find, that my table may be filled."

There was still room, however, after this had been done. Go outside the city to the country roads and hedgeways,' said the householder, 'and gather any waifs and beggars you find, and compel them to come in, for my house must be filled, and none of the men I invited to my supper will taste it.""

Had the hearers but known it, this parable was a deadly thrust at their most cherished prejudices. The priests and Rabbis, leaders of the nation, had been invited again and again by Jesus and His disciples, to the spiritual banquet of the New Kingdom, but they had despised the invitation, on any excuse, or on none. The poor and outcast people, the sinners and publicans, and the hated multitude, who neglected the Rabbinical rules, had then been summoned, and had gladly come, and, now, the invitation was to go forth to those outside Israel-the abhorred heathen-and they, too, were to come freely, and sit down at the great table of the kingdom of the Messiah. with no conditions or disabilities; while they who, in their pride, had refused to come, were finally rejected.

of It was the proclamation, once more, of the mighty truth which might well be too hard for those who first heard it, to understand, since it is imperfectly realized after nueteen centuries-that external rites and formal acts are of no value with God, in themselves: that He looks at the conscience alone: that neither circumcision nor sac rifices, nor legal purifications, nor rigid observance of Sabbath laws, nor fasts, but the state of the heart, determines the relation of man to God us Hillingh which

Before leaving the world, our Lord would put it beyond question that His religion knew no caste, or national privilege: that it was independent of the cumbrous, machinery of rite and ceremony which had crushed the life out of the religion of the Old Testament; and that it could reign, in its divine perfection, in any human heart that opened itself to the Spirit of God. Spits is first bits at still

1.1 1) (19 11/13]1] 1 第一型影漫和目标中,由它和你们是由你们的词子是中国自己的情望。但如今的目标的?" Taken in the sol set white a distance don't sold sold and the set of the set of the ne and the participation of the stand the stand of the bus of the stand of the bus of

123 13. 1 11

nemilis'nd'addr airt

It is impossible ght five yoke of A third begged therefore could noon with the unster with this front. 'I shall g,' said he to the of the city, and he lame you can een done. Go ways,' said the u find, and comand none of the deadly thrust at Rabbis, leaders of sus and His dism; but they had The poor and hated multitude. 1 summoned, and go forth to those oo, were to come n of the Messiah, n their pride, had ghty truth which t, to understand, ies—that external themselves: that mcision nor sacof Sabbath laws, elation of man to

beyond question ge: that it was inceremony which Testament; and uman heart that a bisynte ? Hins Sy yob hoo" STR. DO CONSTANTS Autor win bus sut.

THE incident of the Sabbath meal, in the house of the Pharisce, had occurred as Jesus was journeying by slow stages towards Jerusaem. He had long ago felt that to go thither would be to die: but His death, in whatever part of the country Hc might be apprehended. was already determined by His enemies, and it was necessary for the future of His Kingdom that He should not perish obscurely, like. John, in some lonely fortress, but with such publicity, and so directly. by the hands of the upholders of the Old Theocracy, as to leave their. deliberate rejection of His teaching in no doubt, and to bring home. to them the guilt of His death.

Yet He was in no hurry. It was still some time till the Passover. and He advanced leisurely on His sad journey, through the different villages and towns, teaching in the synagogues on the Sabbaths, and mywhere, day by day, through the week. Meanwhile, the miracles which He wrought before continually increasing multitudes excited. in Herod, the local ruler, the same fear of a political rising as had led him to imprison the Baptist. The sector and the sector and support Landroc

In spite of our Lord's earnest effort to discourage excitement, by damping every worldly hope or ambition in the crowds that followed Him, and leaving no question of His utter refusal to carry out the national programme of a political Messiah, Herod was so alarmed that he made efforts to apprehend Him. Had the throngs increased with His advance from place to place, as they well might so shortly before the Passovor, He would have entered Jerusalem with a whole army of partisans, and compromised Himself at once with the Roman authorities. Thous the sumption of the

He therefore spared no efforts to discourage and turn back to their homes those whom He, saw attracted to Him from other than stritual motives. He wished none to follow Him who had not c inted the cost of doing so, and had not realized His unprecedented demands from His disciples. Instead of courting popular support, now that His life was in such danger, He raised these demands, and refused to receive followers on any terms short of absolute self-surrender and self-sacrifice to His cause, though He had nothing whateven to offer in return beyond the inward satisfaction of conscience. and a reward in the future world; if the surrender had been the ab. solutely sincere and disinterested expression of personal devotion to Hinself. I an aichedh lord lordhal fil a badaal a bilan in tras parte

"Consider well," said He, "before you follow me farther. I desire no one to do so who does not without reserve devote himself to me and my cause. He must tear himself from all his former connections and associations, and offer up, as a willing sacrifice, the claims of father, mother, wife, children, brother, or sister—and even his own life, if necessary, that he may be in no way hindered from entire devotion to me and my commands. Short of this, no one can be my disciple. Nor can he who is not willing to bear shame and suffering for my sake. You cann ot be my disciples unless you are ready to be virtually condemned to die for being so; unless as it were, you already put on your shoulders the weight of the cross on which you are to be nalled for confessing my name.

"It is, indeed, no light matter, but needs the gravest consideration You know how men weigh everything beforehand in affairs of cost or danger: much more is it needful to do so in this case. No man would be so foolish as to begin building a house without first finding. out the cost, and seeing if he can meet it. He will not lay the found dation, and run the risk of not being able to do more, for he knows that to do so would make him the scoff of his neighbours. Nor would any king or prince, at war with another, march out against him, without thinking whether he could likely, with ten thousand men overcome an enemy coming with twice as many. If he feel that the chances are against him, he will seek to make peace before his enemy come near, and will send an embassy to him to propose conditions No less, but rather much more careful consideration of the dangers you run; of the greatness of my demands; of the losses you must endure: of the shame and suffering certain to follow-are needed be fore casting in your lot with metidance as which first berrout of ye berroo "Yet, as I have said elsewhere, before; it is the noblest of all callings to be my disciple. If you really can accept my conditions. For ta him who is truly my follower, it is given of God to keep alive and spread the spiritual life of men, as salt keeps sound and fresh that which is seasoned by it. "My disciples are designed by God to be the Spiritual Salt of the Earth. But if the honour be greater, so much the greater is the responsibility; for if a follower of mine, through hankering after worldly interests, lose his spiritual life and thus lose his power to further my cause how can he hope to regain it? Heis like salt that has lost its strength, and, as such worthless salt is cast ike sait that has jost its strength, and, as such worthless sait is cast out of men, so he will be cast out of God, from the kingdom of the Messiah, at the great day. He who is thoughtful, let him think of althis?" not in the distribution of the second to make the second s

A great English writer has pictured an imaginary character as having a sweet look of goodness, which drew out all that was good in others. There must have been some such divine attraction to the poor and outcast in the looks and whole person of our Lord. India is not more caste-ridden than the Judea in which He lived. The aristocracy of religion looked with hatred and disdain on the masse of their own nation, and with bitterness still deeper on all men of foreign birth. The ruin of long, disastrors years of civil war, as foreign domination, had covered the land with misery. The reign sacrifice, the er-and even indered from is, no one can ar shame and inless you are unless, as itf the cross on uliage and a deal consideration affairs of cost ase. No man at first finding t lay the four for he knows ghbours. Nor ch out against thousand men he feel that the efore his enemy ose conditions of the dangers es you must enare needed be. Defined, Define, Deridou st of all callings litions. d Forta keep alive and and fresh that y God to be the reater, so much. f mine, through fe and thus lose egain it? Heis less salt is cast kingdom of the him think of all equile, " esteris ifet haracter as have aat was good in ttraction to the ur Lord. India He lived. The n on the masses on all men of of civil war, and ery The reight of the Herods had been a continued effort to rebuild burned towns. and restore exhausted finances; but the Roman tax-gatherer had followed, vampire-like, and had drained the nation of its life blood, till it was sinking, as all Roman provinces sank, sooner or later, into general decay. In a land thus doubly afflicted by social proscription, and by ever-increasing social distress—a land of mutual hatreds and wrongs the suffering multitudes hailed with instinctive enthusiasm one who, like Jesus, ignored baleful prejudices; taught the sunken and hopeless to respect themselves still, by showing that He, at least, still moke kindly and hopefully to them, in all their sinfulness and misery; and by His looks and words, no less than by His acts, seemed to heckon the unfortunate to gather round Him as their friend. It must ave spread far and wide, from His first entrance on His ministry. hat He had chosen a publican as one of His inmost circle of disciples. and that He had not disdained to mingle with the most forlorn and unken of the nation, even in the friendliness of the table or the cot-From many a windowless hovel, where the smoke of the houseold fire made its way out only by the door, and the one earth-floored nartment was shared by the wretched family, with the fowls, or even easts they chanced to own + a hovel which the priest or Rabbi would ave died rather than defile himself by entering-the story spread ow the great Galilean teacher had not only entered, but had done to raise the dying; and to bless the living. All over the land it in from mouth to mouth that, for the first time, a great Rabbi had ppeared who was no respecter of persons, but let Himself be anointed a poor penitent sinner, and sat in the booth with a hated publian and mingled freely in the market-place with the crowds whose erv neighbourhood others counted pollution. Still more; it was felt the proscribed millions, the Cagots and Pariahs of a merciless eccracy, that He was their champion, by the very fact that He was emed an enemy by the dominant caste; for opposition to it was walty to them. To Byrollor b Wind . Williams part ulfice rais ing all Hence, the multitudes who, on this last journey, especially, thered round Jesus with friendly sympathy and readiness to read ive His instructions, were largely composed of the degraded and spised—the "publicans and sinners" from far and near in The abis enjoined that a teacher should keep utterly aloof from such ople, "even if one had the worthy design of exhorting them to ad the Law"-that is, even with the view of reclaiming them. It as a sign that wisdom did not dwell with one if he went near the lef or the usurer, even when they had turned from their evil ways. e superstitious reverence demanded for those who kept the Rabical laws strictly, was only equalled by the intense loathing of the mant commonalty. No Rabbi, or Rabbi's scholar, might on any count marry a daughter of the Am-ha-aretz-or unlearned for the and the most repulsive crime known to the Law was no worse than to marry among them. No one might walk on a journey with a "common man." It was sternly forbidden to pollute the Law by being seen to read it before one. Their witness was refused in the Jewish courts, and it was prohibited to give testimony in their favour: no secret was to be told them: they could not be guardians of orphans, nor allowed to have charge of the alms box of the synagogue; and if they lost anything, fo notice of its having been found was to be given them.

No wonder that the Rabbis, and the hierarchical party at large owned that "the hatred of the common people towards the 'wise' was greater than that of the heathen towards Israel, and that the wives hated the dominant caste even more fiercely than their husbands."

That Jesus should outrage the established laws of privilege and exclusiveness, by allowing those to follow Him whom Rabbis would not allow to approach them, and, still worse, by receiving them kindly, and eating with them, was a bitter offence to the Pharisees and scribes. In their eyes, He was degrading Himself by consorting with the "unclean and despicable." Nor could they say anything more fitted to excite the mortal hatred of their class against Him. "The storm of bitter murmurings erelong reached the ears of our Lord, and He at once seized the opportunity to define His position unmistakably, and show that the course He took was in keeping with His whole aim.

"Let me ask you," said He, to some irritated Rabbis, who muinured at seeing Him, on one occasion, surrounded by "publican and sinners," "who of you, if he had a flock of a hundred sheen and one of them were to go astray, would not leave the ninety and nine on the pastures, and go off after the one that was lost, till he found it? And when he had done so, would he not lay it on hi shoulders gladly, and carry it back to the flock? and, when he had come home, would be not call together his friends and neighbour to rejoice with him at his having found the sheep that was lost? You scribes and Pharisees, -Rabbis, -lawyers, -think you and so righteous, that you need no repentance. You speak of some o your number, as having never committed a sin in their lives; of som whose only sin has been such a thing as having once put the phy lacteries on his forchead before those on his arm; and call some h "perfectly righteous." Let me tell you, that all men as such are the great flock of God,—for all are His sons,—and that when one wh has gone astray, and has lived in sin comes to himself and repent there is greater joy in heaven over his return, than over ninety and nine, who, like you, think they have no need of repentance. And this be the case in heaven, how much more ought I, here on each to rejoice that many such penitent ones come to me, than at you coming in proud self-sufficiency to boast that you need nothing atm hand?

"Or," continued He, "I ask you, -suppose a poor woman wh had only less hove would she pains in would she to rejoice the same God, in th bitterly de ladly rece earn the w "Let me "A certa his father,that falls, to much as n father, on however, th death, as In His share, h "But bet of his father country, and that erelong ad spent hi be in distr ask one of was, to get o be his swi iter all, he c or neither h ft to starve. arob-tree, w Very poor iny laboure have m ere of want. my guilt we sinned a all say that ill ask him t m that I wil He had n s father's ho

whim and 1

journey with the the Law by refused in the in their favour: ans of orphans, agogue; and if und was to be party at large, s the 'wise' was that the wives ir hushands."

of privilege and m Rabbis would receiving them to the Pharises of by consorting hey say anything against Him. the ears of our fine His position s in keeping with Rabbis, who murd by "publicans a hundred sheep e the ninety and at was lost, till he not lay it on his ind, when he had and neighbours hat was lost? s,-think you an speak of some of eir lives; of some once put the phyand call some the hat when one wh uself and repents n over ninety an pentance. And t I. here on earth me, than at you eed nothing atm poor woman wh

had only ten drachmæ, were to lose one in one of the dark windowless hovels, in which so many of our people in these evil days live, would she not light a lamp and sweep the floor over, and spare no pains in seeking till she found it? And when she had found it, would she not call together her friends and neighbours, and ask them to rejoice with her for having found the drachma that was lost? In the same way, I tell you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God, in the highest heaven, over one such sinner as those you so hiterly despise, who turns and repents. Well, therefore, may I pladly receive them, and mingle with them, when they come to me to earn the way back to God. "Let me tell you a parable.

"A certain man had two sons. And the younger of these said to his father, --- Father, give me I pray you, the portion of the property hat falls to me. I am the younger son, and inherit only half as much as my elder brother, but I pray you let me have it." The ather, on this, divided between the two all his living, retaining. owever, the larger share of the elder son in his hands till his own death, as he might have done with that of the younger son also. Hishare, however, he gave into the young man's own hands. "But before long, the younger son began to dislike the restraint of his father's house, and gathering all together, set off for a distant country, and there gave his passions the reins, and lived in such riot, hat erelong his whole means were scattered. But, now, when he ad spent his all, a great famine arose in the country, and he began be in distress. At last it went so hard with him, that he was glad ask one of the citizens to give him anything at all to do, whatever was, to get bread. He was, thereupon, sent into the man's fields, obe his swineherd, a sadly shameful occupation for a Jew! Yet, iter all, he did not get even his food for which he had bargained, or neither his master nor any one else thought of him, and he was eft to starve. He even longed to fill himself with the pods of the arob-tree, which are fed out to swine, and are sometimes eaten by he very poor, but no man gave him any even of them. "In his loneliness and sore trouble, he began to reflect. How tany labourers and household servants of my father,' said he to him-any labourers and notisenoid servants of my lattier, said he to himef, 'have more bread than they can eat, while I, his son, am dying ere of want. I will arise, and go back to my father, and will cones my guilt and unworthiness, and tell him how deeply I feel that I ave sinned against heaven and done great wrong towards him. I all say that I feel I am no longer worthy to be called his son, and all ask him to treat me like one of his hired labourers, and will tell in that I will gladly work with them for my daily bread, so that he relye me again.

"He had no sooner resolved to do this; than he rose to return to stather's house." But when he was yet a great way off, his father whin and knew him, and ran out to meet him, full of tender com-

Am

were,

all wer a few's

ever tr

greates

princip to have

they ha

charge d

this ma

so he ca

at the sa

no longe

"The

do. I

tomed to which he

carry it o

each how all this ]

missioned

amount in example.

lord?' and his bill; ai

a hundred

only eight

factor, he

when he h

secured hi

And, in tr

of this wor

fellows, th

brethren, s

though it i

a prudence

life. By b

the interest

whom you

and aim in no longer f

of Mammo

"As the

"Some

"A c

passion, and fell on his neck and kissed him tenderly. And the son said to him. 'I have sinned against God and against thee, and am not worthy that thou shouldst any longer call me, thy son.' He could not say what he had intended besides, when he saw how fondly his father bent over him, notwithstanding his sins, and folly. Nor was more needed; for his father called out to his servants. 'Bring me a role, the best there is, that he may have my finest; and put it on him; and put a ring on his finger, and sandals on his feet; he shall no longer, like a slave, be without either; and bring the fatted calf and kill it. We shall have a feast to day and be merry, for my son; lost and dead as I thought, in a strange land, is once more home: doad by his sins, he is alive again by repentance: a lost wanderer, he has returned to the fold.'

"The elder son, meanwhile, had been in the field with the labourers, but now came towards home. And as he drew near, he heard music and dancing. Calling one of the servants, he thereupon asked what had happened, and was told that his brother had come home, and that his father was so glad to have him once more safe and sound, that he had had the best calf killed, and given for a feast to the household.

"But now, instead of rejoicing over his brother's return, the elder son took amiss such gladness of his father, at having him safely back again, and would not go into the house at all, or take any part in the rejoicings. The father, therefore, ever kind and gentle, went out a him to soothe him, and to beg him, to come is. All he could say however, failed to soften his heart, and he vented his disconten in angry reproaches: 'I have served you for many a year, more lik a slave than a son, and have obeyed you in every particular, and ye you never gave me a kid, far less a fatted calf, that I might have little enjoyment with my friends. But when this fellow, who indeed your son, though I will not call him my brother, —this fellow who has spent your money on harlots, —has come back, you hav killed the fatted calf, for him.'

"" My son,' replied the father, mildly, 'have, you forgotten the you have been always by my side, while your brother has been for away from me, or that all that I have belongs to you as my her Surely all this should raise you above such hard judgments as jealous thoughts. What could we do but rejoice when a long he son has come back again to his father's house?""

The parables of the Lost Sheep and of the Lost Piece of Silver h been enforced by the noblest of all the parables. Henceforth, for ages, it was proclaimed beyond the possibility of misconception, the in the teaching of Jesus, God looks with unspeakably greater favo on the penitent humility of "the sinner," with its earnest of gratude and love, than on cold correctness in which the heart has no plan We are indebted to St. Luke for some other fragments of the teaching of these last weeks. And the son the and am not by He could how fondly his hiy. Nor was bring me a role, it on him; and hall no longer, alf and kill it. ; lost and dead, has returned to

th the labourers, he heard music pen asked what come home, and safe, and sound, or a feast to the return, the elder g him safely back te any part in the entle, went out to All he could say ed his disconten a year, more like marticular, and year his fellow, who other, —this fello e back, you hav you forgotten the other has been for you as my her rd judgments an when a long-lo

Piece of Silver ha Henceforth, fora hisconception, that ably greater favours ts, earnest of gat heart has no place fragments, of the

which transfiles

Among the great multitudes who had thronged after Him, the publicans of the district were especially noticeable. Many of them were doubtless, in a good position in life, and some even rich, but all were exposed to peculiar temptations in their hated calling. Not a few seem to have listened earnestly to the first Teacher who had ever treated them as men with souls to save, and it was of the greatest importance to them that they should have wise and true principles for their future guidance. The following parable seems to have been delivered specially to them, as part of an address when they had gathered in more than usual numbers.

"A certain rich man had a steward, to whom he left the entire charge of his affairs. He learned, however, from some sources, that this man was acting dishonestly by him, and scattering his goods; so he called him and 'et him know what he had heard, telling him, at the same time, to make out and settle all his accounts, as he could no longer hold his office.

"The steward, knowing that he was guilty, was at a loss what to do. 'I cannot dig,' said he, to himself, ' for I have not been accustomed to it, and I am ashamed to beg. At last he hit on a plan which he thought would serve his end, and at once set himself to carry it out. Going to all his master's tenants, one by one, he asked each how much rent or dues he had to pay, though, in fact, he knew all this beforehand. When told, he pretended to have been commissioned, in compliance with his own suggestion, to lower the amount in each case; and he thus secured the favour of all, For example, he went to one and asked him 'How much owest thou to my lord?' and when told 'A hundred pipes of oil,' bade him take back his bill, and write another, instead, for fifty. A second, who owed a hundred quarters of wheat, he told to make out a fresh writing with only eighty. In this way, by leading them to think him their benefactor, he made sure of friends, who would open their houses to him when he had been dismissed.

"Some time after, when his master heard how cleverly he had secured his own ends, he could not help admiring his shrewdness. And, in truth, it is a fact, that had men like this steward—the sons of this world—not of the next—are wiser in their dealings with their fellows, than the sons of light—my disciples—are in theirs with their brethren, sons of my heavenly Kingdom, like themselves.

"As the master of that steward commended him for his prudence, though it was so worldly and selfish. I, also, must commend to you a prudence of a higher kind in your relations to the things of this life. By becoming my disciples, you have identified yourselves with the interest of another Master than Mammon, the god of this world whom you have hitherto served—and have before you another course and aim in life. You will be represented to your former master as no longer faithful to him, for my service is so utterly opposed to that of Mammon that, if faithful to me you cannot be faithful to him, and he will, in consequence, assuredly take your stewardship of this world's goods from you—that is, sink you in poverty, as I have often said. I counsel you, therefore, so to use the goods of Mammon—the worldly means still at your command—that, by truly worthy distribution of them to your needy brethren—and my disciples are mostly poor—you may make friends for yourselves, who, if they die before you, will welcome you to everlasting hibitations in heaven, when you pass thither, at death. Fit yourselves, by labours of love and deeds of true charity, as my followers, to become fellow-citizens of the heavenly mansions with those whose wants you have relieved while they were still in life.

"A' If you be faithful, thus, in the use of your possessions on earth you will be deemed worthy by God to be entrusted with infinitely greater riches hereafter, in heaven, for he that is faithful in this lesser stewardship, has shown that he will be so in a higher, but he who has misused the lesser, cannot hope to be entrusted with a greater. If you show, in your life, that you have not been faithful to God in the use of this world's goods, entrusted to you by Him to administer for His glory, how can you hope that He will commit to your keeping the unspeakably grander trust of heavenly riches? If you have proved unfaithful in the stewardship of what was not yours the worldly means lent you for a time by God-how can you hope to be honoured with the great trust of eternal salvation, which would have been yours had you proved yourself fig for it? Be assured that if you do not use your earthly riches faithfully for God, by dispensing them as I have told you, you will never enter my heavenly Kingdom at all. You will have shown that you are servants of Mammon, and not the servants of God; for it is impos sible for any man to serve two masters."

Such unworldly counsels, so contrary to their own spirit, were received with contemptious ridicule by the Pharisees standing round, as the mere dreams of a crazed enthusiast. The love of money had become a characteristic of their decaying religiousness, and it seemed to them the wildest folly to advise the rich, as their truest wisdom, to use their weath to make friends for the future world, instead of enjoying it here. It is quite possible, indeed, that some of them fet the words of Christ as a personal reproof, and were all the more embittered.

Patient as He was in the endurance of personal wrongs and insults, the indignation of Jesus was roused at such sneers at the first principles of genuine religion, and He, at once, with the caim fearlessness habitual to Him, exposed their hypocrisy and unsafeness as spiritual guides.

You held your heads high," said He, and affect to be saints, before men-such perfect patterns of plety, indeed, that you may judge all men by yourselves.

"But God, who knows all things, and judges, not by the outward appear from is so h ignore, suit yo whole . to be m the Lay erate co off" Sin which I the Scri the tim future, one pres and Kin enter it. overcom the Law, its truest Kingdon than for it with examples what con that the v opposition wife, exc adultery. guilty of honour th How God hef But t what I ha when they for yourse ell you a There -the rain cotton; wh There Azarus, w before the day after d the rich m and knew. the suffere appearance, but by the heart, knows how different you are in reality from what you make men believe. Your pretended holiness, which is so highly thought of by men, is an abomination before God. You ignore, or explain away the commands of His law, when they do not suit you, and thus are mere actors, for true godliness honours the whole Law. I condemn you on the one ground on which you claim to be most secure. Nou demand honour for your strict obedience to the Law: I charge you with hypocrisy, for your designed and deliberate corruption of that Law, to suit yourselves (1.917);

"Sincerity is demanded from those who wish to serve God, That which Moses and the Prophets so long announced, -- that to which all the Scriptures point, the Kingdom of the Messiah-has come. From the time when the Baptist preached, that kingdom is no longer future, but is set up in your midst, and with what success! Every one presses with eagerness into it. But, as you know. I, its Head and King, make the most searching demands from those who would enter it, and open its citizenship only to those who are willing to overcome all difficulties to obtain it. You charge me with breaking the Law, but, so far from doing so, I require that the whole Law, in its truest sense, be obeyed by every one who seeks to enter the New Kingdom. It is easier for heaven and earth, I tell men, to pass away, than for one tittle of the Law to lose its force. But how different is it with you! Take the one single case of divorce. What loose examples does not the conduct of some of your own class supply? what conflicting opinions do you not give on the question? I claim that the words of the Law be observed to the letter, and maintain, in opposition to your hollow morality, that any one who puts away his wife, except for adultery, and marries another, himself commits adultery, and that he who marries the woman thus divorced is also guilty of the same crime. Judge, by this, whether you or I most honour the Law-whether you or I are the safer guides of the people. How God must despise your boasts of special zoal for His glory "But that, notwithstanding your sneers, you may feel the truth of what I have just said as to the results of the possession of riches. when they are not employed as I have counselled—to make friends for yourselves, who will welcome you to heaven hereafter, let mo ell you a parable.

"There was a certain rich man who dressed in robes of fine purple -the raiment of princes-over garments of the costliest Egyptian cotton; which only the most luxurious can buy, any sitt an interest

"There was also, in the same place, a poor diseased beggar named Lazarus, who had been brought and set down, as an object of charity, before the gates of the great man's mansion, where he lay helpless, day after day; so abject, that he longed to be fed with what fell from the rich man's table. But the rich man, though he often saw him, and knew his case, showed him no kindness, and instead of helping the sufferer, and thus making a friend with his money, who should

that you may

ip of this

have often

mmon-the

rthy distri-

are mostly

y die before

o, when you

e and deeds

izens of the

lieved while

ns on earth,

ed with in-

is faithful in a higher, but rusted with a

en faithful to

by Him to ud-

ill commit to

ly riches? If

was not yours

can you hope

vation, which

ches faithfully

ill never enter

that you are or it is impos-

n spirit, were landing round,

of money had

and it seemed

est wisdom, to

brld. instead of

në of them felt

e all the more

gs and insults,

t the first prin-

calm fearless

unsafeness as

t to be saints,

-9111-

it?

by the outward

help him hereafter, as I advise; had no thought except of himself, and of his own pleasure. The poor man's case was indeed pltiful; he could not even drive away the unclean dogs, which, day by day, came and increased his pain by licking his sores.

"It came to pass, after a time, that Lazarus died, and was carried by the angels to Paradise, and there set down next to Abraham on the banqueting couches, at the feast in the kingdom of God, with his head in the great patriarch's bosom—the highest place of honour that Paradise could give.

"Erelong, the rich man also died, and, unlike Lazarus, whom men had left uncared for, even in his death, he was honoured with a sumptuous funeral.

"He, also, passed to Hades; not, however, to that part of it where Paradise is, but to Gehenna, the place of pain and torment in the world of shades. And in Hades he lifted up his eyes, and saw Abraham in the far distance, in the banqueting hall of bliss, with Lazarus reclining next him, in his bosom, as his most honoured friend. And he knew them both, and remembered how Lazarus had lain at his gate, and thought of this as a bond between them. 'O Father Abraham,' cried he, in his torments, 'have mercy on my agony, I beseech thee, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue, for I am tormented in this flame." So great had been the change in their positions, that now the despised beggar was catreated to do even so small a favour to him from whom he himself had once looked for any favour in vain! Dives would fain make friends with Lazarus now, but could not bethink him of any good deed he had ever done him to help him to do so.

"Abraham now called this to his mind. 'Son,' said he, 'wonder not that you and Lazarus are in such opposite conditions here, from those you had when in life. You, then, had as much earthly happiness as you could enjoy: you had it, and set your heart on it, and lived only for yourself. Had you used your wealth as a godly man, in doing good to those, like Lazarus, who needed pity, instead of lavishing it on splendour and self-indulgence, you would have had good laid up for you now. But you lived only for earth, and the good you chose has been left behind you. You made your portion in your lifetime, and have none here. But Lazarus endured, while still alive, the sufferings allotted him, and he has none in this state. Penitent and lowly, he bore them patiently, as a child of God, and is now receiving the reward of the poor in spirit. His position and yours are reversed, for he now finds cousolation and joy, in exchange for his earthly misery, but you, pain and sorrow, instead of your self-indulgence.

"Besides all this,' added he, 'between this happy abode and yours, there is a great space, across which no one can pass, either from us to you, or from you to us, so that it is impossible that you should have any share in our joy, or that we can in any way lessen your pain." "No misery, he, "wh impenita as God welcome tions of "Bu of my fa I beseect brethren, if they al them of repent, an Prophets "Nay enough.

turned ag it was wit '' You

'It would tures fitted not win 't dead.'"

The Rat failing too with Jesus with the whole day and bearing the nation their effect nature of H weakness o and abiding By way

"It is imp even desert times to co minds; the inevitably 1 dom will, I cannot be a and glory o criminal, he har that I

64 of himself, eed pitiful; lay by day, was carried ibraham on God, with of honour whom men ured with a t of it where ment in the es, and saw if bliss, with st honoured Lazarus had n' them. 'O nercy on my lip the tip of ented in this that now the avour to him n vain! Dives I not bethink n to do so.

he, wonder is here, from i earthly hapeart on it, and a godly man, ity, instead of buld have had earth, and the your portion indured, while in this state. I of God, and s position and y, in exchange instead of your ode and yours, either from us iat you should sen your pain.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

"Now, for the first time, the rich man saw the full extent of his misery, and its cause. "Would that I had acted differently, cried he, "when in life. Would that, instead of living for myself—hard, impenitent, selfish—I had been lowly and penitent, using my wealth as God enjoined, in blessing the wretched. I should then have been welcomed by Lazarus, and such as he, into the everlasting habitations of Paradise!"

"'But, oh! Father Abraham,' he continued, 'let me be the only one of my father's house to come into this doleful place. Send Lazarus, I beseech thee, back to earth, to my father's house, for I have five brethren, who five as I lived. It would add unspeakably to my pain if they also came to this abode of woe. Oh! let Lazarus go and warf them of what has befallen me, their brother.'

""To escape your sad doom,' replied Abraham, 'they must needs repent, and live the life of the godly. But for this the Law and the Prophets are the appointed means; let them listen to them.'

"'Nay, Father Abraham,' answered the lost one, 'that is not enough. It did not move me to repentance. But if a dead man returned again from the grave, and came to them, and told them how it was with me here, they would be alarmed, and reform."

"You err, my unhappy son,' said Abraham, closing the scene. 'It would not move them in the least, for so amply arc the Scriptures fitted to persuade men to repentance, that those whom they do not win to it would not be persuaded even if one rose from the dead.'"

The Rabbis had listened to the parable, but it touched their own failing too pointedly to make them care for any longer conference with Jesus. When they were gone—it may be while He was resting with the Twelve in the cool of the evening—the incidents of the whole day were passed in review, and Jesus noticed that the words and bearing of His opponents, respect for whom, as the teachers of the nation, was instinctive with every Jew—had not been without their effect even on His disciples. It was evident that the very nature of His demands—the trials and persecutions to come, and the weakness of human nature—would raise moral hindrances to the full and abiding loyalty of not a few.

By way of caution, therefore, He now warned them on this point. "It is impossible," said He, "to prevent divisions, disputes, and even desertion and apostasy, on the part of some of you, in the evil times to come. Misrepresentation, prejudice, the bent of different minds; the weakness of some, and the unworthiness of others, will nevitably produce their natural results. The progress of my kingdom will, I foresee, be hindered more or less from this cause, but it cannot be avoided. Yet, woe to him who thus hinders the spread and glory of the Truth. It were better for him, if, like the worst criminal, he were bound to a heavy millstone, and cast into the sea, that he should cause a single simple child-like soul, who be lieves in me, to fall. Take heed that you neither mislead nor are misled! Remember that I tell you that offences must be prevented or removed by a lowly forgiving spirit on your part. You know how far you are yet from this; how strong pride, love of your own opinion, harshness, and impatience, still are in your hearts. To further my Kingdom when I am gone, strive above all things for peace and love among yourselves.

"The one grand means of avoiding these causes of offence and spiritual ruin is unwearied, forgiving love; by that frame of mind which you see so wholly wanting in the Rabbis, that they have even now murmured at my so much as speaking to sinners, from whom such simple, lowly brethren are to be gathered. If such an one sin against you, and turn away, from your fellowship, rebuke him for his sin, but if he see his error and repent of it, and come back, forgive him; aye, even if he wrong you seven times in a day, and feel and acknowledge his error and promise amendment, as often, you must each time forgive him freely."

The Twelve had listened to these counsels with intense interest, but their moral grandeur almost discouraged them. They felt that nothing is harder than constant patience and loving humility—never returning evil for evil, but ever ready to forgive, even when repeatedly injured without cause. It needed, as they feared, stronger faith than they yet had, to create such an abiding spirit of tender meckness. They had talked over the whole matter, and saw, only one source of strength. Coming to their Master, full of confidence in His divine power to grant their request, they openly, and with a sweet humility, prayed Him that He would increase their faith.

"This request," answered Jesus, "shows that faith, in a true and worthy sense, is yet to be begun in your hearts. If you had it, even in a small measure, or, to use a phrase you hear every day, as a grain of mustard-seed, instead of finding obedience to these counsels too difficult, you would undertake and perform even apparent impossibilities—acts of trust which demand the highest spiritual power and strength. To use words which you have often heard as an illustration of acts naturally impossible, you would say to this sycamore or mulberry-tree, 'Be thou plucked up by the roots and planted in the sea,' and it would obey you—that is, you would be able to do what, without faith, seems as impossible.

"To such efficiency and eminence in my service will true faith in ME lead you: but beware, amidst all, of any thought of merit of your own. Your faith must grow, and cannot be given as a mere bounty from without: it is a result of your own spiritual development and true humility, which looks away from self to me, as the one condition of this advancement. You shall have the increased faith you seek, but it will be only by your continued loving dependence on me, your Master. If any of you had a servant ploughing or tending you flock, would you say to him when he comes home from the field in the ev Would self fit shall e tion to cause servant Be; you, required ended; count of or honou and not only wh does less done his himself ( work has have esca The-ha each frui Him, and Him with of On one knot of P to elicit se " Maste mighty de ing of the promised. "The k different revolution in Jerusale and consci display an Lo, here the kingde you' any 'm is already i and where it steadily.

like the gr measure of The mal curiosity, a Messiah wa

lead nor are prevented or u know how of your own hearts. To Il things for i Das Justich f offence and ame of mind ey have even s, from whom ch an one sin buke him for me back, forday, and feel as often, you need lesdith tense 'interest. They felt that umility-never n when repeatstronger faith f tender meeksaw only one confidence in nd with a sweet ith. roten K. " h, in a true and ou had it, even day, as a grain se counsels too pparent imposspiritual power en heard as an ay to this sycathe roots and you would be will true faith in of merit of your a mere bounty evelopment and

evelopment and as the one conceased faith you bendence on me, or tending your rom the field in the evening, "Come near immediately, and sit down to meat?" Would you not rather say, "Prepare my supper, and make yourself fit to wait on me at table, and after I have supped, you shall eat and drink?' Would you think yourself under obligation to the servant because he has been working for you, or because he waits on you as required? Assuredly not, for your servant had only done what it was right he should do as a servant. Be, you, such servants. There is a daily work, with prescribed tasks, required from you. The great supper will not be till this life is ended; but when it is ended, you must not think of yourselves, on account of it, except as becomes servants; and should you be rewarded or honoured, you must not forget, that it is only from my free favour and not as payment of any claim; because, in fact, you have done only what it was your duty, as servants, to do. The servant who does less than his duty, is guilty before his master, but he who has done his duty, though he has avoided blame, has no reason to think himself entitled to reward. Feel, therefore, in any case, that your work has not been beyond your rightful duty, and that, though you have escaped condemnation; you have no claim for any merit." The hostility of the Rabbis was growing daily more bitter, after each fruitless attack. At each town or village they gathered round Him, and harassed him at every step by attempts to compromise Him with the authorities." Then the above on the stand set wall shell On one of these last days of His journey towards Jerusalem, a so on one of these last days of His journey towards Jerusalem, a knot of Pharisees had, thus, forced themselves on Him, and sought to elicit something that might serve them, by asking Him

"Master, you have often represented yourself, both by word and by mighty deeds, as the Messiah, but we see no signs as yet of the coming of the kingdom of God. When will it come? It has been long promised." The 2007 here the second set of the commence of "The kingdom of God," answered Jesus, "is something entirely different from what you expect. You look for a great political revolution, and the establishment of a Jewish empire, with its capital in Jerusalem. "Instead of this, it is a spiritual kingdom, in the hearts and consciences of men, and, as such, cannot come with the outward display and circumstance of earthly monarchy, so that men may say, 'Lo, here is the kingdom of God," or, 'lo, there.' The coming of the kingdom develops itself unobserved. I cannot, therefore, give you any moment when it may be said to have come, for, in fact, it is already in your midst. I, the Messiah, live and work amongst you, and where the Messiah is, there is His kingdom. There, already, is it steadily, advancing, after its nature, like the seed in the ground; like the grain of mustard-seed, or, like the leaven in a woman's mensure of meal." I with , r f the at the stay pit to be so the

The malevolent question thus met a reply which at once balked curiosity, and laid on all the most solemn responsibilities; for if the Messiah was really among them, how imperative to fit themselves for entering His kingdom! The interrogators, finding their sinister effort vain, presently left, and, when thus alone, Jesus resumed the subject with His disciples.

The

the fut

and the them.

own, th

who loy

His kee where t

afar for themsel

The n of the di

many w

must oft

It was, n tion of the The mys multitud

would h

who, like

for many such que

listen to only wou lower. 1

gratify cu

was much

saved, so

enter in th

I say unto strive now

If once yo

in vain, pl

great ban

the banque the door,

know you

you, and th

and drank

He had to know you

unrighteon "What

tion as y

" W1

"I have only spoken to these men," said He, "of the growth and development of my kingdom, unseen, and silently, in the hearts of men. To you I would now speak of the future. Days will come when trouble shall make men's hearts long for one of the days of the bon of Man back again, and false Messiahs will rise, pretending to bring deliverance. But when they say to you, 'Lo, there is the Mccaiah come at last,' or, 'Lo, here He is,' go not out after them; do not follow them. For the coming of the Son of Man will be as sudden, as striking to all eyes, as mighty in its power, as when the lightning leaps from the cloud and suddenly sets the whole heavens in flame. There is no need of asking of the lightning 'Where is it?' , r for any to tell you of it.

"But this coming will not be now. I must first suffer many things from this generation, and be rejected by it. Far from approaching with slow royal poup, seen and welcomed from afar; far from the world hailing my coming, and preparing for it, as for that of an expected king: they will be busied in their ordinary affairs when it is hearest; till, suddenly, wide ruin and judgment burst on them, as the flood on the men of the days of Noah, and the fire from heaven on Sodom, in the days of Lot, bringing destruction on all. Men lived in accurity then; they ate and drank; they married and gave in marriage, with no thought or preparation for the impending catastrophe.

"It will be, the same at my coming. Men will be as secure; the day will burst on them as suddenly, when I shall be revealed in my glory. When it comes, there will be an awful and instant separation of man from man. The good and evil will no longer be mixed to gether. He who would save himself must, on the moment, part from those whom the peril threatens. He who lives in a town, must, as the destruction approaches, so hasten his flight, that if he be on the housetop when it draws near, he must not think of going into the house to save anything; but must flee, at the loss of all earthly pessessions. He who is in the open field, must not turn back to his house for his goods, but must leave all behind him, and escape with his life. You hear my words: see that, in that day, you give heed to them. Remember Lot's wife, who perished for looking back, in disobedience to the divine command. Whoseever, in that day, shall scek to preserve his life, by unfaithfulness to me, shall lose life cternal, and he who loses this life for my sake, will secure heaven for ever.

"The separation of men, at my coming, will, indeed, be solemn! Those who spent this life together, will then find themselves parted for over! I tell you, in that night there will be two men in one bed; one will be taken, and the other left; two poor slaves will be grinding flour for the household together; one will be taken and the other left." the subject growth and the hearts of tys will come the days of the pretending to there is the fter them; do in will be as as when the vhole heavens Where is it?

r many things approaching far from the hat of an exirs when it is n them, as the om heaven on Men lived in re in marriage, strophe. as secure; the evealed in my tant separation be mixed to moment, pari a town, must, at if he be on going into the all earthly pos rn back to his nd escape with ou give heed to ng back, in disthat day, shall shall lose life cure heaven for eed, be solemn! msolves parted nen in one bed; vill be grinding the other left.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Twelve had listened with breathless attention to this vision of the future. They had heard much that was new, grand, and fearful, and they trembled with a natural fear at the awful picture set before them. "Where, Lord," asked they, "will the Messiah gather His own, that they may be safe? Where is the refuge in which those who love Thee will be received in that day?"

"Who says to the eagle," replied Jesus, "where the carcase is? His keen eyes see it from afar. Where the Messiah will be, and where the gathering place for the saved will be, they will see from afar for whom it is provided, and with swift flight will betake themselves thither."

The momentous earnestness with which Jesus had so often spoken of the difficulty of being truly His disciple had sunk into the hearts of many who heard it, and the free access to Himself He permitted. must often have been used to seek counsel on a point so momentous. It was, moreover, a passion with the Jew to speculate on every question of theology, as is seen in the vast system elaborated by the Rabbis. The mysteries of the future world especially engrossed them. By the multitude it was taken for granted that every Israelite, as such, would have a portion in heaven, but there were not a few others who, like Esdras, fancied that "The Most High had made this world for many, but the world to come for few: as He had made much common earth, but little gold." One in whom His words had raised such questions, took advantage, about this time, of His readiness to listen to their doubts and inquiries, to ask Him if more than a few only would be saved, since He had said it was so hard to be His follower. Instead of answering, directly, a question which could only gratify curiosity, Jesus, ever practical, gave His reply a turn which was much more useful.

"It would benefit you little," said He, "if I answered your question as you wish: the great matter for you is that many will not be saved, so that it becomes you to strive, with intense carnestness, to enter in through the narrow door that leads to eternal life; for many, I say unto you, who would like to enter at last, but do not thus strive now, will seek to do so when too late and will not be admitted. If once you be shut out from the kingdom of the Messiah, you will in vain plead your external connection with me now. When the great banquet of heaven begins, the Messiah will cause the door of the banqueting hall to be shat. If ye, then, come to it and knock at the door, saying (Lord, open to us,' He will answer from within, 'I know you not, whence you are.' If you urge that He has forgotten you, and that, if He will bethink Him, He will recollect that you ate and drank in His presence, as companions at the same table, and that He had taught in your streets, He will only answer, 'I tell you I know you not, whence ye are. Depart from me, all ye workers of unrighteousness.' A State of

"What weeping and gnashing of teeth will be there as ye stand, thus, and see A braham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the propheta, in the kingdom of God, and yourselves cast out!... What wailing, when you see, instead of yourselves, the heathen you have so despised, come from the east, and west, and north, and south, and sit down at the great feast of heaven. Believe me, there are many who, now, before the setting up of my kingdom, are first, who, after it is set up, will be last; many, like the heathen who shall enter to the feast; who will become my disciples only late, and shall yet take a first place in my kingdom. See that ye pression while the door is still open to admit you."

Jesus had now been for some time in Perea, in the territory of Antipas, the murderer of John. The intense unpopularity of the crime had, doubtless, been a protection to Him, but there were many reasons why such a man should wish the great Wonder Worker, whom he personally feared so much, as, perhaps, the murdered Baptist, risen from the dead, fairly out of his dominions. Unwilling to appear in the matter, he used the Pharisces, counting on their readiness to further his end of getting rid of Him. Some of their humber, therefore, came to Him, with the air of friends anxious for His safety, and warned Him that it would be well for Him to leave Perea as quickly as possible, as Herod desired to kill Him.

Jesus at once saw through the whole design, as a crafty plan of Herod himself to expel Him. He was on His way to Jerusalem, and contented Himself with showing that He gave no grounds for political suspicion, and that He quite well understood how little friendship there was in the advice the Pharisees had given Him.

Go and tell that crafty fox," said He, "that I know why he is afraid of me, and wishes me out of his land, Tell him there is no cause for his alarm, for I do nothing to wake his suspicions. I have no designs that can injure him, but confine myself to driving demons from poor men possessed with them, and to healing the sick. These harmless labours I shall not intermit till the time I have fixed to give to them is over. It will take three days more to pass quite out of Perea, and for these three days I shall be in his territory, but on the third day I leave it, for I am now on my way to Jerusalem, to die there. Herod will not need to trouble himself, to kill me, for it would be unfitting for a prophet to die outside the holy city." Such a message was virtually an intimation that He knew that it would be by the hands of those who pretended kindly to warn Him, and ther allies, that He should perish, and not by those of Antipas.

The word Jerusalem, and the thought of the guilt of the city so tenderly loved by Him-guilt soon to be increased by His violent death at its hand, filled His heart with deep irrepressible emotion. "O Jerusalem! Jerusalem." cried He, in a louder voice, trembling with sadness-"it is thou, the City of the Temple, the City of the Great King, who killest the prophets, and stonest those whom God sends unto thee! Thou art still true to thine evil repute! How often, oh, ha them hen c spread But t come tection will I till I c no lon

the nai

LUBRE A TUN SUT -46.81 33 ol pauliti THE Twelve continu patient were gr JULY Stri udices a A sens Jesus as might be less neces difficulti umphant more tha duty, He one of ha and give seeming a parable "There nor rever

had an en

terpositio

justice to paid no a

could bea

'Though

not preten

torments :

own sake,

e prophets. hat wailing, have so deuth, and sit many who, o, after it is enter to the 11 yet take a e the door is territory of larity of the re were many der Worker, urdered Bap-Unwilling to on their readitheir humber, for Hissafety, eave Perca as crafty plan of erusalem, and ands for politiittle friendship now why he is him there is no icions. I have driving demons c sick. These ve fixed to give ss quite out of ory, but on the rusalem, to die kill me, for it ly city." Such hat it would be Him, and their, tipas. t of the city so by His violent ble emotion. voice, trembling the City of the ose whom God te! How often,

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

oh, how often, thou mother of many children, would I have gathered them all round me safely, from the dangers before them; as the careful hen calls together her brood when the shadow of evil falls near, and spreads ner wings over them, and guards them from every harm? But thou wouldst not let me do thee this service. For what shall come on thee thou must, thyself, bear the blame! The divine protection I would have given thee thou hast refused and hast lost, nor will Lappear in thy desolation as thy helper. Thou wilt not see me till I come to set up in thee my Kingdom, and receive thy homage. till I come to set up in the my Kingdom, and receive the arms, no longer to be denied, —as the Messiah, the Blessed, who comes in the name of the Lord!" I is only on the Bessed, who comes in all o the find the Lord!" I is only on the Bessed, who comes in the name of the Lord!" I is only only on solution of solution and only of million of the Lord of the solution of solution and break near of the ChAPTER LIV. It is low all a moder of a break near of the Lord of the solution of the solution of a break near of the the solution of the solution of the of a break near of the the solution of the solution of the solution of a break near of the solution of the solution of the solution of a break near of the solution of the solution of the solution of the solution of a break near of the solution of the solution of the solution of the solution of a solution of the solution of the solution of the solution of the solution of a solution of the solution of th

THE lofty demands of Jesus from His followers had filled the Twelve with doubts and misgivings of their power to fulfil them. A continuous self-denial, which thought only of their Master, and a patient love which returned meekness and good for evil and injury. were graces slowly attained; how much more so when they could buy strike root in the heart after the dislodgement of hereditary prejudices and modes of thought? A ball while works of it sends be

A sense of weakness had already led them to ask that their faith in Jesus as the Messiah; able to aid them in all their straits and trials; might be strengthened. The utterance of that faith in prayer was no less necessary, at once to obtain the grace needed to bear them through difficulties, and to raise them to a steadfast confidence in the triumphant manifestation of their Master's Kingdom, of which He had more than once spoken. Lest they should grow slack in this great duty. He reminded them that their whole frame of mind should be one of habitual devotion, that they might not become faint-hearted, and give way before the trials they might have to suffer, or at the seeming delay in His coming. His words, as usual, took the form of a parable. third days f. lease it, for 1 and days of any se

"There was in a city," said He, "a judge, who neither feared God nor reverenced man. And there was also a widow in that city who had an enemy from whom she could hope to get free only by the interposition of the judge. So she came often to him, asking him to do justice to her, and maintain her right against her adversary. But he paid no attention, for a long time, to her suit. At last, however, he could bear her constant coming no longer, and said within himself Though I should do it as my duty, that does not trouble me, for I do not pretend to fear God, and care nothing for man. Yet this widow torments me. I shall therefore do what is right in her case for my own sake, for otherwise she will perfectly weary me by her constant appeals. tonight if a brut of bury the o stra the LE Maker of an entres

642

"So, the widow, by her importunity, obtained her end, at last. "Hear what the unjust judge says!" But if men thus get what is right, even from the worst, if they urge their suit long to bugh, with sufficient earnestness; how can any one doubt that God, the Righteous One, will give need to the cry of His Saints for all they have to suffer? Will He not much rather, though He let the enemy rage for what seems a long time, surely, at the great day, avenge the wrongs of His elect, who are so dear to Him, and thus ery in prayer night and day? "I tell you, He will be patient towards them, though they thus cry to Him continually, for He is not wearied with their complaints, as the unjust judge was with those of the widow; and He will deliver them from their enemies, without and within, and give them a portion in the Kingdom of the Messiah; and that speedily. For when the Messiah comes it will seem as if the waiting for Him had only been brief. But when He thus comes, will He find any who still look for Him. and believe that the promise of His return will be fulfilled? Will my disciples endure to the end; or can it be that they will fall away be-fore all their trials?"

To one of these last days in Perea we are indebted for the parable of the Pharisee and the Publican. Jesus had spoken much of prayer, but the religion of the day was so largely mechanical, that they were in danger of mistaking the outward form for the substance. Only repeated lessons could guard them from the lifeless formality of the Rabbis, with them the most sacred duties had sunk to cold outward rites. Self-righteous pride, moreover, was the characteristic of much of the current religiousness, and was, in fact, a natural result of the externalism prevailing. To show the true nature of devotion pleasing to God, He related the following parable:---

"Two men," said He, "went up at the same time, the hour of prayer, to the Temple, to pray." The one was a Pharisee, the other a Publican. The Pharisee, who had seen the Publican enter the Temple with him, stood apart; his eyes towards the Holy of Holies, and began to pray thus—"O God, I thank Thee that I do not belong to the common multitude of mankind, whom Thou hast rejected—to the coveous, the unjust, the adulterous." T thank Thee that I am not what so many men are, what this Publican, here before. Thee, is. He knows nothing of fasting of of tithes, but I fast every Monday and every Thursday, and I give the Priests and Levites the tenth, not only of all I have, but of all I may gain, which is more than the Law requires.

The Publicar, meanwhile, feeling that he was a sinner, st pped far behind the Pharisee, coming no further into the sacred court than its very edge, for he shrank from a near approach to God. Nor could he dare, in his lowly penifence, to lift up so much as his eyes to heaven, far less his head and his hands, but, with bent head, smote on his breast in his sorrow, and said—'God be merciful to me the sinner.' 'The Pharisee had offered only a proud, cold thanksgiving for his own merits; the Publican an humble cry for mercy.

"B the ex God, a see we thinks God, a Am rival s of div divorc his ha or her the con adulte Jesus other y compre Som questic a man condem and do and low on the permitt part of day to a on light versy, a ness. "Ha made n race, an

not kn

though

that the

before,

than to father

tionship

as it we

the two joined '

has ma

regard

~

think t

Ther

i, at last. s get what is enough, with he Righteous ave to suffer? age for what vrongs of His ght and day? they thus cry complaints, as e will deliver hem a portion when the Mesly been brief. ook for Him, ed? Will my fall away be-or the parable ich of prayer, hat they were stance. Only rmality of the cold outward ristic of much l result of the otion pleasing

e, the hour of ee, the other a ter the Temple lies, and began ng to the com--to the covetm not what so s. // He knows day and every not only of all law requires. sinner, st pped ered court, than od. Nor could as his eyes to head, smote on me the sinner.' sgiving for his

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

"Believe me, this Publican, whom the Pharisee gave a place among the extortionate, the unjust and the impure, received favour from God, and returned to his home forgiven and accepted; but the Pharisee went away unjustified. For, as I have often said, every one who thinks highly of himself in religious things will be humbled before God, and he who humbles himself will be honoured before Him."

Among the questions of the day fiercely debated between the great rival schools of Hillel and Schammai, no one was more so than that of divorce. The school of Hillel contended that a man had a right to divorce his wife for any cause he might assign, if it were no more than his having ceased to love her, or his having seen one he liked better, or her having cooked a dinner badly. The school of Schammai, on the contrary, held that divorce could be issued only for the crime of adultery, and offences against chastity. If it were possible to get Jesus to pronounce in favour of either school, the hostility of the other would be roused, and, hence, it seemed a favourable chance for compromising Him, to broach this subject for His opinion.

Some of the Pharisees, therefore, took an opportunity of raising the question. "Is it lawful," they asked, "to put away one's wife, when a man thinks fit, for any cause he is pleased to assign?" Or, do you think there are exceptions to this rule?"

There could be no doubt that the lofty morality of Jesus would condemn a mere human custom which was corrupting the whole civil and domestic life of the nation, and undermining all honour, chastity, and love. He had already answered the question fully, in the Sermon on the Mount, in which He had taught that arbitrary divorce was not permitted; but that was long since, and He was now in a different part of the country. It was quite in accordance with the habit of the day to appeal to any Rabbi on a disputed religious question, or scruple, on lighter or weightier points; it gratified the universal love for controversy, and gave an opportunity for showing dialectical wit and sharpness. But the questioners gained little by trying their skill on Jesus. "Have you never read," answered He, "that the Creator of men made man and woman at the same time, in the very beginning of our race, and gave them to each other as husband and wife? And do you not know that so intimate was the relation thus instituted, that, close though the connection be between parents and children. God has said that that between man and wife is so much closer, that a son, who, before, was under his parents, and was bound more closely to them than to any other persons in the world, is to separate himself from his father and mother when he marries, and to form a still nearer relationship with his wife—such a relationship that the two shall become, as it were, one. As soon as a man and woman are married, therefore, the two make, together, only one being. But since it is God who has joined them thus, divorce is the putting asunder by man of what God has made into one. Marriage is a sacred union, and man is not to regard it as something which he can undo at his pleasure."

644

Nothing could be said against this from natural grounds, but the objection lay ready that the Law of Moses was not so strict, and a prospect offered of forcing Jesus either to contradict Himself, or to pronounce openly against the great founder of the nation. "If this be so," said they. "how comes it that Moses permitted a man to divorce his wife? for you know that he says that writings of divorcement might be given where a divorce was wished, and these dissolved the marriage."

"Moses," replied our Lord, "did, indeed, suffer you to put away your wives, to prevent a greater evil. He did so as a statesman and a law-giver, from the necessities of the age, which made any better law impracticable. Our fathers were too rude and headstrong to permit his doing more. But, though he did not prohibit divorce, because the feelings of the times did not allow him to do so, it does not follow from this that his action in this matter was the original law of the Creator, or that conscience and religion sanction such separations. I say, therefore, that whoever puts away his wife, except for fornication, which destroys the very essence of marriage by dissolving the oneness it had formed, and shall marry another, cemmits adultery; and whoever marries her who is put away for any other cause commits adultery, because the woman is still, in God's sight, wife of him who has divorced her."

This statement was of far deeper moment than the mere silencing of malignant spies. It was designed to set forth for all ages the law of His New Kingdom in the supreme in ter of family life. It swept away for ever from His Society the conception of woman as a mere toy or slave of man, and based true relations of the sexes on the eternal foundation of truth, right, honour, and love. To ennoble the House and the Family by raising woman to her true position was essential to the future stability of His Kingdom, as one of purity and spiritual worth. By making marriage indissoluble He proclaimed the equal rights of woman and man within the limits of the family, and, in this, gave their charter of nobility to the mothers of the world. For her nobler position in the Christian era, compared with that granted her in antiquity, woman is indebted to Jesus Christ.

When an opportunity offered, the disciples asked fuller instruction on a matter so grave. Customs or opinions, supported, apparently, by a national law, and that law divine; customs, the rightness of which has never before been doubted, are hard to uproot, however good the grounds on which they are challenged. Hence, even the Twelve felt the strictness of the new law introduced by their Master respecting marriage, and frankly told Him, that if a man were bound to his wife as He had said, it seemed to them better not to marry.

"With respect to marrying or not marrying," replied Christ, "your saying that it is good for a man not to do so is one which cannot be received by all men, but only by those to whom the moral power to act on it has been given by God. Some do not marry from natural state, th vice of lofty pr life, tha service, Jesus to to marr the man perversi

It is a househo derness doubtles as alway beamed still mor question on the would la blessing. A beau age to th of the e "had lai by one, a up famo works." holiness, bcfore J again bro pray for seemed o bringing ent from been a re Himself I ones His cility, an lliem at a needed th had enfo peating t "Let t bid them childlike for the be natural causes, and there are some who voluntarily keep in the single state, that they may give themselves with an entire devotion to the service of my Kingdom. Let him among you who feels able to act on the lofty principle of denying himself the nobility and holiness of family life, that he may with more entire devotion consecrate himself to my service, do 'so." Self-sacrifice, in this, as in all things, was left by Jesus to the conscience and heart. Even His apostles were left free to marry or remain single, as they chose, nor can any depreciation of the married state be wrung from His words, except by a manifest perversion of their spirit.

It is significant that, in the South as in Galilee, the mothers of households, though not expressly named, turned with peculiar tenderness and reverence to the new Prophet and Rabbi. They were doubtless encouraged to do so by the sight of the women who now, as always, accompanied Him on His journeys; but the goodness that beamed in His looks, and breathed in His every word, drew them still more. Indifferent to the hard and often worthless disputes and questions which engaged the other sex, they sought only a blessing on the loved ones of their hearts and homes, contented if Jesus would lay His hands on their infants, and utter over them a word of blessing.

A beautiful custom led parents to bring their children at an early age to the Synagogue, that they might have the prayers and blessings. of the elders. " After the father of the child," says the Talmud, "had laid his hands on his child's head, he led him to the elders, one by one, and they also blessed him, and prayed that he might grow up famous in the Law, faithful in marriage, and abundant in good works." Children were thus brought, also, to any Rabbi of special holiness, and hence they had been presented already more than once before Jesus. Now, on this, His last journey, little children were again brought to Him that He might put His hands on them, and pray for a blessing on their future life. To the disciples, however, it seemed only troubling their Master, and they chid the parents for bringing them." But the feeling of Christ to children was very different from theirs. To look into their innocent artless eyes must have been a relief after enduring those of spies and malignant enemies. He Himself had the ideal childlike spirit, and He delighted to see in little ones His own image. Purity, truthfulness, simplicity, sincerity, docility, and loving dependence shone out on Him from them, and made them at all times His favourite types for Hisfollowers. The Apostles needed the lessons their characteristics impressed, and though He had enforced them before, He gladly took every opportunity of repeating them. much a 12 1

"Let the little children come to me," said Jesus, "and do not forbid them, for the Kingdom of Heaven is given only to such as have a childlike spirit and nature like theirs." Instead of being too young for the bestowal of His blessing, He saw in their simplicity and inno-nds; but the strict, and a mself, or to "If this a man to diof divorceid these dis-to put away atesnian and le any better trong to perdivorce, beb, it does not the original netion such his wife, exmarriage by nother, cemtway for any till, in God's ere silencing ages the law fe. b. It swept an as a mere sexes on the ennoble the position was of purity and proclaimed f the family. of the world. ed with that rist. 1 at at 1 r instruction apparently. rightness of oot, however ace, even the their Master h were bound to marry. plied Christ, is one which om the moral t marry from cence, the fond earnest of the character He sought to reproduce in mankind, "The cuizens of His Kingdom must become like them by change of heart and a lowly spiritual life. Stooping down, therefore. He took them up in His arms, put His hands on them, and biessed them. Even the least incidents were thus ever turned to the highest uses.

646

1

The need of this childlike spirit, and the sad results of its absence, must have been brought home to the Apostles by an occurrence in their next day's journey. Starting southwards, on the way to Jerusalem, a young man, whose exemplary character had already made him a ruler of the local synagogue, came running after Him, and, approaching Him with great respect, kneeled before Him, as was usual before a venerated Rabbi. "Teacher," said he is shall greatly thank Thee if Thou wilt ease my mind. I have laboured diligently to do good works of all kinds prescribed by the Law, but I do not feel satisfied that I have done enough: so am not sure, after all that I shall inherit eternal life in the kingdom of the Messiah. Fray, tell me what special good work can I do to secure this?" "Way do you ask me what is right to do?" answered Jesus. "Your question is superfluous, for it answers itself. There is only one Absolute Good—that is, God. The good act respecting which you inquire can be nothing else than perfect, obedience to His holy wil. If you really would enter into life eternal, you must keep the Commandments given thee by Him."

Commandments given thee by Him." The young man expected to hear some new and special commands, requiring unwonted pains, and securing correspondingly great merit by faultless obedience. The answer of Jesus was too general to help him in this. He, therefore, asked—What commands He particularly meant.

To his astonishment and mortification instead of naming some ceremonial injunctions, as the Rabbis would have done. Jests simply quoted some of the well-known commandments of the Second Table — Thou shalt not kill," 'Thou shalt not commit adultery," 'Thou shalt not steal, "Thou shalt not bear false witness". Honour thy father, and thy mother," closing the list with the greatest of all— "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." which was thus put lass as the one by which He intended to bring the young man to the test. These were only the common duties required of all men, and, as such, lisd a conventional fulfilment, which satisfied human standards. Their scope was very different, however, in the eyes of Jesus, and this the young man presently felt.

His upright and honest life brought no blush at the enumeration. Without pride, except the secret pride of self-righteousness, and with all reverent docility, he replied:

all reverent docility, he replied: "L believe I can say that I have strictly kept all these commands. In what respect do I still come short?" The question isself revealed his spiritual deficiencies. If showe in particu neighbou hinted a taught hi its fulfilm Jesus 1 ness of 1 character in his life demand t of the kin " You wish to b their dept anything, have sugg you what from with your desi self all th instead of treasure in cross after The den tieular cas neath it 1 Christ, red young ma conception him to a h weakness do whatev He had th heaven: h It might that which roused one thoughts i Jesus mus there must But the g from all and willing life, for H that, how heaven, l had reali that, however, sincere in his efforts after such a life as would secure heaven, he had not risen above the outward service of the letter, and had realized neither the spirit of the commandments as a whole, nor, in particular, the infinite breadth of that which enjoined love to his neighbour. Had he seen this in its true grandeur, it would have hinted a higher moral task than merely legal conceptions of duty had taught him, and have supplied, at the same time, an impulse towards its fulfilment.

Jesus read his heart in a moment, and was won by the guilelessness of his answer and question, and by the evident worth of his character. As He looked at him, so earnest, so humble, so admirable in his life and spirit, He loved him. Could he only stand the testing demand that must now be made, he would pass into the citizenship of the kingdom of God.

"You lack one thing yet," said Jesus, therefore, " if you really wish to be perfect. Had you understood the commands of God in their depth and breadth, you would not have asked if you could do anything more than you had done; their living power in you would have suggested continually fresh duties. When you ask me to tell you what next to do, it shows that you think only of tasks imposed irom without, and do not act from a principle in your own soul. If your desire for eternal life be supreme, as it ought to be go home, self all that you have, and give what you get for it to the poor, and instead of the earthly riches thus given in charity, you will have treasure in heaven. Then, come to me, be my disciple, and bear your cross after me, as I bear mine,"

The demand, great though it seems, was exactly suited to the particular case. It was a special test in a special instance, though underneath it lay the unconditional self-sacrifice, and self-surrender for Christ, required from all His disciples. It could not fail to bring the young man to a clearer self-knowledge, and thus, to a whofly new conception of what true religion demanded. The only way to lead him to a healthier moral state was to humble him, by a disclosure of weakness hitherto unsuspected. He had fancied himself willing to do whatever could be required; he could now see if he really were so. He had thought he cared for nothing in comparison with gaining heaven; he could now judge for himself if he had not erred. It might have been hoped that this lofty counsel, the repetition of

It might have been hoped that this lofty counsel, the repetition of that which had been so often given to others before, would have roused one so carnest to a noble enthusiasin, before which all lower thoughts would have lost their power. The love he had inspired in Jesus must have shown itself towards him in every look and tone; there must have been every desire to attract and win: none to repel. But the one absolute, constant condition of acceptance demanded from all supreme, unrestricted devotion to Himself and His cause, and willingness to sacrifice all human ties and possessions, or even life, for His sake, could in no case be lowered. Foor, friendles, out naming some Jesus simply Second Table tery. Thou Honour thy atest of alls thus put lass an to the test men, and, sy han standards, of Jesus, and reproduce in like them by down, there-

n them, and

turned to the

f its absence,

occurrence in

way to Jeru-

already made

er Him, and, Him, as was he, 'I, shall ave laboured the Law, but am not sure,

n of the Messecure this?"

wered Jesus.

There is only

pecting which

e to His holy

nust keep the

al commands,

ly great merit eneral to help

e particularly enumeration ness, and with se commands.

648

1.3

lawed, Jesus abated no jot of His awful claims, loftler than human monarch had ever dreamed of making, on all who sought clitzenship in His Kingdom.

The test exacted was fatal, at least for the time. It was precisely that which the young man had least expected, and was a thousand times harder than any legal enforcements; painful and protracted even as those by which the highest grade of ceremonial lioliness was attained. Had Jesus invited him to be His disciple without requiring the condition He had so often declared indispensable, there would liave been instant, delighted acceptance. But that could not be. He could not say "Be my disciple," till He had secured his supreme devotion.

Rich, and already a magistrate--for Church and State with the Jews were identical-the demand staggered and overwhelmed the young man. A moment's thought, and his broad acres, and social position, which he must give up for ever, if he would follow Jesus raised a whole army of hindrances and hesitations. The condition imposed had no limitation, but neither had his own question to which it was a reply. He had been touclied where weakest, but this was exactly what his repoated request demanded. Why should Jesus have asked less from him than from other disciples? It was, doubt less, harder for a rich than for a poor man to leave all, but there must, in no case, be room for dot bt of the entire sincerity of those admitted as disciples, and this could be tested only by their readiness to sach fice all to become so. It was less, besides, to demand this, as things were, for discipleship would only too surely involve, very soon, het only loss of all earthly goods, but life long trials, and even death." But the world got the better in the young man's heart, and he went away sorrowful! at the thought that he was voluntarily excluding hunself from the kingdom of the Messiah. Yet, the broad acres: the rich possessions how could he give them up? "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of Godt" said Jesus as he went away, evidently in great mental dis tress..... It is easier," continued 'He, "to use a proverb you often hear, for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God." To Build to approximate the words fell with a new and perplexing sound on the ears of the disciples." Like all Jews, they had been accustomed to regard worldy prosperity as a special mark of the favour of God...for their ancient Scriptures seemed always to connect the enjoyment of temporal blessings with obedience to the divine law. They still, moreover, secretly cherished the hope of an earthly kingdom of the Messiah, in which riches would play a great part, and, even apart from all this if it were hard to enter the kingdom of heaven, except by stooping to absolute poverty, it seemed as if very few could be saved at all. "Children, how hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God." repeated Jesus, seeing their wonder and evident un of a needle the kingdo "Who; "With estly on th sible, He riches: apa Peter, es passed, and disciples ar of merit be Jesus sumn young man They had g familios, ho selves, thes natural, the which Jesu sake. In keepin restrain, his Apostles wo Knowing of reprovin have sound "Be assu things shall. through me the world:

humiliation, you, on his.

every one w

or children,

fold Even

he has left:

dren: for he for all: he v his own, and ship. But, future world he will inher

15"But," 80

of he en

er than human ght cltizenship

t was precisely was a thousand and protracted al lioliness was thout requiring be, there would ald not be. He d his supreme

State with the erwhelmed the cres, and social d follow Jesus. The condition lestion to which st. but this was y should Jesus It was, doubtmut there must, those admitted adiness to sacrid this, as things e, very soon, hot even death. art, and he went tarily excluding broad acres: the dout whiten to the kingden reat mental dis werds you often than for a rich in the ears of the o regard worldly or their ancient of temporal y still, moreover, the Messiah, in t from all this if by stooping to aved at all a riches to enter

heir wonder au

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

rident uncasiness. At It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man, who clings to his riches, to enter into the kingdom of God.

"Who, then, can be saved?" asked some of them. Enall duraber and "With men it is impossible." replied Jesus, fixing His eyes carnestly on them, " but not with God: for with God all things are possible. He can bestow heavenly grace to wean the heart from worldly iches: apart from this the world will prevail."bad all notificante Peter, especially, had listened with deep attention to all that had passed, and had been mentally applying it to the case of his fellow disciples and himself. Their minds were still full of the Jewish idea. of merit before God, and of a claim to corresponding reward. When Jesus summoned them to follow Him, they had been exactly in the young man's position, though they had not had so much to surrender. They had given up every thing for Him, at His first invitation-their families, houses, occupations, and prospects. However little in themselves, these had been the whole world to them. I It seemed only natural, therefore, that they should have a proportion of that treasure

ske. In keeping with his natural frank impulsiveness, Peter could not rstrain his thoughts, and asked Jesus directly what he and his fellow Apostles would have for their loyalty to Him?

which Jesus had promised the young man, if he forsook, all for His Knowing the honest simplicity of the Twelve, their Master, instead of reproving their boldness, cheered them with words which must have sounded inconceivably grand to Galilæan fishermen. "Be assured that at the final triumph of my Kingdom, when all things shall be delivered from their present corruption, and restored, through me and my work, to the glory they had before sin entered the world: when I, the now despised Son of Man, shall come again, seated on the throne of my glory, you who have followed me in my humiliation, will be exalted to kingly dignity, and shall sit, each of you, on his throng, to judge the twelve tribes of Israel. Yea, more: every one who gives up his brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or children, or lands, or houses, that he may the more unreservedly spread my Gospel, and honour my name, will be rewarded a hundred fold. Even in this present life he will receive back again richly all he has left: houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, for he will find among those who believe in me, a compensation for all: he will regard and be allowed freely to use their means as his own, and he welcomed by them with more than brotherly friendsip. But, with all this, he will have to bear persecution. In the wure world, moreover, he will have a still greater reward, for there he will inherit everlasting life." winwith at Bomose H. (173 10 public ala "But," added He, by way of warning, " Do net trust to your having been the first to follow me. For the rewards of the kingdom in he en will be like those given by a householder who had a vineyard, and, needing labourers for it, went out early in the momning to hire them. Having found some, he agreed to give them a denarius a day, and sent them into the vineyard. Going out again about the third hour—nine o'clock—he saw others standing idle in the market-place, and sent them also into the vineyard, making, no bargain with them, however, but bidding them trust him that he would give them what was just. He did the same at the sixth and at the ninth hours. Finally, he went out at the eleventh hour, and found still others standing about, and asked why they had stayed there all the day, idle. 'Because no one has hired us,' replied they. 'Go ye also into the vineyard,' said he, 'and you shall receive whatever is 'right.'

"When the evening was come, the lord of the vineyard bade his overseer call the labourers, and pay them all the same sum—the denarius for which he had agreed with the first. He was, also, to begin with those who came into the vineyard last.

"When they came, therefore, who were hired at the eleventh hour, they received each a denarius. But when the first came, they supposed they should have received more; but they also received each only the same amount. And when they received it, they murmured against the householder, saying—"Those who came in last did only one hour's work, and thou hast made them equal to us, who bore the scorching wind from the desert at sunrise, and the heat of the day." But he answered one of them, "Friend, I do thee no brong: didst not thou agree with me for a denarius? Take what is yours, and go: I desire to give the same to those who came in last, as unto thee. Is it not lawful for me to do what I will in my own affairs? Is thine eye evil because I am good?"

The householder thus made the first last, and the last first, be cause the first had been working for hire, while the others had simply trusted his promise. He who works in my kingdom for the sake of a reward hereafter, may do his work well, but he bonours me less than others who trust in me, without thinking of future gain. The spirit in which you labour for me gives your service its value. He who is called late in life, and serves me unselfishly, will stand higher at the great day than he who has served fie longer, but with a less noble motive. Many are called to join my kingdom and work in it, but few show themselves by their spirit and zeal especially worthy of honour. If the first find themselves last, it will dependen themselves, for though no one can claim reward as his due in the king dom of God, yet I give it, of favour, to those first who serve me most purely. He, I repeat, who works most devotedly, without thought of reward, will be first, though, perhaps, last to be called ; he will be chosen to honour, while others less zealous and loving, though earlier called, will remain undistinguished."

Nothing could have been more fitted to check any tendency to selfimportance and pride, so natural in men raised to a position so incomceivably forth, for charge of enter the footing w their wo reward p ment of They w near Jeri Nisan, the davs mur spring bei city. All hung over constant o very sole with an u because 1 were on t had had to Jordan, to very jaws the woody Jabbok at the spot w of Machae where, the Mount No where Joh Everythin knew thei enter Jeru old, whom could be b to His dea His purpo walked at alarm. WYet, the result ver dream of a though Je

which He

might be n archy. That

To dissi

d to give them Going out again standing idle in rard, making no ust him that he the sixth and at hour, and found stayed there all d they. Go ye give whatever is ineyard bade his a sim—the denans, also, to begin the eleventh hour, came, they supso received each they murmured in last did only us, who hore the heat of the day' no 'vrong' didst is yours, and go: as unto thee. Is affairs? Is thine the last first, be others had simply m for the sake of honours me less ature gain. The e its value. He fishly, will stand e longer, but with ngdom and work d zeal especially it will dependen is due in the king ho serve me most without though called he will be ng, though earlier tendency to selfposition so incon-

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

ceivably above their original station. Nor was there room, henceforth, for any mercenary thoughts, even of future reward, for the discharge of their duty. They could not forget, that, though first to enter the vineyard of the New Kingdom, they were yet, so far, on a footing with all who should follow them, that the spiritual worth of their work, slotie determined their ultimate honour. The special reward promised by their Master was a free gift of God, not the payment of a debt, and depended on their own spirit and zeal. They were now approaching the end of their journey, for they were near Jericho, at which the road struck directly west to Jerusalem. Nisan, the month of the Passover, had already come, and only a few days more remained of our Saviour's life. Nature was putting on its spring beauty, and throngs of early pilgrims were passing to the holy city. All around was joy and gladness, but, amidst all, a deep gloom hung over the little company of Jesus. Everything on the way-the constant disputes with the Rabbis-the warning about Antipas; the very solemnity of the recent teachings, combined to fill their minds with an undefined terror. They had shrunk from visiting Bethany. because it was near Jerusalem; for they knew that the authorities were on the watch to arrest their Master, and put Him to death. He had had to flee from that village, first to Ephraim, and then, over the Jordan, to Perea, and yet He was, now, deliberately walking into the very jaws of danger. They had marched steadily southwards through the woody highlands of Gilead; had passed the rushing waters of the Jabbok and its tributaries, and had, for a moment, seen, once more, the spot where John had closed his mission. The distant mountains of Machaerus now threw their shadows over their route, and, everywhere, the recollections of the great herald of their Master met them. Mount Nebo, where Moses was buried, and the range of Attaroth. where John's mutilated corpse had been luin to rest, were within sight. Everything in the associations of the journey was solemn and they knew their national history too well not to fear that, for Jesus, to enter Jerusalem, would be to share the sad fate of the prophets of old, whom it had received only to murder. It was clear that there could be but one issue, and no less so that. He was voluntarily going to His death. The calm resolution with which He thus carried out His purpose awed them; for, so far from showing hesitation. He walked at their head, while they could only follow with excited alarm. "Yet, their ideas were still confused, and the hope that things might result very differently, still alternated with their fears. The old dream of an earthly kingdom still clung to them, and they fancied that, though Jesus might expect to be killed in the rising of the nation which He would, perhaps, bring about at the approaching feast, He might be more fortunate, and live to establish a great Messianic monarchy.

"Fo dissipate such an illusion, He had already told them, twice, ex-

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

652

and the home of the anti-anti-anti-antiactly what was before Him; but to prepare them, if possible, for the shock which the sad realization of His words was so soon to bring. He once more recapitulated, with greater minuteness than ever, what He knew: with divine certainty, awalted His entrance into Jerusalem. "Behold," said He, "we are going up to Jerusalem, and the Son of Man will be delivered to the chief priests and scribes, and they will condemn Him to death "-they, and no others; for, as heads of the Old Kingdom of God, now corrupt and dying, they had refected Him-"and they will deliver Him to the Romans, to mock, and scourge, and crucify, but the third day He shall rise again. How hard it is to uproot strong prepossessions was shown within a few hours. In spite of such repeated warnings, not only the Twelve. but the others who followed Him, did not understand what He meant. It is easy for us to do so, after the event; but to anticipate the explanation thus given must have been well-nigh impossible to minds preoccupied with ideas so radically opposed to it, The mention of thrones, as in reversion for the Twelve at "the Coming" of their Master in His glory; had neutralized the announce ment of His death. His open triumph was expected as very near at hand. His death they did not understand, and could not reconcile with His other statements, for, indeed, they did not wish to do so. Dreams of ambition, thus kindled, had risen, especially in the minds of James and John, who, with Peter, were the most honoured of the Apostles. They had been in a better social position than most of their brethren, and, with Salome, their mother, had given all they had, freely, to the cause of their Master. Ashamed, themselves, to tell Him their thoughts, they availed themselves of Salome, whom, perhaps, He might the more readily hear, as older than they; as a woman; perhaps as His mother's sister; and as one who had, shown herself, like her sons, His true friend.

So different, as yet, were the two men from what they were after wards to become, when they had drunk more deeply of their, Master's spirit has a located on the recursion of the second barries to the

"You do not understand what your request implies," answered Jeaus. "The highest place in my Kingdom can only be gained by drinking the cup of sore trial, of which I, myself, shall drink presently, and enduring the same flerce baptism of sorrow and suffering, even to death, in which I am to be plunged. Do you think for are able to bear all that?"

In simp on You's hantized v can be giv only can them. T for my sal thus prepa alfeady! John an request, b was inevi at such an four. Th fil'a fierco adly out lowly Son under the keenest so round Hir prehended ing throug 90% You'a "as if it's tell you th sound us exercise at is very diff place amoi Kingdom he who wi their slave King and unto, as of a ransom f The upl road led de district" of riant spot the Dead S ground of Egypt, an were pre-e of various plant, whi was In gr harvest! w

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

ossible, for the on to bring. He ever, what He Jerusalem. ino n, and the Son ibes, and they for, as heads g, they had ree, to mock, and ain. Wilesteation shown within nly the Twelve, tand what He ut to anticipate h impossible to it, wolve at "the 1 the announce as very near at d not reconcile ish to do so. pecially in the most honoured ition than most 1 given all they themselves, to Salome, whom, han they; as a who had shown falling on her ded and as was great Messianic "What is it?" two sons, may est step of Thy aft, when Thou they were after of their, Masters blics," answerel ly be gained by alf, shall drink rrow and suffer you think you

In simple true-heartedness, both answered, at once, that they were, " You shall, indeed," replied Jesus, "drink of my cup, and be aptized with the same baptism as I, but, in my Kingdom, no honours en be given from mere favour, as in kingdoms of the world. Those only can obtain them whose spiritual greatness has fitted them for them. The way to secure them is only through supreme self-sacrifice for my sake, and they are given by my Father to those only who are flus prepared for them. "For such, indeed, they are prepared by Him already! John and James had striven to hide their selfish and ambitious request, by coming to Jesus when "He was alone, but the Ten, as was inevitable, soon heard of it, and were indignant in the extreme at such an unworthy attempt to forestal them in their Master's fafour, "Their own ambition, at best only suppressed, broke out, afresh, fil'a fierce storm of fealous passion. Such human weakness was adly out of place at any time, among the followers of the meek and lowly Son of Man, but still more so, now, when He stood almost inder the shadow of the cross, and it must have caused Him the keenest sorrow. Calling the whole Twelve, offenders and offended, round Him, therefore, He pointed out now utterly they had misspe prehended the nature of His Kingdom; not withstanding all His teaching through the past years. id." bootin troi stricter state of to all dire

" You are disputing about precedence in my Kingdom," said He, "as if it were like the kingdoms of the world. Once more, let me iell you that it is wholly different. " The kings of the heathen nations adund us lord it over their subjects, and their magnates, under them. erercise authority often more imperiously than their chiefs. But it is very different in my Kingdom, and a very different spirit must find place among you, its dignitaries. He who wishes to be great in that Kingdom can only be so by becoming the servant of the others; and he who wishes the very highest rank, can only be so by becoming their slave. Yournay see that it must be so from my own case, your King and Head for T. the Son of Man. came not to be ministered into, as other kings are, but to serve, and to give up even my life as a ransom for many with griesprite, a server and to give up even my life as The upland pastures of Perea were now behind them, and the toad led down to the sunken channel of the Jordan, and the "divine district" of Jericho." This small but rich plain was the most luxu: riant spot in Palestine. Sloping gently upwards from the level of the Dead Sea, 1,350 feet under the Mediterranean, to the stern background of the bills of Quarantana, it had the climate of Lower Egypt, and displayed the vegetation of the tropics. Its fig-trees of various kinds: Its crops of dates were a proverb: the balsamplant, which grew principally here, furnished a costly perfume, and was in great repute for healing wounds: maize yielded a double harvest wheat ripened a whole month earlier than in Galilee, and of the set Back of the test innumerable bees found a Paradise in the many aromatic flowers and plants, not a few, unknown elsewhere, which filled, the air with odours, and the landscape with beauty.

Rising like an amphitheatre from amidst this luxuriant scere, lay Jericho, the chief place east of Jerusalem—at seven or eight miles distance from the Jordan—on swelling slopes, seven hundred feet above the bed of the river, from which its gardens and groves, thickly interspersed with mansions, and covering seventy furlongs from north to south, and twenty from east to west, were divided by a strip of wildcrness. The town had had an eventful history. Once the strong. hold of the Canaanites, it was still, in the days of Christ, surrounded by towers and castles. Thrax and Taurus, two of them, at the entrance of the city, lay in ruins since the time of Pompey, but the old citadel Dock still stood—dark with the recollection that its hercie huilder Simon Maccabæus, and his two sons, had been murdered in its chambers. Kypros, the last fortress built by Herod the Great, who had called it after his mother, rose white in the sun on the south of the town. The palace of the Asmonean kings towered amidst gardens; but it had been deserted by royalty since the evil genius of her house. Alexandra, the mother in-law of Herod, and mother of Marianne, had lived in it. The great palace of Herod, in the farfamed groves of palms, had been plundered and burned down in the fumults that followed his death, but in its place a still grander structure, built by Archelaus, had risen amidst still finer, gardens, and more coplous and delightful streams. A grand theatre and spacious circus, built by Herod, scandalized the Jews, not less by their unholy amusements than by the remembrance, that the elders of the nation had been shut up in the latter by the dying tyrant, to be cut down at his death in revenge for the batred borne him. Nor was the murder of the young Asmonean, Aristobulus, in the great pools which surrounded the old Asmonean palace, forgotten; nor the time when Cleopatra had wrung the rich oasis from the hands of Herod, by her spell over her lover, Antony. A great stone aqueduct of eleven arches brought a copicus supply of water to the city, and the Roman military road ran through it. The houses themselves, however, though showy, were not substantial, but were built mostly of sur-cried brick, like those of Egypt; so that now, as in the similar cases of Babylon, Nineveh, or Egypt, after long desolation hardly a trace of them remains.

A great multitude accompanied Jesus as He drew near Jerichopilgrims, on foot, or on asses, or camels; who had come from all the side passes, and cross roads, of Percaand Galilee. They met at this central point to go up to the Passover, at Jerusalem: not a few with an eye to the trade driven so briskly in the Holy City at this season with foreign pligrims, —as well as for devotion. Near the gate of the town one of the last miracles of, our Lord was performed. All the roads leading to Jerusalem, like the Temple itself, wer who reape Blindne Europe th in every h quite healt of the day the eves, a Nile; whil dles in the wise might Among at Jericho by name B by two of They had had been U wonder-wo of Davidin vain to came near, a moment' was cast, a artless 'tale prayed He received si Healer. Jericho's many pries ductive dis two sides much the s tre of the th

THE LIFE OF CF JIST.

the air with

iant scene, lay or eight miles hundred feet groves, thickly ngs from north by a strip of nce the strong. ist, surrounded them, at the ompey, but the. , that its hercie n murdered in rod the Great. in on the south towered amidst evil genius of and mother of rod, in the fared down in the l grander strucer gardens, and re and spacious by their unholy s of the nation to be cut down or was the mureat pools which the time when Herod, by her educt of eleven and the Roman elves, however, mostly of sunhe similar cases n hardly a trace near Jerichome from all the hey met at this not a few with y at this season, f our Lord was

iself, were much frequented at the times of the feasts, by beggars, who reaped a special harvest from the cliarity of the pilgrims. Blindness is specially frequent in the East. While in Northern Europe there is only one blind in a thousand, in Egypt there is one in every hundred; indeed, very few persons there have their eyes quite healthy. The great changes of temperature at different times of the day, especially between day and night, cause inflammation of the eyes, as well as of other parts, both in Palestine and on the Lower Nile; while neglect and stupid prejudice, refusing or slighting remeiles in the earlier stages, lead to blindness in many cases that otherwise might have been easily cured.

Among the beggars who had gathered on the sides of the road at Jericho were two who had thus lost their sight: one of whom only, by name Bar-Timzus, for some special reason, is particularly noticed by two of the Gospels, in the incident that followed.

They had probably heard of the cure, at Jerusalem, of the man who had been born blind, and learning now from the crowd that the great wonder-worker was passing by, at once appealed to Him as the Son of David—the Messikh—to have mercy on them. 'The multitude tried in vain to silence them: they only cried the londer. At last, Jesus cane near, and, standing 'still, commanded' them to be brought. In a moment their upper garment, which would have hindered them, was cast, aside, and, leaping up, they stood before Him with their, atless tale; that they believed He could open their eyes, and they prayed He would do so. A touch sufficed : immediately their eyes received sight again, and they joined in the throng that followed their Healer.

Jericho was a Levitical city, and hence the residence of a great many priests: its position as the centre of an exceptionally productive district, and also of the import and export trade between the two sides of the Jordan, made it also, a city of publicans. It had much the same place in Southern Palestine as Capernaum—the centre of the trade between the sca coast and the northern interior, as far as Damascus—held in Galilee. The transit to and fro of so much wealth brought with it proportionate work and harvest for the farmers of the revenue. Hence, a strong force of customs and excise collectors was stationed in it, under a local head, named Zacchæus, whom, in our day, we might have called a commissioner of customs. In a system so oppressive and arbitrary as the Roman taxation, the inhabitants must have suffered heavily at the hands of such a complete organization. To be friendly with any of their number was hot the way to secure the favour of the people at large.

Zacchæus, especially, was disliked and despised, for, though a Jew, hehad grown rich by an infamous profession, and was, in the eyes of his fellow-townsmen, not only an extortioner, but, by his serving the Romans, a traiter to his race, and to their invisible king, Jehoyah. His personal character, moreover, seems to have been bad, for he owned to Jesus that he had, at least in some cases, wrung money from his fellow-townsmen by swearing falsely against them before the magistrates.

Jesus had seldom passed that way, and hence His person was little known, though report had spread His name widely. 'Among others, Zacchaus was anxious to see Him, and, being a little man, he had ren before the caravan with which Jesus was entering the town, and had taken his station in one of the ever-green fig-trees—a sycamore—of which some grew at the wayside, of great size—a few even fifty feet in circumference. They were easy to climb, from their short trunks and wide branches, forking out in all directions.

He had never seen Jesus; but he was not the less known to Him, and must have been astounded when the Great Teacher, as He passed the spot, looked up, and, addressing him by name, told him to make haste and come down, as He intended to be his guest that hight. A divine purpose of mercy, as yet known to Jesus alone, had determined this self-invitation. Though all others shunned the chief of the publicans as specially disreputable, he was chosen in loving pity by Jesus, as His host. The word was enough: in an instant he was on the ground, and pressingly welcomed Christ to his hospitality. That he, the hated and despised one, should have been thus favoured, in a moment won his heart, and waked the impulse of a new and better life; but it also raised the hostile feeling of the multitude. Voices on every side were heard murmuring that "He was gone, in defiance of the Law, and of public feeling and patriotic duty, to lodge with the chief publican."

They little knew the mighty change His having done so had, in a moment, wrought in a soul hitherto degraded and lost, not less by an ignoble life, than by the social proscription which barred all hope of self-recovery. Christ had completely overcome him, for He had treated him as a man, with respect, and shown him that the way still lay open, even to him, to a new and better future. The two had meanwhile, apparently, reached the court of Zacchaus' liouse, and the crowd pressed closely round as Jesus was about to enter a dwelling, the threshold of which no respectable Jew would think of crossing. He was braving a harsh public opinion, and incurring the bitterest hatred of the Jewish religious leaders, by openly disregarding the laws of ceremonial defilement, and by treating with respect one whom they denounced as accursed. Zacchaus was overpowered with a sense of the unselfish magnanimity which could prompt such treatment of one who had no claim to it. He would signalize the event by an open and public vow. Standing before the crowd, there fore, he addressed Christ-"Lord, I feel deeply the honour and low ing service you do me, and I hereby yow that I shall give one half of my goods to the peor, to show how much I thank Thee. And still more, if, as I lament to think has been the case, I have ever taken any money from any one by false accusation. I promise to repay tim four-f

"This di anch word son of Abr came to ser won back far from F power, and human sou

" Before the court-j what is i and suppo throngs of Messiah in set before With the account wh ble borrow ing nations from Jeric thekingdor had sent a All the prin of Rome, a their kingd A certa try to recei citizens, an servants, fr la entrust which he co pess to be r to choose fi "In the drachmæ, a return, 11 be able to s "It happ citizens, in supreme po ing that the their embas Was appoin "On his wrung money it them before erson was little Among others, an, he had run town; and had a sycamore of even fifty feet for short trunks known to Him, er, as He passed. Id him to make that night. A hind determined hief of the publoving pity by at he was on the ality. That he, roured, in a moand better life, ide. Voices on e, in defiance of p lodge with the one so had, in a t, not less by an rred all hope of m, for He had hat the way still The two had 'liouse, and the nter a dwelling, ink of crossing. ng the bitterest isregarding the ith respect one as overpowered ald prompt such uld signalize the he crowd, therelionour and lovgive one-half of k Thee. And, have ever taken romise to repay him four-fold—the highest restitution that even Roman law demands fom one guilty of such an offence.

"This day is salvation come to this house," said Jesus, as He heard neh words, "for this man—sinner though he be—is, nevertheless, a son of Abraham, and now shows himself humbled and penitent. I eame to seek and to save that which was lost, and I rejoice to have won back to the fold of God, a child of Israel, who had wandered so far from Him." He had foreseen the whole incident, by His divine power, and calmly ignored, all recognition of caste or class when a human soul was to be won.

"Before you leave," He continued, still addressing the crowd in the court-yard, or, outside it, "let me tell you a parable. I know what is in your thoughts. You see that I am near Jerussiem, and suppose I shall take advantage of the Passover, when such vast throngs of Jews are in the holy city, to proclaim the kingdom of the Messiah in the way you expect, by insurrection and force. Let me at before you the truth."

st before you the truth." With that marvellous power of turning every incident to practical account which marked His teaching. He proceeded to repeat a parable borrowed, in many particulars, from facts in their recent or passing national history. Archelaus had set out for Rome, most likely from Jericho itself, not many years before, to obtain investiture in the kingdom left to him by the will of his father Herod, and the Jews had sent a fruitless embassy after him, to prevent his obtaining it. All the princes of the house of Herod had, indeed, been only vassals of Rome, and had had to go to the imperial city, in each case, to seek their kingdom as a gift from the Roman senate.

"'A certain man," said He, "of noble birth, went to a distant country to receive for himself the dignity of king over his former fellowclizens, and then to return. Before doing so, he called ten of his servants, from whom, as such, he had the right to expect the utmost care for his interests in his absence. He proposed, in his secret mind, a entrust, them with a small responsibility, by their discharge of which he could judge, when he returned, of their fitness and worthiness to be put, into positions of greater consideration; for he wished to choose from them his future chief officers.

drachmæ, and said to them, 'Trade with this, on my account, till I sturn,' If they proved to be faithful in this small matter, he would be able to advance them to higher trusts.

"It happened, however, that he was so unpopular, that his followattizens, in their, hatred of him, sent an embassy after him to the supreme power, complaining against him, and contemptuously declaring that they would not, have such a man to rule over them. But their embassy failed, for, in spite of it, he obtained the province, and was appointed their, king. "On his return, after he had thus received the government, he ordered the servants to whom he had given the mency to be called before him, that he might know what each had gained by trading. The first came and said, 'Lord thy mina has gained ten.' Well done, good servant,'replied his master, 'because thou wast faithful in a very little, be thou governor of ten cities.' The second came, saying, 'Lord, thy mina has gained five.' 'Be thou governor of five cities,' replied his master. But another came and said, 'Lord, here is thy mina, I have kept it safely tied up in a napkin: you will find it just as I got it. I did not know what to do with it, and I was afraid of thee; for I know, you are a hard man in money matters, looking for great profits where you have laid out next to nothing,-taking up, as they say, what you had not put down, and if needs ke, reaping where you had not sown,---making good your loss, if there were any, at his expense who caused it,----making so, to keep myself safe,' I thought it best to run no risk one way or other.'

"'I will judge you out of your own mouth, wicked servant,' replied his master; 'You say you knew I was a hard man in moneymatters, seeking gain where I had laid nothing out to secure it, and reaping where others have sown, — why then did you not at least give my money to some exchanger to use at his table, that thus, on my return, I might have got it back with interest?' Then, turning to the servant s anding by,'he continued, 'Take from him the mina, and give it him, that has ten.' 'He has ten already,' mattered the servants, half afraid. But the king went on in his anger, without heeding them, —'I tell you that to every one who shows his fitness to serve me, by having already increased what I at first gave him, I shall give more; but I shall take away what I first gave, from him, who, by adding nothing to it, has proved his unfitness to use what might be put in his hands.'

"As to my enemies, who did not wish me to reign over them bring them hither, and put them to death in my presence." The lessons of the parable could hardly be misunderstood. To the Jewish people, who would not receive Him as the Messiah, they spoke in words of warning alarm; but the Twelve, themselves, heard a solemn caution. They had each, in being selected as an apostle, re-ceived a sacred trust, to be used for his Master's interests, till the coming again in glory. Well for him, who, when his Lord returned to judgment, could give a good account of his stewardship; we to him who had neglected his trust! Though called to the same honour at first as the others, as an apostle, he would be stripped of his rank, and receive no share in the glory and dignities of the Messianic. kingdom, As to the Jews who rejected Him, His coming would be the signal for the sorest judgments. Having finished His brief stay in Jericho, Jesus set out, once more, on His journey of calm, self-sacrificing love, to Jerusalem, going on before the multitude in His grand consciousness of victory beyond thought. Idan't had already gone up to the Holy City, for not a few needed to be to take par lepers, for dean by the numbers, mo with the firs Mean while of Christ's ev vas evident, ould they vy The advice u of the party mested at who knew w ension. In the mid the sixth da Him to rema ad the stree sme, not on He had raise whether they f him was v fituce to a vic lung I fitoù ung g usg schot

1.8. 112

THE long o rild gorge of me pressin, leased them ope of the I ight of Jerus enext day A steep ad been the maritan.911 een passed 1 orst footing bage, on the miney was we three ho y Jesus wa Mary . 1 over three needed to be there some time before the feast, to prepare themselves a take part in it, by purifications necessary from various causes. Lepers, for example, who were cured, but had not been pronounced dean by the priests, and many others, were in this position. Great umbers, moreover, doubtless went up early, for purposes of trade with the first arrivals of pilgrims from abroad.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

Meanwhile, all classes allke, in Jerusalem, discussed the probability (Christ's coming to the feast, The excitement among the people res evident, and increased the alarm of the hierarchical party, for how ould they withstand Him, if He once gained general popular support? The advice of Caiaphas had, therefore, been accepted as the policy the party at large, and orders had been issued that He should be mested at once, when found, It was even required that any one the knew where He was, should report it, with a view to His apprehension.

In the midst of this commotion, Jesus quictly entered Bethany, on he sixth day before the Passover. It was however, impossible for lim to remain concealed. The news passed from mouth to mouth, ind the street of the village soon became thronged with visitors, who ame, not only to see Him, but to see Lazarus also, whom they heard he had raised from the dead. The high priests began to question whether they could not manage to put him, also, to death. The sight the was winning many disciples to Jesus. They would try. the next of the ansatt, etc. without heed

I and state of the second seco marche bry frint gentan The long carayan of pilgrims that had accompanied Jesus up the ild gorge of the Kedron, from Jericho, had been left at Bethany; ome pressing on to Jerusalem, others striking their tents, as fancy based them, in the pleasant dell below the village, or on the western tope of the Mount of Olives, where they could feast their eyes with a ight of Jerusalem.". It was the eve of the Sabbath, and that night and benext day were sacred. The journey from Jericho had been exhaust-A steep and narrow bridle-path, threading the precipitous defile, ad been the only road. It was the scene of the parable of the Good amaritan. The klian, where the wounded man was sheltered, had en passed half way. Lonely ascents, between bare rocks, with the torst footing, had only been left behind when Bethany and Bethhage, on the eastern spur of the Mount of Olives, came in sight. The burney was over before three in the afternoon, for it was the rule to ave three hours of rest before the Sabbath began, at six. In Bethr Jesus was at home. It was the village of Lazarus, and Martha. ad Mary. The fifteen miles from Jericho had been a continual climb over three thousand feet, but He could now rost with His friends.

ay to be called d by trading, ten. Well i wast faithful second came overnor of five d, "Lord, here wou will find it, and I was ioney matters t to nothing.-d, if needs he. r loss, if there p myself safe!

d servant," renan in money secure it, and ot at least give thus, on my returning to the the mina, and ttered the ser-, without heed. his fitness to st gave him, I ave, from him; ss to use what 1. 9719771 15. 71 gn over them, ACC: " Stores fili stood. To the siah, they spoke selves, heard a an apostle, reterests, till the Lord returned rdship; woe to ie same honour ed of his rank, the Messianic ming would be out, once more, alem, going on victory beyond v. for not a few partit Indiated

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

through the Sabaath. Before the next He would be crucified. And He knew it. Strain 11 best sound the state of the sound of the second state of the And This glimpse of sweet rest over-the last He would enjoy before the awful end, the first act in the great tragedy-His triumphal entry into Jerusalem-filly led the way to the great consummation. In these last months He liad more and more openly ussumed the supreme dignity of Messiah. With wise caution He had at first re frained from a sudden proclamation of His office, and had carefully chunned popular excitement even by the publication of His miracles that His words-which were the true seed of His kingdom-might cet time to root themselves, and bear fruit among the people; before the inevitable opposition of the ecclesiastical authorities brought His work to a close. He had never, however, refused the title when give flim, or the honours, from time to time paid Him as the Christ." H had even revealed Himself to the woman of Samaria, to the Aposties first, on the Sea of Galilee, and afterwards, with impressive solemnity ct Cæsarea Philippi; and, latterly, more than once, to His enemies, a the Head of the New Kingdom of God. But, as yet, He had made no public, or, as it were, official declaration of His claims and right as the Mcssiall, and till this was done, there still wanted a formal proc famation of His kingdom before Israel and the world. Till it has been done, moreover, the heads of the moribund theocracy could no be said to have had the choice openly given them, as the representa tives of the religious past, to accept Him us the Messiah, or definitely On the early morning of frinds to reject Him. 19 He had, therefore, determined, with calm deliberation, and con sciousness of what it involved, to enter Jernsalem publicly, with sue circumstance as would openly unnounce His claim to be the Messiah He would also perform specific. Messianic acts, in the very citade o the theoracy, and under the eyes of the haughty, and yet alarmed hierarchy. He would enter as a king, but, as the Prince of Peace giving no real pretence for any charge of political design; but clearly as king 'only in a spiritual sense." He had no longer any reason conceal from the authorities whom He really was, and felt Himse to be.

The companies of pilgrims from the various towns and districts Palestine, or from Jewish settlements abroad, were wont to mak public entries into the city before the great feasts. Euch an en-Jesus would make; Himself its central figure. It would be a day joy and gladness to Himself and to others, as when a king enters o his kingdom. He would no longer check the popular feeting in H favour. His last entry to the Holy City, at the Feast of Tabernack had been designedly secret; but this should be in exact contrast for He knew that His kingly work was now over, so far as He, Himsel rould complete it, and the entinestasm of willing consecration to deal as "His path to eternal triumph, filled Him with a serger and vice rious foy. Misconception of His claim would be impossible in hos ninds, in th He, who sding the life. He k ot be said aders this Hitherto b'so as De pecially Je omection Statelier, li hvour An for work in be horse, w vas used es was pecul n assi to E not the ass Every Jew, is that the s. No act of a king o that king pr On the ear Monday, the a Betliany, ters of fig. al erer-gregen hage: like abbinical. J heb who aft od twenty Bely City, v in Bethphag ling them us tied, and eds them, over had ri nd the read litained at o Meanwhile and great muhet from hed the pa nthusiasm, a crucified. And at bit of abric enjoy before the triumphal entry quantion.

nly ussumed the had at first red had carefully of His miraeles: kingdom-might e people; before ties brought His title when given the Christ." H to the Apostles essive solemnity 'His enemies, as et. He had made laims' and rights ted a formal proc orld. Till it had ocracy could no s the representa sian, or definitely On this early m eration; and con ubliely; with such o be the Messiah he very citadel o and yet alarmed Prince of Peace estan; but clearly ger any reason and felt Himsel

s and districts o re wont to nak Such an entr would be a day o a king enters o llar feeling in H st of Tabernack xact contrast for r as He, Himsel secration to deat secration to deat secration to deat

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

ninds, in the face of facts. Israel should now see Him come openly, He, who, alone, if they frankly accepted Him, could save them, by eding them as a nation, to true repentance, and a higher spiritual fe. He knew, befor, hand, that they would not, but His work could of be said to be completely ended till He had given them and their aders this last public opportunity, Hitherto He had entered the Holy City on foot; this day He would

h so as David and the Judges of Israel were wont-riding on the pecially Jewish ass. Nor must we think of Western associations in mnection with the name. I In the East, the ass is in high esteem. sateher, livelier, swifter than with us, it vies with the horse in brour. Among the Jews it was equally valued as a beast of burden; ir work in the field or at the mill; and for riding. In contrast to be horse, which had been introduced by Solomon, from Egypt, and vas used especially for war, it was the symbol of peace. To the Jew was peculiarly national, for had not Moses led his wife, seated on mass, to Egypt; had not the Judges ridden on white asses; and was of the ass of Abraham, the friend of God, noted in Scripture? Every Jew, moreover, expected, from the words of one of the prophis that the Messiah would enter Jerusalem, poor, and riding on an is h No act could be more perfectly in keeping with the conception a king of Israel, and no words could express more plainly that hat king proclaimed Himself the Messiah.

On the early morning of Sunday, the tenth of Nisan-the Jewish Konday, therefore Jesus and the Twelve-left their hospitable shelter Betliany, and passed, out to the little valley beneath, with its clusis of fig. almond, and onve trees, soon to burst into leaf; and its ser-greech palms. Somewhere pear lay the larger village of Bethmare: like Bethany, so close to Jerusalem as to be reckoned, in the Robbinical Jaw a part of it. Secret disciples, such as the five hunand who afterwards gathered to one spot in Galilee, and the hundred nd twenty who met, after the resurrection, in the upper room in the Hely City, were scattered in many places. At least one such lived a Bethphage. Jesus, therefore, now sent two disciples thither; kling them that, immediately on entering it, they would find a she estied, and her colt standing by her. "Loose and bring them, to me," said He, "and if any one make a remark, say that the Lord meds them, and he will send them at once." His supernatural over had rightly directed them. The ass and its colt were found, ad the ready permission of their owner-no doubt a disciple-was itained at once, for their being taken for His use. Meanwhile, it had reached Jerusalem that He was about to enter. and great numbers of the Galilean pilgrims, proud of Him as a whet from their own district, forthwith set out to meet and escort in, cutting fronds, as they came, from the palm-trees that then hed the path, to do Him hanour. The disciples showed equal thusiasm, and it was forthwith caught by the crowds around-for the whole open ground near the city was filled with pilgrims at this season. The former hastily threw their abbas on the back of the oolt, to deck it for their Master, and set Him on it, the mother walking at its side; and the latter, not to be behind, spread theirs on the road, or cut off the young sprouts from the trees, and strewed them before Him. So, myrtle twigs and robes had been strewn by their ancestors before Mordecai, when he came forth from the palace of Abasuerus, and so the Persiap army had honoured Xerxes, when about to cross the Hellespont, and so it is still sometimes done in Palestine, as a mark of special honour.

There were three paths over the Mount of Olives—on the north, in the hollow between the two creats of the hill; next, over the summit; and on the south, between the Mount of Olives and the Hill of Offence—still the most frequented and the best. Along this Jesus advanced, preceded and followed by multitudes, with loud cries of repoking, as at the Feast of Tabernacles, when the great Hallel was daily sung in their processions. With the improvisatorial turn of the East, their acclamations took a rhythmical form, which was long sung in the early Church, as the first Christian hymn.

"Give (Thon) the triumph, (O Jehovah), to the Son of David) Blessed be the kingdom of our Father David, now to be restored in the name of Jehovah! Blessed be He that cometh—the King of Israel—in the name of Jehovah!

Blessed be he that cometh the King of Israel in the name of Jehovahi Our peace and salvation (now coming) are from (fod above) Praised be he in the highest heavens (for sending them by Him, the Son of David)

12 From the highest heavens, send Thou, now, salvation P. and that if sing

It was a triumph in wondrous contrast with that of earthly monarchs. No spoils of towns or villages adorned it, no trains of captives deatined to slavery or death; the spoil of His sword and His spear were seen only in trophics of healing and love, for the lane whom He had cured ran before, the dumb sang His praises, and the blind, sightless no longer, crowded to gaze on their benefactor. The Pharisees among the multitude in vain tried to silence the accla mations. In their mortification they even turned to Jesus Himself, to ask that He should rebuke those who made them. "No," replied He. "I tell you that, if these should hold their peace, the very stone will cry out."

As they approached the shoulder of the hill, where the road bend downwards to the north, the sparse vegetation of the eastern slop changed, as in a moment, to the rich green of gardens and trees, an Jerusalem in its glory rose before them. It is hard for us to imagine now, the splendour of the view. The City of God, seated on he hills, shone at the moment in the morning sub. Straight before stratched the vast white walls and buildings of the Temple h courts, glittering, with gold, rising one above the other, the stee sides of the hill of David crowned with lofty walls, the might castles towering above them; the sumptuous palace of Herod in h green pa rested til which or Holy of centuries wondrou lem! who have been

The wl

was cros Roman le destined future as He was a at the spe would she sayingthy day, thee peac make ther upon thee compass. t with the not one st time when Sweepin the bridge semane. crowd at t winding in through w the valley hung with sides, and "Who is t Nazareth. and discip province b Leaving -He coul sandals, the enforced, h shoes, or sa a place so I representat a calm and

hours thus

bilgrims at this he back of the e mother walkad theirs on the l strewed them trewn by their h The palace of Xerxes, when etimes done in on the north, in ver the summit; and the Hill of long this Jesus h loud cries of reat Hallel was satorial turn of which was long direstored in the me of Jehovahi vel by Him, the Son of earthly monto trains of caps sword and His ve, for the lane praises, and the benefactor. The ilence the accla o Jesus Himself, "No," replied e, the very stones

e the road bends he eastern slope ns and trees, and for us to imagine, d, seated on her Straight before, the Temple, it other, the stee alls; the might of Herod in it

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

green parks, and the picturesque outlines of the stroots. Over all ested the spell of a history of two thousand years; of a present which craved salvation in its own perverted way; and the mystic Holy of Holies linked the seen to the invisible. The crusaders, long centuries after, when the only glory left to the Holy City was its wondrous memories, burst out into a loud cry—Jerusalem! Jerusalem! when they first saw it, and the epthusiasm of the Jew could not have been fainter. The shouts and rejoicing rose higher than ever.

The whole scene was overpowering, even to Jesus Himself. He was crossing the ground on which, a generation later, the tenth Roman legion would be encamped, as part of the besieging force destined to lay all the splendour before Him in ashes. Knowing the future as He did. His heart was filled with indescribable sadness, for He was a patriot, and man, though also the Son of God. Looking at the spectacle before Him, and thinking of the contrast a few years would show, tears burst from His eyes, and His disciples heard Him saving-"Would that thou hadst known, thou, Jerusalem, in this, thy day, when I come, who, alone, can bring it-what would give thee peace and safety! But now, thou seest not what only could make them thing the receiving me as the Messiah! Days will come upon thee, when thine enemies will raise a mount about thee, and compass thee round, and invest thee on every side, and level thee with the ground; and bury thy children under thy ruins, and leave not one stone in thee upon another, because thou knowest not the time when God, through me, offeredst thee salvation!"

Sweeping round to the north, the road approached Jerusalem by the bridge over the Kedron; to reach which it had to pass Gethsemane. The myriads of pilgrims on the slopes of Olivet, and the crowd at the eastern wall of the Temple, thus saw the procession winding in slow advance, till it reached the gate, now St. Stephen's, through which Jesus passed into Betheza—the new town—riding up the valley between it and Mount Moriah, through narrow streets, hung with flags and banners for the feast, and crowded, on the raised sides, and on every roof, and at every window, with cager faces. "Who is this?" passed from lip to lip. "It is Jesus, the Prophet of Nazareth, in Galilee," should back the crowd of northern pligrims and disciples, glorying in the vindication of the honour of their province before the proud and contemptuous sons of Jerusalem.

Leaving His beast and entering the Temple, which—having ridden —He could do without preparation, except that of removing His sandals, though the crowd with Him, if at such times the rules were enforced, had to stop behind to cleanse their dusty feet, take off their shoes, or sandals, and lay aside their walking staves, before entering a place so holy,—He took possession of it in the name and as the representative of Jehovah its Lord, and closed the wondrous day by a calm and prolonged survey of all around. Earnest, sad, indignant hours thus passed; but even they were filled with works of pitying

means

constru

Roman for it h

led, and

lenge th

of Jesu popular absence fatal to not, hor

Him to forbiddi Christ, s

Morni

not as the hom

hours m

for dates

dates:" v a variet

ripened

'It was

fruit mig

One tree

road-side

trees had young le

boast: th

naturally

without

no fruit.

One who "Picture

ciples to

ing no fi

ever," an

performa

Father's

from the

under an

Since the

ing of oxe

and the other acc

cordant's

Reaching

roodness, for the blind and the lame had heard of His coming, and hastened to Him, and were healed. The courts and halls of the Bacred House—the very stronghold of His enemies, re-echoed—to their intense mortification, with the shouts that had accompanied His entry to the city, for the miracles He wrought heightened and prolonged the enthusiasm till the very children joined in the cry of "Hesanna to the Son of David!"

"Do you see how powerless we are against Him?" muttered the Pharisees: "the whole people have gone after Him."

His bold appearance in the Temple itself, especially filled the priestly dignitaries and Rabbis with indignation, all the deeper because they dared not at est Him for fear of the crowds, even when now in their very hand. That the children should hall Him as the Messiah; also chraged them. "Hearest thou not what these say?" asked some of them. But, instead of disavowing the supreme honour ascribed to Him, He only replied that He did—"but," added He, "have ye never read in your own Scriptures— Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings, Thou (Jehovah) hast perfected praise, that Thou mightest put to shame Thine enemies, and silence Thy foes, and those who rage against Thee,"

Never was His presence of mind and quick appness of retort shown more strikingly.

The day was now far spent. The end proposed had been abundantly attained. The crowds had begun to retire, after evening prayers, and He, too, with the Twelve, passed out quietly with the throng, and betook Himself once more to the well-loved cottage at Bethany.

It had been no chance coincidence that the day in which He had thus virtually consecrated Himself to death, was that on which the paschal lamb was selected.

It is easy to understand the statement of the Gospels, that neither the Twelve nor the disciples at large realized at first the full signifcance of what had happened. In later times, however, after He had risen and ascended to heaven, its full grandeur gradually broke on them as they discoursed again and again on the whole strange history through which they had passed. They remembered, then, the words of the prophet Zechariah, and saw how the triumphal entry in which they had taken part, had been the divincly designed fulfilment of ancient prophecy.

The entry on Palm Sunday, though, for the moment, a bitter more tification to the hierarchical party, was presently halled by them as a fancied mistake on the part of Jesus. Till now, all their efforts to frame any capital charge against Him, on plausible grounds, had ut terly failed. He had slighted the Rabbinical laws, but the Romans, with whom lay the power of life and death, would take no cognizance of such offences. His public entry into Jerusalem, as the Messiah, amidet the shouts of the people, seemed to give them, at last, the coming, and halls of the re-echoed—to ompanied His uied and proin the cry of muttered the ally, filled the the deeper be ds, even when il Him as the at these say?" preme honour t," added He, the mouths of aise, that Thou foes, and those of retort shown

ad been abunafter evening uietly with the wed cottage at which He had on which the ls, that neither the full signif-, after He had ually broke on strange history then, the words entry in which d fulfilment of t, a bitter more ed by them as a their efforts to rounds, had ut at the Romans, e no cognizance as the Messiah, hem, at last, the means of indicting Him for what they could represent as at least constructive treason—the claiming to be king instead of Cesar. The Romans dreaded nothing more than assumption of the Messiahahip, for it had often cost them dear to quell the insurrections to which it led, and they were stern to the uttermost against any attempt to chalienge the Emperor's authority. But the absolutely peaceful bearing of Jesus, throughout: His studied care to make no illegal use of the popular enthusiasm; the quiet dispersion of the crowds, and the utter absence of any political character in His whole life and words, were fatal to judicial action, based on grounds so stender. They would not, however, let such a charge against Him slip, and could accuse Him to Pllate, if other charges failed, of "perverting the pation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cresar, saying that He, Himself, is Christ, a king."

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

Morning saw Jesus once more on His way to the Temple. He had not as yet eaten, for He, apparently, looked forward to doing so at the home of some disciple in Jerusalem, and the keen air of the early hours made Him hungry. The little valley of Bethany was famous for dates and figs, for the very name Bethany means—" the place for dates;" while Bethphage is " the place for the green or winter fig" a variety which remains on the trees through the winter, having ripened only after the leaves had fallen.

'It was not yet the time of the fig harvest, but some of last year's fruit might, no doubt, be found on some of the trees growing about, One tree, especially, attracted the notice of Jesus. It grew at the road side, as common property, and, even thus carly, when other figtrees had scarcely begun to show greenness, was conspicuous by its young leaves. When He came to it, however, they proved its only. boast: there was no fruit of the year before, as might have been naturally expected. It was, indeed, the very type of a fair profession without performance: of the hypocrisy which has only leaves, and no fruit. Such a realized parable could not be passed in silence by One who drew a moral from every incident of life and nature. "Picture of boastful insincerity;" said He, loud enough for the diaciples to hear-" type of Israel and its leaders: pretentious, but bea:. he no fruit to God-let no fruit grow on thee henceforward, for ever," and passed on. They were to learn that profession, without performance, found no favour with their Master. 131 927.31. 144 7.801

Reaching the city, He once more went to the Temple, as His Father's house. Two years before, He had purified its outer court from the sordid abuses which love of gain had dexterously cloaked under an affectation of prously serving the requirements of worship. Since then, they had been restored in all their hatefulness. The lowing of oxen, the bleating of sheep, the cries of the money-changers, and the noisy market chaffering of buyers and sellers of doves or other accessories to a ceremonial worship, filled the air with discordant sounds of the outside world, which had no right in these

sacred precincts. The scene roused the same deep indignation in Jesus, as when He formerly rose in His grand protest against it. He had now, in His triumphal entry, formally proclaimed His Kingdom. and would, forthwith, vindicate its rights, by once more restoring the Temple to its becoming purity, for while it stood, it should be holy. The same fervent zeal again dismayed and paralyzed opposition. Filled, as all minds were, with the awe of the popular enthusiasm in His behalf, His command sufficed to clear the spacious court of its motley crowd: the sellers of doves, at His order, bore off their cages: the exchangers gathered up their coin, and He made the one remove their benches and counters, and overturned the empty booths of the others. Nor would He suffer the desceration of laden porters and others seeking to shorten their journeys by crossing the Templespaces, as if they were public streets. They might carry them round by what way they chose, but must not make a thoroughfare of the sacred courts. "Jehovah has written," said He, "My house is the house of prayer for all nations, but ye, bringing in all the wiles and cheats of unworthy traffic, have made it a den of thieves." We cannot suppose that Jesus, within a few hours of His death at the hands of the Temple authorities, and immediately, after His lament over His rejection by them and the nation, intended, by this cleansing of the outer Temple spaces, to present Himself as a reformer of the Temple service. He meant, rather, to show, among other things, to the multitudes round Him, by an act which they could not mistake; that the Holy House was already descorated by the sanctioned intrusion of the spirit of common gain, and made no more than a huge bazear, with all its abuses; doubly unworthy in such a place. He wished to teach them by the sight of such insensibility to the ideal of a Temple of God, that the fall of the theocracy, with its scoffing high priests, and worn-out ccremonial, was a fact already begun. The very texts He had quoted were from lamentations over the religious decay of the nation, which, the prophets predicted, would bring the stranger into the House of Jchovah, as more worthy than the Jew; a decay which demanded, instead of mere outward service, a reform of the heart and life. But the great lesson, also, was not wanting, that the worship of God must be pure and earnest, not merely formal, and that hypocrisy was abhorrent to Him. This truth sank that day into all hearts, and before a generation had passed, it had been repeated from the Euphrates to Rome. It was the knell of the Jewish economy at its centre, for a Temple thus publicly marked as given over to greed and gain, under pretence of zeal for religion, was doomed to perish, as all hypocrisies must, in the end.

The significance of such an act to Himself, was known to none better than to Jesus. He knew that His hour had come, and that He would perish, a mattyr to the spirif of a living, as opposed to the letter of a worn-out, faith. He knew that He had against Him the vast power of zeal for C thousands begun wa by any mit to stand. serenity to for the sou

The day

ple, was d all who we The people Temple-v so searchin bis. It wa while He v and no on Eastern na This day evening Be with loud f bearing and ing, therefo crossed Oli The sense profound. of a true pr public cens their duties, buked before exactly the watchful gu of the nation Next mor "Rabbi," e. which Jesus Thou cursed up. The quest

Twelve a tra hearts durin apostles, con would be ab to overcome "See," re trust in God or wavering

dignation in ainst it. He is Kingdom. restoring the mld be holy. opposition. athusiasm in court, of its E their cages: e one remove ooths of the porters and the Temple y them round ghfare of the house is the the wiles and

His death at ely after His. ended, by this. Himself as a show, among t which they descerated by and made no y unworthy in f such insenthe theocracy. al, was a fact from lamentaprophets preovah, as more d of mere oute great lesson, be pure and orrent to Him, eneration had Rome. It was nple thus pubetence of zeal s must, in the nown to none e, and that He sed to the lett. Him the vas power of great vested interests, who passed off their selfish aims as real for Church and State, and thus won support from unthinking thousands. He knew, moreover, that the religious revolution He had begun was spreading daily, and must be crushed by His opponents, by any measures that promised success, if their own authority were to stand. But, in the face of all this, He went forward with calm serenity towards death, as the one purchase price of liberty and life for the souls of men.

The day, which had begun with the symbolic cleansing of the Temple, was devoted, in its later hours, to His wonted work of teaching all who would listen, but none of the discourses have been preserved. The people, thronging the Court where He sat—for He taught in the Temple—were greatly impressed by His words; so new, so earnest, so searching and practical, compared with the vapidities of the Rabbis. It was vain for the Jewish authorities to attempt to arrest Him, while He was thus in favour, for all the people rallied to hear Him, and no one knew how far they might be disposed, with their flery Eastern natures, to rise on His behalf, if He were seized.

This day, therefore, passed as safely for Him as the last, and in the evening Bethany once more received Him. He had entered the city with loud jubilees, but the last mortal struggle, begun by His lofty bearing and independence, made it wise to retire unnoticed. Léaving, therefore, privately, by the flight of steps to the Kedron, He crossed Olivet, only with His disciples.

The sensation caused by the great act of the day must have been profound. The religious instinct of the masses felt that it was worthy of a true prophet of God, but the Temple officials realized only the public censure it implied, on their own estimate and discharge of their duties. For the moment they were paralyzed and helpless, rebuked before all, and boldly condemned by the strange intruder, in exactly the point on which they were most sensitive, for it was us watchful guardians of the Temple they claimed especially the respect of the nation.

Next morning found Him once more on the way to the Temple. "Rabbi," exclaimed Peter, in wonder, as they passed the tree on which Jesus had, sought figs the day before—"The fig-tree which Thou cursedst is withered away." It had, indeed, already shrivelled up.

The question gave another opportunity for impressing on the Twelve a truth, which, above all others, He had sought to fix in their hearts during His three years' intercourse with them—that, as His spostles, commissioned to establish and spread His Kingdom, they would be able, if they had an unwavering faith in God and in Him, to overcome all difficulties, however apparently insuperable.

"See," replied He, "that you learn from this tree to have firm rustin God. Believe me, if you have such faith, and let no doubt wavering enfeeble it, you will be able to do not only such things,

THE LIFE OF CHRIST. THE LIFE OF CHRIST. THE LIFE OF HOLD TO THE LOC Who had thus be

603

668

7

hereafter, as you have seen done to this tree, but, to use the expression you so often hear from the Rabbis, when they intend to speak of overcoming the greatest difficulties, or achieving the most unlikely ende-you will be able, as it were, to bid this mountain rise, and cast itself into the sen. All depends, however, on your faith being simple and undoubting, for anything less dishonours God. He who has such child-like trust in Him, may confidently expect his prayers to be heard. When you pray, believe that prayers) in very deed, answered, and your faith will be honoured by God granting what you seek, for, as His children, and my disciples, you will ask only what is in accordance with His will. Only, you must ever, in your prayers, be in that frame of loving tenderness to your fel. low-men, which true faith in God, as His sons, always brings with it. Strife and division destroy your spiritual life, and weaken that faith by which, alone, you can do great things. As you stand at your prayers, as your manner is, you must have no anger, no revenge in your hearts, else you will not be heard." The spirit of trank for giveness, which springs from true love to God, must, beforehand. have forgiven all who have injured you. For how can you hope that your Father in heaven will forgive your sins against Him, if you do not forgive offences against yourselves?" your Jugice suit, your lan But the moments were precious, for His hours were numbered. Always, from the first, intensely energetic, He was now, if possible. more so than ever, that He might utilize every instant for His great purpose. With calm undisnayed resolution, each morning saw Him in the Temple, as soon as it was opened. He would show that He was no Jacobin, no revolutionist, " Had He been so, how easily might He have taken advantage of the popular enthusiasm, at His entry to the city, or at His cleansing of the Temple Courts. Instead of doing so, He would proclaim the true nature of His Kingdom, by the one means He employed to establish it-the power of persuasion in He would devote His last hours, as He had all His public life, to teach ing. By His words alone would He prevail, for they had the irresistible and deathless force of truth, and, as such, would found in every heart whose convictions they reached, a kingdom that must spread; and could never perish. Second and forming reliably ethre find

Meanwhile, His enemies, ir resolute what couvse to pursue to strike Him down; determined to do so but afraid of the popular feeling they might invoke in His favour; watched every opportunity to facilitate decisive action. Their bearing had acquitted Him of all further responsibility towards them. He had brought the truth home to them in their central stronghold; had made it unmistakable what He de manded in the name of His Father;—that they should begin the reform and salvation of the nation, by reforming themselves, its leaders that they should be true shepherds, and not hirelings; sincere in their religion, and not actors. Such demands, in themselves, proved Hi-Messiahship, for they bore on their front the evidence that they we from God, an from God to a words thus es their own with had shown th they bors only God.

He had not hear Him, bei mined to bring had been an i His assuming schools, which been a deputat priests-heads "elders"-the who, as a body days of Moses. asked Him by doing, D They, doubtl that they, thus, He was not to h keen disputant. giving any han question, He ev your question," his great work, he unauthorize forced to give. embarrassing, b much. Jesus never before do for of Pharisees who had roused runner and Hers God, and evide preaching of the His claim to be He, Himself, have to say it, w ogists. 9 Yet, wil blind to the tru servant of God? on themselves th what he said res wilness, alone, i

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

GD 1. 031

B expres-

speak of

unlikely

who has

st prayers

ervideed.

ting what

ask only

twever, in your fel-rings with eaken that

1 stand at

o revenge Vrank for-eforehand, 1 hope that if you do

bered. Al-

f possible,

r His great

g saw Him

asily might

is entry to ad of doing

by the one

asion. He

the irresist-

nd in every

ust spread,

( HITE ASON)

ue to strike

feeling they

to facilitate

further re-

ome to them

what He de

jegin the re

s, its leaders

cere in their

proved Hi

from God, and, if accepted, He also must be, who had thus been sent from God to proclaim them. The internal evidence of His acts and words thus established His highest claims, for truth and goodness are their own witness, in the universal conscience. But the hierarchy had shown themselves incapable of reform. Like the barren fig-tree, they bore only leaves, and must be left to the righteous indignation of God.

He had not been long instructing the people, who flocked to see and hear Him, before some of the Temple authorities came to Him, determined to bring Him to account for His act of the day before, which had been an intrusion on their duties as Temple-inspectors; and for His assuming to teach as a Rabbi, without any licence from the schools, which was contrary to established rule. They seem to have been a deputation sent officially, and consisted of some of the higher priests—heads cf. the different courses—some Rabbis, and some of the "elders"—the ancient senators or representatives of the people who, as a body, had existed through all political changes, from the days of Moses. Interrupting Jesus as He taught, they now abruptly asked Him by what authority He acted as He had done, and was doing.

They, doubtless, hoped that He would claim divine authority, and that they, thus, might have ground for a charge against them. But He was not to be snared. He showed Himself the dreaded, prompt, keen disputant, ready to turn defence into attack. Careful to avoid giving any handle for misrepresentation, instead of answering their question. He evaded it, by asking one in His turn, "Before I answer your question," said He, "let me ask you-Did John the Baptist, in his great work, act in obedience to God, as one sent by Him, or was he unauthorized?" To be themselves put to the question; to be forced to give a reply, instead of listening to one, was sufficiently embarrassing, but the question itself was still more so. It involved much. Jesus evidently associated Himself with John as He had never before done. He implied that the man who had been the terfor of Pharisees and priests, and their victim-the man of the people, who had roused such an unprecedented excitement, was His Forerunner and Herald He spoke of John's baptism as a commission from God, and evidently claimed that His own entry to Jerusalem, His preaching of the Kingdom of Heaven, His cleansing the Temple, and His claim to be the Messiah, were no less by divine authority.

He, Himself, might say all this if He pleased, but, that they should have to say it, was to force them to become His advocates and apologists. Yet, what could they do, for was it not clear to all men not blind to the truth, that John was no mere adventurer, but a noble servant of God? But to own that he was so, would only bring down on themselves the crushing question, "Why then did ye not believe what he said respecting yourselves, and what he said of Me? for his wilness, alone, is enough to prove that I come from God." On the other hand, to denounce him as an impostor was dangerous, for his

Implicati

Baptist i history o

days. H

John; bu

before th

Henow

messenge

A cer

a vinevar

the hill-sl watchers,

work it

And whe

bandmen,

them; and

sent other

men treat

and woun

handed, b

they kille

ed # Havir

termined

his servar

But instea

selves, T

he should

him out of these hush

The dig

crowd liste

"He will

spokesman

his fruits i flashed on by a deep

retiring by stone whic

main foun

eyes?'." The mea

of which 1

their own

"Looki

memory was cherished by the people at large, as that of a national hero, the last of the mighty line of prophets. To avoid so disastrous a dilemma, therefore, they were driven to the feeble evasion—that they could not tell whether John's mission was from God or not. If so," replied Jesus, "then clearly he did not need your author. ity, since you never thought it worth while to sanction, or even decide respecting him, and you can have no claim to authorize me, or to with. hold authority from me. I, myself, decline, therefore, to tell by what anthority I act; if it was indifferent in the case of John. It is equally so in mine." 0 19/19/1 10/0 3 それまたのでいっよかのためを見たった He had silenged His opponents, but would not let them leave without once more trying to open their eyes to their false position. "Let me tell you a parable," He continued. "A certain man had two sons. He came to the first and said. Son, go, work to day in the vineyard.' But he answered, 'I will not;' yet, afterwards, he repented and went. And he came to the second son, who, on receiving the same command, at once answered, - 'Yes, Sir.' But he did not go.' Let me ask you, which of the two do you think, did the will of his father?" The perfect composure and the consummate art, with which He addressed them, were equally perplexing; for high dignitaries of the Jewish religious world must have been little accustomed to be put in such a position before the multitude. But an answer could not be refused, and the question was framed in such a way, that they could give none but the one which Jesus required for His complete justification, and their own condemnation. Hardly seeing what it implied. they readily answered, "The first." They were now in His hands, "You say rightly," replied He, "for when John came calling you, in the name of God, -you pricsts, scribes, and elders, -to repentance and righteousness, you honoured him by ready professions, and smooth compliance, promising all good works of a plous and holy life, and yet you held aloof after all, and showed, by your neglect to obey him. that you disbelieved his message. You are the second son, who said yes, but did not go into the vineyard." Addressing but adress fifth of Fu On the other hand, the publicans and harlots whom you despise, the common people at large, whom you reckon cursed of God; who had roughly and wickedly refused to do right, and had even gone to the utmost in sin, repented at the summons of John, believing his words, and sought earnestly to enter into the Kingdom of God. They, therefore, condemn you, O ye leaders of the people, for, by your own showing, they have done the will of their Father in Heaven, but you have not. Show and suburties bettopies around out define a conte """ It has, indeed, been always the same. As, in John's day, ye would not hear him, and in the end persecuted him to the death, so have you and your fathers done in all generations. "You, indeed, are worse than they all, for you seek to do even worse. Hear another parable." He had spoken of the call of God by the month of John, and by erous, for his of a national to disastrous evasion—that od or not. I your authoror even decide ne, or to witho tell by what i, it is equally em leave withosition. dotew tain man had to-day in the is, he repented iving the same ot go.' Let me his father?" vith which He nitaries of the d to be put in r could not be hat they could mplete justifihat it implied, in His hands. calling you, in repentance and s. and smooth holy life, and t to obey him; son, who said server Ilin of Fin n you despise, of God; who believing his gdom of God. beople, for, by her in Heaven, day, ye would h, so have you eed, are worse other parable."

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

implication affirmed that His own experience, as the successor of the Baptist in his great work, had been the same. He now glanced at the history of the theorracy, and at the sine of their party, from its earliest days. He recounted the long roll of the servants of God whom they had persecuted and misused, from the first to the last, now no longer John, but a far greater—Himself. In doing so, He now first openly, before them, called Himself the Son of God, and left them to feel that He now stood as such in their presence, awaiting the fate of other messengers of His Father at their hands.

""A certain man," said He, adopting a parable of Isaiah's, "planted a vineyard, and set a hedge about it, and hewed out a wine-cistern in the hill-side, into which to press the wine, and built a tower for the watchers, to guard the vineyard, and agreed with husbandmen to work it on his behalf; and went into a far country, for a long time. And when the fruit season drew near, he sent his servants to the husbandmen, that they might receive for him his fruits. But they took them, and beat one and killed another, and stoned a third. He then sent other servants, more numerous than the first; but the husbandmen treated them as badly, for they beat one, cast stones at another, and wounded him in the head, and sent him away, not only emptyhanded, but shamefully treated. Some of the rest they beat, others they killed; and they refused to pay the fruits they owed. "Having yet, therefore, a son, -his only and well-beloved, -he determined to send him to them, thinking that, though they had treated his servants so badly, they would be sure to show his son respect. But instead of this, when they saw the son, they said among themselves, "This is the son, come let us kill him, and the vineyard, which he should have inherited, will be ours.' So they took him, and cast him out of the vineyard, and slew him.

these husbandmen?"

The dignitaries thus addressed could not, in the presence of the crowd listening to all that had passed, refuse the only possible answer: "He will come and miserably destroy these wretched men," said their spokesman, "and give the vineyard to others, who will render him his fruits in their seasons." The meaning of the parable had already fashed on the minds of some of them, and the answer was followed by a deep "God forbid!" from several voices.

turing by a further question.

"Did you never read in the Scriptures," said He, "this text, 'The stone which the builders rejected is made the chief corner-stone—the main foundation; Jehovah hath done this; marvellous is it in our eyes?"."The meaning was clear. The corner stone of the Kingdom of God, of which those in His presence claimed to be the chief men, was, in their own mode of speech, only a figurative name for the Messiah, on

and to attr THE LIFE OF CHRIST. the refers a lat call be charal radio o

whom its existence and completion depended, as a building depends on its foundation and support. The Psalm quoted had been sung it is believed, by Israel, on the first Feast of Tabernacles, after the return from captivity. Its historical reference was primarily to the Jewish nation-rejected by the heathen, but chosen again by God as the foun dation of His earthly kingdom; but, in a higher spiritual sense, the Rabbis themselves understood it of the Messiah, and thus there could be no doubt in the mind of any Jew that when now applied by Christ to Himself, it was a direct claim of Messianic dignity. If we have a direct claim of Messianic dignity. You know this verse, do you not?" continued Jesus: "Well. then-because the stone which you have rejected has been chosen by God as the foundation-stone of His New Spiritual Kingdom, every one who shall fall on it-that is, every one who, by rejecting me, the Mes. siah; shall have drawn down on himself destruction-will perish; but he on whom it will fall—he, I mean, on whom I, the Messiah, will let locse my avenging judgments, for his rejection of me--will be crushed to pieces, small as the dust or chaff that is scattered to the winds. Therefore, I say to you, the Kingdom of God shall be taken from Israel, and from you, its present heads, and be given to a nation who will render to God the fruits He has a right to claim from it." add no The guilty consciences of the chief priests and Pharisees addressed. felt, instinctively, that in these parables He had pointed to them. The vineyard of God, separated from the wilderness of heathenism was, clearly, Israel. The Jews had been favoured by having the "noble vine" of divine institutions among them. The tower which protected them, was the Temple of God; the husbandmen were the successors of Moses; the Priests, Rabbis, and Pharisees, the representatives of God, to whom of old He had left His vineyard when He returned to heaven from Mount Sinai; with the charge to tend it and to render Him duly its fruits. The servants sent were, clearly the prophets, from their first appearance, in the distant past, to John the Baptist. They had been despised, beaten, martyred. Only one could follow them-the last and highest representative of God, who should have commanded respect even from murderers-His only and well-beloved Son, the Messiah, who had come, not as the nation fancied, to bring them political glory and earthly prosperity, but to receive and bear to His Father the fruits which, kept back for hundreds of years, could no longer be left unrendered. But Jesus, the Messiah, had long foreseen His fate. He had had it before His eyes every hour since His public entry to Jerusalem. He, the rightful heir of the vineyard, had been received by the husbandmen with jealous eyes and deadly purposes. The revolt He had come to end had grown rampant. It had risen from a refusal to render the fruits; to a rejection of their dependence, and a daring resolution to take the vineyard into their own hands: to cast out God, in casting out Him whom He had seni. The fierce anger of God could not long delay. The rebels, smitten by His wrath, must perish. The vinevard m the hea had rei other na the figu corner-s builders -had r kingdon them, a ignomin which w The fi rarchica call Him which w and inter to arrest them, be not let I prophet. they wer leave the had pow round Hi do Left in took Hin The di and the ( hist paral blindness multitude last hour in additio haff The a marriag is, to tell come. B come. enjoy the invite the the first, n all things. this fresh to his mer and even Mdiers, ding depends been sung, it fter the return to the Jewish d as the foun tual sense, the us there could lied by Christ TVT Allas per the Jesus: Well, een chosen by lom, every one g me, the Mes . vill perish; but essiah, will let will be crushed the winds. be taken from o a nation who rom it." adgrag sees addressed. inted to them. of heathenism by having the he tower which dmen were the sees, the reprevinevard when arge to tend it, were, clearly, t past, to John red. Only one e of God, who -His only and as the nation sperity, but to back for hun-But Jesus, the before His eyes le, the rightful bandmen with hd come to end nder the fruits: olution to take in casting out could not long sh. The vinevard must pass into other hands. But "the others" could only be the heathen, whom Israel despised. Loyal to the Son, whom Israel had rejected and slain; His disciples and followers, gathered from other nations, would be entrusted with the inheritance. Changing the figure, these would willingly accept, as the foundation and chief corner-stone of the New Kingdom of God. Him whom the first builders of whom those now before Him were the representatives had rejected. Was there any doubt that God would transfer that kingdom to those thus loyal to His Son? He, who now stood before them, and who at any moment might be cast out of the Temple with ignominy, and slain, must be the foundation of the New Theorracy which was to supplant the Old H dow it out or no in other mouth and The first open attempt at violence followed this parable. The hierarchical party felt that they were meant, and that Jesus had dared to call Himself the chief corner-stone of the future Kingdom of God, which was to rise in the place of that with which all their dignities and interests were bound up. With wild Eastern frenzy, they sought to arrest Him on the spot. But as looks and words, passing among them, betrayed their intention to the crowds around, these would not let Him be taken, counting Him, if not the Messiah, at least a prophet. Some, bolder than the rest, possibly laid hands on Him, but they were forced by the surging multitude to let go. They had to leave the place, and suffer. Jesus to escape for the moment. But they had power, and organization, and the people would not always be round Himil (i district the district the a sufficient for the in the second second the internet the second se Left in peace, the unwearying Divine Man once more calmly betook Himself to His task of teaching all who would heards batostorg The die had finally been cast, and the open breach between Him and the Church authorities had been proclaimed by Himself in His last parables in Fuil of hofty indignation at the hypocrisy, and wilful. blindness of His adversarles, no less than of compassion for the multitude. He could not repress the crowding thoughts which the last hours raised in His soul, and, as usual, they found expression in additional parables and pint out thut the forth -- indit, rollog bluos "The Kingdom of Heaven," He began, "Is like a king who made a marriage-feast for his son, and sent forth his servants, as the custom is, to tell those who had already been invited that the time had now come. But, though thus once and again summoned, they would not come. Yet, the king, unwilling, in his goodness, that they should not enjoy the feast; in spite of this, sent, once more, other servants to invite them again. (Come,' ran his message, 'for I have prepared the first meal of the feast; my oxen and fatlings have been killed, and all things, are ready; come to the marriage. But they made light of this fresh invitation as well, and went off, one to his farm, another to his merchandise, while still others took his servants, and ill-treated; and even killed them. . Then then king was langry, and sent his sidiers, and destroyed these murderers, and I hurned their city The rebels with it is Ill, wrath must perish The vine VRINE

'ne vine.

318

Meanwhile, he said to his servants, The marriage feast is ready, but those who have been called were not worthy. Go, therefore, to the highways, where the roads cross, and there are most passers by, and invite to the feast as many as ye find. So the servants went forth from the palace of the king to the roads and cross-ways, and gathered together all, both evil and good. who were willing to accept their invitations, and the feast-chamber was filled with guests of the Bion and The king had made all preparations for the guests being nobly arrayed in festal robes, so as to be worthy to appear before him. But now, when he came in to see the guests, he saw among them a man who had not put on a marriage-robe. And he said to him. 15 Friend, how is it that you have come in hither without a marriage garment? You must needs have known that I provided robes, fit for my presence, for all my guests, and, not less, how great a slight and disrespect it is to refuse what is thus offered; you know that to do so is to raise the severest indignation in a king thus offended." But the man was speechless, for he could not excuse himself.

and cast him out into the thick darkness outside.""

"Ye know," added Jesus, "how dark in the night our streets are, in which no windows open, and which no lights illumine. That darkness is but a type of the awful night into which he will be cast out, who appears at the marriage feast of the Messiuh's kingdom, without the marriage-robe provided by my Father. In that darkness there will, indeed, be weeping and gnashing of teeth, for though multitudes are invited to the feast of the heavenly kingdom, many neglect to secure the marriage-robe, without which no one can see the king!"

The parable was an enforcement of those just addressed to the priests and Rabbis, but with various additional lessons. The haughty sons of Jerusalem heard once more, that when the kingdom of the Messinh should be set up in its glory. God would call the heathen to a share in it, while the people of Israel, with their religious leaders because, as a nation, they had rejected His repeated invitations would no longer be the one people of God. Still more, they would be visited with the avenging wrath of God, in the destruction of Jerusalem, even before the final triumphant establishment of the New Divine Kingdom. Yet, among the heathen invited to enter it, as among the Jews; God, at the day of judgment, when the kingdom was finally set up for eternity, would separate and judge those who had been wanting in loyalty to Him, and had come into His presence without the preparation demanded. Such would be cast into the outer darkness of Gehenna.

Thus, in the very presence of imminent death, there was the same tranchillity and repose as on the free hills of Galilee, or in the safe petrest of Centres Philippi; the same stagendous claims as Head of the Ne and ete the fac the pas lowly i sought peniten fluence of wea serene the spin barriers He is E predict of God on the grandet apparen in the n present and he because than ms ing unc -Man. mystery

1100 000

W. 1140

e hautha

oni 10 into

JI IT wa

The dep

early m all parti

mental.

commor

It was t

burned .

Savonar

the non murder

but wou

and thei

Plot.

athorit

.

t is ready, but erefore, to the assers by, and ie king to the evil and good. feast-chamber ts being nobly fore him. w among them ne said to him, out a marriage d robes, fit for at a slight and w that to do so ded. of the sea le se himself.

hand and foot. Still Production our streets are. lumine. That he will be cast ah's kingdom. n that darkness h, for though ingdom, many no one can see dressed to the The haughty ingdom of the the heathen to gious leadersd invitationsre, they would destruction of ent of the New to enter it as the kingdom adge those who to His presence e cast into the

e was the same , or in the safe ms as Head of the New Kingdom of God, and King over the souls of men. for time and eternity." Within a few hours of crucifixion, and conscious of the fact; in the intervals of mortal contest with the whole forces of the past and present, the wandering Galilæan Teacher, meek and lowly in spirit, so that the poorest and the youngest instinctively sought Him; full of divine pity, so that the most sunken and hopeless penitent felt. He was their friend: indifferent to the supports of influence, wealth, or numbers; alone and poor; the very embodiment of weakness, as regarded all visible help, still bore Himself with a serene dignity more than human. In the name of God He transfers the spiritual glory of Israel to His own followers: throws down the barriers of caste and nationality; extends the new dominion of which He is Head, to all races, and through all ages, here and hereafter: predicts the divine wrath on His enemies in this world, as the enemies of God, and announces the decision of the final judgment as turning on the attitude of men towards Himself and His message. The grandeur of soul which could so utterly ignore the outward and apparent, and realize the essential and eternal; the conscious majesty in the midst of humiliation and danger; the absolute trust that, if the present belonged to His adversaries, the everlasting future, in earth and heaven, was all His own, could spring in such a heart, only because it felt that it was not alone, but that, unseen by man, a greater than man was ever with Him. Only when we realize Him as enjoying-unclouded and absolute communion with eternal truth and love -Man, but also the Incarnate Divine-can we hope to solve the mystery 1 . Anot 10 anithong and anitor wild handlat divisionit . man and the start is the of the of the near of ity king the and the and the and the secure the many of the secure of the s the king:" I he parails was an IVL RETERAUD here just addressed to the pricestance ltadige, but we Malasinar behout descons. I'l he haught pricestance ltadige, but we Malasinar behout descons. I'l he haught here of slorns-lean hermi once where and, when the kingdom of the IT was still Tuesday, and Jesus still remained in the Temple courts.

The deputation from the Temple authorities had come to Him in the early morning, only to retire mortified and silenced, but the heads of all parties were threatened by One who demanded changes so fundamental. All alike, therefore, however hostile at other times, made common cause in trying to get the hated Reformer into their power. It was the same spirit, as, in after ages, when far less fiercely roused, burned Arnold of Brescia, and John Huss, and strangled and burnt Savonarola, and slew the thousands of victims of the Inquisition :the non possumus of a corrupt ecclesiastical corporation, which would murder in the name of God, because that could be called orthodoxy; but would not reform, because to do so would touch their interests and their order. I willight an antanni 10 youseour v manade at and I Plot, therefore, thickened on plot, Having themselves failed, the intherities sent sume of the Pharisees in company with some Herodians, otherwise their deadly enemies, to try to commit Him by the answers He might give to treacherous questions. Obscure men wers chosen, men unknown to Jesus. They were to pretend themselves anxious, as sincere Jews, scrupulous in all duties, to get His counsel on a point much disputed. The snare was no longer laid in the sphere of Rabbinical law, but in the more dangerous one of political oblightion, that an ambiguous answer might compromise Him before the Roman procurator. If they succeeded, it would at once transfer the odium of His arrest from themselves: ensure His not being rescued, and make it possible to get Him put to death, for the power of death was in Pilate's hands alone.

The Pharisees and Herodians, though from different principles were equally disloyal in heart to the Roman Emperor. The extreme section of the former had developed into the sanguinary zealots-the extreme left, or irreconcilables, of Jewish politics: the Herodians were Jewish royalists, who sighed for the old days of Archelaus and the Edomite dynasty. With dexterous craft, the ultra-orthodoxy of the Pharisaic party allied itself with the discontented loyalist faction. to tempt Jesus, if possible, to some bold expression of opinion on the hated question of the payment of the Roman poll tax, which had already excited flerce insurrections. If He held that payment should be refused. He would compromise Himself with the Romans wif He sanctioned it, He would embitter Himself both with the Herodians and the ultra-national party. "Danger lay on each hand. On the one. the fierce cycs of the multitude, on the other, the bailing of Herod: here, the cry, "Publicans, sinners;" there, a Roman dungeon. To disarm suspicions they used dolla. Take out gette of yous & it not which on which me to solve the volt 's ing the com you pay an s-mild the new "Smooth dissimulation, taught to grace A devil's purpose with an angel's face."

"Teacher," said they, with soft accents and humble looks, "we know-indeed, we are fully convinced-that thou teachest what God requires of man as his duty in all matters, truly and rightly, and troublest not thyself about the opinions of men, but fearlessly and nobly speakest what truth demands, without thinking of conser quences, and without caring who hears Thee, whether he be rich, or poor, learned or simple, powerful or lowly. Is it lawful for us Jews to pay tribute to Casar or not? We are the people of God: God is our King: is it in accordance with the allegiance we owe to Him, as such, to recognize any other king, as we must do if we pay taxes to Casar?"" It was on such reasoning that Judas the Gaulonite had based his fierce revolt against payment of the tax demanded after the census of Quirinius, and his name and opinions were ven crated by the closely-packed multitude around. Every Galilman among them expected a stern avowal of the illegality of the demand. For Judas had taught the youth of the country that to pay taxes to a new lice was not allowable; and dealed tho land, and thousands had alrea the north. The mo off His g cost the nanded f n the rep menting instead of therefore, was, und nized no founding should he world. tions, for ances, He would ha Him to re Romanst party wo against th But Ch

"You! designs, a you thus which you the Roma coin whic poll tat w Besidel, it rius, and t to spare J out a-like tional Jev of August especially the hope, image on -mght p proved the Whose of Csesar "Rende the things Nthing

Him by the re men were themselves His counsel laid in the e of political Him before once transfer ot being res the power of unite and main t principles. The extreme zealots-the e Herodians rchelaus and orthodoxy of alist faction, inion on the which had ment should mans: fif He e Herodians: On the one. fst of Herod: ingeon. To DOF 20 11 SINY in no. holder i have all mit is dours give looks, "we st what God rightly, and earlessly and g of conset e be rich, or for us Jews God: God is e to Him. as pay taxes to ulonite had handed after s were ven. rv Galilæan the demand. Day taxes to dithousands had already died for this cause; or lived as fugitives in the caves of, the north additional ( digitation of the bridges perform a animality of a to classico a The mode of approach adopted was well fitted to throw Jesus, off His guard ... Recognition, even by Pharisees, as the brave, frank, fearless Man of God, and appeal to Him in a matter which might cost the questioner his life, were, alike, ensnering, Frankness denanded frankness. The courage of the question demanded as much n the reply. Jesus knew, besides, that such ideas were always fermenting in the mind of the Pharisee youth, and that the Herodians, instead of being friends of Rome, anxiously desired a change. Why, therefore, should He distrust the new allies? The Roman supremacy. was, undoubtedly, at bottom, a usurpation. The strict Jew recornized no ruler but Jehovah, and, since Jesus had devoted His life to founding a "Kingdom of Heaven," it seemed only natural that He should hold His followers free from obligations to the kingdoms of the world. They could not comprehend the spirituality of His concept tions, for had they not had a secret suspicion, that, in spite of appear. ances. He really meditated an attack on the Roman government, they would hardly have asked such a question. Gould they only bring Him to reveal these secret thoughts, His death at the hands of the Romans was certain, as a crafty conspirator, and the hierarchical party would get their revenge, without the odium of exacting it, against the daring and determined transgressor of Rabbinleal law, But Christ's answer scattered their subtle plans to the wind, "You hypocrites !- you actors!" replied He; "I see through your designs, and value your deceitful flatteries at their worth. Why do you thus seek to entrap me, under pretence of religious scruples. which you wish me to solve for you? Bring me the coin you pay as the Roman tax." A Roman denarius was presently brought Him-a coin which the Jew hated intensely, for it was that in which the poll tat was paid, and was, thus, the sign of slavery to the heathen. Beside, it bore the idolatrous image of the Roman Emperor Tiberius, and the legend of his authority. The Emperors, to Vespasian, to spart Jewish feeling, had a special coinage struck for Judea, without a likeness on it, and only the name of the Emperor and the traditional Jewish emblems. But other coins, stamped with the image of Augustus or Tiberius, naturally found their way to Jerusalem, especifily at the feasts. Such a coin was now handed to Jesus, with the hope, doubtless, that the double abomination-the idolatrous image on one side, and the legend of Jewish subjection on the other -mglit provoke Him to some treasonable expression. But the result proted the reverse; of by the Manny at _ in a late there it all has "Whose image and superscription is this?" asked He. all Casar's " statistic and inter our the metandisperienters.

"Lender, then, to Cæsar, the things that are Cæsar's, and to God, the pings that are God's." "Nthing could be said after such an answer... The head of the Emperor on the coin, and the legend round it, were overt proofs of the existing state of things, and of the de facto right of the imperial gov. ernment, as such, to levy taxes." Hence followed, not only the law. fulness, but the duty, of paying what was thus due to the Emperor. including the tax in question, since the very coin in which it was payable showed, on its face, that it was the lawful claim of the ruling power." "But," added He, "your theocratic duty is in no way com. promised by such political duties as subjects. Pay also, what is demanded by God as your spiritual King, as a legal claim of His government,-the Temple tax, and all that He demands from you besides as His spiritual subjects." The treacherous question was answered with a clearness, precision, and wisdom, which defined, for all ages, the relations of His kingdom to the civil power. The Christian was not to oppose existing authority, but to unite his duty to it, with his duty. to God." The political and religious spheres, were declared not opposite but co-existing, and harmonious though distinct.

To realize the immense significance of this utterance delivered as it was, on the moment, without an instant's hesitation we must remember that it introduced an entirely new conception of the relation of Church and State. Till then, over the world, they had been identical. The Cæsar was chief priest as well as emperor, and the colleges of priests and augurs were political institutions. In Judea, the two spheres, henceforth to be separated, had, hitherto, been confused and intermixed; the civil power was the instrument of the priest; its institutions were religious, and the priesthood had striven after kingly power and rank." Henceforward, the new society was to stand apart from political interests and authorities. The State was no longer indispensable to its perfect completeness and efficiency. The sphere of religion was that of the conscience, which is, by its nature, free. The State cannot leave the payment of its impositions to godwill; it must enforce them, if they be refused: but force is utterly opposed to the idea of the Kingdom of God. In it voluntary service alone has value. What is yielded to force, without inner truth and love. is before God, as if not given at all; what is given in hypecritical self-interest, is an abomination to Him.

No wonder such an answer filled the messengers of the hierarchical party with astonishment. It was not only not treasonable, but indirectly pressed on the hierarchy the conscientious discharge of its duties to Rome. But they could not grasp its whole significance, for they had no conception of a religious community which had no the right and power to inflict civil penalties. The Old Testament conomy was, itself, the State. Obedience to its requirements wa forced by the national courts, and an attempt to change or transgress them was severely punished. Jesus Himself, indeed, was abut to atome with His life for His offences against the established and raditional religious usages and opinions of the ruling caste. The ices of Fredem of conscience and faith, which was the very starting-out of His te His age. sponsibil All the dangerou prescript of the da favour E Herodian renewed were aga ancein lofty claim united th nestness ( and infide after, in I they were offence at attacked: bishops o who, like among H disposed 1 and to lau ical dream gerous, an tempt, by For this by Rabbin ance with brothers, e inary, it w died witho marry the to be enter Not beli supposing notions as cover Him of the Rat that in the in the fut But they Rabbis ger resurrection theirbodily

e. delivered as 1 we must red the relation had been idenid the colleges ludea; the two confused and e priest; its inen after kingly to stand apart was no longer The sphere s nature, free. hs to good will; tterly opposed y service alone ruth and love, n hyperitical

he hierarchical onable, but inischarge of its ignificance, for ch had not the estament conments wa e or trangress , was about to shed and radithe ites of rating-point of His teaching, was a stumbling-block, and a ground of bitterness, to His age. The conception of a religion, in which there was no responsibility except to God, was beyond it.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

All the influential Jewish parties had now united against Him, as a dangerous innovator, an enemy of the Rabbinical "hedge" of human prescriptions and refinements, which was the essence of the religion of the day. If tolerated longer He might win over the people to favour His demand for fundamental reform. The Pharisces and Herodians had hardly left Him, when some aristocratic Sadducees renewed the attack. The olergy of all classes, from highest to lowest, were against Him! His support was among the people. His appearance in the Temple, His assumption of authority over it, and His lofty claim to be the Messiah, filled the official world with alarm, and united them to crush Him. But the Sadducees had none of the earnestness of the Pharisees. They were the prototypes of the scoffing. and infidel priests whom Luther found, almost fifteen hundred years after, in Rome; who parodied even the words of the Holy Sacraments they were busied in consecrating. The Pharisees had early taken offence at Jesus, for they were zealots for the Rabbinism which He attacked; but the Sadducees-few, rich, dignified; the primate and bishops of the day-affected at first only to despise the Galilæan, who, like so many before Him, had stirred up commotion for the time among His rude compatriots. Even now, in Jerusalem, they were disposed to look at Him and His adherents with a lofty contempt, and to laugh the foolish rabble who listened to Him out of their fanatical dreams. His claims were, in their opinion, more silly than dangerous, and they would, therefore, bring the whole matter into contempt, by making it ridiculous.

For this end they had carefully selected, from the cases invented by Rabbinical casuistry, that of a wife, who was supposed, in accordance with the Mosaic law, to have married in succession seven brothers, each of whom died without children. Though an imaginary, it was a possible case, for the Law enacted, that, if a husband died without leaving a con to perpetuate his name, his brother must marry the widow, and the first-born son of this second marriage was to be entered in the public register as the son of the dead man.

Not believing in the doctrine of the resurrection themselves, and supposing that Jesus, who, they had heard, taught it, I eld the same notions as they ascribed to the Pharisees, they fancied they could over Him and it with ridicule, by a skilful use of this case. Some of the Rabbis, indeed, had purer conceptions than others, teaching that in the kingdom of the Messiah, after the resurrection, or at least in the future world, the just would neither eat, drink, nor marry. But they were exceptions, for the popular belief, as expressed by the Rabbis generally, was gross and unworthy in the extreme. The resurrection would not only restore men to their former bodies, but to their todily appetites and passions; they would not only eat, drink, and take wives, but would rise in the clothes they wore in life, if buried with them, and even with all their bodily blemishes and defect, "that men might know them to be the same persons as they knew in life." Even the case supposed by the Sadducees, had been settled in principle,—"for the woman who had married two husbands in this world," says the Book Sohar, ' will be given to the first, in the world to come."

Fancying there was no sanction, either for the immortality of the soul or the resurrection, in the Pentateuch, the Sadducees sneered at both doctrines. "They deny the resurrection after death," says the Talmud, "and maintain that it is as vain to hope that a cloud which has vanished will appear again, as that the grave will give back its dead."

Coming to Jesus, with a well-bred politeness, they put their question softly, addressing Him respectfully, as the Pharisees and Herodians had done, as Rabbi, for which they used the current Greek equivalent.

"Your ideas respecting these things are wrong," replied Jesus, "from your not understanding correctly the Scriptures which refer to them. The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage, because they are mortal, and marriage is necessary to perpetuate the race. But those who shall be counted worthy to enter the Heavenly Kingdom of the Messiah, and will be raised from the dead to do so, neither marry nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more, for they will be immortal, like angels; and hence there is no reason for their marrying and raising children, to take their place, as with men in this world. As sons of the resurrection, they are sons of God, and, like the angels, will live for ever.

"As to the resurrection of the dead, you have referred to Moses. But let me also refer to him." Even he shows, in the passage in which we are told of the vision at the burning bush, that the dead are raised. For he calls Jehovah, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Now, God cannot be the God of persons who do not exist, and, therefore, the patriarchs, though their bodies were dead, must themselves have been still living—living, I mean, in the separate state, and awaiting the resurrection. Thus, God regards all the dead as still living, and how easy, if this be the case, for Him to raise them hereafter!" "Rabbi, Thou hast spoken well," said some Scribes, as He closed. They were, for the moment, won to His side, by His triumph over their bitter Sadducee cnemics: Meanwhile, the people were more than ever astonished at His, teaching, and disposed to think Him's prophet. A state that the Sadducees had been silenced, but It soon spread abroad that the Sadducees had been silenced, but the Pharisees had already prepared a new attempt to entrap Him. One of them, who had listoned to the dispute -a Scribe, or master of the Law Had bien selected to be their spokeman, but, as it prove was only were grea weighty, t ness; howe ticular pre founded of transgressi observance minutest ri like. The Feast of T contrary, c obedience were treate mother-bir the hands, injunctions scarves, we mud, "are Law are b weighty,", more comm Himself to: It may be ance respect had been lif who made H in the face o His reply, whole sweep principles. give offence at the same Rabbinical 1 "Teacher mandment i No one co He was, if w few days be Jericho. W with more fu but giving at as great, to Scribe He g nd in the tr

the rest work and defects; they knew in een settled in sbands in this in the world ortality of the ees sneered at ath," says the a cloud which give back its 1: 10 1.: Dia out their quesces and Herocurrent Greek replied Jesus, es which refer given in mary to perpetnate nter the Heavthe dead to do in they die any nce there is no their place, as , they are sons MIL erred to Moses. the passage in that the dead am, Isaaci and o do not exist, ere dead, must e separate state, all the dead as n to raise them R. 25 6 1. 63. 16. 14. s, as He closed. triumph over ple were more to think Him's with the these n silenced, but to entrap Him. be, or master of it milt proved ife, if buried

was only half-hearted in his task. The Rabbis taught that there were great and small commands in the laws-the one hard and weighty, the other easy and of less moment. Their idea of greatness, however, was independent of the religious importance of a particular precept, and had regard only to their own external precepts, founded on it. Thus, commands were especially called great, to tho mansgression of which excommunication was attached; such as observance of the Sabbath, in their seuse; of circumcision, of the minutest rites of sacrifice and offering, of ceremonial purity, and the ike. The precepts respecting the structure of the booths at the Feast of Tabernacles, and of the washing the hands, were, on the contrary, counted small. But, in spite of this nominal difference, obedience to all was alike imperative, and, in practice, both classes were treated as alike weighty. To honour one's parents and to let a mother-bird fly when the young are taken; not to kill; and to wash the hands, were put on a level, and had an equal reward. Even the injunctions of the Rabbis respecting the zizith, or tassels of their . scarves, were "great," "The words of the Rabbis," says the Talmud, "are to be prized above those of the Law, for the words of the Law are both weighty and light, but those of the Rabbis are all weighty,", If Jesus answered as the Pharisees hoped, He would oncemore commit Himself, as an enemy of the traditions, and expose Himself to new charges.

It may be, there was, besides, a lurking desire to clicit some uttermee respecting His claims to a more than human authority. Stones, had been lifted more than once, to put Him to death as a blasphemer, who made Himself equal with God. How, would He express Himself, in the face of the first command of the Decalogue?

His reply, as always, goes to the root of the matter, simplifying the whole sweep of "the Ten Words" into brief and easily remembered principles. He avoided the least approach to anything that could give offence to the most zealous supporter of the Old Testament, and, at the same time, gave no handle for accusation of any slight of the Rabbinical precepts.

"Teacher," said the legalist, "which is the great and first com-

No one could take Jesus by surprise at any time, but in this sphere He was, if we may so speak, especially at home, as He had shown a few days before, in His conversation with the young ruler, near Jericho. With a full sense of the peril of His position, He answered with more fulness than usual, leaving no ground for misapprehension, but giving as little for offence. He had named only one command as great, to the young ruler—the love of our neighbour—but to the Stribe He gave two, as forming, together, "the great and first commandment.". Neither, was abridged, or subordinated to the other, and in the two He formed the principle from which obedience of all be rest would follow. With sure hard, He tuned not to the other,

inspirati Bit thou

Thy mig

thou in t

be his So

one which is David

ceeding

kind, and

twofold 1

true estin

their the

but it wa

had show

to overco

however,

if not th

attitude,

made all

profound

proceeded

self and I

be enable

place. TH

Henow

ble denun

versaries.

risy and

Yet their practice ]

its" The

the seat o

and teach

obey then

what the

mands, in

will not h

little finge from othe conscience

they make all true v

effect: to

tion and T

most pion

Anew

The'tr

Book of Moses, then to the Third, for the two great guiding stars which all the host of lesser commands followed. "Hear, O Israel," said He: "Jehovah, our God, is one God"—the words in which every Israelite, each morning, confessed his faith in Jehovah—!" And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. This is the great and first commandment. A second is like it. Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. There is none other command greater than these. On these two hang the whole Law and the prophets."

He had once more shown His greatness as a teacher, by summing up our whole duty in the fundamental conceptions of religion and morality: in the love to God, which is also love to His children, our fellow-men. Nor were the various commands of any part of the Scriptures overlooked; the religious and moral precepts of the prophets, no less than the Law, were honoured and made binding for ever. "Thou hast spoken well and truly," broke in the scribe, "for God is One, and there is no other but He, and to love Him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength, and to love one's neighbour as one's self, is of greater consequence than all the whole burnt offerings of the Law, the morning and evening sacrifice, and all other sacrifices besides."

"Thou art not far from the kingdom of God," replied Jesus as He heard words which showed that the speaker was no mere man of his party, but was accessible to higher impulses. The Galilæan had proved very different from what he had been led to anticipate. His answers had not only silenced His enemies, but had half won some of them to His side. Henceforth, all, alike, kept aloof from one from whom chief priests and Rabbis equally went away humbled.

As on the day before, the defeat of all the attacks on Him was followed by His taking the offensive, but only in a mild, instructive conflict with prejudice and misapprehension. He had openly assumed the Messiahship, but in a sense entirely in contrast with the popular conception. That He fulfilled none of the conditions expected alike by the authorities and the people, in the Messiah, had given the former the pretext for spreading it abroad that He was an impostor; a cry caught up, in the end, only too widely, by the Jerusalem populace. He would now show the Pharisees, if they chose to listen, that their preconceptions were wrong, when tested by Scripture, and thus expose the worthlessness of the arguments on which they based their light denial of His Messiahship.

light denial of His Messiahship. Turning unexpectedly to a knot of Pharisees who hung near, to watch as He was teaching, He asked them— "What is your opinion about the Messiah; I mean, as to His lineage and extraction—whose son is He?". "The son of David," answered they, at once. "How is it, then," replied Jesus: "that David, in the hundred and toph. Profession, which you Rabbie justly refer to the Messiah, says, by at guiding stars car, O. Israel," in which every i—"And thou ith all thy soul, his is the great a shalt love thy od greater than ophets."

er, by summing of religion and is children, our any part of the bis of the prophinding for ever. cribe, "for God lim with all the e soul, and with elf, is of greate." Law, the morndes."

eplied Jesus, as no mere man of he Galilæan had anticipate. His findf won some f from one from imbled. ... old s on Him was nild, instructive openly assumed ith the popular s expected alike d given the foran impostor; a Jerusalem popuse to listen, that ipture, and thus they based their 1110 217

o hung near, to w blac be co h, as to His line has to attend he hundred and foodable, says, by inspiration of God, 'The Lord said unto my Lord, the Messiah, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enamies thy footstool. Thy mighty sceptre will the Eternal stretch forth out of Zion; rule thou in the midst of thy foes.' If He be David's Lord, how can He be his Son?"

The true answer they must have given, had they given any, was one which had not entered their thoughts. It would have been—He is David's Son by His' human descent; but, as the Son of God, proceeding from the Father, He is exalted far above David and all mankind, and therefore was rightly called, by David, his Lord. But this twofold relation of the Messiah to their great king, and, with it, the true estimate of the dignity and office of the Messiah, were not in their theology. The exposition of Jesus might displease the Rabbis, but it was heard with eager ears by the multitude around.

A new scene now opened. Day after day; the hostility of His enemies had shown itself more fierce, as they found it increasingly hopeless to overcome Him by legitimate weapons or argument. The people, however, were more friendly, and regarded Him as, at least, a prophet, if not the Messiah. He had hitherto maintained only a defensive attitude, but the clear purpose shown to put Him out of the way, made all further reserve or caution useless. With the calmness of a profound conviction, and the clearest statement of His grounds. He proceeded to open a vigorous attack, that the contrast between Himself and His opponents might be beyond question. Every one must be enabled to judge intelligently on which side he would take his place." He desired, henceforth, only a speedy decision of the struggle. He now, therefore, broke out, before the multitude, in a last ferrible denunciation of the moral and religious shortcomings of His adversaries. These He summed up under the two great heads of hypocrisy and selfishness; they made a pretence and a gain of religion. Yet their doctrines and decisions were substantially right; it was their practice He condemned. Bt (1 1.200 2002 0 at the glas base bit off .

"The Scribes and Pharisees," said He, "have taken possession of the scat of Moses, to continue his office as hw-giver, by explaining and teaching the Law. They are his official successors; therefore, obey their decisions." But do not imitate their lives, for they teach what they do not practise. They heap together their rules and demands, into heavy burdens, and lay them ou men's shoulders, but they will not help those whom they thus load by so much as the touch of a little finger. They shirk many rites and forms which they demand from others as sacred duties. Their requirements are a load on the conscience, which deadens and destroys it. To exalt their order, they make slaves of the people, paralyzing by their countless laws all true virtue, freedom, and love. They act only with an eye to effect; to be thought more religious than others; and reap consideration and profit from this reputation. They come out to pray in their nost plots robest especially by the feast, and wear phylacterize of extra size on their forehead and arm that they may be noticed; and the very tassels hung, in honour of the Law, at the corners of their ablas, are larger than those of others. To get honour, they strive for the highest places at feasts, and the chief seats in the synagogues, and court salutations in the crowded market-place, and the sounding title, Rabbi. Have nothing to do with such proud names, for I, only, am your Rabbi or teacher, and all ye are brethren. They like to be called 'Father,' but call no teacher on earth your father, for one only is your Father; God in Heaven. And do not, like them, be called Leaders, for you have only one Leader, Me, the Messiah. The highest place among my disciples is quite otherwise obtained than among them, for he who seeks to be great among you can become so, as I have said before, only by being the servant of the rest. This lowliness is itself his greatness. For he who exalts himself shall be humbled at my coming, and he who humbles himself will be exalted."

Rising, as He proceeded, He now broke out into a lofty utterance of indignation at such principles and conduct.

"Woe to you, Scribes and Pharisees, actors! Ye plunder the houses of desolate widows, left without protectors, and, to hide your doings, make long prayers while at such work! For you say in your hypocrisy, 'Long prayers make a long life,' and some of you boast that you pray nine hours a day! Believe me, you will receive for all this the greater damnation lercafter. "Woe to you, Scribes and Pharisees, actors! Ye stand in the gateway of the Kingdom of Heaven, that Kingdom I have come to set up, and, not only do not yourselves enter; but even close the doors I have opened, that you may keep those from entering, who wish to do so, and with the set of the set of the set of the set.

"Woe to you, Scribes and Pharisees, actors! Instead of helping men into the Kingdom of the Messiah, ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, that your party may profit by him, and, when he is gained, what do you make of him? A son of hell, by your example, two-fold more even than you are yourselves.

Wee to you, blind guides, who say, 'If any one swear by the Temple, it is not binding; but if he swear by the gold which belongs to the Temple—the gilding, the golden vessels, or the treasure—he is bound by his oath.' Fools and blind! for which is the greater, the gold, or the Temple that sanctifies the gold? You say, in the same spirit, 'If any one swear by the altar, his oath is not binding on him; but if he swear by the gift that he has laid on the altar, he must keep his oath.' Fools and blind! for which is the greater, the gift, or the altar that sanctifies the gift? He who swears by the altar swears by it, and by all the things on it, and he who swears by the Temple swears by it, and by Him that dwells in it. And he who swears by heaven, swears by the throne of God, and by Him who sits on it.

and Habbis " Why transfors ye." he had also what we comminde strict in even the and yet a to do just ought ce surely no out the worthles "Woe outside o and inco and dish the outsid by the tal of your c "Woe whitewa

the dead You pass hypocris Over a which H slope of t most of w these mor afresh-"Woe over the c we had 1 part with you call sons-and You are o the measu -by slavi vipers, for escape the to you pro ye shall k and persed ple, may c on the ear the son of the court

me, all the old, bad d and Rabb

TELET OF CHRIST

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

2551

.....

strict in observing the Law that you pay a tenth to the Temple of even the sprigs of mint and anise and cummin in your garden borders, and yet at the same time you neglect the great commands of the Law; to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with your God. You ought certainly to attend to the lighter demands of the Law, but surely not to leave the far greater neglected. Blind guides, who strain out the gnat from the wine and swallow the camel! Sticklers for worthless triffes, regardless of matters of moment.

"Woe to you, Scribes and Pharisees, actors! Ye make clean the outside of the cup and the dish, but, within, they are full of robbery and incontinence. Blind Pharisee, clean first the inside of the cup and dish, that the wine taste no more of plunder and hus, and that the outside may not only seem clean by your washing it, but be clean; by the taking away of that defilement which your life gives it, in spite of your cleansings.

"Woe to you, Scribes and Pharisees, actors! You are like the whitewashed tombs all over the land—fair outside, but full within of the deadliest uncleanness—the bones of men, and all corruption. You pass yourselves off as religious, but in your hearts you are full of hypocrisy and iniquity."

Over against the castern hall in which Jesus now stood, and from which He looked down into the Valley of the Kedron, lay, on the slope of the Mount of Olives, the tombs of the Prophets, the southmost of which is yet known as the tomb of Zechariah. In sight of these monuments, ranging His eyes from grave to grave. He burst out afresh

"Woe to you, Scribes and Pharisees, actors! Ye build fine tombe over the old prophets, and beautify those of the saints, and say, 'If we had lived in the days of our fathers, we would not have taken part with them in their martyrdom of these holy men." But when you call them your fathers,' you bear witness that you are their sons-and you are, not only in natural descent, but in your spiritt You are of kin in heart to the prophet murderers! Fill up, therefore, the measure of iniquity your fathers before you filled in their day, -by slaying me and those I shall send to you! Serpents! brood of vipers, for vipers your fathers were, and vipers are ye, how can ye escape the judgment of hell! Thus e may not do so, behold, I send to you prophet-like Apostles, and Rabbis, and Scribes. Some of them ye shall kill and crucify; some ye shall scourge in your synagogues, and persecute from city to city-that on you, the leaders of the people, may come the punishment of all the innocent, righteous blood shed on the earth; from the blood of righteous Abel to that of Zechariah; the son of Berechiah, who was stoned by command of King Joash in the court of the Temple, between the shrine and the altar. Believe me, all these things will come in this generation." Zechariah, of old, had denounced the sin of Israel; as Jeans had that of the priests and Rabbis. Why transgress ye," he had asked, "the commands noticed: and ners of their r, they strive synagogues, the sounding s, for I, only, ley like to be , for one only em, be called The highest than among come so, as I This lowlishall be hume exalted." y utterance of der the houses your doings, n your hypocyou boast that ive for all this nd in the gateve come to set ose the doors I , who wish to ad of helping ea and land to and, when he by your exam-swear by the which belongs reasure—he is he greater; the y, in the same nding on Lim; altar, he must eater, the gift, s by the altar swears by the And he who Him who sits affect to be so

1090

ments of the Lord? Ye cannot prosper Because ye have forsaken Jehovah, He hath forsaken you. States on I mathin ous, and Adv ron O Jerusalem! Jerusalem," He continued, "that killest the prophets, and stonest those sent in love to thee; how often have I desired to gather thy children, as a hen gathers her chickens under her wing. and ye refused to come under my loving protection, by accepting me as the Messiah. Behold, your house is left to you! I go from it. The time of the divine help and guard, over you and your city, which I was sent to offer, is past. I gon - taken that out out mer it "I tell you ye shall not see me henceforth, after my death, which is near at hand, till I appear again in my glory. Then, you shall be only too eagerly willing to hail me as the Messiah, though now ye refuse. even to let others thus hail me. "Then, when too late, you will cry. as the crowds did as I entered your city, 'Bl essed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord.'" Thus, the breach between the Future and the Past was finally made complete. The whole hierarchy, from the high priest its primate, to the Levite its curate, and the Rabbi its university professor or tutor, had been denounced before the people, in language which they must resent if they were to retain any authority at all. Either Jesus. or the Church as it was, with all its innumerable personal interests. must perish. It had come to this, indeed, before this last tremendous indictment of the system, and the certainty that nothing could avert His being sacrificed to the fanaticism and vested interests arrayed against Him, had alone caused such a protest. He had no reasons for further reserve. It was fixed that He must die at their hands, and the irreconcilable opposition between the system for the sake of which He was to be martyred, and His own character and work, must, once more, for the last time, be brought out in full contrast, that every one might choose for himself for which he would decide meal, not a sit The infinite moral grandeur and purity of Jesus His absolute truth, His all embracing love, His lowly humility, His sublime consecration to the will of His Father, His intense moral earnestness, His spirit of joyful self-sacrifice for the moral and spiritual good of mankind, shine out nowhere more transcendently, than when con-truth, His all embracing love; His lowly humility, His subline consecration to the will of His Father, His intense moral earnestness, His spirit of joyful self-sacrifice for the moral and spiritual good of mankind, shine out nowhere more transcendently, than when contrasted, in this parting lament, with the wretched sophistries and reverence for the infinitely little, which marked the Habbinism He opposed. The spirit of the market or the booth, in religion, found no sanction at His hands; He would have no huckstering for heaven by a life of petty formalities; He abhorred all cant and insincerity, and all trading with religion; all striving after mere cutward success, for ulterior and unworthy ends. He would have no divorce of religion from morality; it was with Him a living principle in the hear, not a rubric of external acts; its outward expression was a holy life, but the holiness without was only the blossoming of a similar holiness within. In Rabbinism, on the opposite, there was formal piety, with no moral earnestness; an absorbing real for artificial duties, with which the tion of r spiritual had been round the stitution enforced and the authoritic Israelites of a system anything cerity and and perp

The th Jesus op eye, but that they religious Him than Over st Judaism set chairs Mrs Shri doi thr by 59.74 1215. AFTER the nation steps belo and thirt people at and it was It was es huilding Jesus h past hours persons ca each came The poor o and silver others, bec mercial va Among of our pen cast in less

L. DUI

nave forsaken

est the prophnave I desired der her wing, accepting me I go from it. ur city, which leath, which is u shall be only now ye refuseyou will cry, that cometh as finally made st its primate, y professor or ge which they Either Jesus, sonal interests. ast tremendous ing could avert terests arrayed no reasons for neir hands, and e sake of which ork, must, once that every one dre but son, tles, His absolute s sublime conral earnestness, iritual good of han when concophistries and Rabbinism He religion, found ring for heaven nd insincerity, itward success. ivorce of religle in the heart, was a holy life, similar holiness mal piety, with aliduties, with which the conscience had nothing to do; and an elaborate multiplication of rules and rites, for the express aim of obtaining the absolute spiritual dependence of all, on the teaching caste. The whole system had been originated and developed to its fulness, to be a "hedge" round the Law, and thus secure fidelity to the politico-religious constitution of the nation, and its minutest details were strenuously enforced to secure this end. Unquestioning acceptance of tradition; and the deepening and extending of the ghostly influence of the authorities, were the two great points kept in view. There were true Israelites, like Nathanael, or Zecharlah, or Simeon, or Joseph, in spite of a system thus lifeless and corrupting; but it was vain to hope for anything but evil, in the community at large, under its reign. Insincerity and immorality in the teachers of a religion can only multiply and perpetuate themselves in their disciples.

The theology and hierarchy of Judaism had become, in fact, what Jesus openly declared them—whitewashed sepulchres—pure to the eye, but with only death and corruption within: They had proved that they were so, by rejecting Him, because He demanded moral and religious reform. Wedded to the false and immoral, they rather killed Him than let Him lead them back to God. I and the false and immoral, they rather killed Over such a state of things He could only raise His sad lamentation Judaism had chosen its own way, and left Him to His.

n. bury among to training to t

AFTER His terrible parting donunciation of the religious leaders of the nation, Jesus passed into the great forecourt of the women, fifteen steps below that of the men. It was a wide space of a hundred and thirty-five cubits in length and breadth, and was open to the people at large of Popular assemblies, indeed, were at times held in it, and it was the scene of the torch-dance at the Feast of Tabernacles. It was especially frequented, however, by both sexes, because the huilding was there in which the plous presented their offerings. Jesus had sat down to rest, after the multiplied excitements of the past hours, over against the treasury, where the continuous stream of persons custing in their money necessarily altracted His notice." As each came, He could judge by his appearance how much he threw in. The poor could only give paltry copper coins, but the rich cast in gold and silver; some, doubtless, from an honest zeal for the glory of God; others, because alms, in the sordid theology of the day, had their commercial value in the future world as on this for indestant searcher of the Among others, came a poor widow, with her two lepta-one-twelfth of our penny each the smallest of copper coins. She could not have cest in less for one lepton was not received as an offering. The sight touched the heart of Jesus. "Believe me," said He, to those around, "this poor woman has cast in more than any one, for they have only given of their superfluity, but she, in her need—for she has less than enough—has thrown in all she had for her day's living."

MARTIN FIG FIGHT

Among the multitude of pilgrims to the feast, then in Jerusalem. were many foreign proselytes. That they should have come up. though heathens by birth, showed an earnest sincerity, for it exposed them to ridicule and even worse, from their own countrymen. Many of them; doubtless, men like the centurion at Capernaum, or like the Ethiopian eunuch, were men won over to faith in Jehovah, and to a loval respect for the great doctrines of the Old Testament; proselytes of the gate, in distinction from the proselytes of righteousness, who. by circumcision, had become, in all religious and social respects. Jews, The spread of a Jewish population in all countries, and the immunities they enjoyed, had resulted in the conversion of great numbers of Gentiles, who were willing to pledge themselves to what were called the seven commands of Noah—the avoidance of murder. bloodshed, or robbery: obedience to the Jewish courts in matters of religion: the rejection of idolatry, and the worship of Jehovah: and to eat no freshly-killed and still bleeding flesh. They were received as "the strangers within the gate" of Israel, and could attend the syn agogues, but could not pass beyond the Court of the Heathen, in the Temple. I was a bar was of room or ordered ford or deter

Of this class, some Greeks, then at Jerusalem for the feast, which they were in the habit of attending, had heard much of Jesus: perhaps had seen Him and listened to His discourses, and were anxious to know Him personally, that they might have His personal counsels. Too modest to come direct, they applied to Philip, the only Apostle bearing a Greek name, though Andrew is of Greek origin. To him Hhilip forthwith mentioned the circumstance, and the two communicated it to Jesus. I thiled His heart with much needed joy, to welcome men who must have seemed to Him an carnest of His future triumphs, among the great heathen pations, As Bengel says, "it was the prelude of the transition of the kingdom of God from the Jew to the Gentile." . hosoit size, Bend, breakle of ... Burner will . Thole ments He went out to them, therefore, to the Court of the Heathen, and they, doubtless, heard from His lips the counsels desired. The incident brought to His mind, with fresh vividness and force, the nearness of His death, through which His salvation was to be brought to the heathen world at large, and His emotion broke forth in words, full of sublimity: 3 dail, de antresistine autoster or d'a annable iller are brat "The hour has come." said He, lifting His face, as we may believe, to heaven, as He spoke-"the hour appointed in the counsels of my Father, from eternity, when the Son of man shall enter into His glory by death. For it must be that I die, that my work may bear its due fruits—as the grain must fall, into the ground and perish, that it may bring forth the harvest. Verily, verily, I say to you,

nenota

it must as the lif vond me the corn. "As it so, also, i so loves will lose fully give with loya really to to die: an right han dwell with me, my F hereafter. The aw moment. r shadowing "" Now, all through were even if commun the hour c all the pas glorify Th Cross had dimmed th of soul ga of the gre pose of Go repeating a -" Father, death for 1 up to Thee Forthwit ity of our scendent gl April sky, v powered by articulate w name, alrea gracious life on Thy hea 10 It thun realize what

689

The Dal M.J. S. H. State

ose around, y have only as less than 1701 1 0100 101 Jerusalem, e come up, r it exposed men. Many , or like the ah, and to a t; proselytes uspess, who, ial respects, rics, and the ion of great elves to what e of murder, in matters of fehovah: and were received ttend the syn eathen, in the e feast, which esus: perhaps re anxious to onal counsels. only Apostle gin. To him he two comeeded joy, to of His future says; "it was om the Jew to

Heathen, and ed. The incib, the nearness prought to the words, full of may believe, ounsels of my inter into His ork may bear d and perish,

say to you,

it must be so. My life remains limited and bound up in myself, as the life is in the seed, till I die. It cannot, till then, pass beyond me to others, and multiply. But when I die, I shall be like the corn, which, in its death, imparts its life to what springs from it.

"As it is needful for me thus to die, to make my work triumph, so, also, is it for you, my followers, in your own case." He who so loves his life as not to be willing to yield it for my kingdom, will lose eternal life hereafter; but he who, in this world, cheerfully gives up even his life for me, as if he hated it in comparison with loyalty to me, will gain life everlasting. If any man wish really to serve me, let him imitate me in my joyful readiness even to die; and he will receive, as his reward, that where I go, to the right hand of my Father in heaven, there, also, will he follow, and dwell with me; for if any one thus truly and self-sacrificingly serve me, my Father will honour him by giving him the glory of the life hereafter."

The awful vision of the immediate future, meanwhile, for a moment, raised a shrinking of human weakness. It was the fore-shadowing of Gethsemane.

"Now, is my soul troubled," cried He, with a voice of infinite sidness. In His agony of soul, He hesitated for a moment, before all through which He had so soon to pass, and it seemed as if He were even now enduring it. "What shall I say?" He added, as if communing with Himself; "Shall I pray-Father, save me from the hour of darkness: take this cup from me?' No, let it not be: all the past has been only a progress towards it, that by it I might glorify Thy name!" The momentary human shrinking from the Gross had passed away as soon as it had risen. The cloud that dimmed the clear heaven of His soul had disappeared." His trouble. of soul gave place, on the instant, to the victorious consciousness. of the great future to flow from His accomplishment of the purpose of God for the salvation of the world. Then, as if He were repeating aloud His inward thought. He burst forth into the words. -" Father, glorify Thy name, as Thou hast purposed, through my death for man. I come to do Thy will, O God, and I give myself. up to Thee!" an inter a state of the store a

Forthwith came a wondrous attestation, scaling the divine authority of our Saviour's mission with the stamp of august and transcendent glory. Suddenly there sounded a voice from the cloudless April sky, with a volume that filled the heavens, so that some, overpowered by its grandeur, could not think of it as an utterance of articulate words, but fancied that it thundered—"I have glorified. My name, already, in having sent Thee, and in all Thy sinless and gracious life, till now; and I shall glorify it again, by Thine entrance on Thy heavenly glory through the gates of death!" sensibility—" It was an angel speaking to Him. He is a prophet, at least; if not the Messiah Himself, and God speaks, thus, to Him, by a heavenly messenger." But the disciples around, and Jesus Himself, knew whence it came, and what were the precise words from the excellent.glory.

"You may not understand," said Jesus to the disciples and the crowd, "whence this voice comes, and why it is sent." It is the voice of my Father in heaven, and comes, not for my sake, but for yours, to take away your unbelief, and to strengthen your faith. The time presses for your decision regarding me. Even now, the judgment of my Father is being given forth, against those who have rejected me as the Messiah. Through the victory of my kingdom, which my death will secure, and the spread of my name over the earth proclaim. the impotence of my enemies will be shown, and their guilt before God be made clear. He, especially, whom even you call the ruler of this world, and the great enemy of the kingdom of Gcd-4 e prince of evil-will feel the greatness of my triumph, for his kingdom must yield to mine. My death, as the atonement between God and man. will deliver from his power and place under my protection, as the glorified Shepherd of the sheep, all who telieve in my name. Nor will that triumph cease as time rolls on: age after age, till the last day, in ever wider sweep, it will subdue all things under me, and drive the kingdom of darkness from the world.

"So it shall be; for I, if I be lifted up from the carth by the death of the cross, as I know I shall be, and thus pass away from the world and return to my Father, shall draw all men to me; for the power of my cross will be universally felt, and the Holy Spirit whom I shall send from the Father, will turn men's hearts to love and serve me. The prince of this world has, in Me, his conqueror; for I must rign till all things are put under my feet, and the world be won back to God."

The people round, accustomed to speak freely with the Rabbis on the subject of their addresses, had listened to Him respectfully, but were at a loss to reconcile His words with their preconceived ideas of the Messiah. In the Synagogue, they had heard passages read from the Scriptures, describing Him as a priest for ever, and His dominion as one which should never pass away or be destroyed, but stand for ever and ever, and had come to expect, in consequence, an everlasting reign of the Messiah upon earth. They were at a loss, therefore, to reconcile Christ's use of the name, Son of Man, which they applied to the Messiah, with the statement that, instead of dwelling on earth for ever, as a king over all nations. He should suffer the shameful death of crucifixion. The cross was already the stumbling-block to them it afterwards became so widely to their nation.

"We have heard out of the Law," said they, "that the Christ is to live for ever, on earth. What dost Thou mean, then, by saying that the Son of Man—a name by which we understand, the Christmust be cr What dost contrary to

His time it have bee planations urge on the safety. St threw into pestness of

"If you lifted up; le it may be make right as the trave before darl now lights darkness k Light of Me from it." It was sti Temple till evening. E spublic tea mained onl round Him, His work w a last sad lo lo seek sech It must ha hus to bid centre of the life, and the before Him. cess, for, tho spernatural n which it h restraint whi my personal had come to riolence; sec dices had class, to acce ud ambitiou hief rulers a secret conv

The threat

a prophet, at to Him, by Jesus Himwords from iples and the It is the voice ut for yours, h. The time judgment of e rejected me m, which my arth proclaim, r guilt before all the ruler of d-de prince kingdom must lod and man, tection, as the y name. Nere, till the last inder me, and h by the death from the world of the power of whom I shall and serve me. of I must reign to won back to the Rabbis on spectfully, lut ceived ideas of ages read from this dominion but stand for an everlasting s, therefore, to they applied to be on earth for hameful death block to them

t the Christ is nen, by saying I, the Christmust be crucified? Who is this Son of Man to whom Thou referrest? What dost Thou mean by using this name, when Thou speakest so contrary to Scripture?

His time was too short to give a formal explanation. Nor would it have been of any effect in minds so prejudiced, for the fullest explanations of after days made no impression. He chose rather to urge on them, once more, the one course in which lay their eternal safety. Standing at the very close of His public ministrations, He threw into these last words of warning the whole intensity and earnestness of His soul.

"If you wish to comprehend what I have said about my being fitted up, let me tell you how all your questions and di.lcuities about it may be resolved. I shall be with you only a very little longer; make right use of that time to believe in me, the Light of the World, as the traveller makes use of the last moments of day, to reach safety, before darkness overtake him. With me, the light of truth, which now lights you, will be gone, and you know that he who walks in darkness knows not what way to go. While ye still have me, the Light of Men, believe in the light, that ye may receive illumination from it."

It was still early in the afternoon, and He might have stayed in the Temple till, it shut at sunset, then a few minutes after six in the evening. But these were almost the last words He was to speak as public teacher. His mission to His nation was ended. There remained only a brief interval of communion with the loved ones mind Him, and, then, would come the consummation of Calvary. His work was over, except the final and greatest act of all. Casting a last sad look of quenchless pity on all, He turned away to Bethany, bseek seclusion, till the time came for His self-sacrifice. 10 and inte It must have been a solemn and well-nigh overpowering moment, hus to bid farewell, for ever, to the Temple of His nation,-the entre of the old kingdom of God;-for the retrospect of His public ife, and the vision of the future, must have risen, like a dream, before Him, So far as apparent results went, He had had little sucess, for, though even His bitterest enemies were forced to own His spernatural power, and the greatness and number of the instances n which it had been shown: though they had seen His grand selfestraint which always exerted it for others, and habitually ignored my personal end, either of ambition, defence, or retaliation, till they ad come to treat Him; not only with disrespect; but even with open tolence; secure, in His infinite patience and humility; their projdices had utterly blinded them, and they steadfastly refused, as a tass, to accept; in His person, a Messiah so contrary to their gross ad ambitious expectations. There were, indeed, even among the disf rulers and priests, many who believed in Him, but it was only secret conviction which they had not the courage to own, i the ball The threat of excommunication had been too terrible to brave, and

-the leng

forty-five

But Jes

with very its day, an

which the

Israel, in r

spiritual li

death, alre

would be t

God on ea

heathen na

He knew

independer Messiah, an

in which th

fate! the n

even from

in which H

predicted th

"Yes," s

buildings, b

not be one s

He said n

Kedron Val

peace and

knoll, to en

to the Rejec

in its whole

with snow.

In the gro

nearest thei

them-splen

seen it had still ran on

They had be fill they sho

and that, in

stroyed. Th

of a deliver

might confe

could not in before the er

that, to free I

kruction of destruction d

they preferred to cling to their social and civil interests, at the cost of repressing their better thoughts.

Once more, only, was the pleading voice raised. A number of those near apparently followed Him as He retired, and He could not tear Himself from them, without a final outburst of yearning desire for their salvation. Turning round, and raising His voice till the sound rang far and wide, He cried—

"Think not that the faith I demand in myself in any way lessens or takes from the faith that is due to God. To believe in mc, and to believe in God, are the same thing. He who has that faith in me, which the proofs I have given of my being sent from God demand, believes not so much in mc as in Him who sent me. And thus, also, he who looks on me as that which I have shown myself to be, looks not so much on me as on Him who sent me—on the Godhead of my Father revealed in me. In Me ye have a Light. I came into the world to enlighten men, that every one who yields himself to my guidance, may be as when one walks after a light, and may no longer remain in the darkness of ignorance, superstition, and sin.

"Yet if any one who hears my words, refuses to believe in Mclet him not think that I shall inflict judgment on him for his refusal. The end of my coming is not to judge the world, but, rather, to save it from eternal ruin. He who rejects Me, My words, and My deeds. has in his own breast a judge that will condemn him hereafter. The truth I have spoken, in the name of God, which he has refused to receive, will condemn him in his own conscience at the last day, and will condemn him also from the lips of the Great Judge. For the words I have spoken have been no mere utterances of my own; I have taught only that which I was commissioned by my Father to speak, and I know that my teaching, if obeyed and followed, secures everlasting life to men. All that I say is only what my Father has told me to speak in His name. Therefore, let no man think that speak anything but that which my Father has given me to proclaim, I am He whom God hath sent, and my words are the words of God." Nothing in these last discourses of Jesus had seemed more strange and inexplicable to the Apostles, than His prediction of the early de struction of Jerusalem, and of the Temple itself. As they now passed with Him, through the forecourts, to the outer gate, and down the castern steps, to the Kedron Valley: overpowered by the vast mag nificence, which seemed grand enough even for the times of the Mes siah, they could not refrain from speaking to Him respecting Hi strange and mysterious words.

"Master," said they, "see what a wondrous structure this is What stones! what buildings! what splendour! what wealth! How the whole Temple rises, terrace above terrace, from the great whit walls, to the Holy Place, shining with gold! and it is not finishe even yet!" The Temple, says Josephus, was built of white stones of great in at the cost of

A number of l He could not earning desire s voice till the

hy way lessens e in me, and to nat faith in me, n God demand, And thus, also, self to be, looks Hodhead of my I came into the himself to my I may no longer I sin.

believe in Mc-1 for his refusal. t, rather, to save , and My deeds, hereafter. The e has refused to the last day, and Judge. For the es of my own; I by my Father to followed, secures t my Father has man think that I me to proclaim, words of God," ied more strange of the carly dethey now passed e, and down the v the vast mag imes of the Mes n respecting His tructure this is, at wealth! How the great white t is not finished pnes of great size -the length of each about thirty seven and a half feet, some even forty-five feet, —the thickness twelve feet, and the breadth eighteen. But Jesus looked at all this strength, wealth, and magnificence, with very different eyes. To Him the Jewish theocracy had outlived its day, and had sunk into moral decrepitude and approaching death, which the mere outward s, londour of its Temple could not hide. Israel, in rejecting Him, the Voice of God, calling it to rise to new spiritual life, had shown itself ripe for divine judgment. His own death, already determined by the ecclesiastical authorities, and now close at hand, would seal the fate of the nation and its religion. It would be the proclamation of the passing away of the Kingdom of God on earth from Judaism, now dead in forms and rites, to the heathen nations willing to receive its spirit and liberty.

He knew that the Theocrary would cling to their dream of national independence, and the erection of a mighty political empire of the Messiah, and that this involved a struggle between them and Rome, in which their petty weakness must inevitably be crushed. Strange fate! the moment when they fancied they had secured themselves even from reform, by the resolution to put Jesus to death, was that in which He whose death was to ensure permanence and prosperity, predicted their utter destruction!

"Yes," said Jesus in utter sadness, "1 see all: they are very great mildings, but I tell you solemnly, the day will come when there will not be one stone of them all left on another, not thrown down."

He said nothing more, but went out of the city by the blossoming Kedron Valley, with its gardens and stately mansions, a picture of peace and prosperity, to the Mount of Olives. Sitting down on a knoll, to enjoy the magnificent view, so full of unutterable thoughts to the Rejected One, the Apostles had Moriah once more before them h its whole glory, crowned by the marble Temple, like a mountain with snow.

In the group around, Peter and James, and John and Andrew, sat marest their Master, and, as they looked at all the splendour before them—splendour so great that it was often said that he who had not een it had missed one of the wonders of the world-their thoughts till ran on the words in which He had doomed it to destruction. They had heard Him say that the nation would not see Him again, ill they showed themselves ready to receive Him as the Messiah, ad that, in the meantime, the city and Temple should be utterly detroyed. Their only idea of the Messiah, even yet, bowever, was that M'a deliverer of the nation, who, besides any spiritual benefits He night confer, would raise Israel to world-wide supremacy. They fould not imagine that the holy city, and its Temple, would perish kfore the end of the world, and He must surely come sooner than hat, to free Israel from subjection and inaugurate its glory. The defruction of the city, therefore, could not, they fancled, be before the estruction of all things. They would fain know what sign, after this catastrophe, would precede His glorious coming and the final consummation, if it were to be so; that they might recognize His advent when it took place. Their ideas, in truth, were in a hopeless confusion.

"" Tell us, Master," said one of the four favoured ones, "when shall these things, of which Thou hast spoken, take place? And what sign will there be of Thy coming, and of the end of the world?"

It was impossible to explain fully, to minds so filled with preconceived ideas. Much must happen-His death, resurrection, and departure from the earth, before they could acquire just conceptions of His kingdom. Till then, it was hopeless to remove their prejudices. He, therefore, confined Himself, as usual, to the practical, that He might rouse them to watchfulness over themselves, and remove the illusion that the holiness of Jerusalem would preserve it, and that the Messiah must appear first, to deliver the nation from the hand of the Romans.

"Take He fitly began by warning them against false Messialis. heed," said He. "that no impostor deceive you, by persuading you that he is the Messiah, come, as you expect, to free the nation, and subdue the world, and to spread the Jewish' religion over the earth. Many deceivers will rise, calling themselves the Messiah-sent from God to deliver Israel-and saying that the time of this deliverance has come. They will mislead many. Take care that you go not out after them.

"But, to turn to your question-before the Tcmple is destroyed, you will hear the terrors of wars near at hand, and the distant tumult of others, and you may think that they will bring the end. But be not alarmed. They are divinely appointed, and this may serve to calm your minds; but the destruction of the city and Temple will not take place so soon. Nor must you think that these wars will herald national deliverance: instead of proclaiming an interference of God for the restoration of Israel, they mark the beginning of His judgments. For nation will rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, and there will be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, and fearful sights in the heavens, here and there, over the earth. Yet, do not think, from these, that God is about to appear for the Jews, and to send them an earthly Messial. No; all these are only the first pangs of the coming sorrow. Your Rabbis have told you that such things are signs of the speedy advent of the Messiah, but be not deceived.

listead of peace, these things will bring you evil. Once more, be on your guard. I shall soon leave you, and would again warn you of the dangers to you which shall precede the last catastrophe. I have told you often, what perils and heavy trials await you, in your founding and spreading my Kingdom, so different in its spiritual and moral unworldliness, from all others. Before the end comes, men will proceed to violence against you, for my name's sake. Your the friend fanaticism own, and v own numb persecution Christians thus aposta and scorn, false Christ

countrym

the local

thrown i

governors

before the

that I wl

shall, iny

you word nals. Be in the hou

"Yet, 1

every forn

not only

Messiah, F

can look o

"But a

out. The family; th

own child.

Ghost.

"But 1

numbers, and religion life cannot "But he astray by fa evil days ar Such good reward, for their share gards that,may so spectructure spectructure spectrum spectr souls, even

"Mean w preached th he may be but not till 60.

and the final recognize His in a hopeless

s, "when shall e: And what e w orld?"

d with preconection, and deconceptions of heir prejudices. ctical, that He and remove the it, and that the the hand of the ssiahs. "Take persuading you the nation, and over the earth. siah—sent from this deliverance t you go not out le is destroyed, te distant tumult lie end. But be is may serve to Temple will not wars will herald erference of God ing of His judgkingdom against and earthquakes, the earth. Yet, ar for the Jews are only the first ld you that such h, but be not de

il. Once more, old again warn last catastrophe. vait you, in your its spiritual and end comes, men e's sake. Your countrymen will lay hands on you, accuse you, and bring you before the local authorities; you will be sconrged in the synagogues and thrown into dungeons, and even dragged before kings and Roman governors, that you may witness for Me, my Person, and my Work, before them.

"But let me comfort you, in prospect of such trials. Never forget that I will not forsake you when you thus suffer for my sake, and shall, myself, by the Holy Spirit whom I shall send to your aid, give you words and wisdom for your defence, when your are before tribu nals. Be not therefore anxious, when such persecutions rise, for, in the hour of your trial, it will not be you who speak, but the Holy Ghost.

Yet, let me not conceal from you that they will deliver you up to every form of suffering, and even kill you, and that you will be hated not only by your own nation, because you proclaim me as the Messiah, but by all the heathen nations as well. In this world you can look only for tribulation.

<sup>4</sup> But a greater trial awalts you than mere persecution from without. The strife of creeds will enter even the sacred circle of the family; the father will give evidence before the Courts against his own child, the brother against the brother, the child against its parent, the friend against the friend. The fury of heathen and Jewish fanaticism will feel no pity: the nearest blood will rage against its own, and will deliver them up to the executioner. And even in your own number, many will renounce their faith, under the pressure of persecution and trial, and will even betray and deliver up their fellowchristians to the magistrate, and will hate those from whom they have thus apostatized. My name will indeed become a symbol of hatred and scorn, against every, one who confesses it. Still worse, many false Christian teachers will rise in your own bosom, and will mislead numbers. And all this spiritual corruption will sap the brotherly love and religious zeal of great numbers of my followers, for true Christian life cannot thrive where there is moral decay.

"But he who neither renounces my name, nor lets himself be led astray by false teachers, but remains true and loyal to me, till the will days are over, will receive evenlasting honour at my final coming. Such good and faithful servants need have no fear of losing their reward, for nothing can befall them, to hurt or lessen, in the least, their share in the salvation my eternal Kingdom will bring. As regards that, they are perfectly safe. Not a hair of their head, if I may so speak, will perish, so far as their heavenly hopes are conterned. Their faithfulness will gain for them the eternal life of their souls, even should they die as martyrs here.

"Meanwhile the Gospel of the new Kingdom of God will be reached throughout the whole world, that a testimony respecting he may be given to all nations, however they may hate you. Then, at not till then, shall come the end of this present state of thingsthe old will then pass away, and the new begin. The reign of the kingdom of God will begin when Judaism has fallen, and heathenism has heard its doom.

"The full spread of my Kingdom cannot come so long as that which it is to displace still stands in Jerusalem. The Gospel needs new soil, new means, new powers. The old religions are so identified with the old civil and political life of men, with their customs and modes of thought, that my Kingdom can hope to found its peaceful reign only after great and terrible revolutions and disturbances. The way will be opened for it by war, with all its horrors, and by the widespread judgments of God on the world at large.

"When, therefore, ye see Jerusalem compassed, with armics, it will mark the beginning of the end. When you see the holy place in ruins, and desolation reigning there in its hatefulness, as is spoken of in Daniel, let him who is in Judea fice to the bills of Gilead, where he will be safe; let him who is on the house top not come down to take away his things from the house, but let him flee along the flat roof, to the town wall, and thus escape: and let him who is working in the field, where he has no outer garment, not come back to his house to get it, but let him flee for his life. But woe to those who are with child in these days, and cannot fice, and to those who have children at the breast, and are kept from escaping by vainly trying to save them also. Pray that your flight be not, in the winter, with its rains and storms and swollen torrents, nor on the Sabbath day, when he who still clings to Jewish law will think it unlawful to travel more than two thousand cubits. Whatever hinders your swift flight will, indeed, be cause of regret, for the troubles of those days will be great beyond example, side SIL 398 19.11

There will be great distress in the land, and the flerce wrath will be let loose on this nation. Its sons will fall by the sword, and be led off, to be sold as slaves, over the whole earth, and Jerusalem will be trodden under foot of the heathen, as a captive is by his conqueror. (ii) the times allowed by God to the Gentiles, to carry out thus His avenging wrath, be fulfilled.

"And, indeed, if the number of these cvil days had not been short ened, in God's pitying mercy, no flesh would be saved. But for the sake of the chosen ones of the Kingdom of the Messiah, whom God has determined to save from the calamities of these days and preserve alive, they have been shortened.

"But when the Temple has been laid waste, and you have fled for your lives, false Messiahs, and men pretending to be prophets, and to speak in the name of God to the nation in its affliction, will rise once more, taking advantage of the commotion and anxiety of the days, and will be so much the more dangerous. When men say you, of any of these, 'The Messiah has appeared here,' or 'He has appeared there,' do not believe it. They will pretend to perform sud great signs and wonders, that even the chosen ones of my Kingda -my d warned to it. the wild to the v

'Behold bers,' d. which y or to the instant a mistake. for the ju the carca will reve "Then have spol ly, like th heard-I even in t attendant encourage when the the king he has gor the destru and earth the great c they see th -the far-sl -when Ho great glory the unutter the dead, sl all who are dom of the the whole r have reject majesty. heads, for at hand. 7 off When, these wars, you, know know that t tree, and all leaves. For Temple, as 1

e reign of the nd heathenism

o long as that c Gospel needs s are so identia their customs ound its peacel disturbances. rors, and by the

Sel.

h armies, it will e holy place in as is spoken of f Gilead, where ot come down to ee along the flat who is working ome back to his oe to those who those who have vainly trying to e winter, with its bbath day, when ful to travel more swift flight will. lays will be great flerce wrath will he sword, and be ad Jerusalem will by his conqueror, arry out thus His ad not been short wed. But for the assiah, whom God ese days and pre you have fled for e prophets, and to fliction, will rise anxiety of thos When men say it here,' or 'He ha id to perform suc s of my Kingdon

-my disciples—would be deceived, if it were possible. I have warned you of this already, but press on you once more to take heed to it. If, therefore, any one say to you, 'Behold, the Messiah is in the wilderness,' do not go out with him, for they draw their dupes to the wilderness as a safe place for mustering them. If any say, 'Behold, he is in such and such a house, shut up in his secret chambers,' do not believe it. My visible and final coming, respecting which you ask me, will not be such that men need point to this place, or to that, to see me; it will be like the lightning, which shines with instant splendour through all the sky, and announces itself beyond mistake. For, from east to west, the earth will, in that day, be ripe for the judgments of the Messiah, and, as the eagles gather wherever the carcase is, so the Son of Man, then the minister of divine wrath, will reveal Himself to all who have fallen under His condemnation.

"Then, in a future age-when the time of the Gentiles, of which I have spoken, is fulfilled-when he who has prayed long and unfaintingly, like the importunate widow, shall begin to wonder if ever he will be heard-I do not say whether in the second watch, or in the third, or even in the morning when the bridegroom has tarried while his attendants wait longingly for him-when the unfaithful servant lins encouraged himself by the thought that his lord delays his coming-when the Gospel has been preached to all the Gentiles-and when the king may be expected, at last, from the far country to which he has gone-then, suddenly, like the flood in the days of Nonh or the destruction of Sodom, shall the words of the prophets be verified, and earth and heaven be veiled, and darkened, and tremble, before the great coming of the Son of Man, to judgment. And then shall they see the sign of His coming, respecting which you have asked -the far-shining splendour around Him, like the sun in its strength -when He descends in the clouds of heaven, with power and with great glory. And He shall send forth His angels, from the midst of the unutterable light; and the great trumpet of God, which will wake the dead, shall sound, and the angels will gather together around Him all who are His—chosen of God to be heirs of the heavenly kingdom of the Messiah-from north, and south, and east, and west-over the whole round of the world. And all the nations of the earth who have rejected me shall mourn, when they see me thus come in divine majesty. And when these wondrous signs begin, then lift up your heads, for your eternal redemption from all the afflictions of time, is at hand, Talk (15 1957) Star (Star a Star US-0 5.

When, therefore, soon after my departure from you, ye see all these wars, and hear all these rumours of wars of which I have told you, know that I, the Messiah, am near in my first coming, as ye now that the summer is close, when ye see the branches of the figtre, and all other trees, swell, and put forth their buds and tender taxes. For it is I who come, unseen, to judge Jerusalem and the temple, as I shall, in the end, come visibly to judge all mankind.

"Verily I say to you, This generation of living men shall not have passed away, before the beginning of the age of the Messiah, to be ushered in by the fall of Israel, and to be closed by all these signs, has come; when the old world shall have drawn to an end and my Kingdom—the new age of the world—shall take its place till the consummation of all things. Heaven and earth shall one day pass away, but my words shall not, for all I have told you must happen. All the signs I have predicted, as heraids of my coming to judge Jerusalem and Israel, will assuredly be seen by some of you now round me. And my coming then, will be the revelation of my Kingdom before the world, and of its triumph over its Jewish enemies, for my -Kingdom can only, then, truly rise, when the Temple has been destroyed. When it shall lie strewn in ruins, and desecrated for ever by heathen soldiery, the world that is will be seen to have passed away. There will be an end of the old priesthood and sacrifice, and the earth will be opened to the victory of my spiritual reign.

"But, the exact time of the last period of all, of which I have spoken—the destruction of all things visible—the resurrection of the dead, and my return in glory, to judge the nations, I cannot tell you. Even the angels do not know it, nor oven does the Son: it is known to my Father alone. This uncertainty of the time of my coming will make men secure and carcless, as they were in the days of Noah. For they went on, dreading no catastrophe, eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, and neither believed nor dreamed that the flood would really happen, till it came, and swept them all away. Like it, my coming will be so sudden, that, of two men in the field, one shall be taken, by the angels sent forth to gather the saints, and the other left—for they will have no time to fice—and, of two slave-girls at the household mill, while they are still grinding, the one shall be taken, in like manner, to be with me, and the other left.

"Take heed to yourselves, and watch, lest at any time, like the people before the flood, you give way to sinful pleasures or indulgences, or be engrossed in the anxieties of life, so as to be careless, and unprepared for my return, and that day come on you, as the flood did on them, unawares. For it will, burst on all that dwell on the face of the whole carth, as suddenly and unexpectedly, as the snare flies over the creature caught in its toils.

"Take heed, I repeat, and watch: for ye know not when the hour may strike. It will be like the coming of a man who has taken his journey into a far country, and has left his house in the hands of his servants, and given authority over it to them— is each his own special work—and has commanded the keeper of the gate to watch for his return. Watch, therefore, like faithful, diligent servants, for ye know not the hour when I, the Master of the House, shall come, whether it will be in the evening, or at midnight, or at cock-crowing, or in the morning; lest, if I come suddenly, I find you asleep. And what I sa at all tim ing, by b holy ange vants, in "You beforehan der his go house to t Son of Ma "Who a

He will be his journe give them fully did it returns, shi bim to a fa of his hous manner, wi charge com

"But, if, be like a sci My lord d and to eat ord of that him, and in him to the crite, Even outer darkne be there ! in "In that d the maidens pare to go o the bride, wl there were to m ones took he path of besides, to re out only tool len, thus diff ind waited i come, to be r "But he de at last, at m M streets ha the la at the d

what I say to you, my apostles, I say to all, Be awake and watchful at all times, that ye may be able to escape all the terrors of my coming, by being found faithful, and thus may be set before me by the holy angels, to enter into my glory, and stand before me, as my servants, in my heavenly kingdom.

"You know how a householder would have acted had he known beforehand at what watch of the night the thief would come, to plunder his goods. He would have watched, and not have suffered his house to be broken into. Therefore, be ready at all times, for the son of Man will come, when, perhaps, ye least expect Him.

"Who among you will prove himself a good and faithful servant? He will be like a servant of him of whom I have spoken, who took his journey to a far country—a servant set over the household to give them their food in due season, during his absence; who faithfully did it. Blessed will be that servant, whom his lord, when he returns, shall find so doing! Verily I say to you, he will advan to him to a far higher post, for he will-set him not only over the food of his household, but over all his substance. And blessed, in like manner, will he be whom I, on my return, will find faithful to the charge committed to him in my kingdom!

"But, if, instead of being faithful, you fail in your duty, you will belike a servant of the same master who should say in his heart, My lord delays his coming,' and begin to beat his fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken, at his master's cost. The bod of that servant will come in a day when he does not look for him, and in an hour when he does not expect him, and will punish him to the uttermost, and make him bear the just fate of a hyporile. Even so, the hypocrite, in my kingdom, shall be cast out into outer darkness. And, oh! what weeping and grashing of teeth will bethere!

"In that day of my final coming it will be as when, at a marriage." he maidens invited to play and sing in the marriage procession, preare to go out to meet the bridegroom, to lead him to the house of he bride, where the marriage is to be celebrated. Let me suppose bere were ten such maidens, -five wise, five foclish. The five foolmones took their lamps with them, to help the display; and lighten be path of the bridegroom, but they forgot to take oil with them, wides, to refill the lamps, when they had burned out. "But the wise at only took their lamps, but oil in their oil flasks as well. All the thus differently prepared, went forth from the home of the bride, ad waited in a house, on the way by which the bridegroom must me, to be ready to go out and escort him, when he passed by continuou "But he delayed so long that they all grew heavy, and fell asleep. a last, at midnight, they were suddenly roused; for the people in streets had heard the loud music and shouts, and had seen the int of the lamps and torches of the procession, afar, and raised the at the doors— The bridegroom is coming, go ye out to meet these signs, end, and my till the cony pass away, iappen. All udge Jerusau now round my Kingdom mies, for my has been deated for ever have passed sacrifice, and eign. which I have rection of the nnot tell you, a: it is known of my coming n the days of e, eating and er believed nor me, and swept n, that, of two forth to gather e to flee-and, still grinding, , and the other all not have essiah, to be time, like the surces or indulto be careless, ou, as the flood it dwell on the ly, as the snare when the hour o has taken his he hands of his his own special o watch for his grvants, for ye ise, shall come t cock-crowing, ou asleep. And him.' Then they all arose, and trimmed each her own lamp, to have it ready. The foolish ones now found that their lamps were going out, because the oil was all burned, and usked the wise ones to give them of theirs. But they answered, 'We cannot possibly do so, for our oil would assuredly not suffice both for ourselves and you; go, rather, to the sellers, and buy for yourselves.'

While they were away buying it, however, the bridegroom came, and the five who were ready, joined the procession, and went in with the bridegroom to the marriage and the marriage feast, and the door was shut. After a time, the other five came, and knocked at the gate with anxious entreaty—'Lord, lord, open to'us.' But he answerd, 'I do not know you.' You were not 'among the other maids of the bride in the 'procession, and, therefore, you are 'strangers to me, and as such have nothing to do at my marriage.' 'Learn from this parable that they who patiently watch and wait, doing the duty I have assigned them, till I come, though they know neither the day nor the hour when I shall do so; will have a part in the joys of my heavenly kingdom. All my followers will then be, as it were, my bride, and I their bridegroom; but those who are not faithful and true to the end, will be shut out from the marriagefeast.'

The Apostles and the others who followed Jesus had been altting long in the cool of the evening on the pleasant slope of Olivet, listening to this wondrous discourse, but their Master's stay with them was now nearly over, and He was as loath to end, as they that He should. He still went on, therefore, and, next, repeated to them the parable He had before delivered near Jericho—of the talents lent by the lord to his servants. Its awful close, however, which represents the unprofitable servant as cast into the outer darkness, with its weeping and gnashing of teeth, brought before Him all the terrors of the last judgment, and led Him to close by a picture of that awful day unequalled for sublimity by any other; even of His own utterances.

"The parable of the talents, my beloved," said He, "shows that every one of you must needs make the utmost possible use, for the interests of my kingdom in your own hearts and among men, of all the different gifts entrusted to you by me, for my service, according to your respective abilities. For, at my coming, I shall reckon with you all, and those who have been faithful to me shall receive high rewards in heaven, but those who have left their gifts, however shall unused, will have those gifts taken from them, and they themselve will be thrust out of my kingdom." He then proceeded—in words such as no mere man could eve dream of using—words which we seem to hear spoken with the ligh as of other worlds shining from the speaker's eyes, and a transfigun tion of His whole appearance to more than human majesty. "I have told you how 7 shall return invisibly, to earth, before the generation when the come again their warfa from victor this world world becom Then sl so; earnestly returned fro Son of Man jected by my cross like th kingdom of the # The Fatl His Son and And at that amidst the sp ton "Then wil when they sit before me, by from another, from) the blac the goats on n Bult" Then, as dom, shall I of my Fathe foundation of innce of the n in my name, b can yield o F and ve gave m naked, and ye prison, and ye di WThen shall getting their g Lord, they sha tenance; or thi stranger, and g when saw we will And Lathe asmuch as ye d the least of the wretched, who, one of the least Me, who died fo Then shall

700

ere going es to give do so, for you; go, om came, nt in with d the door at the gate answered, ids of the to me, and kingunn! and wait, they know re a part in ill then be, ho are not e marriagebefore and a been site of Olivet. s stay with as they that ted to them talents lent vhich reprekness, with I the terrors f that awful own utter-Makert, and shows that e use, for the g men, of all e according reckon with receive high wever small.

to have

y themselves asmins is as n could even vith the ligh a transfigura sty Man all h. before thi generation shall have passed away, to judge Jerusalem and Israel. when the cup of their iniquity shall be full, and how, also, I shall come again, in spiritual unscen precence, to be with my servants in their warfare with the powers of darkness, till my kingdom passes from victory to victory, through succeeding ages, and the prince of this world be finally cast down from his usurped throne, and the world become the kingdom of God and of me, His Messiah. "Then shall come that day which I have warned and urged you so earnestly to keep over in mind-the day when like the lord who returned from the far country to reckon with his servants I, the Son of Man, now poor, despised, with none round me but you; rejected by my brathran of Isuael, and in a few hours to be nailed on a cross like the meanest slave: will come again as Head of the great kingdom of the Messiah, which will then embrace all nations. ""The Father has committed all, judgment in this kingdom, to me, His Son and has given me all power in it, in heaven and in earth.

And at that day I shall come in my glory, as its Prince and Head, amidst the splendours of heaven, and with all the angels of God. when they sit to judge; and all nations shall be gathered together before me, by my ministering angels, and I will separate them, one from another, as you have seen a shepherd separate the white sheep from the black goats, and I will set the sheep on my right hand, but the goats on my left, all and the wather

""Then as King, coming in the majesty of my assembled Kingdom, shall I say to them on my right hand Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the earth-that kingdom which I promised as the inherisace of the meek. For ye have proved that ye have truly believed in my name, by the love towards me and mine, which only true faith can yield ... For I was hungry, and ye gave me to eat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me to drink; I was a stranger, and ye gave me welcome: naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me.' getting their good deeds, think it cannot be as I have said. When, lord, they shall ask me, 'saw we Thee hungry, and gave Thee maintenance; or thirsty, and gave Thee to drink? When saw we Thee a stranger, and gave Thee welcome; or naked, and clothed Thee? Or when saw, we Thee sick, or in prison, and came unto Thee?'

And I, the King, will answer them.- 'Verily I say to you, Inasmuch as ye did it, for my sake, to one of these my brethren, even the least of them; the poor, the lowly, the outcast, the persecuted, the wetched, who believed in me, and are now yound my throne-or to me of the least of all my brethren of mankind; for the love ye bore Me, who died for them-ye did it unto me."

do and the entry of the Tennit, duly shut over accursed, into the everlasting fire; prepared for the devil and his angels, but now to be shared by you, his servants. For I was hungry. and ve did not give me to eat. I was thirsty and ve did not give me to drink? I was a stranger, and ye would not receive men naked and ye did not clothe me: sick, and in prison, and ye did not visit me. Then they will try, vainly to justify themselves, by pleading innocence ..... Lord, they will say, when did we see Thee hungry. or thirsty, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister to Thee? | Lord, we never saw Thee thus, and therefore. lieve never refused Thee our service. That and and apply hours But I will answer them ---- Verily I say to you Inasmuch as ve did it not to one of the least of these, my brethren, whom you had with you and might have helped; ye did it not to me. Had ye truly, and not in name only, believed in me, ye would have shown fruits of your faith in deeds of love for my sake. While while hall an And these shall go away into everlasting punishments but the righteous into life oternal." Will the or when they I was such the last is considered in the property of the state of the second state of "Inge and other and the transfer of the ansatt and the bellen a the most TRASSESSION TO THE ME THE CHAPTER LVILLE PART OF THE SAME SAME AND IT was the twelfth day of the new moon, new rounding to fulness. when the last words had been spoken in the Temple, and farewell taken of it for every Jesus had litherto lingered in its courts till the gates closed; at sunset, after the evening sacrifice, but His soul this day was filled with immeasurable sadness. Israel would not hear the words which alone could save it, and, by its representatives, had not only rejected and blasphemed Hirn, but was, even now, plotting His death, "He had left the Temple courts, therefore, in the early afternoon, to spend some hours with the little band of followers He was so soon to leave .... They had sat on the slope of the Mount of Olives, facing the Temple e id the city. He had passed quietly and unheeded through the stream of pilgrims and outzens, and had been resting, during His long discourse, in the privacy of His own circle, beneath one of the fig-trees of Olivet, gazing, with full soul, at all He had left for ever. Had they known it, the high priests and rules would have seen in His final abandonment of "His Father's House" a portent more awful than any their superstitious fears were even then noting. For forty years before the destruction of the Temple, and, therefore, in the yeav days of our Lord's public life, it had been seen, with unspeakable darm,-if we may trust the Tahnud-that the hindmost lamp of the saored seven-branched candlestick, in the Holy Place, one night went out, and that the crimson wool tied for the harns of the scape-goat; which ought to have turned white when the atonement was made, had remained red; and "the lot of the Lord," for the goat to be offered on the Day of Expiniton, had come out on the might, had was to be to ple was nea the Holy of ently, a grea But the t when His S them no mon Rising aft future, He, should com attended 'by head; was on the slope wit cottage at Be As they we proaching fat Passover, an counsels of G It was the sec able degradat though they h hous an eclip Mean while, ing, and nothi of the preced seeing no sign to inaugurate. even hostile. liended! Yet. countrymen of a time that the while it laste Mesarea for Jo Even the gove it worth his wh Jesus were app be certain to br the community The heads of difficulty, and priest, Joseph, pressor," was memorable' wo nation perish?" tion, to the idea

702

out on the left hand; and the gates of the Temple, duly shut overnight, had been found open in the morning. A generation later, it was to be told, with pale lips, among the heathen, that when the Temple was near its fall, a more than human voice had been heard from the Holy of Holies, crying "The gods have departed," and that presently, a great sound, as of their issuing forth, had been heard. But the true hour of Jehovah's leaving it and that for ever, was when His Son passed that afternoon through its gates, to re-enter them ho more man ful mit ton this most but me most of a under the whist his 200 "Rising after He had ended His discourse on the near and distant future. He, who, a breath before, had anticipated the hour when He should come amidst the clouds of Heaven, to judge all nations; attended by all the abgels, and robed in the splendours of the Godhead: was once more the calm, lowly Teacher and Friend, cumbing the slope with His handful of followers, on the way to the well-loved cottage at Bethany, when mento how of the about of the annual of an off "As they went, He once more broke to those around Him His approaching fate. "You know," said He, "that after two days is the Passover, and that the Son of Man is appointed, by the eternal counsels of God, to be delivered over to His enemies, to be crucified." It was the second time He had expressly used that word of unspeak. able degradation and infamy, to men of His day-THE CROSS. But though they heard it again, they could not even yet realize so disasrous an eclipse of their cherished dreams an about the drand com Their Meanwhile, His chemies were not idle. It was now Tuesday evening and nothing klarming had followed the popular demonstration of the preceding Sunday. The multitude indeed disappointed by seeing no signs of the national movement they had expected that day in augurate had lost their on thusiasm, and in many cases, grown even hostile. There was less to fear than the authorities had appreliended." Yet, the crowd was fickle, and thousands of Galileans, the countrymen of Jesus, were at the feast, which was always so restless a time that the Roman Procurator kept a double garrison in Antonia while it lasted, and himself exchanged the congenial society of (Hearea' for Jerusalem, with its bated bigotry and muffled treason. Even the governor-general of the Province sometimes indeed thought tworth his while to be present." The fiery Galilæans might rise if Jesus were apprehended during the feast-week, and any tumult would ecertain to bring severe measures, at the hand of the Romans, on the community at large mound with mission bit when we have the of a The heads of the priesthood and of the Rabhis, were hence in a difficulty, and met to consult on the wisest course. The acting high priest, Joseph, known among the people as a Calaphas, "" the Oppressor." with the soul of the movement against Jesus-for his nemorable words." Why not this one man the, rather than the ation perish?" had first given definite expression and formal sancnon, to the idea of putting Him to death. Throwing all his official

e al a donatio of a talgate ra n you had Had ye ave shown Palato at but the 11. Jose dister dialph arros 13日4 小时 HAL STOLEH North Hand to fulness. nd farewell urts till the is soul this ld not hear tatives, had w, plotting m the learly bllowers He e Mount of quietly and ad had been own circle, soul, at all ts and rulers er's House," a were even the Temple, it had been almud-that stick, in the wool tied to white when e lot of the on, had come di his an-

give me ked, and sit/me.

pleading

enhungry,

d did not therefore,

NUMBER OF

nich as ye.

dignity into the plot, he put the upper court of his palace, in the upper city, at the disposal of those engaged in it, and there they and he met, to consult how they might get the Hated One into their, power without the knowledge of the people, in order to hand Him over to the Romans for crucifixion, without fear of a rescue. The meeting could not, however, come to any fixed plan, for fear of a popular rising. No more could be done than watch, and take advantage of the course of events.

While murder was thus being discussed in the halls of the primate, peace and sacred friendship reigned in the pleasant home at Bethany. The house of Simon, once a leper, but cured by Jesus, now the abode of Martha, perhaps his widow, perhaps his daughter; of Mary, her sister, and of Lazarus, so strangely, brought back from the unscen world—the one man raised from the dead of whose, second earthly life we know any incident—was a scene of tender respect and loving homage. To do Jesus honour, the family had made a supper for Him, with invited guests, and Lazarus reclined with Him on the table couch. The company consisted, doubtless, as in the case of the little household itself, of such as owed their health, perhaps their life, or that of some friend, to the Great Healer, and of His immediate followers.

It was, in itself, a tender proof of reverent love, that, at such a time, when the life of their guest was sought by the Authorities of the Temple and Schools, and every one was required, on pain of high displeasure, to help them to arrest Him, He should have been thus honoured; for Bethany was close to Jerusalem, and the act might have brought disaster on a household, known, like that of Martha and Mary, to the dominant class. But a still higher tribute was paid Him: touching and delicate, beyond expression, under the circumstances. The sisters had often pondered how they could show their gratitude for all He had been, and all that He had done for them He had healed Simon, and had, given not only him, but the sisters and their brother, the hope of Heaven, by winning their souls to Himself, and, but now, He had shown how truly He was the Messiah, by bringing back Lazarus from the grave, or They knew that the shadows of death were gathering over their Mighty Benefactor Himself, for the disciples, doubtless, repeated to them the depressing intimations He had given them. Mary was left to give their love and gratitude expression under the moult of parstrupit will ut stab &

It was common to anoint the heads of the Rahbis who attended marriage feasts, with fragrant oil, and special guests were sometimes similarly honoured. Jesus Himself, at an earlier, date, had had even His feet anointed by a grateful penitent, who had, besides, washed them with her tears, and wiped them with her hair, flowing loose, in self-forgetfulness. But now, Mary outdid all former honour paid Him. The costliest anointing oil of antiquity was the pure spike. ard, drawn from an Indian plant, and exposed in flasks of alabaster for sale put it t Of t weight. the seal on the head, li she cou symbol and, as raised di the fragi such lav ment," se and give this!" It With t in such ci hurt the f heart that guest !!! HL "Why especially done in my can never wish. Bu I was soon how much Messiah, ar had to do What rema the gospel's will also be Judas, th brought up, listened to feelings. 12 E of the Apo disciple. T early days iso, small erelong, and else." Like of the prosp of them we uchy, he ha plendid, TI for sale throughout the Roman Empire, where it fetched a price that put it beyond any but the wealthy.

704

Of this Mary had bought a flask, containing about twelve ounces weight, and now, coming behind the guests as they reclined, opened the seal, and poured some of the perfume, first on the head and then on the feet of Jesus, drying them, presently, with the hair of her head, like her predecessor. She had rendered a tribute than which she could have given no higher to a King; but it was a worthy symbol of the rightful devotion of all we have and are, to Christ, and, as such, was lovingly accepted by Him. The act, however, raised different thoughts in some of the narrow minds around. As the fragrant odours filled the room, voices were heard muttering that such lavish expense for such an object was wrong. "This olntment," said one; "should have been sold for three hundred pence, and given to the poor. That would have been a worthy act; but this!" It was Judas Iscariot.

With that perfect gentleness and repose which He always showed in such circumstances, the answer of Jesus showed no resentment, to hurt the feelings of any, but yet must have carried joy to the tender heart that find felt her highest offering too little to bestow on such a guest.

"Why do you blame and trouble her?" said He to the company, especially to Judas. "Let her alone. It is a good deed she has done in my honour. You have the poor with you always, and you can never want an opportunity of showing kindness to them, if you wish. But you have not me always with you. Mary, as if she knew I was soon to die, has chosen the strongest way she could of showing how much she loved me. She has done for me, as her Teacher, Messiah, and Friend, while I still live, what she would soon have had to do to my dead body she has embalmed me for the grave. What remains will do for the day of my burial. I tell you, wherever the gospel shall be preached in the whole world, what she has done will also be told for a memorial of her." in sme , dound believed on the Judas, the only southern Jew among the Twelve-the only man brought up, as it were, under the shadow of the Temple-must have istened to such praise of an act so hateful to him with the bitterest feelings." He had been with Jesus at least from the first appointment of the Apostics, and must, even then, have been conspicuous as a d the Apostles; and must, even then, have been conspicuous as a disciple. The good seed of Christ's words had spring up in those any days in his heart, as in those of the others; but the evil, iso, small and unnoticed, perhaps, at first, had been let spring up eelong, and it had grown to rank strength that slowly choked all est. Like all his brethren, he had cherished gross and selfish views of the prospects to be opened for them by their. Master. If some it them were to be the high officials in the expected World-Monruhy, he had trusted to get, at least, some post; profitable, if less were breaded. Indeed, the lowest dignity promised inconceivable honour, e they and into their hand Him scue. The or fear of a ad take ad-1011128 351-6 the primate, at Bethany.us; now the er; of Mary, . rom the unhose, second r respect and ade a supper h Him on the he case of the perhaps their of His imme-

ace, in the month 11 hat, at such a Authorities of n pain of high have been thus the act might of Martha and bute was paid er the circumuld show their one for them. but the sisters their souls to He was the Chey knew, that hty Benefactor the depressing e their love and

s who attended were sometimes , had had even besides, washed lowing loose, in at honour paid he pure spike sks of alabaster

only thirt

covetous

He sold h tunity to

on which

house bef

Towards a Temple, b

the altar a

the feast, day, at su whole of J

country, w

observance

The Pas from Egyp first-fruits,

We are n

home at Be privacy, aw

would celel structions.

the village

usages; and killed at the

according to this comman innocent du

No doubt

He had sole

to, go thith enemies, H more. It w

would there

son of Israe the institution to link it in Temple, und

bounds; and told them, to

might eat, it meet a man

Turning.

In On Thur

The nex

for were not all the Twelve to sit on thrones to judge the Twelve Tribes of Israel? In the minds of the others, the dream was loyally subordinated to love and duty to the Master: in his, self seized and beld, abidingly, the first place. The mildew of his soul had spread apace, Trusted with the common purse of the brotherhood, into which passed the gifts of friends, to meet the humble expenses of each day, the bonour, sought at first, perhaps in all uprightness, became a fatal snare. His religion withered apace. Once a disciple from honest anxiety, he continued one in outward form, as an adventurer of Gain became a passion with him, till, under the very eves of his Master, he embezzled, as treasurer, the petty funds in his hands The entry to Jerusalem had kindled his hopes, after many chagrins and disappointments, for the popular excitement promised to force on Jesus the part of a National Messlah. But, blind, as he must have thought Him, to His own interest, He had made no use of the splendid opportunity. Instead of allying Himself with the dignitaries of Judaism, and inaugurating a mighty Jewish uprising, with high priests and chief Rabbis as His supporters. He had assailed both - (). Temple and School, and proceeded to open rupture with them." Inpress of a crown. He had spoken of a cross: instead of honours for His followers, He had foretold persecutions and martyrdom. To the mean and sordid heart of Judas, the bounty of Mary had sufficed to TT kindle smouldering, resentment and disloyalty to a flame. If ruin were certain, he would profit, if he could, before all was over. If Jesus must fall into the hands of His enemies, he might as well get of imoney by what was unavoidable. Had not He, argued the diseased st...it, disappointed him: led him about, for years, in hopes of gain in the end: and had He not, now, told him that the only inheritance he could expect was poverty and suffering? He would go to the high priests, and see what could be done. Stealing out, therefore, with guilty thoughts, from the gulet cot tage, perhaps, when they and Bethany had sunk in sleep .--- unmoved by the divine love and purity of his Master: forgetful, in the blind ness of his evil excitement, of all he had seen and heard, through the last three eventful years, he made his way, in the darkness of flight to the Temple. The watch was at its post at the gates, and on it rounds, but Judas found means to reveal his object to the captain i charge, and was admitted. [ The officers hastily gathered round t learn why the stranger thus disturbed the night." I come to lietra Jesus of Nazareth," muttered Judas. "" He had better be taken to th chief priests," replied those round. Some of the council were hasti summoned forthwith, and received his overtures with a joy the brightened their faces, even by the dull light of the night lamps,for it was clear that a cause so righteous as that of the Gallaan; could never give them open and honest grounds for His arrest. Treaso must come to their aid, from within. So they bargained with bin meanly enough, indeed; for they offered for his villany if successful only thirty shekels of the Sanctuary, —the price of a slave. But the covetousness of an Oriental was fascinated even by so paltry a bribe. He sold himself as their tool, and from that time sought a good opportunity to betray Jesus, when the people were not round Him.

te Twelve

seized and

nad spread

rhood, into xpenses of a disciple

s'an' adven-

ery eyes of his hands.

ny chagrins sed to force as he must

o use of the e dignitaries

s, with high them.<sup>11</sup> In-

om. To the d sufficed to me. If ruin as over. If t as well get the diseased pes of gain m heritance he b to the high

Michight Coint

he quiet cot

.-- unmoved

in the blind

f, through the

ness of night

es, and on it the captain it red round t

ome to betra

e taken to th

l were hastil

ha joy tha

ight-lamps,- allæan; coul

est. Treaso

if successful

The next day, our Thursday, was the fourteenth of Nisan—the day on which all labour ceased. All leaven had been removed from every house before noon in preparation for the Passover in the evening. Towards sunset, the Passover lamb was killed in the forecourts of the Temple, by any one chosen to do so, and the blood and fat burned on the altar as an offering to God. The rest supplied the materials for the feast, an hour or two later, after the beginning of the fifteenth day, at sunset. The fourteenth was, therefore, very busy for the whole of Jerusalem; for both it, the villages round it, and the open country, were filled with countless thousands, all intent on the same observances.

The Passover had been founded to commemorate the departure from Egypt, but its time permitted the union with it of the feast of inst-fruits, to celebrate the opening harvest, and it was also called, from rites, connected with it, the feast of unleavened bread. We are not told how Jesus spent Wednesday, for the supper in the home at Bethany was on Tuesday evening. He apparently stayed in privacy, awaiting the coming day.

On Thursday morning the disciples, taking it for granted that He would celebrate the feast with them, came to Him'early to receive instructions. Would He keep it, as He legally might, in Bethany, for the village was counted by the Rabbis part of Jerusalem, for religious usages: and the lamb might be eaten in Bethany, though it must be killed at the Temple. It had already been bought on the tenth Nisan, according to the rule of the Law, for though the strict enforcement of this command was not maintained. Jesus was careful to fulfil all the innocent duties prescribed.

No doubt the disciples expected that Bethany would be chosen, for He had solemnly turned away from Jerusalem, two days before, and to go thither again would be to put Himself in the power of His gnemics. But He had resolved to visit the city so dear to Him onco more. It was the place appointed by the Law for the feast, and He would there be in the midst of the rejoicing multitudes, as Himself a son of Israel. He wished, also, to throw a greater sacredness over the institution He designed to inaugurate that night, as the equivalent in the New Kingdom of God, of the Passover in the Old. It was well to link it in the minds of the Apostles with the sacredness of the Temple, under whose shadow; the City of the Great King, in whose bounds; and the gathering of Israel, in whose midst, it was founded. Turning, therefore, to Peter and John, His usual messengers, He told them to go and prepare the Passover, that He and the Twelve might eat it together. "On entering the city," said He, "you will meet a man bearing an earthen jar of water; follow lim into the house he enters, ask for the master, and say. 'THE TEACHER told us to ask you.''Where is the room intended for me, in which to eat the Passover with my disciples?'' And he will himself show you his guest-chamber, on the upper floor, provided with couches, ready for us. Get the supper prepared for us there."

The two started at once, and found everything as Jesus had said, and by evening all was in readiness to receive Him and the Ten. Who it was that thus entertained Him is not told us. It may have been John Mark, or, perhaps, Joseph of Arimathea, the early scholar, and the friend after death. The Gospels do not say, and even tradition is silent. Universal hospitality prevailed in this matter, and the only recompense that could be given was the skin of the paschal lamb, and the earthen dishes used at the meal. Not fewer than ten, but often as many as twenty—enough, in any case, to consume the entire lamb, could, sit down together, but Jesus wished to have none but His closest circle with Him, that He might bid them a final, tender farewell. Women were not commonly present, and indeed, were excluded by many; but, apart from this, the evening was designed as a time of deepest communion with the trusted Twelve alone, and hence, neither the outer circle of disciples, nor the ministering women who had lovingly followed Him from Galilec, were invited. Peter and John had had much to do beforehand. It may be the

Peter and John had had much to do beforehand. It may be, the lamb was yet to be bought, that morning, for its purchase on the tenth had fallen rather out of use. They had to choose, from the countless pens in which the victims were offered for sale, a male lamb, of a year old, without blemish of any kind. In Galilee, no secular work was done all day, but, at Jerusalem, it ceased only at noon. About two, the blast of horns announced that the priests and Levites in the Temple were ready, and the gates of the inner courts were opened, that all might, bring their lambs for examination, and might satisfy the priests as to the number, intending to consume each. Forthwith, the long lines of household fathers, servants, disciples of the Rabbis, and, among the rest, the two deputed by Jesus, pressed across the court of the men, which was gaily tapestried and adorned, to the gate of the priests' court; the lamb on their shoulders, with a knife stuck in the wook, or tied to the horn.

About half past two, the evening offering was killed, and about an hour after, it was laid on the great altar. Forthwith, three blacts of the trumpets of the priests, and the choral singing of the great Hallel by the Levites, gave the signal for the slaughter of the Passover lambs, which had to be finished between the hours of three and five. As many offerers were admitted as the courts would hold, and then the gates were shut. Heads of families, or servants deputed by them, killed the lambs, and the priests, in two long rows, with great silver and gold vessels of curious shape, caught the blood, and passed it to others lichind, till it reached the altar, at the foot of which it was poured o pillars of were then liver, set home fro at sunset, pomegrar then put tom, on the begin inner the stars, claimed b

Judas h might not the burnin

tles, to Je in the trou heart. T

dom of G

within the

sorbed in national M

which no nounced J

dismay, fo

assembled ple, of whi

the tiara w exclusively the shadoy

tions, and Jesus chos

moment-i for self-agg

To Jesu

scarcely for

trial. The

rated. for en

kingdom, s destroyed, hended, dis were to be

Messiah in

from the in the realizati

most enligh

2

HER told us h to eat the ow you his is, ready for us had said, nd the Ten. It may have arly scholar. d even traditter, and the the paschal ver than ten, consume the to have none hem a final, and indeed. evening was usted Twelve nor the minislilec, were int may be, the se on the tenth the countless le lamb, of a secular work A About two, in the Tempened, that all sty the priests with, the long Rabbis, and, is the court of he gate of the stuck in the

and about an inree blasts of the great Hallel the Passover inree and five, hold, and then uted by them, th great silver ad passed it to which it was poured out. The victims, hung on the iron hooks of the walls and pillars of the courts, or on a stick between the shoulders of two men, were then skinned, and cut open; the tail, the fat, the kidneys, and liver, set apart for the altar, the rest wrapped in the skin, and carried home from the Temple, towards evening. 'As the new day opened, at sunset, the carcass was trussed for roasting, with two skewers of pomegranate wood, so that they formed a cross in the lamb. It was then put in an earthen oven of a special kind, resting, without bottom, on the ground, and was roasted in the earth. The feast could begin immediately after the setting of the sun, and the appearing of the stars, on the opening of the lifteenth of Nisan, which was proclaimed by new trumpet blasts from the Temple.

Judas had stolen back to Bethany before daylight, that his absence might not be missed, and, after another day's bitter hypotrisy, under the burning eyes of his Master, followed Him, with the other Ados tles, to Jerusalem, in the evening. They must have breathed heavily in the troubled air, for presentlinents of unknown dangers filled every They still clung to their old dream of a visible earthly king heart. dom of God, under their Master, but their spirits must liave sunk within them as they passed through the vast multitudes, wholly absorbed in the approaching feast, with no sign of preparation for house national Messianic movement; and along the illuminated streets, in That the hierarchy had dewhich no one took notice of them. nounced Jesus, was, itself, enough to fill their simple minds with dismay, for its splendour and power seemed reflected in the millions assembled from the whole world, to honour the faith and the Temple, of which they were the public representatives. And was not the tiara worn by a fierce Sadducee? were not the governing families exclusively of this cruel and inhuman party? As they passed under the shadow of the Temple, with its gleaming lights, its martire bastions, and its immemorial traditions, they must have felt, that, unless Jesus chose at last to do what He had never yet done, even for a moment-unless He used His supernatural power in self-defence, and for self-aggrandisement, they were hopelessly lost.

To Jesus Himself the moment was unspeakably solemn. His scacely founded Kingdom was about to pass through the severest trial. The temporary and earthly in it were to be violently sepnated, for ever, from the heavenly and eternal. All hopes of a worldly kingdom, so deeply rooted in the minds of His followers, were to be destroyed, and He, the visible head of the Kingdom, so be apprehended, dishonoured, and crucified. The thoughts of His disciples were to be raised from the idea of a present, incarnate Messiah, to a Messiah in heaven; to appear, henceforth, no more, but by His return from the invisible world. To be true to Him, meant, from this time, the realization of a spiritual conception as yet unastained by even the most enlightened of the Twelve.

the first of the solution and the solution of the solution of

PROM THEN

demes but n ep pleasing modellifili

DIA But this

selfish amb

versely hop

It was u gi

have the h

might affect

as they drea

other side o

only still it

my kingdor

rather be fo

in it! the hi

10 But He d

when the st

poured wat

ciples. / Pri

touchingly

knew/that H

Father, and

return to H

that such an they all be transcenden

that one of

the Son of

gift were t

dead, and th

commentary

vancement

forming the

the warm h

from letting

"dost That act intended

derstandest wash my f

thee," said the case," b

and my hea

cording to a more than t

on the way

He seems

Highest

a towel, lik

But Christ was in no degree turned aside, or paralyzed in His re-olution, by such dangers, While in no sense courting death, and 1:363 even wishful, if it pleased His Father, to escape its attendant horrors. He moved towards the appointed and foreseen and with sublime self-possession, and holy peace of soul, recognizing all that yet remained for Him to do, and doing it with a divine screnity. His bearing to the great world, to the last, His action and His self-restraint, are, alike, wonderful; but it must strike us still more, as we observe it closely, how He bore, Himself in the circle of His chosen ones as the catastrophe pressed nearer and nearer.

When the Twelve, with their Master, had entered, the room, to take their places on the cushions, for the meal, the greatness of the change yet to be wrought on their minds was once more strikingly shown. In spite of all He had said, the question of precedence was uppermost in their thoughts.

As the head of the group, Jesus naturally took the first place on the highest couch-the outermost, on the right of the hollow square; -His face towards the second place; His feet outwards, Resting

12 1 Hin Bruppels and Gri1 18 1 Sill Highest, TRICLINIUM. Difference and the second s

His left elbow and side on a cushion the whole breadth of the couch. His right hand was thus free, while the Apostle next Him reclined so fliat his head lay, as it were, in his Master's bosom. It had been the custom, in ancient times, to ent the Passover standing, but the Rabbis had changed it for the Gentile practice of rectifing. It was like slaves, they said, to cat standing, and as Israel was not a race of 710

When with the Flatt

TIMAN

Lowest

Marine Plant

MIT

Couch.

Ś

nr.

Septiment 1883

1171360

n His res

leath, and it horrors.

h sublime

at yet renity. His lis self-reore, as we lis chosen

room, to

ness of the strikingly

dence was

place on w square;

Resting

insitting ..... 1 and findly .

140 Amarian

A LANCE MALLO Wether an

FOTTING MY. ....

的第2月4月1日。

Well Fr. Juli ou

190 141173 .

1316) + Frith 1/1

学书山前语

deady un

tatanan an Tatanan an Tatanan an

Highert of Highert

24 4173

ast, Main

166 is to il or the couch. m reclined

t had been

ng, but the

g. It was

ot a race of 251 133

" Leal de Int

DROW YILL YOU

711

him who infends to betrav me. Haves but of free men, they should eat the feast reclining; a flattery to pleasing to Jewish pride that even the poorest adopted the new modelling mothand out on it suit drait hot ( with him of Kupt selfish ambition, in prospect of the political glory they still perversely hoped for, could ill brook to take a lower place than others. It was a grave matter for them, as, for the Pharisces, who should have the higher seats, for, in their delusion, they assumed, that it might affect their future position in the Messianic State, to be founded. as they dreamed, presently. So the strife that had broken out on the other side of Jeriaho, once more distressed their Master, and He could only still it by repeating the keen rebuke. He then gave them. "In "In my kingdom," said He, "to be humble is to be great: the lowliest is, in it! the highest !! No more was needed; the struggle, now, would rather be for the lowest place. , and words. Bising from the couch, when the suppor was just about to hegin, and girding Himself with a towel, like a slave, after laying, aside His upper garments, 'He poured water into a basin, and began to wash the feet of His disciples. Pride and selfish ambition could not be more strikingly and touchingly reproved, than by such an act on the part of one who knew that He had had all things given into His hands by God His Father, and that He had come forth from Him, and was about to return to Him. No greater proof could be shown of His love, than that such an act of humility should be its natural expression, Had they all been true hearted, it would have been amazing in one so transcendently above them, but, it was still more so, when He knew that one of them was already a traitor. He had proclaimed Himself the Son of Gody the fature judge of the world, the Massiah in whose gift were the honours of heaven, and whose voice was to raise the dead, and they were simple Galilæan fishermen. There could be no commentary on His demand for lowliness, as the true ground gf advancement in His kingdom, more vivid than His voluntarily performing the lowliest act of personal service to them all at it and the He seems to have begun with Simon Peter, His chief Apostle, but the warm heart and the impulsive nature of the rock-like man sirank from letting his Master humble Himself thus. "Lord," said he, "dost Thow washing feet!" He had not realized the meaning of an act intended as symbolical. "What I do," replied Jesus, " thou understandest not now, but wilt know hereafter." Thou shall never wash my feet, Lord," reiterated the Apostle. "If I do not wash thee," said Jesus, "thou hast no part with me." "Lord, if that be the case," broke out Peter, " wash not my feet only, but my hands and my head." "It is not necessary," said Jesus." "He who, according to Jewish ways, has taken a bath before his meal needs no more than to cleanse the dust from his feet, which has clung to them on the way from the bath. Except this, he is clean, and it is the same with you, except him who intends to betray me. By my word, which I have spoken to you, and the faith waked in you by it, you are already clean in the sense I mean-right in the desire of your heart towards me. Yet, though thus clean, the dust of carth still clings to you in part, and makes a last washing needful." The hour was at hand for this last crowning act of love the shedding His blood for them for the remission of their sins and He would now prepare them for it, by this tender symbol, for it laught, not only humility, but that He alone could take away sin.

Having washed their feet and resumed His garments. He once more took His place on the couch. "Do you know," He asked, as He did so, "the meaning of what I have now done to you? You call me Teacher and Lord, and you are right, for I am both. Learn, then, that, if I, your Master and Lord, wash your feet, you, also, ought to wash one another's feet, for I have done this as an example to you, that you should do to each other as I have done to you. You know, and I would have you remember it. that a servant is not greater than his lord, nor an apostle than He who sent him forth, so that you may well imitate me, your superior, in my humility. If you understand what I say, it will be well for you if you act on my teaching. I do not, indeed, speak of you all. I know your characters and hearts, but all has happened in fulfilment of the divine will, for the Scripture must needs be fulfilled, which says, 'He that eats bread with me, craftily lifts up his heel against me, to trip and overthrow me. I tell you before it happen, that, when it does take place, you may believe that I am indeed the Mest siah, and that no other is to be expected. That I should be betraved by one of ourselves might have shaken your faith in me, but it cannot do so when I have forescen and foretold it, as part of the counsel of God, But to cheer and encourage you in your faithfulness, let me tell you that you may go forth to the mission on which I have sent you, with joyful hearts. "Your high position, as my apostles, remains unaffected by the treachery of one of your number. For, as I have said before. I now solemnly repeat-he who receives you is accounted by me as if he had received myself, and he who receives me receives God the Father who sent me, for He dwells in me, and I in Him."

The supper now began, but the spirit of Jesus was still clouded and troubled by the presence of the traitor. At last His feelings broke out into irrepressible words 1." Verily, verily," said He, "One of you, who eat with me, will betray me. His hand is with me on the table." They had never hitherto realized His hints, and the very thought of treason, to their honest and faithful hearts, was almost beyond belief. They could not think who was meant, for Judas had managed, by his hypocrisy, to hide his character from them all. One by one, they began to ask, "Lord, is it 1?". 'It is one," replied Jesus, "who dips with me into the dish. The Son of Man, indeed, goes in this way by the counsels of God, from this world, but woe to that man by whom Acent this, he is clean, suid it is the TUTI V . TY 3115 1131 He is betray born!" Woi all. At last, conscious of Lord, to ask "who is just and to whom He then di to Judas.

vet unmelted soul could nd keep up the swful replyveiled his hea in shame and madness of himself: his soul, and ben the exposure arch enemy t

.toomlinet doider , hold te crimua looi It was vain, affected outy

107811971:91 tommen 12.11

But the eyes the tumult of to do," said miserable ma table as soor harder to bea of the comm dipped in the the outer nig end as at all hans distant. either to buy for that spec deed of mer gone, Christ into a joyfu vision of the conqueror o and that of (

y it, you of your arth still

ting His uld now

not only

ace more

f what I l you are ad Lord, or I have ther as I

than He

well for vou all.

d, which

l against en, that.

the Mes.

unsel of a t me tell

ent you.

remains

I have counted

receives

lim."

ded and

oke out of you, table."

ught of belief.

, by his ne, they

ho dips

way by

whom

betrayed t cannot He is betrayed! It would have been well for him if he had not been born!" Words thus general only increased the pain and emotion of all. At last, Peter, not venturing to ask directly who it could be, but conscious of his own integrity, beckoned to John, who lay next our Lord, to ask Him who could be so base. "It is he," whispered Jesus, "who is just about to dip the bitter herbs into this charoseth with me, and to whom I shall give some of it presently."

He then dipped the piece of bread it to the charoseth, and handed it to Judas. "Is it I?" asked the guilty man, conscience-stricken, and yet unmelted. He had not heard the words of John, but his guilty soul could not help stammering out the question, in a vain attempt to keep up the mockery of true-heartedness he had acted so long. The awful reply—that. "It was"—tore away the mask at once, and unveiled his heart. That all was known would have overwhelmed some, in shame and contrition, but it only hardened the betrayer. The wild madness of evil was on him for the time. He could think only of himself: his fancied wrongs; his full resolve. Satan had entered his soul, and bent his whole nature to his own dark ends. It may be that the exposure roused him to the heedlessness of despair, as when the arch enemy bade hope farewell.

tuninificit the bausgereil and and; with hope, farewell fear, and much band in the day word in the state of t

It was yain for him to seek to hide the workings of his soul by an affected outward calm. He had long veiled falsehood to yustant of bucon's litest : doe under saintly show to on will bas said to many found Deep malice to conceal, couch d with revenge all said to the said of the said to the said tot the said to thes

But the eyes of his Master shone into the depths of his being, and saw the tumult of his worst passions, in their mastery. What you have to do," said Jesus, "do quickly." He could not breathe freely till the miserable man liad left, and besides. He would fain meet the inevitable as soon as might be, for the slow advance of a catastrophe is harder to bear than the catastrophe itself." Judas knew the meaning of the command at once, and, having received the piece of bread, dipped in the charoseth, moodily took it, and silently withdrew into the outer night.<sup>11</sup> The Eleven were too much confused to realize the end as at all so near.<sup>11</sup> Betrayal might come, but at some future, per-haps distant, time.<sup>11</sup> They only fancied, therefore, that Judas had left either to buy what might be needed during the week of the feast, or for that special night; or that Jesus had bethought Himself of some deed of mercy to the poor, and sent him to carry it out. The traitor gone, Christ felt free to speak, and, as if relieved of a load, broke out into a joyful anticipation of His fast-coming triumph." In the near vision of the Cross, His work seemed already finished; His glory, as conqueror of Death and Hell, and Redcemer of Mankind, attained, and that of God the Father Illustrated. "Now," said He, in effect, "the Son of Man is already glorified. All things are hastening to His triumph, and, in that triumph, God Himself will also be glorified, for it is His work which I shall presently complete. And, if God be thus glorified in my death for the salvation of man, He will assuredly crown me with His own heavenly glory, when I return to Him: the glory that I had with Him, before I came to earth to become man, and that, even now, is close at hand, through my death, which will usher me into it. The betrayer has gone to accomplish it!

"My children, for I call you so in love, I shall be only a little while longer with you, and you will feel the want of my presence, and wish for me; but, as I once said to my enemies, I shall be where you cannot follow and find me. For a parting word, let me give you a last command, —my very last: a new command, to be kept, as such, so much the more; —that, henceforth, ye love each other because I have loved you all, and because you all love me. I have often, before, told you to love all men, and so be like God, but I now tell you to do so, for the love I bear to you, and for that which you bear to m. You must, henceforth, be known as members of my kingdom, by the love you show to leach other, as such. And the love you have, as brethren, must be such, and as great, as mine has been towards you all."

As He thus spoke. Peter still dwelt, in his thoughts, on the sad words which seemed to foreshadow a lasting separation between him and his Master. "Lord," said he, in his bold, impetuous way, You speak of going away; pray tell us whither you are going? Will you leave us and go to the Gentiles?"..." I go to a place," replied 11 Jesus. ""where you cannot follow me at present, however willing you and may be to do so at Yet, do not fear. We shall not be separated for every. You will, one day, follow me, in the same way, and then you will come to me." Peter's heart could not be silent. /"I shall be glad to come to Thee, Lord," said he, "even after a time, but why can I not go with Thee now? Thou knowest me. I am ready to lay down my life for Thee." at the tall is a stand Do you think so?" replied Jesus, with a look full of friendship. and yet also of earnest sadness. "You little know your own heart. All of you will forsake me, and leave me to my enemies this very night, as Zechariah, the prophet, has foretold-'I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock will be scattered abroad." But he not cast down with too much sorrow, After I have risen from the dead, I will go into Galilee, and gather you round me once more." The idea of forsaking his Master, whom he loved so dearly, was too inconceivable, however, to Peter, in the self-confidence of his affection to allow him to accept it as possible. "Other men may, perhaps, be offended on account of Thee, Lord," said he, "but if all the world were to be so, there is no fear of my failing. I, at any rate, will never leave Thee." and the frendstates and that here and the had know undoing. over into h time, to sif professions tions, dang thus prove have prave that your f entirely fro pent, and of your fell firm them, Peter wa love and 1 Galilæan h in a way o said he, 'S Thee to pri untrue to voice full o cock crow "If I were me denv T There w ently Jesus I have don Your circu they have. you. Wh Kingdom. -did you Lord," said Jesus. 114, visions for coat to buy sions can none will it, let him, ure, for I but I wish be to you earnest en are thus c I tell you! among tra been writt

dy glorified, jumph, God I shall presath for the wn heavenly Him, before Dose at hand, petrayer, has little while ce, and wish you cannot 1 a last comch, só much have loved ore, told you o so, for the You must, he love you is brethien. où ali." on the sad etween him tuous way. are going? ce," replied willing you parated for id then you "I shall be out why can eady to lay had know him long ago-"take care. Self-confidence will be your undoing. Satan has seen it, and has sought to get God to give you over into his power, as he once did Job, and he has got you for the time, to sift you as wheat is sifted. He would fain have it that your professions are only chaff, and he will shake and test you by temptations, dangers, and troubles, to try to make you turn against me, and thus prove that it is so, But I am mightler than your enemy, and I have prayed for you that, though you fall, you may rise again, and that your faith in me may not give way altogether, and separate you entirely from me. Though you will assuredly fall, yet you will repent, and when you have done so, see that you strengthen the faith of your fellow disciples, and become their helper, to support and confirm them, if they, like you, waver." I have a suprimition product near Peter was sorely distressed at such words. . . Conscious of his honest love and fidelity, it seemed as if, Jesus doubted both. His warm Galilæan heart was full, 'He felt as if his Master spoke of his acting said he. "I care not what happens to Thee. I am ready to go with Thee to prison, or to die with Theo, but I will never leave Thee, nor be untrue to Thee " Do you think so, Peter?" replied Jesus, with a voice full of tenderness-"I tell you that this very night, before the cock crow the second time, you will thrice deny that you know me.' "If I were to die for it," answered the Apostle, "no one will ever hear" me deny Thee." I can say the sume," added all the other Apostles. There was now a pause for a short time in the conversation. Presently Jesus re-commenced it. "You may wonder at my speaking as I have done to-night," said He, "but there are good grounds for it. Your circumstances will be entirely different, henceforth, from what they have been in the past, A time of care and struggle, lies before ydu. When I sent you to travel through the country, preaching the Kingdom, and you had neither purse, nor bag for feed, nor sandals, -did you miss any of those, or want for anything?" "" Nothing, Lord," said all the Eleven. "It will be very different now," replied Jesus, Whoever has money, let him take it, and let him take provisions for the way, as well; and let him that he no s vord sell his coat to buy one, to defend himself. He who has money and provisions can help himself on by them in his journeys, but he who has none will need to ask hospitality, and, as he needs not hope to receive It, let him, at least, have the means of protection. I speak in a figure, for I do not really mean you to fight, or to carry or use a sword, but I wish to impress on you how hostile the world will, henceforth, be to you, as you go on your journeys as my apostles; and what earnest energy and struggle will be needful, on your part, while you are thus carrying the news of the Kingdom through the world. For I tell you, salemnly, that the words of Isaiuli, 'And He was reckoned among transgressors,' must be fulfilled in me, for that which has been written of me in Scripture is about to be accomplished." 1 8-29.28 received, great all prove a for a great for praise only to parate

The disciples, always ready to understand whatever they heard, in the most material sense, had failed to catch the real meaning of Jesus in His reference to the sword. They fancled that He wished them to provide weapons to resist approaching danger. "We have two swords," said one of them. "That will do," replied Jesus, gently avoiding further explanation. "You will not need more than the two,"—a touch of sad irony which sufficed to show even then that He had thought of something very different as their defence than the purchase of arms; for how were the nine, v ho had no swords at all, to protect themselves, when scattered on the apostolic journeys of which He had spoken?

The evening was now somewhat advanced, according to Eastern notions, but the Passover meal, in its different rites, could not be hurried. The feast began thus, in other circles, though we cannot tell how far the usual customs were followed by Jesus. A cup of red wine, mingled with a fourth part of water, to make it a pleasant and temperate drink, was filled by one of the company, and given to the head of the family, who took it in his right hand, as he rested. supporting himself on his left side and arm, and thanked God in the words-"Blessed be Thon, O Lord our God, Thou King of the world, who createdst the fruit of the vine." He then tasted the cup, and passed it round. Thanks for the institution of the washing of hands followed: and then the washing itself, which was merely formal." "Bitter" herbs, such as endives, lettuce, and the like, were next set on the table, to represent the hard life of Egypt. Thanks were given for them also, and then they were passed round and eaten, after dipping them in a mixture of salt and vinegar. The unleavened bread -the bread of affliction-which gave one of its names to the feast. followed next, and then the bowl of charoseth and the Passover lamb. After this, the flead of the company once more gave thanks to Him "who created the fruit of the earth," and the bitter herbs were dipped by each in the charoseth, and a piece of it, "the size of an olive." eaten, with them, by all. A second single cup of wine, mingled with water, was now poured out, discourse on the lessons of the feast was held, and then the hundred and thirteenth and hundred and fourteenth Psalms, part of the Hallel, were sung. Another short thanksgiving followed, and the cup was once more passed round and tasted.

 The meal h when the war Master by Pet solemn words been added, w and dearest to since His pub ual religion li forth, should ended. Hom the Past: the Future.

He was abo simple, to for Some emblem vinguished: so to each other, the symbol of Gcd an outwo each other, a Israel, Jesus v ages and cou found its viv night, for the forth, have an it, but equally

Nothing co olicity than th as "the cup o to do honou been handed and the flesh is the body God having b one of the lo handed it to of those they body, which taking the cu round, He ga with the wor nant" present made also in symbol, "m Israel, "whi sins. This d sins. For Hims forth." said ] heard, in of Jesus I them to ave two s, gently than the hen that than the ds at all, irneys of Easter not be e cannot cup of pleasant given to e rested. d in the e world. cup, and of hands formal. next set re given fter dipd bread ie feast. er lamb. to Him ere dipl olive,' led with east was rteenth sgiving ŧ. en took ) pieces l be He e bitter roseth, part of ad only like, in h their round.

dir.t

The meal had advanced thus far, and war now virtually finished, when the warning had been given of the approaching denial of their Master by Peter, and the weak-minded desertion of the Eleven. The solemn words, foretelling the dangers and trials before them, had been added, when Jesus, now in the bosom of the little band, nearest and dearest to Him on earth; His companions through the past years, since His public work began—introduced by an act befitting a spiritual religion like His, in its simplicity, the institution which, henceforth, should supersede in His kingdom on earth the feast they had unded. Homage had been paid for the last time, as in farewell, to the Past: they were, hereafter, to honour the new Symbol of the Future.

He was about to leave them, and, as yet, they had no rite, however simple, to form a centre round which they might permanently gather. Some emblem was needed, by which they might, hereafter, be disinguished: some common bond, which should outwardly link them to each other, and to their common Master. The Passover had been the symbol of the theoracy of the past, and had given the people of Ged an outward, ever recurring, remembrance of their relations to each other, and their invisible King. As the founder of the New Israel, Jesus would now institute a special rite for its members, in all ages and countries. The Old Covenant of God with the Jew had found its vivid embodiment in the yearly festivity He had that night, for the last time, observed. The New Covenant must, henceforth, have an outward embodiment also; more spiritual, as became it, but equally vivid.

Nothing could have been more touching and beautiful in its sim-plicity than the symbol now introduced. The Third Cup was known as "the cup of blessing," and had marked the close of the meal, held to do honour to the economy now passing away. The bread had been handed round with the words, "This is the bread of affliction." and the flesh of the lamb had been distributed with the words, "This is the body of the Passover." The feast of the Ancient People of God having been honoured by these striking utterances, -Jesus took one of the loaves or cakes before Him, gave thanks, broke it, and handed it to the Apostles with words, the repetition, almost exactly, of those they had heard a moment before-" Take, eat; this is my body, which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me." ! Then, taking the cup, which had been filled for the fourth and last handing round, He gave thanks to God once more, and passed it to the circle, with the words, "Drink ye all of it, for this cup is the New Cove-nant" presently to be made "in my blood;" instead of the covenant made also in blood, by God, with your fathers: ""it is," in abiding symbol, "my blood of the Covenant" of my Father, with the New Israel, "which is shed for you and for many for the remission of sins. This do, as often as ye drink, in remembrance of Me." For Himself, He declined to taste it. 10"I will not drink, henceforth." said He. "of the fruit of the vine-for it was still only wine

-till that day, when, at the end of all things, the kingdom of God, which I have founded, shall finally triumph, and my followers be gathered to the great heavenly feast. Then, I shall drink it new, with you and them."

Such, and so simple, was the new rite of the Spiritual Theocracy. To those around Him, at its institution, there could be no doubt of its meaning and nature, for it was, even in words, a counterpart of that which He had supers ded, with a purer and more spiritual form. The, cup, He told them, was a symbol of the New Covenant, under which, as His followers, they had come: in distinction from that which they had left, for His sake. It was to be a memorial of Him. and a constant recognition of their faith in the virtue of His atoning death-that death, whose shed blood was the seal of this New Covenant between the subjects of His kingdom, and God, His Father. It symbolized before all ages, to the New Isruel, the cardinal virtue of His death. The Apostles could have had no simpler or more unmistakable intimation that as the blood of the Passover lamb redeemed the people of God, of old, from the sword of the angel of wrath, His blood would be a ransom for man, from far deadlier peril. A covenant, to them, implied a sacrifice, and His blood, as the New Covenant, was, therefore, sacrificial: the blood of a Covenant which pledged His followers to faith, and duty; the blood of a new paschal lamb, with which His disciples must, in figure, be sprinkled, that the destroying angel might pass over them, in the day of judgment. The custom of the nation to make a common meal the special occasion of religious fellowship, made the new institution easy and natural to the Apostles, and the constant use of symbols in their hereditary religion prevented their, misconceiving the meaning of those now introduced for the first time. They saw in it an abiding memorial of the'r Lord: a vivid enforcement of their dependence on the merits of His acath, as a sacrifice for their salvation: the need of intimate spiritual communion with Him, as the bread of life: and the bond of the new brotherhood He had established. The joint commemoration of His broken body and shed blood, was, henceforth, to distinguish the assemblies of His followers from the world at large, [ Excepting baptism, it was the one outward form in the Society, established by their Master.

From a rite thus simple, noctrines have been developed by theological zeal and heated fancy, which would have alike startled and shocked those who first partook of it. It has been forgotten how Jesus, Himself, in answer to the cavil—"How can He give us His flesh to eat?" repudiated the literalism which caught at sound, and missed the sense. "My flesh—my bodily person," said He, "profiteth nothing towards procuring eternal life: to talk of eating it to gain that life is unworthy trifling: it is the Spirit who quickens the soul to a new, immortal, and heavenly existence, and that Spirit acts through the words of sacred truth which I speak to you. "They are spirit, and they are life." 1. Of Constants at the part of Constants which do moves a Constants of Neoncarching at the at the second of the second second

Ilila Lo I de [1

JERUSALEN

overinight.00

side, there we

their number

once more, th

heart from sh

Masterithey

their half-wor

Masters hall

men but it lo

ently near ov

As they rec

gan to cheer

the glorious f

way, 2 said of

in His name,

promises mad

must go to n

You have, as reward in the

that account.

you need not

If it were no

Navi morel I

pare à place

get all ready

Nor is th

that, where I

I have said in but since lit

otheriwholiv

Way Wast soul

vants, to guid

long before, i man entered this, as they

A full and

words. Bu

the minds o

TREAD OF HALLING

to it is meaning and its of its of its of its of its and its of the property of the part o

JERUSALEM was the brightest and happiest of cities on this Passover night."But though the hum of universal rejoicing rose on every side, there was only sadness in the little band round Jesus. One of their number had proved a traitor, and their Master had told them. once more that He would very soon leave them. They were sore at heart from shame at the baseness of Iscariot, at the dread of losing a Master they passionately loved and at the utter miscarringe of all their half-worldly, half-religious, expectations of earthly glory. Their Master had instituted a rite to mark them as apart from all other men but it looked as if there would be little use for it, in the appar-As they reclined and silent, Jesus read their thoughts, and be gan to cheer them, by lifting their hearts from the gloomy present to the glorious future and denot ballon maining out any sail of delated portal f Let not your liearts be troubled with care and anxiety in such a way 2 said offer; 22 believe in God, and in me, His Son, who speak in His name, and let that faith lead you to trust confidently that the promises made you will be fulfilled. I have, indeed, told you that I must go to my Father, but I have told you, also, that I will return. You have, assuredly, nothing to expect on earth except trial, but your reward in the world to come may well raise you above all sorrow on that account o In heaven, my Father's house, are many manslons; you need not fear that everlasting habitations in glory will fail you. If it were not so, I would have told you, for I never deceive you. Nay more I am your forerunner thither. If I go away, it is to prepare a place for yound I am your friend, going home before you, to get all ready for your glad reception when you follow rae. 1944 (budy) Nor is this all, I till return to fetch you to my heavenly home, that, where I am, you may be, also, for ever, If you remember what I have said in the past, you will know not only whither I am going, but since it is I who prepare a place for you above, and I, and no other who will come to lead you thither, you must also know the wivingstrouted time of the first of the second second state with the second second second second second second He alluded to His spiritual return at the blissful death of His servants, to guide them to Himself, above, and He had told them, not long before, that He was the door of the great fold, and that if any man entered by Him, he would be saved." But they had forgotten this as they had so much else, show a grant the show an entered to be the same set of the same A full and satisfying answer to the question of Peter, lay in these words. But it was not enough to still the fears and doubts in the minds of the Apostles. They still clung fondly to their earthing of God, wers be it new, eocracy. ibt of its t of that al form. it, under om that of Him. atoning w Coveherisalt irtue of e unmisdedmed ath, His A cove-W Covewhich paschal that the rt. The asion of al to the religion roduced r Lord s death. al comha new of His ish the ng bapby their 艺界月。四 v theoled and en bow us His nd. and rofiteth to gain he goul rit acts hey are hopes of the Messiah's Kingdom, and though they, perhaps, realized the near departure of their Master, they had not, even yet, come to comprehend that it meant His death. Hence His figurative language remained so dark to them, that Thomas, constitutionally given, as he was, to seek clearness and certainty, interrupted Him with a reverent freedom--

3 100 100-07

"Lord, we do not, as yet, know whither Thou art going, and how can we know the way in which to follow Thee?" The questioner wished to find out the way by learning the goal, but Christ, in His answer, pointed him to the way as revealing all else.

"I myself, and no other, am the way," said He, "because no one comes to the Father, in His heavenly glory, but through me. I am the true way, for I speak only the truth given me from above to make known the way to life, for he who believes in me shall live by me, and shall have everlasting life, and I shall raise him up at the last day. If ye have known me—the Way—ye will know whither I am going —to my Father—for, since he who sees the Son, sees the Father also, you know Him from this time, and have seen Him, in seeing me. I am the Way, because no one can reach my Father's presence, but through faith in me as the Saviour: the Truth, because I am the selfrevelation of God; the Light, come into the world, without following which, no one can gain salvation; the Life, because I am the source and spring of eternal life, so that he who does not receive me into his heart, by faith, is already condemned."

Philip had listened, but could not understand. He could only think that Jesus, in speaking of seeing the Father, alluded to some invisible appearance of Jehovah, for the purpose of founding the earthly kingdom of the Messiah. With a child-like simplicity, therefore, he turned to Christ—"Lord, show us the Father, and all our wishes will be satisfied."

No one who had thought over the words "If ye have known me, ye will have known my Father, also,", and had understood them, could have asked such a question. It marked an amazing want of intelligent appreciation of the teaching of our Lord, and of His mode of speech. Hence, the answer of Christ sounds almost sad, "Have I been so long with you, and do you know so little of me, Philip? If you really knew me, you would not ask me to show you the Father. He cannot be shown to the natural sight. But he who sees me, and rightly understands who I am, knows the Father, in thus knowing me. Such an one realizes that, in me, the highest revelation of God that is possible has appeared, and has no wish to have any higher or other outward and material manifestation of Him. You speak as if you did not believe that I am in the Father, and the Father in me, and that hence, as I said, he who sees me sees the Father also... The proof that it is so, is in my words, for they are not my own, but His. If you doubt this, you do not need to believe merely because I say so: believe it on the proof of the works that I do, for it is not I, who do them, but the mean is, the likeness, but soul."

Jesus now course at the broke in wit "I have p my Father. in your futu nity, that if you will hav done, and ev all power in pravers, as n of my King You will rec labours as n and to trium when I spea cles on one h for I am in m me, and I sha for His glor mighty, inde that I will do but I will do "But if yo that I should things, keep love for me. I know help, and we gone. Be n my place, be the Father. who will not for ever-pr the Spirit of men, leads th The unbelie the inward s sense. But that is not m who believe will be in yo is so.

them, but the Father. Put away your gross earthly ideas. What I mean is, that the Father is revealed by the Son, as His image and likeness, but only in a spiritual sense, to the eye of faith and of the soul."

Jesus now turned to the Apostles at large, and resumed His discourse at the point He had left, when, first Thomas, and then Philip, broke in with their questions.

"I have promised you eternal life," said He, "if you trust me and my Father. Let me do more, that you may be cheered and supported in your future labours for my Kingdom. I tell you, with all solemnity, that if you have this true faith in me, and love towards me. you will have the power to do just such wonderful works as I have done, and even greater, for I am going to My Father to be raised to all power in heaven and earth; so that you may feel sure that your prayers, as my Apostles, offered in my name, for the advancement of my Kingdom, will be heard and answered, in all their fulness, You will receive power from above to overcome the world by your labours as my Apostles;—to spread the Gospel among all nations. and to triumph over all Jewish and Gentile opposition. I mean this when I speak of your doing greater works than my outward miracles on one here and one there. It is I who will give you this power, for I am in my Father, and my Father is in me, and He works through me, and I shall give it that my Father may be glorified by my triumph; for His glory is the great end of my work, now and hereafter. So mighty, indeed, will be your prayers in my name, as my Apostles, that I will do not only what you ask, for the spread of my Kingdom, but I will do it whenever, and as often as ever, you ask it.

"But if you desire that so great an honour should be granted you, that I should hear and answer all your prayers, you must, above all things, keep my commandments, for by doing so you best show your love for me.

"I know you feel sad at the thought of losing my presence and help, and wonder who will stand by you, and aid you, when I am gone. Be not afraid. I will not leave you alone, but will see that my place, be supplied, so that you want for nothing. For I will ask the Father, and He will give you another Helper and Counsellor, who will not leave you, as I must now do, but will abide with you for ever-protecting, helping, strengthening you, in all your needs; the Spirit of Truth, who imparts the divine Truth to the hearts of men, leads them to know it, and quickens them to all spiritual power. The unbelieving world cannot receive Him, because they have not the inward sight to know Him, and He is not visible to the outward sense. But they cannot comprehend, and will not receive, anything that is not material, and apparent to the bodily eye. You, however, who believe in me, will know Him, for Hc will remain with you, and will be in you, and your own experience will make you feel that He to address this in these is so.

, realized , come to language ven, as he , reverent and how se no one st. in His e no one e. I am e to make ve by me, e last day. am going ther also, g me. I sence, but

n the selffollowing the source as into his ould only d to some nding the ity, thered all our nown me, od them. g want of His mode "Have I min? If e Father. s me, and knowing a of God higher or peak as if n me, and The proof His. If

I say so: , who do

"Nor is this all, my dear ones I will not leave you like orphans: with me, your spiritual Father, gone from you for ever, Not, only will you have the Spirit of Truth, with you, but I, myself, will shortly return to you. In a very little while longer the world will see me no more, but you will see me, though not bodily present. Vou will see me in spirit, and feel that I commune with you and work in you through the Spirit, whom I will send. I shall be alive though unseen, for I will rise from the dead and live for evermore, and shall make you partakers of my heavenly and deathless life. By this higher spiritual life ye shall know, in that day, when, by the gift of my Spirit, I come to you in power, that I am in my Father, and you in me, and I in you. When I come finally, in outward glory as I have told you already, at the last day, you will have no more doubts, or fears, as you now have, in this time of my lowliness and humilia. tion. You will then know, when you see me descend in heavenly. majesty as you shall have already felt when I come, very soot by the Spirit; that my words are true-that I am indeed in my Father. and you in me, and I in you that we are for ever inseparably one with the Father, and with each other, dated in humany dependent of lar tises them in his life, truly loves me, and will be loved by my Father and by me to him will I reveal my presence in his soul, by the Spirit through whom I commune with him." All it deal hand it is and

Here, Judas Thaddæus, "the brave," the son of an unknown James, interrupted the discourse by a reverent question. With the simple literal ideas of his age and nation, he could not understand what Jesus had said about manifesting. Himself only to individual believers, and not to all men. He still expected a visible appearance of Christ, in glory, as the Messia , to judge the unbelieving world, and set up His own Kingdom. "What has happened, Lord," asked he, "to make Thee determine to show Thyself as the Messiah only to us, and not to the world at large? How comes it ?"

"The reason," replied Jesus, "is, that the world, so long as it does not believe in me and love me, is neither morally capable of receiving. such a manifestation of me, as I mean—a spiritual communion with the soult-nor worthy of it. Only believing and faithful hearts can become, or desire to become, the abode of my Father or of myself, so that We may live in that loving fellowship with them which reveals Us to them. I do not speak of such an outward and visible dwelling with men as when the divine glory rested between the cherubin, or over the Tabernacle; but an unseen abode, by the Holy Spirit, in the soul as in a Temple. Only he who loves me, and, loving me, keeps my commandments, can have this honour and blessedness. Such an one My Father will love as well as I, and we will, come to him and make our abode with him. He who does not love me will not keep my commandments. It call my commandments mine, but, in reality, they are those of my Father who sent me. With such an one, there fore, who re I cannot ma spiritual way There was Glancing ba knowing tha minds, He lo "I have know that y will necessa will send in and Helper. your vivid r a fuller and opened." "Fear not for they we friends Pea Peace be w salvation in Saviour. M it will be wo This gift-m men wish ea perity, which lasting good, As I beg neither let it either? Inst that, though if you love r that I am go human weak vation of ma and indirect will be under and directly, on earth, by limitation, s as the Son o Almighty po my Kingdon body.

"I have presently leagone. The l with you af orphans Not only! Il shortly ee me no I will see in in you. ough unand shall By this he gift of and you: lory as I re doubts humilia heavenly soon, by Father, ably one and an Jor ! nd pracy Father il, by the Lilles. phy inknown With the derstand dividual pearance g world, asked n only to die 1 s it does cceiving. ion with earts can vself, so 1 reveals dwelling ubim, or it, in the e, keeps Such an him and

Such an him and ot keep reality, e, therebody. I have told you presently leave you, gone. The hour of m with you after this.

fore, who rejects God's words and does not obey them, the Father and I cannot make our abode, and, thus, I cannot manifest myself in this spiritual way, of which alone I speak, except to individual souls." There was now a short pause, but, after a time, Jesus began again. Glancing back at all He had said to them during the evening, and knowing that much of it must be dark and enigmatical to their simple minds. He lovingly cheered them by some further kind words. "I have said these things to you, while I am still with you, but I know that you hardly understand some of my sayings, and that you will necessarily forget others. The Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in my name, at my request, to be your heavenly Friend and Helper, will, however, throw light on every point, and bring to your vivid remembrance all that I have now told you; giving you a fuller and wider understanding of the truths I have only briefly opened."

"Fear nat, my beloved ones, all will be well with you," added He. for they were sorely troubled. "You know how you wish your friends 'Peace' when you part from them. My farewell greeting is 'Peace be with you'—the peace of reconcillation to God, of eternal salvation in my Kingdom, which I have gained for you as your Saviour. My peace, coming from me, and by me, I leave you; for it will be won for you, as an undying gift, by my death, now so near. This gift-my peace-is of a wholly different kind from that which men wish each other in their farewells-mere earthly joy and prosperity, which leave the soul unblessed. My peace carries with it lasting good, and true unfading happiness, for it is that of the soul As I began, therefore, I shall end-Let not your heart be troubled. neither let it be afraid, either now or hereafter. Why should it beeither? Instead of sadness, you ought to feel joy, for I have told you that, though I go away now, I shall come to you again. Indeed, if you love me, as I know you do, you will be glad to hear me say that I am going back to my Father, for here my Father has used myhuman weakness to speak His words and do IIIs works, for the sal-vation of man. The mortal nature 1 now wear has been His feelile and indirect instrument. But when I return to Him, my Kingdom will be under His direct power. My work, thenceforth, will rest alone, and directly, in His hand, and He will complete what I have begun on earth, by His mighty power, through His Spirit; without human limitation, such as has been inevitable while He wrought through me. as the Son of Man-a man like yourselves. He, working with His Almighty power, directly, through His Spirit, is greater, as a help to my Kingdom, than I can be while I act for Him through this dying

"I have told you now, while I am still with you, that I shall presently leave you, that your fuith may not be shaken when I am gene. The hour of my departure approaches: I shall not speak much with you after this. For the prince of this world—the evil oneis already coming against me. But fear not, he has no power over me. There is nothing in my soul which he can assail; no sin by which he can claim me as his. Nor do I need to yield to him in anything, for I could, if I chose, avoid the death with which he threatens me. But, that the world may know my love to the Father, and that I do what He has appointed for me as His will, though it be to die: let us rise now from the table, and go forth to meet the powers of darkness, before whom, according to the counsels of God, I shall fall."

The whole company hereupon rose, and prepared to leave the room. But Jesus, full of thoughts which He longed, even yet, to utter, before His ever nearer separation, stood, as it were, fixed to the spot by His love to them, and once more began to speak. He could not bring Himself to break up this last communion. He should have with them.

He began by the well-known and beautiful comparison of Himself and the Apostles to a vine and its branches. Perhaps the thought rose from the sight of the wine-cup on the table and its recent use at the evening's feast, or, perhaps, the house stood amidst vines, and branches may have been trained round the window, or the vineyard itself may have lain below in the bright moonlight.

"This vine, with its branches and fruit," said He, pointing to the wine-cup, or to the vines outside, "is a type, in its earthly and visible way, of a heavenly and divine truth. I am the true vine, ye are the branches, and my Father is the husbandman. He sent me into the world; He has given me such faithful souls as you, and joined you with me, in living fellowship and communion; He has tended the growth of the truth in the past, for it has been He who has been working through me, and He will continue to do so after I leave you, by His Holy Spirit.

"As in the natural vine there are fruitful and unfruitful branches, so, in my fellowship, there are some who bear fruit both in word and in act, and some who do not. Only those who are pure and sincere —those who truly love me and keep my commands, have the abiding communion with me from which such fruitfulness springs; for, as the careful husbandman cuts off the unfruitful branch, and cleans away with his pruning-knife all that would hinder the full fruitfulness of the good one, so does my Father with my disciples.

"But be ye comforted. You have been pruned and made clean by your loving and obedient reception of the truths I have told you, and by the discipline through which you have passed. Dismiss anxious care! You will not be cut off as unfruitful branches. My Father will make you still more fruitful; will cleanse away all that hinders your progress in grace, and will perfect you in the end. But, to secure this growing fruitfulness, you must cherish fondly your communion with me; grafted into me, as the branches into the stem of the yine. If you do so, I will not separate myself from you, any more than you by my it do not a ve abide in power to b vou will spiritual lif as that of from me ye the husban and then g break away here, by my while they God. But fast my co will, and it name, only a great mot my Father answers to your prayer for the enjo true disciple our of That yo union with fellowship b your side, al in this love t shown and mands. As tinue hencef ever be able which I hav felt by you. that this hol fulness."

The sound Him back to before. Th secret of ke place in His for them. His for them. His told them, so ''You wis you, and will wer over

o sin by n in any-

and that

e to die;

owers of I shall cave the n yet, to

fixed to

ak. He

e should

Himself

thought

ines, and

vineyard

ig to the

thly and rue vine.

e sent me

you, and

He has

He who

o after I

ranches, vord and sincere

for, as

d cleans

fruitful-

clean by ou, and anxious

Father hinders

But, to ur com-

stem of bu, any more than the vine tears itself from its branches, but will strengthen you by my spiritual aid. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself if It do not abide in the vine, you cannot bring forth good fruit except ve abide in me." I am the vine, you are the branches; the living power to bear fruit comes only from me. But if you abide in me, you will bear much fruit. All true work as my disciples-all spiritual life-comes only from fellowship with me-fellowship close as that of the vine and its branches each in the other-for apart from me ye can do nothing. As unfruitful branches are cut off by the husbandman, and cast out of the vineyard and left to dry up, and then gathered and cast into the fire and burned, so, those who · break away from living in union with me will be cut off from me here, by my Father; the teligious life hence will wither up in them while they live, and at the last day they will suffer the judgment of God. But if ye abide in loving, spiritual union with me, and hold fast my commandments and keep them, you may ask what you will, and it will be done to you, for you will, then, ask, in my name, only such things as are in keeping with my will. And it is a great motive for your abiding in me, that your doing so glorifies my Father by leading to your bearing much fruit, through my answers to your prayers. You will further, by this fulfilment of your prayers, become truly, and in the strict sense, my disciples, for the enjoyment of it is the special distinguishing mark of my true disciples only.

""" That you may thus continue in living fellowship and spiritual union with me, let me remind you that the uniting bond of this fellowship between me, my Father, and you, is love; and that, on your side, all depends on your showing yourselves true and obedient, in this love to me and in the practice of my commands, as I have shown and still show myself towards my Father and His commands. As He has loved me, I have loved you; see that ye continue henceforth, for ever, to love and obey me, that I may still for ever be able to love you. I have spoken thus, that the same joy which I have in knowing that I abide in my Father's love, may be felt by you, from your knowing that you abide in my love, and that this holy joy of soul may increase, more and more, to a heavenly fulness."

The sound of the word "love," so dear to the heart of Christ, led Him back to the new commandment He had given a few minutes before. That His disciples should love one another was the true secret of keeping His commandments, and so of retaining their place in His heart, and securing the holy joy of soul He desired for them. He now defined His requirements more narrowly. They were to love each other, as He had loved them, and that meant, He told them, self-sacrifice, even to death, for their sakes. "You wish, I am sure," said He, "to retain my love after I leave you, and will strive to keep my commandments that you may do so.

725

DITING OF COULSE

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

These commandments are summed up in the one which I gave you to night, already, that ye love one another. I only add, that that love must be such as I have shown and will presently show to you -love so great, that, in furtherance of the divine purpose for your salvation, I willingly lay down my life for you. There can be none greater between man and man, and this highest example-this joyful sacrifice of life itself for each other-must be your standard. Nothing less is the ideal I require in my New Society. That spirit alone which would not shrink from this, makes true and full obedience to my command possible, with all the blessings it brings, and "If you thus fise to a love like mine, you will hind me to you in closest undying affection ;-affection, not as from master to servant, or teacher to disciple, but as of friend to friend. If, by having this love, you do the things I command you, I shall call you my friends. my loved and trusted ones; for doing is the only proof Laccept of loving, I know, indeed, that you will, and therefore, henceforth, I call you no longer merc servants, as in the past, but trusted friends. For the servant obeys without knowing his lord's thoughts, and plans, but you have been told all I have heard from my Eather, so far as you are able to hear and understand it;-told it, not as mere servants and messengers,-the blind instruments of my will; but in the fulness of loving confidence, as sharers of my inmost thoughts and heart.

"But great though the honour be I thus give you, never forget that you have not, like the disciples of the Rabbis, with him whom they follow, chosen me for your teacher, master, and friend. On the contrary, I chose you, not for mere idle friendship, but that I might appoint you to go forth as my disciples, and work in spreading my Kingdom, and hear fruit in winning men to the truth;—fruit that would remain for ever, both for yourselves, and for those you led to the light. Thus you owe all to me; your first discipleship, no less than the friendship to which I have now advanced you; and also that amazing honour I have promised you, that so long as you keep my commands, the Father will give you whatever you ask in my name. How much fruit may ye not bear with this heavenly help, and how great the reward before God when ye have borne it!

worth to your acts or words. Wonder not that I enforce this call to mutual love. Let it reign within my New Society, for outside you will have only hatred. But let me comfort you by the thought that, as you know, it has hated me first. To be hated by it, is only to share my lot. And let it still more console you, to remember that this very hatred by the unbelieving world, is a proof that you no longer belong to it. If you belonged to it, it would love its own, for like loves like. It hates you, because I have chosen you out of it, and made you mine. To be hated of the ungodly is a testimony to your worth, as to be loved by them would be of the re-

>

"Rememb reater than have, they w ing, as you They will ha name. confes Him who sen "This hatr men, and tau such as no o which should were such as ence of the divine word to and seen my n I repeat, no en alone; it is h works, which these words an He thus, by'th visible God car ness of a hatre unbelieving w seen by God an hated me with

"You may, I Thee, and have having seen such hated Thee, and what good is th you, and dissipal shall send up goes forth from needs, —He will leeply concerning ay be able to men, of all you ing of my pub "I have cold fou, for my sak ar be offended nore earnest ze fut you out of t sequences, is no how the Rabbis

· 13119 1.1.131 7

796

RVA JOU

bat that show to pose for e can be ple-this tandard.

lat spirit

Prin Surge

gryou in

servant, ving this

friends,

eforth, I I friends.

nd plans,

ar as you

ulness of

rt. Batthat

m whom

On the

t I might

iding: my

ruit that

ou led to p, no less

nlso that

keep my

ny name. and how

all your

gives its

t it reign ed. But hated me

till more

onged to ecause I

d of the m would be of the reverse. How ought this to cheer you in all your future

"Remember what I said to you to night, already, 'A servant is not creater than his lord.' If they have persecuted me, as you know they have, they will also persecute you; if they have received my teaching, as you know they have not, they will receive yours as little. They will hate you and persecute you, because you come in my name, confessing me as the Messiah and Saviour, —for they know not Him who sent me.

"This hatred of my name has no excuse, for I have dwelt among men, and taught them the truth, and have done works among them: such as no other messenger of God, or prophet, has done -- works which should have made them feel that God had sent me, for they were such as Israel'itself had agreed to accept, as proof of the preseice of the Messiah, and they proved that my teaching was His divine word to them." But though they have both heard my teaching, and seen my mighty works, they have not believed. They have, thus, I repeat, no excuse. Nor is their hatred of My Name, hatred of me alone; it is hatred of God, my Father, no less; for my words and works, which they hate and reject, are not mine, but His. And as these words and works are thus the self-revelation of my Father ;--- as He thus, by them, had made Himself visible in me, so far as the invisible God can do so, their hatred of me involves the awful wickedness of a hatred of the Eternal Dather. Yet this hatred of me by the unbelleving world, is not a mere accident or chance, but was forewen by God and spoken of in ancient prophecy, as you read; "They the stopped the fast of the stre hated me without a cause."

"You may, however, say in your hearts, 'If they have persecuted Thee, and have not kept Thy word; if, after having been taught, and having seen such things, they would not receive them; if they have hated Thee, and Thy Father, and if we are to find the same treatment, what good is there in your sending us to them?' Let me encourage you, and dissipate such thoughts. 'For when the Helper comes, whom I shall send unto you from the Father—the Spirit of Truth, —who goes forth from the Father, and therefore is able to help you in all your needs, —He will bear witness of me in your souls; teaching you more deeply concerning me, and glorifying me to you in doing so, that you nay be able to make right and effective use, in your witness before men, of all you have seen and heard while with me, from the begining of my public work as the Messiah.

"I have cold you these things about the hatred the world will show you, for my sake; that you may be prepared for it, and not stumble, if be offended on account of it, but may meet it with so much the nore earnest zeal and fidelity. As I have often told you, they will at you out of the synagogues; but this, hard though it be in its conequences, is not the worst their fanatical hatred will do. You know how the Rabbis teach, that 'he who sheds the blood of the wicked is

. Discontent via a solution as distant and of subscripts a as vibration far too

above, y

to drive

come, 'F

ing in i

vince th

and sinf

have be

Cross in grave, ar

man, and

Son, sent is righted

will, fina

evil, and vealing t

of the w

resurrect

my serva

He had

future ec

farther.

present w

forced H

things," H

Truth, co

will streng

to the kno

for you al

said to yo

trusted me

repeated w

will not sp

only what

my words.

bounce to

of prophec

be revealed

"'You'n

you any ne He will on

tions conce

dom, will

you, and th

as the Son,

the Son, in

They will act on this principle towards you, for the hour comes when every one who kills you will think your blood is an acceptable sacrifice offered to God. Nor will the heathen treat you better. Israel knows neither the Father nor me; and this wilful ignorance of divine things makes them act thus. I tell you all this, that, when these times of persecution come, you may be strengthened in your faith in me, and in your patient endurance of suffering for my sake. I did not speak of these things till now, because they were still distant when you first followed me, and because they might then have frightened you away from me. Besides, as long as I live, the hatred of men will be directed against me, not against you."

It is hard for even the best to rise superior to the present or near, by thinking of the distant or future. The Eleven were thoroughly cast down and dispirited, and stood silent; unable to break the stillness, even by a few of those juestions which the disciples of Jewish teachers were in the habit of putting to their masters. The lofty promises of Jesus would one day strengthen, their faithful souls, but, for the time, they had no ear for them. As He spoke, He saw this, and gently reproved it.

"Now that I am on the point of returning to my Father," said He, "how are you so wholly engrossed in sadness, that while friends are always wont, to ask often from one about to leave them,— where he is going,'—you have not been cagen to do so?". He wished to be asked more closely about His going away, for it seemed as if His dis cipl.s had not fully understood His previous words, else they could not be so dejected.

"You forget the comfort I have given you, and dwell only on my near leaving, and the troubles to come after it. But I tell you only the truth, when I say that it is better for you that I go away. For if I were not to do so, your great Helper would not come to you, but, if I go away, I will send Hira to you."

The history of the Church, after the ascension of Jesus and the effusion of the Holy Spirit, explains and confirms these words. Only the once Crucified but now Risen One; the glorified Son of God, sitting at the right hand of the Father, could have been proclaimed by the Apostles as the Lord of a new, eternal, and spiritual kingdom of heaven. Only the Conqueror of Death;—the Son of God, returned triumphant to the glory of the Father, could have been announced to the world as the Righteous One, the Victor over the Prince of this world; as He not to believe in whom was sin.

Jesus continued—"You will have to strive, even to blood, with the opposition of the unbelieving world to me, and their evil opinion of me; against their illusion that they are doing right in their unbelief and in their persecution of my servants; and against their belief in the invincible power of wicked men, and of the prince of darkness. All these you must oppose and overcome. But numan eloquence is nciple towards ou will think Nor will the ather, nor me; n act thus. I come, you may t endurance of gs till now, bene, and because i. Besides, as against me, not present or near, ere thoroughly break the stilliples of Jewish ters. The lofty thful souls, but, ie, He say this,

ather," said He, while friends are tem,— where he te wished to be ned as if His dis , else they could well only on my I tell you only o away. For if he to you, but, if Jesus and the se words. Only Son of God, sitproclaimed by tual kingdom of of God, returned en announced to e Prince of this blood, with the r evil opinion of in their unbelief inst their belief nce of darkness han eloquence b far too weak for this great task. Without assistance and help from above, you will never be able to convince men, of their sin and error, or to drive out the reign of evil." But when your Heavenly Helper has come. He will, through you, show the world their sin in not believing in me, and in persecuting you, my servants. He will also con-vince them of my righteousness—that is, that I am not unrighteous and sinful, as they suppose, but that my righteousness and innocence have been shown by my not shrinking even from the death of the cross in the fulfilment of my great work; by my rising from the grave, and thereby proving that my death was a voluntary act of love to man, and by my returning to my Father, which will show that I am His Son, sent by Him as the Messlah. Thus It will be seen that my cause is righteous, and that I am the righteous and holy one of God. He will, finally, convince men of the utter weakness of all the powers of evil, and of their having been judged and condemned of God, by revealing to them the complete overthrow of the reign of the devil, and of the works of darkness, by my life, my teaching, my death, my resurrection, my return to my Father, and my victorious help to you my servants."

He had touched the confines of great and mysterious truths in the future economy of His kingdom, but felt Himself forced to go no farther." A wider field of higher teaching lay before Him, but their present weakness and incapacity to understand lofty spiritual things, forced Him to break off further revelations. "I have yet many things," He continued, "to say to you, but you cannot hear them now. Yet be not cast down. When your Helper, the Spirit of Truth, comes from above, He will give you fuller instructions, and will strengthen your minds to understand them. He will lead you to the knowledge of the truth in its whole extent, and will illuminate for you all the heights and depths of my meaning, in all that I have said to you. Nor need you fear to trust Him less than you have trusted me; for just as I have not spoken of myself, but have only repeated what I have heard from my Father, He, the Spirit of Truth, will not speak for Himself, or of His own promptings, but will utter only what He has heard from God. Nor will He simply explain my words, and reveal higher aspects of the truth. He will also announce to you things future. He will give you, my apostles, the gift of prophecy, by which the future development of my Kingdom will be revealed to you, to fill you with comfort and triumpli.

"You must not think, however, that the Holy Spirit will teach you any new or different truths, not connected with me, your Saviour. He will only purify and enlighten your hitherto imperfect conceptions concerning me, and, while thus fitting you to spread my kingdom, will but develop, expand, and complete what I have taught you, and thus increase my glory. All that the Father has is mine, as the Son, consecrated and sent forth by 11im to carry out His work; the Son, in whom the Father, for this end, dwells and works in closest communion, as He also dwells in like communion with the Father. Therefore, as the Holy Spirit will teach you only what He hears from the Father, He can teach you no other doctrine than mine."

But all the instruction and comfort Jesus could administer; all the warnings, on the one hand, of the difficulties and sufferings; and all the supports, on the other, in rich promises of power, help, and blessing from above, could not dispel the sadness of the Apostles, or bring their joy and courage. The near departure of their loved Master filled their minds with abiding dejection and anxious fear.

In tender sympathy, therefore, Jesus once more sought to cheer them. "I said, indeed," He went on, "that very soon you would see me no longer, but yet, a little while more, and you will see me again."

The Apostles were more than ever perplexed by these words. They thought only of an earthly communion with their Master, such as they still enjoyed, and could not understand the sudden change of not seeing Him, and seeing Him again, or the double use of the words—"A little while,"—or what He meant by saying so often that He was going to the Father. Wondering questions followed between them, and they were anxious to ask an explanation, when Jesus, seeing their perplexity, anticipated their wish.

seeing their perplexity, anticipated their wish. "Do you inquire among yourselves," said He. "what I mean by saying, 'A little while, and ye will not see me: ard, again, a little while, and ye will see me; and 'I am going to the Father?' Ye shall, indeed be in great trouble at my death, for I am presently to die, though you seem as if you could not credit it. Indeed, ye will be sad, when the world that rejects me will rejoice. But your sorrow will be turned into joy, as sudden as that of the mother when she bears a son, and forthwith forgets the past for gladness that a man is born into the world; for you know that no joy is so great to a woman, in our nation, as that of having a son. So, truly, you will have sorrow now at my death, but it will pass into abiding joy when you see me again, is my spiritual return.

In that day the Spirit of Truth will have given you such a full and satisfying knowledge of all that concerns ino and my Kingdom, that you will have no need, as now, to ask me respecting any words or matters you do not understand. You will no longer miss my earthly presence, but be joy ful in the possession of full enlightenment For most truly do I assure you, that all you ask my Father in my name—all illumination, all gifts, and joys of the Spirit—He will give you. Hitherto, from want of insight and experience, you have asked nothing in my name, and, therefore, have, as yet, no dream of the boundless gifts your Father in Heaven is ready to give you—no dream of His comforting and supporting grace. From this time, ask in my name, and you will receive what you ask, that your joy may be complete.

"I have spoken of my going away, and of your seeing me again, ondic a pul. And of what comes when you clearly In that day lightened b cede for yo Father Him lieved that without my --the sum o to appear in again."

The disci stood. in p had, at least forth from ( to heaven. also unders again. # It s speak clearl moreover, ha had in their He was omn answer their vividly impr Him; as havi strengthened Is it so, t "An hour i have a hard waver; for, home, and lo calm and clo have the help not alone, for "I have sp consolations. Me, by comm indeed, afflict I have said, and broken t neither hinde dom." Hill Lad The farewe have conquer the night, so l

munion He h e Father. ears from 120103631

r; all the s; and all help, and Apostles, heir loved

s fear.

to cheer ou would ill see me

Mallin, M

se words.

en change

use of the

often that

d between

ien Jesus,

ain, a little

Ye shall.

tly to die,

ye will be our sorrow

when she

that a man great to a y, you will joy when

Kingdom, any words

r miss my htenment

her in my

e will givo

have asked

am of the c you-no

this time,

t your joy

me again,

such a full

I mean by

781

and of what would flow from it, in figures, and darkly. But a time comes when I will no more speak to you in this way, but will instruct you clearly and plainly, through the Spirit, respecting the Father. In that day ye shall ask in my name, because you will then be enlightened by the Spirit of Truth, and you will not need that I intercede for you that your prayers, thus offered, may be heard; for the Father Himself loves you because you have loved me, and have believed that I came forth from Him, and will therefore hear you, without my intercession. Nor must you ever forget this great truth —the sum of my life and work—that I came forth from the Father to appear in the world, and now leave the world to go back to Him again."

The disciples, listening to these words, fancied they now understood in part, at least, what had before seemed so dark. They had, at least, realized, from His last sentence, that, as He had come forth from God, and was about to return to Him, He must be going to heaven. Perhaps they thought, in their simple way, that they also understood better what He had said about their seeing Him again. It seemed as if He had, already, fulfilled His promise to speak clearly, and without metaphor, to them. That He should, moreover, have known, without being told them, the questions they had in their hearts, so astonished them, that they, further, felt sure He was omniscient, and did not need any one to ask Him, but could answer their questions without having been told them." Awed and vividly impressed, they felt a fresh corroboration of their belief in Him, as having come forth from God, and hastened to tell Him their strengthened conviction. in Wille

"Is it so, that you now feel sure you believe in me?" asked Jesus. "An hour is coming, and, indeed, has come, when your faith will have a hard test. Will you stand firm? Alas! how soon will you waver: for, in that hour, you will be scattered, each to his own home, and leave me alone?" "Yet," added He, after a pause, in .calm and clear assurance that, though forsaken of man, He would have the helping and protecting presence of the Father—"yet I am not alone, for the Father is with Me."

"Thave spoken as I have," He continued;—" have given you these consolations and promises, that you might have rest and peace in Me, by communion with Me as the loving and loved. In the world, indeed, affliction is your lot, for men will hate and persecute you, as I have said, for my sake; but, be of good heart, I have conquered and broken the might of the world and its prince, and they can neither hinder your salvation, nor check the triumph of My Kingdom."

The farewell discourse was ended with this note of triumph-"I have conquered the world!" But now, before. He went forth into the night, so big with fate, He could not break up for ever the communion. He had had with them so long, through joy and sorrow, without gathering them round Him in a parting prayer. He was about to die for the redemption of the world, and, as the Great High Pricst of humanity, would make intercession, before yielding Himself the sacrifice. I venture, reverently, to amplify the expression, that the import may be more easily caught.

Lifting up His eyes to heaven-the Apostles standing, as the manner of their nation was, while He prayed He began, "Father, the hour of my death has now come. Glorify Thy Son on the completion of the work of salvation, that Thy Son may glority Thee as its author. before man. Glorify Him, in accordance with Thy will, by which Thou hast given Him power over all men; for Thou hast appointed Him the only Saviour and Redeemer, to carry out Thy purpose of salvation, which regards the world; that He should give eternal life to all whom Thou hast given Him. And this is everlasting life, that they should know Thee, the only true God, and Him whom Thou hast sent-Me, Jesus, the Messiah. I have glorified Thee on earth, for I have made known Thy name, Thy will, and Thy plan of salvation for man, and have thus completed the work Thou hast given Me to do. Therefore, glorify Me, now, O Father, when I rise from my work on earth into Thy presence, in heaven, with the glory which I had with Thee, before the world was. Let me enter again into that divine communion in Thine uncreated glory, which I had before the creation of the world!"

He had, till now, prayed for Himself. He passed next to intercession for His disciples, urging His faithful obedience to His divine mission, as a ground for His being heard.

"I have made known Thy name unto the men whom Thou hast given me out of the unbelieving world. They were Thine own, for they were of Thy true Israel, and Thou gavest them to Me, and faithfully and truly did they receive my words as Thine, and they have kept them. In much they may have failed to understand, but they have been true and firm in their belief in Me, as having been sent by Thee, and as speaking Thy truth. Now, also, they have learned to know, and do acknowledge, that all that Thou hast given me—all that I have said and done—is, as it truly is, from Theel.

"I pray for them. I pray not, now, or those who know Thee not; the u. believing world, but for Thine own, now in Thy presence —Thine own, whom Thou hast given Me. My whole life and work has been, and is, a prayer for the world at large, from which My people must be gathered, but I pray, now, for these, Thy servants, because they are Thine, though Thou hast given them to Me. And all things that are Mine are also Thine, and Thine are Mine: the work, the aim, the means, the power, the grace, are, alike, Mine and Thine, for I am in Thee and Thou in Mc. Neither I, nor Thou, Eternal Father, work, nor have, for Himself, but each for the other, and, thus, though they are Thine, I am glorified in them. Great is their need of Thy help, for I, their triend and helper, am about to leave sake. able to Father known one, as and pr kept th denyin perishe ture mi I shall Bu the wo that is have do I have has hate fore, O out of th needed 1 dom. I that the of the w need Th Tho hostile w and kept in the T sphere of secrate 's through bolduess, but dids that I mi sent then cration, i . " For t holy offer also, may whom Th

"But I but for a their wor one, in m between T

them.

Great High elding Himexpression.

to end

as the man-'Father, the e completion as its anthor, 11, by which ast appointed y purpose of e eternal life ting life, that whom Thou hee on earth, Thy plan of k Thou hast ther, when I ven, with the Let. me enter clory, which I next to interto His divine

m Thou hast hine own, for Me, and faithnd, they have and, but they been sent by ve learned to given me—all

b know Thee Thy presence ife and work m which My Thy servants, to Me. And are Mine: the ke, Mine and I, nor Thou, for the other, and about to leave them, but they remain in the world that hates them for my sake. Without Thy heavenly aid and protection, they will not be able to do the work Thou hast appointed them. Therefore, Holy Father, keep them true to Thy name, which Thou gavest Mo to make known to them, that by their common faith and love they may be one, as Thou and I are one. While I was in the world, I watched and protected those whom Thou thus committedst to My care, and kept them faithful to Thy name;—kept them from the evil one, from denying Thee, from falling away from Thee; and none of them has perished but the son of perdition—as could not but be, for the Scripture must be fulfilled. Thou must watch and keep them, now that I shall leave them!

<sup>9</sup> But, now, I come to Thee, and these things I speak, being yet in the world, that they may have, in their own souls, the perfect joy that is in Mine, feeling assured confidence that the grave will not have dominion over Me, and that they will have Thee for their helper. I have given them Thy word, and for their receiving it, the world has hated them; because they do not belong to it, as I do not. Therefore, O Father, keep them! I ask not that Thou shouldest take them out of the world because it hates them; for suffering and struggle are needed to perfect their spiritual life, and to spread abroad my Kingdom. But I ask that Thou shouldest protect them from the evil one, that they, too, become not sons of perdition. They, Ilke Me, are not of the world, for it is the kingdom of the evil one; therefore, they need Thy protecting care, and as Thine own will surely have it.

Thou hast brought them out from amidst the unbelieving and hostile world, and hast given them to Mc, and they have received, and kept, Thy Word, made known to them by Mc. Thus they live in the Truth, for Thy Word is Truth; sanctify them in this, the sphere of their new spiritual life: not only keep them in it, but consecrate and prepare them for their great work, by giving them, through the Spirit of holiness and truth, divine enlightenment, power, boldness, love, zeal. Even as Thou didst send Me into the world, but didst first consecrate Me by the Spirit, given without measure, that I might accomplish the work Thou gavest Me to do, I have also sent them into the world, and they, O Father, need a similar consecration, in Thine own measure, to prosper in Thy work.

"For their sakes I consecrate myself to Thee, in My death—as a holy offering—for I ain both high priest and sacrifice; that they, also, may be made holy in the Truth, by Thy Spirit—the Lieber whom Thou will send, because I, the Holy One, have thus died for them.

"But I pray not for these, Thy servants now before Theo, alone, but for all them, also, who will henceforth believe in Mo, through their word—that they all, teachers, believers, and converts, may be one, in mutual fellowship and communion of love; the copy of that between Thee, Father, and Me:—communion so deep and holy that Thou art in Me, and I, in Thee. May they be, thus, one in each other, by being one in Us, by loving vital communion with Thee and Me, that the unbelleving world may have a visible proof, and may believe, that Thou didst send Me—the source—the centre—the stay of such heavenly love.

"That all who shall, now, or hereafter, believe in Me, may be thus, one, in holy love and life, even as We are One—I have given them, as their future inheritance, at My coming, in My eternal Kingdom, part in that heavenly glory which Thou hast given Me; that they may share it with Me, for ever. I have given it them, that they may be one, even as We are one, for how strong must it be as a bond of unity that they are heirs together of the same glory with Me in heaven. I have given it them that they may thus be perfectly joined in one; I dwelling in them and Thou in Me; that the world may know that Thou hast sent Me, and hast loved them with the same Father's love, with which Thou hast loved Me; and may thus believe on Me—the Saviour of the world.

"Father, I will that they whom Thou hast given Me, from all the generations of men, be with Me hereafter, to enjoy eternal life, and everlasting communion with Me, in that heavenly world whither I am now going: It is the high reward of their faithfulness, their supreme consolation amidst all earthly trials, their glorious animating hope. I will that their joy may be full, in seeing and sharing My heavenly glory, as they have seen and shared My humiliation on earth—that glory with Thyself, which Thou hast given Me because Thou lovedst Me before the foundation of the world.

"Fighteous Father, I know that Thou wilt carry out this My will, for, though the world has not known or acknowledged Thee, as revealed in My words and deeds—I have known Thee, as working in Me, and revealing Thyself through Me—known Thee by direct immediate knowledge—and these, Thy servants before Thee, having opened their hearts, and received My word, have known and believed that Thou hast sent Me. I have made known unto them Thy Name, and will make it known through the Spirit whom I will send, that the love wherewith Thou hast loved Me. Thou mayest also make dwell in their hearts, and that I, by the Spirit, may dwell in them for ever."

How sublinely this prayer was realized in the history of the Apostles, the "Acts" and the Epistles abundantly illustrate. It was their common glory to believe that nothing could separate them from the love of God in Christ; that He, by His Spirit, was with them, and that thay overcame all that opposed, through His help. The contrast between the dejected, faint-hearted, materializing Galikan fishermen and peasants of the Gospels, and the heroic, spiritual confessors of Pentecost and after times, is, itself, a miracle, great beyond all others. The illumination of soul, the grandeur of conception, the loftiness of aim, are a transformation from a lower to an indefnitely i from e admissi enlight od. ver izer : (if

PHILI, M.

WHI

in the u authorit It wa

which, l up to re

reaping

pilgrims

novelty,

lived by

loadston

come up and had

which st

Xystus,

the uppe

Moriah,

preservat ters were

was the p

struction, abounded their bear

gold and dining-ha

style of p

broad wal

dered by, l

water, and

It was the

Herod has had died. building

made it the

Pilate,

With t

nitely higher mental and moral condition, as complete as the change from early twilight to noon, and find their only solution in the admission that they must have received the miraculous spiritual enlightenment from above which Jesus had promised to send them.

""I has a town ashid, a montait heisenfor, theliewe in distance, be that on the bely done and the rates had at me. One we believe after four, as rearrance other, and the rates had to me, the detect of the four, as rearrance other, and at APTER APTER but have green allow their the manual and have a the dist. There are strong to be they they may burge but the dist. There are strong basis been allow they may burge burget with dist. There are strong basis they they may burget with dist. There are strong basis they they may burget with dist. There are strong been about the strong the stron the off an post the off in forting of the appropriate WHILE Jesus was tenderly bidding farewell to His few followers in the upper room, all was bustle and excitement among the Church authorities, now on the track of His blood by the help of Judas. It was the great holiday of the year at Jerusalem: the week in which, beyond any other time, the whole population gave themselves up to rejoicing. The citizens, from the highest to the lowest, were reaping the great gold harvest of the year from the myriads of pilgrims, and they, on their side, had the excitement of numbers, and novelty, and religious enthusiasm. A mere mountain city, Jerusalem lived by the Temple, either directly or indirectly, and it was now the loadstone that had drawn the whole Jewish world around it. With the craft that habit ally marked him, the tetrarch Antipas had come up from Tiberias, to show how devoutly he honoured the Law. and had taken his residence in the old castle of the Asmoneans. which still remained in the hands of his family. It was near the Xystus, and exactly opposite the Temple, to which he could cross by the upper bridge, over the Tyropœon Valley, between Zion and Moriah, which is a start of the second design of the second s Pilate, also, had arrived from Cæsarea, to secure, in person, the preservation of order in the dangerous days of the feast. His quar ters were in the new palace, built by Herod the Great on Zion. It was the pride of Jerusalem, "The kinds of stone used in its con-struction," says Josephus, "were countless. Whatever was rare abounded in it. The roofs astonished every one by the length of their beams, and the beauty of their adornment. Vessels, mostly of gold and silver, rich in chasing, shone on every side. The great dining-hall had been constructed to supply table-couches for three hundred guests. Others opened in all directions, each with a different style of pillar. The open space before the palace was laid out in broad walks, planted with long avenues of different trees, and bordered by broad deep canals and great ponds, flowing with cool, clear water, and set off, along the banks with innumerable works of art." It was the vast citadel-pale ce in which the tragedies of the family of Herod has been enacted. Here Archelaus had reigned, and Glaphyra had died. By right of war, the Romans had taken it, as the chief building of the city, for the residence of the procurators, and had made it the Prætorium, or headquarters. Its enclosure-large enough one in each th Thee and of, and may re—the stay

Me, may be have given ternal Kingren Me: that am, that they be as a bond y with Me in fectly joined te world may with the same y thus believe from all the rhal life, and rld whither I ifulness, their ous animating d sharing My umiliation on m'Me because this My will, d Thee, as reas working in hee by direct Thee, having a and believed in Thy Name, ill send; that est also make lwell in them istory of the trate. It was ate them from as with them, is help. The zing Galilæan spiritual congreat beyond t conception, to an indef.

736

to permit almost an army to be gathered in it, if necessary—ran along the inner side of the first city wall, and was connected with the great castles of white stone—Marianne, Hippicus, and Phasaelus, which Herod had built; the whole constituting, in fact, a vast fortification.

The high priest at the time of the Passover, as we have seen, was Caiaphas. The real head of the priesthood, however, was the crafty Hannas, or Ananus, without whom, nothing of moment was done in the affairs of the theocracy. As father of the greatest Sadducean family, he was fitly notorious for his harsh judgments, and was presently to take the chief part in the death of Jesus, as his son after-wards did in that of St. James. He had been appointed high priest by Quirinius in the year A.D. 7, but had been deprived of the dignity seven years latter by Valerius Gratus. The unique honour was reserved to him, however, of seeing his five sons successively pontiffs --one of them twice---a distinction which, in later years, gained for him, among his countrymen, the name of the most fortunate of men. Intrigue and unwearied plotting were the very life of Hannas and his house. The gliding, deadly, snakelike smoothness with which they seized their prey was a wonder even to their own generation, and had given them a by-name as 'hissing vipers.' When Quirinius. after the census, sacrificed the high priest Joazer, who had brought on himself universal hatred by his services to the Romans, Hannas was chosen as the one of the Temple aristocracy least displeasing either to the Romans or the Jews. He had managed to maintain his influence under three procurators through difficult times. Under Valerius Gratus, he had had to give way to Ismael Ben Phabi, but, after a year, had had him displaced, in favour of Eleazar, one of his own He himself declined to take the place again, on the same sons. ground on which Jonathan, another of his sons, afterwards did so, in the days of Herod Agrippa, when that king wished him to take it a second time. The family, though loose enough in more serious matters, were very strict as to hierarchical order. No one, they held, should put on again the sacred vestments after having once laid them off, and released himself from the obligations under which their wearer lay. Hanna bowed to this rule, as vital to the theocratic constitution, by the help of which his house stood at the head of Israel. He chose, therefore, henceforth to guide the reins in safe obscurity, but with a firm hand.

His sons, Eleazar, Jonathan, Theophilus, Matthias, and Hannas, successively became high priests, but when, at his death, the leading spirit was gone, the brutality of the Sadducee came more prominently into play, and speedily led to the ruln of the house.

Among the high priests who had interrupted the direct reign of this family, Caiaphas, son-in-law of Hannas, ruled longest. At the time of the condemnation of Jesus, he had held the high priesthood for seventeen years, having given Pilate no excuse for setting him aside, in spite of the conflict respecting the cagles, the shields, and the conduits o the yea were h before consecucould 1 this great than, the Thus priest w head of rest of 1 Jewis consisti of the S Temple sacred demned right ha Ben Za

Alexand the five Theoph the awf hereafte murder The n constitu were Jo andria, married

eyes of i son-in-la an evil r indced, l thera—t dai, —an attend, a of the po Ismael mitred h of his se and the a hundre pounds.

St. Paul

y-ran along ith the great aclus, which fortification. ve seen, was as the crafty was done in t Sadducean ind was presnis- son afterd high priest of the dignity nour was reively pontiffs s, gained for mate of men. Hannasland with which n generation, en Quirinius. d brought on Hannas was leasing either intain his in-Under Valeabi, but, after ne of his own on the same rds did so, in n to take it a serious matne, they held, nce laid them which their neoeratic conead of Israel. fe obscurity, and Hannas, , the leading prominently t reign of this At the time riesthood for ng him aside, and the con-

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

duits of Jerusalem. He even retained it till after the great day, in the year A.D. 36, when the sacred vestments, so long held from them, were handed over by Vitellius permanently to the Jews, instead of heing given out to them from the strong room of Antonia, a week before each great feast, for seven days' purifications, washings, and consecrations, to free them from heathen defilement, before they could be worn, Caiaphas, however, had little to do with procuring this great favour, and was almost immediately after deposed; Jonathan, the son of Hannas, being appointed in his stead.

Thus, at the time of the condemnation of Jesus, the acting high priest was only a puppet in the hands of a powerful family, at the head of which stood Hannas, his father in-law, sorely envied by the rest of the priestly aristocracy.

Jewish tradition describes the grades of the ancient hierarchy as consisting of the high priest; his deputy, or Sagan; two suffragans of the Sugans; seven priests, to whom were entrusted the keys of the Temple; and three treasurers, whose office it was to give out the sacred vessels. Of those holding these offices when Jesus was condemned, we can still darkly make out some. Beside Caiaphas, at his right hand, sat Hannas, the titular second, but real head. Jochanan Ben Zacchai, called John in the Acts of the Apostles, and one Alexander, seem to have held the next dignities, and after them came the five sons of Hannas, already an old man, Eleazar, Jonathan, Theophilus, Matthias, and Hannas—the five apparently hinted at in the awful parable of Dives and his five brothers—all to be high priests hereafter, and Hannas, the younger, to stain his pontificate by the murder of James, the brother of Jesus.

The names of some other members of what we may call the selfconstituted high ecclesiastical council, still survive. Among these were Joazer and Eleazar, the sons of that Simon Boethus of Alexandria, father of the second Mariamne, the belle of Jerusalem, married by Herod. The father, though well-nigh a heretic in the eyes of the national party, had been made high priest by his royal son-in-law, and his sons had succeeded him in the dignity, but bore an evil name for their state and violence. Their guard of spearmen, indeed, became an object of popular hatred. Simon, surnamed Kanthera-the Quarrelsome-the murderer of St. James, the son of Zabdai,—and his son Elioneus, afterwards high priest, had a right to attend, and did so with a pomp which brought on the family the curse of the people-"Woe to your fine feathers, ye family of Kanthera!" Ismael Ben Phabi, the handsomest man of his day, was another mitred high counsellor, to be famed hereafter for the clubs and blows of his serving men, the greed of his bailiffs, his shameless nepotism, and the Oriental luxury of his dress; one outer tunic of which cost a hundred mine-equal, perhaps, at this day, to eighteen hundred pounds. There were, also, Johanan Ben Nebedai-the persecutor of St. Paul; infomous in later days as a sensual glut on, who saized even the holy sacrifices for his feasts; and Issachar, of Kefar Barkai, who, in his pontificate of a later day, would not sacrifice except in silk gloves, for fear of soiling his hands, and lived to have those hands barbarously cut off by King Agrippa. Such were the men about to seize Jesus. No wonder that even the Talmud relates that voices were heard from the Holy of Holies, crying—"Depart from the Temple, ye sons of Eli; ye defile the house of Jehovan!".

The elders of the people—a body equivalent to a Jewish Senate were in no less agitation respecting Jesus; for they, also, were identified with the preservation of things as they were. One or two of them—Nicodemus, and Joseph of Arlmathea—were secretly in his favour, but they had not moral courage to take his part openly. The names of the rest have perished.

The college of Rabbis took an equally vigorous part, but its members at this time can only be guessed, though some who had met the boy Jesus, twenty years before, in the Temple school, doubtless survived.

It was late in the night of Thursday when Jesus had ended His last discourse and farewell prayer. According to the immemorial custom of the nation to mingle songs of praise to God with their feasts, the little band had already sung the first two of the six Psalms-the one hundred and thirteenth to one hundred and eighteenth-which formed the great Hallelujah of the Passover and all other feasts. The stillness of the night had been broken by the sound at the time when the second cup had been poured out. Now, at the close, the voices of the eldest of them chanted, with slow, solemn strains, the remainder of the Hallelujah-the rest responding with the word, Hallelujah, at the close of each verse. The anthem began fitly-"Not unto us, not unto us, but unto Thy name give glory, for Thy mercy and for Thy truth's sake," and closed with the words of the hundred and eighteenth Psalm-"Blessed he He that cometh in the name of Jehovah;" the Apostles responding-"In the name of Jehovah, Hallelujah!" And, now, all was over, and the Eleven, following their Master, went out into the night. They were on their way to Getlisemane:

The spirit of Jesus had, hitherto, been calm and serene. But the final close: the break with all the past: the shadow, deeper than that of Kedron, before Him, for the time brought on a reaction, which, till it passed, overwhelmed Him with trouble. No wonder the Apostles had been cast down when even He, who had been exhorting them to dismiss sorrow, was Himself moved. Behind Him lay life, before Him death: He was about to leave friends; and the fair earth, which, as a man. He loved so well; and His infant Church, the hope of the world He had come to save. Before Him lay, not only natural death, but shame, derision, misconception. He whose whole soul was truth, was to be crucified as a deceiver: the one on earth absolutely loyal to God, He was to die as a blasphemer. To be misrepresented: to the ground the future Himself f would He for He wh the people legions of of self? W though He temptation have return overcome i Nor was be for even absolutely a be made an infinite lov cence freely worthy and Son of God the Majesty raise the de was for the They pass the town ga by the bridg to Bethany. world lay a among ston after, to find parts. He l no intention Always give a Galilæan, on one part and shade c for ever. A Press-or, as ( lied so from trodden with new leaves moonlight fe grass. Stilli slept safely c Heavenly Fa tiw bonword sented: to feel the utter falseness of charges, and to be crucified on the ground of them! How might it affect the little band, to whom the future of His kingdom was entrusted? He had hitherto restrained Himself from using His supernatural power in 'His own behalfwould He still do so? 'He had but to speak, and all would be changed; for He who could calm the waves of the sea, could still the tunult of the people, and what were Temple guards or Roman soldlers against legions of angels? Would He still absolutely subordinate all thought of self? 'Would He, to the end, let men do with Him as they pleased, though He had at His command all the powers of heaven? The temptation of the desert and of the mountain may, for a moment, have returned, and who can tell the struggle it must have been to overcome it?

Nor was even this all. The mysteries of the divine counsels must be for ever unknown, but they pressed, in all their weight, on His absolutely sinless soul. He was to give His life a ransom for man: to be made an offering for sin, though He knew none: to be repaid for infinite love and goodness by ignominy and simme. Perfect innocence freely yielding itself to misconception and death, for the unworthy and vile, would be transcendent even in a man, but in the Son of God. Who can tell what it was to have left the right hand of the Majesty in the heavens to stoop to Calvary t—for Him who could raise the dead to descend to the tombl. No wonder His human soul was for the moment eclipsed and clouded.

They passed, silent and sad, down the steep side of the Kedron, for the town gate was open that night as it was Passover, and, crossing by the bridge, were on the road which leads over the Mount of Olives to Bethany. The noise of the multitude had passed away, and the world lay asleep under the great Passover-moon. The path lay among stone-walled orchards and gardens, which Titus was, hereafter, to find so many deadly battle-grounds, with the walls for ramparts. He had gove out of the city, each night, to Bethany, but had no intention of doing so now, for He knew that His hour had come. Always given to solitary prayer, among the hills so dear to Him as a Galilæan, He had often turned aside to commune with His Father on one part or other of Olivet, and, this night, chose the stillness and shade of a spot which His presence made, henceforth, sacred for ever." An olive orchard lay near-known by the name of the Oil-Press-or, as we are accustomed to think of it-Gethsemane. It was ( led so from a rock-hewn trough in it, in which the rich olives were trodden with the feet, the oil flowing into a lower vat at hand. The new leaves were opening over the branches as they passed, and the moonlight fell through their motionless network, on the tender spring grass. Stillness, peace, solitude, filled earth and air: even the birds slept safely on the boughs, under the great sky; for they, too, had a Heavenly Father. Moriah rose in richly wooded terraces behind, crowned with the snow white Temple in its magnificence, and be

Barkal, scept in ve those the men ates that art from Senatere identir two of tly in his ly. Tho its memhad met doubtless

d His last al custom easts, the alms-the h-which er feasts. t the time close, the trains, the the word, an fitly-, for Thy rds of the eth in the name. of e Eleven, e on their

But the than that n, which, onder the exhorting n lay life, fair earth, the hope ly natural hole soul with absomistepte fore them, from its border of gardens and orchards, the yellow slopes of Olivet swelled between them and the loved cottage of Bethany. Amidst this quiet and beauty of nature Jesus turned aside, and entered the enclosure of Gethsemane, to strengthen. His soul for the coming crisis. It was a fitting place—amidst olives, the emblems of peaced peacel A square, stone walled spot, close by the path to Bethany, on the edge of the Kedron ravine, under the shadow of the Temple hill, is still shown as the spot. Venerable olive trees, tended with superstitious care, are claimed as the very witnesses of our. Saviour's agony, but is is fatal to the belief in their age, that Titus afterwards cut down all the trees around Jerusalem, for military use, and that the same fate has befailen the whole heighbourhood even in later sieges. But the gnamed trunks, twenty to thirty feet high, the broad branches, and the still seclusion, at least reproduce the outward features of the scene. When the soul is overwhelmed it seeks to be alone, and yet not too far from human sympathy and help. To take all the Eleven with Him, into the depths of the garden, would have invaded the sacredness of His retirement. Only three: the most trusted—His long, tried, and early followers: Peter, whose guest He had been in the bright Capernaum days, and James and John, knit to Him by special tendenness, if not even by relationship—were let follow Him beyond the first few steps into the enclosure. The others were to sit down and rest, while He went into the deeper shade, to pray. "Followed by the Three, He passed out of hearing of the rest, and presently, leaving even these three behind, with the words, "My sout is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death-tarry ye here, and watch with Me," He went on, about a stone's cast-alone. And, now, the great pent-up sorrow, hurst forth. It had been gathering, no one knows how long, but the excitement of action had repressed it as yet as the wind keeps a heavy rain cloud from breaking. But, here, instead of the city and its multitudes of men, there was silence and loneliness: instead of the distractions of conflict with enemies, or discourses with friends, He was face to face with His own thoughts, and with the Past and the Future, and that in the night, and in such awful isolation. For it seemed as if even heaven were as far from Him as the sympathy of earth; as if even its lights had gone out, and He was treading the valley of the shadow of death in a horror of thick darkness, Must He bear all? Must the cup be drunk to the dregs ? Was redemption possible only at the awful price that so oppressed His soul ? Could the hour not pass? Was it not possible for the Eternal Father to, save, Him from it 2111 other for the tort of The sacred writers labour to describe the agony that overwhelmed Him. They tell us that He first kneeled, then fell on His face on the earth, and prayed with strong crying and tears, till His sweat became, in it ware, great draps of blood, falling down to the ground. He WIS CICE soul, as it v Father, H nevertheles was a sirug and lowly, could be no even human lief. He ca wrestling s weariness o Peter-latel with him, t hour ? Wa selves to ten I have said faithfully, b weak, and it Leaving th but the clou turned to its or wish of H Father," crie except I drin be found in a He was fast what?—He hour's sloth, His sorest tri comfort was prostrating H sion to His He had been even if possi carnest cry h holy acquites perfect love wish: enough will of the Fa a moment da the face of Go the victory of pcared an ang Meanwhile, Master from i set to carry illeminated st

w. slopes

ide, and I for the

blems of

, on the

le hill, is supersti-

s agony

that the er sieges,

branches,

res of the

et not too

ven with ie sacred-

ong-tried,

he bright

by special m beyond

sit down

rest, and ds, "My here, and he. And, repressed ng. But,

as silence

enemies, thoughts,

d in such

far from

e out, and

horror of

e that so

t possible

whelmed

t became,

und a He

ink to the

hany

was "exceeding sorrowful," "sore amazed," "very heavy." His soul as it were sank under the vision that rose before it. "Only Father," He cried, "if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not my will, but Thine, be done." But as long as there was a struggle of the frail human nature, and a cry, however reverent and lowly, for change, if possible, in the burden laid on Him, there could be no peace. Rising from the ground, in His agony of spirit, even human sympathy and presence seened as if they would be a relief. He came therefore to the Three, but only to find that, in His long, wrestling supplications, even they. His nearest ones, overcome by weariness of body and spirit, lay sunk in deep sleep. Housing Peter—lately so boastful—He gently reproved and warned him, and with him, the others. "What ! could you not watch with me one hom ? Watch, and pray as ye do so, that ye may not expose yourselves to temptation to be untrue to me, and to be offended at me, as I have said you would. The spirit indeed is willing to stand by me faithfully, but human nature, with its instinct of self-preservation, is weak, and if you head not, will make you fall?"

Leaving them again, 'He once more prostrated Himself in prayer, but the clouds were already breaking, for His whole being had returned to its habitual harmony with the will of God. Every desire or wish of His own, was passing like a troubled dream. "O my Father," cried He how, "if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, Thy will be done." Perfect peace of soul can only be found in absolute submission to the One Supreme Will, and that. He was fast attaining. Returning to the Three-who knows for what?-He found them asleep again. They were losing, by their hour's sloth, the opportunity of cheering and helping their Master in. His sorest trial. Man had thus failed Him, but the need of human comfort was passing away. Retiring, therefore, once more, and prostrating Himself a third time, the same calm, child-like submission to His Father again rose from His lips. He had triumphed He had been heard in that, He feared. He no longer craved a change, even if possible, in the ordered course of the divine purposes: His carnest cry had passed into still submission; His intense desire into holy acquitescence. He thought no lenger of Himself, but of the perfect love and wisdom of the Father. He had ceased to have a wish: enough for Him, henceforth, the all-holy, all-wise, all-loving, will of the Father. His spirit had broken through the cloud that for a moment darkened it, and reposed once more in the calm light of the face of God. The tempter had fled, and, in His place, as after the victory of the wilderness, we are told by St. Luke, "there appeared an angel unto Him from Heaven, strengthening Him." of fol Meanwhile, Judas had been busy. Exposed, and dismissed by his Master from the company of the Apostles, he had only been the mora set to carry out his miserable purposes. Hastening through the illeminated streets to the autiontice be had, forthwith, reported that the favour ble moment seemed to have come. Jesus had, once more ventured into Jerusalem, and though it might not be safe to take Him in the thronged city, it would be easy to come upon Him outside the walls as He was in the habit of going each night for prayer to a spot at the foot of the Mount of Olives. The traitor meant Geldsemane. meant Gethsemane.

figuration because E back in con seek ye?" a the boldest.

me, let the of those w even in an Fear, as self, but no welfd spell had given having to p by himself that he sho

Him the cu therefore, fri their numbe kissed Him do so safely. for what hav could he giv aged by his Jesus and bo New follow was brave, co a word or a them with t or thinking thinself alone a flerce cut at grazing the s heroic act, bu the wounded deprecated th and an enace and then touc

He told him t He, will suff lives to dange given met S suffering, Peu He would sen legion for each liappen which idea of resista

prayer to a spot at the tool of the Mount of Olives The traitor meant Gethsemane. "The suthorities remained in permanent session till the arrest was effected, and it once detached part of the Temple Watch, a body avoing as the police of the Temple and only armed, in a few cases, with wooden butches or clubs." The afficers of the watch, and even some of the 'chief priests and 'lders, if their excitement scoups-nied them." It had been thought unwise, however, to trust so graves a minister to an undescriptified and weak force, and the high priest had, therefore, communicated with Thiase, representing, doubtiess, that he proposed the arrest of a faise Messiah, dangernus to the Roman power, sind feared a rescue " bund" had therefore, been told off from the troops in Antonia and there, with lanterns and torches, see discover Jesus should the strempt to blue Himself, led the way, behind judas, who went foreness as guile. It was the full moon of April, but the trees and recesses might and an attempt at escape. Useas had fust returned from His third, prayer, and was rousing this discopies ( when He heard the noise of the solutions and the arrows, and eaw their lights approaching. The disappointment even in His must trusted thends, called from His third, prayer, and was rousing this disciples when He heard the noise of the solution and was rousing the set trusted thends, called from His third, prayer, he old then the watching was no tonger needed. His low, therefore, He old then that they might steep on now and they therefore. He old them that they might steep on now and the their form that for the solution of the first that they might steep on now and the their form. His day cho there the first had therefore is that the bade them the day out day out ded this heart? With Keen but gentle hour, therefore, He old them that they might steep on now and take their from the day chose, ther watching was no tonget needed. His hour had come. Then, speak-ing in a seriom strain. He bade them trise and go out with Him for Judias and his employers had utterly misjudged the character of Jesus. Knowing all that was before Him, and, now, calmly victo-rious over momentary human weakness. He did not wait for His rious over momentary human weakness. He did not walt for His enemies, but, taking His disciples with Him, weat out of the garden enclosure to meet them. Whom seek ye?" said He, as they ap-proached. "Jesus' the Nazarene," answered the toremost. To their confusion, the caim, self-possessed speaker presently told them that He was Jesus. Not a few in the Jewish crowd now gathered before Him, had heard Him spoken of as a prophet, and had, per-haps, even accepted Him as such. They had all heard of His super-natural power. From whatever source, and He might now use it against them, though hitherto He had never availed Himself of it for personal ends. His kingly composure and dignity, moreover, awed them, for grandeur of sour and bearing enforce acknowledgment. Withed, it may be, "He revealed a mementary glimpse of His trans-

÷

Aguration splendour, to show that He freely surrendered Himself, because His hour had come. From whatever cause the crowd tell back in confusion, overturning each other in their alarm. Whom seek vet "asked Jesus once more. Jesus the Nazarene," muttered the boldest. I fold you, replied He, that I am He, if you seek me, let these men, my disciples, go their way." He had said, that of these whom the Father had given Him He had lost noner and even in an earthly sense. He would now protect them. Tear as yet, paralyzed the crowd. Jesus had campy owned Him-self, but no one dated to lay hold of Him. Judgs still under the weird spell of even hight well dread that all would miscarry. Ho had river is signing by which to know his late Master, reckoning on

I. once safe to n Him ght for traitor st was a body cases. d even compa-

gravea st had, s, that Roman en told arch in of the torches. he way, noon of pe.ov? rousing ecrowd, n in His ed. and ded His em that

ie; their speak fim. for acter of y victo for His garden hey ap-To ld them athered ad, per

s. super v use it

it for awed

loment. trans

had given a signal by which to know his late Master, reckoning an having to point Him out, and would now embolden those with him, by himself taking the first step in further action. He had arranged that he should mark Jesus to them, by going up to Him and giving Him the customary kiss of a disciple to his teacher. Stepping out therefore, from the crowd, into the circle of the disciples, as one of their number, he approached with a hypocritical "Hail, Pabbi," and kissed Him tenderly. He knew, by long experience, that he might do so safely. To the calm and keen question of Jesus— "Good friend, for what have you come?"—he returned no answer; for what answer could he give? But he had gained his end, for those behind, encour-aged by his remaining uninjured after such treachery, laid hold of Jesus and bound Him, without the least resistance on His part. Now followed the only act of violence; for Peter, impetious as he was brave, could not see his Master thus led away, a prisoner, without a word of act of the part of His friends. Lord, shall we smite them with the swort? cried he, and without waiting an answer, them with the swort? chied he: and without waiting an answer, or thinking of the hopelessness of a rescue, or of the odds against himself alone, he drew the sword lie had hung by his side, and made a flerce cut at one of the servants of the high priest, fortunately only grazing the skull, but yet cutting off an ear. It was a splentidly heroic act, but sadly out of place under such a Teacher. Turning to the wounded man, and at the same moment rebuking Peter, Jeaus deprecated the fury of the crowd at the brave attack, by soft words and an efficient of the injury done. "Suffer thus far," said He, and then touched the ear, and healed it. Forthwith, turning to Peter, He told him to sheathe the sword. "He who uses violence," added He. will suffer violence. If you use the sword, you expose all your lives to danger. Shall I not drink the cup which my Father hath given me? Shall I hesitate to please Him? If I wished to escape suffering, Peter, dost thou not know that I could ask my Father, and suffering, Peter dost thou not know that I could ask my Father, and He would send me, instead of your help, twelve legions of angels-s legion for each of you-to protect me? But, then, that would not happen which the Scriptures have forefold I must undergo." The disciples, after the first impulsive thought, had shandoned all idea of resistance; and as any attempt to rescue Jesus was pleasty hopeles, since He did not put forth His supernatural power on His own belief; and would not let them do anything; and as they them. selves seemed in danger, through the impetuosity of Peters, all took to flight as soon as they saw their Master fairly in the hands of His enemies. The intense activement of the hierarchy had broken through all restraints of official dignity. The proposal for the arrest had been too important a matter to be trusted to any underlings and bence. some of the head priests, and of the "elders," had joined the leaders of the Temple police in the wild march to Getheemane. Surrounded on all aldes, and firmly bound as if His captors still feared that He would escape or be rescued; Jesus now turned to these dignitaries, so sadly out of their place in such a scene, and calmly, but keenly brought home to tliem their shame. "You come out against me," said He, has you might against a robber, or the head of a rising, with swords and clubs. I sat, day by day, in the Temple, teaching, in the thick of the people. You had every apportunity for laying hold on me then, but you did nothing. The darkness of night is fitted foryour designs: it is your hour: the powers of evil work by choice in the dark But, in all this, there is no chance: it happens only in accordance with the predictions of the prophets." He said no more, and let them lead Him away. DThe disciples were scattered, but one form hovered after them, white in the moonlight. It was that of a young man, who had, apparently, been roused, from sleep by the tumult, and having thrown his white linen sleeping, cloth sound him in his haste, was following Jesus towards the city. Who he was must remain for ever unknown ? Was it Mark himself, who alone relates it? dr one from the house likely attached to Gethsemane? Some have supposed him to have been Lazarus; others have had different conjeotures; he was, at least, rome faithful heart, eager to see what they would do with his Lord. "The roldiers had let the Apostles flee, hav. ing no orders to prest them; but this strange apparition attracted. their attention, and they sought to lay hold on him to Casting off the cloth around him, however, helescaped out of their hundsonned onen Yet there were friendly eves following the sad scene, in the safe darkness of the night. Peter and another of the Apostles, who could only be John, had fled no further than safety demanded, and followed the crowd, at a distance, unable to leave one they held so deer. The great object with the authorities was to hurry forward the pron ceedings against their prisoner so quickly, that they might hand Himover to the Romans as one already condemned, before the people could be roused on His side. They had gained their point, so far, and

On reaching Jerusalem, Jesus was first led to the mansion of Hannas, the head of the reigning priestly family, either in deference to his recognized influence, or because, as the oldest high priest, he was still recognized as the rightful, if not legal, dignitary. He could see Jesus, and hear His defence, and advise his son-in-law how to act. His "snakelike" craft might help the less acute Cataplias. What pa known. 191 high priest tion wans a

The hou ings, or cha panages b tares havin or tather c square, the SOIDO CASILAS of soft gree offers the able spot f rounditit some house and, mall, building ____! "The hiera "Delinee's of priests, with result of th had externe bunal. The of establish rights? gath excitement ceeding. or of Hillel ger ceedings w the flerce ed name Sanhe blies, simply not used in t of dignitarie

The com house of Ca of Uudatam who could h their predete particulation anti-od-dae one biocould silf base of cilf base of

THE LIDE OF OHRIST.

What passed before Hannas, or what higts he sent Calaphas, are not known. It may be that he simply passed on the prisoner to the legal high priest at once, hurrying to follow Him; and secure His condemnation was still to shart out RAT habit half the markes worth as more regulated

D HIS

bem-

ok to

mies.

di all

been ;

inded

at He

ies, son

enly,

, with

in the old on

ed for nly in more; ut one

at of a by the s must relates

at con-

at they

e hav

tracted

off the e safe

could

llowed

in Lingi

d Him

people

faried

annas, to his

e was

uld see t. His

The houses of the great, in the East, are, rather, a group of buildings, or cliambers of unequal height, hear or above each other, with ages between and intervening open spaces; the different atrue. tures having independent entrances, and separate roofs, Such a house, or rather cluster of mouses dias usually the form of a large lickow some the four sides of which surround a toomy court any di in some cases in others, planted with trees, and ornamented with a lawn of softwireen. Sometimes an underground cistern, a spring of a bath. offers the luxury of abundant water, and makes the court in agreeable spot for relaxation or refreshment. Porticos and galleries surroundbit; and furnisk chambers for guests and entertainments. in some houses there is also a forecourt, enclosed from the street by walls, and, in all, the inner court is reached by an archway through the front building - "the porch" in the narrative of the Gospels and the first "The hierarchical party were in permanent session in the mansion or "palice" of Calaphas " A commission, consisting mainly of the chief priests, with Calaphas at their head, had been appointed, to await the result of the Meachery of Judas; for the whole party in its alarm. had extended joint action, though their taking any judicial steps at all was irregular, for they formed no legal court or recognized tribunal They were simply acting as a self constituted body; partisans of established ecclesiastical order, and defenders of their own vested rights? (gathered, at the) summons of the high priest in the blind excitement of fanaticism and passion, without rules of judicial proceeding, or legal standing as a court. The chief Rabhis of the school of Hillel generally kept aloof from such tumultuous and violent proceedings, which were already too common and left them to those of the florce schuol of Schammai and to the merciles Sadducees The name Sanhedrim is given in the Gospels to such extemporized assentblies, simply as such? for the word means "an assembly." But it is not used in them as the title of a legal tribunal. It was before a mob of dignitaries not an "court," that Jesus was broughted milot of the

The commission were awaiting the arrival of their prey in the house of Calaphas, who, as high priest, was the only representative of Judaism recognized by the Romans, and, therefore, the only one who could hold official relations with Pilate, to ask him to carry out their predetermined resolution to put Jesus to death.

On react they have the new we have the minute in all informated its firm and the the many of the second of the sec

CHAPTER LXI. THE JEWISH TRIXEL Passure through the closed porch, or archway, into the inner court, His captors led Jesus to one of the ohambers, opening from it, where His Judges sat, ready to go through the mockery of a trial. The Roman soldiars had been balted outside, for their presence would have been a defilement, but the Jewish serving men went in with the prisoner, though only the few required accompanied Him to the inner chamber. The tribunal about to condenue Him, it must not be forgotten, was not a legal "court." but simply a self-constituted 'Committee of Public Safety", extemporized by the excited Temple authorities and Rabbis. Ike the Vigilance Committees of America, with a Jewish Folquier. Tinville for President, in the person of the Sadducee Caiaphas. Knowing the illegality of their proceedings, they could only venture to propose the framing as indicment to lay before Pilnte, and trust to, their violence for extorting a condemnation from him. The hierprechy were mesters of form, and knew how to honour the

The hierarchy were masters of form, and knew how to henour the appearance of justice while mocking the reality. In imitation of the traditional usages of the Sanhedrim, while it existed, the judges before whom Jesus was led gat, turbaned, on cushions or pillows, in Oriental fashion, with crossed legs, and unshed feet, in a half circle; Cataphas, as high priest, in the centre, and the chief or oidest according to precedence, on each side. The prisoner was placed, standing, before Cataphas; at each end of the semicircle sat a scribe, to write out the sentence of acquittal or condemnation; some bailiffs, with cords and thongs, guarded the Accused, while a few others stood befind, to call witnesses, and, at the close, to carry out the decision of the judges.

Like most other matters in the Judaism of the time, nothing could be fairer, or more attractive, on paper, but on paper alone, than the rules for the trial of prisoners. The accused was, in all cases, to be held innocent, till proved guilty. It was an axiom, that "the Sanhedrim was to save, not to destroy life,". No one could be tried and condemned in his absence, and when a person accused was brought before the court, it was the duty of the president, at the outset, to admonish the witnesses to remember the value of human life, and to take care that they forget nothing that would tell in the prisoner's favour. Nor was he left undefended; a Baat Rib or counsel was appointed, to see that all possible was done, for his acquittal. Whatever evidence tended to aid him was to be freely admitted, and no member of the court who had once spoken in favour of acquittal could afterwards vote for condemnation. The votes of the youngest of the jud their senio two to con at once, tl Hence, cap or public f night; the day before. the sentenc Rules so before Caia tlie prostitu later days o tells us !!! though they death of an case of Jen the close. office, in ut prisoner alo by the judge though the l or counsel." even the pos The Court, quired, to ac the trustwor hand, to the Willifulness. been felt by afterward4 I out as a fals trines of the or fathe ni was, Calso. co Christ's con wase subring BIf we try t leant vit it guilty of son which Calap Old Testame self the Mes charges so of die Sabbath them, were n

TVIII.

Adr to (Bisis Fish F)

Gilavit Acres in the 19 stoll

10 1113 1111 inner

rom, it, a drial.

resence wentin d Him it must constiexcited ttees of the peroftheir

a indictorting a

spinott ist nour the n of the dges, belows, in f circle;

-accordtanding. to write Is, with rs stood decision Tomustis g could than the es, to be the Sanried and

brought

utset, to and to

isoner's sel was

quittal

ed, and cquittal

ounges

of the judges were taken first, that they might not be influenced by their seniors. In capital charges, it required a majority of at least two to condemn, and while the verdict of acquitial could he given at once, that of guilty could only be pronounced the day after. Hence, capital trials could not begin on the day preceding a Sabbath. or public feast. No criminal trial could be carried through in the night; the judges who condemned any one to death had to fast all the day before; and no one could be executed on the same day on which the sentence was pronounced.

Rules so precise and so humane condemn the whole trial of Jesus, before Caiaphas, as an outrage. It was, in fact, an anticipation of the prostitution of justice which Josephus records as common in the later days of Jerusaiem. "Fittitious tribunals and judicatines," he tells us,<sup>114</sup> were set up, and men called together to act as judges though they had no real authority, when it was desired to secure the death of an opponent.<sup>12</sup> As in those later instances, so now, in the case of Jebus, they kept up the form and mockery of a tribunal to the close. No accuser appeared, and the judge himself took the office, in utter violation of all propriety. Witnesses against the office, in utter violation of all propriety. Witnesses against the prisoner alone appeared, and were, indeed, cagerly prought forward by the judge; but not a single witness in His defence was called, though the law gave such witnesses the preference. No Baal-Rib-or counsel was assigned Him, nor were any facilities provided, or even the possibility offered, for His calling witnesses in His favour, The "Court," from the first, sought to condemn; not as the law reanired, to acquit. There was no attempt, as was usual, to ascertain, duired, to acquit. There was no attempt, as was usual, to ascertain the trustworthiness of the hostile evidence, nor any warning, before-hand, to those who gave it. of the moral and legal offence of un-withfulbess. So keenly, indeed, has the judicial murder of Jesus hear felt by the Jewish nation, in later times, that the doctrine was afterwards invented in the Talmud, that any one who gave Hinself out as a fulse Messiah, or who led the people astray from the docr trines of their fathers, could be tried and condemned the same day, or fathe night. "Yet in contradiction to this the monstrous table. whs, also, colned, that a crier called aloud, for forty days, before. Christ's condemnation, for witnesses in His favour to come for,

March M. A. A. "If we try to discover by what law it was possible to condemn Jesus e-ully lit will be found, that, provided He could not be proved guilty of some civil crime, there were no written laws whatever to which Camplias and flis assessors could appeal against Him. The Old Testament had not anticipated the case of any one calling Him-shifthe Messian, whether in a national of spiritual sense, and the charges to often made against Jesus, of having broken the laws of die Sabbath, even if He could not have defended Himself against. them, were not punishable, by the laws of the day, with death. The lay wholly outside the law of Mones, and even of these expansions and modifications of it which formed the current law, in A pretext had to be invented for the course taken. His real offence was that the Church authorities felt, He was diffusing a spiritual influence. which, if left to develop and spread, would inexitably undermine the corrupt theorracy, and with it, their own power and worldly interests To gain a brief respite, they were bent on putting Him to death, though His lofty purity of life and morals far transcended the highest ideals hitlerto known, and His divine goodness was altogether unique: They did not see that, to kill Him, was only to hasten the ruin of the cause they sought to uphold, me Will daised if out around But His spiritual glory remained hidden to their wilful blindness, and the shadow into which it threw their own shortcomings roused only fanatical rage There remained nothing, therefore, since they could bring no capital charge recognized in the Law, against Him, except to feign horror as Jews, at the presumption, of one so much below them in worldly station, raising Himself above the divinely revealed laws of Moses, and even claiming equality with God ; and as hypocritical friends of the Roman, whom they in reality hated in. tensely, to pretend indignation and fear at the popular disturbance and disloyuity to the Emperor, which they affected to believe would result from His claim as Messiah King, Only on this last ground could they secure the indispensable assistance of Roman power, to put Him to death. of miner live were of the bar mout of bree of the bree of the bree of the would let Him feel what it was to denounce the priesthood as He had done, and to hold them up to the oblequy of the pation, as careless of the charge entrusted to them, by His taking it on Himself to interfere with their Temple jurisdiction, in His puritanical ;; cleansing, of the sacred enclosures. He had brought no end of odium on them, by the contrast between His zeal in this matter, and their alleged neglect, in allowing so-called abuses. The fanatical reformer, who would turn the world upside down, was now standing, hound, before him, and he had Him at his mercy. The rest, of the self constituted judges had their own injuries to avenge, for had not they, the Scribes and Pharisees, -teachers of the nation, - heen held up to contempt, as unsparingly as the knot of high-caste Sadducees? Caiaphas had long made up his mind what to do. The form of a trial might be necessary, but the result was determined beforehand. He had already counselled both Sadducees, and Pharisees, to lay aside mutual disputes, and unite against Jesus, as one who endangered their, common interests, and to sacrifice Him without hesitation. Policy, he had urged, demanded that He he at once put to death, to prevent His overthrowing the whole ecclesiastical constitution, with which. their weifare and dignity were identified. The sentence was thus proclaimed before Calaphas took his seat that night; the judge had already openly said that he intended to condemn. The whole pro-

coolings we necessary ai Deadly on amiable tern common for fiercely at his disciples and What He h announcing before, at his Him as the siah, and wo such? Jeaus care for to have r As to Him itself. *1 h have no acci publicly, in t and enemies: hearers the p secretly, -- no ask some of have said to! tial than any first be exam 91 But an hol by the Law, They sought as possible: people, amo morning duty, and sh proving His mgry words rupted, for nccord, beca Hannas or C decency, for to silence I said he. Ne not attempt. the calm sel what is false I say be righ right to take coolings were, in fact, simply a smooth hypotriey, to secure the necessary aid of the Roman executioner. Deadly chemics at other times, the "court" were now on the most.

pretext

was that fluence,

nine the

idly in-Him to

ided the together

sten the

indness,

roused

ice they

st Him.

io much

divinely

cd; and ated in-

urbance

e would ground

ower, to

ould let

d done.

s of the

interfere

sing" of

n them, alleged

her, who

L before

stituted

Scribes

ntempt.

has had ight be

He had

mutual

eir com-

licy, he prevent

h which

as thus lge had

DE DIO

Deadly chemies at other times, the "court" were now on the most amiable terms with each other in their sinilety to hunt down the common foe. The proceedings began by Calaphas, as he glanced hercely at his prisoner, asking Him various questions respecting His disciples and His beaching: Why he gathered so many followers? What He had meant by sending them through Galliee and Judes, announcing the coming of the Kingdom of God ? Why, a few days before, at His entrance to the city, He had allowed the crowds to hall Him as the Messiah ? What He meant by the kingdom of the Messiah, and why He did not formally and publicly proclaim Himself as such?

Jeans carefully avoided any allusion to His disciples in His answer; for to have referred to them might have brought them into danger. As to Himself, the questions needed no inquiry; the matter spoke for itself: "I have taught frankly and without reserve," said He; 'I have no secret doctrines; I have spoken everything I had to teach, publicly, in the synagogues and schools of the land, before friends and enemics; and here in Jerusalem, in the Tomple, where I had for hearers the people assembled from all parts. I have taught nothing secretly, --nothing except in these public places. Why do you ask met ask some of the multitudes who have heard me. (They know what I have said to them, and what they say will seem to you more impartial than any words of mine. The Law requires that witnesses should first be examined in any trial."

But an honest and formal inquiry of this kind, though necessary by the baw, was no part of the plan of Calaphas and his assessora They sought only to get Jesus handed over to the Bomans, as soon as possible; that He might be beyond the hope of rescue, when the people, among whom He had so many supporters, awoke in the morning. That He should dare to direct the high priest as to his duty, and should presume to throw on the court the rightful task of proving His guilt, was a fresh offence, and provoked fierce looks and angry words from the bench. The defence was at once rudely interrupted, for one of the turnkeys standing by, whether of his own accord, because he saw the feeling of the judges, or at a line from. Hannas or Calaphas, in utter violation of judicial rules, or common decency, forthwith struck the prisoner on the mouth, with his hand. to silence Him . . . Answerest thou the high pricst thus boldly?" said he. Nothing could have pleased the bench better, and they did not attempt to rebuke the offender. It failed, however, to disturb what is false," He replied, " prove that I have done so, but if what I say be right, why do you strike me violently thus 2. No one has a right to take the law in his own hands, much less a servant of the stready or only haid that he intended to concernal The whore you

The appeal to the known and established forms of trial had not been lost. Hostile witnesses had aircady been sought to bring home to Jesus, if possible, some charge of false dectrine or seditious fanguage, but none had been found. The only evidence to be had would not suffice, even in such an assumbly, to testablish a capital charge of which the Romans would take cognizance. There were many, doubtless, who had heard Him use language which had given the Rabbis offence, - such as, " Thy shas are forgiven thee "-words regarded as bhaphemy," and, as such, punishands with death, by Jewish law; but they wanted to condemn Him on a charge bunish able by Roman law They had tried by spice, for months back; to draw from Him something they could twist into an attack on the national religion, or the Roman government, but had failed.""It was hard to get a tolerable pretext for condemning Himtigiat Ladquidd ... Such evidence as they had was now however brought forward in the hope that it would at least prove Him to be " a deceiver of the people." stirring them up, and exciting them against the laws of Moses as defined by the Rabbis. But it was a fundamental rule of Jewish jurisprudence, that condemnation could only follow the concurs rent testimony of at least two witnesses Some, however who came forward, had nothing relevant to say, and others contradicted themselves, "His last discourses were, doubtless, the special orime in the eyes of His accusers. Little could be said about His ovation on catering Jerusalem, except that He had not refused it, nor was even the expulsion of the buyers and sellers from the Temple brought up. for the spirit that dictated it was evidently noble, however the act itself might be challenged in The strong invectives against the collect tive hierarchy offered a safer ground for accusation. Unfortunately for the judges, suitable witnesses were not to be found." At the best those who came forward garbled, or misunderstood the words of Jesus; as the hierarchy themselves afterwards, before Pllate, twisted those respecting the tribute money into a directly opposite sense? But even thus, the testimony amounted to nothing. I Time was pass ing dangerously fast, without anything done for instandard addum andor At last, one witness appeared, who alleged that he liad heard Jesus say. Pull down this Temple, it is only the work of man, and L will in three days, build another, not made with hands." Others agreed that He had said words which seemed intended to bring the Temple into contempt; an offence so grave that it was afterwards made a capital charge against the first martyr, Stephen; that he had spoken blasphemous words against this holy place;" but their statements did not tally, and their witness was therefore worthless and Meanwhile, Jesus had stood silent. Even to charges so hateful to Jewish cars as contempt) of the Temple. He had made no answer! He knew it would be idle to speak before such a tribunal, and kept a dignified silence. To the judges, on the other hand, they seemed of the greatest weight. Cataphas a true inquisitor-could an longer

DICEPTVE OI up in front own defence a confession spoke for it worthless words were pearls cast. conscious a even His h course; f, He mambers, f die, innocen Caiaphas taken the y acuteness, he in Jowish er cism, and th admission of bearing to if possible, a go no further the plot, by l of the Roma he determine ble; compron featson He h offence; foc il silent and di and speveal H was evidently enthusiasti an Looking st robes, with p the matter, by of the Jewis the lixing Go and require y the King Mes bThe long fo He had hithe pressions, rath tence of deat Messiah : that rather; in His days before, I greeted His e ad not

r home

ius Tan-

be had capital

re were

d given

words

ath: by

bunish-

back! to

on the

Colico 1 -

vard, in riof the

lews of

rule of concur-

er. who

erime in

tion on ight up.

the act

e collec-

tunately the best vords of twisted

BISCOSCO

as pats

tolics, wi

d Jesus , and I Others

ring the

he had

hlessard

tefulto

answer!

kopt u

emed of

longer

radicted .

preserve official calmness. | Springing from his couch, and standing up in front of it, he demanded if Jesus had nothing to say in Hit own defence, against all this. What did His silence mean ? Was it a confession, of guilt 7 But He still remained alent: "The matter spoke for fiself when culimony given against Him was discordant and worthless. If His past life could not secure His secultal mere words were useless. .... To use His own earlier saying they would be pearls cast, before swine, who would turn again and read Him. Self conscious and kingly. He bore Himself with a dignity that impressed even His judges. "He would let violence and falsehood ran their course, ". He would not recognize the tribunal, nor do nonour to'its members, for He knew that they were determined that He should die, innocentior guilty, to serve their own ends, where determined that international Caiaphas might have closed the examination at this point, and have taken the votes of the Commission. But with guick, hypocritical acuteness, he felt that the charge best sustained was an offence only in Jewish eyes; that the evidence in support of it was open to oriticism, and that the slience of the prisoner might not, after all, be an admission of guilt in His pride, moreover, was touched by such a bearing towards bimself, the primate, and he would force an answer, if possible to save like own dignity. It would, besides, be better to go no further into matters which might protract the sitting; and spok the plot, by letting morning return before Jesus was in the safe hands of the Romans. "True to the serpent cunning of the house of Hannas, he determined to bring things to a head by making Him if possible, compromise Himself at once with Jewish opinion, and Roman feats ... He hoped to worm out what could be distorted into a civil offense, for this keen knowledge of men told him, that, while fithy shout and dignified hitherto the prisoner would give a frank reply, and reveal His sooret thoughts when honour demanded it. The was evidently about to die, as He had been charged with living, an insquesticeling the frinte money had a directing the solution is a second and the Looking struight at the nocused, the mitred hypocrite, in his white robes, with practised official solemnity went at once to the heart of the matter, by the demand, uttered in Aramate, the common speech of the Jewish courts as of the nation. "I put you on your bath by the living God, whose curse falls on those who swear falsely by Him? and require you to tell us whether you are the Malcha Mesolichathe King Messiah the Son of God Ever Blessed?" monitor technol bar bag foresein moment had come, when an open claim which He had hitherto left to be inferred from His acts and figurative expressions, rather than openly stated, would bring on Him swift sen tence of death. Calaphas knew that many believed Him to be the Messiah: that He Himself had not refused the awful name, but had rather, in His discourses, justified its being given Him; and that, a days before. He had allowed the thousands of Galilean prigram. who greeted His entrance to Jerusalem, to salute Him by it. But the enclesiastical authorities had decided that He neither was, nor could be, the Messiah, and hence, in their eyes, His claiming openly to be so would be a crimen keed majestatis—blasphemous high treason, against the true Sovereign of the Land—Jehövah. He had hitherto ovaded a direct answer, except in rare cases, because the time had not yet come for His openly declaring Himself. To have done so before all hope of longer life was passed, would have been to cut short His public work in founding His Kingdom.

But the supreme moment had now arrived. With kingly dignity, in the face of certain death for His words, and in solemr answer to the appeal to "the living God" as to their truth, Jesus calmly replied to the adjuration; "If I tell you, yo will not believe, and if I ask questions that would prove my highest claims you would not answer. Thou hast said the Truth—I am the Malcha Meschicha—the King Messiala—the Son of God, and Son of Man. In my present guise ye will see me no more; but when yo have slain me, I, the Son of Man, will forthwith sit on the right hand of the Majesty of God, and when ye see me next it will be sitting there, and coming in the clouds of heaven."

This declaration might have seemed sufficiently explicit, but the excitament of the judges, true Orientals, had grown ungovernable. Rising on their cushions, one and all demanded, with loud voices, "Art Thou, then, the Son of God?" "You have said it," replied Jesus, "AND I AM." Caiaphas, had gained his end. Hearing witnesses would have re-

Caiaphas had gained his end. Hearing witnesses would have required time, and the whole scheme would have miscarried, if Jerusalem woke and the Galilæan pilgrims learned, while a rescue was still possible, the secret arrest, through the night, of their fellow-countryman, whom many of them esteemed a prophet of Jehovah, if not the very Messiah.

Caiaphas played his part well. Quivering with passion, and triumphant at his success, he forgot the practised coldness of the Sadducee, and once more springing from his couch with well feigned horror at the words of Jesus, though they were precisely what he had wished, rent the bosom of his priestly robe of fine linen, as if it were too narrow to let him breathe, after hearing such blasphemy. He forgot that it was the worst of blasphemy for his own lips to use the name of Jehovah as a mere cloak for crime and wickedness! Jesus had spoken with the calmness of truth and innocence. He had applied to Himself words of Daniel, and of the Psalms, universally understood of the Messiah, and had predicted His sitting henceforth with Jehovah on the throne of heaven, and descending in divine majesty to judge the earth, though, while He spoke, He was at the very threshold of a shameful death.

"He has blasphemed!" cried Calaphas. "What need is there to hear more witnesses? You have heard the blasphemy from His own lips. He gives Himself out as the true Messianic Son of God, which we have colleagues In an ir already ap prisoner of He had ki have secur too many der. The themselves. that the Me Theocracy, Rome. Th It might be broke the L what else ?-And, besi harm if a si the common identify its All voted confession J

They had or Judaism, Roman proc siah, He cou up for an att The forma to be confirm three o'clock sentence coul Mean while while the jud nothing, now prisoner had always, in the those in char of the judges,

Their passions

Jewish bigots

treated Him,

Having blinds

with their fists

rions and othe

to use on the f

lesus had such

cands, while s ve have already decided He is not? What seems good to you, my colleagues?" In an irregular, illegal, self-constituted court, whose members had already approved the cold-blooded counsel of Caiaphas, to put the prisoner out of the way guilty or innocent; and thus quench the fire done so

to cut

dignity,

iswer to replied

if I ask

answer.

he King

guise ye

of Man,

nd when clouds of

but the

vernable.

d voices

" replied

have re-

if Jerusa-

was still

-country-

if not the

and tri-

the Sad-

gned horit he had

if it were

the name

lesus had

d applied

Ny under-

orth. with vine maj-

t the very

s there to

His own

od, which

He for-prisoner out of the way, guilty or innocent; and thus quench the fire He had kindled, in His own blood, no evidence or want of it could have secured an acquittal. Too many private and class grudges, and too many vested rights lent weight to any pretext for a judicial murder. The very humility and the purely spiritual aims of Jesus were. themselves, a deadly offence; for their Jewish pride flattered itself that the Messiah would wield supernatural powers to restore the old Theocracy, and make Israel the head of the nations instead of hated Rome. Then, was He not a Galilæan-one of a race they despised? It might be true that He wrought miracles, but one who wilfully broke the Law, as He openly did, by Sabbath healing-and who knew what else?-must work them by help from Beelzebub, not Jehovah. And, besides, had not the high pricest told them that it was no great harm if a single man were put out of the way, even if innocent, for the common good? When, moreover, did ferocious bigotry fail to identify its cry for blood with pious zeal for the glory of God? All voted that further investigation was useless: that on His own confession Jesus was worthy of death. The selection is the activity and and and

They had, at last, their wish. All charges affecting the Temple, or Judaism, would have raised only the contemptuous laugh of the Roman procurator. But now that Jesus had claimed to be the Messiah, He could be represented to Pilate as a State criminal delivered up for an attempt against the imperial rights of Tiberius.

The formal, preliminary examination was over, but its result needed to be confirmed by a larger gathering of the hierarchy. It was about three o'clock in the morning, and some hours must elapse before the sentence could be formally ratified.

Meanwhile; Jesus was left in charge of the rough Temple police, while the judges separated for an hour or two of sleep. There was nothing, now, to restrain the coarse natures to whom the condemned prisoper had been consigned. One under sentence of death was always, in these rough ages, the sport and mockery of his guards, and those in charge of Jesus, made worse than common by the example of the judges, yented their cruelty on Him with the coursest brutality. Their passions, indeed, intensified their bitterness, for they were fierce Jewish bigots. He was to die as a false prophet, and as such they treated Him, racking their ingentity to invent insult and injury. Having blindfolded Him, some struck Him violently on the head with their fists, or perhaps with the vine-stick, which Roman centurtions and other officials carried as their sign of rank, and were wont to use on the face or head of the soldiers; for some of the captors of lesus had such stayes with them-others struck Him with their open ands, while still others, adding the greatest indighty an Oriental could offer, spat in His face; crying, as they insulted and tortured Him, -" Prophesy to us, thou Messiah, who was it that did it?" The hands they had bound had healed the sick, and raised the dead : the lips they smote had calmed the winds and the waves. One word, and the splendours of the Mount of Transfiguration would have filled the chamber; one word, and the menials now sporting with him at their. will would have perished. But, as He had begun and continued. He. would end-as self-restrained in the use of His awful powers on His own behalf as if He had been the most helpless of men. Divine patience and infinite love knew no wearying. He had but to will it and walk free, but He came to die for man, and He would do it. While His examination had been proceeding, the central court, which seems to have been paved, was the waiting place of the servants of the several judges, and of the underlings of the high priest. and the Temple watch. John and Peter recovering from their first panic, and anxious to see what became of their. Master, had followed at a distance, till He was brought to the house of Gaiaphas. The door of the outer court, or porch, had been closed, to prevent the entrance of any one likely to spread an alarm and bring about a rescue, but John, happening to be known to the household, or, perhaps, to the high priest himself, was readily admitted. Meanwhile, Peter remained shut out, but at John's solicitation was presently admitted by the maid who kept the door. That have structure

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

A fire of wood kindled in the open court in the chilly April night. had attracted all round it. Peter among the rest, by its cheerful blaze. He sat, with weary heart, by the light, wondering what the end would be, and not without alarm for his own safety, in case he should be recognized, and charged with his violence in the garden. Meanwhile, the door-keeper, who, perhaps, had, seen him in attendance on Jesus in the Women's Court of the Temple, sauntered, like others, to the fire, and with a woman's abruptness, after gazing at him steadily, put the question directly to him-" Art thou, also, one of this man's disciples?" Confused and off his guard, he said nothing but she would not let him go. "Thou, also, wast with Jesus of Galilee," she continued-repeating to those round her, "Certainly this man, also, was with Ilin," "Woman," said Peter, stammering out the words in mortal terror for his life, "I do not know Him; I do not know what you mean." But his conscience was ill at ease, and his foars grew apace. The could no longer hide his confusion, and went cff into the darkness of the porch. His inexorable inquisitor would not, however, let him escape. He had hardly come to the light again, after a time, when she once more scanned him, and, determined to justify herself, began to speak of him to the serving men and slaves. "Lie is one of them. He was with Jesus of Nazareth." Irritated and alarmed, and losing all presence of mind, he repeated his denial with an oath. ...... I do not know the man. I am not one of His disciples. :. I swear I am. not." about our million french bill. et

His stou troubles w his bearing high priest by asking the door of did," said shows that volces, "y Peter, ne his last der cations on knew nothi the sound o still before turned and no less rep found his st

It was en brought bac been alarmo brightness i uninanly we them, the rep words, which crew, he we trast betwee ness!

Shame and of forgivene have done ea beautiful tra historical rea never left hi when the loo for pardon.

Towards the heads of the whole Sanher of death, had Nation in son escort of Ter before the not other dignitar had gathered to take part i ings were, ho

THE LIFE OF CHRIST,

ortured

".The

ad; the rd, and

lled the at their

ued, He.

vine pall it and

l court,

he serv-

h priest

heir first

followed

The door

entrance scue, but

s, to the emained

by the

ril night, ful blaze.

id would hould be

Mean-

dance on others, to steadily,

nis man's

, but she

Galilee,"

his man,

out the

I do not and his and went or would

mined to

d slaves.

Irritated

is denial

His dis-

His stout assertions gave him an hour's respite and pcace, but his troubles were not over, for the maid had fixed attention on him, and his bearing had excited suspicion. At last, one of the slaves of the high priest, a kinsman of the wounded Malchus, renewed the subject by asking Peter, directly—"Did T not see thee, as I was standing at the door of the garden, just as they were coming out?" "You never did," said Peter. "I was not there." "Why, your very speech shows that you are of them—you were with Him," criccl angry, flerce volces, "you are a Galilæan—we hear it in your words."

Peter, now, lost all control of himself. He had tried to strengthen his last denial by a soleum offit, but now burst into curses and imprecations on himself, it he had not spoken truth, in saying that he knew nothing whatever about Jesus! In the midst of his excitement the sound of a cock-crow fell on his cars, and at the sound, his Master, still before His murderers, in a room opening into the courtyard, turned and ooked him full in the face, with those loving, but now no less reproachful eyes, in the light of which Peter had so long found his sweetest joy. It was enough. The glance, like lightning, revealing an abyss,

It was enough. The glance, like lightning, revealing an abys, brought back to its nobler self the honest heart that for a time had been alarmed into superficial unfaithfulness, and throw an awful brightness into the depths of sin on whose edge he stood. All his unnanty weakness and wretched fear rose in his thoughts, and, with them, the remembrance of his boastings, so miscrably belied. Christ's words, which he had so warmly repudiated—that, before the cock crew, he would deny Him thrice, had come true. What a contrast between the grand strength of his Master and his own weakness!

Shame and sorrow; mingled, on the moment, with a yearning hope of forgiveness, overpowered him, and he did, now, what he should have done earlier; went out; and wept bitterly. It is a touching and beautiful tradition, true to the sincerity of his repentance, if not as a historical reality; that, all his life long, the remembrance of this night never left him; and that, morning by morning, he rose at the hour when the look of his Master had entered his soul, to pray once more for pardon.

Towards the close of the fourth watch, and before daybreak, the heads of the theoracy, true to precedent, which required that the whole Sanhedrim, while it existed, should meet to ratify a sentence of death, had extemporized a semblance of the old High Court of the Nation in some suitable building. Thither Jesus was now led, under escort of Temple police and retainers of the high priest; to appear before the notables of Israel. The chiefs of the priestly courses, and other dignitaries of the Temple, with a number of elders and Rabbis, had gathered in the fading darkness, old though most of them were, to take part in the condemnation of the Hated One. The proceedings were, however, only formal; to hear the sentence of the Commission and to endorse it. This done, the way was clear for handing

Him over to Pilate. In the third is the second of the fatal sentence. He was a criminal of the worst dye; for, in their opinion He had blasphemed with audacious boldness, by claiming to be the King Messiah, the Son of God, the long-expected deliverer of the nation, sent to it from heaven. No one had ever before laid claim to the sacred name, for, though many Messiahs rose in later years no one, as yet, had assumed the tremendous dignity. Proof more than enough to establish His highest claims, offered itself in His life, and words, and works, but passion and prejudice had hardened their hearts, and blinded their judgments. The worst among them would never have dared to proceed against Him, had they believed Him really the Messiah. , "I know," says St. Peter, "that you acted in ignorance, as did also your rulers," But it was the ignorance that had refused the light. Had they been honest and honourable, the first point to have been settled would have been, at least to hear what the Accused had to say in His own favour. They had constituted them-selves the vindicators of the Law and the Prophets, and it was their clementary duty to hear the Prisoner's exposition of the statements of both, respecting the matter in hand. He had owned Himself the Messiah, and for doing so, without giving Him the opportunity of supporting His claim, they voted the sentence of death, by noisy acclamation. Law and tradition demanded a second full hearing of the case, but they thrust both aside, in their zeal to get Him condemned and him and the stand of the persistent of a

Tol dud man out in son CHAPTER LXII. of the house of oldere harmidouristist BEFORE FILATELY

THE decision of the Jewish authorities having been duly signed and sealed, and Jesus once more securely bound. He was led off: strongly guarded from rescue, to the official residence of Pilate, on Mount Zion. It was still early, but Eastern life anticipates the day, for the heat of noon requires rest during the hours busiest with us. The way ran from the West Hall of the Temple over the Tyropœon by a bridge, and across the open space of the Xystus, with its pillared porches. The palace of Herod, now Pilate's headquarters, lay just beyond the proud residence of the Roman knight who held the government for the Emperor. Tiberius. It was, inhabited for only a few weeks or days at a time, but now, during the Passover, the Procurator took care to be present; to repress, at once, any popular movement for national freedom, which the spring air, the feast itself, and the vas' gathering of the nation, might excite. Now, for the first time, Jesus' entered the gates of a king's palace; the home of "men in soft raiment "-entered it as a prisoner. He character. enervated

pression o

at Rome,

masses in l

the unconq Emperor, s

for quiet.

tecting Hin Him up in people he h the popular already give

There was ducted, but much too h

there might

began that season a su the freewill d

Passover and would preve

to the charac

bowl and pl

wickedness.

of the Roman

Knowing t

tempt to over

mon, for Ron

half Roman H

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

inding

e fatal oinion. be the the nalaim to ars, no re than ife. and d-their a would ed Him acted in that had rst point the Aced themwas their mentsof mself the tunity of by noisy earing of Him conplantost ly signed s led off; Pilate; on s the day, t with us. Pyropœon th its pilarters, lay o held the for only a , the Propopular e feast it-

utili

n alabig

12dB

a palace;

was to stand before a man who has come down to us as one of the most unrighteous, cruel, arbitrary, and hateful; a man rightly named Pilate-the "Javelinman"-for it seemed his delight to launch cruelties and scorns on every side, like javelins, among the oppressed peoples. What had Jesus to expect from one who hated the nation from his soul, and sported with their lives and possessions as if they were not mon, but a lower race of despised slaves and fanatical Helots? It might, indeed, be of benefit to Him that the hatred of Pilate towards the Jews, might regard Him as a welcome instrument, in the absence of a better, for playing off his bitterness against them and their leaders. To favour a man who was in opposition to them, was, itself, a pleasure... Calm, temperate, and impartial, compared to Jewish passion and bitterness, and in some respects in sympathy with the accused, the hard, proud, heathen Roman was more open to the impression of Christ's innocence or harmlessness than the Jews or their leaders.

That he did not permanently protect Him, rose, partly, from his character, and, partly, from his past history as procurator. Morally enervated and lawless, the petty tyrant was incapable of a strong impression or rightcous firmness, and, besides, he dreaded complaints at Rome, from the Jewish authorities, and insurrections of the masses in his local government. He had, in the past, learned to fear the unconquerable pertinacity of the Jews and the rebukes of the Emperor, so keenly, that he would permit, or do almost anything, for quiet. This showed itself in his bearing towards Jesus. Protecting Him for a time, half in sympathy, half in mockery; he gave Him up in the end, rather than brave the persistent demand of a people he hated and feared. He would have set Him free, but for the popular clamour, and a bitter remembrance of the trouble it had already given him in Jerusalom and at Rome.

There was a hall in the palace, in which trials were generally conducted, but the Jewish notables, who had condemned Jesus, were much too holy to enter a heathen building during the feast, since there might be old leaven in it. It was Friday, and the Sabbathbegan that night, and in the evening there was universally at this season a supplementary feast of priests and people, on the flesh of the freewill offerings. It had, for centuries, been associated with the Passover and was thought a part of it, and Levitical uncleanness would prevent the accusers taking part in it. They were still true to the character given them by Jesus; careful of the outside of the bowl and platter, but willing that, within, it should be tilled with wickedness. They had effected their end. Jesus was in the hands of the Romans, before Jerusalem awoke.

Knowing the people with whom he had to do, Pilate made no attempt to overcome their scruples. Trials in the open air were common, for Roman law courted publicity, Roman governors, and the half Roman Herod and his sons, erected their tribunals, indifferently, before the palace, in the market-place, in the theatre, in the circus, or, even, in the highways. Pilate, therefore, caused his oficial seat to be set down on a spot known, in Jerusalem, as Gabbatha—the high place, from its being raised above the crowd, and as "The Pavement," because it was laid, according to Roman custom, where judges sat, with a mosaic of coloured stones. It was, very possibly a permanent erection, square, or of crescent shape, of costly marble, in keeping with the spiendour so dear to Herod, its builder; projecting from the front of the "Judgment Hall," in the palace, and easily accessible by a doorway from it. It was a maxim of Roman law that all criminal trials should be held on a raised tribunal, that all might see and be seen.

The lyory curule chair of the procurator—his seat of state, and sign of office; or, perhaps, the old golden seat of Archelaus, was set down on the tesselated floor of the tribunal, which was large enough to let the assessors of the court—Roman citizens—who acted as nominal members of the judicial bench, sit beside Pilate—for Roman law required their presence. On lower elevations, sat the officers of the court, fric_ds of the procurator, and others whom he chose to honour.

The priests and elders who appeared against Jesus, now led Him up the steps of the tribunal to the procurator, and set Him before him. Seats were generally provided for the accusers near the judge, and there was, also, usually, a seat for the accused; but in Judea, despised and insulted, this custom was not now observed, at least so far as regarded Jesus, for He had to stand through the trial. An interpreter was not needed, as the Jewish officials doubtless spoke Greek, and Jesus, brought up in Galilec, where the presence of foreigners made its use general, necessarily understood it. A strong detachment of troops from the garrison guarded the tribunal, and kept the ground, for a wast crowd of citizens and pilgrims speedily gathered, as the news of the arrest spread.

Roman law knew nothing of the inquisitorial system by which a prisoner might be forced to convict himself; it required that a formal accusation of a specific offence should be made against him. This office of accuser, Calaphas, dispensing with the customary employment of an "orator," himself, apparently, performed, as the representative of the nation, and its highest dignitary; to give the charges the greater weight.

Pilate, having taken his seat, began the proceedings by formally, asking Calaphas and his colleagues what accusation they had against the prisoner in this derivative sector is a set of the sector is the sector is

"If He had not been a great offender," replied Caiaphas, as spokesman, "we would not have delivered Him up to thee. We have power enough to punish ordinary offenders, by our own haws, but this man's crime goes beyond our powers in the punishment it demands, and, therefore, we have handed Him over to you. That we have done so I submit, is proof that He deserves death. The preHis accuser

Pilate wa already und He had lear courses had was mainly and public I same cause. first appear course in G munications formly repr therefore, th only from e learned, Jesu easily see ho terests and in Roman auth religious mon for apprehen

The Gospel the opening a his colleague Pilate himsel however, a vid hypocritical c Jews, and, sti of taste and c was hateful a represented th question about accusers had,

Interrupting found Him will and Judge Him him further, h understood the they wished so

Caiaphas ha he, "a charge without your confirm any s and, thus, the stoned Jesus f they were reso have their vict erce of myself, the high priest, and of the notables of the nation, as this accusers, may suffice to prove the blackness of His guilt."

ircus.

official

a-the "The

where

sibly a narble.

project-

l easily

that all

ind sign

et down

to let the required

e court,

led Him

n before

ie judge,

n Judea,

t least so

rial. An

ess spoke

ce of for-

A strong

unal, and speedily

which a

a formal

m. This

y employthe repre-

e charges

formally

ad against

as spokes-

We have

hws. but

nent it de-

That we

The pres-

Pilate was not a stranger in Palestine, and had, doubtless, had Josus already under his notice, through reports of his spice and officials, He had learned that He avoided all appeals to force, that His discourses had nothing whatever political in them, and that His zeal was mainly directed against the corruptions of the Jewish priesthood and public teachers, whom the Romans themselves despised for the same cause. The immense crowds that had followed Him, at His first appearance in Judea, three years before and His subsequent course in Galilee, must have been the subject of many official communications to Cæsarea. Pilate's usual residence; and they had unit formly represented Him as peaceful and harmless. Hilate know, therefore, that He was now delivered up by the priests and Rabhis only from envy, and for their own selfish ends. From all he had learned, Jesus was only a well-meaning enthusiast, and He could easily see how such a man might well be dangerous to the vested interests and mock holiness of the Jewish magnates, but not at all so to Roman authority. He was ready enough to quench in blood any religious movement that threatened the peace, but he saw no ground for apprehension as regarded this one, of I hind birniz do referendt on

The Gospels give only a brief outline of the whole trial, but even the opening address of Caiaphas, or the orator who spoke for him and his colleagues, was, no doubt, full of rhetorical compliments to Pilate himself, and of fierce words against the prisoner. It had, however, a very different effect on Pilate from that intended. The hypocritical elamour for blood by a priesthood whom he despised as Jews, and, still more, for their superstition, bigotry, barbarous want of taste and culture, restless greed, and restive opposition to Rome, was hateful and repulsive. The would not involve his court, which represented the majesty of the Emperor, in any further details of a question about one who seemed a mere religious reformer. The accusers had, themselves, jurisdiction in their own religious disputes.

Interrupting the speaker, therefore, Pilate told him—". If you have found Him what you say, you had better, in my opinion, take Him, and judge Him according to your own law." If they did not trouble him further, he would not interfere with them. He had not, as yet, understood that they sought to have Jesus put to death, but fancied they wished some other punishment.

Cataphas had his answer ready. "It is a criminal charge," said he, "a charge of capital crime, and we cannot put any one to death, without your confirming our sentence." He could not, however, confirm any sentence, without at least, a summary investigation, and, thus, the matter must proceed before him. They might have stoned Jesus for blasphemy, had he sanctioned their doing so, but they were resolved to leave the odium of the murder on him, and have their victim crucified. In the fulfilment of the divine counsels. He was to die, not as a martin to Jewish fury but as a sin-offering, on the Cross, and an entrance for much of an W. Awards and sur What is your accusation then?" asked Pilate, overflader we have

Craftily keeping out of sight Christ's declaration that He was the Son of God, because such a theological question was indifferent to the Roman, and because heathenism had no such ideas connected with the phrase as Judaism, Caiapins, turned the religious offence into a political one. The "Son of God," in a Jewish sense, was equivalent to the Messiah, the expected national deliverer, and, hence, he created out of the claim, a pretension to earthly royalty. Such an accusation could not be overlooked, and must wake prejudice, if believed, as involving a charge of treason against the suspicious and relemiess Tiberius. The priests expected an instant condemnation, for they knew Pilate's hysenaliko nature.

Roman law permitted the questioning of a prisoner after formal accusation, and confession of the charge was held sufficient proof of guilt if and his deal that the well contrained by us as a deceiver of the people," answered the high priest. If there a line most indicate the rest How?" asked Pilater the number of the line in the second

"In a double way," said Caiaphas. ""He stirs up the nation against paying their tribute to Casar, and He sets himself up as king of the Jews. He says He is the Messiah, which is the name we give our king, and He has led many to regard Him as a descendant of David. and our only lawful sovereign "harmersal" over warts fairft in and Jesus was standing at Pilate's side. Rising from his chair and ordering Him to be brought after him, he retired into the palace, and calling Jesus before him, asked Him-" Art Thoughe king of the Jews? Dost Thous really claim to be so?" He evidently expected a disavowal, for he felt it almost beneath him to ask such a question of one, in his eyes, so utterly unlike a king. Had he been firm and strong minded, he would have seen the groundlessness of the charge, from the absence of all overt proof, but he weakly proceeded to compromise himself, by putting Jesus to examination of the Knowing that Pilate had nothing against Him but the words of His enemies outside, Jesus, with a calm dignity that must have amazed the procurator, asked him a counter question. ""Do you ask this of your own accord, or have others told it you of me?" He would have Pilate remember the more than doubtful source of the accusation, and that with all his official means of information, no grounds of such a charge had ever suggested themselves to his own mind. It was, besides, essential to know if he spoke as a Roman, with a political use of the title "king," or repeated it in the Jewish sense as equivalent to the Messiah." Been difficult adding and "Do you think I am a Jew?" answered Pilate, scornfully, feeling his false position, in entertaining an accusation from so suspicious Source. Your own nation have brought you before me; the charge co their accu Tell me, y Jews?" "In you" but in an conquering earthly and for me, to

by the sole

nor any at

show that

You s

other sense

Mysterious

Thou s

born to be

for The Tr

Truth He

bosom of th

tinued-11t

He had thri

not of this

How th

they are, this which is a r.

with such a

Greek or a l

him that Je

ring up a di

felt how awi

strangelyidif

make men be

man. " " If I

a king! Bu

Truth?" said

answer, for

in that age,

returned to prisoner's sel

only of Truth

hierarchy sho

less enthusias

and Rabbis in had examined

His thinking

Leaving Jo

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

charge comes from the priests and Rabbis. I have only repeated their accusation. What do I care for your dreams about a Messiah? Tell me, what have you done? Do you call yourself, the king of the Jews?"

DICETING.

r.M. Michill

Signa Blant

was the lerent to ce into a

juivalent

e created

ccusation

lieved, as for they

Where et ge

erformal

proof of when shod

AR TEARY

ion against

ing of the e give our

of David.

chair and

balace, and

ing of the

vexpected

a question

firm and he charge,

bceeded to 12311 11824

e words of

nust have

Do vou ask me?" He rce of the

mation, no

to his own

a Roman.

the Jewish

address stept

ly, feeling

suspicious

e me; the Jews?" In your sense of the word I am not a king," answered Jesus, "but in another, I am. My accusers expect a mere earthly, worldconquering Messiah. But my Kingdom is not of this world—not earthly and political. If it were, my attendants would have fought for me, to prevent my being arrested and delivered up to my enemies by the soldiers you sent against me. But they made no resistance nor any attempt even to rescue me, and this, of itself, is enough to show that my Kingdom is not a political one." "You speak of a kingdom: are you really a king, then, in any other sense than the common?" asked the procurator, awed before the Mysterious Man.

"Thou sayest it; so it is: I AM A KING," answered Jesus. "I was born to be a King; I came into the world that I should bear witness for The Truth." He spoke in His lofty, mystic way of the divine Truth He had seen and heard in a former existence, when in the bosom of the Father. "All who love and seek the Truth," he continued—"that is, who hear and obey my words—are, my subjects." He had thrice claimed a Kingdom, and thrice told Pilate that it was not of this world.

How these Jews talk!" thought Pilate. ""They, barbarous as they are, think they have TRUTH as their special possession-TRUTH, which is a riddle insoluble to our philosophers! What have I to do with such speculations, fit only to confuse the head of a hungry Greek or a beggarly Rabbi?" But he had heard enough to convince him that Jesus had no thought of treason against Rome, or of stirring up a disturbance in the country. Hardened, cold, worldly he felt how awful goodness is, and would fain have dismissed One so strangely different from other men-an enthusiast, willing to die to make men better 10 " What kind of a man is He?" thought the Roman, "" If He only had not been so ready with His talk about being a kingt But He will do nothing to help Himself!" "What is Truth?" said he, ironically, and turned away without waiting an answer, for in Pilate's opinion, as in that of most men of his class in that age, Truth was an airy nothing, a mere empty name. Leaving Jesus to be brought out after him to the tribunal again, he returned to the accusers and the multitude. Touched, by the prisoner's self-possession and dignity; half-afraid of one who spoke only of Truth, and of other worlds than this; and incensed that the hierarchy should, for their own ends, have sought to palm off a harmless enthusiast on him, as a dangerous traitor; he threw the priests and Rabbis into fierce confusion, by frankly telling them, "that he had examined Jesus, and found no ground for any punishment in His thinking Himself the Messiah, as they called it." One point in the accusation had failed, but it was necessary to hear what might be alleged besides." The accusers could easily see that, in spite of the admission of Jesus that He claimed to be a king, Pliate regarded him rather with pity than fear. More must be done, to fix on Him the crime of being dangerous to the State. The priests and Rabbis were greatly excited. " One after another, they sprang up, with charge on charge, to confirm their main accusation. In their flerce bigotry and unmeasured hatred, they had not scrupled to speak of a purely religious movement as a dark political plot, and now they were bold enough even to adduce proofs of this treason." " He has perverted women and children, and has systematically stirred up the whole nation against Cæsar: from Galilee to Jerusalem there is not a town or village in the land, where He has not won over some, and filled them with wild expectations. He has appealed to the nation to join His Kingdom; He has spoken against paying the taxes; He is a second Judas the Gaulonite, and you know what his career has cost Rome, in blood and treasure." The hypocrites! They were hunting Jesus to death simply because He would not identify Himself with them, and use His supernatural power to drive out the Romans, and set them on the vacant throne: "They were demanding His death on the pretext that He had threatened to use force to establish His Kingdom, when the truth was-His real offence, in their eyes, was that He would not use force! out to tringularity a Jod wood wilden bolt Such a storm of accusations and suspicions might well have led Pilate to expect some denial or disproofs from Jesus. He doubtless attributed all the difficulty of the situation to His too ready admission of His dreamy kingship; and, on every ground, even for his own sake, to clear him from a business that grew more and more serious. hoped to hear some defence. "But Jesus knew with whom He had to do. He knew that His enemies were determined that He should die and would invent charge after charge till He was destroyed. They had already scrupled at nothing. He knew Pilate flerce, and yet cowardly, with no moral force; the tyrant, and yet the sport of the Jewish authoritics. The majesty of truth and goodness in Him looked down with a pitying disdain on the moral worthlessness of judge and accusers alike, and would not stoop to utter even a word in His own behalf, before them. They knew His life and work, and if the witness they bore were of no weight, He would add no other. "If I demand that He answer," thought Pilate, " perhaps He will do so." ""Do you not hear," said he, "how many things they accuse you of? Do you make no defence at all?" But Jesus remained silent, not uttering even a word. A very strange man," thought Pilate. He seemed to him more than ever a lofty enthusiast blind to His own interests, and careless of life. S. Sucolife and a first discution "The word "GALILEE," in the wild cries of the priests and Rabbis, raised a new hope in Pilate's mind. Antipas was now in Jerusalem, at the feast. If Jesus were a Galilæan, it would be a graceful of a true to a start and and a start of a start of the st r 14.144 or unching in courtesy prince, an for havin Temple, the altar :get him c save the st weakness with, such very face the Temp another co Jesus was Antipas, th The old short way streets off, of Zion, the of Herod, upper city, and middle led, under e accusers lia them; for it the great m The vassa ferring a G pleased him having One his petty cou hung like a should like t of a day, an the Cross, co perform one in chains, co Pilate had hour had pas like all Orien and received A few minut tice of the pa tribunal, on v The light, condescendin his idle curio be performed

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

the second is have a failed and a construction for the formation for courtesy to send Him to be tried, as a Galilsean, before His own prince, and would perhaps efface the grudge Antipas had at himself, for having let loose his soldiers lately on the Galilean pilgrims in the Temple, during a disturbance, and by cutting some down, even at the altar:-a sore scandal in the Jewish world. It would, moreover. get him clear of a troublesome matter, and, perhaps, it might even sive the strange man - so calm, so dignified, in circumstances of such weakness and humiliation; with such a look, as if He read one's soul; with such a mysterious air of greatness, even in bonds, and in the very face of death by the Cross. Antipas would not likely yield to the Temple party, as he himself might be forced to do, to avoid another complaint to Rome. He no sooner, therefore, heard that Jesus was a Galilean, than he ordered Him to be transferred to Antipas, that he might judge Him as such: 1 -PU - UT dolbar M -SU The old palace of the Asmoncans, in which Antipas lodged, was a short way from Pilate's splendid official residence. It lay a few streets off, to the north east, within the same old city wall, on the slope of Zion, the levelled crest of which was occupied by the vast palace of Herod, now the Roman headquarters. Both were in the old, or upper city, and through the narrow streets with raised pathways, and middle sunk to prevent defilement to passers by -- Jesus was now led, under escort of a detachment of the Roman troops on duty. The accusers had no choice but to follow, and the multitude went off with them, for it was no ordinary spectacle, to see the high priest and all the great men of the city, thus, in public, together. with Us hour data The vassal king was caught in Pilate's snare. The flattery of referring a Gulllaan case to him as the Galilaan tetrarch, greatly pleased him, and his light superficial nature was no less gratified by having One of whom he had heard so much; brought before him. In his petty court, amidst all its affectation of grandeur and state, ennui hung like a drowsiness over all, "He had never seen a miracle, and should like to be able to say he had to It would break the monotony of a day, and give an hour's languid talk. A prisoner, in danger of the Cross, could not refuse to humour him, if he commanded Him to perform one! He had been afraid of Jesus once, but a miracle worker in chains, could be only, at best, a clever juggler. This is not set in Pilate had taken his seat on his tribunal in the grey dawn, and an hour had passed. It was shortly after six, when Antipas, early astir, like all Orientals, heard the commotion in the courty and of his palace. and received word that Jesus had been handed over to his authority. A few minutes more, and the prisoner was led into the Court of Jus tice of the palace, and presently, Antipas made his appearance on the tribunal, on which Jesus was also forthwith placed stated a possible of The light, weak, crafty, worthless man, was disposed to be very condescending, ... He put question after question to Him; whatever his idle curiosity suggested; and doubtless asked that a miracle might be performed there and then. But Jesus was no conjuror or "'magus."

of the ed him lim the is were arge on try and purely ere bold erverted e whole t'a town nd filled to join He is a has cost hunting self with ans, and death on blish His eyes, was 1010 1001 have led doubtless dy admisr his own e scrious, n He had le should lestroyed. lerce, und sport of ss in Him essness of en a word work, and no other. s He will ney accuse remained " thought iast, blind Trans In 1973 d Rabbis, erusalem, graceful

11.

ight be

He was ready to save His life by worthy means, but He would not, for a moment, stoop to anything unworthy. The creature clad in purple before Him was the murderer of John: the slave of a wicked woman; a mean adulterer; and would fain have had His life, as well as that of the Baptist. Jesus felt, therefore, only utter disdain for him, and treated him with withering silence. He might tire himself with questions, but not a word of reply would be vouchsafed. Antipas began to feel that it was no time to indulge his humour, and grew half-alarmed.

The high priests and Rabbis, Caiaphas at their head, would gladly have turned the annoyance of the tetrarch to their own account. When his questions had ceased, they broke out into vehement accusations, forgetful, in their rage, of either their office or their selfrespect. But they, too, were met with the same insufferable, contemptuous silence, which gave no chance of fastening anything on their enemy, by any admission of His own. Antipas was no less at a loss what to do than Pilate had been. One thing, alone, he had resolved—he would have no part in condemning so mysterious a nan. Was he afraid of the large following Jesus already had in Galilee? Was he spell-bound and awed by those eyes—that calmness—that more than kingly dignity? Was he afraid of the very power of which he had craved some exhibition? When there wus no Herodias at hand to make him the tool of her revenge, he was rather a mere voluptuary than cruel.

Treated so strangely before his courtiers: humbled and baffled, Antipas covered his defeat and alarm, by an affectation of contemptuous ridicule. The harmless fanatical madman who claimed to be a king, would make a fine butt for the humour of his guard. Let them trick Him out as a king, and play at homage to Him, and see how He would bear. His shadowy dignities! It was a brave chance for the courtiers to show their manliness by mocking a helpless prisoner! Antipas knew, by this time, Pilate's opinion of the accused, and suspected why he had sent Him. So, officer and common soldier set themselves to amuse their master, by trying their wit on this ridiculous pretender to a crown! Tired at last, nothing remained but to send Him back to Pilate, and let him finish what he had begun. Antipas had no desire to meddle further, in what might prove a very troublesome matter. Having, therefore, put a white robe—the Jewish royal colour, on Jesus—as if to show that he had no fear of such a king, he sent Him back to Pilate.

Pilate had already made one vain attempt to save Him, and now, anxious to end the matter, summoned the accusers once more to the tribunal. A great crowd had gathered, mostly of citizens, hostile as such to the alleged enemy of the Temple by which they lived. Looking at Jesus again—standing before him in the humble dress of the people—for they had already stripped Him of. His robe of mockery :—Pilate noticed that He showed no trace of fanaticism, in word, bearing, c was no re said he, Still more he has se trouble has ment. I missed. I was a mea fusing thei

Meanwh momentou at the Feait was also liverance o Passover, t the multitu Coming f ple, Pilate 1 prisoner, to that he show pleased him who should king, and ha accepted. whether the leased to the It happen Barabbas t mised throu volts which robber, but a Law, had tal thizers or sol The propo hierarchy, an lar fancy, an quick presen ing a counter lease Barabb It was a dext offence which risen against zealot for the things as they Caiaphas had

rabbas, but it

1 not.

lad in vicked

is well

in for

imself

Anur, and gladly ccount.

t accu-

eir self-

le, con-

hing on

) less at ne had sanan.

Galilee?

ess that

of which

rodias at

r a mere baffled,

of con-

laimed to

ard, Let

n, and see e chance

less pris-

accused,

on soldier

t on this

remained

ad begun.

ve a very

he Jewish of such a

and now,

bre to the

hostile as

ney lived.

e dress of

of mockin word. bearing, or countenance; and felt more than ever convinced that He was no robel or dangerous person. "I have examined this man," said he, "and nothing worthy of death has been done by Him. Still more, I sent Him to Herod, and he is of the same opinion, and he has sent Him again to me uncondemned. But since so much trouble has been caused by His fancies, He deserves some publishment. I shall, therefore, order Him to be scourged and then dismissed. It will be a warning to Him." His offer to scourge Him was a mean salve to the wounded pride of the hierarchy, for his refusing their deman. for a sentence of death.

Meanwhile, a cry arose in the crowd, which was destined to have momentous results. It was the custom to carry out capital sentences at the Feast times, that the people, at large, might get a lesson; but, it was also the practice of the procurators, in compliment to the deliverance of Israel from the slavery of Egypt, commemorated by the Passover, to release any one prisoner condemned to death, whom the multitude might name in the Passover week.

Coming forward, therefore, and addressing both accusers and people, Pilate reminded them of their custom that he should release a prisoner, to them, at the Passover. Uries instantly rose, clamouring that he should do so, as he had always done, and for once the shouts pleased him; for he fancied that, this time, there could be no question who should receive the pardon. One who claimed to be their national king, and had attracted so much notice, would, he assumed, be gladly accepted. Coming forward, therefore, he called out to the people, whether they would like "Jesus, their king," to be the prisoner released to them that year.

It happened that, at this time, there lay, awaiting execution, one Barabbas—the son of a Rabbi—who had, apparently, been compromised through religious fanaticism, in one of the countless petty revolts which incessantly harassed the Romans. He was no common robber, but a zealot, who, in mistaken ardour for the honour of the Law, had taken part in a tumult, during which some Roman sympathizers or soldiers, had been killed.

The proposal of Pilate threatened to overthrow the scheme of the hierarchy, and, unless opposed on the instant, might catch the popular fancy, and be accepted. Calaphas and his party, therefore, with quick presence of mind, determined to turn attention from it, by raising a counter proposal flattering to local passion. "Ask him to release Barabbas to you, and not this man," shouted they to the mob. It was a dexterous stroke, for Barabbas had been condemned for an offence which made him a martyr, in the eyes of the people. He had risen against the abhorred Roman. He was a patriot, therefore: a zealot for the Temple and the Law, while Jesus was the enemy of things as they were—of tradition and rites,—and demanded reforms. Calaphas had no sympathy with the revolutionary flerceness of Barabbas, but it made him only too zealous on the right side, whereas Jesus was the public accuser of the whole pricethood, and of the schools as well.

The cry for Barabbas was, therefore, raised by the high priests as a cue to the people, and repeated with such vehement urgency that, erelong, it was caught up by the whole crowd, who were presently wild with excitement to have "the patriot" released, instead of Jesus. The public opinion, or voice of a nation, when the result of free expression of opposite judgments, may be the voice of God. but the voice of the unthinking multitude, as the outburst of sudden passion or caprice, seems often, that of Satan. Pilate was not required to give the people their choice, but had fancied he might appeal to them as against the priests and Rabbis, and have their approval, as a counterpoise to the opposition of their leaders, and a security for himself with the Emperor. But the high priests kept up the cry for Barabbas so fiercely, and, to Pilate's regret, the multitude echoed it with such a wild tumult of voices, that he saw he had failed. "Give us barabbas," alone was heard. A popular tumult seemed rising. Everything promised another scene like that of the great deputation to Cæsarea, about the standards set up in Jerusalem, when the persistent cries of the multitude were not to be silenced, even by fear of death, and forced Pilate, in the end, to yield, To add to the governor's perplexity, he had scarcely ascended the judge's seat to receive the decision of the people, and give his sentence in accord with it, when a message came to him from his wife, from the palace behind, which, under the circumstances, must have greatly impressed him. Since the time of Augustus, Roman magistrates had been permitted to take their wives to the provinces, and tradition has handed down the wife of Pilate—whose name it gives as Procla—as a proselyte to Judaism. She had evidently heard of Jesus, and, having taken a lively interest in Him, was greatly troubled at His arrest, and present danger. Her messenger, hastening to Pilate's ear, now whispered an entreaty from her, that he would have nothing to do with condemning this just man; she had suffered many things, through the night, in a dream, because, of Him—and feared divine vengeance if He were condemned.

Pilate—guided only by expediency—was at a loss what to do. Urwilling to give way to the mob. and let loose a fierce enemy of Rome, instead of a harmless, and evidently lofty-minded enthusiast: certain that the high priests had accused Him only from envy at His influence with the people, and hatred of Him for His opposition to themselves: half afraid, moreover, especially after his wife's message, to meddle further in the matter—he, once more, turned to the crowd, who were still shouting—" Not this man, but Barabbas "—and attempted to carry his point, and save Jesus.

"Which of the two," cried he, "do you really wish me to release to you?" "Barabbas, Barabbas," roared the multitude. The cry raised by the priests had carried all before it. "What shall I do then," asl call the I of titles so have some For now —"To the

Rabbis—p of the trib ing them 1 Pilate h time to the

"Why a broken no put Him ta go."

But he k of the price counsels of The sea of thousand ye

The six d palace, with still—the six humble him mind.

"It will while I can, Eternal to d bosom: stro saved the In of the appar forgets that

Not daring was yet dete his disavowa should be m symbol, so ex adopted by J Moses, the e been found, heifer, and de was already a familiar to be Pilate went t washed his h clean before man. It is o then," asked Pilate, pale before the storm, "with Jesus, whom you call the Messiah—the King of the Jews?" He hoped that the sound of titles so dear to their hearts, and so flattering to their pilde, would have some effect. But he was bitterly deceived.

For now, for the first time, rose in answer to him, the fcarful words —"To the CROSS!" "Crucify Him! crucify Him!"—the priests and Rabbis—prelates and doctors of the nation—on the raised platform of the tribunal, shouting first, and the mob, below, presently re-echoing them far and wide.

Pilate had failed twice, but he still held out. Appealing a third time to the excited crowd, he strove to reason with them-

"Why shall I crucify him?" What evil has He done? He has broken no law. I have found no cause, in anything He has done, to put Him to death. I will, therefore, only scourge Him and let Him go."

But he knew not the forces he was opposing. Behind the passions of the priests, and Rabbis, and people, were the slowly self-fulfilling counsels of the Eternal!

The sea of upturned faces broke into wild uproar, once more, and a thousand voices cried only, "Crucify Him! crucify Him!"

The six days of Cæsarca, when the same crowds had besieged his palace, with the unbroken cry, which not even imminent death could still—the six days, when their invincible tenacity had forced him to humble himself before them, and let them triumph—rose in Pilate's mind.

"It will be another uproar like that," thought he; "I must yield while I can, and save myself." Poor mockery of a ruler! Set by the Eternal to do right on earth, and afraid to do it: told so by his own bosom: strong enough in his legions, and in the truth itself, to have saved the Innocent One, and kept his own soul—he could only think of the apparently expedient. Type of the politician of all ages, who forgets that only the right is the strong or wise!

Not daring, in his weakness, to play the man, and do right, Pilate was yet determined that even those at a distance, who might not hear his disavowal of any willing share in the condemnation of Christ, should be made to see it. To wash the hands in water is a natural symbol, so expressive of repudiation of responsibility, that it had been adopted by Jews and heathen, alike. So long before as the days of Moses, the elders of a city, near which the body of a slain man had been found, were required to wash their hands over a slaughtered heifer, and declare their innocence. To wash the hands in innocency was already a common expression, in the days of David, and it was familiar to both Greeks and Romans. Calling, therefore, for water, Pilate went towards his official chair, and with significant gestures, washed his hands, calling aloud as he did so " that as his hands were clean before them, so was he himself, of all guilt in the blood of this man. It is on you; you may answer for it as you best can!"

of the y that, resently tead of esult of lod, but den pasrequired ppeal to val, as a for himcry for echced it . Give d rising. putation the pery fear of nded the sentence his wife, nust have an magisinces, and it gives heard of troubled tening to ould have red many nd feared > do. Ur: of Rome, t: certain His influto themnessage, to ne crowd, --and at-

to release The cry shall I do "Yes! yes!" cried the furious priests and rabble, "willingly! we and our children will take the blame! His blood be on us and our children, if He be slain unjustly."

"Then you may have His blood," thought Pilate; "I have done my best to save Him!" So dc men deceive themselves, as if they could wash their conscience clean as easily as their hands! They fancy they have done their utmost for their acknowledged duty, when they have not, done precisely the first indispensable and decisive act. They weary themselves, toiling along a thousand crooked ways, which can not lead them to their end, and turn aside only from the path of unhesitating, immovable, right—the way nearest to them, and the shortest, after all!

The Innocent One had gained nothing but evil by all the windings and doublings of the scheming and trimming Roman. Pilate had proposed as a compromise with His accusers, to save His life, by delivering Him over to the shame and agony of scourging, though He had, confessedly, done nothing amiss. He was, now, to be both scourged and crucified.

Victims condemned to the cross first underwent the hideous torture of the scourge, and this was, forthwith, inflicted on Jesus. 'Pilate, in person, commanded it to be carried out. 'Go, bind His hands, and let Him be beaten," was the order for this terrible prelude to crucifixion.

Roman citizens were still exempted, by various laws, from this agonizing and painful punishment, which was employed sometimes to elicit confessions, sometimes as a substitute for execution, and at others, as the first step in capital sentences. It was in full use in the provinces, and lawless governors did not scruple to enforce it even on Roman citizens, in spite of their protests that they were so. Jesus was now seized by some of the soldiers standing near, and, after being stripped to the waist, was bound in a stooping posture, His hands be-hind His back, to a post, or low pillar, near the tribunal. He was then beaten till the soldiers chose to stop, with knots of rope, or plaited leather thongs, armed at the ends with acorn-shaped drops of lead, or small, sharp-pointed bones. In many cases not only was the back of the person scourged, cut open in all directions: even the eyes, the face, and the breast, were torn and cut, and the teeth not seldom knocked out. The judge stood by, to stimulate the sinewy executioners, by cries of "Give it him"-but we may trust that Pilate, though his office required his presence, spared himself this crime. Under the fury of the countless stripes, the victims sometimes sank, antidst screams, convulsive leaps, and distortions, into a senseless heap: sometimes died on the spot; sometimes, were taken away an unrecognizable mass of bleeding flesh, to find deliverance in death, from the inflammation and fever, sickness and shame.

ployed as lictors, in the absence of these special officials, who were not allowe they be force of Besides life wo wards." in the e to see t very ve the very The l hear an livered ... crucified palace . with pa which, a side-wa now put own hu humour and the ] the keen over His lesque of One of th and shan the thorn that wor sharp tho on dwarf sceptre, t used in Placed in to pay Hi allegiance The court could not had clain Emperor, coarseness striking F rudely wit as they di to end it, a out. This lon ingly! we s and our e done my hey could fancy they they have act. They which can ath of unthe short-e windings Pilate had life, by dethough He to be both eous torture Pilate, in hands, and de to crucis, from this 1 sometimes tion, and, at all use in the ce it even on Jesus was after being lis hands beal. He was of rope, or haped drops not only was ns: even the he teeth not e the sinewy st that Pilate, is crime. netimes sank, a senseless ken' away an ice in death, soldiers em-

allowed to procurators, only too gladly vented on any Jew the grudge they bore the nation, and they would, doubtless, try if they could not force out the confession, which His silence had denied to the governor. Besides, He was to be crucified, and the harder the scourging the less life would there be left, to keep them on guard at the cross, afterwards. What He must have endured is pictured to us by Eusebius in the epistle of the Church in Smyrna. "All around were horrified to see them (the martyrs)," says he, "so torn with scourges that their very veins were laid bare, and the inner muscles and sinews, and even the very bowels, exposed."

The scourging over-Pilate, as his office required, standing by, to hear any confession that might be made, -Jesus was formally delivered over to a military officer with the authorization to see Him crucified. He had been scourged in the open grounds before the palace gate, close to the tribunal, but was now led, still half-naked; with painful, bleeding steps, into the inner court of the palace, in which, as the trial was over, the whole cohort-no longer needed outside—was massed, to be ready for any attempt at rescue. His guards now put some of His clothes on the quivering body. For this His own humble under garments contented them, in part, but the brutal humour of the guard-room was free to vent itself on a condemned man, and the lofty claims of Christ, and His hated nationality, excited it to the keenest. Instead of His plain abba of linen, therefore, they threw over His shoulders a scarlet sagum, or soldier's cloak-as a rough burlesque of the long and fine purple one, worn only by the Emperor. One of them, running to the nearest open space, heightened the coarse and shameful merriment by bringing in some of the tough twigs of the thorny Nubk, which he twisted into a mock laurel wreath, like that worn at times by the Cæsars, and forced down, with its close sharp thorns, on our Saviour's temples. The Nubk even yet grows, on dwarf bushes, outside the walls of Jerusalem." A fit mockery of a sceptre, to complete the ridicule, was at hand, in one of the long reeds, used in many ways in Jewish houses, and hence easily procured. Placed in His hand, the mock king had a sceptre! It only remained to pay Him a show of homage, and this they did, with mock oaths of allegiance, on their knees, saluting Him, "Hail, King of the Jews." The courtyard rang with peals of laughter. Some of the more brutal could not, however, let things pass so lightly. He wasa Jew; He had claimed to be a king, in opposition as they fancied to the Emperor, and He was about to be crucified. So they indulged their coarseness by tearing the stout cane-like reed from His Hands, and striking Him with it over the face and head. Others struck Him rudely with their fists: some, in their contempt, even spitting on Him as they did so. The scourging had lasted till the soldiers had pleased to end it, and now, their unspeakable brutality was left to wear itself out.

This long passage of insult and mockery was one of the screet trials of these last sad hours. Yet through the whole no complaint escaped His lips. He was being insulted, maltreated; and mocked, as a Jew, while already agonized by the scourging: but if His tormentors had known it, it was because the Jews hated Him He stood, where He did. They ridiculed His claim to the monarchy of the world; but had the soldiery known the truth, it was because He had opposed the Jewish dream of such a monarchy that He was being, put to death.

No murmur rose from Him. He might have spoken, or sighed, or implored the pity of the soldiery; He might have appealed to their honour and compassion. A heart beats even in the roughest bosom. But He was silent-silent, not because the waves of His sorrows had overwhelmed Him, but in triumphant superiority to them. He had been bowed and crushed in Gethsemane, but now, He showed the screne joy of a conqueror. His silence was a mark of His perfect child-like resignation to the will of Ilis Father. He was fulfilling, by His calm endurance, the work of His life, in accordance with the eternal counsels of God, and in holy love for His nation and the world. His kingly spirit was clouded to human eyes by pain and agony, but the end of His life and death shone out over more triumphantly before Him. He was dying to destroy for ever the dead and death-causing ritualism of the past; as the founder of a religion of love and freedom and light; and as the atoning sacrifice for the sins of the world, which would open the gates of mercy to man for evermore!

Filate had, apparently, retired into the palace for a time, but now reappeared; urged, perhaps, by his wife Procla, to make one more effort to save Jesus, alle might have prevented the pitiful coarseness of the soldiers had he pleased, and the scourging itself was an injustice, by his own confession. He now ordered Him to be brought out once more, totterting with pain and weakness, wearing the scarlet cloak and the crown of thorns, and covered besides with the vile proofs of contempt and violence. Even the stony heart of Pilate was touched. "Behold," stid he, "I have brought Him out to you again, that you may know, once more, that I have found no fault in Him." Then, turning to the figure at his side, drawn together with mortal agony, and looking at the pale, worn, and bleeding face, through which there yet shone, a calm dignity and more, than human beauty that had touched his heart, and might touch even the heart of Jews, he added -"Behold the man!" Would they let the scourging and mockery suffice, after all?

But religious hatred is the flercest of all passions. Jesus had been sleepless through the night, worn with anticipations of the terrible future, and with the sadness of an infinite sorrow: disfigured by the lawless treatment of the palace-yard, and bowed by the terture of the scourging; and now stood, utterly exhausted, hefore all oves—yet a form demanding reverence.

form demanding reverence. But the priests were unmoved. What revenge would satisfy their batred so long as still more could be had? The sight of their victim redouble the chies and the appeal o Tak. Pilate: law for y will not The fir the pries

it on a no "He s has com Jewish la He has cl and for t which the ing, in an bound to Thousa fanaticism out. The break Pil hesitation, in the nam gods, and Jews could The irre pled to be -was alar fore him, present itse him.

Retiring, fore him ag of God? No answ was possibl clear, wou governor, y been fruitle means of ju birth or org to decide. free, whoey

Filate's p

redoubled their ferocity. Forgetful of their profession and dignity, the chief priests—the primate and prelates of the day—their servants and the servile crowd echoing their cry—answered the procurator's appeal only by loud shouts of "Crucify!" crucify!"

"Take ye Him, then, and crucify Him, if it must be so," answered Pilate. "I have found Him blameless of any offence against Roman law for which I could condemn Him." As if he wished to say—"I will not be your mere tool!"

The first accusation had therefore failed, and was dropped. But the priests were determined to have His life, and forthwith demanded it on a new ground.

"He shall not escape with life!" cried their spokesman. "If He has committed no crime worthy of death by Roman law, we have a Jewish law which He has outraged, and by this law He must die. He has claimed to be the Son of God—the Messiah—which He is rot and for that, by our law, which we only can or dare decide, and which thou hast sworn to uphold, He deserves death;—death by stoning, in any case; death by the cross, if thou allowest it. Thou art bound to uphold our decision, and confirm our sentence."

Thousands were eager, now that the high priests had roused their fanaticism, to put Jesus to death, with Pilate's permission or without. The zealots would do it as a meritorious act. But such an outbreak Pilate dreaded. He would, therefore, have yielded without hesitation, but even to his frivolous soul there was an ominous sound in the name "Son of God." Might he be braving the wrath of the gods, and what, compared to that, was the utmost these wretched Jews could do?

The irresolute man—with no force of character, and too unprincipled to be an upright judge, if the right were not, first of all, politic —was alarmed, "Perhaps," thought he, "if he brought Jesus hefore him, privately, once more, a way out of the dilemma would present itself," There was also that dream of Procla's to frighten him.

Retiring, therefore, into the palace, he ordered Jesus to be set before him again.

"What was that they said," asked he, "about Thy being the Son of God? Whence comest thou? Art thou of human birth or more?" No answer which could have revealed the mystery of His nature was possible at such a time. Anything He might have said, however, clear, would, moreover, have been unintelligible to the heathen governor, with his utter want of moral carnestness, and would have been fruitless. Jesus therefore remained silent. Pilate had abundant means of judging from the past, and, besides, it was no question of birth or orgin, but a simple matter of uprightness he was called on to decide. If his prisoner were innocent, he had a right to be set free, whoever He might be.

Pliate's prite was touched by the silence. His momentary tender-rhed, or to their

bosom.

ows had

He had

wed the perfect

ulfilling,

with the

e world. ony, but

ly before

-causing freedom

ld, which

t now re-

ore effort

ess of the ustice, by

out once

let cloak

proofs of touched.

" Then,

al agony, hich there

that had

he added

mockery

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

172

ness turned into .owering passion: for power, when it feels itself in the wrong, is the more ready to drown conscience by violence towards the weakness it outrages. "Do you refuse to answer Mn?" he asked, in flashing anger. "Do you not know that your life is in my hands, and hangs on my nod? that I can crucify, or release Thee at my pleasure?"

Had he been self-possessed at the moment, and able to ponder things aright, he would have seen an answer to his question, even in Christ's silence. For it is certain that He in whose hips no deceit was ever found, would, on the instant, have honourably confessed that He was only a man, had He been no more. His very silence was a testimony to His divine dignity.

But He was now no longer silent. "You have indeed," said He, power over me, but you would have none were it not given you from above, from God. But your sin, though great, in condemning me against your conscience, and exercising on me the power granted you by God, is not so great as that of others; for you are only an instrument in His hands to carry out His counsels. The chief guilt lies on those who have delivered me to you to force you to carry out their will against me. Theirs is the greater sin!" Even in His lowliest humiliation, He is tender and pitiful to the man who has done Him so much wrong, and bears Himself towards Him, Roman governor though He be, as if He were the judge and Pilate the prisoner. He has nothing to say of his own agonies or wrongs, but only warning earnestness at the thought of the sin that was being wrought by men against their own souls.

The words, and the whole bearing of Jesus, struck into the heart of the Roman. Presence of mind and self-respectful dignity, even in the most helpless victim of injustice, have an irresistible power over the oppressor. How much more such a unique grandeur as diffused itself round this mysterious man f. Pilate was more than ever resolved to release Him. Returning once again to the tribunal, Jesus at his side, he strove to bring the priests and the crowd to content themselves with what their victim had already suffered. Here, and But the priests and Rabbis had hit upon a new terror for the halfrighteous judge. Hardly waiting to hear his first words, they raised a cry which they and the mob kept shouting till Pilate was thoroughly alarmed and unnerved. If you let this man go, you are not true to Cæsar. Any one that makes Himself a king, as He has done, declares Himself against Cæsar."

Pilate knew the jealous, suspicious character of Tiberius, and feared his displeasure the more, because his conscience told him how he had abused his office by every form of tyranny, so that an appeal to Rome might well be fatal to him. Should he expose himself to the displeasure of the Emperor? He was ready for any act of weak unrighteousness, rather than brave a censure from Capræa, far less the risk of its vengeance. He, doubtless, tried to make himself believe tha himselfit after all, recall; p justice de politician Shall I sa Furiou hateful in once mon and he ha would no carry his Turnin cloak-in politic as answer w crucify H - shall and outca Catapha more than force his have no k king!" + souls of sla self. king, tending to out being out their r It was F began' at 's might rise day, by the over, could against His Teacher? wished the He, there pb: Saob >.

etics, jaug al hira how himself to et of work winself bebinaelf be-

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

TER LAFS OF CHEIST.

Ent water

tself in

ncc: to: [E?" he

s in my

Thee at ponder

even in

o deceit

onfessed

nce was

F1 7 5500

aid He.

ou from

ning me

sted you

n instru-

uilt lies

out their lowliest

one Him governor

ner. He warning

t by men

even in

wer over diffused

ever real. Jesus

o content

the half-

ey raised

oroughly

not true

done, de-

ius, ' and

him how

in appeal imself to of weak i, far less nself be-the heart

lieve that he could not, in any case, save Christ's life, and flattered himself that he had acted with exceptional uprightness. He must, after all, look to himself, first. Would he bring down on himself a recall; perhaps banishment, or even worse; to save a Jew, because justice demanded his doing so? "Who," doubtless thought the mere politician, "5 in my position, would dream of committing such a folly? Shall I sacrifice myself for any one? No!"

"Furious at the priesthood, and the rabble, who kept shouting the hateful insinuation that clemency would be treason to Cesar, Pilate once more took his official seat. It was, now, about nine o'clock, and he had at last given way; though with bitter mortification. He would not, even yet, however, surrender without one more effort to carry his point, for he was alarmed alike at Jesus and at the Emperor "Turning to Jesus, still wearing the crown of thorns and the scarlet cloak in a burst of unconcealed contempt against the Jews, as impolitic as it was useless, he cried-" Behold your king!" The only answer was a hurricane of cries-" Away with Him, away with Him. crucify Him!" "What!" cried Pilate, with keen withering mockery -" shall I crucify your king?" As if to say that one so humiliated and outcast was all the king they deserved or could show any off to Cataphas and Hannas, and the group round them, were, however, more than a match for him. They had an answer ready which would force his hand, if the had any thought of still holding out with We have no king but Cæsar," rose all round him-"" we want no other king!"" "The hypocrites," doubtless thought Pila e, "with the souls of slaves. Tiberius, himself, has not yet ventured to call himself king, or Lord, and these, his mortal enemies; priests too, pretending to be the heads of religion, pay him homage as king, without being asked, only to force me, by their pretended 'oyalty, to carry out their revenge against one so much better than themselves.") in all It was Friday and Salbath on which nothing could be donebegan at sunset. If the execution were delayed, new difficulties might rise to save Jewish scruples about the descration of the holy day by the exposure, during it, of bodies on the cross. Who, moreover, could tell what might follow, if the followers of Jesus rose against His enemies during this respite, to force a release of their Teacher? Besides, Pilate felt he could not now save Him, and wished the whole matter over as soon and as quietly as possible. "He, therefore, at last, gave the final order for crucifixion. institution to Cotar A:0 and that make Bindell a king as He has done, de

Castre Himson Hosanitt Person

Plate tore, the journe, anapiouse of Theirits, and if are the tore, the fourner, anapious of the constitution how healthd named in a plice by orange form of extrange, so that an appeal to forme migat, well be fault to him. Sheald the expose himself to the displassion of the thrue prior?, they are projection work analysing the product as grades thrue proves in the first or the display the risk of us venerance. He, doubles tried to make himself bethe risk of us venerance. He, doubles tried to make himself be-

raising all sent ent

and the second

fr. cole troin, whom he had got it as the wards of his guilt-paid be realized of an interest in the former with the second of the second seco Evil Bualfor weigh in JUDAS THE CRUCIFICION SILT SILT SILT SAL

Among the spectators of the trial and condemnation, .7as one who was far enough from joining in the cries of the high priests, and their satellites,—Judas Iscariot. Whatever might have been his thoughts while sustained by excitement, he had no sooner seen Jesus led away by the Roman soldiers from the garden, than all changed. The excitement was over-the whirlwind of evil on which his spirit had for the time ridden, was spent, and in its place had come the awful calm of retrospect and reflection. He was no longer needed by his employers, and found himself, lately so flattered and followed, now cast ignominiously aside, as the traitor he was. The great moon, the silent night, his loceliness, after such agitation, the sudden breaking up of the past, the vision of the three years now so tragically ended; echoes and remembrances of the love and divine goodness of the Master he had betrayed; a sudden realization of the infinite future; with its throne, its unerring Judge,-the assembled universe, the doom of the guilty, and the joy of the faithful, acted . and reacted on his heart and brain.

<sup>10</sup> It may be he had stood, pale with remorse and anxiety, through all the incidents of the trial, hoping, against hope, that his Master would at last put forth His supernatural power, and deliver Himself, as perhaps he had expected. It is quite possible that Judas had acted as he had done, to precipitate a crisis, and force Jesus to such a display of His power, as would, even against His will, force on Him the assumption of the worldly Messianic dignity, from which the unhappy fallen man had dreamed of political greatness, and rich official state for himself.

"To his unspeakable horror, he had found all his calculations miscarry! Perhaps after waiting amongst the crowd before Pilate, as well as at the gate of the high priest, he had heard the shouts of the radation and extremest agony-and last of all, the fatal utterance of Pilate-"I, miles, expedi crucem,"-"Go, soldier, prepare the cross." They had fallen in a Sodom-like fire-rain on his soul, and he felt himself already the accursed of time and eternity. The light of life had passed into the darkness visible of despair. Which way he looked was hell; himself was hell. a ider the Grein dupling t

Hurrying to the Temple with his wretched gain, for which he had bartered away his inheritance of one of the twelve thrones of the resurrection, and an apostle's glory here, in the heavenly kingdom his Master had founded, -he sought to thrust it back again on the AUTEURIA DUB #1 priests forehan Temple their ow back the the price shekels, and was very cou to couse ter? He Jesusiw Would t spotion He mi they stoo by.buThe is nit tow own affa could at money w pavement morning-but had Jewish at known as the Field which he turedand To put ful: DTo buy the v for the fu in which scene of t Meanw Death shameful which eves, or e Eastern o thaginians ander the the defenc citizens, w duction in crucified s priests from whom he had got it, as the wages of his guilt—paid beforehand, to quicken his zeal. But though willing to prop up their Temple system by murder, they would on no account, compromise their own ceremonial purity, or that of the sacred treasury, by taking back the coin, which they themselves had poilnted, by paying it as the price of crime. They could see the stain of the blood on the shekels, but not on their own souls. Judas had served their purpose, and was nothing to them how. He had in his agony pressed into the very court of the priests, where they were gathered—ground sacred to consecrated feet. Would they do nothing yet, to save his Master? He had not expected they would go to such awful extremes. Jesus was innocent. All he had sald against Him was untrue. Would they not for their holy office sake, for the sake of the holy spot on which they then were, undo the awful crime?"

ne who

sts, and

een his

n Jesus

hanged.

is spirit

me the

needed

llowed.

e great

sudden

so trag-

ae good-

f the insembled acted.

murni

through

s Master

Himself,

das had to such

force : on

n which

and rich

illy fills.

ons mis-

Pilate, as ts of the bleeding

vest deg-

pare the

oul, and

he light

hich way

rit hold B

h he had es of the kingdom

op the

He might as well have spoken to the marble pavement on which they stood, with bare feet, in reverence of the Holy of Holies close by. The stone was not more impassive than their hearts. " What is it to us," answered they, "what you have done? That is your own affair. See you to it." But if he could not move them, he could at least clear himself, so far, by casting back among them the money with which they had hired him. Throwing it down on the pavement, therefore, he went out, perhaps in the darkness of early morning-for possibly he did not wait for the last acts of the trial, but had been overwhelmed by the condemnation of a Jesus by the Jewish authorities and hanged himself in a spot of ground, till then known as the clay-yard of a potter of the town, but thenceforth as the Field of Blood Nor was even this the end, for the cord by which he had suspended himself gave way, and he fell beneath, ruptured and revolting analign fin /

To put money, defiled from any cause, into the treasury was unlawful. To what could the authorities apply it? How, better, than to buy the worn-out clay pit, already defiled by the suicide of Judas, for the further defilement of a graveyard. There was need of a spot in which to bury foreign Jews, who might die in Jerusalem. So the scene of the traitor's death became doubly a "field of blood."

Meanwhile, proparations were being rapidly made for crucifixion. Death by the cross was the most terrible and the most dreaded and shameful punishment of antiquity—a punishment, the very name of which. Cicero tells us, should never come near the thoughts, the eyes, or ears, of a Roman citizen, far less his person. It was of Eastern origin, and had been in use among the Persians and Carthaginians, long before its employment in Western countries. Alexander the Great adopted it in Palestine, from the Phenicians, after the defence of Tyre, which he punished by crucifying two thousand citizens, when the place surrendered. Crassus signalized its introduction into Roman use by lining the road from Capau to Rome with crucified slaves, captured in the revolt of Spartacus, and Augustus finally inaugurated its general use, by crucifying six thousand slaves at once, in Sicily, in his suppression of the war, raised by Sextus Pompeius to and crucic balli court of childebout found i starts.

It was not a Jewish punishment, for the cases mentioned in the Old Testament of "hanging up" criminals on offenders refer only. to their dead bodies, or were imitations of the heathen custom by some of the kings. For Jews to crucify a Jew, indeed, would have been impossible, as the national sentiment would have revolted from it mi The cruelty of heathenism had to be called in by the corrupt and sunken priesthood, before such a death could be inflicted on any member of the nation, far less on one declared by the Procurator himself to be innocent of It was the punishment inflicted by heathenism, which knew no compassion or reverence for a man as man, -- on the worst criminals, on highway robbers, rebels and slaves, or on provincials who, in the eyes of Rome, were only slaves, if they fell into crime in search shall derive supersonver the andr. Bur all the last for all The cross used at Calvary consisted of a strong post, which was carried beforehand to the place of execution, and of two cross pieces, horne to the spot by the victim, and afterwards nailed to the uprights so that they slanted forward, and let the sufferer lean on his stretched out hands, and thus relieve the pressure of his body downwards. A stout rough wooden pin, in the middle of the upright post, supplied a seat of fitting agony, for the weight of the body would otherwise have torn it from the cross, the larment admit I attain While everything was being prepared, Jesus was exposed in the guaro mom, once more, to the insults of the soldiery. At last, however, all was ready, and the scarlet cloak was now removed, and His own linen abba replaced. It was the custom, as I have said, for offenders themselves to carry the transverse pieces of their cross, and these therefore, were now laid on the shoulders of Jesus, faint as He was with mental and bodily distress. A detachment of the cohort which had been massed in the court of the palace, in case of disturbance, was told off under a conturion to guard the procession to the place of death, the officer being responsible for the due execution of the sentence. I Jesus was not, however, to die alone. Two more prisoners were brought out to suffer with him; men convicted not of merc/insurrection; but of robbery; the special trouble of the land in these evil times, even till Jerusalem perished. Pilate could hardly have intended to degrade Jesus in the eyes of the Jews by associating Him with enemies of society, but the want of thought, with which he formed such a group of victims, simply to empty his prison, and get through the annual Easter executions at once, shows how superficial an impression had been made on his light nature by all that had passed h His seriousness had been written in water, heartlessness and utter want of moral earnestnesss were his provailing anood faring And now the sad procession began to It was about ten in the forenoons for at least an hour had been spant in gotting roady of The soldiers guard, whitene which I soldier' cross, fa projecti It is v Jerusale nt a der island after sie of succes outside t let the st the palac the shade through moved's prisoners soldiers y the rest o As it n nied it. ver week busy with many, be women es by religio die of w men, even all were f the city h at the tri many of t which the posed ener their pock early mor Two inc ecution. streets, for so delayed seized a pr them. Th Simon; fre

776

-)

soldiers stepped into their ranks, and the prisoners were set, under guard, in their places; each carrying, lrung from his neck, a whitened board, proclaiming in large black letters the offences for which he was about to die; unless, indeed, as in some cases, a soldier bore it before them. Each, also, bore the cross beams of his cross, fastened together like the letter V, with his arms bound to the projecting ends.

It is vain to attempt to follow the route, for the whole surface of Jerusalem has changed since then. Roman London is only reached at a depth of sixteen or seventeen feet, though the history of our island is comparatively peaceful; but Jerusalem has stood siege after siege till the streets of Christ's day are buried below the ruins of successive cities. All we know is that the place of execution was outside the walls, to the north-west, at the side of a leading road, to let the spectacle be seen by the crowds passing and repassing. From the palace of Herod, the sad procession must have passed out under the shadow of the great castles of Hippicus, Phasael, and Marianne; through the Hebron or Jaffa gate, or the gate Gennath. As it moved slowly on, an official proclaimed aloud the names of the prisoners, and the offences for which they were about to die. Four soldfiers walked beside each, as the special guard and executioners, the rest of the detachment preceding and following.

As it moved through the narrow streets, a great crowd accompanied it. The Temple had recial claims on the citizens in the Passover week, and, besides, it would soon be Sabbath, and they were busy with their worldly affairs, and loath to afford the time; yet many, both friends and enemies, pressed after the soldiers. The women especially, less easily diverted from sorrow and pity. either by religious rites or every day duties, thronged to see One led out to die of whom they had heard so much. "In the East, men and women, even man and wife, never appear in public together, and hence all were free to show their feelings independently. The Galilæns in the city had been taken by surprise, and had had no time to gather at the trial and show sympathy with their countryman, whom so many of them reckoned as a prophet. Only fanatical Jerusalem, to which the cry of the priests was law, and to whom Jcsus, as a supposed enemy of the Temple,-the idol at once of their bigotry and their pocket,-was doubly liateful, had learned of the arrest in the early morning and had gathered to yell down Pilate's proposals of

Two incidents only are recorded of the march to the place of execution. "The beams laid on Jesus soon proved too heavy, in the hilly streets, for His exhausted strength, and His slow advance with them so delayed the procession that the guard grew impatient, and having seized a passer by coming from the country, compelled him to bear them. The involuntary cross-bearer was a foreign Jew, called Simon, from Cyrene, in North Africa ; now part of Funis, then part

alavea extua

in the only.

m by l have

from

pt and

n any urator athenn, non orion ey fell Brur call ch was pieces, the upon his down upright e body in the t, howand His aid, for bas, and faint as cohort disturbn to the ution of o more l not of land in hardly ociating h which on, and v superhat had

lessness

odhasias.

he fore-

V-noiThe

of the province of Libyant Ptolemæus Lagi had carried off a hundred thousand Jews from Palestine, and settled them in these part of North Africa, and in three hundred years they had increased se greatly in numbers, that a special synagogue was erected in Jerusalem for the pilgrims they yielded to the great feasts. Simon's appearance marked him as a foreigner, for, in the East, all nationalitics have their distinctive dress; and, as a stranger, the infamy of being made to carry a cross would be less likely to cause a stir. It may be that he showed sympathy with Jesus, but, in any case, his service to Him appears to have resulted in his conversion, with all his family: for it is easy to believe the tradition that the "Rufus and his mother," of whom St. Paul, a quarter of a century later, speaks so tenderly, were his wife and, one of the two sons, Alexander and Rufus, mentioned by St. Mark as known to his readers. From the moment of His declaring Himself the Messiah, and being condemned to die for doing so, Jesus had had nothing more to say to His judges. No cry of pain; no murmur of impatience escaped Him. He had realized to the full all that the victorious completion of His work, through self-sacrifice, demanded; and bore indignitics and agonics with unbroken submission, He was dying to free mankind from the bondage of the letter; to break, for ever, the chains of Rabbinism and priestly caste, from the human soul; to inaugurate the reign of spiritual religion; and, above all, to atone for man's sin, and then enter into His glory with the Father. The joy set before Him strengthened Ilim, in the words of the Epistle to the Hebrews, to endure the cross, and despise the shame. an privilian diversion But His lips, shut for hours, opened once more on the way to His death. The road was lined, with spectators, many of whom did not attempt to conceal their sympathy; and a great crowd followed, both of men and women, the latter filling the air with loud lamentations and wailings. Touched with their grief, so strangely sweet after such a long bitterness of mockery and clamorous hatred, the Innocent One stopped on His way, and turning to them, bade them lament, not for llim, but for themselves of bad ovoit as around an "Daughters of Jerusalem," said He, "weep not for Me, but weep for yourselves." His death was the fulfilment of the counsels of God, and His apparent overthrow was His real and cternal victory. They might have wept for Him, had He shrunk from completing the work given Him to do, and failed to perfect the great pla of human salvation. "But weep for yourselves and for your children. The fate of Jerusalem which I love so well, is sealed, and will be sad indeed compared with my momentary pains, For if your enemies to these things to Me, a green fruit-bearing tree that deserves to live and be cherished-Me, pronounced guiltless even by the judge himself-what will they do with the dry and worthless tree of the nation, guilty before God and man? Israel is a dry, leafless trunk that will hear no more fruit, but is descued to the hurning. What will be its fate: if Yet the for ever will over herds." "He ha licart an future no To bear years, H borne. pushed h killed its and now life let it should fa God. a sacred The sp of the ga Golgutha Luke, wr Calvary, tradition it simply. and sligh rounded a there is n would ha mitted to To The ere sometime. up. Jesu once mor cloth at n apart for ground, or along the pin of rou followed; the cross, driving a The legs w upright be by two gr A single fate, if Mine, who am green and fresh in innocence, be what it is Yet the green, cut down, will sprout again, but the dry will perish for everyoner. In that day the curse of ages of sin and hypocrisy will overwhelm your city and Temple, with its watchers and shepherds."

01

778

He had always loved children, and had often pressed them to Ilis heart and carried them in His arms, but the vision of the avful future now rising before Him was darkened by this very tenderness: To bear children was the glory of every Jewish wife; but in after years. He told them, they would call her blessed who had never borne. "Your nation has not known the day of its visitation; it has pushed back My hand when I offered it life here and hereafter; it has killed its prophets and stoned them that were sent to it from God; and now the things of its peace are hid from its eyes. Instead of life let it wish a grave, ere its despairing cry rises that the mountains should fall on it, and the hills cover it from the avenging wrath of God." Words of tender human love, welling up from the depths of a sacred pity, even under the shadow of the cross!

The spot on which the crosses were to be crected stood near some of the gardens of the suburbs, and was known by the Aramaic name, Golgutha, of which Cranion—a skull—given as the name by St. Euke, writing for Gentlles, is the Greek translation, and Calvaria, Calvary, the Latin. From a fancied allusion to the shape of a skull, tradition has handed it down as a hill, but all the four Gospels call it simply a place, as it it had its name only from its bare smoothness and slight convexity, as we speak of the brow of a hill from its rounded slope. It may have been the usual place of execution, but there is nothing in the name to lead to the belief, for, in that case, it would have been spoken of as a place of skulls, had they been permitted to lie unburied in Juden, which was impossible.

The cross pleces were nailed in their places on the upright posts, sometimes before, sometimes after, the posts themselves had been set up. Jesus and His fellow-sufferers, in either case, were now stripped once more, as they had been before they were scourged—a linen cloth at most being left round their loins. The centre cross was set apart for our Lord, and He was haid on it either as it lay on the ground, or lifted and thed to it as it stood upright, His arms stretched along the two cross beams, and His body resting on the projecting pin of rough wood, misnamed a seat. The most dreadful part then followed; for, though even the Egyptians only tied the victims to the cross, the Romans and Carthaginians added to the torture, by driving a huge nall through the palm of each hand into the wood. The legs were, next beat up till the souls of the feet lay flat on the upright beam and then they, too, were fastened, either, separately, by two great iron nails, or over each other, by one.

Licht character of humanity was permitted during these prepara-a hunpart of ised se Jerusaom's apnalitics f being may be cvice to family; and his eaks so ler and d being to say escaped apletion lignitics ee manhains of ugurate an's sin, t before lebrews, y to His did not ed, both ntations set after he Innolo them ut weep

nsels of victory, ting the f human n. The l be sad enemies s to live ge himb nation, hat will h hs is soldiers, mingled with some stupefying bitter drug—usually myrrh. The ladies of Jerusalem made it, indeed, their special task to provide it for all condemned persons. But Jesus would take nothing to cloud His faculties, even though it might mitigate His pain. The cross was now lifted up and planted in the ground, with a rough shock of undescribable agony. It was perhaps then that the first words uttered from it rose from His lips—'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do,"—words breathing love, patience, submis sion, gentleness, and goodwill, not only towards the soldiers, who were only the blind servants of power, but even to 'Pilate, and Caia phas, Hannas, and Jerusalem! Racked by the extremest pain, and covered with every shame

Racked by the extremest pain, and covered with every shame which men were wont to heap on the greatest criminals; forsaken and denied by His disciples; no sigh escaped His lips, no cry of agony, no bitter or faltering word; only a prayer for the forgiveness of His enemies. They had acted in blindness, under the impulse of religious and political fanaticism, for, to use St. Paul's words, had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of Glory. They thought, without doubt, that they were doing a service wellpleasing to God in putting Him to death. It stood written in the books of Moses, "Cursed be he who does not fulfil the words of the law to do them," and they fancied they were obeying this command in crucifying Him for slighting their additions, which they confounded with the words of God. In spite of all their school learning they were kind to the true meaning of the Scriptures; though this ignorance was not guiltless, for He had sought for three years to rouse them to a better knowledge. But their guilt was in some measure lessened by the influence on their minds of education and the prescriptions of centuries, which had shut their eyes to the light He brought them. His prayer that His heavenly Father would pardon them was only a last utterance of the love of which He had been the embodiment and expression through life, and the fitting illustration of His words that He came to call the sick; not those who had no need of a physician.

The "title" that had been borne before Him or hung from His neck, was now nailed on the projecting top of the cross, over His head. That all classes might be able to read it, Pilate had it written in the three languages of the country—the Aramaic of the people, the Latin of the Romans, and the Greek of the foreign population. It proclaimed Him THE King or THE JEWS, but seems to have run differently in each language, to judge from the variations in the Gospels.

No tribute could have been more fitting, or more prophetic than an inscription which revealed unconsciously the relation of the Cross to all the nationalities of the world. The crucifixion was now completed, and there only remained the weary interval, till denth came to deliver the sufferers from their agonies. Meanwhile the trooper with their they w executi PaThe . the sen perquis Jesus t division robe, he from th by rend brazen lots for himself John, lo been w Jews of tonthe my vest od The i demnati Himath once, w a bitter man, to vet aları enough dismisse have wr Mean The suff partly fr the outs motion of feet, pie through and som Inflamm and ere checked creasing extremit naturall e besides, grew me Had the there gya their centurion, kept the ground and guarded the three crosses, for they were answerable with their lives for the due carrying out of the execution many participant and the second seco

The four soldiers,-a quaternion-specially detailed to carry out the sentence of the Procurator, were now free to appropriate, as their perquisites, the clothes of the three victims. The outer garments of Jesus they divided into four shares-tearing the larger, to make the division equal-for they were not worth keeping entire. The inner robe, however, like the robes of the priests, was of one piece woven from the top without any seam or stitching, and would be destroyed by rending. The dice were ready in their, pocket, and one of their. brazen helmets would serve to throw them; it would be better to cast lots for this, and let him who won the highest number keep it for himself-and so it was done. No wonder that both Matthew and John, looking back on the scene, were struck by the fact that it had been written, ages before, in the twenty-second Psalm, which the Jews of that day, as well as Christians, rightly believed to refer to the Messiah-"They parted my garments among them, and for my vesture they cast lots." work with

The inscription on the cross had been Pilate's revenge for the condemnation of Jesus, wrung from him by the priests. To proclaim Him, the villager of Nazareth, as the King of the Jews, marked, at once, what was fit, in his opinion, for them, and flung in their faces a bitter reproach of having betrayed their own nation and countryman, to Rome. The authorities of the Temple were indignant, and yet alarmed, and applied to him to alter it. But he had suffered enough at their hands, and smarting under his defeat and humiliation, dismissed them with the laconic answer, "What I have written I have written."

Meanwhile the fierce heat of a Syrian noon beat down on the cross. The suffering in crucifixion, from which death at last resulted, rose partly from the constrained and fixed position of the body, and of the outstretched arms, which caused acute pain from every twitch or motion of the back, lacerated by the knout, and of the hands and feet, pierced by the nails. These latter were, moreover, driven through parts where many sensitive nerves and sinews come together, and some of these were mutilated; others violently crushed down. Inflammation of the wounds in both hands and feet, speedily set in, and ere long rose also in other places, where the circulation was checked by the tension of the parts. Intolerable thirst, and ever-increasing pain, resulted. The blood, which could no longer reach the extremities, rose to the head, swelled the veins and arteries in it unnaturally, and caused the most agonizing tortures, in the brain. As, besides, it could no longer move freely from the lung, the heart grew more and more oppressed, and all the veins were distended. Had the wounds bled freely, it would have been a great relief, but there was very little lost. The weight of the body itself, resting on mvrrhij otovide o cloud e cross ock of rds utor they submis rs, who d Caia 1100515 7015 shame orsakcii cry of giveness pulse of rds. had Glory ce wella in the s of the mmand ley conlearning ughethis vears to insome tion and the light riwould He had e fitting nose who Hollom rom His over His t written ople, the tion.bg It have run hs in the 11:11:11:11:00 etic than the Cross ow com niname to oper with the wooden pin of the upright beam, the burning heat of the sun scorching the veins, and the hot wind, which dried up the moisture of the body, made each moment more terrible than that before. The numbress and stiffness of the more distant muscles brought on painful convulsions, and this numbress, slowly extending, sometimes through two or three days, at last reached the vital parts, and released the sufferer by death.

Common pity would have left the victim of such agony to die in peace. But it is reserved to the malignant hatred and passion which spring from perverted religious zeal to ignore compassion. The fitle over His head was as offensive to the people as to the priests and Rabbis, for it was a virtual ridicule of their impotent aspirations after universal monarchy. Beneath the cross the same mockery indulged itself. as the Procurator had thought not beneath the dignity of Rome. The fierce crowd had heard repeatedly that day of Jesus having said as was asserted, that He could destroy their vast temple, and build it up again in three days. They had heard also a great deal about His miracles, and of His calling Himself the Son of God, but it seemed as if the whole must have been a deception, else why would He let Himself die such a death? There were taunts and bitter gibes, from the mob and the soldiers, and triumphant sneers at His having met the fate He deserved; the very high priests, and Rabbis, and elders, indeed, degraded themselves to the level of the rabble in their unmanly taunts, among their own knots and groups. ""Thou that destroyest the Temple, and buildest it in three days, show that Thou couldst have done so, by saving Thyself, and coming down from the cross," called out a looker-on, with a contemptuous laugh. "If Thou be the Son of God, as Thou sayest," cried another, "come down from the cross." "" He wrought miracles to save others," said a high priest to his fellow, " by the help of Beelzebub, but He can not save Himself, now His master has forsaken 'Him." The crowd, catching their spirit, bandied from one to another the scoff,"" If He be the Christ, the King of Israel, the Chosen of God, let Him descend from the cross, that we may see and believe.""A true index to their. religious ideas! If they saw Hiru with their bodily eyes, by a miracle come down from the cross, they would believe! "Their religion rested on their five senses. The invisible spiritual power, in which Jesus taught, did His work, and founded His kingdom, had no existence for them. The only authority for their faith was what they could grasp with their hands, or see with their eyes!"

Nor was the only railing, and trial of litter mocking, from the spectators. Affecting indifference to their own sufferings, and perhaps wishing to get a poor favour with the crowd, in their last hours; perhaps angry that Jesus had left both them and Hirnself to die, when He might have saved them; the two unhapor men crucified with Him, cast the same reproaches in His teeth. But a Frange contrast was soon to display itself. One of the two, erelorg, awro and won by

His bea of Jeru Jesus in perliaps taunts to be th lecting bitterne kinder 1 think t reproac Besides, ment of done no Then were ali the mee all that in realit the folly been a J in agon Him, an here. I the result "O Lo Jesus, as ment of "I sha among th To hav deserted the first ( be vague which ut phemios dropping bounty o answerin of a crow The El too much outside th had cour Him by foreseen t was too I

His bearing under such treatment; perhaps thinking of the daughters of Jerusalem he had seen weeping by the way; or of the words of Jesus in which He spoke of the distant future as open before Him; perhaps struck by the title over the Saviour's head, or by the very taunts which spoke of His having trusted in God, and having claimed to be the Christ, the Chosen, the Son of the Highest; perhaps recollecting some words of His heard in happier days; repented of his bitterness, and turned to his companion, to persuade him, also, to kinder thoughts. "Have you no fear of God," said he, "when you think that you are dying the same death as He whom you are still reproaching? It is no time to mock, when you are so near death. Besides, we are dying justly, for we are receiving the fitting punishment of our deeds; but this man, as the very Procurator has said, has done nothing amiss." Then followed words which showed that his repentance and faith were alike sincere and intelligent. He had been silently watching the meek and patient endurance by his mysterious Fellow-Sufferer, of all that His enemies could do, and had come to the belief that He was, in reality, the Messiah He declared Himself to be. With death near, the folly of the earthly dreams of his countrymen-for he must have been a Jew-flashed on his mind. As the Messiah, He who now hung in agony must have a kingdom of which death could not deprive Him, and it must be in the world beyond, since He had only a cross here. He would doubtless enter on it, as even the Rabbis taught, at the resurrection of the dead, and reign over it for all future ages.

"O Lord," said he, therefore, turning as far as he could towards Jesus, as he spoke, "remember me when Thou enterest into the enjoy-among the blessed, in Paradise." to his fellow which the in

To have confessed his faith when Christ hung on the cross, and was deserted even by His Apostles, won for him the high reward of being the first trophy of the victory that cross achieved. His ideas might be vague and obscure enough; but the broken heart and trustful love which uttered them, made them dear to the Saviour. Angry blasphemios alone had hitherto greeted Him, but now came this prayer, dropping like balm on His wounded spirit! Calmly, and with the bounty of a king-chough now nailed to the cross-He showed His answering love by the gift of divine pardon of sin, and the bestowment of a crown in Paradise! That the are to the stand matt a

The Eleven had never gathered again after the arrest, and had been too much alarmed even to venture_singly, into the crowd which stood outside the cordon of troops round the three crosses. John, alone, had had courage enough to follow his Master to Calvary, and to cheer Him by the proof of fidelity in at least one heart. He had, indeed, foreseen that He would be deserted thus in His hour of need; but He was too near His triumph to notice their absence as otherwise He

the sun loisture e. The ight on netimes and re-

o die in n which The title ests and ons after ndulged f Rome. having ple, and eat deal Jod, but y would d bitter rs at His Rabbis. abble in "" Thou how that wn from gh. ""If "come rs," said He cane crowd, "If He descend to their miracle religion n which d no exhat they

the specperhaps urs; perlie, when fied with contrast n won by might. The veil between Him and His sternal glory was, each moment, fading into the upper light, and had He not, even now, won the first trophy of His redeeming love, to bear with Him to heaven? The last sight we have of John, before the crucifixion, is in the courtyard of the high priest, where his silence and prudent kceping in the background, saved him from the danger before which Peter had fallen. He had seen Jesus led away to Pilate, and had, apparently, followed Him to the palace, waiting in the angry crowd till the weak. time-serving Procurator had given Him up to the cross. He may have left as soon as the end was known, to hasten into the city with the sad news, to those anxious to hear; above all, to tell her whose soul the sword was now about to pierce most keenly. Mary, likely, heard her Son's fate from his lips. She had come to Jerusalem to be near Him. but we do not know when; for she was not one of the group of pious Galilæan women who habitually followed Him, though she was with them at this moment. How many were together is not told; but Mary, at least, on hearing John's words, determined, in her love, to go at once to Calvary, and some round her resolved to go with her. Her own sister, who, it may be, was Salome, the mother of John; Mary the wife of Clopas; Mary from Magdala, on the banks of Gennesareth, would attend her, and John, faithful as a woman, would not stay behina.

The first sight the Virgin had of her Son was as He hung on the cross, at the roadside, mocked by the crowd and the passers-by, and scowled at, by the high priests and dignitaries, who had come out to glut the hatred they bore Him by the sight of His agony." A supernatural darkness-the sign of the sorrow and the wrath of heavenhad fallen on the landscape soon after the nailing to the cross-though it was then high noon; but the spectators had fancied it only a strange incident in the weather. The Sufferer had offered His prayer for His murderers, and had spoken words of comfort to the penitent spirit at His side; when, as His eyes wandered over the crowd, He saw, through the gloom, John, standing by His mother's side. None of His "brothers or sisters" were there, for His resurrection was first to win them to His cause, and Mary, long a widow, was now to be more so still. He knew John's heart, and, indeed, his presence there proclaimed it. The sight of His mother in tears; true even in death; in spite of danger, or of her broken heart, or of the reproaches rising on every side; the remembrance of Nazareth; the thought of the sorrows that so often, in these last years, had pierced her soul, and of the supreme grief that had now overwhelmed her; the recognition of the true faith in Him, shining out in these last hours, as the child, borne by miracle to be a Saviour, the holy Son of God; and the thought that His earthly relations to her were closed for ever, filled His heart with tender emotions.

Turning His face, now veiled with many sorrows, to her and John. He provided for the one, and honored the fidelity of the other. A few words gave Mary a home and another son, and rewarded the friend of His soul by the charge to take the place towards Mary He Himself was leaving. "Woman," said He, in tones of infinite tenderness, "behold, in him at thy side thou hast thy Son-given back to thee." Then, looking at John, He added, "To thee I trust My mother; let her be thy mother for My sake."

Need we wonder that the beloved disciple, writing his Gospel in old age, felt a sweet reward in recalling an incident so unspeakably touching? Mary, henceforth, had a home, for John took her to his own: His love to her divine Son made him dearer to her than the circle of Nazareth, however related. In Mary, he saw a second mother; in John, the widowed one saw a son. Nor was the new nearness to Jesus the only reward to John from the cross. His Master had shown, by His thoughts for others rather than Himself, in this time of His greatest need, that He was still what He had always been. Looking mp to Him, John saw the light of higher than earthly victory on His pale features, and felt his faith confirmed for ever. It was now three o'clock, and Jesus had hung on the cross about three hours. Darkness still lay like a pall over the landscape, as if nature, less insensible than man; refused to look on such a spectacle, or would prefigure the sadness one day to be spread over all nations for the sin that had caused so awful a sacrifice. What had been passing in His spirit no one can know. As a man He had a nature, in all things, except its sinlessness, like that of the race at large. But He was also the divine Son of God, for a time in the form of a servant, and now, of His own free love to man, dying as a ransom for sin." We accept the transcendent mystery but we cannot hope to explain it. The cross was but the culmination of a long martyrdom. His soul had often been sore troubled; His sighs had been marked even by His disciples. To be dying for the sake of men, and yet to be treated as their foe; to be misconceived and misrepresented; to have His heart full of infinite love, and hear, even now, only excerations, brought back, for a moment, the mental agony of Gethsemane. It was the "power of darkness," the final truggle with the prince of this world." To the unendurable torture of the body there was added the unspeakable spiritual pain of apparently utter rejection by man, whom He loved with a love so divine! His Father was with Him in the midst of the darkness as much as in the Transfiguration at Cæsarea Philippi, but the gathering clouds and gloom of these last awful hours made it seem, for an instant, as if His face were hidden. The shadows of death passed for a moment in blackness and horror over His spirit, and His mental anguish rclieved itself by a great cry of distress. The language we have heard from our mother's lips and have spoken in childhood, may be laid aside in after years for another, to meet the requirements of life; and Jesus, doubtless, in these last years, had often had to use the Greek of city communities, instead of His own simple Galilean.

and John r. A few

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

But, now, the sounds of infancy, always nearest the heart, and sure to come to the lips in our deepest emotion, returned in His anguish, and in words which He had learned at His mother's knee, His heart uttered its last wall- aba. and grad cont. and ditach milling hand at

Elori Elori Elori lama sabachthani? "My God! My God! why hast Thou forsaken me?"

The first words sounded like the name of the great prophet Elijah. the expected herald of the Messiah, and were taken, by some in the crowd, for a cry that he should come to save Him. Meanwhile, one near, more pitiful than the rest; caring little for the words, saw the agony of which they were the expression, and ran and filled a sponge with the sour wine-and-water of the soldiers, and having fixed it on the short stem of a hyssop-plant, growing near, put it to Ilis lips; for the cross was quite low, the feet of Jesus reaching nearly to the ground do an another the state state million still in a strong of the ant

A moment more, and all was over. The cloud had passed as suddenly as it rose, "Far and wide, over the var, quiched throngs of His enemies, with a loud voice, as if uttering H.s. mout of eternal victory before entering into His glory, He cried, itcased without -weightable que Construction of the second of the local second of the construction of the second s ful periods soit of moves of IT 18 Finished but his sait at animal day de sud such ne Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit " divel - 30 T A moment more, and there rose a great cry, as of mortal agony. the head fell. If He was dead in a kew war emperated this brief out and

The great work of salvation was now, at last, completed; prophecy fulfilled; the Ancient Covenant at an end, the New inaugurated. Judaism was for ever obsolete, and the Holy of Holies had ceased to be the peculiar presence-chamber of Jehovah among men. Nor was a sign wanting that it was so, for the great well of purple and goldsixty feet long and thirty broad-before the inper sanctuary of the Temple, suddenly rent itself in two, from the top to the bottom, at the moment of Christ's death : as if He who had hitherto dwelt there had gone fort's to lead up His Eternal Son to His own right hand. And, indeed, not only the yielding veil of the Temple, but the very rocks, round Calvary, as St. Matthew tells us, the were rent, and the carth quaked, the graves were opened, and many of the saints sleeping in them rose from the dead, and went into the Holy City, and appeared unto many ??, introublic ath patiting with contains but far at One incident is recorded of this moment, by three of the Evangelists. W The centurion in charge of the troops had halted, as he passed the cross, when Jesus uttered His loud death-crystal He was within a few yards of Him, and must have involuntarily fixed his gaze on Him at such a sound. He saw the change pass over His features; the light of the eart But the cry and but had cross. a shriek organs t it, and j broke i righteou haps, eq heathen had with Nor w the earth They had over, am home in populatio Calvary'l the rend feeling in themselve

The Je had been death: I after suns not be det cross till t or the rav the cross' the Jewis should be not alread almost at an hour of on the cro cred, wou Besides, th A deput to get his vet be aliv brutality. clubs, and them at or rible orde light of life leaving them, and the head suddenly sink. As it did so, the earthquake shook the ground, and made the three crosses tremble, But the tremor of the earth affected the Roman less than the piercing cry and sudden death. He had likely attended many crucifixions, but had never seen or heard of a man dying within three hours, on a cross. He had never heard a crucified man, strong to the last, utter a shriek that showed, as that of Jesus did, the full vigour of the vital organs to the last. He felt that there was something mysterious in it, and joining with it all He had seen and heard of the Sufferer, he broke involuntarily into the words, "Assuredly this man was righteous; truly this was God's Son." The one expression was, perhaps, equivalent on his lips to the other, but both showed that even heathen spectators were profoundly affected by the spectacle they had witnessed.

Nor was the effect on the spectators less marked. The darkness, the earthquake, and the rending rocks, had filled them with alarm. They had been noisy and ribid enough, for a time, but when all was over, amidst such strange portents of nature, they were glad to hasten home in silence, with the demonstrations of awe peculiar to Eastern populations—smiting their breasts as they went. The incidents of Calvary had prepared the way for the triumph of Pentecost, as perhaps the rending of the veil had been the first step towards the change of feeling in the great company of priests who soon after professed themselves Christians.

The Jewish law, as I have said, knew nothing of crucifixion, but it had been not uncommon to hang up the body of a criminal after death. It was not permitted, however, that it should be exposed after sunset; burial the same day was enacted, "that the land should not be defiled." The Romans, on the contrary, left the bodies on the cross till they were wasted away, or devoured by the dogs, the jackals, or the ravens as they fell limb from limb. "" To feed the crows on the cross" was a familiar expression." It was necessary, therefore, if the Jewish law were to be honoured, that the permission of Pilate should be given for putting the crucified ones to death, if they had not already died, and for taking down and burying their bodies. almost at once, Next day was the great Paschal Sabbath, and only an hour or two remained before it commenced. Three corpses seen on the cross, so near the Temple and the Holy City, on a day so sacred, would make great commotion, as polluting the whole place. Besides, the feelings of the people might turn, with unknown results,

A deputation of the Temple authorities, therefore, waited on Pilate, to get his sanction for putting any of the three to death, who might yet be alive. The common way to do so was in keeping with Roman brutality. The legs of the unfortunates were broken by blows of clubs, and this Pilate authorized to be done, that the shock might kill them at once. The two thieves were found still living, and the horrible order was forthwith executed on them, but Jesus was dead nd sure nguish, is heart

Liston 1

1 all the

m. E. Sull At

Willie !

Elijah.

e in the ile, one saw the sponge ed it on lips: for to the 11:119 (00" las suds of His 1 victory Differencies ( I UTHATSU ilanon 040 in Stillen Stimmen! 1 10 . 191 grand bury al agony: Willis Mil. prophecy igurated. ceased to: Non was hd gold ---ry of the oltom, at weltithere ht hand. the very

, and the

nts sleep-

City, and

but tax ?

Evange-

he passed

within a

gaze on

tures; the already, and they left Him untouched. One soldier, however, resolved that there should be no doubt,—plunged his spear into the Saviour's side, making a gash so wide, that Jesus could afterwards ask Thomas to put his hand into it, and so deep that blood and water poured out in such a quantity as attracted the notice of John, who was still standing close by.

That any one should die so soon on the cross, especially one, like Jesus, in the prime of life, and unweakened by previous ill-health, and in such vigour to the last as to utter such a shrick as that with which He expired, appeared even to Christian antiquity, to imply some supernatural cause. But the mingled flow of blood and water seens to point unmistakably to another explanation. The immediate cause of death appears, beyond question, to have been the rupture of His heart, brought about by mental agony. Excess of joy or grief is known to induce the bursting of some division of the heart, and the consequent flow of blood into the pericardium, or bag, filled with colourless serum, like water, in which the heart is suspended. In ordinary cases, only examination after death discovers the fact but in that of our Lord, the same end was answered by the thrust of the soldier's spear. In a death from heart-rupture " the hand is suddenly carried to the front of the chest, and a piercing shrick uttered." The hands of Jesus were nailed to the cross, but the appailing shrick is recorded.

Jesus died, literally, of a broken heart district of the sale of the second

The heat of the climate in the East has led to the custom of burial following, almost immediately after death, but there were special reasons for that of Jesus being hurried. It was the eve of the great Passover Sabbath, and no corpse could be left unburied to defile the ceremonial purity of the Holy City, on that day. It was necessary, therefore, that our Lord be buried without a moment's delay, for sunset, when the Sabbath began, was rapidly approaching.

Bodies of Jewish criminals seem to have been buried with ignominy, in the Valley of Hinnom; known, from this reason, as the Valley of Corpses—amidst the unclean dust-heaps of the city, and the ashes of the burned offal of the Temple sacrifices. They could not be laid in the graves of their fathers—the common burial-place of the community—for the guilty could not be buried with the just but were huddled out of sight—the beheaded, or hanged, in one spot; the stoned, and burned, in another. But such an indignity was how to befall the sacred form of the Saviour.

Among the spectators of the crucifixion there had been one, if not two, whose position might have enabled them to be of service to Jesus in His hour of need, before the high priestly court, had they had the moral courage to avow their convictions. Joseph, a member of the ruling class, known by the name of his birthplace—Arimathen, or Ramathaim Zophim, where Samuel the prophet was born—among the "fruitful hills" of Ephraim—had long been a secret disciple; and so, also, had Nicodemus, another member of the theocratic oligarchy. Afraid of the overwhelming opposition they must encounter by supporting Christ, they had timidly kept in the background during His trial, though neither had voted for the condemnation. Joseph, indeed, if not both, had even braved public opinion, and the wrath of their fellow-counsellors, by following Jesus to Calvary, Now that He was dead, breaking through all weak reserve and caution at last, he went into the city, and waited on the Procurator, in his palace, to ask as a favour, that the body of Jesus might be put at his disposal. He would fain honour His lifeless form, if only to show his regret and shame for unworthy half-heartedness while He still lived. The meekness and majestic silence under all reproaches and indignities; the veiled sky, the trembling earth; the prayer of the Sufferer for His murderers; His wail of mental agony, as if forsaken; and then the great shrick, and sudden death-had awed his soul, and lifted him far above fear of m n. He had been waiting for the Kingdom of God before, but would openly identify himself with its founder now.

Pilate was astonished, alike, that a Jew in Joseph's position should make such a request, and that Jesus should already be dead. It was not allowed to remove a body from the cross without formal permission from the Procurator. The Eleven, with one exception, had left their Master alone amidst His enemies in His last awful hours, and even the women who had watched the cross, did not venture to ask the stonyhearted governor to let them pay the last tribute of love to the dead. It was no light matter Joseph had undertaken: for to take part in a burial, at any time, would defile him for seven days, and make everything unclean which he touched; and to do so now involved his seclusion through the whole Passover week-with all its holy observances and rejoicings. But, conscience-stricken for the past, he had risen superior, alike to prudent inaction or ceremonial prejudice, and would render his Master a tribute and service especially sacred in the eyes of a Jew. It was one of the most loved remembrances of the hero Tobit, in the old times of the first exile, that he buried any Jew whom he found cast out dead, round Nineveh, and Josephus could add no darker horror, a generation later, to the picture of the fall of Jerti-salem, than by telling that the Zealots would not bury those slain in the city or who fell down on the roads. Joseph would not suffer Jesus to want the last offices, with all the indignity the neglect would imply.

Sending for the officer who had charge of the execution, and finding that Jesus was really dead, Pilate granted Joseph's strange request. A brave deed had had its success. The humour of the Procurator could not be counted on, and the rage of Joseph's own party was certain. In later days, a servant, Porphyrius, who ventured to ask from the Procurator Firmilian, the body of his martyred master, the presbyter Pamphilus, for 'burial, was himself seized and put to death. 'The apocryphal Acts of Pilate describe Joseph as beseeching the favour with ver, ito the rwards l water n, who ne, like health, at with imply d water mediate pture of or grief art; and g, filled spended. the fact thrust of d is suduttered." hg shriek of burial the special the great defile the necessary, for sun-is strand

ith ignon, as the city, and hey could irial-place the justone spot; y was he one, if not te to Jesus ey had the ber of the nathea, or n—among sciple: and sears and entreaties, and they, thus, rightly mark the gravity of his act, but it is not unlikely that a meaner influence came to his help, for Fhile tells as that Pilate's special characteristic was his openness to a bribe. Two or three thousand denaril from the wealthy supplicant, would weigh note than his supplications, in securing his wish.

A written order, or a verbal command to the centurion, put the body at Joseph's disposed.

With the help, of servents, and, it may be, of some soldiers, the cross was quickly cut down or lifted from its socket, and laid on the ground, the cords round the limbs untled, and the nails drawn from the hands and feet. An open vier sufficed to carry away the body to its destined resting place.

Among the Jews the hopes , f the future were closely connected with the careful preservation of the body after death. Like the Egyptians, they attached supreme importance to the inviolability of the tomb either by time or violence. and, no less, to the checking of natural decay, by embalming. To perpetuate their existence on earth, at least in the withered mockery of the grave, and to lie in the Holy Land, in the midst of their fathers, had, at all times, been the most sacred wish of the Jews. In the days of Jesus, however, an additional motive for burial in Palestine, and a careful preservation of the body, was found in the belief of the Resurrection, which was to take place first in Judea, commencing in the valley under the east of the Temple. Even now an Israelite always seeks to have some of the soil of the Holy Land laid in his grave, that the spot where he rests may be counted part of the sacred ground ; if, indeed, his body has not, before the Judgment, made its way through land and sea, to the home of his fathers. The same feeling was all-powerful in the days of our Lord, for in the great sieges of Jerusalens, many Jewish fugitives came back to the city, in spite of the horrors they had already striven to escape-that they might count on at least the last of all blessings, a burial in its holy bounds.

The neighbourhood of Jerusalem, like all other parts of Palestine, has, hence, since the earliest times, abounded in tombs hewn out in the limestone rock. Princes, rich men, every one who could by any means secure it, desired, above all things, to prepare for themselves and their families an "everlasting house," and such a tomb, never yet used, had been hewn out in the hill-side for himself, by Joseph, in a garden not far from Calvary.

To this the body of Jesus was now taken. Nicodemus had come with some of his servants, and he and they, with Joseph and his attendants, and Mary of Magdala, and Mary the mother of James the Less, and of Joses; the wife of Clopas, and perhaps, some others of the true-hearted women from Galilee, were the only followers of His bier.

Arrived at the grave, the sacred burden was laid down for a time, till the needed preparations were made for placing it in the tomb. The whol and then thickly st by Nicode The ends with gum finally late The corps no stone d pose, was designs of ried burial the stone w

Even the the spot. ... saw Him, s theirs, and tomb. In scemed to 1 as near as n they had loo Meanwhil awaked. aud the suc subject of h was not ove had spoken disciples, ac the assertion than ever, by that the grav therefore, at sions. Tir humour to a ness, Go. strong cord it, after not approach wi And thus through the arit to enorts ill to sig-

r for a number

at the state of th

The whole body, stained as it was with blood, was tenderly washed, and then wrapped in broad bands of white linch, within which were thickly strewn powdered myrrh and aloes, which had been provided by Nicodemus for the imperfect embahament practised by the Jews. The ends of the bandages were apparently secured on the innerside with gum, as in the case of the Egyptian dead. A white cloth was finally laid over the face, after a last kiss, the pledge of undying love. The corpse was then laid in a niche in the rock, and since there was no stone door, as in some tombs, a great stone, prepared for the purpose, was rolled against the entrance, to protect the body from the designs of enemies, or the attacks of wild beasts. It was only a hurried burial, for the last rays of the sun were shining on the garden as the stone was set up against the entrance to the grave.

Even then, however, there were some hearts that could not leave the spot. Though He no longer spoke to them, and they no longer saw Him, some of the Galilæan faithful ones still felt that He was theirs, and sat down as mourners, on the earth, before the door of the tomb. In the evening stillness and gathering twilight they still seemed to hear His voice and see His form, and so they lingered on, as near as might be, into the Sabbath eve, and lamented Him whom they had lost fragments and

Meanwhile, the fears of the chief priests and their party had already awaked. A meeting had been held immediately after the crucifixion, aud the success of the scheme to crush Jesus had, doubtless, been the subject of hearty mutual congratulations. But they dreaded that all was not over. It was remembered by one or more that "the deceiver" had spoken darkly of rising from the dead on the third day, and His disciples, acting on this hint, might steal the body, and spread abroad the assertion that He had actually risen, misleading the people more than ever, by claiming for Him divine honors. It was hence necessary that the grave should be watched for three days. A deputation was therefore, appointed to wait on Pilate, representing their apprehensions. Tired of them, and hating them, the governor was in no humour to argue. "Ye have a guard," said he, with military blunt-ness. "Go, make it as sure as ye can." This they did. Passing a strong cord across the stone, and securing its ends by clay, they sealed it, after noting that the soldiers were duly stationed so as to make approach without their knowledge impossible.

And thus the Redeemer was left-pale, but victorious-to sleep through the Salbath out of the stabled in gulf has stated at a state of the state o

Nice.

stil tils nowled preparations were made for placing it in the tomb.

of his help, nness ippliwish. it the and the second of s, the on the from ody to nected ke the . ility of ing of ice on in the een the ver. hn rvation ich was the east some of here he is body l sea, to al in the Jewish hey had the last alestine, n out in by any emselves b, never Joseph, ad come h his atames the ers of the of His r a time, he tomb. India any action of the publication in the four Contraction of the state of the

THE RESURRECTION AND THE FORTY DAYS.

The religion of the Letter had carried out to the bitter end its conflict with the religion of the Spirit. Incapable of reform: identifying its dead rights with the essence of truth; it had crucified the Teacher who had dared to say that they had served their day, and lost their worth. Ritualism had reached its natural culmination in claiming to be the whole of religion, and had slain The Truth itself, when He witnessed against it.

The benumbed and moribund Past had striven to perpetuate itself, by attempting to destroy the Kingdom of the Future in its cradle. How utterly it failed, eighteen centuries have told us.

It was the old story: the light had come into the darkness, and the darkness would not have it; accustomed to the one, it was only dazzled and blinded by the other. Evil had had its apparent triumph. As far as the will and hand of man could effect it, He who, alike as He was man, and as also the Messiah of Israel, knew no spot or blemish of sin, had been crushed as an evil-doer. The one holy being of our race, having revealed Himself as the true Ohrist, expected for ages; the Hope of Israel; the highest and perfect expression, the true spirit and aim of the ancient economy; and even of all other religions, so far as they had divine elements in them; had been rejected and dishonoured to the uttermost by the rulers of the People of God, and by the great bulk of the nation. He who had desired to secure the salvation of Israel, and through it, of humanity, and had shown how, alone, that salvation could be attained, had been branded by the highest authorities, both of Judaism and heathenism, as a deceiver of the people. The blindness of the one, and the indifference of the other, had united in attempting to crush Him whose only weapons in the assault of evil had been the highest wisdom, the divinest love, and unconquerable meekness. But their triumph was only a momentary and permitted eclipse of the Light of the World, destined, presently, to reappear, in unveiled, and, henceforth, unsetting glory. "Nothing," says even so keen a critic as Heinrich Ewald, "stands more historically certain than that Jesus rose from the dead and appeared again to His followers, or than that their seeing Him thus, again, was the beginning of a higher faith, and of all their Christian work in the world. It is equally certain that they thus saw Him, not as a common man; or as a shade or ghost risen from the grave; but as the one Only Son of God-already more than man at once in nature and power; and that all who thus beheld Him, recognized at once and instinctively His unique divine dignity, and firmly believed in it thenceforth. The Twelve and others had, indeed, learned to look on

Him. but f clear conqu minda ance o depth the fir Himt as the Mar for Ma the day the gai ing on Passoy ed natu Sc The landsca in the s put on ] ing (till robed, a of gouts sacrifice the rude with str trumpet high pr robes :---throngs, an omen by Levi hitherto for a few the cour for the The hug its hyach top to bo pired on been exp " The di by the e meaning, warnings dead on t

1 19 1 1

× . . . . . . .

and these

its con-

ntifying Teacher

ost their

iming to

vhen He te itself.

s cradle.

only daz-

triumph.

, alike as t or blem-

being of bected for n, the true ther relig-

n rejected

le of God,

ad shown

ded by the leceiver of

nce of the

veapons in

inest love,

nly a mod, tistands

d and ap-

Him thus,

r Christian v Him, not grave; but

e in nature at once and ieved in it

to look on

Him, even in life, as the True Messianic King and the Son of God, but from the moment of His reappearing, they recognized more clearly and fully the divine,side of His nature, and saw in Him the conqueror of death. Yet the two pictures of Him thus fixed in their minds were in their essence identical. That former familiar appearance of the entity Christ, and this higher vision of Him, with its depth of emotion and ecstatic joy, were so inter-related that, even in the first days or weeks after His death, they could never have seen in Him the Heavenly Messiah, if they had not first known Him so well as the earthly."

Mary of Magdala, and the wife of Clöpas, herself another Maryfor Mary, from the Hebrew Mirlam, was a favourite name ever since the days of the sister of Moses,—had sat on the ground at the door of the garden tomb in which the Beloved One lay, till late on the evening on Friday... The trumpet announcing the beginning of the great Passover Sabbath had only startled them for a moment, and exhausted nature had, perhaps, first compelled them to leave.

as The next day rose calm and bright on the budding and blossoming landscape, for it was Nisan-the month of flowering-and nature was in the secret to be revealed on the morrow-and might well, for joy. put on her fairest. The courts of the Temple were filled from morning till evening, with zealous worshipperst the barefooted, whiterobed, and turbaned priests were busy offering the blood of bulls and of goats for the sins of Israel, unconscious that the blood of a greater sacrifice had been shed, of which that which they offered was only the rude, and well-nigh revolting, symbol. ... Yet it must have been with strange feelings they went through the services of the day. The trumpets and volces of the Levites were loud and clear as ever; the high priest, fresh from Golgotha, not less gorgeous in his splendid robes -- the crowd of priests not less pressed with official toil: the throngs, filling the courts below, not less numerous or devout. But an omen, portentous beyond all their history recorded, had been seen by Levite and priest alike-for, was not the Holy of Holies, hitherto velled in awful darkness, and entered only once in the year, for a few moments, by the high priest, laid visibly open before all in the court of the priests: in fact, before all in the vast Temple area, for the Holy of Holles stood high above the rest of the sanctuary? The huge, heavy vell of Babylonian tapestry of fine flax, gorgeous in its hyacinth and scarlot and purple, had been mysteriously rent from top to bottom, at the moment when the "enemy of the Temple" expired on Calvary, and the awful presence-chamber of Jehovah had been exposed to every eye, like ground no longer succed.

The disciples of Jesus, and even the Eleven, had been overwhelmed by the events of the day. Having no clear idea of their Master's meaning, and thinking little on words painful at best, His repeated warnings that He must be put to death, but would rise again from the dead on the third day, had made no lasting impression on their minds.

The catastrophe had been so sudden and complete, that, for the time, they were confounded and paralyzed. It is the glory of woman that she most seldom forsakes those she loves, even when things are darkest. The two Marys had left the grave only when the deep night compelled them, but, even then, they still had its Dear One in their hearts. The Sabbath, which had begun just as the stone was rolled to the entrance, kept them from doing anything for Him for twenty four hours, but it was no sconer over, on Saturday at sunset, than, with Salome and Joanna, and some other women, they arranged to take additional spices at the earliest dawn to complete the embalming of the body begun by Nicodemus, but left unfinished through the approach of the Sabbath. Mary, mother of Jesus, was too sorely stricken in heart to join them.

Meanwhile, the Roman sentries were pacing to and fro on their beat, before the sepulchre their fire lighted, for the spring night was chilly, and besides, the light prevented any one approaching. The true-hearted women had resolved to reach the grave by sunrise, which would take place about a quarter before six in the morning, and slept outside the city gates, which would not open till daybreak at the earliest. The grey dawn had hardly shown itself, when they were afoot: on their errand, to perform the last offices of love. As they went, however, a difficulty rose of which they had not thought before. Who would roll away the stone for them, from the door of the sepulchre? They had heard nothing of its having been sealed during the Sabbath, or of the guard being mounted in the garden, else they might have been altogether discouraged. But they had, doubtless, told some of the Eleven where the grave lay, and might hope that one, at least, would be there to help them hus but as a sugare bachait A greater than an Apostle had already, however, been at the tomb. For St. Matthewitells us,"" an angel of the Lord had descended from heaven; this countenance shining like lightning, and his raiment white as snow,""" and," striking terror even into the Roman guard, "" had rolled back the stone from the door." As it opened the Crucified One had come forth, unseen by the dazzled soldiers, and had presently vanished are oils at bloss a deary had to I at postis, a set es They had scarcely left the spot, when the women arrived. If The earth had been trembling strangely, but they had kept on their way. How great must have been their astonishment, however, when they found the stone rolled away, and the grave open. There was no longer a guard, for the soldiers had fied in terror at the angelic vision. Mary of Magdala had entered the garden first, and had found things thus, and having run back to the others, hastened into the city to tell Peter and John. Determined to solve the mystery, if possible, her companions came, together, to the sepulchre, and, bending down, entered its inner chamber. But its was only to be appalled by the sight of an angel, in white, sitting in it; as if waiting to bear the glad news to them, of what had taken place. Presently, a second radiant forn. in ter to the reth v Heis Him from was hands And to Him, a Mary to tell theistr John's joined the tom both, fo way to utmost contente gazing i was no t in the en erence, a entering ing unde indeed, e linendwa and the d them; bu now ente tells us mind, the as yet, r would do would ha Himself Having only of re what it c Wanderin loved, if t to some o and stood companio and refusi

time;

7 -1.01

se she

it the

, they

begun

doing

over;

some

arliest lemus,

Mary,

11.11 113

atheir

ht was

which

nd slept

at the

ey were

As they

ught be-

or of the d during

else they

oubtless,

ope that indeed, e

e tomb.

led from

nt white

d,a "had

Crucified

had pres-

1 52 22 23

d. in The eir way.

hen they

e was no

ic vision.

nd things

ity to tell

sible, her

ng down; ed by the r the glad

nd radiant

form stood before them, as they bowed down their faces to the carth, in terror. But words now fell on their ears which brought back joy to their hearts. not Fear not, for I know that ye seek Jesus of Nazareth who was crucified. Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, for He is risen. Behold the place where they laid Him But go quickly, tell His disciples, and Peter, that He is risen from the dead. Remember the words that He said to you, while He was yet in Galilee-that the Son of Man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again. And tell them: 'He goeth before you into Galilee'-there you will see Him, as He said unto you. So,' I have told you." total unto be could Mary of Magdala had hurried back to Jerusalem with eager steps. to tell Peter and John, who seem to have lived together at this time, the strange fact of the grave being empty. The Virgin Mother, John's honoured guest, now, doubtless, heard the amazing news, and joined the other Mary in urging the two Apostles to go instantly to the tomb; though their own hearts had at once instinctively impelled both, forthwith, to do so. Peter and John, therefore, were on the way to the garden at once; their eager haste hurrying them to the utmost speed of John, however, younger than Peter, outran him, yet contented himself, on reaching the tomb, with stooping down, and gazing into its empty space. The body, assuredly, was gone, but there was no trace of violence, for the linen bandages lay carefully unrolled, in the empty niche where the Saviour had been placed. Natural reverence, and the awful mystery before him, kept him from actually entering; but no such hesitation checked the impulsive Peter. Passe ing under the low door he went in, undismayed. The sepulchre was; indeed, empty, as John and the women had found; only the grave; linen was left: the bands for the body and limbs laid by themselves, and the cloth that had covered the face of the Dead, not lying with them, but, folded up, in a place by itself. Following his friend, John now entered, and saw that it was so. The great truth, as he himself tells us in long after years, now, for the first time, finshed on his mind, that Jesus had risen. Neither he nor the other Apostles had, as yet, realized that it had been foretold in the Scriptures that He would do so; for this would have explained the whole at once, and would have thrown light on the hitherto mysterious words of Jesus Himself respecting His resurrection. What I want taken three woll

Having seen for themselves the empty tomb, they thought like men; only of returning; to discuss with each other and with their brethren; what it could mean. But the women would not leave the spot. Wandering everywhere; they only cared to find Him whom they loved, if they could, for they fancied that the body had been removed to some other place. Mary of Magdala had, meanwhile, returned; and stood weeping at the door of the tomb; her spirit, like that of her companions, overborne with longing anxiety to find Him; if possible; and refusing to believe that she would not. The two Apostles had seen no angels, but the weeping woman was more highly favoured. Gazing into the sepulchre, the empty space where Jesus had lain was no longer untenanted, but, instead of the Redeemer, she saw two angels, in bright robes, one where the head, and the other where the feet had rested. They were there to comfort the broken heart, as, indeed, they had, doubtless, been before, though for the time they had remained unseen.

796

"Woman," said one, in a human voice, that disarmed fear, "why weepest thou?"

"Because," replied Mary, in broken accents, "they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him."

As she said this, she turned and drew back into the open garden, hardly knowing what she did. A man now stood before her, in the simple dress of the humbler classes, and being in a garden, she naturally thought him the person employed in it. "Woman," said the stranger, strangly enough as it must have seemed to Mary, in the same words as the angels had used. "why weepest thou?—whom scekest thou?" "Sir," said Mary, taking it for granted, as great sorrow does, that the cause of her grief must be known to all—" if thou hast carried Him from this tomb, pray tell me where thou hast laid Him, and I will take Him away." She was a woman of means, and would see that He had a final and suitable resting-place.

No reply was given, except the repetition of her own name-"Mary." But the voice revealed the speaker. It was that of Jesus. She had not recognized the known, but now strangely ethercalized features—the one "spiritual body" ever seen by human eyes—the corruptible changed into incorruption—the mortal into immortality. But the sound of that voice, so tenderly remembered, brought with it full recognition of the face and form.

"Rabbouni," said she, in the country tongue they both loved so well.—" My Teacher!" and was about to fall on His neck in uncontrollable emotion.

"Touch me not," said He, drawing back, "for I have not yet ascended to the Father, but go to my brethren, and say to them, I sscend to my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God." Meanwhile, the other women had come hear, and hearing and seeing what had passed, kneeled in lowly worship. As they approached, Jesus greeted them with the salutation they had, doubtless, often heard from His lips—"All hail!"—and the words, and the sight of Mary adoring him, left them no question of its being their Lord. He had withheld Mary from any approach to the tender freedom of former days, but He now stood still while the lowly band, Mary doubtless among them, held Him by the feet, and did Him lowliest reverence. Then, as they kneeled, came the words, grateful to their hearts, "Be not afraid! Go, tell my brethren to go into Galilee, and they will see me there."

So saying, He was gone.

L Jeru spre seen ple n they first 1 semb No discir ing of the w Occasi us, in of "h writte ised th those y myster doubtl ness ar and tri early C One. they no associat Even w ways se vealing culmins as audd His dea terial, o Jesus as ences an as to M the voic ed com their sou etition o He had outward others, b the shore It wou after tha while still

ired.

was

igels,

t had

they

ained

why

away

arden.

in the

e natu-

aid the e same

scekest

v does,

ast car-

n, and I

uid see

name-

f Jesus.

realized

ves-the

ortality.

with it

oved so

icontrol-

not yet

them, I

ur God."

id seeing

roached,

ss, often

sight of

ord. He

m of for-

y doubt-

st rever-

ir hearts,

and they

WILLING H

Losing no time, Mary of Magdala, and the others, hurried back to Jerusalem, and found that, in the still early morning, the news had spread to all the Eleven, that their Master was alive, and had been seen both by her and by them. But it seemed too wonderful for simple minds to realize at once, and sounded only like an idle tale which they could not believe. It sufficed, however, to rally them, for the first time since Gethsemane; for that very night they once inore assembled as of old.

No detailed narrative of the successive appearances of Jesus to His disciples, after His resurrection, has been left us, each narrative giving only special cases, which had particularly impressed the mind of the writer. It is evident, indeed, that He showed Himself on many occasions of which no record is preserved, for St. John expressly tells us, in his summary of the Forty Days, that besides the sign in the case of "homas, Jesus did many others before His disciples, which are not written in the Gospel bearing the Apostle's name, and He had promised that He would manifest Himself again, soon after His death, to those who continued faithful to Him. Had we a full narrative of the mysterious interval between Calvary and the Ascension, it would doubtless illustrate more vividly than existing records permit, the fulness and variety of demonstration which alone accounts for the firm and triumphant proclamation of the Resurrection by the Apostles and early Church

One characteristic is common to all the appearances recounted: they never pass outside the purely spiritual bounds we instinctively associate with the mysterious existence on which Jesus had entered. Even when most closely touching the material and earthly, He is always seen speaking and acting only as a spirit, coming suddenly, revealing Himself in an imperceptibly increasing completeness which culminates at last in some unmistakable sign, and presently vanishing, as suddenly as He appeared. He no longer acts or suffers as before His death, and even when condescending most to the seen and material, only does so to prove Himself, beyond question, the same Jesus as formerly, who in common human life, shared all the experiences and wants of His followers. To some He made Himself known, as to Mary and the women, by a single word or by brief sentences, the voice carrying instant conviction with it: to others, in a lengthened communion, as with the disciples going to Emmaus, kindling their soul by the higher sense He gave to the Scriptures, and by a repetition of the symbolic "breaking of bread," which, on the last night, He had enjoined on the Eleven: to others again, as to Thomas, by an outward material proof from the wounds on His person; and, to still others, by joining them in their simple repast, as with the disciples on ACOS PHILORE [ DOLLAS BENA the shore of the Lake of galilee.

It would seem, from a notice by St. Paul, that the first appearance, after that granted to the women, was vouchsafed to Peter, perhaps while still in the garden. The completeness of the Apostle's repent

fanci

turni

whic

Mess

life,

siah,

fied?

possit

eager

natura

Half

suprei

though

who w

things days."

was a teacher

know

conden

believe

who sh

all this

pany, h had go

came b

that He

sepulch did not

It wa

been al

began t

so engre

interest

an intel

spairing

heart!~

is the bu

as read

accept t

"Wh

The s

Me

ance had secured as complete a forgiveness, and Jesus could not forget that Peter's home at Capernaum had been His, or how true-hearted he had been from the very days of the Baptism on the Jordan, though he had failed for a moment, when off his guard. The look of reproach, mingled with love and pity, had melted Peter's heart while the denials were yet on his lips, and now, the look and tender words of the risen Christ, bound him to Him for ever. He had been the foremost in zeal for the meek and lowly Master, while still rejected and despised, but when that Master stood before him, the conqueror of death, and the glorified Son of God, his zeal rose to a passionate devotion that, henceforth, knew no abatement.

The news of the resurrect on spread fast among the disciples in Jerusalem; still it required time to reach all, and even when it spread, the fact was too great to be realized at once, and too contrary to previous expectations, to be other than slowly understood. Deep dejection reigned throughout the little Christian company. In spite of all their Master's warnings, His death had come on them by surprise, and, as it seemed, had destroyed everything. 'Cut off suddenly from all the hopes of an earthly kingdom they had cherished, notwithstanding the constant lessons of Christ's life and words, and deeply distressed by the loss of their Teacher and Head, they appeared to be left helpless, and paralyzed. The horrors of the past few days engrossed their thoughts and conversation. They believed Him now in Paradise, but no one dreamed of a resurrection so soon. John had, indeed, risen in some measure to the grandeur of the truth, and Peter had even seen Him, but the bulk of the disciples had lost wellnigh all hope. The report of the empty grave and of the vision of angels and of their announcement that He was alive, was insufficient to break their gloom, and prolonged their perplexity without relieving it.

Midday had passed, and only floating rumours were, as yet, abroad. The disciples began to think of finally separating, and abandoning all hope; for, without their Master, they were without a leader. Two of them determined to go home to Emmaus, a village between seven and eight miles north-west of Jerusalem, on the high slope of the hills. The way to it was over hills, and through valleys, more and more barren as Jerusalem was left behind, out Emmaus itself looked down into a hollow through which a rivulet spread greenness and beauty. Vines and olive-trees, planted in terraces up the hill-side, and the white and red flowers of the almond-tree, now bursting into blossom in the valley, made the end of the journey a pleasant contrast to its beginning.

The two travellers were not of the Twelve Apostles, and it is not even known whether they had been in the number of the Seventy. The name of the one is told us—Cleopas, a different word from Clopas, the name of the husband of one of the Marys who waited on Christ, and, thus, no hint is furnished by it. The other has been variously fancied as Nathanael, Peter, or, even, Luke himself, but it is only conjecture. They were passing on their way, their conversation turning naturally on that of which their hearts were full—and of which they had heard and spoken so much that day. Was Jesus the Messiah or not? If so, how had things happened as they had? His life, His words, His miracles, seemed to show that He was the Messiah, but, on the other hand, how could the Messiah have been crucified?

Meanwhile, a stranger, going their way, overtook them, and, very possibly to their disappointment, joined them. He had heard how eagerly they were disputing and reasoning, so that it seemed only natural when He asked them what subject had so engrossed them. Half impatient that he should seem unacquainted with a matter so supreme to themselves, Cleopas answered—"That he could not have thought there was any one who had been to the feast in Jerusalen, who would ask the subject of their conversation, when such great things, still in every one's mouth, had happened in these last few days."

"What things ?" asked the stranger.

"What but respecting Jesus of Nazareth?" replied Cleopas. "He was a prophet of God, a mighty worker of miracles, and a great teacher. All the people must own that He was that. Do you not know about Him? How our priests and Rabbis seized Him, and condemned Him to death, and forced Pilate to crucify Him? Yet we believed, as it seemed on the best grounds, that He was the Messiah, who should have delivered Israel. But it is now the third day since all this has happened. Some of the women belonging to our company, however, have created no little perplexity amongst us. They had gone early in the morning to the tomb, but found it empty, and came back, saying that angels had appeared to them, who told them that He was alive again. On this some of our number went to the sepulchre, and found the women right as to its heing empty, but they did not see Jesus Himself."

It was clear that the spark of hope kindled by the first report, had been already extinguished.

The stranger had listened attentively, and now, to their surprise, began to chide them for their doubt, and entered into the matter that so engrossed them, with the earnestness of one who felt as supremely interested in their Master's cause as they were themselves, and with an intelligence that arrested their closest attention.

"What is there in all this, that makes you so dejected and despairing?" asked He. "O ye dull of understanding, and sluggish of heart! Why not grasp more clearly, and believe more readily, what is the hurden of all the prophets? Had you been as intelligent, and as ready in your hearts as you should have been, to understand and accept the witness of Scripture, you would have seen that it had been prophesied, from the first, that the Messiah was to suffer and die, as

.forrted ough of revhile ords n the ected ieror nate it ma es in read. ) prelejecof all prise, from standy disto be vs cnlow in had. h, and t wellion of licient reliev-2 1)611 broad. ing all wo of en and e hills. more down eauty. nd the ossom

to its

is not

venty.

lopas,

Ohrist,

riously

108

800

e on intrate non- h o br the discourse Jesus has done Let us examine whether the prophets do not snow that the Christ-the Messiah-must needs have been thus lowly, entering into His glory only after suffering death, though you have foolishly imagined His kingdom was to come by force and miracle? The stranger was evidently a learned Rabbi, at least; and had won their anxions, respectful attention already, by the novelty and force of this appeal. But, now, as He journeyed on at their side, their wonder and delight increased, for He quoted passage after passage, from the beginning to the end of the Scriptures, and showed them how the whole spirit and contents of the Holy Books pointed to such a Messiah as He had indicated—a Messiah founding a spiritual, not a mere earthly kingdom, founding it by love and self-sacrifice, not by force. They had never heard such discourse. He threw light on the deep things of Scripture which made it a new book to them. They had been familiar with it from childhood, but now, for the first time, found that their Master, alike in His life and death, shone out from every page. Such discourse shortened the road, and found them still eagerly listening as they approached Emmaus, the end of the journey. Climbing the hill path together, through the terraces of vines and olives, and passing under the village gate, they were presently at the house where the disciples were to stay. And, now, the stranger bade them adieu. What they had heard from Him, however, had interested them so much, that they longed to hear more. They begged Him, therefore, to lodge with them for the night, and this, the rather, as the day was far spent. Accepting the invitation, all three went into the house.

It must have been no small wonder to the Two, who the mysterious stranger could be. Nothing in His dress or speech gave them a clue, and they did not know His features. But a feeling of reverence kept them from asking: defined, didness of the them and the Simple refreshments were presently set before them anong the Simple refreshments were presently set before them—among the rest, bread and wine. The stranger, as was His due, had the place of honour at table, and it fell to Him to hand what was before them, to the others.) Only the three were present.

Presently the Unknown, taking the bread, offered the usual benediction—just as Jesus had done; broke the bread, just as Jesus had broken it; handed it to them, just as Jesus had handed it. Bearing, volce, and manner were His. And now, as they look at Him more closely,—the veil He had assumed passes away, and the very Face and Form, also, were His.

"It was He! Meanwhile, as they gazed in awful wonder and reverence, He vanished.

No instance given illustrates, more strikingly, the adaptation of the Risen Saviour's self-disclosures to the requirements of His disciples. Their minds were first enlightened and their hearts warmed, till there was no longer a danger of affecting their senses only, but a security

Le hear He t ures. as th and a Neith inmo Haste fore t of the the or them amazi. unhea still 'f strang fact. It w gather before any em they w justifyi form a of Jesu ed fron Peace t The a it was r "WI once, v recogni exposed through marks d back Hi "Look be satis may kn knew of

bones as

ofi

they

ther

ing : faitl of intelligent conviction, resting on impressions left by the discourse they had heard. They were gently led on till fully prepared, and then the APPEARANCE was granted in a way so inexpressibly truching and tender, that it no less fired their love than established their faith.

now

have

won

force

their

sage,

them

such

not a ot by

on the

They

; time.

t from

agerly

Climb-

olives,

house

e them

erested

Him.

her, as nt into

terious

a clue,

verence

ong the e olace

e them,

al bene-

sus had

Bearing,

m more

ry Face

d rever-

n of the

isciples.

till there

security

le?

Left to themselves, the Two could speak only of what they had heard and seen of how their hearts had glowed in their bosoms, at He talked with them along the road, and opened to them the Script ures. Their ecstatic joy at having seen Him, whom they had known as the earthly Messiah, now unveiled to them as the Messiah, risen and glorified—the conqueror of death—can only be faintly imagined. Neither life nor death could ever efface the memory of it from their inmost hearts." But their brethren must know the great truth. Hastening, with quickened steps, back to Jerusalem, to reach it before the shutting of the gates, they found the Eleven, and a number of the disciples gathered together-the amazing rumours of the day the one engrossing theme of discussion. Peter, it seemed, had told them that Jesus had appeared to him, and, now, the Two added their amazing narrative. It was a thing so transcendent, however, and so unheard of, that any one should rise from the dead, that the company still fancied the women, and Peter, and the Two, under some strange delusion. They could not credit their story as a matter of where the container were to say. draft and the strang fact.

It was still Sunday, and the assembled Eleven, with the others, had gathered at the table couches, to eat a simple evening meal together, before parting for the night. The doors were fast closed, for fear of any emissary of the high priests and Rabbis discovering them, and they were still discussing the strange reports they had heard, and justifying their incredulity. Suddenly, through the closed doors, a form appeared in their midst, which they at once recognized as that of Jesus. Presently, the salutation they had heard so often, sounded from His lips—the common Jewish greeting—Shalōm Lichem. Peace to you!

it was really Jesus Himself, but fancied it was His spirit. Is monod to

"Why are you in such fear," said He, "and why do you not, at once, without any such doubts and questionings in your minds, recognize me as Him who I really am?" His hands were, of course, exposed beneath the sleeves of His abba, and His feet could be seen through His sandals. Holding up the former, and showing the marks of the great iron nails of the cross in the palms, and pressing back His abba, and disclosing the wounds on His feet—He went on— "Look at my hands and my feet—see the wounds of the nails—and be satisfied that it is I, Jesus, myself, who speak. And, that you may know that it is not my spirit you see, but the same Master you knew of old, come near and touch me, for a spirit has not flesh and hones as you see me have."

har

ther

Hel

clot

eibT

but,

endo

secr

Him

brea

the s

F191 35

com

ers o spiri

Thro

anno

those

make

whor

forgi

PloHa

All It i

and d

put to

His p

specti

Heha

minds

Messi

inable

faith.

the at

of the

a radi

belief

promi

hearts

of the

But, n

over d

sacred

the pu

in It is

Master

Thew

Evidence so convincing could leave no doubt, except from very joy at its completeness; for the return of their Lord, thus triumphant over the grave, was so stupendous a miracle that while they could onot question it, their gladness would scarcely let them think it real. But still further proof was to be given. Knowing how easily the idea might spread that His appearances were merely those of a disembodied spirit. He asked them to let Him share their meal. They had broiled fish, and having set some before. Him with wondering awe. He ate it in their sight, All doubt now fled: it was, indeed. otheir Risen Lord. to a mouth a ties avera the out bareauco the sold yel "Now that you are convinced that it is really I," continued Jesus, "let me remind you that the facts you have now verified-that I should die, and rise again from the dead—are the fulfilment of what I said to you while I was yet with you-that all that was written respecting me in the Scriptures, must be fulfilled in this way:" 1 40 '20' be As the M Light of the World," He then proceeded to recall to their minds and explain more fully, the prophecies respecting Himself in the Books of Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms, —the three divist ions under which all the Holy Books were classed by the Jews; and showed their wonderful vividness as inspired anticipations of what had really happened in His own person of poplation to and new down "You see thus," added He, after giving this summary of the testimony of Scripture, "that it was necessary, in the Divine Counsels, that instead of founding an earthly kingdom, as you expected, the Messiah should suffer as I have done, and that He should rise from the dead, the third day, as you see has been the case with me. The purposes of God now further require that the need of repentance, and the promise of the remission of sins to be obtained through my death and resurrection, should be preached, henceforth, as the great end of sall L have suffered, and as the Salvation I was sent as the Messiah to secure, not for Israel only but for all mankind. These truths you are to proclaim to all nations, but you are to begin at Jerusalem, that Israel may have still another opportunity of accepting me, and of being saved through my name, now I am risen and glorified; though they rejected me in my humiliation. And you, my disciples, are the witnesses through whom God will spread abroad this message of mercyito Jews and Heathen, and proclaim Hismew Heavenly Kingdom founded by me, "we lead to the transfer back by me, is a lost of the enc The wondering disciples now saw that He was about to leave them, once more. If As He prepared to do so, however, He added :- if to read Peace be with you'l "As my Father sent me, so I send you. DGo ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature. He who believes and is baptized, will be saved, but he who does not believe will be condemned. And these miraculous signs will be granted those who believe, for a confirmation of their faith, and that they speak with tongues new to them ; they will take up serpents without harm to themselves ; if they drink any deadly thing it will not hurt them ; and they will lay hands on the sick, and they will recover. "To fit you for your great work I shall presently send you the Helper promised by my Father, but stay in the city till you are clothed with this power from on high."

TY joy

phant

could it real.

ly the

a dis-

They

dering

ndeed.

Jesus,

-that 1

f what

ten re-

10 920

to their

selfin

e divist

s; and

of what

M. 11 11 11

ne testi-

ounsels.

ted, the se from

e. The

ace, and

v death

t end of ssiah to

ths you

em, that , and of

though

are the ssage of

ly King-

-pronte-

ve them,

+ HI to

ou. In Go

are. a He

i not be-granted

hat they

they will without

J.G mer-

There were only ten of the Eleven present, for Thomas was absent, but, these, He now gathered before Him. As an carnest of the fuller endowment, hereafter, He was about to impart to them a special consecration by the Holy Spirit, to their office as Apostles. He had, Himself, compared the influence and entrance of the Spirit to the breathing of the wind, and, now, prefacing His intended words by the symbolical act of breathing on the Ten-He said:

Receive ye the Holy Spirit. The government of the Church is committed to your charge. As a special gift for your work as founders of my Kingdom, divine insight is granted you to 'discern the spirits' of men, that so you may know their true state before God. Through you, therefore, henceforth, as through Me till now, He will announce the forgiveness of sins, and it will be granted by God to those to whom you declare it. Through you, moreover, He will make known to others that their sins are not forgiven, and to him to whom you are constrained to speak thus, to him his sins will not be forgiven by God till you announce their being so."

Add It is impossible to realize the emotions of the little band of Apostles and disciples at these appearances. They knew that Jesus had been put to death: they had fancied themselves permanently deprived of His presence and help, and they had not known what to think respecting Him. But when He stood amidst them, once more, after He had risen, a sudden and strange revolution took place in their minds. They saw before them Him whom they had revered as the Messiah while clothed in human weakness, now raised to an unimaginable glory which at once confirmed and sublimed their former faith. They saw Him victorious over the grave, and clothed with the attributes of the eternal world. In a moment, the whole sweep of the truth respecting Him, hitherto only half realized, had become a radiant fact, even to their senses. The hesitating and imperfect belief in His heavenly dignity, and power to fulfil all He had promised, here and hereafter, which had slowly rooted itself in their hearts while He still lived, had seemed, after all, from the catastrophe of these last disastrous three days, a fond and beautiful delusion. But, now, at length, as He stood amongst them, triumphant even over death, it broke all restraints and flooded their whole soul with sacred light as never before, for the revulsion from despondency to the purest and holiest joy gave it additional strength: and liter or affective of the state of t It is impossible to conceive the effect of such sights of their Risen Master, on the minds of those who were thus favoured with them. The whole life of one who had seen Him and stood near Him, purhaps touched Him, after He had risen, became a long dream of wonder. Such an one felt, henceforth, even in the midst of his commonest occupations, as if Christ were still, though unseen, beside him: he saw Him, as it were, radiant before his eyes: he seemed still to hear His words of infinite love, and lived in habitual communion with Him, as with One, hidden it might be, for the moment, in the upper light, but to be expected as a visible form, at any instant. We see this in every page of the Gospels and the Epistles.

Only the immeasurable force of the thought that the Son of God Himself, the true, glorified Messiah, had appeared to them; not, as hitherto, in the veil of the flesh, but in a heavenly transfiguration; victorious over death; that He had stood among them, had quickened and inspired them; perhaps had let Himself even be reverently. touched could have created such effects. Henceforth, he, only, was recognized as an Apostle in the fullest sense, who had seen Him in His spiritual body during this mysterious interval, when He seemed ready to soar to heaven as His rightful home, and, though still on earth, was no longer of it. Nothing could be more amazing than the result of such a sight of Him thus glorified, on the Apostles. From despair they passed at once to triumphant confidence-from incapacity to believe that the Messiah could have suffered as He had done to the most fervent and exulting faith in Him as the Messiah, on account of these very sufferings. They became, suddenly, men into whom the very spirit of Christ seemed to have passed; their spiritual nature had been wholly changed, and they were bound to Him, henceforth, with a deathless, and ecstatic devotion.

The appearances vouchsafed during the day of the Resurrection had now ended. On the part of the priests and Rabbis there had been great anxiety, for they, as well as the disciples, had early heard the rumours of His having risen. Some of the watch, after having fled in terror before the descending angel, had come into the city, and reported what had happened. A hasty meeting of the chief men of the party had been held, and the whole matter laid before them. Their perplexity was extreme, but at last their Sadducce leaders invented a specious story. Not believing in angels, they affected to think that the soldiers had been frightened away by some clever trick of the disciples, who had thus got possession of the body of their Master. There were, indeed, difficulties in the way of spreading such a story, but it would be fatal if the rumour spread that angels had appeared. The people would naturally think it a proof that Jesus had been what He said He was, and they would turn to Him with . more ardour than ever. The guard were therefore instructed, with the inducement of large bribes, to say that they had fallen asleep, and found the body stolen when they woke. The hierarchy were aware that it was death for a sentry to sleep at his post, but removed this difficulty by the promise that, in case the story reached the cars of Pilate, they would explain that it was only an invention, to keep the people quiet.

Sunda trast t "The they h honou them. presen to beli himsel in His into th made t his Ma demon grave. On t were fo room, before, and th howeve to you becn.n uttered faithfu cagerly amazen "Th put thy hither. and pu To . present to rece his love the glo him wi utter h his Go "Th hast se as thou Hit are red really of 'th

m of

com-

d still

union

in the

God

not, as

ation;

kened

rently

only,

n Him

en He hough

nazing

ostles.

-from le had iah, on

n into oiritual

hence-

ection

re had heard

having ty, and

men of

lers in-

cted to

er trick

f their

ig such els had

Jesus

m with

1, with ep, and

aware

ed this

cars of

eep the

them.

• We'

A whole week elapsed before the next appearance recorded. ... On Sunday; known, henceforth, as the "first day of the week," in contrast to the Jewish Sabbath, the seventh day; and as, especially, "The Lord's Day;"-the Eleven having once more assembled, as they had done daily through the week, and continued to do, Jesus, honouring His resurrection day, once more stood in the midst of them. Thomas, known as Didymus, or The Twin, had not been present on the Sunday before, and in his grave, earnest way, refused to believe that Jesus had risen and had appeared to the Ten, till he himself had had what he deemed indisputable proof. "Except I see in His hands the prints of the nails," said he, "and put my finger into them, and put my hand into His side, where the spear-thrust made the gash, I will not believe." No one could desire more to see his Master again, but his temperament demanded what he thought of demonstration, of so amazing a fact as the rising of one from the grave. 1. 1. 1. S. 1. 1931 1. 33. 834. 1

On this first Lord's day after the Resurrection, however, his doubts were for ever dispelled. The disciples had gathered in their common room, which held at least, a hundred and twenty. The doors, as before, had been carefully closed, for fear of spies from the Temple, and the approaches were, doubtless, carefully watched. Suddenly, however, the words were heard in the midst of the company—"Peace to you!"—and, looking up, Jesus stood before them. He had not been near, so far as the senses could perceive, when Thomas had uttered his doubts, but He knew them not the less. Turning to the faithful but still incredulous one—whose presence there showed how cagerly he wished to believe the transcendent news, Jesus, to his amazement, addressed him—

"Thomas, thou saidst thou wouldst not believe, unless thou couldst put thy finger in the wounds of my hands, and feet, and side. Reach hither thy finger—here are my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and put it into my side, and be not faithless, but believing."

To hear his own words thus repeated by one who had not been present when they were spoken: to see the hands, and feet, and side: to receive such condecension from one who he now felt was, indeed, his loved Master; yet no longer a mortal man, but the Lord of Life, the glorified Messiah who had triumphed over death, overwhelmed him with awe. No words could express his emotion. He could only utter his one deepest thought, that he had before him his Lord and his God.

"Thomas," said Jesus, "thou hast believed at last because thou hast seen me blessed are they who, without having seen me, believe, as thou now dost, that I have risen from the dead."

Hitherto, the Risen Saviour, in all His appearances, so far as they are recorded, had designed to prove to His disciples that He was really alive again. Convinced of this, there was much to tell them, of "the things pertaining to the kingdom of God," which they were to spread abrown of through the earth. Before His death He had told them that He had many things to say to them, which were, as yet, too hard for them to understand or receive. These He had now to communicate; for what would have been incomprehensible before His sufferings and Resurrection, was dark no longer, when seen in the strong light of the cross and the empty grave.

of Hi

guther

scene

work

not on the .H

they r

the R

tion.

The

though

terval

more,

this vi

them

Jerusa

lands, long at everyt

duties

James,

ently h

themse

quietly

of ther

night,

dawn,

recogni

strange

buy the

commo

on the therefor

miliarit

"Child

mornin

will fin

he had to do s hardly d

was this

their Ma

John to hundred

There

"If y

Simo

He did not, however, mingle among them and live in their r lidst as of old. They, doubtless, expected that now He was alive a sain on earth. He would once more gather them around Him, and s ay permanently with them, and they even fancied, that surely now at last He would set about the establishment of that earthly kingdom of Israel, to which they so fondly clung. But to have stayed thus familiarly with them, was no longer in keeping with His gloritied immortality. Till they, too, had put on incorruption, He was separated from them, by the infinite distance and difference of time and cternity. They belonged to the former, He, now, to the latter.

He showed Himself, therefore, to them in such a way that they could never count on His taking up His abode with them again, as in former days; that so they might be accustomed gradually to his absence, as in no measure breaking or weakening their connection with Him. He, hence, vouchsafed them only intermitted appearances; that, on the one hand, they might be in no doubt of His really having risen from the dead; and, on the other, that they might become famillar with the idea of His leaving them. He showed Himself as One about to quit the world, and as no longer belonging to it, but dehying His departure for a time, for their good. His intercourse with them was, thus, almost like that of the angels with their fathers in the early ages, when they came to their tents, conversed with them, and even ate and drank what was offered them, but, presently, left again and disappeared, till some new occasion brought them back. "Hence we are no more told the place of His stay in these forty days, or of His journeys, or other details, as otherwise we might have 'expected.' He appears only at intervals, and we have no trace whence He has come, or whither He vanishes." He does not travel back with His disciples to Galilee after the feast, as was usual, but only names a mountain on which He will meet them. They never ask Him, as He is about to leave them, whither He is going, or, when He comes, whence He has done so? His whole bearing towards them was like that to Mary of Magdala-"Think not that my Resurrection restores me to you as the companion of your daily life. Rejoice not over my reappearance as if I were to stay now, abidingly, with you. I go to my Father, and your Father-to my God, and yours."

He had told the women at the sepulchre, to say to His disciples that He would meet them on a mountain in Galilee, which He named, and He had, doubtless, repeated this to the company when in their midst. The most of them were Galileans, and would return home after the feast week. Galilee had been, moreover, the special scene nd told

as yet,

now to

ore His

in the

lidst as rain on ay per-

at last

dom of

ed thus fied im-

parated

ad eter-

nat they

in, as n

his ab-

ion with

arances:

lly hav-

become

nself as

but de-

rse with athers in

th them,

ntly, left

m back.

ese forty

e might

no truce

ot travel

sual, but

y never

or, when rds them

Resurrec-

Rejoice

ly, with

yours." disciples

e named,

i in their rn home

ial scene of His labours, and of Ills success, and a greater number could be githered together there than in Judea. Jerusalem was not to be their scene of action as yet. They could not begin their great Apostolic work while their Master was still on earth, and, besides, they needed not only many counsels before He left them, but the power which the Holy Spirit, who was not yet given, could impart. When they returned, to attend the Feast of Pentecost, seven weeks after the Resurrection, they would receive their full heavenly consecration.

The future was still unknown even to the Apostles, and hence, though they held themselves at the command of their Lord, the interval before. He required their permanent service, saw them once more, at their former callings. They seem to have had no idea that this visit to their homes would be the last they would ever make to them as such, or that, within a few weeks, they would remove to Jerusalem, to stay there for a time, and then wander forth to all lands, and see their native country, rarely, or never again. But the long attendance on their Master had prepared them for finally leaving everything for Him, and had fitted them, unconsciously, for the duties that lay before them.

Simon Peter, Thomas the Twin, Nathanael of Cana. John and James, sons of Zabilal, and two whose names are not given, apparently because they were not Apostles, had, among others, betaken themselves to the well-known shores of the Lake of Galilee, and had, auletly set themselves, once more, to the occupation familiar to most of them-that of fishermen. They had been out on the Lake all night, but had caught nothing, and were rowing to land in the early dawn, when they saw on the shore a stranger, whom they could not. recognize in the twilight, as any one they knew. It was nothing strange that a person should come to them as they were landing, to buy their catch. The simple habits of the East, moreover, made it. common to sell even single fish, which were prepared and cooked on the spot, in the open air, by the buyer. They thought nothing, therefore, of the stranger presently asking them, with a kindly familiarity not unusual in antiquity in addressing the humbler classes, "Children, have you anything to eat?"; as if wishing to huy for his morning meal. "Nothing at all," cried the fishermen.

""If you cast your net once more on the right side of the boat, you will find fish," said the stranger, and they, thinking, perhaps, that he had noticed a shoal they had overlooked, were only too glad to do so. But, now, the net sank, overloaded, so that they could hardly draw it after them as they rowed to land.

There was no further question who the stranger could be; for what was this incident but the repetition of a well-remembered miracle of their Master, almost at the same spot? "It is the Lord," whispered John to Peter. The name was enough. They were only about a hundred yards from land, but the ardent, impulsive Peter could not think as

Jesus do

all thin

Jesus, that the

say to yo

pleased,

forth you will gird go-to t

present, a

was a bri

Apostle o

glorified

and then,

Master as

so a few r

Unwilling a fellow-d

too, would

man do?"

communic

should yo

that you f

ance, whic

Matthew.

by Jesus

number of the time fi

the close, s

had been c

would be a when Jesu

when Paul

ness, the E witness, sti

that he co

Jesus as th

loftiest sen

heaven and now I com

me, to go i

and am 3xs

Before f

St. Paul

Peter, t

"Hea

wait. He was standing, naked, in the boat, after having swum round with the net, to sweep the waters, as is the custom on the Lake of Tiberias still; but he instantly drew on his upper garment, and, jumping into the water, swam ashore, to be the first to see if it really were his Master. The others, meanwhile, were slowly pulling to the shore, and presently reached it. The beach had been bare a moment before, but now, strangely enough, they saw a fire burning, with a little fish on it, and bread at hand, as if the stranger had intended them for Himself.

"If you would like to eat with me," said He, "bring some of the fish you have just caught."

Peter had not dared to speak, for the awe of his Lord's heavenly greatness; as one belonging, now, to a higher life, was on him. But he instantly ran to the boat, dripping, as he stood, and dragged ashore the net, which was found to have caught a hundred and fiftythree large fish, without being rent. All were convinced that it was Jesus, but they were dumb with amazement; and though they wished to ask, their awe, and their very eyesight, which told them that it was no other than their Master, kept them from doing so.

They had sat down on the white, dry beach, round the fire, at His invitation, and He now, once more, as of old, took His place as Head of the little group. Taking first bread, and then the fish, He divided them, just as He had done while He was with them, and, as He did so, His face and bearing were so exactly what they had been, that the fear produced by the suddenness of His appearance, and the undefined difference in Him which had struck them at first, soon abated. His every word was now doubly weighty, and hence John gives us a more than usually circumstantial narrative of what followed. The meal being finished, He turned to Peter, as if to show him by a further proof, how, entirely, his shortcoming had been forgiven, and the completeness of his restoration to his apostolate. He commonly called him Peter, but now addressed him as He had done three years before, when they first met, and only once since, when he made his grand confession of belief that his Master was the Messiah. "Simon, son of Jonas," asked He, "carest thou for me more than my other disciples?", "Yes, Lord," answered Peter, "Thou knowest that I love Thee." "Go and feed my little ones-my sheep," replied Jesus; "for love to me, care for the spiritual wants of all who know and love me, as a shepherd sees that his flock be duly fed." The same question, in the same words, was then repeated. "Yes. Lord," answered Peter, more eagerly than before, "Thou knowest that I love Thee." "Then, tend my sheep," replied Jesus. "'Not only nourish, but care for them, as committed to thy charge." A third time the same question was asked-"Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me?" The treble repetition had something in, it tender. and warning. It was not a reproof, yet it was fitting that the disciple who, a few days before, had thrice denied Him, should be made to think as often of his weakness. Peter felt it, and almost thought that Jesus doubted his trustworthiness. "Lord," said he, "Thou knowest all things; Thou knowest that I love Thee." "Then," replied Jesus, "feed my sheep—the oversight of my flock is thine, to see that they are fed."

.808

"Hear now," He continued, "what awaits you. Verily, verily, I say to you, Eitherto you have girded yourself and gone whither you pleased, and you do so still; but, in your old age you will stretch forth your hands helplessly, and will give yourself up to others, who will gird you with chains, and lead you off where you would fain not go—to the place of judgment." An assurance of safety for the present, and a timely warning of what the future would bring! There was a brief pause, and then the words "Follow me," summoned the Apostle once more, as of old; but spoken this time, by the risen and glorified Saviour—it called him to follow Him in a martyr's death, and then, to the glory beyond.

Peter, taking the last words literally, fancied he was to follow his Master as before, and as Jesus seemed now leaving them, had done so a few paces, when, turning round, he saw John coming after him. Unwilling to separate from one endeared by long companionship as a fellow-disciple, he, therefore, ventured to ask, in hope that John, too, would be allowed to come with them—"Lord, what will this man do?" But things were not as in old days of common familiar communion. "If I should please that he live till my return, why should you seek to know it?" replied Jesus. "From you I require that you follow me in the path in which I have gone before you."

St. Paul, about twenty-five years after, mentions another appearance, which was no doubt the same as is related, more fully, by St. Matthew. It took place in a mountain, appointed for the purpose by Jesus Himself, doubtless as a well-known spot. Here, a large number of disciples, including, as we know, the Eleven, gathered at the time fixed. It was a moment of supreme solemnity, for it was the close, so far as we know, of His ministry in Galilee. A mountain had been chosen, alike for privacy and because all who might come would be able to see their Master. Over five hundred had gathered when Jesus appeared in their midst; some of them long since dead when Paul wrote, but the majority still alive. With beautiful frankness, the Evangelist tells us that some, who likely had had no other witness, still doubted a miracle so stupendous, but they were so few that he could say of the multitude, as a whole, that they worshipped Jesus as their Lord.

Before this numerous assemblage Jesus declared Himself, in the loftiest sense, the Messiah. "All power," said He, "is given me, in heaven and in earth." As I have before commissioned my Apostles, so now I commission you all, in the fulness of the authority thus given me, to go into the whole world, and announce to all men that I live, and am exalted to be the Lord and the Messiah. Go, gather disciples swum on the irment. wee if it pulling bare a urning, had in-

e of the

n. But dragged nd fiftynt it was ey wishucm that e, at His place as fish, He , and, as lad been, , and the irst, soon nce John what folf to show been forlate. He had done , when he Messiah. nore than ou knowheep," reof all who luly fed." d. "Yes, d. "Yes, knowest is. Not arge. A of Jonas, 1 it tender the disciple be made to

to me from among all nations, and consecrate them by baptisn, to faith in the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, by whom God will speak and act through your means. What commands I have given you as my disciples, give you to them, and urge them to keep them. Nor must you think yourselves alone while thus working in my name, for lo, I am, and shall be, with you always, till the end of the world." As at the first, so, now, at the last, the word was the only weapon by which His Kingdom was to be spread. Resting on PERSUASION and CONVICTION from the beginning, it was left on the same basis now He was about to ascend to heaven.

Only two or perhaps three more appearances are recorded—one to James alone, and one to all the Apostles. The last known meetings with the Eleven took place immediately before the Ascension. It was the Parting for Ever, so far as outward and visible communion on earth was concerned—the final delegation of the interests of His Kingdom to them, as His chosen heralds and representatives. They were instructed to wait in Jerusalem till the promise of the Father was fulfilled; that He would send the Holy Spirit to them, as their Helper and Advocate, in place of their departed Master—a promise which Jesus Himself had made known to them. "For John," said He, "truly baptized with water, but the promise which even he announced, that you would be baptized with the Holy Spirit, will be fulfilled before many days."

The Apostles, acquainted as they were with the Old Testament prophecies, which foretold that the fulness of the Holy Spirit would be poured out in the times of the Messiah, seem to have fancied that there was an indirect promise of the establishment of the Messianic Kingdom, as they conceived it, in these words. It appears as if an interval had elapsed—apparently only a part of the same day, between the appearance at which the renewed assurance of the bestowal of the Holy Spirit was given, and that at which the question they were now to ask was put. When they had come together again, Jesus once more stood among them, and then—so hard is it to uproot fixed preconceptions—they resolved to find out, if possible, whether they had any grounds for their fond hopes. "Lord," asked they, "wilt Thou at this time restore the fallen kingdom of the Israelitish nation?" They had not yet received the illumination of the Spirit, which was to raise them at once and for ever above such narrow and national views, and were still, entangled in Jewish fancies, which regarded the Messiah as sent to the Jewish people, as such, for its earthly glory as well as spiritual good.

Jesus would not answer such a question. There was much in their expectations which would never be realized; yet the gift of the Spirit would really be the true setting up of the Kingdom of the Messiah. Of its final proclamation and full establishment in its glory, which would take place at His final return, He would say nothing. It lay pidden in the depths of the future, and was of no advantage to them to kno the circ Father enough ure: J and ins forth a salem a out th. mankin barbari

This it befor walked He may so often He asse of Olive pared th them, an within a

He wi

not thinl re-appea that He: to Himse when the the worl His hun thoughtbe the st We.kn now, fins His bless conceptie nature a gradual the form He had and divir The tra His chos Whe Him, He their sig "And as behold ty to know..."It is of no use to you," said He, "to know the time or the circumstances of these great revolutions in the ages to come. The Father has kept these as a secret of His own omniscience. Be it enough for you to know what will happen immediately on my departure. You will receive the powers of the Holy Spirit in rich measure, and inspired by these, and prepared by them in all points, you will go forth as witnesses for me, and of my resurrection, not only to Jerusalem and Judea, but to hated Samaria, and to the heathen throughout the whole earth; for mine is a universal kingdom, open to all mankind, without distinction of race, or rank; of bond or free; of barbarian or Greek; of Jew or Gentile." This last interview had taken place in Jerusalem, but He had left if before He closed, leading them out towards Bethany. He may have walked through the well-known streets, veiled from His enemics, or He may have bether here the well-known streets.

811

walked through the well-known streets, veiled from His enemics, or He may have appointed the meeting-place for them, where He had so often, in His last days, retired in their company. The place where He assembled them is not minutely recorded, but was on the Mount of Olives. It was the last time they were to see Him. He had prepared them, as far as their dulness made possible, for His leaving them, and had fitted them to receive the gift of the Spirit, which, within a few days, would illuminate their intellects and hearts.

He wished, however, to leave them in such a way that they should not think He had simply vanished from them, and wait for His present re-appearance. He would show them, as far as it could be shown, that He returned from the earth to His Father; that God took Him to Himself as He had taken Elias. They would be able to tell men, when they asked where He now was, that they had seen Him leave the world, and pass through the skies to the eternal kingdoms. in His human body; to sit down at the right hand of God. The thought—HE LIVES: HE IS WITH the FATHER! was, henceforth, to be the stay and joy of His followers in all ages.

We know not with what last parting words he let them see He was, now, finally, to leave them. All that is told us is, that He gave them His blessing, with uplifted hands. Step by step, He had raised their conceptions of Him nearer the unspeakable grandeur of His true nature and work. At first the Teacher, He had; after a time, by gradual disclosures, revealed Himself as the Son of God, yeiled in the form of man; and, now, since His crucifixion and resurrection, He had taught them to see in Him the Messiah, exalted to immortal and divine majesty, as the conqueror of death and the Lord of all.

The transcendent miracle which closed His early communion with His chosen ones is most fully narrated by St. Luke:—

"When He had spoken these things, while they were looking at Him, He was taken up into heaven, and a cloud received Him out of their sight"—that cloud which symbolized the presence of God. "And as they were gazing earnestly into the heavens, as He ascended, behold two men stood by them, in white apparel, and said to them—

age to them

'Yo men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing into the heavens? This same Jesus, who is even now taken from you into heaven, will come, in the same way as ye have seen Him go."

"Earth, thou grain of sand on the shore of the Universe of God: thou Bethlehem, amongst the princely cities of the heavens; thou art, and remainest, the Loved One amongst ten thousand suns and worlds, the Chosen of God! Thee will He again visit, and then thou wilt prepare a throne for Him, as thou gavest Him a manger cradle; in His radiant glory wilt thou rejoice, as thou didst once drink His blood and His tears, and mourn His death! On thee has the Lord a great work to complete "gasenome a Walt

Arraham Christ das before 509 i Matronens' stellamo of strow tarns Scraham Christ das before 509 i Matronens' Bastoen 100 101 Herrish 1. 525 rejocing na seo Christ's Antroportes of office of 50 1. 525 rejocing na seo Christ's Antroportes of office of 50 Address is a contenes 121 Addres

Antigorus, 2., 29, 23 Antipas, Hered, 110; airlinday fransa J. Lide effective rescion 26 million 250 ker eff. 2004, 200 ar libertas, france of, a tracs falge-and and a stricture of the Christics danges france of, a to be the the 27. 202 of the stitler, 200 of, 533; paintee france i transponder 202 in spectrumian to of, in Jarmanian 333, Jessa brought ar fathering 20 of countral insur-of, in Jarmanian 333, Jessa brought ar fathering 20 of countral insurbudne, 543.68 Antipater, 543.68 Antipater, 541.00 at Herol, 21-21 [J., at a star partition of the Habing of 243, 20 at a star on of Herod at Horns, 53 of 94 Antipater, 6, 19 at 25, 26 at 95 412, a reheading and the reduite after Link (1296; recounds) deals an Massian (1204) of the relation and the relation of the r

Alexander and Aristounius, sons of the second of the Marianane at Rome w. Alexandra, mether of Marianane, Crus provelon, numinated leviswho returnal 84 naren hy treedt, ind the completened at a single and an the and the related bare, Sc. of, 109. Aristobula mucdered 22. Aristobula mucdered 23. Aristobula functories (S. 1990) Aristobula functories (S. 1990) Aristobula functories (S. 1990) Acouston of Jersel (S. 1990) Accession of Jersel (S. 1990) Accessio oniced by ubrish of the solution in the solution of the soluti T'his samor)

: bob h T'SA TICT . throw Slive ber Mi offer RiH Mis

a biol

Abraham Jews no il, 598; day .599 Actium, b Adultery, Age of ch Agony and Gethsen Agrippa I. Alexander Mariam

Alexandra 84. Almighty, Almsgiving Amestris, Andrew, S 416.

Anna, lege Anna, the Antigonus, Antipas, I of, 800; 510; Ch

stition,

of, in Jer before, 7 Antipater, son of H

Antony, M Apologue, Apostle, J 412.

Archelaus, od's des canvass of being narch b ture, &c. Aristobulu Ariston, th Ascension Ascetic re quired by Asceticism of God. 4

LINE TO ALT AL

'Fu men of Halilon why stand ve paring into the neavens? This same done, while same is the seven now tak n fir a you into heaven, will reman. Is the same new seven now tak n film ge.

"Tharth, thou truth of send on the store of the Universant God; there identicates, mongre San (D'A 1 of and succears "here any and to remaines the Lower San (D'A 1 of and succears worlds, the Church of God. They will be acting visite and then there will prepare a throne for him as ther revest line a manger eradle, in distrations prory will then rearry as then dider oney drink Eis

? This il come.

of God; thou art, worlds, 10u wilt adle; in ink His e Lord a

. . . .

Spraham. Ind awal 11, 5051 nay Sun Actium b: Aduitter nio do $2.6 Azony anu ochiach Agrippa I Alexander Marian Alexandra E.S. .vidancelA priviganslA. Amesina. Androw, B ATTEN, PERC Anna, ilia Annigintà T HAILITAA 01, 890, 10, 910 10, 910 11, 910 of, in Jer 11 , 915 Lud Antiputer, 11 16 aug Antony; Anton Apolngue, 4 HILEOGA Augitado:A :00 - 2'UU CADYDES

Ascolicien

12 Conterto

Antipas, Herod, 110; oirtinday feast of, 300; at Tiberias, palace of, 510; Christ's danger from super stition, &c. of, 532, 533; palace of, in Jerusalem, 735; Jesus brought before, 703,764. Antipater, father of Herod, 21-24; son of Herod and Doris, 25, 41, 44 Antony Magir 20, 25, 56, 27, 30, 31, 83 Antony, Mark, 22, 25, 26, 27, 30, 81, 83. Apologue, Indian, 885 Apostle, Jewish equivalent of term, 412. Archelaus, and the people after Herod's death, 183; and Antipas' canvass in Rome for the honor of being king, 184, made Eth narch by Cæsar, 185, cruel namon lu haren h 5010, Sto. ture, &c. of, 190. Aristobulu Aristobulus murdered, 32 Ariston, the, or breakfast, 486. Ascension of Jesus, 311. Ariston, H. Accendion Ascetic restrictions at table not re-Ascebic m oured by quired by Christ, 472.

84.

416.

Almsgiving, 437.

Asceticism, contrary to New Kingdom of God, 407.

Abraham Christ was before, 599;

Adultery, woman taken in, 591, 592. Age of children in schools, 121.

Agony and bloody-sweat of Christ in Agrippa I., life of, in Palestine, 247. Alexander and Aristobulus, sons of Mariamne at Rome, 40. Alexandra, mother of Mariamne, 31, Andrew, St., 321; special notice of, Antigonus, 27, 28, 29. Antipas, Herod, 110; birthday feast Almighty, voice of the, 559, 560.

Amestris, wife of Xerxes, 301.

Anna, legend of, 78. Anna, the Prophetess, 93.

Actium, battle of, 33.

Gethsemane, 740, 741.

Jews not children of, but of devil, 598; rejoicing to see Christ's day 599.

blocd and Min thus, and mouni fils ileath! On the has the Lord a Asmoneans, palace of the, 762 W Jack Astrology, Eastern, 100, 101; Jewish, 101; Old English, 102.

Atonement, preparation for day of, 164: forgiveness of offences before, 164.

Augustus, 84.

Auranitis or Hauran, plateau of, 224. Authorities, chief of the Synagogue, 132.

B

Babylon, number of Jews who returned from, 45.

Babylonian Jews, 98.

Balaam, legends of, 104.

Baptism, introduction of, by John, 357.

Baptist, food of the, 260; motives of the, in going into the wilderness, 202; elevation of mind, 263, 265; Life of the, in wilderness, 264; institutes baptism, 275, 276; excitement to hear the, 277, 278; effect of his preaching, 279; his preparation for God's kingdom, 280; rebukes Phari-sees and Sadducees, 281; contrast of his teaching to the Rabinnical deatring 281; treaching of 282, 285; doctrine, 281; preaching of, 282, 285; character of, 283; still a Jew, 283; work of, 284; attitude of authorities towards, 285; at Enon, 286; Jesus goes to the, 286; his Messianic ideas 286; recognizes Jesus as Messiah, 287; after-life of the, 289; imprison-ment of the, 290, 292; testimony of, to Christ, 290; Antipas' reasons for imprisoning the, 293; the, before Antipas, 294; Herodias' curlosity to see the, 295; execution of, by Anti-pas, 301; witness of, to Jesus, 320. Barabbas, Pilate asked to free, 705. Barby the discipling pluck on Sch

Barley, the disciples pluck, on Sab-bath, 454.

Bartholomew, 416. Bartimæus, Blind, cured, 655.

Bathing, cure for various diseases 440; before eating; 486. Bazaar, Great, in Jerusalem, 156. Beatlindes, 492, 428

Beelzebub, meaning of, 484, 625. Eethany, 600, 601, Christ enters, 659. Bethesda, pool of, 446, 447. waters of, 450

Bethlehem, 33 ; massacre at, 105 Bothsaida, town of Philip, Peter, and Andrew, 826 . Christ in, 511.

Betrothal among Jews, 74. Blasphemed, bellef that Christ had,

Blasphemy, accusation of, 399, of Rabbis against the Divino Spirit, 480

Blind, two, men receive sight, 501; healed, 546, man healed, miracle of 605, 006 Bread, the true, 517, 510 Brothar, patience to be shown to wards guilty, 575, 570 wards guilty, 575, 570

Burial, uncleanliness of Jews after a, 738, of Christ, 700.

1 " per a la port is " O a latter at batty iter in the statement

Casar, Julius, at Catiline's trial, 20

Casar, Julius, at Catiline's trial, 29; struggle with Pompey, 23; in Egypt 32; nurder. of 25; immunities. granted to Jews by, 23, 40 Casarea, 86; capital of Roman pro-curatorship, 80. Philippi, 546, 547 Calaphas the high priest, 736; speech of, to council, 610, high priest, 619; and Hannas demand the crucifixion of Jesus 778 of Jesus, 778. Calendar, Jewish Ecclestastical, 139. "Call," the, to the first Apostles, 382. Cane of Galilee, 327, 329; marriage at, 330-383; home of Nathanael, 327; site of, 820; traditions respecting the marriage in, 880.

Capernaum, circuits from, 390, de-scription of, 398, 330, 382, 397, 567, Jesus makes His home in, 842; Jesu: makes fills nome in, 342; reasons of Jesus for choosing Caper-naum as His home, 344, 345; stay of Jesus in, 345; site of, 383; Christ's "coming down to," 587; left on ac-count of rage and intrigues of Rab-bis, 498; Christ returns to, 498; crowds waiting to be healed, 515; Christ's visit to, 505.

Captivity, revival of religious earnest-

L noss during the, 43. Caravan, Galilœan, to feast in Jerus-lem, 579.

Carlyle on jesus Christ, 2.

Caste, sweeping away of, 531. Caverns of Gadara, 496

Caves used for houses 65.94.

Census of people taken by Quirinius, 194, of Quirinius, 80, of Roman Empire, 80, of Judea, 81

Centurion, the, believes in Christ's divine power, 780,787; servant of the, healed, 459 Ceremonial defilement, dread of, 223.

Ceremonial purity, 172, 174.

Channing on Jesus Christ, 2

Children brought to the Rabbis to be blessed, 645, blessed by Christ, 645; Christ's love of, 571; desire for among Jews, 66. Chorazin, Christ denounces the perversity of, 465.

Christ, opinious of great men respect. ing, 1-4; Mohammedan title of, 1; religious revolution effected by, 4, unselfishness of. 4; never owns sh. 4; awful claims of, 5; character of, 5; conception of God, 5; novelty of 5: conception of God, 5 . novelty of His teaching, 5 . on God, 6 ; on the brotherhood of man, 6 . visit to Je rusalem at the time of the Passover. 144 ; in temple with the Rabbis, 158 ; growth of, 161 ; first teachers of, 165 ; knowledge of Scriptures, 167 ; sojourn of, in Nazareth, 168 birth of, 85 , date of birth of, 85 legends of birth of, 86 . vision of angels at birth of, 86 . Vision of angels at birth of, 86 . Vision of angels at birth of, 86 . His dress, 477 ; prejudices against, Indifference to, 402 ; position of towards the Rabbis, 401 ; the Friend of sinners, 406 ; no respecter, of persons, 407 406; no respecter of persons, 407, kingdom founded on self-denial and kingdom founded on self-denial and self-sacrifice, 409; ignores ritual and ceremonial law, 409; preach-ing, originality of, 410, nobility of character of, 410, grace, lov, and kingliness of, 411, self-abrogation required by, in His disciples, 412, bearing towards His disciples, 417; minute acquaintance with opinions different schools, 420-421 (new roll, ious erea of universal love created ious era of universal love created by, 436, spiritual not political re-ligion of, 436,437, universal love, deep religious ground for, 443; warnings, solemn, to beware of false teachers, 443, teaching, origin-lity, and independence of 441 ality and independence of, 444, teaching, astonishment of the peo-ple at, 444, sayings and deeds per-verted to evil, 448; answer to the disciples of John, 462; eulogy of, on John the Baptist, 462; acknowl-edges John as the Ellas who was to come spirit, 4 John wi dom to humble ture and 460; call to Him. womani of blass claiming tained' a the town 470; 50% 471; sup atways v ty of m light, 47 proof of . of, to Ba leaders o point in the boat, against, i 504; cast extent of rections started o lations c of, to His Peter's u 554; loftin 577; lesso dignity a ishing lea He was ta tion of pe refused a 594; fore vincing di to spread tempt to fessed by shipped proaches blindness, that the h 610; cross 613; with 613: gath Perea, 619 whom trie 619; enthu the teachi im, 620; cu bath, 620; Great Sup religion, p of, that the ture of His around to

1958 1.2

1, Quirinius oman Em.

in Christ's ervant of ead of, 226.

2 abbis to be by Christ, : desire for s the per-

en respect title of, 1; cted by, 4, r ownstein. haracter of, , novelty of 6; on the visit to Je ie Passover. he Rabbis, st teachers Scriptures, zareth, 168, irth of, 85, vision of His dress, indifferenço owards the of sinners, ersons, 407 , f-denial and ores ritual 09; preach nobility of e, love, and i-abrogation sciples, 412 sciples, 417, ith opinions new reli-ove created political reversal love, for, 443 beware of hing, origin-ce of, 441, of the peo l deeds per-wer to the ulogy of, on acknowl-as who was to come." 463; much depressed in spirit, 464 ; compares the coming of John with His own, 464; New Kingdom to rest on simple faith and humble love, 465; reveals His na-ture and relation to the Eternal, 466; calls the weary and heavy laden to Him, 466; feet anointed by the woman in Simon's house, 469; charge of blasphemy raised against, for claiming to forgive sins, 470; enter-tained as a Rabbi, 470; mission to the towns and villages of Galilee, 470; poverty of, and His disciples, 471; supported by hospitality, 473; atways with disciples, 474; simplici-ty of mode of life, 474; yoke of. flight, 477; sign demanded of, as proof of His claims, 483; superiority of, to Rabbis, 486; rejection of, by leaders of the nation, 488; turning point in life, ii, 489; falls asleep in the boat, 495; charge of blasphemy against, 501; oreaches in Nazareth, 504; cast out of the synagogue, 504; extent of missionary circuit, 505; diwoman in Simon's house, 469; charge extent of missionary circuit, 505; directions to the Twelve, when they started on mission, 509, 510; specu-lations concerning, 532, 533; irony of, to His tempters for a sign, 543; Peter's unconscious temptation of, 554; loftiness of spiritual nature of 577; lesson of universal charity, 583; 577; lesson of universal charity, 583; dignity and humility of, 584; aston-ishing learning of, 585; proves that He was taught of God, 586; indigna-tion of people at, 588; His testimony refused as without witnesses, 593, 594; foretells his death, 594; con-vincing dignity, 595, 596; reference to spread of His Kingdom, 595; at-tempt to stone, 599; openly con-fessed by blind man, 607; wor-shipped by blind man, 607; re-proaches the Rabbis with spiritual blindness, 608; enforces the idea blindness, 608; enforces the idea that the heathen shall enter heaven, 610; crosses the Jordan to Perea, 613; withdraws from the Temple, 613: gathers crowds round Him in Perea, 613; nature of assembly by whom tried, 618; retires to Ephraim, 619; enthuslasm of the people for the teaching of, 620: leaves Ephraim, 620; cures a woman on the Sabbath, 620; relates the Parable of the Great Supper, 623; character of new religion, preached by, 624, auxiety of, that the people should know nature of His mission, 625; warns those around to consider well before becoming His followers, 625; character of crowds gathered round, 627 of crowds gathered round, cer, halled by the people as a Rabbl, no respecter of persons, 627, outrages established laws of, privilege, &C., 628; title of, nailed to Cross, 780; ag-ony of, on the Cross, 781, 782; death of, 786; removal of, from the Cross, 780, is hundred in the tom of Cross, 790; is buried in the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, 790, testimony of Scripture respecting, 803; parting counsels of, 803; appears on a moun-tain to the assembled people, 609; religion before advent of, 6, 10.

- Christian Republic, declaration of principles and laws of, 419.
- Christianity, founded in direct opposition to customs, formulæ, 420; fun-damental principles of, 5; the no-blest truth of, 436; originality of, 5, 10,
- Chronology, from B.C. 69-B.C. 37; not strictly followed regarding Christ's movements, 458.
- Cipher for the names of God and angels, 479.
- Circumcision, must be on eighth day,

Civilization, advance of Roman, 271.

- Class-hatreds amongst the Jews, 485, Claudius, famine in time of, 529, the poet, on Jesus Christ, 2, Cleanliness, Levitical, 2, the Scrip-
- tures defiling the hands, 427.
- Cleopatra, Queen of Egypt, 23, 26, 27, 29, 82, 33
- Coins, symbols on, 677, 678. Confession, confirmation of Peter's
- 560
- Consolence, freedom of, taught by Christ, 457, right of, denied in anti-quity, 7.
- Conservatism, Jewish, on the decline, 458.
- Contrast between old and new kingdoms, 431. , M. HIG WHAND
- "Corban," the word, 528.
- Corn, the disciples pluck, on Sabbath, 454.

Council, rage of, at Christ, 607.

- Counsels to the young, 128.
- Country, aspect of, in April, 345.
- Court of Herod at Jerusalem, 35.
- Covetousness, caution against, 4°8.
- Cross, Christ on the, 779; agony of Christ on the, 780; title of Jesus nailed to, 780; Pilate and the inserp-tion on the, 780; removal of Christ from the, 790; description of the, 776; Simon, the Cyrenian, compelled to bear the, 777; inscription on, 780, 781.

Crucifixion, history of, 775; Jewish law in connection with, 787; hour of, 772; Jewish and Roman, 776; 779; dark-ness at, 787.

Cure of boy possessed by dumb spirit, 563, 564; of man with impediment of speech, 587; wonderful, in Capernaum, 479.

Cuthites, tradition respecting, 365. Cyrene, Jews in, 777. Cyrus, 45.

Cyrus, 45. Is to these of a first solar of a second solar to the second solar solar

Danger of turning any from Christ. 578.

Daniel, Jewish interpretation of, 2.7, -228

Decapolis, the, 537.

Defilement, Jewish Ideas of, 80.

Demon, Christ cures man possessed of 5, 385; Jesus said to be in league with, 481; man possessed with, healed, 497; casting out from dumb man, 501; casting out; from daugh ter of Canaanitish woman, 533, 536, Christ accused of having a, 598.

- De Wette on Christ, 3. Disciple, desire of Samaritan to be, 581:
- Disciples, call of the, 882; perplexity and distress of, at breach of law, and distress of, at breach of law, 405; necessity of selecting a larger number, of, 411; future work of Christ's, 411; reward, no earthly one held out to, 412; rejection of persons unfit to be, 412; sincere enthusiasm 'necessary in Christ's, 412; twelve appointed as, 413; reasons for Christ's choosing from the humbler closes 414; enumeration of 414; classes, 414; enumeration of, 414; social position of, 414; alarm of, at Christ's doctrines, 531; necessity of confirming, in their faith, 548-549; confirming, in their Tath, 548-549, "Christ's preparation of, for His vio-lent death, 553; suffering, &cc.; in store for Christ's, 555, 556, discour agement of, 557, 558; failure of, to work miracle, 568, 564, 565; jealousy amongst the, 566, 567; not to expect posts in a temporal kingdom, 569, 570; powers for Church government given to all the 576. Christ's reproof given to all the, 576, Christ's reproof of, for fanaticism towards Samaritans, 580, complete surrender of earthly ties by, 581; future reward of the, 649, 650; journeys of the, 651; speak of Christ's fate, 651, counsels of Jesus to His, 694, 701; Christ informs, of approaching fate, 703; ask Jesus for directions respecting Passover Feast, 707, 708; inability of the, to interpret Christ's words, 719, 720; flight of the, at arrest of Jesus, 744: opinions of the, respecting Christ's resurrection, 708; Jesus appears to the, 801; astonishment of, at appears to the, 801; astonishment of, at appear-ance of Jesus, 808, second appear-ance of Jesus to the, 805; opinions, of the, respecting Christ's stay on earth, 806; last appearance of Jesus to the, 810, 811.

Discipleship, strict conditions of, 494.

Disobedience to Christ's words, the foolishness of, 444.

- Dives, parable of, and Lazarus, 633, 634; parable of, explained, 634, 635, Divorce, the facility of, among the Jews, 429, 430; debates of Rabbis re-specting, 643; Rabbis ask Jesus if, is lawful, 643, 644; Christ reasons with the Pharisees respecting, 644, 645.
- Doctrine new of Jesus respecting ob-servance of Sabbath, 454. Doves, sale of by priests, 346

Dress, difference between that of Christ and the Rabbis, 472, of Christ, 477.

Dress and living, moderation in, enjoined by Christ, 472. the month of the month of the start of the East, difference of spirit of, from the West, 123; houses of the wealthy in the, 745.

Edom, prophecies against, 181

Education among Jews, 170, 178, 121. 47.

Egypt, guilds of workmen in, 106, Jews, unpopular in, 106; idolatry of, 107.

Elders of Synagogue, 132

- Elijah, the greatest of all the prophets, 463; coming of, 624, 634.
- Engedi, valley of, 253; spring of. 259; town of, 260.
- Enoch, book of, mystifying influence of the, on the Jews, 253. Entertainment of Christ after day's labours, 474.

Equivocation, Christ speaks against, 430.

Esdraelon, plain of, 213 Decke Jarman &

Esdras, fourth book of, Messaianic ideas, 236, 237.

Essenes, the, 426: dread of defilement, 253, devotion to ceremonies, 254, rules of, &c., 254; popular influence of, 257. 57. OF THEY STATE WE WE WE WE THE

Evening spectin Excitem Christ, Ercomm Exorcism Explanat verse o 111 461 10

Fallure, against Faith, Ch with th 460; Wa

496 False tead Famine ir Fanaticis

877. .... Fasting, C 408; Chr ridícule after mo 454. 16

Fasts, pub Father, in Feast of L Fever, enc

385. Fig-trees, barren, 6 Fires, illeg guishing Fishermen lake of G of Galile

Fishes, th 807. ...

"Flesh, to phrase, 5

Food, prej

449, equ specting, tion of, b

Forgiving s

Forty days during th

Fountain o Freedom, J

Fugitive, C 494.

Funeral, de of Lazar Nain, 460

Blur Stal Gabriel, ap 74, to Ma Gadara, to ty of the, , 719, 720; esus, 744: Christ'a ppears to t appearopiaions s stay on oof Jesus is of, 494,

ords, the zarus. 633, 1, 634, 635. mong the Rabbis re-Jesus if, st reasons cting, 644, pecting lob-6. Tar Youth a that of , of Christ, lon in, en-יובי לאלימאן ז איז איז איז איז

f, from the wealthy in 181 9 95,01 70, 178, 121, en in, 106, idolatry of.

e prophets,

ing of. 259;

influence

after day's aks against,

e to Tontorat

Messaianic

f defilement,

monies, 254, ar influence

ANT MARCH

Evening, meal, manners of East re-specting, 472. Excitement, great, of people for Christ, 488. A ALL STORES COM Exercism, formula of, 479. Explanations, innumerable, of every verse of Bible, among Jews, 444. AND RECEIPT A THE AND AND A REPAILS Failure, Christ's words of warning against, 425. Faith, Christ compares the centurion's with that of the bigoted Judeans, 460; want of, reproved by Jesus, 496. False teachers, danger of, 443. Famine in Palestine, Fanaticism, religious, of Christ's day, 377. Fasting, Christ's opinions respecting, 408; Christ urges secret, 430; Roman ridicule of feigned humility, 439; till after morning service in synagogue, 454. Fasts, public and private, 407. Father, inquiry who was Christ's, 594. Feast of Dedication, 611. Fever, endemic, on Lake of Galilee, 385. Fig-trees, barren, 665; lesson on the barren, 667, 668. Fires, illegality of lighting or extin-guishing on the Sabbath, 449. Fishermen, Christ visits the, on the lake of Galilee, 807, 809; on the lake of Galilee, 415. Fishes, the miraculous draught of, 807. "Flesh, to eat one's," meaning of phrase, 519. Food, preparation of, for Sabbath, 449, equivocation of the laws re-specting, for Sabbath, 450; prepara-tion of, before the Sabbath, 455. Forgiving sins of paralytic, 398. Forty days, Christ's sojeurn on earth during the, 806. Fountain of the Virgin, 440. Freedom, Jewish, 595.. Fugitive, Christ a, from his enemies, 494 Funeral, description of Eastern, 499. of Lazarus, 614; of young man at Nain, 460. tustan Werd to Lann G test with strain T Gabriel, appearance of to Zacharias, 74, to Mary, 70 Gadara, town of, 496, visit to, 494.

Gain of Rabbis from exorcisms. 490. Gaillee, description of Sea of, 212: description of province, 213, 214, 216; life and population in, 215; coloniza-tion of, 216; in Christ's day, 81; Christ's last visit to, 565; Christ's centre for work, 336; chosen by Christ as His future home, 337; de-scription of, 342; Judea left, it re-visited, 445; roads of, 115; taxation of by Rome, 194; customs and ex-cise duties of, 196; situation of prov-ince, 211; work in, virtually over, 558.

Galilee, lake of, causes of storms, 403; storm alises, 495. Galilæans, devotion of to their country, 218.

Gaulonitis, description of, 222.

Gennesareth, lake of, described, 339-841; valley of, fruits of the, 840; ap-pearance of the shore of the, 841; lake of, 544.

Gerizim, the sacred mount, 307, 308.

Germanicus sent to Syria, 197.

Gethsemane, Christ in the Garden of, 789, 740; foreshadowing of, to Jeaus, 689, 670.

Glaphyra, 40; Archelaus married to, her death, 190.

God, the Jews' idea of, 433, 434; patience of, towards all men. 642; new life from, spiritual not ritual. 521; our great debts towards, 576, 577. Goethe, on Jesus Christ, 2. Golgotha, the place, 779.

Grave of Lazarus, description of, 617, Greece, size of, 11.

Greeks, national pride of, 7. Let 1. Reducing a construction of the second of the second Haircloth, garment of, 273.

Hannas, intrigues and plotting of the house of, 736, 737.

Heathenism in Palestine in Christ's day, 86, 87. Heaven, Jewish ideas of, 639, 649; Jesus explains about, 639.

Help granted by God to those who ask it, 442.

Herder on Jesus Christ, 2.

Herod Antipas, successor to Herod in Galilee, 208; repairs his kingdom, 209; strengthens fortress of Machaerus, 209; relations with Tiberius, 210; alarmed by the people who flocked after Jesus, and fears a political rising, as in the case of the Baptist, 625; Judea in the time of, 620.

Herod Boëthos, the High Priest, 297.

Herod the Great, 24-28; as king, 80; effect of the long reign of, on Jewish parties, 230; hatred of Jews to, 24-26; size of his kingdom, 85; marries the second Marianne, 85; false position of, 30; bounty in the time of famine, 39; date of death of, 106; family of, 182; successor to the throne of, 182; funeral of, 183.

Herodians, the, 109. Herodias, marriage of, 206, 207, 208; evil results of marriage of, 208, 209. Hesbon, description of, 220.

High Priests, changes of, 261; luxury and audacity of the, 241; moral corruption of, 62; robes of, kept by Romans, 64.

High Priests on Day of Atonement, description of, 71. High Priesthood, changed at Herod's will, 184.

Hillel, 51-54; narrative of life, 192.

Hillel's explanation of the whole law, 442.

Hillel and Schammai, schools of, 526.

Hospitality among Jews, 84; of friends enables Christ to live; Christ refused, 580.

Houses free to pilgrims during Passover, 142.

Human nature perfect in Christ, 445. Humility, Christ's love of, 578.

Husbandman and vineyard, parable of the, 671; explanations of, 672.

Hymn, first Christian, 662.

Hypocifical righteousness of the Pharisees, 426. Hyrcanus, 22–33; hatred to, for his innovations, 299.

Hyrcanus and Aristobulus, civil war of, 186, 187. , .

and the second s

Incense offering in Temple, 154. Influence of the Synagogue on the people, 188.

Influential friends of Jesus, 510.

Inhumanity of bigots, 447. Inquisitors gentle and amiable in other relations, 448.

Insanity, manner in which regarded.

Intolerance, religious, 458. Israclite, daily religious life of, 123, 124.

Israelites, pilgrimages, fasts of, etc., 125. Iturea, region of, 223. Lace a statist the state to be a the strate rate of the

- Jairus, raising of daughter of, 498. James, St., 320. James and John, dreams of ambition of, 652, 653; sketch of characters of, 415.
- Jealousy of the ecclesiastical authorities, 394; danger resulting from. 894.
- "Jehovah," mighty power of word, with Rabbis, 479, 480. Jericho, plain of, 653; town of, its sit-uation. etc., 654; a Levitical city, 655.
- Jerusalem, veneration of by the Jews, 602, siege of by Herod, 29; heathen erections in, 36; appearance of, 145, 146; description of, 80; headquarters of the great religious institutions, 156; during time of the Passover, 846; water supply of, 446; Christ's last journey towards, 505; Christ's love for, 554; lament of Jesus over, 640; during the Passover, 708

640; during the Passover, 703. Jesus, family of, 242, 243; position in His household, 244; Mary's ideas concerning, 244; Increasing faculties of, 245, baptism of, 283; baptism of, His divine consecration, 302-305; after handism 203; retirement to after baptism, 803; retirement to wilderness, 205; temptation of, in wilderness, 302-314; portrait of, 315; fabled statue of, at Panias, 816. earliest conception of appearance of Jesus, 316; images of, 318, de scription of, by Nicephorus, 318; by Lentulus, 318; by Delitzsch, 319; first disciples, 323; character of, 334, first disciples, 323; character of, 334, age of, on entrance into public work, 336; popularity of, 348, 349; explains His teaching to Nicodemus, 354; addresses the officers of the Sanhe drim, 354; originality of speech of, 355, burden of His preaching in Judea, 358; cave of nativity of, 86; date of birth of, 85; time of baptism of, 286; sojourn in Judea, 860; His words to the woman at the well, 868, 869; success in Samaria, 372; jour-neys to Galildee, 373; popular favour 509; success in Samaria, 372; jour-neysto Galilee, 373, popular favour towards, 374, 375; heals the centuri-on's servant, 375, 376; retires to the north, 376; His call to repentance, 378; first Galilean tour of, 879, His early disciples, 380, 381, midnight prayer of, 383, 889, 413; power of the preaching of, 421; address in syna-roome at Capernaum, 383; curves all gogue, at Capernaum, 383; curcs all who are sick of divers diseases, 385-387; the great purpose of, furthered by His aculous 888; ret 389, firs of, to pe restrain neys, 8 439; wis tion, 447 His Fat fence, 4 ing enm Galilee, Rabbini withdra populari naum fo bl," 488 worldly of, 544 Feast o Ephrain man, 620 poses H cures a fuses tl great act His disc 635, 630; publicly, ters the Jerusale. 670-674; 679; judg a woman bands, 6' 680, 683; Pharisee eur of, question dresses t sign den 693; addr ing the meeting of in Bethan 704, 705; 709; wasl explains. Judas' ti betrayal with Pete 715; wai coming h disciples discourse Spirit of death, 73 ples in G and arre 742, 743; and sufficients, of, 498.

ambition racters of.

al authoring from,

of word,

of, its sititical city, y the Jews, 9; heathen nce of, 145, adquarters nstitutions, Passoyer, 16; Christ's 15; Christ's Jesus over, , 708.

position in ary's ideas ng faculties baptism of, n, 302-305; irement to tion of, in rait of, 315; Panias, 816. appearance of, 318, de rus, 318; by itzsch, 319; cter of, 334, public work, 49; explains emus, 354; the Sanhe f speech of, reaching in tivity of, 86; of baptism ea, 860; His he well, 868, 1, 372; jourular favour the centuri-etires to the repentance, of, 879, His 1, midnight power of the ess in syna-85; cures all liseases, 385-of, furthered by His remarkable cures, 387; miraculous powers of, first instance of, 888; retires to a mountain to pray, 389, first circuit of, 389; attraction of, to poor and sorrowful, 880; self-restraint of, 887, life of, on His journeys, 390, pretence abhorrent to, 439; wish to avoid attracting atten-tion, 447; claims equality with God His Father, 451; speaks in self-defence, 451; commoncement of last-ing enmity towards, 458; returns to Galilee, 453; entirely opposed to Rabbinical ideas of a Messiah, 457; withdraws from Capernaum, 458; popularity of, 458; leaves Caper-naum for Nain, 400, a "Great Rab-bl," 468; not a judge or divider in worldly affairs, 456; sadness of heart of, 544-547; look-out kept for, at Feast of Tabernacles, 584; leaves Ephraim, 620; cures a palsied wo man, 620, silences a Rabbi who op poses thim in His good work; 620; cures a man ill of dropsy, 621; re-fuses the popular support, 625; great acts of kindness of, 627, warns His disciples of their weaknesses, 635, 633; resolves to enter Jerusalem fence, 451; commencement of last-635, 638; resolves to enter Jerusalem publicly, and on an ass, 660, 661; en-ters the Temple, 663; entry of, into Jerusalem; 664; composure, &c., of, 670-674; parties unite against, 678, 679; judgment of, asked concerning a woman who had had seven husbands, 679, 680; attempts to entrap, 680, 683; denunciation of Scribes and Pharisees by 683, 685; moral grand-eur of, 686, 687; Decalogue, Jesus questioned respecting the, 681, ad-dresses the multitude on faith, 602; dresses the multitude on faith, 602; sign demanded by disciples from, 603; addresses His disciples respect-ing the end of Jerusalem, 694, 696; meeting of conspirators against, 703; in Bethany, 704; anointed by Mary, 704, 705; dangers of, in Jerusalem, 709; washes disciples' feet, 711, 712; explains His doing so, 712; tells of Judas' treachery, 712; tells of His betrayal and death, 714; converse with Peter respecting his faith, 714, 715; warns His disciples of their coming hardships, 715; promises the coming hardships, 715; promises the disciples eternal life, 721, 722; final discourse of, to disciples, 723-734; Spirit of, on the near approach of death, 738, 739; and the three disci-ples in Gethsemane, 740; betrayal and arrest of, in Gethsemane, 742, 743; brought before Hannas, 745; trial of, before Caiaphas, 743, 746; illegality of trial of, 749, 747; accused of blasphemy, 753; meeting of judges of, 755; trial of, by Pilate, 757-762; brought again be-fore Pilate, 704-768; scourging of, 708, 769; mocked and scoffed by the soldiers, 769; delivered over to the people, 771; is brought out to be dru-cified, 776; ascension of, 811; how long in the grave, 777. long in the grave, 777.

lew, ancient pride of, 6,

- ews, hatred of other races, 46; en-thuslasm of, for education, 120; dress of, 133; religious excitement of, 198; war against Rome, 199; de-votion of to the Holy City, 200; Gal-ilæan, faithful to the law, 217; pop-ulation of, in Iturea, &c., 223; pu-chase of freedom by, 225; treatment of, by the Romans, 227; early ad-miration of the, for the Romans, 229; under Pompey's rule, 229; Mes-sianic enthuslasm of the, 231, 232; Samaritans, hatred of, by, 365-367; conservatism of, 399; deputation of. Jews, hatred of other races, 46; enconservatism of, 399; deputation of, wait on Jesus, 459; indignation of, when Christ contrasts them with heathen, 460; kingdom of God, as imagined by, 460; sacred moncy of, appropriated for water conduits, 5%; burial-places of winthout CS8; 500; hurial-places of criminal, 788; future hopes of resurrection, 790.
- Jewish education, 47; husband, rela-tion of to his wife, 117; tribal divis-
- ions, 557; hatred of all races, 435, Jewish exclusiveness, rise of, 46; de-nounces Greek, 46; no Gentile to learn Hebrew, 47.

- Jezreel, plain of, 461. Joazer, high priest, aids Quirinius, 199;
- John the Baptist, early life of, 248, 249; fate of, &c., 357; opinions re-specting, 359, 360; mode of baptism by, 275; locality where he baptized, 273; lying in prison, 461; seuds disciples to Jesus, 461; prisoner in Machaerus, 507; murdered, 510.
- John, St., 321; was he of priestly race? 614.
- Jordan, the river, 17; description of the, 272; great plain of the, 273; val-ley of the, 273; description of the, 576.
- Joseph, husband of Mary, 73; death of, 212; legend of body of, 631.
- Joseph and Mary, route of, from Naz-
- arcth to Jerusalem, 81. Joseph of Arimathea, asks Pilate for Christ's body, 788, 789.

Judaism, "Hedge" round, 48; revival of, under Ears, 170; first steps to-wards open separation from, 418; Judas the Gaulonite, devotion of, 900. Judas the Galionite, devotion of, 40. Judas Incariot, first apparent thought of treachery in, 522, speaks respec-ing Christ's aneinting, 705; disap-pointment of, 706; betrays Christ to the authorities, 706; eats the sop with Jenus, 718; effects of, conduct of, on the disciples, 710; furthers his treacherous achemes, 741; remorse and anxiety of, 774; 775; suicide of, 775

775. Judas Thaddeus, belief of, in the Measiab, 723. Judea, size of: 61, 856; barrenness of, 88; wilderness of, 258, 250; strength of casto in, 027. Ora . anter paintes.

and the state of the state of the take Khans or Caravanserais, 84. Kidron, valley of the, 148. Kingdom of God, Israel as the, 59; Successive developments of, 59. Knots, illegality of tying, &c, on the Sabbath, 448.

L Lamb, Passover offering of, 150. Lamb of God, title of Jesus, 320, 321, 6. E . . . .

Last Supper, place of Jesus at, 710; Je-sus cats the, with disciples, 717, 718, Law, reading of the, 138, the, ex-plained by the Rabbis, 171; Christ's not wishing to destroy, but fulfil it, 425; sacred the, 420; "food or drink," metaphor for study of, 186.

Lawyer's question, as to inheriting eternal life, 601, 602. Lawyers, Christ's speaking against practices of, 487, 488. Laying on of hands, 132.

Car Salaras

Lazarus, raising of, 617; legends respecting, 617

Leaven, parable of three measures of, 492; of Pharisees, remarks concerning, 545 Lebanon, 597; valley of, 565. Leper, Christ cureth a, 390; cere-monies for the purification of a, 392, 893.

Lepers, Christ heals the ten, 582, 583, Leprosy, cleansing of, 390-392, 393; contagiousness of, 391; purification from $92. Life of Christ, difficulty of writing a, Lator dr. for vestion of the later

Light, Christ the, of the world, 503 Literature, heathen, the Golden Rulo found in AH, 448 Loaves, miracle of, and fishes, 598. Longuiffering, patience towards of-fenders, 576. Lord's Prayer, the, 499. 113. Sui 19.33. .

M. UNCOLLON

Machaerus, fortress of, 291, 208, meanmachaorus, fortress of, 551,558, mean-ing of, 409. Mackintosh, Sir James, on Christ's, ac-cepted apparently by Mary, 484. Magdala, description of, 471 Magti, the, 100, 401, legends of, 107. de-rivation of word, 108. Magic, vast Rabbinical sciences of, 480 Magicarias, meating of the underword Magistrates, meeting of, to condemn Christ, 755, 756. Malachi, his prophecies concerning Jesus, 275. Manimon, the god, 681, 682 447. Manna, legends respecting, 510 Marianne, the first, wife of Herod, 25-84. Marriage, Pharisaic doctrine of, 459 Marriage ceremonies in East, 850 Marry's under Herod, 239. Mary, the Virgin, 74; her character, 76; Magnificat, 77, in Temple 79; appearance of, 80, rebuke of, by Jesus, 160; family of, 827; anxiety of, to withdraw Christ to Narareth, 485; viaits Capernaum, 801; inter-view of, with Christ, 503; goes to see Christ on the Cross, 784, 785. Mary, Magdalene, healing of, 474-476; and other women go to emotion Je-25-84. Mary magnitude, nearing or, act-vo; and other women go to embaim Je-sus, 794; they find the stone rolied away from the tomb, and an angel sitting within, 794. Mary, Martha, and Lezarus, 601. Matthew, St. 402; made a disciple, 403; feast in house of, 404; sees in Jesus the fulfilment of Jesath ringche in the fulfilment of Jesath ringche in 458; invitation of, great principle in volved in it, 409. Mechanical piety of Pharisees, 428. Medical treatment, Jewish, 499. Memory, feats of one of the Rabbis, 178.

Messiah, ideas respecting, among Jews, 55, 56; expected advent of, 56, birthplace of, 57, 104; to appear first in Galilee, 57; Jewish ideas of king dom of, 58; to be of tribe of Judah, 103; idea concerning the, in Pealms the, 267; Christ's ing the 464, 518 591; ide 641; Jee confess instil-id spectin stion t some th ishmen as, 607; the disc of 638, 0 090; Day Messiaha, Middle-Ag Miracles o -519: 000 Miracles, 834; 100 1 ing, 385, 387; cui 387; Ch them al ples, 56 Miraculou

Real Ezra, A

th

Misconcep Obrist, Mission, C anter, to: Months of Moralt W Tighteou Moses, als Mother an who are Mountain, Nor 111den, 75;

people, Mourning Multitude Murder, C Musterd & Mystery, 1 102, 180;

Nablous, Nain, the restored Napoleon, rld: 803 olden Ruie 108, 588.

wards of-

2 Sand 102 1112 208, mean. Christ: 4. hrist's, acof 107: de-ence of, 480 o condemn concerning AND PRIMA rears cured, , 510 :108 of Herod, ne of, 420 ast, 880.11 character,

Temple, 79; buke of by 27; anxiety o Narareth, of, 474-476; embaim Je-nd an angel us, 601, disciple,403; ees in Jesus 's prophecy.

principle in sees, 426, 499. the Rabbis.

ng, among dvent of, 50, appear first leas of king e of Judah, e, in Psalms of Solomers, Sid Sid; in Sourth Book of Endras, Sid, Sid; Vision of the, to Enra, Sid; heralds of the, Sid; ex-citement at the near approach of the 199, 24, 36; John's expectation of, 267; expectation of, general, 90; Christ's divine consciousness of be-ing the, 444; Jewish conception of, 464, 513; Rabbis' conception of, 512-531; ideas of Pharisses about the, 444; Jesus proclaimed; Adt; Feterris confession of the, 551; differently to institute of suffering, 354; ideas re-specting, 597; Christ's public deslar-ation that He was, 567; feeling of some that for acknowledging Christ as, 607; kingdom of, 686; advice to the disciptes respecting the coming of, 653, 650; opinions respecting the 690; Davidio descent, 691; Middle-age preather, 984; Mindle-age preather, 984; Mindle of a final's mouth, 500, 117 Mindle beginning of, at Cane, 883; 334; reasonablemens, if Sid Cane, 483;

Miracles, beginning of, at Cans, 333, 334; reasonablepess of, 355; of heal-ing, 365, 390; as a religious influence, 387; ouriesity to see discouraged, 387; Christ did net lay stress on them alone, 465; wrought by disci-ples, 563 : others bendess disciples parmitted to work, 578. Miraculous conception, not a Jewish idea. ilden, 75; # Misconceptions of Mary concerning Onrist, 484. Mission, Christ sends the Seventy on Months of the Hebrew year, 578, Morall worthisemens of Pharissic Fightsourness, 497, Morall most deified, 517, Moral and brethwn, Christ explains who are His, 480. an Antistia Mountain; Christ retires to, to escape people, 514. Mouraing for dead, 404. Multitudes taught, 476. Murder. Christ's definition of, 498, 429. Mustard seed, parable of, 498. Mystery, love of in Rabbinical teachand the start where the start of the start o Nablous, town of, 863. Nain, the "beautiful," 400 ; young man restored to life at, 401, 4 Napoleon, on Jesus Christ, 9-10.

Nations, Jewish idea of number of,

National, Jewish idea of number ex, 883, 12 National enmity, 484. Nationalities, gathering of, in Jerum-lem, at Passover time, 144. Nativity, the cave of the, 25, Nasarene Rabbis accuse Christ of de-moniacal possession, 508. Nasarenes, Christ grieves over their unbellef, 505. Nasareth, characteristics of life in, 109; description of, 110, 161; people of, 113; a view from; 113, 114; Christ visits, 508. Nasarite rules, 249, 250; legend of a, Nazarite rules, 249, 250; legend of a. 251.

Net, gathering good and had fish, para-ble of, 498. New Moon, time of the, 139, 140, 144 Nicsnor's Gate, 90, 100, 140, 144

Nicodemus, the Pharisee, 358, 383; a rich benefactor, 594; speaks timidly autor Christ, 500: Sungaingeft's .....

For a P. T. Mar. 221-1 millialter

Oaths, the use of, 480. Oatns, the use of an other, decay Old families, English and other, decay of, 73.

alighter constant in Ponistance of Samuel

Palestine, climate and vegetation of 18, 14: physical geography of 14: fertility of 15; andent populousness, 16; historyof, in the generation before Christ, 31: climate of 14; northern boundary of, 17; smailness of, 11: position of, on map of the ancient woold 11 world, 11. Palsy, man sick of the, cured, 631. Pan, legend of death of, 947. Parable; application of, to Jewish pre-judice, 634; first to a great-multitude from fishing-boat, 489; of the debt-ors, 469; the prodigal son, 630, 630; rich man suddenly summoned be-fore God, 438; the lost sheep, 638; a familiar way of instructing, 499; pe-culiar adaptability of, to the people, 609; the unjust steward, 631; the woman with the lost silver, 628. woman with the lost silver, 628. Paralytic, healing of, 401.

Parents, duty of honouring, 528, 529. Parthians, the, 27, 28, 271 Passover, ceremony of, 150-152; focst of the. 141; length of, 153; meaning of in Hebrew, 141; number of sacrifices at, 151; ceremony of the, de-scribed, 151; order of eating they, 716; singing of psalms at the, 738; preparations of the disciples for the, 708, 709; time of, 453; such as the second

Peace, the Roman; 271.

Pearl of great price, parable of, 493. People, agitation of the, respecting Jesus, 738; Jesus consoles the on His, way to execution, 778, 779; they scoff at Christon the cross, 782, 783; • listened standing, Christ sat, 476. Perea, description of district of, 219; Jesus urged to leave; 640.

Perjury, sanctioned by Rabbis if purified by an offering, 430. (1997) br Persian religion, the, 96; influence of, on Judaism, 97

- Peter, St., special mention of, 325, 415; first interview with Christ, 825; enjoined by Christ to teach Hisflock. 808; Christ's blessing, 551; Christ's charge to, 552; cuts off a servant's ear, 743; and John, follow Christ after His arrest, 744, 754; denies Christ thrice, 754, 755; his impulsiveness, 649, 743; mother-in-law, illness of, cured, 385; house of, Jesus in, 491; 612, death of, 3, as "the Rock," 552. Pharisaic conception of righteousness
- 426; hypocrisy denounced, 529, 530. Pharisee, invites Christ to his house, 467; Jesus dines with a, 621, 623; the word, gradual disuse of, 428; and

Publican, parable of the, 642.

Pharisees, and Herodians, alliance of, 533; disloyalty of the, 676; craft of the, 676; 6,000 in Christ's day, 49; numbers through the empire, 49; aud Sadduces, different opinions of, 539, 542; &c., attempt to arrest Christ by, 588-590; demand proof from Christ of His true Messiahship (512; Jesus alludes to maxims of, 454; jealousy of the, 361; noble prin-ciples of, 430, 491; different classes of, 432, 626; decay of, 51; rebuked by Jesus, 632; strict rules respecting those with whom they ate, 467.

Phasael, 27, 28.

Phenicians, famous as traders, 535.

Phenomena, natural explanations of - ordinary, unknown, 440. Philip, his reign, government, &c., 234; mention of, ii. 40; tomb of, 233. Philistia, plain of, 17.

- Phylacteries, countless rules for the straps, &c., of, 472.
- Physician, Christ the, of souls, 522.

Pilate, palace of, in Jerusalem, 735, 786; cha.acter of, 756; trial of Jesus by, 758-761; Jesus again before, 764-768; endeavours to save Jesus from the cross, 770-772; public works of, for Jerusalem, 207; government of, 265.

Pilate's offences to the Jews, 506. Pilgrimage to Gerizim, 269.

- Pilgrimages, abuses during, 591. Pilgrims to Jerusalem, 156; approach of, towards Jerusalem, 145; depart-ure of, from Jerusalem, 158; journey of, to, 162, 163.
- Pius Scipio, proconsul of Syria, 196.

Places at feasts, order of taking, 621, 622

Plain of Esdraelon, people of, 118. Polycarp's martyrdom, 3.

Pompey and the Jews, 229; murder of, 22; triumph of, 229; takes Jerusalem, 229; notices of, 21, 22. Pool of Bethesda, Christ's meeting with the man healed at, 450.

Poor, the, and Christianity, 8; in Heathen antiquity, 9, in Jewish, 9. Possessed, cure of man, 384.

Possession by spirits, ideas of, in Christ's day, 884. Potter's Field, Judas and the, 775.

- Prayer, efficacy of united, 576; earnest, heard, parable to prove 603; fre-quency of, by Pharisees, 438; Jewish antiquity of, 408; special, for feasts, 567; superstitions concerning, 408;
- the Lord's, 438, 439. Preaching, Christ's, to be the sign, 484; differences between that of Christ and of Rabbis, 421, remarks on Christ's, 421. with rescriptions, some Jewish, 499.

- Priesthood, Jewish, decay of, 62; Jewish, 61; number of, 61,62; dignitaries of, 63; poor members of, 62.
- Priests, fears of the chief, as to the resurrection of Jesus, 791; genealogy of, 63; legal age for consecration, 63; consecration of, 64; dress of, 64; duties of, 65; marriage of, 65; priestly towns, 65; support of, 66.

Princes, Asmonean, friends of the, 187. Procurators of Roman provinces, 194-207.

Property, the disciples retained enough to provide for their daily wants, 473.

- Prophet, Jewish idea of a, 274. Prophets, Galilæan, 590; false, mis-leading the people, 583; decay of the, 231.
- Proselytes, foreign, in Jerusalem, 99; number of, 99.

Proverbs 565.

Proverbs 11187.72 Publican, toundin imprud

ple, 404 Publicans

greed a to, inter

ety, 402 of John Publicity

Publius

"Purifica i. 561;

Purificatio 639.

Purim, fe

Question Messiah Quiet hon ciples, 4 Quintilius 187; plu Temple, rusalem Quirinius, Quotation New, 108 mart Morth :" Rabbi, and ent profe title, 52; becomin Rabbinical prayer, 4 Rabbinical 176; wor life, 177. Rabbinical 52; in he

Rabbinism

to, 455. Rabbis, ac scholars, anxiety resurrect dread of on, for bigotry a Christ pr to true 1 tion of c

Proverbs, last chapters of, date of,

Proverbs and parables of the Jews,

Publican, making a, a disciple, as-tounding novelty of, 403; apparent imprudence of admitting a, as disci-ple, 404; derivation of word, 401. Publicans, at Capernaum many, 401; greed and tyranny of, 401; hatred to, intense, 402; outcasts from society, 402; and people receive sulogy of John with Joy, 464; good, 618. Publicity shunned by Jesus, 892, 546.

Publius Sulpicius Quirinius, gover-nor-general of Syria, 194. "Purification" in different religions, Purification, the feast of, 89-90; ii.

Purim, feast of, 166. (1. Ka., storm, 1. Le 1 stri fenses se sunt most de la ma Question raised, if Jesus were the Quiet home life of Jesus with His dis-

Quintilius Varus comes to Jerusalem, 187; plunders Jerusalem, 188; the Temple, 188; advances again on Je-rusalem, 189.

Quirinius; Legate in Syria, 194 Quotations from Old Testament in New, 108.

the survey and the first state of the Rabbi, ancient sermon of, 186; different professions of a, 168; meaning of title, 52; to follow a, 588; things un-Rabbinical custom to teach a form of prayer, 439. Rabbinical rules, strict observance of, Rabbinical schools as old as Jacob,

Rabbinism, Jesus a dangerous enemy

Rabbis, accepted money from their scholars, 473; activity of the, 396; anxiety of the, respecting Christ's resurrection, 804; anxiety of, and dread of Jesus, 448; Christ's attack on, for not keeping law, 586, 587; bigotry and fanaticism of the, 441;

Christ proclaims them a hindrance to true knowledge, 457; condemna-tion of conduct of, 487; custom of, 176; working of, in Jewish daily life, 177.

with right that was Roger . . .

52; in heaven, 53.

to, 455.

1 经资本 计图例记忆员

565.

127.

i. 561.

Messiah? 479.

ciples, 478.

639.

lem, 735, l of Jesus fore, 764esus from works of, vernment

3, 506. 591. approach 5; depart-

8; journey yria, 196. aking, 621, of, 118.

9; murder akes Jeru-, 22. 's meeting 450. ity. 8; in Jowish, 9.

eas of, in he, 775, , 576; earnve,603; fre-438; Jewish , for feasts, erning, 408;

e the sign n, that , of 21, remarks

h. 499. of, 62; Jew-2: dignitas of, 62. f, as to the genealogy dress of, iage of, 65 ort of, 66.

s of the, 187. vinces, 194-ined enough v wants, 473. 274. false, mis-; decay of

rusalem, 99;

with regard to offenders, 575; depu-tations of, sent to crush Christ, 588; difficulty of learning endless pro-cepts of, 527; disciples of, 588; dis-pute of Jesus with the, 582; hostile The lings of, 400; hostility of the, to Jesus, 637; demand a sign of Jesus, 637; in danger of losing authority, 478; indignation of, at Christ, 518; in-furiated; provoking Christ, to com-mit Himself, 486; insurrection of, in Jerusalem 438; laws of the 550; and Jerusalem, 493; laws of the, 580; and the common people, 212; manuers of the, 627; denounced by Jesus, 628; miracles of, 52; inordinate pride of, 53; slavery of nation to, 53; any may bo, 55; noted, of Christ's day, 158-159; offer to be disciples, 494; national preachers of the, 240; over national presenters of the, sto, oren-awed, 484; passages from, respect-ing the Messiah, 586; pedantry of, 727; persecuting spirit of the, 737, place of the, at feasts, 623; public addresses of, 380; questions of im-portance referred to, 488; reverence shown to 386; react to agrest desus shown to, 896; seek to arrest Jesus, 619; self-righteousness of, 884; ser mons of, 400; training of, 47; use of, as an order, 47; dignity of, 50; im portance of, 54; unpaid, 54. Rachel weeping for her children, 88.

Redemption-money, 561; of firstborn, 91; modern ceremony of, 91.

Reform, much needed amongst Jewish leaders, il. 441.

- Reformations, always begin with the obscure, 465; temporary, under John, 484
- Religion acted for gain, 438; comparison of Roman and Jewish, 227; in antiquity, 6-10.
- Renounce anything that hinders a godly life, 190.

- Restlessness of Jews, politically, in Christ's day, 43, 99. Resurrection, Christ appears to Mary after His, 795, 706; to Peter, 708; to the Two, on the road to Em-maus, 798-800; Jewish ideas respecting, 561, 562; opinions of Ewald re-specting the, 792; prophecy of by Jesus, 849, 350.
- Retaliation, doctrine of, repudiated, 431, 482,

Retreat of Antony from Media, 31.

Revenge, sanctioned by Oid Testament, 436; the idea of, cherished by Jew and heathen, 431. Richter, Jean Paul, on Jesus Christ, 1. Righteous, meaning of word amongst the Jews, 93.

6 ale Blie Stables elourenting and the produces the set bearing of Riot dreadful in Jerusalem, 506.

Risings in Galilee, under Athronges, Simon, &c., 188.

Rites and forms, Christ's vindication of the disuse of, by the disciples, 418; only necessary when religion was in its childhood, 426

Rivals, meaning of the word, 7.

Roman Emperor, omnipotence. of, 18; empire, at the birth of Christ, 18, 19; feeling of superiority and aversion to the conquered, 485; generals, corruptness of, 29; religion at the time of Christ, 20.

Romans, contempt of, to other nations, 7.

Rome, assimilating power of, 226; de-putation sent to, 204; friends of, 457; tribute of Judea to, 246; in Christ's day, 80; its size, 18, 19. Roofs, Eastern, 897.

Rousseau on Jesus Christ, 1. Rule, heathen overthrow of, ideas of Esdras concerning the, 237, 238. Ruler, the young, and Jesus, 646-648.

The const and presented and a standar

Sabbath, commencement of, 449; Jesus charged with violation of the Sabbath, for curing the man at the Pool of Bethesda, 450, David vio-lates, by eating holy bread, 454; du-ration of, 449; facts respecting Jew-ish observation of, 606: grand fidel-ity of Jews to, 454; Jesus cited be-fore the unable for descention of 401 fore tribunal for desecration of, 451; Jewish, 383, 886; maxims of Pharisees concerning, 450, miracle wrought on the, 605; observance, extraordinary strictness of, 448, 449; preparation for, 383; service in syn-agogue, 383; revelation respecting observance of, 449; rules concerning food, &c., 449; strict observance of, 450; the, a day of peace, joy. and refreshment, 455; violation of laws by Pharisees, 450.

Sabbath-day's journey, 450. Sabbath laws, Jesus places himself

- Sacrifices for empire and emperor, standing grievance; 48.
- Sadducees, 506; doctrines of the, 538, 539. 541.
- Salome (daughter of Herodias), dancing of, at the feast, 800 ; her re-
- Salome (mother of James-and John), was she related to the Virgin ? 826.

ites stable in itters. Salutations, 508, 509. Salvation of Israel, 457. Salvation of Israel, 457. Samaria, Christ's journey through, 579, 580, description of, 341, 842; re-built by Hered, 86. Samaritans, land of the, 225, parable of the good, 602, 603. Sarepta, Phenician village of, 461. Satan under the feet of Christ's scr-vants, 604; in New Testament, 809, temptations by, of Jesus, 309. Schleiermacher on the Virgin Mary. 88. Schools in Israel, 120-122; in Jerusalem, 170. Scribe, title of, explained, 170. Scribes, indignation of, 399; discomfiture of, 401. Scianus, fall of, 246; influence of, in Judea, 205. Semicha, laying on of hands, 182 Seneca spoke of the gods almost like a Christian, 484 Sermon on the Mount, 417, 418, scene of, 418. Servant, parable of the wicked, 577. Servants, various duties of, 132. Service, Jesus accused becruse of simplicity of teaching, 471 Seventy, Christ's instructions to the, 582; significance of the appointment of the, 582; success of mission of the, 604.

Shammai, type of Rabbi, 399. Shechem, description of valley of, 862, 863.

Sheep, shepherd's anxiety for lost, 574. HEREAR TIELL MAR WHO'LE Sheckel, the, 847, Shunem, village of, 461.

Sick, Sabbath rules concerning, 456. Sign, demand for, by authorities, 349, 543. Siloam, fall of tower in, 506.

Simeon, the aged, 92. and the the shi

Simon Boëthus, 538.

Simon the Cyrenian, compelled to bear the cross, 777. 13 " 5 " 5 "

Simon Maccabees, 48. Simon the Zealot, 416. Sin, belief in earthly punishments of, 605; the conception of, unknown in antiquity, 5; no idea of, in antiquity, 6. .

Sincerity, Christ's fundamental de-mand of, 424.

- Slanders by Rabbis, Christ's refuta-tion of, 481.
- Slaves, prisoners sold as, 30.
- Slavery, condemned by Christ, 8; in antiquity, 8.

Soldier spear, Soldiers ments. Sclomon the Me Solomon Son of A Sower, p 401. Spies, Cl Spiritual ily, 485 Star in t 107.

Stephen, Steward, 632.

Stoicism, Storm ca of Gali

Stranger, Rome,

Stranger meals, Suffering

true dis Superstit

&c., 142 Supper, p Synagogu

great, 5 383.

Synagogu 533; imp 130; op arrange worship of, 130;

Tabernac 584, 591; of feast Table, ma ous cere ing at. Tabor, Mo Talents, 1 lessons Tallith, th Talmud, f &c., rest 178. Tares, am Tax for te Teacher, Teaching, lutionar Temple,

Soldier pierces Christ's side with his spear, 788. Soldiers cast lots for Christ's gar-ments, 781.

Sciomon, Psaims of, 229; on advent of the Messiah, 234-230.

Solomon's porch, 611.

Son of Man, 57. Sower, parable of the, 490; explained, 401.

Spies, Christ's steps dogged by, 448. Spiritual Head, Christ, of a new family, 485.

- Star in the East; 101; legends of the, 107.
- Stephen, St., trial of, 451. Steward, parable of the unjust, 631,
- 632.
- Stoicism, creed of, 20.
- Storm calmed by Christ on the Lake of Galilee, 495.
- Stranger, position of, in first ages of Rome, 434.
- Strangers allowed to enter during meals, 468.
- Suffering, associated by Christ with-true discipleship, 423.
- Superstitions regarding the Temple, &c., 142.
- Supper, parable of the great, 623, 624.
- Synagogue in Capernaum, 459, the great, 50; Christ visits, 504; service, 388.
- Synagogues, closing of against Christ, 533; importance of, 129; erection of, 130; opening of, for services, 131; arrangement of the interior of, 131; worship in, 134–136; size and form of, 130; ruler of, office of, 132.
- a an an Transfer Cartain Tabernacles, feast of, 165, 578, 579, 583, 584, 591; great rejoicings on last day of feast of, 588.
- Table, manner of sitting at, 467; various ceremonies connected with eating at. 438.
- Tabor, Mount, 558.
- Talents, parable of the ten, 657, 658; lessons on the parable of the, 658. Tallith, the, 133. Talmud, first collection of traditions,
- &c., resulting in, 526; extracts from, 178.
- Tares, among wheat, parable of, 493. Tax for temple paid by Christ, 568. Teacher, reverence due to, 170.
- Teaching, Christ's, denounced as revolutionary, 528. Temple, Christ greater than, 454;

Christ teaching in, 584, 585; compar-ison of the body to, 584; court of women in, 592; desecration of the, women in, 592; desecration of the, 846; buyers and sellers, &c. expel-led from, 347; fight in, at feast of tabernacies, 688; gates of, 560, 561; heathen gifts to, 37; Herod, descrip-tion of, 66-68; Herod proposes to rebuild, 33; Herod's service at, 61-68; Jesus questioned respecting de-struction of the, 692, 693; signs of destruction of the, 702, 703; morning service, &c., 153; Jesus in, with the Rabbis, 159; defied by Samaritans, 568; plunder of treasury, 204; regu-lations for priests in the, 142; rend-ing of the veil of the, at Christ's death, 786-703; scene in the Temple on the arrival of Jesus, 665; buyers on the arrival of Jesus, 665; buyers and sellers turned out of, 666, depufation of authorities of the, come to Jesus, 669; second, inferiority of, to first, 61; tax towards treasury of the, 567, 568: the, on the day after the crucifixion of Jesus, 763; shekel of, 347.

- Temptation, incident to man, 306; of Christ, characteristics of, 807.
- Temptation to Christ to use His power for Himself, 489.
- Teruma, separation of, 175.
- Testimony of two men received, 594.
- Theatre, Herod's, in Jerusalem, 146.
- Theologians, Christ's change of con- duct toward, 523. Theology, the staple of conversation in Nazareth, 429. Theudas and others promised the peo- ple great miracles, 483.
- Thief, the penitent, on the cross, 782.
- Thieves, the two, are put to death, 787.
- Thomas, Christ shows, the marks of crucifixion, 805.
- Tiberias, made capital of Galilee, and fortified, 210.

Tiberius, reign of, 270, 271.

Time, Jewish mode of reckoning, 625,

Toil, exhausting, of Christ, 478.

Towers watch, for shepherds, 86.

- Trade, respect for, among Jews, 55. Traditions of more authority than Scriptures, 526, 527.

Traffic, in doves and sheep, 846.

- Training, early, of Christ by Mary and Joseph, 420, 421.
- Transfiguration, supposed scene of, 558; witnesses of, 558.

Travelling, restrictions on, 450.

Treacherous invitation to morning meal with Rabbi, 486.

PER AL MERTINE, through, J1, 862; re-5, parable

1. 199.0 1.30

of, 461. hrist's scr-ment, 809, , 309. rgin Mary.

in Jerusa-

1.111 170. 39; discom.

ence of, in ds, 182

almost like

418, stene

cked, 577.

becruse of

171 ons to the. ppointment mission of

399. valley of,

ty for lost,

1 10 K. 210 11 K. 12. 5223. 7.526

rning, 456.

horities, 349, 06. The Property in the first

mpelled to

1 " · · · · · But the state of

ishments of, unknown in in antiquity,

amental de-

ist's refuta-

30. Christ, 8; in

- Treasure hidden in field, parable of, 498; on earth not to be sought after, 440.
- Treasury of Temple, abuses with re-gard to, 528; the widow casts her mite into the, 687.
- Tribute, Pharisees question Jesus re-specting, 676; answer of Jesus to question of, 676-678.
- True purity and cleanliness, 486.
- Trustin God and Faith, 440, 441.
- Twelve, sent forth to preach, the, 507; the, ask Jesus to strengthen their faith, 636; self-denial of the, 641; left all to follow Jesus, 649.
- Tyre and Sidon, description of, 534; heathenism of, 465.

1 * * * 11 . * * # $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $ an an an the state of the state

- Unbelief of the Gadarenes, 498. Unclean spirit, Christ said to be pos-sessed with, 481.
- Uncleanness, purifying of, 172. Union of hostile factions of the nation against Jesus, 457.
- Universal religion, first proclamation of, 434; idea of, scouted by antiquity,
- Unleavened bread, feast of, 149, 150.

Veronica, legend of, 317. Vessels, burial of Tabernacle, 268, 269. Vineyard, parable of the, 650. Voice, a, heard from heaven by Jesus, 689, 690.

W

War, relation of Christ to, 8. Washing offeet, &c., Christ conformed to such forms as, 472; of hands. &c., 524, 525; of vessels, &c., 525, 526, Water, promise of living, 367, 368; re-strictions of uses of different kinds

ي او

- of, 173; wish for, 589, 593; walking on, 514, 515.
- Wealth, unjust uses of, 682.
- Wedding, parable of the, feast, 673, 674
- Well, Jacob's, at Gerizim, 863; woman at, 964.
- Widow, parable of the importunate, 641, 642.
- Wine, use of, among Jews, 382; Christ is offered, on the cross, 779.
- Withered hand, man with, healed by Jesus, 455.
- Woman, in antiquity, 9; dress of Jewish, 183.
- Women, those who followed Christ, 471; position of, in Israel, 116. Word of God, frequent use of expres-
- sion, 57.
- Words, explanation of, by figures, &d., 179.
- Work, excessive, of Christ, 511. World, centre of, believed to be Jerusalem, 11; ready for teachings of Jesus, 434.

A A A Y

Youth, precocity of, in Judea, 156; spring of unfading, 517.

Z

94 |

Zacchæus, the publican, 655, 656. Zacharias and Elisabeth, 66; at Temple, 70.

and the second sec

and a start of the second starter  $\chi^{(1)}$ ter man a start to start to start العليمية المحلي . \* مريكي بالتعلي في • مذه التهي هذ •

Zealots, title of, 199, 765. Zerubbabel, 46. Zion, 145, 146, 147.

6.

13.0 1

of hands. 525, 526, 7, 868; reent kinds alking on, feast, 673, 3; woman bortunate, 32; Christ healed by ed Christ, 116.

of expresgures, &c.,

511. to be Jeruachings of

idea, 156;

, 656. ; at Tem-

e 8. .es

 $\begin{array}{c} \mathcal{A}_{1}^{2} = \left\{ \begin{array}{c} \mathcal{B}_{1} \\ \mathcal{B}_{2} \end{array} \right\} & \begin{array}{c} \mathcal{A}_{2}^{2} \mathcal{A}_{2} \\ \mathcal{B}_{2}^{2} \mathcal{A}_{2}^{2} \mathcal{A}_{2}^{2} \end{array} \right\} & \begin{array}{c} \mathcal{A}_{2}^{2} \mathcal{A}_{2}^{2} \mathcal{A}_{2}^{2} \\ \mathcal{B}_{2}^{2} \mathcal{A}_{2}^{2} \mathcal{A}_{2}^{2} \mathcal{A}_{2}^{2} \end{array} & \begin{array}{c} \mathcal{A}_{2}^{2} \mathcal{A}_{2}^{2} \mathcal{A}_{2}^{2} \mathcal{A}_{2}^{2} \\ \mathcal{A}_{2}^{2} \mathcal{A}_{2}^{$

Another and the second s

And the second sec

r,

 $= \frac{1}{1 + \frac{1}{2}} \frac{1}{1 +$

