HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

SUCCESS OF LABOUR DISPUTES ACT.

On the Orders of the Day being called :

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Minister of Labour). Mr. Speaker, with your leave I would like to inform the House that the first experiment with the new Labour Bill has been highly satisfactory, the welcome news of this fact having just been received. As you are aware a strike in which about 1,700 men were interested and in which the collieries of Nova Scotia were also deeply interested was about to be declared at Springhill. An application for the appointment of a board of arbitration, required by the new law, had been made by the General Manager of the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company, Limited. The men were informed through the deputy minister of labour, Mr. King, that the law would apply and he told them what the consequences would be if the strike were declared.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What strike is the hon. gentleman speaking of ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Springhill. The men, I am pleased to say, publicly yielded and they have understood that if an investigation took place perhaps public opinion would not be with them. This morning we received a telegram from Mr. Hector McInnes, of Halifax. It reads as follows :

Halifax, Nova Scotia, April 8, 1907.

I have pleasure in advising you that all the men at Springhill collieries have returned to work and no question was raised on their return as to open or closed shop ; under the circumstances it will be unnecessary to take any further steps on the application for reference submitted by Cumberland Railway and Coal Company.

(Sgd.) HECTOR McINNES.

I cannot express too highly my sympathy with the men and the trades union, who have so quietly and so openly abided by the new law which was passed by this parliament.

Mr. J. HERRON, (Alberta). I am pleased that the hon Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux) has been able to give us such an encouraging report regarding the success of the new Labour Bill in the part of the country to which he has referred, but I would like to ask him for further information regarding the coal strike in the Crow's Nest Pass and in the west generally where they are mining coal. I have a telegram here from Mr. Sherman, President of the Division of the United Mine Workers of America, located in the Crow's Nest Pass :

Fernie, British Columbia, April 6, 1907.

John Herron, M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Government has refused to enforce industrial Disputes Act against Taber Coal Companies who locked out men on April 2. As result referendum vote now being taken ; may result immediate strike at all mines this district.

(Sgd.) F. H. SHERMAN.

I wish to impress upon the minister the great importance of the government taking immediate action and of doing everything possible to avert trouble in the west as he states that he has been successful in doing in the east. Owing to the present conditions in that country we would look for a worse situation than that which occurred last year if this threatened strike should take place ; in fact it has already to some extent taken place as we are informed that a lockout has occurred. I would judge from the telegram received that all the mines in our locality would be affected, and it would make the situation much more serious than it was last summer. I would like to hear an explanation from the minister.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am glad my hon. friend (Mr. Herron) has called attention to this matter. I received a telegram yesterday from Mr. Sherman, and also many telegrams from the owners of the mine. There seems to be a misapprehension as to the enforcement of the law. Mr. Sherman seems to be under the impression that it is the duty of the government to take proceedings against those who declared a lockout. We have reminded Mr. Sherman that the remedy was in his own hands, and that if the law was being violated, it was open to any individual concerned to go before a justice of the peace and to avail himself of the procedure provided by the Criminal Code. I expect that during the day I will be able to give further, and I hope more encouraging news.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has either party made the necessary application to bring the pending dispute under the Act.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The deputy minister has been informed that an application has been sent from a place called Taber, but it has not yet reached the department.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would not be prepared to acquiesce in what the minister says about the enforcement of the statute. If this parliament passes a law which provides that no strike or lockout shall take place under certain conditions, and that statute is deliberately violated by one party or the other, it does not seem to me that the government can say to one of the parties : You can violate this law as much as you please unless the other party takes the responsibility of proceeding to punish you. If that is the proper way to look at it, I doubt very much whether the statute will be effective.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I should think it would be the same as in the case of any other statutory offence where a penalty is provided. If the law is violated, it is the duty of any person who is aggrieved to take action. That is specially provided for in cases where in the Criminal Code, a distinction is made between 'malum in se' and 'malum prohibitum.' We have advised the men in the west that if a lockout has been declared by the company without an application being made to the department, there is a penalty provided, and it is open to them to take action against the company. This strike occurs at a great distance from Ottawa and the details are not yet in the possession of the department.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is necessary to have the facts definitely ascertained before one can say very much about it, but I absolutely dissent from the proposition which the minister has laid down as to the enforcement of the law. If this statute was passed for any purpose at all it was passed in the general interest of the public, and not in the interest of those who lockout or those who strike. To say, notwithstanding this, that the general interests of the public may suffer even to the last extremity, that people shall suffer for lack of coal, and that the government shall leave it to either one party or the other to enforce the law, seems to me to be a complete departure from the policy which the Minister of Labour laid down when he introduced this Bill. If there was any basis at all for this law, it was, that, when the public interest demanded it, the government should step in to enforce the law if either party to the dispute did not enforce it. I protest against any policy which declares that the government should not enforce this law in the public interest, whether that policy be followed by this government or any other government.

Mr. SPROULE. And especially so in view of the fact that we have established a Department of Labour whose duty it should be to enforce such a law. You might as well say, when we pass an Inland Revenue law for the protection of the revenue, that it is not the duty of the Department of the Inland Revenue to enforce it, as to say that it is not the duty of the Labour Department to enforce this law.

GOLD AND SILVER MARKING ACT.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I would move that order No. 52 for the second reading of Bill (No. 137), from the Senate, to amend the Gold and Silver Marking Act, be called, so that the Bill may be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. This is a Bill to amend the Act of last session, which was of a very technical character, and in order that the parties may be heard, it should be referred to the committee.

Motion to call the order agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Macpherson the Bill was read the second time and referred to the Select Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

YUKON COUNCIL GRANT—AUDIT.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). In the discussion in committee on the Yukon Amendment Bill last Wednesday the question was raised as to whether the expenditures of the grants to the local council of the Yukon were audited by the Auditor General. The impression seemed to have been that they were not so audited, and that the Auditor General's Report did not contain the items of the expenditure. That impression resulted from the fact that on page L—42 of the Auditor General's Report, on which the bulk sums appear, no reference is made to the part of the report in which the details of the expenditure are shown. The expenditure of the grant is audited here in the same manner as are all other expenditures of moneys appropriated by parliament. On pages L—21 to L—131 of the Auditor General's Report there are given the items of the revenue of the local council, including the grants of $225,000 from the Dominion, and complete details of the expenditures.

RETIREMENT OF LORD AYLMER.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to ask for details in connection with the retirement of Lord Aylmer, and the appointment of his successor.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I regret that the hon. gentleman's question comes in the absence of the Minister of Militia, who of course has a personal acquaintance with the facts which I have not. I can only give the facts as they appear on the record. Lord Aylmer, who formerly held the position of adjutant general and was in receipt of a salary of $3,200, on November 1, 1904, as the record shows, was appointed to the position of inspector general at a salary of $6,000. The order in council specified that the appointment was only until December 31, 1906. The object, as it appears to have been understood, was that he should have that period of service which would entitle him to retire on his full pension, and the order in council making this arrangement was initialled by Lord Aylmer, which, in the absence of personal information, I would assume to mean that he was consulted with and that the matter was arranged to his satisfaction. Subsequently his time of service was extended, not by special order in council, but he held the office for a certain time until the department was ready to appoint a successor. Lieut.-Colonel Vidal was appointed his successor, and Lord Aylmer retired with the rank of Major General and a pension of $4,200 per annum. These are the facts shown by the records of the department and that is all the information I can give my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the age of Lord Aylmer and Colonel Vidal respectively?

Mr. FIELDING. The papers do not furnish the age, but my colleague tells me that Lord Aylmer is sixty-five and Colonel Vidal sixty-three years of age.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the country be expected to superannuate Colonel Vidal in another year?

Mr. FIELDING. Sufficient to the day is the good thereof.

Mr. BENNETT. The evil.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to point out to the Minister of Finance that the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), before leaving informed me that there would be no objection to passing notices of motion numbers 20 and 21. This is perhaps a convenient time to do it.

Mr. FIELDING. There would be no objection.

1. Is John Patrie Molloy, V.S,. of the town of Morris, province of Manitoba, still in the employment of the government as veterinary inspector ? If not, when did he resign ?

2. How much was paid him during the years 1905 and 1906 ?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). In answer to question 3, Mr. Stratton resigned the 9th of March, 1905. Miss Barbara Stratton is now postmistress at Stonewall.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE—by Mr. Talbot—asked :

1. What measures have been taken by the Postmaster General for the spread of the French language as the requirements of the department, of business and of the population demand ?

2. Will the Postmaster General have postage stamps issued this year in French and in English ?

3. Will the post office stamps that bear the name of the office, the date of the arrival or of the sending off of letters, &c., be printed in French as well as in English, as the laws of the Dominion require ?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) :

1. All necessary measures have been provided for in the Post Office Department to meet the requirements of the public such as the printing in both languages of :

All general and special circulars of instructions to postmasters ;
Annual Official Postal Guide ;
Supplements to Postal Guide ;
Postmaster General's Report.
Postal Notes ;
Postal Note forms and books ;

Postal Note instructions to postmasters ;
Post Office Savings Bank cheques and acknowledgments of deposit ;
Post Office Savings Bank instructions to postmasters ;
Post Office Savings Bank forms and books ;
Forms of Money Order ;
Forms of Money Order advice ;
Instructions to Money Order Offices ;
Money Order forms and books ;
Notices of departure and arrival of mails, &c. The correspondence of the department is also conducted in French whenever necessary.

2. The postage stamps, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, bear all the information required by the public to prevent any possible mistake. The stamp itself with the figure thereon indicating the value is sufficient for all purposes.

The size of the postage stamp, especially the space available for lettering, is very limited. Besides, the present inscription on postage stamps is so familiar, and therefore so easily understood by all elements of the Canadian population, that it would be unnecessary to make the suggested change.

To engrave and print a new series in order to admit of a dual inscription might, in addition to the extra expense, involve a radical change in the existing contract. Therefore no change is contemplated in the system which has been in force during the last 50 years.

3. The post office stamps that bear the name of the office, the date of the arrival or of the sending off of letters, &c., are, for all practical purposes, printed in both languages. The name of the post office can not vary, the date is expressed in numerals. As regards the name of the month, the abbreviation standing for them are almost identical. No change is contemplated.

2. What are his duties ?
3. What salary does he receive ?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs) :

1. William F. Wilson is an officer of Customs.
2. His duties are to aid in discovering and in preventing frauds on the Customs revenue.

STATISTICAL YEAR-BOOK.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE—by Mr. Talbot—asked :

1. Is the Statistical Year-book of Canada translated into French ?
2. When will the translated edition be distributed ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). The translation was completed on the 12th February, and the copy sent at once to the Printing Bureau. On the 30th of March last the last corrected proofs went in, and the book will be ready for distribution shortly.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE—by Mr. Talbot—asked :

1. Has the Minister of Railways taken any steps to have the rights of the French language better respected on the government railways ?
2. Will time tables in French be distributed on the Intercolonial ?
3. What steps have been taken for the use of the French language on the Intercolonial Railway, in accordance with the requirements of business and of the people ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Instructions have been given for the printing of time tables in the French language to be placed in all the Intercolonial Railway stations in the province of Quebec. The question whether any further printing beyond what is now done is needed in order to meet the convenience of the people of that province is under consideration ; and, if needed, additional French documents will be printed.

DOMINION NOTES.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE—by Mr. Talbot—asked :

1. Does the government purpose conforming with the wishes of an important portion of the population by having the Dominion notes printed in the two official languages of the country ?

2. Does the government intend to have the money of the country struck in English and in French ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The forms of the notes and coins of the Dominion of Canada, so far as language is concerned, are the same as they have been from the beginning of confederation. The government has no reason to believe that they have caused any disadvantage to any class of the Canadian people. Therefore, there is no present intention of changing them.

ST. ANN'S ISLAND LEASE.

Mr. CLEMENTS—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. Who is the lessee of St. Ann's island, in the district of St. Clair ?

2. Was there a written lease between the government and the lessee ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

4. Copy of lease herewith.

POLLUTION OF RIVER ST. JOHN.

Mr. WILMOT asked :

1. Is the government aware that the city of Fredericton, New Brunswick, has recently established a sewerage system, no provisions being made to prevent the raw sewerage from entering the River St. John, notwithstanding protests being made by the Provincial Board of Health, and of the people residing along the river, for a distance of thirty miles below the city ?

2. If it is shown that in thus polluting the river, the fishing interests will be injuriously affected and human life endangered, will the Dominion authorities interefere and insist upon the Fredericton municipality sterilizing the sewage, or otherwise secure the people from danger and loss ?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) :

1. No representations have been made to the government on the subject.

2. Should circumstances arise such as are described in the question, the matter would appear to be of a local nature and would no doubt engage the attention of the provincial authorities.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Harbours and rivers, Nova Scotia—Annapolis—repairs to Queen's wharf, $1,300.

Mr. AMES. How much more is required to complete this work ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Acting Minister of Public Works). This vote will complete it.

Mr. AMES. Is it being done by day's work ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. AMES. Last year a stricture was made on the way the work was being done, as there appeared to be an inspector, a superintendent and a walking boss for eleven men. The government had no explanation. Was that looked up afterwards ?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that that is not the case. I am told that there is just one superintendent.

Mr. AMES. What is his name ?

Mr. FISHER. Whitman.

Mr. AMES. The point I was raising was that F. C. Whitman is reported as being an inspector. Now is James Parks superintendent, and is Carmen Odell the walking boss, and are those three men all engaged in superintending the work ?

Mr. PICKUP. Whitman was the commissioner and Parks was the foreman, Odell was a common labourer on the work the same as any other man.

Mr. FISHER. There is only one superintendent to look after the work generally. On very large works there are sometimes more than one superintendent. I do not know whether he is called a superintendent or an inspector, I think they are the same person. Sometimes he is called an inspector and sometimes a superintendent.

Mr. PICKUP. As I have just stated, there is a foreman and also commissioner.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the salary allowed for an inspector or a superintendent ?

Mr. FISHER. Generally $3 a day. There is a foreman of the carpenters who generally gets a little more than ordinary carpenters, probably half a dollar more. Ordinary carpenters get $1.50 or $1.75, and the foremen $2.50.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand then that there are two inspectors, that is men who are not labourers ? As I understand, there is one man who assembles the materials, and in addition there is an inspector of construction.

Mr. FISHER. The man who does that is called by the department the inspector. I am informed that sometimes the Auditor General calls him the superintendent. In the department the man who has general charge of the work, who buys the material and authorizes the employment of men, is called the inspector. There is only one such man.

Mr. PICKUP. That is a correct statement of the facts.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that there is a man who purchases the raw material for the work, and then another man who superintends it ?

Mr. FISHER. The information I have from the department is that there is an inspector appointed by the department who looks after the construction of the work. He probably has a foreman or boss carpenter who actually works with his hands and directs the other men on the work. Then there is an inspector who is sometimes called a superintendent by the Auditor General.

Mr. BLAIN. The information I have is that F. C. Whitman is inspector of the work, James Parks is the superintendent, and Carmen Odell the walking boss.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know what the hon. member means by saying that James Parks is the superintendent. There is no such information in the department. My officers do not know the name at all. Of course, if desired I could lay on the table to-morrow the names of all the employees on that work.

Mr. MARSHALL. About what salary do these foremen receive each ?

Mr. FISHER. Inspectors in charge of the work are generally paid $2.50 or $3, according to the importance of the work.

Mr. MARSHALL. In some items he is called a foreman, would that be an inspector ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know that he is ever called a foreman. The inspector is not supposed to work with his hands, but a foreman actually works with his hands.

Mr. MARSHALL. I suppose an inspector then is overseer of the work?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. MARSHALL. Suppose a work begins in April and lasts until November, are they paid for the year, or are they paid for actual days work done?

Mr. FISHER. They are usually paid for the actual days they work.

Mr. MARSHALL. Are inspectors or foremen on public works or harbours paid for the whole year ?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed they are not.

Baddeck wharf, $5,600.

Mr. AMES. There were three sites suggested, were there not ? Which of the three was selected ?

Mr. FISHER. There were three sites offered. The Campbell property acquired by Alexander Macdonald in 1904 ; reduced price, $2,300. Then there was the Macdonald property, $5,500 ; and the Park property, the original price of which was $7,500.

Mr. AMES. What was paid for the property that was purchased?

Mr. FISHER. $3,300.

Mr. BENNETT. The Auditor General B—174, says only $3,000 was paid.

Mr. FISHER. I suppose it was got a little cheaper by bargaining. The offer was $3,300.

Mr. FISHER.

Bay St. Lawrence boat harbour, $10,000.

Mr. AMES. Will the minister tell us whethere this expenditure at Bay St. Lawrence will finish this work?

Mr. FISHER. No, the estimated cost is $20,000; $5,500 was voted in the year just closed and we are now voting $10,000, so that $5,500 is a revote. There will be $15,500 expended on it during the coming year.

Mr. AMES. Is it expected that when this money is expended the work will be fully and finally completed and is the work of a permanent character?

Mr. FISHER. $20,000 will have to be expended from now on. I understand this is an ordinary wharf at the extreme north end of Cape Breton island.

Mr. AMES. The last work that was done at that point was all washed away by the sea. Is it expected that this work will be permanent?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, it is hoped so.

Big Lorraine harbour—dredging entrance channel, $3,600.

Mr. FISHER. This is a revote also, no work has been done, but it is hoped this season to do some.

Mr. BERGERON. Which county is it in?

Mr. FISHER. Cape Breton south.

Mr. AMES. I would like to know how it is that this money is revoted year after year. Is it the intention of the government to proceed with this work this year?

Mr. FISHER. We have not been able to get dredges.

Mr. AMES. Will it be undertaken just before the next election?

Mr. FISHER. That will depend altogether on whether we can get dredges.

Mr. AMES. It would seem as if the work were not very necessary if it can be postponed from year to year.

Mr. FISHER. It would not have been put in if it were not thought necessary.

Mr. AMES. Here is a harbour that is two miles from the excellent harbour of Louisburg and which can only be used for a few fishing boats. When the government ask for money year after year to spend on this same work it would seem that the government were not very positive that this expenditure was of any great value. Is it intended to really do the work this year?

Mr. FISHER. If we can get any dredges this year.

Charlo's cove—breakwater, $14,200.

Mr. FISHER. This is under contract, I am told, and we now hope to carry it on.

The reason it was not proceeded with was that the contract was not arranged for.

Mr. BLAIN. How much was expended last year?

Mr. FISHER. Nothing. The vote was taken very late in the season as my hon. friends know and nothing could be arranged for for fall work. The contract is now let in order that the work may be proceeded with early this spring.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the total cost?

Mr. FISHER. $14,200. The amount of the contract is $12,875.

Mr. BLAIN. What county is this in?

Mr. FISHER. Guysborough. Mr. Hugh Macdonald, North Sydney, is the contractor.

Church point—extension of groyne and repairs to wharf, $2,000.

Mr. AMES. I think the government have had very difficult work at Church Point if one can judge from the reports. In 1901-2. the work was rebuilt, in 1902-3, 134 feet of it had to be rebuilt; in 1903-4, the reconstruction of the wharf wall was necessary and in 1905-6 it was necessary to spend $2,000 in rebuilding the wharf wall. I would like to know if this is going to continue year after year.

Mr. FISHER. Unfortunately wharfs are very frequently damaged by storms and the undermining of the sea. A system was adopted years ago of building a good many of these wharfs in a way that the engineer does not like to continue, which resulted in the construction of wharfs of what I might call a temporary character. The department is now recommending very much more complete and permanent structures, but in the earlier days these wharfs were frequently constructed in a way that has involved very heavy repairs. That was one of the reasons why the votes this year and in future years will call for larger sums.

Mr. FOWLER. I think it would be well if the minister would explain to us the character of this temporary work and the character of the permanent work. It is very important to know if we have to build these wharfs year after year. There has been a great deal of money wasted at Church Point and we would like to have some information from the minister with respect to the difference between the temporary and permanent character of these works.

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. gentleman will be good enough to look up the report for the year, page 166, he will find a full description of this work. Works of a temporary character were built with native timber and not with concrete. Lately we have been using creosoted timber and concrete on top.

Mr. FOWLER. Are you importing the timber?

Mr. FISHER. We have had to import creosoted timber in the past. There is a question before the department of establishing a creosoted plant, but it has not yet been determined upon. It involves a very heavy investment, but if we are going to require a large quantity of creosoted timber there is no doubt it will pay but still the department has not yet arrived at a decision upon that point. Personally, I would be in favour of it but as acting minister I do not feel justified in starting a new departure of that kind.

Mr. FOWLER. I think it is a very important matter and that it should be taken up by the department. It perhaps may not be a proper thing for the department itself to establish that plant, but it might adopt the plan that the minister has adopted in the Department of Agriculture and give a certain bonus to any person who will establish a plant of that kind. I think it is a matter that certainly should be considered. If our native timber is creosoted it will last about as well as imported timber. In addition to which you will provide a home market for your own timber.

Mr. FISHER. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. AMES. Is the Church Point work to be done by days's work?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. AMES. Is it proposed to finally complete it this year?

Mr. FISHER. We will complete whatever repairs are necessary now. I would not like to say what may be necessary next year because it depends upon the storms, &c.

Mr. AMES. It would seem as if this history of building up and taking down should be closed.

Cow bay (Port Morien)—Repairs to breakwater, $10,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is the continuation of a work that was commenced some years ago.

Mr. AMES. On this work $200,000 has been expended altogether, and $60,000 of that within the last four years. It is a large work to keep on doing by day's work from year to year; is it not possible to have a careful estimate made, tenders called for and a contract given to complete the work? I do not think we are getting satisfactory results from the present system.

Mr. FISHER. For repairs of this kind I do not believe any estimate could be made or that any one would care to take it as a contract.

Mr. JOHNSTON. This is a work of very great importance to the community. The work done for the past four or five years is on repairing the existing breakwater. Some twelve years ago about 250 feet of this breakwater was swept into the ocean and what remained was considerably damaged. For the past two years the department has been repairing the existing breakwater and making it somewhat of a permanent character in cement and stone. The 250 feet which was destroyed has not been reconstructed, and it is necessary that it should be in order to make the harbour a proper one. I would suggest that when the present repairs to the part of the pier remaining are completed, the work of constructing the new portion should be done by tender and contract. I would impress on the minister that this is a very important matter, and I hope he will see his way clear at an early date to proceed with the work of reconstructing the portion of the pier destroyed. That, in my judgment, should be done by tender and contract.

Mr. AMES. The minister stated last year the total estimated cost of this work was $200,000. How much of that is for repairs and how much for new work ?

Mr. FISHER. That estimate was for the whole of the new work, should it be carried out.

Mr. AMES. Is it not possible that this new work should be done by tender and contract?

Mr. FISHER. There will be no trouble about that.

Mr. AMES. Is it the intention of the government to have the new work done by contract?

Mr. FISHER. This vote is for repairs simply.

Mr. AMES. This $10,000 is to be used entirely for repairs?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, the vote says 'repairs to breakwater.'

Culloden breakwater, $6,500.

Mr. GANONG. In what county is this?

Mr. FISHER. Digby.

Mr. GANONG. When was the first vote made for this work?

Mr FISHER. The arrangement for the contract was made last year and if a vote had been taken earlier it is probable that a contract would have been let before that.

Mr. GANONG. Is the property owned by the government?

Mr. FISHER. It is a breakwater out in the sea, and we control all water within three miles of our shores.

Mr. GANONG. Do we own the landing to the breakwater?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. GANONG. What is the estimated cost of the total work?

Mr. FISHER. $6,500. The contract is let for $5,850 and the superintendence and contingencies are estimated at $650.

Mr. GANONG. What population is there at Culloden?

Mr. FISHER. There is a statement here that this is situated seven miles north of Digby town and that a number of families partly engaged in farming and partly in fishing are resident there; this is to give protection to their fishing boats.

Mr. GANONG. What protection are you giving to the farmers?

Mr. FISHER. We help them in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. GANONG. According to 'Hansard' the minister stated formerly that this would cost $20,000.

Mr. FISHER. I think that must be a mistake. There is a statement here which calls attention to the fact that the people have subscribed $2.000 in labour and $700 in timber towards this work.

Mr. GANONG. The $20,000 in 'Hansard' may be a misprint for $2,000.

Digby harbour—improvements, including repairs to pier, $2,000.

Mr. FOWLER. I want some explanation of this.

Mr. FISHER. This is for repairs to the old wharf.

Mr. FOWLER. In 1906-7 $12,000 was voted.

Mr. FISHER. $10,000 is spent and $2,000 revoted.

Mr. FOWLER. Was that $10,000 to carry out the contract that was made between the member for Digby (Mr. Copp) and the town?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister will remember that contract?

Mr. FISHER. I do not. I remember some talk about it.

Mr. FOWLER. The member for Digby was to receive $5,000 if he got Digby made a winter port.

Mr. FISHER. I have not charged my memory with it.

Mr. FOWLER. The member for Digby is not here.

Mr. COPP. I am here.

Mr. FOWLER. The member for Digby might give us an explanation as to that contract which was in writing between himself and the municipality of the town of Digby, whereby he was to render his eminent services to procure from the government a very large grant for Digby and in return he was to receive $5,000. I believe he got the $500 on account. Is that $10,000 part of the grant he was to get from the government? I would like to know whether he received any more of the amount?

Mr. COPP. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the $10,000 voted last year has not been expended as yet. I am in hopes that it will be expended and that we will some day have a new peir at Digby. I can further assure the hon. gentleman that it has nothing to do with any contract I may have had with the town council in reference to any pay I may have received from them. I have never received any pay out of any moneys voted by the Dominion government with respect to the Digby pier or in any other way. This $2,000 now voted is simply an annual grant that has been going on for years. Some years when it is found necessary it is expended and some years it is not. I think last year only about $300 was spent, but this vote is put in every year and stands there so that if anything happens they will have it to fall back on and if nothing happens it is not expended. I never need ask for it.

Mr. FOWLER. I did not say that the hon. gentleman received any portion of the government grant. I want to know whether the $10,000 voted last year was a carrying out of the contract made between him and the town.

Mr. COPP. I know nothing about it.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman knows nothing about it? Does he mean he does not know anything about such a contract being in existence, because we had the papers here a year ago, and there was $500 voted by the town for the hon. gentleman, as I understand.

Mr. BENNETT. $5,000, was it not?

Mr. FOWLER. The agreement was for $5,000, but he received $500 on account.

Mr. COPP. I assume the reference is to a matter which was brought up by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) some few years ago. I was only too anxious that the hon. gentleman should have gone on and had an investigation. However, he did not see proper to take that course. There is nothing in the transaction between the council and myself of which I am ashamed. I had no agreement with the council, but what took place between us had nothing to do with the moneys voted by the government then or now, or in the future. The $10,000, I believe, was put in by the Minister of Public Works himself. I had nothing to do with it; I did not ask him for it; and, in fact, I might say that I was urging something in another direction. But the pier is an interprovincial pier, and one which the members for St. John are as much interested in as I am. We want a new pier; we must have one. Whether it shall be provided for by the government or by the steamship owners is a question that has not been decided on as yet.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the hon. gentleman say that there was not a contract entered into between himself and the municipality, whereby he was to receive a certain sum of money from the municipality, provided he got a grant from the government? If he says so, that ends it.

Mr. COPP. The hon. gentleman does say so. The agreement had nothing to do with the government whatever; the agreement between the council and myself had nothing to do with the Dominion government or the municipality of Digby. It was an agreement between the town council—

Mr. FOWLER. For what purpose?

Mr. COPP. To induce a company to undertake harbour improvements at Digby.

Mr. FOWLER. Will he say that the agreement in terms specified a company?

Mr. COPP. I almost forget what the agreement did specify, but that was the intention.

Mr. FISHER. The Digby pier was constructed many years ago, largely for the trade between Digby and St. John and also United States ports, and it has been getting into bad repair. We have had to expend public money on it from time to time. I am informed it is in even worse repair than usual, and the probability is that some very considerable works will have to be undertaken there, whether by the government, the steamship companies or the town of Digby, is a matter for future decision. The expenditure here indicated is a revote of part of the $12,000 voted last year, some of which has been expended.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not want the minister to think I am condemning the vote; I think it is very necessary. I know the wharf there; it is a very long pier, rendered necessary by the depth of water there, and Digby is an important point, and no doubt the expenditure is necessary. I was simply trying to ascertain whether it had anything to do with the contract we heard of some time ago.

Mr. BENNETT. In reference to this bargain and contract between the member for Digby and the town council, it is quite true that I brought it up, and I do not regret doing so. I simply brought it up to show the people of Canada an illustration of how business is conducted in this country.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Does the hon. member think it is relevant to this vote? It has been denied by the hon. member for Digby that there is any connection between the two. This is a vote for repairs to the pier; the other is an altogether different question.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman has not denied that there was an agreement. I will put it another way.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think you can put it on this vote.

Mr. BENNETT. In the event of this grant being made for Digby this year, does the minister think that it will be beneficial to the municipality that the municipality should enter into a contract with any member of parliament to use his efforts to induce the government to make a grant, or does he think it would be to the interest of the country that a member of parliament should place himself in the position of a suppliant at the door of the department urging them to make a grant? An investigation has been conducted in the Public Accounts Committee as to the affairs of the Collingwood Dry Dock Company. From the papers produced there it is quite plain that the member for North Simcoe (Mr. L. G. McCarthy) is promoting the interests of that company for the purpose of gaining a subvention of $300,000. Will it be to the interest of that company to still engage the services of the law firm of which the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. L. G. McCarthy) is a member, in order that the company may secure a continuance of that grant?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think the hon. gentleman should discuss another item, which will come up later, on this item. I am not going to express an opinion on a supposititous case. When there is a case in concrete form before the House I will certainly be ready, as a minister, to express an opinion, but not to express an opinion on a supposititous case, and I am not going to express an opinion on another case under this vote. I do not think he should discuss the Collingwood dry dock under this item.

Mr. BENNETT. I am discussing the Digby grant.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: In committee we can only discuss what is referred to us, and this refers to the Digby vote.

Mr. FOWLER.

Mr. BENNETT. This will be particularly well ventilated on the public platform.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order. I think any member is quite within his rights, in connection with the harbour improvements and repairs——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. At Digby.

Mr. SPROULE. On harbour improvements and repairs at Digby, he is quite within his province and his rights in discussing it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. But not at Collingwood.

Mr. SPROULLE. But at Digby.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. member was prevented from discussing this question because he had been referring to something that occurred in the past. The member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) was quite within his rights in discussing anything in connection with that harbour.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We are in committee on certain items.

Mr. BENNETT. I ask the minister whether it will be to the advantage of the town of Digby to employ that hon. member, or some other hon. member from that province or another province, to fee and pay the member for Simcoe? He will not be making any contract with the government at all, there will be no violation of the Independence of Parliament Act. It may be a question of public ethics whether a municipality seeking a grant from the government should think it necessary to go to a member of parliament and ask his assistance. So far as I am concerned, I will give the public every opportunity of learning the facts, which are admitted, that the people of Digby thought that it would be to their interest as a municipality in asking a grant to fee the member a very substantial and handsome sum of money in order that the claim might progress through the department. If the minister thinks that is right, it may be well for other municipalities to know it, so that they can act accordingly. We have the Digby case right under the vote.

Mr. FISHER. No, it is not.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it not a Digby vote?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, but my hon. friend for Digby (Mr. Copp) has said that there is no such contract, and the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has to accept his statement.

Mr. FOWLER. He did not say that.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, he said that any arrangements which he entered into with the Digby town council had no reference to the government of the day. That being the case, the argument of the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) does not apply.

Mr. FOWLER. As a matter of fact the contract that was entered into between my hon. friend and the town of Digby did not confine its operation to the company at all, and the natural inference would be——

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend has made the statement and the hon. member has to accept it.

Mr. FOWLER. I quite understand that, but I am pointing out how the layman outside, who is not bound to accept any statement made in this House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has to accept the statement and that must be the end of the matter for the present. There is another way of bringing it up if he wishes.

Mr. FOWLER. I am not disputing the ruling of the chair in the slightest, but I am saying that while I accept the statement as absolutely true, I still have the right to point out how a person who is not bound by parliamentary rule looks at it. It seems to me that that position is unassailable. That being the case and the contract being silent as to where this money is to be got, the natural inference to the lay mind would be that, as the hon. gentleman representing that district in this House is a supporter of the government, he was going to get the money from the Dominion treasury.

Mr. FISHER. Honi soit qui mal y pense.

Mr. FOWLER. That is very true but at the same time——

Mr. FISHER. You do not dispute it?

Mr. BERGERON. But there was a question of woman in that case.

Mr. FOWLER. Since the hon. gentleman has said that it has nothing to do with the Dominion government, I am bound to accept his statement and do so most cheerfully.

Eskasoni wharf, Nova Scotia, $1,000.

Mr. AMES. What is the population of the town?

Mr. FISHER. It includes the village of Eskasoni. The wharf is used by a large number of people in the back part of the country, who come down and use it for fishing operations in the fishing season.

Mr. AMES. Are the inhabitants mostly Indians?

Mr. FISHER. There is an Indian settlement there who do a good deal of fishing.

Mr. AMES. From whom was the land purchased?

Mr. FISHER. The site was purchased from Mr. E. T. Bowen for $1. That is to say the approach to it.

Mr. AMES. Is Mr. Bowen a storekeeper there?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know.

Mr. AMES. Is the wharf of service to anybody but him?

Mr. FISHER. It is of service to a large settlement, comprising a number of Indians and about a hundred white men.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Is there a collector of customs there?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know.

Mr. BERGERON. Are you going to build a post office there?

Mr. FISHER. Not at present.

Mr. AMES. How many tenders were there?

Mr. FISHER. Six in answer to public advertisement. The lowest $2,875; the highest $3,700. The lowest was accepted.

Mr. AMES. Where does Mr. T. D. Morrison, the contractor, live?

Mr. FISHER. At Descouse.

Mr. AMES. I wish in this case to congratulate the government. Here is an expenditure of $3,000 all told, yet it has been thought advisable to call for tenders and give a definite contract for the work and the work is to be done in one season. This should be applied in many cases which are now done by days work, but the minister has always contended that small contracts could not be carried out except by days work. Well, here is proof to the contrary. This work will soon all be completed and that will be the last we shall hear of the euphonious name of Eskasoni.

Mr. FISHER. We always call for tenders in the case of a work which is specific and can be measured in advance.

Mr. PERLEY. Does the government own the land?

Mr. FISHER. This is an enlargement of a wharf.

Mr. PERLEY. Is it the policy of the government to own the land on which wharfs are built?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. PERLEY. In this county there have been public works built on land which the government did not own. There is one particularly at Gunning cove, a short distance away, about which I asked a question this session. On the 11th February I got an answer that there was no public road leading to the wharf at Gunning cove, but it was expected that arrangements would be made to secure a road from the municipal authorities. There are one or two other cases of the same kind in this county, where the government has built public works on private land to which there is no public access.

Mr. FISHER. In years gone by that was done but not in the last five or six years.

Mr. PERLEY. This did not happen so long ago. A wharf was built at Gunning cove, in John Doane's backyard, and that wharf was inaccessible from the shore except by traversing his private property.

Mr. FISHER. When was it built ?

Mr. PERLEY. I do not know when it was commenced ?

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend it was built many years ago. I remember the instance and I understood that the municipality agreed to provide access when the wharf was built. For some reason or other they did not carry out that agreement, and the condition arose which my hon. friend has described.

Mr. PERLEY. I am informed that during the past year the municipality was asked to arrange with Mr. Doane to open up a road to this wharf, but John Doane wanted $500 before he would allow the public access to the wharf. When MacKenzie and Mann wished to land supplies there for their railway, they were allowed access to the wharf provided they paid John Doane for the privilege of crossing his land and any damages caused thereby. This is in the county of Shelburne and Queen's N.S. There are one or two similar cases in the same county which I do not propose to discuss to-day, but this seems to be a very aggravated one.

Mr. AMES. To this particular expenditure, I think, we have no objection, because we realize that if the railway goes to that point, it is necessary that there should be ample accommodation. But I am struck with a sentence which occurs in the report of the Public Works Department for 1906 which states that here in the county of Shelburne for a stretch of ten miles there are no wharf facilities. I had no idea that there was such a state of things anywhere in Nova Scotia. When you remember that that county has been represented for about eleven years by the Minister of Finance, there must be some mistake.

Mr. FISHER. Does my hon. friend think it ought to be remedied ?

Mr. AMES. I should say that if the government's policy were carried out, there would be a wharf every two miles. It must be a Tory district.

Mr. SINCLAIR. If my hon. friend will do me the honour of paying a visit to my county next summer, I will show him a coast where for twenty-five miles there is not a public work of any kind, although it is thickly settled, and although applications have been made for breakwaters, wharfs and other improvements.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE. I think there would be more facility in the discharge of the business of the committee if the hon. member from Montreal (Mr. Ames) would confine himself to the particular item under discussion, and not make a general flout at the province of Nova Scotia because we might contrast the expenditures in that province with those made in the immediate neighbourhood of Montreal.

Mr. AMES. I should be delighted to do so in this House and in the country, to compare the expenditures made along the seacoast of Nova Scotia with those made on the St. Lawrence route. The latter are for the general benefit of Canada, while the former are almost invariably for the benefit of a small group of favoured individuals.

Mr. PERLEY. Who was the supervisor in charge of this work at Frude's Point?

Mr. FISHER. His name is Harlow.

Mr. PERLEY. I am informed that a lawsuit has been brought against him by a workman named Hardy, because he did not employ him after having promised to do so. My information is that after having promised to employ the man, Harlow told him he could not do so unless he voted for the Liberal candidate. I would like to ask the minister whether there has been any lawsuit of this kind brought against Harlow?

Mr. FISHER. I am not aware of it and I do not believe it.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I happen to know that there was such an action brought against the foreman of the works, but I believe the foreman denies having refused the man employment. On the contrary, he states that this man was offered employment, but refused to accept it.

Mr. PERLEY. Was a writ issued ?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. The writ was issued at the time of the last by-election in Shelburne for political purposes, and I do not suppose that it has proceeded any further.

Glace Bay—assistance towards harbour improvements, $6,910.38.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the difference between the Dominion Coal Company and the government with respect to this work ?

Mr. FISHER. The Coal Company undertook to build this wharf and make these improvements as an ordinary contractor, and this is to pay the balance of the contract.

Mr. BLAIN. Is this on public or private property ?

Mr. FISHER. On public property.

Mr. BLAIN. My understanding was that it belonged partly to the Dominion Coal Company.

Mr. FISHER. The Coal Company owned the property, but an agreement was come to at the time of the contract, that the work to be done should be open to the public and be for the use of the public.

Mr. BARKER. Is that a written provision of the contract ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes, and the contract has been produced on three occasions in this House, and is a matter of record for at least two or three years. The Dominion Coal Company own the land and the harbour, by reason of the fact that it is an artificial harbour; but an arrangement has been made between the company and the people of Glace Bay, which has been discussed in this House on several occasions, by which the public are entitled to all the privileges in this harbour that they have in any other harbour of the country. There is a contract between the Dominion Coal Company and the government to that effect, and as that company is a responsible company, it will be subject to damages if the contract is not carried out. It serves all the purposes of a public harbour, and the people of Glace Bay generally are satisfied with the arrangement and have so signified on many occasions.

Mr. BLAIN. My information is that the public are not quite satisfied, but that they see growing up there a great monopoly, which I am informed has the support of my hon. friend who has just spoken. The minister has stated that the policy of the government is to expend money only on government property. My hon. friend varies that policy in this case by expending money on property owned by a private corporation. Therefore my hon. friend will have to be a little careful in future in stating that the policy of the government is to expend money upon public property rather than upon private property? I could give him some instances in the province of Ontario where the government have expended money upon properties owned by private individuals.

Mr. FISHER. That is the general policy, but at the same time there may be instances and special circumstances where it is advisable to make the change, and if ever there was an instance here is one, where an important harbour serving a large number of people is in the hands of a private corporation, and by an arrangement with that corporation the government is able to secure all the benefits and advantages which that corporation has provided for the benefit of the public.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the government any control over the charges ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, a contract is entered into by which this company is obliged to put all the benefits and advantages of their expenditure at the disposal of the public at large, and as a further expenditure of government money was necessary in order to complete the work, the company obligated themselves to give all their former work for the benefit of the public.

Mr. AMES. In case any other coal company should wish to ship coal by that wharf could they do so under this contract ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. AMES. Therefore that coal company has the absolute and exclusive monopoly, so far as coal shipping is concerned, of a wharf for which the government pays $25,000.

Mr. FISHER. There is nothing in the contract to prevent it.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. AMES. Mr. Chairman, the question I asked before you left the Chair was whether this contract would permit another coal company, in case there was another coal company in the neighbourhood of this wharf, to use this wharf for the shipment of their coal, or whether, in the case of coal shipments, it would give an absolute monopoly to the Dominion Coal Company in respect to this wharf.

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that it would not and am also informed that there is no other coal near there and no mines that can be used for that purpose.

Mr. AMES. It may be that there has been no coal discovered up to the present time but unless the entire area subject to this place is owned by the Dominion Coal Company, one can never be sure that, with the great wealth of Nova Scotia, additional deposits of coal may not yet be discovered. It may be that a coal mine will be discovered somewhere in the neighbourhood which will be subject to this particular harbour.

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that this whole area has been exploited for coal and that is all in the hands of the Dominion Coal Company.

Mr. HAGGART. What amount has been expended upon this undertaking and will this finish it ?

Mr. FISHER. It is finished and this is for the payment. The government have paid $25,000 and the coal company was to have spent about $13,000 more.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand the minister to say that this finishes it ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. That is $38,000 altogether ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. But there has been a far larger sum than that expended on Glace Bay.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Not by the government.

Mr. HAGGART. Oh, this is an expenditure on a private undertaking ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. That is the explanation ; that is right.

Mr. HAGGART. In whose name is the wharf ?

Mr. FISHER. The wharf belongs to the Dominion Coal Company but there is a contract with the company that as the government paid this $25,000 the wharf and its approaches shall be made public so that the public may use it.

Mr. HAGGART. Has the coal company contributed anything towards the expenditure ?

Mr. FISHER. About half as much as the government in addition to all the work which was there before.

Mr. HAGGART. They built the work that was there before and for the work that has now been completed they have contributed one-half.

Mr. FISHER. No, the government contribute $25,000 and the whole work cost about $38,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What about the future in respect to repairs ?

Mr. FISHER. That is for the future to decide.

Mr. BLAIN. As I understand it the government has expended $25,000 and the Dominion Coal Company, $13,000 ?

Mr. FISHER. $13,000 now.

Mr. BLAIN. Making a total of $38,000, which completes the work ?

Mr. FISHER. Which completes the work, but this is not the whole work because the Dominion Coal Company spent large sums before the government did anything.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that the government spent something before the Dominion Coal Company ?

Mr. FISHER. No, this is the first expenditure by the government.

Mr. BLAIN. The government having an investment of $25,000 in a private enterprise, with the exception that the minister has given that it is open to the public on certain conditions which practically give a monopoly to the Dominion Coal Company, has the company control of the wharf under the contract that has ben entered into with it by the government ? What about the future ?

Mr. FISHER. The government is under no obligation as to the future.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that the government do not spend any more money ?

Mr. FISHER. I am not prepared to say. I do not know what the future may bring forth.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand the minister to say that the government have only expended at Glace Bay, $25,000?

Mr. FISHER. As I am informed.

Mr. HAGGART. That is under the new arrangement, but, before that, surely the government expended some money ?

Mr. FISHER. I am told not.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Not at Glace Bay.

Mr. FOWLER. Have there been any complaints from any people resident at Glace Bay who want to use these works but who have been prevented from doing so by the coal company ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think so.

Mr. JOHNSTON. No.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to hear from the hon. gentleman representing the county as to whether the citizens of the town and surrounding country are perfectly satisfied with the agreement which has been entered into between the government and the Dominion coal company ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I have on three or four former occasions assured my hon. friend that the citizens generally approve of this scheme.

Mr. BLAIN. No complaints whatever ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Well, there may be two or three Bourbons who are opposed to this as they would be to any other movement, but I have only to assure my hon. friend that a gentleman who is so keen to give him information does not know very much about what the citizens of Glace Bay desire. This scheme is perfectly acceptable to the people of Glace Bay. It was approved by them as represented by their mayor and town council on several occasions.

Mr. BLAIN. That is a very good explanation except for the fact that the town council and mayor are all or nearly all in the employ of the Dominion Coal Company.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I must again correct my hon. friend; I am bound to say that, knowing as I do the source from which he gets his information, I will give him the correct information in regard to it.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like the hon. gentleman to give us the correct information. Is the mayor of the corporation in the employ of the Dominion Coal Company?

Mr. JOHNSTON. No.

Mr. BLAIN. Was he last year or a year or two ago?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes, he was.

Mr. BLAIN. What about the town council at the present time?

Mr. JOHNSTON. There may be one or two members of the town council at the present time in the employ of the Dominion Coal Company. As nearly as I can recall there is one member of the town council of Glace bay in the employ of the Dominion Coal Company, but I want to assure my hon. friend that there is no member sitting at the town council board of Glace Bay one whit more independent than is the member who is in the employ of the Dominion Coal Company. In the consideration of this matter they were actuated simply by a desire to meet the views of the citizens generally of Glace Bay.

Mr. DANIEL. It seems unusual to have a harbour in the control of a private company. How did the coal company become possessed of Glace Bay harbour?

Mr. JOHNSTON. The harbour was originally constructed by the Glace Bay Mining Company, one of the companies absorbed by the Dominion Coal Company in 1893. The harbour was constructed by the Glace Bay Mining Company a good many years ago, and when it sold all its rights and properties to the Dominion Coal Company the harbour was part of the assets. Originally there was only the mouth of a small stream that runs into the ocean, and at very great expense the Glace Bay Mining Company dredged it out. As to $38,000 respresenting the expenditure made by the Dominion Coal Company, they are obliged under their contract with the government to dredge the harbour and keep it dredged, which represents a very considerable additional expenditure to the $38,000.

Grand Etang—repairs to and part reconstruction of channel protection works, $2,800.

Mr. FOWLER. In what county is this?

Mr. FISHER. Inverness.

Mr. AMES. Who is the owner of the bridge that has been built across this pond?

Mr. FISHER. The government.

Mr. AMES. Is it customary for the government to own a bridge across a creek, the bridge being portion of the highway?

Mr. FISHER. The creek was enlarged by the government there and it was thought they should build a bridge.

Mr. AMES. In such a case is it not desirable that the bridge should be dedicated to the provincial government who has the duty of keeping the highway in repair? Should not the maintenance of the bridge be with the provincial authorities, as the rest of the roadway is?

Mr. FISHER. The bridge is our property, but, without knowing more about the case I am not prepared to express an opinion on whether it would be better for us to keep it under our own control, or to hand it over to the municipal or provincial authorities.

Mr. McLENNAN. The harbour of Grand Etang is navigable beyond this bridge, and I think the government should retain control of the bridge in order to secure the navigation of the harbour.

Mr. FOWLER. The argument of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McLennan) does not hold, because I can point out to him that the St. John river is navigable beyond the bridges crossing it, but these bridges were not built by the Dominion government. There are cases in the province of Quebec, notably the Disraeli case where the Dominion government have built bridges. In that case they did it under the pretense of calling it a wharf, but it was built in a cow pasture and could not be a wharf. Outside of the province of Quebec this is the first instance I know of, where the Dominion government built a bridge of this kind. But the hon. member for Inverness has influence enough with this government to induce them to go outside of their proper sphere and to build a bridge which certainly should have been built by the municipal or provincial authorities.

Mr. FISHER. The St. John river was there before the Dominion of Canada came into existence, but in this case it was by reason of dredging out to make a harbour that the government of Canada made a bridge necessary.

Mr. FOWLER. The river was there, but if you dredge it out and deepen it, it does not necessarily make it any wider. The space has to be crossed by a bridge whether the water is six feet or sixty feet deep, so that the dredging out cannot place any responsibility on the Dominion government to build the bridge.

Mr. FISHER. That shows the danger of talking about a situation which the hon. gentleman is not familiar with. It happens that this was a beach, and that there was no connection between the sea and the pond inside, and the public road went along that beach. The government, in order to help the fishermen, dredged a channel into the lagoon which was at the back of the beach, and when that dredging was done the bridge was necessary. Before, there was no creek, and no water, and no bridge. Under the circumstances it was thought right that the government should build a bridge.

Mr. FOWLER. I am not aware whether the minister was reading me a lecture or reading himself a lecture about talking of something he knows nothing about. The minister told us this river was there before there was a Dominion government——

Mr. FISHER. I said that of the St. John river.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister certainly referred to this creek.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. FOWLER. If the minister reads 'Hansard' to-morrow he will see I am right.

Mr. FISHER. No; I referred to the St. John river.

Mr. FOWLER. If the minister does not attempt to fix the 'Hansard,' I will guarantee it does not state what he says.

Mr. FISHER. I will promise not to touch it.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister now says there was a lagoon there, and they dug a ditch through to it.

Mr. FISHER. A channel.

Mr. FOWLER. We have heard of lagoons in the province of Nova Scotia to which ditches have been dug from the ocean, and the lagoon emptied itself and there was a lagoon no more. Is this one of these?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. FOWLER. Of course not, because in that case you would not require a bridge because the ditch would be dry. You must have dug a very large ditch to necessitate the expenditure of $10,000 for a bridge.

Mr. McLEAN. The bridge in question is built across what the hon. gentleman calls a lagoon. It is called Grand Etang in French, and therefore, as the name implies, it required a bridge of considerable size. As the minister has very properly said, the old highway was across the beach between Grand Etang and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The Dominion dredged a channel there, through which nice sized fishing schooners can go in and out, and they had to cut the highway in order to do that. The harbour having become a navigable harbour by means of the dredging of this channel, the municipality or the provincial government would not dare cross that lake, or pond, without coming to the Dominion government and asking leave, thus demonstrating that that harbour was the property of the Dominion government. I object to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) comparing this to something found in the Quebec harbour cow pasture. I can assure my hon. friend that we have not such shady transactions on our hands down there as could be found in some other parts of the country—known to the hon. gentleman from King's, N.B.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McLENNAN. And therefore all our grants should not be viewed with that miserable degree of suspicion that seems to have been cast upon every grant that has been under consideration before this committee to-day, for the simple reason, in my judgment, that they are grants to public services in Nova Scotia, a province that has committed the unpardonable offence of sending an unbroken contingent of Liberals here. I cannot account for this in any other way. To return to my point, the Dominion government very properly assisted the fishermen of Grand Etang by aiding them in getting a harbour for their boats before which time about 100 or 150 fishermen were obliged to build small slips and to place capstans at the heads of these slips and pull their large fishing boats up along these crude slips. To-day the member for King's N.B., (Mr. Fowler)) could not wish to see a prettier sight than 25 or 30 large sized fishing boats coming in from sea on a beautiful summer day and sailing straight into that harbour——

Mr. FOWLER. I am glad that the hon. gentleman resents the idea that this is nothing like so nefarious an affair as the Disraeli bridge. Of course, we know it is difficult to parallel such a case as the Disraeli matter. The hon. gentleman is very much mistaken if he thinks I was criticising the creation of this harbour.

Mr. McLENNAN. Calling it a ditch would look like that.

Mr. FOWLER. It is not the pier that is the ditch, the ditch was made across the beach connecting the ocean with the lagoon. It was explained by the acting minister that this channel across the beach was made necessary and that destroyed the highway. I understood from the minister that this bridge was built across the new channel. Now my hon. friend tells us that this bridge was built across the lagoon itself and was necessitated owing to the channel being cut through the beach. It then became necessary to change the highway and the Dominion government built the bridge across. I still fail to see why this calls for the building of a bridge out of the Dominion treasury. The fact that the provincial authorities would have had to get permission by reason of this being a navigable water is of no consequence as the same thing exists with regard to St. John which is a navigable water.

Mr. McLENNAN. Where is St. John, anyway ?

Mr. FOWLER. It is a fairly prominent point, the great winter port of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. Next to Port Hood.

Mr. FOWLER. This is the point I make that the Dominion government have no right to use the money from the federal treasury to build bridges which should be built and maintained by the provinces. They are built by the province in New Brunswick and every other province.

Mr. AMES. So long as that bridge remains a Dominion government property we shall continue to spend $1,500 or $2,000 a year in repairing it. When the highway ran along the bar it was the duty of the provincial government to maintain it, and to rebuild it in case the bar should be washed away in the spring. If the Dominion government places the highway in a position equivalent to what it was before, then this bridge should be handed over to the provincial government and the cost of maintenance borne by them.

Mr. FISHER. That would be a question of whether the maintenance now is more expensive. If it is more difficult to maintain the bridge then it may be said that the Dominion should maintain it.

Half Island Cape—breakwater, $6,000.

Mr. GANONG. What sized boats will this accommodate ?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed there will be about nine feet of water at low water. This is under contract. None of last year's appropriation has been expended.

Mr. FOSTER. What will the total cost be ?

Mr. FISHER. $7,500. It was begun last year but the season got too late to go on with the work.

Mr. GANONG. The principal claim made by the member for Guysborough in connection with this was that steamers could not under present conditions, take freight from this point. It seems to me if you have only nine feet of water that a very large steamer could not get into it.

Mr. FISHER. That is nine feet at low water.

Mr. GANONG. You must have the steamer to correspond with the tide.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend knows there are lots of places where steamers can get in only at high water.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I have no doubt that the steamer which collects fish along that coast will be able to call on the outside of that breakwater. The water is not deep and it will be difficult for a steamer of any size, but these steamers are small.

Mr. GANONG. It may be necessary to ask another grant next session of $10,000 to put it out into deep water, may it ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. It might be a very good thing to consider.

Hall's harbour, $6,000.

Mr. FOWLER. How large a place is Hall's harbour and who will be served by this ?

Mr FISHER. This is situated on the south side of the Bay of Fundy about 65 miles northeast of Digby and 12 miles southwest of Scott's bay. It is near Kentville, that is, it is opposite Kentville on the coast. The headquarters of the Dominion Atlantic Railway are in Kentville, and there is considerable traffic to the harbour from the back country.

Mr. FOWLER. Is there a branch line from this harbour to Kentville ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. FOWLER. What the minister has said is, no doubt unwittingly, rather misleading. He would have the committee understand that Halls harbour was the harbour for Kentville and the terminus of this railway.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. FOWLER. But a mountain lies between. Halls Harbour is a village of about twenty families, which had once a little trade, but to-day that trade is gone and no vessels go there. This is just an expenditure to satisfy some private individual.

Mr. FISHER. I have not got information of the exact size of the village, but it is a place some distance from any other harbour along that coast and with what is known as the mountain back of it. The people on that mountain could come here, and there is no doubt a considerable population along the coast who need shelter for their fishing boats.

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be the total cost ?

Mr. FISHER. $8,300.

Mr. FOWLER. There is a wharf there at present ?

Mr. FISHER. This is for repairs.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you propose to let the work by contract ?

Mr. FISHER. No, by days work.

Mr. FOWLER. What was the original cost of the wharf you are repairing?

Mr. FISHER. I have not got the details.

Mr. FOWLER. My instructions are the total amount expended on this wharf from 1839, when the wharf was begun, to the present would not amount to $8,300. And now it is proposed to expend a similar amount. This is really a new work, and as such is one that may well be let by contract. So far as days work is concerned, my own opinion is that there are many instances where that is the only way you can do the work properly. The whole thing depends on the honesty of the men in charge, but there are even repair jobs which might be done by contract; and wherever possible, I think the government should do the work that way. The great majority of repair jobs can only be done by days work because when you come to repair an old wharf, you do not know exactly how much you may have to do.

Mr. FISHER. That is the trouble.

Inverness (Broad cove) mines—harbour improvements, $10,000.

Mr. BARKER. Have these harbour works been transferred to the government?

Mr. FISHER. Not yet, but we do not propose to do any work on them until they are. An arrangement is about being completed for their transfer.

Mr. BARKER. This has become a very old story. We have had it ever since 1905. We were told in 1905 that the government expected to have a transfer of these works and were going to expend $10,000 on them; but at that time Mr. Brodeur, who was then minister, said the vote was for the extension of the harbour works, and the member for the county (Mr. McLennan) was good enough to inform us that the work to be done was simply placing brush and stone for the protection of the entrance of the harbour, and they apparently wanted for that $10,000. But in 1906, the succeeding Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman), wanted that $10,000 revoted, but not for the extension of the works at all. What he wanted it for was for repairs. He was going to spend $10,000 in repairs on works already in existence and not for brush and stone. Now we come to the present acting minister (Mr. Fisher), and he wants the $10,000 for improvements. But if we are giving $10,000 here and there along this coast, the minister or the acting minister should know what he wants the money for. First we had three years ago a demand for $10,000 to be used for the extension of the harbour. Then he wanted that same $10,000 to repair the works already in existence. And now we want it for improvements. It strikes me that if the department does not know what it wants the money for, it had better postpone the expenditure three or four years longer. We have got on very well for three years without spending that money, why not wait a little longer? I would ask the member for the county (Mr. McLennan) why this expenditure has been put off until next year. I suppose we are going to have an election then, and I would like to know whether the hon. gentleman has requested the government to postpone this expenditure from time to time until an election is certain, and does he propose to have $10,000 expended next year on day labour?

Mr. McLENNAN. The member for the county has not made any such request to the government.

Mr. FISHER. The member for the county has been very keen indeed about getting an arrangement completed with the owners of this harbour for its transfer to the government. I am not very familiar with what occurred several years ago but I can tell the hon. gentleman what the situation is at present? The harbour is in the hands of Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann. They own certain wharfs and foreshores. We wish to acquire the rights of McKenzie and Mann so as to make this a public harbour. The arrangment now is pretty nearly but not absolutely completed. We are to pay them $3,500 for their rights.

Mr. BARKER. We were told that the company offered it free.

Mr. McLENNAN. They did nothing of the kind.

Mr. FISHER. There is no knowledge of that in the department. If we acquire their rights, we shall then have to make some repairs to the wharfs. If we do not get their rights, we will not do any work. The reason this money was not spent last year was that the arrangement was not completed, and until it is nothing will be spent; but if an arrangement is completed satisfactory to the department, the work will go on, and out of this $10,000 a sum sufficient to purchase the rights of McKenzie and Mann will be used and the rest go to repairs.

Mr. BARKER. I understand that the Inverness Railway and Coal Company are the only people who use these works. If they can use them three years in their present condition, the government had better leave them alone and not pay $3,500 and then $10,000 in repairs.

Mr. McLENNAN. They are not using the harbour.

Mr. BARKER. Who are using it?

Mr. McLENNAN. Nobody, it is unfit for use. The company allowed the works to go into desuetude. The entrance is out of repair, and on that account no one can use it.

Mr. BARKER. Nobody wants to use it, I suppose.

Mr. FISHER. That is another thing.

Mr. McLENNAN. A very nice harbour can be made of it if it is properly handled.

Mr. BLAIN. This is the result of having these estimates passed while the work is allowed to remain in that condition. When this matter was up in 1905, the minister made the bald statement to the committee that not a dollar of this money would be expended for the property, but that it would all go for the construction of the work. Evidently now, from the statement of the hon. gentleman representing the county, here is a wharf owned by a coal company which has allowed it to get into bad repair, and now that it is of no use they propose to sell it to the government.

Mr. McLENNAN. Would the hon. gentleman have it left to the company ?

Mr. BLAIN. What I say is that it looks to me as if the coal company were anxious now to sell it to the government.

Mr. FISHER. They have been so little desirous of doing so that we have not been able to get them to do it for over a year.

Mr. BLAIN. The same statement was made a year ago. I think these matters should be looked into a little more closely.

Mr. BARKER. Has the government an item in the estimates for the $3,500 which they propose to pay for that harbour work?

Mr. FISHER. It is included in this vote of $10,000.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman does not tell us so. This is an estimate of $10,000 for harbour improvements, and he is going to purchase a harbour with it.

Mr. BLAIN. When the item was before the committee in June, 1905, this is what was said :

Mr. BRODEUR. The committee may be sure that no money will be spent unless a transfer is made to the government.
Mr. BARKER. That is, all the money is to be spent on the work ?
Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.
Mr. BARKER. There are no payments for property ?
Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. McLENNAN. Will the hon. gentleman be pleased to hear that not one dollar of that vote was expended in any way whatever, for the reason that the conditions expected by the minister did not prevail ?

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that quite well. The vote was passed in 1905 and repeated in 1906. It was passed first with a distinct understanding that not one dollar would be spent for the property itself.

Mr. McLENNAN. It was not spent. Is the hon. gentleman satisfied ?

Mr. BLAIN. No, I am not, for the reason that there is now a change of front on the part of the government, and they say that out of the $40,000 which we are revoting, $3,500 will be paid to this company for a property which is of no value, which the hon. gentleman representing the county says is of no service to anybody.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think that is a fair statement of the case. Here is a property which is out of repair, which, however, when constructed cost a considerable amount of money. The hon. gentleman quotes Mr. Brodeur, though I do not know why Mr. Brodeur was dealing with the matter, because he was not Minister of Public Works. But the government having failed to get the property for nothing, the question is whether they will take it over and turn it into a useful harbour. $10,000 is asked for that purpose. Negotiations are now going on. If the property is not acquired by the government, the money will not be spent ; if the government gets the property for $3,500, which I understand is the amount nearly agreed upon, they can with the balance, $6,500, make a useful and effective harbour for the people. The government think that is worth while. They are not buying a useless thing. On the contrary, they buy a work which has cost a considerable amount of money, and which can be made useful with a little repair. In the hands of a private corporation it would be of no use to the public, while in our hands, with the expenditure of $3,500 for the property and $6,500 for putting it in repair, it would be made available and useful to the public. That is the whole state of the case.

Mr. FOWLER. All this difficulty is due to the fact that we have so often an acting Minister of Public Works. Since the Hon. Mr. Tarte left that office, with the exception of a few months, we have always had an acting Minister of Public Works. We had first Mr. Sutherland as acting minister, then for a little while as minister, and then he went away for his health. Then we had Mr. Hyman as acting Minister of Public Works, then as minister for a little while, and then he too left for his health. Then we had Mr. Brodeur acting minister, and now we have the Minister of Agriculture. Hence all this confusion and difficulty. I would like to know from the hon. Minister of Agriculture if he expects to expend these votes ? There is a rumour about the country that the hon. gentleman is to be translated from the position of Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. FISHER. Do not believe rumours. They are very insidious and untrustworthy.

Mr. FOWLER. Sometimes there is a foundation for them, and this rumour says that the hon. gentleman is to be translated from the office of Minister of Agriculture to that of Minister of Public Works. I think the hon. gentleman might take the committee into his confidence and tell us whether that rumour is true or not. If we felt that he was going himself to expend this money, we would feel greater confidence in the statements he is making with respect to these votes, because we would know that he would be in a position to carry them out, and we believe that he would make a really earnest and honest attempt to carry them out. So it would shorten the discussion on this item if the hon. gentleman would get up and make a clean breast of it, and tell the committee whether or not he is going to be Minister of Public Works.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman is expressing the hope with so much confidence that it tempts me very much. I am not in a position to make any such statement, but I can assure the hon. gentleman that whatever minister is dealing with the department, he will be quite sure to try to carry out the intentions of the government and the pledges I have given.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that the conduct of the various departments of this government for the last few years is little less than an abuse of parliamentary privileges. We have never had the same minister at the head of it two years in succession. The man under whose supervision we voted the money is not here to tell us how the money has been expended; he is not here to give us the information of the manner in which he has carried out the promises of the government. The acting minister for the time being always falls back on some excuse, saying, Well, the government endeavoured to expend it properly, but I did not make these promises, therefore I am not responsible for the performance of the work. So we do not know where responsibility rests; we have no man to hold responsible. When one minister gives a promise to the House that he will do a certain thing and it is not done according to promise, we have no one whom we can hold responsible. It is getting to be a very grave abuse. We have not had the same minister two sessions in succession. We had Mr. Tarte, who made certain promises, but he went out and he could not be held responsible afterwards. Then we had Mr. Sutherland for a short time, and he went away for his health. Then after that we had Mr. Hyman, who made certain promises, very few of which have been fulfilled, then he goes away for his health. Now we have the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) for the time being. We ought to get down to some stability and be able to hold some one responsible.

Mr. FISHER. I can tell the hon. gentleman that we will try our best to see that the government is made stable for the next ten years.

Jersey cove—wharf, $5,200.

Mr. AMES. Is this wharf situated inside or outside the bar which crosses St. Ann's harbour?

Mr. FISHER. It is on the north eastern side of the harbour, at the angle formed between the beach and the mainland. I cannot say whether it is inside or outside.

Mr. AMES. If it is on the inside, as I think it is, it is to the west of the bar which crosses St. Ann's harbour, where there is a shallow bay filled with eel grass with two or three feet of water, with an impassable mountain at the back of it, and no inhabitants. It is a useless expenditure of money.

Mr. FISHER. I think from the hon. gentleman's account of the situation it must be on the outside of the bar, because there are twelve feet of water at the end of the wharf.

Mr. AMES. It is in a place where there is scarcely any population and nothing but a precipitous mountain range behind it. I think we ought to know where the cove is situated before we vote the money, because that section of Cape Breton county is dotted with useless wharfs from one end to the other.

Mr. FISHER. The work is now under contract.

Mr. AMES. On all sides of St. Ann's harbour are wharfs which are not used and which are the laughing stock of the people in that section; they are not used except by an occasional fishing boat coming in and out. It is just another wharf started to keep people employed in that section, and is a useless expenditure of public money. I want to point out another fact that the government has not apparently considered this to be a very necessary expenditure, as it has been revoted year after year, and each successive year the expenditure seems to be a little higher. When the work was first proposed we were told it would only cost $4,100; that was in 1905. In 1906 we were told it would cost $4,300; this year we are told it will cost $5,200. I do not suppose the work will be done this year unless we have a general election next fall so next year we will have the minister telling us it will cost $5,500 or $6,000.

Mr. FISHER. There was an estimate that it would cost $4,500 before the contract was let. The order in council authorizing the contract was dated 12th of October, 1906, the amount of the contract being $4,620. We have had to add a little for incidental expenses, which makes up the amount mentioned here. My hon. friend will remember that last year and the year before this House closed late in the summer after the votes were passed by the House and the contract could not be let until late in the fall. If this money could have been voted last spring the work would have been done before the close of the season.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I wish to say for the information of members of this House that the statements of the member for St. Anne's division. Montreal (Mr. Ames) with regard to St. Ann's bar and St. Ann's harbour and the construction of a number of useless wharfs in that vicinity is absolutely incorrect. That is the strongest word I desire to use in that connection; no stronger word could reasonably be employed. Of course I am bound to say that I have looked at the census returns and I find that the population at the particular place at which this wharf is to be built is slightly below the population of the city of Montreal, but notwithstanding all that there are quite a number of people around St. Ann's bay who are doing a reasonable amount of business and who are entitled to a reasonably fair amount of protection in the business which they carry on, and I have only to add that the statements that these works are large and useless around St. Ann's bay or around any other bay in the county of Victoria are not justified.

Mr. AMES. Would the hon. gentleman tell me where Eel cove is ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. When the committee rises I will take my hon. friend and have speech with him, draw a diagram and satisfy him that Eel cove actually does exist.

Mr. AMES. Will the hon. gentleman tell me where it is ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes.

Mr. AMES. Will he kindly do so ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I cannot give any better description of where Eel cove is in the absence of a map or blue print than that given by the minister, which information has been prepared by the department and which the minister has given to the committee as furnished to him by the engineer.

Mr. AMES. Will the hon. gentleman tell us whether the wharf as proposed to be built at Eel cove is inside or outside of the Bar ? Does he know his own county well enough to tell us where Eel cove is ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do not want to add to the disconfiture of the hon. gentleman by revealing his ignorance any more than it has been revealed. If I did not want to spare the feelings of my hon. friend I would say to him that it is not in my constituency at all.

Mr. AMES. This is one part of Cape Breton that I know pretty thoroughly. I have heard of that wharf in Bay St. Anne's and what I say I stand by.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Was the hon. gentleman on the inside or the outside of the Bar ?

Mr. AMES. Both, but I had the worst time on the outside. I want to point out to the minister that he says the contract will be $4,620, and that the cost of the land and advertising amounted to $50. This would make a little under $4,700. Are we to understand that it is going to cost $500 for the superintendence of that little dock or about 12 or 13 per cent ?

Mr. FISHER. The general estimate of the department for superintendence and contingencies is 10 per cent of whatever the contract is. That is not always spent, however.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much did the superintendence of the tower, which fell down, cost ?

Mr. FISHER. That was done in the department.

Mabou—repairs to harbour works, $2,000.

Mr. GANONG. Will the minister explain what work has been done there ?

Mr. FISHER. This is to make provision for continuing to raise the brush and stone on either side of the entrance at Mabou harbour where subsidence has taken place.

Mr. GANONG. How much water is there at the entrance of that harbour ? In 1903 it appeared to be very shallow at low water.

Mr. FISHER. There were three or four feet of water but we are making it deeper.

Mr. McLENNAN. There are 16 feet of water at low tide to-day. It was dredged last year.

Marble Mountain—wharf, $3,100.

Mr. FISHER. This is a revote.

Mr. CROCKET. Who owns the land upon which it is proposed to construct this wharf ?

Mr. FISHER. It was purchased by the government from Roderick McDonald.

Mr. CROCKET. At what cost ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not see the cost here.

Mr. CROCKET. When was the purchase made ?

Mr. FISHER. It must have been over a year ago because there was some work done in 1905-6.

Mr. CROCKET. Did the minister state that some work had already been done on this wharf ?

Mr. FISHER. There was some $800 spent in the year 1905-6 so that the purchase must have been made before that.

Mr. CROCKET. What is the reason for the increase in the vote from $2,000 to $3,100 ?

Mr. FISHER. The estimate was that $2,000 would do the work. That was not spent last year, and very much for the reason that I have already explained in some other instances and in view of the complete survey it will cost $1,100 more than was expected.

Mr. CROCKET. Is there not already a wharf at this point ?

Mr. FISHER. No public wharf there.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the minister know the population of Marble Mountain ?

Mr. McLENNAN. There are two wharfs at Marble mountain ; one owned by the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, a wharf they have kept busy day and night—in fact they have even a night shift on during the season of navigation—the other the property of the Bras d'Or Line Company which they also keep quite busy day and night during the season of navigation. The public cannot get near these wharfs. This is a settlement of about 18 miles in extent and this is the only public wharf built or proposed to be built in the near future for the whole settlement.

Mr. FISHER. There is a large lime quarry and the combined companies employ about 800 men.

Mr. CROCKET. I find by reference to 'Hansard' for 1905, that the Minister of Public Works stated that the population of Marble Mountain was 350.

Mr. FISHER. It has been increased by the introduction of a large number of labouring people.

Mr. McLENNAN. The Dominion Iron and Steel Company have 500 men employed there.

Middle Country harbour—wharf, $3,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is a revote and the work is under contract.

Mr. BARKER. This seems to be another of these long protracted cases which began in 1905 and has continued with votes and revotes. There does not seem any particular hurry about it. I see very little west of Isaac's harbour. How far west is it ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. By a straight line it is five miles west of Isaac's harbour. There is a strip of land between.

Mr. BARKER. I understand this wharf is to be built seven miles inland ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. It depends on where you start from. You can take the largest ship in the British navy up to this wharf. It is built on the waters of Country harbour, one of the finest harbours on the Atlantic sea board ; it is the fear of Halifax harbour. If the hon. gentleman will read the report of the Transportation Commission, he will see this harbour referred to as one of the great harbours on the coast of Nova Scotia.

Mr. BARKER. Where this wharf is to be built?

Mr. SINCLAIR. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. What business is to be done there?

Mr. SINCLAIR. It will be a shipping port for an inland district with a large population.

Mr. BARKER. Are you trying to create population by building wharfs?

Mr. SINCLAIR. There are some small wharfs in the vicinity where business is being done, but they do not afford sufficient facilities.

Mr. BARKER. You are building wharfs inland at the expense of the Dominion?

Mr. SINCLAIR This is not inland.

Mr. BARKER. The report says it is seven miles inland.

Mr. SINCLAIR. That is a mistake. It may be seven miles from the entrance to the bay, but it is in deep tidal water where there is ample draught for the largest ship.

Mr. BARKER. The report says : $3,000 was voted during 1905-6 for the construction of a wharf at Middle Country harbour, seven miles inland.

Mr. FISHER. Read on.

Mr. BARKER. Certainly ; it says : Or one mile below the head of navigation, for small vessels.

Mr. FISHER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARKER. Is the Dominion going to construct wharfs all over Nova Scotia seven miles inland?

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend is doubtless unintentionally in error ; but if his remarks were let go uncontradicted, they would create the idea that this wharf is built seven miles away from the sea. The fact is that this is a large inlet of the sea which extends more than seven miles into the country ; it is really a great harbour.

Mr. BARKER. Is there any other wharf there now?

Mr. FISHER. There are wharfs on the same inlet, but not at this particular point.

Moose harbour—breakwater, $1,200.

Mr. AMES. Where is this?

Mr. FISHER. In Shelburne and Queen's, near the entrance to Liverpool harbour, about three miles from the town.

Mr. AMES. Has anything been expended on this work?

Mr. FISHER. No; this is a revote for the whole amount.

Mr. AMES. It has already been revoted twice. Have we any assurance that the work will be done this year?

Mr. FISHER. If this vote goes through, there is no reason why it should not be done this year. The Supply Bill was passed so late last year that nothing could be done during the season.

Mr. AMES. But this vote was also passed the year before.

Mr. SPROULE. It is a very bad principle for parliament to vote money when it is not expended. The idea is to have money available in the event of an election, so that the government can become active in spending it. If the expenditure is necessary at all, the work should be done during the year for which the money is voted. We should not encumber our estimates from year to year with these revotes. Some of these have been revoted four times without being spent, and the principle is an extremely bad one.

Mr. FISHER. I quite agree with my hon. friend. One reason why we have changed the fiscal year is that the money may be available before the summer is nearly over. These works cannot be proceeded with in the winter, and when the House rises in July or August it is impossible for public works to be gotten under way before the winter sets in. If this year we get the Supply Bill sanctioned within the month of April, there is a fair chance of letting the contracts and having the work done during the season. I hope that will be the case this year. I am afraid my hon. friend is exaggerating when he says that some of these have been voted four times. In this present case I find that the current year just finished was the first appropriation for this purpose.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not believe I have exaggerated, and I think I can point to several items that will come within my description. If the government intend to turn over a new leaf it will indeed be refreshing.

New Campbellton—ballast wharf in Kelly's cove, $7,700.

Mr. BLAIN. What is this for?

Mr. FISHER. This vote is to complete. The contract was let in November, 1906; the total amount of the work is $17,000.

Mr. BLAIN. The amount was first voted in 1905, and the minister then stated that $12,000 would finish the work. Did the government decide to spend more afterwards?

Mr. FISHER. The lowest contract was for $17,000, and we had to outvote the additional amount.

Mr. BLAIN. But the minister stated in 1905 that the tenders were in, and that the total cost would be $12,000. He must have known then what the tenders were.

Mr. FISHER. The explanation is, I suppose, that the tenders were not opened. The lowest tender was $17,000.

Parker's cove—improvements, $8,000.

Mr. CROCKET. What are these improvements?

Mr. FISHER. The extension of the breakwater on the east side of the stream flowing into Parker's Cove, which is done under contract; constructing a breakwater on the west side of the stream, and affording additional shelter to the fishing boats.

Mr. CROCKET. Did the minister state the contract had been let?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, a contract has been let.

Mr. CROCKET. At what price?

Mr. FISHER. $7,100 for the eastern breakwater and it is expected we will have to spend $3,600 on the western breakwater, the contract for which has not yet been let.

Mr. CROCKET. How much has been expended?

Mr. FISHER. Nothing has been spent on the latter, I do not know how much the contractor has spent on this.

Mr. CROCKET. Has anything been paid to the contractor on account of his contract?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, it was expected that out of last year's vote we would expend $3,300. I cannot say positively how much was spent.

Mr. CROCKET. When does the contract call for the completion of the work?

Mr. FISHER. The 30th of April.

Parrsboro harbour, $11,200.

Mr. BENNETT. How much was spent on this last year?

Mr. FISHER. About $6,000 out of $20,000; we are asking a revote of $16,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Is this under contract?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT Per yard?

Mr FISHER. It is a bulk sum contract.

Mr. BENNETT. A bulk sum for dredging, do I understand ? How is that done, by an estimate that there would be so many yards in all probability?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, I understand that an estimate was made by the department of how much dredging would be needed there, I suppose by soundings, to get a certain depth and that contract was let.

Mr. BENNETT. How many yards was it estimated would be dredged for the $20,000?

Mr. FISHER. 27,000 cubic yards.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the formation ?

Mr. FISHER. Silt and mud.

Mr. BENNETT. Were tenders invited and if so how many were received?

Mr. FISHER. Six tenders were received in answer to advertisements. The tenderers were obliged to construct six lighters to do the work and when the contract is finished the lighters will belong to the government, in addition to our getting the depth of water.

Mr. BENNETT. Were the tenders asked for at so much per yard or was it for the lump work, including the supply of six lighters ?

Mr. SPROULE. What will you do with the lighters when the job is done.

Mr. FISHER. We will use them for something else.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the estimated value of the lighters ?

Mr. FISHER. I am told about $6,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the name of the contractor ?

Mr. FISHER. Hugh McDonald, of North Sydney.

Mr. BENNETT. What length of time was allowed for the tenders ?

Mr. FISHER. About a month, the usual time.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it expected that $14,,000 will be spent this year ?

Mr. FISHER. Oh, yes, the whole of it.

Mr. BENNETT. Only $6,000 was expended last year.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, we hope to finish it this year.

Mr. BENNETT. What would be the average depth of water ?

Mr. FISHER. I have not the contract here and I cannot say as to that. My information is it is six feet at low water. Of course there the tide rises very much indeed.

Mr. SPROULE. The lighters I suppose were to carry off the stuff excavated. It is a rather strange way to let a contract.

Mr. FISHER. I think the idea was that the contractor would not need the lighters for any other purpose and we would, and you could not get a contractor to build lighters for this work unless you took them off his hand.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the government keep a fleet of lighters on hand ?

Mr. FISHER. Oh yes, we need a large number.

Mr. BENNETT. Who is the inspector as to the work performed there ?

Mr. FISHER. I have not the name here.

Mr. BENNETT. What was it estimated this would cost per yard ?

Mr. FISHER. The estimate of the engineer was about 50 cents a yard.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the average cost of dredging in Nova Scotia where there is a similar formation ?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that depends on the rise of the tide. This is on the Bay of Fundy where the rise of the tide is so great that it costs more than where there is not a tide.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is this dredging for high or low water ?

Mr. FISHER. It is to make a depth at low water. Of course the dredging has to go on or be interrupted by the very high tides.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But if this harbour is to be reached at low water what is the need of dredging at all?

Mr. FISHER. That depends on the commerce ; there are some places where the commerce can wait for a high tide and some places where it can not.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the depth when the tide was out before the dredging was done ?

Mr. FISHER. Part of it was dry when the tide was out.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the depth of the deepest part of the dock ?

Mr. FISHER. There is no navigable depth at low tide.

Petite rivière—improvements, $3,000.

Mr. BARKER. I do not rise to object to the construction of works at this point, but I am informed that two parallel piers are being run out to form a channel and that it is almost inevitable that the wash from the sea will continually fill up that channel with sand and that in fact in bad weather it is likely to be washed away entirely. I rise, not for the purpose of objecting to improvements, but to put on record that objection to the manner in which the work is being done. Some years ago I understand a stone breakwater was begun some distance below, but that did not suit a local politician, by the name of Sperry, and he has got the work put near his own place of business. If the work were constructed where the stone breakwater was begun, it would be effective, but the work now going on will be ineffective.

Mr. FISHER. I understand that just the opposite will be the case. I understand that by restricting the flow of the river going in there, there will be sufficient current to prevent that silting in and the formation of a bar. I have only the opinion of the engineers and am not prepared to dispute it.

Mr. BARKER. We shall see by and by who is right.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. There is nothing of this stone breakwater left and it could not be utilized for any purpose whatever. The hon. gentleman may possibly be correct in saying that the mode of construction in this case may turn out to be faulty. It is largely in the way of experiment, and possibly in a year or two there will need to be additional expenditure to make the work valuable.

Phinney's cove—breakwater, $6,800.

Mr. AMES. Where is that?

Mr. FISHER. It is in Annapolis county, on the south coast of the Bay of Fundy.

Mr. AMES. Near what place large enough to have its name on the map, is it?

Mr. FISHER. It is three miles west of a place called Kempt. There is a fishing fleet there which has no shelter.

Poirierville—landing pier, $6,800.

Mr. FISHER. That is in Richmond county.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it by contract and who is the contractor?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, Mr. Thomas Morrison of Descouse. It was let to the lowest tenderer. Estimated cost about $8,500.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who has charge of it?

Mr. FISHER. The local inspector there. I do not know his name.

Porter's lake—boat channel to Three Fathom harbour, $4,000.

Mr. AMES. What is intended to be done there?

Mr. FISHER. It is intended to excavate a complementary permanent channel, 1,050 feet long, across the neck of land known as Gorman's head, so that it may be navigated by boats at low tide drawing three feet of water.

Mr. AMES. Here is a public work that is undoubtedly very much needed. Unless that work is done, not only can there be no access but there is considerable flooding of the whole neighbourhood at certain times of the year, which this is intended to prevent. Yet it has been just played with at election time the last two or three elections. Whenever there is an election on, we find great activity in connection with work at Porter's lake.

Mr. J. D. REID. In what constituency?

Mr. AMES. Halifax county. Take the last election of 1904, you find that in 1903-4 it was only thought necessary to expend $325 in relieving the exigencies of this old trouble. But in 1904-5, $4,275 were spent, and that was spent in October and November, and spent by days work immediately before the election. In September it was only considered necessary to put out about $389 in wages, but in October, just before the elections, the wage list ran up to $2,180. And no sooner was the election over, than it was found unnecessary to do anything more. Yet the following year, when Mr. Hyman took charge of the department, this is the way in which he described the work. He said a canal had been constructed but was not large enough to allow the water to go off. It was constructed for the distinct purpose of allowing the water that flooded the land to get out to the sea but it failed in that purpose. And although last year the inhabitants of the neighbourhood prayed to be relieved, there was not a dollar spent, and the probabilities are none will be spent this year. But if you have an election in November of 1908, there will be a tremendous pay roll in September and October. Really it seems to me that the government should deal with this very necessary matter in a business-like way. The people need this work and are entitled to it. There is a case of genuine hardship which the government should relieve, but it keeps this off for election purposes and will spend a lot of money just before the election and then do nothing for three or four years until another election comes on.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). I do not wish to be discourteous to the hon. gentleman and always try to listen to his remarks with patience, but he has a habit of propounding questions and making remarks regarding subjects of which he cannot necessarily have very much knowledge; and since he has made an itinerary of the lower provinces and obtained a little more information than he had previously, he looks upon himself as an authority on all matters particularly affecting those provinces. It is no doubt commendable in gentlemen from a district like Montreal, where there is an immense city population, to occasionally visit the maritime provinces; but before they pass comments on any particular work in any locality, they would do well to visit the locality and inform themselves of the local circumstances. This canal was partly built before I became a member. The lake is a large lake twenty miles in length, which at certain seasons, principally in the fall and spring, overflows, and this work is primarily for the purpose of relieving the post roads in the neighbourhood, which are flooded by the waters of the lake. The canal at present built is inadequate to carry off the water. When I made my last visit to Halifax I went down to it, and I found that there was a canal of about one foot and a half in depth and fifteen feet in width to carry off the water. That canal was the result of a dispute between the engineers, being so built for reasons of economy. The canal projected to be built at Graham's Head was supposed to cost a great deal more money than this one, and it was thought that a medium sized canal would carry off the water. The hon. member for St. Antoine complains that the people in that locality will not build canals and work without money, and this government had no money voted for it until I think about September of that year.

Mr. AMES. May I correct the hon. gentleman? There was $4,000 voted for it in 1906-7, and not a dollar was spent last year.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. He said that the work had taken place a month or two before the election of 1904. The House knows that the money was voted in September, and it was intended to be laid out in the summer, but the session was so prolonged and the vote so protracted, that no money was available to complete the work on the canal up to the time it was actually employed to pay for the labour of the men who constructed the work at the most opportune time.

Port Hastings, Nova Scotia—wharf, $4,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Has this contract been let?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. BENNETT. Will this complete the dock?

Mr. FISHER. No, it is a large work.

Mr. BENNETT. Has a site been purchased yet?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. BENNETT. Have any parties been applied to, to sell sites?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say as to that.

Mr. BENNETT. Was not the money voted last year for the same purpose?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, but nothing was done.

Mr. SPROULE. How much is the work expected to cost?

Mr. FISHER. That will depend on the plans of the work and on the site chosen. The site has not yet been selected.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. minister say that he has no estimate of the work?

Mr. FISHER. We cannot have that very well until the site is determined upon.

Mr. SPROULE. I have always thought it was the duty of the government, when they submitted an item of this kind, to be prepared to tell the House what the work was estimated to cost. For all we know, this work may cost $400,000 or $500,000. Until we have an estimate of the cost of the work and some intelligent idea of its nature, I think the House should not vote the money.

Mr. BENNETT. A similar sum was voted for this work in 1905-6 and again in 1906-7. What is the population of this place, and what requirements will be met by the construction of a dock?

Mr. McLENNAN. There was a wharf at this very point on the Strait of Canso before confederation. The government of Nova Scotia constructed a wharf there perhaps over fifty years ago. At confederation it was handed over to the Dominion government. When the Inverness Railway was constructed, the shipping pier of the company came right over this wharf and utterly destroyed its usefulness, because it jutted out not only over the approach to the wharf, but into the water far beyond. The people of that locality and the surrounding country having no other access to the water, as they had for generations back, were pressing the government for a public wharf at this point. It would appear that the municipality of Inverness granted to Mackenzie and Mann a free right of way for their railway and their shipping pier. Under an existing Act of the province of Nova Scotia only a certain amount of land could be taken for a railway. But it would appear that the company smuggled a short special Act through the legislature granting to them an almost unlimited area for their railway terminals at their mines and at the Strait of Canso; and when the government here proposed to build this wharf at the point where the public wanted it, Mackenzie and Mann came upon the scene, and claimed that the right which they had got from the people of Inverness would cover this ground. The government here refused to go ahead with the work until that matter was settled between the municipality of Inverness and the Mackenzie and Mann Company. The matter was in fact in the courts. It went from the local court in the County of Inverness to the Supreme Court at Halifax, and from Halifax to Ottawa, and it was only last fall that the question was settled, and the municipality had to pay for the land taken by Mackenzie and Mann for their railway and their terminal. That accounts for the delay in appropriating this money to the purpose for which parliament granted it.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the site of the place?

Mr. McLENNAN. It is a nice village. But the port is a very important one as a shipping point on the Strait of Canso and has been for the past 50 or 60 years.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the population?

Mr. McLENNAN. If you take the village it is only a small one, but the surrounding country which does its shipping at that point is a very large one.

Mr. BENNETT. Are there fifty people there?

Mr. McLENNAN. There are 200 people there.

Mr. SPROULE. That is a very reasonable cause for delay, but notwithstanding that the time has passed, it would seem only fair to expect that the department has sent their engineer there to collect information which the House would require to know.

Mr. McLENNAN. We could not get on the ground; we could not know who owned the ground.

Mr. FISHER. This port has been used for various purposes. As long ago as 1867 the provincial government built a wharf there and the Department of Railways and Canals in 1886 added to it. Since that time the people have been complaining on that portion of Cape Breton island and desiring better communication. But the department could not make its plan until the exact location was determined upon, and that location has not yet been absolutely determined upon. It was only last fall that eventually the case was decided which contributes towards that decision. This item has been in the estimates for two or three years. The department is not yet in a position to say what the plan of this wharf will be or the exact location.

Mr. J. D. REID. The very fact of our voting this money will give the government authority to enter into a contract for the work. It may cost us an enormous amount before we get through, and we should have some statement giving us an estimate of what in the opinion of the government will be required, a statement that it will cost $4,000, or $8,000, or $20,000. This is a very strange way of proceeding with a new work.

Mr. FISHER. The estimates vary according to location. I see no prospect myself that $30,000 will be used there. This is practically an item on which there has been a decision by parliament that a wharf shall be built at Port Hastings. If this item had been rejected two or three years ago it might have been said that there should be no wharf built at Port Hastings at all. It is only in regard to chosing the exact location that a difficulty has arisen. I do not ask for this item unless the House is quite prepared to say, what they have said already, that a wharf should be built there.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not object to the wharf, but I object to committing ourselves to an expenditure of which we know nothing of the amount.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not think $4,000 is much to start with if the work is going to cost $20,000. I am not objecting to the expenditure of the money if the work is required. Thirty thousand dollars seems quite a lot for a wharf unless there is some special reason requiring a large expenditure.

Mr. FISHER. It is a deep water wharf.

Mr. J. D. REID. It may be more expensive but we should have some information about it. Next November we could vote a sufficient amount to carry it to an early finish. The trouble is that $4,000 practically will not start the work.

Mr. FISHER. The only reason for this being $4,000 is that this is what has been voted for the last two years.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the municipality contribute anything towards the cost by giving the site to the government?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. Do many boats land at this place?

Mr. FISHER. In 1900 the statistics of the port showed a trade of about $200,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. And there has been no business since?

Mr. FISHER. That is the last year I have statistics for. The business has been increasing.

Mr. J. D. REID. How has it been going on without any wharf?

Mr. FISHER. There is an old wharf which was built by the Intercolonial Railway and the people seem to have been doing their business as best they could. There is no doubt that when a new wharf is built private business there will increase still more.

Mr. McLENNAN. Just one word in regard to the observations of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). I allowed the other hon. gentlemen who were not here in 1896 to go on. I sympathized with them considerably because I knew that they had very little knowledge of what they were talking about, but the hon. member for East Grey got up and posed as a purist in regard to the improper practice of husbanding grants like this until the eve of an election. I might as well tell the hon. gentleman that the Minister of Public Works and myself were defending at every step the conduct of the government that he was supporting, and that the very bridge that we were defending the construction of was built by the government that he was supporting, and that the work was proceeded with at the very time I was running my election against my predecessor in 1896.

Mr. SPROULE. What has that to do with this ?

Mr. McLENNAN. That bridge was under construction and another wharf at Seaside costing $8,000 and yet the hon. gentleman and all the others got up and asserted that that it was an immoral practice to be holding these grants up until the eve of an election. The bridge that so much criticism was made about was constructed by the government which the hon. member for East Grey was supporting during the campaign of 1896. The Minister of Public Works and myself very successfully, I hope, defended the act of that government.

Mr. SPROULE. I never mentioned elections in connection with this vote.

Mr. McLENNAN. Yes, the hon. gentleman did.

Mr. SPROULE. Not a single solitary word. My contention was that it was improper to ask a vote from the House without any estimate or information to give to the House to show that it was needed or what it was going to cost. I said that the explanation given by the hon. member for Inverness was an excusable and justifiable reason for delay, but that now, when they come forward and ask for a vote to go on with that work, they should be able to give us information. I did not say a word about an election then and what the hon. gentleman has said now is altogether uncalled for and gratuitous on his part.

Port Hood harbour—closing northern entrance with brush and stonework, $15,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. What shape is this work in ?

Mr. FISHER. This is for a continuation of the work of closing up the space between the mainland and an island, the harbour having been originally protected by a natural beach.

Mr. J. D. REID. What is the total cost going to be ?

Mr. FISHER. Nearly $100,000 of which about $60,000 has already been spent. Last year we spent $5,000, we propose to spend $15,000 the coming year and $15,000 or $20,000 more will close it up.

Mr. SPROULE. How is this work being done ?

Mr. FISHER. By day's work.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister think that a work like this should be done by day's work.

Mr. FISHER. It is very hard to say just how a work of this kind can be done by contract.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not a pier ?

Mr. FISHER. No, this is on a sand bank which used to be sufficient to protect the harbour, but this has been washed out and this work has been done at low tide, the brush and stone being brought on to create a sort of breakwater. This is done at different times as it can be done and for that reason it has to be done by day's work.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that this is the kind of work that a contractor would have no objection to tender for. It is a large work and it is not a work that there should be very great difficulty in making a specification for or in estimating the cost of because the cost of stone, the cost of brush and the cost of putting these in place could easily be arrived at, and as there is a large amount of it I think that it would more properly be done by tender and contract instead of by day's work.

Mr. FISHER. I think this is a class of work for which a contractor would probably charge a very high price to protect him against loss by accidents caused by storms arising and washing away the work. For this reason it would be cheaper to do it by day's labour. No contractor would undertake such work without asking for a price which would protect him against accident.

Mr. SPROULE. Any contractor would meet with almost the same difficulty on almost any work which was set out anywhere in the water. It may be that here there is greater danger than elsewhere but it seems to me that even that would not justify the expenditure of this large amount of money by day's work. I think the minister said that it would probably cost $100,000. Will any one say that it is a good plan to expend $100,000 on a breakwater and do it by day's work ?

Mr. FISHER. My information is that the first part of this work was a good deal in the nature of an experiment, but as the work went on it was shown to be feasible. It has therefore been carried on and has proved effective.

Mr. SPROULE. Look at the expenditure. In 1903 there was an expenditure of $2,958, in 1904 an expenditure of $19,950, in 1905 an expenditure of $9,999, last year we voted $15,000 and now we have another vote of $15,000, and all by day's work. Does not the minister see that this is a way of expending money that would hardly meet with the approval of any intelligent man in this country? I do not see how it can be justified at all.

Mr. FISHER. That was the recommendation of the engineer.

Mr. SPROULE. How many foremen have you in connection with this work?

Mr. FISHER. One foreman and one inspector—James McDonald.

Mr. J. D. REID. There are two timekeepers, I see.

Mr. SPROULE. There are two timekeepers, a sub-foreman and a foreman.

Mr. FISHER. The department does not give these titles to the men. There is a superintendent of the work, whom we call an inspector, and he employs the men and is responsible for the work.

Mr. SPROULE. You have an inspector getting $3.50 a day, and a sub-foreman getting $2.50, and two time-keepers at $2.50, and other men getting $1.60 and $1.70 a day.

Mr. FISHER. That is not out of the way; I suppose the leading workmen get more than the others.

Mr. J. D. REID. If this work had been done by contract it would have been done within a reasonable time, and whatever benefits the people are to get from it would accrue to them. It probably will last eight or ten years under this system.

Mr. FISHER. Oh, no.

Mr. J. D. REID. Pending completion, is there any benefit derived from the work?

Mr. FISHER. Yes; but, of course, there will be greater benefit when it is completed.

Round Hill wharf—to complete, $1,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What will this cost?

Mr. FISHER. About $2,000 altogether.

Mr. BLAIN. On this small work you have a Mr. Armstrong who is described as a conductor; you have a foreman at $3 a day, and a sub-conductor at $2.50 a day. Why do you require so many inspectors on a little work that will cost $3,000?

Mr. FISHER. We have to employ an inspector whether the work costs $3,000 or $10,000. Some of the workingmen are paid a little more and some a little less. The Auditor General may call these men by what titles he likes, but the department does not recognize that. It is quite possible that these men may have been on the work at different periods of time, but I cannot explain without having the accounts before me. I can quite understand that some skilled men would be paid $2.50 a day, while some others are paid less. I have paid men $2.50 a day on my own barn, and they were well worth it, while I was paying others only $1.50. The department only recognizes one inspector, who does not do manual work. These accounts have to be certified by the inspector, then by the resident engineer, as being reasonable, then by the chief engineer, and then they pass the Auditor General. With all these checks, I should think that the prices charged are reasonable.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there any revenue from this wharf?

Mr. FISHER. We do not hand it over to the Marine Department until it is finished.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will there be any revenue from it?

Mr. FISHER. I hope so.

Mr. J. D. REID. When does the minister expect the Minister of Public Works back?

Mr. BENNETT. After the London election.

Scotch cove (White point) breakwater, $10,000.

Mr. AMES. Is this by contract or day labour?

Mr. FISHER. Contract; the contract has not yet been let.

Mr. SPROULE. Was there not a vote for this last year?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think so.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the estimated cost?

Mr. FISHER. $27,000.

Tatamagouche—wharf, $3,000.

Mr. AMES. What will be the depth of water at the Tatamagouche wharf when it is completed?

Mr. FISHER. Twelve feet.

Mr. AMES. At high or low tide?

Mr. FISHER. I think these are all low tides.

Mr. AMES. Is it expected it will be a port of call for steamers or only for small schooners?

Mr. FISHER. 12 feet of water would allow smaller steamers to come in.

West Head (Cape Sable island)—wharf, $5,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is a new wharf.

Mr. BENNETT. What will the total cost be ?

Mr. FISHER. $8,500.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the site been purchased ?

Mr. FISHER. It will have to be either purchased or given by the proprietor, but I have not information as to the selection of a site here, I shall bring it down. This is in Shelburne and Queen's. The contract has not been let so I suppose it is by day labour.

Yarmouth harbour—improvements, $10,000

Mr. BENNETT. What is the nature of the improvements ?

Mr. FISHER. This is to continue dredging in the harbour at Yarmouth.

Mr. J. D. REID. What dredge is doing that ?

Mr. FISHER. The 'Canada.'

Mr. SPROULE. Why did you not use any of the money voted last year ?

Mr. FISHER. There was dredging done there last year by the 'Canada' but it was paid out of what was called the general dredging vote.

Mr. BENNETT. Was the 'Fielding' working in there ?

Mr. FISHER. She was not in Yarmouth, she cannot work there ; she is too large for that narrow channel.

Mr. BENNETT. Where is this work ?

Mr. FISHER. It is in the channel from Yarmouth town to the sea ; the channel is tortuous and needs to be deepened, widened and straightened.

Mr. BENNETT. Is there any government dock there ?

Mr. FISHER. No, I expect there is not, they are company docks.

Mr. LAW. There is no public dock in Yarmouth, they are all owned by private individuals. The entrance to Yarmouth harbour is one of the most circuitous channels in Nova Scotia, and it is one of the most important ports. I am sorry the vote is so small, it should be $100,000 at least. There are more first-class passengers handled in Yarmouth than in any other maritime port in Canada, which is saying a good deal. There is a daily line of boats in summer between Yarmouth and Boston and also between Yarmouth and New York. One of those lines last year carried over 70,000 passengers. There has been a line of boats between Yarmouth and the United States for the past fifty years ; they have been improving in size each year and now we find the very fine boats owned by the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company are too small for the trade. They have gone out on some occasions with 1,100 passengers on board, and they are drawing every inch of water which the harbour will permit.

Mr. BENNETT. How much water is there at this point ?

Mr. LAW. About thirteen feet at low water. This is to cut off two points, the channel turns at right angles and this is to make the navigation more easy for vessels going in and out. The Dominion Atlantic Railway Company's line ends at Yarmouth and connects with their line of steamboats. During the last year Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann have completed their line of railway along the south shore and in December last the line was opened to Yarmouth. We are in hopes they will make Yarmouth the terminus, in which case they will want a line of boats to the United States. We have not accommodation now for any more business than we are doing, and if the department does not improve Yarmouth harbour and give us dredging and better shipping facilities, Yarmouth must go back to a third or fourth rate port. I wish to draw the attention of the government and of the department to this, and hope that they will see their way clear to take into consideration this port and its claims and give Yarmouth the harbour facilities to which it is entitled. With both of these railways centering there I consider that we are entitled to far more work than the government has given and hope that in the near future the amount for dredging there will be largely increased. I might say, in connection with the steamboat services that the Dominion Atlantic Railway that they now have four boats, but they find them too small for the business and are considering building larger boats. They sold one last year and will sell others provided there is sufficient accommodation for larger boats to go in and out, but on many occasions at low tide the boats from Boston have had to wait for the tide sometimes for an hour, and with four or five hundred passengers on board that is not what it should be. The passengers get uneasy, find fault with the steamship company, and are perhaps led to travel by some other route. Boats leave Yarmouth at night and arrive at Boston the next morning in time for breakfast and this makes the shortest route between Nova Scotia and the United States and is bound to be always an important port. It cannot be otherwise if the government properly improve the harbour facilities.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman's application is one that has a good deal of merit. Here is a case that will certainly commend itself to the House. He has said that there is so much business that private capital has invested money to construct docks ; we are not told how many, but there must be a number of them. He doee not ask for the construction of a dock as is done in many of these cases but he simply says: Private capital having constructed docks there and there being a big and growing business established we should have the harbour properly dredged. This paltry $10,000 is not going to be a flea-bite on the work the hon. gentleman has shown is necessary. Surely it would be better to do work of this kind properly by putting in a substantial amount rather than to fritter away $4,000 or $5,000 here and there for these little docks. I am glad the hon. gentleman has confined himself to what is a right public user of money for dredging purposes. I hope his influence will prevail and that he will get a sufficient grant for the purpose.

Mr. AMES. I would like to say a word to endorse what my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has said. Sometimes we on this side are considered as making frivolous objections and as objecting to every item of expenditure proposed. But it is only when we consider the money to be practically wasted, the expenditure for purely political purposes, wharfs built for which there are no vessels and where there is practically no water or traffic, that we object. But here you have the case of a thriving seaport at one of the termini of two railways, where there is an international steamship line, and which is a port of call for a number of local steamship lines—any expenditure to make that harbour what it should be, we are not at all prepared to object to. But let me call attention to these two expenditures side by side—one at Scotch cove, White Point, $10,000, and the other at Yarmouth harbour, $10,000. Scotch cove is a tiny fishing village at the extreme northern end of Cape Breton, only three or four miles away from a good harbour, but where a hook of land comes around and makes it possible for a few fishing boats to hang on when the wind does not blow from the north. It is proposed to spend a lot of money here making a breakwater. And a much larger place like Yarmouth is getting exactly the same amount. The opposition has taken a patriotic stand when they advocate expenditure when there is really need for it and where it will be a benefit for more than a small locality. To such expenditure we have no objection when it is wisely and honestly made, and if the minister had asked a considerably larger amount for Yarmouth we would have had no objection.

Mr. FISHER. The work of dredging at Yarmouth has been going on a number of years and will probably continue. This $10,000 does not necessarily limit the work to be done in Yarmouth harbour because we have also a general dredging vote for the maritime provinces from which the government dredges are paid. It is expected that the dredge 'Canada' will spend most of the coming season in Yarmouth harbour, and she will not be able to do that on $10,000 but will have to be paid out of the general vote as well. With regard to Scotch cove, the work to be done there, when completed, will be done once for all. It is not a continuous work as at Yarmouth, and therefore it is not fair to make a comparison between the two.

Mr. DANIEL. Where is the dredge 'Fielding' at work?

Mr. FISHER. She has not begun the season's work yet. She has been at Pictou all winter.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this work to be done by contract?

Mr. FISHER. Our own dredge 'Canada' will do it.

Mr. SPROULE. Then there will only be a charge to pay the wages and running expenses.

Mr. FISHER. The amount now voted I estimate will run the 'Canada' a certain time.

Mr. J. D. REID. Do the government feed the men on their dredges as well as pay their wages?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. The 'Canada' was only charged $14.36 worth of provisions last season. That may account for the government dredges doing so little work. If these men were only on the 'Arctic' they would fare differently.

Prince Edward Island—Higgin's shore pier—part reconstruction of and repairs to pier, $1,500.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Will this finish the work?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. LEFURGEY. What length of wharf are they putting up there?

Mr. FISHER. We are not adding to the length of the wharf but repairing it.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Was it not repaired last year?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, but the work was not completed.

Miminegash harbour, Prince Edward Island—extension of northern breakwater inwardly and repairs, $2,000.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Was there not a recommendation to the department to extend that breakwater out southerly?

Mr. FISHER. This is for extending the piers.

Mr. LEFURGEY. There was a contract?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, for $2,375 and that was completed. There was also $500 spent on the roadway over the sand beach to the wharf. We now expect to spend this amount of $2,000, of which $1,800 is a re-vote.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Will this complete ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Point Prim island, Prince Edward Island—wharf, $5,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is under contract and will be gone on with this summer.

Rustico harbour, Prince Edward Island—breakwater on Robinson's island, south side of entrance to harbour, $2,500.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Has the construction of these works improved the depth of water ?

Mr. FISHER. The works are not yet finished and we cannot tell exactly what the result will be.

Summerside harbour, Prince Edward Island—breakwater, $75,000.

Mr. LEFURGEY. How is this progressing ?

Mr. FISHER. Pretty well, I think. It is difficult to prepare labour and stone.

Mr. LEFURGEY. There can be no such difficulty in Prince Edward Island. Have the specifications been changed in any regard ?

Mr. FISHER. I am told not.

Mr. LEFURGEY. How much of the contract has been completed ?

Mr. FISHER. The amount of the contract is $113,942.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I understand that this breakwater is being built to deepen the harbour and create a current out to the lighthouse to carry away the sand. At the present time parts of the harbour are largely sanded up, and I would like to know if the department have arranged any schedule for dredging it in certain places.

Mr. FISHER. We cannot do any dredging until the breakwater is completed.

Mr. LEFURGEY. You can do dredging in Summerside harbour at any time. There is nothing in the building of the breakwater to prevent dredging. If a third boat is to be put on next winter it is very important that the dredging should be done this season. A request was sent to the minister from the Summerside Board of Trade to that effect.

Mr. FISHER. I will look into the matter.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I asked a question on December 3 regarding dredging in Summerside harbour and also in Alberton harbour. The minister replied that he had received requisitions for dredging there, but had no schedule rates at the time. The department ought to know whether they are going to carry on that work.

Mr. FISHER. We have not arranged a programme for that at the present time.

Mr. LEFURGEY. What dredges have you available for that work ?

Mr. FISHER. We have dredges at work in Prince Edward Island, and I shall be glad to see if one of them can be sent to Summerside harbour.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Will the minister consider the case of Alberton also ?

Mr. FISHER. I will look into the matter and see what can be done.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is the dredge 'Fielding' any use at all ? I understand that it is not.

Mr. FISHER. She is one of the best dredges built for certain purposes. She requires deep water. She could not go into Summerside harbour.

Mr. J. D. REID. I understand that she cannot take on board very much of the material she dredges, as she is not built high enough on the sides, and for that reason is an absolute failure. I have heard that from reliable men.

Mr. FISHER. Last year we had not a scow to go with the 'Fielding.' But this year there will be scows attending on her to carry off the material.

Mr. J. D. REID. She was built to do deep water dredging without scows, because when the water is a little rough scows cannot go alongside of her. It turns out from what the minister says that she has proved a failure for what she was built, as she is now to be used in the same way as any other dredge.

Mr. FISHER. No, the 'Fielding' was built for work in large harbours. She has been tried in localities for which she was not fitted. She was primarily constructed for St. John harbour, but she has not been able to go there yet, although we hope that she will be working there before next winter. This year there will be scows attending on her to take away the material.

Mr. J. D. REID. What about the dredge 'Montague' ? Has not she been idle and also turned out a failure ?

Mr. FISHER. She is working all right.

Mr. J. D. REID. Where did she work last summer ?

Mr. FISHER. In Victoria harbour, P.E.I.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. She was only working a couple of months, and did very poor work She was under repairs nearly all the time she was there, and only worked two or three hours a day.

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that she is a very good dredge and does effective work. She is a new dredge, and it happens that there was an accident which delayed her for a considerable time ; but she is a very good dredge.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I know to the contrary. Whoever supplied the minister with that information has not supplied it correctly. If the department send an inspector down, they will find that the statement I make is absolutely correct.

Mr. FISHER. I certainly will inquire into it, because I am informed that it is not a correct statement of the facts.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I am quite sure the statement is incorrect, because I know that on some days she took out a thousand yards, which she could not do working only two or three hours.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Was there a scarcity of labour in regard to the construction of that breakwater?

Mr. FISHER. I said the contractors had found a difficulty to get labour and to get stone.

Mr. LEFURGEY. There is any quantity of stone on the mainland. Is there any limited time within which this contract is to be completed?

Mr. FISHER. The contract was to be completed on the 27th of July, 1907. This vote is for repairs. The contract was let by tender; three tenders were received. I have only the name of the successful tenderer. He was the lowest of the three. The contract was dated 11th July, 1905. This vote is not for the contract, but for repairs.

Campbellton—wharf extension, repairs, &c., $15,000.

Mr. FOWLER. How much has been expended on this Campbellton work?

Mr. FISHER. $15,000 last year. Out of a vote of $24,800, $11,000 was not expended.

Mr. FOWLER. There was some difficulty some time ago between certain people who used this wharf at Campbellton in connection with berths for vessels lying there. It seemed that the firm of Shives & Co., who formerly owned the wharf, or the bit of railway line from the main line down to the wharf, had certain privileges granted them by the government which were not accorded to other people who did business at this wharf, the other mill owners who loaded vessels with deals at this wharf. Has that matter been settled ?

Mr. FISHER. The department does not know anything about that. The wharf is not a public wharf and we have no information as to the details of the berths there. I think that would be managed by the Marine and Fisheries Department.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the Department of Public Works own the wharf?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, that new wharf. I believe we bought it from a man called Shives. The Railway Department uses part of it for its lines there and the Marine and Fisheries Department manages it.

Mr. FOWLER. Complaint was made the last few years. I know that papers were sent to me at the time showing that when steamers would come in this Mr. Shives, owing to some arrangement he had with the government, would get a preference. That statement was made at any rate and telegrams passed back and forth.

Mr. FISHER. As a matter of fact we expropriated the wharf and there was no condition at all. He may claim something of that kind, but he has no right to it.

Mr. FOWLER. I know a claim was made that other people had to wait. because I had a telegram from the Richards Company, which I think was a rival company.

Mr. FISHER. There are people in New Brunswick who make claims that they cannot substantiate.

Mr. FOWLER. I don't know of any. I think their claims are generally pretty well substantiated.

Mr. CROCKET. When is it expected that the work at Campbellton will be completed?

Mr. FISHER. It is expected this vote will complete it.

Mr. CROCKET. This $24,800 will complete the work that is now going on at Campbellton?

Mr. FISHER. No, we are asking for $4,000 more. Last year the estimate was $24,800, of which $11,000 was not expended, and we are asking for $15,000, which means $4,000 more.

Caraquet wharf—approach, ice-breakers, &c., $2,000.

Mr. FOWLER. I notice that a great deal of money has been expended in this county where Caraquet wharf is situated. It is a pretty expensive county ; it is represented by my hon. and genial friend from Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) who sits on the government side. His county has more money expended in it than perhaps all the rest of New Brunswick put together. I must congratulate the hon. member for Gloucester on the great pull he seems to have either with Sir Wilfrid Laurier or with the government. He is something like the king, who when he was Prince of Wales, got the assistance of the present Canadian Prime Minister to get him into his present position. I notice that last year the county of Gloucester had $29,000, and for the year 1908 it is to get $23,000, there is $52,000 in two years. I do not go back any further, but I dare say this is a pretty fair average. It does not seem quite fair to the rest of the province. Gloucester is a county which borders upon the sea, but we have other counties in New Brunswick which border upon the sea.

The hon. member for Restigouche does not seem to have had his fair share. Of course he had quite an expenditure on these wharfs at Campbellton and Dalhousie but the hon. member for Kent, N.B., (Mr. LeBlanc) has fallen far short. The hon. member for Kent has been pretty badly used by this present administration. He does not seem to have the pull that the hon. member for Gloucester has. The hon. member for Kent, we expected, was going to be translated to another Chamber. But that even did not happen; nor does he get the compensation by extra grants that he might be expected to because the hon. member for Gloucester scoops in every thing in sight. There is nothing left for the hon. member for Kent and not a great deal left for the hon. member for Restigouche.

Mr. FISHER. Not even for the hon. member for King's-Sunbury.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not know who that man is.

Mr. FISHER. King's-Albert.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. Minister is not as well posted in geography as he might be. The county of Albert gets absolutely nothing; not even the winter port of Herring Cove that the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) was going to do so much for. It is entirely left out. The government only give to the hon. member for Restigouche a wharf at Campbellton and just a little bit to the county of Kent represented by my hon. friend who sits across the way. Many of these expenditures, I have no doubt, are quite right and proper but it does seem to me that it is appropriating a little too much in one direction and not making it general enough. It does seem to show that the hon. member for Gloucester must have a very strong pull, a very strong influence with the government to get all these things. I have no doubt that these appropriations secure for my hon. friend the majorities by which that county has always returned him to the House. I would like to hear what the hon. member for Gloucester has to say about it.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Chockfish—improvement of outlet of river, $1,500.

Mr. FOWLER.

Mr. DANIEL. Where is Chockfish?

Mr. FISHER. In Kent.

Mr. DANIEL. The hon. member for Kent county is getting something?

Mr. FISHER. Oh, yes.

Clifton (Stonehaven) breakwater—improvements and repairs, $2,000.

Mr. GANONG. Is this Clifton in King's county?

Mr. FISHER. No; in Gloucester.

Mr. GANONG. What is the total cost?

Mr. FISHER. $42,000 altogether.

Dalhousie—harbour improvements, &c., $7,000.

Mr. CROCKET. What will be the total cost of these improvements at Dalhousie?

Mr. FISHER. We are asking $7,000 revote out of the $39,500 voted last year.

Mr. CROCKET. Will that complete the work?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mispec—extension of eastern or outer breakwater, $6,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it the intention of the department to proceed with this work this season?

Mr. FISHER. Yes; I think the contract was awarded the other day.

Mr. DANIEL. What was the amount?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot remember the details, but it will be covered by this vote.

North Head breakwater—wharf, Grand Manan, $10,000.

Mr. GANONG. This is the most peculiar vote in the whole list; it must be getting grey headed by this; the type for it must have been kept standing since 1900.

Mr. FISHER. I awarded a contract for this work the other day.

Mr. GANONG. How much?

Mr. FISHER. About $27,000; I forget the exact sum.

Mr. GANONG. That is very interesting news.

Mr. CROCKET. But this vote is only for $10,000.

Mr. FISHER. I will probably ask a supplementary for the rest.

Mr. GANONG. Petitions have been presented to the department for wharfs at two other points in the county of Charlotte. One of these is at White Head, parish of Grand Manan, where there is a fishing village, with a population of 300 or 400 without any accommodation whatever in the way of a wharf. The people are large fishers of fish, and they have offered to supply the location for the wharf. At Leonardville, on Deer island, the wharf is in such a bad state of repair that the steamer, which calls three or four times a week, cannot land. Both these places are sheltered, the wharfs would not be liable to be carried away by a heavy sea, and the work is not expensive. Will the minister make a memorandum?

Mr. FISHER. I have done so.

Oak Point—wharf, $8,000.

Mr. WILMOT. Where is Oak Point?

Mr. FISHER. In Northumberland county. This work is under contract.

Mr. LOGGIE. It is ten miles below Chatham, on the Miramichi river.

Mr. GANONG. Is that where Loggie's factory is located?

Mr. LOGGIE. No, sir.

Petit Rocher—breakwater, including connection with shore, $6,500.

Mr. FISHER. This is in Gloucester county; it is under contract.

Mr. GANONG. Is this to be the winter port of the future?

Mr. FISHER. I hope it will be a great harbour.

Mr. GANONG. I understood the member for Gloucester was negotiating with the Hamburg-American and other lines to make this port a call.

Mr. FISHER. If he can get them there it will be good for the trade of the country.

Quaco harbour—extension of east pier, $10,000.

Mr. DANIEL. What work has been done, what is it intended to do, and what will be the cost when complete?

Mr. FISHER. The existing breakwater is to be extended. There has been an expenditure there already of about $40,000, and the total expenditure will probably be $27,000.

Mr. DANIEL. More than has been already expended?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. This vote will not finish the work?

Mr. FISHER. No.

St. John river, including tributaries, $6,000.

Mr. CROCKET. I would call attention to the necessity of something being done to improve the St. John river channel between Fredericton and Woodstock. There are seven or eight points between these two places at which there are gravel bars and other obstructions to navigation. If these were removed, and I am advised they could be by the use of a low water dredge, at comparatively small cost, we would have a channel which would admit of navigation between Fredericton and Woodstock by low draft boats for practically the whole season of navigation. At present the residents along the St. John river rely on a steamboat which on account of the very bad condition of the river between these two points has not been able to make more than twenty or thirty trips during the whole season of navigation. In 1901 or 1902 Mr. Tarte, then Minister of Public Works had a low-water dredge constructed near Fredericton for use in the river between Fredericton and Woodstock. It was put at work at a point five or six miles above Fredericton and dredged a channel through a bar at that place which channel is still in good condition. Mr. Tarte then said that it was his intention to continue the work along the river and to provide a continuous channel between Fredericton and Woodstock. However, the dredge after making a channel through the bar I spoke of, was taken off and nothing has since been done. This is a matter of the greatest concern to the people along the St. John. As many members are aware that district is one of the best settled in the province. The people have no railway accommodation whatever barring the Gibson branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway for eight or nine miles along the east bank of the river St. John, above Fredericton. They have to rely entirely upon the steamboat for communication with Fredericton and Woodstock, That is all they have other than by stage and their own teams. It seems that the government have decided to construct the National Transcontinental Railway by the back route in New Brunswick, and the hopes which the people of the St. John had in that regard have disappeared so that they must rely on the river for communication between Fredericton and Woodstock. I think the least the government can do is to give a reasonable appropriation to put the channel in good condition. I therfore appeal to the minister and press upon him the necessity of something being done, and I trust he will be able to see his way clear to make provision, if necessary, in the supplementary estimates, so that the residents of the St. John river valley may be afforded the accommodation which they so much need.

Mr. FISHER. I must confess that a good deal of what my hon. friend has said is new to me but I will be very glad to look into the matter, to consult the engineers and see what can be done.

Mr. CARVELL. I would feel like endorsing the remarks of my hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket). A person can hardly understand the necessity of this work without going on the ground and seeing conditions. You can hardly imagine a territory sixty-five miles in length which has been long settled—it was settled by united empire loyalists 125 years ago—having no means of communication whatever, except that about twenty-five days in the year they have steamboat communication. In fact the conditions for steamboating have now become so obsolete that I understand the steamer is taken off this year. Possibly even dredging could not make the river navigable all summer, but the department I believe could dredge out a channel and it would be a great boon to the people in that part of New Brunswick.

Mr. WILMOT. How many dredges are employed on the St. John river?

Mr. FISHER. There is one employed there all the time and sometimes another.

Mr. WILMOT. Under whose direction?

Mr. FISHER. The department here directs where they shall do their work.

Mr. WILMOT. There is great necessity at different points on the lower St. John for the river being dredged. There are some points notably at Oromocto where there are serious obstructions. The traffic between Fredericton and St. John is large in the summer and there is a great deal of difficulty when the water is at low ebb in getting freight over the shoals. For years nothing has been done in dredging and I would urge the necessity of having some dredging done.

Mr. FISHER. That work is done out of a general vote for dredging in the maritime provinces, and has been done by government dredges. My hon. friend is mistaken in saying that there is no work being done on the St. John river. Between Fredericton and St. John there is a dredge working regularly and sometimes two, but I will see what can be done about it.

River St. John—wharfs in tidal waters—contribution to local government, $5,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is a regular vote, that is done every year.

Mr. WILMOT. I do not understand the policy of the provincial government and the Dominion government in combining to build these wharfs. That is a policy that does not apply in any other part of the Dominion.

Mr. FISHER. I am told that this system was established a good many years ago when the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was Minister of Marine, and it has been carried on ever since under a sort of arrangement with the provincial government.

Mr. WILMOT. I cannot see the advantage of it, and should think it would cause more or less confusion in construction work.

Mr. FISHER. These are small wharfs cheaply built and the work is carried on by the provincial government. We contribute an equal amount up to $5,000 each year. Some years it runs fully up to the $5,000 and others not quite. That system has been carried on for a good many years; I would not care to say that it is the very best but I suppose it really has secured the economical construction of a lot of small wharfs.

Mr. WILMOT. That system is not carried out in any other province than New Brunswick.

Mr. FISHER. Not in a general way, sometimes individual cases are.

St. Andrews—dredging, $5,000.

Mr. GANONG. Is it figured that this will finish the dredging of the bar at St. Andrews?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, it was partly done last summer and is to be continued this year.

Mr. GANONG. That is a very desirable work and will save a lot of delay in handling traffic. There is another item to which I would like to call attention while you have a dredge in Charlotte, and it is of the utmost importance that this should be looked after. The most prosperous fishing village in that county, where we do a fishing business of $1,500,000 a year, is Seal cove, Grand Manan. There has never been any dredging at the mouth of the little cove where the fishermen draw up their boats, and during the last few years a sea wall of sand has been thrown up which interferes with their getting into the harbour. If it is possible at all for the minister to send that dredge to Grand Manan to remove a portion of this sea wall and give them a free passage into the only place of protection they have there for their boats, he would be doing a great service to the community. A few years ago the Public Works Department considered the possibility of building a pier to protect this portion of the harbour; but I think they decided the location was such, it would be very expensive indeed to put a pier there which would stand, owing to the exposed location. But if this dredging could be done, I am satisfied that great good would result.

Mr. FISHER. Would the dredging alone, without protection work, be of much benefit?

Mr. GANONG. They never had any dredging done there and that accumulation of sand has been taking place for the last fifty years. It is the opinion of the people in that locality that if this passage were open again you would probably not require dredging again there for another fifty years.

Mr. WILMOT. With reference to the dredging at St. John one of the officials of the Department of Public Works told me they had not dredges sufficient to do the work necessary. What are your plans for the coming season in those waters?

Mr. FISHER. We have hardly been able yet to lay out a programme and would not undertake to say what can be done until authorized by parliament. As soon as the votes are passed, we will proceed to let out the work. It is quite true that in the maritime provinces our plant is hardly equal to the demand, and I feel disposed to ask money for the purpose of adding to it this year.

Mr. J. D. REID. Surely some plan must have been laid out before preparing these estimates?

Mr. FISHER. There is a large vote for dredging in the maritime provinces, but not for contract dredging. When these items pass the House I shall endeavour to try and get some of the work done by contract in addition to what our own dredges can do.

St. John harbour—improvements, repairs and dredging, $200,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the hon. minister explain how much of the work at present in hand this $200,000 will accomplish and to what extent the government intend proceeding with the works there? Do they intend to carry out the dredging in the harbour and permit the full length of the thousand feet of wharf to be built, and do the government intend sending a dredge of their own there or to do the work by contract with private persons? I understand from the press that it did not take the right hon. the First Minister very long to see the urgent necessity of the work at St. John being rushed with the utmost speed, and I presume the report is correct that the acting minister received a telegram from him urging him to expedite this work as fast as possible. I would like to hear the First Minister say how he proposes to do this work and whether he intends to improve the channel in the harbour of St. John as well as do the necessary dredging for the wharf?

Mr. FISHER. This vote is for the purpose of completing what is known as the Maze contract for dredging near Sand Point wharf. The St. John city delegation which came to see the government a little while ago asked for very considerable more dredging there on the understanding that the government was to prepare a bed for the building of the wharf by the city of St. John.

Mr. DANIEL. To prepare what bed?

Mr. FISHER. In the harbour of St. John the city is prepared to build some wharfs, but in consequence of the nature of the bottom it is impossible to build until a large amount of dredging is taken out so as to bring the space down to hard pan on which the wharfs can safely lie. It will be necessary to dredge to a depth of about thirty feet below the lowest water. Mr. Hyman seems to have undertaken with the city of St. John to do that, and last year a certain portion was done and a certain part of the wharf was built by the city of St. John, but not quite completed. The city wish that wharf to be extended and are asking the government to dredge out a space on which it may lie.

Mr. DANIEL. That is the addition to the first wharf?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. They have asked that a thousand feet should eventually be dredged out for a thousand feet extension, but they only ask that six hundred feet should be done this year. I hope to do it. This vote is not for that purpose. It will depend on what the House decides later on in the session.

Mr. DANIEL. This vote does not include the addition to the original wharf?

Mr. FISHER. No, it is for the purpose of finishing the Maze contract which does not include that dredging.

Mr. DANIEL. Does the minister intend bringing in supplementary estimates in order to do this?

Mr. FISHER. I hope in a day or two to lay the estimates on the table.

Mr. DANIEL. He does not feel like stating that now?

Mr. FISHER. No, I am not in a position just yet.

Mr. DANIEL. With regard to the channel in the harbour of St. John, has the department come to the conclusion to do anything this season?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, I hope to have the 'Fielding' there before the end of the year at work.

Shippegan harbour—improvements at Shippegan gully, $6,000.

Mr. GANONG. What is the total cost?

Mr. FISHER. This is to complete. The total cost will be $15,940.

Mr. GANONG. Is this to be the port of call between London and Yokohama? Perhaps the hon member for Gloucester (Mr. O. Turgeon) will tells us.

Mr. FISHER. There is a large choice of ports down there.

Mr. GANONG. We would like to hear from the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon).

Mr. FISHER. You must not be too curious.

Anse à L'Ilot, Quebec—landing pier, $2,500.

Mr. MONK. Before going into the details of the expenditure on harbours and rivers of the province of Quebec, I would like to ask my hon. friend if the government intend carrying out the suggestion of the Transportation Commission named in 1903, which has long since made its report to the government? As far as I can judge from the estimates to-night, the government has laid aside the recommendations of that commission except in some unimportant details, and has continued, since that report has been before it, the same course as it did previously, namely, of laying out certain public money on public buildings or wharfs here and there, according to the recommendation of members who represent the counties interested or in deference to some influence or suggestions powerful enough to obtain the expenditure of public money. But, as I understood the intention of the government when it named that commission, it was that we should have before us as soon as possible a comprehensive scheme which would enable us to solve the problem of transportation, which is daily becoming more urgent, and, having been fully informed as to the best solution of that problem, we should apply ourselves, if the recommendations of the commission had the approval of the government and parliament, to carrying out that scheme. Now, that report has been in the Department of Public Works for over two years, it has been printed, and, although it has not attracted much attention, it seems to have met the approval of everybody who has had anything to do with it. Yet, this year some $700,000 is to be spent on public buildings in the province of Ontario and nearly $500,000 in the province of Quebec. How are the sites for those public buildings selected? How is it that a public building is erected in one village instead of in another? It seems to be a matter of arbitrary decision by the government, acting under the influence of the strongest pressure. If from public buildings you turn to harbours and rivers, which more particularly concern the question of transportation, you find that last year we spent on that item in the province of Ontario about three quarters of a million, exactly on the same plan or want of plan that we have been acting upon for the past ten years. In the province of Quebec last year we spent about three-quarters of a million on wharfs and piers, built here or there, under no rule, but as the government decides under pressure from the members of parliament who represent the constituencies concerned or under some other strong influence. This year my hon. friend asks for the province of Quebec about the same amount and for the province of Ontario a larger figure than that of last year. These expenditures seem to be made without any rule, any guiding principle or any system. It is very difficult for one sitting to your left, Mr. Chairman, to take any particular case and to say that a wharf should not be built there because there is no necessity for it, because this immediately attracts to him a large amount of disapproval from the locality concerned. That is why I am criticising in a general way. Now, let us look for a moment at the two principal recommendations of the Transportation Commission in regard to these two provinces; and let me say that these recommendations are made by experts, by men specially chosen by the government because of their particular knowledge of the question, and these recommendations have met with general approval and with the entire concurrence of the government. They have recommended improvements on the great lakes. They have recommended equipping immediately, without a moment's delay, the port of Midland, for two purposes —for transmission by rail from Midland to Montreal and other lower ports, and as the entrance to the Trent canal which canal should be terminated without a moment's delay. They recommend equipping with elevators, and preparing in a general way, exactly as the ports of Superior and Duluth on Lake Superior in the United States are equipped, the port of Depot Harbour.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but he will understand that we are not discussing the principle of these votes. We are on the item of a pier at Anse à l'Ilot. These remarks should be made when the Speaker is in the chair.

Mr. MONK. I rose when you called the vote for harbours and rivers in the province of Quebec, but did not catch your eye.

Mr. FISHER. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I hope this will not be taken as a precedent. When we come to the individual items, I hope we shall confine ourselves to those items.

Mr. MONK. What I say applies to all the items for the province of Quebec, and will abridge the time of the committee. With regard to the province of Ontario the recommendations of that commission are general as to the improvements of the ports of the great lakes and as to the aids to navigation. With regard to the province of Quebec, the commission has recommended that we should nationalize and render free the ports of Montreal and Quebec. They say this is urgent, that it should be done at once. They recommend in detail some important improvements on the St. Lawrence river; for instance, the widening of the channel from 300 feet, where it is in some places, and where wrecks and strandings continually occur, to 800 or 1,000 feet. They recommend rendering the channel safe from Montreal to the sea. They recommend the same thing at Quebec. On the 19th of March last, Mr. Reford, who was for a time the chairman of the commission and took an important part in its reports, writing to the newspapers, recommended that we should without any delay start the work of building the Georgian Bay canal.

Now confining my remarks to some of these recommendations, I would like to ask the government in connection with this item, what are its intentions, after waiting two years or more, as to carrying out the recommendations of the commission with regard to these two ports in the province of Quebec? If it is urgent and necessary that without delay they should be made free ports and maintained as national ports, is the government going to carry out that recommendation, and when? They have expended I think at this moment, in round figures, some $600,000 on a survey of the Georgian Bay canal, to ascertain if it is feasible to make it a great waterway. In view of the pressing communication of the chairman of the commission to the newspapers made last month, has the government arrived at any conclusion in regard to undertaking that waterway? How far has the government proceeded? Does it intend to carry out without delay the plan recommended by the commissioners? I think, Mr. Chairman, that these remarks are pertinent to the item we have under consideration. If the government says, as by its Act it has said, we intend for the present to take no notice of these recommendations of the commission, and will not announce any policy as regards, nationalizing St. John, Halifax, Montreal and Quebec, we have no policy with regard to the Georgian Bay canal, and we do not intend to carry out in detail the other recommendations of the commissioners, but we intend adhering to the old system of building wharfs and piers here and there without any settled rule or system. For my part, I do not see any object in criticising each item so far as the province of Quebec is concerned. There is no doubt that a wharf at many of the places mentioned in these estimates under the heading of the province of Quebec, would be of some utility. A wharf is always useful, although in many cases wharfs have been built within the past ten years that have not given the government sufficient revenue to begin to pay the salary of a caretaker. It seems to me under these circumstances that the question is pertinent, and that it would be far more systematic and far more wise, in our country where we require to solve as quickly as possible the problem of cheap, easy and quick transportation, to take up that report of the commission, which has cost something, which has been elaborated with great care by able men, and to say, Here is a recommendation that we are going to carry out. That report, probably the most important we have had before us on the subject since confederation, has been laid aside by the government; while every year we are called upon to build small wharfs here and there, public buildings in places where they are scarcely asked for. We have not even from the government a declaration as to its policy with regard to that scheme. I think it would be better for us to take up that report, and if there are parts of it that are impracticable, lay them aside. But if, as I believe, it is a sensible, wise and proper report, carry it out as quickly as possible. It will take millions to do so, but carry it out as quickly as possible, instead of frittering away the public money, as we have been doing in the past, in building unnecessary works, and without any policy of a consistent character.

Mr. FISHER. Although my hon. friend is altogether out of order, I will reply very briefly to his remarks. In the first place, supposing we were to undertake the immediate completion of every thing the commission has recommended, I do not think that would in any way relieve us from the necessity of doing a lot of local work for the benefit of the people in these different localities. The hon. member speaks of the pressure of members of parliament, but the pressure of members of parliament represents the pressure of the people of the country, not of the members themselves, not in their particular interest, but because they represent the Canadian people. That is the only reason why the government pay heed to their representations. Even if we plunged deeply into the magnificent schemes that have been suggested by the Transportation Commission and did every thing they asked, it would not relieve us from the necessity of having a long list of these public works every session of parliament.

Now as to the recommendations of the Transportation Commission, my hon. friend seems to forget that for some years back we have been to a large extent carrying out their recommendations. I will only commence, in the west, at the great work we have been doing on the River Kaministiquia at Fort William, and at Port Arthur also, where we are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars. We are improving these two ports for the benefit of the nation, and to that extent we are nationalizing them. On the eastern side of the Georgian bay we are doing another large work. Coming down to the entrance of the Welland canal we find large works at Port Colborne, and coming east a little farther we find improvements in the canal system of the St. Lawrence. We have been spending large sums of money, I am almost afraid to say how much, in plans, specifications and surveys of the Georgian Bay canal. Then when we come down to what we call the national port of Montreal, we find that we are aiding that port enormously by improving the channel of the St. Lawrence, by lighting and dredging it, by increasing its depth and width, and making it safer. In the city of Montreal we are aiding the harbour commissioners by advancing them money at a comparatively low rate of interest with which they are able to carry out great works under a commission. We have recently reconstituted that commission by appointing business men of a high character, and have made it more efficient than ever before. Going a little further east we find the ports of Sorel and Three Rivers, where we have been expending considerable sums of money, making them available for ocean transport. Then in the city of Quebec we have been expending large sums of money in building a breakwater, piers, and improving the harbour. Going further down the gulf, we have been dredging out this last season the obstructions which interfered with ocean navigation. Then again in St. John harbour, which is the subject of much comment by the Transportation Commission, we are doing the work which they have suggested, and in the supplementary estimates for this year we propose to bring down further large sums for the same purpose. All this work has been done in improving the transportation facilities of the country, not simply for the benefit of a few great lines. The maritime provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island must not be cut out from these magnificent schemes, and must not be left out of consideration in the expenditure of public money. I make these brief remarks because my hon. friend has brought up the general question, although I think he was out of order in doing so.

Mr. MONK. I would like to have a ruling from you, Mr. Chairman, as to whether I am out of order or not. I am speaking of the vote of $747,450 for harbours and rivers in the province of Quebec, and I take advantage of that vote to ask whether we are going to carry out the recommendations of the Transportation Commission. My hon. friend the acting Minister of Public Works says that I am entirely out of order. If I am I do not wish to take up the time of the committee, but it seems to me that I am absolutely in order in discussing this vote in order to find out if we are going to carry out these recommendations.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would not like to see the discussion followed out on these lines, because, as I understand it, the committee has to discuss what has been referred to it by the House. This item has been referred to the committee, and it is desirable to take up this item and dispose of it without introducing other questions.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier is speaking of the whole item.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I did not put the question as to the whole item, but I put it as to this one item.

Mr. FISHER. When I spoke of the hon. member being out of order——

Mr. MONK. I do not think I was out of order.

Mr. FISHER. I do not wish to say that in any offensive way at all.

Mr. MONK. I do not want to take up the time of the committee uselessly.

Mr. FISHER. No; but in dealing with these items in the whole of the provinces it has been our practice to take up each individual item and dispose of it by itself. Although the whole item for Quebec is read, just as the whole item for Nova Scotia was read, and just as the whole item for New Brunswick was read, we take up each individual item, and we do not discuss Quebec, Nova Scotia, or New Brunswick as a whole. We are now proceeding upon the same principle. It is only upon that line that I said that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier was out of order.

Mr. MONK. I noticed that some members of the committee who represent the province of Nova Scotia here seemed to approve of the minister when he said that they had to do something for Nova Scotia. Do these hon. members know what the recommendations of the Transportation Commission are with respect to the maritime provinces? They are for the immediate nationalizing and putting on a proper footing, to enable us to compete with the American ports, of the ports of St. John and Halifax. There are other recommendations for the maritime provinces that, to my mind, are more urgent than what I find in the estimates for these two provinces, so that I do not think, in advocating as I do here, the immediate carrying out of the recommendations of the Transportation Commission, I am endeavouring to do any harm to the maritime provinces. But I refer particularly to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, as it is with them that I am better acquainted. My hon. friend says that they are carrying out the recommendations of the Transportation Commission. I do not want to take up the time of the committee in discussing that. If they carried out these two recommendations as regards Montreal and Quebec, I hold that the country around Quebec and Montreal for miles up and down the river would be more benefited by the carrying out of these recommendations of the Transportation Commission as to these important points than it will be by all of this frittered expenditure in detail. The answer to that is that the government have not adopted that recommendation of the Transportation Commission. It has not nationalized either of these ports or any other ports. Montreal has not received any money from the government in the direction of the nationalization of that port. Neither has Quebec. I will admit that the machinery recently provided by the government for the administration of the harbour of Montreal is undoubtedly an improvement upon the old one. But it is an old system. It is not a new system. It is not an ideal system, as my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) says, and it is not the new system that is recommended. I take then some of these improvements in harbours and rivers, not only in Quebec, but in the other provinces. No doubt there are urgent calls everywhere, but why cannot we declare, in the first place, that we adopt that recommendation; that we adopt that report, as we do all the other reports, even the most trivial, that are made to this government, and set aside every year a certain amount for the carrying out of the report, instead of laying that report entirely aside and pursuing the system we have pursued for years? In 1903 the pretext for naming this commission was precisely that we wanted to adopt a proper system of transportation in Canada, and that we meant to carry it out. My hon. friend has taken very great care to avoid saying that the government proposed to adopt the policy recommended by the Transportation Commission. You never can get the government to say of that report: We adopt it or we reject it. If they do something which happens to be included in the recommendations of the Transportation Commission they say: You see that we are carrying out that report; but the system of transportation and the equipment of our ports which they recommend have not been carried out. My hon. friend has pointed out that some works were executed on the Kaministiquia river. Yes; there have been some improvements there, some dredging; but that is not what the Transportation Commission recommended. They say that as that is the head of Canadian navigation, you must immediately nationalize the ports of Port Arthur and Fort William, just as you must nationalize the ports of Montreal, Quebec, St. John and Halifax; that the land there must be immediately taken possession of by the government while it is cheap and easily available, and that certain works must be executed immediately. Nothing of that kind has been done any more than has been done in Montreal. It seems to me that when we vote millions every year, as we do here, it is competent for members of this House, instead of criticising every item individually, to direct the attention of the government to this report, which has been prepared by competent men, and to ask what you are going to do about it. Are you going to carry it out, or are you going to continue the old system?

Mr. BERGERON. I believe that what my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has said is perfectly in order and to the point, and that the best way to reply to the hon. acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fisher) would be to read to him 'Hansard' between the years 1879 and 1896.

Mr. FISHER. Oh, do not do that.

Mr. BERGERON. During the time the Conservative party were in power all these items appeared in the estimates, and year after year we read the very same names. You would imagine that it was a perpetual payment that is expected every year by the places which are mentioned. The hon. gentlemen opposite, when they sat here—and they may have been right—declared that this money was being spent for nothing, that it was a corrupt expenditure, and that this was the way which had been adopted of buying up counties. The hon. acting minister answers our criticism by saying that these recommendations are not made by members of parliament. No; but members of parliament are pressed by their electors. We were promised, in 1896, that if there was a change of government there would be a change of methods. But the methods have not been changed. Hon. gentlemen are in a better position than we were before 1896 by reason of the report of this commission. They can answer to these people who are clamouring for these little bits of work: We have appointed a commission and we are only going to carry out the report of the commission. But my hon. friend goes further than that. He is ready to accept the proposition of the commission, he is ready to make further large expenditures which it proposes, and which I think may be right. I believe that no amount of money should be spared to put the ports of Halifax and St. John in proper shape. I believe that any amount of money spent in Montreal would be well spent, and, as my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier says, instead of squandering over three-quarters of a million in little bits of wharfs and pieces of work right and left, if that money were spent upon the ports of Halifax and Montreal, or any other national harbour in Canada, it would be more advantageous to the country. As my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier says, and as the hon. acting minister knows, there must be an end to this. We know what it means; it means that if the minister does not give the people of such and such a county a little bit of work he may lose a few votes. But the people must be educated upon this great question. The time must come when they will be educated. Why does not the hon. gentleman commence that work of education ? The whole system pursued by the government in the distribution of these little works is with the idea of corrupting the people, who in the end have to pay the cost out of their own pockets. I endorse all that has been said by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier. If, instead of criticising the speech of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk), the minister would rise and say that in the future he would put an end to these useless expenditures, he would be doing himself credit, and he might have a chance of retaining the portfolio of Public Works, which is one of the most desirable of all the portfolios.

Mr. J. D. REID. As an Ontario member I endorse what has been said by my hon. friends (Mr. Monk and Mr. Bergeron) in favour of equipping the port of Montreal in the most efficient and most modern manner. The same would apply to the ports of Halifax, St. John and Quebec. The expenditure made by the government in some of these ports does not seem to have been economic or prudent. It is now said that the elevator at Montreal which cost the country hundreds of thousands of dollars, is practically useless, and that very little grain has been elevated in or through it. Take all these estimates of expenditure amounting to practically one hundred million dollars this year, and there are many of them that could be much better applied to improving our transportation facilities. We are voting a million dollars for instance, for Ross rifles, which are absolutely useless.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is out of order.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am referring generally to these useless expenditures.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The item before the committtee is for a landing pier at Anse à L'Ilot and the hon. gentleman is proceeding to discuss the expenditure on the Ross rifle.

Mr. BERGERON. When your friends were not in power, don't you remember that for hours they went on discussing all sorts of things in committee ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is no reason why the rule should be broken now. Discussion must be confined to the question before the committee.

Mr. BERGERON. The question is the public expenditure.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That general discussion can come up when Mr. Speaker is in the chair, on the motion to go into committee, but once we are in committee you cannot discuss the Ross rifle on a vote for a landing pier at Anse à L'Ilot.

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am not going to discuss the Ross rifle ; I am simply referring to it as an example of useless expenditure. Is it now understood that we cannot discuss anything but the particular item which is before us ?

Mr. FISHER. We have sometimes been allowed a good deal of latitude, but for the sake of despatch of business it is necessary that we should confine ourselves to the item under consideration. My hon. friend (Mr. Reid) is an old enough member of the House to know, that while these items are grouped together it is understood that each item shall be discussed as it is called.

Mr. J. D. REID. We have always been allowed to discuss the general question, and now the minister is going to suppress discussion and shut us off.

Mr. FISHER. It is desirable the discussion should be confined to the item, in the interest of the speedy despatch of business.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister may think it is to his advantage to do this, but it may not turn out so in the end.

Mr. BERGERON. There is no desire to delay supply, as was shown in the passage of the New Brunswick estimates. So far as the Quebec items are concerned I can say that there is every desire to facilitate their passage. This is a discussion on a general topic, and it will not last long.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister will not find that this tends to the despatch of business.

Mr. BLAIN. How much has been expended on this work. When the item was before the House in 1905 the minister said $1,000 would complete it.

Mr. FISHER. The appropriation for 1906-7 was $3,000, and the expenditure $2,500, leaving a revote of $500. There was a total expenditure before the 30th of June, 1906, of $1,819.70. This vote will complete the work.

Anse du Cap (Cape cove breakwater), $7,750.

Mr. AMES. Who owns the land where this is being built?

Mr. LEMIEUX. This is in the county of Gaspé. The people deeded the land to the Department of Public Works, at my request.

Mr. AMES. Is the work being done by contract?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. The contractor is John Burns, of Ottawa; the amount, $13,300; it is to be finished in August, 1907. Five tenders were received and this was the lowest.

Mr. AMES. The cost of advertising for tenders for this work was $219. Is not that pretty large for a small work?

Mr. FISHER. There are no contractors down there and advertisements would be inserted in the Ottawa, Montreal, Quebec and Sherbrooke papers, I suppose.

Mr. BERGERON. I would suggest that you drop that advertising, it does not amount to anything. The government does not give the contract to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. FISHER. We do in every case.

Mr. BERGERON. I differ from that; it is only given to some of their own friends. The hon. gentleman cannot give a case in the last ten years of a public tender given to one who was not a friend of the government.

Mr. FISHER. I beg your pardon, in this very one, John Burns, of Ottawa, is a Conservative. This very contract has been given to a Conservative. My hon. friend is entirely unjustified in saying that they are not given to the lowest tenderer. There is not a single instance in these estimates where public or any tenders were asked that the work was not given to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. BERGERON. I think it is money spent for nothing.

Mr. FISHER. If I was to adopt that plan the hon. gentlemen opposite would criticise me from morning to night and I would never hear the end of it.

Baie St. Paul—improvements to wharf at Cap aux Corbeaux, $1,800.

Mr. J. D. REID. Where is that?

Mr. FISHER. That is in Charlevoix county, represented by one of your friends.

Barachois de Malbaie—training piers, &c., $8,700.

Mr. AMES. I wonder if this is a sample of the accuracy of the estimates of the department. Mr. Hyman told us that the total cost of this would be $16.000. Twelve thousand six hundred dollars have already been spent and here is $8,700 more. That would be $21,300 or an advance of about 25 per cent or 30 per cent on the estimate. Is that as near as the estimate usually goes?

Mr. FISHER. Of course sometimes there is a possibility of a mistake.

Mr. AMES. Is that by day's work?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. AMES. Is not $20,000 a large amount to be done by day's work year after year?

Mr. FISHER. It is hard to get contracts down there.

Mr. J. D. REID. It was not hard to get them down in Gaspé.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is a large county; there are 300 miles of coast. The department has secured the services of a very able and straight forward engineer, Mr. J. T. Bertrand, and he himself supervises this work. There are large lumbering operations there and it is quite an important place.

Mr. J. D. REID. It would look better for the Postmaster General if it was done by contract. I am perfectly satisfied that a work of that size could be done by contract, but it looks to me as if the Postmaster General was distributing it to a lot of friends in that locality.

Mr. FISHER. It would cost $300 for advertising to which my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) objects.

Mr. AVERY. Is that near the place where the government built a dock and had not a deed to it after it was completed?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. Are there any other places there where the work is not done by contract?

Mr. FISHER. This is the only one.

Bic harbour—wharf at Pointe à Côté, $10,000.

Mr. MONK. Is this recommended by the Transportation Commission?

Mr. FISHER. This is in Rimouski county; it is intended to be let by contract.

Mr. J. D. REID. Has anything been done there before?

Mr. FISHER. There has been work done to connect the island with the mainland. The work is being done by day's work, that is the filling in, and the wharf outside the island will be done by contract.

Mr. J. D. REID. How much has been spent already?

Mr. FISHER. Nearly $5,000.

Mr. AMES. There was $5,000 in 1904 and $4,500 in 1905; a very considerable sum was spent last summer. There must have been $20,000 all told.

Mr. FISHER. The total expenditure to June 30, 1906, was $9,500. Then there was $4,378 last year, about $14,000 and the total is expected to be $26,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. And that was all done by day's work?

Mr. FISHER. Up to the present time; we are now ready to ask for a contract.

Mr. AMES. How much is it estimated the part of the work to be done by contract will cost?

Mr. FISHER. About $14,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. There is only $10,000 in the estimates now.

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr J. D. REID. Is that $10,000 for all new work?

Mr. FISHER. It is for all that will be done this year.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is there not some going on now that will take part of the $10,000?

Mr. FISHER. No, what work was done last year was paid for.

Mr. J. D. REID. And none of this will go towards work that has been gone on with.

Mr. FISHER. No, I do not think so.

Mr. J. D. REID This $10,000 is entirely for new work?

Mr. FISHER. For the wharf described, and the work will be commenced when the contract is let this spring.

Mr. MONK. Bic is a place of some importance. I am very glad to see a wharf there; I would like to see several, but the question to my mind is that it has been pointed out to the government by competent men appointed by them that the channel between Montreal and Quebec is in several places, in two places particularly, very narrow, about 300 feet wide, and when large steamers meet there there is great danger of stranding. Twice in the last three years they have stranded there and consequently these men recommended that the channel be widened to a sufficient width to relieve all danger to navigation at that point. If we have $25,000 to spend is it not more important to provide safe navigation at these perilous points in the river which render underwriting very expensive and do great injury to the St. Lawrence route, than that we should build wharfs in places where we are not recommended to build them as an urgent matter?

Mr. FISHER. I quite agree with my hon. friend that work such as is described to improve the channel from Montreal to the sea should be done and the Department of Marine and Fisheries which has that in charge is arranging to do it and is taking votes to do it.

Chateauguay—wharf, $1,000.

Mr. R. N. WALSH. Has there been any expenditure on that wharf?

Mr. FISHER. No, that is new.

Mr. R. N. WALSH. This is the third time it has been voted and nothing has been done.

Mr. FISHER. We expect to do it this summer.

Mr. R. N. WALSH. Has the site for it been selected?

Mr. J. D. REID.

Mr FISHER. Yes, I understand so.

Mr. MONK. Where is it?

Mr. BROWN. Near the wharf of Mr. Durocher.

Mr. BERGERON. How far will $1,000 go on that?

Mr. BROWN. I asked for $500 more.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why not make it $500 more and do the work right?

Mr. FISHER. We will bring that down in the supplementaries if necessary.

Mr. BERGERON. I think it is necessary. $1,000 might not go far enough.

Chicoutimi pier—improvements and repairs, $5,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. How is that being done?

Mr. FISHER. By day's work under an engineer.

Mr. BERGERON. How much will it cost altogether?

Mr. FISHER. $5,000.

Cross Point wharf—extension, $10,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who has the contract?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Charleson, of Ottawa. Six tenders were received and the contract was given to the lowest.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was anything spent previously?

Mr. FISHER. In 1896-7 $5,000 were appropriated and $3,000 not spent. That is included in this as a revote.

Mr. J. D. REID. How much water will there be at this wharf when completed?

Mr. FISHER. At low water only three or four feet.

Mr. J. D. REID. There was $3,020.15 spent in 1905-6 on this same wharf in addition to the expenditure last year.

Mr. FISHER. There was then a contract for one extension and this is a further extension.

Mr. J. D. REID. How much was spent altogether previous to this?

Mr. FISHER. I think the total expenditure was $13,820.

Mr. J. D. REID. Here is another contract for about $11,000. That makes about $25,000 for a wharf at this point. What is the population of the village and is there much business done there?

Mr. FISHER. This is the point from which the ferry crosses to Bonaventure county and it serves the people all along the shore.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is there any revenue from this wharf?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know that there is, but that comes under the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. J. D. REID. Your department builds the wharfs and repairs them and then hands them over to the Department of Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, we do not deal with the revenue.

Doucet's landing—pile wharf, $5,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Why is there a revote here ?

Mr. FISHER. The vote was given too late last season to have any work done.

Mr. AMES. Is this wharf used by the Grand Trunk Railway ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. AMES. What use is there for the wharf ?

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. The wharf is immediately opposite Three Rivers and is for the convenience of the people of Ste. Angèle de Laval and that portion of the county. It is at a terminal point of the Grand Trunk Railway, but was not built for that company because they have their own wharf but for the convenience of the people generally. Tenders were called for and six or seven were submitted, and the lowest was accepted. The wharf is now under course of construction.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it expected there will be any revenue ?

Mr. FISHER. There may be when it is handed over to the Marine and Fisheries Department.

Mr. BLAIN. Is not that always considered in these large expenditures ?

Mr. FISHER. What is mainly considered is the convenience of the public.

Mr. BLAIN. Do I understand that there will be no revenue ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not say that, but we consider the convenience of the public not the revenue when deciding on these wharfs.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) is reading the 'Hansard' of years ago when putting that question.

Mr. AMES. Is there any real demand or has there been any for that wharf ? Is not the wharf of the Grand Trunk Railway quite sufficient ? And has that not been used for the ferry ? What possible use can there be for a second wharf alongside the other ?

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. As a matter of fact this is for the convenience, not only for the population of Ste. Angèle de Laval but of that whole portion of the county. It is an agricultural section and the farmers send their products across to Three Rivers. The object is to provide facilities for the farming community as well as the people who cross to Three Rivers.

Mr. AMES. Is it not duplicating facilities that already exist ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No. The wharf already in existence some fourteen years or more is monopolized by the tracks of the Grand Trunk Railway and no vehicle is allowed to pass over it. In the short time I was a member for that county, I saw Mr. Wainwright and other leading men of the Grand Trunk Railway and asked them to make repairs so as to allow vehicles to cross but they refused. If the government made the necessary repairs, they would be spending money on a private property. My hon friend knows what traffic there is between the north and south shores at that point.

Mr. BERGERON. How much money will be expended ?

Mr. FISHER. $5,000. The contract is for $4,911.

Escoumains pier—extension, $20,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is under contract to James B. Charleson, of Ottawa, and the amount of the contract is $24,045. Tenders were invited and the contract was given to the lowest. This will complete the work.

Mr. J. D. REID. How much has been spent there already ?

Mr. FISHER. This is an extension to the wharf.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the hon gentleman is letting the contract for $12,000, why does he ask $20,000 ?

Mr. FISHER. We seem to have got a tender very much lower than we expected. I might cut the item down $5,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why not cut the item down to the amount of the tender ?

Mr. FISHER. We have to make allowance for superintendence.

Mr. J. D. REID. In 1905 this wharf was practically being built by the Saguenay Lumber Company as there is no other concern there. The government spent $13,078 up to 1905. When Mr. Brodeur put $8,000 in the estimates for this wharf, he said that it was to provide for building a public pier which was under contract and that the cost altogether would be $11,478, and the usual amount for superintendence and contingencies, $1,552. I cannot understand why $20,000 more is asked for now.

Mr. GIRARD. It is quite true that the Saguenay Lumber Company is operating at that point on a large scale, but this wharf is to be used by three other parishes besides Escoumains, because this is the only point at which a deep water wharf can be built. Then it becomes a public wharf instead of a private one.

Mr. FISHER. As we have let the contract, I think we can reduce this amount by $5,000.

Item reduced accordingly.

Father Point—wharf repairs and breakwater, $24,000.

Mr. FISHER. The wharf was damaged last season, and this is for repairs.

Mr. AMES. When this work at Father Point is finished, will it be possible for the steamships to draw up alongside the wharf and discharge their mails ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. AMES. Is it the intention of the government to use Father Point instead of Rimouski for that purpose ?

Mr. FISHER. A deputation came up to see the government in regard to that the other day, but we have not yet decided, because we have not sufficient information.

Mr. AMES. There are often times most vexatious delays at Rimouski. I was present on one occasion, it took six hours to transfer the mails from the steamship to the train. The steamer had made a very rapid passage, the fact of which was heralded everywhere, and this delay of six hours in transferring the mails was exasperating. If Father Point could be used for that purpose, it would be a great improvement. Has the department that question under consideration ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, the whole matter has been under consideration not only of the department but of the government, but there are serious difficulties in the way. The transfer of the mails from Rimouski to Father Point would mean a very large expenditure of money, probably from $300,000 to $350,000. At the same time, the necessary dredging every year at Rimouski may cost so much that it might be better to expend even half a million dollars at Father Point if it is found that that would accomplish the object in view. But even that would involve two or three years' work ; so that before deciding upon a change the government would have to consider the whole question carefully.

Mr. AMES. Is that expenditure mainly for a spur line from the Intercolonial ?

Mr. FISHER. That would be included. The first expenditure would be to prolong the wharf and build the breakwater ; then we would have to build the spur line. At present the water at Rimouski is rather shallow, and the tender employed for the mail service is frequently stuck. We dredged the channel out last season, and the dredging was effective for the time being, but I regret to say that this spring the report is that a good deal of the channel which was dredged out last season has filled in again. If that is to go on year after year, it would be better for us to spend half a million at Father Point. But we need all the information necessary before deciding a question of such magnitude.

Mr. BERGERON. It seems to me that I heard two or three sessions ago that the government were considering whether they would bring the mails to Father Point or to Rimouski.

Mr. FISHER. It has been talked of for a long time.

Mr. BERGERON. I think it would be better to decide the matter at once instead of going on spending money every year at both places.

Mr. FISHER. This expenditure at Father Point is necessary even if the mails are not taken there, because this wharf affords shelter for the pilot boats for the lower St. Lawrence.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I may say that the opinions are not unanimous in favour of Father Point. I have heard several large steamship owners say that Father Point was the preferable place, whilst others have contended that Rimouski was the better place. I may say that last summer I went to Rimouski and met there a delegation of interested parties, I met also a deputation from the Montreal Board of Trade. The question has never been so live a one as it is at present. In the next estimates my hon. friend will see quite a respectable amount for a new tender for the mails at Rimouski, and the experiments made this summer will probably decide whether Rimouski or Father Point will be the place where the mails and the passengers will be landed.

Mr. AMES. Meantime we are going on year after year fostering both of these places at an expenditure of $25,000 or $30,000 on each when only one is required. In the last three years we have spent about $100,000 at Rimouski and about the same amount at Father Point. If Father Point is to be selected as the point for landing the mails, it is not necessary to continue to spend $25,000 or $30,000 a year at Rimouski. I have on several occasions been carefully over the ground at each of these places. I do not think you can ever make Rimouski a suitable port, because it is in a long shallow bay, and every spring the sand will drift in around the wharf, and almost out to the end of the wharf you have shallow water and always will have. Now if it is decided that one or the other is to be the ocean point, expend your money there in sufficient sums to give us what we really need, and cease to expend money at the other place. But if we are going on at the rate of $25,000 a year at each of these places, that is not a sufficient sum for either, and it is too much for the one that is not to be used.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think some dredging will have to be done this summer, and it will take one or two years at least to complete the work at Father Point.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that the longer the wharf the greater the quantity of sand that gathers around it. If that is so, we are likely to have trouble there. Why could not the mails be taken from the steamships on tenders instead of bringing the steamships to the wharf ? Would it not be better to land the passengers and freight on tenders, as is done with the Royal Mail Steamship Companies?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The steamer does not stop at the wharf but unloads upon a tender drawn up alongside of her. But even last summer the tender was unable to approach the ship on two occasions because there was not sufficient depth of water.

Grande Rivière de Beaupré—wharf, $3,500.

Mr. MORIN. I would like to ask the minister where that wharf will be built.

Mr. FISHER. The lot on which it is to be built was bought from Mr. Joseph Coté, at the mouth of the Rivière Beaupré.

Mr. MORIN. It must be near the old wharf, I suppose. You cannot build a wharf at the mouth of the river.

Mr. FISHER. We bought the old Morel wharf, and are going to rebuild it. The cost will probably be about $10,000. For the old wharf we paid $1,200, and $300 for the land adjacent to it. Sea-going ships now have to load in the roadstead from lighters. The lighters now have no place to load, and they will come to the wharf.

Mr. MORIN. At low tide the water is 800 feet from the wharf. It rises 15 to 20 feet.

Grand Méchins—breakwater, $30,000.

Mr. FISHER. A contract has been let for $26,900. It is expected that the total cost will be $30,000.

Mr. BERGERON. When was the first money voted ?

Mr. FISHER. $20,000 was voted last year, and this is a revote. The contract was let to John J. Collins of Ottawa, last October. Practically no money has been spent there up to the 31st of March last.

Mr. BERGERON. I find by the Auditor General's Report that some money has been spent there. You bought a piece of land from Mr. Bell.

Mr. FISHER. That was in 1904, before tenders were called for. It was spent in the purchase of timber for the construction of a breakwater.

Mr. BERGERON. How much property was bought ?

Mr. FISHER. There was $3,000 paid.

Mr. BERGERON. There was more than that ; there was $3,714.16 by the Auditor General's Report. That was spent during the election of 1904.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say as to that.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, I have it here in the Auditor General's Report. It was in October, 1904.

Mr. FISHER. Does the Auditor General say it was spent in an election ?

Mr. BERGERON. No, but the Auditor General says that the money was spent in October, 1904, and I know it was during election time.

Mr. FISHER. You should make a distinction between a quotation and your own assertion.

Mr. BERGERON. I see there was an amount of money paid to a notary. What had a notary to do with that ?

Mr. FISHER. I suppose it was in connection with the buying of the site.

Mr. BERGERON. There was a piece of land bought from Mr. Verrault.

Mr. FISHER. The approach to the pier for the sum of $50 was bought from Pierre Verrault.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the size of the land ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not find a description of the land. It probably was not very large if it only cost $50.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is Mr. Verrault ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know.

Mr. BERGERON. What was paid for advertising ?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot tell.

Mr. BERGERON. I can ; $208.50.

Mr. FISHER. Then do not ask me.

Mr. BERGERON. There is a large amount of money spent in advertising. Of course. I understand the object of it. It is just given to a lot of little papers all over the country. It starts with Montreal, Quebec, Toronto, Halifax and Kingston and then it goes to all the weekly papers all over the Dominion.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. BERGERON. I have seen an advertisement in a little paper published forty miles outside of Montreal for works to be done in British Columbia. This is a small amount but when you add these sums together they come to a very large figure. This money is thrown away with the system the government have adopted of giving the contract to their own friends after sending letters to a few of them. There is another thing. Why is it that the contractors who get these contracts for work located as far away as below Quebec almost all live in Ottawa? There seems to be a little combine amongst contractors living here and they get the contracts right and left. People living outside complain that they cannot get any work at all.

Mr. BUREAU. Do they tender ?

Mr. BERGERON. They tender.

Mr. FISHER. Contracts are given to the lowest tenderers whether they happen to live in Ottawa or anywhere else. My hon. friend would be the first to complain if we did not give the contract to the lowest tenderer. If we did not publicly advertise, it would be said, as my hon. friend said a few moments ago, that we sent letters to our friends and asked them to tender and did not give other people an opportunity. There is no satisfying my hon. friend. If we advertise for tenders all over the country he is dissatisfied. If we write letters to people he is dissatisfied. It is evident he wants to criticise.

Mr. BERGERON. No, I do not want to criticise. It is all a sham ; I know very well how it is done. The hon. gentleman will go out and tell the people that they advertised for tenders. I am not criticising him for that but I say it is sham advertising. It is a way of giving patronage to the newspapers and it is not fulfilling the spirit of the law which says that tenders must be called for all over the Dominion. There is no obligation to give the contract to the lowest tenderer. There is a clause in the advertisement calling for tenders saying that the government does not bind itself to give the contract to the lowest tenderer. Practically these works are given to a few contractors around Ottawa. I do not want to make any insinuations but how is it that these contractors who are around here are always the lowest and have better information than if they did not reside at Ottawa ?

Mr. FISHER. It is not true that they are always the lowest. Sometimes they are and sometimes they are not.

Mr. BERGERON. But those who get the contracts are.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, but they are not always Ottawa people.

Mr. BERGERON. A good many of them are. Mr. Bourque has contracts right and left. How is it that they are always the lowest tenderers, lower than those who are living near where the works are done ? Contractors in their own districts cannot compete with the contractors living around Ottawa. I repeat that the money that is spent for advertising is money thrown away and that it is merely given as patronage for the newspapers.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend may say that but if we were not to give the contract to the lowest tenderer the first to raise a row would be hon. gentlemen opposite. They would accuse us of favouritism and everything under the sun. There is a clause saying we need not give it to the lowest tenderer but my hon. friend knows that the only excuse for that is that the lowest tenderer is not a proper person or he has been shown to be an unsatisfactory contractor. Such a case may arise. I know that a certain person did not obtain a contract because he had previously got contracts that had been unsatisfactorily performed and he was refused another contract although he was the lowest tenderer. If we were to send around to our friends privately the hon. gentleman would object. When we advertise publicly all over the country and we give the contract to the lowest tenderer provided he is a contractor who is able to carry out the work then we remove it from criticism and my hon. friend ought to be glad to have us do it.

Mr. BERGERON. I am not glad. I will give an example to my hon. friend. There was some work in the harbour of St. John. Tenders were invited. There were four tenderers. Three of them disappeared. The lowest, the second lowest and the third lowest disappeared and the fourth, or the man who put in the highest price, got the contract.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to know what work my hon. friend refers to ?

Mr. BERGERON. Some work in the harbour of St. John.

Mr. FISHER. What work ?

Mr. BERGERON. Deepening, I think it was.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know of that.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not know the details but it involved a lot of money.

Mr. C. DEVLIN. Was it during the time of the previous government ?

Mr. BERGERON. No, it was within ten years. I will give the name of the contractor. The contract was given to the highest tenderer.

Mr. FISHER. To whom ?

Mr. BERGERON. To Michael Connolly.

Mr. FISHER. This department never gave any to Mr. Connolly.

Mr. BERGERON. It was the Department of Railways and Canals, but the same principle was carried out. The contract was given to Mr. Connolly, and a year after it was decided to extend the work in the harbour of St. John to the extent of $700,000. It was given to Mr. Connolly without tender. Mr. Blair explained at the time that it was the practice to continue the contract to the man who first obtained it. The man who first obtained the contract had probably made an arrangement with the tenderers lower than he was to have them disappear. I don't know how he did it. We on this side are justified in endeavouring to prevent that kind of thing going on in the future.

Mr. BUREAU. What is your suggestion?

Mr. BERGERON. To do what the spirit of the law says as well as what the letter of the law says. In 1896, one of the ministers of the new government winked at the others and said: The letter of the law says you must not give any work without calling for tenders for work that costs more than $5,000, but you can let it by piecemeal in contracts under $5,000; and that minister built a $14,000 fence around Major Hill Park by giving out contracts for less than $5,000 at a time. That is the way the law is evaded by the government to-day, and that is why it is useless to advertise in newspapers.

Mr. BUREAU. These particular items we are discussing are all for contracts given to the lowest tenders. If my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) meant anything, he meant to insinuate that there must be collusion between the Minister of Public Works, or the deputy minister, or the chief engineer, and the Ottawa contractors to give them the advantage over other contractors. I do not see how that could be. These gentlemen opposite complain that advertising costs too much, and in the same breath they charge the government with not advertising enough. I do not know what they are driving at. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) want the government to cease advertising on the ground of economy, or does he want the government to continue advertising and have an inquisitorial board into the methods pursued by the Ottawa contractors? The government is giving the contracts to the lowest tenderers, and to get the lowest tenderers you must have publicity. There are complaints that we advertise in the Liberal newspapers, but that is easily explained, because we want the advertisements to be read by the greatest number of people, and hence the Liberal newspapers get the notices. The hon. gentleman again complains that we publish the advertisements in country newspapers. Well, if we confine the advertisements to newspapers published in Montreal, Quebec and Ottawa, he would raise his hands and exclaim: You stand by the rich people in the big cities; there must be graft. It is hard to satisfy my hon. friend. If the contractors combine and some withdraw their tenders, what are you going to do about it? The only thing to do would be that if a man is awarded a contract and makes a deposit, the department could forfeit his deposit. I do not see what distinction my hon. friend draws between the letter and the spirit of the law. The letter of the law says the government must advertise in the public press, and the government do that. The Liberal newspapers, no more than the Conservative newspapers, are not going to give their advertising space for nothing; it is only fair and just that they should charge for it. But the whole thing appears to come down to this, that the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) must find fault with the Minister of Public Works, no matter what he does.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not want my hon. friend (Mr. Bureau) to draw on his imagination to that extent, and when he calls the acting Minister of Public Works the Minister of Justice, he is simply trying to be facetious. I know the officers of the Department of Public Works, and I would not for a moment suggest that they would enter into any understanding with the contractors of Ottawa. But, if the Solicitor General looks at who the contractors are, he will find that most of them are from Ottawa.

Mr. BUREAU. They are the lowest tenderers.

Mr. BERGERON. Even admitting that to shorten the discussion, the fact is that men living in the neighbourhood of these public works tender as low as they can, and they cannot get the contract.

Mr. C. DEVLIN. This very contract at Doucet's Landing is held by a man living on the spot.

Mr. BERGERON. There may be one or two cases of that kind, but nine out of every ten of these contractors reside in Ottawa. I do not understand it, and I am trying to get information, not from the Solicitor General, but from the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. FISHER. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) want us not to advertise, and not to give the public at large an opportunity to tender?

Mr. BERGERON. Carry out the law; and if you do advertise, advertise all over the Dominion.

Mr. FISHER. But the whole complaint of my hon. friend is that we are advertising too widely and spending too much money on it. If we do not advertise in the local papers, then only contractors in the larger cities would have an opportunity to tender. There is a possible explanation of the fact that Ottawa men get a good many contracts, in that Ottawa men know perfectly well that they must tender just as low as they can if they want to get a contract. Some men who live in the locality of these public works think that they can tender pretty high and still get the work, but the Ottawa men know how keen the competition is, and they tender low. Then, again, they make a specialty of contracting; they are professional contractors; they have the staff and the plant, and they buy their cement in thousands of barrels, and they buy their timber in the cheapest market, and hence their success in tendering. Sometimes a local man, as in the case of Doucet's Landing, may succeed.

Mr. BERGERON. Then why not advertise only in the Ottawa papers?

Mr. FISHER. Because we want to be fair to the other people, and give them a chance to tender. But we do not want them to get this work at the public expense. We want the work to be done as cheaply as possible, and so we give every one a chance to do it as cheaply as possible, and in the end the best man gets the contract.

Mr. BERGERON. What will be the total cost of this work at Grands Mechins?

Mr. FISHER. Not including the time we have wasted on it here to-night, it will cost $30,000.

Mr. BERGERON. When will it be completed?

Mr. FISHER. October, 1907.

Mr. BERGERON. In what county is it?

Mr. FISHER. Rimouski.

Mr. MONK. There is a very easy solution of the advertising question. It has grown to be a terrible abuse, and I am sure we must spend between $50,000 and $80,000 a year advertising.

Mr. J. D. REID. They spent $22,000 advertising the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. MONK. We spend sometimes as much as $500 to advertise for a contract of $4,000 and very often it is not given. We find that estimate comes up here year after year, it has become a gross abuse. Will the minister pretend that if we advertised for tenders in the Canada Official Gazette, we would get no tenders.

Mr. FISHER. I do.

Mr. MONK. Everybody knows that contractors are limited in number, the minister has just indicated that himself. He says most of them reside in Ottawa and being near the source they provide themselves with what is necessary. I say if we advertise for tenders in the 'Canada Gazette' and carry it out systematically we will save from $65,000 to $75,000 a year and get any number of tenderers. To go a step further suppose we had a mailing list as they have in England and in France. Do you suppose they waste public money there in that way? I defy my hon. friend to say they do.

Mr. FISHER. I do not.

Mr. MONK. He knows they do not. It has grown into an abuse here. If we advertise our public works for tender in the 'Canada Gazette' and posted notices throughout the post offices where the works are to be, what would it cost us? Not one dollar and we would be the richer by $70,000 to $75,000 every year, have better competition and be able to devote that money to other works. It began in a small way but it has grown into an abuse and I verily believe that if my hon. friend, who is a practical man, would introduce that reform he would find that tenders would come in as freely as ever, and I would be curious to know if we could get a return in how many cases we have given a contract in the last two years to the lowest tenderer, fair and square.

Mr. FISHER. Fair and square as far as I can say, we have given it to the lowest tenderer in every case but one since I came into the department.

Mr. MONK. That is about two weeks.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the length of that breakwater at Grands Mechins?

Mr. FISHER. The stone bridge is 20 feet long and 20 feet wide and the cribwork 580 feet.

Mr. BERGERON. It is to be 16 feet at low water?

Mr. FISHER. It says here 18 feet 3 inches.

Mr. BERGERON. If I understand, tenders were called for in 1904, and there was no response, then in October, 1904, when there was no contract given, the department bought wood to the tune of $3,457.

Mr. FISHER. They bought that in preparation for the work by day labour.

Mr. BERGERON. Would my hon. friend approve of that?

Mr. FISHER They had an item in the estimates for this pier. It did not seem likely that it would go by contract, and when they could not get tenders they proceeded to get timber and prepare for the completion of the work. Then tenders were asked for again and they got a contract.

Mr. BERGERON. It smells very much like election.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend is too suspicious.

Mr. BERGERON. They bought wood from a number of people in amounts varying from $60 to $627. If the people of the country knew all the details of this, what would they say ?

Mr. FISHER. I hope they will know them.

Mr. BERGERON. On the eve of an election, in the county of Rimouski where an immense amount of money was being spent this was done. Is that the only way in which the government could secure an expression of the confidence of the people by buying wood from every Tom, Dick and Harry during election time ?

Mr. FISHER. I am sorry my hon. friend misplaced his confidence. I think that is a proof that the government is doing what is in the interest of the people; we go direct and buy from the producer leaving out the middle men.

Mr. BERGERON. That is not what the Department of Railways do.

Mr. FISHER. The department went straight to these habitants and bought from them direct instead of employing middlemen and thus the government saved the profits of the middlemen.

Mr. BERGERON. Three years before the work is done and the wood is lying there probably being eaten by worms to-day.

Mr. FISHER. We were buying it when we had the money to do the work and were ready to go on without waiting.

Mr. BERGERON. What is to be the use of that breakwater ?

Mr. FISHER. For ships to go to.

Mr. BERGERON. That was not the reason that was given before. Mr. Brodeur said last year that it was for the fishermen and the general trade, and that vessels such as the 'Campana' could go to it. Is that to be useful for a vessel like the Campana ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know whether the 'Campana' can get in there or not. I do not think that the 'Campana' draws 18 feet 3 inches.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Brodeur said the depth would be between 12 and 17 feet.

Mr. FISHER. The statement here is 18 feet 3 inches above low water.

Grosse Isle, Quarantine station—wharf extension, $24,000.

Mr. AMES. How many tenders were received, who tendered, what is the price of each tender, and who got the contract ?

Mr. FISHER. Heney & Smith, of Ottawa. There are nine tenders but I have not a list of them here.

Mr. BERGERON. Another Ottawa firm ?

Mr FISHER. Yes, the tenders range from $22,467 up to $31,900.

Mr. AMES. The reason I asked was in order to demonstrate the same point as was made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that it is an Ottawa contractor who gets the contract.

Mr. AMES. How soon will the work be finished?

Mr. FISHER. Next fall.

Mr. AMES. No one knows better than the minister how important it is to have the work finished as soon as possible. We have voted this money twice and failed to complete it.

Mr. FISHER. I understand that perfectly.

Lake St. John wharfs—repairs, &c., $3,500.

Mr. J. D. REID. What is this for?

Mr. FISHER. This is a general vote put in every year for repairs.

Mr. J. D. REID. I see in these repairs accounts such as these: Office Specialty Manufacturing Company, office and cabinet, $124.75; office chair, $13, and other similar items which cannot have anything to do with repairs to wharfs.

Mr. FISHER. Those are to fit the office of the engineer in charge of the work.

Mr. J. D. REID. But the year before we find the same thing How is it these items come in every year?

Mr. FISHER. There was an increase in the staff and we had to fit the office accordingly.

Mr. J. D. REID. Here is an item for photographs, $26.50.

Mr. FISHER These are photographs of the wharfs to see the condition of the work.

Mr. J. D. REID. And electrical fixtures, $31.

Mr. FISHER. Those are in the office of the superintendent of work.

Mr. J. D. REID. Are these done every year?

Mr. FISHER. No, only when necessary.

Mr. J. D. REID. How many of these offices are there?

Mr. FISHER. This is not an office on the wharf, but the office of the engineer in charge of all these wharfs. It is in the town of Chicoutimi.

Mr. J. D. REID. He has his office all carpeted.

Mr. FISHER. Very likely

Lake St. Francis (Beauce)—wharfs, $7,000.

Mr. FISHER. There are two wharfs and one is under contract.

Mr. BERGERON. When was the money voted for the first time?

Mr. FISHER. Last year.

Mr. BERGERON. How much money has been spent already?

Mr. FISHER. None. The contracts were let recently and we hope the work will be completed this coming summer.

Mr. BERGERON. The Auditor General reports $285 spent already.

Mr. FISHER. It may be that we bought the sites before.

Mr. BERGERON. From whom was the site bought?

Mr. FISHER. A lot of land bought from Desile Rousseau.

Mr. BERGERON. What work had Saussier to do for which he was paid $26.95.

Mr. FISHER. He translated the specifications which were issued in English and had to be translated into French.

Mr. BERGERON. That should be done in the department. We should call the attention of the member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) to that. What is the object of building these wharfs.

Mr. FISHER. There is a large lumber trade in that district and these wharfs are for the use of tugs tha tow the scows and logs.

Lavaltrie—wharf, $5,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is a revote almost entirely.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the whole amount?

Mr. FISHER. $1,843.50 have been spent already and this will complete.

Mr. AMES. Is that the wharf which was bought from the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. AMES. And that company has the same rights to it as before?

Mr. FISHER. Not exclusive rights. They have the privilege of using it the same as anybody else.

Mr. AMES. And the government have the privilege of keeping it in repair?

Mr. FISHER. For the use of the public.

Mr. AMES. Did the public not use it before?

Mr. FISHER. Not except on sufferance.

Mr. BERGERON. Does any body else use it but the Richelieu Company?

Mr. FISHER. Large quantities of hay, cattle and farm produce are raised in the neighbourhood, and the dues levied by the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company were prohibitive to the local people. It became necessary to provide improved and increased wharf accommodation and that could not be done while the company owned the wharf. So the government took it over and are improving it for the public use.

Mr. AMES. Is it the policy of the government to buy all the wharfs of the Richelieu Company?

Mr. FISHER. No, except where we find it necessary in the public interests.

Mr. BERGERON. I asked last year what was the depth of the water and the minister (Mr. Brodeur) answered that this was for the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company and the depth was from ten to twelve feet. Evidently those are the only boats that go there. Now the government have bought the wharf and are repairing it and the Richelieu Company are using it.

Mr. FISHER. And other market boats as well.

Mr. BERGERON. According to the minister (Mr. Brodeur) only the Richelieu boats go there.

Mr. BUREAU. I may tell my hon. friend that other boats do not go there because they cannot. There is a new company called La Plante Company that goes there, and the government has purchased the wharf because it can give better accommodation to the farmers.

Mr. MONK. Does my hon. friend say that that company started because this wharf was purchased by the government ?

Mr. BUREAU. No, but because it could go there and get the traffic.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this for the cost of the wharf ?

Mr. FISHER. No. The wharf was bought for $1,800. The rest is for fitting it up.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that to be done by contract or by day's work ?

Mr. FISHER. By day's work.

Mr. BERGERON. When will it be finished ?

Mr. FISHER. This summer.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there to be any dredging done there ?

Mr. FISHER. There is no estimate for dredging.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why do the government not purchase wharfs at Prescott, Brockville, Gananoque, Kingston and other places where the Richelieu boats call ? Farmers ship large quantities of hay and other produce at these wharfs, and have to pay toll on them.

Mr. LEIGHTON McCARTHY. Are they not public docks ?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, private docks, every one of them.

Mr. LEIGHTON McCARTHY. Whom do they belong to ?

Mr. TAYLOR. The one at Gananoque belongs to the Rathbun Company. Why do the government furnish free docks in one part of the country and not in another ? From Montreal to Toronto there is not a government owned dock. Private enterprise has built them all.

Mr. FISHER. If there were a hardship, the people would present the case to the government.

Mr. J. D. REID. I may say that at Prescott the dock at which the boats call and from which the farmers ship their produce is a private dock on which there is a wharfage charge. If you are giving the public a dock in this locality, why not give us one at Prescott ?

Mr. FISHER. If you make out a case.

Mr. J. D. REID I make out a case now. There are four or five docks at Prescott, and a boat cannot be landed at any one of them without paying wharfage. Even the ferry dock is a private dock. We have just as much right to a public dock there as this locality, and if it is only necessary to make the application I shall be very glad to see that it is done promptly by the mayor and council of Prescott.

Mr. FISHER. I did not say that it was only necessary to make an application.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the minister is going to adopt that policy, which has been done since he assumed the position of acting minister——

Mr. FISHER. This was done last year.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. gentleman is following it up. At all events, I will see that application is made, and I hope the minister will give it the same consideration that he has given to these other places.

Mr. FISHER. I will consider it.

L'Isle d'Alma—removal of rocks, $1,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Will this complete the work ?

Mr. FISHER. This is a kind of work that is done from time to time to improve the navigation. The ice frequently brings the rocks back into the channel.

Mr. MONK. I do not see anything in these estimates for removing the rocks in the St. Lawrence channel at Cap St. Charles in compliance with the recommendation of the commission.

Mr. FISHER. That is in the estimates of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. There is not an item for that particular thing, but it is done out of the ship channel vote.

Mr. MONK. I am glad to hear it, because I put a question to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries about the removal of those rocks, and his answer was that there were no rocks there at all, although last year the Bavarian had her bottom stove in by a rock in that channel.

Lotbinière and Portneuf counties government wharfs—improvement of approaches, $1,200.

Mr. MONK. What are these approaches, and how was the amount voted last year expended ?

Mr. FISHER. There are a lot of boulders in the bed of the St. Lawrence, on each side of the ship channel, and we have sometimes to remove them.

Mr. MONK. Then I understand that this money is not for approaches to the wharfs from the land ?

Mr. FISHER. No, for clearing out the channel.

Magdalen Islands—breakwaters and piers, $1,600.

Mr. J. D. REID. This is in Gaspé ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is, and there is a very thrifty population of 6,000, composed of fishermen. Five wharfs have been built there and they give great satisfaction. The steamer running between Pictou, N.S., and the Magdalen Islands twice a week, calls at every one of these wharfs. The expenditure has been a wise expenditure from all points of view.

Mr. FISHER. This amount ought to be $16,000, instead of $1,600 and I shall have to bring an item in the supplementary estimates to bring it up to that amount. This is for the completion of piers already begun.

Mr. J. D. REID. Last year there was $20,000 in the estimates for 1905, and the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) said :

You spent $20,000 last year, and $20,000 is asked for this year. Does that cover all the work to be done ?
Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

He stated that was all that was to be done. Now you are asking for $16,000 more.

Mr. FISHER. And I do not think this will finish it. It will take another year probably. It is not done by contract, that would be almost impossible.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who has charge of these works ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. Bertrand.

Murray bay—wharf, renewals and repairs, $5,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. How much has been spent here ?

Mr. FISHER. $52,000 has been spent here since confederation. $507.99 was spent last year.

Mr. J. D. REID. I see that last year there was a sum of money spent for linoleum and mats. Was that for repairs of the wharf ?

Mr. FISHER. I think that must have been for the waiting room, where a large number of passengers are accommodated.

Notre Dame du Portage wharf—to complete, $2,400.

Mr. FISHER. It is expected this will cost $21,363, including this amount.

Percé wharf (North cove) $9,000.

Mr. AMES. Where are Lyons & White, who have this contract ?

Mr. FISHER. At Ottawa.

Mr. AMES. How many tenderers were there, and who were they ?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot give the names of the other tenderers.

Petites Bergeronnes—removal of boulders, $1,500

Mr. FISHER. $904.71 have been spent.

Mr. BERGERON. Who owns the sawmill there ?

Mr. GIRARD. It belongs to Mr. King, of Quebec.

Mr. BERGERON. According to the Auditor General's Report, there is a sum for the removal of boulders in September and October, 1904 ; but it appears that work was not completed.

Mr. FISHER. No, the amount expended in 1905 was $898.50. We spent more when there was no election than when there was.

Mr. BERGERON. The work was commenced during an election but it was finished afterwards. How much do you want to take away these boulders ?

Mr. FISHER. We are asking for $1,500 this year. I do not know if it will complete the work.

Mr. GIRARD. There are about three miles covered with boulders, the work can be done only at low tide and it will take a long time.

Mr. FISHER.

Pointe aux Trembles (county Portneuf) $15,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will this finish it ?

Mr. FISHER. No, I understand that the contractor has failed and that we have to make a new contract.

Mr. J. D. REID. I see that last year when this item was up—Pointe aux Trembles, $10,000—my hon. friend the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) asked :

Will that finish the wharf ?

Mr. HYMAN. The contract will finish it.

Mr. BLAIN. Are any of these votes for new works, or for continuation of works already begun ?

Mr. HYMAN. They are mostly revotes for continuation of works begun. It will require $2,000 to complete the work at Pointe aux Trembles.

At that time $10,000 would complete the work ; now there is $15,000 more and still the minister says that it will not complete it. Will he give us an explanation of that ?

Mr. FISHER. The original contract was for $33,775. The total estimated cost of the wharf is $38,000. Up to the beginning of this fiscal year there has been actually expended nearly $23,000 and we are asking for $15,000 which will make up $37,949, or practically $38,000. That is the $15,000 that we are asking for here.

Mr. J. D. REID. Well, this will not complete the wharf ?

Mr. FISHER. Of this, $5,000 is a revote. When I say it will not I do so because the contractors have failed and have given up the work.

Mr. MONK. Who are the contractors ?

Mr. FISHER. Dussault & Pageau, of Quebec.

Mr. MONK. Have they failed ?

Mr. FISHER. They have given up the contract.

Mr. BERGERON. There is the danger of giving it to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. FISHER. This is not an Ottawa firm.

Mr. J. D. REID. I think the government should be protected either by the deposit of the contractors or by keeping back a certain percentage of the progress estimates.

Mr. FISHER. So we are.

Mr. MONK. Is this firm of Dussault the same firm which is executing government works in the harbour of Quebec ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. MONK. Do I understand my hon. friend to say they have failed ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not say they have failed. I mean they have failed in this contract.

Mr. BERGERON. Why ?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot tell.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the government lose anything by it ?

Mr. MONK. What reason have they given for giving up the work ? They ought to be forced to finish their contract ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know.

Mr. J. D. REID. How much was the deposit ?

Mr. FISHER. It is still in the hands of the department, I suppose.

Mr. J. D. REID. There is generally a deposit and in addition there is a certain percentage of the progress estimate kept back.

Mr. FISHER. That is done.

Mr. J. D. REID. They have the government deposit and the percentage of the progress estimate ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then there is no reason why they should lose ?

Mr. FISHER. No, the government will not lose.

Mr. J. D. REID. And there is no reason why the work should cost any more than it would under the original contract ?

Mr. FISHER. No, but it delays the work.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister says that it is going to cost more.

Mr. FISHER. No, I did not say so.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister says that this $15,000 will bring it up to what the original estimate of the whole work was to cost ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. And yet he says that will not complete it.

Mr. FISHER. I did not intend to say that ; this is intended to cover the whole work.

Mr. J. D. REID. And will it complete the whole work ?

Mr. FISHER. I believe so.

Mr. J. D. REID. We have a right to know why this firm which is perfectly solvent and which has not failed has abandoned this work.

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that they were not proceeding with their work in such a way as to satisfy the department, that the department had notified them that they must proceed with and complete it within a certain time or else the government would take the work out of their hands, and they said they would not do that, that they could not do it and the government took the work out of their hands.

Mr. MONK. As I understand the position, these contractors have government work at Quebec.

Mr. FISHER. They are not the same contractors at all ; that is another firm.

Mr. MONK. And they have refused to carry on this contract and the government have taken it out of their hands.

Mr. FISHER. These are different contractors from those who are doing work at Quebec.

Mr. MONK. They have no other contract from the government ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. MONK. Is that the position as I have stated it ?

Mr. FISHER. No, the position as you have stated it is not correct because these are not the people who have a large contract from the government at Quebec.

Mr. MONK. I asked if the position in regard to these contractors is that they have been called upon by the government to complete their works but they have refused and that the government have taken them out of their hands ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. MONK. When did the government take over these works and who has them in hand now ?

Mr. FISHER. They have just lately signified their intention not to go on with them.

Mr. MONK. Then the government has not taken over the work ?

Mr. FISHER. Officially it has not, but that is the consequence of their notifying us that they will not go on. We have not yet taken active steps to go there and take it over.

Mr. MONK. And they have given the government no other reason for the abandonment of this work except that they do not want to go on ?

Mr. FISHER. They could not complete the work in time and the department notified them that they must complete it or give it up.

Mr. BERGERON. They could not keep the contract ?

Mr. FISHER. They could not fulfil the contract.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the first name of Dussault ?

Mr. FISHER. J.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the initial of the Dussault who is working at Point Levis and Quebec?

Mr. FISHER. Etienne.

Mr. J. D. REID. How much has been paid this firm up to date?

Mr. FISHER. $18,240.45.

Mr. J. D. REID. And you say that there is only $15,000 needed to complete the work in so far as their contract is concerned?

Mr. FISHER. There is about $20,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. But their contract was for $33,775.

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. So that there is $15,000 necessary to complete it? Have the government had an engineer down there to examine the work and see what has been done?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. About how much work has been done?

Mr. FISHER. The amount that has been paid to them was only paid on progress estimates and on the certificates of the engineer that a certain amount of work had been done.

Mr. J. D. REID. How are the certificates given; on the actual wages paid out and the actual invoices?

Mr. FISHER. They are taken on the proportionate quantity of the work performed, estimated by the engineer.

Mr. J. D. REID. As I understand it ten per cent is deducted from the value of the timber delivered, and 10 per cent deducted from the labour and so on.

Mr. FISHER. 90 per cent of what the government engineer shows, has been expended is paid.

Mr. J. D. REID. The contractor in making his tender for this wharf puts in a certain price for lumber, and a certain price for labour.

Mr. FISHER. This contract was let for a bulk sum of $33,775.

Mr. J. D. REID. If 10 per cent was kept back there would be about $20,000 paid on the contract, and there has been $18,000 paid?

Mr. FISHER. While the $18,000 was being paid 10 per cent more was due. There has been work done to the extent of over $20,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. Only $11,000 of the work remains to be done?

Mr. FISHER. Of the actual work.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does the engineer report that the deposit and the percentage kept back is sufficient to complete the work?

Mr FISHER. That is the expectation.

Mr. MONK. In view of the circumstances, I suppose no more money will be paid to these contractors?

Mr. FISHER. Not until the question is settled. I do not know whether any thing more will be due or not.

Mr. MONK. Is not the amount they owe for damages for refusing without reason to prosecute the work, larger by far than any thing they could claim?

Mr. FISHER. I have no doubt that would be considered in the settlement.

Mr. BERGERON. How can that wharf cost so much; the Richelieu boats do not go there?

Mr. FISHER. It is 600 feet long.

Mr. J. D. REID. The inspector is R. Plamondon; where did he come from?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say offhand; probably he is from the locality, but I do not know.

Mr. MONK. What amount has been paid for right of way, and to whom?

Mr. FISHER. The property, three quarters of an acre, was owned by Athanase Delisle and he was paid $300.

Mr. MONK. Is it the policy of the government to purchase the right of way to reach these wharfs?

Mr. FISHER. We frequently have to.

Mr. MONK. Is there a deed of this piece of property?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. MONK. Filed in the department?

Mr. FISHER. I have no doubt it is, but I have not seen it.

Rimouski—wharf improvements, $25,000.

Mr. AMES. Is it the intention to spend this $25,000 in day's work?

Mr. FISHER. The work for which there is a vote in the supplemenary estimates was done last year by day's labour, and this work consists of improvements and will also be done by day's labour.

Mr. AMES. Is not $25,000 a large sum to expend by day's labour, on which there is practically no check?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed by the officers of the department that in such work as this they do not know what they will find until they commence to carry on the work, and they tell me they cannot let it by contract. I am not sufficient of an expert to contradict them.

Mr. AMES. If they need any lumber, or other supplies, is it bought by tender?

Mr. FISHER. They ask quotations from people in the neighbourhood who have lumber to sell.

Rivers Ashouapmouchouan and Peribonka—training dykes, &c., $5,000.

Mr. FISHER. It is expected that by narrowing the channel the current will be sufficient to clear it out, and thus make the river navigable.

Mr. BERGERON. Navigable for what?

Mr. FISHER. Small steamers run on the Peribonka.

Mr. BERGERON. Will this complete the work?

Mr. FISHER. We will see what the result of this is, and if the work will permit of navigation further up we may do some more.

Mr. BERGERON. How much has been spent already?

Mr. FISHER. $5,000 last year.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What does the minister mean by 'dykes,' in this connection?

Mr. FISHER. Running a ridge of stone out from the river to force the water into the channel.

Rivière aux Renards—breakwater pier, $8,000.

Mr. AMES. Will this finish the work?

Mr. FISHER. I may say that the work is completed, and I am going to ask that this vote be struck out.

Mr. AMES. The work was commenced in 1903.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the one-fifth that has been voted remain?

Mr. FISHER. I am afraid it will. It has passed through the House, but we will not spend it.

Motion agreed to, and item struck out.

Rivière à la Pipe—wharf extension and repairs, $4,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is this to complete the work?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Rivière Batiscan—dredging channel at mouth,

Mr. AMES. Will this complete the work?

Mr. FISHER. Oh, no; that is dredging the mouth of the river.

Mr. AMES. Who has the contract?

Mr. FISHER. We have not yet called for a contract for this work. As soon as the vote is passed I am going to call for tenders.

Mr. AMES. For this Batiscan river, is the contract renewed each year?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. MONK. Is that river navigable?

Mr. FISHER. Oh, yes.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the general price for dredging in a place like that?

Mr. FISHER. We paid 13½ cents last year in this case.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that the average price?

Mr. FISHER. No; that is lower than we have had to pay. The average price is about 15 cents for soft material where there is no rock.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who has the contract?

Mr. FISHER. Nobody has it; last year Prendergast, of Montreal, had it.

Rivière du Loup, Fraserville—harbour improvements, $15,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that the long wharf?

Mr. FISHER—Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. The harbour is behind that?

Mr. FISHER. I suppose the wharf is a part of the harbour; it is a protection to the harbour.

Mr. BERGERON. I would call the harbour the bay behind the big wharf.

Mr. FISHER. That is true, but the wharf is part of it.

Mr. BERGERON. How much money was voted for that at first?

Mr. FISHER. A very large amount of money has been spent on it. I see here that $97,000 has been spent on it.

Mr. BERGERON. How much does my hon. friend intend to spend this summer?

Mr. FISHER. There is $15,000 here. We cannot tell exactly; we have asked for this vote.

Mr. BERGERON. How much will be spent there, say, in four or five years?

Mr. FISHER. Last year there seems to have been $5,000 spent, and the year before $3,729.

Mr. BERGERON. The year before $13,000.

Mr. FISHER. I think my hon. friend has the figures there.

Mr. BERGERON. How much will it all cost?

Mr. FISHER. I suppose $15,000 more. The $90,000 is an amount which has been spent since confederation.

Mr. BERGERON. How is that work done?

Mr. FISHER. These repairs will be done by day labour.

Mr. J. D. REID. A large thing like that should be done by contract.

Mr. BERGERON. There is a great deal of wood you bought here; is that by contract?

Mr. FISHER. We took the lowest offers.

Rivière du Loup (en haut)—dredging and other improvements at mouth, $15,000.

Mr. FISHER. That dredging will be done by contract.

Mr. BERGERON. Who are the contractors?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Poupore had the contract last year.

Mr. BERGERON. That is not what I find in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. FISHER. That was the year before probably.

Mr. BERGERON. How much money was spent there in 1903-4?

Mr. FISHER. I may say that I have not the details here. In 1905-6 there was $16,000, and in 1906-7, $10,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the estimated cost of the whole thing?

Mr. FISHER. I suppose we can go on dredging there for ever almost.

Mr. BERGERON. For what purpose is the dredging?

Mr. FISHER. To enable the navigation to be carried on without interruption.

Mr. BERGERON. Are there boats passing there?

Mr. FISHER. Oh, yes.

Mr. BERGERON. What boats go there?

Mr. FISHER. Market boats, and there is a large lumber trade there.

Mr. BUREAU. The Tourville Lumber Company do their shipping at that place, and the farmers ship their produce here; apart from that, they are in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway to ship their produce.

Mr. BERGERON. Can you not give an idea of when the expenditure will be at an end?

Mr. FISHER. This will give a certain depth of water. If more is required, we will have to have more money.

Mr. BERGERON.

Rivière Maskinonge—dredging, $15,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. Would the minister say how much has been spent on that?

Mr. FISHER. $13,466.13 had been spent up to 30th June, 1906. Then there was $10,000 last year, that would be $23,000, and we are asking for $15,000 this year.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who has the contract for that?

Mr. FISHER. Last year Mr. Poupore had the contract also at eleven cents a yard. We have not let the contract this year.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who had it in 1905?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Poupore also.

Mr. J. D. REID. I see in the 'Hansard' of 1905 that Mr. Brodeur said the contract was awarded to Davis & Sons, of Ottawa, on the river Maskinonge at fifteen cents.

Mr. FISHER. The next year the department got it at eleven cents. I hope we will get it this year at less but do not believe we will. Eleven cents is very low.

Mr. J. D. REID. A man named Antoine St. Pierre was paid $9,240 for dredging from May 21st to November 12th, in 1904-05 at the river Maskinonge, do you know who he is?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. I never heard of any party by that name in the dredging business.

Mr. BUREAU. He has been dredging for years, and you will find his name in the Auditor General's Reports the last twenty years.

Rivière Ouelle pier—repairs, &c., $4,500.

Mr. FISHER. That is the pier from which the ferry starts from the Intercolonial railway to Malbaie.

Mr. BLAIN. Is that work done by day labour?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. How much is being expended altogether on this?

Mr. FISHER. Years ago there was spent $225,000 and lately $49,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there any revenue from this wharf?

Mr. FISHER. It is run by the Intercolonial railway which has a spur line down to it.

Rivière Saguenay—dredging and other improvements, $60,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is done by our own dredge. Last year there was a large vote of $45,000 but the dredge had to be taken away.

Mr. BERGERON. How much will it cost altogether ?

Mr. FISHER. If the whole channel is dredged right up to Chicoutimi town, as the people want, it will cost $400,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this river not navigated mainly by Richelieu boats ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the matter with the river ?

Mr. FISHER. This is to deepen and widen the channel. A dredge worked there last summer a part of the time.

Mr. BERGERON. Last year Mr. Brodeur said they wanted to get two dredges there and that is why there was such a large amount voted.

Mr. FISHER. We could not succeed in getting the two dredges.

Mr. BERGERON. If the work is necessary, can you not get a dredge somewhere ?

Mr. FISHER. We shall try.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the government scheme of getting their own dredges built ?

Mr. FISHER. We have not been able to carry that out altogether but we have been building some.

Mr. J. D. REID. Do you hire the dredges by the hour or at so much a yard ?

Mr. FISHER. At so much a yard.

Mr. J. D. REID. Are there no cases in which you hire by the hour ?

Mr. FISHER. Not now.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is Mr. Cohen, of Montreal, employed by the department for dredging and do you not hire his dredges by the hour ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. Have they not been doing the work by the hour ?

Mr. FISHER. Not last season at all. Previously I believe they were.

Mr. J. D. REID. Now all the work is by the yard ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, and open to tender.

Mr. BERGERON. How much money spent already ?

Mr. FISHER. $129,000.

Mr. MONK. What part of the Saguenay is not deep enough ?

Mr. FISHER. About Ha Ha bay and below Chicoutimi town.

Mr. BERGERON. The minister said last year that the intention was to bring Atlantic steamers as far as Chicoutimi, and he said it would cost $300,000 to make the channel twenty feet deep.

Mr. FISHER. That was a mistake. It must have been a fifteen foot channel.

Rivière St. Maurice — channel between Grandes Piles and Lt Tuque, $16,500.

Mr. MONK. When is the work of dredging the St. Maurice going to finish ? Since 1903 we have spent over $100,000 in dredging it. Except for floating lumber, that river is not used much, and the impression prevails that a great deal of the work is for the purpose of floating down lumber.

Mr. BUREAU. Not that particular item.

Mr. MONK. Perhaps it is the next. Should not these large lumber kings contribute to that work since it is to facilitate the bringing down of their logs ? I understand that a great deal of this work is being done for the purpose of favouring the lumbermen. If the state contributes to enhance their prosperity, I think they should contribute also. We are expending a great deal of money to improve the port of Three Rivers. This is right and proper, because it is for the public in general, but when we spend hundreds of thousands of dollars in improving the navigation in the St. Maurice river, and that improvement is for the lumbermen, I think the government is going too far. I think the lumbermen should contribute their fair proportion of the cost.

Mr. BUREAU. The improvement of the channel is not exclusively for the benefit of the lumbermen. There is 75 miles between Grandes Piles and La Tuque which is a thoroughfare for people going up and down the river and communicating with the St. Lawrence at Three Rivers.

Mr. MONK. How many steamers ply between these two points ?

Mr. BUREAU. There must be six or seven.

Mr. MONK. Are they regular passenger boats ?

Mr. BUREAU. Passenger boats and freight boats, belonging to companies and private individuals. As to the item for a dam at Grandes Piles, this has been discussed in this House before. This is in a great part for the benefit of the lumbermen. That part of the river between Grandes Piles and La Tuque is very difficult to navigate owing to freshets that come every year. But this money that is to be expended by the government for the construction of the dam is to be repaid by the lumbermen, so much per annum, the amount being equal to the interest and the sinking fund. This has been agreed to between the St. Maurice Improvement and Driving Association and the Public Works Department, as far as the lumberman derive any benefit from it. A rapid will be flooded by the building of this dam, and another advantage to be derived from it will be a reservoir at Grandes Piles, enabling the lumbermen to operate their mills two months longer every year ?

Mr. MONK. Is the agreement which my hon. friend has referred to in writing?

Mr. BUREAU. It is going to be put in writing. There has not beeen anything spent on this work except preliminary expenditures in taking soundings, which was necessary in order to call for tenders. No tenders have been called, awaiting the conclusion of the agreement between the lumbermen and the Department of Public Works, which has been reached during the last week.

Mr. MONK. I suppose we can get the assurance of the minister that before any of this money is expended the agreement mentioned by my hon. friend will be reduced to writing and closed ?

Mr. FISHER. Undoubtedly. The agreement has been reached in its general terms, but its details have not been worked out.

Mr. MONK. But there will be no expenditure until it is finally settled ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. MORIN. I notice that there is a deficit every year in the revenue from slides and booms in the St. Maurice river, and I am afraid that if the government spend $40,000 for a dam, there will be the same result. I do not see why the government spend money to build dams and slides and booms for the lumbermen. I think the lumbermen should do that at their own expense. The government does not help the farmers to buy horses or cows or pigs. Then why should they help the lumbermen by building dams and slides and booms for them ? Why not treat everybody on an equality. If a man goes to clear up a farm, he has to buy his axe and his supplies and live for years like a begger ; while the lumbermen, when they start business, get the government to build slides and booms for them. The lumbermen of this country are all millionaires, while the farmers are poor from the time they start until their death, and they are left to take care of themselves, while the lumbermen have fine homes and money in the bank and still get help from the government.

Mr. FISHER. I wish to remind my hon. friend that if we do this work we charge dues on it. When the work is entirely for the lumbermen, it is perfectly right that they should contribute towards it in that way ; but the work is also for the general improvement of navigation, and in that respect the lumbermen are no more interested than other members of the community.

Mr. BUREAU.

Mr. MORIN. I agree with the minister that we should collect revenue every year from the lumbermen, but they will refuse to pay.

Mr. FISHER. No, they always pay.

Mr. J. D. REID. The point raised by my hon. friend is an important one. He says the minister spends $50,000 or $60,000 to help the lumber industry, whereas if he would spend the same amount for the farming industry, he would do a great deal more good.

Mr. FISHER. I do spend a good deal for the farming industry.

Ste. Anne des Monts—harbour of refuge at mouth of Grande Rivière Ste. Anne, $5,500.

Mr. AMES. Was it not at first the intention of the government to give this out by contract? If so, why was that not done?

Mr. FISHER. This is one of those places on the north shore of Gaspé and on the south shore of the St. Lawrence where it is hard to get a contract. I think this will be done by day's work.

Mr. AMES. An attempt was made to get tenders, was there not ? Were there any bids ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not remember.

Mr. AMES. It is a case where $50 was paid by the King's Printer for advertising.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The reason why tenders were invited and the invitation afterwards withdrawn was this : I myself made the request at the Department of Public Works, and the tender that came in was for a very large amount, I think something like $40,000 or $50,000. This was not at all according to the intention of the department, nor according to the intention of the residents of St. Anne. The object was merely to dredge out the mouth of the river, so that schooners entering the river would find a shelter at the mouth. I am sure the amount required there would not be over $10,000. Large lumbering operations are carried on there. Last fall the work which had already been done there was found very useful in tempestuous weather, and three or four schooners found shelter at the mouth of the river.

Mr. AMES. There has been $6,000 spent here, and it is proposed to spend $2,000 more. Do I understand that $10,000 will complete it ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is the intention.

Mr. FISHER. $5,500 are required for completing the contemplated improvements.

Mr. AMES. There is another point I wish to raise. I notice that practically the names of the same firms appear nearly the Minister of Agriculture on the one hand——

Mr. FIELDING. Oh, yes, on military matters.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—and from your humble servant on the other. If so, the Minister of Finance is more able than I gave him credit for; I will wait until the Minister of Agriculture has the Minister of Finance posted on his end of the subject.

Mr. FIELDING. You can proceed.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Col. Vidal has now been appointed Inspector General at a salary of $6,000 a year, or $5,000 a year and allowances. The Minister of Finance stated yesterday that Col. Vidal had only 24 years service in the militia.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not remember stating that.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Col. Vidal's record is given as follows: He was appointed ensign in the 4th Foot (Regulars) in 1863; lieutenant of the 4th Foot, August, 1864; London Field Battery (I think that is a Canadian institution) on the 6th of June, 1871; he was captain in the 27th Regiment, 1870; 12th Regiment, 1877; Infantry School, 1883. Suppose his apopintment to the Infantry School, 1883, were his first Canadian appointment—I do not know whether the London Field Battery appointment in 1871, is a Canadian or imperial appointment—but suppose his first Canadian appointment were in December, 1883, that would put him pretty well into the running for 25 years service. But if he remains in his position until he has put in 25 years service, and then retires by arrangement with the department, he will be entitled to 35 years service and can retire on the same basis as if he had actually served 35 years. Then he retires, not voluntarily, he would be entitled to a pension of $4,200 a year; one-fiftieth of $6,000 multiplied by 35 years service. I may point out that this is $1,400 a year more that he would be entitled to receive as a pension had he not been appointed to Col. Aylmer's position, and that $1,400 a year would pay nearly one-half a regiment for annual drill in camp.

I have never thought out this aspect of the case, because I felt there were many of these chief positions which were absolutely necessary in the interests of the service, and therefore to be maintained—assuming always of course, that the salaries were not altogether too high. But the men of the militia and of the country generally are beginning to wonder if the force is not running a little too much to fuss and feathers. I think that the present instance affords an occasion when it might be pointed out that the minister should be very careful about adding unnecessarily to the burden upon the militia of these top positions. I do not know whether it is the intention to retire Colonel Vidal before he has served the full term of twenty-five years which would entitle him to the maximum retiring allowance, or whether this is to give him the honorary position with a view to his earlier retirement. I should be glad to see Colonel Vidal given any high position and to receive any fair compensation for his services. At the same time, I hardly think that the force would commend his appointment over the heads of men like Colonel Otter and then have him retired on this large pension. In case the latter course is followed, it will look as if he had been put into the higher office for the purpose of being retired at the end of twenty-five years' service, and I am satisfied that the force generally would not endorse that action.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The point as to the amount of pension Col. Vidal would be entitled to did not engage my attention. I should think, speaking offhand, that the interpretation put upon the law by the hon. member (Mr. Sam. Hughes) is a mistaken one. I confess, however, that I am less familiar with the work of the Militia Department, perhaps, than with that of almost any other department. These things, of course, are regulated in the Militia Department very largely by general rules and principles governing military affairs. Whatever pension Col. Vidal is entitled to under the Act must be given to him. Whether the Act itself is a wise one or not is a matter of fair debate. The interpretation of the Act, of course, I shall have to leave to the Militia Department. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Sam Hughes) will be content with the statement that, whatever guarantees are given Col. Vidal or any other officer under the Militia Pension Act, must be carried out.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But why appoint him over the heads of others?

Mr. FIELDING. As to that, of course, I am not in a position to give information. Nor could I get a full understanding of the matter even by referring to the department. The Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) has his own reasons for doing whatever has been done; and, as he is not present, nor accessible at the moment, to give us the information, I think the hon. gentleman will have to leave the matter to be, if necessary, the subject of future inquiry.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). There is a very important principle involved in this matter. It seems to me that these changes are too much like appointments being made for the special purpose of giving an officer, for the rest of his life, a higher pension than he would otherwise receive. In carrying this out—and here is another most objectionable feature,—the appointment seems to be made with a 'string to it,' the officer giving his own signature to an understanding that he is to retire at a certain time. This is the allegation, and it has not been denied either by the hon. gentleman speaking for the Militia Department in this House or by the one who speaks for the Militia Department in the upper Chamber. I can well understand that a man who had passed the age when he would be entitled to retire might still be the best available man for a certain position and might be retained for some time beyond the age when he would be entitled to retire. But why should he be put in the higher position merely for a few months or for a year? The allegation is that he is placed in a position with a salary of $6,000 a year, in order that, after a short time, he might be retired from that position with a larger pension than he would otherwise receive. The result will be if these aims are carried out that we will have three officers promoted for no reason that we can see except to enable them to receive large pensions. This is clearly an abuse of the Act; for the object of the Act, as I understand it, was to bring in efficient men in order of seniority to occupy the higher positions and to afford them suitable pensions when their term of service ended. But the appointments in this case seem to involve much the same general plan as those that were made by the late government in Ontario. A man would be appointed registrar under an agreement that he would enjoy the emoluments of office only for a certain time, and then would retire to permit the appointment of somebody else. That was a bad principle. But this is even worse, because it involves not only the bad system of appointment but also the retirement of the officer upon a life pension, which was not the case in the practice of the former Ontario government. I think that, since we are dealing with the matter, we ought to have from some person representing the Militia Department an explanation of the position in which these three officers stand under this alleged agreement. Is it the intention to carry out that agreement? This is a point upon which we ought to be informed.

Mr. FIELDING. I can only say that I have no knowledge of such an agreement. And the only person who could give the information is the minister himself, who is not now accessible. I can say that, so far as I have any knowledge of the matter, there is no such agreement.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. Minister (Mr. Fielding) say that whoever represents the department is not prepared to give the information that the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) would give if he were here? The hon. acting Minister (Mr. Fileding) has the subordinates of the minister (Sir Frederick Borden) at his command and should be able to get the information.

Mr. FIELDING. I could not get from the officers of the department information as to an agreement made by the Minister of Militia. As I say, so far as I know, there is no such agreement; but, of course, I cannot answer for the minister in a matter of which he has personal and intimate knowledge. Therefore, the information for which the hon. gentleman asks can only be had from the minister.

Mr. SPROULE. What about the written agreement?

Mr. FIELDING. I have already said, that as far as I know, there is no written agreement. What happened is that the order in council retiring Lord Aylmer, was initialled by him—as an intimation, I presume, that he was content with the arrangement made. I do not think there is any thing wrong in the minister arranging with an old and honoured official as to the date of his retirement. It would be a mark of respect to the official to fix the date of his retirement at a time convenient to him.

Mr. SPROULE. But why should he be appointed at all?

Mr. FIELDING. Lord Aylmer had been in service for years and was past the age when he might retire. And, if the minister discussed with him the question of the time of his retirement and fixed it at a time suitable for him, that would be an act of respect to an old officer and there would be nothing wrong about it.

Mr. SPROULE. But a larger pension is given than he would otherwise be entitled to receive.

EXCISE DUTY ON TOBACCO.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I desire to ask the government if it is intended to give effect to the intimation made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), at the time he made his budget speech, of a change in the excise law, during the present session, in so far as the duties on tobacco are concerned. In his budget speech, the present leader of the House (Mr. Fielding) spoke as follows:

I am not proposing to deal to-day with the excise law at all, but I am confining myself to the customs tariff. One matter to which attention has been drawn in connection with the excise duty is the duty on tobacco, and that has not to do so much with the increase or decrease of the duty as with the method of collection. We have been asked to consider that question but have not been able to give it our attention so far. We intend, however, dealing with it later in the session. It is merely a question of a readjustment of the method of collection.

The manufacturers of Montreal are anxious to know whether the intimation made by the Finance Minister at the time will not be carried into effect during the present session. I have received a letter from one of them in which he says :

I send you an extract from the speech made by Mr. Fielding upon this question. You will no doubt know that delegations of manufacturers went to Ottawa at the beginning of the session to meet the Prime Minister and Hon. Messrs. Fielding and Templeman and some other ministers in regard to the changes to be made in the tobacco tariff. Our tobacco growers of the counties of Montcalm and Rouville also went to Ottawa to endorse the request made by the manufacturers. Everything in the petition of the manufacturers was approved excepting one article, that which touches the prohibition of free commerce in leaf tobacco. The manufacturers have asked for the prohibition of the free sale of leaf tobacco and the tobacco growers approved the entire demand of the manufacturers, less that particular item. We were promised in a positive manner that the tariff would be amended according to our request. Especially during the last couple of years we have been promised that changes would be made such, for instance, as a uniform tobacco stamp on all tobaccos manufactured in Canada. These changes did not oblige the government to increase the duty or give more protection to manufacturers, but the object in view was to render the products manufactured in Canada uniform in appearance, in order that the consumer should judge of the merit of the tobacco not by the excise stamps of three different colours intended for the tobacco, but upon the merit of the tobacco itself.

My correspondent goes on to ask that this matter should be pressed upon the attention of the government and he speaks on behalf of several important manufacturers in the city of Montreal. He says :

This question of the tobacco industry, considered from a Canadian standpoint, is of very great importance and should receive the immediate attention of Mr. Fielding.

Mr. MARTIN. Who signed that ?

Mr. MONK. Mr. O. W. Legauet, managing director of the St. Lawrence Tobacco Company. I would ask my hon. friend if it would not be possible, as it does not carry with it any increase in the duties but simply a rearrangement of those duties, and as the matter seems to be pressing, to give effect to that intimation which he made during the present session.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend will observe that in the passage which he was good enough to quote from my budget speech I do not say that any change would be made ; I said that at the moment we were dealing with the question of the customs tariff, that representations had been made to us in regard to tobacco duties, which was a question of excise duties and might be considered at a later stage in the session. At that time I had it in mind that it might be taken up at a later stage. However, it is not by any means as simple as my hon. friend supposes. It would be a matter of controversy and when we came to the preparation of the programme for the closing of the session, in view of the fact that there would be some controversy over it, the Prime Minister was of opinion that it was one of the subjects that might well be left over until the next session. I think an intimation of that was given a day or two ago. I may say now that the government have not come to a conclusion adverse to the request, but as it is a matter not free from difficulty or controversy we thought it was one of the things that might be dropped for the present session.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. In reference to the same subject would the Minister of Finance be good enough to inform the House whether the government is going to take any action in reference to the rebate now being paid on cuttings?

Mr. FIELDING. I think I shall have to ask that the whole question of the excise duties on tobacco should be left to the free action of the minister. I would not like to give any definite assurance, only I can assure my hon. friend that that, as well as other phases of the question, has received a very large measure of consideration, and I would not like him to take my reply as indicating any hostility to his views, but simply that the matter may be left in the hands of the department for free action next session.

Mr. H. S. CLEMENTS (West Kent). I feel I cannot allow this occasion to go by without referring to the tobacco industry. I fully understood from the minister that some arrangement in regard to the duties on tobacco would be made at this session. I asked the Minister of Inland Revenue the other day and to my regret he stated that no action would be taken this session. In the section from which I come and in the province of Quebec, this is a very important question, one of the most important pertaining to the farmers, and I am sorry that the government did not take it into consideration in the early part of the session instead of leaving it until, as I believe, the Prime Minister has left for the old country and there is apparently not time to deal with it. I was in the tobacco district the other day and the farmers by the score were asking when the change would take place and if any change was contemplated at this session. A great many farmers there did not approve of putting in the acreage of tobacco this year that they have planted in the past because they claim that the increased cost of their labour and the price they get for their tobacco will not permit them to make a profit on its culture. I asked the question in this House and I was told that 15,000,000 pounds of American leaf tobacco is imported, grown by American farmers.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, is the hon. gentleman in order? I think the rules were changed so that we cannot make speeches on the Orders of the Day.

Mr. FIELDING. This is not the Orders of the Day, it is Supply.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. I apologize. I thought it was the Orders of the Day.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN: Hello! Rip Van Winkle has wakened up.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I am sorry my remarks—

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I humbly apologize, I thought it was on the Orders of the Day, not on Supply.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Out of the 15,000,000 pounds of tobacco we imported from the American farmers, I asked what proportion was made into cigars and what into chewing and plug tobacco. I was told that 9,000,000 pounds of that American leaf tobacco was manufactured into plug tobacco in this country. In the tobacco district from which I come—I cannot speak of the quality of tobacco grown by our friends in Quebec—I know that we grow as good a leaf in Ontario as they grow in the United States, and I contend that when we can raise in this country tobacco equal to what is produced in the United States the market for that 9,000,000 pounds should be reserved for our farmers. It is all right enough to look after the manufacturers; I believe it is right and proper to see also that the farmers who struggle so hard for a living should be given every advantage of the Canadian market and for that reason, if there is 35 cents a pound duty against our leaf tobacco entering the United States, which is a prohibitive duty, some similar arrangement should be made to prevent that 9,000,000 pounds of American tobacco coming into this country in competition with the products of our own farmers. I do hope that the government will see fit even at the end of this session, to give at least some consideration to our tobacco growers in order that they may be induced to go on and develop that industry which I claim, in my section of the country can be made one of the most lucrative branches of the farming industry. On the farming lands in that district we are able to produce every pound of tobacco of that class required in Canada. It is not enough to say that the farmers have not been engaged in the industry to a sufficient extent; they have not been given sufficient protection to go ahead and put up the proper buildings for the curing of the tobacco. Had we these facilities I believe it would excel the American tobacco, and I see no reason why the American farmer should get at least $1,000,000 a year from that industry which should properly go to the Canadian farmer. I sincerely trust that the farmers of this country will get some encouragement this session. When the former Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) was in the district a year ago, he saw for himself the advantages that were bound to accrue to the country from the cultivation of tobacco and appeared convinced that something more should be done for our tobacco growers. I only regret that he left the Inland Revenue Department, because, had he remained there, I am confident that the tobacco growing industry would have been protected as are our other industries. At present it is not getting the encouragement it should and will practically go out of existence unless something be done for it.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I would like to point out that at present there is very considerable duty on imported tobacco, and the farmers who are raising Canadian tobacco have, within the past few years, very much improved the quality of their products. This improvement is largely due to the fact that they enjoy protection and are consequently able to command to a considerable extent the Canadian market. But we have inaugurated a very much more important movement than any increase or readjustment of the duties, and that is the imparting of information how to cure tobacco. That has been done through the instrumentality of my department by the appointment of a tobacco curing expert, who has been able to help our farmers very materially, with the result that they have improved the quality of their tobacco to such an extent that our manufacturers are using it much more largely than before. There is thus to-day a demand for Canadian tobacco which five or ten years ago did not exist. Our farmers, being sure of a market, have not the slightest hesitation about increasing their acreage and improving their culture. It is quite true that a readjustment of taxation on tobacco as between customs and excise might be arranged, which might still further help that industry without adding to the burdens of the consumer, but at this late stage of the session that question could not possibly be taken up. It is however under consideration.

COAL STRIKES IN THE WEST.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Minister of Labour). I regret that the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) is not in his seat because I have some news about the projected strike at Taber, which no doubt will gratify him. Yesterday a question was put to me, asking whether I had any news regarding the application of the new Act, and I am in receipt of the following letter dated Taber, April 5, 1907.

Your telegram to hand. As soon as apprised of the character of the new law bearing on such matters as we are contending with, I notified the men that the mine was open. They are now working. I hereby make application to the Department of Labour, through you, that a board of conciliation be appointed to inquire into the causes of our disagreement as quickly as possible.

C. DIXON,
Canada West Coal and Coke Company.

I have further good news for the House and country. As you are aware, we were threatened with a general strike in the coal mines out west. Strikes were threatened on the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Company, the West Canadian Collieries, Limited, the Canadian and American Coal and Coke Company, and the International Coal and Coke Company, employing a total of 2,770 persons. On being apprised of the new law, the men have returned to work without striking and have all applied, through their president, for a board of investigation. I am glad therefore to announce that there will be no general strike before a complete investigation is had.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. One, or several boards ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am informed by my deputy that the miners and the mine owners have agreed to submit the disputes to one board for all the different mines.

IMMIGRATION POLICY OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE (Montmagny). I desire to call attention to a matter concerning which I gave notice some weeks ago, namely, the re-establishment of bonuses on immigration. Last year, when the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company was cancelled, the principal reason given why this contract had been entered into was that the government did not any longer desire to deal with individual booking agents or steamship companies. When, therefore, I read in the Montreal 'Star' that a policy of that kind was going to be taken up again and that the government were going to make a new contract with certain shipping companies or booking agents, I was more than surprised. I gave notice then that I proposed to discuss to-day the policy of the government on immigration, especially as regards bonuses.

I will try to prove to the House that the policy of paying bonuses for immigrants is, in the first place, a dangerous policy; secondly, that there is an unjust distribution of the funds in bringing immigration into this country, and, finally, that the policy on which the government has entered is a reckless and unwise one. I say that the system of paying bonuses on immigrants to this country is a false and dangerous system. It is a false system in so far as it has for its object the filling up of this country. It will be evident at once to any man of thought that the idea of paying bonuses on immigrants will have the certain consequence of bringing in men of poor quality. The steamship companies which we make our immigration agents have no other desire than to get the premium or passage fare; they care not where the immigrant comes from, what his character is, what his health is; their only care is to bring a large number of persons to this country so that they can receive a greater number of premiums. I would say more than that. In my opinion there are only two classes of desirable immigrants that we need in this country; those are immigrants that come from the British isles and those that come from France or Belgium. They are easily assimilated; they are already under the same laws and civilization that we enjoy in this country. The British immigrant or the French immigrant when he comes to Canada finds practically the same laws and the same civilization with which he was acquainted in his own country. On the other hand, the immigrant who is brought here by booking agents from all parts of continental Europe comes to Canada with an entirely different idea of civilization to that which prevails in this country. More than that, not only is the policy of paying bonuses to immigrants a dangerous policy, but it has already had a tendency to endanger the quality of immigrants we can have from the British isles. I will not give my own opinion, but I will give the opinion of a man who resides in the western part of Canada, who is an English immigrant himself. In the Toronto 'Globe' of Tuesday, January 22, 1907, I find this, speaking about immigrants that come from the British isles under the bonus system :

Vancouver, British Columbia, January 14.—I fear the Salvation Army immigration scheme more than the Sikh invasion. I am sure mischief and expense to the province will come if this Salvation Army scheme is accepted.

Thus remarks Captain Andrew Hamilton, a British officer, who had such experience with emigration from the east end of London to Canada before he settled in British Columbia. In view of 'General' Booth's forthcoming visit to the Pacific coast his statements are sure to attract a good deal of attention.

Settlement in villages or farm colonies is all right ; then the community bear their own burdens, and the lazy or drunken are located and treated by their own patrons, but fancy emptying Whitechapel or Hoxton into Vancouver because the east end wanted to see the world or have a change.

In strong terms Captain Hamilton exposes the plan of the British Columbia government to let loose on this province thousands of the submerged tenth whom 'General' Booth is busy rescuing from the gutters of London.

He goes on further :

The startling fact has been disclosed that it costs, or is to cost, $15 a head to transfer a Salvationist from Great Britain, and that $40 per head is asked from those who would subscribe for the fare of a waif or stray or a reformed drunkard to the west.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. What are you reading from?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. From Captain Andrew Hamilton, speaking in Vancouver on the Salvation Army immigration scheme. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we see that even the best kind of immigration which we could bring to this country is endangered by the system of bonuses. There is no doubt that if it goes on it will become dangerous to the country, and within a very short time it will make of us, to use the expression of another British writer, I think Mr. Wells—it will make of Canada a mongrel nation. At the present rate of immigration we cannot assimilate the immigrants as fast as they come in. The United States has been receiving immigrants at a tremendous rate, and yet the incoming tide is not half as strong, comparatively, as it is in this country. The people of the United States are becoming anxious about immigration, and we find that President Roosevelt is calling for an international convention to discuss immigration and to check it into the United States. 'Le Canada,' of February 26, 1907, had an article with this title, 'Problem of Immigration, 1,000,000 immigrants per year; the American Congress alarmed by foreign invasion decides to call for international conference on immigration.' It says :

While Canada sees with satisfaction the number of immigrants that every year fill up its immense territory, the United States begin to feel alarmed at the foreign immigration.

But conditions of immigration in the United States and in this country are so widely different that it is only fair to say that the danger of foreign immigration into the United States is not one hundredth part as great as it is in this country. Let me give you a few figures to prove my contention. The Americans, with a population of almost 87,000,000, cannot assimilate 1,000,000 of foreign immigrants per year, that is 150 immigrants for every 10,000 of the population. Canada, with a population of 6,000,000 received 215,000 immigrants in 1905-6, and in 1906-7 will probably receive 300,000; that means that Canada receives 360 foreign immigrants per 10,000 of the population, and probably during the next year we will have to assimilate 500 per 10,000. We have received during the last six years 736,000 immigrants. According to the 'Hansard' of 1903, page 701, the unit of representation is 25,736 ; therefore, we have received enough immigrants during the last six years to fill twenty-nine new counties with a foreign element, and at the present rate, within four years, we will have enough of the foreign element to build up sixty counties, only five less than are now apportioned to the province of Quebec.

Again comparing the United States with Canada, I have some figures here which I will not read because they would be rather tedious, but they show that the immigration into the United States between 1790 and 1900 was never greater than eleven per cent of the native population. According to the figures of the Department of the Interior of Canada, from 1900 to 1911, Canada will have received in immigration thirty seven per cent of the native population. Only when the United States had fifty million of a population they received 300,000 immigrants a year. President Roosevelt is already sufficiently alarmed to call a congress to check the immigration movement In Canada, where we have only a population of six millions, we received more immigrants than the United States did when they had a population of fifty million and we received more than the United States did when they had a population of six millions. Then, they received about one and one-half per cent and to-day in Canada with six millions of a population we receive thirty-seven per cent. I will give some more figures which I think very interesting and then I will not any further bother the House with figures for a little while but I will go on with the facts which are more relevant to the position of Canada. To proceed with the comparison with the United States the figures show that since 1850 the percentage of foreign born people in the United States was never more than 15 per cent while in Canada the foreign born population is about 12 per cent. The total population of Canada at the last census was 5,371,000 and the foreign born population was 684,322. Taking the same proportion, according to the estimate of the Department of the Interior, the total population in Canada in four years will be 8,000,000 and the foreign-born population at the rate at which it has been increasing will be 2,600,000. If we receive 500,000 immigrants a year, in six years that makes 3,000,000 immigrants of which 2,600,000 will be foreign-born and if the average continues we will within ten years have 5,000,000 foreign-born people or almost half the total population of Canada will be foreign-born. Canada at this rate cannot assimilate the immigrants who are coming in from the old country. I may say that we almost deserve what is happening to us because of the manner in which the immigration propaganda has been carried on by this government or any government before which propaganda is the most unwise one that could be devised. Lately we have had the famous North Atlantic Trading Company which received the bonus previously paid to individual booking agents. You remember well, Mr. Speaker, that when this contract was cancelled last year it was cancelled, either, as my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) put it the other day, because the contract was an immoral one, or because it was opposed to the laws of nations. We have been told that some of the shareholders if their names were given, if the people of Canada knew to whom they were paying this bonus, would be obliged to commit suicide. I have been under the impression since this reason has been given that if the names of the shareholders of the North Atlantic Trading Company were given not many of them would commit suicide, that not one of them would commit suicide, but that probably a good many of them would go to prison. There is another feature of the North Atlantic Trading Company contract and that is the exclusion of the French element which involves an unjust distribution in the expenditure for immigration purposes. This expenditure is unjust to the older provinces of the Dominion.

The Immigration Department is for the Northwest and very little is for the older provinces of the Dominion except that they have to bear the burden of immigration. I have under my hand a publication which is issued by the Department of the Interior called the Twentieth Century of Canada. It is rather an expensive publication. It has 39 and 40 pages of printing and maps but the Twentieth Century of Canada is nothing less than the Northwest. I see half a column for Ontario and half a column for Quebec. The immigration policy which is carried on is carried on only for the Northwest. Certainly no one in Canada desires that the fertile plains of the Northwest should not be developed, but we have at the same time to remember that the older provinces of the country support more than three-quarters of the burden of the cost of the immigration policy of this government and they should at least receive something in return. We will have the west filled up with a very large foreign population which has no national idea of Canadian unity and which will overbalance within a very short time the older provinces of the Dominion. This is so true that one of the great writers of Canada, Mr. Goldwin Smith, in the last issue of 'Review of Reviews,' says that the filling of the Northwest with Doukhobors, Mennonites, Galicians, Jews, Poles, Prussians and all those coming in from Europe, will have no other effect than the breaking up of confederation. I would not go that far but it seems to me that we should exercise greater wisdom in the selecting of the new population which we are inducing to settle on the plains of the Northwest.

There is another feature of the immigration policy of this government which I desire to call to the attention of this House and the country in general. It is the most unjust way in which French immigration and the province of Quebec have been treated. The province of Quebec, in so far as the immigration policy of this government is concerned, pay more than their share. We are about 30 per cent of the population and therefore we pay 30 per cent of the expenditure. In return what do we receive in so far as French immigration is concerned? We receive 0·5 of the whole immigration of this country. Immigration into Canada, a French economist, Mr. Pierre Le Roy Beaulieu has stated, is fast overflowing the natural increase of the Canadian population, but at the same time the immigration policy of the government does nothing towards bringing to Canada French immigrants. I speak for the French Canadians who are about 30 per cent of the population and who therefore bear 30 per cent of the cost of the immigration policy. In 1905-6, of $843,000 spent for immigration purposes the province of Quebec paid $260,000. Of French immigration about $10,000 was spent. Of the 215,000 immigrants who came to Canada not more than 4,000 were French speaking.

Mr. W. ROCHE. What profession or employment did the French-speaking immigrants follow?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I think most of them were farm labourers.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Were any of them expelled clergymen?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. No, but I hope a great many of them will come to Canada.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Clergymen who were driven out of France by order of the French government.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I hope we will get more of them because they are the very best class of immigrants we can have in this country.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. A curse to the country.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. They can compare with those who have been described by an imperial officer as worse than Sikhs.

An hon. MEMBER. How will they vote?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I hope they will vote according to their conscience as every honest Frenchman does. Now, my hon. friend may not be pleased with the French immigration we bring to this country, but I can say, Mr. Speaker, that it compares advantageously with the immigration which has been brought from continental Europe by the North Atlantic Trading Company. The French immigrant would compare more than favourably with the Polish Jews, the Prussians, the Galicians and the Doukhobors, who are looking for the Lord in the plains of the Northwest, or who are in jail at Regina, because they will not work. These are the immigrants which have been favoured by this government. On the other hand, we have as our agents in France Mr. Wiallard, a very able man, but he cannot do the work alone; and Mr. Foursin-Escande, who walks about on two crutches, and would be a fit subject for the Canadian Senate. I protest against the conspiracy against French immigration which is carried on in the Interior Department. To prove that, I will give the opinion of a man who was once in the Department of the Interior as deputy minister, and who is termed in the newspaper from which I quote the 'Hon. Mr. Smart':

> The 'Northern Express,' Liverpool, February 10, 1902—British blood is needed.
> The Hon. J. A. Smart, Deputy Minister of the Interior of Canada, and Mr. W. T. R. Preston, immigration agent general for the Dominion, arrived in Liverpool to-day from London and Glasgow to arrange a gigantic system of British emigration to Canada.
> More British blood is also needed to be infused if the views of the Dominion of Canada is not to be Frenchified by the rapid growth of the French population.

That citation, I think, is a true opinion of the policy which has been carried on in the Interior Department, at all events until very recent years. The motto of the Immigration Department seems to have been: The Doukhobors rather than the French. We have other facts which show the policy of the Interior Department towards immigration. We have in Belgium a most favourable field for immigration, and Belgian immigrants would favourably compare with any immigrants which come from the British Isles. I may also say that the Belgian government favours emigration to Canada. We had some time ago an exposition in Belgium, and the Canadian government was represented there by Mr. Hutchison, who could not speak a word of French, although the French language, together with the Flemish, is the language of the people of Belgium. Some pamphlets were sent by the Quebec government to the Canadian exhibit, and, on the order of Mr. Hutchinson, the Canadian representative, they were stowed away in the cellar of the Canadian pavilion, and strict injunctions given that not one of them should be distributed. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if such an unjust act can be defended in this House or before the country? I may be again met with the old argument that the French people do not emigrate; at all events, that is the argument which we hear from the government in the province of Quebec. We are told that the Frenchman is happy in his own country, that he loves old France, that he does not want to expatriate himself.

But this statement is exaggerated. The French statistics for the year 1905-6 show that in that year 92,000 Frenchmen emigrated; that from Belgium 43,000 emigrated; that there are 52,000 French people in the Argentine Republic, and that in France there are 400,000 unemployed. I am not as narrow minded as some members who have interrupted me, and I will say that we do not want in Canada the scum of the French population and the scum of the unemployed. But these 400,000 idle people in France prove that there is an economic disturbance in that country, that the people are seeking for work, and that they would be willing to come to Canada if a wise propaganda were carried on amongst them. The statistics also show that in France, to 1891, 6,235,000 people migrated to Paris, or from one department to another, which shows a great displacement of population and unrest, and a field for immigration propaganda by Canada. Even so late as 1902, the present Minister of the Interior stated that the British people would not emigrate to this country. But an active and wise propaganda was carried on in the British Isles, with the result that while in 1900 only 4,129 emigrants came to Canada, in 1901 there were 9,401; in 1902 there were 13,000; in 1903, 41,000; in 1904, 50,300, and the number is steadily increasing. This shows that the Minister of the Interior was wrong, and that by the adoption of proper methods the British people have come to Canada, and we are now relying on them to counterbalance the foreign population dumped on us by the booking agents and the North Atlantic Trading Company. I could also give figures to show that the French emigrant has cost less to this country than the British emigrant, and I only mention this to show that if the Department of the Interior were not so savagely opposed to it, it would be easy to bring French emigrants to this country. There is another reason in favour of French immigration, which I cite for the benefit of my friends from the west, and that is that French emigration is a national necessity. The French Canadian people are great assimilators, one strong proof of which is that in the county of Charlevoix they have assimilated a whole Scotch regiment, and every one knows that none are more tenacious of their nationality than are the Scotch people. Now, I contend that the French Canadian people are the natural guardians of the idea of Canadian nationality. We French Canadians have no other country but Canada, while the English Canadian has not yet quite come to know whether his country is the old land or whether it is Canada. My hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) says he is an Englishman before being a Canadian.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No, he didn't.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. He said he was an imperialist before being a Canadian.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Well, perhaps I made a mistake, because the British people were wise enough in the last elections to show they would have nothing to do with imperialism. Again, the French Canadians have an entirely different civilization which separates them from the people of the American republic. Their aspirations, their race, their language, separates them from the United States. On the other hand, the English Canadian has nothing but an imaginary line which separates him from the United States, and I think I am right in saying that every day, English civilization is becoming more closely allied to what I might call Americanism. It seems to me that the government would be doing a wise thing if they brought to this country French emigrants who would be assimilated by the French Canadian people, and who would strengthen them to assist the British people in resisting the growing influences of Americanism in Canada. But it seems that the government has not been considering that side of the question and has no other ambition than the stuffing of the Northwest with a foreign population. We realize the truth of this when we look at the Auditor General's Report and compare the expenditure made to secure this foreign element with the expenditure made to bring British or French people to Canada. In the Auditor General's Report for 1905, page L—13, it will be found that of the expenditure on immigration in 1904-5, $77,000 was spent in the United States, $52,673 in Great Britain, $13,000 in France and Belgium. In addition bonuses were paid in the United States to the amount of $5,860. But the North Atlantic Trading Company, which had its field in continental Europe—France and Belgium being excluded and accounted for by this $13,000 I have referred to—received no less than $111,000. Thus it will be seen that by far the largest expenditure was upon this continental immigration which is so largely made up of elements almost impossible of assimilation in Canada. And am I not right in saying that the contract which the government now will have with the booking agents and steamship companies is most unwise and uncalled for? The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has said that fair criticism was always welcome. It seems to me the fairest of fair criticism when I quote the figures of the department's own expenditure to show that more is devoted to promoting this foreign immigration than to bringing in people of our own kin. This order in council which we are now discussing, passed by the government on February 19 last, was adopted by the government without authority from parliament. We do not know for how long this arrangement has been made for no details appear in the order in council except that fees are to be paid to selected steamship booking agents in continental Europe, including France and Belgium. Judging from the past, I assume that the immigration from France and Belgium will be looked after by one agent who is able but overworked and another who is an invalid.

This system for which the country is paying has already been condemned by the government. The Minister of the Interior last year, when defending the North Atlantic Trading Company contract, said that the government did not want to deal any more with individual booking agents, and therefore entered into the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company, and not very long afterwards, the contract with that company was cancelled. Why? Because the North Atlantic Trading Company was not living up to its obligations so that there was a decrease of immigration under its operation. Sir, if the North Atlantic Trading Company could not be supervised by this government, how are all the individual booking agents in continental Europe to be under the supervision of the government? How is the government to be reasonably assured that the character of the immigrants, the health, the nationality, the ideal of the immigrants, will be in accord with the needs of this country and with our hopes for its future? It seems to me that the order in council itself, in contrast with the previous declaration of the Minister of the Interior, is the strongest condemnation of the government's policy.

Moreover, it must be remembered that the arrangement under this order in council covers the same territory as did that of the North Atlantic Trading Company. Therefore we shall be faced by the same international difficulties; our agents will be obliged to work in deep secrecy, because, should their work become known, they will be obliged either to commit suicide or go to prison—for that is the dilemma which faced the representatives of the North Atlantic Trading Company, according to the government. The only object that these booking agents will have will be to get the bonus and fare for transportation of the immigrant. It seems to me that, if we want to have good immigration into the west, if we want to have immigrants who will be in accord with our national ideas, the best settlers of all are Canadians born. Canada to-day produces more emigrants to other countries, according to its population, than any other country in the world. Why not divert this emigration as to make it a migration within our own country and fill up the west with our own people? There is to-day an actual discrimination against the Canadian who wishes to settle in our Northwest, because it is to-day actually cheaper for a man to come from a foreign country and settle in the Northwest, than it is for a Canadian born—in the province of Quebec at least—to go and settle in that country. Not being favoured, so far as settling in the Northwest is concerned, the Canadian is led to emigrate to the United States or elsewhere to fill up the factories and workshops of other countries. Is there any good reason, on grounds of common sense, for the immigration policy that is now carried on by the government? I have heard no such reason given. But I have seen the reason given many times in the press that its object is simply to promote the interest of speculators. It is stated that there are certain friends of the government—some newspapers go so far as to say certain officials of the government—who own land in the Northwest and who are promoting their own interests regardless of the future of Canada and the carrying out of our national ideas. They want to sell their land, and, to that end, they promote the bringing in of this mongrel population, a population that comes in by flocks. Conceivably, this might have been upheld by the former Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). But, knowing the present minister and his immigration policy, it seems to me that speculation should not appeal to him as a reason for paying a bonus to booking agents to bring to Canada the scum of continental Europe. If this goes on, in twenty years, there will be no such thing as the Canadian ideal.

Canada will be still a great country, but filled up with a foreign population and with a population of the character that is creating such alarm to-day in the United States. The best proof of what I say is the fact that for the first time last year we had in Montreal, under the present policy of the government, a socialist parade with the red flag of anarchy at its head, and possibly this year, if the police do not interfere, we shall have a repetition of that procession. In a few years the Jewish population of Montreal has increased from 8,000 to 40,000. It seems to me therefore that if the twentieth century is to be, in the words of the right hon. the First Minister, Canada's century, we must first establish a sound and solid Canadian basis. Otherwise we shall see in the Northwest, with its strong influx of population from the United States, a repetition of the story of Texas. When the state of Texas belonged to Mexico, there was a strong American population going into that country, and the result was that not long afterwards Texas declared itself in favour of annexation to the United States. In our case of course it may be that the Americans will be better satisfied with the laws and institutions of this country than those of their own, but they are coming in so thick and the foreign population is coming in so fast, that it is physically impossible for us to assimilate them, and we will be taking only a wise and prudent course if we take some steps to prevent a repetition in our Northwest of the story of Texas. It will be only by establishing a solid national Canadian basis that the twentieth century will be ours. Otherwise we shall be strangers in our own country and the foreigners will be the masters. Therefore I beg to move the following motion :

That the payment of bonuses on immigration has a tendency to bring in a less rather than a more desirable class of people, that it is a most unwise policy and expenditure and therefore should not be continued.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I am sure the House has heard with relief the motion just made by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) because I think every one will agree that he has been successful in crowding into an hour and a half a more liberal proportion of mis-statements with regard to important public questions than it has ever been our misfortune to listen to. Having condescended however to close his remarks by moving a motion, it is possible for us to consider and discuss it. I may say, however, that it does not seem to have a great deal to do with the greater part of the hon. gentleman's speech. If I could gather anything from his remarks, it was that he was opposed to immigration. He was afraid that Canada would cease to be Canadian if immigration continued and therefore it was not sound Canadian policy to encourage immigration. That is the point that I singled out from the very large number of contradictory positions taken by my hon. friend.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Does my hon. friend say that I am opposed to immigration ?

Mr. OLIVER. That is what I understood.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Not at all. What I am opposed to is this system of bonusing, which has the effect of bringing into this country an undesirable class of foreign population.

Mr. OLIVER. I am glad to be corrected, but it does not appear to me to make any material difference in the result, whether that result be brought about by the payment of bonuses or any other means. If there be any danger of such an influx of people within the next few years as will swamp the Canadians of to-day, that is a condition which the hon. gentleman devoutly desires to prevent. The question of bonuses therefore is merely a side issue and the question of securing immigration is the real issue, if issue there be. In any discussion of this nature, I think it only needs to be stated that Canada has an area equal to that of continental Europe, that it has at present a population not quite equal to that of Belgium, that under such conditions there must be necessity for a reasonable and rapid increase of population if we who are alive to-day, wish to see our country achieve the greatness which we believe is its destiny. That at any rate has been the belief of the public men of Canada ever since its settlement, and my hon. friend has the honour of holding an absolutely unique position in this regard. The question then is how shall we best achieve the result to which my hon. friend is so strongly opposed, that is to say, the development of these great natural resources which are at our command for the benefit of Canada and Canadians. The idea that Canada should stand still, that its resources should not be developed, is one which I think no one except my hon. friend will advocate for an instant in this country or in his public capacity. But how is that increase of population best to be brought about? There have been many and various attempts and policies to accomplish this. As circumstances in this country have changed, so has our immigration policy. And as the conditions of the countries from which we draw immigration change, so must we change our policy. Therefore, because we have a certain policy to-day and had a different one yesterday, it does not follow that either is better or worse than the other. What would rather follow is that each best suited the peculiar circumstances and conditions of the day, and that as circumstances and conditions change so must our policy.

My hon. friend has spoken of bonuses to immigrants or to steamship companies on account of immigrants. If he has moved his resolution under the belief that bonuses are paid to immigrants or steamship companies, he is under a wrong impression. Bonuses are not paid to immigrants or to steamship companies on account of immigrants. They are paid for the purpose of advertising the advantages of Canada in those countries from which it is considered desirable to secure immigrants. The idea is that Canada is a country of such natural advantages that if these advantages are properly and fully brought before the people of those countries from which immigration will likely come, those people will come to Canada and take advantage of those opportunities. It is not now, although it was, I believe at one time, a part of the policy of the government of Canada to bonus immigrants who come to Canada or to bonus steamship companies for the bringing of immigrants to this country, nor has it been the policy at any time since this government attained power. The system of paying immigrants to come to Canada and of giving bonuses to steamship companies to bring them was not considered by this government to be a sound policy and was not continued.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Did not the Doukhobors get the bonus of $5 a head?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think so.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Yes, the money was paid to them direct.

Mr. OLIVER. The Doukhobors were not brought in as a part of the general immigration policy. I am not going to argue whether my hon. friend is correct or not; I am under the impression he is not, but admitting for the moment that he is, it only brings out the fact which I have stated that the policy of immigration must vary from time to time according to conditions which have to be met.

We believe that what is necessary is to bring the desirability of the conditions in Canada to the attention of the people best fitted to avail themselves of these conditions by coming to Canada. We believe that by doing that we have gone as far as it is the duty and the business of the government to go, and as far as the government can safely go. That is what has been done in past years, and that is what has produced the results that have been achieved. The bonus that is paid is paid to booking agents, the people whose business in life is to sell tickets of transportation without regard to the point to which the transportation carries. In Europe, including the British isles, the calling of a booking agent stands by itself; a man who is entitled to sell tickets of transportation receives a license from the government of the country in which he lives and is under certain restrictions and surveillance of the government of that country which assumes a certain responsibility for the business he carries on and looks after him in its operation. In some countries the booking agent is under less strict surveillance than in others. In Great Britain there is very little restriction; he pays his license and that is pretty well all there is to it, but in some European countries he is responsible for the representations he makes to the immigrant and he is liable to serious penalties for infractions of the regulations which surround him.

The principle upon which the bonuses are paid to agents is that the business of these agents is the sale of tickets; they get from the various railway and steamship companies from whom they hold agencies a commission on each ticket. There are thousands of these booking agents in the British isles and in the large continental countries. They are necessarily in touch with the travelling public and with the emigrating public. A man who is going to move from the country in which he lives to another country naturally goes to one of these licensed booking agents to buy his ticket, and it goes without saying that in some degree the booking agent has an interest in selling a man a ticket. The ticket that will carry with it the largest commission to the booking agent is the one the booking agent would most desire to sell and by giving a bonus to the booking agent on tickets sold to Canada it becomes a matter of interest to the booking agent to sell that man a ticket to Canada in preference to a ticket to any other country. It then becomes his business to advertise Canada in whatever way may suit him best, possibly by public advertising, possibly by conversation across the counter, but in one way or another, whatever it may be, the bonus which we give to the booking agent multiplies the agencies of advertising for Canada by the number of booking agencies in the country in which they are operating, provided we choose to do business with the booking agent. That is the principle of the fee to the booking agent; that is the principle of the bonus. It is not a bonus to the immigrant; it is not a bonus to the steamship company, it is a means of advertising Canada and we believe that from the results we have achieved it is a very good means of advertising Canada. We do not offer any assistance to emigrants or to the steamship companies except in the ordinary way of subsidies, in regard to which I shall speak later on, and we do not believe it is sound policy to do so; we believe that if the immigrant cannot be induced to come by a fair representation of the conditions which prevail in this country then he had better stay where he is.

In regard to the North Atlantic Trading Company my hon. friend has said truly that at one time we were paying bonuses to individual booking agents in Europe, and at the time of the organization of the North Atlantic Trading Company it was thought advisable, instead of paying to these individual booking agents who were at all times under this police surveillance in the carrying on of their business, to make the arrangement with what was believed to be, and as a matter of fact was, a syndicate of booking agents who would be able, to better advantage, to carry on the advertising that was necessary to the profitable earning of the bonus to them. That was the reason for the agreement with the North Atlantic Trading Company; that was all there was in it; that was what was in it. The associated booking agents under the name of the North Atlantic Trading Company were able to carry on joint advertising, instead of individual advertising, and were able to place the advertising as it could not be placed on the responsibility of the individual agents. That is the reason why it was necessary that the proceedings of the North Atlantic Trading Company should not be exposed to publicity in the House, because of the regulations in the countries in which the work was carried on. The contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company was entered into because it was believed to be desirable to deal with a syndicate rather than with individual agents. At that time there was great necessity for more people to come to Canada. We had not up to that time had a very satisfactory inflow of population, it was desirable that there should be such an inflow, and means were taken to secure it in that way. The years have gone by since then, we have attracted a large number of immigrants from other countries than continental Europe; we have now a large immigration from the states and a large immigration from the British islands; we have the benefit of the immigration we had already received from continental Europe, and we are not to-day under the same stress for securing immigrants. It is not necessary that we should take the same means or be satisfied with the same class that we were glad to get at that time.

In looking over the conditions as I found them, I saw, in the first place, that the business of transportation from continental Europe, from the countries in which the North Atlantic Trading Company were dealing, had gone into the hands of a steamship combine, a combine which absolutely divided the traffic between them; that is to say, they divided the results of the traffic without regard to which line carried the passenger, or to what destination he was taken. Now it must be evident that although the bonus is an inducement to the booking agent to secure the passage of an immigrant to Canada, an agreement between the steamship companies which absolutely disregards whether the immigrant comes by one steamship line or another, the steamship companies getting their proportion of the moneys in any case, absolutely disarranges any control we might be able to exercise over immigration, and control over immigration is just as necessary as immigration itself. In view of the existence of this steamship combine and in looking over the return it appeared to me that the North Atlantic Trading Company, although they had been instrumental in securing large numbers of immigrants to Canada, immigrants who under those circumstances were very welcome, at the same time it seemed to me that the special provision of the contract which had been made was not being carried out by them, or was not producing the results that we were entitled to expect it would produce. The agreement that we made with the North Atlantic Trading Company contemplated a distinction as between the several countries of Europe, there was a preference shown in that contract to immigrants from Scandinavia. My hon. friend (Mr. A. Lavergne) does not seem to think that immigrants from Scandinavia are at all preferable to immigrants from other parts of Europe, but the gentlemen who negotiated that contract thought they were, and they made provision for a special payment for a propaganda in Scandinavia. When on looking into the returns I found, as it apeared to me, that the number of eligible immigrants from Scandinavia instead of increasing as we hoped it would under that payment, was either stationary or actually decreasing. We felt that in the circumstances surrounding the North Atlantic Trading Company it was not a matter for argument, it was a matter in which either the company produced the results, or we ceased to do business with them. When I found that the immigration from Scandinavia did not justify the special payment being made to the North Atlantic Company in order to induce that immigration, it appeared to me, judging by the results, that that company was not carrying out its contract and we cancelled the contract.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I never said that the Scandinavian immigrants were any worse than others from continental Europe, but that I preferred immigrants from the British Isles and from France and Belgium, because they were already nearly assimilated.

Mr. OLIVER. I think my hon. friend hardly remembers everything he did say. But I think he will agree that the people of Scandinavia are not inferior in civilization or in any of the attributes of civilization, and capacity for free government, to the people even of France and Belgium, or the British Isles; that industrially, commercially, politically and educationally they are quite equal to any other civilized race. I have stated the reason why the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company was cancelled.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was the reason? I did not quite catch it.

Mr. OLIVER. I say that, in the first place, the stress of requirement had passed, and it was in order now for us to consider the possibility of controlling the immigration rather than merely securing a large volume of it. Then, finding that owing to the existence of a combine amongst the steamship lines sailing from the ports through which the immigrants were secured in the North Atlantic Trading Company contract—owing to an agreement between them which provided that the companies should divide the results no matter whether they carried passengers or not, it appeared to me that the control of that immigration had passed out of our hands. And when in addition I found, as it appeared to me from the returns that the immigration for which we were specially paying was either stationary or decreasing, I was justificed in assuming that the North Atlantic Trading Company was not carrying out its contact, and the contact was cancelled.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is that the same reason of a different reason to that which the minister gave last year?

Mr. OLIVER. I think if my hon. friend will look into the 'Hansard' he will satisfy himself on that point. I do not think my hon. friend is as gracious as he might be in asking the question in that way.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought it was a very polite question.

Mr. OLIVER. I must disagree with my hon. friend. Then in regard to what my hon. friend calls a contract. The order in council recently passed to provide for the payment of bonuses to agents on immigrants from continental Europe, makes provision for carrying on such a propaganda as may be possible in these different countries, and as may be desirable according to the conditions in our country, by utilizing the services of booking agents where those services can be satisfactorily utilized. Now it is true that a large number of people are coming from the British Isles, it is true that a large number of people are coming from the United States, nevertheless it is true that in Canada today there never was such a demand for unskilled labour as there is at the present moment. As a matter of fact the great railroad projects which are in hand for the development of Canada are largely handicapped if not at an actual standstill, because of a lack of necessary unskilled labour. It seemed to us therefore that although we were getting immigrants to settle our lands from the States and from the British islands, there was also room for immigrants from continental Europe to settle our lands, and there was above all room for employment of thousands and thousands of unskilled labourers to build railroads and who after having done their work, with the money that they had received on that work, would be in a position to go on to the land and become good settlers and good citizens of Canada.

We therefore thought, although we had cancelled the North Atlantic Trading Company's contract, it was right and fair, in view of all these circumstances, that we should take means to utilize the services of booking agents in any country in continental Europe from which we might think it desirable or possible to secure suitable immigrants to meet the present urgent requirements of this country. Therefore, we passed this order in council which permits the payment of a ten shilling bonus for an adult and of a five shilling bonus for a child from certain of these countries in continental Europe. These payments are permitted to be made directly to the booking agent on exactly the same principle as payments may be made to booking agents in Great Britain. The conditions are the same in all particulars except that the bonus is only one-half what it is in regard to a British immigrant. My hon. friend may believe if he likes that the difference is because of the extra cost of assimilating continental Europeans as compared with the cost of assimilating British immigrants. There is no contract with any one. We have taken authority which will enable us to pay a bonus to people whom we may see fit to do business with in countries which will permit us to do business with these people.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. If you pay that bonus to the people that you see fit to pay it to you will be making a contract.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, we perhaps make a contract but it is a tacit contract. We propose to hold out to certain people under certain conditions that they will receive a certain bonus but we have never made any contract and the order in council which my hon. friend has told the House was a contract is no contract. This is only one of the very many inaccuracies with which my hon. friend has favoured the House to-day.

At one o'clock House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. OLIVER. The motion before the chair condemns the granting of bonuses as a means of inducing immigration, and it sets up the allegation that such a system tends to indiscriminate rather than to select immigration. I desire to place before the House the facts in connection with the bonus system as applied to Great Britain, and as it will be applied to continental Europe under the order in council to which my hon. friend (Mr. Armand Lavergne) has taken objection. The system granting bonuses to booking agents has been in force for many years. It was in force in Great Britain when the contract was made with the North Atlantic Trading Company, and the agents then received seven shillings a head on adults booked to Canada. There was a general understanding that this bonus should only be paid on immigrants of the agricultural class, but in practise it was taken for granted that any one who saw fit to declare his intention of following agricultural pursuits in Canada might be classed as an agriculturist. It was found, under such a system, that there was not that discrimination which was desired in the immigration from Great Britain. So long as the intending immigrant declared he was going to follow farming in Canada, the booking agent made his claim and, in a large number of instances, he was paid. But the people we desired from Great Britain were those who not only had it in their mind to follow farming here, but who, by reason of their mode of life in the old country, were fitted to pursue that calling when they came to Canada. After consideration, it was decided to increase the bonus on British immigrants from seven shillings a head to twenty shillings, or five dollars, and at the same time to definitely restrict the payment of the bonus to immigrants who had followed occupations in the old country which might fit them to be agriculturists in Canada. This large increase in the bonus was made for the express purpose of giving a substantial inducement to the booking agents to secure only desirable immigrants. If there was a difference of five dollars between the immigrant of one class and the immigrant of another class, it was believed that the booking agent would ship the desirable man to Canada and ship the undesirable man to anywhere else he might wish to go. That arrangement went into force in April of last year, and there is no doubt that under its operation not only has the number of immigrants from Great Britain been very greatly increased, but their personnel has been improved.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not understand the distinction which the minister drew between an agricultural immigrant and another kind of immigrant. Is the distinction that the agricultural immigrant himself declares that he intended to go on the land?

Mr. OLIVER. Formerly all that was required to distinguish an immigrant as an agriculturist was that on arriving in Canada he declared his intention to become an agriculturist.

Mr. J. D. REID. In writing?

Mr. OLIVER. No. It was found that the definition did not restrict the immigration as we desired. We then increased the bonus to five dollars per head on adult British immigrants, but restricted the payment so as only to make it on people who had in the old country followed agricultural pursuits, or pursuits kindred to agricultural, and who also declared their intention of following agriculture on their arrival in Canada. That policy has had the result of increasing the actual number of immigrants, because it stimulated greater activity on the part of the booking agents, and it has also improved the class of immigrants by reason of the large bonus paid for agriculturists. For instance, two men might go to a booking office; they might not have made up their minds as to what country they would emigrate to; one had followed farming and was eligible for the five-dollar bonus, the other had not; it would be to the interest of the booking agent to induce the agriculturist, for whom he would receive five dollars bonus, to go to Canada, while so long as he got the commission on the sale of the other man's ticket, it mattered not to the agent what part of the world he went to. In order that there shall be no mistake on this point, I wish to travel a little outside of the point raised in the motion. It has been stated very publicly that the government is in some way a party to inducing other than agriculturists, people who are adapted to enter into various other trades and callings, to come to this country.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And why should not the government induce these to come here?

Mr. OLIVER. In order to answer the hon. gentleman so that there may be no misunderstanding, I shall read from a circular which we have sent to the booking agents of the old country.

Mr. SPROULE. When you say 'the old country,' what do you mean by that?

Mr. OLIVER. England, Ireland and Scotland. In this circular we set out, not only what we are doing, but why we are doing it. When we put in force this new order in council we propose to make the same conditions applicable to continental Europe, but for the present I am discussing the British bonus which has been in force for a year, and in reference to which we have issued these instructions to the agents in Great Britain and Ireland :

The classes of people on whom bonus is paid by the Canadian government are expected, by reason of their experience at home, to find scope for their abilities in the occupation of the vacant lands of Canada, in employment upon the lands now occupied and cultivated, or in the railway development now in progress. And while it is not asserted that people of other callings or conditions of life should not come to Canada, or may not find a career open to them in this country, it is desired to have it well understood that the government of Canada assumes no responsibility with respect to any other immigration than that of the classes mentioned as eligible for bonus payment. It is not asserted that the farmer or farm labourer is necessarily a more desirable citizen than any other, but it is a simple fact that the demand in Canada is for people to occupy the as yet vacant lands of the country, to aid in the cultivation of those already occupied, and also to assist in providing additional transportation facilities. This it is which justifies the government in assuming the expense of immigration effort. To go beyond the attempt to meet these requirements would be to use the money of certain classes of Canadian taxpayers for the purpose of securing competitors against them in their several callings, for which they would naturally hold the government to account.

There is the policy of the government in regard to this matter of immigration of the different classes as set out to the people who are acting as agents of the government in Great Britain.

Mr. SPROULE. Are these the only classes for whom the department pays bonuses to the steamship agents ?

Mr. OLIVER. In order to have the matter thoroughly understood, I will read from the circular which is sent to the booking agents, setting out the terms upon which the bonuses may be earned. I have already read from the supplementary circular which explains the reasons of this arrangement :

1. Bonus will be paid provided the regulations of the department are complied with, upon tickets to Canada sold to British subjects, whose occupation in the United Kingdom has been for at least one year, one of the following, viz.: farmers, farm labourers, gardeners, stablemen, carters, railway surfacemen, navvies or miners, who have signified their intention of following farming or railway construction work in Canada ; and female domestic servants.

2. Bonus is only payable on emigrants landing at Canadian ports, excepting those landing at Portland, Maine, during winter.

3. The bonus will be £1 on each person of prescribed classes, eighteen years of age or over, and 10 shillings on those between one and eighteen years of age. No bonus on infants, tourists, returning Canadians, prepaid tickets, or persons of other occupation than one of the above-named, or on persons mentally or physically unfit. To obtain bonus on saloon passengers it is necessary to obtain the certificate of one of the accredited agents of the department in the United Kingdom.

I read this in order to set at rest the contention made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armand Lavergne) that the system of paying bonuses tends to indiscriminate immigration. The system under which we are paying bonuses to-day in regard to British immigrants, and under which we propose to pay bonuses on continental emigrants is essentially the system whereby a bonus is used to secure a select class of immigrants, suitable to meet the requirements existing in this country.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) leaves that branch of the subject, may I ask a question ? Is he giving any assistance to immigrants from continental Europe or other portions of the world ?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) I fear has hardly followed the address of the mover of the resolution. The ostensible cause of the resolution is an order in council recently passed whereby the government takes authority to pay a bonus of 10s. a head on immigrants from continental Europe, according to the same conditions as bonuses are paid on British immigrants. We have not yet begun operations under this order in council, but the principle is the same as in the case of the British bonuses, the only difference being that the bonus on the immigration from continental Europe is just half that on immigration from the British Isles.

Mr. SPROULE. Let me go just a little further with my question. What commission does the department pay to agents in the United States ? Or is the system of paying bonuses for American immigrants the same as in years past ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) at this moment the information he asks for. We have a large number of agents in the United States who are on salary. We have had a large number on commission. My impression is that the commission in the United States is $2. But the position in the United States is not at all parallel to that in Europe. The booking agent as he exists in continental Europe and in the British Isles is not known in the United States.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) will allow me: Have the bonuses paid on immigrants from the United States been changed recently? It used to be $3 for an adult male, $2 for an adult female, and $1 for a child.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think there has been any change. What I am saying is that the condition surrounding the payment of bonuses in Europe and those in the United States are altogether different. In regard to the complaint made by my hon. friend (Mr. Armand Lavergne) that we were not giving enough attention to immigration from certain countries in Europe, I can only say that it has been a necessity of intelligent immigration effort that work should be pushed most where the best results can be achieved. A few years ago, until the favourable attention of the British public had been attracted to Canada by a long course of immigration effort it was practically impossible to get any considerable number of people from the British Isles. At that time we had to look to central or northern Europe for our immigrants, and the efforts of the department, at that time, were turned in that direction. After a time persistency of advertising in Britain, improved conditions in Canada making the country more adapted to settlement by British immigrants, together with changes in Great Britain, attracted the favourable attention of the British public; and to-day we find public opinion in Great Britain very favourable to immigration to Canada. Under these circumstances, it seemed reasonable that the money employed by the people for immigration should be used where it could produce the best results. A few years ago these results could be best achieved by effort directed to the over-crowded countries of central Europe. To-day, undoubtedly, the best results are to be achieved by directing our efforts to the British Isles. We have there a vast population, a prolific population, a population already assimilated and one fully imbued with the idea that Canada is the country for colonization. It seems to me only reasonable, therefore, when we are taking the money of the Canadian taxpayer to secure immigration, that we should spend it where it will produce the best results. We are not pushing our efforts in continental Europe, as we are pushing them to-day in Great Britain, for the reason that none of the countries of continental Europe offer the same inducements to immigration effort. Not only are the laws restrictive but in many of the most desirable countries the conditions are not favourable. Take, for instance, the case of France to which my hon. friend has alluded. No one will say that France is not at the head of civilization, that the French people are not desirable in every way, that France is not an agricultural country. In fact France is one of the greatest agricultural countries in the world, but it is carrying a stupendous burden of militarism. It has an empire which ranks only next to Great Britain. It has burdens on its population to-day which make it absolutely unreasonable to expect that flood of immigration from France to Canada that we would expect from Great Britain.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would think that those conditions, if they do prevail, would rather induce immigration from France.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not going to quarrel with my hon. friend's opinion. I am only stating the facts; and in consequence of these facts and conditions, the sentiment of the governments in all those European countries which are in that condition, is absolutely opposed to emigration, and particularly emigration to Canada. Therefore in carrying on an immigration propaganda in these countries, we are doing that in the face of public opinion and contrary to the good will of the government.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. When the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company was being discussed, one of the reasons given why France was not included in that contract was that in France there was no restriction on emigration. My hon. friend gave that reason in answer to the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) and so did the right hon. the First Minister.

Mr. OLIVER. If the First Minister and I so stated, we were both at fault. What I have said is that the condition of public opinion which these European countries, by reason of the military burdens they carry and the colonial responsibilities they have assumed, and in the case of Germany by reason of her trade relations—by reason of all these circumstances the governments of these countries are not favourable to emigration to Canada. Therefore a dollar spent in Great Britain to-day will produce more and better results than a dollar spent in Germany or France. That, I think, is sufficient reason for the greater energy now being shown towards inducing British immigration. I have no desire to draw any comparisons, but I think that in this part of the British domain it is only fair and reasonable that, other things being equal, we should look to the British immigrants as being the most desirable, and when we can secure them we are doing our duty to our country.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. That argument would be very good if the government had not spent more money in continental Europe than Great Britain.

Mr. OLIVER. Owing to the conditions and circumstances I have mentioned it was not possible, at a certain time, to secure immigrants from Britain, and there were better opportunities in continental Europe owing to the pressure of population there. Those conditions however have changed very largely owing no doubt to the immigration propaganda the government have kept up in the mother country, so that to-day we find in Great Britain the most favourable field for immigration, and therefore we are justified in using our best endeavours to secure that immigration. We cannot and do not want to cover the whole world. Our favourable attention being particularly attracted to Great Britain it must be to some extent drawn away from other countries.

As regards the general question, I think I have shown that bonuses are not being paid on the principle my hon. friend supposes. They are being paid with the view of securing a selected, and not an indiscriminate immigration, and so as to give us the best results for our money.

As to the discrimination which my hon. friend alleges is exercised against eastern Canada in favour of the west by directing the flow of immigration to the west; in one breath the hon. gentleman decries the immigration policy of the government and in the next he complains that the flow of immigration is not directed to eastern Canada. In the one breath he complains that we are bringing out immigrants who would swamp our present population, and then he complains that we are not so directing them as to swamp eastern Canada in particular. But, Sir, the whole purpose of our immigration policy was to secure development of the great productive areas of the west. That was the policy and purpose of the fathers of confederation. Any one who understands the requirements of our country, will understand that the filling up and development of the western country cannot fail to increase the prosperity of the east. My hon. friend has made a speech which, in my opinion, was most discreditable, because it was a deliberate attempt to set section against section and excite race against race, if you like, and creed against creed.

Mr. BOURASSA. If you like.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. How does it compare in that respect with the policy of the government ?

Mr. OLIVER. I say that the people of the province of Quebec are just as much interested in the development of the natural resources of the Northwest as any other people in any other section of Canada.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. And the policy of developing the Northwest is one of the many features of the immigration policy which my hon. friend has decried.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. In my language I was not nearly so violent as the hon. Minister was before he was a minister.

Mr. BENNETT. Tell us about the Galicians.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman has said that before, and I asked him to turn up the 'Hansard' and furnish proof in support of that assertion. He did not see fit to do that, but at any rate whether I was wrong or right years ago does not make him right to-day when he is wrong. It is a number of years since the statements were made which my hon. friend attributes to me, and I cannot now recall all of them; but so far as I have had the opportunity of looking over them in 'Hansard,' I think they were good statements.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. And they are just as good to-day as they were then.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. gentleman will read them, he will gratify me exceedingly. I have nothing to take back as regards any statements I may have made concerning the question of immigration, and to-day the principles I formerly enunciated are being carried out. I was about to say that if there is any part of the Dominion of Canada that is interested in the development of the Northwest it is the province of Quebec. To what end are the ports of the province of Quebec, to what end are the industries of the province of Quebec, to what end does Quebec exist, except it shall have something behind it to support it and make it great ? Quebec has always been interested in the Northwest. Quebec's explorers were the men who discovered the Northwest and why should Quebec's representatives in the House decry the policy which develops the Northwest and makes Quebec something more than it would ever be without developing the west, realizing the great dream of great men—it is a pity they are not succeeded to-day by my hon. friend.

The necessity of immigration, if we are going to develop this country within a reasonable time, goes without saying. It also goes without saying that any system of immigration may very easily be made the subject of criticism. As I said in the beginning of my remarks, what may be a good and wise policy to-day may, by reason of a change in conditions, be an unwise policy to-morrow. Because the policy of to-day is not in all its details the same as the policy of yesterday, because the policy of to-morrow may still differ in some details, does not show in any degree that the policy of yesterday, of to-day or of to-morrow, is unwise in any particular. The policy of this government, ever since it has been in power, has been to secure the development of the country, and it is necessary to take such means as may lie in its power according to the circumstances from time to time in order to secure that development. That development has been secured as the predecessors of this government hoped to secure it, as they were never able to secure it, and as they never could have secured it under the policy they followed, although their intentions were good. But how much less would they have been able to secure it under such a policy as that suggested in the remark of my hon. friend to-day? There is a party in Great Britain known as the Little Englanders, my friend stands to-day as the representative of that party in Canada; it is the Little Canada party—the very Little Canada party. We stand for a great Canada and a greater Canada, a Canada that is good enough for anybody and big enough for anybody, and our business in life is to secure the development of that Canada, so that it will be, not a little one amongst the nations, but one of the greatest, a nation of which every Canadian may be proud, although there may be more people in the country to-day than there were a hundred years ago.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). The hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has grown eloquent to a degree seldom known in this House. It is one of the first times that I have noticed that hon. gentleman abandoning the stern path of logic to adopt the high-toned and not well defined way of grandiloquence in order to avoid a straight issue. I was surprised, more especially at one of the statements of the hon. gentleman, when he said that the speech of my hon. friend (Mr. Armand Lavergne) —which to him seemed to have lasted an hour and a half, whilst in fact it was only three-quarters of an hour—was full of inaccuracies, and that in his hour and a quarter speech he has not found it proper to dispel any of these so-called inaccuracies. Before reviewing the speech of the hon. gentleman, I will remind the House of some of the facts stated by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) which the minister has not deigned to refute.

The hon. member stated that the North Atlantic Trading Company's contract had been made by the government as a change from the policy of paying bonuses to booking agents, and that, according to the declaration made last year by the minister himself. This has been stated by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne), and not refuted or denied by the minister.

The hon. member for Montmagny stated that the policy of paying bonuses had proved, under the operation of the North Atlantic Trading Company, to be a failure. This has not only not been denied, but it has been admitted and ratified by the minister.

The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) stated that the policy of paying bonuses to immigrants had a tendency to bring a bad instead of a good class of immigrants. This has not been denied, but reiterated as a reason for the cancelling of the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company.

The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) stated that the system was a bad one. The minister has not denied the fact; he has simply tried to evade the issue by saying that this system was no longer in existence under the present order in council. The minister has tried to quibble with words by stating that there was no contract; but when a question was put to him by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) he was obliged to admit that, under this order in council, he would enter into a tacit contract with booking agents. Instead of making the case better, it simply makes it worse; because the people of Canada are sick of tacit contracts, secret contracts; what they want is a fixed, determined and public policy in immigration as well as in anything else.

The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) stated that the result of such a policy was to bring a large number of people into this country whom we could not assimilate. The minister has not refuted that argument, and it would have been very difficult for him to do so, because in a moment I shall read his own words, which were stronger than my hon. friend's, a far stronger condemnation of the policy which he is himself trying to enact and impose on the people of Canada to-day.

The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) has stated that, with regard to immigration, it was no more a question of bringing all sorts of people, but a question of bringing the best class of people. The minister has not denied the fact, he has simply tried to prove that under the present order in council he is doing that. This was one of the few points in the speech of the hon. member for Montmagny which the minister tried to discuss, and I will prove that the minister is entirely wrong in regard to it.

The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) stated that after the government had denounced the North Atlantic Trading Company's contract, they had failed to announce their future policy, and had adopted this order in council whilst parliament was in session, and did not even consult the representatives of the people here assembled to give instructions to the government. The minister has not denied the fact, and the fact remains; and here is a radical change in our policy, the enactment of a principle contrary to the very policy of the government, as announced and propounded last session; and that change has been made in this session when parliament was sitting, when it would have been the easiest thing possible for the minister to consult the representatives of the people. I wish one of the colleagues of the minister were here, I wish the Minister of Marine and Fisheries were here, so that he could repeat those words of denunciation which he thundered so eloquently against the Conservative government because, forsooth, they had dared to purchase one million of dollars' worth of arms in Great Britain while parliament was in session. Is this another one of those principles for which the Liberal party attacked the Conservative government, but which they now advocate?—with this difference, that in the case to which I refer it was simply a question of the expenditure of money, whilst in this matter it is a question of a change of policy, a change of attitude on the part of the government, contrary to the attitude which they took last year; and without consulting parliament, whilst the representatives of the nation are assembled here, they meet in a closed chamber and frame a policy which they announce to the country, and say that we must support it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Do we understand that the hon. gentleman goes back on his record concerning payment for arms in 1895?

Mr. BOURASSA. No, I denounced it in 1895, and I denounce it to-day, whether done by a Conservative government or by a Liberal government. Now one of the arguments used by the hon. minister was this: He said, we are devoting most of our energies and spending most of our money in the British islands because we have found that it is the best field for immigration, and because the people of Great Britain, knowing that Canada is a desirable place to live in, want to come here. Sir, if the people of Great Britain want to come to Canada, what is the use of giving $5 a head to booking agents to send them here? But let us accept the argument, let us suppose it is necessary to have agencies in Great Britain to bring over a desirable class of immigrants is that a reason for passing an order in council to induce people to come from Norway, Sweden, Holland, Denmark, Hungary, Russia, France, Belgium and Switzerland? If the argument of the minister is good, if the government have changed their policy because circumstances have changed and circumstances have changed in such a way that the people of Canada are entitled to see that their money is well employed by spending it in Great Britain, then why has the government adopted an order in council that allows them to spend money in foreign countries where it is so difficult to carry on a propaganda? Now on this question of propaganda, the hon. gentleman says that the order in council is far different from any past order, because according to the present order in council nothing will be paid to agents who work against the laws of the country in which they are operating. Either this restriction in the order in council holds good or it does not. If it holds good, then this order in council is nothing but a copy of the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company, because in that contract the government introduced the very same clause that the agents of the North Atlantic Trading Company were not going to do anything contrary to the law of the nations in which they were operating. If the North Atlantic Trading Company's contract was a bad one, because it brought those agents into conflict with the laws of the land in which they were operating, this order in council is equally bad because it is based on the same principle; it is the same policy, except that here you are dealing with individual agents instead of with a company.

Now with regard to this aspect of the question, I am open-minded, I am ready to be convinced that it is better to deal with agents than to deal with a company. But I am surprised that that argument should come from the minister, because last year when he announced to the House that the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company was to be cancelled, what did he say? He referred to some writings or some letters from Sir Charles Tupper, saying that it was better to have arrangements of that kind made with companies than with individual agents, and the hon. gentleman took credit for the government in the fact that they were now paying bonuses to a company and not to individual booking agents. He said:

> Now, to whom did our hon. friends on the other side pay the bonuses? They paid them to individual booking agents—so their letters show. To whom did this government pay in the years preceding the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company? They paid to individual booking agents.
> To whom do they pay now? Not to any individual booking agents, but to the North Atlantic Trading Company, a collective interest of booking agents. And do they get value for their payments? Judged by the standard laid down in the letter of Sir Charles Tupper, they do. And any man of common sense, not warped by political bias, will agree that that is the main question. . . . I know they are engaged in the business of booking emigrants to Canada, and I know that they work under better conditions to-day as a company, than they did when they worked as individuals, and are sending more emigrants to Canada. That was the purpose of the change from payments to individual agents to payments to this company.

agents. Now the minister says it is better to pay individual agents than a company. Circumstances change, says the minister; but it seems to me that the mind of the hon. gentleman is changing quite too fast, even for modern times and modern circumstances, with the development of electricity and all other means of rapid manifestations. Now if the hon. gentleman would show us what is the difference between the circumstances as they existed last year when he preferred the policy of paying bonuses to a company instead of individual agents, and the circumstances of to-day which make it better to pay to agents instead of a company, we would not be so much mystified. But he has not deigned to inform us. He has in a somewhat satirical manner pointed out what he styles the inaccuracies of my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne), but he does not deign to tell us what were the circumstances which allowed his ministerial mind not only to change so much from the independent mind of the member of Alberta, but to change so greatly from the ministerial mind of the Minister of the Interior from 1906 to 1907.

The minister has told us very often, not only to-day, but on previous occasions, that circumstances had changed in the last few years with regard to immigration. I admit they have, but in what way? The very argument which the minister made with regard to immigration from the British islands applies to a large extent to immigration from all countries. I think every one in this House will admit that the main change which has occurred to warrant a modification of our immigration policy is that Canada is better known to the world to-day than she was some years ago. Canada's trade is better known, her agricultural and mining resources are better known; and therefore if that basic change of circumstances means anything with regard to our immigration policy, it means that the time has come when we should stand upon our dignity as a nation and step out before the world, instead of advertising our country through more or less questionable agencies as a patent medicine vendor advertises his nostrum and invites all sick and ailing people to come and be cured. Sir, the minister has taken pride in the fact that under this order in council he was discriminating with regard to the class of immigrants which were coming in, and he read the words which I will read again.

The immigrants for which this government offers a bounty and bonus or a prize to booking agents, are:

> Farmers, farm labourers, gardeners, stablemen, carters, railway surfacemen, navvies, or miners, who have signified their intention of following farming or railway construction work in Canada, and female domestic servants.

That is a pretty broad ground. Let us come to the facts. How will this operate? You have a booking agent in London or you have ten or twenty of them. You have so many in Liverpool, in Amsterdam, in Hamburg, in Antwerp, in different parts of Europe. According to what the minister says in regard to immigration work in foreign countries, to which this order in council applies exclusively, they are not allowed to go outside of their offices to canvas immigrants. They must stay there until the immigrant comes to buy his ticket. I have very grave doubts, once this inducement is offered to a booking agent to make so much money per head of all the people he may ship to Canada, whether he will confine himself to the letter of this order in council or whether he will not put himself in the sad position, as stated by some ministerial supporters, of committing suicide or going to gaol. I have my grave doubts as to whether these booking agents, immediately you offer them this inducement, will stay in their offices. But let us suppose that they stay in their offices. Let us suppose that they conform to the letter of this order in council. What will be the result? Here is a man in Hamburg who does not know what tramp or other person will come from Prussia or Silesia to his office to get a ticket for the United States or elsewhere. The agent has only to sell him a ticket to Canada to get $2.50 and he will say to him: Of course you are a railway worker or a navvy, here is your ticket for Canada and you will make a declaration that you are going there to work at railway construction. The booking agent will receive his $2.50. By what human means does the minister pretend that he will control the work of these booking agents so that after five minutes conversation they will be able to find out what occupation an immigrant may have been engaged in three hundred or four hundred miles away from his office? All nationalities and occupations will come. It may be that a large number will be sent to Canada as farmers or farm labourers or railway workers or navvies because forsooth they have passed through some of the criminal courts and they have been condemned either to go to gaol or to leave for America. There is nothing in the order in council that prevents a booking agent from making his $2.50 out of that kind of immigrant.

In regard to female immigration, those who are familiar with the social life of London and other English cities, those who have read some of the reports of the London County Council know very well that a large female population is sent every year from continental Europe to London composed of women who have passed through criminal courts. They are sent to England and then they are taken up by the Salvation Army. Now, I have the greatest admiration for the devoted work of the Salvation Army, for everything they have endeavoured to do to raise to a higher moral and physical standard some of the lowest classes of the United Kingdom; but as a Canadian I fail to see that the population and the future of Canada should be made part of that kind of work if that kind of works means that after the Salvation Army authorities, without going beyond the varnish of civilization with respect to these people, shall ship them to Canada in order to make them civilized beings. I have the greatest objection that Canada should be made a dumping ground—even at the expense of being considered narrow by the broad minded Minister of the Interior. I have an objection to Canada becoming the ground of exile or reformation for the Salvation Army to ship to us all the worst characters from Whitechapel or any other of the worst quarters of the larger English cities. If that is what is called British immigration, if that is what is called immigration tending to give a permanent basis to British institutions in Canada, then I say to the minister that he is greatly mistaken with regard to the social conditions in that country; and it simply proves that he does not know the fundamental principles of the development of nations, and if he thinks that a nation and the best interests of the people are promoted by the degraded elements of its population, he is mistaken.

The minister has stated that my hon. friend from Montmagny had given utterance to a policy that would be detrimental to the interests of Canada. Of course, that is a broad point of view. That is a large basis for discussion. There are many ways in which a public man may view the interests of his country. It cannot be altogether dismissed by saying : 'You are a little Canadian, you have no breadth of mind and you do not understand the interests of the country.' For my part I think it is just as patriotic to say : 'Let us take a little more time to increase the population of our country, let the land speculators of the west wait a little longer to make their money; but let the basis of the future population of Canada be sound both mentally and physically.' It may be that such is the view of a Little Canadian, but I think that hon. gentlemen who go to the very basis of this patriotic policy will agree with me. It has been stated that we want to see the result of our policy. There was once a famous phrase uttered in this House : 'Cox cannot wait.' This very sentiment can be applied to many of the friends of the hon. minister who cannot wait for their paying dividends upon the lands they have secured from the government. I am afraid that the same phrase would apply that these hon. gentlemen cannot wait because they are anxious to secure their 50 per cent or 100 per cent or 200 per cent profit from the sale of land. The future of Canada, the future of British institutions, the future of the British flag—which some of their legislators have put on every school house in Manitoba—is a very small asset in the ideas and aspirations of some hon. gentlemen concerning the Northwest. I want perfect liberty to be given to every man to make as much money as he can. But I have some objection, as a Little Canadian, if the hon. gentleman wants to style it in that way, to seeing the future of my country endangered by the policy of men who simply want to reap the greatest advantage possible by speculating with the soil of Canada and not only with the soil of Canada but with the future of the Canadian people.

Now, Sir, the hon. minister has tried to make my hon. friend from Montmagny appear as very narrow minded and as being animated by racial prejudice because forsooth he stated that it was not desirable to have all sorts of people in this country but that it was a better policy to bring in people who have something in common with the various elements that have laid down the foundations of this country, who have the same blood, the same ancestry, the same national traditions and who come here to adopt our nationality and to help us in maintaining those traditions. The hon. gentleman has tried to leave the impression that my hon. friend from Montmagny objected to the importation of people from Scandinavia or other European countries because he was animated by racial prejudice. Neither has my hon. friend for Montmagny stated, nor do I state now, that the people from Scandinavia, Russia, or Germany are not a splendid race of people, a people animated by high national traditions, and a people actuated by a deep sense of civilization.

> I am not claiming that we are the best people in the world ; that our civilization is the highest form of civilization ; but I do claim that our present civilization suits us, and it is that which we have set ourselves to improve. Our social system, our political system, our religious system, are those which we have inherited and under which we are trying to improve ourselves.

> Possibly a Chinaman is a better man than an Englishman, let the Englishman answer for that himself; a Japanese may be a better man or a Russian may be a better man than the Englishman ; I say nothing about that, he may be a much better man, but he is not one of us, and inasmuch as he is not one of us he is not helping us to develop along those lines that Providence has chosen for us, or that we have chosen for ourselves. His presence is a hindrance and not a help.

Sir, this is the language of a Little Canadian, known heretofore as Mr. Oliver, member of parliament for Alberta. Circumstances have changed, but I am afraid the only circumstance that has brought the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) to abandon this patriotic policy which he calls now a Little Canadian policy, is the circumstance that now he is a member of the cabinet and then he was a free member of parliament.

Let me say further that it appears to me to have been a mistake in the past to have spent so much money as we have in paying bonuses to steamship companies for the conveyance of immigrants, and for this reason : we made the steamship companies, by that means, our immigration agencies, and it did not make any difference to the steamship companies what the character of the immigrant was, who he was, or where he was from, so long as they got the bonus.

Does not that argument apply to the booking agents as well as to the steamship companies ? Certainly it does, unless the Minister of the Interior can prove that every Hamburg Jew he selects as an agent is so patriotic, that when an undesirable immigrant comes to his office he will say : I cannot send you to Canada ; I am too patriotic a Canadian to do that; I will lose by $2.50 commission on you, rather than send you to that country. Unless the Minister of the Interior can give such a certificate of character to every Hamburg Jew or Liverpool Jew that he appoints as an immigration agent, the remarks of the member for Alberta on the 29th of April, 1902, which I have just quoted are just as true to-day as they were five years ago. Let me quote further what the Minister of the Interior said when he was member for Alberta :

It seems to me, from my point of view, that this is a most undesirable system and a most undesirable expenditure, and I would ask that it be not continued.

These are the words of the member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) speaking of the immigration policy of the government, and if I have any reproach to make to my good friend from Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne), it is that he has taken the words of his motion from the very language uttered in this House by the member for Alberta. The former part of my hon. friend's motion was taken from a speech made by the member for Alberta one year later than the speech I have referred to, and the circumstances which existed then exist to-day, the only change being that the member for Alberta is now the Minister of the Interior. On the 14th of July, 1903, the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) said ;

Something has been said, I understand, about the paying of bounties or commission to induce immigration. To my mind, if ever there was need for that system, that need has passed.

It was not a question with him then, as to discrimination or selection, but in his opinion the whole system was bad, and he condemned it without qualification.

The payment of bounties and commissions——

And here again, Mr. Speaker, if you do me the favour to follow the wording of the motion, you will find that my hon. friend from Montmagny has made a faithful copy of the language of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) :

The payment of bounties and commissions has a tendency to bring the less desirable rather than the more desirable class of people.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that is still my opinion ; and at the expense of being denounced as a racial zealot, or a Little Canadian, I still hold the patriotic view which the member for Alberta held before he became Minister of the Interior.

But that is not all. A Bill was introduced providing for the better inspection of immigrants in the matter of their health, and the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) supported the Bill, but he warned the House that sanitary precautions were a small consideration compared with the great national principle at stake. He said :

From my standpoint, the diseases existing among immigrants are but a trifling consideration in comparison with the general character of the immigrant. I cannot understand the frame of mind which looks carelessly upon the introduction into the very life of our country, of a population without regard to whether such population will raise or lower the general standard of our people. It does not need any demonstration on my part, that if the increase of population which will necessarily take place in the development of these resources is of a character and constitution essentially different from our own, not only will they build up a different civilization wherever they establish themselves, but they will invariably control our civilization in this part of the country.

Now, Sir, the argument made by my hon. friend from Montmagny, is the very argument that was made by the hon. member for Alberta, when he was a member and not a minister.

It may be said that I have given these quotations simply for the pleasure of putting my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) in contradiction with himself. If he has that thought he may dispel it ; because after all when there has been some good in a man it is well to remind him of it, for it may help to awaken remorse. If I have reminded the Minister of the Interior to-day of his former self, it is simply because I still hope that he will not utterly abandon his patriotic ideas, and that instead of being dragged into this policy by a government which was dragged into it by his predecessor in the department, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) will assert his own will, and although he has given way by adopting this order in council, he will hesitate in the application of it and stop before committing the errors of his predecessor.

It is said to us : You want to restrict all immigration to Canada, you do not want the population to increase and the resources of our country developed, you are taking an unpatriotic view and the people of Canada will not support you. That charge is false. The view I take is this: That in the development of a nation regard must be had for all conditions; regard must be had to the past and to the future as well as to the present, and care must be taken that the present exigencies of interested people are not to control. I am in favour of a strong and well directed and well controlled policy of immigration, and I think I could prove from the words of the Minister of the Interior in the past, that he agrees with me. I hold that the best immigration agent is an agent you have not to pay or hire to do your work; I hold that the best and the most patriotic and the most business-like immigration agent is the contented settler, who being satisfied with his lot in this country will write home to his relatives and friends to join him in this happy and fertile land. Instead of spending so much money in favour of steamsh'p companies, and railway companies, and booking agents, and land speculators, if you took a little more care that the settler coming to Canada is properly treated from the time he lands until he reaches his future home; is not robbed on the way; is not intercepted by the land speculator; is ont intercepted by the agents of the very same men who have enforced this immigration policy upon you; —you will have a much better immigration system than the system which is costing you so much at the present day.

If you look to the settler, from the time of his arrival until he settles on his holding; if you make him satisfied with his life in Canada; if he finds that Canada is a land of law and justice, a land which looks after the farmer and the settler, which prevents the speculator and the railway company from crushing him, he will be far more satisfied than if you paid $2.50 to a Hamburg Jew to ship him to Canada—and let God take care of him when he gets here. If you would take the large sum of money you are now spending in Europe in paying these booking agents or their steamship companies, or these secret organizations like the North Atlantic Trading Company, and devote it to the development of the transportation facilities of Canada, so that the settler would find the best and cheapest means of sending out his farm produce, that he might not be at the mercy of the elevator company or the railway company which you incorporate and which you protect, and if you would also cheapen communication so that the settler could get his manufactured goods at a better price than he gets them to-day, then that settler would write home, he would tell his friends and relatives in the British islands, in France, in Belgium or in Germany—that Canada is a land where railway corporations and land speculators do not control the government and the law, that Canada is a country where trade flourishes and a man can buy and sell without paying tribute to monopolies of any kind—and that contented settler, writing with enthusiasm to his friends of his new home, would be a far more effective immigration agent than any of your Hamburg Jews or secret organizations.

Now, with regard to the question of discrimination let me at once point out that the discrimination urged by my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) was not as between English and French immigrants, as the Minister of the Interior, in an effort to make a cheap point, would have had the House believe. The hon. minister tried to put in the mouth of my hon. friend words which he never uttered; he tried to impute to him sentiments which are foreign to him. The hon. minister tried—as many like him have tried for ten years past, on my own account—to make it appear that my hon. friend from Montmagny was seeking to raise racial distinctions as between the English-speaking and French-speaking population in this country. The accusation is no more true in this case than it ever was before. What my hon. friend (Mr. Armand Lavergne) asked the Minister of the Interior to do was to formulate and carry out a policy based upon the very nature of the Canadian people, a policy that would encourage English and French immigrants as against those from other countries. Is this again 'Little Canadian?' Is this 'mere sentiment?' I say, Sir—quoting from the words of the Minister of the Interior—we must take facts as they are; we must accept history as it is. This country was settled and founded by the French and conquered by the English. After the feuds of many years these races have agreed together to found a vast Canadian nation. But, Sir, it never was in the minds of the founders of this nation, it never was in the minds of the fathers of confederation, the men whose names these present so-called Liberals are so fond of invoking, that in order to be broad—or even in order to make land speculators rich—we ought to change a providential condition of our partly French and partly English country to make it a land of refuge for the scum of all nations. That idea, I say, never entered the mind of any patriotic Canadian, whether Conservative or Liberal, whether British or of French descent. It is an idea worthy of those 'big' men who now try to teach breadth of mind and loftiness of patriotism to others. The idea of the founders of this nation was that the double current of our national and mental activity should go on, that the British civilization and the French civilization should be maintained in this country, and not that we should give the better half of our continent to people who have nothing in common with us—nothing in common with us in history, nothing in common with us in blood, nothing in common with us in education or economics, nothing in common with us in national sentiment—to men who come here, not with our inherited pride in our own land, but with the purpose only of making money. It was no part of the idea of the fathers of confederation that these people should be gathered from the ends of the earth and helped to come to this country, given such inducements as to bring them here in such number that before twenty years are over at the present rate of movement, they will be masters of the country and the two races that have formed the Canadian people will be swamped by these 'intruders.'

The example of the United States has been quoted to us to show that there is no great danger to the native population in bringing all sorts of people from abroad into our country. I regret that my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) has not gone a little deeper into that subject. I fear he was too anxious not to weary the House by giving figures. But it seems to me that these figures are most instructive. Generally speaking they show that at no period in American history was there ever such a large incursion into the United States of the foreign-born element in proportion to native population as has been brought into Canada under the so-called broad and patriotic policy of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). When I speak of foreign-born population, I leave aside the figures relating to those that come to Canada from the British islands, though perhaps I should be able to show that a large proportion of these are foreigners. But even assuming that all those who ship from Great Britain are British, and leaving aside all those from France and Belgium, and you find that you are bringing in a larger proportion of foreign-born and foreign-educated immigrants into Canada in proportion to the population of Canada than ever were brought into the United States in proportion to the population of that country. Nor is that all. There is still another grave reason to condemn this policy of bringing in these foreigners. In the United States the great bulk of the foreign element leave ship at the eastern ports, settle in the eastern part of the country and mix with the relatively dense population there, just as we find in our own case in Montreal or Toronto. But the western states of the union, whether annexed or purchased or conquered, were settled by American-born people. That is to say, the basis of the political institutions, the basis of education, of organization, of everything of a national character, was laid firm and immovable by the American-born settlers who left the eastern states, giving up their places to the foreign element and went west; so that when the foreigners moved slowly westward they found themselves upon a solid footing of true American institutions. I leave altogether aside the problem of the foreign element in the United States which is disquieting the mind of President Roosevelt and of many social observers and writers, and I take it for granted that this foreign element does not, in fact, threaten the character of the United States. But, even assuming this—which is very far from being proven—to be the case in fact, we find that the same does not apply to Canada. And why? Because in Canada under the policy followed by this and by the preceding government—though it has become much more dangerous of late, than in the past—you leave the eastern provinces in the hands of the old population, giving very little inducement to the sons of the farmers of Ontario and Quebec and the maritime provinces to go west, and you allow the railways that you have incorporated, that you have subsidized with the money of the people of Canada to give better facilities to a Doukhobor or a Galician to reach the western plains than they offer to a Canadian. We allow them to give better facilities to the Doukhobor and the Galician to reach the western plains than to a Canadian from Ontario or Quebec or the maritime provinces. I could read you a letter from the father of a large family in my own constituency who went to Edmonton last fall and who had to pay some $100 more to get there than your imported Galicians or Doukhobors pay from Halifax to Edmonton. And yet you plume yourselves on your broad Canadianism. What do you mean by it? Do you want to prevent your own people from Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick from getting their share of the inheritance and domain which has been purchased and is being paid for by them—the purchase price of which came out of their taxation? You boast of your broad Canadianism and you allow your own railways, paid for with the money of your own people, to discriminate against Canadians in favour of foreigners, and you think you are going to get the people to endorse such a policy by sneering at little Canadians and casting slurs on the patriotism of men who have some regard for their country's future.

What is the result of your policy ? The old provinces are settled and populated by the descendants of the pioneers of this country. Your immigrants, who are coming in larger numbers in proportion to the rest of the population than ever was the case in the United States, instead of stopping in some of the large cosmopolitan cities, where after all the individual loses more or less of his character, are landed at Halifax, St. John or Quebec, and immediately put on board railway trains and carried through to the west. All they have is just a glimpse of our large cities. They do not know what Quebec is or what Ontario is. You convey them to the west, you put them on the land there, and within ten years you make them the complete masters of that land. They have not even a moment's contact with the rest of the people of Canada ; they have no intercourse with those people with whom they are called on to live and carry on the business of the country. There is more than that. Providence, in its wisdom, had divided the continent upon certain geographical lines while the policy of men has parted it contrary—everybody will admit—to the laws of nature. You have two immense stretches of territory, each with different climates and resources and economical interests. They are divided by a barrier of water and barren land which, if ever peopled, will be so thinly populated that for all time to come you will always have a natural barrier between eastern and western Canada, such as never existed in the United States. And you will have in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba and that stretch of northern country whose capabilities we are only beginning to perceive, a population foreign born, foreign educated, knowing nothing of our country, having nothing in common with us, developing trade and farming industry and economical needs entirely different, if not entirely opposed to ours. What will be the result ? Within thirty years you may look not only to the probability but to the certainty that this House will be controlled by members elected in those constituencies west of Lake Superior. You will have our Canadian parliament controlled by a majority, of whom certainly the four-fifths if not the whole will be foreign—neither English nor French nor British nor Little Canadians nor broad imperialists, but simply foreigners who came to this country to make money, who will try to control this parliament so as to make money ; who will subordinate everything to that object, and who will be quite content to see British institutions disappear from our midst in spite of all the British flags with which you are decorating the schools of Manitoba. When this parliament will fall under the control of those foreign elements—and that may happen in the lifetime of the present Doukhobors and Galicians, before the first Canadian born generation of those immigrants will be taking part in our public life—are you going to tell me that it is not a wise, not a sound and patriotic and British policy to pause at least a moment and look into the possibilities of such a future ?

Having said so much on Canadian immigration, leaving aside all questions of French or English or Scotch or Irish, I will not be more afraid to state my views in this House with regard to French immigration than I was in the city of Toronto. My views are these. Because the fathers of confederation decided, and decided wisely, that this should be a dual country—French in its origin, British by assimilation, taking from both races and both civilizations its best moral, social and political characteristics—I claim that the equilibrium between the two should be maintained and that it is in the interests of all British citizens in Canada that a French speaking population should be developed. My hon. friend has referred to the influx of Americans into Canada. I hear it often said by men, who at other times will try to stigmatize us as disloyal, as racial or religious zealots, that it does not matter from what country settlers may come, that all the Americans who want to come here are welcome. To a certain extent I agree with them. Let all good, moral, intelligent people come to this country. That we must seek a large influx of American population may be, from a purely monetary point of view, sound policy ; but if there be any sincerity in the so-called loyalty of those who argue this way, you cannot say it is in accord with your sense of British citizenship that you should open this country wide to the influx of American population, capital and ideas. It is all very well to say that the Americans who go west are satisfied with the laws of Canada. They do not come here to study law but to make money, and because they find the conditions at present in Canada better for making money than in the United States. But when they have grown two or three generations, when they have reached a higher stage of civilization, and when they will form the majority of the people of this country, are you quite sure they will be so much attached to British institutions as you claim, and that the simple fact of having so many British flags hoisted on schools and elsewhere is going to make them British ? Are you sure, when you discriminate against the farmers from Quebec, Ontario and the maritime provinces going to settle in the west, that the newcomers will be as safe and sound with regard to British connection and Canadian citizenship as you say they will ? Are you quite sure that mingled with those foreign elements, neither British nor American, but who will always have a natural attraction for the larger and wealthier country to the south, a country independent by itself—which has always a greater prestige in the eyes of foreigners than a colony—are you quite sure that these foreign elements will be attached to British connections in such a way that if it comes to a choice between their British connection, between their connection with the rest of Canada, between the unity of confederation, and their economic interest, that they will not ten times rather break the British connection, ten times rather break the Canadian confederation, than endanger or damage their economic or their business prospects ? It may be that my view is wrong, it may be that I am a pessimist in this ; but I claim that this is a point of view which cannot be dismissed by a simple laugh at Little Canadianism. After all, I do not suppose that even as big Canadians as the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) can afford to ignore history, can afford to ignore human nature, can afford to ignore the laws that have directed all nations in the past, whether in ancient or modern history; and if history repeats itself in respect to Canada, it may be that my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior cannot stop it all by himself. I think that the laws of nations, the laws of history and the laws of nature will be stronger than even my friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver).

I need not say much more on this subject; I simply claim that this is a subject which imposes itself on the attention of the people of Canada, and that before changing the basis of the policy as defined last year, before going back to the system which my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) himself had denounced with the greatest vehemence while a member of this House, I claim that the least that the parliament and the people of Canada could have expected would have been to be informed of what the minister contemplated, and that we should have been consulted before such a step was taken. There is, therefore, no hesitation in my mind in deciding that the motion of my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) is a timely one and that it should be adopted by this House.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE (Strathcona). Mr. Speaker, I may be pardoned for speaking on this subject as I represent a constituency in a part of the country where this immigration policy operates to a very great extent. We have had some rather peculiar statistics placed before us to-day concerning the manner in which the immigration policy of the present government works out. I shall take a few moments of the time of the House then to discuss the conditions as they work out in the province of Alberta, as far as my practical experience goes. A great deal has been said that would lead one to believe that in the western provinces our population is made up mainly of the foreign elements with a small percentage of British and Canadian people to leaven the whole lump. I have to hand statistics which I do not think can be questioned, which are based on a census taken no longer since than June, 1906, which will show that nothing could be further from the truth than the statement made by an hon. member in this House, that in the western provinces four-fifths of the people are of foreign origin. Nothing could be further from the truth, and I resent with all the energy that is in me, any imputation that my constituents and my fellow citizens in the province of Alberta constitute the scum of the earth. The exact words used are: 'Canada is becoming the land of the scums of all other nations.' I resent any such statement; it has not one solitary foundation in fact. The much discussed Galician who is so often referred to in this House has been a surprise to every man who is a citizen and takes an interest in public affairs in that country. He is a wonderful pioneer in the remote sections of the country, a man who begins with the smallest amount of capital and, working and earning as best he can to improve his surroundings, looks about him and sees his fellow countrymen improving, and whatever surplus money he acquires, he invests in improvements. The Galician becomes one of the very best, one of the most industrious citizens we have. On his arrival in Canada he does not appear to be the most desirable person to look at; his social laws are somewhat different from ours, his habits are different from ours, but when you can assimilate a class of people such as that and make them what they have become in the west, I say that they are a desirable class of citizens to have in the country, notwithstanding how they may appear on their arrival in this country.

We have heard something of American immigration, it has been, so to speak, discounted greatly in this House this afternoon. I want to tell the House one fact, if they have not already learned it, that the great proportion of the American immigration that comes to this country consists of repatriated Canadians. Do you mean to tell me that a man who has had to live in exile ten, twenty or thirty years, will not retain the tenderest loyalism towards the country from which he was exiled? Do you mean to tell me that he will not raise his children with the tenderest loyalism? Do you mean to tell me that these men are annexationists? I deny it, and declare that there could be nothing further from the truth. Take the American born citizen if you will. They are certainly not lawyers as stated by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), but they are men who look into the political machinery of government in a peculiar way, they are men who have been taught from their birth that they have the full right of manhood. Therefore they take upon themselves the duties of citizenship, and the responsibilities of a citizen, and inquire into all the machinery of government, and what do they find? They find that they have left a democratic country at home to come to a more democratic country here; they find that our institutions are above their own, they find with us almost their ideal of responsible government in every particular, whether municipal or otherwise. I say it ill becomes any citizen of Canada with the capital that has come into the western country to rise in this House and, so to speak, damn the whole population that comes from the United States. It ill becomes us. I want to tell the House that the American farmer has done something for us in the west. He has taught us a great deal in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. The American farmer, the dry farmer as he is sometimes called, has taught us to bring under cultivation land that we had concluded was semi-arid, and with these facts before us it ill becomes any loyal citizen in this country to stand up and with one sweeping phrase damn the whole population. In that census of Alberta, taken last June, we find that there is a population in the province of 185,412 souls.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. And does my hon. friend know that this year more foreign immigrants will come in than the whole population of Alberta?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. I am not going to prophecy, I am talking facts. The hon. gentleman told us that he was giving us some figures; well, I am giving you some figures that are facts. I say that we have 111,138 British born people in the province of Alberta, out of a total of 185,000, disregarding the other immigrants. Take also into consideration the fact that there are an additional 43,000 immigrants coming in from the United States, and I have accounted for 154,000. Yet they tell us that the foreign invasion is upseting us, they tell us that we must look out, or four-fifths of the population will be foreigners. I can see no justification for such fears. Now you must take out of the 300,000 left, those who come in from France and Belgium, these must be reserved as sacred, these are the ideal citizens, according to the hon. member who moved this motion (Mr. Armand Lavergne). There are some 5,000 coming from Norway and Sweden who go to make up the so-called northern European immigration, which every hon. gentleman on both sides of this House will admit are most desirable immigrants. People from Norway, Sweden, Denmark, France, Belgium, Switerzland, are known to be most admirable settlers, whose civilization is as high as our own. I exclude those, and I have a very small residum of foreign population.

Now with regard to the increase in population. Take the increase of population between 1901 and 1906 in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, which are the three provinces which we are told will be four-fifths foreign born. The increase between these two years, in each of which the census was taken, I find to be 389,351; of this increase 239,044 were British born ,which is sixty-two per cent of the increase in those three provinces. That is the way the foreign population is coming in. The remaining foreign born portion showed an increase of thirty-eight per cent, of which the United States furnished eighteen per cent. Belgium, Denmark, Holland, Iceland, Norway, Sweden, France and Germany contributed seven and two-fifths per cent, leaving of so-called undesirable immigrants, so defined time and again by the hon. member for Labelle and the hon. member for Montmagny, twelve and a half per cent. Do you think that with that percentage of good loyal Canadians there is any danger from the so-called foreign population? Even if they were not assimilable, even if they were hard to assimilate, do you think there is any danger of a foreign invasion when there is only twelve and a half per cent of these people out of the whole population?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the fact that these people come from inferior surroundings, from a civilization perhaps inferior to ours, is no argument that they will not appreciate their new surroundings and will not form sentimental ties for this country even stronger than we appreciate ourselves? I will cite one little circumstance that came to my own knowledge to illustrate what I mean. A certain Galician came to my office one day, and in speaking of the country of his adoption and comparing it with the country of his birth, he said, Do you know that my little boy twelve years of age can take up an English newspaper and read it so that we can all understand it in our own language? You may think that is a mere passing sentiment, you may think it does not amount to much. But when I heard him say: My little boy of twelve years of age can read these books that have always been closed to me, he can read all the English papers—he was almost overwhelmed, and tears of gratitude stood in this man's eyes. It is these little sentimental things that go to make up a strong national spirit; it is these things that tie the so-called foreigner to the country. Imagine the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) telling us that this House would be dominated by a foreign population. Does not the hon. gentleman know that every man who comes into Canada and proves upon a homestead must take the oath of allegiance! and I claim that no man who has taken the oath of allegiance should be termed a foreigner. What difference does it make whether the accent which he used comes from the highlands of Scotland, or of sunny France or from Galicia. If he is a good citizen, if he be an honest and industrious man, contributing to the wealth of this country, he should have the sentimental protection of not being called a foreigner.

Now we have heard something said regarding the cost of immigration, and I wish to cite a few figures showing the percentage of the cost of immigration at various periods. I have here a statement showing the total expenditure of immigration and its various branches, and I have worked out the per capita cost of each immigrant. There was a statement made in this House that this government was paying $60 per head for its immigrants. What are the facts? In the year 1901-2 we paid $7.13; in the year 1902-3 we paid $5; in 1903-4 we paid $5.71; in 1904-5, $6.65; in 1905-6, $4.45.

This is the per capita cost of the immigrants for these years. Now, let us take up this national question. The great cry that seemed to come up from my hon. friend from Montmagny was that we were discriminating, that this government did not spend sufficient money particularly in the countries of France and Belgium. That they have made no endeavour to get these people was practically his cry. Let us take the per capita cost in 1905-6 as regards nationalities. Great Britain and Ireland contributed to this country in that year 76,796 immigrants at a cost of $148,000. That made a per capita cost of $1.75. The United States contributed to our immigration tide 47,919 at a cost of $248,000. That made a per capita cost of $4.28. France and Belgium contributed 2,754 immigrants at a cost of $15,000 making a per capita of $5.44. All the other countries sent us 41,595 immigrants at a total cost of $88,000 or a per capita cost of $2.11. It seems to me that we have gone to the trouble of spending more per capita on France and Belgium than we have on any other country in the civilized world.

Mr. LAVERGNE. Does the hon. gentleman include, advertising, printing, commissions, bonuses, and the administration here in Ottawa ?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. Everything.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I do not know where my hon. friend got his figures.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. I can tell my hon. friend where I got my figures. I got them from the immigration department. There is another point I wish to bring up on this national phase of the question. We have been told that the best immigration agents are the contented settlers. We will admit that. They write home and bring their friends in great numbers. Any one who has lived in the west knows that quite well. But, I have some peculiar statistics to consider now. I went to the trouble of getting the statistics as to nationality as shown by the last census with regard to the city of Montreal, and I found that in the city of Montreal there were at that time only 43 souls in 10,000 that were French born. I looked up the national statistics of Alberta as they appeared in June 1906 and I found that we had 47 native Frenchman to every 10,000 people. Forty-seven native French in Alberta as compared with 43 in the city of Montreal ! They have all the attraction of the same language, they have all the attraction of their friends writing for them and all these inducements to come to Montreal and yet our statistics show us that they seem rather to be repelled than attracted. Another statement made that I would like to correct was that there was a discrimination in railway rates against the Canadians. Is it the business of this government to move the people within the country ? Is it the business of this government to change the population from the province of Quebec to the province of Alberta ? Are we to waste our immigration fund in transporting the people from one part of the country to the other ? Is not our immigration fund for the purpose of bringing immigrants to this country ? We found in one breath an hon. gentleman arguing that not enough population was coming to Quebec and in the next breath we have the same hon. gentleman arguing that we have not facilities to carry the people out of Quebec.

I do not wish to take up very much more time because we have wasted most of this day with a rather unimportant subject. But I notice that unimportant subjects are the kind that the hon. member for Montmagny likes to take up the time of the House with. I notice that in regard to the great subjects that would naturally involve the two sides of this House we do not find the hon. member for Montmagny taking a very active part, but when some little racial question comes up we find the hon. member for Montmagny very prominent. I may be pardoned if I give my estimate of the manner in which these matters are taken up as a member of this House. As I read my history, Mr. Speaker, the time was when this country was divided into French and English colonies. They had an opportunity in those days to draw to themselves their compatriots. They had in those days the opportunity of formulating the kind of laws which they thought would suit their particular religion or race. They drew to themselves their particular race and their particular co-religionists. They tried for 150 years, yes, more, the French on the one hand and the British on the other, to build up a country, but what was the result ? The great minds came from these colonies and they formulated the theory that if we were to ever become a great country we must bury our racial differences and also our religious differences. They formulated that wonderful piece of legislation known as the Confederation Act which gave liberty of conscience and liberty of race, so to speak, to every nationality that should seek our shores. That was the condition, that was the law that made this Canada as Canadian as possible. Without it we would still have been French colonies or English colonies inland and by the sea-board. Sir, we were taught a lesson by that legislation which probably was none too well learned by individuals, but the men that breathed the breath of that broad loyalty and who promoted that legislation made it possible for the teaching of the sentiment to correspond with the legislation, and I claim as I stated a short time ago that when a man takes the oath of allegiance and becomes a citizen of this country it ill becomes another citizen to stand up and call him a foreigner.

It was the idea of these wise men who saw ahead probably further than we see, who read into the future possibly better than we can; it was their idea that we should live together, one beside the other regardless of our racial or religious differences. And I have this tribute to pay to my friends from Quebec: That they are broad in their ideas. I think probably they take less account of what religion a man has, or what race he comes from than do those of the tenets under which I was taught. I believe the French Canadians have a broad patriotic nationalism, that they take people as they are and accord to them the right of citizenship. But coming from the old colonist days, we apparently have an obsolete section that is bobbing up to teach the same carping sentiment that was taught in those days. We are told that this is a new party; we are told that it is a nationalist party. Well, when the time of this House is taken up with discussing whether a certain minister shall have the portfolio of Marine and Fisheries because he is French——

Mr. BOURASSA. The hon. gentleman is putting words into my mouth that I never uttered.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BOURASSA. I rise to a point of order. I stated that the minister in charge of that department should be one who was cognizant of the important duties of the department, and whether he be English, Scotch or French had nothing to do with it.

Mr. FIELDING. The duties of the Marine Department extend from ocean to ocean.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. I say that when the time of this House is taken up with discussion as to whether the departments of government have their proper quota of deputy ministers who speak French, when the time of the House is taken up with discussing what kind of language shall be printed on a postage stamp; I say that when we have men of that class here, when we have men who will raise a question as to whether at the simultaneous moment one page of the French statutes shall be printed with a page of the English statutes; when we have men in this House who would devote the time of parliament to that sort of thing, I say they need a proper national sentiment just as much as any Doukhobor or Galician.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). I rise, not to discuss the issue between the member for Montmagny and the Department of the Interior, but, to give a few facts and figures concerning the tide of French emigration to Canada, which after all is the principal feature of the motion before us. Let me say, that I dissent from the views expressed by my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) as to the immigration policy of the Department of the Interior. I do not think that when thousands and thousands are leaving the shores of Europe every year, that we in Canada can, or should prevent a portion of these immigrants coming to our country, so long as we have salutary and stringent laws to protect our own people. Let me quote from a book written by Mr. Whelpley, an authority on immigration, who says :

> Like a mighty stream, it finds its source in a hundred rivulets. The huts of the mountains and the hovels of the plains are the springs which feed ; the fecundity of the races of the old world, the inexhaustible source. It is a march the like of which the world has never seen, and the moving columns are animated by but one idea—that of escaping from evils which have made existence intolerable, and of reaching the free air of countries where conditions are better shaped to the welfare of the masses of the people.

I say that no human law can prevent the thousands of Hungarians, of Germans, of Danes, of Norwegians, of Russians, of Poles, from leaving their own country and coming to the western world to breathe the free air of America. The very word 'America' is alluring to the people of Europe, for they know that in America they will find justice and liberty. I appeal to the liberalism of my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and I ask him, if he would prevent the Pole, or the German, or the Dane, or even the Russian, who, living under harsh conditions in his own country to seek the free air of America; will he prevent this foreigner who after all, is a unit in the brotherhood of man, from seeking a home among his brothers. If we have stringent and good laws, to prevent undesirable emigrants coming to our shores, will my hon. friend exclude these downtrodden people, who, after a few years in this country, contribute to its progress and prosperity and become law-abiding citizens? As a Canadian and as a Liberal, I say that Canada should open her doors to all desirable emigrants, and I trust that our country may be known, as Great Britain is known, to be the land of the free, and the happy home of refugees from oppression. According to Mr. Whelpley :

> Last year the immigrants from Austro-Hungary started on their journey westward to escape burdens both economic and political ; last year 230,000 Italians, 200,000 Austro-Hungarians and 136,000 Russians successfully passed the immigration barriers of a single country, the United States.

Now, if so many thousands of these Europeans found their way westward to the United States where they have the most stringent laws to prevent undesirable immigration, will my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) say that we, in Canada should close our doors to these people who come to us. We have a vast country awaiting development, and I as a Canadian, pround of my country, anxious that it should share in the universal prosperity, am ready to open the doors to desirable immigrants. I claim that the immigration laws of Canada are just as well calculated to protect our people as are the laws of the United States to protect the Americans, and so we need have no fear. I am surprised that my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) said so little on the question of the immigration from France and Belgium, because it is the special point raised in the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Armand Lavergne). I say at once, that if I rise now, it is to put an end to the campaign which has been carried on by a certain press in the province of Quebec, and which has been proclaiming that this government was deadly opposed to French immigration.

I oppose, Sir, the most unqualified denial to such an accusation. It is not true, I say so on my responsibility as an adviser of His Majesty in this Dominion. It is not true. It is all very well to roam about the province of Quebec, to go into the essentially French Canadian centres, and to say: Fellow countrymen, you are not helped in this country you do not receive from France, your old mother country, the share of immigration, to which you are entitled'. It is well enough to hold that language in the province of Quebec, but what are the cold, hard facts? Let me put this question to my hon. friend: Is it a fact, yes or no, that the people of France emigrate to-day? Have they to the extent that other races do, ever emigrated in the past? I know that, with my hon. friend's honesty of purpose, with his wide knowledge, he will answer me that never in the past, and even less to-day than in the past do the people of France emigrate.

Mr. BOURASSA. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) wish me to answer his question?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Wait a minute. During nearly two hundred years, according to the historians of this country, less than 9,000 Frenchmen came to Canada as settlers. It is true that in 1759, at the time of the conquest, there were 65,000 of French blood in Canada. But the increase was due to the high birth-rate among the French-Canadians. Why, my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) himself, in a remarkable essay which appeared in one of the periodicals in England, two or three years ago, stated that the French who came from France under the old regime did not come—except the small minority—as permanent settlers, but as soldiers.

Mr. BOURASSA. I never said that.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will quote it. Wait. The moment the struggle was over in 1759, the soldiers returned to France—

Mr. BOURASSA. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX—the rich merchants returned to France;—

Mr. BOURASSA. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX—but the peasants remained in this country, and they formed the permanent basis of the French race in America. All this is only to exemplify the main point, which is that, in two hundred years under the French regime, the French came to this country to the number of only 8,000 or 10,000. To further illustrate my point that the French do not emigrate, contrast the History of Canada under the French regime with the history of the New England colonies. The Pilgrim Fathers landed about the same time as the first French settlers on the shores of the St. Lawrence. But, at the time of the American revolutionary war, we find that the French colony—though the means of communication with England were no better than those with France, and though France was, perhaps, the predominating power in Europe and in the world—there were only 65,000 French in America against nearly 3,000,000 English-speaking people in the thirteen colonies. The French do not emigrate, yet my hon. friend speaks of French immigration. He knows—I am sure he knows—that you will not find emigrating from France to-day to the foreign countries of the world more than 6,000 a year. My hon. friend will not deny this.

Mr. BOURASSA. Of course, I deny it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will explain—

Mr. BOURASSA. Over 90,000 emigrated last year.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) is not serious. Of course, it is quite true that from Toulon, Marseilles, Bordeaux and Hâvre, 90,000 people, 100,000 people, 150,000 people, leave France every year. But are they French? No, they are Armenians, Syrians, they are Spaniards, they are Italian navvies. Mr. Whelpley, who has written on this subject, who has thought over it and knows more about it than my hon. friends from Montmagny and Labelle know, says:

> The emigration from France has been nearly a quarter of a million people in fifty years, and the annual exodus is now less than 6,000. These people come to the United States of America or the Argentine. France is deeply concerned, however, with immigration matters owing to the fact that her territory is a great highway for those coming from countries of the east and of the south. Russia, Austria, and Italy and the Levant, send their thousands of immigrants each year, and the French ports and the French people are thereby exposed to all the evils which follow upon this movement.

That is where my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) will find his 90,000 French emigrants.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. If my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) will pardon me, it is not to Mr. Whelpley's book that he should go, but to the statistics of the French government.

Mr. LEMIEUX. And if my hon. friend (Mr. Armand Lavergne) will look at the French statistics, he will find also that France has colonies as England has. Now, in order to show still more clearly that the French do not emigrate, even to the French colonies, let us consider first the case of Algeria. Algeria is just across the Mediterranean—the French lake as it has been called—at a stone's throw from the southern coast of France, from the great port of Marseilles. It has the same climate, and yields the same products as southern France. It has now been in the possession of France for eighty-five years. French capital has directed its forces for more than half a century to build up this colony for France. And to-day the total French population of Algeria is 295,000, while the total Spanish and Italian population is 300,000. This is the darling colony of France, and we all know what sacrifices France would be ready to make in order to keep the colony of Algeria. But, France has other colonies. She has Madagascar, she has Tunis, she has Tonquin and others. She has closer relations with Louisiana and some other parts of the United States to-day than she has with Canada. And still, the exodus from France to all parts of the world does not exceed six thousand souls a year. It is true as I have said, that in the great ports of Marseilles, Toulon and Havre and Dunkirk, you will find inscribed in the books of the agents of the several navigation companies, the names of thousands and thousands of emigrants. But, they are not French. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Whelpley speaking of France, says that France has a population of about 39,000,000, and this population is practically at a standstill, owing to the abnormally small birth rate. Sir, the people who emigrate are those who live in countries overflowing with population. But is that the case in France? Let me point out first that in France property is more evenly divided than in any other country in the world. There is in Great Birtain to-day—I am sorry to say it as a Liberal—a system of feudal tenure, and this may be the cause why my friends from Ireland left the green little isle; in Germany the masses are led by the classes; we know what are the civil and economical troubles suffered by the Russians—but in France the property is evenly divided. There are 10,000,000 families and 8,000,000 land owners. The Frenchman is happy in his own country. Nay, more, he is wealthy, and there are not the civil and political troubles in France that there are in other countries. But this is a question of fact to be determined by those who know best. Frenchmen, I say it again, do not emigrate, because the property there is evenly divided, and also because the population is practically at a standstill. Last year the population in France increased by about 205,000 souls, whilst in twelve departments or territorial divisions the population decreased by nearly ten or twelve per cent. Do you think that a race whose birth-rate is decreasing will emigrate? Common sense will tell you no. The people will stay in France, and the French government will see that its own population does not emigrate. My hon. friend knows fully well that there is no country in Europe where there are more stringent laws to prevent emigration than in France.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. What about the North Atlantic Trading Company? Why did it not operate in France?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will read the laws which have been passed.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I am not denying the statement, but I am asking why did not the North Atlantic Trading Company operate in France then?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I say once for all, from my seat in parliament, and before the whole country and not in some obscure little village in the province of Québec, where there is an election, where you can appeal to the French Canadians—and in doing this I have no intention to belittle the French government or nation—my sympathies for France are well known, and I can well afford, as a Canadian and a British subject, to love and revere the old mother country—that this government is doing its level best to bring out French settlers to this country. But in France there is no reciprocity. Just let me read a synopsis of the French laws relating to restriction of emigration:

No one shall undertake to engage or transport emigrants without the authority of the Minister of Agriculture, Commerce and Public Works.

Any infraction to the above law is punishable by fine of from 50 to 5,000 francs. In the case of a second offence during the same year the fine shall be double this amount.

In a circular dated November 10, 1873, the Minister of the Interior calls the attention of the authorities to the decrease in the population of the rural constituencies and attributes this to the constant emigration of young people. He states that there are a certain number of authorized agencies who are employing sub-agents who are distributing literature giving erroneous ideas as to the places where they are asking them to emigrate. The minister recommends to the public officials to oppose themselves to the distribution of literature promoting the cause of emigration, and he states that the authority for the distribution of such literature must be refused in every case.

Another circular dated December 9, 1873, calls attention to the fact that a certain subagent of emigration employs an illegitimate process to induce people to emigrate to America. This circular recalls the necessity for all French people to be supplied with a 'passport' if they desire to emigrate, it being important for young men to remain on their farm where they are more useful to their country, and also in view of the fact that they may be called upon to fulfil the obligations imposed by the law of enrolment.

In a British and free country, and in any other country, they do not exact passports from people who emigrate. We require pass-ports from immigrants, but in France they have a dual pass-port policy. They exact pass-ports from Frenchmen who wish to emigrate as well as from people coming into France. You see that the laws are very stringent. I do not admit that this government is not doing all it can to promote French immigration, but it is very much hampered in that work by the French authorities themselves. Here is a circular published in January, 1886, instructing police officers to warn emigrants against going to Canada. This circular says:

Emigration to Canada can be successful in only two cases. First, for those who are willing to be employed as agricultural labourers by others; and second, for those who have sufficient pecuniary means to establish themselves independently. All others are condemned to misery.

This is a circular which was published by the French government in 1886, and since then we have had in France immigration agents. We have Mr. Fabre in Paris, one of the most remarkable French Canadians, one of the most creditable men our race has ever produced on this continent; and besides Mr. Fabre, there are two agents, Mr. Wiallard and Mr. Foursin. My hon. friend said that Mr. Foursin was going about carrying crutches. I deny this. He wishes to ridicule Mr. Foursin, but I can state on my honour, knowing Mr. Foursin, and having been the cause of his appointment, that he does not carry crutches, and that he, more than any one else, has been instrumental in sending French immigrants to the territories. If in Alberta and Saskatchewan there are a few French settlements, that is due to the efforts of Mr. Foursin.

Mr. SPROULE. If it be the case that France will not allow her people to emigrate, and puts every obstacle in the way, and if they do not emigrate, does the hon. gentleman think it right to spend money keeping up immigration agencies there?

Mr. LEMIEUX. This is, Sir, the effect of such speeches as we have just heard. As was stated a minute ago by my hon. friend from Strathcona, as long as we have in this House, hon. members who have a political platform based on a postage stamp or a Dominion bill, the French Canadians may well expect that some day or other the majority in this country will say: Only one race, only one language, only one law—and the firebrands will have been the cause of it.

It has been repeated over and again that this government has done nothing towards helping French immigration to Canada. I have stated under what special difficulties the Canadian immigration agents work in France. Yet, Sir, if we take 6,000 as the average number of Frenchmen emigrating every year we will find that Canada received her full quota of that immigration. The immigration to Canada during the past ten years from France, has been:

Year.	Number.	Percentage immigration from France.
1896..	382	6·36
1897..	370	6·16
1898..	267	4·45
1899..	332	5·53
1900..	180	3·00
1901..	360	6·00
1902..	431	7·18
1903..	937	15·62
1904..	1,534	22·22
1905..	1,743	28·9
1906..	1,648	27·3

Thus, you will see, that even with the small exodus of Frenchmen, Canada has received her full share of that immigration.

Will my hon. friend state that the government does not do its duty in helping Belgian immigration towards Canada? Some years ago I remember we had no agent in Belgium and I was one of those who went to the then Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) to obtain the appointment of an agent. My hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) and myself obtained the appointment of Monsieur Treau de Coeli, a very good agent, whose name was suggested by my hon. friend, I believe he even was one of his electors in the county of Ottawa. My hon. friend will not deny those facts. In Belgium, I am told by Mr. Whelpley, who is a very good authority on the subject that:

The native emigration from Belgium is inconsiderable, but owing to the fact that Antwerp is one of the important points of embarkation for emigrants from other European countries, the treatment of emigration by the Belgian government becomes of considerable interest and importance.

Here are the hard facts. It is needless for me to draw on my imagination or on any fancies of the mind. I stand by the book and by the facts. My hon. friend has read a book probably the best book written on Canada and the Canadian question since the last 25 years. It is by M. André Siegfried, the son of the ex-Minister of Trade and Commerce of France. It is called 'Le Canada, Les Deux Races,' Canada and the two races. Here is a Frenchman who has travelled in our country, who knows our people and who has published chapters of intense interest which have created quite a sensation, because it was never thought that a Frenchman could grasp the Canadian question as well as he has done. In order to show you that after all there is not so much affinity between the modern Frenchman from France and the French Canadian of to-day, I would only have to quote what this gentleman states in his book. Indeed I would not need to quote what he said but only to quote from some of the speeches which have been delivered by my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). There is not such a great affinity and I am pleased to say so before you, Mr. Speaker, between the modern Frenchman from France, and the French Canadian of to-day. There is quite a gulf dividing them and the differences are plainly shown in this book. Speaking about Canada and France he says :

The present political relations between France and Canada, since the conquest of a century and a half ago, are characteristic because there is a complete absence of any equivocal questions between the two. On the one hand the French Canadians do not desire to come back to us. Abandoned, left to their own resources, they have magnificently fought in order to create for themselves a place under the sun of God, in the new society where destiny had brought them. They have succeeded and to-day they are well enough accustomed to the present arrangement to be freely and frankly satisfied with it. It would be very hard for them to readjust themselves to the ideas and the ideals of modern France. On the other hand——

And this comes as another illustration of what I stated a moment ago, that the French government itself, the French nation itself, is not desirous of sending its sons abroad and especially to Canada.

On the other hand, our government is not labouring under any illusions. It does not ignore the state of mind I have just recalled, and it admits freely that such a state of mind is both natural and logical as in good faith it believes that our political domination and prestige in North America belongs to the past and that it would be chimerical to attempt to revive it. At no moment have we ever thought or dreamt of making the conquest of our old colony, and that old colony in the same way has never thought of being reconquered by us.

Speaking of what relations there are existing, the writer says that the French Canadian could cultivate the French literature, the French language, could revere and love the old French history, but that is all. M. Siegfried adds :

There is a rapprochement which we must make with a very delicate touch. For many reasons we are too different from the French Canadians to understand each other. As I have stated, a whole fraction of Canadian society is afraid of our influence, and I must admit that this is quite natural and quite logical. Can we indeed ask devout Catholics, men who are moderate in their political views and who politically belong to the English school, to come to us and receive their inspirations from a country politically the most advanced in Europe ? It is not only distance, but also time which separates us, and we would be wrong in believing that it is possible to go back a number of years after so long a divorce between modern France and French Canada

Such is the opinion expressed by an eminent Frenchman who has travelled in our country, who is known among French Canadians, both clergy and laity, and remember that the views which he expresses in this book which I now hold in my hand, are those expressed by four-fifths of the people of France. So, Mr. Speaker, I for one would view with pleasure, any efforts this government might make towards stimulating French immigration, though I would favour such a movement I will never claim as some of my hon. friends do claim, that there is such an affinity, such a similarity of ideals between modern France and French Canada, that we ought to hope for a large influx of French immigrants. In the first place, we will not be able to get that influx because the laws of France are against it, the French birthrate is against it, the tendencies of modern Frenchmen are against it. It is like fighting a windmill to shout right and left in the French Canadian centres that this government is not doing its duty towards the French Canadian population in neglecting to promote French immigration into this country. No, Mr. Speaker, this government since 1896, by the literature distributed broadcast in France, by the appointment of agents in France, by the subsidizing of a line to the extent of $100,000 between Havre and Montreal in the summer and Havre and Halifax in winter, has done its duty towards the French Canadian population in the province of Quebec. Now, Sir, I heard a moment ago my hon. friend declaring that the French Canadians did not receive fair-play at the hands of the Department of the Interior in the matter of transportation from the east to the west.

Mr. BOURASSA. I beg your pardon, I stated that Canadians moving from the eastern provinces had to pay more for their fares than foreigners.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Did not my hon. friend state that an elector from his county had been refused some advantages, and was I not justified in inferring that my hon. friend meant that the people of the province of Quebec—of Ontario, if you please, of the lower provinces, if you please—were not treated as well as foreigners ? That claim has been answered by my hon. friend from Strathcona (Mr. W. McIntyre). This government does not provide, in its immigration policy for the moving of one Canadian from the east to the west, it only provides for bringing in people from foreign countries. But I say this, does my hon. friend in his plea for the people of the province of Quebec, ignore that the leaders, the natural leaders, of the French Canadian element, are very averse to sending our compatriots from Quebec into the western provinces ? I put that question straight to my hon. friend. Does he deny that the clergy in the province of Quebec as a rule are opposed to such a movement, because they argue that the French Canadians would be swamped in the west ?

Mr. BOURASSA. Do you want an answer ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, the answer is given by Monseigneur Taché. I have it here. Monseigneur Taché some years ago——

Mr. BOURASSA. Circumstances have changed.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Circumstances have not changed. Will my hon. friend deny that the organ of the clergy in the province of Quebec, a paper which I hold in my hand, 'La Vérité'——

Mr. BOURASSA. I deny it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend is strong in denials when the facts are brought forward before the House.

Mr. BOURASSA. Will my hon. friend state on his responsibility that 'La Vérité' is the organ of the clergy of the province of Quebec ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that 'La Vérité' is generally known as the organ of the clergy in the province of Quebec, and my hon. friend knows it well. Some days ago the Rev. Father Lacombe, an old missionary well known to many members of this House, came back from the west, and as usual he gave an interview to a journalist in Montreal. That journalist asked Father Lacombe : How about the French Canadians in the west ? And Father Lacombe answered : We have not the French Canadian immigration that we should have into the west, because 'La Vérité' prevented the French Canadians from settling there some years ago. Being rather nettled by the statement made by this old missionary, 'La Vérité' has taken up the question, and in its issue of the 16th of March last 'La Vérité' discusses that question with Father Lacombe, and gives word for word the language used by Monseigneur Taché between 1870 and 1890. An old missionary had gone to Monseigneur Taché and asked him if he would allow him to bring some French Canadians from the province of Quebec into the Northwest Territories, and Monseigneur Taché answered: No, it is perfectly useless, you should not depopulate the province of Quebec where the French Canadians are strong and bring them into that vast Northwest territory. Will my hon. friend deny that? I accept the word of 'La Vérité' although 'La Vérité' is pretty hard on me sometimes, Mr. Speaker. I translate again from the French into English:

From 1872——

Says 'La Vérité' :

—Monseigneur Taché was opposed to French-Canadian immigration. If French Canadians come here, he said, we will receive them, but let us not appeal to the province of Quebec to migrate to Manitoba. It would be too grave a responsibility. One of his priests who lives to-day and who resides in Manitoba proposed to the bishop to recruit some settlers in the province of Quebec, but Monseigneur Taché stoutly opposed such a plan.

There is a marginal note.

We received this information from an old missionary from the Northwest.

So, Mr. Speaker, when my hon. friends are appealing to the province of Quebec that this government does not do its duty towards helping immigration from France or towards helping French immigration from the province of Quebec to the Northwest they are making vain appeals. First of all, as I have already proven, the French do not emigrate, and secondly the natural leaders of the French Canadian people—I mean their religious leaders in that province—are not in favour of emigration to the Northwest. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have stated plainly what are my views with regard to the question which was raised this afternoon. I know that I will be taken to task in the province of Quebec and misrepresented by my hon. friend from Montmagny whom I have helped to be elected, as trying to get the sympathies of the majority of the English speaking members of this House at the expense of French emigration, but I am well enough known on both sides, and I have a past of which I am proud enough to appeal to my own countrymen, to appeal to their sound common sense to which we have appealed on so many occasions and which has brought us victory in the past. I have said, Mr. Speaker.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

MANITOBA RADIAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Further consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 46) to incorporate the Manitoba Radial Railway Company.—Mr. Bole.

Mr. FIELDING. In this case the Senate struck out a clause which had relation to the power of the company to run its line through a municipality ; the Senate taking the view that the Railway Act, 1903, was sufficient protection. The promoters of the Bill thought this was not so, and I understand that at the request of the city of Winnipeg the amendment was not concurred in by the committee. I move that the first amendment be disagreed to.

Mr. SPROULE. The reason given in the committee was that the General Railway Act does not safeguard the rights of the municipality.

Mr. LENNOX. The only provision of the Railway Act that could be said to apply would not cover the case.

Amendment disagreed to.

On motion of Mr. Fielding the second amendment was concurred in.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 15) to incorporate the Live Stock Insurance Company of Canada, Limited.—Mr. Walsh (St. Anne).

Bill (No. 153) for the relief of Victor Harold Lyon.—Mr. Wilson (Russell).

Bill (No. 149) to incorporate the Rock Life Assurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Parmelee.

Bill (No. 150) to incorporate the Collingwood Southern Railway Company.—Mr. McCarthy (Simcoe).

SUPPLY—IMMIGRATION POLICY OF THE GOVERNMENT.

The House resumed discussion of the motion that the House go into Committee of Supply, and the amendment of Mr. Armand Lavergne thereto.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). Mr. Speaker, after the very lengthy debate on the motion of the hon. member for Montmagny, I do not intend to detain the House at any great length. The Minister of the Interior was good enough to refer to the speech of the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) as a very discreditable one. I do not agree with everything the hon. member for Montmagny said, but I did not notice anything discreditable in his speech; on the contrary, I thought he argued his case from his own standpoint very fairly indeed. It is true that the Minister of the Interior may very well think it a most outrageous thing that the member for Montmagny should have selected extracts from the speeches of the minister himself, embody them in a resolution, and move them as an amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply. I do not wonder that the feelings of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) were somewhat hurt. I trust that my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) will never again be guilty of perpetrating such a trick on any minister of the Crown because that is rather a serious thing to do. Then to have my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) launching out into a somewhat discursive and very warm speech in attack of that very motion, which was taken from his own utterances of bygone days, was a spectacle which of course the minister himself did not relish as soon as he came to realize the situation. My hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) as well as my hon. friend from Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) did not argue this motion very seriously. They contented themselves with criticising very strongly the speeches made by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) in support of what those gentlemen consider a proper policy. The Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) asked very warmly more than once whether we propose in this country to exclude foreign immigrants. But I did not understand either of the gentlemen who supported this motion to advocate any such policy. They simply proposed that we should not spend money in certain quarters to encourage immigration from those quarters. When it was suggested by the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) as well as by my hon. friend from Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) —and the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre), I thought, did not exhibit his usual fairness in some passages of his speech—that there was something racial or narrow in the arguments put forward by the mover and seconder of the motion, I am bound to say I found nothing racial or narrow in the speeches of those gentlemen. I have not agreed very often with my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) in this House. We have sat on opposite sides, and, as a general rule, have not been very much in agreement; but I am bound to say that I never denied him the qualities of courage and sincerity, and I believe that he has never said in the province of Quebec anything he has not been willing to say in this House. I believe that thoroughly; and even if his speech had the characteristics which were somewhat unfairly imputed to him this afternoon, I would venture to inquire most respectfully whether the Postmaster General should be selected as the one to throw the first stone.

There were one or two other observations which I wish to take up. The hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) referred to this as a very unimportant subject. I do not agree with him. I think it is a very important subject indeed and one which well deserves the consideration of this House. It was said by my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) and also by my hon. friend from Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) had endeavoured to raise the racial cry with reference to the transportation of people from Quebec to the west. I did not so understand the remarks that were made. I simply understood my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) to allude to the difference in transportation rates, whether from the maritime provinces, Quebec or Ontario, as compared with those charged by the transportation companies of this country to persons landing at Halifax or Quebec from foreign countries or the British Isles.

As a point was sought to be made against the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) because of some reference he made to the devolution of the duties of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) upon the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman), I distinctly understood him to say that, from his point of view, he did not attach very much importance as to whether a certain proportion of the ministers came from one province or the other, but would look rather to the fitness of a minister than to the province from which he might happen to come. I do not think therefore that the imputations passed upon these gentlemen this afternoon were deserved, and I can say this the more freely because a little later on I intend pointing out that I do not concur in the terms of the resolution as it goes somewhat beyond what I would be prepared to support in this instance.

A somewhat sneering remark was made with regard to the attitude of my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) concerning the use of the French language in this country. As far as the statutes are concerned, I have not the slightest hesitation in supporting the position he took. I would like to point out to the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) that if the French version of these statutes had been prepared in the first instance and the English version would not be ready for some three month later, probably we would have heard something from the English speaking provinces, and perhaps the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre), if he happened to be a member of the bar, would not look at the situation in the very philosophical light he was inclined to bestow on the converse situation this afternoon. As far as the two languages are concerned, both are, under the law of the country, to be used in the preparation of the statutes and the debates of this parliament, and I can see no good reason why it was departed from in the instance alluded to. Those of us, whose mother tongue is English, if we were two millions in this country among a population of over four million French, might perhaps be quite as susceptible as my hon. friends have proved themselves to be during this session and previous sessions on that point. I have thought fit in all fairness to express this view because neither one of these two gentlemen will have the opportunity to speak again in this debate. I have therefore taken this opportunity to say what I think may well be said in fairness and justice to them with regard to the imputations which have been cast upon them.

I was impressed with the baldness of this resolution when my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) moved it. But its somewhat bald and abrupt wording was explained afterwards when it was shown to consist of two sentences taken from two speeches of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). It could not therefore be expected to be in precisely that form which would command the adhesion of a majority in this House.

Let us look at it for a few minutes and see what it involves. It declares that the payment of bonuses on immigrants has a tendency to bring a less desirable rather than a more desirable class of people into this country. That was the utterance of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) some few years ago before he was a minister of the Crown. I do not think that sentence expresses a principle in which I would be inclined to confer. It does not seem to me that the payment of bonuses in itself has any tendency to bring in a less rather than a more desirable class of people into this country. That would depend altogether on the way you work it out. If without the payment of bonuses you permit people to come in indiscriminately, if you use every possible means by advertising and otherwise in any particular country from which immigration is not very desirable, you might, without a system of bonusing at all, increase the tendency to bring in people who are not desirable. On the other hand, if you use the system of bonusing, you might attach to it such conditions as would not tend to bring in undesirable people. It seems to me that that portion of the resolution is of so bald and inconclusive a character that I for one would not be inclined to commit myself to supoprting it.

Mr. BOURASSA. Does my hon. friend not think that the moment you pay a bonus to an agent in a foreign country, over whom you cannot have the direct control that should be exercised, the result of that system will naturally be to defeat your purpose of selecting immigration, and you will encourage the agent, through his own self-interest, to look rather to the number than to the character of the immigrants?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would not think so necessarily, and I shall come to that point a little later on and endeavour to satisfy my hon. friend that there is at least another way of looking at the matter.

Before going into that, however, I would like to call the attention of my hon. friend from Strathcona (Mr. W. McIntyre) to his observations this afternoon with regard to the qualities of foreign immigrants. I do not think that the expression 'foreign immigrants' was used in this debate to characterize those people who have taken the oath of allegiance. It was intended to distinguish between those born under the British flag, and those not born under that flag. The hon. member for Strathcona was particularly severe, in that connection, in commenting upon what has been said here today. Now, I have here some expressions with regard to certain settlers in the Northwest. I quote them, not because I approve of what is said, for I am bound to say that, from my observation of the Galicians in the Northwest—I did not see anything of the Doukhobors—I thought these Galicians would make very good settlers, and that in the second or third generation you would hardly be able to distinguish them from the descendants of Canadians. That was the impression which I formed and which I have stated more than once in this House. But if my hon. friend (Mr. W. McIntyre) proposes to question language used with regard to these settlers, let me point out to him what his leader, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has said about these people. I will not give many of the extracts that have been placed in my hands, but here are two or three of them. In 'Hansard' of 1901, page 2934, the hon. Minister of the Interior, then a private member of this House, is reported to have said :

I have heard hon. members say that these strange people, these Slavs, will assimilate with the other people. Do you know what the word 'assimilate' means ? It is a nice sounding word. Do you know that it means that if you settle on a farm on the prairies, amongst them, or in their neighbourhood you must depend for the schooling of your children, on the taxpaying willingness and power of people who neither know nor care anything about schools ?

That is a fairly strong statement. There is more of it, but I will not quote more than another line, as follows :

The pride of race is as strong in these people——

He is speaking now of the Germans and Scandinavians.

—and they object, and object very strongly, to being placed in the same category as a Slavic people, a people who, less than two generations ago were serfs of the soil, and who unfortunately have not had the opportunities, even if they had the capability to rise very high above that position to-day.

I do not think my hon. friend from Strathcona will find anything in the observations he reprobated so strongly which compares with the language of the Minister of the Interior whom to-day he is proud to call his leader.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. If the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) will excuse me : He expresses the opinion that I was mistaken in interrupting the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) as saying that even a man who had taken the oath of allegiance was a foreigner. If my memory serves me well, the hon. gentleman went so far as to say that there will be a majority in this House coming from the western provinces, and if so, they would have to take the oath of allegiance. He also said that four-fifths of the population, would be foreign born and then before they could vote, would have to take the oath of allegiance.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not pretend to be able to set forth in detail what the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) said. I can only say that his words did not impress me in the same way as they have evidently impressed the hon. member for Strathcona. Let me give another quotation; and, if the hon. member for Strathcona is disposed to criticise, I should certainly expect him, at the very earliest opportunity to rise in this House and reprobate most earnestly, the language used by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) who now occupies the position of the Minister of the Interior :

But the Galician or the Doukhobor who have been reared under circumstances which did not permit them to know what free government is, who know nothing of government, except that government is a tyranny, these people, let them be ever so good, cannot be citizens as we would wish them to be citizens, or as our Scandinavian or German fellow citizens are.

That is fairly comprehensive. A little further on there is this quotation :

We want to build up a nation, a civilization, a social system that we could enjoy, be proud of and transmit to our children, and we resent the idea of having the millstone of this Slav population hung around our necks in our efforts to build up, beautify and improve that country and so improve the whole of Canada. I say it is an unpopular policy in western Canada to encourage this Slav immigration.

I do not think you will find anything in the language used here to-day that at all approaches this which, somewhat singularly, has escaped the attention of my hon. friend from Strathcona—to which at all events, he did not refer, this afternoon.

Mr. OLIVER. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) care to give the House his opinion of the remarks he has quoted?

Mr R. L. BORDEN. I have already done so. I said—and I say again—that the Galician settlers, so far as any information with regard to them came to me, seemed to me to be good settlers ; and I believe that the second generation will not be distinguishable from the descendants of Canadians. Now, I have answered the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) ; will he answer me ? Does he adhere to the sentiments he uttered and that I have quoted ?

Mr. OLIVER. What has been stated there are facts, not sentiments.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would point out to the hon. member for Strathcona that the hon. minister still adheres to the strong language he uttered with regard to the settlers who have been so strongly commended by the hon. member for Strathcona himself. I trust that hon. gentleman will take an early opportunity to bring to the attention of the Minister of the Interior the unfairness of the language he has used with regard to these settlers and to show him that this is language not worthy of a member of the House, much less of a minister of the Crown.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) has been good enough to give us his opinion of the people who have been mentioned, but he has not been good enough to give his opinion of the language used—whether it is or is not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not seem to have succeeded in making myself clear to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) but I think I have made myself perfectly clear to every other person within the sound of my voice.

Now, this motion, as I have already pointed out, goes beyond what I think is desirable. It declares that the bonus has a tendency to bring in less desirable rather than the most desirable class of people. I do not think that necessarily follows, for the reason I have stated, and the motion, in the bald form in which it has been extracted from the speeches of the Minister of the Interior, does not seem to me to be proper. It would shut out altogether, any effort of this kind to bring us immigrants from the British Isles. That was the policy of the Minister of the Interior, when he was a private member of this House if these sentences are correctly quoted from his utterances in 1901 or 1902, as I am assured they are. I must say that that circumstance makes me a little suspicious. I do not think we would be justified in going thus far. Now, it is true that we have an order in council, passed on the 19th of February last. It seems to be designed for the purpose of establishing, in effect another North Atlantic Trading Company in a somewhat different form. I observe, in the first place, that it specifies certain classes of persons upon whom bonuses are to be paid. In the next place, it provides for the selection of agents ; that is to say, it declares that it will be possible > —to make a selection of responsible and reliable agents who may be depended upon to provoke no conflict with the authorities who are responsible for the administration of the emigration laws above referred to.

These are the restrictive laws which prevail in most European countries. Now, there is the selection of classes and the selection of agents, but there does not seem to me any particular provision in the order in council for the selection of immigrants.

My idea is that we in this country should endeavour to select the best quality of immigrants. It is not enough to select agents who will not get into conflict with the governments of the respective countries, we should go further than that and endeavour to select the very best immigrants of each class referred to in this order in council. The order in council does not seem to take any account of that. I think further it is not a desirable thing that we should carry on an emigration propaganda against the law of any foreign country. That was attempted in a very skilful form by the contract made with the North Atlantic Trading Company. I shall not go over the history of the negotiations and the contract with that company to-night. It is enough to say that the apparent attempt to carry on by collusion with these agents a propaganda which was forbidden by the laws of foreign countries, has resulted in secrecy of contract, in the denying of information to parliament and last but not least in the threat by these agents of the government that they would commit suicide if their names were divulged. That is not a very desirable condition of affairs. We would not desire to drive any one to suicide or to contravene the laws of any foreign country or to enter into collusion with any agents, so that while pretending to carry out the laws they will, with the collusive sanction of this government, in effect violate the laws of foreign countries. I do not believe in that ; I believe we should not carry out in Germany, Scandinavia, Russia, Austria or any country a propaganda which is in effect forbidden by the law of that country. This order in council seems to me to be intended to carry on the very same game as that which was carried on under the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company ? What was the meaning of the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company ? What was the meaning of the terror that was inspired by the suggestion of divulging the names of the persons who composed that company. It was pointed out by one of the gentlemen who discussed this matter the other day that there were only two possible explanations of the failure of the government to divulge the names of those persons to this House and this parliament. The first explanation is one which would be unworthy of this government and which I shall not put forward, namely that some persons who ought not to be interested in this contract had, as a matter of fact, an interest in the contract. The only other explanation was that these agents were in fact carrying on a work in foreign countries which was forbidden by the laws of those countries, but this government knew perfectly well that these agents were carrying on this work and by the secrecy it imposed on their operations and by withholding information from parliament, was protecting these people against the laws of the foreign countries which they violated. That is the only explanation, and if it is designed by this order in council and by the scheme which is to be carried on under it to repeat that which has already brought discredit upon this government, I for one am not inclined to agree with it.

I do not agree with the motion in the terms in which it is proposed. I do however agree with most of the arguments that have been advanced in support of it. I believe that the splendid opportunities which Canada affords to the people of all countries, the magnificent fertile land in the west, the opportunities in Quebec, in Ontario and in the maritime provinces, should attract to Canada the very best elements of the most desirable emigrating races in the world, I do not think there is a doubt about that. I think that any resolution which is proposed on this subject should declare that our immigration propaganda should not be carried on in any country whose law it contravenes. I think the efforts of the government should be especially directed toward securing immigration of the highest quality available and that the indiscriminate payment of bonuses on unselected immigrants has a tendency to bring the less desirable, rather than the more desirable class of people, and should not be continued. In a word, I would be inclined to restrict our efforts so far as the system of bonusing is concerned to the people of the British Isles. If the motion of my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) had not been so comprehensive, had been restricted to the lines I have suggested now, I would have been very glad indeed to support it, but in the unqualified and comprehensive terms in which it is brought forward, I do not think I can in justice to the convictions I hold on this question, support it.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Might I offer a word of explanation ? When we drafted the motion we expected that the government would support us, that is why we put it in that form.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the belief of my hon. friend was a very natural one considering the sources from which he derived his inspiration.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). In order to accommodate the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) I paired with him before he left this chamber, but I would not like to see this occasion pass without at least expressing my opinion on this very important motion. My hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) took up a good deal of the time of the House this afternoon in developing the idea that this motion was intended to shut out from Canada desirable settlers who might wish to settle within the limits of this country, and he held up to scorn the idea that we, of all nations of the world, having such a splendid domain and such a fine class of population should, contrary to the comity of nations, close this country to desirable settlers. It is not at all in that sense that I understand the motion is presented. We are anxious to observe the rules that govern nations among themselves, we are desirous of seeing immigrants come to this country, but we should lay it down as a rule that we will not admit to our family, we will not take in among those who are contented with us to build up this great country undesirable settlers. We will not pay so much a head to people we do not know in order to increase the flow of immigration to this country. For my own part, I have not, since I have had the honour of a seat in this House, taken any other position than this, that the time has arrived for us in our present state of development to discontinue that system of bonusing immigrants and to have recourse to some other means of procuring immigration if in any way the flow which at present is coming into this country should show any signs of diminution. The question to my mind is : Is the system a good one ? Is it bad in principle ? If it is a bad system in principle, we should abolish it entirely, and I will say for my own part that I consider immigrants from the British Isles, the English yeoman, the Scotch farmer, the Irish peasant as the most desirable immigrants for this country. But if the system is a bad one, why should we continue to apply it even to the countries from which we expect a most advantageous flow of settlement into Canada ?

At the same time we should limit ourselves at present to making known the advantages of this country as a place of residence, establishing offices in all countries where we may expect to find immigrants, making known to the world what immense natural facilities this country affords and the great advantages open to people who desire to settle, not only on the great plains of the west, but in all the different provinces of Canada. But the idea of saying to a person, whom in most cases we do not know, as in the case of the North Atlantic Trading Company, which has brought most forcibly before this House and the country the defect of that system, the idea of saying : We will pay you so much per head for every person that you send to this country, and who will be able to pass the cursory examination he will have to submit to at the port of entry—I say that system is a bad system, that it has been productive of bad results, and that it is time, in the interest of the welfare of this country, that we should adopt a more proper and more advantageous system of immigration. Now, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has quoted from speeches made at different times by the Minister of the Interior, and it is a very singular thing that this afternoon we have had from two ministers of the Crown practically a repudiation of the views which, before they entered the sacred precincts of the cabinet, they held and were not afraid to express publicly on many occasions.

Mr. OLIVER. Does the hon. gentleman mean to indicate that I have intentionally repudiated any of the expressions which have been quoted as utterances made by me?

Mr. MONK. Intentionally—I believe the intentions of my hon. friend have been excellent. He has become converted. I would apply the same remark to my hon. friend the Postmaster General.

Mr. OLIVER. Allow me to say that I do not repudiate any statement that has been quoted here to-day as having been uttered by me in this House; on the contrary, I stand by those statements as statements of fact, which are incontrovertible, statements which no attempt has been made to controvert, which have not been contradicted in any way.

Mr. MONK. Very far from contradicting any of the statements which my hon. friend calls statements of fact, it is upon those statements of fact that I have relied in declaring that the motion before the House is well founded. I think that my hon. friend is sincere, and after coming into contact with the duties of his high office perhaps he has changed his views. That is the deduction to which one is led upon reading these statements of fact. There is nothing more concentrated than the opinion to which my hon. friend, in 1901, gave expression and which was quoted by the leader of the opposition.

Mr. OLIVER. As long as my hon. friend does not hold me responsible for his deductions, we won't quarrel.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask my hon. friend whether he adheres to these two sentences embodied in this resolution?

Mr. OLIVER. Properly expressed, yes. I think they have been expressed under an entire misapprehension.

Mr. MONK. Speaking in 1901, at the very time referred to a moment ago by the leader of the opposition, my hon. friend said:

> But I tell you that if you want such a market, you must settle the Northwest with a people who will be in sympathy with you, and upon whose industry, integrity and loyalty you can rely. It is better for your and better for us that the people leaving the eastern provinces should go to the Northwest rather than to the United States. What has been done cannot be helped, but this is still a young and a growing country, population is still increasing in these eastern provinces; young men and old men are still looking for new fields. Then, instead of attempting to people the Northwest with Slavs, with people from eastern Europe who are certainly not recognized by the rest of Europe as being equal with them—people under whose nationality and government there has never been reached that degree of liberty, civilization, progress or prosperity which we expect to attain—instead of looking to these people for the settlement of the Northwest, let us look to our own people and to kindred people, upon whose industry and loyalty we can depend. This is the immigration policy which will appeal to the people of Canada from one end to the other.

There is much more, but I will not take up the time of the House in quoting further from the utterances of the hon. gentleman when he was in a position of greater independence than he is to-day. The only point in which I differ from the sentiments and views expressed a moment ago by the leader of the opposition lies in the principle of the system which this resolution, as I understand, intends to condemn. There is no prohibition of an immigration propaganda in England, those immigrants are most desirable. But we cannot lose sight of the fact, however British we may be, that there are in England and in the British Isles undesirable classes. We must make, there as well as in every other country, a selection. I say that under the system which it is intended to condemn by this motion that selection is practically impossible. Not long ago I saw in the papers that some benevolent society in England, well-intentioned no doubt, intended to send out to Canada immigrants belonging to the juvenile criminal classes. That is not desirable, that is to be avoided. There is no doubt, in England as well as in every other country of Europe, a large number of people whom we do not desire to see here; and the system of bonusing at so much per head allows too great a latitude to agents who are intent upon inducing these people to come to this country. You will find these undesirable immigrants in every large city in Canada. If you go to Montreal, you will find that since the active propaganda which has been carried on under the system of bonuses has been productive of such a large immigration, we have received in the city of Montreal a very large number of immigrants who have increased our criminal population to a notable degree, and have increased the population of our jails. I may say, to use the expression of one of our most experienced magistrates. We have had from eastern Europe, under the bonusing system, people who have come to Canada and have given us a revelation of criminality unheard of before. I say, therefore, that at this stage of the development of Canada the first thing we should have in view is the performance of our duty, and if that duty referred to by the Postmaster General consists in throwing open our doors to the people of all nations without any discrimination, we owe a duty to ourselves as a young and rising nation, anxious to see this country settled by the best classes of the rest of the world, and to that end we must select most carefully among those who come to our shores the very best qualified in every way. While we should receive and treat properly in this country all those who come to the country, and who conform to the conditions imposed by our immigration laws, we should, at the same time, put an end to a system which has been productive of bad results and, to my mind, threatens a very grave danger in the future, whatever may be the country in which that system is allowed to prevail.

Mr. Speaker, I am not prone to calling the attention of the House too often to the example of the United States, but there is one fact that we must not lose sight of and that is that in that great country they have never put in force the system of bonusing immigrants. For a long time they gave no particular attention to immigration, but the moment there began to flow into the United States that stream which has continued to flow and increase in spite of all the preventive measures and all the restrictions that have been adopted by the Americans, they put into practice a system of inspection, of selection, and even of taxation to which I venture to say, without being a prophet, we will be obliged to have recourse before many years have elapsed. We must not lose sight either, Mr. Speaker, in connection with this matter of the very large expense to which this system puts us. When I came into this House in 1896 our expenditure under the head of immigration reached some $200,000. Immigration at that time was, comparatively speaking, insignificant. We have to-day reached a very large figure indeed. I venture to say that a careful examination of our accounts would reveal the fact that we are expending in connection with immigration, not only on bonuses, but for every other detail connected with the system a million dollars a year, and we do not derive, to my mind, anything like the benefit which we ought to derive from such an expenditure. In the United States there is a head tax. Not only have they put in force the most stringent laws in order to ensure a most perfect system of inspection and such selection as is possible in view of the immense stream of immigration which comes to their shores, but they have placed a tax upon immigrants which enables them to carry out their system of inspection and selection without the expenditure of a single dollar from the national treasury and they have at the end of each year a large surplus which is the product of the immigration tax which enables them to improve every year with the increasing wants of the country the precautions they take against an undue inflow into the country of undesirable people.

Mr. Speaker, the members of this House who take some interest in this subject should really read the proceedings of the Congress of Social Science which has lately been held in the city of New York and which brought together the most eminent authorities in the United States upon all subjects connected with social economics and other social questions agitating the Americans at the present time. So important was that meeting that the government of this country sent down Dr. Bryce, our medical inspector under the system of immigration, to attend the sittings of the branch of that congress which particularly had under consideration the immigration question. Not only do we find from the deliberations of these men, all of whom are men of great experience, that they do not intend in any sense to relax the stringency of the laws existing in the United States at the present time upon that subject, but their argument appears to be that in view of the immense population of the American Republic—over 80,000,000—it is necessary to adopt a system of dispersing these immigrants all over that great nation for the purpose of avoiding the bad results of immigration even carefully watched from the merger which immediately takes place of these foreigners in the great American republic on account of the immense population. Those conditions do not exist over here, and one of the inconveniences, one of the dangers pointed out by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, when he was plain Frank Oliver, member for Alberta, was that in view of our small population these immigrants are grouped in the Northwest, and this grouping of them far removed from the rest of the population constitutes, to use the very language of the hon. gentleman, a very grave danger for the future of this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) took very severely to task the mover and seconder of this motion, because they pointed out, I think, in guarded and discreet language, the strange absence of effort made by this government to secure desirable immigrants from France. My hon. friend the Postmaster General repudiated absolutely any such intention, and he took ocasion to preach a doctrine of tolerance and the cessation of any appeal to race and religious prejudices. I was very happy to hear my hon. friend, because he has not always carried that doctrine into practice. I have noticed with very great pleasure that my hon. friend has become converted to this view, very much like the conversion of the Minister of the Interior, since he has attained to the high position which he so worthily fills. But these were not always my hon. friend's ideas, and in regard to roaming about the province of Quebec and making strong appeals to race and religion in his younger days and before he had found the road to Damascus, he excelled to a certain extent. I do not wish to refer particularly to this subject, but it is no exaggeration to say here that my hon. friend and his friends on more than one occasion infringed that rule in the province of Quebec. I remember in 1896 when one of the faithful allies and life-long friend of my hon. friend the Postmaster General came into my county and pointed out to my electors that the traitor, Sir Charles Tupper, through his Minister of Militia, Mr. Desjardins, was purchasing rifles in order to force the young men of my county to leave their mothers, sisters and sweethearts to go and fight in Venezuela. There was a very distinct infraction of the rule then. I also recollect that in the last general election a colleague of my hon. friend the Postmaster General, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, took the trouble to go down into my county and there denounce me, because forsooth, I had undertaken the defence—I believe the legitimate defence—of Lord Dundonald and denounced me as a man who wanted to substitute the military rule of an English general for the liberal, popular and free government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. We are glad that my hon. friend has now found out the error of his ways as many of those who sit with him on that side of the House have. But, to return to the French immigration question, I am bound to say—and I hope I shall not be taxed with appealing in any sense to race or religious prejudice that it is a very significant thing, in reverse of what the Postmaster General has said, that when they made that contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company, the government omitted from its provisions France, Belgium and the French cantons of Switzerland. I do not say there was any sinister design in that, but why was it done? Neither the Minister of the Interior or the Postmaster General have given even a semblance of a pretext for the omission. Every one admits there are desirable emigrants to be found in these countries which have been placed under the ban, but the Postmaster General will not deny that we have done nothing towards promoting emigration from them. There was a point, and one of great gravity, raised by the hon. member for Montmagny which was not touched upon by any ministerialist who has spoken. Is it true, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. Lavergne) alleged, that a pamphlet, printed at great expense by the government of Quebec to be circulated among the Belgians, describing the advantages of settlement in that province, was locked up in a cellar by the Canadian commissioner at the Liège exhibition and not allowed to be circulated?

Mr. BOURASSA. There was more than that. There was a representative of the government of Quebec at that exhibition and he was forbidden to remain in the Canadian pavilion to do anything in the way of inducing Belgian emigrants to come to Quebec.

Mr. MONK. Surely we are entitled to some explanation of that state of affairs.

The province of Quebec spent about $25,000 to secure proper representation at that exhibition, and the Quebec government expended $12,000 on the publication of a very excellent pamphlet which I have read from cover to cover, describing to the Belgians the advantages of their settling in the province of Quebec. What possible reason could the Dominion government, through its representative at that exhibition, have had for this unwarranted act in preventing the circulation of this book. Every one knows that the Belgians are excellent settlers. They excel in gardening and dairying; those who have come to Quebec have been the most successful settlers we have had from any foreign country; what reason was there for this extraordinary act on the part of the Canadian government?

Let us look at the present situation in France, and let us ask what the Canadian government has done to induce French settlers to come to Canada. In France, at present, there are laws which are displeasing to a very important section of the population, and a section from which we could draw the most excellent immigrants. We could not induce this class of people to come here through the bonusing system; you will not get them to come at $4 or $5 a head, but, you will get them to come here by making known to them—not in a surreptitious way, not by men who are obliged to hide themselves, whose names we are not permitted to know, whose doings and expenditure we are not allowed to inquire into—you will get these people to come here by openly and frankly showing them the advantages of this country, and the fact that in Canada as in all British countries they can find a safe refuge where they can practise their religion, whatever it may be, and educate their children as they see fit. Nothing has been done by the government to induce such people to settle in Canada. We are told that we have emigration agents in France. Well, I believe we have a gentleman who is a Frenchman by birth, and who does something there, though what he does I do not know. Otherwise we have nothing that I am aware of to promote emigration from France, whereas some years ago we spent over $50,000 in eastern Europe to bring out Doukhobors who certainly have not been a success.

My hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) quoted at great length from Mr. Siegfried's book on Canada, and I noticed with some surprise that his quotations were received with great applause by gentlemen on the other side. What an authority for the Postmaster General to quote. No one will deny the literary merit and wealth of statistics to be found in Mr. Siegfried's book, but what is the doctrine that this man propounds, and that the Postmaster General seems to approve of. As I understand it, Mr. Siegfried lays down in his book the proposition that the people of the province of Quebec, under some compact which has intervened between the government of England and the clergy, are kept in ignorance by the priests of that province ; that their only hope of salvation, if they want to establish a distinct French nationality in Quebec, is to throw overboard their religion and cling to the philosophical ideas which prevail to-day among a certain class of Frenchmen. He invites them to pursue that principle, and in pursuance of it to estrange themselves from their English compatriots. Do hon. gentlemen on the other side applaud that proposition ? For my part I dissent from it entirely. No more sinister and no more unwise exhortation has ever been addressed to the French Canadian people. It is not surprising, that whatever may be in other respects the merit of this book, it has been received coldly in our province. I venture to say that the day when the people of Quebec will become estranged from the Christian belief, and will look upon their compatriots of other origin as strangers, when that day comes then all hope departs of building up in Canada a great Commonwealth of united people. Mr. Siegfried, I suspect, belongs to the school of some of the public men of France, who, through one of their authorized spokesmen, have declared in the French Chamber, that the time has arrived in France for the people to banish once and for all the name of God from that country ; that when they look up to the stars at night they will all believe that there is nothing beyond these stars ; no God, no Christ, no hereafter. I do not for a moment, discuss the deep causes that may have provoked that condition of affairs in France, but unfortunately such it is. A great number of people who do not belong to the Catholic Church, a great number of eminent writers, express sincere regret that this state of affairs exists. I say it has produced this condition—that there are at present in France, perhaps, ten millions of people who would be prepared if, in the proper way, the advantages of this country were shown to them, to consider emigration to Canada ; large numbers of whom would come to this country—eligible people who would make excellent settlers and would quickly become accustomed not only to our political institutions but to our national life in every sense. It may be these possibilities that my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) had in view when he spoke of the singular remissness which this government has shown in encouraging immigration from that great country.

Now, Sir, my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) made a declaration which, I must say, surprised me. He spoke in answer to the proposition—a proposition to which I give my cordial adherence—that we should endeavour to secure as settlers in that great domain in the west—which has cost us so much sacrifice in money, in effort, and even, in a certain sense, in blood—in the first instance our own people of the east. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) objected that the clergy in the province of Quebec were opposed to people leaving our province and going to settle in the west. I wholly dissent from that proposition, and I say there is no proof of the truth of it. My hon. friend (the Postmaster General), with considerable astuteness, referred to some statements made by the late lamented Archbishop Taché. Well, Archbishop Taché as is well known to all of us who were acquainted with that eminent prelate, at one time considered that that great country, in which he had at a very early period performed wonders as an apostle and missionary, might not be fit for settlement. Was he the only one ? Did not friends of the Postmaster General declare time and time again in this House that in building the first transcontinental line we were committing a folly ? Did they not declare that that transcontinental line would not earn enough to pay for grease for the wheels ? Was it not Mr. Blake who declared in this House that that British Columbia was a sea of mountains and would bring no good whatever to the Dominion ? Hon. gentlemen opposite have changed their minds upon that subject ; and everybody knows that, long before he died, Archbishop Taché also changed his mind upon that subject. Time and again, he has told me, under my own roof, that he had altered his views, and considered that land one eminently suitable for settlement by our own people. And this government itself knows to the contrary of the proposition laid down by the Postmaster General. Has not the government made a very important arrangement with a religious congregation in our own province, granting them a very large tract of land in the Northwest, on the condition that they would, under certain specified terms, settle that land ? Does not my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) know, that, on account of the solidity that is found among the clergy, that an agreement of that importance would have been impossible if as a body, as he pretends, the clergy of our province disapproved of that most important movement. And are there not at this moment—there certainly were a few months ago—in the employment of this government two members of the clergy of our province engaged, with the assent of the clergy generally in the work of repatriation. There is not an occasion when clergymen from the distant west come to our province, but we hear lectures in praise and approval of the migration of our own young farmers to the west in order that, along with the young men of other provinces, they may have the first choice in picking up our best lands in that most important domain. And I have been often a subject of great astonishment to me that, while, even in most distant countries of Europe, we provide facilities for immigration to this country, and spend fabulous sums every year in inducing immigrants to come and in taking care of them from the time they leave until they are actually settled on the best lands of the west, yet, the young men of our own country, people the most eminently eligible, people who, by birthright should have the first selection of the best lands in these distant provinces, are offered no facilities whatever to settle on these lands. I believe that we should carry on with a great deal more earnestness the work of repatriation, not only among the people who, to our great regret, have left the province of Quebec in such a large numbers and have gone to the New England States, but amongst all those who are suitable as settlers in the Northwest.

I have had some doubt, I confess, of the desirability of this change, not because any doubt presents itself directly to my own mind, as to the advisability of abolishing the system of bonuses, but because a number of our friends, who are settled in the Northwest, including some who are in this House and even some who sit on this side of the House, seem to cling to the opinion that we should hurry as much as possible the settlement of that great western part of our commonwealth. I say this has created some doubt in my own mind. It is stated that those who have gone there as settlers have succeeded well. I am glad to hear it. But I am also somewhat surprised, I must say; for our system has so lacked the necessary quality of selection that we might have expected to hear a good deal of complaint from that quarter. But we have gone far enough. The time has come for a change. If these people who have settled in the Northwest are suitable even contrary to the opinion often expressed by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), they are the best immigration agents we can have. They will write home to those whom they have left behind—and we can rely implicitly upon them to bring out only the mots suitable immigrants—I would say to my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, let us have a little confidence in our country. Nations such as ours are not built up in a day. What is fifty years, or seventy years, in the life of a nation? Better by far that we should go slowly, that we should make selection of those who are going to help us to build up this commonwealth, that we should be most prudent, even proud and distant, in the selection of these settlers, than that we should fill up this country with people who, at some future day, may become a danger to our commonwealth.

Under these circumstances, it seems to me that we should change our policy. That we should make known our country—yes. That we should spend liberally in order to develop the transportation system of our country—yes. We should take part in exhibitions; we should, for instance, in France and Belgium, have offices where information is given. There is no prohibition as to that. We have spent thousands and thousands of dollars in getting articles published in newspapers to be diffused through the eastern part of Europe. Why should we not do something in order to make known to nearer and more sympathetic countries the value of Canada as a place of settlement, and not continue giving so much a head to in most cases, irresponsible parties, in order to carry on this system. I say the time has come to make a change. I do not wish to cast any aspersion on those employed at present in the immigration propaganda. Some of them have undoubtedly some good qualities, but what is the reason the government is so loathe to accomplish this, to my mind, most urgent reform? Many of these people have been placed in their position because they are political hangers on. Some of them are related to members of parliament or ministers, and some are there doing little less than draw their salaries. Open the public accounts, and you will find that we spent in the United States last year over $100,000 on our immigration agencies there. What on earth is the use of these? They are absolutely useless. There is not a man who knows anything of the immigration of Americans into our Northwest Territories who will not tell you that not one of them has been induced to come in by an immigration agent. If they have come, it is because of the quality of the land in the Northwest. They have found it in their interests to sell out at a profit in their own country and to settle on the virgin soil of the Canadian prairie and thus better their position. Abolish that item of expenditure, withdraw these agents from the United States, and you will not see a diminution of one immigrant. They will continue to come in just as they have done in the past. Under all these circumstances, it seems to me this motion commends itself to the approval of the House; and if I was not situated as I am, I would vote to support it.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I do not wish to take any particular part in this discussion on the subject of immigration. I think that the results of the policy of this government speak for themselves, and there is not much necessity for the friends of the administration to defend its course and policy. My own suspicion is that the reason hon. gentlemen opposite attack us on this point is that they are envious of the results of our policy as compared with their own in days gone by, and they now wish they had taken the same course and had been able to show similar results. But I wish to say a word with regard to the Liège exhibition, concerning which some strictures fell from the lips of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). On one or two occasions in the province of Quebec, I heard rumours of this kind of thing, but as I was not present when the charges were made and therefore unable to explain the true facts of the case, I am glad to have the opportunity now of stating them to parliament and the country. The Liège exhibition, like many others, was taken part in by Canada from a national point of view, and the Dominion government was careful to see that the representation was a national one and not a local or a partial exhibit. Some years ago the provinces did take part in these universal exhibitions, and on several occasions there was some clashing among the representatives of the provinces themselves and between them and the representatives of the Dominion. When the policy of having a special Canadian pavilion at these exhibitions was adopted by this government, it was declared that this was to be a national pavilion and that the exhibits therein were to be the products of the Dominion as a whole and not of any special province. The exhibit was to be a national and not a local one. We have adhered to that policy, and I venture to think that the results at the various exhibitions which have been held during the past five years have been a complete justification of that policy. When the Liège exhibition was announced, the Dominion government received an invitation to participate and accepted that invitation, and we arranged for the establishment in it of a Canadian pavilion. I was asked by the authorities of the exhibition, as minister in charge, to give the names of the commissioners from Canada and those who would have charge of our pavilion and its exhibits. I gave the name of my chief commissioner. Shortly afterwards I received a letter from the officials in Belgium informing me that a certain gentleman by name the Baron de Lépire was declaring in Belgium that he had authority to represent this Dominion at that exhibition. I replied that he had no authority from the Dominion government, but that we had our properly constituted commissioner going there and doing the work, and my reply to the people of Belgium was that the only authority which I could recognize there as representing Canada was the commissioner whose name I had sent. I was asked afterwards to nominate an honorary commissioner and I was very glad at the request of the authorities in the province of Quebec, to name the Hon. Mr. Turgeon as honorary commissioner for Canada at that Belgium exhibition. The statement that the authorities of the province of Quebec were refused entrance into the pavilion at Liège is not correct. That province, the same as the others, was told it could not have particular representation in the Canadian national pavilion, and the provinces of Ontario and British Columbia and the others as well as the province of Quebec, in the recent exhibitions, were all informed that in the national pavilion of Canada only Canadian national exhibits could be received and accepted and only the officers of the Dominion government could have authority or control there as representing Canada. All the provinces were told this over and over again. As far as literature is concerned, let me say that in the Liège exhibition, over a million documents in French were distributed, on behalf of the Dominion, to the people who came to visit. There was no objection to the province of Quebec circulating its documents.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I made the statement this morning, and I made it on the authority of Mr. Obalski, engineer of the Quebec government, and Mr. Simard, employee of the Quebec government, who both told me that some literature sent by the Quebec government—I think it was a book written by Mr. Girard—was ordered by Mr. Hutchison to be put in the cellar of the pavilion and not distributed.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot believe that to be true although I have said over and over again that, as far as the Canadian pavilion and this government are concerned, they do not distribute the literature of any particular province, but literature which deals with the whole Dominion without reference to any particular province, and in that respect the province of Quebec is treated just the same as all the others. The exhibition work of the Dominion government is a national one, is a work without reference to provinces and for the benefit of the whole country, for Quebec just the same as for any other part of the country and no more for Quebec than for any other province.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. The literature which was distributed by the Dominion government was supposed to treat of Canada, but, as a matter of fact, it treated only of the provinces of the Northwest.

Mr. FISHER. That is not correct. The Dominion literature treated of all the provinces equally, treated every province according to its proportions, according to its capabilities—I will not say according to its importance in the country, because the provinces are equally important. The description of every province was just as complete for that province as the description of the Northwest for the Northwest, and in every regard, in all exhibitions in which we have taken part, our officers have been particular to say that all the provinces of Canada welcome immigration, are able to absorb and take in and deal well with immigrants. We gave the same information to immigrants in respect to every province, from the maritime provinces in the east to British Columbia in the west. Quebec has not been neglected ; on the contrary, in every case where foreign languages were employed, the language of the French Canadians has been unusually prominent.

Mr. L. ROBITAILLE (Quebec County). Before I enter into my speech, I wish to rebut the statement just made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). I have here some literature of the Department of Immigration. Here is a special pamphlet entitled 'The Last Best West, Canada, the Twentieth Century, Western Canada, Vast Agricultural Resources, Homes for the Million.' I have another here in the same style, 'Past and Present, the Canadian West, Present Conditions and Future Possibilities.' I have here 'British Columbia,' a treatise written in the French language. I have another one which treats of New Ontario, and another one in French dealing with gratuitous land given in New Ontario. From this it is plain that we have here a minister who will stand up and make statements which he cannot back up. I assure you that I find it very strange that ministers will stand up and make statements which they cannot support with any argument. I was disagreeably surprised this afternoon when I found a man of my own race, who, untrue to the sentiments which are supposed to be born within him, stood up and advanced such an argument as would perhaps not have been so open to criticism if it had been uttered by a member of the English-speaking community. But, Sir, there are times when a man in political life forgets his own blood, forgets his own creed, and looks only to the pedestal of honours where his personal vanity can bring him, and therefore he forgets his religion. I found in the speech uttered this afternoon by the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) evidence that the Minister of Marine (Mr. Brodeur), when leaving Canada had good reason to pass over French Canadian interests and entrust the administration of his department to the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman), who is an Englishman. If we have to swap for an English minister like the one who is now in charge of that department, who, on taking temporary charge of a department which, under the direction of a French Canadian, without any representations being made to him, but simply on walking through the department and finding the salaries of some French Canadians not sufficient, with the increased cost of living, voluntarily raised these salaries—if that is the treatment we are to expect from an English-speaking minister, then every time I will swap an English minister against a French Canadian. I have no desire to raise any question of sectionalism ; I have travelled through the east and through the west of Canada, and I have travelled the eastern states ; I have been brought into such close contact with cosmopolitan ideas and heterogeneous principles, that it is useless for any one in this parliament to ask me to look at any question from a purely provincial standpoint. If we are to expect attacks upon our nationality, if things which are not just and equitable are to be said against us, surely we should expect them only from those who do not bear French names.

This is not the first time that I have known the Postmaster General to show want of tact. He showed it in Nicolet, in Montreal, in fact every time he opens his lips he always puts his foot in a mud hole. I find it bad form on his part to have brought in the article relating to Bishop Taché. I do not want to excuse Bishop Taché for any statement he may have made against or for Western Canada, but the statements made in the House this afternoon have done more to harm the French Canadian element, inasmuch as they tended to show that our own religion is against the work which the government is attempting to do in the west. If you remember, prior to 1896, at which period the Liberal party came into power, the Catholic clergy had a great hold on the people, a hold which they had maintained from the time when Canada was given over to the English by the treaty of 1837——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. There is a proverb which says : If ignorance is bliss, it is foolish to be wise. I mean the treaty of 1663. At that time when the French Canadians had been abandoned and handed over by a treaty to England, the clergy took hold of the material welfare of the French Canadians and became leaders among them; and let me remind the House that there was a time when Montgomery appeared before the walls of Quebec when, if it had not been for the clergy, some of our French Canadians might perhaps have thrown in their lot with the Americans, and to-day Canada might be incorporated in the vast domain of the United States ; perhaps instead of the English flag we might have the Stars and Stripes floating over this parliament. At all events, when, in 1897, the Liberals swept this country and came into power, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, understanding the great harm that might flow from the interference of the clergy in politics, made a special trip to Rome and obtained a manifesto calling on the parish priests of Canada to withdraw from politics, and not even express opinions on them in their own presbyteries.

That statement was issued previous to 1896, and until then no fault was found against the clergy, either Protestant or Catholic ; but there came a time in 1897 when they thought that this question of religion might influence votes and become a burning question. I think it shows very bad form for a minister, especially a French Canadian minister, to bring up in this House a question which, last year, when only the name of a bishop was mentioned on this side of the House, drew forth expressions about popery and sectarianism which ought never to be brought into this House. Another statement has been made by the hon. Postmaster General in which he had to retreat. He was asked if he would state under his responsibility of a minister that 'La Vérité' was the organ of the clergy, and he had to give in and say that it was generally known as the organ of the clergy. It might be a Catholic organ, but it is not the organ of the clergy, and the proof is that not long ago the editor was censured because he had made certain uncomplimentary remarks about a bishop who is now dead. Also a polemic originated in that newspaper which was somewhat ridiculed by private members of the clergy on account of its too candid belief in the doctrines of Leo Taxil. So you see, Mr. Speaker, that the statement of the Postmaster General is not one which can be relied upon. I challenge him to say the contrary, because I belong to Quebec, and he never knew what Quebec was before he landed there with the Liberal forces. I know for a fact that the Quebec politicians asked who opened the window to let that float in? Now another statement was made by the same gentleman, as well as by the member for Strathcona (Mr. W. McIntyre). He asked, Why should not the immigration funds be paid to railways to help them move people from the east to the west? I wonder if the minister is aware that no immigration money is given to the railroads to diminish rates from one point to another. If the railroads do get a subsidy from the government, let it be used for the purpose of transporting people who live in Canada, and with indiscriminate rates. Why should the minister object that rates from Labelle to Brandon should be less than those that are being paid to move immigrants from Halifax to the Northwest? He has spoken of the liberty of races which is guaranteed by the constitution. Well, if he is in favour of the equality of races, if the province of Quebec pays 30 per cent of the immigration fund to bring in foreigners, why should not Quebec have the right to say how that money should be spent? Now if bonuses are to be paid, or ought to be paid, a point on which I take issue with the government, why should a minister put that question in a false light before the country and say that we are working to prevent immigration? I would ask him according to the sound principle of logic if it is a prevention of immigration simply to criticise a policy that induces immigration not only from Great Britain, not only from continental Europe, but from every country except France and Belgium? It seems to me that such an argument is too much opposed to British fair-play even for a French Canadian minister who wants to pour taffy down the English people's backs. I have heard of many a man, who by using too much soft soap, had slid down the lather. Another point that was made this afternoon was that there was a French law against immigration to Canda. That law still exists, it was passed shortly after 1763 when France ceded Canada to England. It was only right that a nation like France, who sent immigrants into all her colonies, found that it was not to her advantage to develop a country which was no longer hers. That law has not been forgotten by the minister, and I would ask him if that law has been revoked or if it is still in existence. At all events, I think it is but right to call this fact to the House to show the light in which this question should be treated. Another point which has been mentioned this afternoon is that the French do not emigrate. Now, Sir, the same thing could have been said about the English in 1899, a period not far back, for we find that British immigration in that year was only 10,660. If it is a fact that this policy of bonusing immigration has given some results by reason of the advertisement of Canada in Great Britain, why should not the same means have been used in France? If France had the same opportunity that England has had of having a magnificent office on the Strand, of having a permanent exhibition of Canadian agricultural products, she would have made a better showing in sending immigrants to Canada. Some one has told us that two of our immigration agents in France have to walk on crutches; perhaps the term was a little too strong, but no one can deny that one of them is infirm and cannot be as active as a man who has full use of his limbs, and it must be admitted that legs help a lot for immigration purposes. If the same operation had been carried on in France as in Great Britain we might perhaps have had better results. As to the question of the French people not emigrating, history teaches us, Mr. Speaker, that France was one of the pioneer countries who sent her navigators not only to India, not only to Africa, but whose adventurous son, Jacques Cartier, was one of the first to plant his foot on Canadian soil. If France did not approve of a policy of emigration why should she be so urgent in sending out vessels and trying to establish colonies in the new world? When the Declaration of Independence was made in the United States there was a vast colony representing French interests in Louisiana, and if France was not interested in her colonies why then should she have accepted the invitation of a Franklin to send a Lafayette with arms and moneys to fight for the American cause? It is useless for me to proceed further but I might just mention a few facts.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on, go on.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. I am a great admirer of people who make fine speeches, but they have to be backed by facts. There are also some politicians who in their convictions are regular weather cocks. I know of a certain minister who was only too glad not long ago in the heart of Paris to make a eulogistic allusion to the advantages of a Franco-Canadian alliance. I know of a certain minister who was only too glad to accept a small decoration of which he is very proud, but there is nothing more to be expected from France. The season is approaching when England will give away decorations, and nothing could be better designed to secure royal favours than the statements which were made here this afternoon in excusing the government and flattering the English principle. The hon. minister would have been better advised had he retained his seat and left the task of defending the government to some English member of the House. Now, I come down to my subject.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr ROBITAILLE. I might call this the entry—the vestibule. According to what was disclosed here last session, let it be right or wrong, and I am not here to discuss it, but basing it on the dictum that where there is smoke there is fire, I must say, Mr. Speaker, that this immigration policy seems to revolve around land speculation. This is the basis of my argument. I have sufficient information from the Department of Immigration to know that the immigration agents work solely for the west. I have proven that by the publications issued by that department. I have here certain circular letters which are distributed as part of the immigration propaganda. Whether the immigrants come to the ports of Halifax, St. John, Montreal or Quebec, the whole effort of the Immigration Department is to promote the interests of the Northwest. These agents have been working absolutely for speculative purposes, not perhaps in their own interests, but in the interests of others. We heard in this parliament the other day of a certain gentleman who was charged with having speculated in land although he was an immigration agent. That gentleman had been sued in the courts because he had been charged with misrepresenting the condition of the land involved in a transaction, but he was fully protected by the vote of this parliament. It shows certainly that if these officials are not engaged in land speculation at least the government approves of the system and encourages it. The second phase of that businesslike transaction of utilizing the Immigration Department for speculative purposes is the taking of immigration money to advertise a portion of the country where prominent politicians have a proprietary interest in lands. While private interests are involved in the expenditure of this money some kind of an effort must be put forth to make it appear that this policy is being carried out for the furtherance of national development. Then in pursuance of the scheme of promoting private interests a company is formed, the government agree to grant a bonus for each immigrant received and it has been proven that the London agent was chiefly concerned in sending people to the west to buy lands from the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company or some other company, or if that were not directly suggested at at least it was made known in an indirect way and everybody so understood it.

The hon. member for Labelle stated that in the not far distant future four-fifths of the population of the west would be composed of foreigners, but I think I can carry that statement further and prove from the figures that nearly four-fifths of the population there now, is of foreign origin. The statistics of the department show that between 1901 and 1906, 273,390 emigrants came to Canada from Great Britain, and that 240,000 came from the United States during the same period. The bonuses on British emigrants amounted to $96,998, and the salaries of agents and expenses of advertising amounted to $505,000, while there was no expenditure made to secure the immigrants from the United States. Now, I would call the attention of the hon. member for Strathcona to the fact, that during the period I have mentioned we received from continental Europe 196,515 immigrants and if we consider the immigrants from the United States as being foreigners, then, we get 430,000 foreign immigrants as against 273,000 from Great Britain, or 50 per cent more foreign than British immigration. The member for Strathcona has truly said that the American immigrants very quickly catch on to the political idea, perhaps quicker than do the Canadian born, and in that very fact alone there may be danger to our institutions. Are the people of eastern Canada to spend their hard earned money to develop a young giant in the west which is already showing its teeth, and which, if we are to judge by what occurred in this House last session, has some pretty long teeth already. What will be the result in the near future when that young giant develops brawny arms, and when eastern Canada has to crouch under the majority from the west. I am opposed to paying bonuses on immigrants. If we cannot get immigrants to Canada without paying for them, it would be far better for us to keep our glorious heritage for ourselves and not throw it away to foreigners who may perhaps imperil our social and political conditions. It seems to me, that the steamship companies who get a profit on every passenger they carry to this country ought to engage in this immigration propaganda at their own expense. It seems to me that in return for the subsidy which we grant to the transportation systems, we might expect in return that they would promote immigration. The Canadian Pacific Railway and other railway companies which have lands in the west stand in the position of private speculators in land; their lands receive increased value from the influx of immigrants, and it seems to me that they should do their share in promoting immigration, and that all the expense should not be borne by this country. Speaking of the interests of eastern Canada as contrasted with the interests of the west, I trust the English speaking members of this House will not find fault with me if I stand up for my own province. So long as I have the honour of a seat in this House, I will never be heard advancing any views tending towards sectarian hatred, or indicating that I am in any sense an anti-Britisher or a firebrand. It would be bad enough, if the government, after bonusing immigrants and after ignoring immigration from France did nothing further against the interests of the province of Quebec in this regard. If they only remained neutral when the immigrants arrived in this country, it would not be half so bad as it is. But the fact is that they systematically try to prevent immigrants who come to ports in the province of Quebec from remaining in that province. To show that I am not making this statement rashly, let me quote from the law of Canada respecting immigrants. I quote from section 38 of the Act:

Immigrants not to be solicited except by licensed persons.

They are so afraid that the province of Quebec or the province of Ontario will secure some of these immigrants that they take this special precaution. Or, rather, I should confine, this remark to the province of Quebec, for the policy has been changed so far as Ontario is concerned, because the representatives of that province stand up for their rights better, perhaps, than do the representatives of the province of Quebec. We do not blame them for that, because we think they are right; we only hope that when we stand up for our own they will not find fault with us.

No person shall, at any port or place in Canada, for hire, reward or gain, or the expectation thereof, conduct, solicit or recommend, either orally or by handbill or placard or in any other manner, any immigrant to or on behalf of any owner of a vessel, or to or on behalf of any lodging-house keeper or tavern keepr or any other person, for any purpose connected with the preparations or arrangements of such immigrant for his passage to his final place of destination in Canada.

This shows that the policy of the Immigration Department is to direct these immigrants to the western lands; and if, perchance the agent of any farmer would like to offer one of these immigrants employment—and we have farms in the vicinity of the city of Quebec where these immigrants would find welcome and an opportunity to work for an honest wage—the making of such an offer is specifically forbidden. It goes on:

—or give or pretend to give to such immigrant any information, oral, printed or otherwise, or assist him to his said place of destination, or in any way exercise the vocation of booking passengers or of taking money for their inland fare, or the transportation of their luggage, unless such person has first obtained a license from the superintendent of immigration authorizing him to act in such capacity.

I must say that the superintendent of immigration knows the policy that he is to follow and gives these licenses only to those parties who are amiable enough to conform to the speculative idea which appears plainly in this bland suggestion to any one who can read between the lines. Here is another point:

No person, whether a licensed immigrant runner, or agent or person acting on behalf of any steamboat company, railway company, forwarding company, or hotel or boardinghouse keeper or his agent, shall go on board any vessel bringing immigrants into Canada after such vessel has arrived in Canadian waters, or into an immigration building or on to any wharf where immigrants are landed, or shall book or solicit any immigrant by such vessel, before the immigrants are landed from such vessel, unless he is authorized so to do by the superintendent of immigration or immigration agent at the port of entry where such vessel is to land its passengers.

A triple lock on any opportunity which might otherwise be opened to the immigrant to find work before he reaches his final destination. To show what control this department has, consider the following section of the Act:

6. Subject to any regulations in that behalf, the minister may appoint or employ, either permanently or temporarily, any necessary subordinate officers not provided for in the next preceding section or in any order in council made thereunder.

And here is another that goes further to show that the interpretation of this law is pretty well in accord with what I have contended:

9. Every officer appointed under this Act shall perform any and all duties prescribed for him by this Act, or by any order in council, proclamation or regulation made thereunder. . . . . and no action taken by any such officer under or for the purpose of this Act shall be deemed to be invalid or unauthorized merely because it was not taken by the officer especially appointed or detailed for the purpose.

Now, I have been in the immigrant sheds in Quebec and have seen the manner in which the officials, directed, perhaps, by tacit instructions, would carry out a policy which is not supposed to be in the interest of Canada ; and such an official, when called to order by the superintendent in Quebec, made his superior officer feel that he could make him very uncomfortable in the office he held. And, as in the Militia Department, so in the Immigration Department, officers are blindfolded and gagged, —they have eyes but cannot see, they have tongues but cannot speak, for they know that their promotion depends upon their seeing nothing and saying nothing. What I say is not mere hear say, nor is it prejudice. I have looked into this question for two or three years past. I have friends in the Immigration Department. I have attended the arrival of vessels, and among the immigrants I have seen faces such as, certainly, one would not care to meet in an unfrequented street after dark. The minister (Mr. Oliver) was right in stating that Canada should be advertised in England. We know that there are judges on the bench in England, men who are supposed to represent the best intellect of that country, who, sentencing convicted prisoners, have given them the choice of three years in the penitentiary or emigration to Canada. Another instance has been quoted of a mother, who to secure the release of her son who had been convicted of a crime, promised, if the boy was allowed to go that he would emigrate to Canada. If Canada is to be turned into a devil's island for the convicts of England, while it will not be to the interest of the French Canadians, it is certainly even more to the discredit and disadvantage of the Englishmen's sympathizers and co-imperialists who live in Canada.

Now, in England there are 1,200 immigration agents; in France there are two. There is also an arrangement under which one who books in England and does not wish to be directed to the west can be booked to Ontario, in which province there are 190 agents, who are paid $2 a head to receive these immigrants as they come and secure for them farm employment. As I have already intimated, I do not object to that. What I do object to is that the province of Quebec and other eastern provinces, which pay their share of taxation, should be discriminated against in the placing of farm help. The balance of power, which has been moving westward, will under the present policy, soon move from Ontario to the Northwest. In reply to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) who has told us that there is no discrimination exercised against the province of Quebec by this government or its agents in its immigration policy, I have here a newspaper in which is published a few paragraphs of a letter written by an employee of the Quebec government, who is in France representing that government. This letter was written to a minister of the provincial government, and in it the writer was depicting the strong undercurrent against which he had to compete when trying to advance the interests of his province. He said :

> We are perfectly aware that there is in France and Belgium a certain movement to prevent emigration to the province of Quebec. We have made official representations to our federal government in the hope of obtaining justice in this particular.

In another paragraph, the same correspondent says :

> We are perfectly aware that there is a campaign made against the province of Quebec, not only in France and Belgium but in all continental Europe. Our only regret is that we have not the means, pecuniarily speaking, to combat by our agents the efforts of those who are working for the federal government.

We have further the statement made by a Quebec minister on his return from France, that he was satisfied, not only by correspondence, but by his own personal observations, of the discrimination which is being exercised against that province. This shows what the province has to contend against, and is it any wonder that such strong prejudices should exist against that province in the rural settlements of the other provinces, and especially of Ontario? And these prejudices are accentuated by the fact that, for political purposes, we have men—and not only ignorant men —exciting sectarian hatred among English-speaking citizens against the province of Quebec in Ontario and the other provinces, and who call upon the people there to vote for such and such a man because his inclinations are British ; whereas, on the other hand, we have even ministers who come down to the province of Quebec and advise the voters there to support such a man because he is a French Canadian. These two elements, working in opposite directions, tend to produce similar results. We have had statements made this afternoon by a minister of the Crown (Mr. Lemieux) which he dare not utter in a French Canadian centre, and certainly not in a centre like the district of Quebec. But he can come here and pose as a broad-minded man, and still be the first to try and crush his own origin under the heel of his boot. This question of immigration is one which should be looked into more seriously. Just see how the United States have advanced. A member of my family, who is to-day still living and who in his youth travelled through the eastern portion of the United States, told me that thirty years ago the vast farms of eastern California and of North and South Dakota were then unproductive, as they were perhaps less settled than those of our west, and he never in those days could have believed that in his lifetime he would see those lands settled as they are to-day. Last year the drawing by lottery of the last government free land was made, and to-day, instead of encouraging immigration, the people of the United States are taking measures to restrict it. They have adopted a most stringent and careful schedule of inspection, which every immigrant must pass. They even went so far as to have appointed a special Immigration Commission, who is largely aided by the immigration office and the Department of Labour. Every immigrant is followed from the moment he leaves his native soil to the moment he lands in an American port. The economic conditions, the political conditions, the reasons which induced him to leave his country and the means employed by transportation companies and others to induce him to leave, are all carefully noted. Then the Labour Department follows the immigrant from the moment he lands in the United States until he has chosen his domicile, and statistics are taken to show what proportion settle in the cities, to what occupations they devote themselves, what proportion settle on farm land and how many become public charges. That example might be very well followed by the Department of Labour in this country; and if that department would adopt such a policy, it would meet the approval of the labouring classes throughout the Dominion. It is about time that some limitation should be put on this influx of new arrivals. It is about time that some judicious discrimination should be enforced, so that we might not receive into our country people of a class with whom it may be exceedingly difficult for us to assimilate, or that in any case we should limit in some degree the immigration of elements whose education, national spirit, political conceptions, habits of life and ways of thinking are alien to ours. Every hon. member in this House knows how difficult it has been since 1837, in fact since we have been a colony of England, for the French Canadian element to work hand in hand with the Britishers who came to this country, and how hard it has been for the phlegmatic Britisher to assimilate himself with the quick, active, enthusiastic way of looking at things which is characteristic of our Canadians of French origin. On the other hand, we, who hail from old France, have found it difficult to become accustomed to the phlegmatic stolidity of the Englishman, especially when he first landed on our shores. But, thanks to the extension of commercial relations, thanks to the influence of commercial travellers on both sides, thanks to the intercourse necessitated by business connections, a great many prejudices have disappeared. The Ontario commercial traveller who visits Quebec, and the Quebec commercial traveller who seeks to find a market for his wares in Ontario—each finds in the other province a more sympathetic and friendly centre than he anticipated, and many an Englishman finds, when he comes to our province, that he has been prejudiced without cause against our people and that he receives from them often a warmer welcome than from people of his own nationality. We French Canadians who come to this parliament expect to have to contend against influences which are not always sympathetic, and to stand up for rights which those who think differently from us are not always able to appreciate; but I personally am glad to say that I have been paid a compliment by members of the English deputation here, which, of course, I value exceedingly, who have told me that we are not half as fanatic as we are supposed to be, and that we are really a very decent lot of fellows after all. In fact, if it were not for the articles inserted in newspapers, which seek to increase their circulation by appeals to prejudice, and were it not for fiery speeches, such as the one delivered by the hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) in Wiarton—and delivered in circumstances in which no question of sectarianism was in question, but which was simply an ordinary election contest—were it not for appeals such as these, we would hear very little about provincial or national differences. But whatever we may say about the writer on a newspaper who is working on the ignorances of the people to gain his own ends, we cannot find language sufficiently strong to express our opinion of a man who enjoys high official standing, and who prostitutes that position for the purpose of exciting racial prejudices and disturbing public opinion by sectarian appeals.

We say Canada for the Canadians. I claim that if it has taken so long to build up the commonwealth which we call Canada, and if the majority of the people of Canada are Britishers, then whatever advantage we can give without sacrifice, it is but right we should give by preference to England. It is only by a slow process that the assimilation of these two races has come to pass, and it can only be a slow evolution that the newly-arrived settler can be assimilated. The great danger is that the country may be developed more quickly than conditions would justify. This would have the same effect as over-growth on a child, it is a disadvantage not only to his physique, but also to his intellect and his moral sense. It may be that the time will come when the large number of foreigners entering our country will outnumber us and force us to become subservient to their ideas. It may be that within a few years the English and French Canadians will be a minority among thirty million or forty million people absolutely strange to our methods of living and to everything that is sacred to us.

In conclusion I desire to enter a vigorous protest against the present method of paying bonuses on immigration and also against the present policy of immigration from a Canadian standpoint, as it is detrimental to all of the eastern provinces. We are legislating for national development and our present system of inducing immigration has not proved to be a safe one. Our efforts should be directed to becoming a great nation so that in the words of the poet:

> We shall have made our lives sublime,
> And dying, leave behind us footprints on the sands of time.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I can agree frankly with a great deal of what has been said by the mover and seconder of this resolution. I see nothing very objectionable either in their arguments or in the conclusions which they reached. The motion seems to me to have but two or three elements in it. One is that payment of bonuses to immigrants has a tendency to bring a less desirable class of immigrants to the country; the other is that the system is wrong and the expenditure unwise. To a large extent I believe this. While I do not feel like going the whole length of adopting it at this moment I frankly confess that I think the hon. gentlemen were not far astray in their conclusions. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) took very strong exceptions to it. He said the speech of the mover (Mr. A. Lavergne) was most illogical, inconsistent and unwise. A large part of his speech was made up of quotations from the speeches of the minister in this House before he became a minister, and if I understood the minister's reply it was to the effect that he has nothing to take back to-day and that he stands by everything he said before becoming a minister. Was I right in that conclusion?

Mr. OLIVER. Correct.

Mr. SPROULE. If that is correct the minister ought to be one of the first men in this House to support the motion made by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) and seconded by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). Yet he abused these two gentlemen because they took the position they did to-night and because the motion they presented to this House was a part of a speech made by himself some years ago. I am sure that the House would be surprised to hear to-night that he has not one word to take back. I find on looking up some of his speeches that in 1904 he said:

> Though we all agree that the system previously followed of resident agents in the old country was very largely a failure, we must admit that the principle of paying bonuses to steamship companies was largely a failure. Both these systems were failures for obvious reasons. I believe that by bringing in contact with the agricultural population of the British Isles successful farmers of this country, there is a reasonable probability of securing the class of immigrants we most desire.

He believed in that, but not in paying bonuses. Then he goes on to say in the same speech:

> In fact I think that a very large part of the money which has been hitherto spent for immigration purposes in the old country, both in the employment of permanent agents there and in paying bonuses to steamship companies, was money absolutely thrown away.

And he stands by that to-night. Now what did he say with reference to bonuses given to the North Atlantic Trading Company? He says the only difference is this, that we are giving these bonuses to a syndicate of agents instead of to agents individually. Therefore when he says that the employment of permanent agents there and paying bonuses to steamship companies was money absolutely thrown away, he ought to be the first man to vote for that resolution. The next part of the resolution is to the effect that foreign population will soon dominate this country and swamp the Canadian element. Now according to the immigration returns for the last ten years, it appears that between eight and nine hundred thousand people have been brought into Canada, a large percentage of which are foreigners from the continent of Europe. Now the minister argued strongly a few years ago that these people could not assimilate with our Canadian race without distinctly lowering that race. Is it desirable that should be done? That was his contention, and he says he still believes it. If the great bulk of the immigration that has come into Canada during the last few years is from continental Europe, then I say it must distinctly lower the standard of the Canadian race. That must be so, because if there is assimilation between the Doukhobors and the Canadians, will the progeny be as high as the Canadian? In my judgment it will not. Many of these immigrants are very desirable, and will make valuable citizens; but we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that a great many are coming in who will not make good Canadians. One of the great problems we have to contend with to-day is how to assimilate the foreign element with our Canadian population so as to make of them loyal and good citizens. The Minister of the Interior then feared that it could not be done. But to-night he seems to entertain a different opinion, notwithstanding the fact that he says he stands by every word he uttered then. Now are these people likely to assimilate? They may, but it will not be by following out the policy adopted by this government, of putting those foreigners down in colonies instead of mingling them with the English speaking element. In my view that is a great mistake, and will have evil consequences.

I have thought of late years that the splendid inducements which Canada holds out to immigrants from other countries are so great that we do not need to spend money in bringing them here. I think so still. The advantages we offer in the way of free land are such as should be sufficient to induce people to come here without paying them bonuses. While saying that, we cannot forget that we have practically the only available land left on the continent of America that will give homes to the new comers. The United States have no longer free land to offer; therefore as long as we have free land to offer we are bound to receive a very large volume of immigration in the future, as the United States are receiving to-day. The United States are not giving bonuses, on the contrary they are putting obstacles in the way of immigration, and yet they are receiving proportionately almost as great a percentage of immigrants as we are in Canada. I think, therefore, the time has come when it is no longer necessary for us to spend the large amounts of money we are spending on immigration. At the same time, I think we should still continue to advertise Canada in foreign countries by distributing literature and by employing agents to give information. True, these agents do not always bring in good settlers, they have brought many people here whom we have been obliged to send back. I notice by the papers the other day that a batch of thirty were sent back from Winnipeg who were brought out under this bonusing system.

Now will any one say that we are justified in still paying commissions to agents to bring in people from the United States? I do not think so. I think we would have just as desirable a class of people coming from the United States if we did not pay a dollar in commissions. There are a great many land companies in the west who are pecuniarily interested in bringing in settlers to take up their land, and these companies are active in bringing in immigrants. The only purpose on which we should spend money to-day is in connection with advertising the country, in connection with our quarantine, and in connection with the selection of immigrants, so as to let in the desirable ones and keep out the undesirables. According to the public accounts, in 1895-6 we expended $120,119 for immigration purposes, and the opposition of that day, represented by the government of to-day, declared that we spent entirely too much money for that purpose. But they commenced to increase that amount from year to year and what does it represent to-day? It has run up from $120,000 to $842,660. From that time to the present we have spent $5,222,000 for promoting immigration to our country. Were we justified in spending so much? I think we were not. Were we justified in giving the large amount of money that we did give to the North Atlantic Trading Company, to that syndicate of men who have taken so much money out of Canada? In my judgment we were not. The Minister of the Interior said: I am in favour of giving this bonus to a syndicate. He said that notwithstanding the statement I read, which he made in 1894 that the whole bonus system was absolutely wrong. I am opposed to it; it is wrong in principle and in practice and should not be carried on any longer. Are we justified in spending the large amount that we are spending to-day for immigration purposes? We are not. We would have plenty of desirable immigrants coming to this country if we did not spend that money—quite as large a number as we have to-day and perhaps of much better quality as well. That being the case I feel that it is well that such a motion should be put forward if for no other purpose than for the purpose of testing the sense of the House upon this question. Were it not for the fact that we are paying a consideration to get immigrants from the British Isles to-day—and I think a most desirable class coming from there—and were it not for the demand that there is in the older provinces for these immigrants because of the number of people who are going from these provinces to the west, I would be disposed to support this motion. I think we have reached the day or very nearly reached it when we can completely do away with giving bonuses either to steamship companies or syndicates to induce immigrants to come to our shores, but I think we ought to have a free vote in this House regardless of party fealty or party politics to ascertain the sentiment of the House and I am quite convinced that it will be shown, in so far as the opposition is concerned at least, that a great many agree with the opinion expressed in the resolution which is put forward to-night. While I am not prepared at this moment to go the full length of this resolution I say that in my judgment we would not suffer very much if we did adopt this resolution and if it were carried into effect by this government.

Amendment (Mr. A. Lavergne) negatived, motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Immigration—to pay Mr. C. F. Just's salary from 14th December, 1904, to 31st October, 1906, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, $3,572.84.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is this the gentleman who was in the London office, and who was sacked by Mr. Preston?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. That amount should be deducted out of Mr. Preston's salary.

Mr. OLIVER. This amount is required to pay the salary of Mr. Just while he was under suspension.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was he doing while he was suspended.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know. Mr. Preston ordered Mr. Just to cease his duties and there is no doubt that Mr. Preston believed that Mr. Just would be officially suspended. After Mr. Preston's departure from the immigration office it was thought advisable to reinstate Mr. Just, and it was found that Mr. Just could only be legally suspended by order of the minister, or deputy minister, and no such order had ever been issued. We thought the only thing to do was to acknowledge there had been a mistake and to pay Mr. Just.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Preston is now enjoying a good salary and neither I nor anybody else knows what he is doing. He may be forming another North Atlantic Trading Company for the purpose of making money for himself or his friends. He thought he was running the whole show in London and had power to dismiss this man, and he should pay for his mistake.

Amount required to provide additional accommodation for the staff of the Topographical Surveys branch, $3,368.33.

Mr. OLIVER. This amount is required to pay for alterations done in the building occupied by the Topographical Survey. Partitions were removed on the second floor and other alterations made. It was found imperative to make some provision for ventilation owing to the large number of clerks to be accommodated in this small building. The work was performed by J. & C. Low, of Ottawa, at a cost of $3,368.33.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Mr. White is the geographer of the department and a very efficient officer; he is a most capable man, and a good Liberal, and he should have charge of all the work in the department. Why does he not get control of all this work?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. White does the map work which includes not only the survey work done by the topographical surveys branch, but also the map work for the Dominion at large. The topographical survey branch only maps the work that is actually surveyed, and Mr. White's branch does all the other map work including the reproduction of these maps.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does Mr. White issue the Homestead map?

Mr. OLIVER. The record of the Homestead is done in another branch, but the map work is done under Mr. White.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Mr. White is a most excellent geographer as every one knows, and he should be given full charge of the work of all the departments. It would be to the advantage of the service if that were done.

Mr. FOWLER. Does it not strike the minister that this is a very large expenditure for mere alterations?

Mr. OLIVER. It is.

Mr. FOWLER. You could erect quite a respectable building for $3,368. It would look as though the gentleman who did the work figured on the same generous basis as the gentleman who built the porch at the entrance to this building.

Mr. OLIVER. There is a good deal of force in the hon. gentleman's remarks. I have always found that any work that I have had done here in Ottawa, whether public or private work has been charged for at the full price. And I have no doubt that under this particular item nothing has been done for nothing.

Mr. FOWLER. Did an architect pass upon the work as to the price?

Mr. OLIVER. The son of Mr. Ewart, the chief architect, who is himself an architect, was consulted.

Dominion lands—chargeable to income—further amount required for salaries of the outside service, $13,000.

Mr. OLIVER. This sum is made up of the following: New appointments, $6,307.85; transfers from vote for Dominion Land contingencies $2,625.75, statutory and other increases $4,051.61—total $12,985.21.

Mr. FOWLER. Has our dearly beloved friend Philip Wagner received an increase? I feel a little interest in Philip.

Mr. OLIVER. I am sorry that Mr. Wagner has not had an increase this year.

Mr. FOWLER. Ah! I fear there has been some mistake.

Mr. OLIVER. If my hon. friend recommends——

Mr. FOWLER. I will recommend him.

Mr. OLIVER. Then, I will take his case into consideration.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What about Mr. Leach?

Mr. OLIVER. He has not had an increase either.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is the man still kept in the service?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Who has been appointed to take the place of Mr. White?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. White did not have jurisdiction over any particular locality. On his death Mr. Sinclair was appointed to do the work of the same character as that Mr. White had done, though his appointment could hardly be called a filling of Mr. White's place.

Mr. J. D. REID. I understand that Leach was the original organizer of the 'thin red line' outrage and was appointed inspector of land offices. I see by the Auditor General's Report that he received $6,575. Is he going to get another raise ?

Mr. OLIVER. We have not provided a raise for him.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Why not dismiss such a man ?

Mr. OLIVER. So far as the department is aware, since his taking service with the department his work has been entirely above reproach.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But does not the minister know that he took part in the Saskatchewan election ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have no information to that effect ; and I can assure my hon. friend, if Mr. Leach took part in the Saskatchewan election, he did so absolutely contrary to orders.

Mr. FOWLER. Contrary to public orders.

Mr. OLIVER. Public and private. I am satisfied he took no part in that election.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) surely does not mean that Mr. Leach's conduct was contrary to private instructions. Of course he would receive his public instructions as matter of form, but if the minister were to tell him privately that he did not want him to take part in elections, I am sure, that, in loyalty to his chief he would abstain.

Mr. J. D. REID. I understand that Mr. Nixon has been appointed sub-land-agent at MacLeod. He was dismissed for embezzlement.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Nixon is not in that country at all.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is Wagner still in the employ ?

Mr. FOWLER. On the recommendation of the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) the minister will increase Mr. Wagner's salary.

Mr. J. D. REID. And what about Moberly ?

Mr. OLIVER. He was temporarily employed by the census department, but owing possibly to some misunderstanding, his services were dispensed with on somewhat short notice.

To pay the widow of the late Thomas Young, homestead inspector at Dauphin, a gratuity equal to two months' salary of the deceased, $250.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who has been appointed to take Mr. Young's place ?

Mr. OLIVER. The position in this is much as in the case of Mr. White. We have appointed Mr. Davis to fill the vacancy.

Mr. FOWLER. Where is he from ?

Mr. OLIVER. He was a resident of Plumas, Manitoba.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is he the only homestead inspector appointed in the last two years in the Dauphin district ?

Mr. OLIVER. I think he is the only one appointed since I took office.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is there a man named Searle, or something like that ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not see any such name in the list before me, I would read the list, only it covers a good many pages——

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I do not want that. Perhaps the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) would know.

Mr. BURROWS. A man named John Seale was appointed.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Yes, and he was the organizer for the hon member (Mr. Burrows) in the last elections.

Mr. BURROWS. No.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Or was it Mr. Davis? Yes, I mistook the name—it was Mr. Davis.

Mr. FOWLER. Was this appointment, made not for fitness, but as a reward of this man's services as organizer ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is Mr. D. C McNab homestead inspector ? And where is his field of operations ?

Mr. OLIVER. He is at Brandon.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE He is at Brandon at the present time, but in the district in which he has been operating for the last few years. I think the Auditor General's Report shows that he was down in the Dauphin district, but I do not think he has been doing any work in that district.

Mr. FOWLER. Election work ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. No, that was in Marquette. He was organizer then and was afterwards appointed to a position. I think it was in the Auditor General's Report. He had drawn so much, but he had not been operating in that district at all.

Mr. OLIVER. A homestead inspector, while he has a residence at a certain place, is not restricted in his operations to that vicinity.

Mr. FOWLER. And you do not restrict their operations to homestead inspection either?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, we do, but there may be certain parts of the country where there are more homesteads to inspect than in others, and we exercise the privilege of sending the inspectors where their services are most required. Because a man's residence is at a certain place, it does not follow that he will not perform his duties outside that district. For instance, Mr. Gibson, who is homestead inspector at Brandon, was engaged in making an enumeration of the Doukhobor colonies in Prince Albert district, and as the Doukhobors have not any votes, I presume that my hon. friend will acknowledge that Mr. Gibson took no part in the provincial elections which were on at the time.

Mr. STAPLES. Is Mr. William McMillan still acting as homestead inspector in Manitoba ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am sorry that I have not that information at present.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. minister should be ashamed to have all these men, guilty of these politicial rascalities, put in his department. Here is this man Preston who was sent over to England and Jackson who was also sent over to England and John McGillicuddy put in his department. And Mr. White, of Ottawa, the man who was at London, he was sent to the Northwest as immigration agent. And Phillip Wagner and this man Leech, and Davis, and many others too numerous to mention. I should think he would divide these up and let some of the other departments take a share of these men. He is making his department a rendezvous for all these men who are committing all these political rascalities.

Mr. OLIVER. In the first place we absolutely deny the rascalities, and in the next place my hon. friend is crediting the Interior Department with some of these gentlemen with whom it has no connection whatever.

Mr. J. D. REID. What about Preston?

Mr. OLIVER He is connected with the Department of Trades and Commerce now.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then you shunted him.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend accused me of permitting other men to be shunted on to my department. In this case the man has gone from the Interior to another department.

Mr. J. D. REID. Where is Jackson ?

Mr. OLIVER. He is in the Trade and Commerce. He was never in the Interior Department.

Mr. J. D. REID. What about Dan McGillicuddy?

Mr. OLIVER. He is not in the employ of the government at all. He is connected with a newspaper at Calgary.

Mr. J. D. REID. He was sent out there.

Mr. OLIVER. He was at one time in the department.

Mr. J. D. REID. So was White.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no knowledge of White at all.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is Dan McGillicuddy doing any government work at Calgary?

Mr. OLIVER. Not that I know of.

Mr. GERVAIS. Dan McGillicuddy has sent in his resignation as an employee of the Debates Committee.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And is still drawing pay?

Mr. GERVAIS. No, Sir. We accepted his resignation last month.

Mr. TAYLOR. While working for the Debates Committee the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) sent him out as a political agent and gave him $150 for travelling expenses. He sent in a bill for three or four times that amount and the minister paid his account purely as election agent in the local elections out west.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. gentleman for St. James, Montreal (Mr Gervais) is on the Debates Committee?

Mr. GERVAIS. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is the reason he was retired.

Mr. WILLIAM J. ROCHE. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) made a statement a few minutes ago with regard to instructions which he sent out both publicly and privately to his officials. He said that he sent instructions to Mr. Leech, and no doubt they apply as well to the other officials and especially his homestead inspectors. I think it well to inform him that those instructions are not lived up to very strictly by his officials. I had the privilege of speaking in the constituency of Russell in the provincial elections there and heard a candidate accuse Mr. McGregor—a relative of the Klondike McGregor—who is a homestead inspector operating in the Dauphin district, to which he does not confine his operations—the candidate accused him of acting as a very active electioneering agent among the Galicians located along the Riding mountain in the constituency of Russell. I call the minister's attention to this fact in view of the instructions he tells us he has sent to these homestead inspectors to confine themselves to the government business. This man has been publicly accused by one of the candidates in Russell of having been a very active electioneering agent.

Mr. OLIVER. What is the name?

Mr. WILLIAM J. ROCHE. Mr. Robert McGregor.

Mr. FOWLER. I would suggest that the minister should not advance the salary of Mr. McGregor because he did not succeed in bringing Russell into the Liberal fold. He is, therefore, not entitled to the award of the faithful.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would suggest that the free and independent electors of the Northwest should bind and fetter any government agent that they may find going outside of his duties to meddle in elections.

Mr. OLIVER. I hope it is not necessary to give any such permission to the people.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. I would suggest that they should do it.

Mr. OLIVER. I am willing to fall in with the suggestion. If any employee of the Interior Department is not attending to the business of the government he will get no protection from the head of that department should any little accident happen to him as my hon. friend suggests. Whatever they may or may not have done they are not serving the country or the party to any degree by deviating from their proper business. They will do the government more good by attending to their own business.

Mr. FOWLER. I trust the minister will stand by these words so that we may say there is one of them who has kept his word.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the minister ask for an explanation from Mr. McGregor?

Mr. OLIVER. I think that is only fair.

Yukon Territory—salaries and expenses, $165,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the minister give us the programme for the Yukon?

Mr. OLIVER. There is no programme that I can give.

Mr. TAYLOR. Would the minister explain the item?

Mr. OLIVER. This amount is required for salaries and expenses connected with the administration of the territory. $150,000 was voted last year for the nine months, that being at the rate of $200,000 for twelve months. For the twelve months of 1908 it is estimated that $165,000 will be required, a decrease of $30,000. The services of ten officials at Dawson are being dispensed with saving $25,200, and reductions of $9,800 have also been made in the estimates for various items of expenditure in connection with the administration of the territory.

Mr. BLAIN. There has been criticism owing to the absence of officials from the Yukon. I am informed that the postmaster among others is absent now.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not prepared at the moment to give a statement in regard to the absence of officials. A question was asked in the House and answered at the time but I have not kept posted in regard to the movements of officials since. The postmaster is not under the control of the Interior Department.

Mr. FOWLER. Who is acting in the place of the commission.?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. J. T. Lithgow, the controller.

Mr. FOWLER. Is Mr. Lithgow giving satisfaction in his position?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Would it not be a good idea to keep him there?

Mr. OLIVER. There are petitions for and against him and while there are things to be said in favour of him there are others that may be urged against him. The petitions both ways are very strong. This is the second time he has acted as commissioner and he has given every satisfaction to all interests concerned. The questions connected with his candidature for the commissionership have no bearing on his position as controller.

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the minister think in view of the decrease in population in the Yukon, that there are too many highly paid officials there? As I understand the population at the present time is only 6,000 or 7,000. It seems to me the machinery of government is too large, too complicated for so small a population. For instance a great loss has accrued to the people of Canada from the fact that the royalty which is supposed to be paid on the production of gold has not been collected, that a large sum of money remains uncollected, amounting to a million dollars or more, I have heard it spoken of as more than two millions, measured by gold production, and by the amount that has actually come into the Dominion treasury. Now if these statements are correct, if it is true that we have not received in royalty by so large an amount as two or three million dollars what we should have received, if it is true that the population of the Yukon has decreased, that now it is only about 6,000, it seems to me that the very large expenditures that we are voting cannot be justified: $165,000 in salaries, and $125,000 granted to the local council, there is a matter of $290,000. Then we have to vote large sums for the Justice Department. I think we are keeping three Supreme Court judges up there with high salaries and tremendous living expenses, living expenses based upon what it cost to live in that country years ago when the cost was double if not treble what it is to-day, and yet the allowance remains just the same. Then we are spending about $100,000 in the Public Works Department. Does not the minister think it is about time to call a halt? We were told that the Yukon was going to be a tremendous source of revenue, we were to receive very large amounts in excess of what we were spending but for the last two or three years the amounts we are spending are very largely in excess of the revenue we are receiving. Now here we have a population decreasing, the output of gold decreasing, and yet we find the expenses of carrying on the administration of the Yukon very largely increasing. Surely there must be something wrong about that. It really looks—I don't want to be unkind—as if the Yukon were used as a place where the government pensions off its supporters when it has no more use for them. Then take the Justice Department. Why would it be necessary to have three Supreme Court judges to carry on the judicial business of a population of 6,000 people? A good stipendiary magistrate ought to be able to do all the work. But you have three Supreme Court judges with salaries in excess of those obtained by judges in other parts of Canada, and with living expenses almost equal to the salaries they receive, if not in excess. Then you have a controller, and I do not know how many other officers. Now let us look at this thing from a business standpoint. Does the minister think that it is good business to continue it along this line? I would like to have the minister's opinion, not only as a minister, but his honest opinion as a ratepayer of Canada as to whether he thinks this is a proper thing for us to continue.

Mr. OLIVER. I think there is a good deal to be said for the hon. gentleman's contention that the expense of government in the Yukon might be reduced in some way. But I would point out that it is not fair to take the population as a guide of the proper cost of government. If you are going to endow with autonomous government a certain piece of territory, whether there is a thousand more or a thousand less people, makes no difference in the cost; that is to say, it would be about as cheap to govern the Yukon if it had 20,000 as if it had only 10,000. When you give a separate government to a district you require to take account of all the incidental expenses of government, and these are not always in proportion to the population. Now the Yukon is peculiarly situated in many ways. I need not remind the House of the very large expense of living there. For instance, a labourer's wage is $5 a day, if I am not mistaken, and of course every thing else in proportion. So that a scale of salaries which would be right and proper in any other part of the country has no application to a country where labourer's wages are so high, and where other salaries are in proportion. These figures are abnormal but I am speaking of conditions as they actually exist. A government organization was given to the Yukon at a time when prices were higher than they are now, and when the expenses were greater, and they were given on a scale which is not altogether justified by present conditions. In the Department of the Interior that fact has been recognized, and as I have already stated, we are reducing the cost by dismissing ten members of the service, and effecting a saving in salaries of $25,200.

Mr. TAYLOR. Can you not dispense with ten more?

Mr. OLIVER. That is a matter for consideration.

Mr. TAYLOR. What are these officials?

Mr. OLIVER. I will read names with the particulars.

Mr. FOWLER. Upon what basis do you fix the salaries and living allowances, because I notice that in some instances the living allowances are greater than the salaries?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not aware of the basis upon which these payments were arranged. I fancy that the apparent discrepancies may occur by reason of a change in the official, that is, that a certain living allowance is attached to a certain office, and that the salary is changed when the official is changed, that is to say, the official who was appointed first possibly got a higher salary than the official who is there now. On the principle that my hon. friend has hinted at, that an official at a low salary requires as much food as an official on a high salary, no change was made in the living allowance. Last year, on the recommendation of the commissioner, the government dispensed with these ten men's services, and relieved the treasury of that amount of drain. At the time I had the idea that possibly we could go a little farther, but I must tell the committee that during the past summer such a change took place in the fever for prospecting in that country that we found that instead of it being possible to still further reduce our staff, it became almost necessary to increase it again. While apparently we still have a large staff, when there is an increase of work, such as took place last summer, we have to, of course, provide for that, and it will not pay the country to fail to give a good public service for the sake of the saving that would be made in the salaries. We are ready to cut down the service and possibly to cut down the salaries. That, however, is a matter for consideration; but the first consideration is efficient and satisfactory service, and we believe we are securing that in the Yukon at the present time.

Mr. FOWLER. As far as the salaries are concerned, they are not excessive when the circumstances are taken into consideration. You would not expect a man to go out into the Yukon and live there for the same pay, even suppose he could live cheaper there than he could in other parts of the country. It is not natural that a man should go out into that country and not want better pay. What strikes me is not the excessive salaries, but the excessive number of individuals who are getting salaries. Of course, this is not in his department, but as the Minister of the Interior has the supervision of the Yukon, does he not think that three judges are out of proportion to the work being done in that country?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course, it is hardly fair that I should answer that question. It may fairly be said that three judges were appointed to do the work when the work was certainly very heavy, when the population was large and when the output of gold was also very large, and there is no doubt that these three judges were all required at that time. It is quite possible that now, with a smaller population, with the smaller output of gold and more settled conditions, it would be possible to get along with a smaller number of judges; but, of course, there is a difficulty in dealing with men who have once been on the bench, because they are not subject to being disposed of as ordinary officials are. I understand that one reason why three judges were placed there and kept there is that it is more convenient to take care of the appeal cases in the Yukon. The cases that are tried before a single judge may be tried in appeal before the two other judges. Otherwise a case subject to appeal in the Yukon would have to be brought up outside, which would be a very heavy expense to litigants. At the time there was considerable litigation, and it was really an economy to have three judges.

Mr. FOWLER. Most of these cases would be appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada, anyway.

Mr. OLIVER. Possibly. There is something to be said on account of the changed conditions, but I am hardly in a position to discuss the matter, as my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) could. But in so far as the Interior Department is concerned, our desire is to keep the service up to the requirements of the country, and not have it beyond these requirements.

Mr. MARSHALL. I have here a comparative table showing the cost of administering justice to 6,000 people in the Yukon Territory by three judges two of whom are often absent from the territory for several months of the year; and the cost of administering justice in some of the eastern provinces which may be instructive. It is as follows:

Provinces.	Judges.	Population.	Cost.
			$ cts.
Nova Scotia.....	13	459,574	63,693 36
New Brunswick .	16	331,120	58,863 84
Manitoba	13	255,211	44,657 50
British Columbia	14	178,657	75,050 53
Territories	8	200,000	45,920 85
Yukon.....	3	6,000	93,398 38

It seems to me that if it costs that amount of money to administer justice in the Yukon, some change should be made. That is an outrageous charge it seems to me. Here is a place with three judges and only 6,000 people costing $93,000. This is a comparison I have made of the different territories and provinces. I find that the Supreme Court of Canada, which has six judges, cost last year $84,618, or about $10,000 less than it cost to administer justice in the Yukon. There must be something wrong. The difference is too great.

Mr. FOWLER. That means $15 for every man, woman and child in the Yukon to pay for the cost of administering justice. I think it would be an excellent idea if the minister, during the recess, were to go up there himself and look the whole situation over. I am satisfied he would bring back the scalps of about three-quarters of the officials there.

Mr. BLAIN. I see an article in the paper headed:

Declines the Governorship.

Ralph Smith will not go to the Yukon.

Ralph Smith, M.P., for Nanaimo, will not be the new governor of the Yukon Territory. He has definitely declined the proffered honour and will remain in the House of Commons as a representative of the people.

I would like to ask the minister if the position was offered to the hon. member for Nanaimo and if the report that I have just read is correct.

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say, Mr. Chairman, what offer has been made to Mr. Smith. I know there has been a current rumour that Mr. Smith was to take the commissionership of the Yukon. Mr. Smith told me in discussing the rumour with him, that he was not going to do so and he spoke in accordance with the item that appears in the paper. Beyond that I am not able to give the committee any information.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the governorship be left vacant? Is it of such little importance that the governor can be absent or that there can be no governor at all?

Mr. OLIVER. I think it must be made very shortly. In the winter the duties of the government are perhaps less onerous than at another time of the year, and with the comptroller in charge I do not think the public interest has been suffering seriously. On the opening of the season's business it will be necessary to have a responsible commissioner in charge, and no doubt one will be appointed in time to get in at the opening of navigation.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand there has been a trade made between Mr. Ralph Smith and the Minister of Inland Revenue, by which Mr. Smith is to become minister and Mr. Templeman is to go to the Yukon. Is that a fact?

Mr. OLIVER. I have no knowledge of any such arrangement.

Mr. FOWLER. How many members in the Yukon Council; how many appointed by the government; how many elected, and what salaries do they receive?

Mr. OLIVER. The elected members are George Black, R. L. Gillespie, Robert Low, H. C. Macaulay and T. W. O'Brien. The appointed members are officials or judges. The elected members receive $600 a year and mileage allowance; Robert Low, whose constituency is furthest from Dawson, gets $600 salary and $460 travelling expenses. The appointed members get no special salary as members of the council.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. What business will be taken up to-morrow at eleven o'clock, and what at three o'clock?

Mr. FIELDING. In the morning we will take up some of the Bills which are not non-contentious, and if there is time we may go into Committee of Supply. In any case the House will be moved into Committee of Supply at three o'clock under agreement.

Mr. LAKE. What supply?

Mr. FIELDING. The item for the Insurance Commission will be taken up in the afternoon, when I understand the hon. member for North Toronto wishes to speak.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.15 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 10, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 156) to amend the Civil Service Act.—Mr. Fielding.

Bill (No. 157) for the relief of Arthur Leon Macpherson.—Mr. Leighton McCarthy.

QUESTIONS.

THE QUEBEC-LEVIS FERRY SERVICE.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE—by Mr. Talbot—asked :

1. What arrangements has the Minister of Railways and Canals made with the Ferryboat Company between Quebec and Lévis for the carrying of Intercolonial passengers ?

2. Is the Minister of Railways aware that the Ferryboat Company, between Quebec and Lévis, collects a double fare after midnight ?

3. Is the minister aware that the service given by that company is not satisfactory to the travelling public, and that the passengers are obliged to reach the boats without any shelter or protection, and to be found pell-mell with the freight and animals, and that, on account of the irregularity of the service, they are frequently obliged to wait on the wharf, exposed to the inclemency of the weather ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Acting Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. The department have no contract with the company.

2. In winter double the regular fare is charged from 7 p.m. to 6 a.m. Summer double the regular fare is charged from midnight to 4 a.m.

3. The department is aware that the service is not as satisfactory as it should be ; complaints having been made from time to time. The minister discussed the matter with the company, and various suggestions were made by him for improvement in the service. The department will endeavour to have it made more satisfactory. The ferry company is not under its control.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC COAL LANDS.

Mr. RALPH SMITH asked :

Has the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company the first claim to pre-empt coal lands in close proximity to their line in Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). By Order in Council the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company is to be considered as the first applicant for all unappropriated coal rights under the lands taken for its right of way and station grounds in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. The company has no rights in coal under lands outside the lands taken for its right of way and station grounds.

THE EXCHEQUER COURT.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH moved that the House do go into committee to-morrow to consider the following resolution :

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide that the salary of any person who may hereafter be appointed registrar of the Exchequer Court of Canada, shall, upon appointment, be two thousand five hundred dollars per annum, with an annual increase thereafter of one hundred dollars, up to a maximum of three thousand dollars per annum ; and that the salary of the present registrar, so long as he remains in office, shall be the said maximum of three thousand dollars per annum.

Motion agreed to.

HAMPTON, N.S., POSTMASTER.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the Postmaster General whether or not Mr. Zaccheus Hall, postmaster at Hampton, in the county of Annapolis, N.S., is still continued in office. I brought to the attention of the House four months ago the fact that this gentleman had been found guilty of having bribed electors at the recent provincial election in Nova Scotia. Having regard to a resolution which was passed by this House in 1905, I desire to know what the action of the government has been.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). Mr. Speaker, I remember that in the early days of the session, the late member for St. John, Mr. Stockton, put a question on the order paper on this subject, and to the best of my recollection I answered that Mr. Hall, the postmaster in question, had been prosecuted before the courts of Nova Scotia, but that no judgment had been rendered or no verdict found against him. I have had no news since, but I will at once inquire of the department, and may give an answer at a later hour of the day, if my hon. friend will renew his question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. minister may be very sure that I will renew the question. I would like to tell him that the judgment of Mr. Justice Townsend was pronounced on the 6th of last November, that an appeal was taken upon it, and that the only ground of appeal was, not that the man had not interfered, but that the person whom he had bribed had not been technically proved to have had the right to vote. That appeal was dismissed a long time ago, as I have been informed, and it did not affect the matter dealt with in the resolution of this House one iota. Two witnesses swore that this man had bribed them. There was no evidence that one of them was a voter, and the charge as to him was dismissed. There was evidence in the opinion of the judge that the other had a right to vote, and he found the defendant guilty and fined him $200. That has been the condition since the 6th of November last, except that an appeal was taken, as I have said.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend may be sure that I will look into the case, and I would ask him to renew the question to-morrow.

RELATIONS BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. E. N. LEWIS (West Huron). Mr. Speaker, I notice in one of the most prominent and authentic papers in western Ontario, the London 'Free Press,' a statement as to which I want to ask the government whether it is correct or not. It is headed, 'Treaty Names Commission to settle all Questions between United States and Canada—Official Announcement from Washington, which is denied by member of Dominion cabinet ;' and is as follows :

Washington, D.C., April 8.—It was officially admitted to-day that a treaty had been drafted between the United States and Great Britain, providing for the appointment of a joint commission which will consider all of the complex questions connected with the water boundaries between Canada and the United States.

This will include such questions as the disposition of waters of the great lakes ; the regulation of the use of the water at Niagara Falls for power purposes, and the whole general subject of fisheries regulations not only for the great lakes, but for the Atlantic and Pacific states.

This treaty will require the approval of the United States Senate to become effective, but it is possible that an arrangement in the nature of a modus vivendi will be reached between Secretary Root and Ambassador Bryce in the near future.

I wish to ask the government if there is any truth in this report. I trust there is not. Our Waterways Commission is doing good work looking after these matters and we have had enough modi vivendi. Questions solely affecting ourselves should be settled by ourselves.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no information on the subject, but I think my hon. friend may safely assume that a newspaper report of that character is not to be relied on.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. AMES. When may we expect a return ordered the 17th December last for copies of all leases and agreements regarding the Athabaska Fishing Company? I have asked at least four times for this return.

Mr. FIELDING. I said a day or two ago that I had given special instructions to have inquiries made concerning all returns and hoped in a day or two to bring the returns in question down or give the reasons for non-production.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems remarkable that this particular one should be so long delayed—four months at least. Who is the minister in charge? Can he give any reasons?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The hon. gentleman was kind enough to send me a note and I shall have inquiry made and give him some information later in the day or to-morrow.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In case the hon. gentleman makes an inquiry, I hope it will be a thorough one.

WINNIPEG TERMINALS—CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY AND GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. FIELDING moved third reading of Bill (No. 128) respecting the Winnipeg terminals of the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. He said: When this Bill was presented for third reading some days ago, an hon. gentleman opposite requested delay so that the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) might inquire into a particular point to which he was giving attention. I afterwards discussed the matter with the hon. gentleman and he said on examination that he had obtained all the information he desired and had no objection to the third reading. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) asked a question concerning the plans. I produced the plans. So far as I know all the information required has been furnished, and I presume there will be no objection to the third reading.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time, and passed.

ADULTERATION ACT—AMENDMENT.

Hon. WILLIAM TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue) moved second reading of Bill (No. 127) to amend the Adulteration Act. He said: This amends the present law only in regard to the method of appointing analysts. Under the present law there is some doubt as to the status of the analysts employed in the laboratory at Ottawa. We have the power to appoint public analysts and assign them to districts and to appoint a chief at Ottawa, so that the assistant analyst in the laboratory and the others who do the real work of analysing are not under the law, properly appointed. If their work were attacked, it would not stand. This is to legalize the appointments of analysts.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you regard outsiders as in the employ of the government? There are analysts appointed for respective localities.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This has only reference to the laboratory in Ottawa.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

1. Paragraph (f) of section 2 of the Adulteration Act, chapter 133 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

(f) 'analyst' means public analyst and includes any member of the examining board appointed under the authority of this Act, and also the chief analyst and the assistant chief analyst.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The only change in subsection (f) consists in the arrangement of the words and the addition of the word 'public' in order to cover outside analysts appointed by the government.

Mr. SPROULE. The explanation is that the words 'public analysts' merely includes those appointed outside for that purpose.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. All the analysts employed by the government outside and assigned to districts and who are retained from time to time to do work that may be required, as well as the analysts employed in the laboratory, will all be known as public analysts. It makes no change in the standard of qualification.

Mr. LENNOX. There seems to be a remarkably quick change on the part of the minister. Before we went into committee he explained that it covered only those who were working at Ottawa. Now I understand it covers those appointed outside as well. We have two contradictory statements within three or four minutes.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I would still be quite right in my explanation. The status of the present public or district analysts is not changed by this Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. Are they continued in their present status notwithstanding this Bill or is it intended to supplant them and get the opportunity of appointing others?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Not at all.

On section 2,

2. Section 8 of the said Act is repealed, and the following is substituted therefor:

8. The Governor in Council may appoint one or more persons as public analysts to analyse food, drugs, agricultural fertilizers, and other articles, and may also appoint a chief analyst and an assistant chief analyst.

2. The Governor in Council may assign a public analyst to a particular district, and may fix the territorial limits of such district.

3. The chief analyst, the assistant chief analyst, and such other public analysts as the Governor in Council directs, shall be attached to the staff of the Department of Inland Revenue at Ottawa.

4. The assistant chief analyst shall have the same powers as are conferred by this Act upon the chief analyst.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We are taking the power to appoint an assistant chief analyst. We have no such power now. Mr. McGill, who is a very prominent chemist, and actually assistant analyst in the laboratory at Ottawa, has no status as such—I understand that the Department of Justice has so advised the Department of Inland Revenue. Under this Bill we propose to take power to appoint an assistant chief analyst and provide that the work done by the analyst at the laboratory in Ottawa shall have all the effect of the work done by other analysts. It also confers upon the assistant chief analyst the powers conferred upon the chief analyst. Mr. McGill has been assistant analyst, but, under the existing Act, he had no power, and in the absence of the chief analyst through illness or otherwise there was no head of the branch. It is to remedy what has been, unquestionably, a serious difficulty that this change is proposed.

Mr. SPROULE. You leave out the recital of the qualification of these experts?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Is it necessary to leave it in?

Mr. SPROULE. I am not discussing that at the moment. But what qualifications must these men possess in order to be appointed?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Of course, no person can be appointed to be an analyst until he has passed the examination of the examining board, which is composed of Dr. Girdwood, of Montreal; the Abbe Choquette, of St. Hyacinthe, and the chief analyst of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. Under the proposed law would outside applicants have to come before the same board?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes, just as all those already employed in the laboratory at Ottawa have passed that examination.

Mr. SPROULE. If my recollection of the law is correct, the outside or public analysts have not applied to go before that board. They must have a certain certificate under the Pharmacy Act and I think there were other standards to be complied with.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is right. Those who were to become public analysts or district analysts had to undergo an examination. But, as a matter of fact, that has not been enforced. I believe that three out of the total of five district analysts have not passed the examination provided for by the law.

Mr. SPROULE. What examination did they pass?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. None, I understand.

Mr. SPROULE. What evidence is there of their qualifications?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Well, for instance, one is Dr. Ellis, of Toronto, a celebrated chemist and competent analyst.

Mr. SPROULE. Then he would not be eligible under this proposed Act?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It makes no difference in that respect. The present law is as stringent as the proposed amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to understand this. At present, analysts must receive a certificate from a certain board. Will the present law supersede that and make that certificate unnecessary?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am advised that it does not affect the status in the slightest degree. The object of the law is to meet conditions existing in the laboratory at Ottawa. Nearly all the analysing is done at Ottawa by competent analysts, but these officers have not the status they ought to have. If the department should attempt to prosecute in the case of an adulteration of food, it is very probable that the case would fail in court simply because the analyst who does the work has not the proper status.

Mr. SPROULE. That refers to the assistant analyst here?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes. As I have said, nearly all the analysing is done at Ottawa. It is true that the district analysts are assigned work from time to time, mainly to verify what has been done at Ottawa.

Mr. SPROULE. But if the district analyst found certain food to be adulterated would the report of that local analyst be accepted in a court as satisfactory evidence of the food being adulterated, or would you be obliged to send a portion of that same food here to have the analysis verified by the analyst in the department before the prosecution would be sustained?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is no doubt that the report of the district analyst would prevail in court. As to the question raised, as to the existing law, section 9 reads :

No analyst shall be appointed until he has undergone an examination before a special examining board appointed by the Governor in Council, nor until he has obtained from such board a certificate setting forth that he is duly qualified to perform the duties attached to the office of analyst.

That has been the law for many years and it has not been changed.

Mr. SPROULE. All the present analysts have been accepted under that law ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes.

On section 3—method of collecting samples.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is a very small change in this. The change is to authorize the examination of the sample by an analyst at the laboratory instead of confining it solely to examination by the public analyst in the district.

Mr. SPROULE. It may be examined there ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This makes it permissive to examine it here.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Are there any other instructions issued than those contained in this clause to the purchasing agents ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes, definite instructions are sent to the food inspectors as to the manner in which they shall purchase samples.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Is there any objection to these being made public ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No, I should think there is none whatever, there are generally written instructions in each case. They may vary from time to time as to the number of samples to be collected, &c., but there is no objection whatever to making them public.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. In fairness I think the tradesmen should be fully informed as to the mode of procedure. There is too much of the informer style of doing business in this department. The tradesman is supposed to be an honourable man until proved otherwise, and a good deal may depend on the mode of procedure when the inspector visits the establishment. He should take it for granted that there are pure goods in the place, and should endeavour to get them, but in all cases he endeavours to purchase not the purest but the most impure. The purchaser should be asked ot procure the pure article. We are aware that there are compounds sold by every legitimate and honest trade and there is no reason why there should not be. For instance the bulk of the mustard sold is used for plasters, and why should a compound that will answer every purpose for the plaster be subject to the same law as the mustard required for food ? This applies to a dozen other articles.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is not a question of what the food inspector may do but of whether the dealer has his goods properly labelled.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Most of those goods are not sold under label, but are in open stock in a drawer or can. This would apply to coffee, pepper, mustard, ginger, or any of these ground spices. Why does not the inspector say that he wants a pound of pure stuff ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Why should he use the word pure ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Because compounds are allowed.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. If they are marked or represented——

Mr. COCKSHUTT. A householder does not always want the cheap article, sometimes he wants the good article. The minister will not dispute that a great amount of mustard, for instance, is used for plasters, and why should not an impure mustard be allowed to be sold for that purpose ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I suppose there is nothing but impure or mixed mustard that can be sold for that purpose. The law permits that. It simply provides that impure mustard shall not be sold for pure mustard. That is the whole spirit of the Adulteration of Food Act.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I think that is an excellent Act. The very point which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cockshutt) suggests, when speaking of mustard alone, is the best of reasons why purity should be insisted on, because the active principle of a mustard plaster is the oil which it contains, and if the oil happens to be adulterated it has not the same effect. There is very little mustard used for plaster purposes. There is a very much better article called mustard leaves. However, that is by the way. I want to say that the very point my hon. friend attempts to make constitutes an excellent reason why these adulterated articles should not be allowed to be distributed through this country. Take, for instance, cream of tartar ; if I go into a grocery and ask for a pound of cream of tartar, they will give me a mixture of cream of tartar and something else which is not cream of tartar. The result is that I am paying the price of cream of tartar for a preparation containing a mixture of alum. Suppose a purchaser goes into a grocery store and asks for a pound of pepper, ninety-nine times out of a hundred pepper is sold to him which is absolutely impure, and the man should be fined for selling impure pepper when he is asked for a pound of peppr. If the purchaser goes in and asks for a pound of cinnamon, I will venture to say that in nine times out of ten he will get a combination. The dealer himself possibly is not aware of this fact, but the manufacturer is, and he puts upon this article a label bearing the words 'pure cinnamon,' just as he puts on the pepper the words 'pure pepper.' The retailer buys this article in bulk and he retails it as pure pepper. Why should not the seller of such an article be fined, so that he will in future give me what I want? I have had some experience of officers of the department who would come into my store and ask for a certain article. I have seen my own preparations analysed and the results published. I did not know when they were bought, but I know that the man who came in asked for preparations which were exactly the same as other men would have got and submitted them to an analysis. That is the only way you can do it. To my mind, our pure food law is not nearly stringent enough. The public are getting to-day, in nine times out of ten, an article which is not at all in accordance with the label which it bears. Yet the purchaser is paying the outside price. Why should not I, when I go into a chemist's or a grocer's shop and ask for cream of tartar, get cream of tartar? Is there any rhyme or reason why I should not get it, because I am paying the price of the pure article? My hon. friend, if he thinks for an instant, will see the force of the statement I am making, that every article which is sold for consumption to the people should be absolutely pure.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to speak about absolute purity. He knows there is no absolute purity in anything.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The hon. gentleman does not want to be too rigid in his definition. I am for selling pure goods just as much as the hon. gentleman is, but there are degrees of purity in all trades. If the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue sends his inspector to my store and asks for a pound of coffee, pepper or spice, and does not get it, I am deserving of being dealt with according to the law, but if he asks for an ordinary article, a compound, or if he says that he wants it for some ordinary purpose and not for eating purposes, why should a man be fined for selling him a cheaper substitute when he may be giving full value? In reply to the hon. gentleman that each article should be labelled in accordance with its contents, I would just say that we have come down from the Banking and Commerce Committee, where they are proposing to mark gold nine karats fine, whereas twenty-four karats is pure gold. Some hon. gentlemen want it to be marked nine karats when it is one-third gold and two-thirds alloy. The same applies to some of these articles of commerce which the inspectors go in and purchase. With all due regard for the hon. gentleman, I think I know a little about business as well as himself.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I do not question that.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. And I want to assure him that there is a great deal of these goods used for poultices and other purposes, that are not consumed for food. They are used for man and beast; they are largely used for animals. Perhaps the hon. gentleman is speaking more particularly in regard to the drug trade, which is quite different from the ordinary grocery trade. When a man sells an article as being pure he should give it pure, but where he sells it as a compound he should be permitted to do so. A man who wilfully adulterates should be punished, but in all fairness I ask that when an inspector goes into a shop to purchase an article he should ask for the kind of article that he wants, the same as any ordinary customer does. There are degrees of purity. The hon. gentleman knows, when he speaks about purity, that it is only a matter of degree, that none of us come up to the pure standard, either one way or the other, and therefore it is that we must allow a little latitude and not look for absolute purity where it cannot exist.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The moral lesson the hon. gentleman has read us is perfectly right, but when it comes to a question of mustard or cream of tartar, it is not the degree of purity, but it is the degree of impurity and the sale of an impure article should not be allowed. If a man is going to use it for his horses or for any other animals, he wants to get the best mustard, and that is the point I am trying to make. The hon. gentleman makes that point himself, except that he applies it wrongly. You want the best of any article, because you pay the price of a good article. You should not be allowed to sell anything which is not absolutely pure that is consumed as food.

Mr. BARR. I quite agree that in so far as we possibly can we should have purity and a stringent law in connection with the adulteration with everything that is used by man or beast. We have a stringent law in so far as many of the things used for cattle are concerned, and I do not think it is any too strict in that respect, but the subject is one that is not without its difficulties. In the first place, the law allows an assistant to analyse these articles, and it is possible that an injustice may be done in that way. The chief analyst may be all right, while the assistant may not be capable of judging whether an article is all right or otherwise. In that case there would be a great danger of injustice being done. Then, in so far as the druggist or the grocer is concerned, he buys his goods from the wholesaler. We do know that soda and mustard are not pure as they are sold in the grocery trade. For instance, there are different grades of soda; you may pay five cents in a grocery store and you will pay fifteen cents for the same quantity in a drug store, but the latter, of course, is of better quality. The difficulty I see in this Bill is that it draws no distinction in a case like that. The provisions of the Bill are too crude. As I understand it, the Bill only touches the retailer in its penal provisions, and does not get at the wholesaler or manufacturer. Take an article like rhubarb; we have Canadian rhubarb and Indian rhubarb, one being high priced and the other low priced, and the Bill draws no distinction between the two. We should have a more elaborate Bill which would define the different grades of a specified article. In the case of compounds, the label should describe the different ingredients in the compound.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it the intention of the minister to send officers into wholesale houses and manufacturing establishments?

Mr. FISHER. I think there is a little misunderstanding about this Bill. It does not in any way change the existing law which provides for all the cases that have been mentioned by hon. gentlemen. This Bill simply provides that the work and certificates of the analysts who have been working under the chief analyst in Ottawa, shall be valid in the courts of law. The chief analyst has a number of assistants at Ottawa who now perform a great deal of the work which was formerly done by analysts in different parts of the country. The certificates of these analysts are not at present valid in a court of law, and several cases have recently been lost on that technicality. This Bill is intended to remedy that.

Mr. BARR. Must the assistant analysts be graduates?

Mr. FISHER. Yes; they must be good men in every respect and as a matter of fact they have been doing the work.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The minister has not answered my question. At present the officers take samples in retail stores, and I am anxious to know whether they will be permitted to take samples from manufacturing establishments and wholesale houses?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The officers of the department always receive instructions to go into wholesale houses.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How often do they do so?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. As frequently as they go to retail places, but of necessity there are more samples collected from retailers. The retail merchant can protect himself by obtaining from the manufacturer who sells him the goods, warranty that the goods are pure. If they are found to be impure the retailer is held harmless and the expenses incurred are paid by the manufacturer.

Mr. GUNN. If there is a label on the package saying that the goods are pure, would that protect a retail merchant without an additional warranty?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. If they are labelled pure when they are not pure, it would make the case all the worse and the manufacturer would be held responsible. As a matter of fact, the wholesale merchants and manufacturers protect their customers whether there is a warranty or not.

Mr. BARR. Would the label be a sufficient guarantee?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Why should the label be any protection to the vendor if the goods are impure?

Mr. LALOR. When the label is marked 'compound' does that remove all responsibility?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Certainly not; but of course the component parts may not be injurious to health.

Mr. LALOR. The only requirement is that they must not be injurious to health?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The retailer would be protected by his guarantee from the wholesaler, but what about the jobbers? Does this Bill conflict in any way with the Canned Goods Bill passed this year?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Clauses 33 and 34 of the Inland Revenue Act provide for all this. The third schedule of the Act gives the form of the warranty which the purchaser or retailer can procure from the manufacturer.

Mr. GUNN. What constitutes a contravention of the Act? If I buy a pound of mustard which is analysed, and is discovered to contain only cornmeal or Indian flour would that constitute a contravention of the Act?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. If it were not marked compound, it would undoubtedly be an adulteration. Why should it not be?

Mr. GUNN. There is nothing injurious about cornmeal or flour.

Mr. FISHER. If I pay for mustard, I do not want to buy cornmeal.

Mr. GUNN. The merchant would sell it only on the basis of a fair advance.

Mr. FISHER. That does not matter. If he does not sell it as pure mustard, he should mark it compound. If he does that, he is protected. If he does not, he is contravening the law.

Mr. GUNN. That mustard is used for plasters, for which purpose you could not use pure mustard.

Mr. FISHER. It does not matter what it is used for. If I pay for pure mustard, I expect to get it.

Mr. GUNN. People going into a store do not ask whether it is pure or inpure. They ask for a pound of mustard.

Mr. FISHER. And when they ask for a pound of mustard, the law presumes that they want mustard, and not meal.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I notice in the bulletins of the department that the article which is found most defective and in regard to which there are more fines than with regard to any other in recent years is maple sugar or maple syrup. For that the retail dealer is not responsible in any degree. This article is manufactured by the farmer or the woodman, who brings it in and sells it on the open market as maple sugar or maple syrup. The dealer buys it, not knowing what degree of purity or impurity it contains. Then the inspector comes round and gathers up samples of the article and finds defects in it. I have been amazed, in reading the bulletins of the department, to learn that it is the great exception to find the pure article. Here is an article made by the class who are commonly spoken of as the consumers, the farmers, and of all the articles on which the minister issues bulletins, it shows the most numerous infractions of the law. Now, is there any inspection of the manufacturers of maple sugar or maple syrup ? Are they allowed to bring in and sell as maple sugar or maple syrup something that is made from boiled maple chips and brown sugar ? I am not in the secrets of the trade, but I ask the minister if it is fair to hold responsible the retail dealer, who has no control over the manufacture of this article ? The farmer usually brings in only five or ten gallons of maple syrup or a few pounds of maple sugar, and it would not pay the retailer to go to the expense of $5 for an analysis of this, and throw away more than all the profits he makes in selling it. It is necessary in these cases to be practical, and I think it is unfair to hold the retail dealer responsible when he believes that he is doing what is right and for the best, while at the same time there is no supervision over the man who made the article, who knows what is in it, and who offered it to the trade as a pure article. I would like to hear from the minister whether any particular precautions are taken with regard to the manufacture of maple syrup or maple sugar to ensure its purity. The Minister of Agriculture comes from a district where a great deal of it is produced, and perhaps he would tell us what course is pursued to secure its purity in that district.

Mr. FISHER. I may say to my hon. friend that the farmers themselves have been crying out about the adulteration of maple sugar and maple syrup. They are the people who are hurt by this adulteration, and they have appealed to the Department of Inland Revenue to have samples taken and analyses made so that those who adulterate this prime article of food, the product of Canada, should be punished. My hon. friend seems to be very careful about the retailer. The retailer certainly ought to be protected, and in the law he has an engine for his own protection if he chooses to use it ; and if he does not choose to use it, he ought to be amenable to the law, like anybody else. He can get a warranty from any farmer or maker of maple sugar or maple syrup just as he can from the maker of pepper or anything else he buys. Then, if he is prosecuted for selling an impure article, that at once protects him and throws the penalty upon the person from whom he bought. I may say, however, that the department has been getting samples not only from retailers, but from farmers, and from those large concerns in the country which have been chiefly guilty of the adulteration of maple sugar and maple syrup. The farmers as a rule do not adulterate ; but the sugar made by them is bought by the larger concerns, not only in the country district but in the cities, and is reboiled or worked over with brown or muscovado sugar and then put on the market as pure maple sugar. If they put the word 'compound' conspicuously on the article, the purchaser knows that he is buying a compound and not pure maple sugar. He does that with his eyes open, and the seller does not violate the law ; but if the article is sold without the word 'compound' upon it, the seller is amenable to the law and ought to be.

Mr. DANIEL. I can endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt). A case was brought to my attention where a dealer in the city of St. John was penalyzed for selling maple sugar, a sample of which had been taken by one of the public analysts and found to be impure. The provision merchant bought the article on the market for pure maple sugar and sold it for pure maple sugar. He did not know at the time that it was necessary for him to get any warranty. The minister will probably remember the occurrence, as some correspondence was had with him in reference to it. The retailer, whose name is Vanwart, was ready and willing to give to the department the name of the farmer who made the sugar. But the department did not consider that that would be of any avail and the retailer was penalyzed. I do not know how much he was fined but he was held in a penalty because he sold sugar as pure which he had bought as such and had not taken the warranty which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) speaks of. He did not take it because he did not know anything about any necessity under the law for his obtaining it. So that there is a good deal in what the hon. member has said with regard to the injustice of holding the retailer under a penalty. At all events the least that should be done is to make all the retailers thoroughly aware of the different sections of the Act, so that they may know it is absolutely necessary they should provide themselves with a warranty before putting on the market anything they buy as pure but which may turn out to be adulterated.

Mr. GUNN. Are there any cases on record of farmers selling maple syrup adulterated ? I should think that that would occur chiefly among the traders in the larger cities who mix muscovado or granulated sugar with the maple. We have no such trouble in Ontario. There I think the sugar is practically pure. It is quite evident the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has never been in the retail business or he would know that if he were to ask a customer who was supplying him with some gallons of syrup, supposed to be pure, for a warranty, he might as well order him out of the store. He would not retain many customers who were selling his maple syrup. I do not see that there can be much trouble regarding the purity of the article as far as the supplies obtained from the farmers are concerned. They are not the parties who resort to adulteration.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think there are many instances where the purchaser bought straight from the farmer and found the syrup adulterated. The adulteration takes place where commercial concerns buy large supplies of the sugar and syrup from the farmer and then adulterate and increase the quantities very largely. I must admit that in one way they purify and clarify it and perhaps make it more attractive in appearance to the ordinary purchaser, but it is not the pure article. Samples have been taken of their goods and they have been dealt with. To the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) I would say that the department has been extremely lenient to the retailer. Until he is proved guilty twice, he is never fined. He has been asked to pay the costs of the analysis which proved him guilty, but nothing further on the first offence. But that leniency has not been exercised towards the manufacturer and should not be. My hon. friend must see the danger of pleading, on behalf of any people, ignorance of the law. If we were to allow that to prevail, there would be no means of improving conditions. The condition of the trade last year was largely due to the fact that nobody has ever held the retailer responsible. Consequently you cannot get at who are behind them until the retailers take care from whom they buy ; and if they do not know the reputation and character of the seller it is not too much to ask them to obtain a warranty. Under the Act provision is made for getting a warranty, and if they do not know the character of the seller sufficiently to trust his honour and sincerity, they should get a warranty.

Mr. DANIEL. No doubt the Act will become known, but at the outset it is rather hard that the retailers who are honestly buying what they suppose to be the pure article and are selling it as such, and who do not know the law, should be penalyzed. This retailer to whom I refer would not have anything in his store except what is of the very highest character, even if he got it for nothing, because he has always prided himself on keeping nothing but first-class articles ; and if he had had the slightest idea that this maple sugar was not of the very best quality, he would not have taken it under any circumstances or at any price. But he bought it for pure sugar from a farmer whom he knew and trusted but who proved himself not worthy of confidence on that occasion. And although we do hear a great deal about the farmer as being the salt of the earth and all that, I think they require a little watching the same as other people.

Mr. GANONG. I certainly can confirm what the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) has said with regard to Van Wart Brothers. They are men of the highest reputation and cater only to a first-class trade. The hon. minister may know a good deal about the maple sugar business but there is a good deal he does not know. I have a carload in my warehouse of maple sugar and I would like him to tell me, if any part is adulterated, how I am going to find out who adulterated it. We have not sent a pound out of our factory this year simply because we have marked it 'compound' and the retailer will not take it. That sugar in that car was picked up in Compton or Brome from a merchant who bought it from fifty of his customers. It would be very interesting to trace who adulterated that sugar, if any of it is adulterated. Seventy-five per cent to ninety per cent of the maple sugar is not sold as it comes originally from the farmers themselves. Just while the season is on and the sugar is coming in after the first run of the sap and it has not had a chance to harden, people buy it as a luxury, but the great bulk of it is not sold within that time ; and were it not for the confectioners of the country, the sugar would never be sold, and the restrictions are such to-day that there is scarcely a confectioner who will touch it at all. This thing reacts on the people who produce the sugar, and I question whether after this year there will be as big a demand for maple sugar as in the past. Sugar that comes to us by the carload, cannot be sold in that form. If you liquify it in order to get it a uniform colour you immediately lose the colour. Every time sugar is boiled it darkens. The confectioners have been in the habit of adding ten to twenty per cent granulated sugar in order to keep it to the standard of colour so that it can be sold at all, but if you put that in the market and label it compound, you will not sell it. The retailers will not handle it. If the minister knows of any possible way by which he can tell that a carload is pure or if he will tell me to whom I should look to have it guaranteed pure, I should like him to do it.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman has mentioned a couple of counties in the eastern townships. I can tell him, that there is a combination of farmers in the eastern townships who guarantee that what they sell is the pure maple sugar, and if he will buy from them he will get a guarantee.

Mr. GANONG. Is there any farmer who will furnish a carload of sugar?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, I have one farmer in my county who has furnished five carloads.

Mr. GANONG. With a guarantee?

Mr. FISHER. Yes—give a guarantee any day.

Mr. GANONG. What about the sugar when it gets into the hands of the general retailer? There is very little sold by the carload.

Mr. FISHER. That is quite true. But the result of the agitation of this very law has been to create a condition of affairs that is met by the farmers combining as in the counties of Shefford and Brome, and making an arrangement by which they will give a guarantee and sell their sugar or syrup by the carload or by the five carloads.

Mr. GANONG. But when you get a carload of sugar, what are you going to do with it?

Mr. FISHER. That is for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ganong) to say.

Mr. GANONG. There will be no sale for it, and so it all reacts upon the farmer.

Mr. FISHER. Give a guarantee that it is pure, and you will sell it.

Mr. GANONG. No one who knows anything about the sugar business would say that. I have been in the business for twenty-five years, and have covered the whole country from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The man who says that you can sell sugar after it has been stored for three or four months, knows nothing about it.

Mr. FISHER. I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ganong) that there are farmers in the eastern townships who store maple syrup from one season to the other and sell it right along. And, neither the hon. gentleman nor anybody else using that syrup after it had been stored for eight or nine months, would know that it had not been made the previous day.

Mr. GANONG. I am not talking about syrup, but sugar.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. I have been in the maple sugar business for a good many years, and my experience is not that of the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Ganong). It is true that when the new sugar comes in we sell more of it than at any other season; still, we keep it on the counter continually and we sell it every day in the year. We buy from reliable farmers and know what we are selling. If my hon. friend (Mr. Ganong) will put it on the counter so that the people can see it, I think he will have no trouble in selling it.

Mr. DANIEL. Do you give a guarantee?

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. No.

Mr. DANIEL. Do you have the sugar analysed?

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. We have never had it analysed ?

Mr. DANIEL. That accounts for it.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. The law on the subject is a new law. It is only recently that they have been able to tell whether sugar was pure or not. But now that they have the law, we can get it analysed. There is no trouble in selling sugar the year round, for we are doing it every day.

Mr. SPROULE. One thing we must admire about the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. A. A. Wright) is his perfect frankness. One thing he has told us was that he sold quite regardless of the Adulteration of Food Act, in not having these products analysed. He has told us also that he sells every day in the year. This is an open and flagrant violation of the Sabbath Observance Law. Where is the Minister of Justice? It seems to me that the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. A. Wright) has said either too much or too little, and in either case, has given himself away. The Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) must be grateful to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) for helping him out of his difficulty. It is quite evident that the Minister of Agriculture thinks his colleague is not able to attend to the affairs of his department, and so feels called upon to make explanations for him. The Minister of Inland Revenue was frank enough to tell us that this Act was made necessary by failure of prosecutions for the adulteration of food. When the regulations were changed to their present form, I remember warning the then Minister of Inland Revenue, and the Minister of Justice that they would be unable to secure convictions. But they persisted in what they had in view, so far as I could judge, one object, and one object only. At that time we had local analysts whose duty it was to analyse foods. In case adulteration existed, any one could lodge complaint and the certificate of the analyst would be accepted in court as satisfactory evidence towards securing a conviction. If, afterwards, the individual complained against desired to do so, he could appeal from the finding of the court to the department here. In that case, the chief analyst would analyse a sample of the same food, and his evidence would be received in court. Now, in order to take work out of the hands of the local analyst, the regulations or law was changed, and it was provided that the sample taken must be sent to Ottawa to be analysed. But, as the Act provided that you could only reach the Department of Inland Revenue by way of appeal, of course, the court would not accept the certificate of the analyst here, as evidence and so conviction could not be secured. I stated then that that would be the result. I had it on the authority of an eminent lawyer who had looked into the matter. But it was positively asserted on behalf of the government that nothing of that kind could possibly follow. This proposed change in the law is complete proof of the soundness of my contention at that time. It is now proposed to provide that the analyses made by the department here, whether by the chief analyst or his assistant, shall be accepted as evidence in court.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) has fairly explained the object of these amendments, just as I tried to explain them in the start. The whole object, as the hon. gentleman has stated is to give the analysts employed in the laboratory at Ottawa their proper status as public analysts. That is the whole scope of the Bill and the reason for presenting it is that difficulty has been found in carrying out the present law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What change in administration will this new Act make?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. None.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You have officers who are called public analysts in different cities. Does this make no difference in their status?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This law makes no change in the status of the public or district analysts.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is their status?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There are five of these public analysts, and they have their offices respectively in Halifax, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto and Victoria. They receive from the department a retaining fee of $400 a year, which is supposed to pay their office expenses; and, when they are required to do work for the department, there are additional fees.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I gather, either from discussion in this House or otherwise, that the policy of the department has practically left these men without remuneration other than the $400 which is to cover their office expenses. Instead of having samples analysed by these district analysts, the department has procured samples to be sent to Ottawa and analysed here, and so these men have been deprived of the remuneration they formerly had. Would the minister please inform us what is the state of affairs in that regard?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I understand that the amount of money paid by the department to the district analysts, for special work is about $7,000 or $8,000. It may vary in amount a few hundred dollars. I am speaking approximately. There is no doubt that in the carrying on of the work of the department it would cost probably five or ten times as much to have the work done by the district analysts as to have it done in the department. The assistant analyst, now the acting chief analyst, Mr. McGill, has performed work in some cases for a few cents that might have cost $5 or $10 if referred to the district analyst. Hundreds of samples of many articles are analysed and often the analysis is a simple matter not taking much time, and it is believed by the department that it would be much less expensive to have the work done in the department.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood the minister to say that there are only five of these analysts. I see by the report of the Inland Revenue Department, 1906, part III, the names of Fagan, Bowman, Donald, Ellis, Valade and Vallée. That makes six. I think the title of this Bill should be changed from 'An Act to amend the Adulteration Act' to an Act to repeal that Act. We have had an Adulteration of Foods Act for a great many years, we have had a staff of officials travelling through the country collecting samples, another staff analysing them, the results of the analyses have been published in bulletin form and sent through the country giving the names of the parties from whom the samples were purchased and reporting the results, showing that a great proportion of the samples were adulterated, but there the matter ends. If this matter were properly dealt with, the manufacturers would be punished. I see in this report that one of these purchasing agents went into a store in Belleville, in the district of Kingston, and purchased some black pepper from John Panter & Son. The analyst reported on this that it is composed of wheat starch and stone cells, adulterated. That is the end of it, that fellow goes on selling that stuff and the department does not enforce the law. If we cannot have the law enforced with all this expenditure we had better abolish the Act. I have here a letter from a party which heads:

Dear Mr. Taylor,—This life is a struggle enough against disease without being helped by wholesale poisoners. The inclosed printed admission ought to help some one get forty years.

The printed matter reads :

Dear Madam,—The law allows cream of tartar to be adulterated and sold provided it is marked cream of tartar compound. These compounds contain about twenty-five per cent cream of tartar and the balance chalk, and sometimes a little acid and sometimes phosphates. These adulterants cost from one to three cents per pound. You, therefore, pay good money for stuff that can be bought for a fraction of the amount you spend. There is another kind of cream of tartar for sale in nearly all drug stores, and allowed by law to be sold for cream of tartar, but contains from thirteen per cent to fifteen per cent of impurities.

If the minister will read this blue-book of his, and look up the report on cream of tartar, he will find that many of the samples marked adulterated, some reported genuine and some reported doubtful. In the report on fruit preserves he will find many cases of adulteration. The report gives the analysis under numbers which refer to a page in the book where the names of the parties from whom the sample was purchased are given. The first sample I see contains glucose and preservatives but is marked 'compound.' The next contains glucose and a preservative and is dyed, very little fruit. So it goes on, page after page of this report. But what good does this do to the country ? You know the men who made the sales, yet nothing is done although we are paying a staff of officials for the collection and analyses and the printing of these reports. There are no prosecutions.

Earlier in the session I brought to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture another fraud perpetrated on the farmers of this country in the selling of adulterated cattle foods. Although we have a law against the sale of adulterated food for men or cattle, there is no enforcement of the law, people are allowed to sell these foods if they mark them 'compound,' and I see here that the word 'compound' is sometimes put on with a stencil that no one can read. The name of the article is in big letters, Cream of Tartar, or Black Pepper, or White Pepper, and then in a little bit of a stencil that the department have deciphered by means of a magnifying glass it is marked 'compound.' The law is practically a dead letter, whereas it should be strictly enforced. We have had enough of the way in which this thing has been played with by the Department of Agriculture and Inland Revenue.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) read from the report the names of six or seven analysts. Two or three of the names he mentioned are members of the laboratory corps at Ottawa, not district analysts. There are but five district analysts all over the country. My hon. friend says that we are not enforcing the law stringently or rigidly enough. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) thought we were enforcing it with too great stringency. It is difficult to please all parties ; it is difficult to enforce this law anyway, because it is of a somewhat inquisitorial character. The department is doing the best it can and whilst not wishing to be too drastic or arbitrary, the law has been enforced in the last few years to the great advantage of this country. A great many samples have been collected, analyses have taken place, the results have been published in bulletins, and that of itself has the effect of reducing the amount of adulteration even if we have not prosecuted the guilty parties. I think that in most of these instances where adulteration was found the retailer was required to pay the cost of analysis, averaging about $9. In the case of the manufacturers or the adulterators of maple sugar or maple syrup proceedings were taken in the courts against them and in most cases the proceedings are still pending. The policy of the department has been to proceed more stringently against those responsible for the adulteration than against what might be considered the innocent retailer.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many convictions of firms and men were made in 1906?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I cannot remember them.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister be good enough to tell us whether this law would in any way conflict with the Act the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) brought down referring to pure foods, such as meats, &c. ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not think so.

Mr. DANIEL. What qualification does the minister require from gentlemen before he appoints them as public analysts? What examination do they undergo, and how does the minister obtain a knowledge of the fitness of these gentlemen who are to perform the duties for which they are appointed?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. They have to pass an examination before the board of examiners.

Mr. DANIEL. Before a board of the minister's own departmental officials?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Before a board appointed by order in council, which consists of the chief analyst of the department, Mr. Macfarlane ; Dr. Girdwood, of Montreal ; and Abbé Choquette, of St. Hyacinthe.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The minister attributes to myself the idea that the law should not be too strictly enforced. I did not say that. He misunderstood me if he takes it in that way. My remarks were directed entirely to shielding the innocent and not defending the guilty. I took occasion to criticise the way in which the inspectors take packages from the retailer. It was not that I wished to defend the man who wilfully puts on the market an impure article, sells it under a false name and misrepresents it; but I desired to point out that in the enforcing of the Act it was desirable that where tradesmen were absolutely innocent they should not be punished for the sins of other parties. I do not wish to be put down as saying that the minister was enforcing the Act too severely. All I want him to do is to see first that he is proceeding against the right party and not against the one who is innocent.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

SUPPLY—WARSHIPS ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, there is a matter as to which I would like to ask information from the government. Recently an item has appeared in the United States papers, which has been copied into the journals of this country, and which reads:

> The protected cruiser 'Detroit' is to be brought to the great lakes from the Atlantic for the use of the Michigan Naval Brigade. Estimates have been called for by the Navy Department for cutting off a section of the warship and preparing the vessel for passage through the canals. The "Detroit' is now out of commission and tied up at the Charleston navy yard at Boston. The section to be removed will be taken aboard the ship and upon arrival at Detroit the severed section will be again set in place and the vessel will be made whole once more. The 'Detroit' will be the first warship of her class ever located upon the great lakes.

I ask the leader of the House whether it has been brought to his attention officially or otherwise, that any application has been made for the passage of this warship through our canals, and whether or not such a proposal is understood by this government to be in accordance with the convention of 1818, under which warships of either country are not allowed upon the great lakes, with certain minor exceptions.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). This matter being of international character and importance, although I have some impression concerning it, I would prefer to have the question stand by way of notice, and to-morrow I will give some definite statement.

Mr. COCKSHUTT.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that is quite proper under the circumstances.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into Committee of Supply.

Further amount required to provide for expenses in connection with the Royal Commission on Life Insurance, including a sum not exceeding $550 to be paid to members of the Civil Service, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $75,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This appropriation of $75,000 is to cover the expenses still remaining to be provided for in connection with the Royal Insurance Commission. The accounts are not yet made up, but my information enables me to give an approximate statement of the cost of the service. The estimate is that the total cost of the Insurance Commission will be about $100,000. I have at present placed it at $105,000. It may be that there are some accounts we have not taken into consideration, but roughly stated that may be regarded as the probable cost. We have already paid to date $47,153.57, which, of course, implies that there are very considerable sums yet to be paid. We have taken two previous appropriations; for the year 1905-6 an appropriation of $20,000, and for the year 1906-7 an appropriation of $10,000. We are now asking for $75,000, which covers and includes $30,000 which was obtained by way of Governor General's warrant. Taking the $20,000 and the $10,000 already voted, the supplementary estimate of $75,000 now asked would make the total appropriations $105,000. The allowance to the commissioners has not yet been fixed by order in council, but the committee would desire to know what the view of the government is, and so I can state that it is proposed that the commissioners be allowed $30 per day in addition to their moving expenses; that the secretary be allowed $15 per day and his moving expenses. The expenses of the legal gentlemen connected with the commission were arranged with the Department of Justice under the late minister. The arangement with Mr. Shepley was that he was to receive an allowance of $100 per day, and moving expenses, for each day in which he might be actually engaged, and that he would expect to receive in addition to that a general fee in proportion to the extent and responsibility of the work. That general fee has not yet been determined. Mr. Tilley, who was the junior counsel, was allowed by the Department of Justice $50 per day and moving expenses. The commissioners have received various sums on account as follows: Judge MacTavish, $2,500; J. W. Langmuir, $2,000; A. L. Kent, $2,000. They have also received some small sums for expenses The legal gentlemen have received on account: Mr. Shepley, $8,000; Mr. Tilley, $4,000. The chief items other than these will be the expenses of actuaries and stenographers and so forth. Mr. M. M. Dawson, the principal actuary, received $50 per day and expenses, as arranged with the commission, and the two actuaries who were assistants received $20 per day and expenses. The actuaries have been paid altogether for their services $7,041.55 and for their expenses $702.35. This, I understand, completes the payment of the actuaries. The stenographers have received $8,955. As I have already said, the total payments to date represent $47,152.57, but when the accounts are finally made up on the basis I have now mentioned, I estimate that the total sum required will be $105,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I regret on one account that I am obliged to ask the attention of this House for any considerable time to matters in regard to which the House has no conceivable legitimate business, and which ought not under any ordinary circumstances to be brought before the House, being as they are matters entirely personal, either with reference to personal conduct or with reference to personal and private business, and which would never have become the subject of comment in this House unless for circumstances over which I had no control. I am, therefore, not apologizing to the members of the House for bringing this matter to their attention; the apology, if any, is due by others than myself. But I, at the same time, none the less regret that a man is called to stand up in this parliament and take any considerable portion of its time in reference to what are entirely his own personal and private affairs. The impression seems to have been created —and there are persons who are not at all laggard in attempting to strengthen that impression—that in some way or other the member for North Toronto has brought himself into a position in which it becomes the duty of the House of Commons to either prefer a charge against or pass a censure upon the same member, and if possible send him about his private business.

Sometimes that is varied by the advice of good friends who think that that matter ought to be relegated to the constituents of the hon. member, and that he should at once take the opportunity of placing his case before his constituents. That impression is also tinged with another, that it is a question of some public malfeasance, some disregard or active violation of some of the public duties of a member of parliament. Now, it might be well briefly to state just why this statement is being made; and perhaps one of the best ways of doing that is in the first place to say why it is not being made. It is not being made owing to any possibility of any member of this House of Commons laying any charge against the member for North Toronto touching any part of his public and official duties, extending now over a period of some twenty-one years as a member of the House and some eleven years as a minister of the government in charge of the work of the country. Although as careful inquisition has been made into my case as I suppose has been made into the case of any other public man, I stand at this time in this House of Commons in a position to state that from no official quarter and from no responsible party has there emanated or is there likely to emanate any charge against the member for North Toronto which may be brought into this House and pressed against him in regard to his public duties.

That being, I think, the case—as I state it modestly, and not in any boasting manner—an attempt was made last year to attack the member for North Toronto on the race-and-religion cry. The member for North Toronto was not born, has not been bred, and is not to-day, a bigot. He believes in his own religious principles, he adheres to that portion of the Christian community in which he was born and to which he remains attached, he asks the right to worship his own God in his own way, and he carefully and generously gives the same right to every other man. On the records of the public press or of the 'Hansard' of this parliament there cannot be found one single expression which can be tortured into a bigotted or ungenerous expression of feeling towards the co-religionists of hon. gentlemen who are not my co-religionists or towards any race or any creed in this country. But last year an attempt was made to drive it home to the people of the province of Quebec that I was an eater and a hater of Frenchmen—that I had chewed them up in various ways in this House and on the platforms of the country; and a young gentleman undertook to publish that propaganda in the province of Quebec. As I said last year, I am not at all thin-skinned with reference to things said about me in the public press; but I did consider it my duty, when a charge of that kind was made against me, to make an example and if possible vindicate my rights in that respect. I did so, and notwithstanding the distinguished protection and patronage of the present Minister of Justice, who endeavoured to laugh me out of court for the assumption of the position that I took, the good sense of parliament prevailed, and two things were demonstrated—one, that after all the assiduity that could be put into the question, no single justification of the statement made was presented at the bar of the House; and the other, that parliament, though largely composed of one party, dropped its partisanship to a large extent for the time being, and affirmed the well-understood rights of a member of parliament and the well-understood dignity of parliament itself.

Some other way had to be found. An insurance commission was appointed by the government of this country a year ago or more. That insurance commission was given certain powers. By order in council and in the King's name they were sent to do a certain work. Let me be absolutely well understood: I do not think it entered into the mind of any person, when that commission was being instituted, that it was to be used for any other purpose than the subject matter to which its powers were confined. But, whilst I state that and hold to that, I am equally strongly of opinion, and I have found no reason to give up that opinion, that it was not long in operation before some people thought that it afforded a piece of machinery by which political opponents, or at least a political opponent, might be broken and a party advantage might be gained. That belief may be simply confined to myself. I state it because I hold it, and I shall have to have good reason for giving it up.

Well, Sir, that commission went to work, and although its powers were absolutely confined to insurance business and insurance systems, and what was germane and closely connected thereto, in some way or other that commission decided it within its province, or within its power, one or the other, to make inquisition into businesses in no way related to or concerned with insurance—into matters of private parties in no way connected with or related to insurance or insurance systems; and in that way, through the press, which diligently headlined all the striking parts that might inure to the injury of a party opponent and followed it up during the time of the commission's work up to and including the report of the commission itself, which we have been able to study during the last three weeks. In connection therewith and as a result thereof, the private businesses of private parties and of private companies have been brought in and made a part of the record, and my own name and my own work have been so brought in and made a part of the record, that I have been in the first place challenged to clear my skirts in this House—challenged to make this House a tribunal and present my case to it; and, by reason of the arbitrary and un-British manner of proceeding adopted by the commission, I was obliged to state before the commission itself that, being denied the rights of a free man inside of that commission, I would be obliged to appeal to a higher tribunal; and here I am to-day. The tribunal is not quite as full as I would like it to be; the tribunal is not quite as wide as I would like it to be; but it is the best I have. I have been challenged to appear before it and I feel it my duty in some respects to make my statement here.

Now, Sir, I do not expect that the statement that I make to-day will go as widely as the precious headlines went in the party papers; I do not expect that all the gentlemen sitting opposite to me or about me will be quite unprejudiced in this matter. I do not know why they should not be. Might I appeal to the fair minded both of the public and the press to take my statement and weigh it, and come if possible to as nearly an unprejudiced conclusion as they can? And if I might appeal to the party press opposed to me, I might venture the wish that they would give as much publicity to the statement I now make in the place in which I am driven to make it as they did to the headlines and reports which came out from day to day whilst the commission was going on. They may be inclined to do that or they may not. That rests with themselves. If they do not, I cannot reach that portion of the public which they have prejudiced against me. That is one of the disabilities of not being ubiquitous or having your hand upon a general distributing machinery for information which shall reach the whole people of this country. That is all I have to state with reference to why I am about here to make the statement that I wish to make.

The work of the commission it is not my intention to take up in full this afternoon. That can be dealt with at another time and probably more effectively. But there is one statement I must make with reference to that commission, and it is this. That commission itself, in my opinion and as I ventured to state before it, overstepped the bounds of the powers that were conferred upon it and overstepped them to the prejudice and injury of private parties and private companies. That is my opinion. Let the House remember that in all the giving of evidence, in all the arrangements of documents, in all the ingenious questioning of witnesses, in all the pressure of charges—not declared but none the less charges—on which a conviction before that commission was sought—in all these neither I myself nor any other man who appeared before that commission had the right of a Canadian or British citizen to ask on what charge he was accused. A specification of the accusation that was brought against me, the protection of a court which always looks impartially on the two sides to a contest, or that greatest of all aid and protection, a counsel who is able to cross-examine and to bring rebuttal evidence—not one of those rights during that whole commission's work was accorded to myself or to any other man brought before it. The Montreal 'Witness' is not a paper particularly favourable to myself or the party to which I belong. Let me read an article from the Montreal 'Witness' which appeared just a day or two ago:

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's very eloquent presentation of the degradation it would be to the House of Commons to resolve it into an inquisition into rumours which no one had had the manhood to formulate into charges amount, as the opposition leader pointed out, to a scathing denunciation of the recent insurance commission, with which the rumours in question had some connection. That commission was far worse than an inquest into unfounded rumours. It resolved itself from the first into a prosecution for undeclared charges. It engaged an inquisitor of the greatest ability as such, though before giving him credit for constructive wisdom, we should need to have assurance that he had no connection, as adviser, with certain preposterous recommendations in the commission's report, and its draft Act of parliament. This prosecutor seemed to regard it as his function to find every manager and director of every insurance company guilty of wrong-doing of some kind. He gave himself, and in the King's name, the commission gave him, every latitude for insinuating crime. He had his brief from a notebook of the faithful government inspectors and auditors, containing every point, however pedantic, raised in their private counsels, in the course of their very thorough audit and inspection for a score of years back, whether as to bookkeeping methods or as to investment. Wilful wrong was assumed in every case by the prosecutor, and, what is worse, wilful wrong is alleged in every case in the report of the commission. Had the gentlemen prosecuted been indicted for the errors with which they are charged in this report, they would have been tried in open court. They would have been assumed to be innocent until proved guilty. They would have been defended by counsel. They would have had the court on their side to see that there was no one-sided presentation of their case. Before this commission no charges were formulated, though criminal charges were present by innuendo all the time. No cross-examination was permitted, no defence was permitted. To a certain extent volunteered evidence was admitted, but was unheeded. The examination showed a determination to incriminate. The usual traps were laid to catch witnesses unaware. In fact every device was used in which a brilliant prosecutor might pride himself. Then at the close each and every one of these unformulated charges is formulated in a public report as a wilful departure from rectitude on the part of men, most of them of hitherto unimpeached reputation, and concerning whom the evidence had revealed nothing that was not consonant with the highest probity.

In other words, from the beginning to the end of that investigation, in so far as it referred to the Independent Order of Foresters, the Union Trust Company and myself, a very determined, most ingenious and skilful attempt was made—which has proved to a large extent successful—to shift the onus of responsibility from the shoulders on which it should rest and place it upon my devoted shoulders. That will come out more particularly as I progress with my statement. I make the assertion here in order that it may be kept in mind.

As the result of all this, certain impressions have been produced, and I propose to take them up in order. They are in most cases more than impressions. They are charges, insinuated if not openly declared. They are findings and judgments given in the report itself. The first of these is that Mr. Foster has imperilled, diverted and squandered the trust money of that organization in his investment of the same through the Union Trust Company and in other ways. Now, Sir, there are gentlemen present who have passed through the period of this controversy. Am I stating too much when I make that statement as one of the impressions created and one of the findings actually given ?

The hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) the other day, in an address brought in out of place, but not without design, made the statement in about so many words: Mr. Foster was the Union Trust Company ; Mr. Foster had to do with the Forresters' funds ; I, and other Foresters have the right to ask him in this House, what became of the funds of the Foresters. Sir, I am here to make a partial answer to that demand. I assume that the hon. member, when he wanted to know what had become of the Foresters' funds wanted to know what had become of all of those funds. I would not willingly charge him with wanting to know only what became of those funds of the Foresters that had been entrusted to my hands and not wanting to know also what had become of those that never entered into my hands, for he put it on the ground that the Foresters had the right to know what had become of their money.

Well, Sir : In 1901, when I took charge of the Union Trust Company, the Foresters had a surplus of $5,250,000 in round numbers. Even the most rabid opponent of mine will not venture to say that I had anything to do with the investment of that money. In 1906, when I went out of the Trust Company work, the surplus of the Foresters was $10,000,000 or thereabouts. That is to say, of the total surplus of the Foresters about five and a quarter millions was handled and invested before I came upon the scene, and less than five millions had to be invested after I came upon the scene. If the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., wants to know, in the name of the Foresters, what became of their surplus, let him read pages 123 to 132 of the report of the Royal Commission on Life Insurance. He will find there what became of part of the surplus, but he will not find there what became of it all. If he does not find it there—if he assumes, as we all must, that the duty of the commission was to look into the investments of this insurance company—he will naturally turn to the evidence taken before that insurance commission to find out what became of that part of the surplus other than that which is accounted for in the pages to which I have directed him. But, when he looks in the report and looks in the evidence, he will not find it. What does that mean ? It means that this commission, which was appointed specifically to look after the investments of insurance companies, looked after the investments of this insurance company quoad, Hon. George E. Foster, but was very careful not to look after the investment of a large proportion of that surplus which was invested before Hon. George E. Foster came into the Union Trust Company.

If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) wants to know what became of the surplus and trust funds of the Foresters after I came upon the scene, I shall be glad to give him, and this House, and the Foresters who are interested, the exact facts of the case. In 1901, as manager of the Union Trust Company, I took charge of the investment of a large surplus of the Foresters, under two heads—one part by contract on certain lines and the other part as the investment of the Foresters in the capital stock of the Union Trust Company. The profits of the Union Trust Company under my management were as follows :

Profits made by Union Trust Company under management of George E. Foster :

1901 (four months)	$ 18,787
1902	39,067
1903	68,727
1904	94,057
1905	122,338
1906	183,898
Total	$526,874

These are the profits made by me—for I am now accepting as the basis of my argument the statement of the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) that I was the whole of the Union Trust Company. I am answering the hon. gentleman on his own ground. The figures show that, in the five years during which I had charge of the work of the Union Trust Company, I made a profit for that company and for the Foresters of $526,874. At the end of that time, the reserve fund of the Union Trust Company—which, of course, was nothing at the commencement—amounted to $400,000 ; the assets—nothing, of course, at the beginning—amounted to a little over $8,000,000. That, Sir, is what became of the funds entrusted to the Union Trust Company and placed under my management for these five years.

Comparisons are odious ; but they are sometimes necessary. I make this challenge : That the history of no trust company in the Dominion of Canada shows in its first five years anything approaching to the profits shown by the Union Trust Company. For example, I take the Toronto General Trusts Corporation. That institution has been in operation for twenty-five years in this country. It is one of the strongest as well as one of the oldest trust companies in the country. It holds its head even with the great trust companies in other countries. That company, during the first five years of its existence—with a most influential body of directors and great avenues of business opened up to it thereby—made as profits $72,500, as against $526,874 made in its first five years by the Union Trust Company. The Toronto General Trust Corporation has been going on for twenty-five years, adding to its influential directorate, adding to its business. Take the last five years of its operation : What have been its profits for the last five years ? $545,500. After twenty years of consecutive work it went into its last quinquennial term and in that time of its operation it made $545,000, whilst the Union Trust Company, in the first five years of its operation, made $526,000, or nearly as much in the first five years as the other company made in its last five years. The reserve of that company to-day, after twenty-five years' work, is $375,000 ; the reserve of the Union Trust Company, after five years' work, is $400,000. The assets of that company, after twenty-five years work are $31,000,000 ; the assets of the Union Trust Company, after five years, is over $8,000,000.

Sir, without attempting to be invidious, I make the comparison with one of the best and strongest of our trust companies, and I do it in order to answer these honestly held qualms and doubts of the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., (Mr. Carvell) as to what has become of the Foresters' money which was entrusted to the Union Trust Company. Let me say in finishing that part of my statement that I challenge the commission, the prosecutors under the commission or the friends of the commission or any other man to show one single illegal investment made by the Union Trust Company of the funds, capital or otherwise, of the Foresters, during that five years. Let me say that every investment was made on the securities allowed by the law and on sufficient securities and the figures that I have read to you indicate whether the securities and their sufficiency have been proved by the results in profits of over half a million of dollars in five years.

The next assumption which has been made—it is more than an assumption it is a finding—is that Mr. Foster was the Trust Company, responsible for the investments.

In the statement I have just made I assumed that that was true, because I wished to give my hon. friend a statement on his own basis. Let me now go on to state, what was acutally true, that Mr. Foster as manager of the Union Trust Company was not the whole Union Trust Company, was not by any means the whole Union Trust Company. Let me say in short that there is not an investment which can be pointed out of any considerable amount which was made by the manager of the Union Trust until it had been discussed and ordered by the Board of Directors of the Union Trust Company. Early in the formation of that company I put my views before those who were forming it. The proposition was to have a large and extended board of directors. I opposed that idea; I said I did not believe in that, for when you have that you get directors who cannot fill the daily responsibility of the work, you then leave it over to a committee of those directors and the responsibility is gone from the directorate almost entirely. I was of opinion that a small board of not more than seven directors living so near to each other that they could be easily brought together for the transaction of business should constitute the managing directorate, and should be held responsible for the investments made. That was carried out and we began and continued almost up to the end of my term with seven directors. These directors were good men. I have had a good deal of experience with boards and I have never dealt with a board where I found the men more capable, more assiduous, or taking greater daily and weekly and monthly interest in the affairs they were supposed to direct. No investment was made unless it was first authorized by the directorate, and in the way of mortgage investments every one of them before the investment was made went before an executive committee composed of three directors, was looked into and reported upon by that executive committee, and if the report to the directorate was approved the manager then put the investment into train. I want that to be understood whilst I am making my statement before this committee. The directors as well as the manager were also governed by the law of investments. A trust company is under law and charter and its investments are absolutely conditioned by the laws in respect thereto and the charter powers given; neither manager nor director can go lawfully beyond what the law and the charter allows him and the directors to go. I made a statement a while ago as to what took place with reference to that charter and these laws in the matter of investments. Thus when the attempt is made to shift the responsibility from the directors to myself and make me absolutely responsible it is unfair as well as being untrue. I propose to take my lawful and proper responsibility ; I refuse to allow anybody to put upon me more than what properly belongs to me. I never shirk, I never have shirked the action of any board to which I belong and to whose investments I assented. Neither do I propose to allow any responsibility which does not properly rest upon me to be shifted upon me by any commission or by any prosecutor in that commission.

The third finding or statement is that Mr. Foster was investing Foresters' trust funds unrestrained by legal conditions. Now, Sir, what are the facts of the case in respect to that ? I want to make as clear as I possibly can these two facts, first that the Union Trust Company was an entity formed under charter by the Ontario government with certain rights and certain powers. I was not responsible for forming the Union Trust Company, I had nothing to do in conceiving the plan, I had nothing to do with putting the idea into its first form. After certain persons had decided to form a trust company and had decided as to what kind of a trust company was to be formed, I was asked to take charge of it. I did take charge of it and, to a certain extent, I gave my advice and my suggestions as to its directorate and as to the way it should be carried out. But this is the point, that, with the formation of the trust company, or with the investments therein of the Foresters I had no responsibility, I was not at the inception of the company and I was simply called in afterwards to manage the company which had been determined on before I was asked to manage it.

Now, the commission and the party press, following the lead of the commission, and my assailants, following the lead of both, are fond of constantly saying that Mr. Foster, as manager of the Union Trust Company, was administering the trust funds of the Foresters insurance organization. Mr. Foster had no part or lot, no power nor influence in the slightest degree in making the investments of the trust funds of the Foresters. Who were the trustees of the Foresters ? Who held their surplus ? Who made their investments ? The Supreme Court of the Foresters and no one else. Who formed the Union Trust Company, who took stock in the Union Trust Company, who called it into being and made it vital by buying its stock ? The Supreme Court of the Independent Order of Foresters and no one else. Does the quality of the trust inhere in the coin itself or does it attach itself to the trustees who administer the trust ? Is it necessary to repeat that question ? I have paused to give it emphasis. There is your gold dollar in the hands of the trustee for that. It is a gold dollar of a certain degree of fineness and weight. When the trustee has exercised his right of trusteeship and has put it into an investment it is a gold dollar of exactly the same fineness and weight, but the man who has it then is bound by no trust. It is his own money ; he uses it as he pleases. Have I made that clear ? Let me try to make it even more clear ? What I want to say is exactly this, that the trustee funds of the Foresters were in the hands of the trustees for the Foresters, namely, the supreme court of the foresters organization. When they looked at those trust funds and made up their minds to invest them, as they had a perfect legal right to do in the stock of a trust company, that is when the trust responsibility was decided. There is where the responsibility lay and there is where it lies to this day. It was up to them to say whether the stock of a trust company was a proper investment for trust funds. They took that into consideration, they decided that it was, they made the investment, their's is the responsibility and not mine. After they made that investment I was handling Union Trust Company funds under the charter and the laws governing trust companies in Ontario and nothing more. The hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) argued on this assumption that if a man had a trust fund and was responsible for its investment, if he loaned $5,000 of that trust fund to John Jones and John Jones put it into a general produce business, having given his security therefor, to the trustee who loaned him the money, if John Jones undertook to buy cattle or groceries and to sell and buy in these respects, the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., would come to thim and say: 'Mr. Jones, let me have a word with you.' 'Yes.' 'I believe you are buying cattle and produce?' 'I am.' 'Where did you get the money for that?' I borrowed it from so and so.' Ah, but, says the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., don't you know that it is trust money and that by the laws of investment you cannot buy cattle and produce and buy and sell indiscriminately with trust funds; I will have you up before parliament, sir; I will have you impeached for using trust funds that could not be so invested. Am I wrong or right in that parallel? Again, I bought for the Foresters, under instructions, 3,500 shares of bank stock paying for them at a certain rate, the investment running up to about half a million dollars. The Foresters put their money into bank stock, the bank took their money and delivered to the Foresters their certificates. Did the Foresters ever think of going to the bank and saying, or would the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., go to the bank and say: What money is this you are using? The money that we got from the Foresters and for which we delivered our bank stock. Ah, says the member, that will not save you; you must remember that this is trust money and that I have the right to go into your bank and follow that trust money up to its latest distribution in the interests of the Foresters. But, my dear man, says the bank manager, a lot of that money has gone to England and is being used there; a lot of that has gone to Australia and is being used there. Never mind, says Mr. Carvell, it is all trust money; I want your bank books; I want all your documents; I want to hale you before the commission; I want to know to the last cent where that money has gone and how it has been used. Could anything be more absurd than that? Mr. Chairman, that is absolutely the position that the commission took and that the prosecutor of the commission took. It was in vain that I raised my feeble voice to point out to them that that was a principle that could not be admitted. One looked at the other, the stronger gained and I was told that it was none of my business, and that they would follow it to the last item of distribution. Therefore, what I said at first I repeat again that it is absolutely a misrepresentation to represent me as investing the trust funds of the Foresters quoad the amount of money they put into the stock of the Union Trust Company and it makes no difference whether they put all of it in or a quarter of it in or any proportion of it in—absolutely makes no difference at all. Is it legal for the Foresters to invest their money in stock of a loan company? The law gives them that right. They have a perfect right to do it. They did do it, but the moments it got thus into the trust company it becomes money which is under the laws of the loan and trust companies, and which is to be administered under those laws.

Now, there has been a great deal said about my powers of leading people on—a sort of slick deception that I sometimes practice. Don't let the member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) try to get back from his position, on the ground that I led the Foresters to believe that the money they so invested in this trust company would be invested as trust funds of the Foresters, and not as capital money of the Union Trust Company. The two representatives of the Supreme Council of the Foresters who had much to do, and in one way most to do, with the inception of the Union Trust Company, were the supreme chief ranger, and Mr. Stevenson, who was the supreme chief councillor. When I was called to take charge of the trust company, was it supposed by these gentlemen that the moneys they invested in the Union Trust Company on capital account were to be invested by me or the directors as trust funds of the Foresters? Not at all. Their evidence is plain. They made their sworn statement, and the sworn statement of these gentlemen is that they knew well; they contemplated it from the first; it was their purpose in forming the Union Trust Company, that the investments should be of two kinds. The capital they put into it should be invested under the laws of the Trust and Loan Companies of the country for general investment; whilst their own surplus funds that they gave to us under a different category should be invested according to the investment conditions of the Independent Order of Foresters themselves. Doctor Oronhyatekha at page 2318 says:

Q. Was it in contemplation then that the public should come in and be owners of capital stock in the Union Trust Company?—A. Surely, it was a regular commercial company.

Q. When did that idea die out, because that never happened, did it?—A. No, when we got hold of the company and found it was a big thing there would be no sense to hand it to you or anybody else.

Then at page 2325:

Q. Unless the Union Trust Company are precisely the same as the Foresters in their powers—and you do not suggest that they are?—A. Or rather the Union Trust Company powers were not limited as the powers of the Foresters.

Q. That is what I mean ?—A. That is correct.

By Mr. Shepley :

Q. And when you have been discussing investments to be made by the Union Trust Company out of its own moneys, you have never made the Insurance Act the basis of your discussion ?—A. Oh, no, just the laws and the laws which created the Union Trust Company were the laws, I should think to be consulted when we were about to make an investment. Is it in accordance with these powers.

Then the question goes on :

Well, then, of course you see, speaking broadly and not wanting to carry the question beyond just a broad statement ; you see, of course, that you have put your money into the Union Trust Company where it may go into channels of investment not authorized by your own statute ?—A. (By Doctor Oronhyatekha). Oh, surely.

And so it goes on, and that indicates the position with refernce to this matter taken by the then head of the Order, Doctor Oronhyatekha. Now, as to Mr. Stevenson, I quote from page 2358 :

By Mr. Shepley :

Q. What class or classes of investment would be in your mind as the probable investments the Union Trust Company would be expected to make of all these funds ?—A. Of course the funds of the order entrusted to them for investment had to be either in mortgage securities, deposits in bank, or a certain class of stocks that are authorized by the Insurance Act as I understand it.

This is to be for the surplus outside of what they put into capital. Then he goes on :

As to the capital of the Union Trust Company we were advised that that might have a broader scope of investment. For instance, the Foresters, could not invest in real estate except to a certain amount, which amount had already been invested. We were advised under the charter of the Union Trust Company that it was legal and proper to invest in or upon security of real estate ; in other words, that the powers of the Trust Company with regard to investments were broader than the powers of the Foresters or of any insurance society.

By Mr. Shepley :

Q. Well, was the fact that in that way a very large sum of money belonging to the Foresters would be able to get into a broader current of investments—was that fact at all an element in the consideration of the formation of the company ?—A. It was not in my mind. I was aware that subsequently it did take a broader form, but at the outset I gave that no consideration and attached no importance to it.

Q. Do you suppose that, having a right to invest in the stock of the Union Trust Company, that what the Union Trust Company might do with that capital stock, after they got it, was a matter that did not concern you ?—A. No, it did concern me, but I understand that they would have the same powers of investment that any trust company would have, and that its capital contributed by the Foresters could be invested the same as the capital of the National Trust Company or any of the other trust companies of the city.

Now, I have thought it necessary in order to be clear upon that, that I should read not only what was the law itself, but what was the express and well understood meaning that the Foresters themselves attached to it when they undertook to form the Union Trust Company.

Now, here is the charter of the Union Trust Company, and among other things the charter gives that company the right :

To invest any moneys forming part of the company's capital, or reserve, or accumulated profits, in, or on the security of, such real or personal property as the directors may from time to time deem expedient, and also to accept covenants, bonds or guarantees by way of collateral security for any such investment.

Now, so much with reference to the money that the Foresters invested in the capital of the trust company, and which was invested as I have stated.

There was another branch of the investment business. The Foresters, as they had a perfect right to do, entered into a contract (I hold a copy of that contract in my hands) by which over and above their investment in the capital of the trust company, they proposed to make the Union Trust Company the machinery of the investment of its surplus funds, such as it wished to invest. Now, that whole document in a few words is simply this. They bind themselves by this agreement with the Union Trust Company to allow the Union Trust Company to invest such surplus as they put into their hands in such securities as are allowable to Foresters' investments and to Foresters' investments only, for which we are to pay them four per cent, and we—that is, the trust company—are to have all the profits over and above the four per cent. That is the guaranteed investment.

Now, Sir, I make again the challenge which I made before. There are the two kinds of investments that the Trust Company made—one, of the Foresters' surplus upon Foresters' securities ; the other, of the capital stock upon such securities as are permitted to loan and trust companies ; and I again make the challenge for any man to point out any investment in any security which contravened the conditions of either the one or the other. Now, Sir, let me once more ask the question : If the Union Trust Company directors and their manager went on and invested their capital and other moneys as they were authorized to do by the laws of the land, who is responsible? The directors of the Union Trust Company or the manager? No, Sir. If there was anything wrong about it, if any trust has been violated, the wrong was done and the trust violated by the men who held the Foresters' securities and who invested them in the capital of the Union Trust Company. But, Sir, they had a perfect legal right to do it. There is a law that governs them and allows them to do it. They did not step one iota beyond the powers which the laws of the country gave them. Theirs was a legal investment. Now, let no man hereafter, within the sound of my voice, arraign me before the bar of public opinion, or before this House, for investing the capital moneys of the Union Trust Company in securities allowed by the law, on the plea that they were trust funds, and that I had no right to invest them in such securities.

Again, the whole gist of the report, the whole inferential impetus of the prosecutor before the commission, goes to establish against me this charge, which was formulated so baldly, not to say boldly, by the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) the other day. I do not accuse the member for Labelle of having any design to injure me in the matter; he was making his case for the passage of his resolution, and he went to what he considered was the authority, namely, the findings in the commissioners' report, and he read them as an unprejudiced man; for I do not for a moment imagine that the member for Labelle had the least prejudice against myself in that whole matter. He went there for information, he read it, he came to his conclusion, and he translated that conclusion here in parliament. I took the liberty of calling his attention to the fact that that was a wrong conclusion—not that he had misinterpreted the commission, but that the commission's report was a misrepresentation of the facts. Now, let me read what the member for Labelle said, which you will find at page 5539 of 'Hansard'—a pretty rough charge to be thrown at a man in the House of Commons or anywhere else; all the rougher when a man can say: I do not make this charge, it is the government commission's report that makes it. This is what the member for Labelle said:

> Is the Prime Minister, in order apparently to avoid an investigation into the conduct of some of his own colleagues, ready to say that these words from the Insurance Commission are not some of the most damaging words that were ever uttered by a tribunal to any man standing before that tribunal?

That is the way it strikes the member for Labelle; that is the way it strikes the man on the street; that is the way it strikes any man who, not knowing the circumstances, reads that report. The member for Labelle continues:

> On the one hand, the hon. gentleman is accused by the commissioners of having formed this syndicate in order to take the trust funds of which he was manager and loan them to himself as a member of the syndicate; secondly, that he has received a commission either from the party that gave him the money to be held in trust, or from the syndicate of which he was a member. This is the summing up by the commission.

Now, put in my own words, the finding of the commission is this: That Mr. Foster violated a trust in the Montague lands transaction, and diverted certain sums of money from the Union Trust funds, he being manager of the same, into his own pocket and for his own advantage. The member for Labelle puts it in other words, but it is about to the same effect.

Now, will the House listen to me while I give a plain statement of that transaction? In March, 1902, the Supreme Court of the Order of Foresters, Dr. Oronhyatekha, its Supreme Chief Ranger, and Mr. McGillivray, its Chief Secretary, who were the custodians of the trust funds of the Foresters, loaned out of the trust funds of the Foresters to themselves and Dr. Montague, Deputy Supreme Chief Ranger, the sum of $133,000, on interest at 6 per cent, on certain lands bought or to be bought by Dr. Montague, to be carried and afterwards sold, for the benefit of the three persons named and myself, whom they invited to come in and be one of the four. Now, as I said before, I will take my own responsibilities, but before God I will take no other man's, if it is to my hurt. I was not a member of the Foresters' Supreme Court; I was not a member of the Foresters in any way—had nothing to do with their moneys, nothing to do with their investments. In that matter I was simply invited to form one of four to borrow $133,000 from the Foresters' funds, and it was loaned on the conditions of the mortgage upon the land. I again do not want to take from myself any blame that might attach; I want simply to state the case. So far as that money was concerned. I had a perfect right to borrow it if I could. I was not a Forester; I was not a member of their court; I had nothing to do with the loaning of the money; I had nothing to do with their trust funds. As an individual outside of them entirely, I went in with the other three, and the loan was made by those gentlemen to that syndicate of four. So that when the member for Labelle translates the finding of the commission into the words that I took Union Trust Company moneys and formed a syndicate, of which I was one, and loaned moneys to that syndicate, and took a commission therefrom, that is a statement of the case as foreign to the reality as it could possibly well be.

Note this. From March, 1902, down to May 1, 1903, that business went on entirely outside the Trust Company. Land was being managed; Dr. Montague was the trustee—a trustee to hold the conveyances, hold the titles and securities and make reconveyances as the lands were sold. About that time, owing to Dr. Montague being around and about the country, away often from where we could all get together, I myself made the proposal that instead of having Dr. Montague hold these lands and their titles, there should be substituted the Union Trust Company, which should take his place in that respect, and in that respect alone, namely as a holding trust to hold the securities and the lands and make reconveyances according as we sold them out. That was done, and what has been cited as a trust, a trust which covered a multiplicity of duties or obligations, was a trust in one particular, and one alone, namely to hold the security and the titles and to convey the lands as the syndicate sold them out. The Union Trust Company was the depository of no money. It had no right to buy or to sell. It had no duty to keep accounts. It had nothing to do except simply to take the place of Dr. Montague and hold the titles to these lands and reconvey them to persons who bought them, according to the instructions of the syndicate and not of the Union Trust Company. Therefore, if hon. gentlemen have followed me, they will see that this was not a complete trust, not a trust involving money transactions, buying and selling or anything of the kind. It was simply a holding trust. That document is here. It was in Mr. Shepley's hands. It was read in evidence. It was placed before Judge MacTavish and is in the exhibits to-day, and I challenge the attention of hon. gentlemen to it. From March, 1902, up to May and after May, 1903, when this change took place, that syndicate of four were still buying lands, and I became to a certain extent the mouthpiece or the negotiator for that syndicate in negotiating for the purchase of lands. The Union Trust Company had nothing under the sun to do with it. The Union Trust Company had no power at all over it. That syndicate managed its own business and managed these later negotiations through myself. We were in contact, the one with the other, looking over the land, deciding what we would give and the terms, and coming to our own conclusions. So what happened? Forty-four thousand acres were bought before the Union Trust Company, even in that capacity, had anything to do with that syndicate. Some 60,000 or 70,000 were bought after that. The Union Trust Company became the holding trust in the place of Dr. Montague for the first 44,000 acres. The others that we bought were destined to be put in the same holding trust. Instead of myself or Dr. Montague buying those lands and having the titles made out to us and we then reassigning to the Union Trust Company, both operations were done in one and the Union Trust Company bought in trust for that syndicate and at the direction of that syndicate. That is the whole case as regards that trust. That syndicate had the right to carry on its business as it pleased. High and mighty though Mr. Shepley may be, and up on a pedestal as that commission may be, and with due deference to both of them, that syndicate of four had the right to carry on its business as it pleased. It did carry on its business, and in the course of its operations on two occasions, in the negotiation for land, came to the point where the vendor and the syndicate were at points or nearly so with reference to the price. But we did not take the lands until the agent of the vendor said to us. Take them at the price at which I am authorized to sell them, but I get a commission of so much and I will give you one-half of that commission if you take the lands. We, the syndicate, came together, discussed the matter, and decided to take the lands under that condition. On the first transaction $10,000 was the agent's commission. He offered the half and we took the $5,000. I took it, said the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell). I put it, he says, into my own pocket. I took it, say the commission in certain parts of its evidence and report. Why could they not be honest and fair, both of them, and say that the commission was taken by the syndicate managing its own affairs. Now, note this. Who were that syndicate? They were Dr. Oronhyatekha, Mr. McGillivray, Dr. Montague and myself. The lenders were in that syndicate and so were the borrowers. Both agreed to the taking of half the commission from the agent. Say it was taking profits prospectively. You may say whatever you like. I have given the facts, and the whole facts of the case. But with a devilish ingenuity, just as skilful as it is devilish, that commission put on the records of this House, to stay there for ever, that I took that commission, and then follows it up with these words: 'He says he divided it among the members of the syndicate.' That is the statement of these unprejudiced and manly men who had the books before them, who knew that the other three members of the syndicate got their share, and yet the best they dare, consonant with instructions, and the worst they dare —brave men that they are—is to say practically that I pocketed it and that I said I divided it with the others.

Now, look at another thing. That syndicate had earned money and had turned it into the funds—$10,000 at one time. They had paid their interest up to that day; they had received nothing for their management or anything of that kind; they proposed to take, and they did take, that reduction of the agent's commission as prospective profits. Characterize it as you like, that is all there was to it.

The second transaction—for I am not going behind anything—was a transaction on exactly the same basis and agreed to exactly in the same way. Other transactions had taken place between the members of the syndicate, which it is no man's business to know. Payments had been made to some members of the syndicate, and I, as a receiver of the second commission, refused to distribute it until we had an adjustment of accounts. My hon. friend from Carleton makes the query: When will this be adjusted? How is it going to be adjusted? Will it ever be adjusted? If it were parliamentary, I would tell him it was none of his business.

Now, what the commission had the right to do—I ask your attention to this, Mr. Chairman, and the attention of every hon. member—was to criticise the officers of the Supreme Court of the Independent Order of Foresters who lent that money to themselves and to me which bought 44,000 acres of land before I knew anything about it. Will you believe it, Mr. Chairman, and will the members of this House believe it?—You may look through the whole record of the evidence and you will not find that the virtuous Mr. Shepley and the highly honourable commission made one single inquiry into the purchase of that 44,000 acres of land—whom it was bought from, how much was paid for it—whether it was bought from the Canadian Pacific Railway, from the Great Northern or from what other source—what letters passed or whether there were any commissions paid—and all the rest of it. Why, they were perfectly agreed that there should not be a word of investigation, not a syllable of censure with reference to that. But, when it came to the point that the name of the Union Trust Company came in—in a document which, as Mr. Shepley knew perfectly, simply substituted the trust company for Dr. Montague—and so my name could be got at, there was no ingenuity too great, no sleuth-like proceedings too keen to follow up to its remotest contingency, to its furthest point of possibility how these lands were got, from whom they were got—whether from political friends of mine or from others—had Mr. Roblin any hand in it? —was Mr. Colin Campbell into it—was this, that or the other friend of mine concerned? All these questions were asked. Now, query: Was the first avoided because Mr. Foster could not be implicated through the trusteeship of the Trust Co. as holder of titles—Was the second brought upon the boards because Mr. Foster could be so represented?. I ask Judge MacTavish to answer that question as a man.

Another finding of this commission is that I accepted a bribe in the shape of a commission in the transaction of the Kamloops properties. You will find that at page 149 of the report. Now, Mr. Chairman, let me ask your attention for a moment to this matter. In the course of human events the time came when in the opinion of Mr. Shepley it was proper that I should be questioned. Let me explain that I was subpœnaed on the last of August. I went to that inquiry and remained from the 5th of September until the 3rd of October. All that time these undeclared charges were being pressed against me. I asked to be heard. I was there with the information; I was the man who knew more about these matters than any other man; my oath was just as good as any other man's. I asked that I be relieved from these long hanging, undeclared charges, by being put on the stand and questioned. But Mr. Shepley was not ready. The train was not sufficiently laid; the bomb was not quite ready to explode. And so I could not be put upon the witness stand, and was not put upon the witness stand, until the 3rd day of October. On the 1st of October, I rose before that commission and made a most earnest appeal against the cruelty of being hung up between heaven and earth while these insinuations were being spread abroad, and when the time was hanging on the hands of the commission. Mr. Shepley said: No, we cannot take you this afternoon. I pleaded with the chairman of the commission. Mr. Shepley looked up at the chairman of the commission and said: 'You know, judge, we have not been able to get those bank books yet.' And Judge MacTavish nodded willing assent, and solaced me by saying: 'You know, Mr. Foster, now that you have made this protest, the public will think there are two sides to the question.' That was indeed a great solace and comfort to me. What were the bank books that were necessary?—What had I to do, what had my oath, my evidence to do with bank books?—Let them call me—I was there to be called. I was there to give them, on my oath, the facts of the case—as I did after the bomb had been prepared and the train had been fairly well laid. I was put on my oath, and, in course of my evidence I was asked this question: Did you receive any commission from Mr. Fowler in the Kamloops transaction which induced you in any way to put that transaction through? Was there any commission? I gave them my word. Meanwhile, Mr. Fowler's bank book had been stripped by that commission out of the guardianship of the bank, and every one of his private disbursements, even to that for a present he had made to his wife, was paraded before that commission and paraded before the country. And all this was done in the absence of Mr. Fowler and without asking his leave; without saying to him, even: Mr. Fowler, the commission would like to see your bank book—have you any objection? Mr. Fowler, if asked that question, would at once have said: Gentlemen, you may see my bank book, but I have private business there as well as other business, and you will please not communicate my private business to the public. That is the way they do these things in England. Will any man say they ever go beyond that in England? Is a man's business to be ruthlessly torn up and his bank accounts publicly paraded because three men are given the name of a Royal Commission and given certain powers which they speedily prepare to overstep in this star-chamber way? Well, Sir, when they got that bank book there was great rejoicing in the camp on two accounts. I cannot divulge the source of my information, but I know a correct and well modulated yell of triumph went up from the prosecutor and his associates, when two items in that bank book met their eyes: One a check from Mr. Fowler to myself for $2,500 and the other a check from Mr. Fowler to the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) for $100 or something like that. They were all cock-a-whoop!—Now we have got them! And my council was telephoned to in a flustered voice: Something of great importance has happened, come down at once. We went down. I was asked the question: Did you receive that cheque for $2,500 from Mr. Fowler? I did. I explained it, I explained it to the commissioners I explained it as a part of my private business. I was stripped Sir. Will you believe it? I was stripped absolutely bare as to my financial standing by Mr. Shepley in the eyes of Canada and before that commission. I have been 22 years in public life in this country. I have stolen nothing; I have made no use of my opportunities to amass a fortune. To-day I stand before this parliament and this country under bare poles. I am not ashamed to say so, but God forbid that any prosecuting attorney, in the King's name, should make me a financial spectacle before this country through a commission appointed to ask some questions with reference to insurance. Some one in the reporters' gallery said that my voice grew tense when I approached this subject. I do not wish to conceal that it does. I never had an experience like this before in my life. All that I have is the ability that God gave me, my power to work, my character and my reputation, and Sir, I will fight to the last ditch before I will let anybody rob me of those. Pressed by Mr. Shepley I gave a portion of my private business, and then said, when he pressed still further; Your Honour, this is private business, I do not think I ought to be asked this question here, I have given you my oath, but if you commissioners want to know the ins and outs of this whole thing I will spread it before you. Judge MacTavish said: That will be quite satisfactory. From that day to this they never asked me to spread anything before them. There was my oath denial, there was my testimony, there was that action. Do you believe it, Sir, that commission never called another witness as to whether I took a bribe by way of commission or not, and yet let me read from page 149 of the report:

> On February 8, 1904, the dealing with the Union Trust Company was reduced into conveyancing. The main agreement of that date, by which Fowler conveys the property to Foster in trust, and which declares the trust to be, to the extent of forty-nine per cent for Fowler, Irwin and McCormick, and to the extent of fifty-one per cent for the Trust Company, recites most carefully that Fowler, Irwin and McCormick contemplate purchasing and desire to negotiate for the property, and have applied to the Trust Company to join them in the purchase; that in pursuance thereof the agreement of January 26, with Ryan, was entered into by Fowler; and that it is now necessary to procure and pay to Ryan his purchase money accordingly.

Now mark this:

> Following this, $225,000 was paid to Ryan by the Trust Company. By the real arrangement between him and Fowler he was only entitled to retain $170,000, and he paid over the remaining $55,000, or the greater part of it, to Fowler.

Now comes the judgment of the commissioners, the finding of a Royal Commission with the King's name stamped on it:

> Out of these moneys Fowler paid Foster at least $2,500 and probably about $7,000. Mr. Fowler's evidence, pages 3102, 3103, 3104. Mr. Foster's evidence, pages 2536, 2537.

That is all there is to it. What do you get? We get what is there. Has one of you seen the evidence and read it? No, Sir, Now if the members of parliament have not seen that evidence and have not read it, what will be thought of it by the man in London, a friend of mine, knowing me as the former finance minister of this country, who gets that report sent to him and reads that I took from $2,500 to $7,000 out of a commission? Will he ever see the evidence? It might as well be hidden in Hades so far as he is concerned. The man on the street does not dig into the evidence. Look at the abandoned maliciousness of a finding like that. In that judgment I am condemned before the country and the world for taking a commission upon business I was transacting for the Union Trust Company; it is stated that I did it. and the evidence given in contradiction is carefully kept out of the report and hidden away in the archives of this country. Twenty-five years from this when my dust has mingled with mother earth, some political slanderer arises in this House and in reply to a member from the opposition says to him: You vaunt yourselves about your men and your leaders, your coadjutors; read the report of the Royal Commission. There was one of your trusted men reported by a Royal Commission as taking a bribe in carrying on his trust company business. I am not near to meet my traducer, and 50 years afterwards it is the same, and for ever down the rolling years of the history of Canada, that damnable record is there, full of falsity, to the utter abandonment of all sense of honour and all truth and all manly conduct, man to man. I ask Judge MacTavish how he dared put such a malicious finding in this report.

Take page 133 of this report. Page 133 in one sentence sums up what is the designed effort of the prosecutor and the designed object of the commission. It had been declared that the Union Trust Company was formed for speculative purposes and after having iterated that and reiterated it, the commission says :

> The purpose was then undoubtedly to embark in active speculation.

What did Judge MacTavish mean by that ? What did the man who wrote that report mean by that ? What did the prosecutor before that commission mean by that ? Again I throw out my challenge in his teeth ; show me the investment that was made by the Union Trust Company of its capital funds in anything else than what was authorized by the laws of the land. What right have you to call it a speculation ? It is the same as every trust company invests in, the same as every loan company invests in ; only that and nothing more. Yet, it is paraded through the pages of that report that it is speculative, that it was meant to be speculative from the first and embarked in because of that ruling idea. Then they go on to say that I speculated or invested in land, invested in timber properties and invested in real estate. In Heaven's name, what do trust companies invest in if they do not invest in these ? What do large banks invest in if they do not invest in these ? Go down to the Bank of Montreal, ask its manager to open to you its page of investments and you will find that nine-tenths of the investments of the bank are investments in land, in business, in lumbering orperations, in milling operations and in company operations. Yet, that is all speculation. Ours was speculation. Loan a thousand dollars on a farm in the Northwest, taking 50 per cent of the valuation, it is a speculation. The risk may prove to be a bad moral risk, there may be three or four bad seasons in the west, the man may neglect his business, you may lose your whole investment ; it is a speculation and nothing more. So, Sir, Mr. Shepley shapes the report to brand me and to brand the Union Trust Company with speculation, whilst the evidence before his own commission shows that we are making exactly the same investments as other trust companies and that they are legal investments.

Now, Sir, I come to one of the most talked about charges and that is that Mr. Foster took trust funds, diverted them to loans to himself, or in his own interests in the case of the Great West Lands Company without disclosing the facts to his directors. That statement was made by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) not on his own responsibility, but collated or read from the report of this commission. What are the facts in reference to that ? I will give them to you just as briefly as I possibly can. Messrs. Pope and Fowler and some friends of theirs, some time or other, became possessed of an option on lands in the Northwest. They purchased those at $3.50 per acre. Let me here say that one of the undeclared charges against me which Mr. Shepley followed up like a sleuth hound was that I had an anterior interest in these lands of Messrs. Pope and Fowler and others which were sold to me. I denied that on oath. There is no truth in it. I knew nothing of it, never knew that they were buying lands, never knew that they were buying other lands, knew nothing about it at all until the proposition was brought to some of us in Toronto. That was an undeclared charge. If Mr. Shepley had been proceeding in a court of law he would have had to specify and declare that charge and he would have sought his conviction by proper legal methods, but he sought it in an underhand way. I gave my denial to it on oath. I repeat that denial here to-day. They brought this option to the city of Toronto and after certain negotiations had taken place with others they came down to a negotiation with a number of gentlemen with whom I, myself Mr. McGillivray and Mr. Matthew Wilson were associated. To make a long story short, Mr. Wilson, Mr. McGillivray and myself bought an option from these gentlemen paying them $4.50 per acre an advance to them of $1 per acre. When we had secured that option. Mr. McGillivray, Mr. Wilson and myself turned around and sold it to the Great West Lands Company for an advance of 50 cents per acre payable in stock. Please keep that in mind. Not one dollar of profit went into the hands of Mr. McGillivray, Mr. Wilson and myself. Our advance was all paid in stock and we would get it or would be paid it after every other obligation of the company was absolved and paid off. Although the finding of the commission misrepresents it, the evidence shows conclusively that at the time Mr. McGillivray, Mr. Wilson and myself bought that option and made a sale of it to the Great West Lands Company, there was no thought of taking that to the Union Trust Company of which we three were directors. Our advance in stock amounted to $95,000. We said : We have to take about half of that to help us to finance this transaction through ; we believe it is a good transaction ; we believe that money will be made out of it and we believe that by giving a bonus of stock we can get capitalists to advance us money for three years. That is all we need. In the course of the thinkings and negotiations and the like of that I simply took this position : Let us take this to the Union Trust Company of which I am the managing director and you two gentlemen are directors. Let us allow the Union Trust Company to have this proposition if they chose to take it before we offer it to any other company or capitalists. Up to this time who finds fault with me ? Had Mr. Fowler and the others the right to buy property in the Northwest Territories ? Had they the right to sell it at an advance ? Had Mr. McGillivray, Mr. Wilson and myself the right to buy property ? Had we the right to sell it again at an advance ? Where is the law against it ? Where are the ethics, where is there any objection to a course of that kind ? Now, Sir, having gone that far, we wanted to raise money in order to finance the transaction partly by money raised and partly by the sale of stock until we could get into the sale of land and thereby recoup ourselves and carry the operation along. I proposed that we should take the proposition to the Union Trust Company. We took it to the Union Trust Company and the Union Trust Company directors took it into consideration and thought it all over, these directors being in part Foresters, viz.:—Dr. Oronhyateka, myself, Mr. Wilson, Mr. McGillivray, Judge Boyd, Col. Davidson and Mr. Stevenson. We took that to the directors of the Union Trust Company and they talked it all over time after time. At last the conclusion come to by the directors was this: if we can legally do it we will go into this transaction and loan your company the money that you require. What were the terms ? We were to pay six per cent for the money, we were to mortgage all our assets as a security, we were to give them a bonus of the 237½ shares of stock. These were the terms. After looking it all over the Foresters representation on the board as well as the board outside of that, agreed to the proposition provided it was within the legal competence of the company to do so. That question was left to Judge Boyd, and Judge Boyd is a careful lawyer and a judge of great reputation. This is the report that Sir John Boyd made as to the legality of the matter. I quote from his evidence before the commission :

> The only opinion I expressed was that it was competent for the Union Trust Company to enter into that in point of law, that being an outside syndicate which had acquired what they thought a valuable asset and presented it for the consideration of the Trust Company as a thing to be gone into jointly. I said there was no objection I could see in point of law, as it was a matter initiated outside the company and brought to them for consideration. That is the sum total of my expression as to the law, and all I think I was asked for.

Now, Sir, when Judge Boyd gave us his opinion as to its legality, then the documents were put through and the loan was arranged for, as I have stated, we, giving the bonus from our stock (that is the three of us) of 237½ shares, and 100 shares were put in Doctor Oronhyatekha's hands, on the Trust Company agreeing to advance us the money at six per cent and to have the option of taking stock for the part or the whole of their advance as and when they deemed fit. Now, Sir, I was told the other night that they had no security from that time until November, 1905. I denied it then. I deny it now. The member for Carleton declared that they had no lien or security from that time until November 28, 1905. The very first document, the basis of the whole where the transaction is set forth, gives the Union Trust Company a lien on every acre of these lands and on every dollar of our assets. When the change was made in 1904 and they took their stock, the instrument drawn up at that time continued that lien upon every acre of our lands and upon every dollar of our assets for any advances they had made, and on November 28, 1905, the last document did the same.

Now, I am not a lawyer; there may be a quibble possible on this—the lands that we had and gave as security in 1903 were lands, the title of which resided in the Canadian Pacific Railway. We gave a lien and an agreement to mortgage. I am told that this is in every respect equal to a mortgage so long as the title is still in the hands of the original vendor, and nobody else can register a claim with reference to it. Now Sir, I will read that, and whilst I am reading it let me dispose of another story. This commission says—and they do it again in an underhand way—that that whole transaction took place and the minutes do not disclose the relations of Mr. Foster, Mr. McGillivray and Mr. Wilson with reference to this transaction. The minutes did not on the face of the minutes, but the document referred to in the minutes and which was the basis of the minutes is the document I hold in my hands ; and I brand as false, I brand as a lie either deliberate or unintentional, the statement, from whomsoever it may come, that that transaction was entered into without a disclosure of the position of Mr. Foster, Mr. McGillivray, and Mr. Wilson with reference to it. That document bears date the 22nd of June, 1903. There it is. All the parties to it are set out in it. Who are the parties ?

> The Hon. George E. Foster, Lieut.-Col. John A. McGillivray, and Mathew Wilson, K.C., hereinafter called the owners—of the first part.

There we are at the very head of that document The owners. The owners of what ? The owners of that property and of that stock as appears in the body of the document.

> The Union Trust Company, hereinafter called the banker, of the second part ; and Doctor Oronhyatekha, Sir John A. Boyd, Hon. Robert Rogers,, George Percival Schofield, and the said Foster, McGillivray and Wilson, hereinafter called the shareholders, of the third part; and the New Ontario Farm and Townsite Syndicate, Limited, hereinafter called the company, of the fourth part.

And this last became the Great West Land Company by a change of name. There are the four parties to this agreement. Every particular with reference to the ownership, and the rights, and the distribution of stock, and the mortgage, to be given, and the interest to be paid is set out in that document. There is a list of the whole thousand shares of stock that belonged to Messrs. Foster, McGillivray, and Wilson, and there is the disposal of it, to whom it is to go, down to the smallest and most minute particular. And yet they tell us that the conditions were not disclosed. I venture to say that no document could be found which so explicitly states the conditions signed by the parties themselves and executed, as that document does. Let us see about this lien business—and this to my hon. friend from Carleton :

First. That the said options and agreements (the dates of which are hereinbefore given), and all the right, title and interest of the owners therein, and in the lands therein mentioned, shall be assigned and conveyed by the owners, and the owners do hereby grant, assign and convey the same, to the company for the consideration to be given as hereinafter set forth.

2. That the company has agreed with each and all of the other parties hereto as a consideration therefor to make all payments required by said options and agreements, and to pay all disbursements and expenses of the owners in respect to the procuring of said options and agreements, and this agreement and to complete the purchase of said lands and to procure title thereto, and to allot or procure to be allotted fully paid-up and non-assessable shares or stock in the company in the amounts or proportions and to the parties, following : That is to say, to the owners (Foster, McGillivray and Wilson), 445 shares of stock——

And yet they say it was not disclosed :

—to Lieut.-Col. John A. McGillivray, 10 shares ; to the Hon. George E. Foster, 17½ shares ; to Mathew Wilson, 10 shares ; to the banker, 237½ shares ; to Dr. Oronhyatekha, 100 shares . to Sir John A. Boyd, 10 shares ; Hon. Robert Rogers, 10 shares ; George P. Schofield, 10 shares ; George Alexander Shaw, James Peter Murray, John Hogg Kydd, Whitford Vandusen, Henry Johnstone Dale and Wilfrid Servington Dinnick, 100 shares ; Rufus Henry Pope and George W. Fowler, 50 shares.

That is all of the stock that belonged to Wilson, McGillivray and Foster, allotted by that document, which was proceeded upon by the Union Trust Company and properly and fully endorsed and executed. Now, listen :

That the bank account of the company shall be kept with the banker (that is, the Union Trust Company) and all moneys required for the purposes aforesaid shall be borrowed from the banker and lent by the banker to the company at such reasonable current rates as the banker may demand, and the company shall give, grant and convey to the banker from time to time as security therefor and for the company's general bank account, the whole assets of the company, including the said options and agreements, and lands or rights therein mentioned, and the unpaid calls on stock now or hereafter issued, and the whole liability to the company of shareholders in the company for amounts unpaid or payable upon shares of stock in the company or otherwise as may be from time to time required by the banker.

Now, Sir, with reference to security, with reference to disclosure, with reference to the openness of the whole transaction, there is the document. Mr. Shepley had it ; the commission had it ; it is in the archives of this parliament to-day—no, this is the very document itself, which I got from the archives ; and in the face of that, the commission publish a finding which conveys to the public the idea that this transaction was surreptitiously gone into, and that the facts were not disclosed. I could go into other particulars with reference to that, but I do not think it is necessary. That is the main point of the transaction. This went on, and after a time the Union Trust Company took its stock. Then it rued taking the stock, because it began to think that it had better have the security on the lands and no partnership. It gave back the stock, and took a mortgage on the whole thing as it stands to-day. In the manipulation of that stock a disagreement arose as to the 237½ shares and the one hundred shares. That was a disagreement between other members of the Union Trust Company, and Messrs. Wilson, McGillivray and myself. It was a family matter; no one had any business with it but ourselves. It did not affect the securities in the least, because the stock was back of the lands, and was of no use or value until all the liabilities for the lands were discharged and the mortgages dissolved. And yet, Sir, will you believe it? that commission made an unpreferred charge against me that I had forged meetings, forged resolutions and forged documents in order to have this matter fixed up, so that certain stock should come to me and Mr. Wilson and Mr. McGillivray, and that certain obligations should be assumed by the Union Trust Company. Do you know, Sir, that in that report the whole of the transactions of the Canada Life Assurance Company, the monster life company of this country, occupies exactly three pages? Will you believe me also when I tell you that the little difference between some directors as to the real and ultimate destination of some shares of stock takes up exactly three pages also in that report.

But they say there was a risk in this matter. Now, I am looking straight at the Minister of the Interior—he knows the Northwest—and I look at the other members from the Northwest provinces ; and I ask them this plain question between man and man : Suppose that you had 200,000 acres of well selected lands, lying in the Saskatchewan valley, along the line of the Canadian Northern Railway, no portion of that land more than fifteen miles from a railway, the large proportion of it being within five or six miles, the railway all plotted out, the survey approved, three-quarters of the railway built, and absolutely no doubt about it being built through to Edmonton; would you consider that those 200,000 acres would be good value at $4.25 per acre? I make the assertion here, that there is no man who understands the Northwest who would look upon such a block of lands as anything but a prime security for the loan that was placed upon it. Why, there was one easy solution of the matter: Mr. Shepley simply had to call for one document in the Union Trust Company; that was the report of the examiners and valuators who went over every quarter-section of that land, described it, put the price upon it, certified to its correctness, and sent their report down to us as a company. If he had called for that document and brought it before the commission, he would have found that a loan of $4.25 per acre on that valuation was a loan of not more than 50 per cent of the value of the land. I talked the other day to a gentleman from the Northwest, one of our most enterprising farmers in that district. He said to me: I know that country, I know where that land was, and when you bought that for $4.25 an acre you were simply buying a gold dollar for half a dollar.' From all he said, there was not a shadow of doubt as to its being a secure risk, and it has worked out so that to-day not only is almost every acre of it sold, not only is the mortgage more than secured by the amount already sold and the contracts running, but the Union Trust Company will get its 6 per cent without any commission; whereas if we had loaned $100,000 on farm property, one per cent of this would have gone for commission and would have been an expense to the trust company. There was a loan without any commission, at six per cent, perfectly secured, and the trust company will have every dollar of it put back into its funds, and will get besides 237 or 337 shares of stock which will net it probably $40,000. It has had the management of the lands at 25 cents per acre, and it will scoop up probably from $30,000 to $40,000 as a profit on that transaction, and it has had also the management of our books and our funds. In all that transaction, not a dollar of money from the Union Trust Company went to Foster or McGillivray or Wilson. I made this challenge before the commission: You say that there were dual directors there. Will you tell me the law that makes it illegal for men to sit on two boards as directors and have business transaction with each other?

Where is the law? It is legal to do it. It is authorized by the law. It is more than simply not forbidden by the law. The directors have a perfect right to sit on two boards if they choose. But, you say, complications may arise. So they may. But I challenge you to go through that transaction and point out a single lack of economy, a single lack of good management, the single taking of a dollar of money or the misuse of any of the funds or anything of that kind; and if you can point that out, then mulct and punish the directors according to their desserts. But nothing such can be found in all the four years it has been going on. The nine directors of that company have simply received $180 as fees attending the meetings of the board. Not a dollar for travelling expenses, not a dollar of remuneration in any way, the funds have all been handled by the Union Trust Company, the books were kept in the Union Trust Company, the moneys paid in were paid in to the Union Trust Company and the moneys paid out were paid out by that company. In the light of these facts, where is the righteous and proper condemnation of any action we have taken in that respect? If we had surreptitiously carried our point, if we had not disclosed the situation, if we had misused the funds, if we had in any way turned them to our own advantage—but the contrary is the case. The result is that not a dollar of the Union Trust Company's money went into the pockets of those people and that in the end the Union Trust Company makes large profits thereby.

I am pretty tired and I imagine the House is pretty tired as well. I think I have taken up all the charges. If anybody in this House has any other charge to make, will he kindly mention it? Perhaps the hon. member for Wright (Mr. E. B. Devlin) has one.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN. I think the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) had better go on with his speech. If he thinks he has made a strong case, so much the better for him.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I conclude there is no charge coming from my hon. friend and I am thankful for that. Well, if I have not taken them all up, if any kind friend will pick out any more I will take them up at another time and try to dispose of them.

This raises the serious question which I propose to touch before taking my seat. This does not dispose of the commission. This is my statement very largely with some parenthetical observations thrown in. Here is the question that faces this House. Government has formed a commission and given it certain powers. That commission has acted. It has taken its evidence. It has put in its report. If my statement to-day is true, have I not the right to say to this House that it is an outrage that such a report should be put in the permanent records of the country? Have I not the right to ask this House in common honesty to me. If my statement be true, that they order that report back to that commission for amendment—for erasures, where erasures are necessary; for statements in full where partial and concealed statements are given; for a plain statement one way or the other instead of an insinuation. Do hon. members know or think what this means? If you can appoint a Royal Commission and it can travel absolutely outside of its scope and bring one person or another before it, without giving that person the right to employ counsel or legal protection of any kind ; if it can compel those it summons to declare their affairs and pass judgment upon them without stating a case or giving them the opportunity to cross-examine and bring evidence in rebuttal—if this House by its action, puts the seal of its approval upon such a proceeding, what security is there for any party in a minority in this House ? In common justice Sir, from man to man, have I not the right to ask this House to keep out of its records, where they otherwise will lie until the eternal doom is sounded, lies, misrepresentations, concealments of truth, improper allegations and inferences with reference to my character and standing as a business man ? What right has this House to perpetrate an injustice upon any one of its members. What right has this House to ask that the public money of this country shall be voted to brand me a common grafter for eternity ? I will fight it until I die. I shall protest against it as long as there is breath in my body, and I shall consider it a most damnable wrong against myself and the rights of any common human being that such a course of procedure should be carried out. I protest and I conclude my remarks for the present by this protest.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The matter under discussion is one in which the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Foster) is so vitally interested that I am sure no one can have failed to listen to him with feelings of sympathy and of extenuation, even if at times the language in which he clothed his ideas seemed rather to exceed the limits of propriety. He has thought it necessary to give a statement of the case from his standpoint, and in the course of that statement has made repeated reflections regarding the intentions of the commission, especially of the chairman of the commission and the gentleman who conducted the inquiry. These reflections call at least for notice and invite attention to the evidence which came before the commissioners and the facts disclosed in that inquiry. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) took exception, at the outset, to an investigation into what he terms private matters and private business in which only he and his associates were concerned. Now the scope of the inquiry of this commission, it is well we should first of all consider. These gentlemen were by order in council, for reasons of public importance constituted a commission for the purpose of general inquiry into all matters relating to the very important subject of life insurance in Canada. The reasons for their appointment were well known and, I am sure commended themselves to every man in this House, to every business man in this country, to every one interested in the important subject of life insurance throughout the whole Dominion. Their mandate from the Governor in Council was :

1. To inquire into,

(a) The general subject of life insurance and life insurance systems in Canada.

(b) The operations of the various companies chartered by the parliament of Canada, or by any province and licensed under the Insurance Act, transacting life insurance in Canada, including expenses of management, investment of funds, and other allied questions.

Under these circumstances it might very naturally happen—it apparently has happened in the view of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster)—that transactions which he had come to regard as private matters of his own, as matters in which no one else had the least interest, were necessarily inquired of by this commission, just as many a similar matter in regard to which he was not interested, but in regard to which other witnesses appearing before the commission had an interest, were similarly inquired of by that body. The hon. gentleman seeks by every word he has uttered to convey the impression to this House and to the country, that the commission, from the moment of its organization, or, at all events, from the moment when it took up the investigation of the affairs of the insurance body with which he was more or less identified, was animated by some desire to secure political advantage and was conducting this inquiry in a manner different from that which previously it had followed. We have, not long since, heard in another place, a gentleman on the other side of politics in this country who thinks he has an equal grievance against the action of this commission and who complains with equal vigour that this commission, in its report upon him and upon his company, has done him a very great injustice. Well, Mr. Chairman, it has been conceded to be the inalienable right of any practising solicitor, if the decision of a case goes against him, to step outside the court room and have twenty-four hours wherein to revile the judge. If that be the privilege of a solicitor who has lost his cause, by so much the more it is to be assumed to be the privilege of the client himself, and much ought to be forgiven the client who, suffering from the result of a decision, abuses it, as unjust, as unfounded and as having been the result simply of prejudice or ill humour. The gentlemen who composed this commission were men of prominence, men of standing, men of reputation in this country. The Chairman who has been singled out especially by the hon. gentleman, (Mr. Foster), and who has been apostrophized by name more than one in the course of the hon. gentleman's remarks this afternoon, is a man born in this country, who has lived his whole life in the county of Carleton or in the city of Ottawa, who is known, perhaps, to the majority of the members of this House personally, and certainly known well and widely, not merely in this city and throughout this section, but throughout the province of Ontario from end to end.

Mr. BENNETT. West Elgin.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I hear my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) repeating an observation which he made at greater length on a previous occasion with reference to West Elgin. And I have no objection, in that connection, to the interruption, because my hon. friend from East Simcoe, when making the observation, must not forget that the colleague of Judge MacTavish in the very investigation to which he refers,—which colleague agreed entirely with the results to which Judge MacTavish appended his name—was Judge Morgan, of the city of Toronto, whose political predilections, before his appointment to the bench put an end to political activity on his part, were, and were well known to be, perfectly in accord with those of the hon. member for East Simcoe.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the hon. minister (Mr. Aylesworth) allow a question ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. If the question has any relevancy.

Mr. BENNETT. Why was not Judge Morgan promoted to the senior judgeship of the county of York ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. But I am not here to discuss the political affinities which judges held before their appointments to the bench. Fortunately, in this country, our judges, with, I think I may safely say, no exception that could be pointed to with propriety, are men of such standing in the communities where they are known, are men of such uprightness and probity of character, that they need no defence at my hands or at the hands of any other persons. The acceptance by a judge of any position such as the chairmanship of this commission necessarily was,—nay, more, the acceptance of any duty of a judicial character in which by possibility any questions of a political nature may come to be involved means the undertaking by the judge of responsibility of a very serious nature. I am old enough to remember, when, as a result of the struggles of the reform party in the province of Ontario and the Dominion of Canada, an end was put to what previously had been the state of things with reference to the trial of controverted elections—when that which previously in the history of the parliaments of Canada had been the work of partisan committees was referred to the courts of the country, and when the outcry was raised by those who opposed the measure that it meant subjecting the judges of Canada to be dragged in the dirt of political warfare and rendering them liable to the censure and attacks of political antagonists whom, it might be said, they had injured or wronged by their decisions.

We have had over thirty years' experience in the trial of controverted elections before judges instead of before committees of parliament, and I think it is a creditable thing, alike to the judiciary and to the people of Canada generally, that with but few exceptions the decisions of the judges in the most intensely critical questions of political warfare have been received by the people of this country as honestly and rightly made. If judges can be entrusted with the important duty of deciding upon the right of a member to sit in this House, and if the people of this country, irrespective of their political inclinations, honestly credit to the judges of the land the intention to do what is right regardless of any political preferences, those judges may have had prior to their appointment to the bench, I should think that we might, and I do think that the people of this country will credit Judge MacTavish, in the matter of this inquiry into insurance affairs in Canada, with the honest intention to do his duty without fear, favour, partiality or affection.

So much has been said with reference to the course of the inquiry, and such an elaborate effort has been made to represent this commission as though it had been a prosecution, that it is at least worth the time it will take to remind hon. gentlemen in this House of the nature of the inquiry, and what it was that that commission had to undertake from the day of its appointment. It was to investigate the operations and the transactions and the investments of every life insurance company doing business within Canada, and its report shows that in the course of this inquiry it has dealt with some twenty-seven or twenty-eight different insurance companies, spending days upon the investigation of the affairs of each, and going into those business transactions of the different insurance companies and of their subsidiary companies with the greatest of care and with the greatest of pains. Upon any such inquiry, of necessity numerous witnesses are called. Upon any such investigations there will be dozens, scores, in this case there were many times that number of different witnesses each interested, vitally, no doubt, in his own mind, in the affairs in regard to which he was being examined, each possibly fully possessed of the view that his most private matters were being dragged into the light of day by the inquiries that were put to him.

This commission was appointed in the public interest. It was for the general good of the people of this country that an investigation of this character should be had and time taken in the investigation. That commission occupied literally a position not differing in principle from that of a coroner and coroner's jury engaged in an investigation into the possibility of some occurence which might necessarily be brought afterwards before the courts of the land for adjudication. Upon any investigation of that character there is in no sense a prosecution. There was in no sense a prosecution in this case; there was investigation, that was a necessity; there was the calling of witnesses, that was a necessity. In most instances one is pleased to see that the witnesses called gave their information freely, produced their papers readily, did not resist the process of law, or make it necessary to invoke the powers of the commission. Had it been so in all cases, the labours of the commission would have been lightened, and the long delay which has been referred to so feelingly by the hon. gentleman who has spoken this afternoon as affecting himself personally, would have been one that he never would have been subjected to.

He complains that no charges against him were formulated, that he was being put upon his trial without having the advantage of knowing whereof he was charged. Was he in any different position from any other person who was connected with an insurance company which was being investigated by that commission? Was he in any special position of difficulty, or in any way set apart in that regard? No charges were formulated in any instance, and for the very good reason that that was not the office or purpose of the commission. The whole business of the commission was to investigate, the whole business of the commission was to inquire and to find out and to report to His Excellency what the facts were in regard to the matters they were instructed to ascertain. There were no charges formulated against him! Certainly there were not, there were no charges formulated against anybody; there was simply an inquiry into the transactions and operations of a company with which he happened to be associated, and there was the reporting to His Excellency of the facts which this investigation on the part of the commission brought to notice.

He complains that there was no counsel permitted to him. No witness who attends a court goes accompanied by counsel. In any court that may be named a witness goes to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. He needs no counsel. If his interests are in anyway touched, he can at once point out to the court his position and the court protects him. But in the present instance the hon. gentleman came before this commission not quite in the naked, unattended shape of which he speaks. He came and was accompanied for two weeks or more before he entered the witness-box by a counsel of his own selection. Mr. Nesbitt goes before the commission announcing himself as the counsel for the hon. gentleman, and Mr. Nesbitt participates with freedom in the discussions which took place before the commission, from time to time, as to the course which they should take in their investigation. Complaint is made that Mr. Nesbitt was not allowed to question the hon. gentleman, that he was not allowed to call witnesses on his own behalf. I was rather surprised, I may say, to hear that charge levelled against the commission to-day. I was particularly surprised at it, because I had before me, not simply the language which the hon. gentleman had used when before the commission at the end of the statement he made to the commission, but I was surprised indeed to hear or to have it supposed that if any evidence whatever which could bear upon the subject-matter of the inquiry had been called before the commission or had in any way been brought to their notice, the commissioners had expressed the slightest unwillingness to hear it. Is it propounded to-day that any suggestion was made to the commission that somebody else could give evidence bearing on the matter, and that the commission refused to hear this witness? The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), some days ago, in this House, complained that he had not been called before the commission. I am not aware that there was any subject in connection with the inquiry upon which the commission was engaged in regard to which the hon. gentleman could have given evidence that would have thrown light upon the subject of the inquiry.

Mr. BENNETT. Then, may I ask why the commissioners gratuitously dragged my name into it?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I answer to the hon. gentleman that his name has not been gratuitously dragged into the matter. I answer the hon. gentleman that if his name appears throughout these proceedings there is nothing gratuitous about it, and it is simply the result of his own management of his own business affairs. I have simply to refer to the evidence in this connection, to demonstrate what I have said in reference to the position which the hon. member for North Toronto took before the commission and to show the language which he at that time used, and, speaking as he then did while the matter was fresh before him, while there was an opportunity for the calling of other witnesses, if there were any other witnesses to be called, it would seem to me his language would be of special and peculiar importance.—I find at page 2665 of the evidence, given on the 10th day of October last, the very last thing that occurred as the hon. gentleman was leaving the witness box after having been under examination on four different days, that Mr. Shepley asked him if there was anything further that he could say which would throw light upon the matter. The hon. gentleman was being accorded a privilege, because it was a privilege, asked for as such and recognized as such by himself, of taking time to consider, and after he had so taken time to consider to make to the commission and through the commission to this House and to this country a statement of his own, uninterrupted by questions, a statement which might set his own case before the people of this country and before the commission for consideration, and the hon. gentleman asking that privilege and being readily granted it by the commission, it being acceded to entirely by counsel conducting the investigation, and retiring for the purpose of collecting his thoughts in order that during the afternoon of the same day or at some later time he might make his statement, he was asked by Mr. Shepley whether his statement would relate to any documents that he would produce before the commission and he answered :

No. I am not going to bring any new matter before you.

Q. Is there in existence and in your possession anything throwing light upon the matters we have been examining and that we have not seen ?—A. No, you have searched me right through.

Accordingly, the hon. gentleman having left the witness box with that statement, while he was still under oath, in the afternoon of the same day, returned before the commission and occupied some hours apparently.

Mr. FOSTER. No, no. I beg to ask my hon. friend to allow me to interrupt him. I took fifteen or twenty minutes at the very outside.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am corrected as to the time. Not having been there I was only judging by the number of pages that the hon. gentleman filled. But, the hon. gentleman having put before the commission his full statement of the facts of the case, in arguing his case before them, concludes with these words which I read with some astonishment in view of what we have heard to-day :

I thank you, your honour, for allowing me to make this statement, and I do not think that I shall leave this box without acknowledging your unvarying courtesy to me ; though I have sometimes had the audacity to question your ruling, it has been on a question of principle, and nothing personal of course. I do not think I ought to leave either without acknowledging that so far as Mr. Shepley is concerned he has treated me with unvarying courtesy, and all who have been associated with him, the officers and others, have been more than kind.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The hon. gentleman who addressed the House this afternoon devoted a great deal of time to a discussion of the methods of the commission, and had special reference to the course of the investigation so far as it concerned the Independent Order of Foresters, and the Union Trust Company so identified with that body. And his complaint throughout seemed directed to an effort to establish, that some different course had been pursued in the investigation with reference to that order than with reference to any of the other insurance companies or bodies which had fallen to be investigated by the commission. And especially with reference to matters personal, he complained bitterly that although he had been subpœnaed some time in September, and had been in attendance on the commission from day to day, he was not called to the witness box until the 3rd day of October following. Well, Sir, every practising lawyer and every one who has had any business experience of legal investigations or of the course of legal proceedings must be aware that but one witness can be examined at a time, and that witnesses must be taken in some order, and the order in which witnesses are called is a matter which, in the conduct of any legal proceeding, must of necessity be left in the hands of the counsel conducting the investigation. In this case, the affairs of the Independent Order of Foresters began to be inquired into on the 13th day of September. The natural person to whom resort in ordinary course would first be had for the purposes of information in connection with that body, was the one man who throughout the whole course of the existence of that institution had been identified with it; its supreme officer, Doctor Oronyhatekha. And Doctor Oronyhatekha was accordingly the first witness put in the box; he was examined on September 13, his examination continued from that time forward from day to day, until on September 24, the names of Mr. Stevenson and of Mr. Foster were called. Mr. Stevenson's examination proceeded on the 25th and 26th ; on the 26th the short testimony, on collateral matters to a large extent, of three other witnesses was taken, and the commission then took up the consideration for parts of two days of the affairs of the Order known as the Woodmen of the World, simply because the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) under subpoena for that date was not in attendance, and did not attend for a week later. After Mr. Lefurgey's evidence had been given, Mr. Foster having on the 1st of September made his protest, as he called it, against the delay in calling him, his evidence was taken at the three following sittings of the commission. In that connection, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), this afternoon referred, in language which was probably not meant to be an exact quotation, which was probably meant to be a paraphrase, but which was his representation of the relations which apparently he would wish to have it supposed existed between the honoured chairman of the commission, and the counsel who was conducting the investigation; and for the purpose apparently of conveying that impression, he professed to be quoting the words of Mr. Shepley, in answer to the protest he had addressed to the commission because he was not sooner called, and he described Mr. Shepley as saying: Well, judge, you know we have not got those books yet. Knowing Mr. Shepley as I do, knowing him for thirty years and more, knowing His Honour Judge McTavish as I do for perhaps an equal length of time, and knowing something by actual practical experience of the relations which ordinarily subsist in the courts of this country between judges on the bench and counsel at the bar, I was astonished to hear such words coming from the hon. member as representing the actual words of counsel upon that occasion. And with some difficulty I have found the passage in the evidence, I have found exactly what took place, and I ask, Sir, your kind attention to it as recorded by the stenographer. After the conclusion of the proceedings on that day. Mr. Shepley said, page 2520:

Your honours are aware from the discussion that has taken place elsewhere, of the difficulty we had in that regard to proceeding further at this moment; and I have also told your honours, in connection with Mr. Nesbitt's attendance here, that I learned last night of his being unable to be here, and while I could go on with some matters, yet I would rather not because I feel that Mr. Foster is interested in them, and Mr. Nesbitt wants to be here, of course, when anything further with regard to Mr. Foster is taken up.

Mr. FOSTER. As far as I am concerned I am quite willing to go into the box now and make a statement with regard to the Great West Land Company's transactions from beginning to end.

Mr. SHEPLEY. I would not accede to that, in view of what the arrangement was that I made with Mr. Nesbitt.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish also to say that I do not think I ought to be kept any longer under this condition of things, with one side of the case going out to the public, prosecuted by the prosecutor, taken in the rear by others, and the public forming a judgment upon a one-sided view of the case. From the 5th of last month——

He was speaking on the 1st of October:

From the fifth of last month I have been under subpoena, from the time court opened here I have been in attendance, all my own business is gone and I wish to be heard just as soon as I can possibly be heard; and I do not want too much cruelty thrown in the way of it.

Mr. SHEPLEY. I can only disclaim any intention of being cruel to anybody, and I disclaim the position of prosecutor. I am not a prosecutor.

Judge MacTavish. We will do the best we can, Mr. Foster, to see that no injustice is done to any person, but we must proceed in order. Then you are not ready with anything further this afternoon.

Mr. AYLESWORTH.

This last remark was apparently addressed to Mr. Shepley and Mr. Shepley then said:

Mr. SHEPLEY. No; your honour quite understands the position about the bank books.

And that is represented to this committee as being a remark by Mr. Shepley, counsel at the bar, to the presiding judge upon the bench: Well, judge, you know we have not got those books yet. It is but a sample, it is but a specimen of the utter unfairness to gentlemen who were not here to defend themselves, which has been exhibited by the hon. gentleman this afternoon throughout the course of his remarks.

With regard to this whole investigation so far as the Independent Order of Foresters is concerned, let me remind you, Sir, of the position in which that organization stood. This commission was charged with the duty of a general investigation into the affairs of life insurance companies in this country, and there fell to be examined by them some twenty-seven or twenty-eight different companies. Their work, beginning as early as the month of April in last year, was continued at intervals during April, during May, during a portion of the month of June; it was resumed in September, continued in October, and brought to a conclusion so far as the taking of evidence was concerned in November. Of the different insurance bodies whose affairs had to be investigated those of a fraternal nature were of course of very large importance. There were four fraternal organizations of particular consequence; there was the council of the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association, there was the Commercial Travellers Mutual Benefit Society, there was the Canadian Order of the Woodmen of the World, and there was the Supreme Court of the Independent Order of Foresters. Let me ask your attention to the comparative importance, so far as insurance business is concerned, of these different organizations, and that is a matter of consequence to bear in mind here when we have a parallel drawn between the number of pages even, which this report of the commission contains in regard to the affairs of the Foresters, and the number of pages that are concerned with the affairs of some other organization.

Of these four principal fraternal societies that were investigated by this commission, the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association of Canada had some 19,750 policies, the Commercial Travellers' Mutual Benefit Society some 1,878, and the Canadian Order of the Woodmen of the World, 10,438, while the Independent Order of Foresters presented itself before the commission with a record of 233,293 policies in force. In a comparison between the amount of business done by the other fraternal organizations with the amount outstanding on the part of the Foresters, if you consider the monetary amount of these policies, the contrast is specially marked. The Catholic Mutual Benefit Association had outstanding $26,393,000 of insurance, the Commercial Travellers, $1,876,000, and the Canadian Order of Woodmen, $11,499,000, an aggregate for the three of something less than $40,000,000, while the Independent Order of Foresters had outstanding no less than $248,800,000 of insurance. With affairs of that magnitude to investigate, with transactions of the character which have been detailed to-day, with complications of subsidiary companies such as those described, is it at all remarkable that the greater part of the month of September and a portion of the month of October were necessarily occupied by the sittings of the commission in investigating those affairs? And is it in such circumstances fair ground of attack upon this commission and upon the counsel who conducted the investigation before it, that Mr. Foster was not the first witness put into the box when the affairs of that order came on for investigation? The Foresters were by far the most important of all the different fraternal organizations whose affairs were examined into, and in many respects the most important of all the insurance companies whose tranasactions were considered by this commission. There was, as I have already indicated, very considerable difficulty in getting at the facts which are now spread upon the evidence for the perusal of anybody who cares to examine that evidence, with regard to the transactions and affairs of this association. There was the contention made by counsel for the body, I suppose—for Mr. Foster, as it was stated—by Mr. Nesbitt, I mean—that so long as the two companies, one known as the Order of Foresters and the other as the Union Trust Company, were separate entities, there could be no investigation into the affairs of the Union Trust Company, and the commission must at once cease to examine into the investments of the Independent Order of Foresters upon it appearing that they had handed their funds over for investment to some other corporate body. That contention was insisted upon to the utmost. Objection was made in the most strenuous possible manner to the production of the books of the Great West Land Company or the books of any other collateral organization—to the production before the commission for the purposes of investigation of books which contained the only record of facts and circumstances which now turn out, when those books are seen, to be of the utmost value and consequence. There had been in the course of the previous proceedings, in the investigation of other insurance companies, exactly the same contention made and exactly the same ruling by the commissioners. In the case of the Manufacturers' Life, the books of the Prudential Securities Company, the books of the Canadian Securities Company, and the books of Messrs. Pellatt & Pellatt, were compelled to be produced, were examined at their offices, and evidence of their contents was given before the commission. In the case of the Canada Life Assurance Company, the books of the Central Canada Loan and Savings Company and the books of the Dominion Securities Corporation were examined; the officers were called upon to produce the books and give evidence in respect to the securities in which the funds of the Canada Life were invested. In the case of the Union Life Assurance Company, the books of the National Agency Company were ordered to be produced, and were fully examined and evidence in regard to them was given before the commission. In the case of the Continental Life Insurance Company, the books of the Ontario Securities Company were produced and their contents displayed before the commission. This contention had before September been made on the part of those different companies, subsidiary to insurance companies whose affairs were under investigation. The views of the commissioners had been stated, their ruling had been pronounced; but none the less, at the opening of the investigation into the affairs of the Union Trust Company on the 12th day of September, and before the evidence had been taken, an elaborate argument, reported at length at page 2152 and following pages of the evidence was made by Mr. Nesbitt and other counsel to prevent the books of this subsidiary organization from being brought before the commission; and, that it may be made apparent to any one who is willing to judge impartially of the course which this commission has taken throughout the whole investigation, I point to the circumstance that, at the conclusion of the discussion, Mr. I. F. Hellmuth, the counsel appointed by the present Ontario government to watch the proceedings before that commission, expressed himself in these words to the commissioners in regard to their ruling—I read from page 2158 of the proceedings:

> I thought your honours had, as my learned friend, Mr. Shepley, had said, decided when other companies came up for investigation that where the funds or money of an insurance company were found in the hands of any other company, or where there was a community of interest even in the directorate of an insurance company and the directorate of a trust company, they could be gone into, and I think I remember some companies whose affairs were pretty well gone into before this commission. I had assumed your honours had ruled upon that. I am not familiar with the facts in regard to this matter at all, I don't know how they will appear, and I should have thought that if it had been shown that the Union Trust Company, as stated by my learned friend, Mr. Shepley, had been really a creature of the Foresters, created by them for the purpose of investing their funds, not directly, but indirectly, an investigation into the investments made by such creature would be as proper as an investigation into the investments made by the creator of the creature.

In the circumstances, with counsel of the eminence at the bar of Mr. Hellmuth, with a man of the political affinities which he is well known to possess, a man appointed by the present government of Ontario to represent their interests and the interests of the public before this commission, announcing his views at the time in such unmistakeable language as this, surely it is late to-day to make the argument before this House or in this country that any special degree of hardship or of cruelty was exhibited by the commission with regard to the Order of Foresters, with regard to the Union Trust Company, its creature and its alter ego, or with regard to the conduct of the manager of that Union Trust Company, who has addressed this committee this afternoon.

He has presented his case before this committee upon the footing that the Union Trust Company was a different entity from that of the Independent Order of Foresters, that he is in no sense accountable to the Order of Foresters as being in their employment or handling their money, that everything which was investigated by this commission regarding the transactions to which he has adverted was simply private business in which only he and his immediate employers the Union Trust Company were concerned, that of necessity invites attention to the creation of the Union Trust Company, to its character and to the interest which the Independent Order of Foresters had in it.

Now I do not know whether or not I correctly understood the hon. gentleman this afternoon, but I certainly thought he meant to convey the impression that personally he had nothing to do with the formation of the Union Trust Company, that he went to it under engagement of employment in the early part or about the middle of the year 1901, going to it as a company already in existence and operation and with the formation of which he had no concern. I can only say that I find among the papers on file produced before the commission one or two documents.

Mr. FOSTER. I might shorten the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Aylesworth) if he will allow me the opportunity of stating what I thought I had said and what I meant to say. As far as regards the inception of the Union Trust Company and the determination to form it and all that, I had nothing to do and was not called upon until that was decided. Afterwards I did assist with my advice and suggestion regarding the directorate and the capitalization of that company in the carrying out of its organization.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The statement the hon. gentleman has just made will hardly accord with a letter from which I am about to read an extract, a letter dated the 30th of April, 1901, addressed to Dr. Oronhyatekha, filed as exhibit No. 461. In this letter, after an opening paragraph, the writer proceeds to say :

I have thought carefully over the matter from my own standpoint and from that of the company and of the order of which you are the head, and its large and steadily increasing financial interests which necessitate great care and responsibility in the matter of investments. It seems to me that a trust company, with a small paid-up capital, and depending alone on the general field for its business, would require many years and much hard work to place itself in position to return any considerable profits to its shareholders. The field is not a wide one and is pretty well occupied by older and well established companies. The unfortunate history and present position of the Provincial Trust Company entails a legacy of distrust and mismanagement which it would be unwise to attempt to shoulder. Nothing but a complete severance of connection in name and reality would, it seems to me, give a fair chance to its successor.

Later on in the same letter, the writer says :

This, of course, you will take as a mere suggestion on my part and prompted in some degree in the interest of the new company. If these arrangements can be made :

1. For the establishment of a company distinct in name and entirely disassociated from the bad history of the old company, to take over its stock and to provide for a strong paid-up capital.

2. For making this new company the medium of investing the surplus funds of the Independent Order of Foresters under guarantee of a fixed rate of interest, and

3. For assuring a strong and representative board of directors for the new company.

I would be willing, with the freedom of action given in your former conversation with me in Ottawa, to undertake the work and throw what energy and influence I can command into its prosecution.

The language I have just read shows that, at all events at the time of writing that letter, the 30th of April, 1901, the establishment of the Trust Company, which was then contemplated, was in no sense an accomplished fact, but was the very thing which was under discussion between the writer of that letter, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and Dr. Oronhyatekha.

In a subsequent letter the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) alluded to the actual formation of the company, on the 27th of May, 1901. The letter is filed as exhibit No. 463, written by the hon. gentleman to the same Dr. Oronhyatekha, in which he discusses the proposed new company at considerable length, and in that letter I find this language :

The chief source of revenue for the new company must be found in the profits we can make in the investment of funds with a guarantee of interest and principal. For a stable guaranteed investment a moderate rate of interest can be taken, compensated as it is by certainty of payment. It is in this respect that the new company, in reality controlled by the Foresters, has one of its greatest opportunities. It can do a real service as an investing agency and collecting agency for the surplus of the order, and at the same time a fairly profitable business for its shareholders who will in the main be the order. I have no doubt you have been thinking over the rate of interest the company should guarantee, and I hope you have been able to come to the conclusion that a four per cent basis would be a fair one for the Foresters, accompanied as it would be with absolute security.

But whilst in reality the trust company will be controlled by the Foresters, it is not best that that point should be emphasized to the public, but rather the contrary.

Following the letters of the character I have referred to, written in April and May, 1901, I find the certificate of subscription for stock in the Union Trust Company dated 22nd of November following, exhibit No. 466, and signed by the late Judge McDougall as director and Geo. E. Foster as general manager, in which the capital stock of the Union Trust Company is set out. Now we were given to understand this afternoon that this company was an altogether separate organization, in regard to which the funds of the Foresters, once loaned, might be dealt with as freely by that trust company as any bank might deal with the moneys of its depositors. But if we look at the articles of incorporation and at the circumstances under which that company was brought into existence, we find in the certificate to which I have referred, over the signature of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), the statement that out of $2,000,000 capital stock, no less a sum than $1,996,000 was the property of the Independent Order of Foresters. Let me ask you to consider exactly the significance of those figures. They establish literally this state of things, that the capital stock of that company and the money invested in it consisted of $499 of the Foresters money to every one dollar of anybody else's. Out of every $500 of capital stock in that company, some individual held one dollar and the Forresters $499. In that state of facts, the language of Mr. Hellmuth, to which I have already adverted, when he called the Union Trust Company simply the creature of its creator is surely thoroughly justified.

The money of the Independent Order of Foresters was the product of subscriptions or insurance premiums paid to that order by its members, or, if you choose to call them so, its policy-holders. I think I am safe in saying that these were, in the main, people of small means, people taking a comparatively small amount of life insurance in a fraternal organization, by reason of the circumstance that it is a type of insurance company in which insurance was supposed to be given at cost, and in which, therefore, premiums were light and suited to the man of small means. The moneys so accumulated from hundreds of thousands of people who could ill afford to lose, it may be, even the small amount which month by month they were paying into the treasury of the order, was literally money laid up by many an honest hard working man to provide a measure of support for widow and children after he was gone. The law of our country wisely throws about the funds of any such order many restrictions as to the nature of their investments. We find, with regard to all insurance companies, restrictions in the law of the nature to which I allude. But, if an insurance company, finding itself possessed of millions chooses to regard the useful restrictions which the law has cast about its method of investment as unduly hampering the freedom of its operations, it is a simple and easy thing to set at naught all the efforts and all the wisdom of the legislature by the simple plan of forming a so-called trust company which shall be to all practical intents and purposes another name for the insurance company itself, every restraint and every safeguard may at will be cast to the winds, and there will be the same freedom of investment for these companies as in the speculations of this, that or the other man in sawmill property or in wild lands in the Northwest or elsewhere. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) took occasion to state, as he has on previous occasions, and rather as though pluming himself on the fact, that he was not a lawyer, and he tells us that lawyers indulge in quibbling and subterfuge. But I want to know by what other word we can fitly describe the operation of creating this trust company for the purpose of taking over, in consideration of its stock, $1,996,000 of the Foresters' money and for investing the remainder of their surplus profits, if it is not to be considered the actual money of the Foresters while in the hands of the trust company. The certificate of incorporation, which I have already mentioned, proceeds to set out that the other shareholders in this company, the men who had put actual money into it to constitute the $4,000 out of the $2,000,000 I have mentioned were Mr. Mathew Wilson, Colonel J. I. Davidson, Hon. George E. Foster and His Honour Judge Joseph E. McDougall. These four put into that company $1,000 each, as against the large sum to which I have referred—altogether they contributed $1 out of every $500, and the Foresters contributed the other $499.

All the said shares of capital stock, except the shares subscribed by His Honour Judge McDougall, Mr. Wilson, Col. Davidson and Hon. Mr. Foster, were subscribed for on behalf of and in trust for the Supreme Court of the Independent Order of Foresters.

That is the statement of the certificate. And the evidence on that point being uncontradicted, the facts being indubitable, I open the inquiry into the evidence that has been taken here and into the circumstances that have been discussed this afternoon from the standpoint that the money which the Union Trust Company had from its beginning was, for all practical intents and purposes the money of the Independent Order of Foresters, and nobody else. Under these circumstances, would it not have been trifling with the commission, would it not have been trifling with this House and the country, if the contention which was made last fall and which was repeated here to-day in our hearing, were to prevail, and if, upon the mere circumstance appearing that these moneys were in the hands of the trust company, there should be an end of all investigation into the affairs of the Foresters?

Now, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) this afternoon started upon his statement of events, with the position that in no sense had he ever put in peril any of the money of the Order of Foresters. I do not know whether he meant that statement in the sense that the money which he advanced upon the transactions which have been mentioned was not the money of the Foresters but the money of the Union Trust Company, or whether he meant that these investments have never imperilled any money at all. If the latter was his intention, then I would beg with all deference and with all due respect to take direct issue. These moneys, I submit, were literally imperilled. Success, he tells us, has crowned the investments, and there has been, as a result of these operations, profits in the five years of more than half a million of dollars; and because these investments have turned out so satisfactorily, because the prices of lands in the Northwest and in the new provinces have gone up by leaps and bounds, these investments have been successful, these moneys were never imperilled and no one ought to complain. Well, Sir, I am not a Forester. I have not the right to complain; it is not a matter that concerns me personally. But if I were interested as a member of the order, I think I should have every right to complain of what has taken place. Only twelve months ago, a gentleman—one thought to be a gentleman—held in honour by those who knew him, the respected manager of what was then a respected bank in this country, was engaging in a career of investment, or speculation, whichever you choose to call it, in the stocks of established companies.

This transaction resulted disastrously, there was no success there, there was abject failure and the wreck and ruin of the institution of which he was manager and the loss to many an honest man and many a poor widow and fatherless child, of everything on which they depended for the remainder of their lives. These moneys were imperilled; the manager who so imperilled these moneys and who failed is to-day in the position we all know. But in this case, moneys which were even more sacredly impressed with the trust of funds which were to provide for the widow and for the orphan are sunk in the purchase of unimproved lands in the new provinces of Canada, which if they happen to go up in price will produce a return to those who have put their money in, while on the other hand, if they become dead stock in the market, will mean the loss of every dollar that is invested and will result as disastrously as the similar efforts of the manager of the Ontario Bank have resulted in the last few months. That is what I would call imperilling funds; that is what I would call imperilling trust funds, and most assuredly that is not the investment of trust funds in the way contemplated by the statutes of the country.

The moneys which the Union Trust Company had in hand to be dealt with were first the $2,000,000 to which I have referred as the proceeds of their stock. They issued their stock and they received in exchange the face value of it—I do not know whether it was sold at a premium or not—but they received in exchange so much cash which was theirs to deal with. Their only shareholders were those I have mentioned and the money they had in hand as return for their stock was substantially in whole the money of the Independent Order of Foresters. But with regard to the remainder of the moneys which that company held for investment, it received them under an agreement entered into on the 2nd day of September, 1901, between the Independent Order of Foresters on the one part and the Union Trust Company on the other, and that agreement witnesses that the Foresters agreed with the trust company to constitute the trust company its agent for the investment from time to time of so much of the surplus cash funds of the supreme court as might remain uninvested and agreed with the trust company to provide for such purposes the surplus cash funds aforesaid, as in the manner afterwards described in the document and it then proceeds to provide:

> Such funds shall be invested and reinvested by the trust company in the name of the Supreme Court of the Independent Order of Foresters but only in and upon such securities as the Supreme Court is authorized by its Act of incorporation and amendments thereto, and the Insurance Act of Canada and amendments thereto, to invest the surplus funds of the order in.

As to every part, then, of the Foresters' money which was in the hands of the trust company for investment, other at any rate than the Foresters money represented by the $2,000,000 capital stock put into that company at its formation, there was the distinct stipulation and the distinct trust imposed upon those funds that they were to be invested for the benefit of the Foresters and only in such securities as the laws of this country permitted an insurance company to invest in. In these circumstances it does seem rather a startling proposition to hear that the Union Trust Company was perfectly free as any individual might be to use its funds as its manager or as its directors might, in their own good judgment see fit. Its funds came, as is manifest from the Foresters and from nobody else and that company incorporated upon the Foresters money, incorporated to invest the Foresters money and receiving, under this agreement of September, 1901, the whole surplus funds of the Foresters to invest, was but another name for the Foresters and took those moneys if not upon the express, certainly upon the implied trust that they would deal with them in no other way than the Foresters themselves could by law handle their money. In that position of matters it is a circumstance not only proper to be investigated by the commission, and a circumstance in regard to which the commission could not help but investigate, but a circumstance, I respectfully submit to this committee, fully justifying the observations of the commission in regard to it, that in the course of the investment in lands in the Northwest which were made by the manager of the Union Trust Company, commissions were paid in cash by that company to its manager. The moneys which constituted those commissions, whether they were large in amount or whether comparatively they were trifling, were part of the general trust funds, which were paid into the hands of that body for investment under the terms I have described. They were held by that company upon that trust; they ought not to have been, they had no right to be diverted from that purpose to any other whatever. It has been said here that in regard to the earlier of these two commissions that have been mentioned there was a dividing of the amount among the four men who constituted the syndicate and that instead of it being $5,000 that went as commission to the personal benefit of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) it was but one-quarter of that sum, that he ought not to be condemned in this regard because he had not taken $5,000 but had taken only $1,250. There is no doubt a substantial difference in the amounts but is there any, the slightest, difference in the principle ? I am quite sure the hon. gentleman would not wish to be understood as so contending and he has met, so far as it was possible upon the facts to meet this statement of the circumstances which appears in the report of the commission, fairly and squarely upon the ground that in this regard as in regard to all the other transactions mentioned, there was nothing worthy of condemnation, there was nothing worthy even of remark. Well now, in that respect one is necessarily moved to call to mind the circumstance that the question whether or not commissions should under any circumstances, be received by the officials or employees of the Union Trust Company had, at a very early period in its history, received the attention of its directors. As early as December, 1901 we find upon the minutes of the company the resolution which is extracted in the report of the commission at page 137 :

> That it is a very unsafe and unwise practice that any one employed by them should receive a commission from the opposite side, and the adoption of any such principle is utterly opposed to the universal practice.

As I have said, no one, I presume, would for a moment, dispute the correctness of that general principle. At all events, the hon. gentleman himself, in his testimony before the commission, was perfectly frank and outspoken in his acquiescence in that view of the duties of any person in the employment of the company represented.

Mr. FOSTER. You need not look it up. That is quite true. I admit that.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. At page 2635 and 2636 the testimony on the subject will be found. It is referred to, though not set out at length, in the report of the commissioners and as the hon. gentleman says just now one need not labour that point. He gives to it his full and strict adherence. It is, to say the least of it, unfortunate that when these transactions were in actual operation and that within eighteen months of the passage of the resolution of this board to which I have referred the fact of the presence on the minute-book of the company of that resolution seems momentarily to have been lost sight of. It stands as a conceded thing that the payment of $5,000 was, in fact, made to the hon. gentleman himself, that it was made by a cheque of his own company, the Union Trust Company, a cheque, which doubtless could not have been issued without his personal knowledge, and in regard to which it is quite probable the ordinary course of business of the company would require his personal signature. That cheque is issued expressly as one-half of the commission of $10,000 which was being paid by the owners of the property then being purchased by the company and is recorded as and being exactly what it purports to be—a commission of $5,000 upon the transaction. It is spoken of before the commission as it has been spoken of to-day as a reduction in the price which was being paid for the lands. If so it is unfortunate again that the purchaser of the land was not receiving the benefit of it. Any reduction in the price as between a seller and a buyer ought to go, one would say, to the benefit of the buyer. In this instance that is not the case. It is stated here in the hearing of all, as it was stated in the witness box that $5,000 was divided among these four gentlemen who constituted the syndicate and every penny of the money, of which this $5,000 was a part, was the money of the Union Trust Company or of the Independent Order of Foresters. However one looks at it, in so far as I am able to see, the views expressed by the commissioners are not open to criticism. If you look at it from the standpoint of the borrowing by the members of the syndicate from the trust company of which these men, or several of them, were directors, you have simply the same transaction in essence. The syndicate, it is said, buy the land, and they buy it with borrowed money. They borrowed the purchase money from the company.

Mr. HAGGART. What company did they borrow it from ? Did they borrow it from the Trust Company ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. They borrowed from the trust company ?

Mr. FOSTER. They absolutely did not.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is welcome to the distinction, if there is a distinction. It is either the trust company or the Foresters. It is a matter of absolute indifference. I do not want to repeat what I have already said. I think I have established from the documents, and I am in the judgment of the committee whether I have established from the documents, that every cent which the Union Trust Company had was the Foresters' money and that every cent of the surplus funds of the Foresters was handed over to the Union Trust Company for investment.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will allow me I will correct him just there. The Supreme Court of the Order of Foresters expressly exempted in that contract a portion of their surplus and they agreed simply that the Union Trust Company should address such portion of their surplus as they handed over to us. They would not contract to bind themselves to give the Union Trust Company all of their surplus.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The hon. gentleman has the advantage of personal knowledge of the transactions under discussion. They were his daily life for some years past, and he is able to draw uopn his knowledge of the circumstances for his statements. I am simply in the position of one who has read the evidence and who has read the documents and I can do nothing but take my stand upon those documents, and taking my stand upon those documents, I find in the agreement of the Foresters with the trust company, that they hand over to the trust company for investment from time to time so much of the surplus cash funds of the supreme court as shall remain uninvested. Whether or not they lived up to that agreement, whether or not they did as they agreed to do and handed over such of their funds as remained uninvested from time to time I do not know. All I know is that that being their agreement, I have assumed not only that every cent which the trust company had was the money of the Foresters, but equally that every cent which the Foresters had for investment and which was uninvested was turned over. However that may be, this transaction which I was discussing when the interruption came is simply the one I described, that four gentlemen who are connected with the trust company in the manner which has been mentioned, buying lands in the Northwest for the purpose of selling these lands again at a higher price and for the purpose of speculation, borrow the purchase money from either the trust company or the Foresters whichever you will, and so, borrowing from that company the necessary amount to purchase, they, in fact, received from the lenders $5,000 which was not necessary as purchase money, which did not go to the seller of the land but which went down into the pockets of the borrowers.

The other transaction of a similar character perhaps deserves one word of additional notice, and for the simple reason that in regard to the $5,000 transaction the verbal evidence which witnesses gave before the commission is contradictory. One witness, gives in his testimony—which I need not say is equally sworn evidence—a statement of the transaction, directly at variance upon this crucial point, with the statement of the hon. gentleman. It is not for me to judge between the two; it has not been the part of the commission to judge between the two. They have stated simply and frankly upon the face of the report what was the evidence of one and what the evidence of the other, and leaving that evidence for comparison and for perusal, and leaving those who read to form their own judgment upon it. The commission left it at that, and discussed the transaction from either of the different points of view, according to the different evidence which any reader may choose to accept.

But with regard to a subsequent transaction in respect to which a commission of smaller amount was paid, there is not, because there cannot be, variation in the testimony of witnesses, it resting upon written documents. This is a transaction, in essence, of precisely the same character. The syndicate is purchasing lands with the money of either the Foresters or of the trust company; with money which is furnished to it, borrowed by it, if you please, upon the security of the lands that are being bought; and the syndicate so making its purchase and so making its payment we are again treated to the proposition that there is to be paid a commission out of it. And in this instance, it is upon the letters which are in evidence. Exhibit No. 665, is a letter dated December 23, 1903, from Mr. George E. Foster to Mr. Pritchard, at Winnipeg. He says :

I have talked the matter of these lands over with some parties. The price is too high as it was asked, and I can get no one to take any interest at any such price. My clients are filled with lands, and the offerings of men who have got lots and have to make payments and have not the money, are numerous. This flattens the price. Now, if the following is any use to you I will on receipt of answer go into it further and give you an early decision, to wit: $5.25 per acre for the land with 25 cents per acre as commission, thus netting you $5 per acre. This will depend on the amount cash down required—$1.25 certainly, and one dollar say in four months, and the remainder in four yearly instalments with note, and option to pay the whole amount at any time without bonus. One trouble is the inability to inspect lands at this time. This, I am aware, is not as good as you expect, but you have no idea of the amount of land offered here, and parties here are filled up. Kindly let me know if this will be acceptable. I see no way of doing anything better at present, but I think I can get the above through.

The answer, on the 28th of December, in Winnipeg, from Mr. Pritchard is as follows:

Dear Mr. Foster,—I am in receipt of yours of the 23rd and have read your offer with some little regret, as I had hoped that you would be able to handle these lands at a better price in view of their choice location. As I pointed out when I saw you in Toronto, the Canadian Northern are putting their branch through from at or near Swan river to the Thunder hills, which will make these lands convenient to railway facilities. However, as you cannot do any better, I accept your proposition with the following slight modifications. There is $2.48 due the Canadian Northern Railway on these lands which runs for eight years at 31 cents an acre per year, with interest at six per cent. The whole of it can be paid off at any time without bonus, which I expect you to assume. As regards the cash payment, $1.25 down, 75 cents in three months, and 75 cents in six months. The cash payment in that way will secure the equity all being met within six months. I trust you will be able to meet me in this slight change. Yours very sincerely.

The answer is a telegram of the 31st December, 1903, to A. W. Pritchard, Winnipeg, Manitoba:

Send contract terms your letter for part due Canadian Northern and amounts due vendors. The Union Trust Company, Limited, in trust is purchaser. Cash payment will be made on signing contracts.

On 2nd of January, 1904, Messrs. Macdonald, Haggart and Whitla of Winnipeg, solicitors for the vendor, wrote to the Hon. George E. Foster, as manager of the Union Trust Company, as follows:

Mr. A. W. Pritchard, who has been carrying on correspondence with you regarding the lands in the Swan river district, has handed us all the correspondence therein together with your telegram of the 31st ultimo accepting the offer of sale of these lands. The lands in question stand in the name of our Mr. Whitla under contracts from the Canadian Northern Railway Company. We are preparing agreements of sale in accordance with the terms of the agreement already arrived at and will forward the same to you as soon as completed. There are 9,920 acres all told. If you have any suggestions to make as to the method of closing the sale we will be glad to hear from you. We presume that since we act as solicitors for your company we can have Mr. Whitla sign the agreements and forward them to you for signature by the company, and you can then forward the cash payment and return one copy of agreement duly signed. We can at the same time forward you for inspection the contracts covering the various parcels which our Mr. Whitla holds. We trust this will be satisfactory.

The answer was as follows:

Toronto, January 5, 1904.

Yours of January 2nd duly received re Pritchard's sale of Swan river district lands. The contracts will be with the Union Trust Company in trust the cash. Cash payment will be made to credit of vendors in Standard Bank of Toronto on receipt and signing of satisfactory documents of agreement. Twenty-five cents per acre is to be paid as commission on sale. This can either be deducted from the cash payment, or better. You can send a cheque therefor signed by the vendors in favour of myself. I will then deposit to credit of vendors the whole cash payment and present cheque which will be paid therefrom. Kindly see that purchasers are allowed to pay up whole amount due on lands at any time without notice or bonus.

Yours truly,
GEORGE E. FOSTER.

And accordingly, as is asked by that letter, a cheque to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) issues for that amount of commission at the rate of 25 cents per acre on the 9,920 acres or $2.480. That is asked for in the letter I have read in distinct and unmistakable terms as a commission on the sale of these lands to the company of which the writer was then the paid manager. That is asked for as a deduction from the cash payment his company was to make, or better, a cheque for the amount signed by the vendors in favour of 'myself,' the manager. And that amount so received has not been shared with anybody. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) tells us to-day, as he told the commission, that by reason of outstanding accounts with other members of the syndicate there had not been final settlements. I do not seek to enter into the relations between each other of the members of this syndicate. I simply say that in the course of its inquiry, it was the bounden duty of that commission to see where the money of the trust company—which was the money of the Foresters, every cent of it—had gone.

Now, as to the two transactions, if the $5,000 was the money of the Foresters as is to-night stated, then all the more was it the duty of the commission to inquire and to report into whose pockets the money had gone.

On this later transaction there was $2,480 paid as commission. That was the money of the Union Trust Company, and therefore the money of the Foresters, and it was the duty of the commission to inquire into and report upon this circumstance; and, having so inquired, and having before it, not merely the verbal testimony of the witnesses stating these facts, but the written evidence which I have read to this committee, that commission would have been false to the duty it had undertaken if, because the gentlemen who were concerned were prominent in the public affairs of this country, it had failed to make its statement of the facts exactly as it would have stated them if those men had been obscure and of little note. In these circumstances, it is certainly a poor reward for honest, patient and painstaking effort on the part of this commission to get at the bottom, not only of the transactions which we are discussing to-day, but of the transactions of every kind in connection with the twenty-eight insurance companies which they investigated, that they should be assailed in this House as men who had been false to every principle of honour, and who had performed the duty placed upon them for the purpose of persecuting some supposed political opponent.

Now, though these two circumstances which have been adverted to may appear to most of us in this House to be considerable, yet in comparison with the other transactions that have been mentioned, they shrink into comparative insignificance. In regard to the transaction with reference to the lands of the Great West Land Company considerable discussion has of necessity been provoked, and the transaction seems to be of a somewhat complicated character. In asking your attention to it, I want to divest it, if it can be divested, of its extraneous circumstances, and simply to state it as it appears upon the evidence and upon the papers that are in testimony before the commission. A syndicate of gentlemen are in possession of an option upon, or a right to buy, a large tract of land to be selected, some 200,000 acres in round figures. This is land not yet settled upon, not yet improved, land which may possess, as the country develops and as population increases, a larger and still larger value, but which is bought by the gentlemen who hold the option at $3.50 an acre. Without the investment of one cent of additional capital in those lands, without the expenditure upon them of one bit of labour, they turn them over to another syndicate at a profit of $1 an acre, or $200,000 in all. Now, my good friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has more than once, when this transaction has been mentioned, appeared, to my way of thinking, to be very uneasy in connection with it, always going about, if I may use the illustration, like a man with a chip upon his shoulder, anxious for somebody to attack him. Well, whoever may view this transaction in a different light, I have no objection to saying upon this occasion, and from my place in the House, that I do not regard it, so far as the hon. member for East Simcoe is personally concerned, as in any degree to his discredit. I have had the pleasure of a more or less intimate personal acquaintance with that hon. gentleman for many years, and I am glad to say that I have enjoyed his professional confidence in days gone by, a confidence which I hope he has never had any occasion to regret. The personal relations which exist between him and me have always been of a thoroughly pleasant character; and although our political differences have been accentuated of late, I have no kind of personal quarrel with the hon. gentleman, and upon this occasion, as upon any other occasion in this House, when I am called upon to discuss affairs in which he may be mixed up, I trust he will do me the credit of believing that I am entirely sincere in what I have just said in regard to him. His position in this matter seems certainly to have been that of a man who, having money of his own which he wanted to invest in a transaction out of which he hoped to make a profit, did not receive what I think any one reading the evidence would consider by any means a fair deal. He did not get what I think any one who reads this testimony, although he himself did not give it, will call fair-play. But that is a matter entirely between him and his associates, with regard to which I have no concern, and in regard to which I have no comment to make. He was not dealing with other people's money; he was investing his own money, and I have with regard to him but this one word to say, that when he deems it his duty as a representative of the people to thunder his denuciations against this, that or the other member of this House, who may, with his own money, have done exactly the same thing, who may with his own money have purchased lands at the price for which they were for sale to all comers, and may afterwards have sold them at an advance and made a profit on the transaction, he should remember that his own withers are not unwrung.

But the hon. gentleman who has addressed the House this afternoon has invited a discussion of his connection with these transactions. While so doing, he has deprecated that discussion, insisting that this is a private matter, that it is something with which neither the public nor this House has any concern; and at the same time he has chosen to put before this committee, as his justification, his statement of the facts of the case, and has criticised the commission as having been unfair to him. In these circumstances it is but fair that we should consider what those facts are, and that we should see from the documents and from the evidence before the commission whether or not the statement of the facts made by the commissioners is supported by the testimony that they heard from the witness-box while holding their investigation. These lands, the option to buy which is held by a syndicate of which Messrs. Pope and Fowler are spoken of as the representatives, are brought according to the statement of the hon. gentleman who addressed us this afternoon, to himself and his associates, two other directors of the Union Trust Company, and they are turned over to him immediately upon their acquisition by the original syndicate at an increase in price of no less than $200,000.

Now the money wherewith the Canadian Pacific Railway, the original owner of the lands is paid—the $700,000 which it was necessary to pay the Canadian Pacific Railway to obtain the lands—was borrowed from the Union Trust Company upon the security of these lands. Every dollar of the purchase money was lent by the trust company to the purchasers of the land, and the security which the lender had for that large sum of $700,000 paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway was these lands themselves. Nay, more than that, there was $1 per acre or $200,000 additional to be paid out in cash before these lands could be acquired. There was the profit of $1 per acre which was to go to the original, the Pope-Fowler syndicate, and that $200,000 also was advanced by the Union Trust Company as an investment, upon the faith and security of these lands, which were first sold by the original owners at $3.50 per acre. But the next purchasers were to have their profit upon the transaction—a perfectly legitimate thing the hon. gentleman says—and their profit was to be, not $1 per acre, but fifty cents per acre or $100,000, so that there was that much more required, or, to make the figures complete, a round million dollars had to be advanced before these lands could get into the possession and ownership of the land company, which was then being formed for the first time, and which had nothing wherewith to pay for the lands except its own unissued capital stock. That company borrowed upon the security of the lands. It borrowed $4.50 per acre or $900,000 in cash, and it provided, for the profit of its managing director and two other directors, $100,000 in its own capital stock. It issued that capital stock, in consideration of which the company got these lands and became responsible to the lenders for the $900,000 it wanted to borrow, and it set out upon the face of the agreement which it then entered into the disposition which was to be made of that $100,000 of its own capital stock. That capital stock was to go in these proportions. Of the whole 1,000 shares, 482½ were to go to Messrs. Foster, Wilson and McGillivray, 30 shares to the three gentlemen who had put money into the concern or were supposed to have put in $1,000 a piece, 100 shares to the men who had the corporate name which was being taken over by the new or Great West Land Company—the men who had the charter—and 50 which had been stipulated for to Messrs. Pope and Fowler. The remaining 337½ shares, it is of importance to keep in mind. The other 337½ out of that 1,000 shares, which this company was then paying out of its treasury for the purchase of these lands, was a fund, so to speak, which was being held by the issuing company as its means of interesting capital, as its means of affording compensation to any investor or capitalist who would advance the necessary money to pay the purchase price. It was a large transaction. It was supposed that any individual or company who would have $1,000,000 to lend upon the security of lands which had only recently been sold for $700,000, would require, not merely to receive the ordinary rate of interest, not merely to have security upon the land, but also something in the way of a bonus or special consideration as an inducement to enter into the transaction. And accordingly we find in the evidence that this 337½ shares, or, as it is sometimes spoken of, 237½ shares of capital stock was designed for that purpose and was held as a means of inducing capitalists to lend their money. That is a matter of so much importance, in the light of what afterwards happened with regard to these 337½ shares, that I must ask you to bear with me while I make a reference or two to the evidence on the subject.

At page 2549, we have the matter taken up on the 3rd of October, in the testimony of the Hon. Geo. E. Foster. Mr. Shepley asks :

Q. How were you then expecting to finance? —A. The situation was exactly this. We were now in possession of the whole option, and we had the whole of the stock represented by the advance of fifty cents an acre at our disposal, to be used first to extinguish the claim of the other half by the good will and the like of that, reserve one-half which we always intended to do for ourselves, leaving us a considerable proportion, amounting in all to 337 shares or thereabouts. We proposed, with that at our disposal to enlist capital sufficient to help us to make what was necessary to be made, in addition to what we ourselves put in, to carry us along until stock could be sold and returns come in from that.

On the next page, 2550, Mr. Shepley asked :

Q. You were expecting to finance the whole of it now with an assistance to the extent of $33,700 ?—A. Yes.

Q. That is right, is it not ?—A. Yes, stock selling in both instances as a factor.

Q. The stock selling, the $33,700 was the stock selling you were relying upon ?—A. Not at all, that was the bonus after keeping our own share.

Q. I thought that was to interest financial people ?—A. Well.

Q. You mean handed to financial people by way of bonus so that they would advance the money ?—A. Exactly.

And at the end of a long answer from the witness (Mr. Foster) he said :

Now when we came to the point where we had left the idea of each half financing his own, and came to the point of seeking other finance in the way of stock selling, and the actual advance of money for stock with bonuses as part consideration or in any way in which it could be used, before we had gone any distance in that at all, though we had talked over some plans, either Mr. McGillivray suggested to me or I suggested to him—I am not going to say which, but one of us to the other—and whichever did the other agreed to it, this idea. We believe this is an excellent thing, we believe that a good amount of money can be made out of it, we have a bonus stock free of 337½ shares, our Union Trust Company is a lending company, why not take this to the Union Trust Company, put the proposition before them and ask them whether they will take it up or whether they will not.

And to conclude the reference, on the next page, 2551, at the end of the answer I have been reading, the witness said :

I said to myself, this is going to pay well to any financial institution that will take it up, take the bonus, lend the money to us at a good rate per cent, and take the whole thing as security, and in three or four years it will have made an excellent profit for itself on undoubted security. It was under that idea and that idea alone that we took it, open and above board to the Union Trust Company without any hole and corner work of any kind and presented it to the members of the board.

Q. Now, then, may I ask you a question or two ?—A. Certainly.

Q. Your idea was to substitute the Union Trust for the financiers you hoped to interest by giving them the bonus stock ?—A. Yes.

Q. The Union Trust Company were to get the bonus stock and lend the money that was necessary by reason of their getting that superior position ?—A. They were to get the bonus stock, or as much of it as was necessary, when they thought it over as a fair proposition for their undertaking the loan. We had that much at our disposal.

Q. It was intended that the Union Trust Company should occupy the position of lenders ?—A. That was our mind at that time.

Q. And in consideration of their occupying or consenting to occupy that position they were to have the stock with which you had hoped to interest other capitalists ?—A. Yes.

So, on these few extracts from the testimony of Hon. Mr. Foster it is abundantly established that the 337½ shares of the capital stock of the Great West Land Company was from the beginning designed to be the compensation of that financier, whoever he was, and he afterwards turned out to be the Union Trust Company, who should loan the money necessary to make these payments. In addition to the ordinary compensation of interest, for the risk that was run by the lender of this large amount, that lender was to receive, as an integral portion of his compensation, 337½ shares of stock.

Now, with that preface, let me omit for the present further reference to the original transaction, and come at once to the transaction which has been very little referred to by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) this afternoon, a transaction, he said, simply of a domestic character between four directors of this company, about a few shares of stock not worthy the notice of this commission. Let me say, first, that it was not only a transaction which involved the worth of 337½ shares of this stock, an amount, upon the testimony, approximately of at least $85,000 in cash, but this sum, whatever it may have been, was literally the money of the Union Trust Company which was the money, to the extent of every dollar of it, of the Foresters, the disposal of whose money it was the business of the commission to investigate. It was, therefore, the bounden duty of the commission to ascertain what had become of that 337½ shares of stock—a thing, I pause to mention—which they never would have discovered under the sun if it had not been for the production of the books of that company which they insisted upon and the production of which was resisted. Originally, as the hon. gentleman has said, the Union Trust Company, instead of electing to become mortgagee of these lands, chose to take the position of stockholder in the Great West Land Company, and under its agreement with that company for every hundred dollars it advanced in the way of loan to the land company it was entitled to receive one share of stock. On the whole it advanced over $900,000, and it was entitled under this agreement to receive from the borrower, the land company, stock to the amount of its advances. No doubt, it did so receive stock; at all events it chose to do so, and I assume that the stock was issued to it as it desired. But sales of land were slow, and there came a time when men who were interested in the trust company and who were not interested in this transaction thought it was preferable that the transaction should be put in different shape and that it would be better, instead of the trust company holding shares in the land company—shares on which, up to that time, apparently, no profit had been made or returns paid—they should become mortgagees and have the direct position of lenders and hold as security for their loan a lien upon the land which had been bought. And the trust company coming to that conclusion and deciding to change its position and become mortgagee, that transaction fails to be carried out in the latter part of 1905. Now, in respect to what follows, let it be borne in mind that witnesses were speaking in September and October, 1906; therefore, they were speaking of events of ten months before. The transaction in question, and the memory they are being called upon to exercise in the witness box are a transaction and a memory that, at the time of their speaking was not yet twelve months gone by. There appears among the exhibits a document by which this block of 337½ shares of capital stock in the land company, which, up to that time —November of 1905—had been held by the Trust Company as its consideration for lending this large sum of money is transferred by that company to Messrs. Wilson, Foster and McGillivray. Now, upon the face of such a document, upon the mere statement of the case—that this company, being possessed of a block of stock which was certainly of appreciable value, should give away the consideration which it had earned by lending to the company whose stock it held no less a sum than $980,000, to be put into the purchase and which represented every dollar that had gone into such purchase, except the contributions I have referred to, made by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) and his colleague from Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) invites attention. It stands to reason, I say, that if you find a document of that kind by which this property having been earned by the company is transferred to its managing director and two other of its directors, you would question why this should be done by the company—what was the consideration for giving up this valuable property which was theirs, which was always designed to have been theirs, being the compensation to them for the risk which they had incurred and which at that time had been outstanding for two years or more? This document itself by which the transfer of the stock is made is one which, necessarily and naturally, would attract attention and to which one would expect scrutiny to be devoted.

One would expect that there would be in the recorded minutes of the company the most careful statement of the steps which it had been decided to take and of the reasons which had moved the taking of those steps, and in that expectation in the present case no one would be disappointed because on the face of the minutes of the Union Trust Company under date 7th of November, 1905, there is recorded a meeting of the directors of the company in which the transaction in question is in a general way noted and discussed. There were present at that meeting according to the records of the minutes. Hon. Elliott G. Stevenson, Colonel John A. McGillivray, Lt. Col. John I. Davidson, Hon. Geo. W. Ross, Matthew Wilson and the Hon. Geo. E. Foster. There are six directors present and three of the six are the gentlemen who appear by the subsequent document as the recipients of this 337½ shares of stock. The minute in regard to it states that:

> Some discussion was had with reference to the Great West Land Company and the position of the Union Trust Company in relation thereto. This matter was, however, left over to be taken up at the adjourned meeting. The meeting then adjourned until Monday, the 13th day of November, at half past two o'clock.

Then follows a minute of the adjourned meeting of the board of directors of the Union Trust Company, stated to have been held in the office of the trust company at 2.30 p.m. on the 13th day of November, 1905. The same directors were present, that were at the meeting on the 7th. These directors, as I have pointed out, were the three gentlemen to whom this transfer was afterwards made and three others, Mr. Stevenson, Mr. Davidson, and the Hon. Geo. W. Ross. The minute proceeds:

> After a full discussion in reference to the Great West Land Company it was decided on motion by Hon. E. G. Stevenson, seconded by Lt.-Col. J. A. McGillivray, that the Union Trust Company should assume the position of mortgagee, with reference to its advances and payments to or for the Great West Land Company instead of the stock received by the company and its president upon formation of the land company and the stock received as representing payments and advances, the company and its president releasing to its original owners respectively the stock which had been acquired under the former arrangement as set forth in the agreement of June 22nd, 1903.
> The solicitor was instructed to prepare the necessary papers to be duly executed by the officers of both companies.

Then the minute deals with some other matter. The next meeting is stated to have been held in the office of the company, November 28, 1905, at 3 p.m. and there are recorded as present the three gentlemen interested personally, Messrs. Foster, Wilson and McGillivray and two others. Hon. Geo. W. Ross and Lt. Col. John I. Davidson. With reference to this matter the minute is that:

> After some discussion and amendment it was moved by Hon. G. W. Ross, seconded by Lt.-Col. J. Davidson, that the form of agreement between the Union Trust Company and the Great West Land Company as submitted by the solicitor, pursuant to the resolution passed at the last meeting of the directors be adopted and that the proper amount be filled in by the general manager and the agreement executed and be submitted to the Great West Land Company for execution.

And pursuant to that minute apparently the document in question is drawn up, is executed by the representative of the respective companies, and bears endorsed upon it a minute, over the signature of Col. Davidson stating that this is the agreement referred to and executed, or ratified, at a subsequent meeting of the shareholders.

With reference to that transaction question is raised upon the face of the evidence before the commissioners and question has been raised in more than one quarter where these events have come to be discussed whether or not any such meetings as those recorded in the minutes as taking place on the 7th and 28th of November, at which this transaction and the agreement in question is authorized had ever taken place.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no question as to the 7th of November.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Not of the 7th certainly not, it was an error of mine ; the 13th I should have said. There is no question raised by anybody as to that meeting on the 7th, but in reference to the two important meetings of the 13th and 28th of November there is question raised. I am not going to attempt, it is perhaps not important to attempt to determine what the fact is, whether or not there was any formal meeting or whether or not there was more than the meeting together of one or two or three or four of these gentlemen without any formality of anybody taking the chair, whether there was discussion of these things and whether upon that discussion some one who was recording the minutes thought himself justified to put down the minutes of a formal meeting. That it is not for me to say and I do not think it is necessary for me to determine. The point which I wish to bring to the attention of this committee is that not only is there certainly very great discrepancy on the point, very great doubt cast by the evidence of Col. Davidson and some raised by Mr. Stevenson, upon the fact of any such meetings ever having taken place, but there is the circumstance that even if you take this record of the minutes as absolute verity there were present at the earlier of the two meetings, at most six directors, of whom three were the men who were taking this large benefit from the company they represented ; and at the second meeting there were five directors, three out of the five being these same individuals. Now it stands an admitted fact that it was not these six individuals whose money had gone into the transaction, that, on the contrary the money which had bought these lands was the money of the company which these six directors represented, that these directors were there present as agents for the shareholders generally, as trustees for those shareholders whom they represented, as bound in their honour and their duty to protect the interests of those shareholders and that under such circumstances and at meetings where these three directors were in one instance in actual majority, there were 337½ shares of the land company which had from the first been designed to be the absolute property of the trust company as consideration for making these advances, which were shares which had been earned by that company in the risk it had undertaken, diverted from the purpose for which they were intended and put into the possession, for their private benefit, of the three directors present.

It may perfectly be, Sir, that these are matters with which this House, as such, is not concerned ; they do not deal with the privileges of this House, they may perfectly be matters which no member of this House, however jealous of its honour, would have a right to bring to the notice of this assembly or to ask that cognizance should be taken of. But they are here as supporting the comments and statements of fact made by this commission in the report which has been violently attacked and denounced to-day as a report which is unjustifiable, and in regard to which matters of trifling criticism are applauded, while large matters, such as those to which I have adverted, have scarcely been alluded to at all. With reference to the minutes I have read, it is due to say just this one word further. This transaction was an important one. It was one you could hardly expect a director of the company to have forgotten, even after a lapse of years, but Mr. Stevenson, who is credited with the moving or the seconding of one of these resolutions at the meeting of the 13th November, and who was on that day leaving for England, was examined in reference to it, and is positive in his statement that it is absolutely impossible he ever could have moved or seconded any such resolution. Not only has Mr. Stevenson, upon testimony before the commissioners, taken that position, and taken it after he has heard or read all the evidence that was given by the hon. gentleman who addressed the House this afternoon in support of the contention that the meetings did take place, but Mr. John I. Davidson, a man so well known in the city from which I come, that I have but to mention his name to any one acquainted with the city as a man whose character stands too high among those who know him to be in any way impeached, a man not of our political party, is equally distinct and clear that he has not the remotest recollection of any such thing taking place, and, in his judgment, it is an impossible thing that these meetings could have been held, or this transaction could have happened, without his remembering it. There is one further circumstance to advert to in that connection that the evidence shows —and the book is here for inspection—that it was the uniform, nay, the universal custom of the directors of this company to sign, in a book kept for that purpose, their names upon each occasion of their meeting as such directors, and that most unfortunately in the case of these two meetings, recorded as taking place on the 13th and 28th of November, 1905, there is an absolute blank in the book for signatures and no names whatever recorded. Space is left wherein the necessary number of lines exist in which names might have been recorded. The left hand page has been half occupied and also half left blank, and the upper half of the right hand page has been similarly left blank, and the signatures begin at the middle, and there is room where the signatures might have been, but where not a single signature has yet been placed. Under these circumstances, surely it is not open to condemn these commissioners as men who have been biased, as men who have been prejudiced, as men who have perverted their high positions and their duty, in the hope of gaining some political advantage for a party with which no one of them is to any practical extent identified, or open to be said that these charges have been fabricated and that no evidence for them whatever exists. The commissioners, in regard to this very important transaction, have simply set out the facts. Any one who chooses may read pages 143, 144, 145 and 146 of the report. They have extracted the evidence, and they leave it to whoever reads to form from it such conclusion as he may think that evidence justifies. I am content to leave it there.

I wish simply to add this single remark, that according to the testimony of Mr. Stevenson the profits which are fairly to be expected and which have, to a large extent, already been realized upon the transactions of this land company will be in the neighbourhood of $400,000. In order that I may not be inaccurate, I wish to refer to exactly what he says. You will find his testimony on the subject at page 2401, where, speaking on the 25th September last, he says :

> A profit in the neighbourhood of $400,000 after we are paid off in full, and of that amount we claim the percentage that 337½ is to the 1,500 or 1,600, and in that regard my position is simply this that even though it were conceded that I consented to the relinquishment of that stock, I was one of four or five, it was just as much the duty of the other four to protect the Union Trust Company as it was my duty; therefore, even if it were conceded I assented to that it would not affect the right of the Union Trust Company to the 337½ shares of stock.

And so we have, upon the testimony, the computation of a man who is in a position to know, and who, after investigation, places the profits of that company upon this land transaction at $400,000. If you take 1,580 odd shares of the company's stock out of the total amount issued, you find that the present value of these shares is at least $250. Now, if we take that sum and apply it to the 337½ shares of the capital stock of that company, we have, at the very least computation, $85,000, which was the property of the Union Trust Company, which had earned it, which had contracted for it, and which, by this transaction, and upon these minutes I have referred to, has passed from the possession of the company into the possession of its managing director and his two fellow-directors under circumstances where the remainder of the directors, who are credited with being present, say they never knew anything about it. I thought in these circumstances that was a transaction that would have deserved a little more attention than was paid to it this afternoon, and if we had had a discussion of the facts of this case, rather than an attack upon the commissioners, the counsel, and upon the course which they pursued, we should have had our enlightenment more contributed to, and we would have been in a better position to judge whether or not the commission was justified in the course that it has taken.

Now, the other transactions which have been adverted to are of comparatively minor importance, and I have delayed the committee too long in what I have had to say in regard to this matter. I wish to refer to but one other thing, because it also is a transaction that was not alluded to this afternoon. Very possibly it escaped attention. I am quite willing to say that I do not suppose that it was thought of, or it would have been discussed. It seems to me to be a transaction worthy of attention, and I therefore call attention to it now. Upon the original handing over by the Pope-Fowler syndicate of the 200,000 acres, or the option to buy 200,000 acres of land, to the syndicate composed of Messrs. Foster, Wilson and McGillivray, who sold afterwards to the Great West Land Company, there was, as I have pointed out, a distribution of stock to the Union Trust Company in the proportions I have named, and as a result of which 337½ shares went to the Union Trust Company as their bonus stock. There was at the same time, a handing over to the members of the syndicate which was selling to the land company, this option, of some 480 odd shares as their portion of the $100,000 profit they were having. The reason for giving to these gentlemen, who were the sole executive of the land company, that block of shares, was put upon the ground that it was their legitimate profit. Messrs. Foster, McGillivray, and Wilson, in other words, though the managing directorate of the land company, came to the land company saying : We hold here the right to buy 200,000 acres which we have secured from the syndicate (the Pope-Fowler syndicate) ; we will sell you (our company) this 200,000 acres if you will in addition to paying the full purchase price which Fowler & Co. have agreed to pay, and paying them their profit of $200,000, give us in the shape of stock $100,000 more. And that $100,000 they parcelled out upon the agreement in the way I have mentioned—482½ out of the 1,000 shares which represented the $100,000 going to these individuals, Messrs. Foster, Wilson, and McGillivray. That transaction is brought to a conclusion on the 22nd of June, 1903. That increase of price which is taken from the buying company is called no commission, but is called legitimate profit because the land is bought from the company's own directorate. On that same 22nd of June, 1903, the new company, the Great West Land Company, appoints these three gentlemen its executive board of directors and they remain its sole directors from that time forward.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is not exact. These three gentlemen were appointed by the directors of the Great West Land Company as an executive committee for certain purposes.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I stand corrected; I thought they were the sole directorate.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. These three gentlemen were, as the hon. gentlemen corrects me, the executive of the directorate and they remained the sole executive from that day forward. Three weeks later a new transaction is entered into, which is the one I adverted to this afternoon, and which I say in all sincerity I have no doubt was forgotten and not thought of any consequence, but which seems to me of peculiar significance. When the Pope-Fowler syndicate purchased its 200,000 acres, or got its option for the 200,000 acres, and afterwards dealt with the second syndicate composed of Messrs. Foster, Wilson and McGillivray, it did not turn over to the second syndicate the whole 200,000 acres. 7,000 acres were reserved or kept back. I do not mean that they were mentioned in the contract, but there were 7,000 acres that are not mentioned and not transferred. That left the original Pope-Fowler syndicate possessed of 7,000 acres of land, and the same syndicate acquired, in the same manner as in the case of the 200,000 acres, a third quantity of some 17,000 acres, and having in that way 24,000 acres remaining on its hands, or having disposed of only some 8,000 acres elsewhere out of the 24,000, it had in hand in the month of July, 1903, a further quantity of land, or an option upon further land, to dispose of. And there is on the 9th day of July, 1903, a block of 8,640 acres of land disposed of by the Pope-Fowler syndicate direct to the Union Trust Company. That transaction, it is said, was understood to be on the same terms as the original transaction, but that transaction is one no record of which appears in the minutes of the company, and which is to be found noted only in the annual report of the company. I speak in that regard subject to correction, but I think my statement is correct. At all events there is a transaction by which 8,640 acres of land is bought direct by the Great West Land Company, in which Great West Land Company the Union Trust Company was at that time the holder of not only 337½ shares of stock, but also of shares representing all its advances to the land company; in which therefore the Union Trust Company (or in other words the Foresters), was practically interested as the only person or entity that had put any appreciable money whatever into the transaction. And that 8,640 acres of land being so bought by that company direct from Messrs Pope, Fowler & Co., there is for some unexplained reason—and to my mind for no possible explicable reason—no less a sum than that which would represent $4,320, (43 1-5 shares in the capital stock of the company) handed to the directorate or executive of that company itself. That was no case of profit upon the transaction, because the lands had in no sense gone through these individuals. Those individuals had never owned the lands; those individuals had never bought the lands, they had incurred no particle of responsibility in respect to the lands; it was the money of their company with which these lands were bought, and they, the executive of the company, take of that money which is literally the money of the Independent Order of Foresters no less a sum than $4,320 of the par value capital stock of the company which they continue to hold to their own use. That body of stock in itself, upon the same computation of the value of this stock to which I have already adverted, is worth certainly from $10,000 to $11,000. It may not be commission, it is not so called; but it is what, I think, if it were being characterized from the other side of the House and were a transaction in which any one felt there was political significance, would be called a rake-off and a startling instance of graft.

Now Mr. Chairman, I have occupied the attention of this committee at much greater length than I expected, and my only justification for it is that I am here, not as making any attack upon the hon. gentleman who addressed the committee this afternoon, or upon any person; I am here because from the position in which I happen to be, it naturally and I suppose expectedly falls to my lot, to defend the position of the commissioners appointed by the Crown, and one of whom happens to occupy a seat upon the judicial bench. It was thought necessary by the hon. gentleman this afternoon, in giving his view of the facts of this matter, to make an attack which was to a large extent personal upon those men. It was certainly personal so far as the conduct generally of this investigation by the commission was concerned. It was in that sense an attack upon the counsel who appeared to prosecute the inquiry and for whom I do not for a moment presume to speak. Though he is not here, he is amply able to defend himself. His hands and his tongue are in no way tied; and if he deems it necessary to make any justification of his course, he is fully in a position to do so. But with regard at all events to the chairman of that commission, Judge MacTavish, he is in no such position. The traditions of the bench in this country preclude any one occupying a judicial position from entering the public arena, even though it may be in self-defence, and though it may be to combat an attack which is utterly unjustifiable. Upon this matter, arising as it does upon the discussion of an item in the estimates, and upon a statement of the facts of this case in regard to which the country generally is interested and in regard to which the commissioners who conducted this inquiry certainly were not the people upon their defence, it was somewhat unexpected to hear the animadversions which the hon. member for North Toronto thought the case called for this afternoon. That seemed to make it my duty, occupying the position I do, to refer at the length I have done to the facts of this case as spread upon the pages of the evidence and as recorded in the documents that are here. In stating those facts, I have tried to avoid comment. Perhaps I have not succeeded in that effort; but I ask you, Mr. Chairman, and I ask the hon. gentlemen of the committee, to credit me with sincerity when I say that I have to the best of my feeble ability, and in the prejudiced position which I suppose any political public man occupies, tried to present those facts honestly, as they appeared on the evidence before the commission, without setting down aught in malice or without endeavouring anything to extenuate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Chairman, we are all at liberty to judge of the spirit of sincerity and moderation which has prompted the three hours speech to which we have just listened from the hon. Minister of Justice. The source of inspiration of the report of that commission, so far as it concerns the member for North Toronto and some other hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, might very well be found in the speech which the Minister of Justice has just delivered. In fact, if we did not know otherwise we might well imagine, after listening to that speech, that the hon. gentleman himself had drafted the report.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I suppose my hon. friend is not serious in making that insinuation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I say if we did not know otherwise. I admit to the full the right of the Minister of Justice, a member of this government, to arise in his place in this committee and defend as best he may that commission in so far as it was attacked by the member for North Toronto this afternoon. Did my hon. friend the Minister of Justice stop there? I will come to that in one moment. What do we find him with? We find him standing up in this committee, with the carefully-prepared brief of an advocate, for the purpose of discrediting the hon. member for North Toronto. What do we find more? In respect of one matter, that which he last brought to the attention of the committee, we find him indulging in a carefully-prepared attack upon the member for North Toronto in respect to which the member for North Toronto did not attack that commission. Yet after taking that most unusual, that most extraordinary course on the part of a gentleman occupying the place of Minister of Justice, he has the audacity in the face of this House and this country to claim sincerity and moderation. Why, Mr. Chairman, every one of us knows that if the Minister of Justice had arisen for the purpose which he says prompted him to arise, he never would have uttered one word about that matter which he dealt with in the concluding portion of his speech. He knows that, and he cannot deny it, and no other gentleman on that side of the House can deny it; and yet that same brief, framed as the hon. gentleman says to justify the commission and not to attack the hon. member for North Toronto, contained an attack on the hon. member for North Toronto in a matter in respect to which that hon. member had not animadverted in the slightest degree upon the report of the commission. Why, Mr. Chairman, the thing speaks for itself. I need not say another word beyond drawing the attention of the House to the circumstances which I have just mentioned.

I do not propose to go very fully into some of the matters which have been dealt with by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice. They have already been gone into by my hon. friend from North Toronto, and that hon. gentleman has another opportunity, I am happy to say, of discussing this matter, and replying to some of the extraordinary statements which have been made by the Minister of Justice.

But let us examine for a moment or two some of the observations with which the Minister of Justice began his speech this afternoon. He says it is always regarded as the privilege of any member of the bar against whose client a court may have pronounced its judgment to go out and for twenty-four hours to revile that court; and he says it is much more the right of the client himself to go out and cast aspersions upon the judgment of the court. Does not my hon. friend realize that when he made that statement he exposed the whole game? It was a judgment against my hon. friend from North Toronto that was obtained, and for that reason he recognizes to the full the right of the member for North Toronto to revile, as he expressed it, the court which has pronounced that judgment. He tells us that Judge MacTavish needs no defence. Well, that may be a matter of opinion. I propose later on in my remarks to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Justice to take up the defence of that hon. gentleman a little further than he has done already, because if he thinks that he has discharged his full duty to Judge MacTavish and to that commission by the remarks which he has already made, I think he will find that he is mistaken. As I think, before this debate is through, in undertaking the defence of these gentlemen he will find perhaps he has undertaken a task of somewhat greater magnitude than he at first contemplated.

He says that a person coming into court in the capacity of a witness is not entitled to counsel. But he did not think it proper to mention that a witness, called for the plaintiff or defendent in an ordinary suit of law, has the protection of the counsel in court representing the client on whose behalf he is called. Was the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) or the hon. member for King's and Albert, N.B. (Mr. Fowler) in the exact position, before this commission, of a witness in court? Why, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) knows that neither of those gentlemen was, under the practical circumstances of the case, in that capacity or position at all. They were called as witnesses before that commission, but they were called as witnesses against whom charges were being made by the counsel appointed by this government to carry on the work of investigation. They were called up as men against whom a charge was made and subjected to an inquisition and interrogation altogether unknown to the English law, although it is known to the laws of some other countries. They were not given the right to cross-examine by their own counsel; they were not given the right to call in witnesses for the purpose of controverting any statements made against them. They had not the right to make any investigation into the facts except so far as they might do so, through their counsel or themselves, by way of suggestion to the counsel appointed by this government. Why, take the case to which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) has alluded in the concluding portion of his remarks. Take the question of evidence, the question of disputed fact between Mr. Stevenson and Colonel Davidson on the one hand and the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and Colonel McGillivray on the other. The men against whom the evidence of Mr. Stevenson and Colonel Davidson was quoted to-night by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), in his strenuous efforts to be moderate and fair, had not the right, by their counsel, to cross-examine Mr. Stevenson or Colonel Davidson upon that very evidence. They had not the right to appear by counsel and to have that cross-examination to which the meanest criminal in this country is entitled in any court of law. If they had been accorded that right they could have put into the hands of Colonel Davidson his own signature appearing upon the document which I hold in my hand, and which would have indicated to him that his recollection with reference to those transactions could not possibly be accurate. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) had not that right, under the ruling of that commission. Yet that commission had the most perfect power, as I understand the law, to regulate its own procedure, and it could have provided by regulation that the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) or the member for King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler), against whom charges were being freely made, should have the right to appear by counsel and cross-examine the witnesses in respect of those charges. Did Judge MacTavish, on another occasion, follow out the rule which he laid down in this case? He did not. That gentleman occupied the position of commissioner in the West Elgin investigation, which concerned the acts of certain gentlemen belonging to the party which my hon. friend and the Minister of Justice belongs. And in that investigation Mr. Justice MacTavish was most particular to make the following provision:

> All persons having charges to make against officials and persons within the scope of the commission, or having information in their possession which is material to be known and will assist the commissioners in their investigation, are requested to furnish the particulars thereof in writing as soon as possible to the counsel for the Crown for the purpose of enabling such counsel to prepare and produce evidence thereof before the commission.

That was one paragraph. Here is another:

> Officials and persons whose conduct and acts are the subject of inquiry and investigation by the commissioners shall, if so advised, be entitled to be represented before the commission by counsel, and such counsel shall be heard in respect of any matters affectng the persons so represented.

That is a striking difference between the procedure which was adopted in respect of the charges made against Mr. Fowler and Mr. Foster and the procedure which was adopted in relation to the matter to which I have just now alluded.

My hon. friend, in the course of his remarks, said that the name of the member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) had not been introduced gratuitously in the report of the commission. He went on to say that the matters alluded to in the evidence and reported upon to some extent by the commissioners were not matters which were of any concern to any hon. gentleman in this House or any person in this country. I shall inquire a little later on why it was, that, under those circumstances, the commissioners ventured to enter into an inquiry regarding the purchase of lands from the Canadian Pacific Railway, which could not, by the wildest stretch of imagination, be held to be within the scope of this commission. The hon. gentleman spoke of these commissioners not being here to defend themselves. But were they so careful about the public reputation and the private reputation of men who were not before them to defend themselves ? I shall come a little later on to deal with the investigation conducted by Mr. Shepley, with the consent of these impartial and upright commissioners, into the question as to whether or not I had some connection with the purchase of these lands. I shall call upon my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) to justify, if he can, to this House and country certain inquiries to which I intend to direct my attention before I sit down this evening.

I shall run over very briefly one or two points made by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) with regard to the inquiry into the affairs of the Forester's organization. He says it was of enormous volume. Let me say to him that in respect of a very considerable portion of that business with which the political opponents of this government were not concerned, there was practically no investigation, and the Minister of Justice thoroughly knows and realizes that fact. Let us come down, however, to one or two statements he made with regard to the relations between the Union Trust Company and the Independent Order of Foresters. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has pointed to the fact that the original idea of the establishment of a Union Trust Company was that the Foresters should own .1 per cent of the stock and that the rest should be taken up by the general public. That idea was changed. It was not changed at the instance of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) but at the instance of the Foresters themselves. My hon. friend for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was not a member or an officer of that organization and he had absolutely no control whatever over its policy. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) declares that the capital of the Union Trust Company was, to all intents and purposes, a trust fund, because, he says, no other capital stock, no other money was subscribed or practically none other was subscribed, and the total capital stock was composed of the money of the Foresters.

I do not know exactly what conclusion the hon. gentleman intended to deduce from that. Does he deny that the Independent Order of Foresters has power under the statutes of this country to invest $2,000,000 in this or any other trust company ? My hon. friend (Mr. Aylesworth) will not deny that the Foresters had that power. What, then, is his argument? Let us suppose that the Independent Order of Foresters had invested $500,000 in the stock of some bank in Canada. Does he argue that, because the money received by this bank for the sale of this portion of its capital stock was money of the Foresters, this commission would have power to go into that bank and examine the exact disposition made by the bank of the money so received?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) wish me to answer?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. If the Independent Order of Foresters owned 99⅝ per cent of the capital stock of any bank operating in this country certainly the affairs of that bank could have been, and ought to have been, investigated by this commission.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand. Let us take the Minister of Justice there, because we have him very prettily I think. The Foresters invested nearly $2,000,000 in the stock of the Union Trust Company whose capital stock was about that figure. The Insurance Commission, therefore, according to his argument, has the right to investigate that company, the Union Trust Company. Suppose the Union Trust Company had a capital stock of $10,000,000 and the investment by the Independent Order of Foresters had been still $2,000,000, would the powers of the commission have been less? That seems to me the argument, and yet I would hardly have expected such an argument from the Minister of Justice.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I said 99⅝ per cent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, suppose it had been 94⅝ per cent ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I prefer to take the facts as they are.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But where would the hon. gentleman draw the line? If the Independent Order of Foresters owns 51 per cent of the stock of a company, apparently there is no power of investigation, but if it owns 99 per cent there is power of investigation. I have here the order in council appointing the commission; let us see if we can find any such distinction in the words of that document. The commission was authorized to inquire into :

(a) The general subject of life insurance and life insurance systems in Canada.

(b) The operations of the various companies chartered by the parliament of Canada, or by any province and licensed under the Insurance Act, transacting life insurance in Canada, including expenses of management, investment of funds and other allied questions.

2. To make the like inquiry, as far as deemed necessary into the operations of companies other than those chartered by the Dominion or province, transacting in Canada the business of life insurance.

3. To inquire into the operation of the laws of parliament of Canada relating to and governing the business of life insurance, both as regards, Canadian companies and companies other than Canadian, and to consider and report upon any amendments thereto that may be deemed necessary.

I do not find in that any suggestion that the powers of this commission are regulated by the consideration whether the insurance company owns 51 per cent or 99 per cent of the stock of any trust company. The hon. minister (Mr. Aylesworth) attached very great importance to the fact that the Foresters owned 99 per cent or thereabouts of the capital stock of the Union Trust Company. He did not lay any stress in his 'calm' and 'moderate' speech upon the fact that the Foresters got 99 per cent of the $526,000 of profits made by the Union Trust Company. And think of the fairness of this 'calm' and 'moderate' speech in which the hon. gentleman likened certain investments made by the Union Trust Company to the embezzlement of funds by the manager of the Ontario Bank. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) challenged any member in this House to lay his finger upon one investment for which he was responsible that was not sanctioned by the law of the land. There is the difference of the case of my hon. friend from North Toronto and such a case as that which was suggested—with no very good taste—by the Minister of Justice. The insinuation was very plain, but the facts do not in the least support the insinuation, and the Minister of Justice knows that as well as I do.

Now, he deals with the question of commissions, and I do not consider that his speech can be regarded as very 'calm' or very 'moderate' or even very fair in that connection. Why, Mr. Chairman, in discussing the question of commission he spoke as though the Independent Order of Foresters were the purchaser of these lands and not the lender upon the security of those lands. Suppose my hon. friend from North Toronto, in the course of his affairs, were making a purchase of real estate—say for the purpose of a residence, and suppose that the real estate agent from whom he was purchasing asked $21,000 for the property, while my hon. friend thought it only worth $20,000, and suppose that the agent finally said: I am to receive a commission from the vendors, and if you will give $20,500 I will take off $500 of the commission of $1,000 to which I am entitled and hand it back to you in order that the sale may be consummated—would the Minister of Justice say there was anything improper in that? And is that in the slightest degree different from the transaction which has been commented upon with such severity by the Minister of Justice this afternoon? As a matter of fact, the Independent Order of Foresters had no interest whatever, as I understand it, I speak subject to correction, in the profits which were to be made by the purchase and sale of this property.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

Mr. FOSTER. Absolutely none.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There was no beneficial interest either in the Independent Order of Foresters, or in the Union Trust Company in one dollar of such profits. As far as the transaction of the first commission is concerned it seems to me, from the statement made by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), not controverted by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), and from the evidence which appears on the pages of this testimony, that it amounted simply to a reduction in price which was borne by the agent who was making a commission upon that sale. That is all there is in it from beginning to end and the same is absolutely true of the second commission which was also commented upon so severely by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth). But to show the length to which this commission was willing to go in its zeal to discover the truth, let us look at the report of the commission for a moment with regard to the commission of $10,000, the second commission referred to by the Minister of Justice. It was a commission of $10,000 in which neither the Union Trust Company nor the Independent Order of Foresters could possibly have had any beneficial interest. If the Union Trust Company or the Independent Order of Foresters had received that or had received the first commission they would have been bound to account for it to the persons who were really entitled to it. There is not the slightest doubt of that upon the evidence or upon the statement made by the Minister of Justice. But the commission which was to be given to Pritchett amounts in all to $10,000, one-half of which he gave up for the purpose of making the sale. The commission of $10,000 was divided, as has been explained, between the purchasers of the property and Mr. Pritchett himself; and this commission found it necessary not only to go into the question of the disposition of the $5,000 which Pritchett gave up but found it necessary to go into the question of the disposition of the part which Mr. Pritchett retained. The Minister of Justice did not indicate to us in what way either the Independent Order of Foresters or the Union Trust Company was interested in that $5,000 that Pritchett was entitled to retain as his commission. Does the minister say that either one of those organizations could by any possibility have any beneficial interest in that $5,000? He will not say it; and yet because $1,000 of that money afterwards was paid over for good consideration to the Hon. Colin Campbell, attorney general of the province of Manitoba, and a Conservative, these commissioners found it necessary to go into a long inquiry as to whether or not Mr. Campbell had given any actual consideration for that $1,000. That is the work of this independent and fair minded commission commended in such terms to-night by the Minister of Justice. Not only that but in order to cast an aspersion by their report upon the honour of Mr. Campbell they do not even do him the justice of giving on the pages of their report his explanation. After casting this aspersion on him what do they say with regard to this statement ?

Mr. Campbell's explanation of this will be found at pages 3136-3140.

That may be the work of a commission which was not trying to accomplish political ends, but I am bound to say that the commission did themselves very little justice in framing their report in that way if my opinion is worth anything on the subject.

Let us go a little further. The Minister of Justice went at great length into the transactions of the Great West Land Company. There was a sum of $100,000 which he mentions as being a profit to the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and his associates. That profit was only to be received by the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and the other gentlemen in case the enterprise of that company should prove to be a success. Every dollar of the liabilities of the Great West Company would have to be discharged, including all their liabilities to the Foresters organization or to the Union Trust Company before one single dollar of that profit could be realized, and my hon. friend the Minister of Justice did not lay very much emphasis upon the circumstance that the 337½ shares of the stock to which he alluded were part of the $100,000 profit which was to go to these gentlemen in case the enterprise should prove a success. He did not lay any undue emphasis upon the circumstance which is disclosed in the evidence that when in the end a change was made by which the Union Trust Company ceased to have as its share in this enterprise the stock of the Great West Land Company, and reverted to the mortgage security which had been the idea in the first instance, that change was not made at the instance of the member for North Toronto or his associates but was made at the instance of the other directors of the Union Trust Company. Therefore it does not seem to me that the Minister of Justice presented the evidence quite fairly to the House when he adopted the tone which he did with regard to this transaction. However, these are matters which will be discussed further by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and I have only dealt with them in a very general way.

I said I would deal a little with the work of this commission in connection with some other matters. Let me refer the minister to the evidence in this case taken by the direction and under the order of this commission which is to be found at pages 2502-2509. The gentleman who is being examined before the commission at this time is Mr. A. A. Lefurgey, a member of this House, and the evidence from which I am quoting begins at page 2502. Let us remember the scope of this commission. The scope of this commission, generally speaking, was to make an inquiry and investigation into insurance companies and into the working of the insurance law of Canada. Mr. Lefurgey was asked :

Q. When was it you made this trip to the west ?—A. In 1901 or 1902.

Q. Can you get a little nearer to it than that ?—A. September, 1902, I think.

Q. Who were of your party ?—A. I do not know that I could name all at the present time, but the parties who were interested with us in forming up this——

Q. What was the occasion of the journey ?—A. The occasion of the journey was a trip that Mr. Borden was making to the west.

Mr. Shepley perfectly well knew what the occasion of the journey was and his object in thus conducting an investigation into the insurance companies of Canada and into the working of the insurance laws of Canada was to demonstrate to the people of this country that Mr. Lefurgey and other Conservative members of this House had purchased some lands on that western tour in which they accompanied me for political purposes. He goes on :

Q. It was one of the occasions on which you were exercising your preference for politics ?—A. Yes.

Q. It was a political tour ?—A. A political tour, yes.

Q. With a political object in view ; it was Mr. Borden' trip to the west which we know about. Now by whom was the subject of buying lands introduced and when ?

What had that question to do with the insurance companies of Canada or the working and operation of the insurance laws of this country? Can the hon. Minister of Justice suggest? Can any hon. gentleman suggest? Mr. Lefurgey answered :

A. I think it was talked over by Mr. Pope and myself, as far as I remember, casually at first. That was the first conversation we had.

Q. The first conversation you had was with Mr. Pope ?—A. Yes.

Q. Was anybody else present when that conversation was going on ?

He was extremely anxious to find out whether Mr. Borden was present at some of these conversations.

A. Not that I recall at the present time.

Q. Who introduced the subject, yourself or Mr. Pope ?—A. That I would not like to say. The subject of lands was one that was very much discussed through the west then, as it is now, I would not like to say.

Q. You would not like to say who first broached the matter, yourself or Mr. Pope ?—A. No.

Will anybody tell me what all that has to do with the subject of an investigation into any insurance company or the operation of the insurance laws of Canada?

Q. But it was one of you so far as you are concerned ?—A. Yes.

Q. Was anything definite arrived at during that first conversation ?—A. No, nothing definite, only that we thought it would be a good idea and that we would see what others would like to go in with us.

Q. What others having regard to those who were participating in the journey ?—A. Not necessarily, no

Q. You mentioned the number ten ?—A. Yes.

Q. Was that discussed at this first interview ?—A. I won't say it was discussed at that first interview. It was discussed on the train. It was understood that we would limit it to ten, that we would take no more than ten into it.

What has this to do with the subject confided to the commission by the order in council which I have read to-night? Will the Minister of Justice, when he comes again to discuss this matter before the House, point out to me what this has to do with the matter legitimately within the scope of the commission?

Q. Perhaps I had better ask you then who came into the matter next to yourself and Pope, so far as you are aware, as a potential member of the syndicate ?——A. I think our next conversation was with Mr. Fowler. He was on the trip.

Q. Then, Mr. Fowler, who was also on the trip, was the next person who came in. Who brought him in ?—A. I think he came in in the natural course of conversation that we talked it over with him afterwards, and afterwards Mr. Bennett and those persons signified their willingness to go in and take up land.

Q. That would be four ?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you four, Mr. Fowler, Mr. Bennett, yourself and Mr. Pope, the only ones who discussed it on this trip ?—A. The only four with whom I discussed it.

Can there be any doubt in the minds of any hon. gentlemen in this House as to what the object of that particular inquiry was? Does the Minister of Justice, speaking as he has spoken of Judge MacTavish and of his ability as a lawyer, pretend to tell me that Judge MacTavish did not perfectly well know that the inquiry then being prosecuted was not within the legitimate scope of that commission? I desire to speak most respectfully of any member of the bench of this country, but when any member of the bench undertakes the responsibility of acting upon a commission of this kind he lays himself open to fair and reasonable criticism in regard to his conduct of it. I have endeavoured to give to Judge MacTavish the benefit of every possible doubt, not only of every legitimate doubt, but of every possible doubt, and I cannot find it in my mind to believe that he thought that particular inquiry was within the legitimate scope of that commission. He is either incapable of properly discharging his duties as a member of the judicial bench, or he knew perfectly what Mr. Shepley was aiming at in this paricular inquiry and that it was not within the scope of legitimate inquiry.

Q. The only four who were suggested as being possible members of your syndicate ? A. The only four with whom I discussed it.

Q. I am now asking you something that is a little different from that. Were they the only four who were expected to become members of the syndicate ?

That is a question authorized by the members of the commission who were to investigate the insurance companies of Canada and the operation of the insurance laws of this country. Do I need more than to read the evidence? Do I need to add anything to it?

A. The only four who were expected at that time to become members of the syndicate, although mention was made that possibly Mr. Borden might come in. Personally I never talked to Mr. Borden, not on the trip.

So the hon. gentleman's object was accomplished, and the apparent object of the commission was accomplished. They had succeeded in introducing the name of Mr. Borden. Now, I will go a little further with this investigation into the insurance companies of Canada. The next question is as follows :

Q. Did you hear him say he would join ?—A. No.

And this is the work of a commission authorized to inquire into the insurance companies of Canada and the operation of the insurance laws of this country, a commission whose impartiality and fairness and the general excellence of whose work have been commended in such glowing terms by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice. Now he proceeds further to investigate the insurance companies of Canada in the next question :

Q. Or that he thought he would join ?—A. No, not at that time, no.

Do I need to read further to convince hon. gentlemen as to what that commission was engaged in at that time, or as to the object counsel had in propounding these questions and obtaining these answers? Now, he proceeds further to investigate the insurance companies of Canada by another question :

Q. Or during that trip ?—A. No.

And then he goes on with this investigation into the insurance companies of Canada by the next question :

Q. Are you quite clear about that ?—A. I think I am fairly clear. I don't think I had any personal conversation with Mr. Borden as to it.

And so on, at great length, in connection with an inquiry into the insurance companies of Canada and the operation of the insurance laws of this country. Then, on the following page (2504) he is referring to some evidence which it appears Mr. Lefurgey had given in some litigation between himself and other members of the syndicate which purchased this land. And before I read the question, remember that the commission and the counsel are prosecuting an inquiry into the insurance laws of Canada and into the business of insurance in this country.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Does my hon. friend forget the word 'investments,' or does he purposely omit it ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Investments ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Oh, investments ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I see, we have now the whole explanation of all this evidence. The commission on this occasion were inquiring into investments of insurance companies in Canada.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Or investments that any one might make

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was about to remark that perhaps if this same mode of inquiry had been adopted with regard to the private affairs of gentlemen who have sat on the treasury benches since 1896—

Mr. TAYLOR. They would find out something.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Shepley puts this question :—

Q. This is what you said about Mr. Borden ; it may or may not be important. I want to see whether you say so now.

On that occasion I cannot say whether we approached Mr. Borden ; I believe he indicated a willingness possibly to join us, he said he would very likely join us on that occasion that we interviewed him ; I don't know whether it was on that occasion, but during the trip he indicated that he would possibly come in with us.

Q. You do not modify that to-day at all ?—A. No, I am not clear, I told you I would not say personally that I had any conversataion with Mr. Borden at all.

Q. But you had in some way or other ?—A. An intimation that he might come in, yes.

Further on at page 2505——They are still prosecuting an inquiry into the insurance companies of Canada, into the operation of the insurance laws, and into the 'investments,' because I must not forget that. as the Minister of Justice considers it a proper justification for the inquiry which I am just now quoting :

Q. Then had there been any other communication with you in the meantime until you got this letter indicating that Mr. Borden had carried out the intention that you understood he had of going in ?—A. None.

Q. Then did you understand when you got these instructions to keep the matter mum except between the three persons, Borden, Bennett and yourself, that he had come in ?—A. I suppose I would form a reasonable presumption, the same as you would that he had.

This particularly, remember, upon the ground stated by the Minister of Justice, is an inquiry into the 'investments' of insurance companies in Canada.

Q. I was trying to get what was in your mind at the time, what information you had at the time ?—A. I presume that would have been in my mind, I don't know whether it was or not.

Q. Then that would indicate five people up to the present time : Messrs. Fowler, Pope, Lefurgey, Bennett and Borden——

And these are the gentlemen as to whom we must be so careful that we say nothing about them in their absence. I was not before the commission at that time, I knew nothing of the examination, and behind my back there was the counsel under the authority of the commission, going outside of the scope of that commissioin for a distinctly political purpose and dealing with a matter which could by no means have any possible relevancy to the subject legitimately confided to these gentlemen by the terms of the order in council. Then on the next page

Q. I am asking you whether you assent to what I have drawn from it, that apparently eight people, the original four plus Mr. Borden and plus the new three were indicated by this letter ?—A. I assent that there are a certain number of names mentioned there.

Then further on

Q. Then, if it does not, perhaps you will assent to that ; you were getting the inside track as to selection and you were also getting the inside track as to terms and prices according to the letter. Then apparently there was some communication of the 7th November which is not set out in the depositions. Do you remember what that was ?—A. Some conversation.

And then further on at page 2509

Q. Did you get any further information about the head of the Chemical Company ?—A. I don't think that I knew that Peuchen at that time was interested either.

Q. Any further information about Mr. Borden? —A. I think possibly I knew that Mr. Borden was not in it, at that time.

Then further on in the same page, he is quoting evidence in the suit to which I have referred :

Q. Now this is something that I would like you to make a little plainer for us than it seems to me. You were asked question 106, 'You left it to him,' that is to Fowler, 'to get anybody that was to be got.' That is to get anybody to come into the syndicate that was to be got: Your answer was, 'It was left with them.' That means Pope and Fowler, I suppose. 'They were supposed,' you went on, 'to have held a meeting in Montreal. 107. Q. With whom ? A. With the parties interested. I presume that Bennett and I presume Mr. Borden was up there, but I was not up there myself.' What meeting are you referring to there ?—A. The meeting he referred to in his letter.

Now let me go a little further into some evidence that occurs in the examination of my hon. friend the member for King's (Mr. Fowler). Mr. Shepley was apparently not yet satisfied with his investigation into the history of the trip to the west and of the conversations which took place between gentlemen in regard to their personal business matters, and therefore he proceeds to get some information from Mr. Fowler.

Q. What was the origin of you and Mr. Pope taking up this scheme of getting land from the Canadian Pacific Railway ? How did that come about ?—A. Well, of course, Mr. Shepley, I don't see what that has to do with this investigation, to start with——

And I am sure no other person in this country will be able to understand what that had to do with the inquiry, as I will endeavour to demonstrate more fully later on. Mr. Fowler continues his answer.

—and I protest against giving evidence with respect to it. That was purely a private matter, how we came to get this land, our taking up the option, so far as the purpose of your investigation is concerned, in my humble view. When you get to the transaction between us and the Union Trust, who represented the Foresters, of course you have a perfect right to examine into it.

Q. Yes ? Well, I can only beg you to take a little wider view and to tell me what was the origin of it ?—A. I submit myself to the ruling of the commission.

The proposed investigation could only have been for one purpose, as the evidence discloses later on, and that was to prove if possible that these gentlemen, who were concerned in that purchase, had improperly used their positions as members of parliament, and had obtained from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company those lands at a price lower than the price at which it would have been willing to sell them to other persons. That question is gone into on page after page of this testimony, not only in the evidence of Mr. Lefurgey, which I have not read in full, but in the evidence of Mr. Fowler, and finally at great length in the evidence of Mr. Griffin, the land commissioner, of the Canadian Pacific Railway ; and I ask my hon. friend the Minister of Justice to inform us when he comes to address the House, in what way the scope of this commission involved the investigation of these matters. Were these commissioners authorized or empowered to investigate the conduct of these gentlemen, or was it any part of their duty to investigate and report on the question whether or not the Canadian Pacific Railway Company received a fair price for those lands or the same price which they would have obtained from any other person ?

Mr. FOWLER. Those were the secret instructions.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know about that. All I say at this moment is that these matters in no wise concerned anything that could be any possible stretch of the imagination be within the scope of that commission. What is the ruling of Judge MacTavish, when the objection which I have just now read was made by Mr. Fowler?

Judge MACTAVISH. Answer the question.

Mr. FOWLER. Now, then, let me hear your question.

Then, under the direction of the commissioners, Mr. Shepley goes into a full political investigation as to whether or not these members of parliament had obtained from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company thoses lands at a lower price than that at which they could heve been obtained by any other purchaser. Now, my hon. friend the Minister of Justice may take a different view of this matter from myself. I have no doubt that he will deal with it before this debate is concluded. For my part, I cannot understand—I say it in all sincerity—why Judge MacTavish under the circumstances could have supposed that that commission was authorized to make such an investigation as that. As far as I was concerned, I had nothing to conceal in the matter ; and if it were worth while, I would be perfectly willing to have my supposed connection with the transaction, or for that matter any other transaction of my public or private life, examined into by any committee of this House or by all the royal commissions which this government or any other government could see fit to appoint. But when we are asked by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice to say that that commission did not step out of the legitimate scope of its instructions, I say I do not concur with him. I say I cannot conceive for one moment why Judge MacTavish should have authorized an investigation of that kind, an investigation which might have affected the political status of gentlemen who had no right to appear there by counsel to cross-examine witnesses or to produce witnesses in their defence—not an ordinary case of procedure in court, where these gentlemen would have the right to defend themselves; but a procedure by what in this respect degenerated into a mere political inquisition into the conduct of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. Under these circumstances I for my part do not feel that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice has discharged his whole duty to these commissioners until he has explained why it was that they dealt with these matters to which I have alluded—why they endeavoured to prove, and permitted counsel to endeavour to prove, that Conservative members of parliament had abused their position, that they had obtained lands at a lower price by reason of the fact that they were members of parliament. The Minister of Justice says that the power to investigate investments justified this. How was any question of investment concerned in the examination to which I have just alluded? The Minister of Justice smiles. I have no doubt that he will show how that is relevant.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Was not the value of the land important?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This was not a question of the value of the lands.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I thought it was. The price at which the lands changed hands was one of the most important questions.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And so they were investigating the value of the lands as an investment, and that is the reason they were endeavouring to connect my name with the transaction, I suppose. Well, we are glad to understand what the theory of the hon. gentleman is. For my part, I am not disposed to accept that theory. These matters were in no wise concerned with anything that was within the scope of that commission. The value of those lands as an investment for the Union Trust Company was one matter; the question whether Conservative members of parliament had interviews with Sir Thomas Shaughnessy and other officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at which they used their influence as members of parliament was another and altogether different consideration, and it was into the latter consideration that the counsel appointed by this government and the commission appointed by this government saw fit to inquire, and with what result in the end? Let me point out to you. After a long investigation, a political inquisition paid for by the people of this country out of the public exchequer and I would like a careful estimate to be made of how much of the $75,000 which we are asked to vote to-night is to be applied to this part of the investigation—after a long and tedious examination of Mr. Griffin, the land commissioner of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, solely upon the question as to whether these gentlemen had abused their position as members of parliament, we have this statement by Mr. Griffin:

I have no hesitation at all in saying that the sale that was made was a more advantageous sale than a sale of the same quantity of land in what would neccessarily be a somewhat wider territory, through the same character of district from between Saskatoon and Edmonton at $5 an acre. That is, if Messrs Pope and Fowler had gone and picked 200,000 acres of land, picked sections through all that territory at $5 an acre, they would have obtained a better bargain than they did.

Q. And it would have been a correspondingly worse bargain, you would say, for the Canadian Pacific?—A. That is my opinion.

Q. Then, my learned friend will not mind my altering the form of these a little?

Mr. CREELMAN. Oh, not at all.

Mr. SHEPLEY. Did Messrs. Pope and Fowler receive any special consideration at your hands for any reason whatever in connection with this sale, or did they get just the terms that any other persons of substance with the money to pay could have got?—A. They received exactly what I would have recommended in the case of any other purchasers.

Q. Did you receive at all from anybody in authority in connection with the Canadian Pacific any instructions or any suggestion that you should reduce or lower the price to these gentlemen?—A. I never received even a suggestion from anybody that I should give Messrs. Pope and Fowler any special concessions that would not be accorded to others.

Q. Then I think that is all I have to ask Mr. Griffin.

The rest is a statement by Mr. Shepley as to the future proceedings of the commission, which I need not read. So that the public money of this country has been expended, and we are asked to vote it to-night, for the purpose of conducting an inquiry which, I repeat, could not by any conceivable stretch of the imagination be regarded as within the scope of the commission under which these gentlemen acted.

Mr. BENNETT. We have had, Mr. Chairman, certainly a most exhaustive speech to-night from the hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), a large percentage of which consisted of an endeavour to build up the reputation of Judge MacTavish. Evidently the Minister of Justice knows full well that the people of Canada are going to hold Judge MacTavish as the commissioner who was the head and front of the whole offending and who is responsible for the fact that that Insurance Commission degenerated into a mere travesty of justice. Why has the hon. minister brought out into such a strong light this Judge MacTavish? He, more than any man, knows that from one end of this country to the other this Insurance Commission is regarded as an institution whose main object was the besmirching of the reputation of men politically opposed to this government. He knows that Judge MacTavish was the whole motive power of that body and that no one could have been selected more fit to do the work he did. It is all very well to talk about respect for the bench, but the bench must learn to respect itself; and when it fails to have regard for its own dignity and honour, it will not meet with much credit in the countrty. The hon. minister (Mr. Aylesworth) lays stress upon the point that there is not that respect in Canada for the bench which existed in former years. In that statement he is quite within the mark. I can recollect, as a lad, that when a judge in the province of Ontario was approaching the entrance to the court house, men involuntarily stepped back and the older men raised their hats as he passed by. But that is not the case to-day. To-day in some cases when a judge passes by, he is pointed out as the fellow who did so and so, and that is due to the policy of this government. Why was Judge MacTavish brought out in such bold relief in this case? Was it because of his eminent judicial fitness ? Will the Minister of Justice say it was ? No, he will not answer that question, Why, a little while ago there was a vacancy on the Superior Court bench of Ontario. What happened ? The Minister of Justice of this country came to Ottawa and offered the position to Mr. Chrysler, an eminent counsel in this city. The hon. minister will not deny that. Mr. Chrysler declined the offer, but this government did not dare to offer that position to this self same Judge MacTavish. Why ? Because they knew, after the part he had played in the West Elgin case, that the people of Ontario would resent such an imposition as the placing of that man on the Superior Court bench. Perhaps the Minister of Justice will rise again in this debate and say why Judge MacTavish was passed over after Mr. Chrysler was offered the position and declined it. Will he explain why Mr. MacTavish was not offered the position then ? Who is Judge MacTavish ? I understand he is a county court judge in the province of Ontario with a residence in the city of Ottawa and the court over which he was appointed to preside is in the county of Carleton. For years in Ontario he has been regarded as a gentleman specially fit to conduct commissions of this kind. We had in Ontario at one time what was known as the West Elgin horror, the West Elgin outrages, and what did they consist of ? There was an election in that riding which was warmly contested, and on the result of which depended to a great extent the fortunes of the Ross government of unhappy memory, which has since gone to its reward, thank God, never to return. That election had to be looked after, and so they looked around the horizon for three gentlemen to go on the commission. In a moment—I think it was a moment of weakness—Judge Barron, a very estimable gentleman, consented to go on the board, but he has never since been elected to go on a similar commission in any other part of the province. I will tell you the reason. There was a recount in the riding of South Perth, and he gave a favourable decision on behalf of the Conservative candidate, and for that reason was cast into the outer darkness. But Judge MacTavish was appointed to act in the celebrated West Elgin case, and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) attempted to show this afternoon what a fair commission that was by saying that Judge Morgan was on it. Well, if he can get any comfort out of that, he can have it all. Judge Morgan was a pretty good friend of the Ross government, and the hon. minister knows it. When there was a school book inquiry, Judge Morgan was one of the commissioners, and he was also connected with the North York election protest. But these gentlemen knew that such was his reputation in Ontario that when they had to appoint a senior judge in the county of York, they did not select Mr. Morgan. Apparently they had no more use for that gentleman than they had for Judge Barron. What was this West Elgin case in which Commissioner MacTavish acted ? I prefer to call him a commissioner because he does not discharge any functions as a judge, but is the commissioner in ordinary of this government and a rather high priced one. $30 a day, I think, is what he is paid of the peoples' money. What was that West Elgin case ? There had been brought into that riding a gang of toughs, thugs and thieves collected from every part of the province—men, who if they had their reward, would have been behind the bars long ago, and some of whom, if they dared to come back to Ontario, would be placed behind the bars no doubt. Who composed this beautiful collection gathered together on that occasion ? There was Duncan Bole, an employee of the local Ontario government, who had plied his nefarious occupation in the riding of Algoma for years for the benefit of hon. gentlemen opposite. This Duncan Bole was switched down to that riding, and under an assumed name he conducted a poll there in the most villainous manner. Then they brought into that riding a Mr. Pritchard from the city of London, that charnel house of pollution and crime, the product of which has driven a man out of this House and prevents him —with other reasons thrown in by the side —from taking his seat—a man who is today an expatriated citizen from the province of Ontario and dares not come back to face public opinion in this House or elsewhere. These were the two men assigned to go there and personate electors and do diabolical deeds for the Ross government. The citizens and voters of that riding know what has occurred. And what did occur ? If you will read this innocent document of this precious commissioner MacTavish, you will find out. Let me take polling division No. 4 of the township of Southwold, where the commissioner found as follows :

> Notwithstanding that the said Duncan Bole acted unawfully as aforesaid and without legal authority, we have to find, upon the evidence of himself corroborated by that of the scrutineers representing the candidate,that no act was done or controlled by which the integrity of the poll was violated or the will of the electorate in any way thwarted.

That was the finding of commissioner MacTavish. Then we come to another poll, and this is the poll where Mr. Pritchard acted, and this was the finding :

> Under all the circumstances and in view of the fact that he admitted having sworn to affidavits which were in some particulars contrary to the fact, the commissioners rely on the evidence of Pritchard.

What was the evidence ? He had sworn that he had tampered with the ballots and miscalled them, and these precious commissioners stood up and declared that they could not accept his statement and that he was not telling the truth. This is the just and impartial commissioner. Now, what had happened prior to the holding of this investigation? Men stood outside the polling booths on the night of the election; they knew the relative strength of their party in that poll. Honest yeomen of that riding, they knew who were their respectable Liberals who could be bought or swerved, and they knew the respectable Conservatives who would not be moved from their party allegiance. When the returns were brought in they were startled—they could not believe their own eyes. And when they gathered in knots to discuss the matter and compare notes, they decided to find how this evil had been done. They asked who was the man who had taken this vote, and it commenced to be whispered about that it was this notorious fellow Bole. And how has this man been treated by the Ross government and its hangers-on in Ontario? A fugitive from justice, broken in health and fortune he was forced to leave Ontario. He had done the dirty work of the Ross government, but those who benefited by that dirty work would not keep this man in funds, though his health was such that he was almost in extremis when he left Ontario. As I was saying, these honest yeomen of West Elgin began to ferret out the reason for this return. They went to a solicitor, and man after man made a sworn declaration that he had voted for the Conservative candidate. They had these indisputable proofs ready when Mr. Commissioner MacTavish and these other gentlemen met there. Mr. Crothers, a leading solicitor of St. Thomas, a man of standing was consulted and he asked that he might be permitted to appear as counsel on behalf of the Conservative candidate. And what was the answer of this immaculate Commissioner MacTavish? His answer was: Mr. George Watson, K.C., is here to look after the interest of all and he is to be assisted by Mr. Macdonald, of the firm of Kerr, Macdonald & Grant, of Toronto. But these men said: No, no, we do not let them know anything of the facts, and they refused to go into court. Had Commissioner MacTavish been anxious to get at the truth he could have got at the truth. All that was necessary was to subpœna the men who had voted at that poll and the truth would have come out—and that is exactly what that commission did not want. Now, mark Commissioner MacTavish's report in the case of polling division No. 4, Southwold:

> No act was done or permitted by him by which the integrity of the poll was violated or the will of the electorate in any way subverted.

And yet 84 men were ready to go on the stand and swear that they had voted for the Conservative candidate, though the return showed that only 44 votes had been recorded for the Conservative candidate by this imported returning officer. Mr. Commissioner MacTavish did not want that to come out, it would have looked bad. Take another case, the poll where Pritchett was. There were 104 men prepared to go on the witness stand and swear that they voted for the Conservative candidate at that poll. And when Mr. Commissioner MacTavish found that these men were waiting at the door to give this sworn testimony he saw it would not look well, for only 85 votes were recorded at that poll for the Conservative candidate. Pritchett stood up in the court room and said: I did it myself and the record will show that I did it. And what was the answer made to him by Mr. Commissioner McTavish? He tells him in effect he is a liar and that he did not do it. That is the sort of gentleman we have for commmissioner—certainly this was a commissioner to suit the case.

Now, take another case—No. 7, St. Thomas. In that poll the same testimony could be adduced of men who had voted there, and yet concerning this poll Commissioner McTavish says.

> That the proceedings at the poll although irregular do not appear to have affected the result.

There were 91 men who were prepared to state under oath that they had recorded their votes there for the Conservative candidate, yet only 80 votes were returned. And so I could take the case of other polls and show that men had honestly recorded their votes, but Commissioner MacTavish did not want anything of that sort to come out. But something of that sort did come out in that West Elgin case later on. Commissioner MacTavish could smother an investigation, but he could not smother a case in the courts. And so when two judges of the Superior Court came down, after due notice had been given, after the evidence had been thoroughly prepared, when witnesses to the number of hundreds were standing in the corridors of the court-house ready to prove that they voted—at the last moment, right under the gun, the following document was put in. And, for the benefit of hon. gentlemen and for the benefit of the country, let me read that West Elgin horror confession:

> 1. That a large number of persons were especially sent into the constituency by men working on behalf of the Liberal party for the express purpose of taking part on Mr. Macnish's behalf in the election held January 12, 1899, and we believe that fraudulent and corrupt means were used by some of such persons to secure this election.
> 2. That some of the said persons illegally and without authority acted as deputy returning officers, at the said election and in at least two cases so acted in the names of reputable local men having, under assumed names, been introduced to the returning officer by local agents of Macnish.

3. That in many of the polling subdivisions of the riding there were grave irregularities connected with the return of the ballot boxes the voting and the counting of the ballot boxes thereat.

4. That there were a large number of persons brought into the riding for the express purpose of personating legitimate voters, and assisted by some of Mr. Macnish's local supporters, such persons did personate qualified voters in voting for Mr. Macnish.

5. That the declared number of votes for Macnish largely exceeded the number of bona fide votes cast for him.

6. That a large number of votes cast for Mr. McDiarmid were in some nefarious and corrupt manner manipulated, whereby the result of the election was rendered doubtful, and in this connection the voting at Shedden, at Middlemarch, and in several divisions in St. Thomas, where said strangers so acted as deputy returning officers merits special mention.

That there are good reasons to believe that there are many specific and well authenticated cases where agents of Mr. McNish concealed at their homes some of those strangers, who there paid large sums of money to electors to induce them to vote for him.

That Mr. McNish will forthwith deliver to the Speaker of the legislative assembly his resignation as a member thereof for the said electoral district.

(Sgd.) DONALD McNISH.

Sir, was there ever a more disgraceful record of crime, harrowing crime, placed on the records of the courts of Canada or any country than that record ? A little while before that this precious commissioner Mr. MacTavish had found in his report that there had been no crime committed there, there was nothing wrong and to-day there is a standing record of the carnival of crime committed and the Minister of Justice knew that every part of it was true, because he was the solicitor and his name was appended to the document as witness.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The Minister of Justice knows a good deal about election cases, I am sorry to say.

Mr. BENNETT. I am quite willing the Minister of Justice shall take off any professional privilege he claims in my case and tell it.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It is your privilege, not mine.

Mr. BENNETT. You can take it off if you like. The other side got out easier than I did and they were more anxious to get out as they had too much disqualification staring them in the face and the minister knew that too. The minister knew all these facts or he would never have permitted his client to sign that statement. I would like to ask was there any time in the whole of this investigation re insurance matters, when the Minister of Justice had not faith in Judge MacTavish, that he would be equal to the emergency ? I do not think he was ever a doubting Thomas in that regard. But so excellent was the work performed by Judge MacTavish that his claims were not to be overlooked when anything of that kind came up and so a while ago in this very House, this government promised an investigation into certain charges in connection with the Huron and Brockville election cases and the first choice of the commissioners was this same precious Mr. MacTavish. Little wonder was it then when they were coming up to this insurance investigation that the first man who loomed up large was Commissioner MacTavish, and I congratulate the government in their foresight in selecting the commissioner. I think he has filled the bill admirably from their point of view, but I do not think he has helped much in placing before the people of this country a fair account of the business of the insurance companies. I propose to deal with the report to show how fair Judge MacTavish is. On page 137 will be found this :

Late in the fall of 1906, Messrs. Rufus H. Pope and George W. Fowler commenced negotiations with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, for the purchase of a large tract of railway subsidy lands on the behalf of a syndicate including Messrs. W. H. Bennett and A. A. Lefurgey.

Now what was the necessity of bringing in the names of myself and the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Lefurgey). Where did all this information come from with which this counsel for the prosecution was primed? It is needless to say where it came from ; there had been an action which has been referred to between certain members of this syndicate. That was all spread on the files at Osgoode Hall, that refuge for Grit politicians in Ontario for the last 30 years, and one can imagine what difficulty there was to induce some of these willing officials to hand out the file and display the details of the case to the gentlemen who wished to get at the bottom of the facts. But the record shows that a gentleman named Mr. Arthur Peuchen was also in the syndicate. Where is Mr. Peuchen's name found in this ? Mr. Peuchen is interested in a large chemical concern in the constituency of North Ontario and he does yeoman service for hon. gentlemen in elections. For a number of years he had rather a close connection in selling wood alcohol to this government. Mr. J. B. Tudhope, local member for East Simcoe has also a large monetary interest in that chemical concern and it was thought advisable not to bring Mr. Peuchen's name into the limelight. There is the first instance of political animus by Judge MacTavish in introducing my name, At page 130 we find.

It seems highly probable that on May 15, when Messrs. Pope and Fowler paid the second instalment, $40,000, of cash payment and took up the option, matters had so far progressed that they were quite certain the matter would be financed; indeed the agreement recites a payment to Pope and Fowler by the Union Trust Company of $23,520, and provides for the payment by the company of a further sum of $33,146.66 by July 1, 1903, beyond which date they had then arranged with the railway company to extend the time for completing the first instalment. These two sums, together with the $60,000 which Pope and Fowler had already paid and which, by the terms of the agreement, was to be refunded to them, made up the total first instalment of $116,666.66 payable to the railway company.

Mark the words, 'that they were quite certain that the matter would be financed.' What is the insinuation by Judge MacTavish there? Not that the party who were in good faith interested in the deal, Messrs. Pope, Fowler, Lefurgey, Peuchen, Bennett and the others had paid their own money down but this precious Commissioner MacTavish wants to convey the idea that the Union Trust Company had put in every dollar that was in the investment. The Commissioner MacTavish can bend so far back that one would imagine almost that he would dislocate himself. He will go out of his way in his report to positively misstate what he knows to be a fact and so we find at page 142:

It should be borne in mind that in this transaction, as well as in the main transaction the Union Trust Company was finding all the funds necessary to carry the lands.

Mr. MacTavish knew that this was untrue, absolutely false, not a scintilla of truth in it, because the evidence was before him that $60,000 cash had been paid by private individuals before the Union Trust Company ever put a cent in it. I did think at one time from some insinuations that have been made and by reading articles in the 'Globe,' from that pious and sainted editor, that I would be called upon to say some words in defence of my own part in this transaction, but after the bouquets thrown by the Minister of Justice I think that would be superfluous on my part. I shall give credit to the minister that he is a shrewd man, and he knew too much to place himself in an absurd position by attempting to make the statement that because a man was a member of parliament he could not approach the counter of the Canadian Pacific Railway and buy lands. How many hon. gentlemen in this House have bought lands from the Canadian Pacific Railway? My hon. friend says: Buy them from the government. We are not permitted that chance. This was not a deal with the government at all. This was not a Saskatchewan Land Company deal, where you are taking the property of the public. This was not a Robbins deal with respect to grazing lands, where you are dealing with the public with the assistance of willing ministers. Not at all. This was a case where you had to go up to the counter of the Canadian Pacific Railway and buy land at the price at which they were offering it, and which Mr. Griffin, in his evidence, states was the fair price the land was being sold at. If any hon. gentleman turns to the evidence he will find this fact stated that in these particular localities the Canadian Pacific Railway was at that time selling land in individual sections or half sections, specially selected, for $3.50 an acre, exactly the same price at which we bought this land. And, as Mr. Griffin pointed out, when it came to a case of buying a large quantity of land, which was not selected land and which was being purchased en bloc, it was a question whether or not we should not have had a better price. It appears that the cat has been let out of the bag to-day. For the last six or seven months hon. gentlemen opposite, stimulated by the 'Globe' newspaper and the rest of the Liberal press of this country, have been making their boasts of what would happen when parliament met. They have had pretty hard reverses in this House. They have had pretty difficult times in the Public Accounts Committee, and the better element of hon. gentlemen opposite, day after day, are recoiling at what they have to swallow.

An hon. MEMBER. Huh!

Mr. BENNETT. Some hon. gentleman says 'huh.' I can believe that there are men over there who will recoil at nothing as long as they may participate in the graft.

Mr. FIELDING. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman should withdraw that expression that there are men who would participate in graft. The expression is not parliamentary.

Mr. BERGERON. Ask for an investigation.

Mr. BENNETT. I withdraw that, Mr. Chairman, and perhaps before another session closes we may go further into this question of what is called 'graft,' and bring some members of parliament much closer to it than we have in the past. You will, Mr. Chairman, certainly agree with me that while it may be all right for the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to state, as he did the other night, that it is no concern to him whether a member of parliament or any other person is dealing with this government under the cover of a joint stock company, the public have a vastly different opinion of that case, and are holding and will continue to hold this government to account for the dealings of hon. gentlemen behind them with the public, whether directly or in the guise of so-called stock companies. If hon. gentlemen opposite are pleased with what has been brought out by this investigation, then all I can say is that they are easily pleased, but there is one thing which stands out in bright relief in this whole transaction, and that is that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has entrenched himself strongly in the affections of hon. gentlemen on the left of the Speaker, and the people of Canada will hold that hon. gentleman at his esteem and his worth. The people of Ontario, and of this whole Dominion, will take into consideration that he was for a number of years a minister of the Crown, and that he is to-day, as he was when he quitted his position, I regret to say, a comparatively poor man. They will place his condition in life alongside of that of some members of the government who entered this government paupers and who can now count their millions. Sir, as they see them in their mansions, sailing in their private yachts, or driving down the street in their magnificent equipages, I think they will come to the conclusion that it is a matter of concern to the country, and when the time comes for an appeal to the electors we know what the result will be. If hon. gentlemen think that they have made any political capital or have gained any advantage over hon. members on this side of the House they are entirely mistaken. I wish the people of this country could see the benches of the government empty as they are, and see the ministers unhorsed as they are being unhorsed by unfair and foul means. We witnessed the conduct of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in this House towards the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson). Was the friendly hand extended to him the other day? Was any friend asked to go over to the hon. member for Westmoreland and say: There are certain charges against you; I want to know whether they are true or not. Was the hon. member for Westmoreland permitted to send back word by his friend, and to say: No, I am above reproach; there is nothing true in these charges, and then have the hand of the premier placed upon him with the comforting remark: Good and faithful servant, go back to your reward. Not at all. That was the differential conduct that was given to the Minister of Railways and Canals as compared with the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman). Why was that treatment accorded the hon. member for Westmoreland? It is accorded to him for the reason that the government and the premier know and every hon. gentleman behind them knows that this government is sinking lower and lower in the estimation of the public, and it is found necessary to throw out the Minister of Railways and Canals in order to assuage, to a certain extent, the tide of public opinion which is setting in against this government stronger and stronger every day.

Progress reported.

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Shall we go on with this item to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, we will continue with this item.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.05 a.m., Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 11, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON STANDING ORDERS.

Mr. GEO. D. GRANT (North Ontario) moved that the seventh report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders be concurred in.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE. (East Grey). It seems to me that that concurrence is unnecessary because the Bills will go in the usual way, and there is something in that report with reference to one Bill at least which must be dealt with by the House and not by the committee. Let this remain as it is and let the Bills come before the House and this will be a notice to the House so that they may look into the matter in question.

Mr. GRANT. The committee thought it proper to draw the attention of the House to the fact that in the case of the Bill in question, the notice published did not contain all the clauses as it subsequently passed the Senate. The committee thought proper to draw attention to this so that in the Railway Committee that point might be considered.

Motion withdrawn.

OTTAWA TERMINALS RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. LAW moved that Bill (No. 152) to incorporate the Ottawa Terminals Railway Company be placed on the order paper for second reading at the next sitting of the House.

Motion agreed to.

RELIEF OF ARTHUR LEON McPHERSON.

Mr. GRANT moved that Bill (No. 157) for the relief of Arthur Leon McPherson be placed upon the order paper for second reading at the next sitting of the House.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 154) respecting the Canadian Northern Railway Company.

Bill (No. 158) respecting the Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Company.—Mr. Ralph Smith.

QUESTIONS.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND TUNNEL.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES—by Mr. Talbot—asked :

Will the government make arrangements to have a complete survey and report made by the best known engineers in its service during the coming summer as to the practicability, cost and maintenance of a tunnel under the Northumberland straits, between Prince Edward Island and the mainland ; also a survey and report as to the practicability, cost and maintenance of a bridge across the Northumberland straits between the said island and the mainland ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). We already have considerable information on the subject. Whatever further information be necessary in order that we may be fully informed as to the approximate cost of the tunnel or bridge should be obtained and efforts will be made, so far as our engineers are available the coming season to obtain a report. I shall do my utmost to get such information at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Through the engineers of the department or special experts ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think we have sufficient engineering skill in the various departments, but if the services of our engineers are not available undoubtedly we shall have to obtain expert opinion outside.

SUPREME COURT OF SASKATCHEWAN.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) moved that the House do to-morrow go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide that the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court of Saskatchewan shall be as follows :

The chief justice of the court, $7,000 per annum.

Four puisne judges of the court, each $6,000 per annum.

And that the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court of Alberta shall be as follows :

The chief justice of the court, $7,000 per annum.

Four puisne judges of the court, each $6,000 per annum.

And that in the province of Saskatchewan the salaries of eight judges of district courts shall be, each $2,500 per annum during the first three years of service ; and after three years of service, each $3,000 per annum.

And that in the province of Alberta the salaries of five judges of district courts shall be each $2,500 per annum during the first three years of service ; and after three years of service, each $3,000 per annum.

He said : His Excellency having been informed of the subject matter, recommends it to the House.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT LOANS.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). I would like to ask the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) how the government is meeting its obligations now maturing or about to mature—whether by the issue of new securities or temporary loans.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). We have a loan maturing in London on the 1st of May and are arranging to extend it for a period of four years. The details are not yet completed, but that is the purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the present rate ?

Mr. FIELDING. Four per cent. It fell due several years ago. Owing to the unfavourable condition of the money market, a portion was extended with the option, which some parties took advantage of, to convert their holdings into three per cent in a certain time. The balance will fall due about the 1st of May and will probably be extended for a term of four years.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the amount?

Mr. FIELDING. It approaches, $10,000,000 ; I have not the figures at hand.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister think he will be able to get as good a rate on the extension as the present rate ?

Mr. FIELDING. Of course, we must just be content to do the best we can. There has not been for many years a less favourable moment for a monetary transaction than the present. We will do our utmost to get the best the market will afford, but I cannot say that I have any expectation that it will be a very favourable rate.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is not the minister negotiating with the Canadian banks for assistance to tide him over the present stringency ? And is not the fact that these negotiations are going on and that the banks are holding large sums in reserve for that purpose one of the causes of the present stringency ?

Mr. FIELDING. No. We have no special negotiations at present, with any Canadian bank. The transaction we have discussed has been managed, as is usual, in London. I have no knowledge of such negotiations as those which the hon. gentleman (Mr. W. F. Maclean) suggests. We have no negotiations except as to maturing loans in London, and I do not imagine that this can affect the money market in Canada.

WARSHIPS ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. minister has had no opportunity to look into the matter of which I spoke yesterday ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, the pressure of yesterday's engagements left me no opportunity to consult my colleagues ; and, though

I had a good recollection of the matter, I thought I had better not speak of it without consultation and inquiry.

SUPPLY—FRENCH IMMIGRATION.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. E. PAQUET (L'Islet). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to make an important remark. I beg to enter the most vigorous protest, in my own name and in the name of the county of L'Islet, which I have the honour to represent, in favour of the exiled religious orders of women who conduct certain educational institutions in that constituency, and in favour of the French religious orders generally who came to Canada. I strongly protest also, as a French Canadian and a Catholic, against the language proffered by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) in the course of the remarks made by my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne), on the 9th inst., in this House, and which I find on page 6292 of the unrevised Hansard :

Mr. W. ROCHE. What profession or employment did the French-speaking immigrants follow ?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I think most of them were farm labourers.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Were any of them expelled clergymen ?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. No, but I hope a great many of them will come to Canada.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Clergymen who were driven out of France by order of the French government.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I hope we will get more of them because they are the very best class of immigrants we can have in this country.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. A curse to the country.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) will unhesitatingly deny or take back those words, which imply an insult to my nationality and my creed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into Committee of Supply.

Further amount to provide for expenses in connection with the Royal Commission on Life Insurance, including a sum not exceeding $550 to be paid to members of the Civil Service notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $75,000.

Mr. LENNOX. Hon. members on the other side, who might be supposed to support the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) in his endeavour to support the finding of the Royal Commission on Life Insurance do not seem to be particularly anxious—not so anxious as they have been on previous occasions—to come to the defence; and I do not wonder at that. They have been politely invited to take part, and numerous reasons have been pointed out why a defence is necessary. Nobody can read the report itself, and make the most casual comparison with the evidence, without seeing on the face of it abundant reason why, if possible, some hon. gentlemen should come to the defence of the commission. One of the points taken by the Minister of Justice yesterday as showing that the commission had been fair was that the report was complained of not only by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) but also by Senator Cox. Sir, the very mention of that matter is sufficient to show the difference. In the case of Senator Cox and the Canada Life and Subsidiary companies enough appeared on the face of the evidence, without prosecuting the inquiry deeper, to make necessary the references made in the report to that company's dealings. But, in place of following out all these transactions into their final ramifications, as was done in the case of the Foresters and the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) Mr. Shepley, the counsel for the commission, over and over again, said : We will leave that matter and come to it again ; but they never came to it again. In one case the commission referred to what came to the surface, to what they could not help referring to ; and in the other case they delved into every nook and corner investigating matters that did not concern them. But the Minister of Justice was in a difficulty. His difficulty was seen to be all the greater in the remarkably lame defence made by this most able legal gentleman. And it was a lame defence. That he and his party are driven to the sternest stress is shown by almost every step in his argument. For instance, he refers to the closing answers of the evidence of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and the polite manner in which he acted as he left the court. It seems to surprise hon. gentlemen opposite that people should be polite, as it surprised them, on looking at the black political horizon by which they are surrounded, to be a reason for jubilation the other day, forsooth that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was found to be not as black as his associates. The Minister of Justice read the closing words of this evidence amidst the applause of his supporters. Neither he nor they seem to question the delicacy of referring to this matter at all. Though he owed it to himself as a gentleman, perhaps, to make no reference to this matter, yet he reads it to bring forth rounds of applause from his supporters. After the case of the Independent Order of Foresters before the commission was practically closed, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) asked for the right to make a statement concerning the position of himself and his company. After that had been discussed to some extent, the concession was finally granted, and Mr. Shepley says —page 2665 of the evidence :

Q. I do not understand that you are intending to bring any other documents ?—A. No, I am not going to bring any new matter before you.
Q. Is there in existence and in your possession anything throwing light upon the matters we have been examining and that we have not seen ?—A. No, you have searched me right through.

That is : Are there any other documents, is there any other scrap of paper that you can bring that will help us in this investigation, or prosecution or persecution that we have been carrying on ? The hon. member for North Toronto says, No, there is nothing, you have searched me right through. And the Minister of Justice sees fit to bring this forward as evidence in support of the righteousness of that commission, and his followers applaud him to the echo. Then he turns over to page 2676—and as I say, he takes comfort from the fact that the hon. gentleman from North Toronto knows what is due to himself as a gentleman, because at the conclusion of the matter he thanked the commission for the courtesy it had extended to him ; but the Minister of Justice did not refer to the remark of the member for North Toronto when he said he had been compelled to divulge things which he should not have been compelled to divulge. He parts with them with the statement, in effect, that they have shown him politeness, but as I will show, it was a devilish politeness touched all the time with venom, and founded from first to last in a desire to blacken the character of the member for North Toronto. Mark you, the hon. member for North Toronto had made his statement, he had made it after an argument that he should be allowed to make it, he had made it after Mr. Nesbitt had pointed out that in England a public man was allowed to defend himself by counsel. Then in conclusion as showing himself a man—and these gentlemen are surprised at this—he says :

I thank your honour, for allowing me to make this statement, and I do not think I should leave this box without acknowledging your unvarying courtesy to me ; though I have sometimes had the audacity to question your ruling, it has been on a question of principle, and nothing personal of course.

And that is what the member for North Toronto has stood for from the first, nothing personal.

I do not think I ought to leave either without acknowledging that so far as Mr. Shepley is concerned he has treated me with unvarying courtesy, and all who have been associated with him, the officers and others, have been more than kind.

When the devil entered the Garden of Eden, he was courteous and polite, but he had devilishness in his heart all the same. The member for North Toronto has not exonerated them from this devilishness in the position they had taken, and the Dominion of Canada will never exonerate them from the devilish and diabolical course they took in endeavouring to blast the character of an hon. member of this House.

Mr. FOWLER. I think the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) must have been reading from the Toronto 'Globe' or the Montreal 'Star' in order to find all these epithets.

Mr. LENNOX. Now the stress to which these gentlemen are forced is shown by another argument of the Minister of Justice, and I am going to discuss the argument of the Minister of Justice not so much on account of the argument itself as on account of the position he occupies. He thinks it his duty to refer, in order to support this commission, to the Ontario Bank case. I venture to say that among honest Liberals as well as honest Conservatives, there will be found no man who will not admit that that reference was a dastardly reference to make. It shows the stress to which the hon. gentleman was driven when he had to resort to such an argument, when he tried to draw a parallel between that case, which was a notorious disregard of the law, and compare it with the conduct of the member for North Toronto who has defied the hon. gentleman, —and the hon. gentleman has not met the challenge—to lay his finger upon any one case in which the law has been disregarded. Would the Minister of Justice, with all his astuteness, like to follow the analogy a little further ? Would he like to recollect that the meanest criminal ever tried under British law is allowed to make his full defence ? Would he like to recall the fact that when the member for North Toronto was put on his trial, only one side of the evidence was brought in ? It was not therefore an investigation but a prosecution. They say they do not want to be a party to a prosecution but to an investigation. It was not, they say, a prosecution but an investigation. Aye, it was not a prosecution but it was a persecution as it went on.

Now the Minister of Justice has not exhausted his arrows. It took him a quarter of an hour to develop the first point, and to comment on what the member for North Toronto said. He devoted fully a quarter of an hour to that, and he concluded amid the cheers of his associates at six o'clock. But the Minister of Justice thought fit to refer also to the fact that the production of the stock book in reference to the Great West Land Company was resisted and that it was only by reason of its being produced that they ascertained the condition of matters in regard to that company. He said something else. He pointed out that the investigation into the affairs of the Union Trust Company in relation to the Foresters had been stoutly resisted, and he laboured with that question for practically twenty or thirty minutes for the purpose of showing that the hon. member for North Toronto had endeavoured to keep back evidence in regard to that. I deny it, and a reference to the evidence shows that whilst the member for North Toronto was in the presence of the commission at that time, Mr. Duverney and Mr. Nesbitt appearing on behalf of the Union Trust were the only parties who objected to the production of the books and papers in that regard. The hon. member for North Toronto, from first to last, never uttered a sentence to the effect that he had any objection to producing all the transactions between the Foresters and the Union Trust. I will come to that point again.

Now to what stress the hon. gentleman was driven was illustrated by the fact that he thought it necessary to devote at least half an hour of his address to proving what has never been denied. The records of 'Hansard' will show that he devotes half an hour to prove that the commission had a right to inquire into the relations between the Foresters and the Union Trust. Did my hon. friend from North Toronto ever deny that? Did any one ever deny it? In this House or out of it; did any one for one moment deny the right of the commission to investigate the investment of the funds of the Foresters in the Union Trust? No, Sir, but what we do object to—and the hon. gentleman knows it very well—is that after the capital stock of the Union Trust is purchased and paid for and the money that goes for the purchase of that stock becomes the property of the Union Trust Company and other individuals who are unconnected with either of these associations, come and borrow from the company, these men should be followed and hounded through this country because of this. I referred to these matters by way of introduction and I now wish to refer to a position that is unique in the history of this country. One point that will always stand out prominently in this matter is that we have had sitting in judgment in this commission a counsel who was employed by the government in the prosecution of the case. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice has great ability and he has had great experience as well. I will ask him to undertake to name a case in which counsel who has stood upon the floor advocating a case and prosecuting it in the manner that was elucidated here last night—has taken that course as the representative of the government—has changed positions, and after he has done all that mortal man could do to blacken the character of his political opponents, has stepped upon the bench and helped the parties who are the judges to decide the very matter which he has submitted to them for investigation. Is that a fact or is it not? Only a few weeks ago my hon. friend from North Toronto asked:

> Has Mr. Shepley, K.C., been in the employment of the government in connection with the Royal Insurance Commission since the taking of evidence was ended?

What is the answer to that?—an answer, which, I will venture to say, could never have been given in connection with the administration of justice in a civilized country before if you take the only meaning from it which can be reasonably taken, is

> Mr. Shepley's retainer to conduct to an end the inquiry referred to in the order in council of February 28, 1906, did not terminate with the closing of the hearing of evidence by the commission, but continued till the completion of the report of the commission.

And so far as I remember the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) apologetically said yesterday: Altogether the expense will sum up to $105,000, we expect; I think it will be more. It is said here in this answer that Mr. Shepley has not yet rendered any memorandum of the services which my hon. friend from North Toronto referred to. That will be kept in the background for the present. See how this turns out; see how the cat jumps. I venture to say that when the hon. Minister of Finance told us yesterday that Mr. Shepley was to get $100 a day for his defined services, everything which is open and above board and which can be spoken of in parliament, he left the greater part unsaid when he intimated that there are certain other charges included in a general retainer, the amount of which, according to what he said, has not yet been determined and will have to be determined by order in council. The services which Mr. Shepley has rendered from the political standpoint will, if present plans do not miscarry, entitle him to a large fee. I will certify to a large fee for Mr. Shepley on that basis. Now, Sir, it is said by my hon. friend from North Toronto that it was not intended perhaps when this investigation commenced that it should be made a political persecution. I do not think it was either. That developed later on. Following the progress of the commission my hon. friend the Minister of Justice will find, and I defy him to contradict it, that it moved step by step. There was no intention at the time this investigation began to shut the mouth of any person or any counsel. The intention was at the beginning and until it developed and until an opportunity was seen to blacken the character of political opponents, to conduct this investigation in a seemingly judicial maner. That is proven by the records themselves. Judge MacTavish said at the opening of proceedings, page 3:

> The commissioners have deemed it expedient that counsel be retained on behalf of the Crown to aid in the investigation.

Mark you, not the government, but the commissioners deemed it expedient to retain counsel to aid in the investigation.

> Arrangements have been made by which the services of counsel will be available. We will be glad to have the assistance of counsel on behalf of any interest affected or likely to be affected by the investigation. We not only desire, but we welcome the assistance of all persons interested in the prosecution of the inquiry.

Was that adhered to? He puts the counsel for the Crown and counsel for the varied interests exactly upon the same basis at that time when he says :

We will be glad to have the assistance of counsel on behalf of any interest affected or likely to be affected by the investigation. We not only desire, but we welcome the assistance of all persons interested in the prosecution of the inquiry.

A day or two afterwards the government counsel decided to shift the investigation, to withdraw Mr. Fitzgerald from the box without completing his evidence and to substitute Mr. Blackadar. A protest was made by Mr. Hellmuth that he should have the right to cross-examine before a new witness was put into the box. What was the position of Judge MacTavish at that time? What was the position of counsel for the government at that time? Not that there should not be the fullest scope for cross-examination but that it should not be permitted at that time. When they went to Toronto afterwards the question came up again. They were still keeping government or departmental transactions in the background and the protest was again made. It was again recognized by the commissioners that there should be a cross examination but not then. The return brought down upon the motion of my hon. friend from North Toronto, or my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), I do not know which, as regards the correspondence which had taken place between the Department of Justice and the commission, shows by the reports of Mr. Shepley, that it was not contemplated at that time and until they approached the close of the Foresters investigation, it was not contemplated to shut out the ordinary British right of the man who was attacked and attacked, in this case, in the most stealthy manner, to make his defence before the investigating tribunal. The Minister of Justice said it was his duty to defend the man whose mouth is shut. Well, Sir, he will have something to do in defending men whose mouths are shut if the course is pursued of selecting for an investigation of constant an important matter of this kind, a man who has given a certificate of political bias in favour of the government upon a previous occasion.

Mr. SPROULE. More than once.

Mr. LENNOX. The Minister of Justice has a big contract on his hands. I want to say here: That when the Minister of Justice comes to defend that commission he will have to defend them against the incorporation into their report of garbled and dishonest statements. We are told not to attack the judiciary. There is not a man in this House who has a greater respect for the judiciary than I have. In my own county we have two judges whom the profession respects.

Mr. BENNETT. And the public, too.

Mr. LENNOX. And who are honoured by rich and poor alike, and in whom the public confidence rests.

Mr. BENNETT. Hear, hear.

Mr. LENNOX. They have never been dragged into the political arena and made scapegoats for the political sins or the political aspirations of former political friends. I refer to the report at page 146, and I am proceeding to support the view that the extracts given are garbled and dishonest. I quote from the report, the evidence of Hon. G. W. Ross :

I do remember that we did discuss, as I said a moment ago, the question of unloading ourselves on these lands.

Q. Do you remember at any time or at any meeting any discussion with regard to giving up the bonus stock which the Union Trust Company held, not for its advances, but as consideration for having made advances.—A. I do not remember any thing about the surrender of the stock.

It may be noted there that that is one of the questions which is dishonest and unfair; the counsel if he wanted to be fair would have put it : 'Do you know anything about the surrender of the stock?' But he emphasized, not the stock generally. but the bonus stock. I continue :

Q. Do you think you would have remembered if such a discussion had taken place ?—A. I think I ought to.

Q. You think you would ?—A. I think I would.

Now, that is all that is given in the report on that point. The point that is endeavoured to be made there is that Mr. Ross was at that meeting or that he was not at that meeting, but that at all events he has no recollection of the question of giving up the bonus stock, and the report sets that citation forth as a fair summary and result of his evidence in that regard. But what is the fact? The fact is that before Mr. Ross answered these question he had shown as definitely as a witness could show that he knew nothing about the transaction at all; that the matter of the stock had never been called to his attention; that the admitted fact that stock had been given for the advances was not even known to him; that the admitted fact that at the public meetings at which he was present the stock had been discussed, and that it was to be given up (that is the stock that is given for advances)—was discussed at these meetings, and was not denied by any one, but Mr. Ross has no knowledge of that matter at all.

Mr. FOSTER. It is fair to say for Mr. Ross that he was not a member of the directorate at the time the Great West Land transfer was being considered.

Mr. LENNOX. Exactly.

Mr. FOSTER. He did not know.

Mr. LENNOX. Precisely, and that is his evidence as I shall read. I refer to page 2,614 of the evidence to show that when they were giving an extract from Mr. Ross' evidence for the purpose of showing he did not know about this bonus stock, and when they put forward that he did have a general knowledge of what was going on, and that he did know of the stock that was given for advances, the fact is that Mr. Ross knew nothing about it at all. I quote from his evidence:

Q. Were you aware of the transaction of the Union Trust Company—did you become aware of the transaction of the Union Trust Company with the Great West Land Company ?—A. I knew of it.

Q. You knew of it ?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you aware that in the course of the transaction between the two companies the Union Trust Company had acquired certain shares of stock ?—A. No, I did not know that.

Q. Did you not become aware of that ?—A. No.

Q. It has been stated here that there were 237½ shares of paid up stock issued practically by way of bonus which were held by the Union Trust Company as its compensation for having financed the transaction. You say that you were not aware of that ?—A I was not aware of that.

Q. And you were not perhaps aware that Dr. Oronhyatekha held 100 shares ?—A. No.

That proves pretty conclusively that when they make an extract for the report they wanted to suppress the fact that Mr. Ross knew absolutely nothing about the transaction at all, and did not profess to, so that when they emphasize the other point they are acting dishonestly. I continue to quote :

Q. Perhaps I should have put this question first ; were you aware that the Union Trust Company, in addition to the stock I have spoken of, had taken stock in the Great West Land Company for the amount of money it had advanced in financing the transaction ?—A. No, I was not aware of the stock transaction at all.

Q. What we find was done is this ; the Union Trust Company surrendered all the stock that it had taken in respect of its advances, and instead of holding stock took a mortgage upon the lands for the full amount of the advances; perhaps you were not aware of that ?—A No, I was not aware of that.

Further on :

Mr. LENNOX.

Q. Do you remember the discussion with regard to the Great West Land Company ?—A. I do not remember anything particular about it. I could not say as a matter of fact that I remember any discussion about that at all.

That is enough for the purpose. Now, I come to another instance of the same kind, but still more glaring. The report, at page 145 in reference to Mr. Stevenson's evidence, says:

The directors who are recorded as being present at these meetings—with the exception of Mr. McGillivray—were all examined. Mr. Stevenson says (pp. 2387-2388):

'In what I said about the other matter' (referring to the giving up of the bonus stock) 'I have no hesitation in saying that while I did not understand the other matter was concluded or considered at all, I have no hesitation in saying the other gentlemen thought it was or that minute would not appear in that way. But I did not understand it in that way .....I had not in mind the giving of it up, although I did not attach much importance to it.'

Now, Sir, turning to page 2388 of the evidence to which reference is made, and which is not before the public, mark you, and which will not be seen by one-millionth part of the people to whom this report will go ; turning to page 2388 we have this important omission. It ends as they end it: 'But I did not understand it in that way.'

Q. You were not moving that ?—A. I did not have that in mind.

That is left out. What the witness is saying is if they would give the whole story, that although he moved the resolution undoubtedly, and although he did not have in his mind the fact that they were giving up the bonus stock, yet he wanted the commission to understand that he was satisfied, and it must have conveyed that impression to the people who were listening to him. 'You were not moving that resolution?' said the counsel. Mr. Stephenson answered : 'I did not have that in mind.'

Q. Do you say your mind was not directed to it, or that you had in mind the retention of that stock ?—A. Well,——

And 'Well' is left out. 'Well' is deliberative ; it connects this with the other matter that he said before. Then they follow with what he said, not giving the context :

—I had not in mind the giving of it up, although I did not attach much importance to it.

Here again something is left out, which gives balance to what Mr. Stevenson is endeavouring to convey to the commission, that his mind was centred mainly on another question, and he says :

The question that was in my mind was to get security, a first lien on the property for our advances. About that time, or soon after, there had to be about half a million dollars advanced.

The questions which intervened between the answers are left out, and why is the answer cut in two—cut in three, as a matter of fact—although the whole thing is only a few lines, if it is not for the purpose of garbling this matter, for the purpose of carrying out the theory and the object of this commission, to condemn the hon. member for North Toronto. Then, in connection with the same evidence, I turn to another statement in the report. In the first place, they think it well not to put in the question. it is very important to have the questions in order to know the meaning of the answers. In the second place, they decided to put in the questions :

Q. Was there at that meeting in connection with the resolution, which you are said to have moved,——

Mark the innuendo—'which you are said to have moved.'

—any discussion, any mention, to your recollection, of this bonus stock being given up ?—A. My recollection is that there was not. I simply say that because when the matter came to my notice that it had been done, it was a surprise. I may say that I talked the matter over with Mr. Wilson since that time, quite recently, and Wilson though I was a party to this agreement, and that I had approved of the agreement itself, and was very firm that the matter was within my knowledge. All I can say is that I did not understand it so.

And then there is one of those singular omissions. That is the answer to one question. In answer to another question, which in this instance is left out, he goes on :

I have given my recollection. That cannot be changed.

Now, Sir, when I turn to the evidence of Mr. Stevenson, I find that he was asked not only the question of recollection, but this : 'If Mr. Foster swears that so and so happens, would it change your view or your recollection ?' He says, logically and fairly, 'It could not change my recollection,' but he does not say it would not change his view, and he shows by his evidence that it would change his view ; but that is left out, and the question is left out. The point is not the magnitude of the omission, but why does it occur at all unless to give a garbled and dishonest statement in the report which will go into the hands of the people of this country, while the evidence will not. Now, here is the evidence at page 2389 :

Q. Mr. Nesbitt asks me to put a question to you in this form : assuming that it will be stated by Mr. Foster that not only was the matter mentioned, but that it was thoroughly discussed before the resolution was passed, would that change your view at all, change your recollection ?—A. That is rather an equivocal way to put it.

That is left out in the report.

I have given my recollection. That cannot be changed.

That is put in.

Mr. Foster will state his recollection.

Mr. Shepley is anxious, and he intervenes immediately with the statement :

I should not have put the question on my own responsibility, but my learned friend wants it put.

What then is left out ? This answer :

And in saying that, I may say I have great confidence in Mr. Foster's word.

That is left out in the report. He would not say that it would not change his view, but of course it would not change his recollection of the matter; but they only give the one side of the case, and so this is left out. And not only Mr. Shepley, when he was formulating this report—because he did formulate it, and his was the main hand in this whole matter—not only Mr. Shepley, but the gentleman who above all others is responsible for the honest administration of justice in this country, the Minister of Justice, left that out and kept it back when he was addressing this House and the people of this country. But he is not the only sinner. Let me also read at page 146 of the report in reference to Mr. Wilson. This is what they thought fit to give of Mr. Wilson's evidence :

Q. You were advocating the policy of not converting your advances into a mortgage ?—A. Yes, in that case.
Q. That is what you were saying to Col. Davidson ?—A. Yes.
Q. Did you say to Col. Davidson, of course if we do that we are going to take away that compensation stock ?—A. I do not recollect saying that to Col. Davidson.
Q. And if you did not say it to him, you heard nobody else say it, and you heard no discussion about it either then or at any time? —A. Oh, well, I won't say that——
Q. You have no recollection of yourself or anybody else saying more about the desirability of maintaining the status quo than you told me you said ?—A. At those meetings I had not.

I now turn to page 2719 for what Mr. Wilson did say. And we will see whether a fair epitome of Mr. Wilson's evidence upon that point was given :

Q. What was said ?—A. I cannot remember all that was said.
Q. Was any reference from beginning to end of the conversation made specifically to the compensation stock ?—A. Yes.

That is an important point in the matter.

Q. By whom ?—A. By me.
Q. What did you say ?—A. I remember this one statement, drawing Mr. Stevenson's attention to the fact that one hundred shares of that was in the Doctor's name, and Mr. Stevenson said : Well, that will be assigned too.

That is all left out.

Q. You remember that as a matter of recollection ?—A. As a matter of recollection, I do not mean to say that occurred on the Monday, but that that occurred——

Q. I am trying to keep to the conversation on the Monday at present ?—A. On the Monday the discussion was more of a general discussion of giving up stock and taking a mortgage. It was very general, it had not got into a definite state then.

Q. I want to know whether, when you emerged from the discussion on the Monday, you emerged with the idea that Mr. Stevenson was intending to sacrifice the compensation stock ? —A. I did not emerge with the idea that he was going to sacrifice anything, but I did emerge with the idea that he was going to give it up.

Q. From anything he said ?—A. Yes.

Q. What did he say ?—A. That I cannot recollect definitely, but the reason why I do say I emerged with that idea was that I went and discussed the matter with Mr. Scholfield and told him that.

That is the evidence of Mr. Wilson. A statement is given in the report from Mr. Wilson which is unimportant ; but this important matter, that he does remember the question discussed at the meeting and the attitude taken by Mr. Stevenson, is wholly left out. I want to call your attention to another item in the report which is probably as malicious as a statement, not supported by the evidence, can be, and you will judge whether it is supported by the evidence or not. The report, and my distinguished friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ayleseworth) almost hinged his whole case on this, says :

It does not appear that the personal interest of these gentlemen would ever have been disclosed had it not been discovered upon inspection of the stock-book, the production of which was strenuously resisted.

Now, I have pointed out that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth)—I do not propose to bother with small fry like the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell)—hinged his argument on the allegation that Mr. Foster opposed the examination of the accounts between the Foresters and the Union Trust Company, and that, in the language the minister used yesterday :

The production of the stock-book of the Great West Land Company was strenuously resisted, and the connection of these gentlemen would never have been disclosed had it not been produced.

But what is the fact? The hon. minister (Mr. Aylesworth) appeals to the high character and standing of the head of this commission. Let me then give him what the head of this commission says on this point. Will that satisfy him? Let us look at the report. I have read what it says. Turn to page 2396, of the evidence and you will find the statement of the chairman of the commission, Judge McTavish himself. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) had pointed out that, in his position as secretary-treasurer of the Great West Land Company, he did not consider it was his duty to produce those books on the mere request of counsel, but that if the commission would take the onus of ordering their production, then they would be put in the hands of the commissioners ; and to show that that was all, we have the certificate of Judge MacTavish himself. Judge MacTavish said :

We recognize the position of Mr. Foster as secretary and treasurer of this company, responsible in a way to his board of directors for the proper execution of his duties, and the position that he takes is quite proper. I understand that it is no part of his duty to volunteer information of that kind. So for his protection we can make a direction that these books should be produced.

And duly produced they were. Yet this same judge, who has there certified that the position taken by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was a proper one, has sent out to the country his opinion that the ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster) was guilty of improper conduct and had vigorously resisted the production of these books. Is that justified by the evidence? It is not. And we await, and no doubt shall await in vain, an explanation how it happens that these significant omissions occur in the report, and that on the other hand we have a coloured and dishonest statement made public in that regard.

Now, these are not the only garbled statements. There is one that is much more significant. I will refer to only this one at this time. But I promise that these hon. gentlemen opposite shall hear more of this from time to time ; for the country cannot know too much of the inwardness of these 2,500 pages, fully three-quarters of which is rot as regards the investigation of life insurance. I come to garbled statements which are directly in aid of the conspiracy to blacken the character of the hon. member for North Toronto. The matter which commands the greatest attention, the matter of which the Minister of Justice was most afraid and around which he squirmed a good deal yesterday, was the point which Mr. Shepley, above all others, endeavoured to make, that the hon. member for North Toronto had inserted in the books of the Union Trust Company dishonest, fradulent and forged statements in regard to the meetings of the 13th and 28th of November. And yet, will you believe it Mr. Chairman—even you, with all your knowledge of those who sit to your right—that on the face of the records that the minister was dealing with yesterday, staring him straight in the face, was the evidence that cannot be controverted or contradicted, the evidence of their own star witness, Mr. Stevenson, that the meeting of the 13th of November did take place, and that he considered it to be sufficiently authenticated. Even at the risk of wearying the House, I shall read the record on this point, because I want to place side by side the statement and its refutation, that the people of Canada may know what this government has descended to. It has been remarked by others—by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden)—the nice way in which these people bring in their innuendoes, the skill with which they shoot their poisoned arrows, the ingenuity with which they bring in statements which border on the truth, yet convey an insinuation of misconduct. Now, it must always be clearly borne in mind that the property in this transaction was in fact, mortgaged to the Union Trust Company. That is a fact, clear, undoubted, it cannot be got over. The stock which had been given to the Union Trust Company and accepted by them as compensation for advances was to be given back when the documents were executed in pursuance of the general conclusion of the meeting of November 7, the admitted meeting. Now, if the theory of the Minister of Justice is correct, there was no meeting after the 7th of November until the 28th of November. Yet, before that time, all these documents had been executed in pursuance of some meeting. Yet, in the face of that, and in the face of the evidence of Mr. Stevenson and Hon. G. W. Ross, these gentlemen have the hardihood to put on the face of the report this statement :

> Mr. Stevenson is very reluctant to admit the paternity of this part of the resolution, and it is both remarkable and unfortunate—— > —that in the book kept for registering attendance of the directors no signatures are found under date November 13, nor indeed is that the date itself found in the book.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) uses the same expression 'unfortunate.' He seems to be inoculated.

> The recorded minutes proceed to instruct the solicitor—who was Mr. Matthew Wilson—to prepare the necessary papers to be executed by the officers of both companies.
> The minute book records another meeting of the directors on November 28, 1905.

The point they make there is that no signatures are found to authenticate that meeting. And what they want the people to believe—that which appeared in staring headlines in the Liberal press at the time of this investigation, was that these were bogus meetings and that this was a fradulent entry. Later on, the report says :

> The directors' attendance book contains no record of a meeting of this date, nor any signature of directors.

And still later :

> Mr. Stevenson had left on November 13—it is said immediately after the meeting recorded on that date—and was not present, of course, at the recorded meeting at which the direction of that date was carried out.

'Recorded meeting' again. Not at the meeting of the 28th, but at the 'recorded meeting' of the 28th. So these gentlemen, in endeavouring to show that there was no meeting on the 13th and 28th, leave out the fact that in the minutes of November 7—an admittedly 'authenticated' meeting—the discussion was not completed and effect was not then given to the proposed action, and this meeting was adjourned, or, as it is recorded, 'adjourned to the 13th of November at 2.30 in the afternoon.' So, at the very inception of their laboured argument, they leave off this important point, though it is in the records of the court and my distinguished legal friend the Minister of Justice stumbled into reading it last night.

Before dealing with the gist of this transaction I want to call your attention to another point. Now, there is a plain question which would naturally have occurred to any layman, to say nothing of any lawyer, who was really trying to get at the truth. We learn from these minutes that there was to be a meeting on the 13th of November—adjourned from the 7th of November. The question naturally arises : Was there ever any meeting in pursuance of that adjournment. And yet, from first to last, the astute Mr. Shepley and the honest commissioners never asked that question. In dealing with this general question, I leave out the evidence of Hon. Mr. Foster. That does not mean that I think it is worth nothing. But, I know that it may be said that he is an interested party. My distinguished friend the Minister of Justice, last night thought that Mr. Pritchard's evidence should be taken as against the evidence of Hon. Mr. Foster and of Hon. Colin H. Campbell, both of whom flatly contradict the statements which Mr. Pritchard made. The Minister of Justice, of course, has a right to his own choice, and I have a right to mine, and mine in this matter is different from his. But I leave out the evidence of Mr. Foster because I can prove my case up to the hilt and without a possibility of doubt, without it. I can prove that there was a meeting on the 13th of November. This fact is established by Mr. Stevenson, and the evidence of Hon. G. W. Ross. Proving that, I tumble down this castle of cards which these gentlemen have so carefully built up to maintain the charge against my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) as regards the surrender of 237 shares of stock.

Now turn to page 2387 of Mr. Stevenson's evidence. Mr. Shepley is referring to the minute as being on the 19th of November, and Judge MacTavish interposes by saying '28th of November.'

> Mr. SHEPLEY. Yes, I should have said the 28th of November. That is the one ?—A. Yes. it was in fact earlier than that, because I sailed for England on the 15th of November, and the matter was agreed on finally before I went away.

Mark that 'it was agreed upon finally before I went away,' and he went away on the 15th of November.

Mr. FOSTER. That means that he left New York on the 15th, he left Toronto on the 13th.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, because he says he sailed for England on the 15th of November, and he gives the date more precisely afterwards as the 13th. Then Mr. Shepley says further down :

It is here in the minutes. We are able, perhaps, to refer to that now, by reference to the minutes of the directors' meeting of the 13th of November, 1905 ?

Now they are dealing with the meeting of the 13th of November, 1905, as to whether it took place or not, and the witness says :

A. Is that the Trust Company ?
Q. The Trust Company, and that I will read before going further with this : The adjourned meeting of the board of directors of the Union Trust Company was held in the office of the Union Trust Company at 2 p.m. The same directors were present as were at the meeting of the 7th. That would be yourself, McGillivray, Davidson, Ross, Wilson and Foster ?—A. That was the day I left Toronto for New York to take the ship.

The 13th of November.

Q. I may refer to the meeting of the 7th, because this was an adjourned meeting. The minute of the meeting of the 7th, some discussion was had with reference to the Great West Land Company and the position of the Union Trust Company in relation thereto. This matter, however, was left over to be taken up at the adjourned meeting. Then on the 13th the same directors were present : 'It was decided on motion by Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Mr. McGillivray, that the Union Trust Company should assume the position of mortgagee with reference to the advances or payments to or for the Great West Land Company.' (reads down to the words 'as set forth in the agreement of the 22nd of June, 1903'). That is put as your motion, seconded by Mr. McGillivray.

And he gets the answer he does not want:

A. There is no doubt that the first move to take security was my motion, and Col. McGillivray seconded it.

Establishing the very fact that is referred to at that meeting. Then :

In what I said about the other matter I have no hesitation in saying that while I did not understand the other matter was concluded or considered at all, I had no hesitation in saying the other gentlemen thought it was, or that minute would not appear in that way. But I did not understand it in that way.

But it does not end there. Mr. Shepley pursues it further. On page 2338 of the evidence we find this question :

Q. I suppose you were not aware of the terms of this agreement before it was executed? —A. No, I was not in the country when it was executed.

He left on the 13th from Toronto, and left New York on the 15th. Then another question :

Q. Then, when the resolution was passed, which you were put down as moving, did you write down the resolution or was it reduced to writing by somebody else?

And he gives this answer which is the conclusion of the whole matter :

Oh, no, the meeting was a hurried meeting, just on the eve of my departure, and I have no doubt it was an oral one.
Q. And that somebody, perhaps——A. I think the minute was made up subsequently.

So though these gentlemen want to show deliberate dishonesty and fraud in order to blacken the character of an associate in this House of Commons, they are confronted by Mr. Stevenson who says, 'I no doubt moved the resolution. I want to say that if the particular matter of the bonus stock was not presented to my mind at the time I moved the resolution, others must have understood it so at that time. But my mind was directed, not to the question of the bonus stock to which I atttached no importance at all, but to the main question of getting security. I wanted security, and if the alternative had to be taken between security and giving up the bonus stock I wanted the security and to let the bonus stock go.' Now let me direct the attention of the House for a moment to that point. These gentlemen have the right to take stock for their advances or to take a mortgage—they exercised the option of taking the stock—that remained, they took their chances, and after considering for months they decided : We will take a mortgage and we will surrender the stock. When they surrender the stock they said: We will deal fairly by ourselves and by the others, we will give up the bonus stock as well as the other stock because we have already exercised our option. What the Minister of Justice read last night from Mr. Foster's evidence is a confirmation of what I have said ; he says they were to have this stock upon the terms I have referred to.

I also want to give the evidence of a good political associate of my hon. friend, the Hon. G. W. Ross. I have given some of his evidence before, but I want to say this ; not only does the Hon. G. W. Ross, by his evidence on pages subsequent to these I quote, say that the theory of the signing of the book is absolute imagination in so far as he is concerned, but that he attaches no importance to it at all ; sometimes it was signed and sometimes it was not. But he shows from the intrinsic evidence contained in the minutes of the 13th of November, that beyond possibility of doubt, if Mr. Ross's evidence is to be taken at all, that that meeting took place, although he cannot identify it. The date is of no importance. It was adjourned until the 13th. The evidence of Mr. Ross, if it shows anything—if I have not established that point by this evidence I can establish nothing at all—his evidence establishes by itself that the meeting did take place. Now I have these two quotations further with which I will trouble the House. Following what I read this morning, Mr. Shepley indentifies the meeting of the 13th by Mr. Ross, and he says, page 2614 :

Q. On the 13th November, 1905, the minute states that the adjourned meeting of the board was held in the office of the Union Trust Company, the same gentlemen present, and the minute reads and so on, identifying the meeting at that point. Then he goes on with some more questions and he says :

Then the minute proceeds——

That is, speaking of the meeting of the 13th :

The solicitor was instructed to prepare the necessary papers, to be duly executed by the officers of both companies.

Well then I ought to call your attention to the fact that there are the minutes of other matters at this meeting and see what your recollection is in regard to these matters.

Now, if Mr. Ross identifies the other matters which are recorded in these minutes of the meeting and says the meeting took place, does any one question the truth of the statement that there was a meeting? Mr. Shepley reads from the minutes:

The general manager reported that the space in the historical room would leave sufficient room—on motion it was ordered that measures be taken to put the room into a condition to receive the Trust Company as early as possible.

Mr. Ross says :

That was discussed.

Q. Do you connect that discussion with any particular meeting ?—A. No, I do not.

Q. The manager was again authorized to confer with the manager of the Standard Bank with reference to the change (reads minute)? —A. I remember that distinctly.

There is more of it. Well then were the commissioners desirous of giving a fair statement to the country or were they not ? Assuming that they had the right to go into all the ramifications of the inquiry that they saw fit to pursue, does any one believe in the face of the extracts I have read that this commission endeavoured to honestly discharge their duty in that regard ? And will the public be in haste to believe that the Minister of Justice, who has perused this report, who has read it, as he says, and knows what it contains, is as candid or as sincere as he wants the people to understand ?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, before this item passes I have a few words to say with respect to the subject-matter of the item, because to some extent—to some slight extent—my name has been mentioned in connection with the matters that formed the subject of the investigation by this famous, or infamous, depending on your point of view, commission. I do not know why I was selected as the victim of a certain political plot that was hatched not very far from this Chamber during the latter part of the last session of this House. I should have thought, Sir, that the humble position which I occupy in the ranks of my party would have relieved me from being selected as one of the victims, but, Sir, I do not suppose that the parties to this plot—I might call it—this scheme, cared particularly about including me among the victims. They were after higher game than the modest and humble member for King's-Albert. They wished to destroy the reputation and political usefulness of one of the ablest and one of the purest men who has ever graced the public life of this country. And, Sir, if I were to look about me for the person who was responsible for this scheme I would not have very far to seek. It is not necessary for me to bring forward an accusation or to name the individual because that individual has named himself.

I propose briefly to give a history of the two transactions in which I was concerned that were discussed by this commission and that were included in this report which contains the greatest number of falsehoods and misrepresentations to its bulk of any document or book that I have ever seen in my life. The whole of this report, as far as it concerns myself, is one tissue of falsehoods and misrepresentations which can be easily shown by any one who will take the trouble to go through the evidence—evidence which was adduced without giving me an opportunity of cross-examination which I would have had if this matter had been brought up in a court of law. Well, Sir, I said I would give as briefly and as succinctly as I can the true history of these transactions. I, in company with some other gentlemen, some of whom were members of this House and some of whom were not, obtained an option from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for a purchase of a block of 200,000 acres of land at $3.50 per acre. We went into the open market and purchased at the market price. Was there anything wrong in that? We were not looking for government favours. We were not privileged as supporters of the government to get special favours from them. No, Sir, there is no parallel between the transaction in which we were engaged, a transaction in which any member of this House or any citizen of this country would be justified in engaging, and transactions such as the Robins irrigation scheme, or the Galway ranch, or any of those schemes which have been discussed in this session as well as last session and which the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) has supported and defended. These transactions were transactions with a corporation, it is true. But hon. gentlemen say: Oh, it was with a corporation that comes before this House to obtain certain benefits and privileges and therefore we had no right to deal with it. Did any one ever hear of any such argument or doctrine ever having been put forward before? If that were so by what right would any man holding stock in the Canadian Pacific Railway become a member of this House? We have a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway a member of this House. Has any one ever questioned his right to vote? Has any one ever questioned his right to vote upon matters directly affecting the railway of which he is a large stockholder and director? In the Senate we have two gentlemen also connected with that railway and we have in the Senate a gentleman connected with the Grand Trunk Pacific. Yet nobody questions their right to vote and to take part in the deliberations of this House or the other House in connection with these matters.

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN (Montreal, St. Mary's). They did not take shares with the money of the government as you have done with your corporation.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not understand that gentleman; he is not familiar with English.

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN. I will get up and say it.

Mr. FOWLER. That would be still worse for my understanding of it, so far as I am concerned. He says something about money of a corporation.

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN. No, money of the government; they did not, like you have done, use the money of that society to buy your shares when the money did not belong to you.

Mr. FOWLER. What this gentleman says is absolutely false, so far as I am concerned, and I challenge that gentleman to make any charge against me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOWLER. What are these burdocks on the back benches calling 'order' for; have they a pain?

Mr. BENNETT. The Minister of Justice is calling 'order.'

Mr. FOWLER. The Minister of Justice is calling 'order'; for what reason? If the Minister of Justice wants to call 'order,' let him rise in his place like a man——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Take it back.

Mr. FOWLER. Have we fallen so low, Sir, in this House that the Minister of Justice, like an irresponsible back bencher, is afraid to rise in his place? Is that what we have come to in the House of Commons?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I rise to order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I ask if it is in order for a member of this committee to accuse another member of saying what is false and untrue?

Mr. BERGERON. When it is false, what other word can you use?

Mr. FOWLER. Is it right for a member of this committee to be permitted to say that I took money belonging to any society?

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN. That is not the way I have mentioned the language.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Let him withdraw it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler) knows the rules of the House. I did not understand quite distinctly what the hon. member for St. Mary's (Mr. Martin) said, but I understood the member for King's and Albert to say that what he said was untrue so far as he was concerned.

Mr. FOWLER. So it is.

Mr. FOSTER. So it is.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for King's and Albert knows that a statement made in the House by a member of the House cannot be qualified as false per se.

Mr. FOWLER. Am I to understand, Mr. Chairman, that a member is to be allowed to use language in this House——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The allegation may be declared to be unfounded, but the language to be used must be parliamentary.

Mr. FOWLER. Do I understand that the member for St. Mary's (Mr. Martin) is to be permitted to make an accusation against me which I know is absolutely untrue, which there is not the slightest scintilla of evidence to support, which, as a matter of fact, is absolutely false, scandalous and untrue; and am I to sit here and not say it is untrue?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. You have the right to deny the allegation.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what he did, and that is what the Minister of Justice says he has no right to do.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand that what the Minister of Justice objects to is the form of the language used by the hon. member (Mr. Fowler).

Mr. FOWLER. He cannot put the gag on us to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not any royal commission to-day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Make the member for St. Mary's take it back.

Mr. FOWLER. It is not worth while paying attention to him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Make him withdraw.

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN. I withdraw nothing.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the member for St. Mary's should be compelled to withdraw an accusation against a brother member which is declared to be scandalous, false and untrue.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN. If you will permit me, I will explain in French. (Translaiton.) In order to make my meaning clearer, I may be allowed to say a few words in French. After the hon. gentleman had insinuated that we had in this House gentlemen who had bought stock in some railway companies, I stated that if those gentlemen were really holding those shares, they had not used moneys belonging to the government to buy that stock, and that they had not done as some gentlemen who bought stock for their own use with money belonging to the Foresters.

Mr. FOWLER. I have some little knowledge of both languages, and, so far as I could follow the gentleman, I understood him to say that the member for King's and Albert——

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN. No, no; I did not mention any member for King's.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, you turned to me and you referred to me.

Mr. TAYLOR. Whom did you refer to then?

Mr. FOWLER. If that hon. member (Mr. Mederic Martin), or if any other hon. member, either on that side of the House or in the colony over here, accuses me of that, I say right here and now that it is absolutely false, scandalous and untrue, and I defy him to prove it and I challenge him to the proof.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. They won't take up your challenge.

Mr. FOWLER. I defy them to take up the challenge.

Mr. FOSTER. The words of the member for St. Mary's should be taken down.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take them down.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The explanation given by the member for St. Mary's is that he has laid down a general principle, and that he has not applied these words to the member for King's.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then they are absolutely irrelevant, and impertinent as well.

Mr. FOSTER. The first statement made by the member for St. Mary's should be taken down.

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN. I used the words generally.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who did you apply them to then?

Mr. FOWLER. The member for St. Mary's does not want to sneak out on that ground. I ask him to say to whom he does apply the words.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the first words uttered by the member for St. Mary's be taken down, and made a matter of record.

Mr. FIELDING. I was not in the House at the time, but unless the request were made at the moment they cannot be taken down.

Mr. BERGERON. He has repeated the same words in French afterwards.

Mr. FIELDING. When I came into the chamber the hon. member for King's and Albert was speaking, so that there must have been an intervening proceeding.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. It was the same proceeding. Take down the words.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The member for St. Mary's made a statement very indistinctly, which I did not understand the purport of; he has since explained he had no intention of attacking the member for King's, and that he merely laid down a general principle. No objection having been taken immediately, as the rule requires, I think it is too late now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Objection was taken immediately by the member for King's and Albert, who declared the statement absolutely untrue, false and scandalous. He may not have used the word 'scandalous' at first, but he declared them false and untrue, and then he was called to order by the Minister of Justice, and then the member for—I don't know his constituency.

Some hon. MEMBERS. St. Mary's.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then the member for St. Mary's was called upon to withdraw. The member for King's and Albert having repeated his statement that the charge was false and untrue, then the member for St. Mary's rose and made certain remarks in French of a general character. As I understand, he did not then apply the words—although he did in the first instance—to the member for King's and Albert, but he purported to be laying down a general principle : that it is improper for any hon. gentleman to use, for the purpose of his own profit, moneys belonging to a corporation with which he is connected in a fiduciary capacity. Then the member for St. Mary's was called on to withdraw. He does not withdraw, and my hon. friend from North Toronto asks that his words be taken down. There was no intervening proceeding; the whole matter has been under consideration from the first.

Mr. FIELDING. I quite realize the disadvantage of not having been present at the moment the incident arose, but even on the statement of the leader of the opposition the member for King's and Albert did not ask the words to be taken down at the time. He proceeded to a discussion of the subject and to attack the member for St. Mary's for what he regarded as an impropriety, which is not a demand to take the words down.

Mr. BERGERON. The words were repeated afterwards.

Mr. FOSTER. This parliament is utterly powerless if its proceedings are to be conducted as it is proposed now to conduct them. If this plea put forward by the Minister of Finance is allowed to avail in this House, then I say that you can never take down the words that a member maliciously states here to the detriment of a fellow-member. There is no way by which the rule can be operative unless you have the right to have the words taken down before any proceeding of a different nature intervenes. Now, no proceeding of a different nature had intervened. There is a scandalous and lying assertion made by a member of this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOSTER. So declared to be by the member against whom it is made. I ask as a member of this House that the words of the hon. member (Mr. Martin) be taken down.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. FOSTER. There stands the conspirator.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I rise to order, Mr. Chairman. I ask if it is parliamentary language for any member of parliament to characterize the statement of another as a lying statement.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I object decidedly to the Minister of Justice shaking his closed fist at me or at any other member of the House.

Mr. PATERSON. In common with all the other members of the House I was at the disadvantage of not knowing exactly what the hon. member for St. Mary's said.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PATERSON. I say so. I have no doubt that the hon. member for King's and Albert thought that he was making a remark directed specially to him. Speaking for myself, I am not able to say what he did say.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Take it down.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not think we are in a position to take down the words if we wanted to. If what the hon. gentleman has said in French, which unfortunately I do not understand, is what he said he meant to say, and if it differs from what he actually said before, then, by the parliamentary rule, the later statement is a virtual withdrawal of his previous statement.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. My ruling, as I said once before, is this. The hon. member for St. Mary's division spoke very indistinctly. The hon. member for King's and Albert called attention to his words. The hon. member for St. Mary's division subsequently gave an explanation in which he said that he had made no personal attack on the hon. member for King's and Albert. I consider, therefore, that on that point the explanation of the hon. member for St. Mary's should be accepted. With regard to taking down the words, the rule is this :

> If the Speaker rules that the expression complained of is not unparliamentary, a member will not be permitted to move that the words be taken down.

Therefore that incident is closed. With regard to the objection raised by the hon. Minister of Justice, the hon. member for North Toronto is an experienced parliamentarian, and I think he knows that the word 'lying' sometimes exceeds the bounds of parliamentary debate.

Mr. FOSTER. It is an essential element of it sometimes.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. In the meantime, it being one o'clock, I leave the Chair.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. FOWLER. Almost immediately before the committee took recess at one o'clock, I was discussing the purchase of a considerable tract of land in the Northwest Territories, which was made by myself and some other gentlemen, several of of whom were members of parliament, from the Canadian Pacific Railway. And I made the statement that although we were members of parliament we had the same right as other men to buy lands in the Northwest or anywhere else from the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other corporation. I make the statement now that we purchased those lands—and I challenge proof to the contrary—at a fair market price, that we received no special consideration from the Canadian Pacific Railway, that we asked for none and received none, that we bought the land at the same price and on the same terms exactly as they could have been bought at by any other group of men or any single individual, and that we had received no favour of any kind whatsoever from the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other corporation in that connection. I not only make that statement but I say that the evidence taken before this Insurance Commission absolutely bears it out, and I challenge contradiction. Mr. Griffin, land commissioner of the Canadian Pacific Railway, was brought as a witness, and my hon. friend the leader of the opposition yesterday read his evidence. Mr. Griffin swore positively that we did not get any favour of any kind from the Canadian Pacific Railway, that we bought these lands in the open market at the prices then asked, and that although we bought a very large tract, 200,000 acres, we paid the same rate as those who were buying retail lots when we might have been given and were entitled to expect a wholesale rate. He swore also that he gave us no special consideration and that he had no suggestion from any one to give us any special consideration, but treated us as he would anybody else. I think I have sufficiently disposed of the purchase of the land. I do not understand why that purchase should be a transaction which the Insurance Commission had any right to consider, but the reason for their investigation was amply shown by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition yesterday. He then explained why it was this whole question of the purchase of these lands by us was taken up by that commission. What do we find? Here is a commission appointed for the purpose of investigating the affairs of insurance companies, and following out that line they took up the affairs of the Independent Order of Foresters. Then what did they do? They said, we have the right to investigate the affairs of the Union Trust Company because it is a subsidiary company to the Foresters. But they did not stop there. They went further and said, we are going to investigate the affairs of the Great West Land Company. But that was not a company which was subsidiary to the Foresters. It was simply a company to which the Union Trust Company had loaned a certain amount, taking a guaranty secured by those lands, yet they claimed the right to investigate the affairs of the Great West Land Company. Having thus strained their rights almost to the breaking point, one would not have thought they would have claimed the right to go any further. But they not only insisted on investigating the affairs of the Great West Land Company, but they claimed the right to investigate the affairs of the men who had sold land to that company. And why? Because among those men there happened to be some Conservative members of parliament. That was the only reason. It was simply the carrying out of that nefarious plot, the chief design of which was the driving from public life one of the brightest minds this Canadian parliament has ever had. Another object was to try and see if they could not fasten something against the hon. the leader of the opposition. Sir, the leader of the opposition is a man whose character shines high above that of his traducers, whose character is held in high esteem by every section of our people. But, Sir, these traducers of honest men's reputations, these mud slingers, did their best to drag his honoured name into the dirt but were not successful. Well, we purchased those lands. And having obtained an option upon them, we carried out that option by making the payments agreed upon, and then we endeavoured to sell them. We did not propose to farm those lands ourselves. As an hon. gentleman near me says, a farm of 200,000 acres would be a pretty big one. We bought those lands to sell them again, and we hoped to sell them at a profit. We were not in this transaction for our health but expected to make a profit out of the sales. It is not necessary for me to go into the details of the sale. The sale was made at an advance of $1 an acre. That was not a very large profit when we consider the fact that a railway was to go right through that district which would enhance the value of the land. But whether the profit be large or small, what right had this Insurance Commission to investigate that transaction? Even supposing that I and my colleagues with me had abused our positions as members of parliament and had put pressure on the Canadian Pacific Railway to get these lands at a lower rate, what right had the Insurance Commission to investigate that matter? If it were a mere Insurance Commission, it had no such right; but if it were a Star Chamber Commission I would understand their claiming it. That is why they did claim it. Something has been said about the the Canada Life Insurance Company. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) tried to prove the impartiality and honesty of these commissioners because forsooth they had been compelled to make certain strictures with respect to the Canada Life, the president of which is known as a Liberal.

I would direct the attention of the committee to the contrast between the report with respect to the Canada Life and the report with respect to the Foresters. What investigation was made into the subsidiary companies of the Canada Life? None whatever, notwithstanding the fact that some of the people with whom the Canada Life had dealings were very closely associated in business and very closely connected by relationship with the president of the Canada Life. But, Sir, every dealing by any subsidiary company, and every company with which a subsidiary company had dealings was investigated in the case of the Foresters. With exceptions, of course. There was one company that was not investigated very much. I wonder why? This was the Independent Lumber Company, 75 per cent of whose stock was owned by the Foresters and 25 per cent nominally owned by another party. Every dollar of the money in the Independent Lumber Company was put in by the Foresters or the Union Trust Company—I think, by the Foresters direct. But there was no investigation into that. Why? Why, there were no Tory members of parliament in it—there was no object in investigating it.

You speak about this commission and the course and conduct of it. From the very first they showed a deliberate intention and desire to blacken the names and injure the reputations of men who happened to be of a different political stripe from themselves. Take my own case, for instance: I was in the city of Toronto in the latter part of August or the first part of September on my way west with certain members of my family. I was going west on business, important private business of my own. I was served with a summons to appear before the commission. I was served on Monday night about 10 o'clock to appear on Tuesday morning and give evidence. So, on Tuesday morning, at ten o'clock I went up to the commission to give evidence. I did not know what evidence they could possibly want from me that would be pertinent to the matter in hand; but I had been served with a summons and I think I had also been presented with the magnificent sum of $2 for attendance. When I arrived I found the commission engaged examining into the affairs of the Home Life Association. I remained a couple of hours, and by that time it had become quite clear to me that it would take considerable time before the commission would be through with the Home Life Association. Besides, I knew that, before they could desire my services as a witness, they must spend a great deal of time with the officers of the Independent Order of Foresters. And I did not propose to stay in the city of Toronto and hang around day after day, and day after day, neglecting my private business merely to suit the convenience of that commission. So I wrote these gentlemen a letter. I told them that I had been served with a summons and had appeared in answer, but that they were still engaged with the affairs of the Home Life and likely to be engaged for some time before they could need my services, if they ever needed them: I said I was on my way west on important business, but would return as soon as possible in order that I might give my evidence if they required it. I went west. Think of it! Was it not an awful thing to treat this royal—royal, mark the word, Mr. Chairman—this Royal Commission in such a contemptuous manner?

Mr. BENNETT. Why didn't you go to California?

Mr. FOWLER. Because to go to California would have meant to carry myself outside the jurisdiction. Moreover, my nerves were in first-class condition; I did not require the sort of treatment that people receive in California for shattered nerves. I went west, and when I was ready to return I returned. I may say that I paid this much deference to the commission—that I got through the business that I had to transact as rapidly as I could; in fact, I neglected some of my business in order to get back, but I had been watching the daily papers and I knew the misrepresentations, lies and slanders put forward by the hireling grit press, and wanted to get back as soon as possible to show the commission what the facts were. When I left Revelstoke on my way east, I telegraphed Mr. Shepley that I was coming. I had to remain a day at Winnipeg on business, but, when I left Winnipeg, I advised Mr. Shepley by wire of that fact. I did not know but that his nerves might become shattered worrying over my non-appearance, and I wanted to assure him that I was coming east, as fast as steam would carry me, to give evidence before the commission. I reached North Bay. Our train had been very much delayed, and we missed the connection at North Bay and had to wait until late in the afternoon. I met a gentleman who had a telegram in his hand, and he was looking for Mr. Fowler. Whether he had seen some of the cartoons in the newspapers I do not know, but apparently, he thought I was the person he was looking for. He asked me if that was my name, and when I told him it was, he showed me the telegram he had from Mr. Shepley. That telegram was a peremptory order to George W. Fowler, to appear that afternoon before the commission. Well, Sir, the commission and I were several hundred miles apart. I said to this gentleman: 'You telegraph to your friend Mr. Shepley, and tell him, that unfortunately, there is no airship line between North Bay and Toronto, but I will be there as soon as the train gets there." Our train arrived at Toronto about 10 o'clock that evening. In the rotunda of the hotel, I was accosted by a gentleman who presented me with a document. He said he was the secretary of the commission. I told him that I had already been subpœnaed. He said: This is not a subpœna, it is something more.' Then, Mr. Chairman, I made a few remaks of a similar character to those you may find in a 'Globe' editorial the day after the pious and hypocritical editor of that paper had preached with great unction. The newspapers said something about this and we had a good audience the next day in the court. Mr. Chairman, I arrived in the court, and strange to say, I found that I had to wait for some time before I could give my evidence because they were not done hearing witnesses. And yet Mr. Shepley, day after day, had gone before that commission, and, in order to make out that the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) was trying to avoid giving evidence, was away in hiding, had made statements to the effect that if I did not put in appearance the most terrible calamities would befall me. Pure grandstand play, Mr. Chairman—pure grandstand play. The document I had received was a summons to show cause why I should not be punished for contempt. Contempt of this commission ! In the court room, there was a long platform and on it were three people—

Mr. BERGERON. Did you take a photograph of them ?

Mr. FOWLER. A mental photograph, yes. There were three people, three old men occupying chairs on that platform. Three old men in a row. The outside men looked to me like men who had crossed the borderline between manhood and dotage. The central was a younger figure. And this was the redoutable MacTavish, this was the hireling of this government, the professional commissioner who is appointed by this government when there is dirty work to do and who is ready to sign any report that is prepared for him by the Crown Prosecutor. Well, Sir, there was present also a certain rotund gentleman, the chief inquisitor, the modern Torquemada, Mr. Shepley, K.C. Mr. Shepley, K.C., when he got through with the witnesses, which took about an hour or so, then addressed himself to the commission, and he moved that Mr. George W. Fowler be punished for contempt of this commission. He did not say what style of punishment should be inflicted, whether I was to be plunged into boiling oil, or have my hand cut off, or have my head cut off, or be imprisoned in the tower.

An hon. MEMBER. Or be put in the stocks.

Mr. FOWLER. But he suggested that I should be punished for contempt. Well, I made a few remarks in reply, and Mr. Shepley's comment on my remarks was to the effect that if anything had been wanting to exhibit the contempt which the member for King's felt for the commission, he had supplied it in the remarks he had just made —and in that I think Mr. Shepley struck the nail on the head. Mr. Chairman, if this commission had, in its wisdom or lack of wisdom, decided that I should be punished for contempt, and if they had decided to make the punishment fit the crime, and to make the duration of my punishment, if it were imprisonment, commensurate with the amount of contempt I felt for them, Sir, all the years that have elapsed since the Christian era commenced would not have been sufficient for me to purge my offence. Sir, they would have had to go back into the dim ages of the past, and I doubt whether eternity would have been enough. Well, Sir, the commission after a while got down to business and I was on the stand. I regret that I have got a very bad cold.

Mr. BENNETT. Take some wine.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, as I went upon the stand there were two matters in which the commission seemed desirous of getting some information from me : One was with respect to the sale of these Canadian Pacific Railway lands, and the second was with respect to the sale of some timber limits in British Columbia. They seemed to have got the impression that there was something very wrong connected with the sale of these lands. I think they had already the impression removed that there was anything wrong in the purchase of them, but they seemed to think there was something wrong in connection with the sale of them, and the chief offence of which they seemed desirous to find me and my colleagues in that affair guilty, was that we had improperly and unlawfully withheld a certain portion of this block of land from the purchasers. Well, Sir, if any hon. gentleman will read the evidence, if any gentleman will examine the exhibits, he will see how abusurd such a pretension was. We sold the lands to the Great West Land Company, or to a syndicate of gentlemen who afterwards transferred them to the Great West Land Company. They were described by metes and bounds, they were set out section, half section and quarter section, as the case might be. There could be no possible misunderstanding, no possible mistake with respect to the amount of lands which this syndicate of gentlemen, the Great West Land Company, had bought from the Pope-Fowler syndicate. There could be no possibility of a mistake or misunderstanding, because attached to the agreement that was entered into between us and them, was a schedule consisting of several pages and containing details, quarter section by quarter section, half section by half section, full section by full section, with the actual acreage of the land which we sold to the Great West Land Company. Now, Sir, what had that to do with insurance matters ? Absolutely nothing at all to do with them. But they thought there was a chance to show that the member for King's-Albert (Mr. Fowler) that the member for Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) and the member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) had buncoed these gentlemen, this Great West Land Company, by professing to sell them 200,000 acres and being paid for 200,000 acres, when in point of fact they only sold them 193,000 acres. Sir, as I say, this agreement and that which was attached to it contained an actual statement of the lands that were sold, and there was not one word in the agreement of sale to show that we were transferring or selling to these people all the land which we had bought from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, not a word. Here was a copy of the agreement between us and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company showing that we had a right to take 200,000 acres, here was a schedule attached showing there was only 193,000 acres. Would not these men be bound to inquire if we had professed to sell them 200,000 acres and the schedule only showed 193,000 ? The contention was absurd, and I think I was justified in saying, as I did say to Mr. Shepley, that nobody but a jackass would put forward such contentions. Well, Sir, this matter has been discussed so often that it is not necessary for my purpose to go into this question of the Great West Land purchase and these lands that were sold. I have only this to say, that we bought 200,000 acres in one block, and afterwards Mr. Pope and myself bought 17,000 odd acres in another block ; and some of them we sold to the Great West people, some to an English syndicate, and some of those lands we still retain, belonging to all the members of the syndicate. That is the position of affairs with respect to that matter.

Now we take up the timber limit. Away back in October, 1903, I obtained an option from a Mr. Peter Ryan on certain property, timber limits and a mill, that he had in the province of British Columbia ; I obtained that option, not at the request, not at the dictation, not under instructions from the Union Trust Company or from any other individual except myself, absolutely without their knowledge, absolutely without any obligation to these people with respect to the disposal of that property. On the 24th of October, 1903, on the very day that I got that property, I gave an option on it to one James Harper. Look in the exhibits, and you will find a copy of that option I gave on the 24th of October, 1903. Mr. Harper was unable to carry out the deal. He fell down, as we say, and about the middle of December, which would be about seven weeks after I had taken the option, I went to the Union Trust Company to see whether they would take the matter up, to see whether I could sell this property to them. Surely up to this time I was not the agent of these people. Up to the 15th or 16th of December, when I first went there, when they absolutely knew nothing of this thing, the matter had never been brought before them, surely I was not the agent ? How did I become the agent—the agent to dispose of what ?—the agent to dispose of my own property. That is what it meant. That option belonged to me, it did not belong to any living soul but myself and whatever it was worth it was mine. How did I become the agent, I would like to know ?

The first minute which is made in respect to this matter is on the 19th of December, when there is an entry in the books of the Union Trust Company as follows :

> A proposition was laid before the directors by the manager in reference to providing money for the purchase and working of certain timber berths in British Columbia as described in a memorandum of agreement entered into between Peter Ryan of Toronto and George W. Fowler of Sussex, N.B., giving an option to the latter by the former, and the manager was instructed to continue the negotiations and secure the reports of the examiners now upon the property, on the understanding that if the reports are satisfactory the Trust Company will advance the money required to purchase the property and take a controlling interest therein.

I want to say right here and now that this report, in so far as it relates to my doings in connection with that land company and in connection with that timber company is a tissue of falsehoods and misrepresentations and the evidence absolutely shows it. Here is what it says with respect to agency :

> Fowler in his testimony asserts very strongly that he was the out-and-out owner of an option upon the property before he approached the Trust Company, and that he approached the company as proposing vendor, and at arm's length.

It says just what I said, that I approached the company as the vendor and at arms length. Surely, if I owned this option for seven weeks before I went near these people I approached them as the vendor and at arms length. Surely I was not their agent in getting hold of this thing. It says :

> On the other hand Mr. Foster and Mr. Stevenson speak of Mr. Fowler as having entered upon the negociations for the purchase of the property in question for all those who were expected to be interested.

The evidence of Mr. Foster does not bear that out at all. Mr. Stevenson does not swear to it either. He says : I understand so and so and so and so. Mr. Stevenson's evidence is very hazy indeed upon that point. But, I do not care for the evidence of these people. Does that make me an agent ? The documents show whether I am an agent or not. Let the documents speak. In every case I am the vendor. What happened ? I did go to these people and tried to get them interested in buying up this property. They were considering the matter and I sent men to British Columbia to make reports. Certain men went to British Columbia to make reports because these people had confidence in them. But, who paid them? This report says that the Union Trust paid them and I say it is absolutely false and untrue. For the examination, for the cruising of the Kamloops property, the first property that is purchased, the Union Trust Company never paid a dollar for expenses or anything else. For the cruising of the Okanagan property which they bought afterwards and with the sale of which I had nothing to do any more than that I was going to be interested in the company they did pay certain expenses. That is the bill that appears there and it is not for the Kamloops property. All the expenses in connection with the cruising of this property, with sending two men out there, their time and everything else, were paid out of my own pocket. I am prepared to defend here or any where else that transaction. I say that property was mine. On the 24th of January my option would be up. Search the books of the Union Trust Company and find if you can any resolution or minute with respect to this matter up to this date, except the one entry on the 19th of December. Question the officers and the parties interested and ask them under oath if they will say when I purchased this property, when, on the 24th of January I took up my option and went to Mr. Peter Ryan's lawyer, Mr. Levesconte and instructed him to make out an agreement of sale, I had any instructions from the Union Trust Company or any other man with respect to this matter. I went and carried out the terms of my option. I accepted the property and on the 26th of January, 1904, I became the the absolute owner of the property subject only to the payment of the price. It was mine. There is not a resolution, there is not a thing to connect me with the Union Trust Company up to that time except that we had certain informal talks and certain negotiations were going on. There is not one scratch of the pen to hold me to any bargain with the Union Trust Company. I hold that the property was absolutely mine. There was not one scratch of the pen to hold me or to hold the Union Trust Company or any officer of that company or to compel them to carry out any negotiations which had been going on or to make them enter into any agreement or contract. I was absolutely free and the property was absolutely mine. That is the position I took before that commission, that is the position I take to-day ; the property was mine and I had a right to that property. I made a profit out of it I am thankful to say. I am also thankful to say that the people to whom I sold made a profit and if it had been handled with any kind of business management at all, the profit would have been infinitely greater than it was. What are the facts ? I want in connection with that matter to refer to something that the Minister of Justice said in his speech in answer to my hon. friend from North Toronto. For the three properties that we bought we paid $440,000 ; $225,000 was what was paid for the Kamloops property, $40,000 for the Shuswap property and $175,000 for the Okanagan property. These properties have been sold since, and sold in a hurry and they have brought $650,000 a profit of $210,000. Let me say, Sir, that the Kamloops property, the original property, of which berth 237 was exchanged for the Shuswap lands, could not be bought to-day for a million dollars. It is one of the most magnificent timber properties in the province of British Columbia, and Sir, I had one quarter interest in it —not 650 shares as stated here but 1,250 shares in that whole property. And yet my interest and the interest of the other individual owners, has been sacrificed, and I have been abused by this same hireling press from one end of the country to the other. That is a clean business transaction ; I am prepared to defend it here, now, and any where. Here is what this commission report says with respect to the expenses page 148 :

> The option referred to in the minute is the option referred to in (4) and the 'examiners' then upon the property were McCormick and Irwin, who were sent out and their expenses paid by the Trust Company.

I say that is absolutely untrue, and there is absolutely no evidence to support it. Here is another statement on page 148 of the report :

> On January 26, 1904, Mr. Fowler again saw Mr. Ryan——

I had seen Mr. Ryan several times before. The 26th of January, 1904, was the day on which we finally closed the agreement of sale and signed it.

> —and negotiations were resumed, the object being to close with Ryan upon a basis which would be satisfactory to the Union Trust Company, which was then expected to finance the transaction.

The satisfaction of the Union Trust Company had absolutely nothing to do with this transaction. If the Union Trust Company had declined to take the matter up I proposed still to carry out the contract with Mr. Ryan. I was bound to do it, I had to do it, I was liable to him for the purchase price of that property and I would have to pay it. And yet, this commission, in a matter with which it should have had nothing to do, made this absolutely lying report in order to try and injure me in some way. The report further says :

> Mr. Fowler does not pretend that he ever disclosed to the Trust Company either the real option on the larger property at $200,000, nor the real bargain on the smaller property at $170,000.

I never told them, they never asked me, if they had asked me I would have told them. If the trust company did not see fit to take up the matter then they need not have done so; I wish they never had because I certainly would have made very much more money out of it. There is one other point

I want to refer to. The Minister of Justice had to admit, because the facts show it, that in every one of these transactions there was a very large profit enuring to the Foresters. But, said the Minister of Justice, what if it had been the other way? And what was the instance which he cited, what was the comparison he made? A comparison, Sir, which a man, occupying the position which the Minister of Justice occupies should not have made—I had almost used an unparliamentary word, but I am so careful on that point that I certainly will not use the word I intended to use. I will not borrow from the vocabulary of the 'Globe' or the Montreal 'Star,' I will use parliamentary language. I say, I was surprised at a gentleman occupying that high position, for it is a high position; it ought to be the fountain of justice, but how can we expect in this country to have a pure and limpid stream of undefiled justice flowing from such a source? Sir, it is absolutely impossible. And the Minister of Justice made that comparison, comparing the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), a man the latchet of whose shoe the Minister of Justice is not worthy to tie; a man whose name will shine in the annals of this country with honour when the name of the Minister of Justice will be forgotten. The Minister of Justice dared to illustrate his point by using the name of a man who has recently been convicted, Mr. McGill, for misuse of the funds of a bank.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame.

Mr. FOWLER. I don't wonder that hon. gentlemen cry out 'shame,' when they realize that a man towards whom we should look with honour and respect would so abuse the position he occupies. But the Minister of Justice need not have gone so far afield; he could have made an illustration inside the ranks of his own party. Sir, there is sitting—there was sitting then within the sound of his voice, a gentleman who was a director of a bank that failed and failed disastrously. The Minister of Justice might have used him as an illustration. Sir, I do not know and I do not believe that anything improper attached to that director, any act of impropriety on his part, but, Sir, it is a fact that the funds of the bank of which he was director were dissipated, and the widows and the orphans (about whom the Minister of Justice wept so feelingly) the widows and the orphans who had their money invested in that bank lost their all. The Minister of Justice might have taken that illustration, and it would have struck a little closer home. But, unfortunately, that sort of thing often happens. Take the 'Globe' newspaper, and the chief push of the 'Globe' (as we may call him to adopt the language of the 'Star'), the chief push of the 'Globe' newspaper is a gentleman who was president of a company in which every investor lost every dollar he put in it. Is that a reproach? According to the Minister of Justice it is a terrible reproach not to lose, but to make money. It is an awful thing because the funds of the Union Trust Company were used in, what he called speculative investments, which made enormous profits for the Order of Foresters. But the Minister of Justice has not a word of condemnation for directors of banks who happen to be his own political friends, where the investors lost every dollar they put in; not a word of condemnation for the chief owner of the 'Globe' newspaper who was president of a company in which the people who took stock lost every dollar.—and Sir, moreover, if rumour is correct, in which interest dividends were paid out of capital. The Minister of Justice has not a word in respect to that, and yet as I understand, that venerable gentleman said he wondered how any defence could be made in connection with this transaction.

Now Sir, let us take the purchase of the Okanagan property. The Okanagan property was not purchased on my recommendation; it was not purchased on my instructions, but I went out with Mr. Hamilton who was sent out specially to examine that property. Mr. Hamilton is one of the best experienced and most successful lumbermen in the province of Ontario; a man of thirty years experience in lumbering. Mr. Hamilton was sent out by the Kamloops Company to examine this Okanagan property in order to see whether it was worth the price which was asked for it. Mr. Hamilton made an exhaustive examination of that property, and he reported that the property was worth more than double the price asked. And here, it appears in this report as though there was some skin game in connection with it, because the report as to this property says :

> The total assets were placed at $65,544.66, stock liability at $50,000, and other debts at $11,026.81, leaving profit and loss account at $2,517.85.

And the report intimates that there is something rotten in connection with this matter, because a property which had originally been bought for $65,000 was now being sold for $175,000. As a matter of fact a large double cutting band-saw mill had been built since that purchase, and it was shown that over $50,000 had been added to the expenditure upon that property. There is a profit in connection with that property. Is that an unusual thing in connection with timber limits in the west? Let me tell the committee something. Within three weeks of this very day, a timber limit has been sold by this government—put up for public tender and the highest tender got it; the government's course in the matter is absolutely straight and absolutely correct; no fault to find at all, everything is perfectly right in respect to it—but, Sir, that property was bought for $43,000 and within three weeks of this very day, an option has been given on it for $125,000. That is a profit of $3 for

$1, and the property will be unquestionably sold under the option. In the short space of three weeks there is that profit, and here in the Okanagan case was a property bought a year and a half before for $65,000 upon which some $50,000 had been spent, and it was sold for $175,000. It is only necessary to state these two cases.

And yet this commission found it necessary to report on these matters—why? Just, Sir, carrying out the plot, that is all; just in furtherance of the original design, that is all: to try and see if they could not throw mud enough so that some of it might stick.

Now, they take up this matter of paying for the Okanagan property. I went out, as I say. I had instructions from the company to get a written option for this property at a certain price. They took the cruisers out to examine the property, and when they were satisfied, I took the option; and because the stockholders of the Okanagan company were scattered, living in different parts of the country, I was requested to act as their attorney in collecting and transmitting the money from the Kamloops company to the various stockholders. I did that, and they are perfectly satisfied; they got their money. Why was it necessary for this report to contain nearly half a column on that point? What on earth had the Insurance Commission to do with the question whether or not these stockholders in the Okanagan company got their money? That is a matter for the Okanagan stockholders to settle with me. It certainly was not any business of the Insurance Commission when that money was paid for that property. Surely it was no longer the money of the Foresters, it was no longer the money of the trust company, it was no longer the money of the Kamloops company. Yet they tried to throw doubt on the question whether I had settled with the Okanagan people or not. What is the business of this country or this House whether I had or not? What, Sir, is the private business of a man to be gone into, is it to be ascertained whether or not he has paid all his creditors, before he comes to this House? If so, there might be some vacant chairs here. Sir, the property qualification was abolished in this country many years ago, so that a seat in this House should be open to every man, whether he was worth a dollar or not. Therefore I do not think that this House has anything to do with searching out these private matters, matters with which, by the greatest stretch of the imagination the Insurance Commission could have no possible concern.

Then they take up the purchase of the Shuswap property. We bought that property for $40,000, three years ago, and the timber limits on it could not be bought today for $200,000. It has most magnificent timber on it; it was a great buy. After we had agreed to buy this property, after the agreement to purchase had been signed between Mr. Shields and myself, Mr. Ryan told me that there was a commission coming to him in connection with that, and he would divide it with me. Mr. Ryan had owed me a considerable amount on the original purchase price, and he gave me an order on Mr. Shields not only for the commission, but for an amount in excess of it. I took the whole thing as a payment on account, and if Mr. Ryan pays me the balance, I shall be very glad to share the $2,500 with my friends.

Now, Sir, I think I have gone pretty fully into these matters, but there are two or three things I would like to refer to. As to this report, we have these three commissioners. I have already described them to you, so that everybody must now know them pretty well. I am going to make the statement right here and now, that the commissioners never wrote a line in that report. I question very much whether they read it all through. The only handwriting of the commissioners was their names signed: D. B. MacTavish, J. W. Langmuir, A. L. Kent. Now, Sir, who is going to be paid for writing this report? Mr. Shepley wrote this report. He dictated it, probably to a stenographer. It shows the master mind and the hand of Mr. Shepley all the way through. Mr. Shepley was carrying out his instructions. His instructions were to try and fasten something on these Tory members; if he could not fasten anything on them, then to throw just as much mud as he could. Mr. Shepley carried out his instructions to the letter, and he is to be paid $100 a day besides a very large additional counsel fee. I would suggest that about three-quarters or at least two-thirds. I will be moderate—of the money to be paid Mr. Shepley and these commissioners should be paid out of the Grit corruption fund, because the money was intended to be expended and was expended, for political purposes and political purposes only. We find besides that these three decrepit old men will be paid at the rate of $30 a day for one and $15 a day each for the other two for every day Mr. Shepley was writing this report. Mr. Shepley will be paid $100 a day and Mr. Tilley, his curtain raiser, bottle holder—to borrow again the language of the 'Globe' and the 'Star'—will be paid $50 a day. For the days when Mr. Shepley and Mr. Tilley were engaged in preparing this report, these men, who had nothing to do with its preparation, who had never added or taken away a line, but simply signed what was put before them according to what they conceived to be their duty as hirelings of this government—these men will be paid as well. I do not think that there ever was in the whole political history of Canada a more notable instance of a political boomerang than this Royal Commission has proved.

Sir, they started out primarily to injure one political opponent and afterwards they thought they could get hold of another. The one is the trusted lieutenant and the other the honoured leader of the Conservative party in this Dominion. That was their object. They were going to drive the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) from public life. No longer would there be any need for them to fear his criticisms of their public acts. No longer was his invective to be hurled across the floor of this House and make these hon. gentlemen cower under the lash. He was to be driven out of public life, degraded and disgraced. But to-day, notwithstanding this campaign of calumny and abuse, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) stands as high, if not higher in the estimation, not only of his party who are supporting him loyally, but in the estimation of all his honest countrymen. And after all that is the only thing a man need care about. He need not care what penny a line scribblers may say about him or what his enemies may say about him. If he is conscious that his course has been one of rectitude, honour and honesty, the people who know him best will still respect and honour him. That is the verdict he most desires, that is the only verdict he need care for, and that is the verdict given the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster.)

For the present I have finished with this matter. If my throat were in better condition, I might perhaps give a few more interesting details; but under the circumstances I think it is nothing short of highway robbery to take the public money of this country and devote it to the purpose provided by this vote. I repeat that at least two-thirds of that money should be paid out of the Grit corruption fund and not out of the public treasury.

Mr. WILLIAM JACKSON. The item under discussion is intended to meet the expenses of the commission appointed to inquire into the transactions and administration of insurance companies in the Dominion. Reference was made last night to the condition of some of our banks in Canada. It is the common desire of all who can save a little money that there should be some institutions in which they could deposit their savings, where they would be as absolutely secure against loss as possible. We ought to be convinced that such is the condition of our banks, our loan societies, our insurance companies and other institutions in that category. Last night the hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) made reference to a certain bank in this Dominion and I presume he meant the Bank of Ontario. Let me say that I hold in my hand a report of that bank, according to which it had a paid up capital stock of $1,500,000 and a reserve fund of $700,000.

And at the time that report was issued, and for some years previously, it had been paying dividends of seven per cent. In view of the real condition of that bank, as it was afterwards made public, people are asking to-day what is the use of those government reports on the condition of our monetary institutions? I say that by the absence of a reliable government report you are striking at the confidence which our people formerly had in these institutions where they deposit their little savings in order to lay up some provision for a rainy day. From these savings they never expected large dividends, but they certainly did expect and had the right to expect absolute security. In this condition of affairs I say that both sides of the House are remiss in their duty in not insisting that our monetary institutions should be placed on a safer basis. Take the winding up report of the defunct Ontario Bank; according to that report there was no reserve, and the shareholders will not receive fifty cents on the dollar. Yet its annual reports used to show that all its capital was paid up and that it had beside $700,000 of a rest. Thus these poor and small shareholders, who had each bought one share or a few shares, found themselves responsible for double liability, and found that the security which they expected from the protection of this government was absolutely illusory. Am I not then justified in asking the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) if there are not other institutions in Canada to-day which are in the same boat as the Ontario bank? The utter unreliability of the government inspection, which has thus been demonstrated, is the cause of a great deal of distrust. The trouble with us is that to-day we are too anxious to get rich quick, to reap big dividends, and it is time to call a halt. By the establishment of this Royal Commission on Insurance, we made some pretense of trying to ferret out the character of some of the institutions of that kind in the Dominion. That was a laudable purpose and one endorsed by the independent electors as a move in the right direction; and had the work of the commission been carried out in that spirit, it would have been effective of untold good to those institutions.

Last night reference was made to a commission—I do not know whether you call it a royal commission or not—which was held in the city of St. Thomas for the purpose of inquiring into certain crookedness reported to have taken place during an election in that electoral district. The central figure in that inquiry was the central figure in this Royal Insurance Commission.

Now, I know something of what led up to that investigation and something about the result of it, and I am going to ask the indulgence of the House while I go into the facts relating to two subdivisions in which crookedness had taken place. The election was held on January 12, 1899. In polling subdivision No. 6, Southwold, in 1898, the majority for the Conservative candidate was 21; in the election of 1899—the one to which I immediately refer—the majority for the Liberal candidate was 27. In the election of 1900, after the unseating of the member elect, the Conservative majority was 16, and in the election subsequent to that the Conservative majority was 32. In this polling subdivision there is no floating vote. These are old-settled farming districts, where people do not move in and do not move out. Practically, the result of polling in subdivisions does not vary from one election to the other by more than five or ten votes. In No. 4 polling subdivision Southwold, in the election of 1899—the one under discussion—the majority for the Liberal candidate was 85; in the election of 1900 there was a Conservative majority of 9; and in the general election following that a Conservative majority of 15. Now, a little personal experience of my own, which I will relate, will possibly illustrate what occurred better than anything else I can say. On the evening of the election, after the polls were closed, I went to the telegraph office with some of my Liberal friends. We have hard fights in West Elgin, but up to that time, we had had honest fights. I admit, of course, that none of our elections are too pure. But, we fight hard, and we like to fight; and the two sides exchange ideas over our political battles. When I came out of the telegraph office, I met a friend, one of the leading Liberals in Southwold, and chairman of the Liberal Association of that township. He asked me what were the returns from No. 4, and I told him there was a majority of 85 for the Liberal candidate. He said, 'That is all bosh, Willie; we did not expect 85 votes there altogether.' I told him that was the way the return had come to me. I went back to the telegraph office and got the message repeated, and it was the same 85 majority for the Liberal candidate. I said: 'Mr. Liberal friend, what did you expect in No. 4,' and he replied, 'Jackson, we expected to tie you there.' And I told him: 'We expected to beat you by two.' He said, there must be something wrong. The same thing pretty well applies to subdivision No. 6 Southwold, where, in previous and subsequent elections our majorities were from 15 to 20, we were snowed under, with an adverse majority of 27. So we Conservatives went to polling subdivision No. 4 and got sworn declarations from 84 men who had voted for the Conservative candidate, although the number returned at that poll was only 42. Seeing, then, that the freedom and the rights of the people had been abused, we appealed to the courts. First, let me read a part of the statement that was put in when the case was coming up for trial, and then I will read the ruling of the judges as well. Mr. MacDiarmid here referred to, was the Conservative candidate:

6. That a large number of votes cast for Mr. McDiarmid were in some nefarious and corrupt manner manipulated, whereby the result of the election was rendered doubtful, and in this connection the voting at Shedden, at Middlemarch, and in several divisions in St. Thomas, where said strangers so acted as deputy returning officers merits special mention.

That is signed by the elected Liberal candidate. The election was on the 12th of January, as I have said, and the election trial was on August 15, of the same year. Here is the ruling given by the judges in connection with the polling divisions of which I am speaking:

It is further proved that a person unknown to the returning officer, but who represented himself as being one Marshall W. Johnson and who also produced a written recommendation addressed to the returning officer, signed by the respondent to appoint 'the bearer' deputy returning officer for polling subdivision No. 6 of the township of Southwold in the said electoral division applied to the said returning officer to be appointed deputy returning officer for the said polling subdivision. The returning officer had intended to appoint one King, and declined to appoint the said person until he had seen King. King subsequently came to the returning officer and told him he would not act and wished him to appoint some one outside the said subdivision telling him also that Marshall W. Johnson was a resident of St. Thomas. The returning officer thereupon assigned an instrument appointing Marshall W. Johnson as such deputy returning officer and delivered such appointment to the person who had procured the said recommendation. This person was not Marshall W. Johnson and the said Marshall W. Johnson did not act as such deputy returning officer at the said polling subdivision, but the said person, or some person other than the said Marshall W. Johnson, acted thereat without authority, personating and representing himself to be the said Marshall W. Johnson.

The fees which are properly payable to the said Marshall W. Johnson, if he had acted as deputy returning officer were paid by the said returning officer to the said King upon an order which purported to be signed by the said Johnson.

The foregoing is with reference to No. 6. Now, with reference to No. 4, we have the following:

It is further proved, that although one Robert N. Stratford or Stafford, a person well known to the returning officer had been duly appointed by him as deputy returning officer for polling subdivision No. 4 of the said township of Southwold, the said Robert N. Stratford or Stafford did not act thereat as said deputy returning officer, but one Duncan Bole without authority assumed to act and acted thereat as such. The fees payable for the services of the deputy returning officer were made payable and paid by the returning officer to one McIntyre.

Now, I have to say, with all respect, that I do not believe that the elected Liberal candidate in West Elgin was a party to this. Liberal and Conservative alike—outside of a little clique—were anxious that something should be done to clear the atmosphere after this election. Here we have the admission of the elected member and the ruling judges that crookedness had gone on in several divisions. An investigation was demanded. And we got an investigation. This man Stafford was an honest farmer living in polling subdivision No. 4. And this young man King had acted as deputy returning officer in subdivision No. 6 for over sixteen years. The commission was appointed early next year of which Judge MacTavish was the central figure, and we did expect that there would be a clearing up of the whole matter. The Liberals as well as the Conservatives in that district as well as in western Ontario generally, wanted the thing straightened up.

They came to St. Thomas, we offered our assistance, Liberals as well as Conservatives, to help clear up and probe corruption to the bottom. Let me add also that it was brought out at that commission that Preston, Vance, Smith, the Sullivans, D. F. Macdonald, and three or four more who had been imported into West Elgin to assist the government candidate. Let me read a message that was sent from Toronto the night of the election by this W. T. R. Preston, the man who was mixed up with the North Atlantic Trading Company, the man who came down here last year and bullied the committee, and showed himself to be the boss of the job when he refused to answer questions, because he knew well enough that he had behind him this powerful government, this is the man that was up there assisting to gain the victory for a supporter of the Hon. G. W. Ross :

> Heartiest congratulations. Sorry to the bottom of my heart I cannot be with you to-night. To be supported by such a noble army of workers, should make you the proudest man in Ontario. Shake hands with the boys for me, and hug the members of the much abused threshing machine for auld lang syne.

Now that commission commenced its labours in the city of St. Thomas. Only one desire prevailed throughout the city, and that was for a disclosure of the crookedness and corruption that had taken place in the election, and that the guilty parties should be brought to justice. We went to our little court house where that commission commenced their labours, we offered them our assistance and it was refused, we were not allowed to take part in that investigation at all. We offered the best counsel we had in the city of St. Thomas to assist the commission, we offered to furnish evidence that would help in bringing the guilty parties to justice, and we were curtly refused the opportunity. But counsel was appointed by the Ontario government to look after their interests. Now, take the case of division number 4, Southwold. A man goes into the witness box and says there was nothing crooked, and the members of the commission in their report say that no wrong had been done in No. 4, yet it was proved in evidence that although only forty-two votes were counted for the Conservative candidate, eighty-four honest yeomen of division No. 4 swore that they had voted for the Conservative candidate. Yet that commission, of which Judge MacTavish was the central figure, said there was nothing wrong. Then take division No. 6. We have this man Pritchard going into the box and telling how he switched votes. And I may say here, Mr. Chairman, that there was so much switching of votes and corruption that I do not know to this day whether my vote was counted for the Conservative candidate or not, though I know well how it was marked when I put it into the box. We have a different condition of things when this man enters the box and tells what had happened, and how he was brought into West Elgin, and what he was paying and what he was paid for staying away from that election tribunal. We have that man haggled and hagged by Judge MacTavish, trying to make him contradict the testimony he was giving as to what he did with ballots on the night of the election. We find the judge saying in his report that he does not believe one word of what Pritchard said. That is the kind of commission that we got. The people of Elgin were not satisfied then and they are not satisfied now, and they never will be satisfied. We have a right to say to this government, or to say to the Minister of Justice, that if he is going to preserve the dignity and honour of the bench in the Dominion of Canada he must, in appointing judges to positions of that kind, see that they are men who can rise above party politics and try a case on its merits. This gentleman, who was the central figure of this Royal Commission at Toronto, as he had been in the West Elgin election inquiry, seems to be a man well qualified for little jobs of that kind. If the government do not cease making appointments of that kind they will bring the honour and dignity of the bench into disrepute throughout this Dominion. Now, I am not familiar with the working of this Royal Commission that has been going on for the last year or so, investigating insurance companies and so forth. But I do say this, Mr. Chairman, in all sincerity, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, that they must be more careful of the funds which innocent and confiding people entrust to institutions of this kind. The time has come when a radical change should be brought about in the men you appoint to conduct Royal Commissions if you wish to preserve the respect of the people for the occupants of the bench.

Mr. PORTER. This commission, during nearly the whole of yesterday and to-day, has been treated to a discussion, the occasion for which should never have arisen, the occasion for which. I venture to say, never would have arisen had this government and its creature the Royal Commission, done their duty, their whole duty and nothing but their duty, namely, to mind their own business. We have to-day witnessed an exhibition of conduct, of ill temper, of spleen, that might very well be expected from a prize fighter in the ring surrounded by toughs, but I venture to say conduct not at all becoming or in keeping with any man occupying the high and quasi judicial position of Minister of Justice of Canada. I can only account for that exhibition of temper which we witnessed this morning by the fact that it is provoked by the consciousness of the minister in being found out in his sins, and the castigation he has received from the speakers on this side of the House with reference to it.

If it is imagined by hon. members on the government side of the House that conduct of that character and speeches such as this House was privileged to listen to from that hon. minister yesterday are going to have the effect of gagging members sitting upon this side of the House and of allowing the tongue of slander, defamation and vilification to wag as it will, I beg to say that any hon. member who has formed any such opinion of the opposition has formed a very erroneous one, and I venture the assertion that the last word in regard to this matter has not yet been said. The minister, in his opening remarks yesterday, was pleased to introduce this subject by a reference to the privilege of a defeated litigant to go outside of the court and abuse the judge. In making that statement he fell into the same error that the gentlemen composing this Royal Commission fell into and one might also detect the fine Italian hand of the minister himself by the fact that both of them, the minister and Royal Commission, have left out the other half of the proposition. The minister says that a defeated litigant can go out of the court and spend twenty-four hours in abusing the judge. That, I say, is only half the statement. He omitted to say that he also had the privilege of appealing to a higher court. That course which the minister omitted, intentionally or otherwise to point out is the one that has been adopted by the hon. member for North Toronto on this occasion. It is not an occasion taken advantage of by him to abuse the commission. That is not the object of the hon. member for North Toronto, as I understood the remarks contained in the speech which he delivered here yesterday, but he is fulfilling the promise he made to the Royal Commission at the time he was before it, namely, that he would avail himself of his right to appeal to a higher tribunal than the Royal Commission, so called—to this parliament and he has availed himself of that privilege, I think, to the discomfort of hon. members on the other side of the House and especially the Minister of Justice. The minister was gracious enough to offer to extend to the member for North Toronto his sympathies in reference to this transaction. Well, Sir, judging from the conduct of the minister during the time he has been privileged to occupy a seat in this House, I have arrived at the conclusion that his stock of sympathy is very, very small and I think there are those very much nearer to the Minister of Justice than the hon. member for North Toronto who require any surplus of that article that the minister may have very much more than does my hon. friend from North Toronto. I think that if that modicum of sympathy is given to the members of the Royal Commission, the quantity necessary to heal the self-inflicted injuries to its conscience, he will have to borrow sympathy from some of those sitting around him if he can find any who have not already disposed of their stock by the liberal way they have disposed of it on behalf of the late Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson).

The minister took the position that the commission was a necessity under the circumstances existing at the time of its appointment. He seemed to assume that or take it for granted. With that proposition I beg respectfully to differ. I think he has confounded the terms by stating that the commission was a necessity with the fact, it may be, that an inquiry was necessary. But it does appear in the history of this government that the necessity of commissions arises at just about the same time as the necessities of the commissioners and just about the same time as this government desires to assist some of its supporters to gain some political advantage. The danger and impropriety of such commissions are well illustrated by the proceedings of the commission now under discussion and the action of the government in regard thereto. I can come to no other conclusion, and I have a fixed and firm conclusion in my mind, that this commission was appointed, as has already been pointed out solely for a political purpose under the guise of acting in the interest of the public. That is a position not for the first time taken by this government when they are afraid to take the responsibility of action themselves on which occasions they bring in or enlist the services of the hired man. One could well believe, from a perusal of the report now before this committtee, that it had been part of the bargain, part of the arrangement, as to the appointment of the commission that the Minister of Justice should, in case its decision or its finding were questioned in this Houses, come to its relief as he attempted to do yesterday during this discussion. The minister was pleased also to compare the actions of this Royal Commission with a well defined, well known and honourable institution of our land—inquests by coroners, but in his reference to that institution he fell into the same error that I have already pointed out in regard to his first statement. He fell into the same error that the Royal Commission fell into in making its report, namely, that he left out from his consideration and from his comparison the most important element of that institution of inquiry by coroners; that is the powers and duties of the jury.

In inquests held by coroners, the jury perform most important functions, and, examination on the part of the accused as well as on the part of the public is allowed to the fullest extent. Even the jurors, have themselves the right to go upon the stand and testify as to any facts within their knowledge which may be useful to a correct determination of the question. Why, the Minister of Justice should compare the procedure before this insurance commission with the procedure before a coroner's inquest, and try to draw any crumbs of comfort from the comparison, I fail to understand. The Minister of Justice was also pleased to make reference to the tendency of lawyers when advocating the cause of their client, to make use of quibbles and subterfuge. No better illustration of that could be given to the public than the effort made by the Minister of Justice yesterday to shelter his clients the Royal Insurance Commission, from the charge under which they lay. The defence of the commission seemed to require the effort of a gentleman who has the reputation of being the greatest lawyer, or one of the greatest lawyers in Ontario, and certainly the greatest lawyer in the ministry. It is a pretty desperate case when it requires such a desperate remedy. The very fact that the defence of this commission is taken up by the Minister of Justice, to whose department it does not belong, instead of by the Minister of Finance who is responsible for the commission, is to my mind most significant. The Minister of Justice dealt with the position of the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) and he handled that question very gingerly. He could not find language strong enough to express his feelings of admiration and respect for my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett). And why? Because that hon. member has time and again in this House demonstrated clearly to the mind of the Minister of Justice that had the minister taken any other course he would have found himself barking up the wrong tree. When I heard the speech of the Minister of Justice yesterday, and when I saw his demonstration in the House this morning, it occurred to me that it would not be out of the way to suggest the necessity for such a commission as has been operating in the city of New York; a commission to discover if somebody very near the head of the Department of Justice is not suffering from what is now known as a brain storm. All the discussion that has taken place in this House, in the press, and in public, has demonstrated clearly a want of respect for and confidence in that insurance commission. I venture to say that for every word spoken in favour of the findings of that commission, 100 words, yes 1,000 sentences and thousand paragraphs have been spoken and written in condemnation of it. The object for which that commission is said to have been appointed was entirely lost sight of by that body in its anxiety to vilify somebody or something. The conduct of the commissioners can only be prompted by a desire to justify their appointment or by a desire to make a report that would find favour with the gentlemen who were responsible for the creation of the commission. Lack of respect for the findings of that commission is amply justified by a perusal of its report, and by a consideration of what was supposed to be the real object of the commission. Nobody can deny but that the several life insurance companies in Canada, in their manner of doing business, possess many features that commend themselves to the confidence of the people. It is just as important to the people of Canada that they should know the merits of the various life insurance companies, as that what may be called the failings of these companies should be pointed out. And yet if you peruse that report you will not find one word in it from start to finish, in praise of the manner in which life insurance business is conducted in Canada. That leads one naturally to an inquiry as to what was the necessity for this commission; as to the appointment of the commissioners themselves and the object, and, as to the usefulness of the work of the commission. In such an inquiry as that, one is met at the very threshold with this very important question: What are the rights of the public in connection with this matter, and what power is reposed in this parliament to delegate the authority which it holds on behalf of the people to some irresponsible body? In answer to that it will perhaps be said that there is a statute of this dominion authorizing the appointment of such a commission. It is true, there is a statute recited in the order in council under which this commission is appointed; but that statute, while intended for the purpose of being made use of in the interest of the people of this country, has in this instance been used not to further the interests of the people of this country, but to abuse the right which this government took to itself under that Act of parliament. Now, looking at the commission itself, the report presented to council by the hon. the Minister of Finance recites, as a reason for the appointment of this commission, this:

> That, in view of the widespread interest at present manifested throughout the country——

In what? In the affairs of the Hon. George E. Foster? Widespread interest in the affairs of the hon. member for King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler)? Widespread interest in the affairs of the Union Trust Company ? No. But the statement is made:

> In view of the widespread interest at present manifested throughout the country in matters relating to life insurance——

Now, had this Royal Commission confined its inquiry to what is stated there, to satisfy the widespread interest of the public in life insurance, I would not be finding fault with its work. But the work of the commission has been in an entirely opposite direction. If that widespread interest was in regard to the private affairs of members of this House or with regard to the affairs of companies not in any manner connected with life insurance, then I venture to say that the report has more than satisfied that widespread interest on the part of the public. But if the object of that commission was to satisfy the widespread interest of the public in regard to life insurance and life insurance alone, then I venture the assertion that that report has fallen far short of satisfying the public desire in that respect. But, Sir, assuming the statement made in the order in council to be correct, that an inquiry into the business of life insurance was deemed to be necessary, then it seems to me that the duty of this government was perfectly plain. The duty of this government was not to my mind to appoint a commission; the duty of this government was not to my mind to shirk the responsibility cast upon them. The duty of this government was to make a thorough and fair investigation itself, and, if evil was found to exist in the quarter to which they confined their inquiry, then to introduce such legislation as would remove that evil. That is a duty cast upon this parliament; that is a duty which is undertaken by this parliament; that is a duty which this parliament has no mandate from the people of this country to delegate to anybody else. I take the position that if an inquiry into the affairs of life insurance was necessary, then that inquiry should have been conducted by this government itself, by a body responsible to the people, and not by an irresponsible body like this commission. The government, in appointing a commission, to my mind clearly shirked the duty which the people of this country put upon them, a duty which they have undertaken to discharge in the interests of the people. It was a violation of the trust reposed in this parliament by the people of this country. When such a condition exists, and we find that the ordinary machinery, well known and approved by the people, is not made use of for the purpose intended, but, instead, the government assumes to delegate its authority to somebody else, one naturally looks for a reason for that action. The only reason that I have heard suggested or that suggests itself to my mind, is the political reason of injuring and defaming a political opponent and gaining some political advantage at the expense of the public. If such an inquiry was necessary, then I say it should have been undertaken by parliament itself, because it is one of the elementary duties of this parliament. Upon this very question, perhaps I could not cite an authority that would be more appreciated by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House than that of the Hon. Mr. Gladstone, who, speaking in regard to inquiries of this character, is reported to have said :

> He felt bound on the part of the government to thank those hon. members for the constitutional doctrine which they had laid down as to the impropriety of referring to commissions subjects which were connected with the elementary duties of executive government.

The inquiry, as I said before, should be conducted by a body of men responsible to the people who appoint them, in contradiction to the action of this government in appointing a commission who are responsible to no one but the persons who appoint them. That such a course would have been a proper one in this case, let me make reference to the report itself; and what do we find? We find that these gentlemen, who made this report say on page 6 that they availed themselves of the proceedings and evidence taken during 1906 before a Committee of the House of Lords upon certain aspects of the subject of insurance, and also had the advantage of examining the report of that committee. Taking the evidence afforded by this report and which was made use of by these commissioners themselves, we find that in Great Britain the opinion prevails that inquiries of this character should be made by a Committee of the House of Lords or of one of the legislative bodies of that country. That such a system is not confined to Great Britain alone is shown by the report of the commissioners themselves for on the same page they say :

> With regard to United States companies doing business in Canada, the commission has treated, as part of the material before it and available for its purposes, the evidence taken before and the report made in February, 1906, by the Joint Committee of the Senate and Assembly of the state of New York.

This shows again that in the United States when necessity is felt for an inquiry of this nature, they recognize the right of the people to have that inquiry made by a body of men who are responsible to them. And a little further down the same page the commissioners say that they also availed themselves of the report made by the Legislative Insurance Investigating Committee of the state of Wisconsin, showing that not only in the United States as a whole, but in the individual states, the very same principle is carried out. The commissioners further say that they had the advantage of the report of the committee of the Massachusetts legislature. Therefore we find that principle clearly laid down and acted upon in Great Britain, in the United States and in the various states of the union, and there is ample authority outside of these to show that when an inquiry of this character is to be carried on, it ought to be carried on by a body of men responsible, not only to those who have seen fit to select and appoint them, but to the whole body of the people. And I take it that any contravention of that wholesome doctrine is a violation of the very first principles of self-government, the right of supremacy of the will of the people; and for those reasons, I condemn the appointment and formation of this commission in the manner in which it has been appointed and formed. This royal commission was not appointed by the people of this country. It was not appointed by the parliament of this country. Parliament had no voice whatever in the matter. It was appointed under the authority of an order in council passed on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). But if further authority be needed for the position I take, let me refer hon. members to the work of a very high authority upon this question. I refer to the work of Mr. J. Tollman Smith. At page 169 of his work, treating on commissions of inquiry, he uses this language:

> No one can even look barely in the face of these essential and unqualified characteristics of commissions of inquiry without at once feeling that such instruments can never be had recourse to for good purposes, or where truth for its own sake is desired, and not feared.

Could there be a more accurate description of the work of this royal commission? The same writer says:

> Such instruments can never be had recourse to for good, and where truth, for its own sake, is desired.

A little further down, on page 170, he thus speaks of commissions of this character:

> The very fact of the appointment of such commissions is, however, conclusive evidence, unless an almost inconceivable ignorance be, in charity, presumed, that simply truth-seeking is not their object.

Again has this learned authority accurately described the character of the work of this commission, and described it in stronger language than I possibly could. Then Mr. Smith says again, on the same page:

> The very fact of the appointment of such commissions, avoiding those legal and regular tribunals and means, and with the characters which have been seen to mark them, is demonstrative evidence of the consciousness of the necessity for a one-sided and irregular proceeding in order to gain some end.

The words of this author I can fairly apply to the Royal Commission on Insurance and the work it has done. Is it not apparent to any unprejudiced man, on reading its report, that the object of that commission was not simply truth-seeking, was not good alone, but, in the words of the author I have quoted, in order that a one-sided and irregular proceeding might take place in order to gain some end. What was the end to be gained? I need not go over that ground again, because it has been well gone over by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Foster) himself and by other members of this House. But it is perfectly evident, from a perusal of that report, that those engaged in the work of that commission had resolved to besmirch, if possible, the character and ruin the reputation and the life of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster).

It then becomes necessary to look at the personnel of that commission. I need scarcely make reference to the appointment of Judge MacTavish, as that has been dealt with pretty fully by hon. members who have already spoken. In this connection, I wish to say that I do not think that it is proper for this parliament, or any legislative body, to appeal to the judges, to drag our judiciary from the lofty positions they are supposed to occupy and do occupy, to besmirch themselves with the politics of the Liberal party in this country. The principle is wrong. If a commission is to be appointed, in all fairness, in all justice, in all decency, leave the honoured judges of the land clear even of suspicion. For that reason, if for no other, I condemn the use by this government of His Honour Judge MacTavish in accomplishing the object which they apparently had in view.

Let me go a step further in examining the composition of this royal commission. Another gentleman appointed on this commission is Mr. J. W. Langmuir. Now, it is generally believed that if a commission is to be appointed the men chosen should be particularly qualified to perform the duties for which they are required. Will any member of this government, or will anybody else, point out the special qualifications of Mr. Langmuir to act upon this royal commission for the investigation of life insurance? Perhaps it is on account of his long connection with the inspection of prisons and public charities in the province of Ontario. If so, I can only say that the influence of prisons and public charities extend further than I had given them credit for. The last member of the commission is Mr. Kent. I have not the privilege of acquaintance with that gentleman, but I have made some inquiries about him, and I find that he has been very well described to-day—a gentleman who has passed the age limit of activity in life, and one who, in the dim and distant past, has been spoken of as an accountant. That seems to be the only special qualification that Mr. Kent possessed to justify his appointment on this commission. Now, if, in appointing these commissioners attention should be given so as to appoint gentlemen who are specially and particularly qualified to discharge their duties, I ask where has this government, in the appointment of this commission, shown that it has exercised any judgment whatever on the line I have suggested? It is apparent in the appointment of these gentlemen, as it is apparent in their work, that the object and intention of their appointment was the political one to which I have already referred.

Now, let me call the attention of the committee to the machinery with which these gentlemen, thus appointed as a royal commission, went to work. It has already been pointed out that the privilege of cross-examination was not allowed to persons who were under trial on this commission. I will take the liberty to point out that the machinery of this commission was to enable them to produce such a report as they have produced in this House is of thirteen different parts. Three of these have already been referred to. The first, I repeat is the irregularity in the appointment of the commission itself; the second is that there is no privilege of challenge of the jury either to the array or to the poll, that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) was pleased to refer to. It is the right of every free man in this country who is on trial or who is undergoing investigation to see that the body before whom his life or property is to be investigated is composed of impartial men, men whose sole and only object is to learn the truth of the matter and to render a just and proper verdict according to the evidence given. In the working of the commission, no such privilege was extended to the hon. member for North Toronto, no such privilege was extended to any life insurance company whose proceedings were investigated by the commission. The body was selected by persons who desired to condemn the persons who were to be investigated; no right of challenge was given and no opportunity to change the forum in any respect, but they were bound to submit to the will and to the finding of this body appointed in the way to which I have already referred. Another part of the machinery employed by this commission differing from all other trials in this or in any other country is, there was no presentment of the charge before the adjudication took place. This was a most unfair and unjust proceeding. Imagine how quickly the people of this country would rise in rebellion if such a principle as that were to become a common article of the law of the land. Occasions have arisen, over and over again, in the history of the British nation, when powers such as have been assumed by this royal commission have been attempted to be assumed by those in authority, from the King down. And again and again, the occasion has arisen, as history shows, where the attempted usurpation was resented by the people, in so much that more than once the King of England himself has been forced to sign, in the presence of the people, a declaration of popular rights in this respect. Such a usurpation is a thing which we cannot guard against too carefully. The right of the people to a fair trial upon every and any occasion must be maintained. Now, another piece of the machinery of this commission or inquisition is this,—they had it in their power to take just such evidence as they pleased, and no more.

No man, no matter how much his interest in property is involved, no matter how much his interest in his character is involved, no matter what his interest, he has no right or voice to say to this commission, Hear my evidence and allow me to make a full statement of facts. This inquisition is carried on in the manner I have described, by taking just such evidence and no more as would please this hon. body of commissioners. And what is more, the proceedings of this high court are not carried on as the proceedings of ordinary courts of our land are carried on, in open day light; but the proceedings of this commission are to a very large extent of a secret nature, and in that respect also it has violated the fundamental principle of the rights of the people of this country and as has already been said, there is no privilege allowed for cross-examination of the witnesses as they are produced before this court.

Another part of the court machinery which has been suppressed is the right of any person, of any corporation, to come before that tribunal, and call witnesses, in answer to a charge not formulated, to make answer to the charge, to establish the defence, if defence these companies or individuals have. Now imagine if you can any other trial taking place in this land, this land of freedom we boast of, where a man is refused the right to call witnesses, the right to file documents, the right to make statements that would establish his defence. Counsel have no rights before this commission, that position is emphasized by the statement that was made by the learned counsel who was acting in conjunction with this commission, when application was made by counsel on behalf of one of those interested in this investigation to be allowed the right to defend his client. He was told in so many words by Mr. Shepley that he had no rights before that court, that he was simply there as a matter of grace or courtesy. Can any one imagine, in a free land like this, where we value the rights of trial, where the rights of Magna Charter are in force, that such a position would be enforced upon any man or any corporation undergoing investigation in this country ?

Another very important thing ; judgment is given in this case in the absence of every person and of every corporation whose interests and property are being dealt with by this high court of commission, given at a time and given in a place where opportunity is not afforded the person accused, to the person who is to be condemned, of even objecting to the finding of the commission, or to the judgment that is given in his absence. That right is afforded in every other court of the land. When the judge upon the bench has delivered his judgment, any person or party interested, any man whose interests or whose property are affected by that judgment, has the right to stand up and then and there make his objection to the findings of the judge. But that right also has been denied to the people who were being investigated on this occasion.

Another most serious objection to the manner in which this commission has conducted its investigation is this, and it is apparent from the opening of the commission to the closing of the evidence. It will be seen almost on every page that counsel, in the presence of a trained lawyer like Judge MacTavish, is allowed to violate one of the plainest and best known laws of evidence, that is to put questions to witnesses suggesting the answer that he desired to get. You will find all through the report, all through the evidence, this manner of questioning, and so persistent was the learned counsel who conducted this investigation, in that respect, that over and over again he puts questions like this, You did so and so, you did think so and so—to get the answer that he desired. And yet a member of this government would have the boldness in the face of an investigation conducted in this way, to stand up in this House, or to proclaim in the country, that this investigation has been carried on with fairness in every respect.

Now another feature of this commission is that they have assumed power to squander the money of this country to an unlimited exent. No limit was put upon them at the time of their appointment, and I am afraid that the limit has not yet been reached, according to the statement made by the Minister of Finance. And for all this, what have the people of Canada got ? What have they gained ? The people of this country have, according to the statement of the Finance Minister, the privilege of paying about $105,000, and I doubt very much if that is the limit of the expenditure. In fact, take the estimates as they have been brought down to this House, and they show a much larger expenditure than that. If I am correct in my understanding of the estimates, the Minister of Finance omitted to include in the expenditure of this commission, a small sum of about $9,-500 which will be required for printing this most valuable report. Add this to the expenses of the commission and you bring it up to about $116,000 ; but with other incidentals I expect that the people of this country will have the privilege of paying anywhere from $125,000 to $150,000.

And what have they got for this expenditure ? They have got about 4,000 pages of evidence and report, on one side of the question, one-sided evidence, an incomplete, unreliable record in every respect. They have got more. They have got a government representing them who, by its conduct in this matter, has not only brought discredit upon itself, but it has brought discredit upon well known institutions of this land. The necessity for this commission appears to have arisen very suddenly. The time was when the hon. member for North Toronto, who is the particular subject of attack in this report, took occasion to expose certain actions of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House and of members of this government in connection with the public affairs of this country, notably in connection with the 'Arctic' expedition, in connection with the North Atlantic Trading Company, in connection with the Northwest lands scandal, the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company and many others too numerous to mention. The hon. member for North Toronto was most diligent in the interest of the people to expose the wrongdoings of this government in connection with these now notorious affairs. The necessity for this commission seemed to arise very suddenly just at that particular point when these discoveries were made and these scandals on the part of this government were exposed. It seemed to arise just at that particular time and no doubt it was felt on the part of the government that some sort of set off, some sort of equivalent, must be raked up in some manner or form in order that their own wrong-doings and misdeeds might be lost sight of by the people having brought before them the pretended wrong-doings of somebody else. But even this commission was a last resort. Before this commission was appointed and during the discussion of these scandals to which I have referred another attempt was made to defame the good name and character of the hon. member for North Toronto and that old falsehood in connection with the Temperance Colonization Company was trotted out and revamped, it is said, by the hon. Minister of Justice. Even he could not make it do duty and then the resort had to be had to this Royal Commission.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman the authority for the statement he has just made.

Mr. PORTER. I have seen it stated in the public press of this country. I did not say that the Minister of Justice was responsible, but I say it is said that he is responsible for it and that this was said in the public press.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. For what?

Mr. PORTER. For revamping, to use the expression of the newspapers, the old time scandal in connection with the Temperance Colonization Company.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Well then I have simply to say I have never heard of the scandal. I do not know to what reference is being made.

Mr. PORTER. My hon. friend must pay very little attention to the press of this country.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I do—very little?

Mr. PORTER. This commission was appointed after other efforts had failed, it was appointed as a last resort and made use of, when they were in a condition, as has been described here, of extremis, in order to gain an undue political advantage and to blacken and damage the character of the hon. member for North Toronto and other members of this House. What is the country getting in addition to what I have already mentioned in connection with this whole affair? —a scandal upon this government in connection with the manner of the appointment of this commission, a scandal upon this government in shirking the responsibility that it undertook to assume on behalf of the people of this country, the use by this government of this commission, of this machine, of this engine to obtain an undue political advantage, and, Sir, finally, this country is getting a Bill placed before the parliament of Canada in which the representatives of the people are asked to enact a law upon evidence obtained in that manner and under those circumstances and that is all the people have got. It seems to me, from what has taken place in this House, from my view point of the action of this commission and from the best consideration that I can give it, that there has been a prostitution of the office of the government in the appointment and in the working of this commission. And no doubt when the opportunity is afforded the people will avail themselves of it to punish this government as it justly deserves for the unfair and improper means employed for the accomplishment of the object it has in view.

Mr. BOYCE. Mr. Chairman, I cannot, as a member of this committee, sit silent and allow an item of $75,000, asked to be appropriated by the government of the day, part of a very much larger sum, if we are to judge from what the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) tells us, for the purpose, forsooth, of defraying the expenses of the so-called Insurance Commission, without giving vent to some ideas which I hold upon this subject and without re-echoing and endorsing some other ideas which have been made public to this House during the course of this debate. One has to go no further than to trace back the history of this so-called Insurance Commission to its source to find out the dangerous character of the weapon which was used, the subtlety and craftiness of the weapon itself and the cat-like cunning with which it was foisted upon the Canadian people. When, at the commencement of the session, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) rose in his place and protested most strongly against the manner in which the Insurance Commission had been issued—what satisfaction did he get from the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier)? None whatever. My honoured leader also further complained not only in regard to the manner in which the commission had been issued, namely, by order in council, but in regard to the personnel of the commission. While naturally saying that he knew nothing personally to the discredit of any of the members of the commission, I remember distinctly, and I will refer in a moment to his words, that he referred the government to the fact that in appointing Judge MacTavish as a member of the commission the government was itself violating a statute which was not more than six months old at that time. This statute was passed in the concluding days of the session of 1905 and of course, my hon. friend the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) is quite familiar with it:

> No judge mentioned in this Act shall either directly, or indirectly as director or manager of any corporation, company, or firm, or in any manner whatever, for himself or others, engage in any occupation or business other than judicial duties; but every such judge shall devote himself exclusively to such judicial duties.

There must have been very strong reasons of expediency to necessitate the appointment of Judge MacTavish to that commission in violation of a statute passed by this government with the approbation of the Minister of Justice. What reason prompted the government to introduce this commission in a secret manner? For what reason did the government avoid discussion before this House, first, as to the necessity for the issue of such a commission; second, as to the scope of the commission; third, as to the personnel of the commission; fourth, as to the employment of counsel and as to who should be represented by counsel; fifth, as to the instructions to be given to that commission? It was absolutely necessary that all these questions should be publicly discussed, but the government did not want discussion for some reason best known to itself, and all the world wondered why. In the secret chamber of council, the document was drawn up; in the minds of the cabinet were the names of men, good and true, who were to be picked out for this job. In the secret chambers of council, the whole arrangement was made and the employment of counsel fixed upon within a few days of the meeting of parliament. And the subtly, the apparent innocence of the wording of the scope of that commission, is where the venom lies. The real object was not to be debated in parliament, it was kept from the representatives of the people and from the press, and it was hidden behind the innocent words that were plastered on the face of the order in council. The ulterior objects of that commission were so carefully concealed that the government ran no chance of making them known. The ingloriousness of the commission only came out when its proceedings commenced, and its report published, and then the people discovered its nefarious and devilish design. And who were the commissioners? Judge MacTavish we know; we have known him of record. The present Minister of Justice knows Judge MacTavish, and has reason to know how useful Judge MacTavish can be on occasions. I think the Minister of Justice is the gentleman who was present, and who subscribed his signature as a witness to the celebrated McNish confession in the West Elgin election; one of the most extraordinary election documents ever published, in which the elected member admitted over his own signature in the presence of the Minister of Justice, that through his agents, his election had been conducted in a notoriously corrupt manner, and that impersonation and switching of ballots had prevailed. Then the Ross government, with which the Minister of Justice admitted at the time he was in close touch, appointed a commission, and at the head of that commission was Judge MacTavish, and in the face of the confession of McNish, Judge MacTavish whitewashed the Ross government, cleared the man who had made the confession of any complicity in the charges, and found nothing illegal in the conduct of that election. No wonder that when the Minister of Justice was looking around for a commissioner, he would naturally think that Judge MacTavish (even though a statute had to be violated), would be the right man in the right place to serve any ulterior purpose. And so they got Judge MacTavish to act as commissioner, and it has been shown by the analysis of the evidence in this House, how useful Judge MacTavish has been to the government. Mr. J. W. Langmuir was another commissioner, and one often wonders whether there was any particular reason for his appointment. I am reminded by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) that Mr. Langmuir was one of the gentlemen commissioned by the Ross government to the somewhat difficult task of finding the surplus of the Ross government. How far he succeeded in that, the people of Ontario proved at the last general election. But there was another reason for his appointment. The government well know that the records of all trust companies were to be investigated, and that in such an inquiry the general manager of a trust company would be a fearless and independent commissioner. Why was Mr. Langmuir appointed, except it was to be an additional weapon in the hands of the government and of Judge MacTavish to get at the hon. member for North Toronto, who was the general manager of a rival trust company which was running the Toronto General Trust Company pretty hard at the time.

I must confess that I was considerably astonished at the attitude taken by the Minister of Justice yesterday. I have been astonished at the conduct of the Minster of Justice ever since he has had the honour and dignity of becoming an adviser to His Majesty. He was appointed early in June, 1906. He succeeded a gentleman for whom both sides of the House entertained and showed at all times the highest possible respect, both with regard to ability and integrity; and it is very unfortunate that within ten days after the hon. gentleman took his place in the House there was a scene in this chamber which was unprecedented, and in which I think it is recorded that the hon. gentleman did not take a very creditable part. Charged with the very serious offence of slandering in the public press a member of this House, an honourable member of an honourable parliament, to wit, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), a member of the press gallery was, by order of the House, brought to the bar of the House; and, Sir, I do not know that it is a very creditable thing to record in the annals of the Canadian parliament, that the Minister of Justice, sitting in his place, was one of the first to beat his desk and vociferously cheer when the gentleman appeared before the bar of the House to answer for an indignity committed against one of its members. Was it a sight that lent dignity to the hon. gentleman himself or dignity to this House? Was it one that would elevate Canada in the eyes of all nations and elevate the hon. gentleman in the estimation of his friends? Whatever his personal feelings were, however great his gratification was at seeing the hon. member for North Toronto in an undesirable and invidious position, the Minister of Justice owed it to this House and this country to show more dignity in the position he occupied than he showed by applauding a gentleman charged with a serious offence against the dignity of this House. I wonder whether the hon. gentleman was merely displaying his personal spleen, or whether he would have treated any other gentleman who appeared at the bar of the House in the same manner. Does any one believe that the hon gentleman would have indulged in that sort of display if any publisher or representative of a Conservative paper had been brought to the bar of this House for using reprehensible and censurable language against a member on that side of the House? Would the hon. Minister of Justice then laugh, beat his desk and cheer? I fancy not. Then where was the justice or the dignity of the Minister of Justice on that occasion? But, Sir, at that very instant the hon. gentleman met a scathing rebuke from his leader. He made a speech which was absolutely a justification of all that had been said in the article of which the hon. member for North Toronto complained. Bit by bit he analysed it; he took up even the sentence in which it was said that the hon. member for North Toronto belonged to a school of lying cant and hypocrisy, and endeavoured to show, in that fine, ingenious, argumentative manner, which has always characterized his arguments at the bar, that that must be read in conjunction with the whole article, and that, therefore, it was not in any way a reflection on the hon. member for North Toronto. Oh, what a specious argument! What a thin, flimsy excuse for the venomous feeling which the Minister of Justice entertained at that moment against the hon. member for North Toronto! And how there was burning in his breast the knowledge that there was a day dawning very soon when he would have his revenge upon the non. member for North Toronto.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BOYCE. When you left the chair at six o'clock, Mr. Chairman, I was referring to an incident in the political career of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) which certainly does not commend itself to this House or country. I have now to pass to another characteristic incident in the career of that hon. gentleman since he has been Minister of Justice. You will remember that when there was a by-election in Quebec county, which was carried by my courageous friend who now represents that county (Mr. Robitaille), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) was in North Grey conducting a campaign in favour of the government candidate. When the somewhat disappointing news came from Quebec county that my hon. friend (Mr. Robitaille) had been victorious despite the great influences which the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) personally brought to bear in that contest, my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) became so nettled that he lost his self-control and indulged in rather intemperate and indiscreet language. In a meeting held at Wiarton he launched out into a vigorous invective against the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and those associated with him who had taken part in the contest in Quebec county, as it was their privilege and, as they conceived, their duty. He said that those people were lighting the fires of sectional hatred, and proceeded to indulge in passionate appeals to racial prejudice in the county of North Bruce, in the interests of my hon. friend who now represents that constituency (Mr. Tolmie). But what was the spectacle presented when my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) came face to face with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth). I do not suppose that in the history of this parliament a minister of the Crown ever received from a private member such a scorching castigation as the hon. minister then was given by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). What did this minister (Mr. Aylesworth), who yesterday was so smug in his averments of his desire to be fair and to avoid any unfair criticism, say on that occasion? When the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) charged the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) with having deliberately attempted himself to light the fires of sectional hatred in North Bruce and with having used language in North Bruce which he dared not use in this House or in the province of Quebec, what did he say? If you will turn up 'Hansard, you will find that he did not utter a word in reply, that he never opened his mouth, but simply remained dumb under that accusation. I suppose that, to use the language of Shakespeare, he would plead that 'the silence of pure innocency doth persuade when much speaking doth fail.' I suppose that would be the excuse which the hon. minister (Mr. Aylesworth) would offer to this House for having remained speechless under an accusation, serious enough when applied to a private member, but doubly so when applied to one occupying so responsible a position in the Cabinet.

The hon. minister (Mr. Aylesworth) attempted to justify the proceedings before the Insurance Commission and the inception of that commission. But let us see what course he took with regard to certain attacks made in this House before the report of the commissioners was brought down. We all remember that, in the course of some heated debates, insinuations and innuendoes were continually being hurled across the floor, at the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), at the hon. member for King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler), at the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), and at the hon. member for Prince, P.E.I., (Mr. Lefurgey), regarding what the evidence taken before the Insurance Commission had disclosed and what the report of that commission would disclose. I remember distinctly that the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Ross) indulged in some very pointed remarks against the hon. member for King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler), especially with regard to the charges included in the evidence taken before that commission. The hon. member from Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) gave vent to some very strong language indeed concerning my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) to the effect that if the truth were known about his connection with land deals in the Northwest, he would be somewhat more tame than he was.

Mr. CARVELL. Would the hon. gentleman kindly refer to the page in 'Hansard' where I made a statement of that kind?

Mr. BOYCE. I have not the 'Hansard' before me, but the hon. gentleman made statements of that kind several times in this House, and I do not know that he ever withdrew them or attempted to justify them.

Mr. CARVELL. I simply ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) to be fair enough to show where that statement was made or else withdraw what he has said. I never made use of any such words.

Mr. BOYCE. Of course I accept my hon. friends denial with the utmost good feeling. I am not going to take up the time of the committee by quoting his exact words. I was not attempting to give them exactly. What I said was that he had indulged in reflections on the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) with regard to so-called land deals in the west, and we had yesterday from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) an entire exculpation of my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) and in fact from the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) as well. This shows that all the taunts and imputations hurled across the floor, during the time this commission was sitting, were absolutely without foundation or justification, and were made solely with the object of prejudging the issue and prejudicing people against hon. members of this House before the result of that investigation was known. But while these insinuations and imputations were being made, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) had not a word to say. He heard those taunts. He knew that the commission had not concluded its business, he knew that the trial was yet proceeding—yet what did he say in defence of hon. members thus attacked? What did he do to uphold the honour and dignity of this House?

Nothing. He was amused. He laughed at what was said, but uttered no word of rebuke to his followers. And what has been said regarding the taunts flung across the floor by the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. D. Ross) against the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler)? What justification has been shown, even by the Minister of Justice for these taunts? Not a word. The hon. member for Yale-Cariboo rose in his place last session and attempted in the most outrageous, and I think, the most unparliamentary manner, to injure the reputation of the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler), the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), and the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Lefurgey), by the introduction of a court pleading in an action pending between them, which was stated to be a friendly action. That sort of slander has gone on in this House long enough. It has been allowed to be altogether too one-sided. When an hon. gentleman can attempt to justify slanderous assertion, of facts notoriously incorrect by the production of pleadings stating a claim of one person against another, it is time that there should be resentment, it is time that hon. members on this side should take notice of the fact and govern their conduct accordingly. So far as I am concerned, I want the Minister of Justice and his colleagues, and all who sit behind him, to understand that that kind of proceeding, even if it be parliamentary—as I think it is not—is unmanly and that I, for one, do not propose to submit to it. When a private gentleman is elected to represent a constituency in this House and become a public man, and when he enters this House and becomes entitled to the privileges of parliament, his reputation is sacred in the eyes of parliament and must be protected. His reputation is not liable, and must not be liable, to be impugned, to be trampled under foot in the unprincipled manner, completely lacking justification, in which the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo, merely reading a statement of claim in a court suit which has not yet been decided—no pleadings on the other side, no evidence, and no judgment—attacked the reputations of the hon. members to whom I have referred. If the honour of this House is committed to the Minister of Justice, in view of the instances I have given, oh, how insecure is the honour of the parliament of Canada!

Now, the hon. Minister of Justice, attempted yesterday, in a speech of great length, to justify the report of the commission to which this country is being asked to provide something like $105,000. The hon. gentleman was somewhat laboured in his attempt to justify that portion of it which was most crucial to him, that which affected the hon. member for North Toronto. Disappointing as it must have been to the hon. gentleman he had to withdraw all that which concerned the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler) and the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Lefurgey). But he attempted to bolster up and to support that part of the report dealing with the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), and to this effort he brought all his skill as a lawyer whose ability is known and recognized throughout Canada. The hon. gentleman attempted to find more even than the commission itself had found, for, as has been pointed out by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), the Minister of Justice made the fatal mistake of going too far and attempting to justify and argue matters which had not been raised by the hon. member for North Toronto, showing that they were only in the brief of the Minister of Justice prepared for his answer in this House. In concluding his remarks, the hon. gentleman used some nice, charitable, smooth-sounding language. At page 6494 he said :

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have occupied the attention of this committee at much greater length than I expected, and my only justification for it is that I am here, not as making any attack upon the hon. gentleman who addressed the committee this afternoon——

This refers to the hon. member for North Toronto :

—or upon any person; I am here because from the position in which I happen to be——

That is, as Minister of Jutsice—

—it naturally and I suppose expectedly falls to my lot, to defend the position of the commissioners appointed by the Crown, and one of whom happens to occupy a seat upon the judicial bench.

Later on he said :

That seemed to make it my duty, occupying the position I do, to refer at the length I have done to the facts of this case as spread upon the pages of the evidence and as recorded in the documents that are here. In stating those facts, I have tried to avoid comment. Perhaps I have not succeeded in that effort; but I ask you, Mr. Chairman, and I ask the hon. gentlemen of the committee, to credit me with sincerity when I say that I have to the best of my feeble ability, and in the prejudiced position which I suppose any political public man occupies, tried to present those facts honestly, as they appeared on the evidence before the commission, without setting down aught in malice or without endeavouring anything to extenuate.

These are very smooth-nice-sounding words. They look well as the closing words of a speech which, I suppose, the minister will circulate all through this country as the great indictment of the hon. member for North Toronto. But let me contrast these words with the instances I have quoted in the House and which are spread out in the records of the House, in which the hon. gentleman had the honour of the House in his keeping and deliberately betrayed and sacrificed it ; instances in which he had the opportunity to follow the noble example of previous Ministers of Justice in this government and to uphold the dignity of this House and in which he sacrificed the honour and dignity of this House to his party prejudice and his personal venom against the hon. member for North Toronto. And it ill becomes the Minister of Justice, who, I regret to say, is not now in his place, to endeavour to smooth over a speech so virulent a speech so violent and so full of specious arguments all levelled against the hon. member for North Toronto by explanation tacked to the end of it that he was actuated simply by a desire to do his duty as Minister of Justice of this country—that it was his duty to bolster up the report of the commission which has been shown to be absolutely and diametrically opposed to the very evidence upon which it is supposed to be founded. If the hon. gentleman is so sensitive to the call of duty, why did not he, as Minister of Justice, and as chief judicial executive of the Crown, defend the honour of this House when the private reputations of members of this House were attacked ? He was not smug then ; did not indulge in platitudes then about his duty.

The Minister of Justice will adorn the high position he holds, and will fulfil the duties of his office from a moral point of view, when it will suit his purpose, and when, by so doing, he can attack the reputation of the member for North Toronto, whom he has sworn to bring down from his seat in this House if he can. Now, the hon. gentleman has not so far succeeded very well in the little plot he has hatched. He has possibly suffered somewhat at the hands of the member for North Toronto, and, possibly in the opinion of other members of this House. To a certain extent I sympathize with him in the position in which he finds himself. But I did not think the Minister of Justice was so small a man as to stoop to the tactics he has employed in order to destroy the reputation of the member for North Toronto. Why, Sir, the member for North Toronto has had twenty-one years of parliamentary experience in this House, and during those twenty-one years, as he said himself, he has occupied the treasury benches eleven years as Minister of Finance of this country. And those days were not like these, those were days when the tide of prosperity which was then seen to be coming had not reached its full ; those were the days of small things ; those were the days when the foundation stones were being laid for the great prosperity that Canada, as well as other countries of the world, now enjoys under the blessings of Divine Providence. During those days it was a question of exercising wise statesmanship, of exercising great prudence in order to build the foundation well and wisely for the great prosperity which was due, and which was inevitable in view of the resources of this country. At that time one of the great builders of the Canada of to-day, one who has aided in laying the foundation of the greater Canada that is to be, was the hon. member for North

Toronto. Compare his record with that of the Minister of Justice, who has so venomously attacked him, compare his record with that of other hon. gentlemen who have seen fit to hurl abuse at him, and what is there in it? Is it not the very shallowest attempt that was ever undertaken in any parliament, in any deliberative body, to slander, without justification, the reputation of an hon. gentleman, a man whose reputation stands clear throughout the Dominion of Canada to-day—with eleven years as Minister of Finance, twenty-one years of honourable and self-denying service in the early days of this country, in preparing for her a career as one of the greatest countries in the world. One is led to ask the question: Is this the reward that an hon. gentleman gets for such service to his country, that a gentleman occupying the position of chief judicial officer of this country can, from motives of pure personal venom, endeavour to hatch a plot and concoct a conspiracy levelled at that hon. gentleman in order to destroy a great reputation earned by twenty-one years of parliamentary service? I say, Sir, that if hon. gentlemen in this House at the back of the Minister of Justice are satisfied with that conduct, if they are satisfied with that course of procedure, there is an appeal, as has been said by the member for North Toronto and admitted by the Minister of Justice, there is an appeal to a tribunal over which the Minister of Justice will have no control, a tribunal where justice will be meted out, not by incompetent or prejudiced judges, not by judges who are selected because of the decision it is known before hand they will give, but by the people of Canada, and the judgment of the people of Canada upon that attempt, I fancy, will somewhat differ from the judgment meted out by the Minister of Justice in his denunciation of yesterday's speech.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether hon. members of this House, in view of the remarks that have been passed from time to time, and the taunts that have been flung across the floor of this House against these four hon. gentlemen, and especially against the member for North Toronto, and significantly against the member for North Toronto—I wonder whether hon. gentlemen who occupy seats on the floor of this House have ever paused to consider what political reputation means, and whether they attach to it any value at all. I wonder whether hon. gentlemen have ever asked themselves the question whether, after sacrificing their time, their business interests and the position they might attain in the financial world, they should maintain that rectitude which they think they are entitled to require at the hands of fellow-members in this House. I wonder whether they prize political rectitude; I wonder whether, if they were in the position of the member for North Toronto, they would not burn with indignation at the thought that, after having wrought, after having toiled long and faithfully, as the hon. member for North Toronto has done according to the judgment with which Providence has endowed him, to found the nation of Canada and to direct her towards that great future which she is to enjoy, when the time comes to lay down their charge and commit to other hands, than for all that service and self-sacrifice, their only reward should be slander, abuse, denunciation and vilification, and that by an hon. gentleman who has been in this House only two years, and who arrogates to himself all the functions of government, all the functions of the administration of justice, and who, as Minister of Justice, should speak words entitled to weight. I can only say that, for my own part, and my judgment upon that point is very sincere, I never believed it possible that any right thinking people, weighing these facts, would attach aught of consequence to the specious argument that was made by the Minister of Justice yesterday, who endeavoured to support, not the finding of a commission, but the insinuations of a commission, against the hon. member for North Toronto. Because there were no findings of the commission, they were merely insinuations upon evidence which my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) showed to be improperly reported, improperly stated, garbled, distorted and disconnected; and that evidence, or the deductions from that evidence, formed the basis upon which the Minister of Justice now seeks to launch forth, in this speech of yesterday, a torrent of abuse and denunciation of the member for North Toronto.

There is a curious fact in connection with the proceedings of this commission worthy of comment, deserving of some more explanation than the hon. Minister of Justice so far has seen fit to give. At times the hon. gentleman is very communicative; at times very taciturn. He finds that political expediency may be served one way or the other. Sometimes he makes mistakes of judgment. He has been known to make mistakes of judgment in this House, but he got rather sentimental in that part of his speech of yesterday in regard to any criticism which might be offered upon this insurance report. I might quote from his speech of yesterday at page 6480 of 'Hansard':

> In these circumstances, it is certainly a poor reward for honest, patient and painstaking effort on the part of this commission to get at the bottom, not only of the transactions which we are discussing to-day, but of the transactions of every kind in connection with the twenty-eight insurance companies which they investigated, that they should be assailed in this House as men who had been false to every principle of honour, and who had performed the duty placed upon them for the purpose of persecuting some supposed political opponent.

In the first place and before I begin to analyse this extraordinary passage in the hon. gentleman's speech, let us see who ever accused the commissioners of having been false to every principle of honour, or of having performed their duty only for the purpose of persecuting their political opponents. Does the Minister of Justice say that those gentlemen who composed the commission were the political opponents of my hon. friend from North Toronto? Is that what we are asked to believe from his words, because they bear that construction? Is that an admission, and I take it to be an admission, because it is in cold type in 'Hansard,' that the gentlemen who composed this commission were the political opponents of the hon. member for North Toronto. Secondly, it is charged by the opposition side of the House as a reason against the acceptance of this report that these political opponents of the hon. member for North Toronto were false not only to their duty as commissioners but that they endeavoured to strangle their political opponent the hon. member for North Toronto. These are not my words, they are the words of the Minister of Justice in an attempt at justification of this report. He comments upon the 'poor reward for honest, patient and painstaking effort on the part of this commission to get at the bottom not only of the transactions which we are discussing today, but of the transactions of every kind in connection with the twenty-eight insurance companies, which they investigated.' Well, now, these are nice adjectives—honest, patient and painstaking. How honest was the commission in connection with the hon. member for North Toronto as a commission? It is a notable fact, Sir, that this commission differed in its method of procedure from all other commissions, even the commission of which Judge MacTavish was previously a member in connection with the West Elgin case. The Minister of Justice is so far familiar with what occurred there that it is unnecessary for me to animadvert at any great length upon what was done and upon what the rule was in that connection, but I would draw his attention and the attention of the committee to what took place before these proceedings opened as referred to in sessional papers of the province of Ontario for 1901, vol. 33, part IX, page 6:

> On the 1st day of March the commissioners opened the inquiry at St. Thomas, West Elgin, and the commission then, after drawing attention to the rules and regulations laid down and to the published notices of the sittings of the commission, stated 'inter alia'.
> We have called by way of advertisement upon the public to furnish the commission (any one of us three gentlemen sitting here) with any information they possibly can in regard to the subject matter of the investigation, which subject matter is of course known far and wide. They can also furnish that information to the Crown Counsel, Mr. Watson, who will subpoena the witnesses whose names are given to him and we shall see that the evidence is properly brought out. We cannot emphasize too strongly this invitation extended to the public generally to assist us by giving us all the information they possibly can which will enable us to fully, fearlessly and impartially inquire into the subject matter of this investigation. They need not be at all uneasy in giving the information either to the commissioners or to Mr. Watson. The commissioners will then see that the matter is properly attended to.

What does that prove? That proves that Judge MacTavish, as a member of a previous commission, knew what it was to be fair and knew what fair consideration should be given to the public or to any one else who desired to lay evidence before that commission in order that the work of the commission should be carried out fully, fairly and impartially. He cannot plead ignorance, he cannot plead that he was not within the scope of his duty, because, although it was not within the four corners of the commission itself in the West Elgin case, yet that was the ruling and the dictum of the commissioners themselves—not very well carried out, I admit—but it was the ruling of the commissioners themselves that they should by public advertisement call upon everybody to come forward and have a full, free, open and impartial investigation. Did Judge MacTavish ever intimate such a thing as that in this commission? What are we told and what does the evidence disclose?—that when charges of a heinous nature were brought against my hon. friend from North Toronto, when his name was vilified in bold type by the Liberal newspapers of this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, when there was in every person's mouth the newspaper reports of the dishonesty which that hon. gentleman was alleged to have been mixed up in, what was the hon. member for North Toronto trying to do in Toronto—a public man, a man of bright intellect, one of the brightest minds in Canada to-day and one to whom Canada owes much? His struggle, I think, is pathethic in the eyes of the whole country. He was trying, in accordance with bare British justice, to get a hearing, either by himself or through his counsel in his own justification. Pathetic! Pathetic! My hon. friend the Minister of Justice has said that there was a member of the judiciary upon that commission. He was there contrary to law, yet the Minister of Justice has appealed to this House because Judge MacTavish was a member of the judiciary and could not defend himself.

As a member of the judiciary Judge MacTavish cannot be excused for the extraordinary manner in which he permitted the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) to be slandered before that commission, and for allowing, without justification or excuse, in violation of his oath as a judge and as a commissioner, garbled evidence to be incorporated in the report. There is absolutely no justification for the learned judge, because he knew better. He has tried many men for petty offences and he had heard civil suits in which the reputations of men less high than the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) were at stake, and I venture to say that the judge's cheeks would have burned with shame, if ever it had been charged that he had denied to any petty criminal charged with stealing a bag of potatoes or a pound of carrots, the right to be heard by counsel or the right to state the full facts in his own defence. It is a lamentable fact, and I regret to say it is a fact, that is chronicled upon the records of this country, one side of that defence of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) who was struggling to be heard. In the net of a gang of traitors ; in the net of men who were politically desirous of accomplishing his ruin, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) was the object against which were levelled all these venomous darts. He pleaded in vain to be heard through counsel, he pleaded in vain to be allowed to make a statement ; this star chamber commission denied him the right of justification, the right of plea. And the Minister of Justice now tells us, that this commission had been honest, efficient and painstaking in their efforts to get at the full truth. Oh, the honesty of this commission ! How honest ! to garble evidence in their report, if they ever read over the report they signed. How honest ! to insinuate in their report what they could not prove by the evidence ; how honest ! to permit the government counsel, a man in the pay of the government, to have access to their chairman and to themselves in private deliberation, to advise and confer with them upon the report they were drawing up. How honest ! to send forth a report destined and designed to slander the reputation, private and political, of the hon. member (Mr. Foster). How honest ! to permit any other hand than their own to draw up that report, and to formulate garbled evidence for the purpose of defaming the noble character of the hon. member for North Toronto. That is the honesty of it. And what about the patience shown by the commission? The Minister of Justice says that they patiently laboured to get at the truth. I ask the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) what amount of practice did he find in his analytical digest of the evidence, what amount of patience and perseverance did he find the commissioners bestowed in garbling the evidence set forth in that report? The hon. member for South Simcoe has stated to the House, and it cannot be gainsayed, that the evidence taken down by the commission was not incorporated in the report as it had been taken down, but was garbled and reconstructed so as to force insinuations upon it. That is some of the patience exercised by this commission, or by the master mind which was controlling the commission, or directing the commission, or at any rate to which the commission lent a willing ear, the mind of George F. Shepley, K.C. This commission was very patient. They had before them an hon. gentleman of great political prestige, a man of whom the people of Canada think highly, a man of great intellect, a man who has done a great work in the building of the Canada we have to-day and of the Canada that is to be ; the commission certainly was very patient while they denied audience day after day, to that hon. gentleman against his solemn protests. They were patient day after day, listening to the evidence and endeavouring to construct a fabric which they hoped would destroy the reputation of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), public and private, and tear him down from the high place he occupied, and still occupies, and will, I trust, occupy until the end of his days, and long may they be. And the commissioners were painstaking. Yes, they were painstaking in the studied cruelty of the star chamber methods they were using to stultify any attempt on the part of the hon. member (Mr. Foster) to be heard, or to put upon the records of that commission one circumstance in justification of the insinuations which were made against him. At whose dictate was all this done? Under whose pressure and at whose spur did the commission act thus from day to day? Who consulted, who instructed, who directed the proceedings of that commission ; who conferred with the chairman of the commission privately as to the scope of the commission; who instructed counsel from time to time privately as to what should be done by that commission ; by whose instruction was the scope of that commission extended beyond what was writ in the order in council? Was it the Minister of Justice ? Did he, as Minister of Justice, direct, control, or suggest to the learned counsel acting for the Crown any course of procedure to be followed by that commission to attain its ulterior ends ?

Does he say that he had no communication? Does he say that he did not communicate with either Mr. Shepley or Mr. Tilley during the course of that investigation? Well, Sir, I can only say that we have the hon. gentleman's own words, that he did communicate with Mr. Shepley and with Mr. Tilley, in matters pertaining to that commission ; and he either feared or did not know enough of the decencies of parliamentary procedure or of the delicacy of the situation in which he found himself, to put those communications on record in the Department of Justice, so that he could maintain his own integrity if a charge were made against him in that connection. It is a very strange circumstance that the hon. gentleman who preceded my hon. friend in the administration of that office, who had administered with signal ability the Justice Department of Canada up to the time of his resignation from that high office, the Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick, knew as Minister of Justice, all that was involved in that procedure, and how delicate was the position, how scrupulous he must be of his own honour, of the honour of this House, and of the honour of those whose reputations were in the hands of that commission, and therefore kept a record of all that took place in the way of communication with Mr. Shepley or interference with that commission. But the methods of the Minister of Justice in days gone by, the methods of David Mills, the Sir Oliver Mowats, the Charles Fitzpatricks, were not the methods of this new star in the political sky, the present Minister of Justice. What happened? Up to the 2nd day of June, when the hon. gentleman was appointed Minister of Justice, there was kept a record in the Justice Department, showing fairly and openly what communications had taken place between that department and the Insurance Commission and the counsel for the commission. What happened after the 2nd day of June? Where is the correspondence? There is not one jot or tittle of correspondence, not one word, line or syllable of correspondence in that department, although under pressure from the hon. member for North Toronto, the hon. Minister of Justice had to admit: 'I had communications with Mr. Shepley; I had communications with Mr. Tilley; these were not written communications; they were verbal communications.' Now, will the hon. gentleman arise, realizing the delicacy of his position, being charged with the responsibility of the chief judicial executive of this Dominion, and will he be man enough to state what instructions or directions he gave, and what control he exercised over that commission? If it was in accordance with proper procedure as recognized in the Department of Justice under all governments preceding the hon. gentleman's accession to office, that there should be a record of transactions of this kind, by what precedent did he arrogate to himself the right to dispense with that record and hold communications with a so-called independent body, whether verbal or written? I ask the hon. gentleman to be fair to this House; I ask the hon. gentleman not to be silent all the time; I ask the hon. gentleman to speak. He knows the position in which he has endeavoured to place the hon. member for North Toronto, and he has placed himself upon record in the language to which I have referred, as being desirous of being fair in the position which he occupies. Now I ask him to make good his words and be fair, and to state to this House what were the verbal communications which he had with or the verbal instructions which he gave to Mr. Shepley or Mr. Tilley. Of course, he admits that he gave some. He admits that he had communications. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice feels possibly that scornful silence would be his best protection under these conditions; but if he thinks that scornful silence does credit to him, he is welcome to take the credit there is in it. Now, Sir, there was a report drafted of that Insurance Commission. I wonder if the Minister of Justice can inform the House who drafted that report. I wonder if he can inform the House how many times that report was changed. I wonder if he will say whether that report was changed in consequence of anything that took place in this House. I wonder how often he saw the draft. I wonder whether he perused the draft. I wonder whether he——

Mr. FOSTER. Swallowed the draft.

Mr. BOYCE—whether he consulted Mr. Shepley with regard to the draft. My friend from North Toronto says he must have swallowed the draft. If he has not swallowed it all, he will have to swallow it. How many consultations did the hon. Minister of Justice hold with Mr. Shepley, with Mr. Tilley, with Judge MacTavish or with the other members of the commission before that report was finally agreed upon as being the most suitable indictment to send to this House against the hon. member for North Toronto and other members who are touched by it? Of course, all this would be interesting information; and, in view of the frank position which the hon. Minister of Justice desired to occupy in this House, as evidenced by his speech of yesterday, I have no doubt that he will be quite willing to make disclosures in this connection. I may be a little inquisitive; but I am taking for granted that in what he said yesterday he was perfectly sincere, and therefore I am asking him these questions. How often did he consult with counsel about this draft report? What was the necessity for changing the report, if it was changed from the draft, and before it was finally settled and signed by the commission? Was the hon. gentleman himself there when it was signed? Does he know that the commissioners knew what was in it when they signed it? Did the hon. gentleman felicitate with the chairman of the commission, and with the counsel, Mr. Shepley and Mr. Tilley, on the night after the report was finally settled upon and signed? Did he have a little jollification with those gentlemen at that time? I wonder whether the hon. gentleman did, when he admits to this House that he had communications with them, and when in the same breadth in which he says he wants to be fair to everybody concerned, he withholds the nature of those communications, and at the same time hurls insinuations and constructs theories upon evidence not in existence. I wonder that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) does not make good his expressed anxiety to be fair. Let me take his words upon another point, and that is the comparison he drew between the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and a former bank manager in Ontario, lately convicted of having made fraudulent returns to this government, and who is now serving out a sentence of five years in the Kingston penitentiary. What a comparison that was to be drawn by a minister who says he wants to be fair and who takes advantage of his three years' service in parliament to thus attempt to destroy the reputation of an hon. gentleman who has been a member of this House during twenty-one years and has always enjoyed a high place in the esteem of his fellow members and the public. Was there anything to justify such an unparalleled comparison—a comparison between a convicted felon and the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) based on evidence contained in this report of the Insurance Commission ? What did the hon. minister say ? Referring to page 6473 of 'Hansard,' I find he used this language :

> Well, sir, I am not a Forester. I have not the right to complain ; it is not a matter that concerns me personally. But if I were interested as a member of the order, I think I should have every right to complain of what has taken place. Only twelve months ago, a gentleman—one thought to be a gentleman—held in honour by those who knew him, the respected manager of what was then a respected bank in this country, was engaging in a career of investment, or speculation, whatever you choose to call it, in the stocks of established companies. This transaction resulted disastrously, there was no success there——

Fancy drawing such a comparison—

> —there was abject failure and the wreck and ruin of the institution of which he was manager and the loss to many an honest man and many a poor widow and fatherless child, of everything on which they depended for the remainder of their lives. These moneys were imperilled ; the manager who so imperilled these moneys and who failed is to-day in the position we all know. But in this case, moneys which were even more sacredly impressed with the trust of the funds which were to provide for the widow and for the orphan are sunk into the purchase of unimproved land in the new provinces of Canada, which, if they happen to go up in price, will produce a return to those who have put their money in, while on the other hand, if they become dead stock in the market, it will mean the loss of every dollar that is invested and will result as disastrously as the similar efforts as the manager of the Ontario Bank have resulted in the last few months. That is what I would call imperilling funds.

Let the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) deny it if he can. He there drew an invidious comparison between the late convicted manager of the Ontario Bank and the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), and hurled that as one of his venemous darts across the floor of this House to be chronicled and recorded as an insinuation against the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster).

But if the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) is going back into the history of embezzlement and misconduct generally, I would suggest that he need not go farther afield than the four walls of this Chamber in order to find instances. If he were desirous of exercising himself in the punishment of embezzlement and meddling with the moneys of the people, he need not go outside these walls or the scope of his office as Minister of Justice. The hon. minister has an extraordinary record, and that record does not bear out his professions of fairness and impartiality and just dealings. I remember a question which was discussed in this House in connection with the Galway cattle ranch deal, in which a member of this House was proved to have received a remission from the government equivalent to $2,400, besides making large substantial profits on transactions in the public lands of this country. There was evidence taken in that case, and if I mistake not the minister rose in his place and voted to defend that deal. Again there was the Moncton land deal in which there was an illegal profit of $8,000 paid to a middle-man. Did the hon. minister raise his voice against that ? Not at all ; he voted for it. That is the sort of thing he likes to encourage. Then we had the Merwin matter, the North Atlantic Trading Company contract involving a loss to this country of between $200,000 and $300,000. Did he say that that was a scandalous transaction for which somebody ought to go to jail ? No, he voted for it. Then there was the case of Phillip Wagner, and here we come down to the case of a convicted felon. Phillip Wagner had been convicted of embezzlement as an employee of this government. He had been convicted of robbing and preying upon the immigrants with whom he came in official contact by virtue of his appointment as an officer of the Department of the Interior. Wagner was tried upon five indictments and convicted and served his time in the Stonewall penitentiary of Manitoba. What became of him when he came out ? He did some election work for this government and in consequence was promoted and his salary increased. He was thus rewarded for his labours in the Liberal cause. He had stolen money, he had embezzled, and had been convicted, but he had done it in a good cause, and was well paid, and this Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), who has drawn this comparison so unfair and injurious to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), rose in his place, when we asked for a commission of inquiry into these facts regarding Phillip Wagner, and voted for the retention in office of that same embezzler. There is another case, the case of Mr. Joseph Nixon, with which the hon.

minister is familiar. That is the case of the embezzlement by a public servant of some hundreds of dollars, which was supported by evidence and put before the minister in the strongest possible light. What did he do on that occasion ? He supported the cause of Joseph Nixon, and there is not a man on the government side who did not rise to defend the transaction I have referred to. I want to remind the hon. minister of another little incident. I refer to the incident of the postmaster at Thessalon, who is reported by the inspector to have been short in his accounts and to have appropriated to his own use over a thousand dollars of public money. The inspector recommended that he be forthwith dismissed and called upon to make restitution. He was dismissed and he did make restitution. He engaged in a Dominion election in Algoma and also in an hysterical attempt to support the Ross government in their spasmodic effort to regain their hold upon the people of Ontario. Then, immediately afterwards, he was reappointed postmaster at Thessalon. There is another case that the Minister of Justice might look into. Now, here are three instances in which the public moneys of this country have been tampered with and in which the Minister of Justice has been brought face to face with the facts across the floor of parliament, and yet does nothing. But he does not hesitate to compile a document full of insinuations and innuendoes levelled, as to many of its important statements, at the hon. member for North Toronto.

Now, the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler) has been the subject of a great deal of adverse comment in this House up to a certain period. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has continuously been the butt of all sorts of insulting and degrading innuendoes. But, Mr. Chairman, let me point out to the hon. members of this House that there were taunts insinuations, innuendoes, charges, revilings, hurled across the floor of this House against my hon. friend from King's, N.B.—up to a certain time. Do you hear them now, Sir ? No, Sir ; there is not an hon. gentleman on that side of the House who would dare to open his mouth to utter one charge against that hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler). And why? Well, Sir, the hon. Minister of Justice knows why, and his colleagues know why, and the leader of this House (Mr. Fielding) knows why. The reason is that the hon. member for King's, N.B., called the bluff. He said : You dare to make insinuations against me, and I will make reprisals ; I will stand up for my own honour, and I will strike back. Not a word said now. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) appealed to the decency and honour of this House, and what was the result ? there is the contrast—in one case absolute silence following a threat ; and in the other a bitter personal attack instigated, formulated, directed by the Minister of Justice, supported by specious argument, arranged with the ingenuity which his long practice at the bar and his skill as an able lawyer has given him—unjustifiably, mercilessly and relentlessly endeavouring to tear from the hon. member for North Toronto that prestige which, I am thankful to say has not and will not suffer as a result of this attack.

There is a marvellous exhibition presented to this parliament of independence on the part of some of its members. There are hon. gentlemen I see before me now who were elected as members because, in order to gain the confidence of the electors, they pledged themselves to pursue a certain independent course and not to favour one party or the other. I have referred, briefly because I do not want to take up the time of this House, to certain political crimes which, I say, no man of independent spirit could possibly condone and save his conscience or his political reputation. Yet these gentlemen have stood in their places, and, have violated the very representations upon which they were elected by voting to support the government in these crimes which were a disgrace to Canada. There are gentlemen sitting here with the promise of preferment and appointment in their pockets who vote upon the questions to keep this government in power—and the greater the crime to be condoned, the greater the alacrity with which they vote. I do not want to be very personal, but I do want to say a word or two with regard to the attitude of some hon. gentlemen who have promised to take an independent course in this House. I have particular reference to some hon. gentlemen who are of the so-called labour classes. I see the hon. member from Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) looking at me. Perhaps he may think I am referring to him as being one who came here pledged to support whichever party is right, and particularly pledged to support compulsory arbitration of labour disputes. It may be that the hon. member is included within the indictment I have made. This hon. gentleman went before the people and induced them to vote for him upon the representation that he did not belong to either one party or the other, but would stand fairly between the two parties and would be in touch with both. I wonder whether he will recollect his words. Here they are(:

If elected he will be entirely independent of the two great parties in Dominion politics, and yet be on such friendly terms with each that he will be able to approach their leaders and lay the needs of this constituency before them in a manner that will be received by them as coming from one who is not an opponent or supporter of either party, but one who will give a cordial support to any measure brought forward by any party in the interests of the people.

Did the hon. member (Mr. Ralph Smith), as an independent member of this House, vote against any of the political crimes to which I have referred? Or did he subserviently cast in his lot with the government which has been so paternally kind to him and who, if rumour certifies correctly, has so richly rewarded him with the promise of the gubernatorial chair of Yukon? Then, we have also the hon. gentleman's platform to which he pledged himself. In that platform is the following :

Public ownership of public utilities.
Compulsory arbitration of labour disputes.

I wonder where compulsory arbitration in labour disputes went at the hands of the hon. member for Nanaimo during the debate on the Labour Bill. The hon. member for Comox-Atlin (Mr. Sloan) similarly pledged himself with regard to that policy, and yet neither of these hon. gentlemen—

Mr. TALBOT. Is this discussion pertinent to the question before the chair ?

Mr. BOYCE. Yet neither of these hon. gentlemen, Mr. Chairman, have in any way fulfilled their promises.

Mr. SLOAN. May I ask the hon. gentleman to what he is referring there ?

Mr. BOYCE. I am referring to the hon. gentleman's representations to his electors, or would be electors, with regard to compulsory arbitration.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) is wandering a little away from the subject.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. He is as near to the point as some of the insurance investigation was to the question.

Mr. BOYCE. If my hon. friend is very anxious to get it from me he can get it.

Mr. TALBOT. I appeal to the Chair whether the hon. gentleman is allowed to bring into the discussion any matter he pleases.

Mr. BOYCE. Well, if my hon. friend is very anxious to hear his own words I think I can give them to him.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I fail to see how the remarks of the hon. member for West Algonm (Mr. Boyce) are relevant to this question. The hon. member knows the rules.

Mr. BOYCE. I will promise to satisfy the hon. member from Comox-Atlin at a later date when I should be in order.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. It is in order for the hon. gentleman to take back what he says about the member for Nanaimo.

Mr. BOYCE. It may be in order for me not to say any more, but I do not think it would be in order for me to take back anything I have said. Now with regard to this herculean effort of the hon. gentleman towards independence, I was going to read a comment that has been made by eminent labour authority with regard to the attitude of the independent labour party in the Canadian parliament, I refer to J. Ramsay McDonald, a member of the Imperial parliament, in an article he wrote with regard to the labour movement in Canada. My hon. friend from Nanaimo, my hon. friend from Comox-Atlin, and any other hon. gentleman holding similar views, will find the article in the November issue of the 'Busy Man's Magazine.' After discussing the whole situation and the difficulties that exist in the way of the labour party in Canada, the article concludes in this way :

But the most formidable of all these tasks of a Canadian labour party will be to get hold of the agriculturalist, and without him it will be impossible to send more than a dozen to a score of labour members to Ottawa. With him, however, the Canadian labour movement will cohere, and the magic will then operate. A good many of the immigrant farmers from the United States have been influenced by the Populist and Bryanist movement, and some of the wiser labour leaders—particularly those in Winnipeg—are looking hopefully to Saskatchewan for political developments. Moreover, the circumstances of Canadian agriculture necessitate a vast army of workers being upon the fields in autumn. In the winter that army is encamped in the cities, living as it best can, subject to the fermentation of idea which goes on in towns.

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Chairman, I appeal to you again, is this pertinent ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman knows that he cannot read anything that is not relevant.

Mr. BOYCE. I am merely dealing with the question of the independence of these hon gentlemen. I will conclude.

Finally, one comes to what after all is the grand determining factor in what the future of the Canadian labour party is to be. In discussing matters with men here and in getting into instinctive touch with the life of this new nation, one feels a silent but solemn conflict going on far down beneath the surface. It is the conflict between the British and the United States tones of life. As this conflict affects the labour movement here it presents problems like these. Will public life become more corrupt ? Will the machine fed by patronage become more powerful ? Will expressions of the national will become more brutally boastful and selfish ? Will plutocratic instinct become predominant ? Will the labour leader continue to leave the labour movement for more lucrative commercial or political employment ? If so, the labour movement will remain in the back water of class conflict, revolutionary methods, Marxian socialism, where it is in the United States to-day. This is one of the most fascinating studies in the evolution of the Canadian spirit, but it is too complicated to be discussed at the end of an article on the prospects of the labour movement here.

I refer to this matter for the purpose of showing how difficult, how impossible, it will be to get from this House a free expression of opinion from both sides, which opinions they are free to express in the corridors, upon their platforms and in their own constituencies. I have shown how hon. members represent one state of things to their constituents and then come down here and vote in a different way, and here we have a case directly in point. An effort has been launched by this government, an attempt has been made, a diabolical attempt it is, to dethrone from the high position in public esteem which he holds, the hon. member for North Toronto. That attempt, Sir, will go down to posterity as one of the most diabolical outrages that ever disgraced Canada. It will be characterized in days to come by our children and by our children's children as a vile and malicious plot, and a little one at that, destined to recoil, to prove a boomerang, upon the party that launched it, and it will meet with the condemnation of a people who will appreciate true merit and true ability better than these hon. gentlemen.

Now, Sir, how mournful must have been the meeting between the commissioners and their counsel when they found that the evidence had turned out-so-unsatisfactory, when, by torturning it, by garbling it, by misplacing it by taking a piece here and tacking it on to a piece there, they could only formulate a pack of insinuations which the Minister of Justice is pleased to call a report. How sorry that meeting must have been, and I think it might be due to the House and the country if the Minister of Justice, like Pecksniff, realizing the duty he owed to society, had suggested to the insurance commission an addition to the report of the things that were in the minds of the commissioners and the Minister of Justice, for instance, the disappointment that was felt, the chagrin that was felt, because, despite all the efforts of the commission to burk inquiry, to prevent the production of evidence that would clear the imputation resting upon the honour of members of this House, despite all the efforts they could make to prevent the member from North Toronto from being heard himself or by counsel, there was so little upon which they could build the insinuations so artfully twisted and tortured by the Minister of Justice in his speech of yesterday into a so-called indictment. In this way they might have said something which would be in accordance with the facts, and they might have put upon this report a concluding paragraph something like this :

The commission were impressed with the extreme importance of establishing that Mr. R. L. Borden was interested in the purchase of 200,000 acres of land from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and beg most regretfully to report that their efforts in that regard were not crowned with success. They might have gone on to add, and I have no doubt that with the ingenuity displayed by the Minister of Justice, he will see that it is done yet: With equal regret the commission beg to report that, notwithstanding their persistent and vigilant efforts, no evidence was obtainable to establish the contention of the prosecution that the four Conservative members of parliament interested in these transactions were guilty of any misconduct or improper dealing in connection therewith. There would then have been something in the nature of truth, something in the nature of evidence of what the commission was really after in formulating the report. Possibly the idea has occurred to the Minister of Justice, and he may yet see to it that a report may be got to read in that way. I would suggest, though, that before he asks us to vote $105,000 to the commissioners and to the counsel for this work, he look a little more closely to the ethics of the situation, and determine whether it is in the interest of the people of Canada that such an expenditure should be foisted upon them.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Mr. Chairman, for two days the committee have been largely occupied in discussing the political, personal and partisan side of this insurance report. While I do not wish for the present to discuss that, I do intend to ask the indulgence of the committee while I look at the evidence and look at the finding from the view of the policy-holder, who has a hundred million dollars of his hard earned savings in the hands of these insurance companies. I wish to look at the matter from the point of view of the policy-holder and of the public, who have to pay this $75,000 and the other charges in connection with this investigation. I think the attention of the House can well be given for a little while to the interest of the policy-holder. The policy-holder is an important factor in the country. He is going to judge of this case, not only from what is said in connection with what might be called the partisan view of this discussion, but he is going to look at it from his own point of view and from the point of view of his savings, and how we, who are members of parliament, are handling his money. There is in connection with this report, in connection with this evidence, and in connection with the finding of the commision an arraignment, and I wish to ask the attention of the committee to it. That arraignment, I may say first of all, is an arraignment of the Insurance Department of this country and it is also an arraignment of the Finance Department which has charge of the administration of the insurance laws. There is furthermore an imperative call to this parliament for legislative action in connection with this great subject of life insurance. I wish for a few moments to bring the interest of the policy-holders and the responsibility of this House in this connection to the attention of the House and of the country. I do not know that I can bring the subject to the attention of the House in a more concise way than by quotinf from a letter that Governor Hughes of New York state wrote the other day in connection with the desire on his part for a change in the superintendent of insurance in the state of New York. I have an official copy of the letter which Governor Hughes wrote in connection with this subject. Governor Hughes, as every one knows, was the solicitor who was given charge of the investigation in regard to the life insurance in the United States and there certainly was no charge of partisanship that could be laid against him. Since that investigation took place he has been elected by the people of New York largely on his insurance record to be governor of the state and upon going into office he felt that, having taken a very prominent part in that investigation, it was his duty to try and find out how the public interest could be served as a result of the findings of that commission. So, after careful study of the situation he decided that the present superintendent of insurance in the state of New York ought to give up his office. To that end he wrote a letter to the Senate of he state of New York and it is because of the exact statements in that letter that I wish to read one or two paragraphs to the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that Kelsey ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Yes.

Albany, February 20, 1907.

To the Senate :

I recommend the removal of Otto Kelsey from the office of superintendent of insurance.

With respect to life insurance, New York is easily the most important jurisdiction in the United States, if not in the world, and the vast interests involved imperatively require, and it should be a point of honour for the state to maintain, a fearless and efficient administration of its supervising department commanding the confidence of the people.

I recommend Mr. Kelsey's removal because as head of this department he conspicuously has failed to perform obvious duties of the first importance, and his neglect has demonstrated his unfitness for the trust confided to him.

Mr. Kelsey took office on May 17, 1906. His appointment was made soon after the investigation by the joint committee of the legislature which disclosed gross irregularities in the management of life insurance corporations. Official position had been used for private gain, and the money contributed by the policy-holders for their mutual protection had been wasted in a scandalous manner. Extravagant salaries had been paid, favorites had been permitted to enrich themselves at the expense of the policy-holders, an elaborate system had been established for the purpose of controlling legislation in this state and throughout the country, and enormous sums had been secretly disbursed without proper vouchers.

The revelation of those grave abuses in connection with our greatest fiduciary institutions shocked the civilized world, and by the discredit which justly attached to the administration of the insurance department, humiliated our state.

Every one of those things which was proved to have taken place in the United States occurred in this country and this commission, which may have been partisan as has been shown here, disclosed the fact, with the assistance of an able actuary who came from New York state, that all these things exist in this country in connection with our life insurance. Incompetency, maladministration, and neglect to administer the insurance laws are also characteristic of Canada, and I say it is the duty of this House to pay some attention to the condition of life insurance in this cuuntry and it is imperative that we should try to remove the enormous evils which do exist at the present time. The governor of New York state went on further to say :

Similarly, in the case of the New York Life in 1904, the same examiner reported :

The result of this work I believe amply justifies the conclusion that all disbursements found to have been made incidental to the expense of conducting business were in no sense excessive, unreasonable or not unwarranted. The officers and representatives of the company gave your examiners full and free access to all its records and aided them in every way in their endeavour to accomplish the work thoroughly and expeditiously.

Those facts were presented to the legislature in the report of its committee, which concluded its review of the work of the department with this statement :

Most of the evils which have been disclosed by the investigation would have been impossible had there been a vigorous performance of the duties already laid upon the department, a vigilant watchfulness in the interest of policyholders and a courageous exercise of the powers which the statute confers.

Everything there pointed out obtains in this country. If there had been a vigorous observance of the law, if the examination of these insurance companies had been made as the law directed, if the public had been supplied with the actual facts we would not have found the abuses which we did find. But, we did exactly what was done in New York. We neglected to investigate these companies ; we did not know the facts or if we knew them we allowed the evils to continue. And to-day, on behalf of more than one hundred thousand policy-holders of Canada who have over $100,000,000 of their savings in the hands of these insurance companies, I demand that this parliament shall legislate immediately to remedy the abuses that exist. I call on the government of this country to follow the example of Governor Hughes of New York state, and to remove every man in office who has failed in the discharge of his duty in connection with this life insurance. The present superintendent of insurance made a sorry exhibition of himself before that commission; he had not the situation in hand; he did not find out things he should have found out; if he did find them out he took no pains to have them rectified or to call public attention to them. If on the other hand he called the attention of the government to these abuses, and the government took no action, and the abuses grew in number and gravity, then the government is to be condemned. I quote from the letter of Governor Hughes on life insurance:

> But the more important the work of the department, the greater the need of making it efficient and trustworthy. The assiduity of a departmental chief in attention to the details of routine cannot compensate for the lack of administrative capacity. The passage of laws will amount to nothing if they are not executed.

Here again I am at issue with the government to tell us they are going to make a new insurance law. What is the good of making new insurance laws, if you do not enforce the laws you already have. On that point Governor Hughes says:

> Provisions for publicity will not avail if the supervision of the state be feeble and inadequate. If examinations in the future are to be of the same description as those in the past, the administration of the department will not prevent a recurrence of the old abuses. Doubtless in former years superintendents and their assistants have been burdened with work, and before the legislative committee much was said of the extent of their activities.
> It is my desire that the administration of the Insurance Department should be worthy of the state of New York, and that the reputation of its administration should be redeemed. With the unparalleled size and importance of the interests committed to its care, it should represent the highest degree of administrative efficiency. There should be no taint of past scandal upon any person connected with it. For the sake not only of the policy-holders, but of all those in any way connected with the important business of insurance it should be above reproach.
> I have been compelled, with regret, to reach the conclusion that Mr. Kelsey is not the man to have charge of this department. His past neglect and his want of force and initiative already displayed, make it unsafe to accept assurances for the future. The excuses that he now makes serve only to place in a more prominent light his misconception of his obligations, and of what the people of the state have a right to expect.

The people of Canada expect that these abuses shall cease, and that any man in office who like Kelsey is incompetent, or has failed in his duty, shall immediately be driven from office. The country expects that a stricter law shall be passed. The policy-holders, and the people of Canada who are paying for this investigation, expect that those men now in office in connection with life insurance companies, who have been proved by this commission to have been guilty of breach of trust, who have been proved, as they have been proved by this report, to have misused these insurance funds to their own advantage; the people of Canada expect that such men shall be retired from office as they have been compelled to retire from office in the state of New York. The presidents of these great New York companies who were exposed in the New York investigation were forced by public opinion and by the action of the authorities to retire from office, and the same thing must happen in Canada before we pass any new laws. As Governor Hughes says, what is the use of more new laws or more executive officers, if there is not an enforcement of the law and a thorough inspection of the business of these companies. It is all very well to talk of the political view of this Insurance Commission, and the partisan effect of the report, but what about the policy-holders whose savings are at risk, and who are exposed to the wrongs that have been proven to exist? What does the policy-holder care for a new law if there is not to be an enforcement of the existing law against the men who have control of these companies, and who have misused their trust. From the beginning I have followed the insurance inquiries both in New York state and in Canada, and it is patent to my mind that nearly every abuse that was disclosed in New York has been shown to exist in Canada. I contended last year that the investigation should be made in parliament, where we would all have been much more cognizant of the facts, and where we would have been competent to deal with the evil, and to have applied a remedy. Now, after this Insurance Commission has been more than a year in existence, and notwithstanding the awful revelations made, we are asked to allow this session of parliament to pass without a remedy being applied. I have had procured at my own expense, a very able man in connection with insurance, to keep a close tab on everything that was disclosed, and to make a very careful study of the revelations made in the United States and in Canada. This gentleman has prepared for me a list of these disclosures, and first of all, it has been disclosed that insurance in Canada is much more costly than it should be. Another thing disclosed is that we are over-insured in this country and that there has been an unhealthy stimulation of insurance. And Sir, if the evils connected with life insurance cannot be cured, my advice to the people of Canada, and I have reached the conclusion after careful study, is, that they had better put their money in the savings banks. But there are a great number of people to whom life insurance is attractive, and I would like to see it continue, but best of all I would like to see it continued under the direction of the state. I would rather there was no life insurance in this country than that the evils disclosed by this commission should be allowed to continue. Another thing disclosed, and it is a shameful thing, is the greed of the shareholders of these companies. That is a great abuse which must be remedied. It is on record that the shareholders of one of these companies, who were drawing 8 per cent on their capital stock, doubled that capital stock by their own vote, without paying any money in, and from that day to this they are drawing 16 per cent on their original investment.

And they took this 16 per cent out of what they called the accrued profits of the company, which they professed belonged to the policy-holders, but which the shareholders themselves were all the time absorbing. Now, that was a great wrong, which had its origin in the greed of these shareholders. Then it was proved in connection with these companies, and in connection with an hon. gentleman belonging to another House who made a defence of himself the other day, that there was over capitalization on the part of one of these companies, whereby the profit fund of a great insurance company of this country is most unnecessarily taxed for an eight per cent dividend on an unnecessary million dollars of stock. $50,000 is all the stock required to conduct a life insurance company in this country, or $100,000 at most; but here is a company whose capital stock, by reason of one-man power, was unnecessarily increased to $1,000,000. Does the government propose to interfere with that over-capitalization, and does it intend to demand that these shareholders, who have unnecessarily increased the capital of this company, shall pay back that money to themselves, if they ever paid it in, and shall reduce the capital of the company to a reasonable amount? Now, that unnecessary capitalization of companies, caused by the greed of shareholders, has been proved to exist in this country. It has not been proved to exist in the United States to the same extent that it exists here. But it is one of the evils that have been exposed, and what the policy-holders of this country are asking is not quite what has been discussed here in the last day or two, although that may be a pertinent subject, but what the Minister of Finance, through his department of insurance, proposes to do about this greed of shareholders and this over capitalization of insurance companies.

Then, what else have we? That the policy-holders have no effective voice in the management of the companies, not even of the mutual companies, and no power as to the handling of trust funds. A hundred millions of trust funds, the absolute property of the policy-holders; and yet these policy-holders have not any substantial voice in the control of those funds. That is an evil that exists, and that has been pointed out in this report. What does the Minister of Finance propose to do with that evil?

Then they say that the interests of the policy-holders are many hundreds of times greater than those of the stock-holders; and they go on to say that men who were extravagant in conducting the business of their companies have been found to be careless and reckless in the handling of trust funds, and that there are unmistakable proofs that there has been graft in handling these trust funds; that there has been most unfair, unjust and discriminating treatment of policy-holders in respect of their insurance contracts and in respect of profits; that in most cases the management have entrenched themselves in power beyond the possibility of being dislodged without some radical changes in the insurance law; that there are flagrant cases of nepotism. There seems to be nepotism all over this country. There is nepotism in the government as well in the conduct of these insurance companies. Nepotism was exposed in the American insurance companies, and it was also shown to exist in the Canadian insurance companies.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman has been studying this question, and I would like to ask him which would be preferable—that the policy-holders should have the right to representation on the board of directors or the right of appointing one of a number of trustees?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. When we come to discuss the Bill which the government may introduce, I shall be prepared to give my opinion. It is a very difficult thing to effect what is called the mutualization of these companies, but it has to come to this, that if there is not a proper representation of the policy-holders in connection with the management of those trust funds, then I am willing to see the state take over the administration of these trust funds and hold them for the benefit of the policy-holders. If the Minister of Finance had the capacity and the courage to take over this insurance business, he would not have had to make the confession which he made to-day, that he was not able to get money to meet the country's obligations.

Mr. FIELDING. Did I say that?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. No, but that money was very tight and that this was the worst possible time to make a loan or to retire loans now due.

Mr. FIELDING. It is better to-night; the bank rate is down.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Well, perhaps the little discussion of this morning helped to reduce it. The point I want to make is this : I am not afraid to say that I would like to see all these trust funds in the hands of the state, even if there were private companies engaged in insurance and then, some means should be devised by which the policy-holders, the men who own these moneys, should have a great deal to say with regard to their investment.

Then they say : That trust and syndicate organizations operated as subsidiary or tributary to insurance companies flourish and abound, though contrary to the spirit of the Insurance Act and foreign to the very idea of investment. Now, that has been proved. These little donkey engines in connection with these great insurance companies have been found to exist here just as they have been proved to exist in the state of New York, and instead of being administered for the benefit of the policy-holders, they have been administered for the benefit of the directors of these insurance companies, especially the managing directors of those companies. The investment of these funds was made through these little donkey engines, and the profits went into the pockets of the men who had control of these trust funds. That was a most wrongful breach of trust and a breach of the law, a thing that could not occur in England to-day. If it did occur there, there would be immediate proceedings in a criminal court. Here our law is wide enough not only to put these men out of office, but to put them in the criminal courts for the way in which they have handled these moneys belonging to the policy-holders. Another and probably the most important point in this insurance problem is the fact that for a good many years there has been in use a very clever invention that was made by an insurance expert. That is the kind of policy called the profit participating policy. It is a bad policy ; it is a wrong policy. It was introduced into this country from the United States. It has been found to be wrong, and it ought to be abolished, and made illegal in this country. Has the government any proposal to make in regard to that ? Policy-holders all over this country have been induced to go into this profit-participating proposition on statements handed to them showing that enormous profits would accrue and that every five years there would be a division of the profits between them and the shareholders. There is not a company that has not disappointed its policy-holders in this respect, and that has not made a shameful use of this scheme. Does the government intend to abolish this profit-sharing policy and substitute a simple policy in its place ? The people of this country want to know that. They want to know if the Minister of Finance is going to give them a benefit of that kind in return for the $105,000 which he is asking this House to vote for this report. And I thought that when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) came to this committee and asked us to give him the $105,000 which this report has cost, he would have given us some declaration of policy with regard to the putting an end to these abuses which this Insurance Commission has exposed. Have we had any statement such as that in connection with the demand for this money ? When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) comes before parliament with his budget, he is bound to explain what the money is required for and what the public are going to get for it. Are we, in return for this expenditure, only to get a blue book ? I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to tell the people what he is going to give them in the way of insurance reform in return for this money we are now asked to vote.

I have not given all the exposures made by this Insurance Commission with regard to these insurance companies, such as over capitaliaztion and stock watering, both to the prejudice of policy-holders. Does the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) intend to tell the people that this over capitalization and stock watering shall cease ? Let me point out another of the findings given in this report :

> The tendency of insurance companies to become aggregations with financial rather than insurance aims.

That is the evil of the great trusts, the multi-millionaire combinations—these great trust companies in connection with insurance companies, which are becoming the engines of financial concerns rather than conducting their business in the interests of their policy-holders. Who is this man that is being exposed in New-York in connection with the consolidation of railways ? It is Mr. Harriman. And who are the associates of Mr. Harriman in all this vulpine work of his ? They were the men who were associated with him in the management of the trust funds of the great insurance companies of the United States. And this attempt to consolidate the railways of the United States into the hands of three or four great plutocrats or multi-millionaires was brought about by the skilful manipulation of trust funds in connection with the insurance companies. Almost the same thing has been exposed in this country. Men in high finance in Canada have been found out to have wrongfully used these insurance trust funds in order to advance their other financial undertakings in contravention of the law on the statute book.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE. With regard to the powers and the independence of auditors, has the hon. gentleman any views on that subject ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I have not come to that yet but I will give him an answer later on. Let me give in brief some more of the findings of this commission.

The Canadian system of insurance modelled on that of the United States.

The British system, ideal in its freedom from legislative control, at present impossible in Canada.

In Great Britain life companies usually managed by scientific actuaries.

These are other findings of that Insurance Commission. In England they have actuaries who are very scientifically trained. In Edingburgh of all cities, they have what they call a Scotch director who has the most honest conception of what a trusteeship is and what fidelity to trust is; and the main thing wrong with our insurance system is that we do not appear to have actuaries, so scientifically trained, and who have this high conception of what a trust fund is in connection with our insurance companies. These facts having been brought out, what does the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) propose to give the people, in the way of curing these abuses?

In Great Britain a large body of trained actuarial opinion, is brought to bear on insurance questions but in Canada the conditions are quite the opposite.

Non-participating insurance 'for a fixed amount and at low rates'; the simple and normal form.

Participating insurance more or less speculative.

Permissible investments should be confined to the bounds proper for trust funds.

There must be no 'wide open door' for investments.

Present powers of investment ample, and in certain respects should be curtailed.

These are all findings of the commission. These are all wrongs which the commission has reported against. I again ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) what is he going to give the people in return for this $100,000 he is asking us to vote? Does he intend to reform these abuses? Does he intend to exact fidelity to the trust funds and to insist that those men shall be removed from office who have been exposed by this commission as guilty of breach of trust in connection with these trust funds? These are questions that come home to every policy-holder in this country. Every one of these policy-holders has a vote and every one is a constituent of some hon. member in this House, and they are asking for an immediate answer to this question. They want to know, first of all, if the insurance branch in connection with the department of Finance is to be reorganized and more competent men put in it. And they want to know that right away. I asked the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) at the end of last session if he proposed to do anything with reference to these revelations and he said not yet. Does he propose to do anything now, in view of the evidence given and the incompetence shown by some of these officials? Does he intend to remove the incompetents from office? In view of the revelations made by this commission, he would be authorized in sending a letter to the directorate of every insurance company asking them: Do you intend to remove your officials who have broken the law and those directors and presidents who have equally violated it or do you intend continuing them in office? And in the name of the people of Canada I notify you that if you do not remove these men, this department will refuse you a license to continue your business. In view of the findings of this commission, it is his duty to send such a letter to every one of the companies which has done wrong. When that is done, when he has put his department in proper shape and has compelled these companies to put themselves in proper shape, and when he submits to us a law which will correct these abuses that are shown to exist, he will be giving the people some return for the money he is asking from them. I say in all seriousness, on behalf of the people of this country, and particularly on behalf of the policy-holders of this country, that this Insurance Commission has done good work. I say that there is great value in its report. I want to give the commissioners and their counsel and that expert actuary from New York, Mr. Dawson, credit for all the good there is in that report. That report shows that there is great call on this parliament to do something in the way of legislation for the benefit of policy-holders. I give the government credit for that report in so far as it exposes the abuses of insurance in this country. Are these abuses to cease? Do we intend to try and get a better law in this country and put a stop to these abuses even as they are trying to put a stop to them in the city of New York? I see that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) is not in his place but the Minister of Finance is there, and I again raise the question, which has now become an old one, which I have frequently raised in this House, namely, the enforcement of our laws in this country.

The President of the United States and the Attorney General of the United States are engaged in enforcing the interstate commerce law of that country and are bringing the greatest magnates before the courts for their violations of the statute law. And Mr. Hughes, who exposed these abuses in the state of New York, is to-day the Governor of that state, and as Governor, is insisting upon the reform of these abuses. He insists upon having a commissioner of insurance who will report what is wrong and will correct the abuses that he finds to exist. Now, if this work is being done by the administrative authorities in the United States, why may we not do the same in this country? But we have had the confession here time and again—at one time by the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), then by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), then by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding)—that the enforcement of federal laws is to be left to the officers connected with the provincial administration. If this parliament is worth anything, it can only justfy itself, not merely by making laws but by insisting upon having an administration that will enforce and execute the laws it makes. I hope that in a short time there will come into office in this country—I care not whence they come—men who will not merely make laws in the interest of the people, but will enforce those laws for the benent of the people and who, if they find a federal official neglecting the enforcement of the law, will compel the retirement of that official from the public service. What is the use of passing more insurance laws if this absurd doctrine is to be preached and maintained? As things are to-day, we are hanging between Heaven and earth ; we do not know where we are with regard to these laws. The time has come when this foolish doctrine must be abandoned, and when this policy, or lack of policy, must cease, as regards this important question of insurance which is now before us. Here is a clear-cut report which shows that certain abuses exist affecting over $100,000,000 of the hard savings of the people of Canada. I say, it is incumbent upon the government to act. It is incumbent upon the Minister of Finance to tell the people of Canada—now that he is asking for this $100,000 to pay for the commission—what he intends to do for the removal or mitigation of the abuses which this report of the commission shows to exist in this country.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Chairman, I shall only occupy a moment. The hon. gentleman (Mr. W. F. Maclean) has asked me a good many questions and I fear he would charge me with discourtesy, or with not giving due consideration to these matters, if I failed to reply. He has probably not been able to attend in his place in this House so regularly as some hon. members, and so it may have escaped his notice that an intimation was given some time ago that it was not the intention of the government to introduce any insurance legislation this session.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I hear that, it was an answer given to me.

Mr. FIELDING. I think that statement that there will be no government insurance legislation this session must be taken as the answer to about nine-tenths of the hon. gentleman's questions. When the legislation is brought down it will be time enough to criticise it. In the meantime, I must ask the hon. gentleman to have hope and also a good deal of faith. One reason why I rise is to protest against the statements the hon. gentleman has made reflecting upon the superintendent of insurance and his officers. I do not mind his criticisms of the Minister of Finance—that is all in the game. But when the hon. gentleman denounces the superintendent of insurance as incompetent, and his staff as incompetent, I say that that is entirely unwarranted in fact, and I say that nothing in the Insurance Commission's report, so far as I have had an opportunity to study it, justifies such a statement. It is true that I have not had an opportunity to study the report as carefully as I would like to do, but I think I am safe in saying that there is nothing in it that would justify him in attacking the superintendent of insurance. The superintendent of insurance is a capable, energetic and faithful official. He is not an appointee of mine, but was appointed nearly a quarter of a century ago by Sir John Macdonald. Many difficulties arise in the administration of insurance laws. It is easy to say that the superintendent should do this or that he should do that; but, I believe that those who have given the matter careful consideration have satisfied themselves that in every case that has arisen Mr. Fitzgerald has endeavoured to do his duty to the utmost of his power. With referenece to the other gentlemen of the staff, I can say that they are very competent men and that there is nothing that justifies the reflection that the hon. gentleman (Mr. W. F. Maclean) makes upon them.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Just a moment in reply to what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) has said : I say that the exhibition that was made by these officers, as shown by the record of the evidence before the commission, is not to their credit ; it shows that they have no proper knowledge of the insurance situation of this country. I was in the House and heard what the minister said as to the government's intention concerning bringing in a Bill relating to insurance. But what I say is that, in asking for this vote of public money to pay the expenses of this commisison, he ought to give assurance to the people of Canada that he intends to remove the abuses which are shown to exist, and to reorganize the Department of Insurance, as the Governor of New York is reorganizing the department in that state—and the department in New York is no worse than that in Canada. And, I repeat, the hon. minister should assure the people that these abuses shall cease to exist ; he should assure the people that it is his intention to refuse a license to every company that has been proven guilty of wrong-doing according to this report. If he cannot do this, he cannot justify himself in asking for the people's money to pay for this commission.

Mr. LEFURGEY. In view of all that has been said both in and out of the House, with regard to the conduct of hon. members as referred to in this inquiry—or rather inquisition, as I think it should be called—I feel it due to myself to make a few remarks upon the situation. It sounds like a laudable and proper thing for the government to appoint a commission to investigate the subject of life insurance in Canada. If this commission had been carried on in the way all royal commissions should be carried on, a great deal of the discussion that has taken place in this House need never have appeared on the pages of 'Hansard.' The ostensible object in appointing this commission was to assist the government by collecting information regarding life insurance and to make recommendations for the improvement of the insurance law. It is a fair subject for discussion whether the commissioners have exceeded their powers or not. I think that any hon. member of this House or any other person who has access to the evidence taken before the commission and to the report which we have before us to-day, will declare that a great deal of this evidence and report has no relevancy to the subject before the commission. I have some knowledge of the subject, at least so far as I figured in the investigation myself, for I was a witness before the Insurance Commission. My own private affairs and those of some other members of parliament were dragged before the Insurance Commission, and have been dragged before this House and before the country. I wish to point out that calling me as a witness before the Insurance Commission, and some other members of the house, had absolutely nothing to do with the insurance inquiry, and with finding out what evils may exist in regard to insurance. Now as this report is certainly an endeavour, through its insinuations, especially with regard to the Union Trust Company and the Foresters' Company to blacken the reputation of the hon. member for North Toronto, and in that regard I think the hon. member for North Toronto has fully justified all his transactions and all his relations with the companies mentioned, I shall not dwell upon them to any extent. The Minister of Justice, however, in his speech last night, among other irrelevant and uncalled for remarks said, on page 6473 :

> Well, sir, I am not a Forester, I have not the right to complain ; it is not a matter that concerns me personally. But if I were interested as a member of the order, I think I should have every right to complain of what has taken place.

Then he goes on to make some other entirely uncalled for remarks in an odious comparison between a bank defaulter and the hon. member for North Toronto. That stricture has been dealt with in this House, and I shall not refer to it further. But with regard to the Foresters, I think when the report is considered in the country, and people realize that during the time the hon. member for North Toronto had charge of the Foresters' company, its earnings in five years amounted to some $526,000, the Foresters who are interested will not have much complaint to make. We have not only the word of the member for North Toronto with regard to his management of the Foresters' affairs during that period—the member for North Toronto has pointed out that the transactions in which he invested the funds were legitimate investments of trust funds—we have also the word of Mr. Stevenson, who is very high in the regard of the Foresters throughout the country, and who is I believe to be their next supreme chief ranger. Mr. Stevenson, addressing the Foresters a short time ago, said :

> Mr. Stevenson then proceeded to deal with the Northwest land deal. Although there were some unpleasant features about this, he said the order had made very large profits on it. Last January the order had owned nearly 400,000 acres, but had sold 325,000 acres at a profit of almost $750,000, and still had 75,000 acres left. They had been accused of speculation, but the results undoubtedly were good. The order had millions piling up in its surplus, and it didn't seem to them to be speculation to pay four or five dollars an acre for western lands—it was like buying gold dollars for fifty cents.

I do not intend to dwell upon that phase of the subject, because the member for North Toronto has fully vindicated his position before this House, and when the public come to know the facts he will have fully vindicated himself in the country. Now I wish to call attention to the part which I had to play myself in this insurance investigation. I shall give some instances which will show to any fair thinking man that the action of this Insurance Commission in calling myself and some other witnesses in connection with the Northwest lands transactions, was simply an attempt to drag into the affair, not only certain members of parliament, but even my respected leader the hon. member for Carleton, Ont., (Mr. R. L. Borden), with the hope that the Liberal party might get some capital from it throughout the country. Now associated with Mr. Fowler, Mr. Bennett and myself in this transaction, was Mr. A. G. Peuchen, of Toronto. This gentleman living in the city of Toronto, was at the beck and call of the Insurance Commission at any hour they wished to have him, during the whole course of that inquiry, and although Mr. Peuchen knew just as much about the transactions as I did, he was never served with a summons and never brought before the commission. He was not asked to give evidence, although Mr. Lefurgey, because he was a member of parliament, was served with a summons and brought before this commission ; and because he did not appear just at the moment of his service, though he sent a lawyer there to represent him and to say that he was ready to give evidence, the Insurance Commission had the audacity to say that Mr. Lefurgey was showing contempt to the Royal Commission, and that he together with Fowler and others should be punished. Mr. Peuchen I think was at one time a Conservative, but I believe he did yeoman service for the Liberal party during a certain by-election, and of course it was not deemed advisable to call upon Mr. Peuchen. Again when I take up the report of the Insurance Commission in connection with the Foresters and in connection with the Northwest land transactions, do we find in this the name of Mr. A. G. Peuchen who was fully as much connected with it as any member of parliament ?

Let me read from the insurance report:

> Late in the fall of 1903 Messrs. Rufus H. Pope and George W. Fowler commenced negotiations with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the purchase of a large tract of railway subsidy land on behalf of a syndicate including Messrs. W. H. Bennett and A. A. Lefurgey.

As I say, they never mentioned the name of Mr. A. G. Peuchen, although Mr. Shepley was perfectly cognizant of the fact that he was in the same position as Mr. Bennett and myself. I point out these things to show that instead of this Royal Commission being unbiased, and desiring to find out the pros and cons of the insurance question, and to report to the House thereupon, it evolved into an inquisition to prosecute and endeavour to injure the reputations of members on this side of the House. The hon. gentleman who was conducting the examination had in his possession, wherever he got it, the evidence that I had given in a preliminary examination in Toronto in a private suit ; Mr. Shepley faced me with this evidence in his hand. He had read over the evidence, he knew perfectly well that the evidence contained the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, under oath; and he knew perfectly well that there was nothing in that evidence that had anything whatever to do with the insurance inquiry which he was carrying on. Yet that gentleman, not satisfied with having the report before him and knowing its irrelevancy, dragged me into the situation as a witness, and as the leader of the opposition pointed out last night, for the sole purpose of trying to drag his name into the situation in some way.

I could go over the evidence showing this, but it has been gone over before in the House. Mr. Shepley tried in every way possible to drag Mr. Borden's name in and when he found Mr. Borden's name could not be dragged into it in any way and that there was nothing to be gained by dragging his name into a legitimate transaction he to some extent desisted. I protested to Mr. Shepley and I protested to the commission when they asked me to produce papers in a private suit that it should not be done, that they had no right to call for these papers, that these papers had nothing to do with this inquiry, that their production was exposing a case that was pending in the court. But, Judge MacTavish ruled that objection out of order and said that I should produce every paper in my possession. But further, the crowning imposition of the situation and showing fully the vindictiveness of this investigation and of the way in which it has been carried on, they had the audacity, the effrontery to call in the Canadian Pacific Railway to find out if perchance these members of parliament had got any advantages that the outside public could not have had. I shall give the committee a sample of the evidence which Mr. Shepley endeavoured to secure from Mr. Griffin, the Canadian Pacific Railway Commissioner from Winnipeg. The calling of Mr. Griffin to give evidence in this insurance inquiry as to the price we paid for these lands and as to whether we got any special favours had absolutely nothing whatever to do with the abuses of insurance or the investment of the funds of insurance companies. So long as they were getting value, so long as their investments were being made with due care, so long as they got valuations of the property which, as my hon. friend from North Toronto said they could easily have obtained if they had called for them, they had no right to go into this matter at all, and they had no purpose in doing so except to drag the names of hon. members of this House into it notwithstanding the fact that the transaction in which they were engaged had nothing to do with the insurance inquiry. This examination of Mr. Griffin puts a different face upon what Mr. Shepley and those who were behind him instigating him wished to work out. Mr. Griffin says, in reply to a question by Mr. Shepley :

> I have no hesitation at all in saying that the sale that was made was a more advantgeous sale than a sale of the same quantity of land in what would necessarily be a somewhat wider territory, through the same character of district from between Saskatoon and Edmonton at $5 an acre. That is, if Messrs. Pope and Fowler had gone and picked 200,000 acres of land, picked sections through all that territory at $5 an acre, they would have obtained a better bargain than they did.
> Q. And it would have been a correspondingly worse bargain, you would say, for the Canadian Pacific ?—A. That is my opinion.
>
> Q. Then, my learned friend will not mind my altering the form of these a little ?
>
> Mr. CREELMAN. Oh, not at all.
> Mr. SHEPLEY. Did Messrs. Pope and Fowler——

Mark you this happens before an insurance commission.

> —receive any special consideration at your hands for any reason whatever in connection with this sale, or did they get just the terms that any other persons of substance with the money to pay could have got ?—A. They received exactly what I would have recommended in the case of any other purchasers.

Q. Did you receive at all from anybody in authority in connection with the Canadian Pacific any instructions or any suggestion that you should reduce or lower the price to these gentlemen ?—A. I never received even a suggestion from anybody that I should give Messrs. Pope and Fowler any special concessions that would not be accorded to others.

Q. Then I think that is all I have to ask Mr. Griffin.

I ask any hon. member of this House if that had anything to do with the insurance investigation, and I ask any hon. member if that is not absolute proof that this investigation into the affairs of the Union Trust Company and the dragging of the names of hon. members of this House and their private transactions into it was a political investigation to throw some possible stain upon the characters and names of members on this side of the House ?

My position in regard to the Northwest land situation is a very simple one and it may be stated in a few words. A number of us were in the west and like hundreds of other people who had gone to the west, we decided to purchase land and formed a company to do so. We went to the Canadian Pacific Railway, or those who represented us went to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and negotiated for the purchase of land. Was there anything wrong in that ? Is there any hon. gentleman who will say that there is anything wrong in going to the Canadian Pacific Railway ? They are the great owners of land in the west. They are the people who own nearly all the land available for purchase. I do not think there is a business man in this country or a member of this House who would get up and say that there is anything wrong in the fact of my having been identified with that transaction. I made a statement to the country shortly after I had given my evidence before the insurance inquiry because there were a lot of garbled statements going through the press and I will just read this statement to the House at this time. I said :

In view of some newspaper comment which has come to my notice, I would like to point out

That I was concerned in a land transaction in an open market.

That I advanced all assessments out of my own pocket.

That I personally had no knowledge of any special favours—if such were granted—when I acquired my interest in the lands.

I have called the attention of the committee to the evidence of Mr. Griffin. I did not interview the Canadian Pacific Railway upon this question but you have the sworn testimony of Mr. Griffin that there were no possible favours given to the gentlemen who applied for this land any more than there would be to any other person who approached them. I further said :

Mr. LEFURGEY.

I had nothing whatever to do with directors of the Union Trust Company as such.

My position, as a member of parliament, I maintain is not at all compromised by my connection with the land transaction. It has never affected any vote which I have cast, and for the future it shall not do so.

I bought my share of the land in the open market. I paid all that was demanded for it with my own money ; out of my profits there arose no transaction that I desire to hide. My connection with the whole affair, my attitude towards all parties was that of an honourable business man, participating in a legitimate mercantile deal.

Do the hon. members of this House believe that statement ? Is there any hon. member on the other side of the House who will get up and challenge that statement? If so I call upon him to do so now.

While it is said in this House that there was nothing wrong in any transaction with which I had to do, there has been a lot of yellow journalism, particularly in the Liberal papers and especially in the organ of the Minister of Agriculture, the Montreal 'Herald,' in reference to this transaction. Are the members of this House, whenever any newspaper in this country misrepresents them or states falsehoods concerning them, to be expected to call for an investigation before the Privileges and Elections Committee or to sue for libel ? If so, then most of the members of this House would have no time left to attend to their private or public business. I refer to some of these articles in the 'Herald,' because the hon. gentleman from Labelle did us the favour of moving a resolution in which he included newspaper comments, and declared he would give us a chance to clear our honour. I thank the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) for his thoughtfulness, although for my part it was gratuitous. I was perfectly satisfied as to my own conduct, and I challenge any hon. gentleman to impugn my honour in connection with any transaction I ever engaged in, whether of a public or a private nature. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) referred to some hon. members in this House by name. Mr. Bennett asked him if he would say that he (Mr. Bennett) had not invested his own money in these lands, and Mr. Bourassa replied :

So far as that is concerned, I immediately say to my hon. friend that I do not see any impropriety in it.

That is, referring to making investments in Northwest lands. And Mr. Bourassa continued :

As far as that is concerned, I immediately say to my hon. friend that I do not see any impropriety in it. Again, as in the case of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), as in the case of the Hon. Senator Cox, I have not come here to charge these hon. gentlemen. But what has happened ? That evidence had scarcely gone to print before the whole Liberal press of the country took it up and branded those three hon. gentlemen as being unworthy of seats in this House.

Why that is what the insurance investigation was started for, and that was the legitimate result of its work.

Let us lay aside, if you like, the accusations which were made before this session; but since the opening of this session, indeed, in this month of March, the Montreal 'Herald,' one of the most respectable organs of public opinion in this country——

I must to a large extent disagree with the hon. member for Labelle in that respect.

—although a party organ, one that has always been regarded as an impartial one among the party papers, has published eight or nine articles, in which it accuses in so many words the hon. member for North Toronto, the hon. member for King's, New Brunswick, the hon. member for East Simcoe and the hon. member for Prince, Prince Edward Island, of improper conduct.

In view of such a statement being made by the hon. member (Mr. Bourassa) I shall quote two articles published in the Montreal 'Herald,' and perhaps when the hon gentleman has heard them he will not have such a high idea of the standing of that newspaper as he has had. The Montreal 'Herald' of February 22 says:

Indeed, it is pretty hard to see how any discussion that may take place in parliament on this subject can be anything more than a continuation of the discussion started in the press. There was nothing in the evidence, that the 'Herald' can recall, which exposed any member of the combination to the censure of the House, or which would justify a member on the Liberal side in demanding the resignation of either Mr. Foster, Mr. Fowler, Mr. Bennett or Mr. Lefurgey. They, or some of them, may have done things which would weaken their reputation with the general public, but that is surely more the affair of the newspapers than of parliament.

It will be seen that the Montreal 'Herald' was not calling for an investigation which the hon. member for Labelle had asked for; in fact it says there was nothing for which to call to account these members of parliament But on March 22 just a month later, they experience a volte face, and the 'Herald' wrote:

If Mr. Fowler, Mr. Bennett or Mr. Lefurgey had as a high sense of what is required in a member as Sir Wilfrid Laurier has of what is required in a Prime Minister, they would have demanded as soon as Mr. Bourassa took his seat that the report of the evidence showing their financial dealings with Mackenzie and Mann be sent before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. They stand pilloried before parliament and before the public, upon their own confession, for having received secret information from Mr. Mann, the possession of which enabled them to hoodwink even the Canadian Pacific Railway authorities as to the value of certain lands in the west; and with having accepted the financial assistance of Mackenzie and Mann, to the amount of $42,000, up to the time when they were able to dispose at a profit, of the option they had secured. The Privileges and Elections Committee might not be able to try Messrs. Fowler, Bennett and Lefurgey for acts committed during the last parliament, but Messrs. Fowler, Bennett and Lefurgey certainly ought to invite such action as the committee can take.

Here are two leading articles in the Montreal 'Herald,' one diametrically opposed to the other. I say that the last of these articles contains falsehoods and an absolute misstatement of the evidence, and I say that if those who control the Montreal 'Herald' had taken the trouble to read the report of the commission they would have seen that at least Mr. Lefurgey and Mr. Bennett put up their own money and received no financial assistance from Messrs Mann and McKenzie. And further, neither of these gentlemen on any occasion interviewed Messrs. McKenzie and Mann, nor the Canadian Pacific Railway, nor did they obtain any secret information, and for that matter neither did Messrs. Pope and Fowler get any secret information either from McKenzie and Mann or from the Canadian Pacific Railway. Mr. Griffin stated in his evidence that he knew perfectly well where these lands were; that he knew perfectly well where the Canadian Northern Railway was being built, and when newspapers in yellow journalistic style try to make political capital by misleading people to think that Messrs. Pope and Fowler went to the Canadian Pacific Railway with information that nobody else knew of, they are stating an absolute falsehood. If the 'Herald' had read the evidence of Mr. Griffin, it would have known that the statement it published was false. Mr. Mann himself in a published interview, stated the facts about that, and if Mr Shepley had been so very desirous of finding out whether any secret information had been given, he could have put Mr. Mann on the stand. What did Mr. Mann say in an interview in Montreal:

The information to Mr. Fowler, M.P., was neither secret or confidential, it was given to him just in the same way as it was given to others, with the view of settling the lands along our line of railway. The same information was given to every one who asked for it. A great many people inquired about the location of the Canadian Northern, and in every case it was given to them.

This information was given so that the lands along the line of the Canadian Northern, which were owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, would be sold and settled up, as this was absolutely in the interest of the Canadian Northern Railway. But, as I have said, the 'Herald' has been calling for an investigation. Well, we are perfectly willing to have any investigation which this House is ready to give. Both sides of this House have taken the position that unless there is some public scandal concerning the public business of this House, we have no right to investigate the private transactions of members of this House; but if there is anything that I have done that would contravene in any way my position as a member of this House, let anybody get up and make the charge. Let the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), who wants the situation investigated, get up and make a charge, if he sees anything wrong in my dealing in western lands or in having bought lands from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Let the Minister of Agriculture, whose paper calls for an investigation, get up and make a charge ; or let the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. W. F. Maclean), whose paper has also been somewhat noisy in the matter, get up and make a charge. We invite any hon. member to get up and make a charge, and he shall have all the investigation he requires, either before the Privileges and Elections Committee or before any other committee of this House. As I understand, the only possible thing that can be said against Mr. Bennett or myself or anybody else in this syndicate is that we bought land from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and afterwards, as the Montreal 'Herald' puts it, voted against the Grand Trunk Pacific. That was a heinous crime, voting against the Grand Trunk Pacific ; but if there was anything which I carefully went into, and in regard to which I considered myself as casting an intelligent vote, it was my vote against the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme as passed by the government of this country, as I think a very few years more will prove to the people of this country. Now, the only question that can arise is, whether there was any unfair advantage given to Messrs. Pope and Fowler and those who were associated with them in buying lands from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company? Is there anybody here who is prepared to say that there was, in view of the evidence of Mr. Griffin, in view of the statement of Mr. Mann, or in view of the price that was paid for those lands ? If you are not prepared to make that charge and take that stand, then you are simply throwing mud. You have to take the one situation or the other ; you have either to get up and take that stand, or the imputation that you are a mud-throwing lot of representatives will have to be applied to you ; or else acknowledge the corn, and take it back. Speaking of the price of the lands, we paid $3.50 an acre for 200,000 acres. I have it on good authority that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company about the same time offered land much under that price to a syndicate who were considering taking up a million acres. We have only to take the case of the Saskatchewan Valley Land deal or steal, as I would call it, that was put through just about the same time by this government, in which they gave away some 250,000 acres of the public lands of this country for $1 an acre to a company which afterwards sold them at a profit of from $10 to $15 an acre. And yet hon. members of this House and the press of this country will get up and howl because we bought lands from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and sold them at an advance of $1 an acre, or rather 75 cents an acre and took stock for 25 per cent. I was unfavourable to selling those lands at the time. I wanted my friends who were associated with me to hold on to them. If we had held on to them, we certainly would have made some money. Then there also is the Robbins Irrigation Company to which a short time ago 10,000 acres of the public lands of this country that were worth probably from $15 to $25 an acre, were handed over for $1 an acre. Do you find the virtuous Liberal press of this country arraigning their own party for such transactions ? No ; they are silent as to these things, when the public domain of this country is handed over to private individuals ; but because I and other members of parliament buy lands from a corporation that is liable at some time to come back to this House and ask one thing or another, we are to be branded as a lot of grafters and thieves who have no right to a place in this parliament. If you are going to carry out such arguments as that logically, the members of this House would not be able to do business at all, because nearly every business venture we go into is in connection with some corporation that has a charter from this parliament and that is liable at some time to come back again. Every time we go to a banking institution and ask for accommodation, we are asking from a corporation that has a charter from this parliament what you may be pleased to call a favour, but which is probably something in the line of legitimate business. Not only to banking institutions, but to trust companies and all other companies incorporated by this parliament, you have to apply the reasoning of certain members on the other side of the House and of the public press. So that a man would be debarred from doing business altogether, or else you would have to brand all the members of this House who do business with any of these corporation as a lot of sharks.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with regard to this investigation. The Montreal 'Herald' says we should have an investigation. Well, the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) brought this question up in the House some time ago, and I, in conjunction with other members whose names were mentioned, said that we were perfectly willing to have an investigation. Shortly afterwards the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) moved a resolution and did us the honour of calling our names to the attention of the House. In this resolution he asked for an investigation, but the right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said that there was nothing mentioned against myself or the hon. member for King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler) or the hon.

member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) which required to be investigated. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) must see something that calls for inquiry or he would not have made the motion he did, or perhaps, like the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), he was simply sympathetic and was giving us a chance to clear our reputations from Grit newspaper imputation. That resolution was voted down although the hon. leader of the opposition stated that every facility should be given for inquiry as to members on this side of the House, and I stand here to-night perfectly willing as before to have an investigation. I have held out and am holding out no threats to hon. gentlemen opposite which need prevent them from voting for a most thorough inquiry. I have no charge to make against any one of them, so that they need have no fear on that score. I have nothing to say against the private business and reputation of others in this House and do not want others to bring up my private affairs before this House. But if anybody wants to make a charge that I have done anything wrong in my private business that would reflect on me as member of this House, I have a perfect right in this parliament to ask him to say what it is and he may have all the investigation he desires. But if none of them will do that, let us stop this mud throwing. I wish to state further that, so far as I am concerned, I see nothing wrong in my investing my money in any legitimate transaction, in my buying from any corporation whether that corporation has its charter from this House or any other legislature. Provided I put my money up and go into business in an honest and legitimate way, I am not amenable to this House or anybody else. If there is anything wrong in any of my private transactions I am amenable, as is every other man, to the courts. That is the place in which to thrash out the private transactions of members of this House or anybody else and not here, and the private transactions of myself or other members should not be dragged before the public. But as regards either my private or public transactions, there is not an hon. gentleman, either in or out of this House, who can place his finger upon any dishonourable act of mine. On that point my conscience is perfectly clear. What then are we going to do about this investigation? Some of those gentlemen opposite who are so anxious for investigation must make a charge. Surely they do not expect me to make a charge against myself. If there is no one here prepared to take the onus of making a charge against me, then the only other place in which I can possibly be called upon to account for my conduct is my constituency. And I am perfectly willing to go before my constituents and explain to them the case of the Northwest land transaction and take the consequences. The people whom I represent know me from my youth up, they know my business reputation, and I do not think that there is the slightest possibility that they would give a verdict against me in connection with any of the insinuations which have come from hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not know that I need say anything further. I have done everything possible to make it clear that I am prepared to meet any charge or any investigation. And if the English language contains any stronger words than I have used to invite hon. members opposite or anybody to come forward and point to any wrong that I have done, I would ask this House to consider that language as having been used by me. But there is one thing I would say to hon. members and to the press of this country and that is: If you have not got anything to say against me, then retract what you have said and do me the justice that I have acted in the only way possible.

Mr. FOSTER. At this late hour and before the item is put to the committee, I have a few words to say in reply to some statements that were made by the hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) last night. As I said to the committee yesterday, it was impossible for me to traverse the whole question then and it is equally impossible for me to traverse the whole of it to-night. The fact of the matter is that this debate has just fairly well begun. This is only a prelude, so far as I am concerned. I do not propose that it shall stop here. So long as any man in this House has anything to say with reference to that Insurance Commission which is directed in any way to myself, I shall meet him and take up the discussion and carry it on just as far as it is taken by any one else. I have nothing to fear from discussion. The more this mattetr is discussed, the better I shall like it. I have already asked hon. gentlemen, who have been very free before this time in insinuation, in charge, and in statement of what took place and of what they would do—I have invited them all to be ready at this time and before this tribunal to make good their statements. And what is the spectacle which we have seen? Not a single man of them who has had anything to say with reference to this commission and its treatment of myself and the companies to which I have belonged or has stood sponsor for the commission or has done anything towards substantiating their insinuations and charges, with the single exception of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth). Well, the Minister of Justice had some remarks to say with reference to myself last night, and very briefly I wish to traverse some of them that seem to be the more important. He seemed to take it amiss that I had been courteous to the prosecutor and the commissioners and that after a long period, partly of waiting and partly of evidence taking, when I bade them good-by, I expressed my thanks to the chairman of the commission and the prosecutor himself for the courtesy which they had shown me.

A man can be very unjust, a man can go to the verge of injustice, a man can use power arbitrarily to invade your rights, and yet may do it with courtesy—even with kindness. I suppose I gave way to the promptings of a gentle nature, and a tender heart, when at the last, in bidding the commissioners good-by, I thanked them for the courtesy they had shown me. Perhaps, in my association with my friends from the province of Quebec—who are always courteous—I have assimilated some of their kindness of manner. At any rate, I expressed myself as I thought becoming a gentleman. But the Minister of Justice does not seem to look at it in that way. But even though it is not pleasing to him, it is certainly not an answer to me. He also thought a witness who was taken before that commission had no right to ask anything except the opportunity to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. That sounds well, but it rests on no basis. When you are before a commission which does not allow you the benefit of counsel—which this commission did not—when the prosecutor before that commission has undeclared charges against you which he is pressing to a conviction with all the ingenuity and skill gained in a long lifetime in the practice of the arts of the advocate and prosecutor, what the witness is called upon to do is not to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, but he is called upon to answer the questions that the prosecuting attorney puts to him, and to answer them as they are put and not otherwise. Any one who cares to read the evidence will find that over and over again. I told Mr. Shepley concerning questions asked of me by him: I cannot answer that question by a categorical 'yes' or by a categorical 'no'; if you will let me answer the question in my own way I will give you the truth. 'I want you to answer the question that I have put to you,' that is what the prosecuting attorney or lawyer always makes his witness do. The examples which were quoted this morning from the evidence by my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), who is himself a lawyer, and well understands the art and methods of a strong and brilliant lawyer, brought out before this committee the ingenuity—looking towards a certain end, demanding to get a certain result—expressed in the peculiar turn of the questions put, admitting of answer only in the way desired. If I cared to take up the time of the committee I could show question after question where there was no opportunity for a man to tell the whole truth when he was confined to the answering of the question. So, while, as a glittering generality, this statement of the Minister of Justice may pass muster, yet, when you come to look into it, you find that this idea that a witness is only expected to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth has no application to the facts in this case; for I was required to answer the questions that were put by the prosecutor and had no chance to have questions put to me by my own counsel by way of cross-examination, or to do the same in the case of other witnesses.

Now, the Minister of Justice seems to think that I had no grievance in the fact that I was not called sooner. He said that the head of the order, Dr. Oronhyatekha was the proper man to be first called. No one will dissent from that. Certainly, I never expressed dissatisfaction on that score. But when Dr. Oronhyatekha was asked with reference to the Great West Lands business and the Kamloops business, he stated that he knew comparatively little about these things, and also that Mr. Foster would know all about them and could give evidence. Now, on that opening, what was the excuse for not calling me, but, instead of that, keeping me there on undeclared charges which were being pressed by evidence of other witnesses, that evidence being built up into theories, expressions, insinuations and apparent facts? Mr. Stevenson was called next, and his examination almost immediately went into Great West Land dealings. And Mr. Stevenson, although a member of the Board of Directors, had nothing at all to do with the Great West Land transaction in its inception, for the reason—given by himself—that until 1905 he took very little interest in the management of the Union Trust Company, and as to Foresters affairs and interests, these were left to Doctor Oronhyatekha and Mr. McGillivray. So, the only knowledge that Mr. Stevenson had of that transaction was a knowledge that he got at second hand and from documents. Yet he was examined minutely on that whole business by a skilful examiner. It was an easy matter for that skilful examiner to create impressions by the examination of a man who had not first hand knowledge, making a case which prejudiced me—and was used through the party press to prejudice me—in the eyes of the public. And all the time, I was there and ready to be examined; and I knew the facts of the case and was ready to give them. My hon. friend from Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) was also examined with reference to the Northwest Land business before I was brought on. Whilst my hon. friend from Prince knows a great deal about that matter so far as his first venture in lands there was concerned, it is not reasonable to believe, and it is not contended, that, with reference to the dealings of the company, he had, or could have, the knowledge that I had. And yet, by the greatest ingenuity these were called and their evidence was brought out in the way the prosecuting attorney wished to bring it out to make a certain impression. And I was kept waiting. Why? Because, under instructions, I was to be kept there until the whole train was properly laid and the bombs were ready to be exploded—and then, and not till then, was I to be called in evidence before that commission. I protested against that, and I carried my protest to the chairman of the commission in words as strong as I could make them, and with due respect, and I think probably as as a result of that protest I was called probably a little before I would otherwise have been. Naturally I felt that if this was an inquiry and not a prosecution, if what they wanted was knowledge of facts and not a conviction, there was no reason in the world, when they subpœnaed me last August and I appeared in direct obedience to that, ready with my facts, that I should not have been called and given an opportunity to state my facts and to state in evidence what I knew in reference to it. It may be I was wrong in that, I think I was right; I felt so, I stated so, and I state so yet.

But the Minister of Justice last night tried to create the impression that I was unalterably opposed, that I was strenuously opposed, with my counsel who advised with me, to the getting of information with reference, we will say, to the Great West Land Company, and that the commission and Mr. Shepley, poor man, had to fight and struggle as if in a battle with Titans in order to drag the information that they wanted to get away from myself. No greater travesty of the actual facts could have been exhibited to a listening audience. They are so far away from the facts that I wondered whether it was because the Minister of Justice had them in a brief prepared for him, and, with his small knowledge of the events, which he pleaded guilty to last night, in comparison of my knowledge of events as being an actor in them day after day and year after year, had led him into that error, a very natural one if he had not read the evidence himself, or whether he was trying to produce an impression upon this House which he knew not to be a proper impression.

Without reading the evidence as given by myself contained in this book, let me shortly say what my position was, a position in which I was supported by the chairman of the commission, to a large extent, himself. I was the secretary of the Great West Land Company, the custodian of its books and of its papers, and I did not propose, and so told the commission, to hand over to them for their investigation books and papers belonging to a company having no connection at all with the Foresters, or the insurance of the Foresters, of a company which simply had a loan from the Union Trust Company, which loan was secured by a mortgage, which mortgage was guaranteed by the Trust Company and endorsed to the Foresters as a security. I said that I thought if every facility was given before that commission by everything that I knew and every paper I could produce to enable that commission to go on up to the body of the security which was held for the mortgage to the lands themselves, what was paid for them, their valuation, everything in connection with the security, which was everything that could be asked for in order to validate or otherwise the security, that that was all it was proper for me to give, and I did profess my willingness, and I carried it out, by giving the documents themselves. The only thing I stopped at was the stock book of the Great West Land Company, which could have no bearing at all with reference to the security held by the Union Trust Company and endorsed to the Foresters, which was the property of the company, and I did not consider that it belonged to the investigation or that it should be called for. Now those are the facts of the case. I said there to the commission, to Mr. Shepley; all the information that I have at my command that you want with reference to validating that security and tracing it to its ultimate source, shall be at your disposal and will be freely put at your disposal. Now, Sir, I do not know but what I should read exactly what I did state; but I have given a fair paraphrase of it, and in reference to the time of the night and the patience of this committee, I make the statement rather than read the evidence, which can be found in the pages of the report.

Now, when it came ultimately to the ruling by the commission that the stock book also should be given up, I had the ruling of the chairman of the commission. It was arbitrary, it was an unjust ruling, it stepped beyond the powers of the commission, without the shadow of a doubt; but it was the ruling of a constituted commission, that book had to be given up or the consequences had to come. What were the consequences? The consequences simply were that if that was not given up, the person who refused to give it up would be committed, I suppose, for contempt of court; he would go to prison, he would be taken out by some process of habeas corpus and the case would be carried to a higher court, and the powers of that commission would be determined by the higher court. That is exactly the position that, on principle, I should have taken, holding the views I did. But I did not consider that it was worth making a martyr of myself to that extent, and I bowed to the ruling of the chair, that is of the commission, arbitrary and unjust though I considered it to be, and stated that at the proper time I would appeal on that matter to a higher tribunal, that tribunal being this House of Commons. Now, Mr. Chairman, do you perceive that I was the cause of a great struggle on the part of the commission to get at the information ? My counsel, Mr. Nesbitt, put it in exactly the same way. He went even further, and he said: I am even willing to admit for my client that the English practice shall be carried out, and that with reference even to private matters such as the stock book, for instance, if the commissioners themselves want to see them, I am willing to go so far as to hand them over to the commissioners. The commission can satisfy themselves on any point, have the knowledge which they desire for the purpose of their investigation, and to show the people the benefit of the commission and its work and its results. But on the other hand, they are not to parade that to the public, or to make these private matters known to the great outside. That is the English practice, I am informed.

And that is a practice that has many good points about it. Many a man who has nothing to conceal at the same time has the right of a man to have his private matters kept private instead of being paraded to the public, and it should be possible for such a man to say; look into the whole matter, see if whatever you as a constituted commission want is there but do not parade it before the commissioner before the public. It is not necessary that the whole country, however, curious it may be, should know the private business of every man. I appeal to the members of this House ; how many of the members of this House would care to disclose their private affairs to the whole country ? Take the Minister of Justice himself ; he has lived for fifty or sixty years, he has had many dealings, and he may stand up and say : I have had nothing happen that I am ashamed of in my whole career. Then, if you have not will you just put all your private business for the last fifty years, carried out in your firm, carried out with your clients, carried out in election matters, carried out in business matters, before the public and let them run riot with it ? Would the Minister of Justice think that he should at once agree to do that? Would he care to do that, would any man at these boards care to have that done ? There must be a point beyond which no court, no commission, arbitrary though it may be in its powers, must go, a point at which it must stop, and my view of it was that it must stop when it got beyond what was absolutely necessary to validate or otherwise the security for the trust company or the security for the Foresters whichever it was. What was beyond that, I contended, was private and should be kept private. If the commission for their own knowledge wished to look into that to see whether it had relevance or not, there it was but it was not to be paraded to the public. Does this committee think this position was a fair one or a business position ? I have no doubt of it and I have no doubt that if I appealed to man after man I would get in every instance an affirmative answer in reference to the matter. The plea was made by the Minister of Justice that a great deal of space was given to the Foresters' work and the Foresters' company because it was the greatest of the fraternal companies. Let us examine the plea. Other companies have few policies, but the Foresters now have two hundred thousand and odd policies ; therefore the investigation must necessarily be longer and take up more time because there are so many policies. But, in reference to the Foresters, as in reference to any other system of insurance, there is only one basis of insurance to be looked at, there is only one law of insurance to be looked at, there is only one set of expenses to be looked at, there is only one class of investments to be looked at and unless the Minister of Justice can show that that commission took that immense amount of time over the Foresters in examining these two hundred thousand life policies which he paraded before this committee he has gained nothing by saying that there were more policies and that therefore it took more time. Did they examine one single policy of the 200,000 of the Forester's insurance system ? I look through the pages of the report and I look in vain for one single tittle of evidence to show that they examined one single policy of the 200,000. But, Sir, my contention is that where this commission made its blunder was that it devoted not too much time to the Foresters' system of insurance and the laws of insurance and the expenses and investments but that it made it its business not to devote its attention to companies so far removed in parentage or alliance from the Foresters' insurance system that there could be no relation between them except of borrower and lender or except that of an intermediate society. Because that was done, Sir, in the case not only of that but of other companies subsidiary in the same way there was very much time taken where it did not count, that is where these days were eaten up, the hours grew, hour upon hour, the expenses went on day after day in tracing up what had no earthly relation or anything whatever to do with the work of the commission which was to investigate life insurance systems, life insurance laws, expenses of management, the investment of their funds and other allied questions. As was shown by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) last night in all that examination that Mr. Shepley took my hon. friend from Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) through, and my hon. friend from King's-Albert (Mr. Fowler) through up into the Northwest Territories on a political tour, looking about the country and making investments in the country with a hundred, yes, a thousand impertinent and unnecessary and unrelated questions, that was where the time of the commission was wasted, and it is in doing that that the 638 pages of evidence are shown in reference to the Foresters, twice as much space nearly as was given to the Canada Life, the greatest insurance company of Canada, the Manufacturers Life, a most important one, and the Imperial Life also an important insurance company. So, it does not seem to me that the Minister of Justice made anything particular out of his plea that more time was given to the Foresters necessarily because they had 200,000 policies where other insurance companies had a much less number of policies.

Now, Sir, as to responsibilty I made that, I think, very clear last night to the Minister of Justice. One thing that excited my wonder in the commission was as to what earthly reason Mr. Shepley had in reading some very good letters that I addressed to Dr. Oronhyatekha as to the work and formation of the Union Trust Company. Those letters were read and put into evidence with great gusto ; they were read and put before this committee last night with equal gusto. For what conceivable purpose? Was it a good or a bad suggestion that if you are going to organize a trust company you should have a good strong capitalization. That is what I advised. Is it a good or a bad piece of advice to say that if you are going to have a trust company you should get the very best possible set of directors to govern and manage that trust company? That is what I advised should be done. These letters were spread broadcast, as though forsooth, there was some malevolent and deep laid design on my part in writing these letters to the gentlemen who had already brought the trust company to its birth and asked me to help clothe it and put it into working form. Ah, but, said Mr. Shepley, in his insinuating way in a question put to Mr. Stevenson : There seemed to be an idea in Mr. Foster's mind that you should deceive the people, because in his letter he suggested that the directorate should be strongly representative of the public outside of the Foresters, and that although the Foresters absolutely controlled the company it should not appear to the public a solely Foresters' concern. I do not see that there was anything wrong in that, when you take the basis of the negotiation which neither the Minister of Justice, nor Mr. Shepley, was very careful to lay before either the commission or the public. The letters show it, the evidence of Mr. Stevenson shows it, the evidence of Dr. Oronhyatekha shows it. What was the first idea? Not that the Union Trust Company should be almost entirely, if not entirely, owned by the Foresters and manned by capital contributed by the Foresters ; the first idea was that that company should be a company in which the Foresters held control by holding at least 51 per cent of the stock, and that the general public should go into that trust company by contribution to the capital stock and become partners with the Foresters in the working of a trust company, appealing to the general public, as well as having the Foresters behind it. On that score I advised that the directorate while being sufficient to guard the Foresters' interests (a majority if you please) should have upon it the name of those that could be got to present to the public that it was not simply a Foresters' trust company, but that it was a general trust company, naturally the Foresters by their contribution of capital having the majority and consequently the control. That idea was started out upon. Mr. Mathew Wilson subscribed for $50,000 worth of stock and paid for it and had it in his possession, and other gentlemen were making their subscriptions when Mr. Stevenson and Dr. Oronhyatekha, thinking, as they said in their evidence that if it was to be a paying concern, why should the Foresters not hold all of it or as nearly as possible all of it, instead of allowing the general public to come in. That idea prevailed against my advice and Mr. Wilson was negotiated with at once and his stock was rebought from him by the Foresters, with a proper addition of profits so far as they had gone, given to him whilst he was the holder of that stock. For that reason and on that ground, I advised that it should not be made an entirely Foresteristic board of directors but that it should present to the public the names of trusted and good men outside of the Foresters' organization in order to give it that general character. There was no guile and there was no deceit about it, and it has passed my wonder, how, Mr. Shepley, or the commission, or the Minister of Justice having the whole knowledge of the facts as they must have had, could see the slightest thing in that to make it necessary that it should be exploited and commented on.

Now then, let me state again what I said last night and which is indubitably true, and I don't think any man can doubt it, that the responsibility for the formation of a trust company into which the Foresters should put their money as capital subscription to the stock of that company, was not my design, was not my idea ; but was the idea of the Foresters themselves. It was brought into absolute action and form before I was approached in any way, shape or form to take hold of the position as manager. What I did do is what I said yesterday I did ; that is, I gave good advice and whatever suggestion I could and worked with them in putting it into proper organized shape. For instance, the idea at first was to carry on the old Provincial Trust Company. I objected to that because, I said, you had better take a new name and not have to shoulder any of the errors or reputation of the preceding company which had failed. That prevailed, and so the company which when I went with it was formed—not absolutely by charter, that was got a few days possibly after I came to Toronto—but was formed in idea and formed in absolute practice, because the provincial Trust Company's assets had been taken, and was in operation as a trust company. I say, that measures my responsibility and that alone. A newspaper to-day holds me still responsible for having improperly invested Foresters' trust funds under the guise of capital of that company, a trust company when I invested them in the absolutely required and allowed securities of a trust company. Now, I don't think that is fair. I did not go there to run the Foresters or their trust funds or to manage them in any way. I went there to manage a trust company, under trust conditions, under trust law, and under trust directorate; and I did it; and I made the challenge yesterday—it has not been accepted; I make it again to-day—for any one to show a single instance of investment of the capital funds of that trust company which was outside the limits of the law and of the charter that the trust company has.

Now, in all fairness, put the responsibility where it lies. My duty my undertaking, was to work a trust company. I did it with the capital provided. The responsibility of providing the capital was not mine. The responsibility of the investment which provided the capital was not mine. With reference to the surplus outside of what the Foresters put into the capital, there is a difference of opinion evidently between the Minister of Justice and myself. I am right; he is wrong. I think I showed him that by reading the agreement. He ran away with the idea that all the surplus funds from month to month accruing in the Foresters' organization were absolutely to be invested by the Union Trust Company. Nothing at all of that kind. When the contract was being made I was there. I have the advantage, as the minister admitted of greater knowledge of the facts, because of my being one in connection with the transaction. I, as manager of the Union Trust Company, would have liked to have got, and pressed to get, an absolute contract by which all the surplus should be invested through the Union Trust Company. The authorities of the Foresters flatly rejected that proposition, and said: We will make a contract with you to invest such of the surplus funds as are not otherwise invested, but we will not cut ourselves off from the right of investing these funds ourselves in any securities that we are pleased to think are proper and good securities; and we never did get all the surplus of the Foresters to invest. The $133,000 that was loaned to the land syndicate known as the Montague syndicate, was surplus of the Foresters which was not entrusted to the Union Trust Company, not a dollar of it. That was reserved by the Foresters themselves, and invested by themselves in the way that I stated, and stated with particularity and I think with plainness, yesterday. Now, I think the minister will not contravene that statement of the case, but here is the clause of the contract:

> That the Supreme Court doth by these presents agree with the Trust Company: and does hereby appoint and constitute it its agent for the investment from time to time of so much of the surplus cash funds of the Supreme Court as shall remain uninvested.

Now, if technically you might say, that means all of them, practically I know that it did not mean all of them and was not intended to mean all of them. As a proof there is the $133,000 which was invested by the Foresters without any intervention, any authority, any power, any action of the Union Trust Company at all, and done, as I said last night, in 1902. Of the very same character were the funds that went to buy the additional lands of the Montague syndicate, which were provided in exactly the same way, out of the surplus of the Foresters, by the Foresters themselves, and without the intervention in any way, shape or form of the trust company.

Mr. LENNOX. And in connection with which the commission arose.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, and that was the case in connection with which the so-called commission arose. My hon. friend says it does not matter whether they were the trust funds of the Union Trust Company or whether they were the Foresters' funds. It does matter materially. With great gusto the Minister of Justice read a resolution passed by the directors laying down the principle that no officer of the company, that is, the Union Trust Company, should take any commission on any business that he was transacting as an officer of that company and for the company. I was asked in the commission if I assented to that. I answered, I think, that I not only assented to it, but that I was at the board that passed it. I more than assented to it; I gave it my most hearty support. I believed it to be right. It matters, then, that you should draw a distinction between what was Union Trust Company business and what was absolutely outside of the Union Trust Company, when you hurl against me the charge of contravening that resolution of the directors, and as an officer of the Union Trust Company taking a commission on business which I did for the Union Trust Company. No such thing ever took place in the history of the Trust Company. I explained last night exactly what that was. The Trust Company appears in it, in what way? As simply a holder of titles, nothing more, nothing less. Is it necessary to demonstrate that by reading the document?

I think I had better, possibly. Now, bear in mind that in March, 1902, as I stated yesterday, the Foresters lent to a syndicate of four, of whom I was one, not by virtue of being managing director of the Union Trust Company or anything of the kind, the sum of $133,000 to purchase lands for that syndicate, to be managed by that syndicate, and the profits thereon, after the mortgage to the Foresters which secured the loan was paid, were to be divided equally amongst the members of that syndicate. That is what was done. Somebody had to hold the titles to those lands. Dr. Montague held the titles. In holding those titles, his duty was simply to hold the titles to the lands, and as it was sold to make the transfers to the people who bought. That was his duty as holder, nothing more. That duty afterwards, as I explained yesterday, was transferred to the Union Trust Company. It might have been transferred to John Jones or James Brown, and the transaction would have been exactly the same. The Trust Company was to hold the certificates of title and was paid its fee for doing that; and outside of holding the titles, it had no duty in any way, shape or form. Here is the document which transferred from Dr. Montague—who held, as I have already explained—to the Trust Company, as holding trustee, and the main clause is this:

> The said trustees are to hold said lands and conveyances thereof subject to the joint order of the grantor and the said society.

The grantor being Dr. Montague and the said society being the Independent Order of Foresters.

> So long as the mortgage indebtedness of said society is not in arrears and in case it should fall in arrears thereupon and thereafter the said trustees shall hold the same——

The certificates, titles and securities.

> To the order of the said society, its successors and assigns.

Instead of the grantor and the said society.

> The said trustees are simply to be the trustees for the purpose of holding the said lands and securities therefor until such time as the said mortgage indebtedness is fully paid off and satisfied, after satisfying themselves of the fact from the said society, their successors or assigns, they the said trustees are to convey the lands and deliver the securities therefor then held by them to the appointee or appointees of the said grantor——

The said grantor being Dr. Montague.

> —his executors or administrators under the written instructions of said grantor, his executors or administrators bearing even date herewith.

The Union Trust Company were not the depositories of the money for the payment of those lands. They had no power and exercised no right to purchase or pay for the lands. They had no authority given them in that trust to keep the books of the company or receive the moneys that came from the sale of the lands or pay them out to the mortgagees who held the securities. They were to do none of these things. The only thing they were to do was to hold the certificates as holders in trust at the indication and order of the grantor and the society which alone were interested.

Now, I come to a technical point. When the syndicate bought these lands from Mr. Whitla, we will say, doing it then through myself as a member of the syndicate—the syndicate coming to their conclusion, agreeing together upon the price, upon the conditions of payment and every thing else for the land we bought then—the lands were to be given into the hands of this holder so that the title might be for these lands just where it was for the lands which had been bought by Dr. Montague before. This could have been done by two processes. Either that the lands should be sold to and the title given to myself or Dr. Montague or any one else representing the syndicate and then that whoever made that purchase should transfer it to the Union Trust Company to hold just the same as it held the other. That is all the Union Trust Company had to do; and to avoid two transactions, I directed the contract of sale and purchase to be made by Mr. Whitla with the Union Trust Company in trust instead of taking two steps and going through two operations. That is all there is in that matter. I thought I made it plain yesterday and hope I have made it a little plainer by my statement just now.

Now I come to a more important matter, which I did not think very important but which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) seemed to think was very important. Am I trespassing on the patience of this committee if I take up a little more time in putting that matter and just what it involved before this tribunal to which I am asked to appeal. A meeting of the Union Trust Company was held on the 7th of November. What was the purpose of that meeting? The Union Trust Company, by the first agreement with the Great West Land Company, became banker for that company and agreed to advance to it all the moneys necessary for the purchase of those lands. It was to take a mortgage upon all the assets. It had also the option to convert its advances into stock in whole or in part whenever it chose so to do. About a year afterwards the Union Trust Company came to the conclusion to convert its advances into stock and did so, but still kept its mortgage lien upon every dollar of the assets of that company. That went on until 1905 when Mr. Stevenson, on behalf of the Foresters—for reasons which are well known to myself and probably well known to the commission but which make no difference at all as affecting what was actually taking place—came to the conclusion that he wanted to get rid of stock participation in the Great West Land Company entirely and to hold the security as a mortgagee without other interest. Now mind you, whatever insinuation of statement may be made, there is absolutely no doubt that the election to take stock proceeded from the choice of the Union Trust Company directors outside of those who were interested in the Great West Land Company.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The election to take stock or the mortgage?

Mr. FOSTER. To take stock. In the first instance naturally that would be so, for we who held that stock felt that the lands would bring a good profit and we would gain more by carrying it with a mortgage upon the land than by the Union Trust Company participating in the stock. Therefore, it was not to our interest that they should take stock. But when Mr. Stevenson and the Foresters expressed their desire to take stock, when they made that proposition it was heartily acceded to by those interested in the Great West Land Company. There is no doubt about that. Now, when in 1905 Mr. Stevenson became of the opinion that he would rather revert to the old arrangement and get rid of the stock co-operation altogether and put it in the shape of an absolute mortgage, he had to reckon with a contract made in good faith, signed, sealed and delivered, and which was solemnly binding, namely, that they should take stock and keep their stock which they had elected to take for the advances. It was to our interest, I think, if we believed the venture would be successful, to revert to the mortgage rather than that the Union Trust Company should participate in the stock. If we felt that there was any danger of a loss, it would be to our advantage that they should keep the stock, and thereby share the loss if there was to be a loss. But, absolutely, again by Mr. Stevenson's testimony, frankly and fairly given, he said that we did not interpose any obstacle to their taking that mortgage; that thing we thought it would be more advantageous to the company if it were not taken, yet as they pressed it, it was willingly acceded to.

Now, Sir. that operation of getting the mortgage on the whole of the property involved two things. One thing has not been mentioned yet, before this committee. When the Great West Land Company went to the Union Trust Company for a loan they had no thought of getting more than a three years loan. These lands were to be paid for over a period of years, a certain instalment each year; and the Great West Land Company believed that, with their receipts from the sale of stock and the sale of lands, a three years' advance was all that would be necessary for them to obtain. As a matter of fact, it worked out exactly that way; three years after the transaction began, the land company, with the money advanced up to that time—somewhere about $300,000 or $400,000—would have cleared itself. But, when Mr. Stevenson wanted a mortgage on the whole of the property, a mortgage that he could register and that would carry title, then the Union Trust Company, to enable them to carry out that idea, had to advance the money to pay for all the lands so as to get the title. That is why the total amount advanced was, in the end, $958,000 instead of $300,000 or $400,000 which was all that would have been needed had it not been that Mr. Stevenson was anxious to have the mortgage title only and registerable. Now that, I think, is clear to the committee.

That mortgage was to be executed, and the documents made right, and everything cleaned up, before the end of the year, for then the financial year of the trust company ends, and, if he wanted the security in shape at all, he wanted it so that it might appear in that years' accounts as a finished transaction. Now, there are three things under consideration there—there is stock of two kinds, the bonus stock and the advance stock, and the other consideration, the mortgage. These three things were to be considered. A meeting was held on the 7th day of November, 1905, at which certain of the directors were present. That meeting was regularly called and regularly recorded in the signature book, and, of course, in the minute book. There is no doubt about the meeting of the 7th of November. Nor is there any doubt of the purpose for which it was called. It was called to arrange that transaction so as to provide for the giving up of the stock and the reversion to the mortgage. At that meeting the directors had their consultation. Other matters of business were up and this came up at the latter part of the meeting and was discussed. There was no difference of opinion about that. Some have a more vivid and some a less vivid recollection of this being discussed. Some have no recollection of its being discussed. But the principal actors in the transaction, including Mr. Stevenson, know that it was discussed. It was so recorded in the minutes. And that meeting was adjourned to a specific day and hour—the 13th day of November, at 2 p.m.

Mr. W. ROCHE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. W. ROCHE. Were the mortgage and stock running at the same time?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. W. ROCHE. From the beginning ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. W. ROCHE. Was land sold to buyers while the mortgage was subsisting over the whole of the land ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. W. ROCHE. Was that right ?

Mr. FOSTER. Was what right ?

Mr. W. ROCHE. That the mortgage should be over the whole property when part was sold to buyers ?

Mr. FOSTER. Almost every company and every person who buys Northwest lands buys them on a scale of the yearly payments. The title is not surrendered by the original seller until he gets his last dollar of payment. But that does not prevent the sale of every acre of land to buyers in the meantime, and by a perfect legal process by which the rights of all are conserved.

Mr. W. ROCHE. Suppose I bought land outright and paid the money for it, was it honest that a mortgage should be over the whole of the property when a part of it had been bought and paid for ?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly—perfectly honest—my hon. friend (Mr. W. Roche) shakes his head—perfectly honest, provided the buyer knew the conditions. And the buyer did know the conditions. Whether any transaction of that kind took place I cannot say. But, if a man was prepared to buy and pay all his money, his money would be taken. And we had the right—and now I hope I shall satisfy my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. W. Roche)—to pay cash for that quarter-section and get release from mortgage. Suppose, for instance, a certain quarter-section was sold outright and paid for— we had the right to go to the Canadian Pacific Railway and extinguish the indebtedness on that quarter-section, get a complete title for it and hand it over to the person to whom we sold it. That, we could guarantee, and that we could do in any such case. I do not think that my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. W. Roche) will say that that was not a perfectly fair transaction.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) allow me a question ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes—any question I shall be glad to answer.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I understood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), in answering my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. W. Roche), to say that there was a mortgage from the time of inception.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Of course, the hon. gentleman knows the facts. But I was under the impression from my examination of the evidence. that there never was a mortgage substituted for the shares of stock until after the year 1904 ; that it was only during the year 1904 that the Trust Company, or its directors, decided to alter their position and substitute mortgage security for the holding of shares of the company.

Mr. FOSTER. The mortgage security was given by the very first instrument.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I thought—

Mr. FOSTER. I will explain the whole thing. As I stated yesterday, the mortgage security was given by the very first instrument in June, 1903. When the company elected to take the stock the mortgage lien was kept for any advances that the banker might make from time to time, or might make over and above what he elected to take stock for. That never ceased.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Was there not a new and independent instrument of mortgage—

Mr. FOSTER. There was, in 1904, and it continued exactly the lien which was in the first mortgage in so far as any advances were made by the banker over and above what they had elected to take the stock for. I have the instruments here, I will send them over to my hon. friend if he likes. Yesterday I expressly gave readings from the instruments themselves.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The question is between what lawyers call a lien and a mortgage as such.

Mr. FOSTER. I explained that as well. I said that I was not a lawyer, but there was a lien, a guarantee, an agreement of mortgage, and that lawyers told me that that was practically equivalent to a mortgage. I simply took that on the legal advice of my friends as constituting a mortgage. I know that no mortgage can be absolutely registered until the property is released absolutely from every claim and from debt. But there was the guarantee, the agreement, and it was perfectly valid, and so considered by our legal advisers. Now these were the subjects that were to be considered on November 7. The meeting was undoubted. That was partially considered, and the minutes stated, 'Left over to the adjourned meeting.' The meeting was then and there adjourned until the 13th day of November at 2 p.m. Now the probabilities would be, would they not, that that meeting so adjourned and authoritatively ordered to the day and hour, would take place, unless there is some evidence to the contrary. Would I be right now in resting my position upon that ? Granted that you have a meeting of directors, that you undertook to consider a question, that they adjourn it until a certain day and date ; unless there is some evidence to the contrary, we must take it prima facie that that meeting did take place. No tittle of evidence to the contrary was shown or could be shown. The meeting did take place, it took place on the testimony of myself, the testimony of Mr. Wilson, and the testimony of Mr. Stevenson himself which testimony was read this morning by my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox). In the report that testimony of Mr. Stevenson is not given, the quotations from his evidence with reference to these meetings otherwise are given. I think it is necessary for me to read that because it is important for this reason : The undeclared charge against me, pressed with assiduous persistence, was that I concocted meetings, forged resolutions, forged documents, and presented them as the real ones. No getting out of that, that is what it means. The document founded on that resolution put into a mortgage carrying certain securities, was absolutely passed, signed, sealed and delivered. It was either a true one or a false one. If these meetings were not held, it was a forged document and a forged resolution, and I was the man who forged it and concocted meetings for the purpose of covering up the forgery. That is why it is important. That is why I should have thought a commission that wanted to be fair would be very careful to take all the evidence into consideration. Now, Sir, what is said on page 2386 ? In order not to make this tedious I will read all of those portions of Mr. Stevenson's testimony relating to the several matters, then we will know exactly what he said. Mr. Shepley is questioning him and he replies :

I discussed the matter with Mr. McGillivary, Mr. Foster and other members of the board, and indicated a desire to assume the position of simply a lender, having security for our money. . . We wanted to assume the position of having security for our money and not having stock for it.

Q. Before you pass from that, was it intended at that time—was it included in what you speak of as stock which you did not want to hold ? Was this bonus stock, the 237 shares, included ?—A. No, I thought we had earned that by the advances we had made, as far as I was concerned, although I attached very little importance to it. I think at that time we became somewhat concerned about the principal rather than about the profits, and I wanted to secure the principal, that was the first consideration.

Then he is pressed still further :

Q. I quite accept what you say, that the movement proceeded from your side of the question rather than from the syndicate side ?—A. Oh yes, the syndicate seemed to feel from the outset that they were exceedingly—doing us an exceeding great favour by allowing us to come in to participate in the profits, and it was decidedly to their advantage that we should occupy the position of mortgagee rather than stockholders, as their prospect of profits was thereby very greatly increased.

Q. That is what I had in my mind when I suggested to you a few minutes ago that the movement was proceeding from the syndicate? —A. No.

Mr. FOSTER.

Q. You tell me that it is not so, and I accept that fully ?—A. No, it was not.

Mr. NESBITT. Q. They did not make a battledore and shuttlecock of their position ?—A. No, if there was any vacillation is was mine.

Q. They did not, when it was doubtful, say, 'take stock', and when it was certain, 'take mortgage' ?—A. Oh no.

Mr. SHEPLEY. I think Mr. Stevenson's observation put it fairly.

WITNESS. I think it is fair to say in that connection that we had practically decided upon a change of policy, and to get out of all sorts of investments of this kind.

Then the matter goes on as to this meeting of November 13. Mr. Shepley reads the minutes, the concocted minutes, if this charge were proven, of the 13th.

It was decided on motion by Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Mr. McGillivary, that the Union Trust Company should assume the position of mortgage with reference to the advances or payments to or for the Great West Land Company (reads down the words 'as set forth in the agreement of June 22, 1903'). That is put as your motion, seconded by Mr McGillivary.

That is the way the minutes have it, that is what Mr. Shepley said to Mr. Stevenson. What does Mr. Stevenson say :

There is no doubt that the first move to take security was my motion, and Col. McGillivray seconded it.

That was at the meeting of the 13th. How could he move to take the security and have Mr. McGillivray second it if there were no meeting on the 13th and if no such transaction took place? The minute of the 13th, the concocted minute under the charges I have mentioned, is that this did take place. Mr. Stevenson, in his testimony, said:

There is no doubt that the first move to take security was my motion, and Col. McGillivray seconded it. In what I said about the other matter, I have no hesitation in saying that while I did not understand the other matter was concluded or considered at all, I had no hesitation in saying the other gentlemen thought it was, or that minute——

The minute of the 13th.

—would not appear in that way. But I did not understand it in that way.

His recollection was clear in reference to the change to the mortgage, that he moved it, that Mr. McGillivray seconded it, that it was done on the 13th of November according to the minutes which were read to him just before by Mr. Shepley. So far as Mr. Stevenson is concerned this is absolute testimony from him that the meeting did take place, and that that particular part of the business was moved by him and seconded by Mr. McGillivray; but at the same time his recollection was that it did not include the bonus stock transfer. For the purpose of proving the meeting that does not count. The fact of the meeting being held on the 13th is proved by the motion and the seconding in accordance with the minutes.

Mr. W. ROCHE (Halifax). May I ask my hon. friend——

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will allow me to make my statement——

Mr. BERGERON. Sit down.

Mr. W. ROCHE. I am not speaking to the hon. member for Beauharnois. I am speaking to a gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not that I do not wish to answer the hon. member but I would ask him to allow me to make my statement through and to defer his question until I finish.

Mr. W. ROCHE. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, Mr. Shepley, puts this next question with reference to the minute of the 13th November.

Q. You were not moving that ?

That is as to the stock. Mr. Stevenson replies :

I did not have that in mind.

Q. Do you say your mind was not directed to it, or that you had in mind the retention of that stock ?—A. Well, I had not in mind the giving of it up, although I did not attach much importance to it. The question that was in my mind was to get security, a first lien on the property for our advances.

The dominant thought in his mind was in reference to the security in the shape of a mortgage the resolution as to which he had moved and had moved at the meeting of the 13th of November, which it has been assumed to be shown was a concocted meeting, that I concocted it and therefore forged the minute. Now, let me go a little further. As a result of that resolution and of the direction of that meeting on the 13th an agreement was drawn up by the solicitor, and that provided for the transfer of the stock and for the giving of a mortgage. Now, Mr. Shepley goes on :

Q. I suppose you were not aware of the terms of this agreement before it was executed ?—A. No, I was not in the country when it was executed.

The afternoon of the 13th November, when that adjourned meeting was held—and according to Mr. Stevenson's evidence it was a hurried meeting—he left for New York on his way to England.

No, I was not in the country when it was executed.

Q. Then, when the resolution was passed, which you were put down as moving, did you write down the resolution or was it reduced to writing by some one else ?—A. Oh, no, the meeting was a hurried meeting, just on the eve of my departure, and I have no doubt it was an oral one.

Could any testimony be stronger? He says I moved the motion and I have no doubt it was an oral motion and not a written one.

Q. And that somebody, perhaps——A. I think the minute was made up subsequently.

Q. Was there at that meeting in connection with the resolution, which you are said to have moved, any discussion, any mention, to your recollection, of this bonus stock being given up ?—A. My recollection is that it was not. I simply say that because when the matter came to my notice that it had been done, it was a surprise. I may say that I talked the matter over with Mr. Wilson since that time, quite recently, and Wilson thought I was a party to this agreement, and that I had approved of the agreement itself and was very firm that the matter was within my knowledge. All I can say is that I did not understand it so.

Recollect that it is in reference to the bonus stock transfer. There never was any question as to the mortgage and the validity of the mortgage security to be given, or the transfer of the stock taken for advances. Later on :

Q. Mr. Nesbitt asks me to put a question to you in this form : assuming that it will be stated by Mr. Foster that not only was the matter mentioned, but that it was thoroughly discussed before the resolution was passed, would that change your view at all, change your recollection ?—A. That is rather an equivocal way to put it. I have given my recollection. That cannot be changed. Mr. Foster will state his recollection.

Q. I should not have put the question on my own responsibility, but my learned friend wants it put ?—A. And in saying that I may say I have great confidence in Mr. Foster's word.

Q. Just one other question, and this one I father myself. If it had been present to your mind distinctly at the time of the discussion that that was the intention of what was going on, would you have assented to it, or would you have protested against it ?

That is in reference to the transfer of the bonus stock in connection with the mortgage. The answer of Mr. Stevenson is:

As I said before I did not attach great value to the stock, and I am not prepared to say what I might have done. If it was absolutely necessary to forego the stock to get the security, as between the two I would take the security. What I wanted was a first mortgage to begin with. I saw no reason why we should surrender the other——

Meaning the bonus stock.

—and if the only alternative was to take the one or the other, I should have taken the mortgage.

Now, that is clear testimony of Mr. Stevenson's part. That testimony was not transferred to the report ; the testimony by Mr. Stevenson adverse to that was transferred to the report, and that is where I find fault with the report. On the 5th of October in examining Mr. Davidson with reference to this meeting, Mr. Shepley asks :

Q. That is the bonus stock. Did you ever hear such a resolution moved or vote for such a resolution ?—A. I have no recollection of it.

Q. Would you not recollect it ?—A. I think I would.

Q. You would be quite alive to the impropriety of giving up that bonus stock ?—A. I think I would.

'Q. What do you think ? Having regard to all these circumstances, can you say with certainty, having regard to the fact that you do not find your signature in the attendance-book, and having regard to the fact that that subject was never brought to your attention, have you any doubt there never was any such meeting ? —A. I do not think there would be any minutes in the book, unless there was a meeting ; but the minutes would be signed of course.

There is where Mr. Davidson was ; he saw the minute in the minute book and now he says: I do not think there would be any minute in the book unless there was a meeting. There was a minute in the book and therefore the inference would be there was a meeting. Then he goes on to say: 'But the minutes would be signed of course.' Now I appeal to the experience of any man who has done business in directorates, if it is not an often recurring event that a meting of directors will be held, it may be a leisurely meeting, it may be a hurried meeting as this was, the business will be done, but the minutes will not be signed and the next meeting which takes place the minutes may not be signed, but though it would be perfectly regular and proper to have them signed. I myself, in directorates, have taken the minutes to the chairman running over half a dozen or more meetings, and asked for his signature and I have got it. It is not the strictest way of doing business, but I venture to appeal to any business man, if, in fact, that does not take place often. Col. Davidson rested on this assumption : If there is not a signature in the signature book there would be no meeting to my mind; if you do not find the directors have signed in the signature book that is evidence that there is no meeting. Now, Sir, have I made my case good from Mr. Stevenson, that there was a meeting absolutely on the 13th day of November? If I have not I have failed in doing what I consider I have done. I leave it to the sense of this committee. Now, Sir, let me go on to say that corroborating the fact that there was a meeting and a resolution passed, came the arrangement of the documents by the solicitor embodying the substance of the resolution, which provided for the transfer of the stock and provided for the giving of the mortgage. Myself and Mr. Wilson are clear and distinct on the point that that was the agreement, that the stock should be given up in toto, and a mortgage should be taken. Mr. Stevenson says: My recollection is, of course, that the mortgage was to be given, that I know is right. I have no recollection as to the bonus stock, but my dominant idea was to get the security, I placed little value on the stock and if it came to an alternative of not getting the security or of giving up all the stock I would have given up the stock. Now, what I say is this : Following directly on that in the sequence of events, the solicitor carried out the instructions of that meeting and prepared the documents. The meeting was called for November 28th and that meeting is not recorded in the signature book, but the minute is there that the meeting did meet, that the documents were prepared, were read and approved, and an order was passed for a shareholders' meeting on the 11th day of December. The only evidence that that meeting did not meet was that there is no signature in the signature book and that Mr. Davidson does not recollect of the meeting and that Mr Ross did not recollect of the meeting. But Mr. Ross, as his answers show, did not keep tab upon all the business of the Trust Company, knew nothing about any of these transactions at all, and would not be supposed to have a very vivid recollection. But here is the point, there could be no shareholders' meeting held unless a notice were issued. A notice was issued and is a matter of record, and it displays the purpose of the meeting. On the 11th of December that shareholders' meeting meets. Col. Davidson is the chairman of that meeting, the documents as submitted from the directors' meeting are presented, and passed, and I have the document here, and Col. Davidson's signature to that document certifies that it passed the shareholders' meeting.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Will the hon. gentleman allow me ?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is hardly the way to put it. Col. Davidson does not sign the document ; he signs an endorsement upon the document which is a very different thing.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well. Take it as far as it goes and it goes thus far : That a shareholders' meeting is summoned for a particular purpose, meets and the purpose for which it is summoned is carried out by the execution and confirmation of certain documents. Then you have to have some authority to show that that meeting was held and that these documents were approved of. That is what Col. Davidson does. That is all I ever claimed he did do. There is the document providing for the transfer of the bonus stock, of the advance or acquired stock. Does the Minister of Justice think it does not ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It alludes to it.

Mr. FOSTER. Must I read it.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. As far as I am concerned, the hon. gentleman need not delay the committee unless he wishes. It recognizes that the bonus stock is to be, or has been transferred, but it scarcely provides in itself for the transfer.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, that is the difference between a lawyer's interpretation of it and a layman's.

Mr. LENNOX. Was that document before that meeting ?

Mr. FOSTER. That document was presented to that meeting as prepared by the solicitor. That document was read to that meeting. It was passed by that meeting and it provides : First, that the bonus stock has been transfered. Am I right in that ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think so.

Mr. FOSTER. That the advanced stock will be given up, and that a mortgage security will be given. The meeting confirms it, and Colonel Davidson, as chairman of the meetings, certifies to the fact that that is the document. I think I am strictly within legal phraseology now. The same document was presented to a meeting of the Great West Land Company shareholders, passed by them, and certified in exactly the same way by the chairman of that meeting, Mr. Van Dusen. There is the evidence in brief of that transaction. What is the principal part of that whole transaction ? To get the mortgage security and to deliver back the stock taken as advances. There is full agreement about that. The dispute arises as to whether the bonus stock of 237½ shares was also to be given up, as alleged and provided for in the document, and as to whether the 100 shares in the name of Dr. Oronhyatekha were also to be given up. That is a question of difference between the directors. A majority of them either having no knowledge that it was to be so agreed or declaring that they did not believe that it was to be so agreed ; others with equal honesty and equal certainty believing that that was the essence of the agreement. When you get there, where are you ? You are a body of directors. An action has been taken, a transaction carried out, and when it comes to be reviewed, some of the directors say, we did not understand it that way, while others say we understood it that way. What absolutely must happen ? That they must agree amongst themselves as to it, or that by process of law, which is easy and rapid in a case of that kind, they must have restored what are their rights in the judgment of the court to which they appeal. What business was it of this commission, as to that dispute or misunderstanding that was to be settled by the Union Trust Company directors and the owners of that stock before it went into these two categories—one part as a banker's bonus and the other as 100 shares in the name of Dr. Oronhyatekha ? A mistake is made when it is stated that those shares belonged to the Great West Land Company. They did not. They were shares that belonged to Mr. Wilson, Mr. McGillivray and myself. That is the whole truth as to that. What reason is there for believing that I was the forger of documents? Is it not easier and a fairer conclusion to say that there was a misunderstanding between the parties, resulting in a disagreement which made it necesary that the matter should be arranged in some way or other ? When the commission was in progress, that matter was being discussed pro and con. If it is any sop to the curiosity of this committee, I may say that that matter has been arranged, just as it would have been if the commission had never entered on this devious course, and arranged to the satisfaction of both parties. But what I am particularly desirous of clearing up, and what every man will say I have the right of being desirous of clearing up, is the allegation that these meetings were never held, and that therefore I was the forger and concocter of bogus meetings for a purpose.

Now, one point more. Will any practical man say to me as a member of a directorate, where you have your secretary and your minutes, and where you have an attendance book, and where it is the common practice to sign that attendance book at each meeting of the directors, that if it appears that that book is not on any occasion signed, that is an absolute proof that no meeting could have been held on that day, even though the minutes show that a meeting was held ? I do not think so. Colonel Davidson thought so. The Hon. Geo. W. Ross, when questioned, said he would not say that, as it was quite possible that a meeting might be held although for some reason or other the signature book was not signed. Now, will this committee take an explanation outside of the general course of evidence ? It did not come to my mind at the time, but after I had given my evidence and was discharged, the clerk in the Union Trust Company who had charge of those books came to me and said : 'Mr. Foster, I think I can give you the reason why those were not signed'; and he called to my mind that there was one period towards the end of that year when that signature book was mislaid and could not be found.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, I do not expect that I am appealing to an unprejudiced jury. The man who wants to believe me a liar has a perfect right to believe it.

An hon. MEMBER. He was only yawning.

Mr. FOSTER. If that is so, it is only a breach of good manners, not an imputation. No gentleman should yawn in the House of Commons ; in fact, gentlemen ought not to go to sleep here ; but we will forgive many things at this hour of the night. I was going on to say that he recalled that to my memory, and I remembered that some time during the fall of that year that book was out of our possession. It happened in this way, that we held a meeting in an upper room, Dr. Oronhyatekha's room, I had all the documents there, and in some way or other that book was left there when I brought the others away, and it was mislaid, and for some time was not found. Now, Sir, that clerk wrote me a letter detailing that, and said he was willing to go and testify to it. I sent it and a letter covering it to Mr. Shepley, asking him if he would have the goodness to include that in the proceedings in any way in which he thought it could be included, because it threw light to a certain extent on the circumstance of the lack of signatures, the space being left for those two meetings to be filled in. It does not appear in the proceeding, and I supopse Mr. Shepley did not think it was proper to put it in ; but I think he could have just as well stretched a point to put that in in its proper place as not sworn to, as that the commission and he could have spent many hours trying to prove me guilty of concocting meetings because there was not a signature of those meetings in the signature book. A note is given to me suggesting that I should state, what I thought I had stated, that that meeting of November 13 was a hurried meeting. Mr. Stevenson himself left in the latter part of that day, went to New York, sailed on 15th to Europe, and did not come back until the last of January or February ; and the fact that these minutes were not signed is probably due to the hurry and absence of Mr. Stevens and the hurry of the general transactions.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). I have no intention of embarrassing the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), but I had the idea, from what he said, that there was a mortgage running, from the first, collateral with the stock, and then afterwards he spoke about the Union Trust Company wishing to revert to the mortgage. If the mortgage was subsisting at the time, the Union Trust Company had no need to revert to it.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, a new instrument was needed. My hon. friend must remember that lawyers live by fees. Laymen like the hon. member and myself would have said that the old instrument was good enough and that all we had to do was to add a little codicil to it. But the lawyers would not get rich if things were done in that way. There had to be a new instrument and that instrument had to be duly made and registered, and no doubt it was proper to have a new instrument and have it registered.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE. In Halifax we had precisely a similar transaction, and the Supreme Court held that even when a part of the property was sold, the mortgage still subsisted over the whole property and was not relieved from any portion of it by the sale of that portion. The hon. gentleman gave the impression to my mind that there was a mortgage existing all the time these transactions were going on.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid that the more I explain, the more difficult I make it for hon. gentlemen opposite to understand.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE. You gave me the impression that there was a mortgage existing all this time, and in that case the sale of any portions of the land could not affect it.

Mr. FOSTER. There are other points I wish to touch. One particularly has reference to the comparison which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) was kind enough to make between me and Mr. McGill. I do not intend to utter one word in reply to that. I simply say that I felt the comparison and noticed it ; and if the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) thinks that he was justified and added to the dignity of his position by making that comparison between myself and a convicted felon, he is quite welcome to all the gratification he can get from it.

Mr. BERGERON. The difference is that he is in the penitentiary and you are in the House of Commons.

Mr. FOSTER. I shall not make any criticism. That is a matter of taste and does not call for any criticism from me.

Mr. BERGERON. McGill was a client of the Minister of Justice for years.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be true, but I do not know. I would not say however that the fact that the Minister of Justice was the lawyer for Mr. McGill had any influence on his course. Now, I have numerous other things to speak about, but to do so would be an imposition on the patience of this House, and I leave this matter exactly as it is, with the proviso however that this discussion is not closed and will not be so long as these matters against me are brought up.

Mr. TALBOT. I would like to ask one question. The hon. gentleman complained that throughout his testimony and during all the time he was in court he had no chance to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Will he explain how it comes that when once his testimony was given and he was asked if he had anything more to say, he simply replied that he thanked the court for the courtesy it had extended to him and all the chances it had given to him ?

Mr. FOSTER. I supposed that my hon. friend had been listening to me yesterday and had heard my explanation. I made rather a long explanation of one part and also a shorter explanation of the other. I explained that in the course of evidence, when you are questioned by a prosecuting attorney or a lawyer who has a certain purpose in view, and he frames his questions to satisfy himself, and when you have no chance of cross-examining by a counsellor friendly to yourself, you have no opportunity of getting the whole case out. I did thank the commission, and I did not think that my hon. frend, with his true French feeling, would criticise me for having been polite to the commission. I had no evidence to give in the way evidence was taken from me. I did make a statement, but it was a statement necessarily very partial; and in the beginning of it I said to the commission that I only proposed to take up one or two points of importance, and that is all I did.

Mr. CARVELL. Would the hon. gentleman mind telling the committee what arrangement was made between the Union Trust Company and the land company regarding the bonus of stock ?

Mr. FOSTER. I shall have to answer exactly as I did last night ; that is none of the hon. gentleman's business.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. At this hour I should not think of detaining the committee even for one minute, much less for the five or ten minutes which at most I shall take, but for two circumstances, or perhaps three, of a trifling nature and yet in which I feel personally interested. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has just alluded to what he speaks of as a comparison or a parallel instituted by me between the case under discussion and the case of the recent manager of the Ontario Bank. I beg to point out to him what is perfectly manifest to any one who heard me and to any one who peruses what I said as recorded in 'Hansard,' that I was but combatting the argument he put forward strenuously in his opening remarks yesterday, namely, that success apparently as contrasted with failure made all the difference in the moral quality of the transactions under consideration. I was endeavouring to point out that the result of the transactions—whether they were disastrous, as in the instance adverted to, or successful as the hon. gentleman says they were in his instance—could be of no consequence in the consideration of such matters as were presented before this commission upon the inquiry it was called upon to undertake. I have no doubt in my own mind—and I think no one who hears me will have any doubt—but that if the operations of the manager of the Ontario Bank had resulted as successfully as the hon. gentleman says his did, we should never have had any such prosecution as took place in the case of Mr. McGill. I spoke of Mr. McGill as a man who, twelve months ago, was considered by any who knew him as a gentleman, and I think, whatever his unfortunate position may be to-day, that is language in regard to him which no one who knows him will gainsay. The other matter that I alluded to a minute ago as the reason for my being on my feet again before this committee is the circumstance that the hon. gentleman (Mr Foster), who has just taken his seat, in the studiedly, careful and courteous observations which he has made to-night, did not refrain from referring to me personally, as I must suppose, when he stated that it was under instructions that he was kept before this commission for a month or thereabout after subpœna and before he was called to the witness stand—until, as he puts it, the train was laid and the bomb ready to be exploded.

Now, in that connection (if the committee will bear with me for a moment) I want to remind this body that I came into this House only thirteen months ago, with no previous experience, and with the feeling that, possibly, every man who enters this House has—much the same feeling, as I take it, that a prize fighter has when he steps into the ring—that he may expect to receive hard blows, that he is prepared to receive them, and that he intends to return them if he can. I came here with as inveterate political prejudices, I suppose, as any man who ever entered this House. I was born that way, and my father before me, and his father before him, and his father before him again, in this country. I yield to no man in the strength of political feeling that I cherish. But I intended, if I could, to fight a fair fight in this House or elsewhere. I had many friends I think, many warm personal friends, among the members of this House who sit to your left, Mr. Chairman, and I think I have many warm personal friends among them yet—I do not know that I have lost any. There were many hon. gentlemen who sit on that side with whom I had had no previous acquaintance of any sort whatever. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was one. There came an incident in this House, before I had become Minister of Justice, to which the hon. gentleman alluded yesterday, and which he seemed to regard as an occasion when some personal hostility on my part towards himself had developed ;—when that young man was brought in custody to the bar of the House, I joined in the applause with which he was received by a very large number—I think I may fairly say by a very substantial majority—of the individual members of this House. Perhaps I committed a very grave indiscretion upon that occasion. It would seem so, for from that day to this it has seemed to be the basis of a feeling of bitter hostility on the part of the hon.

member for North Toronto towards myself personally. It has been alluded to in the course of this debate as if it were the beginning of attacks on my part on the hon. gentleman, I am in the judgment of this House as to whether there is any reason in fact for that statement. This session began. And whatever the cause—no doubt the cause is manifest in what we have heard to-day and what we read in the newspapers that are supposed to voice the sentiments of the Conservative party—there was not one or two occasions merely, but occasion after occasion when I was made, sometimes in my absence, sometimes in my presence, the target for personal attacks of what I consider a very violent and uncalled for nature at the hands of the hon. member for North Toronto. I made no reply. I think I might have done so ; I think there was plenty of material at my hand to have done so if I had thought it right or desirable that questions of that nature should be debated in this House. Now, in the course of the present debate to-day what has been taken up by different hon. gentlemen who sit upon the other side of the House has been attacks almost wholly of a personal character upon myself. And, just before the House rose at one o'clock this afternoon, in a moment of great excitement arising out of an incident to which I shall not further allude, but which is fresh in the minds of all of us, I was charged by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) in, certainly, no calm language or frame of mind, with standing here as the conspirator. I may say, I think, without impropriety, that I was denounced with outstretched arm and pointed finger and violent gestulation, and with the use of the words, 'There stands the conspirator," or 'See the conspirator.' I replied with a like gesture—I am ready, I think, to return blow for blow whenever blow is given.

Now, I want to say, with reference to the many things that have been uttered by different hon. gentlemen in this House, not merely to-day but throughout the course of other discussions with regard to this matter, what I have already said in more than one shape since this session began. That whatever they may credit me with, whatever they may believe, however firmly they may be convinced that I had some directing hand or instructing word in the conduct of this insurance investigation so far as the Foresters were concerned, or so far as any other company was concerned, that suspicion, that statement, that allegation, is absolutely without any kind of foundation whatever. Any information on the subject of the inquiry which came to my knowledge from any source which I considerd trustworthy, I communicated to the counsel who was conducting that investigation.

Mr. FOSTER. By letter ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Any member of the House——

Mr. AYLESWORTH.

Mr. FOSTER. By letter ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH—would have done the same thing——

Mr. FOSTER. By letter?

Mr. AYLESWORTH—and so communicating that information, transmitting it to the hands of the counsel who was concerned in conducting that inquiry, I limited myself to that and never even suggested what course should be taken as to the calling of witnesses, the order in which they were to be called or any other matter connected with the conduct of the investigation, good, bad or indifferent. There was no necessity that I should do so. As I have said in this House before, and as everybody who knows anything about him is well aware, the counsel who was conducting that inquiry is a man who is perfectly capable of conducting any cause whatever as well as I or any other lawyer in this country could conduct it. He needed no suggestions, and none whatever were given to him. So far as the commission is concerned, I never had any sort of communication, suggestion, direction, instruction or any other word you may choose, with any member of it in regard to the business of the commission. That statement I wish to make simply because this whole debate, so far at any rate as to-day's discussion goes, seems to have been based on that allegation.

Mr. FOSTER. The statement of the Minister of Justice renders a word from me necessary. He has not added much to the statement of last night by way of palliation, when to-night he made an addendum, that if McGill's transactions had turned out successfully he never would have been prosecuted and condemned by the courts—which if it means anything, and the minister is a grown man and would not use that expression unless he had a meaning—means that if my investments on lands in the Northwest and in British Columbia, made under the law on legal securities, had proved unsuccessful, I could have been prosecuted and sent to prison as McGill has been sent. That is what it means, if it means anything. One word more, I will say with reference to last night's statement. I took up the organ of the Liberal party in this country, the Toronto 'Globe,' edited by a follower of the meek and lowly Saviour. He preaches on Sunday and indites editorials for Monday morning's paper. In this, as in the work of the commission, he is quick to follow his leader. The first page has this displayed, which I hold up before the committee : 'Two views of trust funds,' with my statement down half way as to my responsibility for the formation of the trust company and the subsequent investigations of the same. The other half is Mr. Aylesworth's polite and considerate characterization of the McGill case and his course in comparison with my name and my case.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am somewhat surprised to hear the Minister of Justice refer to his father, his father's father, and his father's father's father as having been all of the Liberal faith. I was wondering whether the father had stuck to the label or had stick to the principle. It is evidently they have stuck only to the label, because never for one generation at a time have the principles of the Liberal party been the same. I could give a good deal of data with reference to the purchase of these lands by Fowler and Pope, I could give a good deal of information with regard to Dominion lands in British Columbia, to bear out the statements made in this House ; but I will not do so owing to the lateness of the hour. In regard to the comparison drawn by the Minister of Justice betwen the member for North Toronto and Mr. Charles McGill, I have only to point out that it seems rather unfortunate for the Minister of Justice that in his political career he has become mixed up in the notorious West Elgin case, with the notorious Gamey case, with this notorious insurance case, and for years he has been solicitor for the Bank of Ontario, and in each and every instance disaster has followed in his trail.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The hon. gentleman might add that I have been counsel for a great many of his political friends.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I never had the misfortune to have the hon. gentleman as my counsel. I merely rose to move that the item be reduced by the sum of $30,000.

Motion negatived : Yeas, 17 ; Nays, 75.

Mr. BARKER. I was paired with Mr. Carney of Halifax ; otherwise I would have voted for the motion.

Resolution reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What business will be taken up to-day ?

Mr. FIELDING. The acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fisher) will move the House into supply, and the leader of the opposition can make his motion.

Motion agreed to and House adjourned at 1.38 a.m. Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 12, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

ROYAL ASSENT.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House, that I have received the following letter from the secretary of His Excellency the Governor General :

Ottawa, April 12, 1907.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. the Chief Justice of Canada, acting as deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber this afternoon at 4 o'clock for the purpose of giving assent to certain Bills which have passed the Senate and House of Commons during the present session.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
C. J. Jones,
For the Governor General's secretary.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the House of Commons.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 159) to increase the borrowing powers of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.) Would the hon. minister kindly explain ?

Mr. FIELDING. The Quebec Harbour Commissioners have already power to borrow certain moneys on the credit of their revenues, and this proposal is to extend the limit of those powers. Section 1 provides :

In addition to the amount of two hundred thousand dollars which the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, hereinafter called 'the corporation,' may borrow under the provisions of section 35 of chapter 34 of the Acts of 1899, the corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to borrow for the purposes, in the manner and subject to the conditions in said section provided an amount not exceeding in the whole eight hundred thousand dollars.

The interest thereon is made a charge on the port of Quebec, in the same manner as the $200,000 referred to.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT—RECIPROCAL DEMURRAGE.

Mr. ROCH. LANCTOT (Laprairie-Napierville) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 160) to amend the Railway Act He said : The purpose of this Bill is to introduce into the dealings, between railways and their customers something like reciprocity. It is well known that if a car of goods arrives for a merchant he has forty-eight hours to unload it, and if he fails to do so, he is charged one dollar per day for all subsequent days. This charge is also made on the shipper if he is slow in loading the car delivered to him for that purpose. This charge is called demurrage. Thus both the shipper and the receiver of goods are subject to fine, if they do not promptly load and unload the car and allow the railway as nearly as possible the continuous use of the car. Now why should all this punishment for delay apply only to the shipper and the receiver of goods? Is it not fair to claim that the railway owes a duty to the shipper and the receiver and should be subject to some equivalent fine, if it fails to perform that duty?

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 161) to amend the Act of the present session incorporating the Residential Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Fielding.

MILITARY CAMP AT PETAWAWA.

Mr. G. V. WHITE (North Renfrew). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to draw the attention of the government to some correspondence which I have received from residents of the township of Petawawa asking whether the government intends to compensate the township for loss of revenue due to the exemption from taxation of lands required by the government for military purposes. I understand that the township will lose $500 or $600 per annum.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). My attention has not been drawn to the matter, and I cannot speak positively with regard to it. But most of the lands taken by the government were, I understand Crown lands, and exempt from taxation. Were not most of these lands already exempt from taxation as provincial lands?

Mr. WHITE. I understand the government acquired the lands from private parties.

Mr. FIELDING. The general principle governing such matters is that where the government require and take public lands, they are exempt from taxation. I have a case in mind where compensation has been granted, or proposed to be granted, on the ground that the property acquired is still allowed to remain temporarily in the hands of private parties, and not immediately applied for the purpose of the government; private tenants still continue to occupy, the government therefore using the property as a landlord. A case of that nature was brought to my notice recently, and I think we shall ask the House to authorize us to compensate the municipality interested. I would think, off hand, that the case mentioned by my hon. friend does not come within that class. However, if he will be able to give me any further information as to the facts I will be glad to look into them.

INCREASE OF SALARIES TO POST OFFICE OFFICIALS.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto). Now that the session is drawing to a close, I would like to ask the Postmaster General if he intends to introduce a Bill to increase the salaries and improve the general conditions of employees of the Post Office Department, especially the men employed in the outside service, and more particularly the letter carriers, and officers of that class; and if the Bill will provide not only for increasing the salaries, but also improving the conditions under which these men labour? For instance, take the case of the letter carriers. I know the recent case of a letter carrier in Toronto who has been employed in the service twenty-five years, but a few days ago he was absent for about a week on account of illness contracted in the performance of his duties, and his salary was docked his day's pay. Conditions of that kind should be looked into and improved, if possible. I would ask the minister if he has the Bill under consideration which these officials have asked for, and if we may expect to have it introduced this session?

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I would like to inquire as well whether this government have reached a decision to increase the salaries of postmasters throughout the country. We have a great many letters inquiring about it, and it would not be out of place for the Postmaster General to make a statement about it.

Mr. H. LENNOX (South Simcoe). Before the Postmaster General replies—he will recollect that I mentioned this matter to him a day or two ago—I wish to draw his attention to the question of increasing the salaries of postmasters. I have before me a copy of the Toronto 'News,' of which I proposed to read an extract in connection with this matter on going into Supply. However, I do not need to do that, but I will say that this matter has been, I think, under the consideration of the government for about a year since the postmasters presented their case to the department.

Mr. SPEAKER. A discussion is contrary to the rule.

Mr. LENNOX. I will only add that I trust the Postmaster General will bring down his project at an early date.

Mr. TALBOT. Might I also ask the Postmaster General if he intends increasing the salaries of the postmasters throughout the country? I think they have made a strong appeal to the government for additional consideration.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). This question has been engaging my attention and is now engaging the attention of the government, and I expect that within a few days I will be in a position to make a positive statement regarding this question.

Mr. FIELDING. The whole question of civil service salaries, not with regard to any one department but to all departments and all branches of the service, has been very much pressed upon the attention of the government, and proves to be a very embarrassing one. It is not easy to answer as regards any particular department, but before the close of the session a statement should be made with regard to the general question.

RAILWAY BLOCKADE IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. GEO. E. McCRANEY (Saskatchewan). I wish to call the attention of the government to two telegrams I have just received from Rosthern and Saskatoon, in my constituency.

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. gentleman intend to ask a question ?

Mr. McCRANEY. Yes, I will conclude with a question. The first telegram is dated Rosthern, Saskatchewan, April 10, 1907 :

G. McCraney, M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Have received but two mails past fourteen days. Edmonton trains now running via Warman and Prince Albert to Winnipeg, but refuse to carry mails. Situation now unparalleled here. Incoming settlers in many cases delayed two weeks at one point. Western people think your government might better take up western railway congestion than eastern scandals, as situation here is deplorable.

ROSTHERN BOARD OF TRADE.

The next telegram is dated Saskatoon, April 11 :

G. McCraney, M.P., Ottawa, Ont.

Understand that Canadian Northern Railway have notified American roads not to accept shipments settlers' effects for any points on their system. We have received no mail since March. Merchants entirely out of many staple articles, some necesssities. Prince Albert branch tied up both above and below here. Railway officials say no trains this week. There appears to be great inefficiency or mismanagement on part of railway. Can something not be done to compel more strenuous action by them ? Mails could surely be driven over breaks in line.

JOHN ASHWORTH.

I would like to ask the government if they have any information as to the situation there ?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). As regards the mail service, I was made aware a few days ago by a number of telegrams I received from Saskatoon and Regina that the railway main service there was being crippled by the heavy storms that they have encountered lately. Immediately the department gave instructions to the inspector in the district to organize, if possible, a conveyance of the mails across the several gaps by means of vehicles, we have done our best. Unfortunately these complaints before being made against the Post Office Department should be first addressed to the weather bureau.

SUPPLY—BLAIRMORE TOWN SITE.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I desire to call the attention of the House to a question which has been creating a great deal of interest in the Northwest and has been very much discussed in the papers of that country ; I refer to the Blairmore town site. I intend before resuming my seat to move a resolution with regard to that question. Very voluminous papers have been brought down by order of this House. The last of them, consisting of many hundreds of pages, came down only a couple of days ago and it has been impossible to go very minutely into all the details contained in those papers. The general features, however, stand out plainly and I do not think I shall have difficulty in laying before the House the general situation of affairs as shown in those papers. The main features of the case are these :

On the 25th of July, 1901, a patent was issued for 160 acres of land comprising what is known as the Blairmore townsite for the sum of $480, to one Malcolm Mackenzie. Mr. Mackenzie is a lawyer at the town of Macleod, some 45 miles distant. He was the Liberal candidate in the Dominion elections of 1904, and is now a member of the legislative assembly of the province of Alberta. Mr. Mackenzie, according to these papers, had no legal claim whatever to be allowed to purchase this land. At that time Blairmore had a population of between 200 and 300 people ; it had three licensed hotels in full running. The improvements were valued at some $40,000 or $50,000 by Mr. Mackenzie himself. This value was thoroughly well known to the Department of the Interior, but in spite of their thorough knowledge of the subject they were prepared to sell the whole thing to Mr. Mackenzie for $480. Subsequently, however, proceedings were taken to annul the patent. It was formally proved during the course of these proceedings that Mr. Mackenzie's claim was based on certain untruthful statements fraudulently made by one Felix Montalbetti, an Italian. Further, these papers show that before judgment was finally given in the case the Crown withdrew, thus forcing all proceedings to be dropped and confirming Mackenzie in his possession of the land.

Let me go somewhat more fully into the details of this transaction. Blairmore is a town on the Crow's Nest section of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as I said just now, 45 miles distant from the town of Macleod and one mile distant from the well known mining town of Frank. It had a population on the 31st of March, 1901, of 231 people and in 1906 of 449. It is situated just inside the Rocky Mountains on their eastern slope where the pass broadens out and forms an ideal town site, an elevated bit of prairie land with groups of pines dotted throughout it and mountains rising thousands of feet on either side. In the year 1898 the only residents on the present town site were an agent and some section men who were in the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The district had not been surveyed and was not surveyed until 1900, and up to that year no one put in any particular claim to the land. During the course of that year, however, discoveries of coal in the neighbourhood called attention to this land as being extremely valuable as a prospective town site. In December of that year H. E. Lyon, who had formerly been agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway and who had some months previously quitted that employment, had built a store and had started up in business as a general merchant, put in a claim to the land as a homestead, but was refused on the ground that it was an odd-numbered section, and rightly so, in accordance with the land laws. Two months later he made a formal claim that if he was not to be allowed to retain the land, or to purchase it at the ordinary government rate of $3 an acre on the ground that he was the original squatter on the land, that at any rate it should be put up to public competition so that he might have an opportunity of acquiring it by purchase. But about this time or a little earlier other rival claimants put in claims to the land. The papers are missing in regard to these rival claims, although I notice that they are referred to in some of the correspondence, so that the papers brought down are not complete. I may mention here also that a statement has appeared in one of the western papers that very important papers in connection with this question which found their way into the Department of the Interior have disappeared there and have not been found since. The department then called upon their homestead inspector to report upon the rival claims. There was considerable delay, the homestead inspector had a large district to cover and he did not make the inspection for a very considerable time. The department, however, becoming impatient, on the 11th of June sent instructions that the question should receive immediate attention. About this time yet another claimant to the land appeared, this was Felix Montalbetti, an Italian section foreman who had been in the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He claimed to be the first squatter on the land and while making out his claim, which he did in the office of Mr. Malcom Mackenzie, who finally entered into possession of this land, he agreed to assign to Mr. Mackenzie, any rights or claims which he might have in the land. This agreement was come to on the 7th of June.

The agreement was that Mr. Mackenzie should pay him $1,000 and that he should take all the risks of pressing Montalbetti's claim to a successful conclusion. Montalbetti's claim was apparently forwarded to the department that day. On the 17th of June, ten days later, something had apparently developed, for on that day a telegram was sent to the land agent at Lethbridge instructing him that if the homestead inspector had not already made an inquiry into the rights of these rival claimants his instructions to do so should be cancelled.

The following day a telegram was sent to Mr. Joseph Nixon, at Macleod, instructing him to make an inquiry and a report. And who is Mr. Nixon? He was the subagent of Dominion lands at Macleod; he is the gentleman whose name was brought up in this House some two years ago, and whose case was then gone into pretty thoroughly. It was shown at that time that he had been guilty of misappropriating the funds of the government which had come into his possession, and which offence finally ended in his being dismissed from his office, although by the way, very shortly afterwards he received another and a more lucrative position from the same Department of the Interior. This Mr. Nixon was an intimate friend of Mr. Mackenzie, and we find from the evidence that he discussed this matter with Mr. Mackenzie; that he told him he was going up to Blairmore to inspect and to report upon the rival claims. Mr. Mackenzie was the man who had the agreement with Montalbetti to receive his rights in the land. It ended in Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Nixon going up together on the same train to Blairmore. Each of them prosecuted inquiry into the claims of the various claimants; possibly each prosecuted an independent inquiry. I do not think the papers say they prosecuted their inquiry together. Mackenzie and Nixon returned together on the same train after each had made his own particular inquiry. It turned out that Mr. Stewart, the homestead inspector, had already been in Blairmore and had made his inspection, although his report had not at that time been received by the department. Finally the two reports got to the department, and they appear in the papers. Mr. Nixon's report was to the effect that Montalbetti was the only one of the three claimants who could be regarded as a bona fide squatter, and that his claim to be allowed to purchase the land was good. Mr. Stewart's report was that neither Mr. Lyon nor Montalbetti had any claim to the land, but that the claim rested in another party or parties. It is difficult to say exactly what the full meaning of his report in regard to these other parties is, because some of the papers are missing. At any rate, he was definite that neither Lyon nor Montalbetti had a prior claim to this land. The then Commissioner of Dominion Lands,

Mr. Turriff, who is now member for East Assiniboia, sat to hear the case on the 18th of July of that year, and legal representatives of the three claimants were present, and Mr. Turriff apparently heard what they had to say. The following day Mr. Turriff made his decision in favour of the claim of Montalbetti, thus accepting the report of Mr. Nixon rather than the report of Mr. Stewart. Why did he do so?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Had Mr. Mackenzie at this time received the assignment of Montalbetti's claim?

Mr. LAKE. Yes ; the papers show that before the decision was given Mr. Mackenzie had received an assignment from Montalbetti.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So that in effect Mackenzie was the claimant?

Mr. LAKE In effect, the application was in reality on behalf of Mackenzie, as Mackenzie had acquired Montalbetti's rights. Why should the Commissioner of Dominion Lands accept the report of Mr. Nixon rather than the report of Mr. Stewart? Mr. Stewart was a regular official of the department, a homestead inspector, a man accustomed to make such inquiries, and a man who it would be expected would give a report which the department could rely upon. Mr. Nixon, on the other hand, was a subagent of Dominion lands. Speaking in this House a short time ago. the member for East Assiniboia stated emphatically that Mr. Nixon was not in any shape or form an ordinary government official, that he was only in temporary employment by the government, and that he carried on a private business at the same time like any other subagent of Dominion lands. I do not agree with the member for East Assiniboia in regard to that. I consider that the sub-land agents are regular officials, but be that as it may, the fact remains that Mr. Turriff, then Commissioner of Dominion Lands, did not consider that this sub-land agent, Nixon, was a regular official. And yet he accepted the report of this man, who was not a regular official, and rejected the report made by a regular official of the department whose business it was to make such inquiries and furnish such reports.

Immediately that the decision became known protests were put in by the other claimants to the land. On Mr. Lyon's behalf an urgent telegram was despatched, stating that he was prepared to prove there was fraud in the statement of Montalbetti's claim. He went further, and he claimed that Mr. Nixon had been guilty of not making a proper inquiry, that he had conducted that inquiry in private, and that in fact Nixon had been unduly biased in making his award. Applications also were made by the legal firms employed by the other claimants asking that the patent should not be issued until an investigation should be had into these charges of fraud against Montalbetti.

Now, one would imagine, in view of such serious charges, that there should have been some delay, and that a further investigation should have been made. But did the commissioner delay ? Not at all. In just a week's time the patent was issued. I may remark here that this is a very unusual thing. It is very seldom that a patent is issued in less than a week from the time the claim is proved. Why should there have been such undue haste in the issue of this patent ? Why should Mr. Montalbetti, who I presume was the only man who had any rights in the case, have received such extraordinary consideration on the part of the department ? It is perfectly clear from the papers that at that time the department had been put in possession of the assignment which had been made by Mr. Montalbetti to Mr. Mackenzie of his rights in the matter, and I think it must be taken for granted that the department was most anxious that there should be no further inquiry into the question of Mr. Montalbetti's rights, and that nothing should stand in the way of the issue of the patent to their friend and supporter, Mr. Mackenzie. As I said just now, there are frequently delays of many months in the issue of patents. Any ordinary settler in the Northwest who gets his patent within a month of the date when the department has accepted his papers considers himself very lucky indeed. There is usually a delay of many months ; but in this case there was no delay ; the patent was issued at once ; and as Mr. Montalbetti was regarded as the bona fide squatter, if a patent was to be issued to any one surely it should have been issued in the name of Mr. Montalbetti. In the practice of the department a man who squats on land in advance of settlement and before a survey is made is considered to have some right to the land on which he has squatted. In most cases such a settler puts up a home for himself, builds his stables, does his cultivation and accumulates his stock ahead of civilization ; and it would be very unfair if when surveys of the land on which he has taken up his home come in the course of time to be made, and that land is opened to settlement, somebody else should be allowed to come in and make a homestead entry for the land or buy it ahead of him ; and therefore in practice his priority of claim to make a homestead entry for that land has generally been recognized by the department; and in the new Dominion Lands Bill which we have before the House that right is for the first time set out as a definite legal right, and he is given a definite time within which to make his claim good and to make his entry for the homestead. But this appears to be an entirely different matter. Mr. Mackenzie did not even claim that at the time this right to purchase the land was accepted he was living on the land, that he had built a home for himself, that he had farm buildings and stock on the place. Yet as I said just now, the patent was not issued to Montalbetti, but to Mr. Mackenzie. The assignment of Montalbetti's rights to Mr. Mackenzie was handed in to the department, together with the fee for its registration, and at the same time payment was tendered for the land. Everything was in readiness. Everything was apparently expected to turn out exactly as it did. Mr. Montalbetti's claim was to be recognized and the patent was to be issued immediately. The patent then was issued to Mr. Mackenzie who lived forty-five miles away, and who had never been a squatter on the land at all.

Mr. BENNETT. What is Mr. Mackenzie's business ?

Mr. LAKE. It is that of a lawyer.

Mr. OLIVER. A bad business.

Mr. LAKE. The Minister of the Interior suggests that it is a bad business. He was also the Liberal 'pull' in that neighbourhood which seems to have been pretty remunerative business. The question comes in, had Mr. Mackenzie any legal standing in the matter at all? It is a well know fact, embodied in the present law, that if a homesteader makes an assignment of any rights he has acquired in his homestead before he has actually performed all the duties he has to perform to entitle him to the issue of a patent, and it comes to the knowledge of the department, his homestead entry can be cancelled forthwith, and all the rights which he has acquired up to that date can be taken from him. Now, the homesteader certainly has a legal status. He has paid a fee to the department, got a receipt for it, and has a right to keep trespassers off the land—in fact has entered into the general possession of it. Compare his status with that of the squatter. The squatter has no legal status at all. Simply by the practice of the department he has been given, and rightly so, the right of priority in making application for the homesteading or purchase of the land on which he has squatted. If the homesteader by his legal status is absolutely prohibited on pain of forfeiture from assigning any rights he has in the land until the department is satisfied that he has performed all his duties, and has made a recommendation that his patent be issued, so much the more should the so-called rights or claims of a squatter be extinguished the moment he attempts to assign any such rights or claims. In spite, however, of all the doubtful rights which Mr. Mackenzie had in the matter, the patent was issued with extraordinary haste. The money was accepted on the 25th of July, 1901, and the patent was made out in his name on that day. But the matter was not to be allowed to drop. Mr. Lyon, the original claimant to the land, went to the Minister of Justice and obtained permission of the Crown to take action in the Exchequer Court in order to have the patent set aside. The claim was filed by the Attorney General in the Exchequer Court on the 10th of November, 1902, that the patent had been issued by fraud or misrepresentation. After some preliminary investigation had been made, it was decided to appoint a special referee to make an investigation on the spot, and Mr. Justice Wetmore, one of the judges of the Supreme Court for the Northwest Territories, was nominated as the special referee.

He went to Blairmore, made a very thorough investigation on the spot from the 7th to the 11th August of that year and reported. And his report was to the effect that the untruthful statements and misrepresentations of Montalbetti were of such a character and so numerous that he could not resist the conclusion that they were fraudulently made and that an order should be given for the return of the patent in order that it might be cancelled. The matter came before the Exchequer Court again on the 20th March, 1903. In that court, while Mr. Justice Burbidge concurred generally with Mr. Justice Wetmore in his findings and agreed that a case was clearly made out and that the Crown had been deceived, he did not give final judgment as he was so much puzzled with regard to some of the evidence which had been given by the Commissioner of Dominion Lands. And he desired to have Mr. Turriff again before him to give further evidence and also to have some evidence from Mr. Nixon, the subagent, in regard to his report. In the meantime the then Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) had been writing frequenly to the then Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) with regard to this subject. He had been registering desultory protests against the whole proceedings. He declared that the principle had never been recognized that the decisions of the Department of the Interior could be revised by the courts of the land. Further than that he stated that the Crown was not pressing for the cancellation of the patent in this case although the matter was still under inquiry and under judicial investigation. Mr. Sifton was going away about that time, and had some other business to attend to which prevented his going fully into the matter, and at his request it was laid over for a considerable period and some nine months elapsed before anything more was done. Then, on the 19th December, 1903, we find a letter from Mr. Sifton to Mr. Fitzpatrick, at that time Minister of Justice, in which Mr. Sifton sets forth that the judge of the Exchequer Court had held that neither Lyon or Mackenzie had any right capable of enforcement, and he went on to say that the Crown does not attempt to sell land which has an artificial value as town site or for any similar reason at the highest price obtainable, and finally asks that the judge be requested to have the case disposed of on the ground that the Crown does not desire to ask for the cancellation of the patent on the ground of inadequacy of price because everything relating to the price was thoroughly well known when the sale was made. Mr. Sifton's representations were listened to, application was made to the Exchequer Court, and the case fell to the ground. The action was dismissed on the 30th May, 1904, without costs, so that Mr. Mackenzie remains in the possession of the land which had been acquired through the medium of fraudulent statements. He remains in possession of a town site which is variously estimated in the Northwest to be worth from $100,000 to $200,000. Where did Mr. Lyon come in in all this? Mr. Lyon claimed to have the first squatter's right. He had put in the first application for the land, and from his early acquaintance with the settlement, for he was one of the earliest in there, he knew probably more about the matter and how it stood than any one else. And he was so confident of the validity of his rights that he was prepared to let every other consideration go to one side and go to all the expense of an appeal to the Exchequer Court to have his rights vindicated. Even when it appeared absolutely hopeless, after the government had withdrawn the case and had finally handed over possession into the hands of a gentleman who is well known as a good Liberal—even then he was not prepared to let the matter drop, but went on spending money in order to see that justice was done even if it could not ultimately end in his obtaining possession of the town site. Mr Lyon had been successful in proving that part of his case which alleged that the town site had been given Mr. Mackenzie through the fraudulent representations of Montalbetti. Then the Crown threw him down. It had been certainly stated by one of the judges at any rate that he had no legal right capable of enforcement. But according to his letter, Mr. Sifton apparently held the view that no one had any rights or claims outside the will of the Department of the Interior and that no one could enforce any rights or claims outside what the department chose to do.

The evidence given by the Commissioner of Dominion Lands tended to show that in the practice of the department, the first person who entered into permanent residence on the land had priority of right, and Mr. Justice Wetmore's decision, based on the eveidence, was that Mr. Lyon had fulfilled that condition. He was the first one to erect a permanent habitable dwelling on the land and go into permanent residence. But I am not arguing Mr. Lyon's case. The wrong which has been done should first be righted by this department. The patent which has been issued to Mr. Mackenzie shoud be cancelled. After that is done, it will be the duty of the government to see that the rights of all the parties concerned are given the fullest consideration, and especially the rights of those bona fide and innocent purchasers and settlers who went in and took up their abode in the town of Blairmore. I think it would be well for me to read to the House the opinion held in regard to this matter even by supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite. I have here the Strathcona 'Plaindealer,' which is a staunch supporter of the present administration, a good Liberal newspaper. In its issue of the 22nd of March last the Strathcona 'Plaindealer' says :

The Lyon-Mackenzie Episode.

We notice that the Lyon-Mackenzie episode in connection with the town site of Blairmore is being ventilated on the floor of parliament at Ottawa. That is as it should be and we hope the matter will be sifted to the bottom. The closing words of Mr. Burbidge, in his judgment dismissing the case were: 'It is very plain that the defendant, Mr. Mackenzie, obtained the land in question through fraud, but owing to the action of the Crown, which I can hardly understand, in withdrawing from the case, I am forced to find that Lyon has no legal right to cancel the patent of Mackenzie, but had the Crown remained in the case I would find that Mackenzie obtained the land by fraud, and immediately cancel his patent. However, I have no alternative in the matter and will dismiss the case without costs.'

Surely this judgment has placed Mr. Mackenzie, M.P.P., for Lethbridge, and also the Siftonian administration of the Department of the Interior under a cloud. Mr. Mackenzie stands in the judgment of Mr. Justice Burbidge as one who has obtained patent for the Blairmore town site through the fraud of another. His explanation of the matter on the floor of the Alberta House was sufficient——

That word, Mr. Speaker, should be 'insufficient,' as you will see by the context.

—to turn the tide of public opinion in his favour, nor can he turn that tide without abandoning the title he holds to the town site of Blairmore, a sacrifice which he seems loath to make.

The use of the word 'nor' there proves that it was intended to say that this explanation was 'insufficient,' and not 'sufficient' as the actual print has it.

Financially, probably no one but Mr. Lyon has suffered loss in this affair, but the country has a right to know what Mr. Justice Burbidge could not fathom, why the Department of the Interior dropped out of the case at the moment when their action prevented Mr. Lyon from obtaining justice. At first blush it appears that Mr. Sifton was bound to pull that $200,000 chestnut out of the fire for his good friend Mackenzie at any cost.

It will be observed that the Strathcona 'Plaindealer' places the value of the town site at $200,000.

It is now up to Mr. Oliver to have the matter investigated and laid bare in parliament as far as the Department of the Interior is connected with it. If Messrs. Sifton and Turriff can justify their action, well and good, if not the stigma of corruption rests on them and the party must suffer.

Now, I do not wish to go further into the preliminary statement of this case, but I would like to make one or two very brief comments. First, I would call the attention of the House to the cost of this whole business to the government and people of this country. Not only did the government hand over to one of their political friends a town site which he himself admitted, if the coal mines went on—and they are still going on—was of a value of $50,000, and which had improvements on it at that time which he himself admitted to amount to another $40,000 or $50,000, for the sum of $480—not only that, but the government has paid very large sums in connection with the various inspections and inquiries in this case. They have paid for two special inspections by their officials; they have paid for special surveys; they have paid for a special judicial inquiry on the spot, conducted by a judge whose home was distant from the town site five or six hundred miles, and all the cost of the proceedings in the Exchequer Court. They have gone further, and, apparently, to throw a sop to Mr. Lyon in the hope of closing his mouth, they paid his costs in this matter amounting to $2,885. Now, we can hardly say that that sounds like good business administration on the part of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. BENNETT. Nor like an honest transaction either.

Mr. LAKE. Nor like a very honest transaction either. Now, what did Mr. Mackenzie get? He got the town site which, at the time the patent was issued to him, had improvements to the extent of $40,000 or $50,000, and the value of which exclusive of improvements he himself, estimated at $50,000, 'if the coal mines go on.' Different newspapers in the Northwest estimate the present value at anything up to $200,000. And I may say, that in my opinion, the value of that town site will increase enormously as soon as this question of the title to the lands is finally set at rest. The Department of the Interior has been threatening Mr. Mackenzie that if he does not square up with the rival claimants it will cancel the patent. So, no person going there knows what right he will have to the land he is improving. It is fair to infer, therefore, that the value of this beautiful town site will be enormously increased over the estimates given at the present moment. And the patent for this property issued to Mr. Mackenzie was obtained through fraudulent statements made by Montalbetti. It is true as Mr. Mackenzie states, that he did not make the fraudulent statement. But he cannot clear his skirts in that way. He is the beneficiary of these fraudulent statements, and surely it is up to him to clear himself completely of any possible question of benefiting by such fraud. Then, what is the position of the two or three hundred squatters who were on that land at the time the patent was handed over to Mr. Mackenzie? They had rights which were certainly greater than those of Mr. Mackenzie who had not squatted on the land, but who lived forty miles away. Yet, all rights or claims which they might have appear to have been handed over with the patent to Mr. Mackenzie. It seems to me that this case is one of the worst of the many very improper deals in lands which have been made by the government during the last few years in the Northwest. And I say, Sir, it becomes their duty ot see to it that the wrong which has been done in this matter is set right and that the patent which was issued by fraud shall be cancelled. It seems to me that it is definitely in the interest of the country, and that it will conform to the moral sense of the people, that the frauds which were perpetuated by Montalbetti should not be allowed to result successfully to a person who rests his rights upon these fraudulent claims. I contend that the fraudulent patent which was thus procured should be cancelled by the government without any further delay. I therefore beg to move :

That all the words after the word 'that' be left out and the following substituted therefor :

The government of Canada took proceedings in the Exchequer Court to set aside a patent issued to Malcolm Mackenzie, as the assignee of Felix Montalbetti, on July 25, 1901, comprising 160 acres, known as the Blairmore town site,

That evidence was taken in the said proceedings before the Hon. Mr. Justice Wetmore as special referee, and it appears by his report made upon consideration of the said evidence, that the said Felix Montalbetti, in making application for the said patent, had made untrue statements as to the material facts and that the said untrue statements were fraudulently made with the intention of improperly influencing the minds of the officials of the Department of the Interior,

That the said finding of Mr. Justice Wetmore as special referee, was approved and concurred in by the Hon. Mr. Justice Burbidge, judge of the said Exchequer Court,

That notwithstanding the said finding the government by its counsel appeared in the said Exchequer Court and withdrew the said proceedings and consented to an order which confirmed the said Mackenzie in his title to the said town site so acquired by fraud,

That the said Mackenzie is a prominent supporter of the present administration and was their candidate at the general elections in 1904, for the electoral district of Alberta, and is now a member of the provincial legislature of the province of Alberta,

That the said town site is very valuable, and is estimated to be worth between $100,000 and $200,000,

That the collusive action of the government through the Department of the Interior in thus confirming a political supporter in the possession and ownership of property obtained by fraud, deserves and should receive the strongest condemnation of this House.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (East Assiniboia). As my name has been brought up in connection with this matter I would like to place some facts before the House that it may be able to judge of the merits of the case. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Lake) made reference to the fact that the instructions which had been given to the homestead inspector were cancelled and that the subagent was asked to make a report. That was done at the request of the parties who were the applicants, at their own request only. Instructions had been given to the homestead inspector several months before, but the report had not come to hand. The homestead inspector lives at Calgary some two or three hundred miles distant, and as these parties were anxious to have the matter settled, they asked that some one else should be sent. We wired there and ascertained from the agent that so far as he knew the homestead inspector had not been out there, and was not in that part of the country, so the subagent was sent. The subagent at that time, at Macleod, was Mr. James Dickson.

Mr. FOSTER. Who joined in the request that he should be sent?

Mr. TURRIFF. I do not remember who it was. This happened five or six years ago and I cannot remember the details; but there were three applicants for the land, and I know it was one of the three. The hon. gentleman also asked why the subagent's report was acted upon as against the homestead inspector's report, which came in subsequently although the agent at Lethbridge was not aware of the fact. Well, the report of any homestead inspector or of any subagent is not necessarily accepted; if that were the case, there would be no need of anybody else to settle these disputes. This was a dispute like dozens and hundreds of others, a tangle over a quarter-section of land, that came before the officers of the department. As Commissioner of Dominion Lands at that time it was my duty, practically my whole duty, to settle squabbles over disputes as to the right either to homesteads or to purchase a quarter-section of land. In this particular case the very fullest opportunity was given to all applicants. As I said a moment ago, there were three applicants to purchase this quarter-section.

Mr. BENNETT. Who were they?

Mr. TURRIFF. My Lyon, Mr. Montalbetti, and I remember well, a Mr. Moffat. They were all represented at Ottawa by counsel, and each counsel was allowed to go through the files and see all the papers in connection with the case, so each of them could see the claims made by the others. At the request of counsel they asked to be heard, a day was fixed, and they came up to my office and each presented his case. On the evidence given I gave my decision in accordance with the facts that were set before me, gave what I considered then was a right and proper decision, and I have had no reason from that day to this to change my opinion in any respect that that was a proper decision.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman know that his decision has been absolutely dissented from by Mr. Justice Wetmore?

Mr. TURRIFF. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I can assure him that it has.

Mr. TURRIFF. I may say to the hon. gentleman that later on one of the parties who felt aggrieved—and it is customary in a case of that kind that the unsuccessful party should feel aggrieved—through his counsel, I presume, made application for an order to take the matter before the Exchequer Court. That was done, and the action was dismissed.

Mr. BENNETT. Which of the three applicants?

Mr. TURRIFF. Mr. Lyon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was dismissed by consent of the government.

Mr. TURRIFF. I am not very well versed in legal points, but as I understand the matter, the government gave the right to one of the parties who felt aggrieved to bring the matter before the Exchequer Court. Personally, I did not think that should be done. We have had a good exhibition of the results of that kind of thing this last summer, setting aside patents after they have been issued by the government. My own view of the matter is that the government is bound to take all the precautions that are possible, in so far as they can get information, before a patent is issued; but when a patent is issued that should be final, and the party who buys the property after a patent has been issued by the government should know what he is getting.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Even although the patent has been obtained by the greatest possible fraud?

Mr. TURRIFF. Well, I think it is a question whether a good deal more harm would not result from cancelling patents after they are issued than would result even if, in some cases, there is fraud which was not known at the time, and, as the hon. member put it, there may have been fraud. Take what happened at Cobalt a short time ago. Patents were issued by the government, lands that had come to be worth millions of dollars were being bought and sold at Cobalt.

Mr. BRODER. The patents did not carry the mining rights.

Mr. TURRIFF. In this case they were leases and patents, and carried the surface and mining rights. These lands were being sold for millions and millions of dollars, and hundreds of thousands of people all over the country were interested, but when the question of the legality or illegality of the patents came up it brought on a disastrous slump in the value of Cobalt properties, and a great many people suffered in consequence.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the evidence given by the legal representatives of the three claimants, upon which the commissioner gave his decision, taken in writing, has it been preserved, and is it accessible?

Mr. TURRIFF. The evidence was all there on the file, and the counsel for the three different applicants used that evidence that was there on file, and made their argument from the evidence they had each presented.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was it taken orally before the commissioner?

Mr. TURRIFF. Yes, it was taken orally before me, so that I feel satisfied I am perfectly right when I say that the order for taking that before the Exchequer Court should never have been granted any more than patents that have been issued here in Ontario, carrying valuable mineral rights, after they are once granted should be questioned, causing loss to a great many people.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman ascertained that a patent was granted upon absolutely incorrect representations, and by collusion between the individual and the government's own agent, would he still think it right that the patent should not be cancelled?

Mr. TURRIFF. I am still of the opinion that more harm follows from cancelling patents than from not cancelling them. There may be an odd case, we have them in connection with issuing homestead patents, where there was evidence before the department that was conclusive, the homestead inspector made a report and confirmed the claim and the patent was issued. That land was afterwards sold to a third or, it may be, to a fourth party, and eventually it might be proven to the government that the original homesteader of that land had given some false evidence in connection with his application for this patent and his witnesses had confirmed this false evidence, the homestead inspector had been led astray and had not found out that the duties had not been completed, and on some technical ground like that, according to the argument of my hon. friends opposite, that patent should be set aside.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. member has very truly said that he does not apprehend, and cannot be expected to apprehend, the practice on information or petitions of right. In a case such as he has suggested, the Crown would never think of granting a fiat after the land had passed into the possession of a third person, but that does not touch the case where it does not pass out of the hand of the man who committed the fraud. This land was in the hands of the man who has committed the fraud to all intents and purposes. I am not saying that Mr. Mackenzie had committed a fraud, but Mr. Mackenzie had obtained an assignment of Montalbetti's right and had not paid him a dollar for it, and up to the time of Judge Wetmore's decision he had not paid him a dollar.

Mr. TURRIFF. That is a thing I do not know, I do not know if Mackenzie paid Montalbetti or not, or what price he paid. That is a point that was brought up by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake), who pointed out that a homesteader has no right to assign his homestead, and if he does he is liable to forfeit his homestead. That is true, but that has nothing to do with a case of this kind, it does not apply in any way to a purchase. If any man purchases a quarter-section of school lands from the government and makes a payment, or does not make a payment, after he has been given the right to purchase, he can immediately make an assignment of that purchase to any one he chooses, file the assignment in the department with a fee of $2, and the patent is issued to the assignee. Any one who looks up the regulations knows that is a fact; my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) knows it is a fact.

Mr. LAKE. Certainly I do not.

Mr. TURRIFF. Well, it is information for you that you certainly need on that point. Take the question of a pre-emption, A man cannot assign his homestead; if he does, he is liable to forfeit it, but a pre-emption is a different proposition, it is a purchase, and as soon as he has completed his homestead duties he does not need to pay a dollar on the pre-emption, but can assign it to any one, file the assignment in the department, the assignee pays for the pre-emption and the patent is issued to the purchaser.

Mr. LAKE. He cannot assign that until he has fulfilled his homestead duties and obtained his homestead.

Mr. TURRIFF. No, that is the case here. There were three applicants, and when the applicants came before me I considered that Montalbetti had the best claim, the prior claim, that he was the first man to take possession of the land, and I considered that he should be given the right to purchase. I gave my decision accordingly. Afterwards he sold his claim to Malcolm Mackenzie, of Macleod, the assignment was filed in the department, the usual fee paid and the patent issued.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why does the hon. member say that 'afterwards' he sold to Mackenzie?

Mr. TURRIFF. I do not know whether it was afterwards or before; I know that the assignment was filed in the department at all events. I cannot remember the dates; this happened some five or six years ago.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was on the 8th of July, 1901, that Mackenzie got this assignment, for which he did not pay one dollar up to the time of Judge Wetmore's decision, and it was on the 19th of July, eleven days afterwards, that the hon. member, then Commissioner of Crown Lands, gave his decision. It is just as well to be accurate about these matters, as they are rather important.

Mr. TURRIFF. That may be correct.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is absolutely correct.

Mr. TURRIFF. But what difference does it make? I do not know anything about this; it is none of my business.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why did you refer to the dates?

Mr. TURRIFF. In what way?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You said it was after this.

Mr. TURRIFF. I will not correct it, because I do not know which is correct; it may have been afterwards, or it may have been before.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am reading from the original records.

Mr. TURRIFF. The hon. member gives the dates, well and good. I accept them as correct. But, at all events, Mr. Montalbetti was given the right to purchase, and as soon as he had the right to purchase he had the right to assign.

Mr. LAKE. As soon as he had the right to purchase he had the right to assign; had he the right before?

Mr. TURRIFF. He had the right if he chose to assign before, whatever claim he had. If he had not been given the right to purchase, the assignment would not be any good. If I have a right to anything, I can assign it if I wish; there is nothing to prevent that in any shape or form.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the hon. member state when and how Montalbetti got the right to purchase? He says that when Montalbetti got the right to purchase he had the right to assign; when and how did he get the right to purchase?

Mr. TURRIFF. When the matter came before the commissioner of Dominion lands and he had decided that Montalbetti was the man of the three applicants who was entitled to purchase——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But he had assigned eleven days before that.

Mr. TURRIFF. That does not effect the matter in the slightest degree in any shape or form.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. All right.

Mr. TURRIFF. A good deal has been said by the hon member (Mr. Lake) about Mr. Lyon not receiving justice. Well, Justice Wetmore and the judge of the Exchequer Court, they both stated Mr Lyon had not any claim, if I understood the hon. gentleman aright.

Mr. LAKE. That he had no right capable of enforcement.

Mr. TURRIFF. The matter comes down to this: if my decision was wrong it could have been set aside.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. By the Exchequer Court?

Mr. TURRIFF. By the Exchequer Court.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was.

Mr. TURRIFF. The patent could have been cancelled. The matter was brought before the Exchequer Court and I was called to give evidence and if I remember right, to produce the papers on file. I appeared before the judge and gave my evidence and the case was dismissed as I understand it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. By the judge of the Exchequer Court?

Mr. TURRIFF. By the judge of the Exchequer Court.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I see.

Mr. TURRIFF. Probably I am not right technically. I do not pretend to be well versed in law matters; so far I have been pretty well able to keep out of law, and I do not know as much about it possibly as some other gentlemen. I will not say I am technically right, but the case was taken before the Exchequer Court to have the patents set aside and the case was dismissed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. By the consent of the government.

Mr. TURRIFF. The case was dismissed and Mr. Lyon had a right to appeal, and he has had that right all along, and he did not take advantage of it. His counsel in all probability felt they did not have a good case, and they did not go on with the appeal and they allowed the whole matter to drop.

These are the exact facts of the case and they cannot be controverted. So that I say, if I was wrong in my decision it has been backed up at all events by the Exchequer Court.

Mr. SPROULE. On what grounds did the Exchequer Court dismiss the case ?

Mr. TURRIFF. You have to apply to the Exchequer Court to find out. I do not know. I was a witness and was only there for about half an hour. I did not follow the case and I have not heard anything about it or seen any of the papers in connection with it for a good many years, so that I do not know exactly on what ground.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the hon. gentleman aware that by direction of the Minister of the Interior the counsel acting for the government dropped the case ? Is the hon. gentleman aware of that fact or is he not ?

Mr. TURRIFF. I am perfectly aware that the Department of the Interior at no time felt that any wrong had been done. They felt that the decision of the department had been perfectly right and they were not applying. It was not the Department of the Interior that was applying to have the patent set aside ; it was Mr. Lyon, he was applying and the Department of the Interior, I think, stated that they were not pressing the matter and took that ground all through.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have controverted the hon. gentleman several times in his statement, I desire to concur with him now. It is perfectly evident by the correspondence that from the first, the department wanted Mr. Mackenzie to have this land and did not want any question raised.

Mr. TURRIFF. I do not know that the leader of the opposition has any justification for saying that, in any shape or form.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will show it presently.

Mr. TURRIFF. I do not think there is any justification for that statement. Mr. Montalbetti's right to purchase the land was considered the best, and he was given permission to purchase it. The department had nothing whatever to do with Mr. Mackenzie's assignment in any shape or form.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There are a couple of personal letters which make that perfectly plain.

Mr. TURRIFF. That may possibly be, but so far as I know the department was dealing with the claim of Montalbetti, and if the decision I gave was wrong, at all events it has been sustained by the Exchequer Court. Now, Mr. Speaker, these are the actual facts of the case, and I do not know whether it is necessary for me to say anything more about it.

Mr. TURRIFF.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You have made out a very strong case.

Mr. TURRIFF. When the matter was taken to the Exchequer Court, and when the judge of the Exchequer Court dismissed the action, I felt it was pretty good proof that the decision I had given in the matter was a fair decision. I was settling cases of that kind every day, and I would not undertake to say that every decision I gave was right. I gave the decision to the best of my ability and the best of my knowledge, and I gave it absolutely outside of any consideration of whether the party applying for the quarter-section was a supporter of the government or an opponent of the government. That is one thing I can say to-day ; that in the six years that I administered that department I never in any shape or form turned a man down because he was an opponent of the government, or gave a man what he was not entitled to simply because he was a supporter of the government. These are the facts of the case and I feel quite satisfied to leave it to the judgment of the House as to whether the action taken was correct or not.

Mr. TAYLOR. We know what the judgment will be.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He has made a very strong defence.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto). The statements made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff) are very much at variance with the facts in the record brought down in answer to an order of the House. I shall deal briefly with the points raised by the hon. gentleman by way of apology or justification for the action of the government. In the first place, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff) has assured us that on the 18th July, 1901, when this reference was had to him as Dominion land commissioner, all the parties had the right to be heard ; all parties were accorded a fair hearing ; the matter was fully threshed out on its merits, and, that justice was done. Let us see, how far that statement of his is borne out by the return. There is a good deal of correspondence in connection with the matter, and just on this point I desire to quote the letter of Messrs. Latchford, Macdougall, and Daly, solicitors, at that time for Mr. Lyon. They wrote to Mr. James A. Smart, Deputy Minister of the Interior at Ottawa, on the 10th of July, 1901, re this property :

We have received to-day information from the department that we cannot be allowed to see the papers in this case with a view of presenting to you the facts which are before you, and which we consider would entirely justify you in refusing to act on the report of subland agent Nixon, until you have heard the other side of the case. The matter, we submit, is not one which Mr. Nixon could possibly deal with in the absence of official documents which are not accessible to him, and which are accessible to your department. We write now to renew our protest against the action which we understand the Commissioner of Dominion Lands intends to take, and to renew our applicaton for a hearing before action is taken.

That letter was written on the 10th of July and that was replied to by a curt letter from the secretary of the department, Mr. P. G. Keyes, on the 6th July, stating that the hearing would proceed at the office of the commissioner in the Langevin block on Thursday next, the 18th inst. Bear in mind that Messrs. Latchford, Macdougall and Daly, who were acting for Mr. Lyon, were in the city of Ottawa, and could not possibly communicate with their client, who was at Blairmore, and get from him an answer with which to meet the material filed by Mr. Montalbetti. They were not accorded that opportunity ; and, on the 22nd of July, we find them again writing a protest against this unfair treatment, which the hon. gentleman to-day attempts to justify. On that date they wrote to Mr. Keyes, the secretary of the department :

We have your favour of the 19th instant, inclosing same, made by the commissioner, who decided to give Felix Montalbetti the right of purchasing this property.

The hearing was on the 18th, and the next day, in spite of that protest, the commissioner makes his ruling in favour of Montalbetti. That is what the hon. gentleman calls a fair hearing. The letter proceeds:

We beg hereby to request that a patent be not issued to Montalbetti for some days in order that our client, Mr. Henry E. Lyon may have an opportunity of proving that the statements of Montalbetti filed with you are almost wholly incorrect. Our client states that he can prove by several uninterested witnesses that Montalbetti, never cultivated an inch of this land, and that he never built a house prior to to this year, having resided in the Canadian Pacific Railway section-house on their right of way.

This evidence could have been produced before the argument took place had we been permitted to see the files and know what was contained in Montalbetti's affidavit. This, however, was not granted us until a day or two before the argument. Our client is prepared, if necessary, to bring the witnesses to Ottawa in order that they may be examined in the department.

This protest was made two days after the ruling of the commissioner, and in face of that protest, on the third day afterwards, namely, the 25th of July, the patent was issued to Montalbetti. Another firm of solicitors in the city, Messrs. Lewis & Smellie, representing Mr. Alexander Moffat, also a claimant for these lands, or a part of them, wrote to the department on the 22nd of July, 1901, protesting against this hurried action, the same day on which Ritchie & Co. wrote their protest, and they conclude their letter in these words:

On behalf of the said Alexander Moffatt, for the above reasons, we beg to ask that this matter be considered by you, and, pending a decision by yourself, that no grant be issued to the said Felix Montalbetti, nor any step taken for the disposition of the surface rights of said quarter-section, and that, before any disposition of the matter is made by yourself, we further beg to ask that we be heard in support of our client's claim.

In the face of that, the wheels of justice move on. The Department of the Interior was moving towards Mr. Montalbetti and as soon as the patent could be rushed through upon that one-sided claim, the government issued the patent of this valuable town site to Mr. Montalbetti in the fact of these protests. I think that pretty well disposes of the statement of the hon. gentleman that a full and fair hearing was accorded to all claimants by him as land commissioner.

In a moment of apparent inadvertence the hon. gentleman referred to the action of the Ontario government in connection with some Cobalt properties. I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me the opportunity to refer to that matter. Now, what was done by the government of Ontario with regard to Cobalt properties for which patents were obtained by fraud and misrepresentation ? The Crown as represented by the Attorney General of Ontario took action in the courts of the province to set aside all grants of mining lands that were obtained by fraud or misrepresentation—and in this they differ from this government. I refer to the case of the Attorney General of Ontario vs. Hargraves, recently decided, in which the Crown entered action with the result that the grant was cancelled. In a further action of the Attorney General of Ontario vs. Brown and others, similar action was taken, with the result that a settlement was obtained by which the government of Ontario obtained an interest of immense value, which to-day is enriching the coffers of that province, but which otherwise would have gone into the pockets of a private speculator who had obtained vast government concessions on the basis of fraud and perjury. How different we find this government acting towards its favourites or even towards anybody who may have obtained a grant or concession by fraud or misrepresentation, as I shall prove that this grant was obtained before I sit down.

The hon. gentleman also, without evidently having any knowledge whatever of the facts of the case or the legal position in which it is now or ever was, says: 'Justice could have been obtained by appealing from my decision; the courts could have reviewed me.' The courts did review him. An action was brought in the Exchequer Court of Canada, where judgment was given dismising the action and confirming the patent. Well, that necessitates an argument of some length to show the different proceedings that were taken, but let it suffice to say this, that in the first place the Crown as represented by the Attorney General of this Dominion had to be tortured into taking action at all, and that was only during the absence of the then Minister of the Interior. The then Minister of Justice, the late Hon. David Mills, gave a fiat to proceed and I would like to point out that no action can be taken by a private individual against the Crown to cancel this or any other patent or Crown grant or concession without the consent of the Attorney General of the Dominion. Now, what was the action taken in this case? As I have said, after a great length of time the Crown was prevailed upon to allow its name to be used in connection with the action to cancel this patent. The Hon. David Mills granted the fiat in the absence of the Minister of the Interior, but on the return of the Minister of the Interior the fiat was removed. That was the reason for the dropping of the proceedings. Let me advert to the initiation of the proceedings in this case. These are the proceedings which the hon. gentleman who has taken his seat has said afforded a fair hearing. The information was issued by the King upon the relation of Henry B. Lyon, who was the complainant, who set the wheels of the law in motion, and among the other claims we find this:

Paragraph 5. During the course of the investigation there has been evidence that the said Felix Montalbetti falsely and fraudulently represented to J. G. Turriff, Esq., that he located on the land in question in April, 1898, and erected a house, &c.

So that we find the Crown, of its own motion, asserting that Montalbetti had falsely and fraudulently made these various assertions.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not learned in the law, but I do understand that a recital of the charge is an admission of it?

Mr. MACDONELL. This is the plea of the Crown. This is its statement of facts.

Mr. OLIVER. Does the hon. gentleman say that the Crown was asserting these things of its own motion or only for the purpose of bringing them before the court?

Mr. MACDONELL. Here is the title of the action which answers the hon minister——

Mr. OLIVER. If my hon. friend persists in that position, I withdraw my remarks.

Mr. MACDONELL. I just want to make it plain.

Mr. OLIVER. It is quite plain.

Mr. MACDONELL. The title is:

The King, on the information of the Attorney General for the Dominion of Canada and H. E. Lyon, plaintiff, and Montcalm Mackenzie and Felix Montalbetti, defendants.

Mr. MACDONELL.

Now the claim or the relief which is asked in the claim is contained in these words:

That the patent issued to Montcalm Mackenzie on the 25th April, 1901, should be declared to have been issued through fraud or in error or improvidently, and that the same should be declared null and void and should be delivered up by the defendant, Montcalm Mackenzie, for cancellation.

This was the claim for relief. This was the Hon. David Mills' action based on the facts as they appeared before him. And this shows the position in which the government was when it started out. The Crown stated the facts and instituted the action, and we shall see how the Crown disposed of its own claim and what became of the merits of the action.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). With the consent of the House, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to a matter of privilege. In 'Hansard' of yesterday there is a remark—

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I would call the attention of my hon. friend (Mr. W. Roche) to the fact that the House has before it a motion for Committee of Supply and that an hon. member has the floor. If the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. W. Roche) desires to make an explanation on a subject matter not before the House, he should take another occasion to do so.

Mr. W. ROCHE. I have the consent of the hon. member (Mr. A. C. Macdonell) who has the floor, and besides what I have to say will take only a moment. In the 'Hansard' report of yesterday's debate it is stated that I referred to the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) by name. The hon. member for Beauharnois did not order me to sit down, and I made no reference to him. From where the reporter sits, and as my hon. friend from Beauharnois has considerable bulk, it may have seemed as though the utterance to which I referred came from him and that I referred to him. But the hon. gentleman did not order me to sit down. I did not say 'the hon. member for Beauharnois' nor did I refer to that hon. gentleman.

SUPPLY—BLAIRMORE TOWN SITE.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) in his speech this morning pointed out how this valuable town site of Blairmore had been granted by patent from the Crown dated the 25th of June, 1901, for the sum of $480, to Malcolm Mackenzie. Now, let us consider the basis upon which this patent was granted, what right Mr. Mackenzie had to acquire these lands, and what were the proceedings that were gone through by the government to vest this valuable town site in him. It is to be borne in mind that, at the time of the grant, in fact, in March, 1901, according to the census of the territories, the population of this very piece of land, this very town site, amounted to 230 people. Therefore, it is safe to say, that, at the time of the grant in the following June, the population of this piece of land which was granted amounted to somewhere in the neighbourhood of 300 people. That land was granted, or assumed to be granted, to Mr. Mackenzie by certain assignments, or assumed assignments, given him by Montalbetti, Now, let us consider what, if any interest Montalbetti had in the lands, what right he had to ask for a patent, and what, if any, title passed from him to Mackenzie. I submit that there is nothing in the Lands Act, and was not then anything in the Lands Act, or in the departmental regulations, that in any way authorized the department to grant land of this character to anybody at the ordinary price of $3 an acre. I would ask you to bear in mind that this is not homesteading land, it is not taken up by the first settler that goes and squats upon it. It is not agricultural land in any sense of the word. It is and was a town site,—that is, a site upon which there is a flourishing community ; and were it not for the improper dealings by the Crown with this land and the uncertainty of the titles and the legal holding by the purchaser of subdivisions of this land, it is safe to say that the town of Blairmore would be a very large and flourishing community to-day. It is in the centre of a large coal area ; and the mines are being worked to advantage ; and, in every way, at that time it had great possibilities and gave promise of being a valuable tract of land. It was actually a town site. The railway had built a station on its right of way through the section. It was a prosperous village or town, and was growing rapidly.

Now, let us see on what foundation the grant was made. As I have said there is nothing in the Land's Act to justify the grant. There is nothing in the regulations of the department to authorize the giving of a deed to these lands in the ordinary way at $3 an acre. It is claimed that Montalbetti had some title. Whatever right he had was simply the right of a squatter upon Crown lands, and gave him no title under any statute or regulations in this country. Now, Mr. Mackenzie, we find, dealt with Montalbetti, and received from him at least two assignments of whatever rights he had in this land. There was a bargain between them ; but I submit that nothing passed in the way of title, because Montalbetti had nothing to pass and, furthermore, Mr. Mackenzie gave no consideration whatever for the deed. On reference to Mr. Mackenzie's own testimony at page 86 of the examination which was taken in the suit to which I have referred this morning, that of the King versus Mackenzie, is the following :

> I told him I would give him $1,000 and title to his three lots if I got the quarter-section ; I told him I would not give any more than that, and he said 'All right,' and he went over and dealt with Mr. McNeill.
> Q. Mr. McNeill is a partner of yours, is he not ?—A. Yes.
> Q. You paid how much, you said ?—A. I agreed to pay him $1,000.
>
> Q. Have you paid him that ?—A. I have not.
>
> Q. Was that to be paid unconditionally ?—A. That is what I understand.
>
> Q. There was no condition that he was to get anything unless you got the land ?—A. That was not my understanding of it. I have not paid him that $1,000.
> Q Why ?—A. He has never asked me for it.

That is a marvellous thing.

> Q. Never applied to you at all for that $1,000? —A. No, he never has.
> Q. Have you given him any security for it ? —A. I have not—no security whatever.

Now, does that appear to be a transaction of substance, or a transaction that is merely colourable ? Mr. Mackenzie stated to this illiterate Italian—and he is illiterate—that he could get the patent for it. It is alleged that that lies at the bottom of it—that Montalbetti could not get the patent but some body else could. That is a very curious aspect of the case. It has turned out that Mr. Mackenzie has made good the statement that he could get the patent, because he actually did get it. The fact is that Montalbetti had no title whatever, had not a scintilla of right to claim title to the land, not being the first settler on the land, as found by Mr. Justice Wetmore. Whatever application Mr. Mackenzie made for this land, which was made as a basis of grant to him or in the right of Montalbetti, whatever foundation there was for Montalbetti's claim to this land was his own affidavit which was proven in the court to be based on fraudulent misrepresentation. Apparently Montalbetti thought his title was defective, that the grounds he was advancing for the grant were not tenable, that the facts he was stating in his affidavit were not true—at least he had that doubt in his mind. This affidavit of his was and is the application and the basis upon which he, or at least upon which his assignee, Mackenzie received the grant of a patent and he states this : at paragraph 18 of the affidavit.

> That I understand and agree that the sale to me of the land which I hereby apply to purchase shall be void if it shall be hereafter proved that any statement in this solemn declaration is incorrect.

Prophet-like, he had doubts and misgivings about the correctness of his own statement, and apparently he was advised that the best thing for him to do at that time was to insert in his evidence a statement that if it was not true in any respect the grant of the patent would be void.

That brings us to this point that the real purchaser, the man who dealt directly with the government and the only man who dealt with the government, was Mackenzie. These declarations, I may say, were prepared in the office of Mackenzie and his partner, the firm of McNeill & Mackenzie, barristers and solicitors, and I may say further that Mr. Montalbetti's naturalization papers were prepared in the same way by Mr. Mackenzie himself; up to that date apparently he was an alien—so that the real purchaser, the man who really dealt with the government was Mackenzie. It was he who paid the $480, and that is all that was paid. It was to him that the patent was issued, although there is no colour of right to him to acquire the patent or ask for the deed. We find on that point and in that connection the land commissioner's evidence is important. Land Commissioner Turriff, now the hon. member for East Assiniboia, was examined and his evidence was certainly of a most marvellous nature. What was before Mr. Turriff when he decided the application in favour of Montalbetti or Mackenzie? The affidavits and the two reports of the Dominion land agents, Nixon and Stuart. These were the papers that were before him and on which only he could base his decision, because he had no other material before him. Although other applicants for these lands, who had built upon the lands and who had rights there in that respect, asked to be heard, asked that they be allowed to submit evidence to meet the inspector's report and Montalbetti's affidavit, they were not allowed to do so; the haste of the department was so great, the land commissioner was so anxious to hand in his decision, that he rushed it through with the material I have stated.

Mr. TURRIFF. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to make a correction? The other applicants were given every opportunity to bring in any evidence that they desired to bring before the hearing and at the hearing. They did not say then that they wanted to give any further evidence at the hearing; they were quite satisfied at the time and it was only afterwards, when the decision went against them, that they said they wanted to give further evidence.

Mr. MACDONELL. I have already been under the necessity of correcting the hon. gentleman on that matter this morning. The correspondence brought down shows conclusively that on the 10th and 22nd of July, 1901, Mr. Latchford's firm of solicitors in this city protested vigorously against the disposition of this matter without their client being permitted to answer the land commissioner's reports and the affidavit of Montalbetti. Further than that, the letter of Messrs. Smellie & Company, solicitors, representing Moffat, who also had a claim against these lands, was read. He was not allowed to put in evidence to meet the report I have just mentioned. Now, what does Mr. Turriff say on examination? He is asked this question at page 4 of his depositions.

In a declaration filed by Montalbetti in support of his claim, in paragraph 8, he states:

That I understand and agree that the sale to me of the land which I hereby apply to purchase shall be void if it shall be hereafter proved that any statement in this solemn declaration is incorrect.

Q. Do you recollect that clause?—A. I do not.

Q. If I show you a copy I got from the department it may refresh your memory. Look at clause 18. Do you recollect seeing that clause?—A. I do not recollect any of the clauses particularly, I know I had the affidavit before me.

Q. Then you don't recollect if that clause formed the basis of your judgment?—A. No, we would not do anything on the strength of a clause like that in any shape or form.

Q. What do you mean by that?—A. I would not place any strength on a clause of that kind.

Q. No weight was placed on this clause?—A. No.

The land commissioner placed no weight whatever on that clause. Then he further says at page 6 of his testimony:

I did not give my decision on Montalbetti's evidence. My decision would be the same whether Montalbetti's affidavit had been in or not.

That certainly is a most remarkable statement to make and it is commented on by the judge of the Exchequer Court, and I may further comment here by saying that the language of the hon. gentleman's report and the language of the affidavit of Montalbetti bear a most singular resemblance to each other; they are so similar that one who reads them both is forced to the conclusion that the man who made the report had the affidavit in his mind.

Further we will see what Montalbetti has to say about that, just putting in parallel columns the examination of the land commissioner and the statement of Mr. Montalbetti himself. In his statement of defence, filed in this very action he says at paragraph 4, of his defence:

The said defendant, Felix Montalbetti, says that when the said application was made by him for a patent of the lands in question herein, the only representations which were made by him to the Department of the Interior or to the minister or any of the officials thereof, was contained in the said statutory declaration——

That is the affidavit I have referred to.

——made by the said Felix Montalbetti on the 7th day of June, 1901.

The said defendant further says that the statements made in said statutory declaration are true in every particular, in substance and in fact, and no other representations were made at any time to J. G. Turriff or any other official of the said Department of the Interior or otherwise save those contained in the said statutory declaration.

Mr. Montalbetti is clearly of the opinion that nothing else was represented to the department except what is contained in that affidavit.

With reference to the reports of Nixon and Stuart in the papers brought down we will see how they were obtained. The report of Inspector Nixon is of very considerable significance and we will see how Nixon was kept tab of by Mr. Mackenzie and how closely he was followed up.

Mr. Nixon, it must be remembered was instructed by the land commissioner to make a report on this land, and this was apparently before him at the time he dealt with the matter. It is singular that Mr. Mackenzie was aware that Mr. Nixon had been instructed to obtain a report; it is singular that he was informed of the conflicting claims, and of the particular time that Mr. Nixon was going to make his visit, and all about it. I quote from Mr. Mackenzie's evidence:

Q. Where did you meet Mr. Nixon?—A. I met him in Macleod.

Q. That was before he made his report?—A. Yes.

Q. What conversation had you with him then?—A. He told me he was going to make a report as to the conflicting claims there.

Q. Did he name the claimants?—A. Yes, he did.

Q. Who did he say they were?—A. Mr. Moffat, Lyon and Montalbetti.

Q. What else did he say?—A. I don't know that, when he came back down he said there was no doubt in his mind that there were conflicting claims.

Q. What did he say at that time before he made his report?—A. I don't know if there was anything else said, only he was going to make his report.

Q. There was no suggestion that any one claimant was likely to succeed?—A. No.

Q. Did you tell him at that time that you were interested in it?—A. I think he knew I was interested in it. I am satisfied that he knew I was interested in it.

When did you next see Nixon?—A. I saw him sometime after he came back down.

Q. Would it be a few days afterwards?—A. I don't know, it was very shortly after he came back, it might have been the next day; I don't know whether he was on the train that day I went to Blairmore. I went up on the train the day he went up to report.

Q. Did you see Mr. Nixon the time you saw him in Macleod and the time he made his report?—A. Yes, I did.

Q. When would that be, can you fix the day in any way?—A. It is possible that he and I came back down on the train that day.

Q. Had you seen him before he made his report again?—A. Yes, I saw him in Macleod.

Q. Where was that?—A. If I do not mistake it was in the Queen's hotel.

Q. Had you any conversation with Mr. Nixon after seeing him in Macleod of which you have just spoken on the date of making his report on this land?—A. Yes, I saw him before he made his report, I saw him in Macleod.

Q. What took place then?—A. I understood from him that he would report in favour of Montalbetti as being the first squatter on this land.

This evidence shows a very remarkable state of affairs. It is worthy of note, that the subland commissioner should be accompanied on his trip of inspection backwards and forwards by Mr. Mackenzie, that afterwards they should consult together in the hotel at Macleod, and that apparently Mackenzie pursued Nixon until he elicited the the information that he was going to report in Montalbetti's favour. It must be remembered too, that Montalbetti was Mackenzie, and Mackenzie was Montalbetti, because Mackenzie at that time had an assignment of Montalbetti's right. We can see therefore how impartial Nixon's report was; the report which was so hastily acted upon by the Canadian commissioner of lands. In the same way, as to Mr. Stewart's inspection, he seems to have been pursued by Mackenzie who interviewed him frequently with regard to his report, and who saw Stewart before he went up to make his report and who saw him afterwards. What took place between the two we can only surmise. At all events, I leave to the House to consider the impartiality of these reports upon which the claim of Montalbetti was granted.

Let us look to see what is the value of this land, and it will be fair to Mr. Mackenzie to take his own estimate in that respect. I do not want to do Mr. Mackenzie or anybody else an injustice, or to exaggerate in any way the value of this land, and so I will take Mackenzie's own evidence on that point. Mr. Mackenzie was giving evidence as to the value of this land at the time the grant of 160 acres was made for $480; the grant of a whole town site for practically nothing, and this is what Mr. Mackenzie deposed:

Q. Do you know how many buildings there are altogether, I am told there are about forty?—A. I should imagine there are about forty.

Q. Do you know what the valuation of the improvements on this quarter-section before the issue of the patent would amount to?—A. I have not the slightest idea in the world.

Q. I am informed they are worth about $40,000 or $50,000?—A. That may be, I would not contradict that.

Mr. Mackenzie here admits that the value of the improvements alone was $40,000, and he gave the value of the land itself as in the neighbourhood of $50,000. He was asked as to the value of the lands together with the buildings and this is what he deposed:

Q. What do you consider this quarter-section worth?—A. I have not the slightest idea in the world.

Q. You have some idea?—A. The value of the land depends entirely on whether the coal mines are going to be worked or not, and as to whether the Canadian Pacific Railway will have their permanent station and yard grounds there.

Q. These things being considered, what do you think the value is to-day?—A. I think it is impossible to give any estimate as to what the value of that townsite is. I think it is likely to be deserted some time, and on the other hand likely to be a very good town.

Q. Worth $50,000 ?—A. Yes, if the coal mines go on, it will.

Now, the coal mines have gone on and have become prosperous and are in full operation to-day. The value given by Mr. Mackenzie is the value of the land at that time, and I am not speaking now of the enhanced value since by reason of settlement and development.

In these facts, an action was brought at the instance of the King, upon the relation of Lyon, to cancel this patent. It was felt that a great outrage had been committed ; the people who had built upon the land and who were threatened with the loss of their improvements were aroused, and on facts presented to Hon. David Mills, then Minister of Justice, and which the Minister of Justice deemed proper and adequate he gave Lyon a fiat to proceed to cancel this patent. Under that fiat, proceedings were taken, and Judge Wetmore was appointed referee of the Exchequer Court to visit the district and take evidence. After a very full hearing, the examination of the witnesses occupying seven days or more, Judge Wetmore presented his report dated the 15th of November, 1902, which report is a judgment on the merits of Mr. Montalbetti's claim. I quote from that judgment :

Felix Montalbetti admitted on his cross-examination before me that portions of the statement in paragraphs 6 and 7 of that declaration were untrue in the following respects——

Judge Wetmore refers there to the declaration on which Montalbetti obtained this patent, and he declares that in the following respects the declaration was false.

(a) That he erected other outbuildings than the stable upon the land in question ; (b) that he cultivated a portion of the land in the year 1901; (c) that he erected a stable in the year 1899; (d) that since 1898 he kept upon the said lands and in the said buildings certain stock, including a cow and some calves and some poultry.

I, therefore, find, as a matter of fact, that these statements in the declaration were untrue in the respects above mentioned. I find such declaration to be untruthful in other particulars. As a matter of fact I do not believe that either the defendant Montalbetti or the plaintiff Lyon down to just immediately previous to the time that Lyon placed the store upon the land in question, as hereinafter stated, erected any building upon the land or did any work thereon by cultivation or otherwise with the purpose of squatting on it or permanently locating upon it or of retaining any rights respecting it.

He proceeds further very much in the same strain pointing out in detail the untruthful statements made by Montalbetti in his declaration, and finds as follows :

As to the character of Felix Montalbetti's acts with respect to this land, I find that he came there in April, 1898, as section foreman of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, with the intention of residing on such land in that capacity alone, for the purposes of his duties as such section foreman.

I also find that Felix Montalbetti did not have a garden on the land.

The untruthful statements and misrepresentations which I have found to have been made in this declaration, as hereinbefore stated, are so many and of such a character that I cannot resist the conclusion that they were fraudulently made, with the intention of improperly influencing the minds of the officials of the Department of the Interior in determining to whom the right to purchase the land in question should be given.

This is practically his concluding statement, and it is final, and yet Montalbetti stated that if his statements of fact were found to be untrue, he was willing that the patent should be cancelled. Why was it not cancelled ? The immense value was there ; why was it that his offer to have the patent cancelled if the statements were untrue was not accepted by the government and the land taken back? There were other fish to fry apparently. Then he proceeds further :

According to the bargain between the defendants, Mackenzie was to pay this $1,000 to Montalbetti in any event, whether the patent was issued to him or not. Of course, if the patent was issued to some other person, he could not convey the lots to Montalbetti. In other words Mackenzie bought out whatever interests Montalbetti had, and took the risk of getting the patent issued to him. That was the arrangement, according to the evidence of the defendant. Although the patent issued to Mackenzie on the 25th July, 1901, not one dollar of this $1,000 has yet been paid to Montalbetti, and he does not hold the scratch of a pen by way of security, or in recognition of such indebtedness. I cannot understand this state of affairs. It is opposed to business methods, and it strikes me as unreasonable.

Further down he states :

I am not in a position to report fully what the nature and character of the evidence or material was upon which Mr. Turriff made his report, because the evidence before me does not establish it. It is clear that Montalbetti's solemn declaration (which Mr. Turriff in his evidence calls an affidavit) was before him, and reports from two departmental officers, Messrs. Stewart and Nixon, were also before him, and the nature of portions of these reports was disclosed in Mr. Turriff's examination. Exhibit No. 5 in Mr. Turriff's examination is a copy of Mr. Nixon's report.

Mr. Turriff, however, referring to his report, testified as follows : 'I did not give my decision on Montalbetti's evidence. My decision would be the same whether Montalbetti's affidavit had been in or not.

Then the judge proceeds to comment on this extraordinary statement of Mr. Turriff. There is much more in the judge's lengthy judgment, but enough has been cited to show the fraudulent character of Montalbetti's application, to show that he had not only no rights whatever to the indulgence of the Crown, but no rights at the hands of the Crown. Then, on this evidence the matter came up for hearing before the Exchequer Court at Ottawa, where a motion was made by the plaintiffs for judgment; and we find that judgment was given by Mr. Justice Burbidge on the 20th of March, 1903, with the report of Mr. Justice Wetmore on the application before him. Mr. Justice Burbidge says this:

> At the time the sale to Mackenzie was made the quarter-section mentioned had become of very considerable value as a town site, or prospective town site. The Canadian Pacific Railway ran through the quarter-section and the company had built a station building on its right of way.
> There does not appear at any time to have been any question of the Crown disposing of the quarter-section at the best price that could then be obtained for it. It is assumed apparently that some one had a right to purchase it at the current rate of $3 an acre; and after inquiry and hearing the parties the Commissioner of Dominion Lands decided the controversy in favour of the defendant Mackenzie, and the patent was issued to him.
> Now the evidence that has been taken in this case, and the report of the learned referee, show, I think, very clearly that if one has regard to the quarter-section as a whole neither Felix Montalbetti nor Lyon had any such right, or any equitable claim to the consideration and indulgence of the Crown.

And so forth. The case, however, was referred by Mr. Justice Burbidge to a further hearing for the purpose of obtaining further evidence from the Dominion Lands Commissioner, and the judgment proceeds to dispose of the matter in this way:

> Now with regard to setting aside the patent on the ground that the Crown has been deceived, and that it was issued to the prejudice of the public, I should have thought that a case had been clearly made out, if it were not for the evidence of the Commissioner of Dominion Lands to the effect that his decision would have been the same if Felix Montalbetti's declaration had not been before him. I am not sure that I fully understand what he meant by that, and then it appears that the evidence does not disclose all the material that he had before him when he made his decision. I think all that should be made to appear before the motion for judgment to set aside the patent is disposed of. And if on further inquiry it should appear that the commissioner in making his decision relied on the report of Mr. Nixon, the subagent, then the latter should also be examined to see how far his report was based on information derived from the defendants or either of them. And further, I see no objection, if the Attorney General should desire it, to the inquiry extending to show what the practice of the Department of the Interior is, where application is made to purchase lands on which a number of squatters had put up buildings or made improvements on the land.
> Not being satisfied that I had before me sufficient materials to enable me to give judgment upon the motion to set aside the patent in issue in his case, I direct, in accordance with rule 124 of the general rules and orders of the court, that the motion stand for further consideration, and in the meantime the further inquiry suggested may be proceeded with and the further evidence taken before the court.

That is the evidence of the Dominion Land Commissioner, Mr. Turriff, and of the subagent Nixon. The matter was disposed of in that way; that was in March, 1903. So that at that stage we find urgent letters from the then Minister of the Interior to the Department of Justice to have these proceedings discontinued. And right here allow me to refer to the remarks made this morning by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), when he said that this action had been disposed of upon its merits. Now, almost immediately following this judgment, when his own further examination was ordered by the judge, we find requests from the Department of the Interior to the Department of Justice to have these proceedings discontinued, to have the King's name withdrawn, because we know that when the King's name is withdrawn the whole action lapses. We find that actually did take place, the King's name was withdrawn, and I have the record of the proceedings here. I will not trouble the House with reading this correspondence at length, it is sufficient for me to refer to the dates. A letter from the Hon. Clifford Sifton to the Minister of Justice on the 1st of October, 1902; that was when he first began these requests. Further a still more urgent letter at great length on the 7th of February, 1903:

> His behalf to have the patent set aside, the Crown is not pressing and sees no reason for pressing to have the patent set aside and the matter reopened.

Another on December 17, 1903, also from the Minister of the Interior to the Minister of Justice, to the same effect:

> The judge of the Exchequer Court has held that as between one another and as agents the Crown, neither Lyon nor MacKenzie, nor any other occupant of the land, had any right capable of enforcement.

That was not correct. The disposition of the matter was that the judge ordered that further evidence be taken; that you will not find in this book:

> The judge, however, states in his judgment that the only point seemingly of importance, in respect of which the public was prejudiced, was the price obtained for the land was wholly inadequate. That, however, is not a reason for bringing suit to set aside the patent, nor can the Crown ask to set aside the patent on the ground that the price is altogether inadequate. The Crown does not attempt to sell lands which have an artificial value, by reason of being valuable for town sites or for any similar reason, at the highest price obtainable, and the whole experience of the department, both under the late administration and under the present administration, proves conclusively that an attempt to hold land from sale and settlement, under ordinary terms and prices, with the object of selling particular parcels at higher prices, would result in trouble and expense which would more than counterbalance increased receipts, and would cause a great deal of trouble and irritation.

CLIFFORD SIFTON.

These letters show conclusively the attitude of the Department of the Interior towards this transaction and towards the preservation of Mackenzie in his rights. We also find a very notable instance in this proceeding. When action is taken and when the name of the King is first obtained, on an application to the then Minister of Justice for that leave, as is commonly insisted upon, the relator is bound to give security for the costs of the government. That is done because the litigation is conducted for the benefit of the individual, and it is right and proper that the Crown should be indemnified against costs. A bond was given by Mr. Lyon in the sum of $2,000 for the costs of the action. Now, when the name of the King was withdrawn from these proceedings, and when Mr. Lyon was practically within reach of the fruits of his vindication, when the patent was on the verge of cancellation and would have been cancelled had the proceedings been allowed to continue, we find that there was a bill of costs for the solicitors. Now, if the government was rightly and honestly disposed to let the relator pay his own costs, they also should have insisted upon the Crown being paid its costs. But what do we find? A most unusual thing, a most improper thing; we find the Crown actually paying the costs of this whole proceeding. We find in the records of the department, dated 12th November, 1906, this receipt:

Costs of litigation, Department of the Interior, received from the minister of the Crown the sum of $2,585 in full payment of bill of costs as taxed by the deputy minister in the matter of the King on the action of the Attorney General.

(Sgd.) EWART, OSLER & McGARRY.

So the government, having received the handsome sum of $450 for this town site, immediately paid out lavishly the money of the people for costs of solicitors involved in the matter, when there was no legal, moral or other liability to pay those costs, except that the department admitted a wrong had been done to Lyon in depriving him of his right of litigation, that the patent was obtained by a trick which should never have been allowed to stand, and in that view they gave the costs.

Then we find an extremely wonderful solicitude on the part of the Crown that Lyon's claims against Mackenzie and Montalbettti should be dismissed. Why should the Crown be so solicitous for the welfare of Mackenzie and Montalbetti. It is impossible to say, but we find letters in the department which prove that the costs were paid on the distinct understanding that Lyon would not proceed further against Mackenzie and Montalbetti and that the Crown should get a release from Lyon for Mackenzie and Montalbetti. In other words the Crown paid for a release of all claims by Lyon against these parties. I find a letter of Mr. Keyes, secretary of the Department of the Interior, to Mr. Fraser on the 25th of April, 1906, threatening to reopen the whole matter and cancel the patent unless these releases were given. I find a further letter from Mr. Keyes to Mr. Newcombe, deputy Minister of the Department of Justice, dated 27th November, 1905, stating that Lyon must release the defendants Mackenzie and Montalbetti from all claims before the costs can be paid. To say that that is a marvellous occurrence does not do justice to the situation. Then we find protests from that section of country coming in. We find the people there writing to the department a large number of letters of protest—people who had built on parts of the property and whose claims have been ignored by the department to this hour. I find that the people of Blairmore applied to the government for five acres of land for the purposes of a cemetery. That application was declined. There was no available land fit for the purpose, but what could not be devoted to the purposes of a cemetery was given to Mackenzie and who, we have been told to-day, is a prominent Liberal in that section, who was the Liberal candidate at the last Dominion election, and who is to-day a Liberal member in the legislative assembly of Alberta.

We find that this condition of affairs continued, the Crown declining to proceed further in the matter, until at last the action came up for hearing before the Exchequer Court here and by judgment of the 30th May, 1904, was dismissed. It was dismissed on the following consent by the Crown:

The Crown and counsel for the plaintiffs, His Majesty the King and Lyon vs. Mackenzie et al, consent that the action be dismissed without costs.

Then a motion was made on behalf of the defendant for judgment, and counsel for the plaintiff, His Majesty the King, consenting, the action was dismissed without costs. That was done at the request of the Crown. It was done in spite of the protest from the solicitors of Mr. Lyon, Ewart, Osler & Company. Mr. Chrysler, who had been specially retained by the Department of the Interior, appeared in court and asked to have the King's name withdrawn from the proceedings. That was done by the court and the order referred to made, also without costs apparently.

But, as I have pointed out, the costs were subsequently paid by the Crown without reason or excuse, apparently for the purpose of having this whole matter hidden up or of endeavouring in some way to placate Mr. Lyon by offering him a miserable pittance instead of his rights, and for the purpose of obtaining a release and discharge from Lyon for Mackenzie and Montalbetti.

Now, I am in no way concerned with the case of Mr. Lyon. I am simply viewing this matter from the standpoint of the public alone. Mr. Lyon may have or may not have any rights as against the Crown and Mackenzie on these lands, but the position I take is this, that here was a valuable tract of land, consisting of a town site with buildings thereon, that a foreigner was utilized for the sole purpose apparently of being used as a tool, that the foreigner made an application based on an affidavit which two judges have found was false and fraudulent, that this foreigner assigned—and the Minister of Justice will not contradict me when I say he had nothing to assign—this bogus claim to a prominent Liberal in that district, that this Liberal obtained the patent and obtained it in the way I have pointed out, that proceedings were taken by Lyon and others standing behind him who were interested in the result of his litigation because if the patent given Mackenzie were cancelled, their rights would be admitted, and we find that two judges declared that the application of Montalbetti for the patent was false and fraudulent.

SUPPLY—BLAIRMORE TOWN SITE.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall soon conclude my remarks. I was about to emphasize one point further. The complaint that I have been attempting to give voice to, and the charge that I bring against the government is that they did not cancel this patent although the patent was granted in fraud, or in error, or in improvidence. Whichever of these three may have led to the granting of this patent, there was still the right in the government to cancel the patent when knowledge of the facts was brought to their attention. That opportunity was afforded years ago. The complainant Lyon forced that knowledge upon the government. Even if the government had not the knowledge from other sources, Lyon gave them that knowledge. The judgment of Mr. Justice Wetmore points out errors and misstatements contained in the application. And with that before them, and action having been initiated by Mr. Lyon, a citizen of this country, the government failed to prosecute the action, but had it dismissed by withdrawing from the proceedings. Therefore, the transaction stands as a most discreditable one to this government and to the Department of the Interior particularly. In further proof that the government were aware of these facts, I desire to refer to a letter of their solicitor Mr. Chrysler advising the Department of the Interior of the judgment of Mr. Justice Burbidge by which the action was referred for further evidence. Addressing Mr. Sifton on March 20, 1905—the very day on which this judgment was given—Mr. Chrysler says, in part :

The judge of the Court of Exchequer delivered judgment this morning in this case and I attended, having been notified by the registrar that the judge desired my attendance on behalf of the Crown. The judgment is a written judgment, and should, perhaps, be considered either by the Department of Justice or by your department.

The judge intimated that, as between the parties to the suit, Lyon & Mackenzie, he thinks neither is entitled to the patent, but he is prepared to set aside the patent granted to Mackenzie if the Crown desire to do so. At all events that he would do so if some further evidence were given to him as to the practice of the department, and he has directed that opportunity be offered for the giving of further evidence, and intimates that probably the Crown might consider it desirable to take that course, in order to protect the rights of other persons who have built houses upon the property.

I have not ordered a copy of the judgment, but I think one should be obtained and considered either by the Department of Justice or by you, meantime I shall take no further step without receiving instructions to do so.

Thus the solicitor for the government advises the government that they have but to lift their finger to have this patent cancelled, thus restoring to the Crown all its rights in this very valuable town site, worth between $100,000 and $200,000 at least. And, not only that, but the Crown would be in a position to do justice to the large number of other settlers—for there were others besides Lyon and Montalbetti who had settled on the land. The government knows that there are others who made claims, because these people have built upon the land, and because Mr. Mackenzie, anxious to retain his title to as much as possible, would like to give up a great deal to retain the title for them or a portion. Thus, we find Mr. Mackenzie is appealing to the department saying that he is ready to part with such portion of the land as these persons are entitled to. As late as November 15, 1906, writing to Hon. Frank Oliver, Minister of the Interior, he says in part :

When I met your surveyor, Mr. Bray, near Blairmore some weeks ago, he seemed to suggest that I might transfer the whole of block 24 on the plan right out to the railway track to Lyons. I told him I was prepared to do so. Some other people have settled on some of the lots shown on block 24, but if you wish me to do so I have no objection to transfer the whole of this block to Lyons. The people on those lots are simply squatters.

'But if you wish me to do so, I have no objection to transfer the whole of this block.' What has he to do with giving away these lands? If they are the lands of the Crown neither the Minister of the Interior nor anybody else has the right to give them away; if they belong to these other people, Mr. Mackenzie has no right to transfer the title. But it is curious to note that he suggests that these people on these lands should be treated simply as squatters. These people settled there in as bona fide a manner as Montalbetti squatted upon that portion of land which Mr. MacKenzie claims. Now, not only do we find the solicitor advising the department in the way I have indicated, but we find the Department of the Interior itself well aware that it has the right to cancel and set aside this patent. Will it do so? Is there any reason why it should not do so? Who is interested in this transaction? Who is behind this $200,000 town site? Why does not the government set aside the patent? We find the secretary of the Department of the Interior, Mr. Keyes, writing to Mr. Fraser, the solicitor representing Mr. Mackenzie on April 25, 1906 :

Adverting to the departmental letter to you of the 11th of January last, in the matter of the King upon the information of Lyon against Mackenzie and Montalbetti, and to your reply thereto of the 15th of the same month, I am directed to inform you that it has been decided that no further action will be taken by the department toward the settlement. with Mr Mackenzie unless he files here the necessary deeds vesting in Messrs. Pelletier and Lyon the title to the whole of the lands fenced by them.

Pelletier was also a squatter and a claimant.

I have further to say that if these transfers are not filed forthwith, the whole case will be reopened with a view to the cancellation of the patent which has been issued to Mackenzie.

The government there is voicing its own knowledge of its right to cancel the patent, and say it will be cancelled unless the deeds of small fractional parts of acres are given to these parties. The extent of land on which Lyon has built is little more than half an acre. Just what Pelletier claims, I do not know. Unless Mackenzie deeds at once these fractions to Lyon and Pelletier this department is going to take action to reopen the whole matter with a view of cancelling the patent. That is exactly what is being complained of. They have not up to this time taken any steps, the Crown has been put in possession of information which enables it to do so. Not only does it decline to see that justice is done, but it has wilfully perverted justice by interfering in the proceedings and withdrawing them from the court. Now what is the reason for this ? The transaction certainly has a very bad appearance. It seems to me that the government in selling the town site for $480 admits its worth. The transaction is one which well deserves the censure of this House, and I have great pleasure in seconding the resolution.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I think perhaps we would get a better idea of what my hon. friend is driving at if I were to give the House the allusion of the Calgary 'Herald' of February 28 to this matter. The allusion is based I think on the motion dated February 6, by Mr. J. Herron, M. P. for Alberta division in the Dominion House, asking for an order of the House to bring down papers in this particular case. The paper heads the article :

Ventilate the Blairmore town site scandal and the Alberta land department swindle. Member of the provincial legislature holds a title which the judge said was obtained by fraud. Right is not justice—favourites screened.

I notice that the hon. gentleman whose motion was the cause of this statement has not seen fit to father the proceedings of to-day in the House. I presume he was ashamed to do so.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. The hon. member (Mr Herron) is in the lumber committee at the present time.

Mr. OLIVER. He was not a few minutes ago. He was along with some of the members of the opposite party at two o'clock last night, I presume. About two o'clock our friends were very scarce on the other side, and I guess the member for Alberta was with them. There have been so many statements made here to-day with regard to this matter, and there have been so many statements made in the papers at other times, that it will be necessary in order to arrive at a thorough understanding to bring these statements down to a concrete form. If I were successful in following the hon. gentleman who just sat down (Mr. Macdonnell) he made three allegations which I desire to allude to particularly. One was that the government charged in a legal document that this patent had been secured by fraud ; the other statement was that Justice Burbidge, in dismissing the case used words of a similar nature to those which are quoted here in the Calgary 'Herald.' I will read the judge's words as so quoted :

It is very plain that the defendant Mackenzie obtained the land in question through fraud ; but owing to the action of the Crown, which I can hardly understand in withdrawing from the case, I am forced to find that Lyon has no legal right to cancel the patent obtained by Mackenzie. But had the Crown remained in the case I would find that Mackenzie obtained the land by fraud, and immediately cancel his patent. However, I have no alternative in the matter, and will dismiss the case without costs.

I take this as a statement supposed to be made by Judge Burbidge in his decision in the case, that Mackenzie had obtained the land by fraud. The third statement I wish to draw the attention to is that the case of Lyon was dismissed because the government withdrew from it. He supported the first statement by reading from a document being the decision by which the case was entered in the courts; and he knew when he read it, and the House knew, at least I am satisfied the leader of the opposition knew, that the statement which was read as being an assertion by the Crown, was not in any sense of the word an assertion by the Crown.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why not?

Mr. OLIVER. Because it was not, that is the only reason. It was a formal statement of Lyon's allegation in the case, but was not a statement on the part of or on behalf of the Crown, except in order to promote the trial of the case, as Lyon desired to have it tried.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is the statement of the Crown on the relation of Lyon.

Mr. OLIVER I can only say that such a contention on the part of any hon. member of parliament is anything but a credit to this House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We defer to the hon. gentleman's legal knowledge.

Mr. OLIVER. With regard to this quotation in the Calgary 'Herald,' I have read what the Calgary 'Herald' has said, and which my hon. friend practically reproduced in his remarks to-day. But there are no such words, they are not the same words, there are no words that will bear any such meaning of construction in the judgment of Judge Burbidge as are published in the Calgary 'Herald.' There are no words or set of words in the judgment of Judge Burbidge which would indicate in any degree that the judge rendered his decision in the case on anything but its absolute merits according to the evidence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, he is entirely mistaken.

Mr. OLIVER. Let me put a question to the hon. gentleman. This case, my hon. friend is aware, has been the cause of a great deal of talk in the country. He is perfectly aware that the only members of this House who know the ordinary circumstances, would have any knowledge of the facts, are the member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) and myself. And I observe, and the House will observe that if he proposes to take any part in this debate he has been careful not to do it until I have been deprived of the opportunity of reviewing such charges as he may see fit to make.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the minister referring to me ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am. So that I think any remarks my hon. friend may have to made as to the position which I take, if he wanted to have a fair consideration of this matter, if he did not want to lend himself to that systematic campaign of slander against private individuals which has been the policy of his party during all this session,—he would have made his charges and listened to the reply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The charges have been made already and as far as I am concerned, after I have concluded my remarks, with the consent of the House, the hon. gentleman may get up and answer them.

Mr. OLIVER. I am very pleased to have the hon. gentleman's permission.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Quite so.

Mr. OLIVER. This is not more an attack upon the Interior Department than it is an attack upon Mr. Malcolm Mackenzie. If I understood my hon. friend he intimated to the House that Mr. Mackenzie who, he informed us, is a prominent Liberal, who was Liberal candidate in the constituency of Alberta in the last election, who is to-day the representative of the constituency of Macleod supporting a Liberal provincial government in Alberta,—I may stand corrected if I am wrong—secured the patent to this property by fraud. I think that is the effect of the statement the hon. gentleman made. I say that for a member of this House to use his position for the purpose of so slandering a private individual, a man who is not in the House, is a prostitution of the privilege of parliament.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member should hardly suggest that a member of the House was slandering.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. BENNETT. Oh no, that is just western, wild and woolly.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, if it is your ruling that the word is not parliamentary, of course I have to withdraw it. I withdraw it unreservedly; I am only sorry that parliamentary usage will not permit me to call a spade a spade.

Mr. BENNETT. Now a little profanity thrown in.

Mr. OLIVER. These gentlemen are very free with their charges against private individuals.

Mr. CLAUDE MACDONELL. I rise to a point of order; was the hon. gentleman referring to me?

Mr. OLIVER. I was referring to the hon. member for Toronto.

Mr. CLAUDE MACDONELL. Then I beg to call your attention to the fact that the hon. member used the words that I was prostituting my position as a member of parliament in making these statements. I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw these remarks.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that these remarks too should be withdrawn.

Mr. OLIVER. Then in deference to your ruling I certainly unreservedly withdraw these remarks and I can only say that I am very, very sorry that the action and attitude of a member of parliament and of a great political party should be such that it cannot be properly and correctly described in a House of parliament according to parliamentary usage.

Mr. CLAUDE MACDONELL. I desire to rise to this point of order. I quoted the judgment of Mr. Justice Wetmore as my observation upon Mr. Malcolm Mackenzie. I made no comment except to read from the judgment and if the words are not appropriate, if they are excessive, Mr. Justice Wetmore is the man who has to be responsible.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is not a point of order.

Mr. OLIVER. I shall take occasion to read from the opinion expressed by Judge Wetmore, and my hon. friend will fail to find any mention of Mr. Mackenzie in any such connection as he has seen fit to allude to in the House. I shall take my seat and give him a minute or two to find the allusion.

Mr. CLAUDE MACDONELL. I have read the allusion.

Mr. OLIVER. Then 'Hansard' will tell whether my hon. friend is correct or not. I say that to use the privilege of parliament for the purpose of attacking private individuals, for the purpose of misrepresenting the position of private individuals, is certainly not to fulfil the purpose for which parliament was instituted. Let me recall my hon. friend's attention to the proceedings of a day or two ago and how careful they were—oh, how they were horrified at the idea that any body should bring their good names into disrepute by questioning any transactions they might be engaged in, although they are before the public, although they have all the protection of the privilege of parliament. Surely these are not the gentlemen who, as I say, use the privilege of parliament at least to attack private individuals who are not here to defend themselves and who have no means of defence against that attack.

In regard to the position of the department in this matter, a case came before the Interior Department. It was of the nature of many cases that come before that department and as I read the particulars, it was dealt with as others are dealt with. As the commissioner who dealt with it said, he might have been right or he might have been wrong, he dealt with it according to his best judgment and according to the facts as he had them before him. The gentleman who felt himself to be aggrieved in the transaction asked the privilege of having his rights in the matter tried out in the courts. He was given the privilege, his rights were tried out in the courts, judgment was delivered, which judgment did not concede to him the rights that he demanded and these gentlemen hold the Department of the Interior responsible for that action of the court, or for not reversing the action of the court. What do these gentlemen want in the way of administration? What could they have that was fairer than what was done? There was a complicated case, a case of a squatter before survey, a class of case which arises all over the country. There were three claimants, as a matter of fact I believe there were four, and in my opinion, if I may go so far as to express my private opinion, I would think that the fourth claimant, whose name has hardly been mentioned, was the man best entitled to the claim. That is my private opinion but it is not effective at the moment. The right of a squatter before survey is a right which this government in its administration of the Dominion lands has always admitted, has always protected, and while their predecessors have not been as invariable in that attitude, they accepted the principle just the same, that the squatter before survey had a right which should be recognized. And when my hon. friend suggests that there is no difference between the rights of these three men who occupied as squatters before survey, and the men who settled on that town site after survey, he simply sets himself in opposition to all the administrations of all governments that have ever been in Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. I have a case right before me to the contrary.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend will have his opportunity of explaining his case.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is very unfair that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) did not mention that before the minister spoke.

Mr. OLIVER. When my hon. friend says there is no one else in this House acquainted with the circumstances of this case, if he had desired to be fair—yes, the hon. gentleman laughs, he appreciates the joke, so does the House; he never had a desire to be fair and he certainly is——

Mr. BENNETT. Oh now, order.

Mr. SPROULE. Who are you applying that to?

Mr. FOSTER. It is just a general observation.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to the value of this town site, this seems to be a matter of importance in dealing with this case. My hon. friend has rolled a sum under his tongue a number of times, and he says the town site is worth $200,000. Possibly it is. We will be very glad if it is. I hope it is worth a million.

Mr. FOSTER. All the better for Mackenzie.

Mr. OLIVER. Surely all the better for Mackenzie and all the better for the country as well. It is on record that Lyon and Montalbetti lived right on this quarter-section, I think, for some years before the idea ever entered into their minds that it was worth homesteading. When they did apply to homestead there was a prospect of it becoming valuable. I ask my hon. friend's opposite do they take the position that because there is a prospect of the land upon which a squatter is settled becoming valuable, that therefore he is to be deprived of his squatter's rights? And yet that is the position these hon. gentlemen opposite take if they take an intelligible position at all. Now, I say it does not make any difference how valuable the land is, if the squatter had a right, the government should respect that right, and I want to say to the House that is the principle upon which the public lands of this country are administered to-day, and have been during the continuance and power of this government. I could not follow all the quotations which my hon. friend read from the return. My hon. friend has read from such papers, out of the mass, such parts as he saw fit. I submit, that by such a proceeding any person with even half the intelligence or learning of my hon. friend could take the Bible and could read into it or out of it any doctrine he might please. There was no purpose in the readings of my hon. friend except to place on the pages of 'Hansard' a slander——

Mr. BENNETT. Now, now; order.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is repeating the same word, it should be withdrawn.

Mr. OLIVER. I apoligize. I certainly should not have used the word.

Mr. FOSTER. You had better go on with your defence now instead of making apologies all the time.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) had his turn yesterday.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I had.

Mr. OLIVER. I hope that when I get through I will have more support than he had.

Mr. FOSTER. Your majority will help you out sometimes.

Mr. OLIVER. I will not trespass upon the time of the House by reading at such length as my hon. friend did. I will read, however, some parts from the finding of Judge Wetmore. A fiat was granted; the case was taken to the Exchequer Court; Judge Wetmore was appointed to take evidence on the ground. I shall quote from the judge's report, and following the example of my hon. friend opposite I shall read such parts as suit the case I am presenting. Judge Wetmore reports:

I find that this storehouse and root-house——

Which were the improvements first put upon the place by Montalbetti.

I find that this storehouse and root-house was erected as stated and occupied by Felix Montalbetti as a storehouse and root-house before the plaintiff Lyon ever came to the land or vicinity, and therefore before he commenced the erection of his house upon the land.

Establishing beyond question that in the mind of Judge Wetmore Montalbetti was the first man to make improvements upon the property. Now, it is true that Judge Wetmore did not consider that that was sufficient to entitle Montalbetti to the patent, but it is also true that according to the ordinary practise of the department in adjusting the rights of the squatter, the man who has made the first improvement is the man who gets first consideration.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did not the learned judge also state that Montalbetti did not make these improvements with any bona fide intention of squatting upon the property?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, certainly he did. I have already said I am only reading from these documents the parts that suit the case I am presenting. I am following the example of my hon. friend on the other side, who only read the parts which suited the case he was presenting.

Mr. FOSTER. And which you condemned as a bad example.

Mr. OLIVER. It is true, I did.

Mr. FOSTER. And you follow it?

Mr. OLIVER. Unfortunately, I have either to do that or afflict the House by reading the whole document.

Mr. MACDONELL. That was just my position.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend might have read both sides from the document, but he did not do that.

Mr. MACDONELL. I gave the gist of it.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to the allegation that Mackenzie was a party to the alleged fraud of Montalbetti, this is what judge Wetmore says——

Mr. MACDONELL. Nothing was said by me to the effect that Mr. Mackenzie was guilty of any fraud or was a party to any fraud. My remarks with regard to fraud were entirely and exclusively directed to Montalbetti, so that the minister need not rest under any misapprehension as to that.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. OLIVER. I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman say so, because the impression left on my mind by the whole trend of his remarks was, that he intended to fasten an allegation of fraud on Mackenzie.

Mr. MACDONELL. I said he was not guilty of fraud, but that he had taken advantage of the fraud of Montalbetti.

Mr. OLIVER. I think I understand, that is perfectly clear. Now, this is what Judge Wetmore said in regard to that matter—and my hon. friend did not happen to read it:

The evidence does not satisfy me that the defendant Mackenzie was a party to the false statements and misrepresentations contained in Felix Montalbetti's solemn declaration or that he is in any way liable to be charged with actual fraud in connection with the sale of the said land or the issuing of the patent to him. I am not at liberty to infer that he had no knowledge of the false statements and misrepresentations because he or his partner McNeil prepared that declaration. On the contrary, in the absence of evidence to the contrary I must assume that the declaration was prepared entirely on the representations made by Felix Montalbetti, and there is no evidence before me to warrant my coming to the conclusion that either Mackenzie or McNeil had any reason for believing at the time the declaration was prepared or lodged in the Department of the Interior that any part of these representations were untrue.

Here is another portion that I might read, upon the statement that Mr. Montalbetti was the first man to make improvements on the place:

Mr. Turriff at such examination testified that the usual practice in the Department of the Interior, in disputed claims, when several persons are claiming, is to give the right of purchasing to the first man who is entitled—to whoever built or squatted on the land. This evidence is uncontradicted, and I find that the practice is as testified to by Mr. Turriff.

Aside from any statement that might have been made by Mr. Montalbetti, whether it was correct or not, the judge was satisfied that he was the first man to make improvements, and he was satisfied that it was the practice of the department to accord squatter's right to the first man who made improvements; and this is the allegation of wrong-doing made against the department and against Mr. Mackenzie.

In regard to Mr. Lyon's claim, I have no desire at all to throw any discredit upon Mr. Lyon. He had a perfect right to make his claim, and to win his case if he could do so by fair and reasonable means; but on the question of priority of right as a squatter, the judge, speaking of a building erected by Mr. Lyon, said:

This building is a much more substantial building than the one erected by the Montalbettis and is more suitable for a dwelling house. I find, however, that such building was not erected by Lyon with any intention of locating on the land as a squatter or of acquiring rights to such lands. So far as he was concerned, it was erected for a mere temporary purpose. It was erected under the following circumstances. As already stated, Lyon came to Blairmore as station agent for the railroad company. He originally came to the west from Renfrew in Ontario, leaving his wife and family there. Being desirous of bringing his wife and family out to Blairmore to live with him there, and there being no suitable building to bring them to, he applied to the railroad officials to allow the sectionmen to assist him to build a house to which he could take his family. His request was complied with and the house was built, so far as the labour was concerned, by railroad employees, he being among them during their working hours, for which they were paid by the company. Lyon put very little into it outside his labour.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is to say, if I understand it, he held that neither one of these men was a squatter, because improvements were not made in either case, with the intention of permanent location on the land.

Mr. OLIVER. That was his opinion expressed in this report, which he says is not the custom of the Interior Department; its custom being to give the land to the man who first makes improvements upon it. He says with regard to Mr. Lyon:

The evidence does not satisfy me that he put more than about $40 worth of material in the house, which was provided by his own means. The house was practically built for him by the railroad company, and even then his conduct and acts showed that he did not intend to remain on the land, if he could better himself, and that he only considered his occupation as of a temporary character. He was repeatedly applying to the company to remove to other and what he considered more desirable positions, with a view to removing to Pincher creek. I cannot under such circumstances find that he was a squatter on the land.

Mr. LAKE. Does the judgment not go on to refer to his being the first to take up actual residence on the land?

Mr. OLIVER. This is not a judgment, I might inform my hon. friend; this is a finding on the facts. He says explicitly, as I have already read, that Montalbetti built the shanty upon which he claimed priority of right before Lyon was ever there or thereabouts. As to the conclusion of this finding, which has been alluded to as a judgment, and which has been quoted as containing such reflections upon Mr. Montalbetti or Mr. Mackenzie as are mentioned in the Calgary 'Herald,' there are no such words in the finding; and its conclusion is:

I have endeavoured to report upon all the material facts raised before me at the inquiry. I have entirely refrained from expressing any opinion on the questions of law involved in the case, as I conceive that it is not within my duties to report upon such questions.

The case then goes up to Judge Burbidge. Judge Burbidge holds a sitting and hears the evidence, and reaches a conclusion as to what was right to do in this connection and adjourns the case. I will read the portion which is material to the point:

Now the evidence that has been taken in this case, and the report of the learned referee, show, I think, very clearly that if one has regard to the quarter-section as a whole, neither Felix Montalbetti nor Lyon had any such rights or any equitable claim to the consideration and indulgence of the Crown. With respect to the portions of the quarter-section which they respectively built upon and occupied, there was, I assume, some such equitable claim to consideration; though as to that I should prefer not to express any decided opinion without learning more of the practice of the Department of the Interior in such cases.

This disposes, I think, of the information so far as it is based on the view that the relator was entitled as a prior claimant to the right to purchase the quarter-section in question at the current rate and on the usual terms; and that he would have been permitted to become the purchaser and patentee thereof but for the false and fraudulent representations and the fraud of Felix Montalbetti. I am speaking now of the right asserted by Lyon to be allowed to purchase the quarter-section as a whole. With respect to the portion thereof on which he actually built and of which he was in possession at the time the patent issued, the case is no doubt different. But as to that no claim to relief has been made by the relator, and the defendant Mackenzie is, I understand from what counsel stated on the argument, ready to do what is fair and reasonable in the way of making good Lyon's title to such portion of the quarter-section as he was in actual possession of at the time the patent was issued. And so far as doing justice in that aspect of the case is concerned, there is probably no necessity to set aside the patent granted to Mackenzie.

The court was adjourned for the purpose of taking further evidence or for further consideration of the matter. And it was reassembled on May 30, and I shall inflict upon the House the judgment of Mr. Justice Burbidge in the case because that is a material document—the document which contains any charge that there is to be made. It contains a statement of the case as it was proved:—

In the Exchequer Court of Canada.

Monday, 30th day of May, 1904.

Present—The Hon. Mr. Justice Burbidge.

Between—The King, on the information of the Attorney General for the Dominion of Canada, and H. E. Lyon, plaintiffs; and Malcolm Mackenzie and Felix Montalbetti, defendants.

Upon motion made unto this court the 28th day of January, 1903, the 2nd, 14th and 21st days of February, 1903, the 20th day of March, 1903, and this day, by counsel on behalf of the above named defendants and (excepting on the said 30th day of May, 1904, as hereinafter mentioned) in the presence as well of counsel for both of the above named plaintiffs; by way of appeal from the report and finding of the Hon. E. T. Wetmore, special referee herein, filed the 25th day of November, 1902, and for an order varying the said report in the following respects, that is to say: that the said special referee should have found upon the evidence that the defendant Malcolm Mackenzie was the purchaser in good faith of the legal title to the land in question herein, from His Majesty the King, represented therein by the Hon. the Minister of the Interior, and that the said defendant, Malcolm Mackenzie, was the purchaser in good faith from the defendant Felix Montalbetti of all the latter's right, title, interest and equity in and to the said lands for valuable consideration without notice of any fraud or misrepresentation in the application for the patent thereof or otherwise, and without notice of any prior legal or equitable claim or title of the said lands, instead of finding as he does find, that no consideratаion was ever intended to pass between the parties (the defendants), and also that the said report should be varied in such other respects as the same is inconsistent with the evidence adduced herein, or the weight of evidence, or as to the judge of this honourable court may seem proper upon the hearing of this motion ; and also for an order that the said defendants be at liberty, firstly, to put in evidence, and file as exhibits herein, the certificates of title issued to the defendant Malcolm Mackenzie, under the provisions of the Land Titles Act, 1894, being chapter 28 of the statutes of Canada passed in the 57th and 58th years of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, and registration abstracts and certificates of the registrar of titles for the South Alberta land registration district respectively, covering the lands in question herein; secondly, and also to show by proper evidence that the said defendant, Malcolm Mackenzie, is the registered owner of the lands in question herein, under and by virtue of the said Land Titles Act, 1894, and also to give evidence to show that the King represented herein by the Attorney General, has no interest whatever in the present action and that the same is brought solely for the benefit of the plaintiff, H. E. Lyon ; and for a further order that the defendant, Malcolm Mackenzie, be at liberty to amend his statement of defence herein by alleging after paragraph five thereof the following, namely :

6. The said patent was duly forwarded to the registrar of land titles for the South Alberta land registration district and deposited with him, and the said Malcolm Mackenzie became and is the duly registered owner of the lands in question herein under and by virtue of the provisions of the Land Titles Act, 1894, being chapter 28 of the statutes of Canada passed in the 57 and 58th years of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, and as such there was issued to him on the 6th day of August, 1901, and the 28th day of August, 1902, certificates of the said registrar of land titles for the South Alberta land registration district, whereby the title to the said lands is and remains vested absolutely in the said defendant Malcolm Mackenzie.

7. The said defendant Malcolm Mackenzie pleads the provisions of the said The Land Titles Act, 1894, and The Dominion Lands Act, being chap. 54 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1886, and claims the benefit and advantage of the enactments and amendments thereto—or in other like manner as to this court may seem meet ; and upon motion made unto this court on February 14 and 21, 1903, and March 20, 1903, by counsel on behalf of the above-named plaintiffs, for judgment pursuant to the prayer of the information herein and the report of the said learned referee filed, that the patent issued to the defendant, Malcolm Mackenzie, on July 25, 1901, be declared to have been issued through fraud or in error or improvidently and that the same should be declared null and void and should be delivered up by the the defendant, Malcolm Mackenzie, for cancellation and that the defendants should be ordered to pay to the plaintiffs their costs of this action; upon hearing read the evidence taken before the said special referee, the report of the referee, the examinations for discovery herein and the pleadings and other proceedings before the said learned referee, and upon hearing what was alleged by counsel for all parties this court was pleased to direct in accordance with rule 124 of the general rules and orders of the court that the motion for judgment on behalf of the plaintiffs should stand over for further consideration, and that in the meantime if the Attorney General should so desire it a further inquiry might be proceeded with and further evidence taken before the court, and this court was further pleased to direct that the motions made on behalf of the defendants by way of appeal from the report of the special referee, for leave to adduce further evidence and to amend their statement of defence should also stand over to come on at the same time as the said motion for judgment on behalf of the plaintiffs, and the defendants through their counsel upon the argument having offered without prejudice to convey, and having subsequently at the instance of and to the satisfaction of the Minister of Interior, conveyed certain portions of the lands in question herein to the persons (including the plaintiff, H. E. Lyon) in actual possession of such respective portions at or before the issue of the said patent for the said lands, and having deposited the said conveyances with the said the Minister of the Interior, and the said motions coming on this day for judgment in the presence of counsel for the plaintiff, His Majesty the King, and the said defendant (no one appearing this day for the plaintiff, H. E. Lyon although duly notified of these proceedings, as appears by the record herein) and counsel for the defendants now formally moving for judgment, and counsel for the plaintiff, His Majesty the King consenting that the action should be dismissed without costs.

1. This court doth order that the said motion for judgment made on behalf of the plaintiffs be and the same is hereby dismissed without costs.

2. And this court doth not see fit to make any order in respect of the said motion made on behalf of the defendants, by way of appeal from the report of the special referee and to vary the said report, or the motions by the said defendants for leave to adduce further evidence and to amend their statement of defence, or to dispose of the costs of said motions.

3. And this court doth further order that this action be and the same is hereby dismissed without costs.

By THE COURT.

Let these minutes of judgment be settled in accordance with agreement of counsel for the parties.

July 14, A.D. 1904.

(Sgd.) Geo. W. Burbidge, J.E.C.

If I understand this matter right, so far from the case having being settled contrary to the evidence, because of the withdrawal of the Crown from the proceedings. the Crown did not withdraw from the proceedings and the judgment was rendered upon the merits of the case.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is expressly declared by him by consent.

Mr. OLIVER. I hope my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) does not suggest that the Crown is going to withhold its consent from the settlement of a case according to its merits. If that is what he alludes to, or if he alludes to the consent of Lyon, then the consent of Lyon is here with the signature of his solicitor. At any rate, the case was taken before the courts. It was taken out of the hands of the Interior Department, with the consent of the government. It was tried to a finish, and a judgment was rendered upon the merits.

Mr. HAGGART. If I understand the minister rightly, he says that this is a judgment of court to which Lyon and the other parties consent through their counsel.

Mr. OLIVER. That is the idea.

Mr. HAGGART. Extraordinary!

Mr. OLIVER. That is what the documents show. Of course, I may be mistaken. I know that this is entirely contrary to the statements given out to the public, but I take my information from the file, and give it as I get it. I have no knowledge of my own concerning the matter. Now, not to detain the House by reading further from the first presentation by Justice Burbidge, before the adjournment, the effect of his reasoning was this: That neither Lyon or Montalbetti had any right as settlers to this land, but the government had the right to sell the land, and having sold the land, and neither of these parties having any right to it as squatters, there was no reason for disturbing the title. But he also considered the case that, while Montalbetti held the patent for the quarter-senction Lyon was in residence upon it before that patent was issued and before survey; that, as a matter of fact, there were rights on the part of Lyon and Pelletier as squatters before the survey; therefore, his words are in effect that there is no reason for disturbing the patent issued to Montalbetti, provided that the actual residents' rights, that is the rights of Lyon and Pelletier, are conserved. The arrangement then was that an agreement should be filed with the department by which Mackenzie should undertake to convey the lands in occupation by Lyon and Pelletier, and that, upon the filing of that agreement by Mackenzie, the judgment should be given as it was there given. The adjournment of the court was made for this purpose. The documents were filed—the undertaking by Mackenzie to deed to Lyon and Pelletier the land covered by their improvements—and, as decided upon, the documents having been filed, the judgment was given that there was no reason to disturb the patent given to Montalbetti.

Mr. HAGGART. As I understand it, there is a letter from the Minister of the Interior to the Minister of Justice asking them to withdraw the action in the name of the government against the party, or to stop the fiat. The Department of Justice to-day is a consenting party to that. Afterwards there is a judgment of the court here quoted. If I understand the facts, the case seems a most extraordinary one.

Mr. OLIVER. As I read the documents, there is no hint of withdrawal from the case in the judgment that is rendered; or, in other words, to put it as I understand it, and according to the words as I read them, that judgment was rendered on the merits of Lyon's case as understood by the judge. The papers have been before the House for a considerable time, and, if this is not the effect of what was done, it will be for the hon. member who follows me to prove it. Certainly, my hon. friend (Mr. A. C. Macdonell) who spoke before me did not prove it. That being the case, what is the foundation for these charges against Mr. Mackenzie and against the Interior Department? What is the ground for the allegation of scandal? What could the Department of the Interior do that it did not do? When its decision was questioned, the case was taken to the courts; every opportunity was given for the taking of the evidence in full; and a decision was arrived at. And still my hon. friends insist that the Department of the Interior should ignore the judgment of the Court of Exchequer and cancel the patent to Mackenzie in favour of Lyon. On what ground? On grounds that neither Judge Wetmore or Judge Burbridge could find. Now, my hon. friends surely do not expect to be taken seriously in that demand? If they do demand that we cancel the patent to Mackenzie in favour of Lyon because it was improperly acquired, the judges do not find that we should do so. And if they demand that we should cancel the patent because this land has appreciated very considerably in value, they are asking us to do something which has been contrary to the policy of the government of Canada ever since it undertook the handling of Dominion lands—the government under their own friends as well as this government. And the policy that has been followed is a proper and necessary policy. What has the appreciation in value of these lands to do with the case? Let me call the attention of the House to the unfairness of the proposition put forward by hon. gentlemen opposite on that point. During the period in which the Northwest was not going ahead very rapidly there was the railroad from Regina to Prince Albert, with stations all along. The station building stood right on the fertile prairie. Take the case of one of these stations which to-day has a very considerable village around it. The man who bought the town site from the Canadian Pacific Railway at $3 an acre told me, in the fall of 1885, that he had sold $40,000 worth of town lots up to that time—and this was a year or two after he had bought the town site. These town site lands were of no more value than farm lands unless a town was built upon them. And when the railroad went through the Crow's Nest Pass, there was no more reason why there should be a town at Blairmore station than at Dundurn, or at Wapella, on the Soo line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, where there is a very good town to-day. The fact is that this property came into value afterwards, not by reason of the construction of the railroad, but because of the discovery of coal in the vicinity. And even with the discovery of coal in the vicinity, there was no guarantee whatever that the station would remain at Blairmore, where it is. As a matter of fact, the principal business of the Pass is done at Frank, two miles east of Blairmore, and at Coleman, a couple or three miles to the west of Blairmore. There was an even chance that there would not be any town at Blairmore. And I venture the opinion that the value of this land has been greatly exaggerated, quite unjustifiably exaggerated, just as the facts generally in regard to this case have been unjustifiably exaggerated. My hon. friend (Mr. Lake) referred to the fact that the costs of Mr. Lyon were paid by the Department of the Interior. I am not sufficiently familiar with the legal procedure to go into the history of the case from that point of view. I can only give the House the facts as they come to me and as I understand them. After the case was decided it was arranged that the taxed costs of Mr. Lyon should be paid by the government. There was attached a condition that Lyon should agree to the settlement of his claim by the acceptance of the transfer from Mackenzie before the costs would be paid. I do not know why such an arrangement should be made; I do not know why it should not be made. At any rate, the transfer from Mackenzie to Lyon and Pelletier not having been made, I felt that I should not pay the costs, although applied to by the agents of Lyon on several occasions. They, however, continued to apply for this payment. I referred their application to the law clerk of the department, and he reported that the account should be paid, and I ordered the account to be paid. I was surprised to receive a letter from Mr. Lyon indicating the idea that this money was a price to be paid to him to forego his right. I had no knowledge of any such understanding. I do not believe there was any such understanding; I think that Lyon was entirely mistaken in regard to that matter.

Mr. HAGGART. What was the amount he claimed in that letter for fore-going his right?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think he stated an amount. He had some idea that an amount of money was to be paid to him if he would forego his right. The amount of costs that we assessed were paid without asking him to forego his rights. Whether I was right or wrong in ordering the payment, I made the payment on the authority of the law officer of the department; and I submit to the House that whether I was right or wrong it showed that the government had no desire in any way or manner to prevent Mr. Lyon from proceeding to any degree he wished to establish his right to that land. If there was anything improper in the arrangement then the arrangement was not adhered to. I will admit that I might have been open to censure for having paid the money, but if I am, at any rate that certainly relieves the government from any imputation of trying to prevent Lyon from taking any legal proceedings he might please to establish his rights.

Mr. MACDONELL. Why were the costs paid?

Mr. OLIVER. I am stating the matter exactly as it comes before me, I do not know, but I understand that these cases are handled in the Department of Justice, and I was not familar with the reason or with the taxing of the costs. But I cannot hold myself responsible for the arrangement to pay the costs. Possibly it was out of consideration to the fact that Lyon was a squatter before the survey, that there was some colour to his right, that he had been put to a great deal of expense in trying to establish his right, and it was a matter of consideration for Mr. Lyon; I do not know any other reason, but I imagine that would be it. As the case stands to-day, there is no string on Mr. Lyon in any shape or manner in regard to this claim, and when Mr. Lyon wrote me as he did that he was going to have this matter ventilated in the House, all I could tell him was that the matter had been dealt with by the courts and that I did not feel free to traverse the action of the court, and I do not think that parliament will vote that the Department of the Interior should do so.

Just one word more on the general question. The suggestion has been made repeatedly that the Department of the Interior is and has been administrated with a view to the advantage of friends of the government. The suggestion is made that in this case Montalbetti, because of his association with Mackenzie, was favoured because the latter was a friend of the government. Now I ask this House: Is a man to be debarred from his legal right because he happens to be a friend of the government? or is it right that he should be subjected to—I will not use the word slander—but to the unfounded aspersions by members of parliament because he happens to be a friend of the government? Now I want to say to hon. gentlemen opposite that I have sat in parliament since 1896, and I had the honour during two terms of representing nearly the whole of what is the province of Alberta. There was occasion in many, many cases to bring before the Department of the Interior, before I took charge of it, questions in regard to the rights of individual holders of land throughout that great province. I tried to do my duty in that matter, to do what was fair by the people whom I represented. I defy any man to say that on any occasion, or under any circumstances, when a person brought a claim to me to be advanced before the government, I ever asked what his politics were or what they were going to be; that I ever discussed the questions of politics with him at all. I say furthermore, that having dealt with those cases before the Department of the Interior during all that time, the Department of the Interior, and no officer of it so far as I know, ever questioned a case that I brought before it because of the politics of the man concerned in it. As to what is taking place in the department to-day, I can only say that I will not discuss that matter ; but I leave it to the House as to whether any and every man who is dealing with that department is ever questioned or is prejudiced in any way, shape or manner because of his politics. If there is such a thing certainly it is contrary to my wish, it is contrary to all the traditions of the department. There is no foundation for the allegations that have been sent broadcast throughout the country in regard to the action of officers of that department by members of this House during this and past sessions. It is an allegation—I will not use the word that I was tempted to use, although it seems to me it would be applicable—I will say that those allegations have no foundation. They are calculated not only to injure personally the gentleman against whom they are directed, whether they be officers of the department or private individuals. They may not be slanders, but they are of the nature of a slander. The whole tendency of such a campaign and its whole purpose is to discredit in the minds of the people the administration of the Interior Department.

Now, my hon. friends know as well as they know they are alive that the success of this country depends upon the successful administration of the Interior Department as much as upon any other fact and they know that the Interior Department cannot be administered successfully if they can succeed in creating a lack of public confidence in that department. They have been using their best endeavours during this past session in this campaign of slander which they have inaugurated and kept up——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.,

Mr. OLIVER. I withdraw, Mr. Speaker, I will change the word, Mr. Speaker, and I will——

Mr. FOSTER. Spell it backwards.

Mr. OLIVER—and I will say this campaign of scandal which they have entered upon. There is nothing wrong with that, Mr. Speaker, because they are using it against us, but when we change the word to slander, they want the protection of the chair at once. But we have no protection against their shout of scandal from their benches here and from their press throughout the country, a campaign, I say, directly and essentially intended to hurt this country, to retard the prosperity of this country more than it can possibly hurt any individual or any political party in the country. If the government can be discredited by that campaign the country is discredited by the same campaign, and the wheels of progress are retarded by the gentlemen who are here in their places in this House for the purpose, if for any purpose, of pushing the country forward and helping the government and not of hindering it in securing or forwarding the welfare and prosperity of the people.

Mr. JOHN HERRON (Alberta). Whilst I was absent I believe the minister referred to me in a way that I do not think was exactly proper. I do not think it was doing justice to myself and I shall draw the attention of the minister to it. I am told that the minister while I was out of the House said that he noticed the opposition stand for statements made by the Calgary 'Herald,' but he noticed that the gentleman who made the motion referred to in that paper has not seen fit to father the present proceedings in this House, and he added that he presumed I was ashamed to do so. On being told by my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) that I was in the committee room of the Lumber Combine Committee he stated that I was not there a few minutes ago. Then he inquired where I was last night and this morning at two o'clock when the vote was taken in the House. I do not think this is a proper way to use a member who is trying to do his duty. I might state to the minister that I had two reasons for not proceeding with this motion which was introduced in the House this afternoon by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake). The first, and perhaps the most important reason, is that the gentleman whose name was most particularly identified with this resolution was my opponent in the election. I beat my opponent on that occasion, and I think, if another contest arose, I could do so again. Nevertheless I thought it was not the proper thing for me to rise here and debate the proceedings of this trial which has attracted a great deal of attention in the part of the country where I live, and for that reason I refrained from doing so. Then the other reason I had for not taking part in the debate was this—and I state this conscientiously and feel that I can show the House that I have good reasons for my action. It was that my time has been taken up for the last month in the Lumber Investigation Committee and when the minister asks where I was last night or this morning at two o'clock I might state to the House that I was alone—not always alone, but most of the time alone in the lumber combine room from 8.30 o'clock until 12.30 last night preparing evidence for the investigation before that committee this afternoon. I then returned to hear the debate in the House, sat in my seat for a few moments and went to room No. 6 expecting a vote. Had I been here I certainly would have voted for Mr. Hughes' motion, because I do not shrink from votes. As regards the statement that I was not in the committee room a few moments ago, I have positive evidence which I can produce to the House that when the House adjourned for a few minutes in order to go to the Senate for the Royal Assent I took occasion to go to the committee and present the evidence that I prepared last night. I think that is sufficient to explain my course, and I do not think it is right that these remarks and insinuations from which a wrong inference might be drawn by the country should be made against me. I wish to state to the minister that I have not been ashamed to take a stand on these questions, and that I am in the House more than the hon. minister; in fact, I have not lost one day in this House for two sessions, which is a record such as few gentlemen can present. I do not wobble around one way and another when motions are made, nor do I shirk votes when a division takes place. I am always here, 'Johnny on the spot.'

Mr. OLIVER. I gave the hon. member credit for more consideration than he is evidently entitled to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). I would like to say to my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) with respect to his references to slander and scandal, that every scandal is not a slander. I would like him to bear that in mind, and I do not think any such observations as he addressed to the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) come with very good grace from a gentleman who gave the vote which that hon. gentleman did on two motions introduced in this House not long ago by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). That is enough to say with regard to it. If the hon. gentleman wants to go into any investigation as to where people are at 1 o'clock or 2 o'clock or 3 o'clock or 4 o'clock in the morning, he can get all he wants of that at any time.

The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) seemed to have the idea that I was waiting in this debate until he had spoken by reason of some terror existing in my breast that he might follow me and crush me. I have taken occasion in the House when his predecessor, now the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), occupied the position which he does, to introduce several questions in the House on which I naturally expected to be followed and was followed by the hon. gentleman; and perhaps, without depreciating the hon. the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), in any way, I might be permitted to say that any person who is not afraid to be followed by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) would not be absolutely terrified at the idea of being answered by the hon. gentleman who has taken his place. I wish to put this in just as delicate a way as possible to my hon. friend, but I have no doubt he will fully appreciate what I mean by the statement.

The Minister of the Interior has dealt with the question of squatter's rights. I understand that squatter's rights in the first place, are for settlement and not for speculative purposes, and I understand also that the Department of the Interior does not recognize as a squatter a person who goes into a particular locality without any intention of permanently residing there. That is a very important consideration which has been put absolutely to one side in the remarks of the Minister of the Interior. In this instance, that principle was absolutely departed from, as I will show, and as the minister indeed has admitted in answer to a question from myself during his speech. The judge of the Exchequer Court, and the referee, have found that neither Lyon or Montalbetti, at the time they made the slight improvements referred to, had the slightest idea or intention of becoming permanent settlers. And what was the result? The result was that when the Crown had gone into Court upon an information under the hand and signature of the Attorney General for Canada to set aside the patent as having been granted by fraud, and when it was found by the judgment of the referee and by the judgment of the Exchequer Court judge, that that patent had been obtained by fraud, the government did what? It had two men before it, one of whom, Lyon, was the first man who had made any improvements of any importance upon that property—although not for the purpose of permanently locating—and it had Montalbetti who had made some slight improvements but not with the intention of permanently locating either. It had two men before it, one of whom Montalbetti had sought to defraud the Crown, and the other Lyon, who had not sought to defraud the Crown. It confirmed this property consisting of 160 acres to the man who had sought to defraud the Crown and did defraud it, and it told the other man Lyon to go about his business. That is the conduct which the Minister of the Interior thinks should commend itself to the judgment of this House. Why, if neither of the men had been guilty of fraud, the obvious course for the government to take, considering the value which this land had attained in 1904, would have been that suggested by the Dominion Lands Act in sections 102 and 107 :

Sec. 102. Such unoccupied Dominion lands as the minister deems expedient from time to time, may when he so orders be withdrawn from ordinary sale and settlement and sold at public auction to the highest bidder, an upset price being fixed for the same.

Sec. 107. The minister may withdraw from sale or homestead entry any tract, or tracts of land, and may lay the same out into town or village lots and the lots so laid out shall be sold either by private sale at such prices as the minister sees fit, or by public auction, an upset price being fixed for the same.

There were several courses open to the government. One was to withdraw the land altogether as neither of the men had made good any claim to it, and to dispose of it for the benefit of the public, it being likely to attain a great value. That course would be in the public interest. That is the course that has been taken in such cases by the present government of Ontario, as shown by my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Macdonell). That was not the course which this government took. Another course open to them would be to take these two men, one of whom had defrauded the Crown and the other of whom had not defrauded the Crown, and to say that the man who had not defrauded the Crown should be the man entitled. Another course would be, to say that Mr. Mackenzie not having been concerned in the fraud, although he sought to benefit by it, should be put in the same position as Mr. Lyon, and these men shall be allowed to take up the 160 acres between them. That would have been an extreme and unusual course to take in view of the fraud that had been practised, but it would be much less open to criticism than the course which the Minister of the Interior defends. The government took none of these courses, but it declared that Lyon should have no interest although he had been guilty of no fraud, and that the assignee of Montalbetti the man guilty of fraud, the man who had practised fraud on this government, should receive the town site worth at the present time well up to $200,000. And the Minister of the Interior asks us to think that such a course is eminently in the interest of the people of this country.

Let us look at the facts for a moment ; in answer to what has been said by the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) let us see what it was on which he based his judgment in this matter. The man on whose report he acted was a Mr. Nixon, a subagent of Dominion lands, a man who last year was described by the Minister of the Interior as not strictly speaking an officer of the Dominion government at all; a man in the course of whose business transactions with this country, defalcations took place which he sought to fix upon his son, and after which he was promoted to a much better position in the public service than that which he previously occupied. Here is Mr. Nixon's report :

Department of the Interior,
Dominion Lands Office,
Macleod, June 24, 1901.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram dated the 18th inst., re northeast quarter-section 35 township 7, range 4, west 5th. In reference to your telegram re above lands I proceeded to Blairmore on the 19th inst., and interviewed Lyon, Montalbetti and Mr. Beebe, who is the representative of Mr. Moffat at that place, and I find as follows :—Mr. Lyon came to Blairmore in the fall of 1898 as Canadian Pacific Railway agent at that place and in the spring of 1899 a log house was built for him near the Blairmore station by the section gang during the company's hours. Lyons continued as Canadian Pacific Railway agent at Blairmore until about the beginning of the present year but prior to that date carried on a small store business in the building already referred to. This building is about 18 by 26 and is within 120 feet from the centre of the railway track at this point and is supposed to be mostly on the right of way.

Felix Montalbetti came to Blairmore in the fall of 1897 as section foreman at that point, and during his own time the following spring, he built a log house, 16 by 18, stable, 14 by 14, and cultivated a small piece of ground that spring——

I want to point out to the Minister of the Interior and to the member for East Assiniboia, that that statement made in the report of Mr. Nixon, upon which the judgment of the department has been given in favour of Montalbetti, has been expressely found by Mr. Justice Wetmore to be untrue, and further, to have been fraudulently made. The report continues :

—and has continued to do so since these buildings were erected by him during his own hours and not while he should be working for the company. The lands which he cultivated were fenced by him and the fence is yet in good repair. Montalbetti informs me that at the time he made the improvements already referred to he fully intended to become a bona fide settler——

The judge has found that that is not true.

—when the lands were subdivided and open for settlement, and I have no reason to doubt the truth of his statement.

The judge has expressly found that that statement was not true :

The buildings erected by Montalbetti are 184 feet from the centre of the railway track. In regard to Moffat's claim, I may say that I am informed by Beebe that he claimed as the assignee of Henry Pelletier, Pelletier so far as I can learn, first made claim to the quarter-section in question by reason of having purchased a small shack which had been erected on the land by one Buckman, who was a freighter during construction of the railroad and only lived there a very short time. Pelletier informed me that he, Pelletier, had some years ago obtained a homestead near Pincher Creek which he sold before moving to Blairmore.

So far as I can see, Felix Montalbetti is the only man of the three claimants who can be regarded as the first bona fide squatter on the said quarter-section, and in my opinion his claim should be allowed by the department.

Respectfully submitted.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) J. NIXON,
Sub-agent of Dominion lands.

All that it is necessary to point out at the moment is that that report sets forth as true, material statements which Mr. Justice Wetmore has found to be untrue and to have been fraudulently made. There cannot therefore be any doubt that not only the affidavit of Montalbetti, to which I shall refer later on, but the statements of Montalbetti to Mr. Nixon were untrue and made fraudulently—that the whole basis of this claim from beginning to end was one of falsehood and fraud. Well, let us look at what the hon. member for East Assiniboia, then land commissioner, decided when this claim of Montalbetti and the claim of Lyon came before him for adjudication. His decision is dated Ottawa, the 19th of July, 1901, and is as follows :

In October, 1900, Alexander Moffat made application for a permit to prospect for coal, and on December 14, made application to purchase both the coal and surface rights. The contention of his counsel that any land which may contain coal is not open for ordinary homestead or sale cannot be allowed, as under the regulations it is the custom of the department to dispose of the coal and surface rights separately, in many cases the coal going to one party and the surface as a homestead or sale to another.

H. E. Lyon located at Blairmore as ticket agent in the year 1898, and in January, 1899, he built a dwelling house on the land in question and began residence in it with his family in April, 1899, so that his claim as settler may be considered to date from the latter date.

Felix Montalbetti located on this land in 1898, erected a house, fenced in a small portion of the land and cultivated same in the spring of 1898.

According to the judgment of Mr. Justice Wetmore, that statement is untrue, and, the basis of that adjudication being the statement of Montalbetti, was fraudulently made :

He lived in the said house until the fall of 1898, after which he resided in the section house on the right of way. In the year 1899, he erected a stable and other buildings and corralled on the said land, and he is at the present time residing on the said lands.

The fact that both Montalbetti and Lyon were employees of the railway company, does not necessarily throw them out as bona fide squatters, as very many cases come before the department where railway employees either enter for or squat on lands, work them and hold them in that way for a year or two, and when in a position, leave the employment of the railway and reside permanently on the land they had located.

There is no reason to doubt the bona fides of either Mr. Lyon or Mr. Montalbetti, the latter in his evidence showing that it was his intention to make entry for the homestead as soon as the lands were surveyed. When the lands were surveyed, he spoke to the surveyor who informed him that being an odd section, was not available for entry.

The judge has expressly found that that adjudication of the commissioner is not well founded ; and, after the parties have been examined and cross-examined in court, he has arrived at an absolutely different conclusion. The land commissioner goes on :

In view of the above that Montalbetti was the first to locate on the land, lived on it during the summer of 1898, and has utilized his buildings ever since following the usual rule of the department in disputed claims to recognize that of the prior claimant. I decide that Felix Montalbetti has the first right to purchase at the current rate and on the usual terms.

Now, I have dealt with what Mr. Nixon reported and what the land commissioner decided. I have shown that both the report and the adjudication were based on statements falsely made and fraudulently made, according to the judgment of the learned referee Mr. Justice Wetmore which has been confirmed by the judge of the Exchequer Court, and which has not been attacked by either the Minister of the Interior or by the member for East Assiniboia. What follows ? Lyon came with evidence to the Hon. David Mills, then Minister of Justice, and secured a fiat from him for the filing of an information by the Crown on the relation of Mr. Lyon. The Minister of the Interior drew certain fine legal distinctions in regard to this information, which begins as follows :

The information of the Hon. David Mills, His Majesty's Attorney General for the Dominion of Canada, on behalf of His Majesty, showeth as follows :

Then follow the statements quoted by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr.

Macdonell), which the Minister of the Interior declares not to be the allegations and declarations of the Crown. They are the allegations and declarations of the Crown, made on the relation of Mr. Lyon, who was also a plaintiff in the case, and the information is signed by the Attorney General of Canada. It was issued by a solicitor for the Attorney General of Canada. That is not of very much importance perhaps one way or the other. What is important, however, is what follows, and that is the report of Mr. Justice Wetmore. I should first point out, however, that the assignment from Mr. Montalbetti to Mr. Mackenzie was made on the 8th of July, 1901, according to the finding of Mr. Justice Wetmore, that the adjudication of the commission of Domonion lands which I have just read was made on the 19th of July, 1901, according to the official file, and that the patent upon that adjudication was issued to Mr. Mackenzie on the 25th of July, 1901.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

WINNIPEG AND NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

House went into committee on Bill (No. 129) to incorporate the Winnipeg and Northwestern Railway Company.—Mr. McCraney.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The amendments made to this Bill in the Railway Committee are: First, raising the capital from $1,000,000 to $2,500,000; second, making the annual meeting in September instead of October; third, making it subject to the provisions of the Railway Act; and fourth, amending clause 13 to provide that with respect to the issuing of bonds, &c., it shall be done only at a general meeting called for the purpose at which two-thirds of the subscribed stock of the company is represented.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

MANITOULIN AND NORTH SHORE RAILWAY COMPANY.

House went into committee on Bill (No. 133) respecting the Ontario, Hudson Bay and Western Railways Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The only change in this Bill is adding a new section and striking out section three which was not considered necessary. Under their original Bill the Company had power to go via the town of Sault Ste. Marie, in the district of Algoma, or by such other route as the company determines. The Railway Committee thought they should not have that power and have put in a new section taking that power away.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought you only elided the last portion of that in the committee?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That would compel them to go by the town of Sault Ste. Marie. It has been pointed out that there might possibly be difficulties and that they could not go that way. Now they have a right to go that way if they feel like it.

Mr. SPROULE. When they got the charter before, one of the contentions was that they had to go that way owing to engineering reasons.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Quite so, but if you left that in they would be compelled to go that way; they can go that way now.

Mr. SPROULE. That is what the people of Sault Ste. Marie want, that they should be compelled.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If it is the most feasible way they would go that way now.

Bill reported, read the third time and repassed.

ONTARIO, HUDSON BAY AND WESTERN RAILWAYS COMPANY.

House went into committee on Bill (No. 132) respecting the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This is making the same change as in the former Bill, not giving them the power to run wherever they liked.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—BLAIRMORE TOWN SITE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When recess came at six o'clock I was about referring to the report of Mr. Justice Wetmore as special referee. But before doing so I would like to point out the view taken by the Department of the Interior as to the granting of a fiat. The department does not seem to have been consulted, and when an intimation came to it, the idea of permitting litigation to determine the rights of these two parties did not seem to be very acceptable. On the 1st of March, 1902, Mr. Sifton, then Minister of the Interior, wrote Mr. Fitzpatrick, then Minister of Justice, requesting that no action should be taken until he returned and had an opportunity of looking into the matter carefully. Later on, on the 12th April, 1902, in a letter marked personal, he intimates his opinion as follows :—

My Dear Fitzpatrick,—

King vs. Malcolm Mackenzie.

In this matter I have a report from the land commissioner which inclines me to the view that the fiat ought to be withdrawn ; but at Mr. Barwick's request, I have refrained from coming to a final decision until he has an opportunity of arguing the matter.

On a later date, the 7th February, 1903, he writes a personal letter to Mr. Fitzpatrick as follows :

My Dear Fitzpatrick,—

King vs. Mackenzie.

In this case fiat was granted to one Henry E. Lyon to bring an action for the purpose of setting aside a patent issued by this department to one Mr. Malcolm Mackenzie, the assignee of Felix Montalbetti.

Then he goes on to detail what had been done and continues as follows :

The government is not pressing to have the patent set aside and the case reopened. Leave was given to the plaintiff Lyon to bring the action simply for the purpose of enabling him to show, if he were able to do so, as he alleged, that the patent had issued improperly, and the officers of the Crown had been deceived by falsehood and misrepresentations. I do not wish the Crown to be represented by Lyon's counsel upon argument, but desire that you should either appear yourself or by counsel to represent the Crown and specially state that the fiat was granted in this case for the purpose of enabling Lyon to bring his rights before the court, and that in the event of the plaintiff Lyon failing to establish any right on his behalf to have the patent set aside, the Crown is not pressing and sees no reason for pressing to have the patent set aside and the matter reopened.

I may add that the case is one of sale within the discretion of the Crown acting through the department, and it is extremely doubtful if it should ever have been made the subject of an action. But in any event if the plaintiff Lyon fails to establish any right on his own behalf, there can be no possible reason for proceeding to reopen the case inasmuch as the department on its own part has no reason for desiring to withdraw from the sale which was made to Montalbetti.

That is a pretty distinct intimation as to who the favoured applicant was in this case. Both these letters are marked 'personal.' I do not know whether they were intended to be brought down; however, they are brought down, and properly so. The intimation most distinctly is that notwithstanding the allegation of fraud, unless Lyon is able to establish a right, the Crown has no reason for desiring to withdraw from the sale which was made to Montalbetti, a sale made to him for $480 in respect of property which was at that time of enormous value, and which should have been disposed of at an upset price, and the proceeds of which should not have gone into the pockets of Mr. Mackenzie, but into the public treasury of the country.

Now I come to the report of Judge Wetmore, who was appointed special referee of the Exchequer Court. After a preliminary reference to the evidence and the questions of fact submitted for his consideration, he proceeds to deal with Montalbetti's position as follows:—

Felix Montalbetti admitted on his cross-examination before me that portions of the statements in paragraphs 6 and 7 of that declaration were untrue in the following respects :

He is referring to the declaration put in by Montalbetti to sustain his application to the Department of the Interior for a grant of those lands. The learned judge says that declaration was untrue in the following respects :—

(a) That he erected other outbuildings than the stable upon the land in question inasmuch as he never at any time erected any such other buildings.

(b) That he cultivated a portion of the land in the year 1901.

(c) That he erected a stable in the year 1899 inasmuch as such stable was not erected until 1900.

It is to be borne in mind, as this was a question of priority of settlement, that the dates were all important.

(d) That since 1898 he kept upon the said lands and in the said buildings a cow and some calves and some poultry ; because he never kept a cow or calf there until the year 1900 and never kept more than one calf there.

I, therefore, find, as a matter of fact, that these statements in the declaration were untrue in the respects above mentioned. I find such declaration to be untruthful in other particulars. As a matter of fact, I do not believe that either the defendant Montalbetti or the plaintiff Lyon, down to just immediately previous to the time that Lyon placed the store upon the land in question as hereinafter stated, erected any building upon the land or did any work thereon by cultivation or otherwise with the purpose of squatting on it or permanently locating upon it or of obtaining any rights whatever respecting it, and I believe that down to that time and so far as Felix Montalbetti is concerned, down to about the winter of 1900 and 1901, that whatever they did upon that land was merely of a temporary character so far as they were concerned and to serve temporary purposes, and that it was only about the winter of 1900 and 1901 when it began to appear that there might possibly be valuable deposits of coal in the immediate vicinity and that the land in question might in consequence become the locus of an important town site that the imagination of these persons became excited and fed by such possibilities. I will refer to the evidence which so serves to influence me in so far as Lyon is concerned at a later stage of this report. At present I will deal with Felix Montalbetti. The house to which he refers as erected by him on this land is a very small log house (sometimes in the evidence called the 'shack' and sometimes the 'root-house'), with no partitions in it except in the cellar and would be a building of a very miserable character for a residence. Nevertheless, there are plenty of houses scattered along the whole extent of the Northwest Territories of no better character which have been placed for the purposes of residence and homesteading, and in which the persons erecting them have lived for years. I make no point by reason of the character of the building in itself ; but what I cannot understand is why, assuming that he built this house as he states in May, 1898, he should have put up a building of that character with the intention of doing an act towards locating on the land ; in other words, why he put it up for the purpose of a residence when at the time he built it he knew that the railway company was about to erect a substantial building in which he as section foreman would be compelled to live or pay rent for it if did not live in it. In answer to questions put by me, he testified in effect that he was induced to put up that house because he had a bad tent. Assuming that he erected this house before moving into the section-house, I think that this is nearer the truth and that such house was put there for a mere temporary purpose until the section-house was ready for occupation, and that he did not erect it with any object whatever of locating on the land with a view of acquiring any rights thereto. I may also state here in connection with this part of my report, as it has some bearing on the matter I am now discussing, that I find as a matter of fact that Felix Montalbetti did in August or September, 1900, make application to Joseph E. Woods, the land surveyor, to take up an entirely different piece of land. I draw attention to these facts on the assumption that Felix Montalbetti erected this house in May, 1898 (not because I find as a matter of fact that he did erect it) and for the purpose of emphasizing the nature of his occupation of the land. As a matter of fact, I find that Felix Montalbetti did not build this house in May, 1898, or at any other time in the spring of that year.

And it is to be borne in mind that the reports of Nixon and the decision of Mr. Turriff both attached importance to this false statement of Montalbetti.

That, as a matter of fact, this house was not built until the fall, some time about October of that year and that it was then erected jointly by Felix Montalbetti and Joseph Montalbetti for the purposes of a storehouse and root-house and not for residential purposes at all.

Then the learned judge goes on to discuss the evidence which has led him to these conclusions, and discusses the credibility of the witnesses and he then continues :

As to the character of Felix Montalbetti's acts with respect to this land, I find that he came there in April, 1898, as section foreman of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with the intention of residing on such land in that capacity alone for the purposes of his duties as such section foreman and intending to reside in and occupy as a residence the section-house about to be built on that land by the railway company as a residence for him as such foreman or any other foreman of the company who might be placed at that point. And that pending the completion of that section-house he resided with his family in a tent on the said land and on the completion of such section-house he, with his family, moved into it early in the month of August, 1898, and afterwards built the building in question and the fence or corral for the better enjoyment of and in connection with his occupation of the section-house, and not with the view of locating as a squatter on the land or anything of the sort. The cultivation of the small garden was of such a trifling character that it is hardly worthy of notice, but I find that also was done in connection with his occupation of the section-house and not with any intention of locating as a squatter, and the bringing of the cow, calf and pair of ducks, being all the live stock or poultry he ever brought on the land, was incidental to his convenience and comfort in the occupation of the section-house.

I also find that Felix Montalbetti did not have a garden on the land in 1898, that he did not have such garden until the season of 1899, after the building of the Lyon house was commenced. The untruthful statements and misrepresentations which I have found to have been made in this declaration as hereinbefore stated, are so many and of such a character that I cannot resist the conclusion that they were fraudulently made with the intention of improperly influencing the minds of the officials of the Department of the Interior in determining to whom the right to purchase the land in question should be given.

This is a distinct, plain and unequivocal finding of false statements, fraudulently made for the purpose of obtaining this patent.:

I find that this storehouse and root-house was erected, as stated, and occupied by Felix Montalbetti as a storehouse and root-house before the plaintiff Lyon ever came to the land or its vicinity and therefore before he commenced the erection of his house upon the land. The fact is quite obvious, but I find, as a matter of form, that Felix Montalbetti did state in his declaration that he understood and agreed that the sale of the land in question to him should be void if it should be thereafter proved that any statement in such declaration was incorrect. I say nothing as to the effect of that statement upon the result of this case. I conceive that to be a question of law for the consideration of the learned judge of the Exchequer Court and not for mine.

Then he goes on to deal with Montalbetti's assignment to Mr. Mackenzie, and he says:

Although the patent issued to Mackenzie on the 25th July, 1901, not one dollar of this one thousand dollars——

That thousand dollars is the supposed consideration.

—has yet been paid to Montalbetti, and he does not hold the scratch of a pen by way of security for it or in recognition of such indebtedness. I cannot understand this state of affairs.

He goes on to comment on that, and says in conclusion :

If this had been a question between Mr. Montalbetti's creditors and Mackenzie, I would have no hesitation in inferring that no consideration was ever intended to pass between the parties to these transfers and I cannot discover any reason why I should not so find for the purposes of this case and I do so find.

That is to say, the learned judge, after hearing evidence, after hearing Mr. Mackenzie, who was represented by counsel, determines that as between Montalbetti and Mackenzie there was no consideration whatever, and therefore Mackenzie did not stand, as he claimed, in the position of a bona fide purchaser for value, but stood precisely in the same situation as Montalbetti, because he was an assignee without consideration. Then he goes on to say :

The right to purchase this land was awarded to Felix Montalbetti by virtue of a report made by J. G. Turriff, the Commissioner of Dominion Lands, which report is Exhibit 2 to Mr. Turriff's examination before Mr. Justice MacTavish and accompanies this my report.

Mr. Turriff at such examination testified that the usual practice in the Department of the Interior in disputed claims when several persons are claiming is to give the right of purchasing to the first man who is entitled—to whoever built or squatted on the land. This evidence is uncontradicted and I find that the practice is as testified to by Mr. Turriff.

The Minister of the Interior seemed to attach some importance to the expression, 'to whoever built or squatted on the land.' Therefore it is of some importance to refer to Mr. Turriff's evidence in that regard, and see exactly what he did testify as to the practice of the department. Mr. Turriff testified as follows :

Q. Why is it usually given to the first squatter ?—A. Because we consider the first squatter has the best right for purchase if it is land open for sale.

Q. In regard to the lands in question in this action, I notice by your decision that you find on the evidence that Montalbetti was the first man to locate on the land ?—A. Yes.

Q. How did you arrive at that ?—A. From the report of the officers of the department.

The witness obviously refers to the report of Mr. Nixon which I have just read, because the only other report I know of is the report of Mr. Stewart, which is not acted upon :

Q. Did you consider the other evidence also? —A. Yes.

The other evidence alluded to is obviously the declaration of Montalbetti which the report of Mr. Justice Wetmore shows to have been false and fraudulent in every important particular.

Q. And you concluded, as appears by your judgment, that Montalbetti was the first squatter upon these lands ?—A. Yes.

The learned judge continues as follows :

I am not in a position to report fully what the nature and character of the evidence or material was upon which Mr. Turriff made his report, because the evidence before me does not establish it. It is clear that Montalbetti's solmen declaration (which Mr. Turriff in his evidence calls an affidavit) was before him and reports from two departmental officers, Messrs. Stewart and Nixon were also before him and the nature of portions of these reports were disclosed in Mr. Turriff's examination.

Further on :

Mr. Turriff, however, in referring to his report, testifies as follows :—I did not give my decision on Montalbetti's evidence. My decision would be the same whether Montalbetti's affidavit had been in or not.

That is a most remarkable statement by the land commissioner with regard to this application. Montalbetti had made a statement, and suported it by a solemn declaration having the nature of an oath, and to which were attached all the penalties of a false oath if it were false, setting forth certain important particulars as to his occupation of this land ; and Mr. Turriff declares in the evidence which I have just quoted from the report of the judge, that his decision in this case would have been exactly the same if that evidence had not been given. What does that mean ? Does that mean that it was determined from the very first that Mr. Mackenzie and not Mr. Lyon should receive the patent for this land ? Or does it mean—for this is the only alternative—that Montalbetti's statement to him was not regarded as worthy of credence ? What are we to understand from the extraordinary evidence which I have just quoted from the testimony of Mr. Turriff, the land commissioner at that time ?

The learned judge did not seem to understand it; the judge at the Exchequer Court declares that he is not able to understand it; and I am sure there is no one in this House at the present moment, the hon. gentleman being absent, who can give any intelligent interpretation of what was intended by Mr. Turriff in that evidence. A little further along, the report of Mr. Justice Wetmore goes on to say:

I find, however, that the testimony at the inquiry before me has brought to light and developed facts and circumstances hereinbefore reported by me which were never brought to Mr. Turriff's notice or to the notice of the Department of the Interior before the issuing of the patent in question.

Then he goes on to deal with the case of Mr. Lyon. I do not intend to go into that very fully. It is perfectly obvious that, as Montalbetti was a section foreman, so Lyon was merely a station agent and telegraph operator, and that neither of these men went there in the first instance for the purpose of squatting, that houses were provided for both of them by the railway company, and that the supposed acts of occupation which are set forth in their applications and evidence were not acts, in the first instance at least, which would enable the department or the court to consider them as bona fide squatters. Let me read, however, a portion of Mr. Justice Wetmore's report as to Lyon, which was not read by the Minister of the Interior, for some reason best known to himself. Speaking of Lyon, the learned judge says this:

He originally came to the east from Renfrew in Ontario, leaving his wife and family there. Being desirous of bringing his wife and family out to Blairmore to live with him there, and there being no suitable building to bring them to, he applied to the railroad officials to allow the section men to assist him to build a house to which he could take his family. His request was complied with and the house was built, so far as the labour was concerned, by railroad employees, he being among them during their working hours for which they were paid by the company. Lyon put very little into it outside his labour. The evidence does not satisfy me that he put more than about forty dollars' worth of material in the house which was provided by his own means. The house was practically built for him by the railroad company, and even then his conduct and acts showed that he did not intend to remain on the land if he could better himself and that he only considered his occupation as of a temporary character.

That is the house which has been referred to as having been built by Lyon. Lyon, however, did put other buildings on the land, and the Minister of the Interior refrained from quoting this portion of Mr. Wetmore's report:

Early in the year 1900, Lyon commenced to build a store on the land. It was also made of logs and completed, and he started business in it in May, 1900. This building was, I find, built by Lyon without any assistance by the railroad company. I assume that in the absence of any evidence to the contrary.

I invite the minister's attention to this, because perhaps he did not notice it, and therefore omitted it in his statement to the House——

I find that it was the first building that was placed on the land by any of the parties to this suit with any idea of permanent location on it or squatting on it. It was certainly placed there with the object present in the mind of Lyon of doing business there on his own account apart from any connection with the railway company. A few weeks after starting business, namely, on 19th July, 1900, he applied to Mr. Cox the land agent at Pincher Creek to homestead this land or a portion of it. But even then he does not seem to have contemplated taking up the whole quarter-section, for in his letter to Mr. Cox he applied to take up the land behind the Canadian Pacific Railroad station, which I take to mean the land on the south side of the railway track where his buildings were.

So that it appears, so far as actual bona fide squatting upon the land is concerned, so far as any location with intent to settle is concerned, Lyon and not Montalbetti was the first one to attempt that. Not only that but following the erection of this building with the distinct idea of permanent location and settlement, Lyon made an application, not for a whole quarter-section, but for a very large area, and one would suppose that having erected that building—the first building—with the idea of permanent location and having applied for a portion of the land, he would have been entitled to at least equal consideration with a person who, if he made any improvements upon the land with the idea of permanent location, did so afterwards, and who attempted successfully to impose upon the crown by fraudulent and untrue statements with regard to his residence and occupation.

That is all I think it necessary to quote from the report by Mr. Justice Wetmore except one further paragraph with regard to Lyon:

I find that Lyon had a small garden along the east side of his house in the summer of 1899 and that he put a fence around it to keep cattle off. This garden was a trifling affair about of the same character as that of the Montalbettis, and I find that this garden was put in in connection with his occupation of the house in which he lived and not with any intention of locating as a squatter.

It is thus clearly evident that Lyon was the first squatter, and not Montalbetti, according to the finding of this judge. There cannot be any doubt about that. And although Montalbetti, without any bona fide claim to be a squatter, saw fit to impose upon the Crown by false and fraudulent declarations, the Crown, when those facts were exposed by the judgment of the court, says: we will interfere no further we have issued this patent to Mackenzie, the assignee, without consideration of Montalbetti ; and having issued that patent we will permit ourselves to be imposed upon by the fraud of this man and will confirm him in his title to this property whose present value is some $200,000. That is the inference to be drawn from the circumstances, the truth of which I have supported by a reference to the evidence and the findings of the judge thereon.

What was the attitude of the department of the Interior in view of all these facts and circumstances ? What position did the Minister of the Interior of that day (Mr. Sifton) take with regard to the practising of this fraud upon the Crown by the person to whom the patent had been issued ? In a personal letter from the Hon. Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior to Mr. F. H. Chrysler, K.C., of this city, bearing date the 21st March, 1903, Mr. Sifton instructs Mr. Chrysler as follows :

I have just read the judgment in this case. I have not time to consider it fully. It may be that, under the judgment, it will be desirable to have some further inquiries made as suggested by Mr. Justice Burbidge, with whose view of the whole matter I fully agree. As I am obliged to go away and the acting minister will not in all probability have time to familiarize himself with matters of this kind, I desire you to see that no further steps are taken until I return. I have no time to see Mr. Fitzpatrick about it, but if the matter comes up between yourself and the Justice Department or Mr. Osler and the Justice Department, please see Mr. Fitzpatrick and show him this letter and act accordingly. I shall rely upon you to see that my wishes in this respect are carried out. Mr. Fitzpatrick will no doubt be too busy to give it personal attention.

Mr. Osler referred to in this letter was the agent for the solicitor of Mr. Lyon, the relator, and the judgment of Mr. Justice Burbidge which is alluded to, I shall give.

Do not forget that this is an answer to Mr. Chrysler's letter of the previous day which informed Mr. Sifton that the judge was prepared to set aside the patent to Mr. Mackenzie if the Crown desired to do so.

Later on in a letter dated December 17, Mr. Sifton again instructs the Hon. Charles Fitzpatrtick ; and in that letter he points out that neither Lyon nor Mackenzie nor any other occupant of the land had any right capable of enforcement. He says :

The Crown does not attempt to sell lands which have an artificial value by reason of being valuable for town sites or for any similar reasons, at the highest prices obtainable, and the whole experience of the department, both under the late administration and the present administration proves conclusively that an attempt to hold land from sale and settlement, under ordinary terms and prices, with the object of selling particular parcels at higher prices would result in trouble and expense which would more than counterbalance the increased receipts and would cause a great deal of trouble and irritation.

It would no doubt have caused a great deal of irritation to that prominent supporter of the government, Mr. Mackenzie, had he been divested of land of this valuable property, although he had acquired the title to it through the fraudulent statement of Montalbetti, who had assigned to him without consideration. Further on Mr. Sifton says :

Under the circumstances it appears to me that the proper course to pursue is to bring the matter before the judge and ask to have the case disposed of. The statement should be made that the Crown has no desire to ask for the cancellation of the patent on the ground of the inadequacy of price, because everything relating to the price was thoroughly well known when the sale was made.

Further on, in a letter dated 12th January, 1904, he says to Mr. Fitzpatrick, referring to the previous letter I have quoted :

My letter indicates the terms upon which I think counsel for the Crown should ask to have the case discontinued. And I intended to add, and desire to add now, that I think it should be done without costs to either party.

This is the case which, according to my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), was disposed of by the Exchequer Court upon its merits. I shall come to that judgment in a moment, but let me just quote a letter from Mr. Chrysler, the counsel for the Crown, instructed directly by Mr. Sifton. The letter bears date May 13, 1904. It is addressed to E. L. Newcombe, K.C., Deputy Minister of Justice, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,

King, et rel. Lyon vs. Mackenzie.

I attended this morning upon the return of the motion for judgment in this case, and, pursuant to your instructions, asked that the action should be dismissed without costs.

That, according to the minister, is a decision of the Exchequer Court upon the merits. No statement could be more inaccurate and absurd. The report of Mr. Justice Wetmore, and, as I shall show you later, the judgment of the Exchequer Court indicated most clearly that upon the clearing up of Mr. Turriff's extraordinary evidence, which could not be cleared up adversely to the Crown, the government could claim and obtain a decree cancelling that patent and returning that land to the title and ownership of the people of Canada. The judge had so informed Mr. Chrysler. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) declared, notwithstanding the terms of the order for judgment which were directly against his contention, that counsel for Mr. Lyon acquiesced in that order and assented to it. It is true that there is a memorandum at the bottom under the word 'approved' signed by Mr. Glyn Osler, and I understand how and why that memorandum was put there. It does not indicate any consent to the dismissal of the action. Let me continue Mr. Chrysler's report.

Counsel for the defendant——

That is for Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Montalbetti.

—acquiesced and no one appeared for the relator.

That is, Mr. Lyon.

Mr. Osler was present but said he had no instructions to appear.

Thus the order for judgment was made upon the consent of the government which exercised its right of going behind the relator in this matter and dismissing him from the case altogether, if they desired to do so. They went behind the relator and without the consent of the relator took a consent judgment from the Exchequer Court that their own action should be dismissed, although the Crown was entitled to judgment in that action against Mackenzie and Montalbetti for the cancellation of the fraudulent patent.

The minister was not very well able to explain how it was that costs were allowed. There is a letter from Mr. Keyes, secretary of the Department of the Interior, under date December 21, 1904, which seems to explain that pretty well. Lyon's solicitor undoubtedly advised him as any counsel would advise him, that the Crown had the right to discontinue the proceedings; he had been told that he had no right and that Mackenzie had no right against the Crown, that the matter was in the discretion of the Crown and so, in order to get out of the matter as best he might, as the Crown was disposed to grant the lands to the man who had defrauded it and not to the man who was guilty of no fraud, as the Crown was disposed to grant the land to the man who was subsequent and not to the man who was prior in point of occupation, Mr. Lyon had to submit and had to make the best bargain he could. So an arrangement was made that Lyon the relator should be indemnified by the Crown in respect of his costs but upon the understanding, as this letter explains, that he would release his rights against every one. I shall read a portion of the letter:

The decision—

That is the decision to pay Lyon's costs.

———is made upon the understanding that Mr. Lyon will execute and file in this department a full release of all demands, causes of action, and claims as against the Crown in the action in question or against the defendants to such action, and I am therefore to request you to tax the bill strictly in accordance with the minister's decision and to send with it when you are returning the file to this department, a draft of the release which Mr. Lyon should execute.

So that the Crown not only was out of pocket the $480 which they had received from Mackenzie for that land, but out of the pocket also about $1,800 or $1,900 more in order to secure a release for their supporter, Mr. Mackenzie, of all possible claims that Lyon could have in respect of the land. They gave Mackenzie the land for nothing and paid out besides about $1,900 in order to secure him from all possible claims in the future on the part of Lyon. Fairly generous treatment, I think you will all admit, fairly generous treatment especially in view of the fact that at the time this deal, if I may so call it, was made, these lands had acquired an enormous value and there is express provision in the Dominion Lands Act, to which I have already called the attention of the House, that the Crown might reserve these lands from sale, might put them up to public auction at an upset price and in that way might have secured for the people of this country the $100,000, $150,000 or $200,000 that have gone into the pockets of this friend and supporter of the administration, Mr. Mackenzie.

Let us look at what Mr. Justice Burbidge says about it, and at the decree which he made. Mr. Justice Burbidge had before him the report of Mr. Justice Wetmore, and I will take up only such portions of the judgment as seems to me to be material:

The defendant Mackenzie, as assignee of Felix Montalbetti, and the relator Lyon were rival applicants for the purchase of this quarter-section. But each claimed that according to the practice that is followed in such matters he had a right to be allowed to purchase the quarter-section at the current rate and on the usual terms—Mackenzie on the ground that Felix Montalbetti was the first bona fide settler or squatter on the quarter-section, and Lyon on the ground that he was.

There does not appear at any time to have been any question of the Crown disposing of the quarter-section at the best price that could then be obtained for it.

I do not know whether the learned judge was a little facetious or not in that remark or if he intended to be sarcastic.

It was assumed apparently that some one had a right to purchase it at the current rate of $3 an acre.

Although it was a town site worth, I suppose, $1,000 an acre.

And after inquiry and hearing the parties, the commissioner of Dominion lands decided the controversy in favour of the defendant, Mackenzie, and the patent was issued to him.

Now the evidence that has been taken in this case, and the report of the learned referee, show, I think, very clearly that if one has regard to the quarter-section as a whole, neither Felix Montalbetti nor Lyon had any such right, or any equitable claim to the consideration and indulgence of the Crown. With respect to the portion of the quarter-section which they respectively built upon and occupied there was, I assume, some such equitable claim to consideration; though as to that I should prefer not to express any decided opinion without learning more of the practice of the department of the Interior in such cases.

That disposes, I think, of the information, so far as it is based on the view that the relator was entitled as a prior claimant to the right to purchase the quarter-section in question at the current rate and on the usual terms ; and that he would have been permitted to become the purchaser and patentee thereof but for the false and fraudulent representations and the fraud of Felix Montalbetti. I am speaking now of the right asserted by Lyon to be allowed to purchase the quarter-section as a whole.

Further on :

Now with regard to the setting aside the patent on the ground that the Crown has been deceived, and that it was issued to the prejudice of the public, I should have thought that a case had been clearly made out, if it were not for the evidence of the commissioner of Dominion lands to the effect that the decision would have been the same if Felix Montalbetti's declaration had not been before him. I am not sure that I fully understand what he meant by that.

And I do not think any one else did.

And then it appears that that evidence does not disclose all the material that he had before him when he made his decision.

I would like to refer again to the evidence of the Commissioner of Dominion Lands, just to indicate to the House of what an extraordinary character that evidence was. I have read part of it, I will not repeat it.

Q. And you proceeded on the evidence before you, including the evidence of your officers ?—A. Yes.

The evidence of his officers, I assume, means simply the report of Mr. Nixon and the report of Mr. Stewart. I do not know of anything else ; the hon. gentleman will correct me if I am wrong. Certainly the answer includes the false and fraudulent declaration of Montalbetti, because that was before him. There can be no doubt about that, there is his answer.

And you proceeded on the evidence before you, including the evidence of your officers ?—A. Yes.

Now that is pretty distinct and plain.

Q. And this evidence satisfied you that Montalbetti was the first to enter upon the land ?—A. Yes.

Well, I suppose any person reading that evidence could not have the slightest doubt that the then Commissioner of Lands took into consideration the sworn evidence of Montalbetti. We have no evidence that he regarded Montalbetti as of such a character that he did not place the slightest reliance upon his sworn statement. What, then, did he intend by the evidence which I am now about to quote ?

Q. Montalbetti has sworn here that in the early part of 1898 he decided to locate, &c. And again he says: 'Acting upon this I erected upon it a log house, building in 1899 a private stable and other outbuildings, and I have kept on the said land a cow, poultry &c.

Now, supposing that if it were established by overwhelming evidence to be false, would you have granted the patent ?—A. Yes, my decision would be the same if it was not there at all.

Well, I find it difficult to reconcile these two statements. Montalbetti's sworn statement was before him. How can the Commissioner swear, what does he mean by swearing that he would have given the same decision without it. That was a very convenient answer for Mr. Mackenzie. He is asked further on whether he knows upon what evidence Nixon was acting when he gave his report, and he answers : I do not.

Now, let us go back to the judgment of Mr. Justice Burbidge. He says the case shall stand for further consideration, and he directs that the Crown shall be at liberty to re-examine Mr. Turriff for the purpose of making it clear to the court what he intended by the evidence to which I have just alluded. But in the meantime the action of the Department of the Interior intervenes, and the formal judgment which was read by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior was declared. I will not read the whole of that judgment, the minister read all the formal parts, reciting the various proceedings in the action. I will only read that portion which is pertinent to what I am now arguing :

And the said action coming on this day for judgment in the presence of counsel for plaintiff, His Majesty the King, and the said defendant, no one appearing this day for the plaintiff, A. G. Lyon, although duly notified of these proceedings as appears by the record herein, and counsel for defendant now formally moving for judgment, the counsel for plaintiff His Majesty the King, consenting that the action should be dismissed without costs, this court doth order that this action be and the same is hereby dismissed without costs.

Now, I am sure the Minister of the Interior would not contend, in face of that, that this was a judgment upon the merits. We have, in the first place, the direction from Mr. Sifton to Mr. Chrysler to appear and consent that the government's action should be dismissed and discontinued, we have the record of the court made in the absence of counsel for Lyon, although he had been notified to attend ; and that judgment declares that counsel for the plaintiff, His Majesty the King, consented that the action should be dismissed without costs. Then the judgment proceeds to dismiss and does dismiss the action without costs. That is not my understanding of an adjudication upon the merits, that is my understanding of a consent judgment, and notwithstanding the very strong expression of opinion by the Minister of the Interior, that is nothing more or less than a consent judgment. The Crown, having the right to go on and cancel those patents and to resume the title and possession of that land, saw fit not to do so, but to consent that this action should be dismissed, and by doing so conferred on the defendant, Mackenzie, the title to and possession of this land.

Well, those are about all the facts, and I apologize for detaining the House so long in endeavouring to make them perfectly clear. It seems to me that I have made them fairly clear, at least they are fairly clear in my own mind. The result of it is this, that this town site, valuable at that time, was held by the Crown without the slightest obligation to even Mackenzie or Lyon. The Crown was as much entitled to that land as if that patent had never issued. There was the finding of Justice Wetmore, and there was the view taken of the law upon his finding by Mr. Justice Burbidge. Then the Crown, having the right to resume the land free from the fraudulent patent, and having before it two men, each of whom had made a claim without foundation, saw fit to give the land, not to the man who was the prior occupant, the prior squatter upon that property, but to the man who was not a squatter at all, as understood by the court and by the Department of the Interior. The Crown saw fit to give it to Mackenzie standing exactly in the place of Montalbetti, who had committed a distinct fraud upon the Crown.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend said: Mackenzie standing in the place of Montalbetti, who had committed a distinct fraud upon the Crown. Do I understand the language to indicate that Mackenzie had committed a distinct fraud upon the Crown?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Not at all. I did not read that part of the judgment which acquitted Mackenzie of conscious participation in the fraud, because it had already been read.

Let me make myself perfectly clear about that. The learned judge, Mr. Justice Wetmore, acting as special referee, distinctly found that there was absolutely no evidence that Mr. Mackenzie knew of this fraud or participated in it in the nrst instance. But the learned judge also found that there was no consideration whatever for the assignment from Montalbetti, and I say under these circumstances that Mr. Mackenzie, receiving Montalbetti's title acting upon his fraudulent claim, and upon that alone, stood exactly, so far as the merits are concerned, in the place of Montalbetti. Of course, the observation might be made, as is suggested by my hon. friend from East Hamilton (Mr. Barker) that, after this fraud had been found by Mr. Justice Wetmore, acting as referee, his decision being approved by the judge of the Exchequer Court, Mackenzie should not have persisted in a claim founded on fraud. One might very well say, that Mr. Mackenzie having persisted in making a claim founded upon that fraud, made himself a participant in it. I would feel free to make that observation, and I think there is authority in the books for it. But I content myself with saying that Mr. Mackenzie stood, on the merits, in his relation to the Crown, in exactly the same place as that in which Montalbetti his assignor stood. It was under these circumstances that the Crown, although Mr. Lyon was the first bona fide settler as a squatter, gave the land not to Lyon, but to Mackenzie, the assignee of the fraudulent claimant. I do not think the Crown should have given the land to either of them; but, as I said before, if it gave the land to either, it should obviously have given it to Lyon. Does the Minister of the Interior believe for one moment that if Lyon had been the fraudulent claimant and Mackenzie had been the prior occupant, guiltless of fraud, Lyon would have got that land? Does the Minister of the Interior believe that in his heart? I find it hard to believe it. I think this action of the department is not one which should escape criticism. My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) read us a lecture on our duty to refrain from criticism.

Mr. OLIVER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) will allow me to correct him, I think the word was 'slander,' not 'criticism.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But the difficulty is that my hon. friend regards all criticism as slander when it is directed against this government. In the zeal of party conflict an opposition may sometimes make an unjust attack upon a department or a minister. That is not unknown; I would not be prepared to say it had not occurred within the last ten years, and certainly I am sure that it took place very often previously to 1896. But there is nothing in the criticism of this case whight ought to be regarded as against the public interest. The minister says we are likely to injure the country by creating distrust in the public mind with respect to the department. Let the hon. gentleman rest assured that if the departments conduct their business in a fairly reasonable way, straightforwardly, holding the scales of justice evenly —in short, refraining from indulgence in transactions such as this one which we are discussing, by means of which party friends acquire enormous amounts of wealth in a very short time—he need fear no criticism. But when we find the department, after these lands have become valuable and their value has become known, so anxious that the fiat granted by Hon. David Mills should not be proceeded with, when we find them so anxious to hand over to one of their political supporters valuable land upon a claim founded in fraud, we are naturally constrained to criticise the action of the government and to ask ourselves whether or not, as I suggested just now, the patent would have gone in the same way if the influential political supporter had happened to be the other party? I venture to say, notwithstanding the assumed indignation of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, that, if he were on this side of the House and a Conservative administration had been guilty of dealing with the public domains in this way, no one would have been more strenuous in his denunciation of the transaction than the hon. gentleman who now occupies the position of Minister of the Interior. And I venture to say that the unreasonable attitude which the hon. gentleman sometimes takes with regard to the motives and actions of the opposition in this House would justify me in that conclusion. I suggest to him once more, as to the policy of the department in respect to squatting rights, that it never was applicable to persons who are obviously engaged in the acquisition of lands for speculative purposes. This land had ceased to be used for agricultural purposes. It was a town site—neither more nor less. The Department of the Interior knew it, Mr. Mackenzie knew it, every one concerned knew it. And yet, upon pretended squatter's rights, founded on fraud and upheld by a false declaration—a declaration which has been demonstrated to be untrue and fraudulent—the Department of the Interior has seen fit to hand over this land to a political supporter and enable him to make a very handsome fortune out of it. Under these circumstances, I think the thanks of this House and the country are due to my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) for having brought this matter to our attention, and I shall not have the slightest hesitation in supporting the motion which he has introduced.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I had not intended to take part in this discussion and should not have changed my intention but for some of the observations that have fallen from my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) who has just taken his seat. I should perhaps apologize to the House for taking part in this debate, because the application for the fiat whereby to begin this litigation was made by the late Mr. Walter Barwick, then and throughout his practice my business partner, and in consequence of the circumstance that Mr. Barwick and our firm acted in the matter for Mr. Lyon, I had knowledge of the circumstances, derived in that way, other than what the papers here show.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think any apology is necessary.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. However, I shall confine myself strictly, in any thing I may say to-night, to what is the knowledge of every person who has looked at the files, and I shall be very brief about it. I am quite unable to understand what the grievance is, what the complaint is, what it is all about, or what it is that any one looking at this matter with knowledge of it can find in it out of which to make a political attack upon any body. Here is an ordinary piece of litigation which has been tried out to the end in court and disposed of, and the Crown has consented to waive its right to costs, and that is what the judgment says in so many words. The Crown, this action being dismissed, was entitled to have had its costs paid by Mackenzie and Montalbetti—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought Mackenzie would have the right to have his costs paid by the Crown.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I beg pardon of the House. The Crown was entitled to have its costs paid, not by Mackenzie and Montalbetti who are the successful litigants, but by the man who had guaranteed the expenses of the Crown, namely Lyon. The Crown has waived the right—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mackenzie waived his right to recover costs against the Crown.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The Crown waived its right to recover on its bond.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It had nothing to waive in that case.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It had everything to waive because there was a bond required of Lyon before he brought the action at all. Before the Crown consented to the use of its name Lyon was required to indemnify the Crown against any expenses in the matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps I may be at cross purposes with my hon. friend. What I meant is this: As Mackenzie had waived his costs against the Crown, the Crown had nothing to waive against Lyon because it paid no costs.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It had the right to recover against Lyon and Lyon's sureties any expenses to which it had been put. It was not under any obligation whatever to pay any costs to Lyon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But the judgment did not deal with that.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The judgment proceeds as upon notice to Lyon and upon Lyon's default in attending pursuant to that notice, and recites the consent of the Crown to the arrangement as to costs. The Crown waived any right it had upon its bond; it not only waived that right but it went further and paid the costs that Lyon had incurred or was liable for to his solicitor. That is the position in which the case stands, on the undisputed facts of it. It is.

some consequence to see the dates exactly on which these various transactions took place. This patent is not a grant made after the litigation was terminated. It has been put by my hon. friend, as though the Crown, after the report of Mr. Justice Wetmore that there had been falsehood and fraud on the part of Montalbetti, had chosen to condone that falsehood and fraud by granting to Montalbetti a patent which he was not entitled to and which up to that time he had not received. Of course that is not the position of the matter at all. The position of the matter upon the dates, as shown in the records of the court, makes the situation abundantly plain. The patent had been granted in 1901 ; granted as it afterwards turned out, with papers before the department at the time which were false, but which the commissioner and the department say if they had never existed at all would not have changed the result. In other words, the information which was in the department outside these papers altogether, was such as would have warranted the issue of that patent to Montalbetti. And although Montalbetti had stated what afterwards turned out to be entirely false, Mackenzie though in no better position than Montalbetti, was not affected by that falsehood or fraud in any way, and the patent would have been granted to Montalbetti if there had been no statement from Montalbetti himself whatever, simply because upon the other facts of the case as they appeared before the department, independent of the declaration which turned out to be a false one, the patent would have been granted to Montalbetti upon his paying the purchase price.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will my hon. friend permit me to ask a question ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Certainly, if it is a relevant question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The facts upon which the patent was granted are set forth in the report of Mr Nixon ; and in the decision of the land commissioner ; what one important statement of fact is not found to be untrue.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is not the point at all. The whole point of the attack, if there is any point whatever in it, is that because Montalbetti was a man who had made a false statement, he was a man whose money ought not to have been taken and to whom this land ought not to have been sold. That is the point of attack that is sought to be made upon the policy of the department, and the department, through its officer, has stated here under oath that this sale to Montalbetti would have been made exactly in the same way—if Montalbetti had been absolutely silent himself—upon the reports that were before the department and upon the facts which otherwise appear.

Now, with reference to the litigation,—because that is all I intended to say anything about when I rose, except for the digression I have been led into—with regard to the litigation the situation is simply this, Lyon could not bring the matter into court otherwise than by using the name of the Crown ; the patent had been granted ; he had no legal standing to set it aside proceeding in his own name ; he required to use the name of the Attorney General ; he applied to the Crown for permission and permission was granted. The hon. gentleman says it was reluctantly granted. I do not know how that is one way or the other. We are dealing, not with matters that either the present Minister of the Interior or myself know anything about personally, but with regard to transactions of our predecessors in the departments of which we are now respectively in charge. A fiat was granted and leave was given to Lyon to use the name of the Attorney General, to use it of course at his own expense, not at the expense of the public. His suit was instituted in the name not only of the Attorney General, but also of himself, was conducted by his own lawyer in his own way, and he produced all the evidence he had to produce, and the case was fully heard before Mr. Justice Wetmore to whom it had been referred by the judge of the Exchequer Court for the taking of evidence. Mr. Justice Wetmore made his report, and that report came before the judge of the Exchequer Court for consideration, and the judge says in so many words, in what has been read by my hon. friend within the last half hour, that neither of these men is entitled to the land ; that one is in no better position than the other ; Montalbetti is not entitled to it, and Lyon is not entitled to it. Well, it is enough to dispose of Lyon's case if he is not entitled to it ; the judge has said so in so many words. But he has said more than that. Though Lyon is not entitled to it, he has said, if the Crown, which is here before me in actual form and reality, chooses now to take up this case, and chooses to withdraw its own grant of two years ago to Montalbetti, I will allow the Crown to give further evidence. The Crown up to that time had not been actively intervening in the litigation at all. It had been conducted entirely by Lyon, though the name of the Crown had been used. Mr. Sifton, in his letter of the 17th of December, 1903, to Mr. Fitzpatrick, a part of which the hon. gentleman read, makes the matter abundantly plain. Judge Burbidge had, nine months before, in March, 1903, pronounced his decision upon the action. Mr. Sifton, who was about departing for England, wrote a hurried letter to Mr. Chrysler, telling him that he agreed entirely with the judgment and what he wanted in the premises. The case stood then in the same position from March until December, when Mr. Sifton returned, and on the 17th of December, 1903, Mr. Sifton writes to Mr. Fitzpatrick :

> The judge of the Exchequer Court has held that as between one another and as against the Crown, neither King, Lyon nor Mackenzie, nor any other occupant of the land had any right capable of enforcing.

There was none of them with a squatter's right. The land was, as far as any of them were concerned, simply land open for sale. It had been sold two years before, and the man's money had been taken for it. The Crown then had the right, if it chose the patent, to take proceedings against the patentee on the ground of fraud. The Crown had a legal right to do so. If there is any offending here, the head and front of it is that the Crown did not, after Lyon failed in his litigation, go on of its own accord to have cancelled the grant which it had made two years before. The Crown refrained from doing that; Mr. Sifton said why in the portion of the letter that has not been read. The judge went on to say that the only point of importance, in his judgment, in which the public had been prejudiced was that the price obtained for the land was wholly inadequate. Mr. Sifton remarks, on that observation of the judge, that that is not a reason for bringing suit to set aside the patent, nor can the Crown bring suit to set aside the grant on the ground that the price was inadequate. The judge, having disposed of the litigation as between the parties to it and as between the parties and the Crown, said: None of you has any right as against the Crown, nor has any one of you any right as against the other. The Crown, if it chooses, may adduce further evidence; it may, if it chooses, take up this litigation now of its own motion and of its own accord, and go on with it. And Mr. Sifton, in this letter of the 17th of December, points out to Mr. Fitzpatrick why he has no wish to take that course. He points out, as I have said, that the Crown is not in a position to have its own transaction set aside on the ground that the price was inadequate, the price being that which the Crown was receiving for all the Crown lands—the regular price to all purchasers, and there being in this case no special thing differentiating it in that regard from the ordinary course of departmental business. Mr. Sifton goes on to say :

> The Crown does not attempt to sell lands which have an artificial value by reason of being valuable for town sites or for any similar reason, at the highest price obtainable, and the whole experience of the department, both under the late administration and under the present administration, proves conclusively that an attempt to hold land from sale and settlement, under ordinary terms and prices, with the object of selling particular parcels at higher prices, would result in trouble and expense which would more than counterbalance the increased receipts and would cause a great deal of trouble and irritation. The department knew all about the price before the sale was made, and sold the land to the person it believed to be entitled to purchase, at the departmental price, in pursuance of a fixed, well understood, and thoroughly approved policy. In view of these facts and of the conclusive holding of the judge that there are no rights on the part of Lyon which he could properly ask to have enforced in court of law, I have directed that an inquiry should be made by a competent and reliable surveyor to ascertain if any one else had any improvements on the land and was entitled to consideration. A. W. Ponton, D.L.S., was appointed to make the inspection. He has made the inspection and reported. His report is that Lyon, the relator, and one Pelletier, are the only parties entitled to consideration. He submits a plan showing their improvements with a description of the land necessary to cover them. I have intimated to the defendant's solicitor that settlement would be dependent upon making a conveyance to Lyon and Pelletier of the ground which Surveyor Ponton thinks they ought to have. The defendant has accordingly filed a conveyance which will be found on this file and has been examined by my law clerk and found correct. Under the circumstances it appears to me that the proper course to pursue is to bring the matter before the judge and ask to have the case disposed of. The statement should be made that the Crown has no desire to ask for the cancellation of the patent on the ground of the inadequacy of price, because everything relating to the price was thoroughly well known when the sale was made, that conveyances are filed in the department where they can be taken out by Lyon and Pelletier, and that everything seems to have been done that is necessary to effect complete justice.

The case was tried out and the decision given, so far as the only actor in the litigation was concerned. So far as Lyon was concerned, there was an end of his cause. The judge of the court had said : If you—the Crown—being nominally here, wish to go on yourself, this case can stand over for further evidence in that respect. That being the condition of the matter for nine months, there being no reason for going on with the action so far as the Crown was concerned, it not having instituted the action, the whole thing being at an end, the whole thing is disposed of by this order. The order shows the dates of the various proceedings—the report from the referee, the matter coming up on appeal from that report, the disposition of that appeal more than a year perviously, the interlocutory decision or judgment of Mr. Justice Burbidge on the 20th of March, 1903, and then, the matter standing until the 30th of May, 1904, in the manner and for the reason I have pointed out, it is on that day disposed of after notice to Lyon. Lyon, though he receives notice of the motion to dismiss the action, does not choose to offer any opposition. Mr. Osler, who has acted for him throughout, is present, but states that he is instructed not to appear, or has no instructions to appear, and takes no part in the matter ; and the order carefully recites that no one appears for Lyon ; but Lyon, not choosing to be represented, the action is disposed of on notice to him and on his default to object to its being so dealt with. The order is drawn up, and is approved by Mr. Osler, but I do not cite that as being any indication of Lyon's consent to the dismissal of the action. It indicates simply that Lyon's solicitor has examined the order and finds it to state exactly what had taken place, and the order as approved was issued disposing of the action, because that action had been tried and brought to an end.

Now the whole head and front of the offending is that the man who had this land granted to him some three years before this order dismissing the suit was made, happened, some year or more afterwards, to be a candidate in the Liberal interests in one of the constituencies of this country. That, I admit, in the eyes of hon. gentlemen opposite in an indelible crime. No matter what rights as a citizen any man in this country may have, if he be a Liberal candidate there is an end to any further consideration to him.

Mr. SAMUEL BARKER (East Hamilton). I usually, in fact I have always listened with a great deal of pleasure, sometimes with amusement—but always with admiration—to the hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) when he gets up to defend any cause. I do not mean to say that I admire the hon. gentleman in his defence of any cause, but I do admire the cultivated skill with which, from long practice, he can make any cause appear in its most favourable light. He attained a reputation for that, Sir, before he came to this House. He has not been here long enough to lose it. The hon. gentleman is unable to understand the object of this discussion. He gravely tells us, in the face of what everybody in this House has heard to-night, that this litigation was fought to an end, that it was tried out, but he surely knows that the Department of the Interior interposed and that the Crown withdrew from the case and put an end to it.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. After it was tried out.

Mr. BARKER. Before judgment.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Not at all.

Mr. BARKER. If a judgment had been given why did the Crown want to interpose? For what purpose did the Department of the Interior interpose? If judgment had been given in favour of the Department of the Interior, why did it interpose? The hon. gentleman surely did not think of what he was saying. What was the object of this interposition? Why did Mr. Chrysler write to the government? Did any government ever get a letter from their solicitor more clearly intimating to them their duty to the public than is shown in that letter from Mr. Chrysler, written at the instigation of the judge who tried the case, telling the government what the judge thinks ought to be done—but what the government did not do. The government withdrew the case, and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) talks about Mr. Lyon, a railway trackman away off in the far Northwest, after the government had withdrawn, not appearing by counsel here in Ottawa in order to fight both the government and Mr. Mackenzie. What preposterous nonsense.

Mr. E. M. McDONALD (Pictou). Will the hon. gentleman permit me to ask a question. Does he mean to seriously assert that where the name of the King is permitted to be used by the Attorney General, at the request of any relator, the Crown is necessarily a party to the case or has any connection with the case other than a mere nominal one?

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman knows as well as I do what an information laid by the King, on the relation of a private citizen means. He knows that before the sanction of the King is given to that relation, an inquiry has been made by the Department of Justice, and the department has satisfied itself that there is reasonable grounds for litigation. And the hon. gentleman knows that until you satisfy the department, until you have satisfied the government that you have rights—not that they are absolutely proven, but that you have rights that ought to be tried in a court of justice—not until then are you permitted to use the King's name.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I agree with my hon. friend but he is not answering my question.

Mr. BARKER. I have answered it.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I quite know what my hon. friend has just asserted, namely, that this preliminary inquiry is made; but I also know that after the attorney general has given his permission, his position in the suit is nothing more than a nominal one.

Mr. BARKER. Certainly nominal, but the Department of Justice has given its consent to the proceedings; it has inquired, in a preliminary manner, into the facts. And having authorized the name of the King to be used in the suit, how comes it that the King, through the department, intervenes and says: 'stop,' when the question has not been finally adjudicated.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Because the litigant has failed in his litigation.

Mr. BARKER. How can the litigant be said to have failed until he has judgment against him?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. He had judgment against him.

Mr. BARKER. He had not. The whole question whether that patent should be rescinded was open to the last moment.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. At the instance of the Crown, but of nobody else.

Mr. BARKER. The real question in that suit—and the Minister of Justice knows it as well as I do—was whether that patent ought to be rescinded. That court would not settle the rights as between Lyon and the Italian. It could not do that. All that the court could do in that suit was to ascertain whether the King was entitled to recall that patent which had been issued in his name. The hon. gentleman knows that. It is almost an insult to the hon. gentleman to doubt that he knows it. Here is a letter from Mr. Chrysler, of March 20, 1903—to whom? To the Hon. Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior :

The King on the relation of Lyon vs. Mackenzie.
The judge of the Exchequer Court delivered judgment this morning in this case and I attended——.

He attended on behalf of the Crown.

Having been notified by the registrar that the judge desired my attendance on behalf of the Crown. The judgment is a written judgment and should perhaps be considered either by the Department of Justice or by your department. The judge intimated that, as between the parties to the suit, Lyon and Mackenzie, he thinks neither is entitled to the patent.

I think from all we have heard that that was perfectly clear.

But he is prepared to set aside the patent granted to Mackenzie if the Crown desires to do so.

Yet the hon. gentleman says that the question whether the patent should be revoked, was fought out to the end.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am sure my hon. friend does not want to be misunderstood. Will he excuse my repeating what I have already said, that the whole point upon which the judge left the litigation open was the inadequacy of the price.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Crown has a perfect right, in any such proceeding, to protect its own interests even if it thinks the relator has failed, and that is what Mr. Chrysler says the judge would do in this case if the department so desired. The judge was prepared to protect the rights of the Crown.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. On the ground that the price was inadequate?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is to say, that Mr. Mackenzie should not get $200,000 worth of property for $480.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Property which had, in two years, attained that value.

Mr. BARKER. The real question involved in that action on the relation of Lyon was : Should the Crown be allowed to recall that patent? If the Crown had been allowed to recall and cancel the patent, would the rights of Mackenzie, and of Lyon, and of all the villagers of that place, have been wiped out? No, Sir, the Crown would have been placed where it had been when the claim was decided in that most extraordinary manner by the Justice of the Crown Lands Department, Mr. Turriff. That would have so placed the department that it could have done justice to all the interests involved. That was the whole object of the suit. That suit was not to hand over the lands to Lyon, to Mackenzie or to anybody else ; the patent would have been rescinded, the whole rights would have gone back to the government, and the government would have been in a position to do justice to all interests. That would have been the position, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Aylesworth) knows it.

Now, I do not propose, after all that has been said, and so well said, to go through the details of this matter—it would be quite unnecessary to do so. I do not believe there is an hon. gentleman sitting on the other side who does not clearly apprehend the facts as well as we do ; I do not believe there is any man on the other side who does not think of the matter as I think of it. In a general way, the facts of the case are these : The government owned this tract of land which happens to be peculiarly valuable. It was a town site. An Italian, whose name I do not pretend to remember—I may explain I have not looked into the papers, but I have heard the discussion of this case here to-day—was a railway workman on the Canadian Pacific Railway. His brother had a house on the Canadian Pacific Railway right of way, and this railway trackman occupied that house with his brother. It appears that this Italian railway man living with his brother put up some small structure—I do not know whether it was a pig sty or a root house. No doubt he intended to build it on the Canadian Pacific Railway right of way. But, in fact, he built it on the town site. Another man, also a railway workman, named Lyon, had constructed another edifice. I do not know whether this other edifice was of the same particular description or not; it may have been a structure dedicated to the goddess Cloacina. Whatever it was, no doubt it smelt as sweet as the pig sty. There they were on the same footing, except that Lyon was the first—two railway workmen who had built little structures, pig sties or something of that kind, on the public lands, of this town site. As the property became valuable, this Italian got the idea that there was something to be made out of it, and, because he had built a root house, he considered himself a settler. Now, I do not know whether it was the Italian who attracted the lawyer, Mackenzie, or whether it was the lawyer, Mackenzie, who attracted the Italian. But we find the two in an office together. Mackenzie draws an elaborate statement and claim for his client, the Italian. It is then sworn to. This statement of alleged facts, drawn by this Mackenzie and sworn to by the Italian, was a tissue of falsehoods and frauds; that is beyond question, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) has admitted it. That claim is submitted to the department. And by whom? By the Italian? No, but by and on behalf of the gentleman who drew the affidavit, Mr. Mackenzie. He had in the meantime, without paying a dollar, got a transfer of that wonderful fraudulent claim, and he presents that to the Department of the Interior, or rather to the commissioner of that department. He wants the town site upon the story of the affidavit he, Mr. Mackenzie, drew for the Italian who had put the root house on the property. That is the story. But Mr. Commissioner Turriff says: He was the assignee of the property. Why, Mr. Speaker, how could the assignee of the fraudulent claimant be any better than his assignor? The man who presents a claim reeking with fraud and falsehood because he has got an assignment of it to himself, is he any better than the man who makes the fraudulent statement? I do not want to say anything against Mr. Mackenzie; I do not know the man, never heard of him until to-night. But, as the result of a little worldly experience, I should say that when an attorney gets hold of a railway workman and makes out an affidavit and claim of that kind, putting together statements that are afterwards declared by the judge of a court to be a tissue of falsehoods, I think that some little care should be taken in looking into the connection of that solicitor with the case. And when I find that attorney, without paying a cent for the assignment, making the claim himself, and when I find him, after the fraud has been exposed by a judge, still persisting in the claim, a most dishonest and dishonourable claim under the circumstances, I believe I have some reason to think that the solicitor was no better than the client, that it was a case of arcades ambo—neither of them better nor worse than the other. I say that, and I do not care who Mr. Mackenzie is or what he is. I say that the man who persisted in the claim after he had heard the denunciation of it by Mr. Justice Wetmore is no better than the man who originally made the claim. In fact, I think he is worse. But this gentleman presents his claim, and, forsooth, the commissioner thought the facts exposed mattered nothing to him; he allowed the claim, wiped out Lyon and all the others, giving the patent to Mr. Mackenzie. He acts upon the letter of this lawyers assignment while the other claimant was pressing his own claim is ignored. If this commissioner had been the judge in the Merchant of Venice, old Shylock would have got his pound of flesh. The practice of the department compelled him to dismiss poor Mr. Lyon, and grant the right to this valuable piece of land to the assignee of the Italian, although he knew the whole circumstances. The question was not merely the rights of these two men, the Italian and Mackenzie, or Lyon and Mackenzie; there were others. We are told that citizens of Canada have built dwellings upon that town site and that the property is worth $200,000, and this commissioner chose to give the patent to Mackenzie, who was to have the fate of these unfortunate villagers in his hands and to do with them as he pleased. A pretty trustee this commissioner to look after the interests of the public. I wonder if the department did know Mr. Mackenzie. How was it that Mackenzie could get the whole of that land granted to him with the knowledge that there were people interested? Lyon was not the only individual, but he had just about the same claim that Mackenzie, the assignee of the Italian, had, the only difference being that Lyon was honest and had made no false statement. He had not sworn to any false claims, had not been guilty of any fraud. The other man had, and between the two men this ex-Commissioner of Crown Lands granted the fraudulent application, Crown lands, that is the way this ex-commissioner, who had millions of acres of land in his charge dealt with these claims. By one we judge all. Who can tell what injury that man has done throughout this Dominion if he has been deciding other cases as he decided this. What a curse he must have been to the country if that is the way he dealt out what he calls justice.

Mr. OLIVER. I think I might raise the point whether my hon. friend is justified in using the expression he did.

Mr. BARKER. I am speaking of the ex-commissioner, and I am speaking of him as I think he deserves.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think in this case the reference is not to a member of the House, the reference is not to Mr. Turriff as a member of the House.

Mr. BARKER. The gentleman may not be in this House. I am dealing with the deputy of the Hon. Mr. Sifton, the ex-commissioner.

Mr. FIELDING. Even so, I submit that the gentleman is now a member of the House and is entitled to protection.

Mr. BARKER. Of course, I take the Speaker's decision.

Mr. FIELDING. I dissent from the doctrine, that is all.

Mr. BARKER. I would not have used the words if I did not think they were amply deserved. I would have said them of the Minister of Finance if I were not restrained by the rules of the House, and I am not restrained by the rules of the House in expressing my opinion of the other gentleman.

Mr. FIELDING. It is an offensive word.

Mr. BARKER. If it is offensive, I intended every word I uttered. I say to the Minister of Finance that if he were guilty of what this officer was guilty—I speak of intention—I would not hesitate to use the same words to the Minister of Finance, if the rules of the House did not prevent me.

Now what more is there in this case? The solicitor who drew these affidavits or claims knew that fraud was perpetrated, false statements made in the affidavits, would deprive the applicant of the right to the patent. The man who made the application, that Italian, in the words written out by Mackenzie said this:

> I understand and agree that the sale to me of the land which I hereby apply to purchase, shall be void if it shall be hereafter proved that any statement in this solemn declaration is incorrect.

And that is the declaration that Judge Wetmore said was recking with falsehood and fraud.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is fine judicial language, I was wondering if the judge used it.

Mr. BARKER. If the hon. gentleman wishes to qualify it, he may do so. That was the application, and it was that application so expressed that this Mackenzie took an assignment of. That if the application or declaration contained any false statement, the purchase was thereby rendered void. The gentleman when he took the assignment, took only the Italian's rights, and the Italian's rights were subject to that qualification, to the condition and terms that if there was one statement which was false, the claim was worthless. Now in view of Judge Wetmore describing as he did the statements made by that Italian in his affidavit, what sort of an honourable man was Mackenzie. He knew this grant was void on the evidence found by Judge Wetmore, and yet he persisted in fighting Lyon and in attempting to hang on to the patent he was not entitled to. That is the argument I am using, I am not going into any finessing about this thing. These are the broad facts that will appeal to every man in this country. There you will find the difficulty the Minister of Justice is in when he attempts to argue that the thing was fought out to the end. There was the difficulty that Mackenzie was in. How far did that influence the Department of the Interior in getting the Minister of Justice to withdraw? That is a question the people will ask an explanation of. I say we want no more to condemn it than that solitary fact. I do not propose to occupy the time of this House in going into the details of all these circumstances. There was the case before the court, there was the judge intimating to the government, an intimation conveyed through their own counsel Mr. Chrysler, that the court was prepared to cancel that patent, and yet the government would not accept the opportunity to take the lands back into their own hands, to hear all the parties, to hear Lyon, to hear Mackenzie, to hear the villagers who had erected their houses and their homes on the lands, to hear all and do justice to every man—they would not do that, they confirmed the patent.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Lake).

Amendment (Mr. Lake) negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. I did not vote because I was paired with the chief whip of the government. I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. TALBOT. The hon. member for Cumberland (Logan) has not voted.

Mr. LOGAN. I am paired with the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Lefurgey).

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. How would you vote?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. For the amendment, of course.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no.

WARSHIPS ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before Mr. Speaker leaves the chair, I wish to ask the Minister of Finance if he has any reply to the question I put to the government the other day?

Mr. FIELDING. No. I have been so confined to attendance on the House that I have not had an opportunity of searching the records. On Monday I shall be able to answer.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Department of Labour—printing and stationery, including printing of 'Labour Gazette,' allowances to correspondents, administration of Conciliation Act, Railway Labour Disputes Act, travelling expenses, &c., and $500 for an accountant, which sum may be paid to any one in the Civil Service, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $28,350.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Minister of Labour). This vote is $400 less than for last fiscal year. The details are: Printing of 'Labour Gazette,' $13,340; allowance to correspondents, $5,100; accountant, $500; stationery, $1,800; travelling expenses, $3.000; Railway Labour Disputes Act, $1,000; printing and binding, $2.000; miscellaneous, $1,610; total, $28,350.

Mr. BARR. How do you come to pay this $500 to the accountant?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. Johnston is chief clerk and accountant in the Post Office Department; he was appointed in 1876; he has a salary in the post office of $2,500 and he performs all the duties of the accountant for the Department of Labour besides, and we pay him this $500.

Mr. BARR. Can he fill the two positions at the same time?

Mr. LEMIEUX. He does extra work; he is a very excellent officer.

Mr. BARR. How many hours out of the twenty-four does he work?

Mr. LEMIEUX. He gives some time every day to the Labour Department.

Mr. BARR. He is taken off the work of the Post Office Department?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No. He works at night for the Labour Department. He is an old employee, appointed in 1876. He is really expert as an accountant and we pay him this allowance for the work he does.

Mr. DANIEL. How are the correspondents paid?

Mr. LEMIEUX. One hundred dollars per year, payable each month.

Mr. BARR. How is the printing distributed?

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is our account with the Dominion Printing Bureau.

To provide for the appointment of Frederick A. Acland as chief clerk and secretary of the department, from March 1, 1907, with a salary at the rate of $2,600 per annum, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, $216.66.

Mr. BENNETT. How long has Mr. Acland been in the service?

Mr. LEMIEUX. He has just been appointed. The amount has been voted during three successive sessions, but the appointment has only been made now.

Mr. BENNETT. Where does he come from?

Mr. LEMIEUX. He was in the west as editorial representative of the Toronto 'Globe.' He is a man of excellent ability and he has made a special study of the labour question. The press of the country has commended his appointment. He is a man who when Mr. King is absent can fill his position very creditably.

Mr. BENNETT. Oh, well, if he can do that he is worth double the salary.

To provide for the appointment of J. A. McNiven as fair wage officer, from March 1, 1907, with a salary at the rate of $1,500 per annum, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, $125.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. O'Donoghue, who was for many years fair wage officer, died a few months ago, and Mr. McNiven replaces him. He has been highly recommended by the Labour Congress, and was one of the leading officials of the labour societies. He has been for many years correspondent of the 'Labour Gazette' in British Columbia.

Mr. BENNETT. Is this the man who was the defeated candidate in the recent local elections in Victoria city?

Mr. LEMIEUX. He was not appointed on account of that defeat. All I know is that as fair wage officer he was probably the only available man who could succeed the late Mr. O'Donoghue, who, as we all know, was one of the labour authorities of the Dominion.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the Minister of Inland Revenue tell us whether this is the same Mr. McNiven?

Mr. LEMIEUX.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes, he is the same gentleman, and he is an exceptionally good man for the position.

Mr. BENNETT. He was exceptionally well beaten in Victoria.

Department of Labour—To cover expenses of Royal Commission appointed to inquire into dispute between Bell Telephone Company and its employees at Toronto, including stenographer's account for reporting and transcribing evidence, $1,700.

Mr. BENNETT. What are the largest details?

Mr. LEMIEUX. This amount is required to pay stenographers for reporting and transcribing evidence, $700; witness fees of seventy witnesses, $375; Judge Winchester, commissioner, 20 days, at $20 a day, $400; travelling expense, for the chairman of the commission, $100; printing subpoenas and payment of constables, $125. As we are all aware, this commission served its purpose and settled a very vexed question.

Department of Labour—costs of litigation under the Alien Labour Act in connection with the employees of the Père Marquette Railway, $4,772.04.

Mr. BENNETT. What are the details of this?

Mr. LEMIEUX. This item is to meet the expenses of the alien labour case of the Attorney General versus Cain and Gilhula, in which the Solicitor General and the deputy Minister of Justice were engaged before the Privy Council two years ago. I myself acted for the government in that case. Although the appeal was successful, the government were required by the order to pay the costs. The respondents' costs in the Privy Council were taxed at the sum of £374 4s. 6d. say $1,850. Mr. Shepley's costs were $1,808.18. The application was made two years ago. I represented the government with Mr. Newcombe at that time, and Mr. Shepley argued the case before the Privy Council last year. The fee of Mr. Madison Grant, which was paid by the Department of Justice, was $25. The total is $3,683.18.

Post Office Department—Further amount required for civil government contingencies, $1,000.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The postmaster at Centreville, in Lennox and Addington, has, I understand, been absent almost from the time of his appointment, and has left the business in the hands of a deputy who is not very well informed. The postmaster's name is Fraser. I would like to know if he is back there yet, and, if not, is he going to be allowed to live in the city of Belleville and still be postmaster in the village of Centreville?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am informed, as my hon. friend states, that the postmaster has been away for some time; but he has been ordered, since my hon. friend called our attention to this case a few days ago, to return to his office or he could not keep it. I hope he will obey the order of the department.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What was his answer?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am informed that there is no written reply yet.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. There is another matter in connection with that post office which I wish to bring to the attention of the Postmaster General. The post office is at the end of the village, there is no plank walk leading to it, and I understand that the people of the village, in the fall and in the spring, have to wade through mud and through a creek and to go about a quarter of a mile out of their way, to get their mail. There are people of the hon. Postmaster General's own political creed who keep store in the village, and who could afford the necessary accommodation for the post office where it would be much more convenient for the people.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will inquire into the case and see if my hon. friend can be accommodated.

Mr. LENNOX. I want to say a word to the Postmaster General in reference to the payment of rural postmasters. I do so now for this reason, that before the other items can come up the department may have committed itself to a certain scheme, and I want to urge upon the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) to be generous with those postmasters. There are at least, I understand, 6,000 postmasters whose remuneration does not exceed $25 a year for all the services they have to perform and all the requirements they have to provide in connection with the postal service. I know I can be met with the argument: Oh, we are giving them more than your government gave them before. That may be, but the conditions are changed We have a surplus of $1,000,000; and while it is well to have a surplus in any department, I do not think that that principle applies to the Post Office Department to the same extent as to other branches of the service. There is no branch of the service with which so many people are so intimately connected as the postal branch; and I do feel that, particularly with regard to our rural postmasters, there ought to be more generous treatment. I would also urge upon the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) that in adopting a scheme of remunerating the postmasters, he shall not overlook the fact set out in their petition, namely, that their increase should date back to last July. They urge that they presented their petition a year ago, and I know that their allowance is made upon the basis of the receipts of the year before. In that way they very properly say that they do not get as good treatment as they ought to receive. I shall not take up more time. I felt that I ought to bring this before the department. I know that some people may say I ought not to urge this request on behalf of a certain class, but I am quite ready to take the responsibility, and I speak more particularly on behalf of the rural districts and towns. The cities I do not know so much about.

Mr. BARR. I wish merely to detain the House for a moment. I wish merely to say that sometimes a surplus may prove to be a curse rather than a blessing. I am convinced that if we do not take this question in hand this session and treat our postmasters more generously, the service will suffer, and anything that affects the postal service closely affects the whole community. This is one of the questions which ought to be dealt with without delay. We are living in a time of strikes, and I would not be surprised if the rural postmasters went on strike if not treated more generously.

Mr. HENDERSON. I wish to emphasize what has been said by the last two speakers with reference to the salaries of the rural postmasters. I have had a great many letters lately urging me to speak to the Postmaster General with reference to that question, and I confess that outside of what I have said in the House I have not troubled him personally because I understood, when last this question was before the House, that he was going to be liberal. But we are drawing very close to the end of the session and have not heard anything more about that liberality, and I fear our postmasters throughout the country are becoming somewhat afraid that they may have to wait some time for this promised liberality. I have been asked to urge that the increase, when it does take place, should date from July 1 last. I do not know what the Postmaster General's intention is, but that seems to be the understanding among some of the postmasters. I was sorry a moment or two ago to see the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) move from the chair he occupies to another one close to the Postmaster General, and I thought he whispered to him to be careful. We understand that the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) has charge of the purse string, and I apprehended that he was just going to put a little string on his colleague, but I trust that is not the case and that the Postmaster General will be generous. Possibly to-night he can repeat what he said before in order to save us the trouble of answering such a large amount of correspondence and in order that the postmasters will be able to read in the newspapers what the Postmaster General is going to do.

Mr. MORIN. I have nothing to say about the postmasters because others have spoken about them, but I think the mail carriers should be advanced as well. The mail carriers are exposed in the country to weather of all kinds and bad roads, and I know lots of them who do not get half paid. Many of them get only 40 cents to 75 cents a day, and I do not see how a man can live on such a pittance.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As regards the main contractors, of course the very word implies that there are tenders called; and in each case they are themselves the artisans of their own fortune. Tenders are invited, and the lowest, according to the rule followed from time immemorial in the department is in each case accepted. I admit that sometimes people are so anxious to get a government contract that they tender too low, but that is the fault of the contractors themselves. But generally speaking, I can assure my hon. friend there is such competition that I am inclined to believe they make a fair living out of their contract. As regards the postmasters' salaries, my views are well known. The rural postmasters and the outside service know how my heart beats in this connection, but I am not alone and I have to convince others. At all events we had this morning the word of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that he will be in a position to make an announcement this session as regards the civil service in general, not only in connection with the Post Office Department but all the departments, so that my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) will shortly have an answer.

Mr. MORIN. Could not the Postmaster General establish a rule for carrying the mails and give the carriers so much per mile ?

Mr. BENNETT. And employ only Grits.

Mr. MORIN. Yes, I will agree to that.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There will be other items in the supplementaries that will come up in a few days. There will be many opportunities to discuss the question.

Mr. LAKE. There is a question which I would like to lay before the Postmaster General, and I will do it very briefly. I have been trying to arrange to see him for some little time, but he has always been engaged when I am disengaged and vice versa. But I have mentioned the matter to him—it is a question of the change of the names of two post offices in my district. I think he has more or less broadly hinted to me that he does not desire the names changed. There are in my district a town and village which have names which are very similar. One is the town of Qu'Appelle and the other the village of Fort Qu'Appelle. These names were given by the legislature of the Northwest Territories. In each case there was a considerable discussion in the legislature in regard to the name and parties from the two places were heard on the question. The names have been finally and definitely settled. The town of Qu'Appelle has a population of 778 people and the village of Fort Qu'Appelle has a population of 170 people. Now, the Post Office Department have their own names for these two places, names which were given to them a long time ago. The name 'Qu'Appelle' is applied by the department to the village of Fort Qu'Appelle and the name of South Qu'Appelle is the name applied by the department to the town of Qu'Appelle.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is the station.

Mr. LAKE. Yes. I hold that there should be no question of sentiment in regard to this matter. The names of the places have been definitely fixed by the proper representatives in the Northwest legislature. A letter addressed to Qu'Appelle goes to Fort Qu'Appelle, unless the postmaster at the town of Qu'Appelle happens to know the name of the person to whom it is addressed and that he is a resident of the town. This of course, is done under the direction of the Post Office Department. But much greater difficulty exists in regard to registered letters which have to be formally applied for there. I have three petitions here, one from the Board of Trade of Qu'Appelle, another from the town council of that place and one from the municipality of South Qu'Appelle, all asking that the name of South Qu'Appelle be changed to Qu'Appelle and that the name of Qu'Appelle be changed to Fort Qu'Appelle. There is a daily mail from Qu'Appelle to the Fort returning the same afternoon. But in the very near future it is probable that the town of Fort Qu'Appelle will be on another line of railway and there will be no mail running between the two places. Then there will be even more danger of confusion than at present. The people are entitled to address their letters to a town by the name under which it was incorporated and which it officially bears; it cannot be expected that every one should know that the post office name of Qu'Appelle is South Qu'Appelle. The village is commonly and colloquially known as the 'Fort' or 'Fort Qu'Appelle.' Further, it will be noticed in the newspapers that press reports relating to the Fort are almost universally, if colloquially known as the 'Fort' or 'Fort Qu'Appelle.' I hope the Postmaster General will take a practical business view of this matter and will see that the change is made.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I shall delay the House but very little in discussing this subject.

I may say that, there is something else besides the business point of view to be considered in this matter. There is also the sentimental point of view, and this is a matter of importance to the pioneers who settled at Fort Qu'Appelle, and they are very anxious to keep the old name of 'Qu'Appelle,' which is quite historical in the Northwest. In fact, Fort Qu'Appelle was one of the old Hudson bay forts. We all know the origin of the name. The French name of 'Qu'Appelle' applied to this river means the river which echoes, for there are hills on either side of the river which echoes the voice of one who calls. It is a very poetical and sentimental name with the old courreurs des bois, the pioneers and employees of the Hudson Bay Company. So those men who settled around Fort Qu'Appelle are very anxious to keep that name, and I understand and apreciate their sentiment. At the request of my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) I have examined the file in the department, and I can tell him that the people are far from unanimous in favour of the change which he proposes. The incoming settlers who have settled on the Canadian Pacific Railway line have been incorporated under the name of Qu'Appelle. The old settlers were at Fort Qu'Appelle, and as I have stated, they are very anxious to keep the name of Qu'Appelle. The conflict is between the old and the new. Being a little sentimental myself, I feel I must stand up for the old. But if we follow our good old policy of compromise, we may settle the difficulty. I am going to have another conference with Senator Perley and with my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) and we may be able to arrange the matter. But as to names, in the Post Office Department we are not too practical and not too up-to-date. I am for the old names, and I would not like, for the sake of new-comers, to take away the name belonging to the old place.

Mr. LAKE. I would like to add just one word to the discussion. I do not wish to hurt the feelings of any of the old settlers. But I regret to say that there are comparatively few of them left down at the old fort. I wish also to make this remark, that it is not an undisputed historical fact that the first place called Fort Qu'Appelle was situated in the valley. There are a number of people there who make the claim that the original Fort Qu'Appelle was quite close to the place called Qu'Appelle.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Is it the intention of the government to increase the number of letter carriers in the city of Quebec?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I increased the number by five last year. I am informed that the letter carriers complain of the weight of mail matter they have to carry in sections of the city, and Quebec is a hilly city. I have investigated these complaints, and found that a great number of people in Quebec subscribe to Montreal papers, and there are so many of these that they are pretty heavy.

Mr. CLEMENTS. When may we expect the letter carrier system to be established which was spoken of some time ago?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have stated when we discussed the main estimates that I intended to give a letter delivery in all cities with a population of 12,000 and over and a revenue of $20,000. In the supplementaries I expect an amount which will enable me to extend this system.

Excise—provisional allowance of not more than $100 to officers in British Columbia, Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, whose salaries from any government source do not exceed $1,000, $2,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Is that an ordinary allowance?

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is a little extra allowance that we make to officers in the Northwest to enable them to pay for rent and light from their salary.

To enable the department to supply methylated spirits to manufacturers, the cost of which will be recouped by the manufacturers to whom it is supplied, and to pay for rent, light, power, freight, salaries, &c., $57,000.

Mr. BENNETT. From whom is the department now purchasing their wood alcohol?

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is purchased on contract from Gall & Company, of Montreal. The contract was made in 1905 and expires early next year. We pay $1.29 per gallon.

Mr. BENNETT. Is all the wood alcohol purchased from that one firm now?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Weights and Measures—gas and electric light inspection—salaries of officers, inspectors and assistant inspectors of weights and measures, $63,700.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the regulation as to these inspectors making charges as they go about to inspect? I have heard complaints that they charge the individual for whom they make the inspection for the carriage or the livery. For instance, in the town of Barrie the merchants say that in addition to the regular fee they charge each one of them 25 cents for conveyance when they go from shop to shop right along in a row, and they do not think this is fair. A merchant wrote to me complaining bitterly of the amount that he had paid for inspection. He has a great many weights in his shop of different kinds, and he thought the total amount charged was too much.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The charge for cartage is only made when very heavy weights have to be conveyed. There are few instances of that kind, and the charge is very trifling. The fees charged for inspection are made under regulations, and written instructions are sent to every inspector in the country.

Mr. MARSHALL. Have not some of the inspectors been asking for a raise in salary? We have a scale inspector in the town of Aylmer, a man named Littleton, who claims that he is not paid enough.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. He has left the service. I admit at once that we have had very numerous requests from inspectors for increases from all over the country.

Mr. TAYLOR. I presume these are to be considered with the others?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Certainly.

Mr. LENNOX. Are the fees returned to the government or does the inspector have them as an addition to his salary?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. They all go into the consolidated revenue.

Mr. W. JACKSON. Do the fees more than pay the inspectors?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No, there is quite a deficit.

Mr. W. JACKSON. Complaint is made because the same fee for inspection is charged against the man whose scales are found correct as against the man whose scales are always wrong.

Mr. TAYLOR. When the scales are found wrong the owner has to pay the cost of the repairs in addition to the inspection fee.

Salaries, &c., gas and electric light inspectors, $35,000.

Mr. DANIEL. In the inspection of gas, when the inspector finds the gas not giving the proper percentage of illumination, does the department prosecute or content itself publishing the result?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. In such cases the companies furnishing inferior gas are proceeded against and fined and are compelled to provide the proper quality of gas.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the minimum grade of gas?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The light must be at least 16 candle power.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the penalty?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We will have to look up the statute.

Mr. CLEMENTS. In the meantime I would ask if any satisfactory solution has been arrived at of the difficulty arising from the impure natural gas in the Chatham wells.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The question has been engaging the attention of our chemists for the last year. Until the Chatham well was discovered there was very little impurity in the natural gas in western Ontario. The well at Chatham is full of sulphuretted hydrogen, a deadly poison when allowed to escape into a room and our chemists visited Chatham examined the gas, analysed it and reported making certain recommendations. Under an agreement with the Chatham council the gas is being used with purifiers, a system of filtration recommended by our chemists. Up to the present we have heard no complaints and we hope the natural gas will continue to be purified to such an extent that its use can be continued.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I have recently visited the district and in my judgment the gas gives splendid light and heat and no bad results so far as I can gauge.

Mr. MARSHALL. What does the inspection of electric light cover?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is the inspection of electric meters to test the measuring accuracy of the meter to see that the consumer receives the proper amount of electric light for his money.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the provision of the Act requiring registration of companies supplying electric light apply to towns owning their own plant and supplying the residents of the towns?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Just the same.

Mr. LENNOX. I have been written to as to whether it is right that such towns should be called on to pay the $25 fee and I found that the word used in the Act is 'contractor,' who is to pay for a renewal of the license yearly. Does the department consider that to apply to corporations supplying electric light to their own people?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Certainly.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think that was contemplated when the Act was passed.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. LENNOX. When the Act was passed, corporations as a rule did not own their own plants but to-day they are doing so more generally under the guidance, I suppose of the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean). It does seem to me that there is a good deal in the argument that a corporation supplying its own people ought probably not be called upon to pay that fee.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. They are just in the position of a private contractor who charges for the electricity furnished, and the interpretation clause says that a 'contractor' means any person undertaking to furnish electricity.

Mr. LENNOX. But a corporation is not 'a person.' I have looked at it pretty carefully; it says a contractor means any person, but looking at the general interpretation Act I think person includes a municipal corporation. I wrote back to the representatives of the corporation and they still thought they ought not to be called upon to pay the fee.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The Act now simply provides for the inspection of meters used for electric lighting, but a Bill will shortly be introduced providing for the inspection of meters used for furnishing electricity for power. My hon. friend can present his views when that Bill is being considered.

Mr. LENNOX. Is there anything with reference to this renewal of the fee in the Bill.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No.

Mr. LENNOX. A corporation supplying electricity to its own taxpayers is only a contractor in an artificial sense, and I submit to the consideration of the minister whether it is right they should pay this renewal fee.

Mr. MARSHALL. In the annual report of the Inland Revenue Department, I find in the statistics concerning the inspection of electric light during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1906, that the revenue derived from the inspection of electric light was as follows:

Fees for inspection of meters, &c.. ..	$29,974 75
Registration of companies..	5,125 00
		35,099 75
The expenses of inspection (annual)..	8,117 76
		26,981 99
Expended on standard instruments, &c.	1,736 46
Leaving a net revenue of..		25,245 53

I submit that in view of these figures, the fee charged by the government is too heavy. I do not think so much should be charged for inspecting a municipal plant, in view of the fact that there is a surplus from this service.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The salaries for electric light inspection are charged against gas, and the inspection is generally made by the same official. To that extent the apparent profit is larger than it actually is. Nevertheless, the revenue from the inspection of electric light is greater than the expenditure, whereas the opposite is a fact with regard to gas inspection.

Mr. DANIEL. Has the department found it necessary to prosecute any gas or electric light companies for supplying illuminating power under the standard?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There have been prosecutions with respect to gas, but not with respect to electricity.

Stamps for imported and Canadian tobacco, $18,000.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This is simply an illustration of the great increase in the business of the department; it required $18,000 more to buy stamps this year than last.

Mr. TAYLOR. You get that back?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Certainly.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 15, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

REDUCTION IN POSTAL RATES BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND CANADA.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). Before the Orders of the Day are called, with the permission of the House, I would like to make an announcement regarding a reduction in the British postal rates on newspapers, magazines and trade journals to Canada. This announcement, couched in exactly the same terms, will be made to-day in the British House of Commons. I will read it :

The following arrangement has been made between His Majesty's Postmaster General, Mr. Sydney Buxton, and the Postmaster General of Canada, and will come into force on May 1, 1907.

At present the rate of British newspapers, magazines and trade journals going to Canada is that fixed by the Postal Union convention, viz.: ½ d. per 2 ozs., which is roughly equivalent to 4 d., or 8 cents, per pound. At this rate and under existing conditions the articles in question are unable to obtain a footing in Canada, with the consequence that the volume of newspapers, magazines, &c., circulated in Canada is very inconsiderable.

This state of affairs is unfavourable to the growth of close sympathy and common sentiment between Canada and the mother country, and is, at the same time, prejudicial to the mutual trade and material interests of both countries.

With a common desire of providing and encouraging, in regard to these matters, freer and more mutually profitable intercourse between the United Kingdom and Canada, His Majesty's Postmaster General and the Postmaster General of Canada have agreed to the following :

The postage from the United Kingdom to Canada on registered newspapers and on bona fide magazines and trade journals (published at regular intervals of not more than one month) is to be reduced at the rate of a penny per pound, 2 cents, on each package, the charges on packets not exceeding 2 ozs. remaining at a halfpenny. The present limit of weight of five pounds for a packet will be maintained, and certain administrative regulations will be laid down by the British post office.

This special reduction will place Great Britain in the future in at least as favourable a postal position towards Canada in regard to the articles in question as that occupied by any other country. The reduction is based on a consideration of the very special and peculiar position, geographically and otherwise, occupied by Canada, and is granted also in consideration of the fact that the Dominion Postmaster General undertakes to carry free of ocean transit charges all British newspapers, magazines and trade journals sent from the United Kingdom to Canada by vessels under contract with the Canadian government, thus relieving the British post office of the cost of such transit charges on the articles in question (approximately 2⅔ d., 4⅓ cents a pound).

The arrangement will remain in force for a period of four years, unless previously modified or concluded by mutual agreement.

Mr. Speaker, as I have been requested by several members of the press and several public men in Canada to explain the last amendment to the postal convention which exists between the United States and Canada, may I be permitted to state in a few words the exact nature of that amendment. I have prepared in writing an exact statement of that change.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I have no objection to the information, but I would suggest that as we are going into Committee of Supply, this might be read when that motion is made, and that would afford an opportunity, without breaking the rules, for asking some questions. Is the Finance Minister going into Supply ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). A little later. I announced Friday evening that we would go into Supply this morning and take up the estimates of the acting Minister of Public Works. That hon. gentleman is obliged to be absent, and we will therefore take up several Bills and then go into Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. I make no objection.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). I was going to ask a question of the Postmaster General.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understood the Postmaster General asked and obtained leave of the House to make his statement, otherwise I would have applied the rule.

Mr. FIELDING. The motion for Supply will be made early, and perhaps that will meet the case.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister is reducing the rates on magazines to an individual in England to an individual in Canada ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Not from the office of publication alone ? Will it apply to a magazine mailed by an individual in Canada to another individual in Canada ? I may point out that many people in the Canadian Northwest have these magazines sent them by mail and the postage is a great burden. I would draw that aspect of the case to the attention of the minister, with the hope that he will be able to reduce the postage in Canada to the same rate.

Mr. LOUIS LAVERGNE (Drummond and Arthabaska). (Translation). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I wish to put one or two questions to the Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Lemieux) about the reduction made recently in the salaries paid to the postmasters in rural districts, and more particularly in the county of Drummond and Arthabaska.

Mr. FOSTER. This cannot come up on the Orders of the Day.

Mr. LOUIS LAVERGNE. I am asking the minister a question, and I think I have a right to do so.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has a right to ask a question.

Mr. LOUIS LAVERGNE. I do not see why I should not be allowed to speak my own language. I am going to ask a question.

I wish to ask also if the fact is known by the Postmaster General that the population of the town of Arthabaska has increased by about three hundred souls and that the work of the post office has increased accordingly. Though the work has increased, the annual salary of the postmaster has been reduced by $46, notwithstanding that the population of the town has increased by three hundred souls, in the last two years. That reduction has been made quite recently.

Will the minister be kind enough to tell me if it is his intention, during the present session, to take steps to revert to the old order of things by fixing those salaries at what they were before or at a higher figure?

Mr. LEMIEUX. In answer to my hon. friend (Mr. Louis Lavergne), who states that the salary of the postmaster at Arthabaska has been reduced, I may say that the salaries of postmasters in rural districts are regulated by the amount of revenue received, and it sometimes happens in consequence that the postmaster may receive more or less one year than another year In this case at Arthabaska, if the salary has been reduced—of which I know nothing personally except what my hon. friend has just stated—it is because the revenue has decreased. If the revenue had increased the salary would have increased. As regards the county of Arthabaska in particular, the same answer applies. Wherever the revenue of the post office decreases, the head office here is obliged to reduce the salary of the postmaster proportionately.

QUEBEC ORIENTAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 69) respecting the Quebec Oriental Railway Company.—Mr. Gauvreau.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the amendments ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The amendments are merely verbal as far as I can see. Provision was made for the purchase of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway. It was agreed to by the Senate. I do not see any objection to it.

Amendments agreed to.

SUPPLY—NEW POSTAL ARRANGEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). Mr. Speaker, I may now make the statement concerning the amendment of the postal convention existing between the United States and Canada. In laying before you the following information respecting certain changes which have recently been made in the rates on newspapers and periodicals passing between Canada and the United States, I desire to say that when I assumed the duties of Postmaster General, I found the department very much engaged with the question of controlling the influx of American newspapers and periodicals. These were coming into Canada in such a volume as to hamper seriously the operations of the clerks in the post offices and on the railway postal cars. The department represented to me that it had been making inquiries into the character of the periodical literature thus encumbering the operations of the clerks, and it had found that, speaking generally, the material was by no means of a character to inform the mind and cultivate the intellect. A large proportion of it was merely advertising matter, there being no more than enough of reading matter than was necessary to secure for it the privileges of second-class matter in the United States, and to induce readers to look at the papers before consigning them to the waste paper basket.

The department was in serious perplexity as to how to deal with this matter. The convention between Canada and the United States gave each country the privilege of sending to the other all classes of mail matter at the rates and under the regulations of the country of origin. As the smaller country, Canada had not benefited equally with the United States under the convention, but in the matter of letters, post cards, patterns and samples of merchandise and miscellaneous printed matter, this country had no right to complain, because all these classes of mail matter were paid for at rates high enough to exclude any question of subsidy or favour in the transmission of them. With newspapers and periodicals the case was different. In both countries, the rates on bona fide newspapers and periodicals sent from the publishers to subscribers are very low—much below the paying rate—for the reason that each country has made it a matter of policy to encourage the means of diffusing information through periodical publications. Each country aims through the newspaper press to make its citizens better fitted for the duties incumbent on them as members of the state. While this policy is admirable so long as its benefits are confined to those publications whose function is to enlighten and instruct, it has brought into existence large numbers of newspapers and periodicals, which do neither, but are mere mediums for the cheap dissemination of advertising. It is this class of matter, which has brought about the present acute state of affairs in this country. It is regarding this class of matter that the regulations of the two departments conflict, and where the departments are working under a convention which virtually makes one postal territory of the two countries, it is obvious that in the conflict, the smaller country loses its free hand to make and apply its regulations. It must, before dealing with any question, ask itself what the other country is doing regarding the same question; and its inquiry is not limited to what are the regulations in the other country, but it must also ask how the officials of the other country regard its regulations. The smaller country must look not only to the regulations but also to the administrative views of the other country. Each country was in a measure hampered by the necessity of taking into account the regulations and views of the other, but this country as the less populous was particularly impeded in its work. Owing to the difference in regulations and views, there was coming into Canada large masses of newspaper and periodical matter, which was admitted to the United States, but which would not have been permitted to enjoy the privileges if they had been published in Canada owing to the differences in classification. This is not only repugnant to the principles on which the Canadian department was carried on, but it gives rise to complaints on the part of the publishers of this country, who cannot understand why they should be debarred from privileges which the United States publishers enjoy in Canada. And their complaint is founded in justice. This department was called upon to reconcile the impossible. It had to make an effort to carry out its own regulations and views, and that without injustice to anybody, and yet the admission of American publications under the convention made any attitude towards our publications under the convention beyond a servile copy of the United States attitude, an impossibility. The department sought in 1904 to bring matters to a more satisfactory footing by an amendment, which gave each administration the power to refuse admission to its territory, except as printed matter chargeable at 1 cent per 2 ounces or fraction thereof, to all such publications as it would not consider entitled to the privileges of second-class matter, if they were published in its own country. But in the working out of this amendment, which undoubtedly gave a measure of relief, a certain amount of friction was developed, and it was found that to apply the amendment adequately, that is, to apply it to all newspapers and periodicals coming from the United States, would have required a staff of such proportions as to involve an immense expense. This outlay the department did not feel warranted in undertaking, and has not considered that the amendment could be justly applied under other conditions. To administer the amendment inadequately, that is, to exclude some papers, and continue to admit others, laid the department open to the charge of injustice.

There is also the feature adverted to viz: that there is an immensely greater amount of newspaper matter coming to Canada from the United States than passes from Canada into the United States. It is estimated that not less than one ton of such matters comes from the United States for every hundred weight going from Canada to the United States.

The United States department represented to this department that congress was taking up the matter of newspapers and periodicals and would probably give that department larger powers of action, but the prospect appeared so remote, and the necessity of relief from the encumbering conditions was so great that it was not considered advisable to defer action further. The publishing business is developing rapidly in this country, and this department has felt the necessity of revising its regulations, which were made many years ago when conditions were simpler. This revision could not be undertaken while this department was obliged to consider at every turn the regulations and administrative views of the United States.

The notice of the abrogation of the convention as regards newspapers and periodicals was given on the 7th November last, and as six months notice was provided for expire in ordinary course on the 7th May. Conferences between the officials of the two departments took place in Ottawa on the 5th March and in Washington on the 28th March. The conference had before it a proposition from the Canadian department that the rate on newspapers and periodicals sent from the office of publication in one country to subscribers and newsdealers in the other shall be either 2 cents per pound, each pakcet being prepaid by stamp, or 4 cents per pound bulk weight.

After a good deal of discussion in the course of which the United States department urged the desirability of maintaining the status quo, the propositions of this department were taken up. The United States department feared that the propositions of the Canadian department might not be readily understood by the postmasters and publishers and a compromise was reached by which the rate on all newspapers and periodicals passing from one country to the other shall be one cent per each four ounces or fraction of the same, calculated on the weight of each package and prepaid by means of stamps affixed. This rate has the merit of simplicity. It is well understood by the postmasters and the public of both countries, as it has been the rate on transient papers for many years, and as it was considered by the Canadian delegates to meet the conditions they were called upon to deal with it was accepted.

Mr. FOSTER. Might I ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) as to the conditions that Canada undertakes to fulfil ? As I understood it was to carry those newspapers and periodicals on which the reduction was made, in so far as ocean package is concerned, free ; what cost will that entail on our postal authorities ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. According to statistics gathered by the Post Office Department I think the whole cost involved will not be more than about $25,000 or $30,000.

Mr. FOSTER. That cost will come to us in the form of an extra payment to the carriers ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Oh, no, we will not pay anything, but we will charge no poundage to the British authorities.

Mr. FOSTER. Then it comes in as a loss to the revenue ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Has any calculation been made as to the corresponding loss to the British postal authorities by the reduction from 8 to 2 ? I suppose it will be about that amount at least.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Oh much larger. I may say that this arrangement was proposed many years ago from Canada to England but has been stoutly refused every time it has been asked on the ground that it would involve very great loss to the revenue in England. As stated by the British postal authorities, this advantage is given in favour of Canada on account of our special geographical position. The fear of the British postal authorities is that the same demand might be made by other colonies. I must say that this involves quite a large pecuniary sacrifice on the part of Great Britain. I might add that we owe special thanks to the British Postmaster General, Mr. Buxton, who in this matter has been very generous towards Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister also know what weight was carried under this particular item last year ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I could not give the information offhand. If my hon. friend will renew the question when my estimates come, I may be able to give further information.

THE BRITISH TRADE PREFERENCE.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I wish to call the attention of the House to a matter of very grave importance to this country. On March 18, a letter appeared in the public press referring to the fact that German goods were filtering through British middlemen into Canada under the preference. Through the kindness of the Minister of Customs, I have received a copy of that letter, and I wish to place it before the House. The purport of it is that we are simply building up German manufacturers at the expense of Canadian manufacturers and British manufacturers, and I would like to urge upon the Minister of Finance, now that he is going to Great Britain, to take a copy of this letter with him, as well as others of equal importance on the same subject which are in the Department of Trade and Commerce, and to make a thorough investigation of this matter while he is in Great Britain. If he does this, I am satisfied that he will find that under the British preference, as it has worked out, we in the Dominion of Canada for the past ten years have been practically buncoed by German, Belgian and other foreign manufacturers being able to send their goods into Canada under the preference as British goods. This letter is dated Leeds, March 18, 1907, and is as follows :

The following extract is taken from the Yorkshire 'Post,' of the 8th March, 1907 :

A deputation from the Association of Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom yesterday waited upon Mr. Lloyd-George, President of the Board of Trade, at the offices of the board, Whitehall, London, to call attention to the infringement in England of the Merchandise Marks Act, and to the marking in foreign countries of goods purporting to be made in England, but which were not of English manufacture. Sir Howard Vincent, M.P., introduced the deputation, which comprised representatives of forty chambers of commerce including those of Sheffield, Halifax, Nottingham, Coventry and London.

Mr. R. A. Rotherham, Coventry, gave a number of illustrations of fraud to show that the Act had broken down. Watches and bicycles were, he said, being built up in this country of foreign parts, and sold as English. Foreign carpets were being marked and sold as Kidderminster carpets, and foreign cutlery was also being marked and sold as Sheffield cutlery, and numerous other foreign articles brought over here unmarked were being marked and sold as of English manufacture.

Mr. Lloyd-George : Most of them are substantially foreign, I suppose ?

Mr. Rotherham : Some are entirely foreign. Continuing, Mr. Rotherham said there was not a department of industry in England which was not absolutely honeycombed with fraud, and the means hitherto taken to suppress the evil had entirely failed. Nor was the evil confined to the large manufacturing towns and districts; it had extended to the villages. He mentioned a case in the watch trade where a fraudulent vendor was prosecuted, and though the action was successful, the prosecutor was involved in costs to the sum of £1,200, and as no individual trader could afford to vindicate the law at that cost, the Act had since been practically a dead letter, and the watch trade to-day was worse than ever before.

Mr. Lloyd-George : Have you no trade protection society ?

Mr. Rotherham replied that they had, but it was filled from top to bottom with men who were themselves engaged in these fraudulent practices.

Let me repeat this last sentence :

Mr. Rotherham replied that they had, but it was filled from top to bottom with men who were thmselves engaged in these fraudulent practices.

I might go on and read more of this letter, which is a long one; but suffice it to say that it is filled with such arguments which go to show that the impression that we are giving to the people of Canada that we are assisting British manufacturers by the preference is a false impression. Englishmen admit in this letter and in other letters published in the press throughout Great Britain, that the Trade Marks Act of that country is not workable and is of no use. This letter goes on to show that German goods particularly are being brought into Great Britain and put together there, and sold as British goods, having been stamped as such in the factories of Germany. After making this quotation from the press, our representative in Leeds, England, Mr. Jackson, makes the following statement :

In view of the unsatisfactory state of the law here with regard to the identification of foreign goods, it is an admitted fact that a large part of the goods imported into Canada under the British preferential tariff are foreign goods shipped into England, repacked and labelled or marked as British goods . for instance, a gentleman in the cutlery trade in Sheffield informed me the other day, that large quantities of knife and razor blanks are shipped to Sheffield from Germany, and all that is done to them is to stamp them as 'made of Sheffield steel,' or simply the word 'Sheffield' with or without some local man's name attached and reship from Sheffield to Canada.

It is also well known that in the felt trade the British market is flooded with German felts which can be bought here at certain seasons at lower prices than they can be manufactured for in Germany. The wool, or at least a large part of the wool used in the German felt factories, is bought in London, England, through a London house, and it is impossible to manufacture many of the felts shipped to England and Canada at their present price ; and I am informed that it is utterly impossible for the German felt to be shipped into Canada and sold at its present price without a loss, except under the benefits given by the British preferential tariff.

I am also credibly informed that the same class of felt cannot be bought in Germany from the manufacturers, except at higher prices than they are offered in England and in Canada. In view of this manifest invasion of the Customs Act, it seems to be absolutely necessary that some more stringent methods in regard to the invoice forms should be adopted.

If the provisions of the British Merchandise Marks Act were enforced the procedure necessary would be very much simplified ; but to my mind a simple certificate, signed in Great Britain on the back of the invoice form, is not sufficient to debar the unscrupulous exporter in England from evading the Act, nor is it sufficient to protect the reliable and trustworthy English exporter to Canada who should receive the full benefit of the British preferential tariff. In addition to the forms of certificate required from the shipper, I would suggest that a sworn declaration be required from the manufacturer showing when and where manufactured, or that the commercial agents be empowered to grant 'certificates of origin' upon sufficient evidence being furnished to them.

The principal of a well known Sheffield cutlery house, just returned from a visit to Canada, states, 'that if British manufacturers are to successfully meet the German competition that there is an absolute necessity for having a mark of origin required by Canada, which would then put all manufacturers on an equal footing, and would put a stop to the present misrepresentations. He saw consignments of German razors marked 'made from Sheffield steel' which the purchaser would naturally think had been made in Sheffield, but which had never seen that city.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) J. B. JACKSON,
Canadian Commercial Agent.

You could not find a stronger condemnation of the manner in which the preference has been carried on. To give you some idea of the lack of interest taken in this matter by the government and its lack of knowledge, let me quote the words of the hon. Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) this session when we were discussing the tariff resolutions. On page 999 of 'Hansard' I asked him this question :

Has it been found that a large quantity of German goods have been filtering into this country through British middlemen and thus avoiding the surtax ?

To which the hon. minister replied :

The impression has always been abroad that there has been evasion of our customs laws in that respect, but the best information we have is that it is not so. The matter has been carefully looked into and we think it is not correct.

Again on page 1,004 I asked :

Has the hon. minister any officers in Great Britain looking after the valuation of articles shipped under the preference clause ? If so, how many ?

And the hon. minister replied :

We have no special customs officers over there but we utilize our staff of Canadian officials to some extent.

Then I asked him what officials? And he said : 'Occasionally we make inquiries at the High Commissioner's office.' I asked again :

Are they allowed to go to the factories and examine the goods there and see if they are properly valued and not imported from Germany and then fixed up a little in England.

To this the hon. minister made reply :

I do not anticipate any difficulty in getting access to any factory if necessary. We have found cases nearer home, in the United States for instance, where this inquiry was objected to, but we had the remedy in our own hands. The next time these parties sent goods, the goods were held up, and then they were very glad to come over and submit to our conditions. The system of over-valuing is by no means so common in the English trade, and there is less reason for watching the British exporter in that respect than in watching some others.

I then asked : 'Might it not be possible for the German exporter to ship his goods through the English manufacturer?' And I got this reply :

We have had that suggested often in the press and occasionally by hon. gentlemen in this House who received that impression, but wherever we caused the matter to be investigated we found that the impression was a mistaken one and that there was little or no evidence to support it.

I sincerely hope now that the minister has had this matter called to his attention, he will have it thoroughly investigated. I feel confident that the more he investigates this matter the more he will become convinced that, as the preference is conducted at present, the people of Canada have been buncoed. He will find that not only a large but the major portion, the bulk of the goods which come in under the British preference are from Belgium and Germany and other foreign countries and are filtered in through the middlemen in Great Britain. I will refer the hon. minister to a prominent member on his own side who is able to tell him that the has visited the manufactories throughout Germany and has seen himself the goods on the shelves of those establishments stamped 'made in England' and put up in every imaginable form so as to avoid the surtax and get into Canada under the British preference. We have had ten years of this kind of administration. At present Canadian goods are shut out of the German market, while German goods are being shipped into Canada under the British preference. Germany is thus in a far better position than the United States, because she is in the position of being able to get her goods into Canada through British middlemen at the preferential rate. Why not allow United States goods to be filtered into Canada in the same way? This jug handle preference, Sir, is a failure. If we had a mutual preference, the English manufacturer would be more careful and would be interested in not allowing German goods to be filtered into Canada in this way. But it is the same old story of something for nothing, and but little attention is paid to the gift given to England by means of this preference. It is high time that we should inaugurate the policy of Canada for the Canadians. Canadian workingmen would be greatly benefited if our manufacturers were protected in the proper sense of the term. If that were done, the goods now manufactured in these foreign countries would be manufactured in our own land and furnish a home market for our farmers. The government is deserving of the severest censure for its policy. Let any one get up on this side and criticise the preference or the surtax and he is at once denounced as unpatriotic and unworthy to be a representative of the Canadian people. I am convinced, however, that the people will come to see that, in the way this preference is being administered, they have been buncoed for the last ten years. And they will demand a change in our administration in that respect at least. It is only the English middlemen who is getting any advantage from this preference outside the foreign manufacturer. We are shut out of the German market with its 60,000,000 people, whose imports annually amount to $1,800,000,000. Yet out of that immense import we sent into Germany only a paltry $1,000,000 worth. Look at the little Argentine Republic sending into that country $48,000,000 worth of goods; Brazil, $27,000,000; Chili, $21,000,000; Australia, $28,000,000. And they will demand a change in our adworth. And if our present trade relations are to continue you may depend on it that even that $1,000,000 will dwindle down to a couple of hundred thousand dollars next year. Germany, the second largest market in the world, we are completely shut out of. And Germany furnishes a market for just such goods as we are able to produce in abundance. For instance, over $200,000,- 000 worth of agricultural products was imported into Germany last year—just such as the Dominion produces. Yet we hardly sent anything worth speaking of to that country. Do you mean to tell me that our farmers are not interested in sending into Germany these $60,000,000 worth of wheat which Germany imported last year, $24,000,000 of barley, $17,000,000 of rye, and some millions of dollars worth of apples and other fruits. Last year we produced in Canada 16,000,000 barrels of apples and only exported 1,500,000 barrels, and it was estimated in the Agricultural Committee that 10,000,000 barrels rotted on the ground for lack of proper transportation facilities and markets.

Two years ago, the Germans came to Canada and established offices throughout this Dominion to purchase apples for the purpose of shipping them into Germany. They were willing to pay at the rate of about 35 cents per barrel more for our apples than they could purchase apples for in the United States, knowing that we could produce in this country the best quality of fruit and that most suitable for the German market. They were ready to open a splendid market for apples which are now left to rot on the ground throughout our province especially, the province of Ontario. But this German market might be open more for other goods besides our apples. Every interest should join to compel this government to open up the German market to Canada. Not only could we sell in Germany immense quantities of farm produce of many kinds, but we could get a share of the timber trade of Germany—and millions of dollars' worth of timber is imported into that country every year. Moreover they import largely of just such materials as are produced largely in our mines. Such goods as we do send to Germany go in under the German surtax. That places us at a very great disadvantage in that market as compared with our competitors in the United States. The goods from the United States go in under the most favoured nation clause. Prior to 1896, we also were one of the favoured nations in the German market. To-day we are in an entirely different position. Even Great Britain and every colony of Great Britain has the advantage of favoured nation treatment in the German market ; the Dominion of Canada is practically the only country in the world whose goods on entering the German market are subject to the surtax.

Canada's commercial position is one of which we have every reason to be proud. On one side we stretch out a hand to Japan and China to take part in the expanding trade of those countries, and on the other we see splendid opportunities for trade in our various products in Great Britain and the continent of Europe. With these magnificent possibilities before us, I cannot believe that the people of Canada will be willing to continue a jug-handle policy such as we have had for the last ten years.

Now, let me say just one word as to how our policy affects German immigration into Canada. In the United States you see tens of thousands of Germans going in every year. Contrast this with Canada—into our country come a few hundred Germans only. We are sending men to southern Europe to gather up the people of those countries to add to our population ; while, the Germans, the best immigrants that can be found outside of Great Britain are practically driven out of Canada by the manner in which their country is being treated.

I feel keenly on this subject. I have been criticised most unfairly by the Minister of Finance and the supporters of the government. I knew that my position was sound, but I have not been able to bring the proof of it till to-day, and that proof has been sufficient, I think, to convince the Finance Minister that the position I took three years ago on this question was a sound position. Open the markets of Germany to Canada on the same terms as those on which they are open to the United States, and I believe that within ten or fifteen years, so far as agricultural products are concerned we shall be able to drive the American producers out of the German market. And, if we do not do it, we may be very sure that other countries will take up what the United States are losing in that regard. I wish I could awaken the interests of the press in this subject that they might assist in showing to the people of Canada the importance of this German market and the need of taking up in no half-hearted manner the question of securing an entrance into that market for Canada upon fair terms. Let us look ahead and prepare for the future. Here is the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) telling us, as he did, not long ago, that Manitoba was capable of producing 500,000,000 bushels of grain on her 73,000 square miles of territory. What then is to become of the vast quantity of grain that is to be produced in the western country, these new provinces each with its 250,000 miles of territory, when that immense area is properly developed ? Are we going to narrow the trade of this country down to the British market, which market is open to every other nation in the world on as favourable terms as those on which it is open to Canada? I do not believe that the people of Canada will allow the present condition of things to exist.

It has been stated that this is a matter of sentiment. I do not believe that the people of Canada should exist on sentiment. But I believe that our people will see the strongest and most material reasons for urging this government to secure the opening of this splendid German market to our products. Let us have a forward policy in this matter, and let us put it into effect soon.

I do not wish to take up more of the time of the House on this question. But I urge the Finance Minister, I beg of him, to give his full attention to this matter when he goes to Great Britain. Let him investigate there the position of the Trades Marks' Act, and he will find the case to be exactly as I have stated ; he will find that, instead of a British manufacturer receiving the benefit of our preferential tariff, that the benefit goes to the British middleman who is taking unfair advantage of the preference.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of travelling over the very wide range of subjects that my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) has covered in his address. If I say a few words, it will be rather on the matter that he brought to the notice of the House at the beginning of his remarks. I am glad to know that he has received some light on this German question, though I am not quite sure that he has such a definite position on it as he seems to think he has. My recollection is that, the last time he discussed this question of the German trade, his complaint was that the government had done a great wrong by imposing the surtax and thus creating a difficulty with Germany. That was his argument, if he had any argument, the last time he addressed the House. To-day his complaint is, that we do not enforce the surtax with sufficient vigour but are allowing German goods to come in under the guise of British goods.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am sure the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) does not wish to misquote me. If he will read the remarks which I made two sessions ago, he will see that I dealt with the preference in the manner in which I am dealing with it to-day, and dealt with the surtax at the same time.

Mr. FIELDING. Just at present I am not discussing the preference but the surtax. In his address of two sessions ago the hon. gentleman took the ground that by imposing the surtax the government had committed a great blunder, and that in consequence, some barrels of apples which somebody wanted to send to Germany had been shut out. That was his whole line of contention at that time. Now, he tells us : You undertook to impose a surtax on Germany, but it a humbug, for the goods are coming in free of the surtax ; Germany has its own way in the matter. In one breath my hon. friend says, we are pursuing such a policy that the Germans feel that this government is treating Germany badly and in consequence German settlers wont come into Canada—five minutes ago the hon. gentleman advanced that view. But in the beginning of his speech, and in the main portion of his speech, the contention was, not that we are treating Germany badly, but that we are treating Germany too well in allowing German goods to come in under the British preference. Which side of this question is my hon. friend on ? At one moment the German surtax is the trouble, a burden, a snare and a delusion, something which will get us into trouble with Germany ; the next moment he says not that the surtax is a delusion, but that you do not enforce it, and why don't you enforce it ? I cannot understand my hon. friend's meaning.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not think the Minister of Finance wishes to misstate my position, but I cannot help thinking that he is a little more astute than fair in this matter. I am satisfied that I was not only dealing with the British preference in the manner which I have heretofore dealt with it, but the surtax as well. I was considering the trade policy of this government generally in dealing with Germany.

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot tell even now whether my hon. friend is in favour of the surtax or against it—I am speaking in all sincerity. My hon. friend began his remarks by calling attention to the report made by one of the government's commercial agents in England about the possibility of the importation of German goods under the British preferential tariff. Now, whereever we have two tariff rates there is, of course, a temptation on the part of the exporter to try to get the benefit of the lower tariff ; that is a permanent temptation, and calls at all times for great watchfulness. From the beginning of the adoption of the preferential system in Canada we have had constant representations that there was a probability, or indeed a certainty, that the preference was being evaded. It was the most natural thing in the world, that there should be suspicion of such abuse. Again and again suggestions of that kind have been made in this House, and representations have been made by other people calling our attention to it. It was proper that these matters should be investigated, and in every instance where the government have been able to investigate them, the conclusion they have formed is that while such an abuse of the British preference is possible, practically speaking it does not occur on a large scale. Now, the fact that that was the result of our inquiries of several years ago does not prove that a condition which may have existed then exists to-day. That temptation, as I say, will always exist ; there are exporters who will try to bring German goods in under the preferential tariff, and we must be watchful and try to prevent it. As I have said on a previous occasion, the government did make a special inquiry into that matter several years ago, in addition to the general inquiry the Department of Customs are at all times making in their own way. But there was an occasion several years ago when the government made a special inquiry by an official in England, and the result was we came to the conclusion that there was not much ground for the complaint. If, however, later information has come to us, I am quite sure that the Minister of Customs will be prepared to avail himself of it, and of anything of that kind which may be brought to his attention by my hon. friend or anybody else in the House. I am sorry the Minister of Customs is just now absent, though he was here at the beginning of my hon. friend's remarks ; but he will see the whole of his remarks in the 'Hansard,' and I am sure that if there is any ground whatever for the contention that the Germans are evading the preferential tariff and sending goods in here under the lower tariff, the Minister of Customs and his vigilant assistants will do their utmost to prevent it ; and if it is necessary that there should be a further investigation in England, in the light of the information to which my hon. friend refers, why certainly that investigation will take place. I would not attempt to pass judgment upon the statement made by the commercial agent at Leeds, but, speaking generally, I think it will be found that there has not been that broad evasion of the tariff which my hon. friend thinks has existed. I am sure, however, that the Minister of Customs will take notice of the information which has been furnished.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). The closing sentences of the Finance Minister afford all the solace the House can get for the time being. But the House would like to know that when these commercial agents of ours, who are stationed in different parts of Great Britain, will get on to just such things as this and send the information to headquarters, that their suggestions and information will be carefully heeded, and that the government will take adequate steps to see that the grievances complained of are remedied. I have no idea that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance did not understand what the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Armstrong) was driving at ; I think he quite well understood.

Mr. FIELDING. I knew what he was driving at, but I did not know what he understood.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend the minister was not so much bemuddled as he would give the House reason to think he was, and it was not quite fair to represent my hon. friend as being anxious to find fault with the German surtax, in the first place, as being a blunder and, in the second place, finding fault because Germany was mildly treated under that surtax through the medium of Great Britain. I think the proper way in which we might expect this government to act is to see that the preferential trade as between Great Britain and Canada, on the basis on which it was intended to be carried on, and for the benefit of the two parties for whose benefit it was intended, shall be honestly restricted to that channel and shall be kept upon that basis. Now, if the government was right in the imposition of the surtax under the circumstances as they occurred, it is not right if it does not see that the German manufacturer does not evade that surtax, by means of a third party, in bringing his goods into Great Britain and simply having them restamped and sent over here, getting a preferred and favoured entrance into this country. Now, I think that the duty of the government, if it is consistent on the surtax basis and on the preferential trade basis, is imperative in each case, namely, to see that this fraud is not successfully carried out.

Mr. FIELDING. That's right, I quite concur in that.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the government has taken quite as vigorous measures as they might have taken under the circumstances. This statement of Mr. Jackson is a very strong statement, he makes it evidently upon information. Take also the statement that these goods are shown on the counter in Canada, marked with the Sheffield marks.

Mr. FIELDING. That would not prove that they were brought in under the preferential tariff.

Mr. FOSTER. If you take that and the information which my hon. friend read with reference to the statement to Lloyd George, it appears that these articles are made in Germany, that they are brought over to England, that they are simply either repacked without any labour on them or that they are restamped and then are sent here as British goods and get the benefit of the preferential tariff. I think this information—and it is coming to us from all sides—points to the fact that a large proportion of these goods that get entrance into Canada under the British preference really inure nothing to the benefit of the British labourer or to the British manufacturer, and that means by a side road continental manufacturers are getting into this country under a preference which we intended exclusively to keep for Great Britain. I am glad to hear the minister say that he will take further measures—I hope the Minister of Customs will do the same—to see that that abuse is prevented so far as it can be done. These gentlemen, I believe, are to join the cohort which to-day is in London, they will have every opportunity to talk this over with the various chambers of commerce, also with the British Board of Trade, and I think it would be well for them to give speical attention to it. You may depend upon it, that both in Great Britain and here the easiest and best way to undermine this whole preference is to allow it to be imposed upon to the disadvantage of Canada and of Great Britain and to the advantage of outside countries.

Mr. H. BOURASSA (Labelle). Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the opinions expressed both by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) it seems to me that they have failed to go to the bottom of the question. I am quite satisfied that the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) and his vigilant assistants, as they were described by the hon. Minister of Finance, will do, as they have done in the past, their best to prevent this kind of fraud. But, this kind of fraud is the natural result of the policy. A system of preferential tariffs has never been made use of by any other civilized or business country except for the purpose of obtaining reciprocal treatment. The moment you offer a low tariff to a free trade country which gives free access to the produce of all foreign countries, you make of that free trade country to which you offer preferential treatment a natural ground for the process against which you complain. They have no customs tariff in England, and I am far from condemning them for that. It is their business and probably their interest; and if I were in Great Britain I would be in favour of admitting raw material and food stuff free of duty. But that is none of our business. The fact is that the British market is opened freely to raw or manufactured produce from Germany, Belgium, France or any other foreign country. Under our policy of offering a low tariff to the British manufacturer, and enforcing a high tariff against other countries and a still higher tariff against German produce, it is unavoidable that the British middleman and the German manufacturer will take advantage of the opportunity to make use of the British market as a ground for placing goods on the Canadian market under the preferential tariff. Whatever may be the regulations adopted by the Minister of Customs and however vigilant may be the supervision exercised over imports, you will have that state of things as long as you give preferential treatment to Great Britain without Great Britain having protection against foreign produce.

Of course this would not be the occasion, and it may be too late in the session to discuss the question of the German surtax and of the preferential tariff, but there is a good deal in what the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) has said and I do not think it is quite as contradictory as the Minister of Finance has tried to make it out to be. You adopted the preferential tariff for the purpose of giving British goods an advantage over foreign goods in entering the Canadian market. You adopted it without asking any compensation from the British people. Then, a little later on you got into a squabble with Germany and imposed your surtax upon that country. You must be consistent in your policy. If you want to strike Germany you must apply your surtax to German goods even if they are imported fraudulently with the assistance of your British friends to whom you have extended favours without any return If you still adhere to the policy of preferential treatment to Great Britain and ask no return from Great Britain in the form of similar treatment in your favour you are simply going to become the laughing stock of the commercial world. You are putting yourself in the position that you pretend to offer special treatment to one people who make use of the favour for the benefit of another people against whom you pretend to impose harsh treatment because of their policy directed against us. You are defeating your object in both ways. You offer to the British manufacturer a lower tariff than that which you apply to any foreign country, and on the other hand you pretend to have adopted a high tariff against one country in order to get better terms from that country, but by your policy you allow the German manufacturer to obtain the benefit of the tariff which you have adopted in favour of Great Britain. As long as we keep our preferential tariff on the present basis and we exercise no more business foresight in the framing of our tariff either towards Great Britain or Germany, as long as we avoid the observation of the natural law which governs the application of the principle of protection to which we pretend to adhere—and I am far from condemning the government on that ground, because I was a protectionist long before the hon. Minister of Finance was converted to it, but I am a consistent protectionist and I believe that we must protect ourselves, that we must not open our markets to the goods of a country against which you claim you are discriminating, because you cannot get fair treatment—so long will we defeat the object we profess to have in view. If we want to protect ourselves against Germany we must have the proper means, and we will not have the proper means so long as we apply preferential treatment to a country which has nothing to give us in return and which leaves her market open to the produce, especially of that one country against which we want to discriminate.

Mr. TALBOT. I would like to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) if, having discovered the evil, he will point out the remedy ?

Mr. BOURASSA. Certainly ; abolish preferential treatment.

Mr. TALBOT. Are you in favour of it ?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BOURASSA. I was in favour of the preference as long as there was something to be expected from Great Britain, but now that it is outside of the question I am in favour of dealing with Great Britain as she deals with us.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (King's, N.B.) Our irrepressible friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) does not seem to know when to stop. I rose to speak, but the hon. gentleman rose to give a second edition of his speech. If the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) gave us his real opinion as to the position which my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) has taken in this matter, the Minister of Finance is not so clever as we have always thought him. If, on the other hand, he did not give us his real opinion then he should have been more honest in his statement to this House. What my hon. friend from East Lambton objected to was that the merchants and manufacturers of Germany were obtaining by surreptitious means the benefit of the preference which we gave to Great Britain, whereas, we in Canada received all the detriment from the fact that we gave this preference to Great Britain. That is the position of my hon. friend from East Lambton.

Mr FIELDING. And what is the remedy ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. One remedy is to enforce the law.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to admit that the Minister of Finance does not know the remedy. I am quite sure he is ready to make confession of the fact that this government does not know the remedy, but the people of Canada have the remedy in their own hands. The people of Canada can put out this government at the next election and put in those who are willing and able to provide the remedy.

An hon. MEMBER. Who is it to be?

Mr. FOWLER. A back-bencher wants to know the remedy. He will see it when it is put in practical operation by a Conservative government led by my hon. friend from Carleton, Ont. (Mr. R. L. Borden.)

Mr. FIELDING. That is too long to wait.

Mr. FOWLER. It will not be so long to wait. There will not be many more gray hairs in the head of the hon Minister of Finance,

Mr. FIELDING. There is no room for any more.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not often come to the defence of the government, but I must take my hon. friend from East Lambton to task for basing an argument on a statement made by J. B. Jackson. The government know J. B. Jackson so well and his record is so well known to the government as being that of a man who not only gives evidence which is untrustworthy, but who is a procurer of that sort of evidence that they do not trust any statement made by him.

Mr. BERGERON. Still they pay him a salary.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria and Halton). Mr. Speaker, I presume the incident brought up by my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) is closed ?

Mr. FOSTER. For the time being.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. For the time being, and I will do myself the honour of occupying the attention of the House for a very few minutes. On Thursday, April 11, the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Paquet) stated to the House, I shall endeavour to translate as I go on—that he wished to protest with the greatest energy in his own name, in the name of the county of L'Islet, which he had the honour to represent here, in the name of the French Sisters of Charity who had come from their native land to direct some educational institutions in the county of L'Islet and also in the name of the French clergymen from France who reside in Canada. He protests also in the name of his race and religion against the words pronounced by the member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) during the discussion on a recent motion. Then he quotes from the 'Hansard' as follows :

Mr. W. ROCHE. What profession or employment did the French-speaking immigrants follow ?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I think most of them were farm labourers.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Were any of them expelled clergymen ?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE No, but I hope a great many of them will come to Canada ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Clergymen who were driven out of France by order of the French government.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I hope we will get more of them because they are the very best class of immigrants we can have in this country.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. A curse to the country.

He hoped that the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton would disclaim or retract his words which conveyed an insult to his race and his religion.

I would be the last man in the world to offer any offence to my good friend from L'Islet (Mr. Paquet). I would be the last man in the world to offer any insult to the French race. I have the honour to belong to that race myself. I have the honour possibly to have just as good French blood flowing through my veins as any gentleman in this House, and when I have concluded I think it will be seen that I have not offered any insult to the French race. As to his religion I would be very sorry to offer a word of offence to any man's religion and I believe I have not done so. The complaint I believe is that I used the expression: 'A curse to the country.' Years ago Daniel Defoe, a very distinguished gentleman, used the expression in his 'Trueborn Englishman,' that :

> Of all the ills with which mankind is cursed,
> Ecclesiastical tyranny is the worst.

I think there is no need of discussing that point, it goes without dispute, and Sir, in using the term as I have done I used it in the same sense as Daniel Defoe in his 'Trueborn Englishman' long years ago. I am charged with having offered an insult to my hon. friend the member himself, Mr. Paquet. I must disclaim it; the county of L'Islet is also brought in. I do not know the good people of the county of L'Islet, but I do know a great many of my French Canadian countrymen in Quebec and in Ontario, and I have no hesitation in saying that I have yet to find one solitary French Canadian who does not agree to almost the fullest extent—they will not use the same words —but who does not agree in the sentiments I have expressed with the relation to the introduction of these gentlemen from the old country.

Mr. BOURASSA. You will know more by and by.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. With the exiled French sisters I have nothing to do Sir, I had no reference to them direct or indirect; my words were, 'French clergymen.' So far as these gentlemen themselves are concerned, I would be very sorry to offend any gentleman coming to our shores as I shall explain later on.

With regard to the French race, I do not know how I can be charged with having offered any insult to the French race, when the French people themselves, as grand a race as ever graced the universe to-day in many respects the first in civilization, have by an enormous majority expelled these very men from their country for failing to observe the laws of the French nation. That is why these men have come from that country and therefore I do not see how I can have offended the French race by my remark.

As far as religion is concerned, I would be very sory to offend any man's religion; I had no reference to his religion directly or indirectly, and therefore I must disclaim any intention to offend his religion. The reason why these gentlemen have left France is plain, they chose to observe the laws of Rome rather than the laws of France. The French people, having risen to that high state of civilization, having risen to the fullest height in the development of responsible government, have seen fit to request these gentlemen either to observe the laws of the Republic of France or to leave the country. They have chosen to leave the country and have come, a great many of them, to the Dominion of Canada. Many of these men are to-day engaged in teaching and in preaching in the Dominion of Canada, and I have the best of evidence that in their teaching in this country they instill the idea that they hope at an early period in the history of this country and of their own country to return to France and once more occupy the position they formerly held. They do not teach the language of this country. That is no crime in itself because all languages, practically, are used in Canada; what is complained of is that these gentlemen, not knowing or understanding the principles of civilization and of government under which we live in the Dominion of Canada and which we have acquired from that mother of liberty the British nation, do not teach the principles of responsible government and loyalty to the nation under which we live. I might point out, Sir, that the French people themselves recognize that this institution was the greatest trust in the Republic of France. Five years ago there were 20,000 of these institutions in that country. The French government state that they paid no taxes whatever, but many of these institutions received subsidies from the state. By the action of these people themselves in refusing to obey the laws of the country which gave them protection, by declining to observe the laws, they brought on themselves the action of the French government and to-day not one of these institutions is free from taxation and those who did not obey the laws of France have been requested to leave the country. One writer in his discussion of the subject says :

> This trust lived on the people should be accountable to the people ; should never be allowed to develop into a system of repression and suppression, or become a danger to happiness, a menace to human rights.

Sir, it is the opinion of many people who are lovers of liberty the wide world over that the action of the French government has produced the greatest and quietest revolution that history records. A good deal has been said against the Galicians, the Doukhobors, the Salvation Army people and taunts have been thrown even at our British fellow countrymen who choose to come to our shores. I shall not enter into this matter further than to say that if these people are objectionable in any sense the objection is due to the fact that they have not had an opportunity of being brought up under free government such as the government of Britain and the government of France to-day. These autocratic governments some in church, and some in state, have produced the class of men who are referred to by speakers in this House as not being good settlers.

I maintain therefore that it is not any objection to these people that they may not ultimately become the very best of settlers. However, I will not enter into that aspect of the case. Personally, I stand on record many years before this as being in favour of French immigration. I am on record in the pages of 'Hansard' as pointing out that one of the most beautiful settlements in the Dominion of Canada is the little settlement of Bonne Madonne at Lake La Crosse, near the Birch Hills, where people not only from the country districts, but from the cities of France have come and made their homes. I pointed out that a watchmaker from Paris, who had not seen any country before he came here, has now one of the most beautiful farms in the Northwest. Another man, a bookkeeper, who married a milliner from one of the great establishments in Paris, established a home in the Northwest. More intelligent settlers we cannot find in the Dominion of Canada than those who have come from the republic of France. I have said before, and I say it again, that a great many people make the mistake of confusing the French people with the Roman religion, and my good friend's remarks have led me to point out this distinction once more. My objection to these men is, in the first place, that they have been expelled from their own country, and, in the second place, that they are teaching, not loyalty to this country and its institutions, but that it is their intention and hope soon to return to their native land, as soon as a change of government takes place in that country. Canada is on friendly terms with France, and I do not think that persons within our borders should encourage a spirit of hostility to the Republic of France or to any other friendly power. These men are not farmers, like the Galicians, the Doukhobors, and other foreign immigrants. The settlers from France bring with them their families ; the French Canadian people who are being repatriated from the United States bring back their families ; the Canadian people of British origin who have gone to the United States come back bringing their families with them. These people contribute to the wealth and upbuilding of the county, whereas the gentlemen to whom I have referred do not. Why, then, should we specially welcome as the most desirable class of immigrants these gentlemen who have been expelled from the Republic of France, and who, I am sorry to say, do not teach that loyalty to the country of their adoption which the Galicians teach, which our returned French Canadian fellow countrymen from the United States are teaching, which almost every other class of immigrant is teaching, that is, loyalty to Canada and the British empire, her laws and her institutions. With regard to the French people, I might point out that years ago I spoke to the Minister of the Interior about the class of French people we should bring to this country, for I believe no more desirable people than the people of old France can be found as immigrants to Canada. Those who have come and settled in our Northwest to my certain knowledge are doing well, and are a credit to the country. As for these gentlemen to whom I have referred being welcomed by the French Canadian people, I have had interviews with a number of French Canadians who have told me that they have clergy enough of their own, that these men are taking positions which should belong to their own clergy, and they do not relish the introduction of these men into the country. I have reasons to believe that not only the ordinary French Canadian clergy, but men high up in the church, do not relish this influx of clergymen from France into the Dominion of Canada. They have not been received with open arms either by the church or by the French Canadian people in this country. When I find the Galicians, who are a magnificent lot of settlers, and who in another generation will, I believe, be among the best of our citizens, insulted as being undesirable immigrants, and when I find the Doukhobors, who outside of their little fads in religion, are excellent settlers, insulted, and when I find that our own English speaking people from Great Britain are insulted on every hand, I do not see that it rests with any member of the House of Commons to criticise me for having objected to the introduction of these people to whom I have referred into the Dominion of Canada. It was simply in answer to the statement of an hon. gentleman that they would be a most desirable class of immigrants that I interjected the remark I did. Mr Speaker, I have no retraction to make and no apology to offer.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Roman Catholic church and the French race will equally be touched with the expressions of friendship which the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) has given utterance to. I was quite afraid, from the remark which the hon. gentleman made the other day, that he had struck a deadly blow to the Roman Catholic church and to the French race ; but fortunately it will be with us as it was with General DeVilliers when he was captured by the gallant colonel (Mr. Hughes), but found his escape the next day. If I had any reproach to make to my good friend the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Paquet), it was that he took any notice of the words of the hon. gentleman. I do not think it matters at all what the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton thought or thinks of any class of men, because I do not think he represents the ideals or sentiments of any class of responsible or respectable people in this country. Therefore, to my mind it would have been just as well to let the words of the hon. gentleman pass into the oblivion into which the hon. gentleman himself and his military as well as political deeds will go. But, as the hon. member thought fit to say that every French Canadan member of this House would agree with him, I think it falls to us to protest against his words, which will be printed, and may find their way into some responsible newspaper that might give some respectability to them.

I simply want to say that the ignorance which the hon. gentleman has shown, as regards both Canadian history, British history and French history, and the history of the world, cannot be allowed to pass as a sufficient excuse for the remarks of the hon. gentleman with regard to the attitude of the French clergy to the French government. This is a very big question, a question that has been debated for about two hundred and fifty years in France, by rulers and statesmen who could compare favourably perhaps both in military and civil matters with the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton—men such as Louis XIV and Napoleon, as Thiers, and Guizot and others ; and the hon. gentleman might acquire some ideas from these men before passing judgment in five minutes on the question of church and state in France.

The present quarrel between the French clergy and the French government is not one which concerns this House, and I am not going to discuss it now. I would however be quite prepared to discuss it, but not with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes). I would be prepared to discuss it with any man who has any knowledge of French history and the history of the Catholic Church, or any knowledge of the political history of other countries besides his own. And I think that something could be said in favour of the French clergy, looking at the question from a truly British and Canadian point of view.

There existed, some one hundred and fifteen years ago, a system of government in France which some may not consider as the exemplification of liberty and constitutional government, and on account of which a few hundred thousand citizens and Catholic clergymen lost their lives. Some of the religious who escaped went to Britain, and I fail to see in the records of the British government or Crown any evidence that they were considered a menace to British institutions. On the contrary, they were received with open arms, not by English Catholics alone, but by Protestants, and that at a time when there still existed in the British statutes laws of exclusion against British Catholics. They were welcomed as representatives of the highest form of civilization ; and they contributed in no small degree to the high point of culture in letters, in arts and education, which the best classes of the English people have reached to-day. They were even received with open arms in Russia, that country which is considered the most backward in regard to political liberty. They were received as a blessing to that country and contributed in no small degree in getting Russia out of the darkness of barbarism into the path of civilization.

But, confining ourselves to Canada, leaving aside the rest of the world,—concerning which the education of the hon. gentleman is too limited to allow him to know any thing of the facts—with regard to Canada, he should know something of the history of his own country. I would ask the hon. gentleman, when he is about to give expression to those professions of loyalty and attachment to the British Crown which he is so prone to make in this House,—I would ask him to whom we owe it if to-day there is a British flag to protect our political status and institutions and give us that freedom which even such men as the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) enjoy ? Every man who knows anything about our history knows that we owe it to the devotion, patriotism and loyalty of those men whom the hon. gentleman describes as a curse to the country. At a time when the large majority of the people of this country were of French origin and Catholic, when a large majority of our clergy had been born and brought up in Old France—having come of their own free will, because there were then no laws of expulsion in France—it depended on those men that the Canadian people did not follow the American compatriots of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes)—men of his race and religion—who revolted against the British Crown. Later on when a so-called constitutional government in France—a government according to the ideas and taste of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes)—was expelling or slaughtering the most respected population of France, and when some of those described by that hon. gentleman as a curse to the country, went to Canada, what did they do ? Twenty years afterwards there was another war between Great Britain and the United States, and although we were then under a system of government such as we would have to-day if the British and Canadian parliaments were composed of men like the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes), although for some years we had suffered under that tyrannical and abominable oligarchy, yet, because we had given our oath of allegiance to the British Crown, we remained faithful to the British flag. Fortunately we know that the hon. gentleman does not represent the views of a respectable body of English speaking people in Canada. It would indeed create a very bitter feeling in every lover of that church and those curses to our country if, after a hundred and fifty years of staunch loyalty and good work both in the field and in the domain of civil government, of constant effort in aiding to the best of our ability the building up of British institutions—if, when some of our flesh and blood came here from the other side of the ocean, expelled by men of the same mind as expelled those who came a hundred years ago, they were to be received on our shores in such a spirit as that which animates the hon. gentleman.

I would not have taken note of the hon. gentleman's words, knowing in what opinion he is held by the House, but the moment he went so far as to reiterate what he said about these venerable priests, I thought it my duty to take up briefly what he said. I wish to add further that the language of the hon. gentleman does not affect us in the least, because we know that as long as we enjoy British liberty and British institutions, the influence of such men as the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) will always be extremely insignificant .

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has spoken very warmly in his comments upon the remarks which were made on a previous day and also to-day by my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam Hughes). Let me say that I think my hon. friend from Labelle put into the mouth of my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton some phrases which he not only did not use but expressly disclaimed in his speech. He expressly disclaimed any reflection upon matters of race and religion, testifying to his appreciation of the French race, and he accorded particularly to every man in this country the right to worship in his own way without comment or criticism from anybody.

So much for that. Let me say this with regard to the remarks of my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton. In the first place, I do not think it is desirable for us in this house to enter upon a discussion of what has recently taken place in France. The question of what laws would be best for the republic of France is a question entirely for the legislature and people of that country. We do not understand—most of us do not profess to understand—these matters with which the French people and their representatives have to deal. We have problems in our own country which deserve our full attention, and I think we shall do well to abstain from criticism or discussion of matters which are the sole concern of the French people.

So far as the reference of my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton to French priests coming to this country are concerned, I confess that I do not concur in his views or expressions in any way. So far as I have the right to speak for the party which I have the honour to lead in this House, I desire to dissent as emphatically as possible from the expression of any such view. My hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton has referred to a certain well known remark of Daniel Dafoe as to ecclesiastical tyranny. Either that remark should not have the application which my hon. friend gave to it, or it should have a much wider application. Daniel Dafoe was dealing, not with the priesthood of France, but with ecclesiastical tyranny in general; and, if my hon. friend (Mr. Sam Hughes) proposed to apply that remark in that way, he should have said, it seems to me, that all clergymen are a curse to the country, and not alone those priests who come to Canada.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Where they are tyrannical.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But my hon. friend did not qualify his remarks in that way. If the quotation is of any moment or effect, it would lead to the conclusion, which he did not see fit to give to it, that all clergymen are a curse to this country. I do not think that any of us would be inclined to go that far. So far as the French priesthood are concerned, even those who have but the imperfect acquaintance that I have with French literature, must recognize the fact that great writers in France, even those not in absolute sympathy with the Roman Catholic church, have represented as types of the French priesthood, some of the finest and noblest characters ever portrayed by the pen of man. Many will at once recall the instance of the bishop and the convict. The unfortunate convict was a man who had had the soul almost crushed out of him by nineteen years of penal servitude in the galleys for merely stealing a loaf of bread. We recollect the story of his coming to the bishop by whom he was entertained and comforted—how he came back at night, the author portraying him as pausing in the moonlight to consider whether or not he shall inflict a mortal wound upon the bishop who has befriended him that day—how he comes back the next day in charge of the gens d'armes with the bishop's plate which he has stolen—and how the bishop, in answer to the gens d'armes' question, and turning to the convict says : 'My friend, I gave you the candlesticks also, and you have forgotten them, ' and these also he gives to the convict. Then, when the gens d'armes are dismissed, the good bishop says to the convict, 'My brother, you no longer belong to evil, but to good. I have bought your soul of you. I withdraw it from black thoughts and the spirit of perdition, and give it to God.' That is only one of many characters portrayed by men, who, as I have said were not in absolute sympathy with that church. And I am bound to say that a priesthood which could give to the world types of that character—which are not unreal, although the one to which I have referred lives only in an imaginative work—is not to be characterized in the way in which my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton has seen fit to characterize the French priests who are said to be coming to this country.

So far as I am concerned, I venture to think that I have as great an acquaintance with these gentlemen as has my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton. For some twelve years in the city of Halifax, I passed, every day of my life, a community of French priests. They were brought there under the ecclesiastical authority of the late Archbishop O'Brien, of Halifax, than whom a finer, a nobler, a more loyal character never existed in Canada. I have had the advantage of knowing some of these gentlemen. They led holy lives and were engaged in good works—there is no doubt about that; I have seen some of their work; I have known persons who have attended their religious services. They were doing good work in the city of Halifax, and, more than that, they had many pupils—for they were not only a religious but an educational body—including some young men of the very highest character and from some of the very best families in France. To say of men of this type that they are a curse to this country seems to me unwarrantable; and I am sure that my hon. friend (Mr. Sam Hughes) said this only in a moment of warmth and that he will be the first one to withdraw this expression as soon as he realizes the absolute injustice of it.

I have ventured to say this because I think the circumstances justify it. I do not think there is any hon. gentleman on this side of the House who would be prepared to concur in the somewhat hasty remarks which escaped from my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton on this occasion.

So much for that subject. We have matters in Canada which very fully demand our attention, and I would like to direct the attention of the House to a matter which I intend to bring before the attention of the House, to-day—and that is the question of the disregard by the government of a resolution of this House passed——

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Before my leader (Mr. R. L. Borden) goes on with his remarks, may I ask, Mr. Speaker, if I have the opportunity to reply to the statements made by the hon. member from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and any other statements made on the same question here to-day?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

Mr. TALBOT. We will give you a chance. This discussion has not nearly come to an end.

Mr. SPEAKER. Since the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) asks as to his right to reply, I may say that the motion before the House is one that I do now leave the chair, and, as the hon. gentleman has spoken on that motion, he has no right to speak again.

Mr. FIELDING. Wherever a matter of personal explanation——

Mr. SAM HUGHES. No personal explanation whatever.

Mr. FIELDING—comes in, the House is always indulgent. And, I may say one or two others have already spoken on this motion to-day. I do not wish to encourage debate, yet I do not wish the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam Hughes) to feel that he has been shut out.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not want to withdraw the incident from the attention of the House, I wish merely to go on with the motion of which I have given notice to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, without the slightest idea that the previous incident would thereby be shut off. But I am entirely in the judgment of the House; if it is thought desirable to pursue this incident, I will give way. But speaking for myself, and I think the majority of the House, I would be inclined to believe it undesirable that the incident should be pursued any further. However, as I have said, I am in the judgment of the House in that regard, and I do not desire to take a position which might be regarded as unfair to any hon. gentleman who desires to express himself.

If then I am permitted to proceed, I was about directing your attention to a resolution passed by this House and accepted by the government on the 17th of July, 1905, and which is as follows:

> That whilst it is desirable that every official in the employ of the government of Canada should enjoy perfect freedom of political opinion and the untrammelled exercise of his franchise in accord therewith, no official should be engaged or permitted to engage in partisan work of any description in the election of a representative to the provincial or Dominion legislatures.

Now, since that resolution was passed illustrations of its violation have been brought to the attention of the government and of parliament. I brought one at the commencement of this session, in fact, I brought more than one. I brought to the attention of the government at that time the fact that a man by the name of Zaccheus Hall, postmaster at Hampton, N.S., had been fined by a judge of the Supreme Court for having violated the law of the province of Nova Scotia with respect to bribery in having bribed some electors of that province in a provincial election held two years ago.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT (Bellechasse)). Will the leader of the opposition allow me to make one remark? Supposing he follows up his remarks now by a motion, are we to understand that the remarks made by the member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) will in consequence be dropped ?

Mr. SPEAKER. When an amendment to a motion to go into supply has been moved the discussion will have to be confined to that until it is disposed of. After it has been disposed of, I see no objection to a further discussion on the same motion to go into supply.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). With the leader of the opposition, if this matter can be closed at once. I shall not regret it, but if it is to be reviewed, might it not be better that we should dispose of it now? I would rather have it over now than have a second instalment of it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Whatever my hon. friend the Minister of Finance thinks best will be done—I do not want to stand in the way of any discussion, although I would be glad if such incidents should not be very much discussed in this House. But if the Minister of Finance desires me to give way in order that the previous discussion might be resumed, I am willing to do so, reserving my right to speak later on.

Mr. FIELDING. If by bringing on another matter this would be regarded as terminated, I would not regret it very much. I know that some hon. gentlemen have expressed a desire to speak, and if it has to be done it seems to me that we might as well have it over now as to take it up at a later stage.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). I desire to take the opportunity given by the leader of the opposition to discuss the question raised this morning by the member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) and to register in the strongest possible terms my protest against the language which he used this morning and the other day. The hon. gentleman, by his language this morning and by his ill-advised remarks the other day, has shown his ignorance of the history of this country and even the history of his own mother country, England. The Catholic clergy, and I may say the Catholic faith, to use the language of a great Protestant statesman, has always been a school of respect, a school of true loyalty and a school of true patriotism for every Canadian, whethere he be French or English. Let me remind you, Mr. Speaker, that in the early days after the conquest, many and many offers were made to the French Canadians by Americans, and even by members of the Amercian clergy belonging to the Catholic faith, to join forces with Lafayette, Rochambault and Washington. The Sulpician who on that historic occasion, refused on behalf of the French Canadian population, was a clergyman who had come from France to educate with his confreres the French Canadians. Now, my hon. friend speaks of British liberty and British civilization. May I remind him that those French clergymen when they leave France for foreign countries, go also to England and other British possessions. I have seen myself on the island of Jersey establishments of the Jesuit order and of the Oblat order. The reverend fathers were teaching not only the Catholic children but even the Protestant children. The same thing in England. And, Sir, the great monuments of England, Westminster Abbey or others, are the work of these monks, of the French clergymen, in days gone by. Again, Sir, I wish to register in your presence and before the country my formal and strong protest against the language used by the hon. gentleman, and I hope that on sober second thought he will withdraw it.

Mr. TALBOT. I must congratulate the hon. leader of the opposition on the very nice remarks he has made in expressing his dissent from the opinion of the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton. However, in the course of his remarks I understood him saying—I speak under correction —that the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) had put into the mouth of the member for Victoria and Haliburton words that he had not used. Now, I am going to put into the mouth of the member for Victoria and Haliburton words he has used, but which are not reported in the 'Hansard,' words which he used within the hearing of several members of this House when the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) was speaking of the advantages of French immigration into this country, and the hon. gentleman questioned him about the advantages of the French clergy coming to this country.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Might I rise to a point of order ? I do not do so because I wish to stop the hon. gentleman from speaking, but if we are going to review the discussions of this House that do appear on the 'Hansard' as of record, it will give us quite enough I think to do and quite enough to think of. But if we are going to go beyond that and review what members say in the corridors and what they say in the House in asides, one or the other, it opens up a field, it seems to me, which is not only a field of reprisals, but will result in scenes which will be degrading to the House and unprofitable to a degree. I would ask you whether it is within the proper bounds of debate that what you might call private conversation shall be imported into the 'Hansard?'

Mr. FIELDING. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) think that is a point of order?

Mr. FOSTER. That is a general and wise condition which I think should prevail.

Mr. FIELDING. I would regret anything approaching a discussion; at the same time I do not think it is a ground for raising a point of order. I would prefer that we should confine the discussion to the point before the Chair. I think that the question which my hon. friend has raised is a matter of judgment.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would hardly take it as a point of order. It would be very difficult to pass upon such a point as that.

Mr. TALBOT. I would certainly refrain from saying anything if the remarks of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) should apply to what I am going to say. It is not anything that has been circulated in the corridors; it is something that was said right in the House at the time by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton, and within the hearing of several hon. members. It may be that 'Hansard' failed to hear it, but notwithstanding that, it was heard by several members. Following his remarks with regard to the importation of clerical institutions into this country he said that they are only good for breeding purposes. Whether he applied that to the clergy or to the French Canadian race I do not know, but from the remarks that the hon. member made this morning, I consider that he did apply that remark to these people. He went further and made another remark which I will not repeat because it was not within my hearing but it was within the hearing of some hon. members of this House and one of these hon. members told me that if this remark had been made to him as it was made within the hearing of the hon. member for Beauharnois he would have slapped his mouth. I was one of those who shared the opinion of the hon. member for Labelle. I would have treated the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton in this particular instance as I have treated him under other circumstances and as several other members have treated him and that is with contempt. Had it not been for that fact that we have the hon. member for Beauharnois going through the length and breadth of the province of Quebec claiming for himself and his party that they have the right to defend the clergy and asserting that the Liberal party is doing its best to destroy the French nationality and the Catholic religion. I should not at this time have troubled the House by referring to the remarks of the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton. But, there is the hon. member for Beauharnois sitting right alongside of the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton. He should know more about the remarks that the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton has made than we do here. He must have heard what they were as he was sitting right alongside of him. In the course of his remarks the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton spoke about the French blood that coursed through his veins and about his loyalty.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. May I be permitted to interrupt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot)? I was called to the telephone. I understand that the hon. member has made a certain remark here. I am informed of what he says I said. It was the exact opposite of the remark of the hon. gentleman, as stated.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. TALBOT. Do I understand the hon. member for Victoria to say that he withdraws it, that he did not say that?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The words which have been stated by you? Yes, I said the opposite to that.

Mr. TALBOT. Well, there are several members of this House unfortunately who heard the words of the hon. gentleman, they were sitting right alongside of him and they knew exactly what he said, and there are a great many people who will believe that what I say is correct. The hon. gentleman says that what I say is not correct. Very well; let it go. The hon. member spoke of his loyalty in the course of his remarks to-day, but it is not very long ago when he said that rather than see Canada independent not only would he vote for annexation, but he would fight for annexation. If the prophecy of the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler) is realized that before long the Conservative party will be in power we must infer that the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton will be the Minister of Militia. What will happen to Canada when we see a member sitting in the House of Commons who is prepared to fight for annexation rather than see Canada independent? Is that the kind of loyalty that we are to entertain in this House? Is that the meaning which the young men of this country are to attach to the word 'loyalty'? If this country were to have any trouble with the United States would the hon. gentleman as Minister of Militia wish to arm them with the Ross rifle because he was in favour of annexation? Would the hon. gentleman, because he favours annexation, desire that this country should get the worst of it if any invasion from the other side should take place? I am very glad to know from the remarks which have been made by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House that the hon. member for Victoria and Halibur-ton stands almost alone in the Conservative party. I am well pleased to hear that. I am speaking of different remarks that have been made not in the last few days, but in the last few weeks. I would be very sorry to believe, not only in the interest of the Conservative party, but for the good of Canada, that there were more of the type of the hon. member in that party.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take any share in this discussion. I think that the less we speak of these questions in this House the better it is. But since the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) has brought my name into it I am obliged to say a word or two. I did read the other day in one of the papers published in Montreal, 'Le Canada,' a statement in which I was accused of not having killed immediately the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes). I do not think it was my duty to do so. I do not think I am standing here as a policeman. The day afterwards I took up what had been said by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton, as we can see it to-day in 'Hansard,' and which has given rise to the discussion which we have had to-day. I have heard what the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton has said. I said in a private way to him what I had to say. It was as much as I could say and I knew that it was the best way to do it. I had no doubt in my mind, I have none to-day, that the hon. member never intended to insult either my race or my religion. It may be that his words were strong. They are admitted to be so by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and by those who have spoken, but I repeat that I have no doubt in my mind that he did not intend to insult either the Catholic religion, the Catholic priests or the French Canadians. The hon. member for Bellechasse has said that the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton has used words which were worse even than those reported in 'Hansard' and he calls me as a witness. That is very unfortunate for him. If he had called any one else he might have succeeded, because all I have to say is that what he says has been repeated to him is not true. The hon. gentleman says that he did not hear with his own ears what the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton said, but that he was told; I repeat, it is not true. As to the remark of the hon. gentleman behind me, I heard that, but I do not believe that there is much in it, there is certainly not so much in it as has been inferred by some hon. members opposite and by some newspapers. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) thought he would have a fling at me. That is quite customary on his part and he is welcome to do it. He says that we go into the province of Quebec talking on religion, preaching against Liberals as not being good and just people. What we have said in Quebec since 1896, as far as religion is concerned, is that we had done everything we could to secure justice to the minority in Manitoba and had not succeeded. We have repeated what the hon. gentlemen opposite have said, that they had beaten the Catholic clergy of Quebec in 1896. We do not go further than that. My view of religion is that I believe more in acts than in words; I prefer those who properly perform their duty to those who brag about it.

If this incident, these unfortunate words of my hon. friend here (Mr. Sam. Hughes) had had but one result, that is that we should hear the expressions used this afternoon by the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), it would be a bad cause producing a good result. I hope that this discussion will not be kept up too long. I might have immediately jumped to my feet and abused hon. members right and left, but what would be the use of doing so? We have to take one another here as we are. If an unfortunate expression falls from the lips of an hon. member then, if he has courage enough, as in the case of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) to-day, to explain the words he used, we must give him credit for acting in good faith. I am not standing here as a policeman to jump on this one or that one who may say things that I do not approve of.

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN (Nicolet). Mr. Speaker, I agree with the statement which has just fallen from the lips of my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), that in a country such as ours we cannot possibly hope to get along unless we mutually respect our convictions; we must have peace, and I think the only way to secure peace is that one class should respect the religious convictions of another. Nobody on this side nor, I think, 'Le Canada,' which was quoted by my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) asked him to kill his hon. friend beside him (Mr. Sam. Hughes), but everybody expected that as he was seated right beside him, and no doubt heard the expression which fell from his lips but did not reach all parts of the House, he, a champion in the province of Quebec of the church to which he and I both belong, would have protested against that language.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I may say that the hon. member did so at once, reasoned with me.

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. I am so sorry that the power of reason has had no effect upon the hon. member. Judging from what has fallen from him to-day the fact remains that he has uttered an unfortunate expression and that he has not withdrawn that expression. After all he has been told from more than one quarter of the House, that the expression was very hurtful to the feelings of a large proportion of the people of this country, and if he cannot share our religious sentiments, at all events, as a member of this House and as a Canadian, he should respect our feelings and our convictions. That is all we ask him to do, but instead of that he stands by it, and says that the immigration of French priests is a curse to this country.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In response to the statement that they were the best possible immigrants that ever came to this country.

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. My hon. friend intimated that the French priests constituted a curse to this country. Has he read the history of this country?

Mr. BOURASSA. No.

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. Does he know the great and glorious deeds performed in the early part of the history of Canada by French priests? Does he know what they have suffered, what they have endured in order to carry on their mission? Does he know that they have faced every danger and have suffered death in martyrdom, in a worse form perhaps than martyrdom had ever before been inflicted? Has he read the history of Canada? If he has read the history of Canada, he must know that these glorious deeds were accomplished by priests who came out here, not for worldly gain, but in order to fulfil the duties of their sacred calling. With respect to the priests of France, I may say something; I am better posted with respect to them than the hon. gentleman, because I have lived in France for two years, and I know exactly what they are doing there. I know precisely why they are to-day falling under the law; I know their daily work and their deeds, which are making them revered, if not by all the French nation, at all events, by the Catholic portion of France. I have seen them in their colleges teaching the youth, and I have known even those who have fallen away from the Catholic Church without entering any other church to send their children to be educated by those French priests, of whom the hon. member (Mr. Sam. Hughes) thinks and speaks so fiercely in this House. Has he read the history of France? Does he know the great deeds performed by the priests of France? Does he know that in every country, in literature as well as in art and in theological science, no greater lights have ever appeared in the world than the same priests of France whom he is decrying. Sir, there is not a Catholic in this country, there is not a Catholic in any province in Canada who will not feel severely hurt by these words which have fallen from the lips of the hon. gentleman, which he has refused to take back, which he stands by in this House, and we know the reason why. He hopes that in his county these words may secure for him a few additional votes at the next election—he is appealing to the very worst possible form of prejudice and passion.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order; the hon. gentleman is impugning my motives. I am entitled to the same credit as he is—I have never skipped from any country.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member is going a little far when he suggests an improper reason on the part of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes).

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. I respect your ruling and decision, that it is not a motive that prompts the hon. gentleman, that it is an absolute conviction on his part. Then he ought to get out of Canada, or he ought to get all the Catholic population out of Canada, since that is his conviction.

I rose to protest against this language as a Canadian, as a representative of a French Canadian and Catholic county, and even if I were not a Catholic, even if I were a Protestant, I would protest, and I would protest as a Catholic against any insults that should be offered to the Protestant ministers of this country with just as much warmth as I do against the insult hurled against us. I protest furthermore as an Irishman against this insult. Remember that when our forefathers were denied those advantages which happily we have to-day, they had to go to France to get their education, and they came back thoroughly trained—those French priests knew how to educate.

In my humble capacity, therefore, as the representative of a French county, and actuated by the sentiments which should fill the heart of every Canadian, I protest against such outrageous language as that which fell from the hon. member (Mr. Sam. Hughes).

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, a few innocent remarks from me were perhaps the cause of the present outbreak. The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) in the course of his speech, gave the number of Frenchmen who have come to Canada. As I intended to make some remarks afterwards on the subject of the comparative value of the occupations of immigrants, I asked him what was the occupation of those people. I had heard that some priests were coming to Canada, but they were not in my mind at the time. What I wanted to elicit was the number of agricultural labourers who had come. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), who spoke afterwards, alluded to some Belgian farmers or horticulturists who had been inported and my reason for asking the question I did was that I had heard that the French agriculturists who had come to Canada were not numerous. That idea was expanded afterwards by the hon. Postmaster General, who gave as a reason for it that the farmers of France are the most industrious, frugal and comparatively rich of the farming populations of Europe. I intended to argue, if an opportunity had been given me, and I several times rose for that purpose, that at the present time agricultural labourers and small farmers were the most desirable class of immigrants, and that people from cities—Paris, London or any other great city—are not so valuable at the present time. In this connection I wish to bear testimony once more to my old friends the Galicians. Some years ago I defended them because I had an intimate knowledge of them, when they had not so many friends on the other side of the House or on this side as they have to-day. I venture to affirm, from my knowledge of the Galicians, and from the fact that they are all farmers, men, women and children all working in the fields from morning till night, and a most industrious and frugal people, that relatively to any other class in Canada, they will make the most progress during the next five or ten years. With regard to French history, to which my hon. friend from Labelle alluded this morning, a great European statesman once said that he prided himself on what he had forgotten ; and we in Canada can very well afford to forget certain pages in the history of France during the reigns of Louis XIII, Louis XIV, Louis XV and even Louis XVIII. Let us lay aside European history, and have a little less regard for religious controversies. The Doukhobors have frequently been classed with the Galicians. They are not of the same tribe or race nor have they the same religion. I have never heard that there was too much religion in the Northwest. Doukhobors have been reproached, I believe, on the ground that they have too much religion. Perhaps we might import some of those pantheists from Paris, or even a few atheists, and let them mingle with the Doukhobors and make a compromise religion for the Northwest. But certainly the Northwest is wide enough, with land enough and opportunities enough for all kinds of religions and morals. We can assimilate them all and make good Canadians of them, and the best patriot is the man who recognizes these differences of race and religion and allows them all to be tolerated without reproach to any of them.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat sorry that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has thought so keenly of my reference to him as fit to be the Prime Minister's carpet bagger, as to have poured out his spleen on me in such a bitter and uncalled for manner. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that I do not ask him for any commendation before the people of this country. I am neither a braggart in the forum nor a coward in the field. The hon. gentleman has talked of history. You will search in vain in the volumns of his speech for one word dealing with historical facts. I was not going into history this morning. Had I done so, I could have pointed out, as he did, that a number of Frenchmen left France at a certain time—why ? Because they refused to obey the laws of free France : and these men went back and fought against their own fellow countrymen. Not a very creditable record to cite in support of the principles which the hon. gentleman was upholding. I could also have pointed out that before that time a number of men who had fought for civil government in France were driven from France and went to Holland, and some to England, some to South Africa, some to Georgia and Florida, some to Acadia, and some to Canada, and these men, wherever they went, left behind them monuments that are a credit to the free men of France. I have taken the liberty before to-day of discussing the question of the credit to which Frenchmen are entitled. When the Hon. Mr. Tarte edited ' Le Canadien,' and undertook to discipline me in regard to my attitude to the schools of the Northwest, I wrote letters to that paper reviewing French history and upholding the French Canadians and the French Canadian clergy for what they had done for this country I have a record in this matter. If my words were not clear this morning in regard to ecclesiastical tyranny, my record shows that I have carried out exactly the principle expressed in Daniel Defoe's couplet. I am on record both in the House and out of the House against ecclesiastical tyranny, whether from the church of which I have the honour to be an adherent, whether from the Anglican, the Presbyterian or the Roman church. I am on record as against ecclesiastical tyranny from each and every one of these churches, and if my words this morning were not clearly understood, the misfortune is mine. It is really delightful to see such a staunch pillar of religion, of liberty, of the churches, of everything that goes to make a noble and true manhood as my hon. friend from Nicolet, (Mr. C. R. Devlin)——

An hon. MEMBER. From Galway.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES No, he ran away from Galway. They would not have him there any more.

Mr. C. R. DEVLIN. Mr. Speaker, I will not let this go on. That is a falsehood.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member is not in order in making that remark.

Mr. C. R. DEVLIN. Well, I will bow to parliamentary usage and say that it is inaccurate.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman is very much maligned even among his own friends; but that may very well be. I shall not enter into the reasons why he left Galway.

Mr. C. R. DEVLIN. Wherever I wanted a seat, I got one, and where I wanted it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That shows the hon. gentleman's pull. But when an hon. gentleman deeply imbued with the spirit of religion such as the hon. gentleman from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), when such a saint—I beg pardon, I should not use such terms—and the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) or the honourable members from Nicolet (Mr. Devlin) stand up and seek to make a point against my good friend and colleague (Mr. Bergeron) who let me say, in a christian, temperate and charitable spirit reproved me for the language I let slip on that occassion, and showed me the spirit in which mountebanks on the other side would make use of it—I am satisfied the House will see their sorry little game. But since the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) has stated that these people are the best class we could get here, let me say that we do not admit immigrants from Austria who were expelled by the Austrian government. Nor do we admit immigrants from Germany who were expelled by the German government. Nor even do we admit immigrants who were expelled from England by the authority of the government. And in that sense I say—and say it advisedly—that I have nothing to retract. Men who cannot see their way clear to obey the laws of a free country, such as France is—a country which in many respects is at the head of civilization—cannot to my mind, unless there is some very good reason to the contrary, be expected to be very good citizens of a country such as Canada which is not so free as France is. My hon friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has referred to the clergy in the past. But I am not talking of individual clergymen. I have not looked on any of these men as not good subjects in their individual capacity. I know, I am glad to say, many of the French clergy, and they are splendid fellows individually It is not to the individual I am referring but to these gentlemen who, in their corporate capacity, will not obey the laws of a free country like France. I know that I made use of an expression which, I am sorry to say, was taken up wrongly. I know that the politician is always ready to take what little advantage against me he may. But let me tell my friend—I will term him my friend even if he refuses the appellation as applied to me—that I have in the past borne certain matters alone in this House. I stood in this House alone when my leader, Sir Charles Tupper, told me that my proposition that Canadians should take part in any imperial war was absurd and could never be carried out. And when the leader of this government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), told me, on the eve of the South African war, that I was altogether too presumptious—I forgot exactly what the term was which he used—and that Canada would not send a man nor a gun to South Africa, and that not a Canadian would go, I stood alone. I stand to-day to tell the hon. member for Labelle (Mr Bourassa) that Canadians did go to South Africa and from every other colony, in spite of the cold water thrown on the project by the leader of the government and previously by the then leader of the opposition. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has said that I would go down to oblivion. Well, we shall all go down to oblivion. The only thing that can possibly save the hon. gentleman from that fate will be the fact of his having figured in the public life of Canada as a sort of freak in every respect. We will all go down to oblivion, and perhaps quicker than we expect. I would point out to the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) that in our statutes there are certain principles which I have been instrumental at all events in carrying out. I could point to an article in the 'Citizen' this morning, taken from the New York 'Herald,' in which it is pointed out that the main issue in the imperial conference will be a plan for the closer bringing together of Great Britain and her colonies, and that plan is the identical one proposed by me years ago. At that time I could scarcely get a supporter, but now I am proud to say that the brightest minds in the empire bear me out in that contention. I want to say in conclusion that in vain will my remarks to be misconstrued, not one word have I uttered against my French Canadian fellow countrymen. I stand on record possibly as no man in the Dominion does in that regard When the hon, member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) was creating political capital throughout the length and breadth of the province of Quebec against closer connection and loyalty to Britain at the time of the South African war, when he would stand, as I am told, in front of the bulletin board and cheer any bad news to the British——

Mr. BOURASSA. This is another of the numerous inaccurate statements to which the hon. gentleman has given utterance. I never did anything of the kind.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. At all events we had speeches from the hon gentleman strongly opposed to the Boer war.

Mr. BOURASSA. And I stand by them.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And entirely in favour of the Boer side of the question. When the hon. gentleman was taking that line on that occasion, I was doing work in another field. I have not uttered one word against any individual but have stood for the French Canadians on every occasion. At the time of the Northwest Rebellion, when some gentlemen in Toronto undertook to belittle the 65th Regiment, I had the honour of taking up the cudgels on its behalf, and I received a letter from Colonel Dugas thanking me from the bottom of his heart for the stand I had taken in defending my French Canadian fellow countrymen on that occasion. I have never at any time made race and religion a part of my political baggage. In no platform of mine have I ever referred to the race agitation carried on by 'La Patrie' and it editor, Mr. Tarte, and by the colleagues of Mr. Tarte in the cabinet. I fought these issues and want to make a little prophecy. Whoever lives ten years from to-day will see that there will not be as much kowtowing on all these matters as there is to-day throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion.

Mr. BOURASSA. As a personal explanation I wish to say that instead of the right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain and Lord Milner having been the cause of the South African war and responsible for it, as I have stated, I am glad to be able to withdraw that statement because we now all know that it is the Hon. Sam. Hughes who is responsible for the whole war.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The words used by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr Hughes) did not reach me at the time they were spoken and probably the majority of members did not catch them I regret that when the hon. gentleman's attention was drawn to them, he was not able to simplify and shorten the debate by expressing his regret at having uttered them. At all events he has had evidence from both sides of the House that the general opinion is that they should not have been spoken as they were calculated to give offence. The hon. gentleman says he was misunderstood, but whether understood or misunderstood, the words were likely to give offence to a large portion of the community. Now, we have had a full and perhaps a longer discussion than any one anticipated, and I wish to offer the suggestion that the incident be regarded as closed and that we resume discussion on Supply.

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton.) Mr. Speaker, when I gave way for the purpose of allowing the discussion on the matter which has been disposed of, I was directing the attention of the House to a resolution moved by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) and accepted by the government on the 17th of July, 1905. That resolution was as follows :

That whilst it is desirable that every official in the employ of the government of Canada should enjoy perfect freedom of political opinion and the untrammelled exercise of his franchise in accord therewith, no official should be engaged or be permitted to engage in partisan work of any description in the election of a representative to a provincial or Dominion legislature.

I desire to point out that, from the date of that resolution up to the present time, there have been various illustrations of its violation brought to the attention of the government. I do not propose to speak at length, and therefore I shall not go over all these this afternoon. Let. me however, refer to the case of Mr. Zacheus Hall, postmaster at Hampton, in the county of Annapolis, N.S. As far back as November 6th, 1906, Mr. Hall was found guilty of having attempted to bribe two persons in the county of Annapolis during the provincial elections of about a year ago.

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (Minister of Customs), I do not wish to interrupt the order of the hon. gentleman's (Mr. R. L. Borden's) remarks, but will it be convenient for him to announce now the resolution which he intends to move ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have much pleasure in sending to my hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) across the floor of the House a copy of the resolution which I propose to move. This Mr. Hall, the postmaster at Hampton, was found guilty by Mr. Justice Townshend, a judge of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, of having bribed two persons in the elections of that province. These persons were John Taylor and Daly Saulnier. There is no doubt of his having offered these men money ; there is no doubt of the attempt to bribe ; there is no doubt whatever that these men were asked to vote, in consideration of the bribe, for the Liberal candidate in that county. The only defence on the trial was that these men had not been proved to be electors. That would be a good defence so far as the right to recover the penalty is concerned. But it would not make the action of the official any the less a partisan interference with the election. The learned judge found that there was no evidence that one of these men, Saulnier, was an elector ; but he found that there was sufficient evidence that the man Taylor was an elector. His words were as follows :

As to Mr. Taylor the facts are somewhat different. He swore that he did vote, and among the circumstances attending his voting he admitted on the witness stand that he was required to take the oath generally known as the bribery oath. The question is whether this is sufficient proof of his being a male person entitled to vote at the election. With some hesitation I think it is, as unless his name was duly entered on the voting list, the returning officer could not have received his vote at all. The fact that this vote was received is in my mind sufficient to establish his status as a voter. I, therefore, find the defendant guilty of corrupt practices within the meaning of the Nova Scotia Election Act as set forth in the statement of the claim.

Now, an appeal was taken from that finding on the ground that there was not sufficient evidence that Taylor was a voter. That appeal was dismissed some time ago. As I pointed out on a previous occasion, even if the appeal had been allowed there would still be unquestionable evidence that this man was interfering in a partisan way in the election and was offering bribes to two men whom he believed to have votes at that election. I brought this instance to the attention of the government in November or December last. Up to the present, I understand, the government have taken no action, and Mr. Hall still enjoys the position of postmaster at Hampton, and is still in receipt of a salary as such from the people of this country.

Reference was also made to Mr. J. L. Bain and Mr. Oscar Campbell as having taken an offensive partisan part in the by-election at which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was returned about a year and a half ago. Mr. Bain was and is a fishery officer of this government. Mr. Campbell was and is a lighthouse keeper in the county of Shelbourne. The circumstance was mentioned in the debate on the address that these gentlemen had acted as agents for the Minister of Finance at one of the polls. I have a declaration under my hand showing what they did and how they took an active part in the support of the Minister of Finance during that election. The declaration is made by Mr. Avard L. Davidson, and is as follows :

I, Avard L. Davidson, of Halifax, in the county of Halifax, barrister at law, do solemnly declare :

1. That I acted as agent of Dr. R. C. Weldon, the Conservative candidate at the by-election held October 31, 1906, to elect a member for the House of Commons of Canada for the electoral district of Shelburne and Queen's, in the polling booth held at Port Mouton in the said electoral district.

2. The agents in the said booth represented the Hon. W. S. Fielding, Liberal candidate at said by-election, were J. L. Bain, of Liverpool, in the county of Queen's, a fishery officer for the said county of Queen's, and Oscar Campbell, of Port Mouton, in the said county of Queen's, the keeper of a government lighthouse at or near Port Mouton aforesaid. Produced to me at the time of making this declaration and marked 'A' and 'B' respectively are true copies of the appointment of the said J. L. Bain and Oscar Campbell as agent as aforesaid, filed with the deputy returning officer at the said booth at Port Mouton aforesaid which said copies were taken by me at the said polling booth at the day of the said election.

3. That the said L. J. Bain and Oscar Campbell did not merely act as scrutineers at the said booth, but as nearly as I could ascertain had the general management of the campaign for Mr. Fielding at the said booth, one or the other of them being usually employed during the day in canvassing the voters around the booth to come in and vote for Mr. Fielding, and apparently directing those persons who were driving teams in the interests of Mr. Fielding what voters should be driven to the polls.

4. That the said W. S. Fielding addressed a public meeting at Port Mouton aforesaid, addressing the electorate upon political issues on the evening of the 25th day of October, 1906, and I am informed and verily believe that the said W. S. Fielding arrived at Port Mouton for the said meeting in company with the said J. L. Bain, who drove him from Liverpool to Port Mouton on this occasion and on the afternoon of the said 25th day of October introduced the said W. S. Fielding to a number of the voters residing in the vicinity of Liverpool and Port Mouton.

5. That I am informed and verily believe that the said J. L. Bain on the day preceding the said election conducted a house to house canvas in the interests of the said W. S. Fielding at Port Mouton and Port Joli.

6. That I am informed by Arthur Wolfe, of Port Joli, aforesaid, and verily believe that as he the said Arthur Wolfe was not satisfied with the way matters had been managed by the government in his community, and being a Liberal in politics and not caring to vote against his party he had made up his mind not to vote at all at this election and had so informed his neighbours, but that the night preceding the said election the said J. L. Bain called at his house and canvassed him to vote for the said W. S. Fielding and that he promised the said Bain that he would so vote.

7. That I am informed by Joseph Weldon, of Montreal, barrister at law, the agent of the said Dr. R. C. Weldon at the polling booth at Port Joli aforesaid and verily believe that the said Arthur Wolfe presented himself at the polling booth at Port Joli aforesaid and demanded a vote ; that the said Joseph Weldon instructed the deputy returning officer at said booth to require the said Arthur Wolfe to take the bribery oath before giving him a ballot and that the said returning officer thereupon asked the said Arthur Wolfe to take the said bribery oath, but the said Arthur Wolfe refused to take it and left the said booth without voting.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

(Sgd.) AVARD L. DAVIDSON.

Solemnly declared before me this 21st day of November, A.D. 1906, Alfred Whitman, a commissioner of the Supreme Court in and for the county of Halifax.

The documents referred to in that declaration are as follows :

I, William S. Fielding, a candidate at the ensuing election of a member to represent the electoral district of Shelburne and Queen's, in the House of Commons of Canada, hereby appoint Oscar Campbell to be my agent in polling district No. 6.

(Sgd.) W. S. FIELDING.

Dated this 24th day of October, 1906.

I, William S. Fielding, a candidate at the ensuing election of a member to represent the electoral district of Shelburne and Queen's, in the House of Commons of Canada, hereby appoint J. L. Bain to be my agent in polling district No. 6.

(Sgd.) W. S. FIELDING.

Dated this 24th day of October, 1906.

Now it was declared by the Prime Minister, speaking, I presume, on behalf of the Minister of Finance, that these documents were signed in blank by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, and in that way he was not responsible for the selection of these particular persons to act for him at that election. That is one matter. But it is nevertheless true, on the statement of Mr. Davidson, according to information which he believes to be true, that this man Bain was working for the Minister of Finance at that election, canvassing for him, that he drove him around the country on one or two occasions at least, that he was making himself personally active, although an official of this government, in that particular election. Then I would like to bring this further circumstance to the attention of the House, that although the action of Mr. Bain and Mr. Campbell were brought to the attention of this government before the close of the month of November, last, although their partisan action in violation of the resolution which I have read a moment ago was thus brought to the attention of the government in a most pointed manner, both those men are, as I understand, still in the enjoyment of the positions which they then held, and still in the enjoyment of a salary or remuneration out of the public treasury of this country.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. Will the leader of the opposition give me the first name of that Mr. Davidson, and say whether he is associated with the Messrs. Ritchie in Halfax ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. His first name is Avard ; he is not an associate of the Messrs. Ritchie, so far as I am aware. Now I am informed on very good authority indeed that this man Bain made himself notorious as a political partisan in the county of Queen's in the recent election. There can be no doubt about that. He has considerable power over fishermen in that county, he has considerable influence over fishermen, and the reports I have received, not only from Mr. Davidson, whose declaration I have read, but also from various other sources, indicate that he lost no opportunity of making his partisan views known and of endeavouring to secure votes for the Minister of Finance by means of his official influence over the fishermen of that county. Another gentleman to whom I may allude is John E. Payzant, customs-house officer at Port Mouton, deputy returning officer at the by-election in Queen's and Shelburne. He at first refused to allow A. L. Davidson to act as agent for Dr. R. C. Weldon at Port Mouton poll, but after some considerable wrangling finally allowed him to so act. Mr. Davidson asked that the ballots be counted before opening the poll ; Payzant refused to count them, Davidson insisted that the ballots should be counted, whereupon the deputy returning officer said that he would show him —— quick who was running that poll and deliberately assaulted Davidson. Another gentleman who has been very active in the electoral division which is represented by the Minister of Finance, was James A. McKay, postmaster at Clyde River, who acted as agent for Mr. Fielding at Port Clyde. I am informed that not only did he do so, but he took a very active part in previous elections. I understand the Minister of Finance knows him very well, and recommended him for the position which he now holds. He attended as delegate the convention that nominated Mr. Fielding, and he has been delegate, as I understand, at every convention since holding the position he now occupies. I would also refer to the case of Capt. E. P. Greenwood, postmaster at Northeast Harbour, Queen's county. He is an especial friend of the Minister of Finance, and escorted him through the county at several elections, in absoulte violation of the resolution which was passed in 1905. It is true that the resolution was passed after the general election, but the principle was the same, a principle which the Prime Minister has affirmed over and over again since this government came into power in 1896. Mr. Greenwood has been a very active partisan on all occasions when an opportunity of exhibiting his partisanship was afforded him by a general or a by-election. I would like also to refer to the case of Mr. MacCallum Nickeson, fishery inspector at Clarke's Harbour, in the electoral division which is represented by the Minister of Finance. He took an active part also in the by-election which has been held since the passage of this resolution, and he was a delegate to the convention which nominated my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. Andrew Robertson, fishery officer for Barrington municipality, and Wishart Robertson, collector of customs at Barrington also took an active part for the Minister of Finance, as I am informed, at the last election. I am informed, and I make the statement upon good information, that Mr. J. E. Dexter, harbour master at Liverpool, was also an active supporter of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. As a matter of fact Mr. Dexter was called, if I am not mistaken, as a witness in the election trial which followed the general elections, and it was shown, if I am not mistaken, that he had been taking a very active part indeed in connection with the organization of the Liberal party at that election and in the support of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. Now, there are other gentlemen who have been returning officers, such as Mr. W. A. Griffin, postmaster at Lewis Head, Alexander Hurley, postmaster at West Sable River, G. R. Hines, fishery officer at Shelburne. There may be perhaps at first blush no special objection to any one of these officers acting as deputy returning officer at an election. But when you come to reflect that these officials of the government are the men who are required under the law to mark the ballots of illiterate voters, and when you understand what representations are made to some of these voters as to what may be the result of their action in voting for the Conservative candidate, you can readily see that the placing of a public official of well known partisan views in a position of that kind acts as a sort of intimidation to those voters and that the men are not really free agents to cast their ballots as they would wish to do.

Now I have not gone over any cases except those which have occurred in the electoral division of Queen's and Shelburne, and the case in the county of Annapolis where the judgment of a court has been pronounced upon the action of a postmaster in that county. If I chose to go into other counties in the province of Nova Scotia, I could weary the House with illustrations of how public officials have been acting in violation of the principle which was laid down by the resolution to which I have referred. I could give name after name in the county of Halifax, for example, of public officials who have been openly and notoriously partisan in their acts and in their words, and who have been the mainstay in some parts of the county of Halifax of the Liberal organizations there. I have given, however, sufficent illustrations, I think, of how this resolution has been violated in the electoral division of a minister of the Crown of this country, and apparently, in some instances at least, with his direct knowledge and concurrence.

It seems to me that a resolution of this House, accepted by the government and accepted by parliament, which lays down a wholesome rule of this kind, should not be treated with contempt, that the government should intervene when it is so violated. We have the illustrations I have given to the House to-day of cases where the facts have been brought to the attention of the government, I think, five months ago, and no action whatever has been taken to correct these men, to remove them from their positions or otherwise to deal with them as the public interest would demand. An explanation is due from the government as to these matters and I think that their action in permitting their officials with impunity to follow the course which I have pointed out should not commend itself to this House. Therefore, I beg to move, Mr. Speaker:

That all the words after the word 'that' be left out and the following substituted therefor:

On July 17, 1905, the following resolution, moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) was unanimously accepted and adopted by the House of Commons:

That whilst it is desirable that every official in the employ of the government of Canada should enjoy perfect freedom of political opinion and the untrammelled exercise of his franchise in accord therewith, no official should be engaged or be permitted to engage in partisan work of any description in the election of a representative to the provincial or Dominion legislatures.

This House regrets that the government have sanctioned and condoned the deliberate violation of this resolution by officials who notwithstanding such deliberate violation have been continued in positions of public trust and responsibility, and in the enjoyment of salaries paid from the public exchequer.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, the resolution adopted in 1905, unanimously adopted as the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) says is one which has my hearty approval and one which asserts a general principle which we would do well to put in force. True, it is a principle which is rather at variance with the policy of the Conservative party for many years. My hon. friend stands here as the champion of the Conservative party not merely of to-day but of the party of history. If my hon. friend has any recollection whatever of the record of the Conservative party, he will know, while I am not trying to justify the thing, that for one official who to-day takes part in politics there were a dozen who took part in politics at the time I refer to. I do not make that a justification for officials of this government taking part in politics. If that action on the part of officials under the Conservative government at that time was objectionable it would be no less objectionable for officials to engage in party politics at the present time. Still, it is just possible that a good rule may be pushed too far, and it was by no means made clear by the hon. gentleman whether he would apply that rule to every postmaster who is getting $25 a year for attending to a petty post office in the country. I would prefer that even a small postmaster should refrain from taking an active part in politics and be content to simply cast his vote, but I am not going so far as to say that if a postmaster who receives the petty sum we allow in our rural districts should in a decent, honest and respectable way take part in an election he should not be retained in office. I think that a distinction may properly be drawn between officials who have large salaries, officials who, if I may use the expression, make their living out of their public offices, and officials who hold a petty office which is of little or no financial value. I would at once assent to the idea that any official who is receiving a large or living salary, or who makes his living out of his salary while occupying a public office, should not take any active part in politics, and that if he should take any active part in politics upon a change of administration he would be properly removed from office. Whether you can draw the line between an officer who is receiving a living salary and an officer who is receiving a small, petty salary perhaps it may not be easy to determine. But I think that under a fair interpretation of the resolution it would be well that an attempt should be made to draw such a line.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What would you say about the case of Captain Bain?

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Bain; he has not yet got the title of captain. Mr. Bain is a livery stable keeper in Liverpool. I forget what his salary is, but he does not pretend to devote his time entirely to the public service. He cannot make a living out of his public office. For some time he kept a shop at Liverpool. During later years he has been the keeper of a livery stable. We do uot pay him enough to give him a living salary. I frankly say that I regret that Mr. Bain does not abide by the terms of the resolution, but I think there is something to be said in his case. It is said that Mr. Bain drove me through the county and introduced me to the people. Mr. Bain, being a livery stable keeper as well as a government officer, I very naturally went to him and asked him to drive me to one or two places. Mr. Bain, while he was with me never canvassed men and never discussed politics with them, and I have no recollection of his ever introducing me to anybody.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is when he is not with you that he does the mischief.

Mr. FIELDING. That I cannot speak of but I do know that Mr. Bain drove me to Port Mouton, that his team then dropped me and that he drove to another part of the country. He was there simply to drive me and did not canvass any one. In regard to the point of being an agent, my hon. friend, in speaking of this matter before, stated that Mr. Bain and Mr. Oscar Campbell, lighthouse-keeper, acted as agents at the polling booth. It was not alleged that they had canvassed anybody, it was not alleged that they did anything, but simply stood at the booth as the representatives of myself. I will say at once that they should not have been there in that capacity, but after all the agent standing at the poll is not usually the most active man. I said in the House before and I repeat now that I was many miles away from Port Mouton at the time of the election. I was in a distant part of the constituency. Before leaving Liverpool, I, as every candidate is obliged to do in organizing his election, signed blank forms to be used by the gentlemen who might take the trouble to represent me at the polls. Every candidate has to do that. To people who do not know anything about elections it may seem strange that we should sign our blank forms in advance, but anybody running an election will know the reason why that has to be done. If I had had the slightest idea that Mr. Bain or Mr. Campbell would have been chosen to be my representative at the poll I would not have permitted it. If it had been alleged by the hon. leader of the opposition that they had not only acted as agents, but had pursued an improper course, I would have felt that I should have had the matter investigated. My hon. friend says that Mr. Bain is a fishery officer and that in that capacity he exercised an undue influence over the electorate. That is a very general statement. If the accusation could be made against Mr. Bain that while acting in his capacity as a fishery officer he had attempted to exercise any undue political influence by reason of his official position I would consider that a just cause for complaint. Mr. Bain does not receive a living salary for the work which he performs in his public office. I should reprefer that he should not engage in political controversy. But it is a question in my mind whether, in the case of an officer who is very competent and capable in the administration of the fishery laws, who does not get a living salary, and who devotes only part of his time to his official duties, the public service would be promoted by demanding his resignation under the circumstances.

With regard to Mr. Campbell, who, I believe, is a lighthouse keeper, nothing is alleged, as I understand, but that he acted as my agent in the booth. It is not alleged that he did anything improper or attempted to exercise any undue influence. I would regret that he acted as an agent and I would, as far as possible, give it clearly to be understood that I did not wish any government official to be my agent. Some of the other officials mentioned are postmasters receiving paltry salaries of $15 to $20. In most districts the post office is not a source of revenue, and the man who is made postmaster thinks that the payment is quite insufficient; hon. gentlemen opposite have frequently testified to that, asking that the salaries should be increased. If a post office is conveniently located, in a central store for instance, in many cases it is no advantage to the postmaster, but it is a public convenience to have the post office in such a store and it is hard to say that if the postmaster is an intelligent and active man, accustomed to take part in politics, he shall, by reason of his accepting the paltry salary of postmaster, be forbidden to take any part in politics. That seems to be stretching the power too far. Of course if such a man is taking a part hostile to the government of the day, perhaps he should be removed, but I have in mind one postmaster in my own county who acted as agent for my opponent in my election, but who remains in office to this day. I thought it was too small a matter to refer to.

One case mentioned was that of a customs officer who held the position of deputy returning officer. The position of deputy returning officer is a judicial position, the deputy returning officer is not appointed by the minister, he is not appointed by the Liberal candidate, nor would he be appointed by the Conservative candidate if the Conservatives were in power. He is chosen by the returning officer. The returning officer for Shelburne county was appointed by my political opponents; he is a man who has always done his duty faithfully. In every election I have run in Halifax, Queen's or Shelburne, I have invariably had the returning officer be the sheriff. I have always recognized that it was the duty of the returning officer to select capable, fair-minded men, to choose them as far as he could equally from both political parties and to be careful at all times to select men of good character and reputation.

Mr. Payzant, the returning officer at Port Mouton, is a gentleman of good standing. I have no doubt that if he acted as returning officer he did well, and I am astonished to hear that he got into a wrangle with the Conservative agent.

Mr. LENNOX. He acted too well, he assaulted the other man.

Mr. FIELDING. We have courts in this country, and if there was trouble of that kind it was rather strange that we should wait five or six months and then have it brought up in this House. There are magistrates right under the eye of this person in Queen's county who would have protected him, and when after five months we hear of this case of assault for the first time, I look upon it with suspicion. Mr. Payzant is a reputable citizen, and if he has committed any violation of the law, the courts would secure protection for the man assaulted.

My hon. friend's adviser seems to have made a list of a number of Liberal officials in the county and to have taken it for granted that they always did something wrong. There is no evidence against them. He mentions a number of officials who, he says, took an active part. Some of the men he mentions I am certain never took part. Some of the men he mentions I know well as careful, judicious men and while I know I have their sympathies—they belong to old Liberal families—they have such conscientious views as to their duty that they would not take any part and I can say with the utmost confidence that some of the men named by my hon. friend as officials who took an active part in the election took no part whatever beyond exercising their franchise, if they did that. As I say I am sure that my hon. friend's adviser has simply taken a list of officials and assumed that they took part in elections.

In Ste. Croix, where the postmaster was receiving $25, there seems to have been more than political activity. The statement made some time ago was that the postmaster at Ste. Croix had been proceeded against under the provincial law and a conviction found against him for bribery. At the time I made inquiry and I was informed that the matter was then pending in the courts. The hon. gentleman revived the matter recently and led to some further inquiry. I have been advised the matter has been settled. I understand that the postmaster has resigned and as far as that matter is concerned, it is at an end.

The general principle laid down in the resolution passed two years ago is a sound principle, but I would ask the House not to press it too far, to the point of insisting that every man who holds some petty office must be turned out if he takes some respectable part in an election. I say that a man who takes an offensive part, who is offensive to his neighbour, for instance, should be disciplined, but I would hesitate to ask the House to press the rule to the extreme point mentioned by the opposition. It is easy to deal with one class of these cases; I say at once that an official, be he the holder of a large or a small office, who takes a part in the interest of one political party must share the fate of that party, and if a change of government occurs he has no right to complain if he be removed. We removed quite a number of officials in 1896 under that rule, and very grave complaint was made by hon. gentleman opposite.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the complaint was that they were removed without investigation.

Mr. FIELDING. No, my hon. friend will find many investigations. I know that in my own constituency no man was removed without an investigation and very few with investigations, because I thought that the matter was not of sufficient importance to make a fuss about. I accept unhesitatingly the principle of the resolution of two years ago, as a general statement of the principle which should guide and direct the public affairs of this country, but I think in interpreting and enforcing it, there should be moderation. I would strongly advise every public official in the Dominion, although he would get his appointment from one political party or the other, once he is in office to refrain from political activities. If he takes any part whatever in politics and a change of government occurs he must expect to share the fate of his party. If serving the party at present in power, if he is the holder of a living office, he should be told to take his choice of either refraining from political action or resigning. Whether that should be applied to every petty post office in the country may be doubted. The principle holds good, but it may be a point whether it should be pressed as far as that.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As regards the postmaster at Ste. Croix, county of Annapolis, the matter was referred to the other day by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and he again referred to it this afternoon in his speech. I beg to inform him that at our request the postmaster at Ste. Croix, has resigned his position. Therefore the matter need not be brought up in the House in this debate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When did he resign?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Since we learned that the judgment of the court in this instance had been sustained by the higher court. It was only lately that my attention was drawn to it, by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to find that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is fully prepared to accept the principle which is embodied in the resolution of July 17, 1905; but it seems to me that he takes a most extraordinary stand in regard to the enforcement of that resolution. The resolution declares that no official of the government should take an active part in elections. Now presumably if there is disobedience to that resolution the government should be the one to take action, and if I have understood the minister's argument correctly it amounts to this that the government are not prepared to take action in regard to officials who are drawing trifling salaries, and in regard to officials who were drawing what he would call a living salary the government would only recommend them not to take part and that the government would suggest to them that if they were determined to take part in politics they might resign; but as to dismissing them from office, which surely should be the penalty of direct disobedience of a resolution of this House, he decided to leave that until the administration were turned out of power. That surely is not the position for a minister to take who is supposed to carry out the decrees of this parliament. He told us that for one official who had taken part in active politics in these days, there were a dozen who had taken part during the time the Conservative party were in power. I can only say that that is an utter mistake in regard to the Northwest.

Mr. FIELDING. It is not a mistake in the east.

Mr. LAKE. I am not able to speak from personal knowledge of the east, but I am from personal knowledge of the Northwest. From one standpoint at any rate the minister must be wrong, that is, that there are to-day in the Northwest a dozen officials of the Department of the Interior to every one that there was when the Conservative were in power. Last session, when a general discussion took place in regard to the administation of Dominion lands and the practical working of the Dominion Lands Act, I, in common with several other members of this House, brought to the attention of the government various cases of interference in the provincial elections which had just taken place, by officials of the Department of the Interior. We presented a number of affidavits to prove this fact, showing that some of them had even gone so far as to act as scrutineers or agents. The Minister of Finance did not seem to think that that would be a very gross act on the part of the officials. But I would like to point out to him that this offence is one which was specifically condemned by the Prime Minister in the year 1905. I brought to his attention the special case, of one sub-agent of Dominion lands who had acted in my presence as a scrutineer for my opponent in the Dominion election which had taken place just perviously, and he then stated that that was a case in which he would not allow an official to go so far. Yet when we bring to the attention of the Minister of the Interior almost directly afterwards the fact that a large number of his officials have been acting in the same way, no notice whatever is taken of the matter. In a subsequent debate I called the attention of the Minister of the Interior himself to the fact that he had directly encouraged one of his officials by allowing him to take the chair while he was making a political speech on behalf of one of the Liberal candidates in the provincial election, and the Minister of the Interior's only remark in regard to that incident was a cynical statement that he remembered the case, and that he thought the man had made a very good chairman. We brought a number of these cases to the attention of the Minister of the Interior and the government, and in the early part of this year I put a question on the order paper as to whether these officials of whom we had complained were still in the employ of the government, and in nearly every case I was told that they were. They had not, apparently, been interfered with. The argument has been used that a resolution of this sort should not apply to the minor officials of the government, but only to those who are getting a living wage. Now, the list which I brought to the notice of the Minister of the Interior did contain the names of a number of officials who are getting a living wage. For instance, I might mention Mr. Philip Wagner, the immigration officer and interpreter at Edmonton in the service of the Department of the Interior, who gets $1,200 a year. That gentleman was twice convicted of misappropriating the funds of the Galicians, of whom he was supposed especially to have the care; but the Minister of the Interior saw fit, when he was released from prison to give him this appointment. My hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) last year brought to the attention of the House five or six different affidavits, stating that this man Wagner had been taking a very active part in the elections, treating the electors with barrels of beer and doing every thing he possibly could to induce them to vote for the Liberal candidate, yet he still remains in his office. Then there was Mr. J. A. Potvin who acted as scrutineer in the elections, as I proved to the House last year; he is still acting as an agent of the Department at $900 a year. Then, attention was called to the case of Mr. L. B. Cochrane, land agent and immigration officer at Medicine Hat, who has taken an active part in the elections in both provinces, who came to the province of Saskatchewan and acted as agent for a Liberal candidate there, and as far as I know still remains in office. But in regard to the question as to whether the resolution of the House should apply simply to officers who are getting a living wage, I take direct issue with my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. At any rate, I can speak with regard to the conditions which prevail in the Northwest. It is the minor officials who come into immediate contact with the settlers, and there are an enormous number of these minor officials to whom the opportunities of exercising influence upon the electors is more open than it is to the senior officials, from that simple fact. A subagent of Dominion lands, who draws any where from $300 a year to $900 a year, comes daily into contact with the settlers; they have to go to him to make their entries, to ask for an extension of time, to prove up their duties, so that day after day he is able to exercise influence upon them if he so chooses to do. I am perfectly satisfied that some of these officials do use their influence for party purposes. I am not going to say that this is universal, but I will say that it is extended very widely, especially among the minor officials. When dealing with this question last year, the Minister of the Interior took what seemed to me to be a very extraordinary stand. He declared that an official was not under any compulsion not to exercise his powers of speech in regard to public matters, which seemed to me to be a direct inducement to his officials to take part in elections, and directly in contradiction to the stand which was taken by the leader of this House. But he did go so far as to state that he was prepared to punish officials who went to the extent of improperly influencing settlers by terrorizing them or holding out improper inducement to them.

It is hard to understand exactly what he meant by terrorizing or holding out improper inducements. It is not to be expected that any official would go about terrorizing settlers although it is within the power of many of them to hold out improper inducements. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) said that if it could be proved that any of his officials were doing that he would summarily dismiss them. But if officials are allowed to take active part in elections, they must exercise great influence. If we find a homestead inspector attending a political meeting and taking note of what is going on, he must no doubt exercise strong influence over those who go there and who vote. If he goes on the platform or goes to a polling booth, after having openly and publicly expressed certain political opinions, he must exercise a very strong moral influence on the electors. The Prime Minister drew no such distinction as the Minister of the Interior did between terrorizing and making use of improper inducements and going on the platform, acting as scrutineer or canvassing. It must be obvious that an official, with all the powers an official of the Department of the Interior has can exercise enormous moral influence on the voters, and when he does this he becomes, as the Prime Minister put it, a scandal to the community and his usefulness to that community, as an official, must be to a great extent impaired. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) says that gentlemen on this side are guilty of disloyalty and are doing harm to the Northwest by calling attention to the fact that the officials in those provinces are exerting an undue influence in politics. For my part, and I think on the part of every member on this side, we must disclaim any imputation of that sort. The course of the Minister of the Interior is perfectly clear. He has only to issue strict injunctions to his officials to wholly abstain from taking an active part in elections, in accord with the resolution passed in this House, and I feel confident the great majority of the officials will obey him. Let him go further and make an example of one or two of the worst cases, and he will be implicitly obeyed in the future. In that way he will relieve his department from a very considerable number of these criticisms. Every government has condemned this practice of the officials paid by the country, who are the servants of both sides of politics, taking active part in elections and I trust that this government will go further than the Minister of Finance appears to admit they will. I trust they will take definite action and see that the will of this House is carried into effect.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). In the course of his remarks, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) alluded to certain officials in Halifax county who had worked in favour of the government and against the opposition. I do not know of any such officials. But I am aware of this, that a number of the officials, at present in the pay of the government, but who were appointed by the late government, have not refrained from working and voting against the government and from using expressions towards the leaders of the government which are not to be found in the book of homilies. If it be an offence for government officials to support the government, I think it is a far greater offence for them to oppose it and use expressions of contempt and aversion not consistent with the relations between servant and master. As regards Mr. Davidson, perhaps later on, if opportunity be afforded, I may be able to throw some light upon the inquisition persued by him and the inducements he holds out to obtain testimony against government nominees. As regards the appointment of a chairman in a political meeting, in the county I represent generally the magistrate or some official in the district is elected chairman and may preside at a meeting of Liberals and afterwards at a meeting of Conservatives. I do not think that that indicates partisanship. Frequently a leading man is elected and the candidates are glad to have some one of superior intelligence to preside. Therefore, to accuse an official of partisanship because he had presided at a meeting is carrying the argument very far afield.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). The resolution is one of which the country stands greatly in need in order to secure the much desired purity of elections. I have not been very long connected with public life in Canada, but long enough to realize one of the dangers which stands in the way of our obtaining fair-play at an election either provincial or Dominion. That danger is emphasized by this resolution—the danger, the perniciousness of officials in the employ of the government in power for the time being going outside of their office in violation of their duty to the people that employs them and taking part in an election, sometimes harmless, as the Minister of Finance states, and sometimes in a way that is extremely corrupt and that brings disgrace upon the public service and upon the whole country. I have no desire to prolong this debate, but merely to emphasize what has been said by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) in this connection. But there are one or two flagrant instances that have been before now brought to the attention of the ministers of the Crown in the debates on this floor—cases the facts of which have been iterated and reiterated in the presence of the ministers, cases so flagrant that one wonders how these ministers of the Crown can ignore them. And yet not the slightest notice is taken of them. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. W. Roche) has spoken. He knows perfectly well what the evidence was in relation to his own election in regard to bribery and other corrupt practices by Dominion government officials in connection with that election. So he can speak feelingly.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) speak of evidence ?

Mr. BOYCE. Yes.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. I have the evidence here. Will he give me the case to which he refers ?

Mr. BOYCE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. W. Roche) will look at page 21 of the evidence, I think he will find an interesting incident with which he is quite familiar. Now, I did not wish to weary the House by going into particulars. But my hon. friend does not seemed satisfied with my word. If he has the evidence, and of course, he had the advantage of hearing the evidence—

Mr. WM. ROCHE. No, I have not heard it.

Mr. BOYCE. Let me read him from page 18 of this evidence.

Mr. FOSTER. When is that election trial coming off ?

Mr. BOYCE. That is what I should like to know. My hon. friend (Mr. W. Roche) is waiting for the appointment of a judge—not impatiently. Now, I will read from the statement of one of the witnesses :

Mr. WM. ROCHE. In what case is that ?

Mr. BOYCE. The bribery referred to here is a gentleman by the name of James Kehoe.

Mr. W. ROCHE. He is not a government official. He gave no evidence.

Mr. BOYCE. No, for the reason that though he was subpœnaed and called he did not appear—like some others.

Mr. W. ROCHE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) said that this man was a government official. He is not.

Mr. BOYCE. My hon. friend (Mr. W. Roche) asked me to read evidence. I will read it. He will see how far this person is a government official. I read from the statement of Augustus Putman :

Q. Do you know James Kehoe there?—A. Yes.
Q. Prior to the election do you remember being at Waverly ?—A. Yes.
Q. How long before the election ?—A. I have lived there.
Q. Do you remember meeting James Kehoe before the election ?—A. Yes, a good many times.
Q. Do you remember meeting him on one occasion when driving and getting into the wagon ?—A. Yes.

Q. What conversation took place between you ?—A. I asked him if my name was off the voting list. He said no. I said I thought it was.

Q. What more was said ?—A. He asked me what I paid for my vote.

Q. What did you say ?—A. I said I would take $10.

Q. What did he say ?—A. He said that that was rather steep.

Q. Did you see him again before the election ?—A. I did.

Q. Where did you see him ?—A. I saw him at Windsor Junction.

Q. Did you go anywhere with him that day ?—A. I went as far as Beaver Bank.

Q. What was said on that occasion ?—A. We were talking about the election, and he told me that he would give me $5 to stay at home.

Q. What did you say to that ?—A. He told me to meet him the morning of the election at Windsor Junction.

Q. What else did he say ?—A. He said that he would give it to me.

Q. Did you meet him there the morning of the election ?—A. I did.

Q. What was done ?—A. He said, I cannot give it to you myself, but I will give it to another man to give to you. He gave it to the other man who gave it to me. I saw him give to the other man. It was Charley McGuire.

Q. Look at these and say whether these are the notes ?—A. Yes, these are the notes.

Q. How do you know that these are the notes ?—A. Jim Adams asked me to initial them and he gave me a five dollar bill for them. I handed them to him after I had initialled them.

And then at page 23, the witness is asked by Mr. Ritchie :

Q. What is Kehoe's occupation ?—A. He is in the government employ. He is employed on the Intercolonial Railway.

I have only this sworn evidence to go by, and I have given it as it is here before me.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any thing to show where Kehoe got the money ?

Mr. BOYCE. There is a good deal.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. The person the hon. gentleman (Mr Boyce) speaks of is in the employ of the Dominion Atlantic Railway.

Mr. BOYCE. My hon. friend (Mr. W. Roche) knows all about it. Perhaps he can tell where the $10,000 came from that a certain gentleman swore was in his hands.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) spoke of bribery by Dominion officials. Now, this man is not a Dominion official. Also the hon. gentleman should remember that no evidence was taken for the defence, but that, after several witnesses had been examined—witnesses who were quite capable of being contradicted—the case was arrested by the judge, informing the counsel that he had no jurisdiction to try the case. I do not think my hon. friend should quote a case of that kind, where the defence had no opportunities to refute what was stated by individuals who confessed upon oath that they were guilty of bribery.

Mr. BOYCE. Since my hon. friend (Mr. Wm. Roche) has referred to the result of this evidence, he will pardon me if I refer to page 77 of this evidence where, at the close of the case, Mr. Justice Townsend, said :

We would like to know whether, in view of the evidence, the point would be considered of avoiding the election by consent and abandoning the personal charges.

I wonder what he will do about that. Now, I would not have taken up the time of the House had not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wm. Roche) questioned my authority.

Mr. PATERSON. But this is not applicable to the question before the House, for this man was not a government official.

Mr. BOYCE. But the sworn evidence which I read, showed that this man was in the employ of the government on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. PATERSON. But I prefer to take the word of the hon. member (Mr. Wm. Roche) on that subject.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) has the right to make his choice of course.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) said this gentleman is a government official. He is not a government official, but is an employee of the Dominion Atlantic Railway.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Was he a government official then ?

Mr. WM. ROCHE. No. I think, that in all fairness, a case of this kind should not be quoted, which was interrupted after two or three witnesses had been called

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the discussion is growing irregular.

Mr. BOYCE. I had no desire, Mr. Speaker to deal with this matter. I made the statement and was asked to give the evidence, and I have read the evidence as requested. There are other cases which are cases of great flagrancy, cases which ministers of the Crown cannot fail to take notice of in connection with this resolution. Two years ago I brought to the attention of the then Postmaster General the flagrant case of the postmaster at Thessalon. Every session since I have in some way referred to that gentleman, who still holds his position. We had the statement last session, and we had this session the affirmation from the Prime Minister, that any postmaster who was in receipt of a salary of $1,000 a year must confine himself to the performance of his official duties. That is in accord with what the Minister of Finance has said to-day. Now, here you have these statements of officials of this government reported to the Postmaster General and filed in the archives of the Post Office Department. You have it shown that this man became a defaulter, that he misappropriated public moneys; it was reported against him that he should be discharged, he was discharged upon the recommendation of the Postmaster General, and then what took place? After the fiat had gone forth for his dismissal he was allowed to file a letter of resignation. He filed a letter stating that his private business was of such great importance and his business interests were so large that he could no longer afford to attend to the duties of that post office, and that was the reason he was allowed to give for retiring from the office. He retired from his office in September, 1904, just before the Dominion elections. But you never saw a busier man in Eastern Algoma in the interest of my hon. friend from that riding (Mr. Dyment) than the postmaster at Thessalon. He appeared on every platform, he went through all the side lines, he did all he could to secure the hon. gentleman's election. I do not say he did it corruptly, or that he exercised any reprehensible means. But having assisted in East Algoma to give the seat to the hon. gentleman for another parliament, he turned his attention to the support of the Ross government which was then on the eve of an election, and he, together with other gentlemen, officials of the Ontario government, stumped through that constituency and interested themselves very earnestly in the interests of the candidate of the Ross government. Their candidate was defeated, the Conservative government was elected and the Ross government swept out of power. That was on the 25th of January. Then early in February, 1905, upon the recommendation of the hon. member for East Algoma, the same gentleman there thought that the postmaster at Thessalon should be retained, notwithstanding his own declaration now filed in the office of the Postmaster General that by reason of his private business he could not attend to the duties of that office. He has not disposed of his private business, he carries it on just the same as he did then, and yet although the fact has been drawn to the attention of the present Postmaster General and of the two former Postmasters General, nothing whatever has been done in that connection. The salary of that gentleman is $1,071.99. Now, what is the Postmaster General going to do with that case? Is he going to disregard his inspector's fiat? Is he going to keep a politician in that post office notwithstanding the fact that the Prime Minister has said that he must devote all his time to the office where he receives more than $1,000 salary? There is one instance, and there are many others of a kind.

There is another gentleman who occupies the proud position of postmaster at Copper Cliff. This gentleman is a very active supporter of the present government, and was very active in his efforts to secure the return of the candidate of the Ross government at the Sault Ste. Marie by-election. We had an election trial there in September, 1904, and some of the revelations are sufficiently well known throughout this country as to render it unnecessary for me to repeat them. But among one of the star findings of fact was that with respect to the postmaster at Copper Cliff, W. C. Kilpatrick. It was found that this gentleman had had placed in his hands a large amount of money with which to provide travelling expenses, transportation fees and so on, of voters from Copper Cliff to Sault Ste. Marie, that he used the money for that purpose, that he paid money to voters himself at Copper Cliff, and did provide transportation from Copper Cliff to Sault Ste. Marie and return for voters to vote for the Liberal candidate. All this is of record. The Postmaster General will find that Mr. Kilpatrick was reported for corrupt practices at that election. The salary which he was in receipt of as postmaster was $1,721.63. There is on record against him the judgment of the court reporting him for these corrupt practices to the Postmaster General. Does the Postmaster General think that this matter is beneath his notice, that it does not call for necessary consideration? There has been for a year in the possession of the Postmaster General, probably more than that, a petition signed by five hundred residents of Copper Cliff asking that that man be removed from office. I have asked the Postmaster General on the floor of this House, on the 12th of July last year, to inquire into the matter and to see that justice was done, and he made the reply promising that the matter would be investigated and that full justice would be done. When I inquired again this session my hon. friend replied to the effect that the interests of justice would be best served by retaining Mr. Kilpatrick in his position as postmaster at Copper Cliff.

But, Sir, it was not always thus, for there was an inoffensive postmaster at Kentvale on St. Joseph's island who had the temerity to vote for the Conservative candidate in West Algoma. He was not active in politics, the poor man was in receipt of only $25 a year, but he was summarily dismissed from his office immediately after the election, and for what reason? The Postmaster General will find that Sir William Mulock told this House that he was an offensive partisan, and for being an offensive partisan he was deprived of that princely salary of $25 a year. Then there was in 1899, the case of a man who occupied the position of postmaster at Little Current, and who happened unfortunately to be a Conservative. His post office was at that time a very small one, he was getting, I think, under $500 a year, and he was deprived of his office for the reason that he was engaged in other business, besides that of keeping the post office.

There is another gentleman, a fishery inspector, Mr. A. G. Duncan; he gets a salary of $1,200 a year and for his expenses the large amount of $700 or $800 a year. How this is made up I do not know and cannot conceive. Let me tell the leader of the House and his colleagues that there is no more active politician upon St. Joseph's Island or in the district of Algoma than Mr. A. G. Duncan. My hon. friend can look at the newspapers and see that not long ago he wrote pleading the cause of the present Liberal member in the provincial House, Mr. C. N. Smith. He is active, energetic, and always on the spot at elections. I know that this gentleman is one of the most active agents that the Liberal party has up there. At times he is particularly active, assists in the appointment of the deputy returning officers, takes an active interest in canvassing and by multitudinous methods endeavours to secure the election of the Liberal candidate.

There is another gentleman who deserves consideration—Mr. W. L. Nichols, Indian agent at Sault Ste. Marie. Mr. Nichols is in receipt of a salary of $1,000 a year. If hon. members care to read the evidence in the Sault Ste. Marie election petition they will see that Mr. Nichols, although living at Sault Ste. Marie, was appointed, as I believe, in violation of the statutes of Ontario, as deputy returning officer at Michipicoten to which point the 'Minnie M.' was chartered to convey voters. He allowed every man who came into the polling booth from that boat to poll his vote. There was no objection, no question asked, Mr. Nichols sat there and they all voted. The records of that election show that Mr. Nichols was cross-examined at the trial as to why he allowed these men to vote, and as to why he was chosen to act as deputy returning officer. He said first that he did not know the men, that he was not familiar with the locality or the neighbourhood and he supposed that he was chosen because of his ignorance of the locality and of the people who voted. There is another case for the government to consider. Mr. Nichols holds the office of Indian agent there and there might be other cases mentioned. I have no desire to do Mr. Nichols or any other gentleman any harm personally, but I merely point out this as a matter of principle to show the insincerity of the government. If the government desires to stand by the principles which were laid down in the resolution of last year now is the time for the government to pronounce itself. There seems to be hesitation about crystallizing this resolution into action. Although the hon. Minister of Finance said many fine things and spoke very generously and broadly and with considerable honesty, I fancy, in regard to the practice of officials meddling in elections, when it came down to the actual point of endorsing this resolution the hon. gentleman found some reason for avoiding support of the resolution and thereby strengthening and clinching the resolution of last year. The cases I have mentioned being pertinent to the subject-matter of this resolution as they are, should they be condoned by this government? Do ministers of the Crown desire, when cases of this kind have been drawn to their attention, the particulars of which are on record, to have it go forth that they condone this kind of offence and that they are supporting a civil service which is composed of officials of this kind. If so, then the speech of the Minister of Finance in opposing that resolution would be in part, in order. I do not desire to credit the Minister of Finance with any such intention. I prefer to think that he was sincere in the platitudes that he indulged in and I am surprised that he, instead of calling on his followers to vote down that resolution, did not, in accordance with what is right and just and what would promote an efficient and disinterested service in the country, call upon his followers to vote for that resolution.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). In listening to the hon. Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) I came to the conclusion that he had forgotton the history of this resolution in the House. He seems to have devoted his argument to the question as to whether it would be wise to support a resolution involving and including all the officials of the government. Well, he is about two years behind the times. He himself, and the Prime Minister, his leader and the party behind him who support him as well as the opposition in this House united in one resolution which affirms a certain principle and applies it without any idea of doubtfulness about it at all. That has passed. The government accepted it and the Prime Minister spoke enthusiastically in its favour. He even went so far as to particularize that if such and such officials did so and so, they should be dealt with at once and summarily dismissed. What was the resolution which passed in 1905?:

> That whilst it is desirable that every official in the employ of the parliament of Canada should enjoy perfect freedom of political opinion and the untrammelled exercise of his franchise in accord therewith——

We all believe in that.

> —no official should be engaged or be permitted to be engaged in partisan work of any description in the election of a representative to a provincial or Dominion legislature.

Who is the party who permits that or does not? It is the party who exercises jurisdiction over the officials and by that resolution the Dominion government not only gave their adhesion to the principle that no official—it did not say a man with a $5,000 salary or a man with a $1,000 salary or a man with a $500 salary—it made no distinction at all—should be permitted to engage in partisan work. The government having adhered to that resolution obliged itself to see that it was carried out, because it not only imposed the duty upon an official of not engaging in politics, but it said that a man should not be permitted to engage in them. I think it is just as strong as the resolution could be made, and it did surprise me that two years afterwards the hon. gentleman should come down and discuss this question as if we were now conversing amongst ourselves as to whether it was a proper thing or not to declare that officials should not be permitted to engage in partisan work. From 1905, up to the present time they have been permitted to do so. The Minister of the Interior permits them to do it, calls them in to act as chairmen in his public meetings, travels with them through the country, gives them authority, as the minister did in Edmonton, to go on and do his part work, and do all those things that Wagner did as proved by affidavits. They may be the most active and the most partisan canvassers and yet the Minister of the Interior simply laughed at the House when my hon. friend called upon his friends to see that the resolution and the determination of the government were carried out.

Another man acted as chairman of his meeting; when asked about that he said that he did act as chairman of his meeting and he made a very good chairman. Here we have the Postmaster General with example after example, elicited from my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Boyce) of men in his employ who have been criminal, who have been reported for corrupt practices in elections and yet are retained for years thereafter as postmasters with salaries of $1,000 a year or more. This government goes to the public with an affirmation of morality in public life on their lips, declaring as they will and as they have that this is their principle and that they agree in it, and yet every years of their lives they absolutely authorize their officials in plain daylight to disregard the very principle they have laid down, keeping these men in office, and paying them. I say that that marks either a careless indifference or a cold-blooded cynicism which is based on the conclusion as is practically shown that there is no decent public opinion in this country, and that they can outrage public opinion in that way without suffering any ill consequences. I think that these gentlemen will find that they have made a mistake, they will find, as the Ross government found, that they may outrage public opinion for years and years, go back on their promises, make smooth professions to the public and violate them in their practical acts; they may be successful for some years but the time will inevitably come when the odd man in this country, the mugwump, if you will, the man who is not intensely partisan, will make up his mind and condemn the government which makes false promises and refuses to adhere to its pledges.

I cannot understand it; the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is a good sort enough, he is a decent citizen, he is a nice man to meet, he treats us as fairly as he possibly can and uphold his own party and keep them behind him, but he seems to think there is no such thing as adherence to principle, that a government with the dignity of Canada on their shoulders can one day affirm a solemn resolution and pledge themselves to carry it out, and then day after day and year after year do the exact opposite, and when case after case of grave offence is placed before them they will simply laugh at you and say as the Prime Minister did years ago: Well, what are you going to do about it, we are here and you are there? The power of the brute majority is behind them, they have it here and persuade themselves they will always have it in the country, but every one of these lapses from what is true and honest as a declaration of principle has its effect, and these lapses have become the rule and not the exception. Every one of these lapses sinks at last into the mind of the body politic and it will bear its fruit, the people of Canada will settle the matter at some election. Does it matter a single bit whether a man gets $50 or $500? Is that distinction in the resolution for which the Prime Minister voted, and to which he pledged himself and his government? Not at all it is 'no official.' The plea that a man would like to get the fee for acting as a scrutineer, advanced by the Minister of Finance as an excuse for breaking the solemn pledge of the government, has no weight. What does it matter what amount is paid to a man, the principle is the thing that is laid down there that no official should be permitted to take part in an election whether he gets $10 or $1,000 or $10,000 per year. What is involved in it is that, strictly speaking, no government has a right to use the people's money to pay a man to do election campaigning for them. I vote a part of that money, I pay a part of that money into the treasury; the whole people of Canada contribute the public revenue and the whole people of Canada are divided into two political camps or more. What right have you to take out of the public funds, the money of the people, any sum and pay a man ostensibly to carry on the duties of an office for the whole people while at the same time you authorize him to go out and do your electioneering for you? What right has the Postmaster General, after having more than one postmaster reported by the law as having been guilty of an offence in a Nova Scotia election, to retain the services of such a postmaster or to keep another man reported for immoral and guilty practices at elections for years after discovery, and then come to this House and in answer to question say: We do not think the public interest is hurt by the retention of that man. It is not the public interest the minister is thinking of. What he meant was that the party interest was not hurt by keeping him there. I do not agree with him : I believe the party interest is hurt, I believe there are decent men in each party, decent men who say that it is not right for a man who ought to be a convict to be kept as postmaster for men and women of decent moral principles to approach from day to day and do business with. Yet he keeps him there in defiance of what he has done and says it is not in the public interest to dismiss him. It is not in the public interest to keep him and not in the best party interest either.

Take the case of Wagner, an immigration agent, a man who spoke the language of the poor Galicians, who was looked upon as a godfather of the poor fellow who came there an utter stranger in this country and was trying to find a place on which to build a home for himself. That man absolutely stole from the foreigners committed to his care, was convicted of that offence, lay in jail, was convicted twice and yet this government advanced his position and paid him a larger salary and kept him in their employ. Not in the public interest that he should be let go ? Not in the party interest is what they meant. Men who know the circumstances and are Liberals will yet read these gentlemen a lesson for keeping that kind of an official in their employ. The Minister of Finance, I think, should have met the situation better than by special pleading. He ought to have said : Yes, that is the resolution passed by this government concurred in by the whole House. It has been violated, as the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has shown, we will see to it that these men are dismissed. But what is the punishment that the Finance Minister holds out. He says that the resolution does not mean that we shall dismiss them, it means that they take their political lives in their hands and when we go out and another government comes in, then that government may get to work and dismiss them. That is absolutely not the meaning of that resolution in any sense or form, and the Minster of Finance knows it well enough. Oh, but he says, we are only doing what you people did, we do what you did. In the first place, as we know that is not an answer, and there is no use my taking up that part of the subject at all. This House in 1905 came to a certain conclusion ; we all agreed, Liberal and Conservative, to that resolution, the government pledged itself to carry it out, it has absolutely not carried it out but has gone directly in the contrary direction. You never dismissed a man when you came into office unless there was an investigation, unless he was a violent partisan ? Who that remembers the discussion that took place in this House after the elections of 1896 does not know that hundreds upon hundreds of Conservatives were dismissed ? A man in my own county was dismissed after investigation. He was a lighthouse keeper and got $80 a year for keeping the lighthouse. That man did not take any part in the election with the exception of going out to the poll and depositing his ballot. But he had a brother who was an active worker for myself in that county ; and, Sir, will you believe it, after the investigator was sent from St. John and investigated the whole case, and reported that this man took no part in the election except to vote, that man was summarily dismissed from his lighthouse position, and has been kept from it until this day—simply because he was a brother of an active worker in the field against the government. Why, Sir, a Liberal member living not sixty miles from Ottawa was written to by a minister of the Crown after 1896, and it was intimated to him that there were a lot of men along the canal who were not really civil servants, and that if he would make out a list of names, he could replace them all if he wished to do so. To the honour of that man, at that time a member of the House, he refused to send in the list, and the old men were kept on. But here we have example after example. The hon. gentleman says it does not matter much if a fishery officer is an active partisan. A fishery officer in Nova Scotia, with the lobster business, the bounty business, the fishing license business under his supervision, and he an absolute autocrat in charge, is in a position to exercise a more effective and deterrent influence than almost any other officer you can mention. His influence is just as strong as that of the land official in the Northwest. There is a man who knows that after three years of work he is to be reported on by the inspector. His influence, in canvassing, threatening, driving, appearing on the platform, and the like of that, is such that many a man who would like to vote, says : Well, I have not got my patent yet; my papers are not out; I have to be recommended or otherwise by this official, and I had better just keep mum during this election or vote for the government candidate and make sure of my patent. This is a universal feeling in the Northwest, and these minor officials can absolutely hang up an applicant for months. I know a case in which they did hang up an applicant for months. About the same date, for the same service, they hung up one who was a Conservative for four or five months, while the man who was a Liberal got his patent in quick time and regular order. That is what these officials do, and the government, I do not care whether it is Conservative or Liberal, ought to cut itself loose from that kind of influence, and ought to give to the people of this country the untrammelled right of free men, to vote without menace of impending calamity, without fear of adverse government or official influence being used against them ; for that is a form of bribery just as intense and just as masterful, and may be more so, than is the kind which takes dollars and cents and the emoluments of office as its methods.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE. I do not wish to add to what my hon. friend——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has already spoken.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE. With the permission of the House, only one remark. The hon. gentleman said that a man named James Kehoe gave money to a man named Putnam. Putnam was an informer, and this is his evidence, which my hon. friend from Algoma should have gone on and read Page 24.

Q. Where did you get the marked money ?—A. I went into the hotel with Adams. I saw Adams first——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The point of order is taken against the hon. member.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE. Will you permit me ? I shall be just a moment.

Mr. SPEAKER. Impossible.

House divided on amendment of Mr. R. L. Borden.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Immigration—salaries of agents and employees in Canada, Great Britain and foreign countries, $200,000.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). This is the same as last year.

Mr. BERGERON. Are these the salaries of the employees in Great Britain?

Mr. OLIVER. In Canada, the United States, Great Britain and Ireland to the 31st March, 1908. In Canada there are one hundred and thirty-three salaried officials, thirty-three in the United States, seventeen in Great Britain and Ireland, three on the continent.

Mr. BERGERON. Those in Canada and the United States are not doing the same work?

Mr. OLIVER. Those in Canada are receiving and distributing agents. Those abroad are collecting agents.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have heard some of our young men complain that the foreigners get better treatment than they do. The Doukhobors and Galicians are met at Halifax by these Canadian immigration agents, taken out to the west and given the very best pieces of land there, and all free. But when our young men from the other provinces arrive in the Northwest, these immigration agents do not give them the opportunities of getting homesteads such as they do the foreigners. Our young Canadians make the best settlers in the west we can get, and there is no reason why they should not receive as good treatment as these foreigners. They are young men from the country districts, they are not thoroughly up in the laws of the country, and they ought to have every inducement given to them to encourage them to settle. I have heard many complaints in the last year or two in that respect. I do not know if other members have heard any, but if so now is the time to mention them and have them remedied. The young men from the districts I have heard from are complaining very bitterly and some are going to the United States, whereas if the same encouragement was given to them as to the foreigners they would settle in this country.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I have heard complaints of exactly the opposite character. I have been told that inducements are held out, though not by the government, to young men from the maritime provinces to settle in the Northwest, and the consequence is that these provinces are being stripped of their population and it is very difficult to get help to work on the farm. Some of our farmers have been obliged to sell out and go to the Northwest and other places where it is easier to get farm help. The Canadian Pacific Railway for some years past gives very low transportation rates to the young men to go to the harvest fields in the Northwest. Flattering inducements are held out, and the consequence is that our young men go out there, and when they get there inducements are held out to them to remain, and many of them do remain. Therefore, in the maritime provinces, where our population is not growing—in the case of Prince Edward Island it has been reduced within the last decade—our farmers and others who wish to get help are not able to obtain it and are unable to cultivate their farms to the same extent as they otherwise would.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the remedy?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I really could not say. I do not suppose any one can prevent the Canadian Pacific Railway from offering low transportation rates, and I do not know that the government could apply any remedy. I did not rise to suggest any remedy, but merely to point out to the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid), who complains that the young men from the eastern provinces are not encouraged to settle in the west, that down in the maritime provinces we complain that too much encouragement is given them, if not by the government, by other agencies.

Mr. J. D. REID. So far as Ontario is concerned, it is short of help, and so far as encouragement to go out west during harvest season is concerned, no doubt the Canadian Pacific Railway gives our young men encouragement to go out, but what I complain of is that when they do get out there they are not shown the places where they can settle and are not given the same advantages in selecting lands and locating as are given to foreigners. A great many of them return home. On the other hand, when these foreign settlers arrive in the Northwest they are taken in hand by the agents and given every assistance, while that is not done in the case of our own men. I am only stating what is reported to me, and, of course, I may be wrong. But if there is any truth in these statements there should be a change of method, so that every thing may be done to keep our own men in our own country. As to those agents in the United States, I think that our country has been sufficiently advertised in the states and that all there who are likely to look towards our Northwest as a field for settlement are posted as to its advantages. The main point is that foreigners should not have advantages which are denied to our own people: for nobody will doubt that our own young English Canadians and French Canadians are better suited to settle and develop our Northwest than any foreigners can possibly be.

Mr. DANIEL. I concur in the suggestion made by the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid). I think his complaint is well founded, for I have heard it said a number of times that foreigners are better treated in the Northwest than are our own people in so far as looking after them on arrival is concerned. But I have also another complaint to make with regard to our immigration methods. It appears that the whole effort of the government is directed toward procuring settlers for the Northwest. But there are other parts of Canada besides Saskatchewan, Alberta and the territories. I believe that it is true that in the old country the immigration officers of Canada are not supplied with literature showing what the eastern provinces, for instance, have to offer to intending immigrants. The consequence is that we get none of this immigration, or practically none. The fact is that our eastern provinces are being depleted, some of our people going to the Northwest and many others going to the United States of America—I think that the tendency of emigrants from our eastern provinces is rather into the United States than into our Northwest. I am of opinion that the eastern provinces are entitled to consideration at the hands of this government. The minister will correct me if I am wrong in saying that the Immigration Department of the Dominion is not provided with any literature advertising the eastern provinces. An hon. member of this House who is now present, told me the other day of an experience he had had. He was requested by a friend in the old country to let him know where he could get information with regard to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick; and he was unable to find any printed material bearing on the eastern provinces in the Department of the Interior at Ottawa, nor was he able to learn that immigrants could be furnished with information of that kind in the Immigration Department in the old country. I do not know what reason the government may have for taking this stand, but I think the matter is one that should be explained. I think the minister should state to us why immigrants are induced to go solely to one part of the country and not to others which need them, I think, perhaps, quite as much.

Mr. BERGERON. I desire to make a remark or two and to put some questions to the minister now, so that when he rises to speak he may have all the complaints and questions before him. But first I may explain that, although I have had five or six copies of the estimates in English, every one of them has been taken away—I will not use a stronger word. I sent up for another copy, and am informed that there are no copies in English, but a copy in French has been sent me. I find that it is not the same as the English edition. In the English copy, which I borrowed from yourself, Mr. Chairman, I find that the vote for immigration is $810,000, while in the French edition it is $607,500. Nor is the item numbered the same in the two editions—in the English it is No. 57 and in the French No. 55. I draw attention to the fact that the documents which members need for carrying on their work here disappear. The place here is filled up with messengers. Somebody should be put in charge of the Chamber to see that members' papers are not taken away. It is very disagreeable to be obliged to send for a new copy of the estimates every time we go into Supply.

Mr. FIELDING. Can my hon. friend be right, as to the difference in the two editions? Are they the same date?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, they are the same thing. Yet, there is the difference I have spoken of. There is a difference in the paging also—this item is on page 32 in the English and page 33 in the French. Of course this does not matter, but the other does.

Mr. OLIVER. Look at the title of the book.

Mr. BERGERON. I got this English copy from yourself, Mr. Chairman, and it is the same as the other—1906.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is my fault. I now send the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) a copy of the estimates we are now discussing.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, Mr. Chairman, the new copy you send me is just the same. My hon. friend should see that the papers in the House are not taken away.

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot guarantee that.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend has the purse, and he can get somebody to prevent that being done.

Mr. FIELDING. There are no lack of purses, there are of officials.

Mr. BERGERON. We have a lot of messengers here who have not much to do, and they might stay in the House after it is adjourned and see that the papers are not taken away. I am not the only one to complain, some of my hon. friends are complaining of the same thing. An hon. gentleman on the other side of the House was complaining that the whole file of his 'Hansards' was taken away. Would the Minister of the Interior tell me how many there are of these agents for whose salaries he is now asking?

Mr. OLIVER. There are 133 in Canada, including temporary clerks at the head office. There are about thirty clerks in the head office, and about one hundred agents of various kinds outside the head office in Canada. Their business is to receive the immigrant on arrival and convey him to his destination, and then help him to his location on the land. We really do not leave him from the time he lands at Halifax or Quebec until we locate him on his place. We have a line of connection all along.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is the agent at the city of Quebec, and who is his assistant?

Mr. OLIVER. Patrick Doyle is the agent, and a Dr. Lavoie was recently appointed assistant.

Mr. BERGERON. I think Mr. Steyne was the assistant.

Mr. OLIVER. He is the chief clerk.

Mr. BERGERON. Why was Dr. Lavoie appointed in the place of Mr. Steyne?

Mr. OLIVER. This appointment was only made recently in view of the expected large tide of immigration.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is Dr. Lavoie from?

Mr. OLIVER. From Quebec.

Mr. BERGERON. I am informed he is an American citizen, from Fall River.

Mr. OLIVER. He may be. Of course there are many Quebec people who are citizens of Fall River, but I do not know that this gentleman is.

Mr. BLAIN. About those officers we have recently been appointing in the province of Ontario, I think the minister said two in each riding; does this amount go to pay these officers?

Mr. OLIVER. No, we have to ask for a sum in the estimates to provide for paying these agents a commission.

Mr. BENNETT. Is there a Mr. J. B. Henderson appointed at Orillia, what are his duties, and what pay does he receive?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. J. B. Henderson is appointed at Orillia, his duties are to locate farm labourers, and he is to receive a commission of $2 for each labourer located with farmers in that locality.

Mr. BENNETT. Where will he get the labourers to locate?

Mr. OLIVER. We will do our best to forward the labourers from the seaport.

Mr. BARR. Does he send in a list of the number required?

Mr. OLIVER. The understanding is that these gentlemen are appointed on commission; of course they may do their work or they may not. But the understanding is that they inform themselves as to the requirements in their vicinity and they inform our agents at the sea-board. They also inform our officers here and we inform the agents at the sea-board, also our agencies in the old country; so that if possible we may send immigrants from the old country to the various points in Ontario where these gentlemen have been appointed to conduct the labourers to their destination amongst the farmers who have applied for them.

Mr. BENNETT. How long will a labourer have to remain with a farmer in order that the agent may earn his $2?

Mr. OLIVER. We cannot control that.

Mr. BENNETT. If he pleases he can place him with any person else than a farmer?

Mr. OLIVER. Then he does not get any commission. We take no cognizance of any labour in this connecion except farm labour and domestic servants.

Mr. BENNETT. I think this is the most fearful and wonderful plan that was ever evolved in the mind of any minister. He will have a list of claims for commissions that will make the minister shudder when he sees it. He says no matter how long a labourer works for a man he is entitled to the $2. He meets a train at the town of Orillia, where there is no more necessity for a Mr. Henderson to hunt up farm labourers than there is for a wagon to have five wheels. As soon as Mr. Henderson puts in a return that he has placed John Brown with Tom Smith he gets $2. Assuming that the labourer don't like his first place and comes back to Mr. Henderson, who places him somewhere else, will the latter be paid $2 more?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, so far as I am aware.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, then, Mr. Henderson will keep the game going as long at it will last. From what I know of him, this will be a splendid arrangement for Mr. Henderson, because he is the paid organizer of the Liberal party in the county of Simcoe. There is no necessity of any agent of this kind in a town like Orillia, where labour is being sought for day in and day out. It is a busy town where lumbering operations, farming, and everything else is in full swing. Will the minister say who recommended Mr. Henderson, and what are his qualifications?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say at the moment who recommended him. When it was decided to make this endeavour to meet the requirements of the farming community in Ontario the office here took what measures they could to get information as to who would be willing to act in this capacity, and who would be likely to act in good faith. Of course, we have been misled with regard to the good faith of some of these gentlemen who have been appointed, but we hope that in the majority of instances the experiment will work out satisfactorily. At any rate we know that there is a demand in Ontario for farm labour and we know that there has been in the past considerable difficulty in the arriving immigrant finding the place that was really waiting for him. A stranger from the old country landed in the city and while there was probably employment waiting for him inside the city he certainly would not travel out in the country himself looking for employment that he might never get. The farmers came into the cities and tried to pick these men out. It was felt that there was a possibility of a useful work being done in arranging to find out by some means right in the country district where the labour was required what labour was required and take the labourer right to where the labour was called for. There is no question about it but there is a very great demand for some service of that kind. We made some attempt last year to meet that requirement. We have had some measure of success. We are making an attempt this year on somewhat different lines. From the experience of last year we hope to have improved results.

Mr. BENNETT. Is there any appointment in the town of Collingwood and if so what is the name of the party appointed ?

Mr. OLIVER. I may say that the list which I hold in my hand was laid on the table some weeks ago.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. There is no reason why you should not give it now ?

Mr. OLIVER. Not at all ; but I want it understood that this information has been in the possession of the House for that length of time. There has been no attempt to conceal anything in regard to these appointments.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it published in any of the reports ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. HENDERSON. Where can it be had now ?

Mr. OLIVER. Right here.

Mr. HENDERSON. The minister says it was laid on the table.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. Where can that copy be found ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot tell; ask the clerk.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think that the minister perhaps could give me the information that I desire.

Mr. OLIVER. I have to assure the hon. gentleman that I could not.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well then, I am very sorry.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I think the minister had better read that list and then we can get it on 'Hansard' so that we can all see it. I would like to know if this system is carried out in any other province than Ontario ?

Mr. OLIVER. The gentlemen appointed at the town of Collingwood is Mr. Geo. Watson, jr.

Mr. BENNETT. What other position does he occupy under the government ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have no idea.

Mr. BENNETT. And I expect the minister does not care either ; I think he has another position.

Mr. HENDERSON. Would the minister be good enough to read that list and put it on 'Hansard' that we may all be able to see it ? I would like to know whom he has appointed for the county of Halton and I will state my reasons. Last year, I understood, there was nobody appointed for the county of Halton. Farmers from my county went into Toronto and endeavoured to procure farm help, and as my information is that they were told by agents they met there that they were not acting for the county of Halton and more than that that the agents who were there to locate farm labourers were demanding from the farmers a commission, a fee, a tip for so doing. I would like to know from the minister if it is the intention that the farmers should pay this commission or is it the intention that the government should pay it, Are the farmers to understand that they are not to be called upon to pay this commission ? I think it well that that should be known because my information is that a man occupying a similar position made a demand on the farmers of a fee for recommending farm labourers to them. I think this information should be made public so that the farmers will know exactly what is expected of them. In the meantime I would like the minister to read the list so that we will have it on 'Hansard.'

Mr. OLIVER. The conditions last year were not at all as they are this year. I do not know what agent my hon. friend has allusion to. I would like if he would mention the name of the agent of this government who demanded a commission.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not able to give the name. I received that information from a farmer in the county and I do not suppose he knew the agent's name. There were about a dozen agents appointed in various counties last year but it chanced that none of them was from the county of Halton. When application was made by a Halton county farmer to one of these men the farmer received the answer that he was not appointed for Halton and he declined to assist him but at the same time an intimation was given that he did assist him he would expect to be if paid for it. I understand that these men were paid $100 a month by the government for these services. All I want is that this should be made public so that the farmers would know just exactly whether they are supposed to pay this commission or not.

Mr. OLIVER. I would be very glad to be informed as to the name of the agent of the government last year who asked for commission. Of course, in appointing so he acted in a most unauthorized manner and I beg to assure the hon. gentleman that if the fact of his having done so had come to the attention of the government his $100 a month would have ceased there and then. However, we are not continuing that system this year. The reason why there was no agent appointed for the county of Halton was that we did not feel justified in asking a sufficient appropriation to employ salaried agents for each county. We asked for an appropriation to enable us to pay salaried agents for a group of counties.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Have you the same kind of agents yet ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, we found difficulty last year because one man was not able to meet the requirements of a group of counties, it being a physicial impossibility, and therefore there was a reasonable measure of dissatisfaction. Yet. there was a considerable expenditure of money. We did place a great many farm labourers. We did a certain amount of very good work but we did not do enough of it. This year instead of employing salaried agents for a group of counties it is proposed to employ two commission agents in each county in the hope that by doing so we will, with a considerably less expenditure of money, more closely and fully meet the requirements of the case.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the government pay the commission ?

Mr. OLIVER. The government pays the commission. Of course, in appointing so many commission agents as we have done we are very likely to make mistakes in not getting the best man or in getting a man who does not take that interest in the work which would be desirable.

Mr. BLAIN. On whose recommendation were these men appointed ?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not answer that. We had to get information which would warrant us in making an appointment from whatever source was available.

Mr. J. D. REID. What do you pay them?

Mr. OLIVER. We propose to pay a commission of $2 for each labourer placed with farmers.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is $2 paid on each immigrant in addition to the amount paid in England or the continent ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. Where does a man wishing to get help have to send information ?

Mr. OLIVER. The farmer communicates with one of the local agents who sends the information to Ottawa and we send it down to the seaports and to England in the hope that the agents there may be able to ticket a man right to the locality where help is needed. Besides that, of course, we have men at the seaports to pick up what might be called loose fish and send them to the agents.

Mr. BERGERON. Have you any of these agents in Quebec and if not, why ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, one reason is because the province of Quebec is so convenient to the ocean port. Last year we employed one agent and may employ him again this year to work in the eastern townships. We sent this man over to the old country with a view to his getting in touch with the people so that he might attract them to the eastern townships where there was some demand for farm labour.

Mr. BERGERON. There are many townships besides the eastern townships in Quebec.

Mr. OLIVER. We have not provided for any other counties of Quebec except the eastern townships.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. In addition to the commission the minister has mentioned they get $10 for advertisements and incidentals.

Mr. OLIVER. They are permitted to spend $10 for these purposes but they have to produce vouchers showing that they have spent it.

Mr. BARR. I find from the list that there are many more of these agents employed than the minister has indicated. In my county they are three and one of these lives between three and four miles from the station so I do not see how he could possibly do his duty and attend to these immigrants who are coming to that part of the country. I am surprised that the minister could not tell us who advised him as to the making of the appointments. Of course as it is natural to expect they are all good reformers and as far as my county is concerned, they are all very good men well adapted for the work ; but in one or two cases, the appointments are peculiar owing to this distance from the station. If there are many coming to a county as there are in my county this allowance of $10 would not go far. I suppose the minister noticed a case reported in the Toronto papers of a number of immigrants who arrived in Toronto without money, who were not permitted to stay in the government shelter without paying the accommodation, who were found on the street and sheltered for the night by a hotel keeper near the station. I would point out that our boys going to the west are not looked after to the same extent as foreigners coming into this country and they find this ground of grievance. Then too, the system of settling these foreigners in colonies has resulted in their not learning English which prevents Canadians or those speaking English from locating near them as they would not be congenial neighbours. I think the whole system of immigration is not one which is to the best interest of this country. We have a very large vote here, over $200,000. We have agents all over the old country and the result is that a great many of them are doubtless taking the money and doing very little in return for it.

Mr. BERGERON. Has my hon. friend an agent of the department in Montreal at whose office immigrants will find all the informations they require when they land there and if so what is his name and salary?

Mr. OLIVER. There is an agent at Montreal, John Hoolahan.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is his office?

Mr. OLIVER. 167 St. Antoine street.

Mr. BERGERON. That is the first time I have heard his name. To my mind the best part of the work is done by Mr. Marquette whose office is in Little St. Antoine street. At any hour of the day you find a string of men and women at his office which is very small. I believe that Mr. Marquette in under the local government, but I thought that he had also a commission from this government. He should have, as he knows more about this business than any body else. A good many of our farmers in Quebec go to that agency for young boys who have just arrived from England, and very often adopt them as their own children, and generally they give good satisfaction. I am not so much complaining that our people go to the Northwest as I am that our farmers cannot get the help they require, and if these young boys from England were brought to the office of Mr. Marquette, where they would be at the disposal of the farmers who require them, a great deal of good would be done. Mr. Marquette does much better work than any one else, because he knows his work, he has been in it for twenty-five years, and he is well known. If the government would give him the same inducement that they give to their agents, he would do a service that would well repay them.

Mr. J. D. REID. I wish to corroborate what my hon. friend has just stated. In the last few years I have had occasion to go to Montreal to look for different kinds of labour. I have gone to the agent the hon. gentleman mentioned, Mr. Hoolahan, and I must say that it is absurd to keep his office up in the way it is. Those in charge do not seem to know anything about immigration. On the other hand, I was referred some years ago to Mr. Marquette. When I went to him and told him what I wanted, he said that he was appointed by the local government, and that it was not within his jurisdiction to interfere in any other part of Canada than Quebec; yet he assisted me to get the help I required. He seems to be a very fine gentleman and an active man, thoroughly up to his business, the right man in the right place, and, as my hon. friend says, his place was crowded while the other office was absolutely useless.

Mr. BERGERON. I am very much surprised to hear that Mr. Marquette is not an official of the Department of the Interior, as he is doing work for that department every day in the year. The immigrants who come in, both men and women, who are very much required in Montreal as domestic servants, go to Mr. Marquette's office, and I am sure he deserves recognition from the Department of the Interior.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that an arrangement has recently been made whereby Mr. Marquette is to get the benefit of the $2 commission for supplying help to farmers. My hon. friend will agree that a large demand, such as now exists for immigrant labour, is comparatively new in the city of Montreal and vicinity. It is a well known fact that the maritime provinces and the province of Quebec have rather been subject to emigration than immigration; that is to say, they have had a large surplus population which sought employment in other fields, so that it would have seemed rather an ungracious business on the part of the government to use efforts to bring people into these sections of the country and crowd out still more the native born population. The present demand for immigrant labour in those provinces is a new condition, which up to the present time has not been fully appreciated by the Immigration Department. However, as I have already had occasion to say, the policy of immigration must change with the changing conditions, and I beg to assure my hon. friend that it will be the duty of the Immigration Department to meet the requirements to which he refers as it arises, and in so far as we can meet it in a reasonable way. In regard to the office in Montreal, it is not an immigration office in the ordinary sense of the word, but rather a detention hospital for immigrants who come by way of Portland and New York in the winter time, and who make their landing in Canada at Montreal. The immigrants who come to our own ocean ports of Halifax and Quebec, are put on the cars and carried through to their destination, but for those who come by Portland or New York, we have to make this provision for their care at Montreal.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not want my hon. friend to be under the impression that we have too large a population in Quebec. As he understands, families in that province are pretty large. For instance, a farmer living on seventy-five acres of land has five or six sons. Some of these young men are very active, energetic and intelligent. My hon. friends department has been circulating literature which is very well got up and well worth the money spent on it. Many young men who have seen that literature want to go to the Northwest where they have a brighter future, and that is no doubt a very good result. But they have to be replaced on the farms they leave, and these immigrants who come out here to work and take up land, might just as well begin in the province of Quebec as in the Northwest. This place of Mr. Marquette is not a hospital, but a little bit of a house, altogether too small. It should be considerably larger. I am very glad to learn that my hon. friend has made arrangements with Mr. Marquette. I am sure that he will not have from any of his agents that satisfaction in a practical way as he would get from Mr. Marquette, for Mr. Marquette knows the class of immigrants very well, he knows those who are seeking for help, and exercises very good judgment in placing the immigrants. But I would ask my hon. friend if possible to enlarge Mr. Marquette's place so that it may afford shelter for those who are waiting for employment. In justice to Mr. Marquette, I must say that I have known him a number of years and have had opportunities of judging of his work. I know that he takes a great interest in it, that he has given great satisfaction both to those seeking for employment and those wanting to engage them, and in fact in many instances has paid out of his own pocket to help those who had not the means to pay their own way. I know that at times he has paid the board at the hotels of women pending their getting employment. There is another institution, principally for women—I do not remember its name—to which women are sent immediately on arrival in Montreal. I think it is on Colborne street. It is a small place, with not sufficient accommodation, and sometimes the women have to go to a hotel, and I know of cases where Mr. Marquette has paid their hotel fare out of his own pocket. A man who shows so much zeal and public spirit ought to be encouraged, and I am glad to hear that the hon. minister has made an arrangement with Mr. Marquette for the future. The only thing I would ask him to do at present is to provide a larger house because the present one is not at all adequate to the requirements.

Mr. BOURASSA. A good deal of this discussion is entirely out of order. There is another item, yet to be voted, for these distributing agents. The item we are now discussing is that of immigration agents. These distribution agents are not included in the number which the minister gave a moment ago, namely, 133 agents in Canada.

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. BOURASSA. Therefore this is not at all the item concerning distribution agents. The list which was asked by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) will be paid under an item which will appear in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. BERGERON. But I asked how many in Canada.

Mr. BOURASSA. It is not the same kind of agents. I do not say that my hon. friend is out of order, but what I say is that the discussion relating to these agents, whose work is the distribution of immigrants for farm labourers, is not included in this item. Out of those 133 agents in Canada, thirty-one I understand are on the local staff at Ottawa, leaving about one hundred distributed throughout Canada. I would like to have a list showing how many in each province, leaving out altogether those who have for their duties the distribution of farm labourers.

Mr. WARD. I would like to ask the hon. minister, even at the risk of being out of order according to the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), why it is that in the list I have seen just now there is a discrimination in favour of the county of Northumberland as against the county of Durham. There are four agents about to be appointed for the county of Northumberland, which is very little larger in population than the county of Durham, and there are but two agents for the county of Durham. Although Durham is not represented by a government supporter, I do not think that would weigh for a moment with my hon. friend, and people in the north part of the county have as much right to be served with those agents as people in Northumberland. We have only two in Durham, each of them in the front on the lake shore, so that the farmers in the north will have to go some twenty or thirty miles to come into communication with the agents. Why not have more agents appointed in Durham as well as in Northumberland?

Mr. OLIVER. I am unable to answer my hon. friend. I do not think there is any reason. We have appointed rather a formidable number, and I was a little afraid that our friends opposite, who are inclined to be critical, would think that we are rather over doing possibly a good thing. However, as my hon. friend tells us that in the county he represents, there are two in the front and none in the rear, if he will be good enough to give me the name of a suitable person, who would be in the part of the county not at present looked after, I shall be very glad to make the appointment.

Mr. BENNETT. A Tory too.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know whether he will be or not. I take it for granted that my hon. friend will recommend some one who will be likely to discharge the duties creditably, and that will be good enough for me.

Mr. WARD. So far as the appointment at Port Hope is concerned, I have no objection to Mr. Powers, because he is a man who will fulfil the duties, if there are any, very well. But there is a large village at Milbrooke, some eighteen miles north, where a large distributing centre for labour could be had, and I should be very glad to have one established there.

Mr. OLIVER. As soon as my hon. friend will hand me the name, I will see that the appointment is made.

Mr. BARR. Have those agents been notified of their appointment? The farmers in the county of Dufferin are not aware who the agents are, for I have a great number of letters asking if any agents have been appointed. This is the time of the year when our farmers are looking for help and they want to know where to look for it. Yet, so far as I know, no notice has been given of the appointment of those men or their duties.

Mr. OLIVER. I am very sorry if the agents appointed in that locality have not made their appointment known. On January 15, a circular was addressed to them so that they ought to know by this time that they were appointed, and what they have to do, and as they are free to make an expenditure up to $10 for advertising, if they have not made themselves known, they have not done what they should have. With a large number of appointments such as are on the list, made without personal knowledge on the part of our officials here, we cannot expect that they will all be right up to the mark. But now that the season is opening, we hope to have some practical supervision, and where there is any delay, we will try to get them into action or supplant them by somebody else. Nothing will be left undone.

Mr. BOURASSA. I insist on a decision being given. We have been discussing appointments, and salaries, and the policy of appointing agents who are not going to receive one cent under this item.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am surprised at such a point of order being raised by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), who for about half an hour to-day spoke in the House while he was out of order. He seems to think everybody should be in order but himself.

Mr. BOURASSA. I spoke seven minutes exactly.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then he was seven minutes out of order.

Mr. BOURASSA. I want your decision, Mr. Chairman. I want to discuss the question of the distribution of farm labourers, and if it is going to be discussed under this item, all right. But we might just as well discuss the railway policy of the Militia Department.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I would like to know who has the right to say that these are not agents of the government. They are agents of the government, and we are discussing the salaries of agents of the government. I think we have a perfect right to discuss any agents that are receiving commission for locating immigrants in any of the provinces.

Mr. J. D. REID. I think that if we discuss the item more fully we will pass the other items more rapidly.

Mr. BOURASSA. All right.

Mr. OLIVER. I have not been making any objections. I would rather discuss the items separately, not that I wish to avoid discussion on the one or the other, but I think we can get a much more intelligent idea of the matter by keeping the two subjects separate. My hon. friend raised the question at the beginning, a very important one, but we have lost sight of it. I have heard, as my hon. friend has heard, that the native Canadian does not get the same show in the Canadian west as the foreigner. Well, that is a mistake. There is, however, this to be said, that the foreigner who does not speak the English language needs and receives an attention that an English speaking man does not need, and would resent if offered him. Therefore when foreigners come here speaking no language but their own, who are not familiar with our laws and system of government, if we wish them to acquire an understanding of the advantages that are offered to them and of the obligations which they are taking upon themselves, we must pay them an attention that the Canadian certainly does not require, because he understands thoroughly our laws and is himself a part and parcel of the government. But so far as facilities for locating lands are concerned, that is to say, the selection of lands, making entry therefor, and so on, precisely the same facility is offered to every one alike. Our land offices are as wide open to one man as to another. The German, the Galician, the Doukhobor, when they reach the land agencies or the many sub-agencies receive no favours over the Americans or the Canadians. There is no distinction in any way to the disadvantage of the Canadian. But I beg to assure my hon. friend that while it is not the policy of the government to enter upon a campaign to induce people from the eastern provinces to go to the western provinces, and I have every reason for believing that such a campaign would not be looked upon favourably by the eastern provinces—indeed we are not allowed to enter upon such a campaign, I want to say that when eastern Canadians come here, there is nothing too good for them in the minds of the administration.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is there any assistance given to the foreigner in the way of grain, or money advanced to him, or anything the like of that ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. Suppose a foreigner arrives in the Northwest without any funds to start with, do you make him any advance to help him that is refused to incomers from any of the Canadian provinces ? I have heard something of that kind, that advances are made to foreigners in the way of seed grain, in giving them more time to repay, advantages that are not given to young men from the eastern provinces.

Mr. OLIVER. I am glad my hon friend raised that question, because it is an idea that is in the minds of some people, and it is just as well to clear it up now. There is no such system of giving advances to anybody because they come from one country or from another.

Mr. J. D. REID. Are advances made ?

Mr. OLIVER. Under certain circumstances. For instance, during the past winter when there was a blockade and certain difficulties arose that I need not enlarge upon, there were found in the country south of Battleford people who had gone out on the prairie far from railroad communication but expecting to be served by the Grand Trunk Pacific when it was built. These people were under special disadvantages during the past winter. and the money that they intended to spend on seed grain they had to spend for fuel, and they suffered serious disability. We did make some provision for assistance to these people. Police patrols were sent out during the severe weather, and, where families were found to be in an impoverished condition—possibly through lack of money. or possibly not—advances were made to them of provisions, and later on, of fuel. This grant was not made on grounds of nationality, but simply because of the conditions which prevailed.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am speaking of immigrants who came into the towns in the spring.

Mr. OLIVER. There was nothing of that kind—so far as I am aware there never was anything of that kind, except in the single case of the Doukhobor community, who were brought in here as the result of a special movement carried on under specia' conditions. There was an advance to that community, I believe. The ordinary immigrant gets no consideration except in facilities to place him on his land. If, after he gets in, misfortune overtakes him, we may come to his rescue, let him be of one nationality or of any other. Of course, native Canadians are the least likely to require such assistance. They are better adapted to the circumstances, and they know the circumstances ; perhaps they are better fixed, and they are better rustlers. They are the best people we can have there. But, where a man needs assistance, the circumstances being the same, he is given that assistance regardless of his nationality. Of course, these are not free advances. If a man receives an advance, it is because he needs it and wants it ; and the government takes security on his homestead for advances, which, in due time, he must pay before he gets his patent. We have been led to believe that it is better policy to do it in that way so that it shall not be considered a charity. It is an advance, a loan, which the settler is expected to repay.

Mr. J. D. REID. It may be that the information I received arose out of the case of the advance to the Doukhobors. My information was very strong, but, if the minister says that there has been no advances to people under such circumstances as to discriminate against Canadians, of course, I accept his statement.

Mr. BARR. Take those immigrants who come under the auspices of the Salvation Army, is it not true that they have an advantage over the Canadians who go to the Northwest ? Are they not taken charge of and placed upon their lands, while the Canadians must look up an agent to hunt out his own land ?

Mr. OLIVER. The Salvation Army is an institution entirely separate from the government. If they make arrangements to receive and care for immigrants to come in under their auspices that is their business ; they do it at their own expense.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Do not they rereceive a grant from the government ?

Mr. OLIVER. We give them the same bonus that we give to other booking agents.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Does the government not give them a grant besides ?

Mr. OLIVER. We give them $5,000 a year, as assistance to their head office in London, and we do it on the ground that they handle their own people who come out, relieving us of responsibility. But that is the only consideration that they get. As booking agents they are given $5 per head for immigrants. and if they distribute farm labourers in Ontario, they get the same commission as do other agents we have appointed.

Mr. BARR. The Ontario government gives them a grant too.

Mr. OLIVER. We have nothing to do with that. The operations of the Salvation

Army in distributing immigrants are particularly in the eastern provinces and not to any great extent in the Northwest. The salaries covered by the item under discussion represent the machinery by which the immigrants are distributed on land.

Mr. BOURASSA. I do not wish to see the very important question raised by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) set aside. That is the question of the encouragement that should be given by the government to the Canadian citizens of the eastern provinces who wish to settle in the Northwest. This question has been debated once in this House, but it has not been probed to the bottom. The other day my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) referred to the feeling in the province of Quebec on this subject. My hon. friend likes once in a while, to be provincial in his views. I have never regarded this from the provincial point of view, but have considered it from the point of view of the citizen of Eastern Canada as well as from the point of view of the citizens of Canada at large. I claim, as I have always done, that the best settler you can have for the Northwest is the Canadian citizen. I say that not from any jingoistic feeling—I do not claim that we are any better than any other people; but for the very reason that we are the people of this country, for the very reason that we have settled the older portions of this country, we are better prepared to carry on the settlement of those portions that have yet to be opened up. But, while I hold this view I have no objection to any foreigner coming in to settle in Canada. In spite of what has been said by those who choose a time to criticise me when I have no opportunity to reply, I have never spoken, either in the province of Quebec or elsewhere, a single word in disparagement of the policy of bringing desirable immigrants into Canada. The only places in Canada where I have discussed the question of the immigration of French people especially are Toronto, Hamilton, St. Catharines and Orillia. I do not think my hon. friend, the Postmaster General, will accuse me of having gone to those cities to pander to the race sentiment of the French Canadians or to make cheap popularity for myself at the expense of his patriotic colleagues and himself. I shall treat this subject also in the province of Quebec, but, in doing so, I shall hold the same language that I have held in Toronto and these other places and that I hold in this House; and this is a course which I invite the Postmaster General and his followers to adopt, for it will be something entirely new in their political career. I repeat, I have not discussed this question in the province of Quebec, I have never 'roamed' through the province of Quebec talking on this question, but I have discussed it in the heart of English-speaking Canada.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will my hon. friend allow me a question?

Mr. BOURASSA. Certainly, as many as you like.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is a question of fact. If my hon. friend will cool down a little may I ask him did he not discuss that question in the county of Quebec in my presence on nomination day?

Mr. BOURASSA. Certainly.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Then why did you say that you never have?

Mr. BOURASSA. I said that I had never been roaming around the province of Quebec endeavouring to raise the feelings of the French Canadian people on that question.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is not——

Mr. BOURASSA. Let the Postmaster General control himself and cool down a little. The question was raised in the county of Quebec by the hon. member for Quebec county (Mr. Robitaille). His programme was a very simple one. It was that we should encourage the settlement of our own people rather than that of foreigners, and that in the bringing in of foreigners we should not recklessly ignore the claims of our own people. That I supported then and still support. On the question of French immigration—that is the point I have raised and I do not want the Postmaster General to divert from it—I say that I have never discussed it outside of this House or outside of Ontario.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is the hon. gentleman in order in telling the committee what he has done in roaming around the country? What has that to do with this item? Who cares what he has done?

Mr. BOURASSA. The point of order was left aside with the consent of the Minister of the Interior and the Postmaster General. It was stated that they were ready to have the whole question discussed. This item out of which the government is going to pay the salaries of the immigration agents in the different countries of Europe relates directly to French immigration as well as to settlement in the Northwest.

Mr. LANCASTER. Mr. Chairman, I still say that if the hon. gentleman tells us all that he has done personally in roaming around the country it has nothing to do with this item.

Mr. BOURASSA. My hon. friend is quite right, but the point of order comes too late. If the hon. gentleman had raised it five minutes ago I would have been obliged to sit down.

Mr. LANCASTER. I tried to.

Mr. BOURASSA. I simply took the same liberties that have been taken by other members. I have been looking through the list of agents who are to be paid under this estimate. There are agents in Canada, one in Prince Edward Island, fifteen in Nova Scotia, six in New Brunswick, twenty-four in the city of Quebec, five in the city of Montreal, thirty-five in the general offices at Ottawa, twenty in Winnipeg and twenty-nine throughout the Northwest. As will be seen by hon. gentlemen this does not include one of those distributing agents to which my hon. friend from East Simcoe has been referring. I may have a word to say later on about these.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Are these distributing agents?

Mr. BOURASSA. No, these are the immigration agents centred at the immigration offices in different parts of Canada. What I want to point out is that these fifty-one agents quartered in the eastern provinces, that is in Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, Ontario and Quebec, have no other business and have no other instructions from the government than to receive these immigrants and ship them to the Northwest. Therefore, they have nothing to do with the work which the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) would like to have done. We the people of the eastern provinces are contributing to the salaries of these agents as well as the salaries of the agents in the older countries. Now, the whole staff is organized on this footing: The men on the other side have offices, three or four of which I visited in Europe, filled with literature, with maps and pamphlets of all kinds setting forth the advantages of Manitoba and the Northwest. Against this I have nothing to say, but I claim that we the people from the east have the right to have the advantages of our eastern provinces set forth in the literature of the government and made known to the immigrants who leave the other side in order that they should make a choice as to whether they should settle in the east or west. The hon. minister made a statement a moment ago that the eastern provinces. especially Quebec and the maritime provinces, have an overflowing population or that up to a few years ago they had an overflowing population and did not want immigration to come in.

Mr. LEFURGEY. It is flowing away too fast from the maritime provinces.

Mr. BOURASSA. That statement was corrected beforehand by one of the members from Prince Edward Island, who was claiming that the population of the province was decreasing although every one knows that with its splendid soil and climate Prince Edward Island could support a larger population.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Better communication with the mainland would increase the population.

Mr. BOURASSA. That may be one thing. I do not want to allow that very important red herring to come across my trail. Now, it would be the same with New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Quebec and Ontario. I quite admit that immigrants who would find suitable conditions for settlement in the eastern provinces are not the same kind of immigrants who would only desire to go to the west in order to have, for a small price, a large quantity of land which they are not obliged to clear. But I claim that you can get from Scotland, from Ireland, from England, from Belgium, from the north end of France, from Brittany, from Auvergne, from Franche Comté a most desirable class of immigrants. Let me suggest to the hon. Postmaster General when he next goes to France not to stop altogether in the French capital where he may have very nice chats with French ministers, but to go through the provinces of France where the farmers are poor, where the farmers have large families, where they do not emigrate in large quantities because they are not attracted to the outside, but where you can get a splendid race of hardy farmers, as in Britany where they are farmers and fishermen, in Auvergne where they work part of the year in their own country and do, as some of the farmers in Scotland and Ireland do, go to the richest departments of France to work in the harvesting and then go and do their small harvesting in the mountains. You can get from these mountains a hardy race of men who would come to our eastern provinces and take up small farms because any of them have a small capital at their disposal of $1,000, $2,000, $5,000 and as much as $10,000, who will go into the older provinces as some of them have done without any inducement whatever from the government, without any literature being distributed amongst them, having come of their own will because they happened to learn something about Canada. They would settle on a farm of 50 or 100 acres upon which a Canadian family does not find it easy to make a living, cut it into two or three small farms and devote themselves to intensive cultivation and gardening. We have a few settlements of that kind around Montreal, we have some near St. Hyacinthe and near Quebec and I have some in my own constituency around the town of Buckingham, Frenchmen, Germans, Irishmen, Belgians, men of different races, who are splendid gardeners, excellent farmers, who understand the intensive system of cultivation which they bring from Belgium especially. Belgium to-day offers the most splendid field for immigration that you could desire. It has been stated and it may be stated again that we have one immigration agent in Belgium, but I may say here in the hearing of the Minister of the Interior, whether it was under his authority or not I do not know, that the representative of the provincial government of Quebec has written in a document which he has produced before the legislature that our federal agent in Belgium had received strict orders, or at least pretended to have received strict orders, not to direct any immigration to the province of Quebec, but to use only a line of propaganda that would induce people to go to the western provinces.

Now, Sir, it is the same thing in England, it is the same thing in France, it is the same thing almost everywhere where this government or the preceding government had agents or representatives. It is against this kind of policy that I protest. I claim that we have room for a large number—perhaps not for hundreds of thousands, I would not wish for that either from France or any other country, I would not care for an immense influx of population to come into the older provinces—but I claim that if instead of looking to the number you were looking to the quality, if instead of trying to induce all sorts of people to come here by the hundreds of thousands so that you might show big figures in your statistics before the House and the country, if you had some care for the future and for the present good of the country you would try to get the best kind of people you could from any of the most civilized countries, especially from those that are akin to us, particularly Great Britain, France and Belgium ; settle in the older provinces those who have some money and who would go in for the intensive system of cultivation and direct to the west those who prefer to settle on the prairie.

Some mention has been made of the work of the Salvation Army and the splendid kind of people they are sending us. We are told that a bonus is paid on these immigrants in the usual way but, moreover, that the Salvation Army gets a subsidy from the government in order to help them in their work. I repeat what I have had occasion to say in other circumstances. As far as reforming people in the country where they operate. I have nothing but praise for the Salvation Army, but I claim that we who have at heart the welfare of our country ought not to allow the Salvation Army or any other organization to send to us all the worst characters of the country in which they operate in order simply to get rid of them. What do I find in a London newspaper, in 'The Record' of the 21st December last ? This has been sent to me from England and shows you the kind of work which is going on there and the kind of immigrants we are getting for whom we are paying first $5 on the other side and are going to pay $2 to have them distributed on the farms in Canada. I shall not read the whole advertisement, but I shall give the principal part :

> No relief without work. Beggar tickets and married men's relief tickets on application. Labour homes and other institutions in all parts of the United Kingdom, giving a fresh start in life to ex-prisoners, loafers, unfortunates, tramps, drunkards, hooligans, 3,000 sent this year from penury at home to prosperity in Canada. Donations earnestly requested towards £100,000 fund for emigration of 20,000 next year.

Is the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) prepared to state here that it is a good and patriotic policy to not only allow this kind of immigration to be operated against us but also to pay $5 for getting those people here ? If the minister of the Interior is so anxious about reforming the hooligans and the drunks and the tramps and the unfortunates, and the loafers and the ex-prisoners, let him go there and join the Salvation Army and convert them at home and leave them there ; but I claim that the people of Canada who have a feeling of responsibility for the future of this country should not encourage that kind of policy, the result of which will be to attract 20,000 people of the classes I have mentioned and described.

If I am going to be painted all over this country as an absolute rebel, as a provincialist, as a man appealing to the racial feelings of his compatriots because I denounce this kind of policy, I am ready to stand the accusation, but I repeat that I am ready to go and discuss this question in any English speaking city in Canada as I have done this winter. I am prepared to say that whether they come from England, Scotland or Ireland, or from France, Belgium or Germany, we do not want in this country the kind of characters depicted in this advertisement; that not only should we not offer them inducements to come, but that we should put a stop to this kind of work. I am prepared to say further that a good honest decent farmer from France or Belgium is better than a hooligan from London, and that a good and decent farmer from Scotland is ten times better than a hooligan from Paris or Marseilles or Bordeaux. I do not want any hooligans to come here but, on the contrary, I do want an intelligent propaganda carried on with regard to immigration. I claim that to secure a decent kind if immigrant it is not necessary to pay that bonus or to keep those officials. I claim, on the contrary, that as we want to address ourselves to the best farmers of the countries of Europe, that are akin to us in temperament, in feeling, in religion, in national traditions, all that it is necessary for us to do is to have a few good agents there, who would not seek to carry on a speculation at the expense of the health of the Canadian nation, but who would receive a fair salary for doing their duty towards the Canadian people. It would be sufficient to have the right kind of agents there and the right kind of literature, literature that would make known to the people of the different nations of Europe, all the advantages of all the provinces of Canada, and not to have agents who would receive orders from the Dominion government to throw into the cellar pamphlets that would show to the people of Belgium the advantages of the province of Quebec or the province of Ontario. We are not paying either the minister of the Interior or his staff of permanent officers or agents to discriminate against one part of Canada in favour of another. I am in favour of sound immigration for the whole of Canada; I am in favour of advertising the advantages of Canada, but I am against this policy which consists in taking the money of eastern Canada to replete the Northwest with all sorts of people, and secondly I am against a policy which consists, as I have said, in advertising our country as I have described it as a patent medicine to cure the social evils of the poorest classes of all the nations of Europe. I hope we are all devoted to Canada and to the future of our country.

With regard to the organization of these agencies, I have stated after visiting them, that they are not agencies of immigration to Canada, they are agents of immigration to the Northwest of Canada. The Minister of the Interior was candid enough to admit it to-night, but he says circumstances change. They changed a good while ago. I would like a clearer statement by the minister that he is not only going to put a stop to that discrimination against the older provinces of Canada but is going to rearrange his system of agencies as well as his literature. I remember the first time I was in Europe visiting one of the Canadian offices and I found a map issued by the Interior Department upon which one-third of the best part of the province of Quebec was annexed to the United States. That was an official map issued by the Interior department showing the whole country south of the St. Lawrence, in the Montreal district, as annexed to the United States and belonging to the state of Vermont and the eastern part of the state of Maine. I pointed that out to the ex-Minister of the Interior, and he ordered those maps to be corrected. I hope the present minister will be kind enough to make some corrections in his literature, and have a few pages devoted to the mineral, agricultural, fishery and lumber resources of the province of Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces. Now, I would like to know what is the basis of the organization for the distribution of farm labourers in the eastern provinces. If I understood the minister aright, it is entirely confined to the province of Ontario. If I were not aware that the hon. minister does not know a great deal about the province of Quebec, I would have been astonished at the statement he made that in Quebec we do not need farm labour, and that therefore he had for that province only one agent in the eastern townships. I would like to know from the minister what is the number of those agents in Ontario?

Mr. OLIVER. One hundred and ninety-eight.

Mr. BOURASSA. How many for the maritime provinces?

Mr. OLIVER. There are none.

Mr. BOURASSA. So that we have to-day 198 officers who have instructions to keep some of the immigrants for the province of Ontario, and we have none in Quebec except one in the eastern townships. I may tell my hon. friend that I am a descendant of generations of farmers in the district of Montreal, and we have at least eight or ten counties south of Montreal, which are the richest counties in the province of Quebec and some of the richest in the Dominion of Canada, where the need for farm labour is just as great as it is in any portion of Ontario. I suppose I shall be accused of pandering to the feelings of my compatriots if I say that we have as great need for the appointment of such agents for the province of Quebec as there is for their appointment for the province of Ontario. We need them for the counties of the Richelieu valley and for the counties of the St. Lawrence valley as much as they are needed in the eastern townships. My hon. friend says that because these counties are near the ports we need not appoint agents. Does he imagine that the farmers are going to go every day to Montreal to hire immigrants? Many of these farmers are just as far from the port of Montreal as the farmers of the eastern townships are from the port of Quebec. Why not give them the same attention and care as you do this county or that county in the province of Ontario? I quite realize that when you do nothing towards bringing farm labourers from Belgium and France, it is to a large extent not necessary to have that kind of organization in the province of Quebec. Of course, you will occasionally find a farmer in the province of Quebec who has no children or some of whose children have settled elsewhere, and who is glad to adopt a young boy from England and bring him up as his own child; but that it not what I mean when speaking of farm labour. What I mean is that when the time arrives for the hay harvest or the grain harvest, there is an imperious demand for labour both in the counties south of Montreal and in the counties north of Montreal. In Quebec, in St. Hyacinthe, in Valleyfield, in Three Rivers, in Sorel, the demand is just as great as it is in any town of Ontario. If the hon. gentleman were right, it would be sufficient to have a few agents in Montreal to send labourers to Ontario as the people would need them. But there should be agents in the various small agricultural towns, where they could get information direct from the farmers. The farmers coming to market will tell the agent: I would like to have a farm labourer from this date to that date. Another will say: I need two. In that way the agent in the district would be able, a few weeks or months before the time of harvest, to say: We shall need fifty or one hundred labourers, as the case might be. How can you expect to have that information with only one agent at Sherbrooke, and with the staff shipping all the farm labourers to the west? Without a similar organization in the various eastern provinces to do for the east what you do for the west, it is perfectly useless to expect to bring about a change of conditions. I think the time has come when the Department of the Interior should change its policy from top to bottom, as far as that is concerned, and pay a little more regard to the people in the east without discriminating at all against the people in the west.

Mr. WILMOT. I beg to enter my complaint in regard to what the hon. member for St. John brought up a short time ago on the subject of the attention paid by the Immigration Department to the requirements of the maritime provinces. I hold in my hand a letter from a prominent official of that department in answer to a request made to me by a friend going to England. He wished me to obtain from the department some immigration literature, with the idea of inducing farm labourers to come to the province of New Brunswick. The reply of the official of the Immigration Department goes on to say:

> In compliance with this request, I am sending from my office an assortment of literature, including copies of 'Last Best West,' 'Where and How,' 'The Canadian West,' 'How to Succeed in Canada,' and an 'Index Map.' It is not usual to issue literature relating particularly to the older provinces, but this year we have printed a small pamphlet of the province of Prince Edward Island, and another on the eastern townships of Quebec, both of which have been sent to Mr. J. Bruce Walker, assistant superintendent of emigration, 11-12 Charing Cross, London, S.W., England, for distribution in the old country, and I am asking him to forward to you a number of copies of both these pamphlets, together with a supply of the regular advertising matter which is kept in his office.

We could have no better authority than that letter to show that, as the Immigration Department is conducted, there is a total disregard for the maritime provinces. I suppose there are no people in the Dominion of Canada who rejoice more in the great resources this country has in the great west, with its wonderful fertility, and with all its various attractions for immigrants from Europe and elsewhere to come and settle and make for themselves prosperous homes. The time has come when some attention should be paid to the maritime provinces. As the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has said so eloquently and well, the conditions of the maritime provinces will suit better many people from the older countries than will those of a prairie country. The attractions and resources of the maritime provinces should be taken up by the Immigration Department and presented to intending immigrants. Our country is not a desert. It has very great resources. Of course, it is not, take it all through, as fertile as the great west. It is not as fertile in a general way as the lands around the great lakes, but throughout that country there are excellent farming lands. Many of the farms at present are deserted and others are not worked to their full capacity, simply for the want of farm hands, and I think it is the duty of the department, which should have the interests of the whole country at heart, to direct greater attention to the maritime provinces than it is doing now. We cannot have a great country unless our maritime interests are considered along with those of the Northwest. We cannot have a great interior producing vast crops and furnishing homes for a large population, unless our maritime interests are considered as well, not only from the agricultural standpoint but as regards the development of our ports and shipping interests. By inducing immigrants to come there, not only those who will turn their attention to agriculture, but those who will take up other employment, so necessary to the success of this country, we shall not only be aiding our maritime provinces, but our prairie provinces as well. I fail to find that the policy of this government has been directed sufficiently towards the development of our maritime interests. I am speaking now especially with regard to the Immigration Department. But we live in hope that a change will come to the advantage of our country. I felt it my duty to join in the complaint made by the hon. member for St. John's (Mr. Daniel), and I trust the day is not far distant when the Immigration Department will give more attention to the interests of our provinces down by the sea.

Mr. SINCLAIR. There is no province in any part of Canada which requires distributing agents more than the province of Nova Scotia. While we have in Nova Scotia a great variety of resources, agriculture is still our greatest industry. That province has been drained of its population by our people going to the United States and to-day many of them are going to our Northwest. They are also being employed in our own coal mines and ships, so that our farms are practically deserted. There are large portions of the province from which the young men have been all drained away, and the farms are in the hands of the old men so that it is impossible to carry on agriculture there effectively for the want of labour. I am surprised that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) should have appointed distributing agents throughout the country without including Nova Scotia, but as this policy is only being started, I trust that the needs of that province will not be overlooked when the minister completes his plans for the appointment of all distributing agents.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) to say that the minister had appointed no distributing agents for the province of Quebec and now we have the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) complaining that Nova Scotia has been left out. But I find they have appointed ninety-eight for Ontario. What does that mean? It means that Quebec is all right and that Nova Scotia is all right, but the government want a foothold in Ontario. Therefore they have appointed one man in each constituency of that province with some supporters to do political work. These distributing agents are not needed in the province of Ontario at all. The Ontario government are looking after that work which this government is now undertaking to do. This is simply a duplication of the work which the province is doing. The Ontario government are looking after the advertising, and they have their agents to whom applications may be made and who will look after the immigrants and distribute them. But this Dominion government has appointed a special agent in every constituency in that province; it is paying the local press for advertising; and paying these men $2 a head and their travelling and other expenses. Let me give you a sample of the accounts paid. The minister is asking a vote of nearly a million dollars for immigration purposes. What benefit are the people getting for the money? Just let me give you a few specimen bricks of how the money is being paid. The minister paid G. P. Ward from July, 1905 to July, 1906, Pullman cars, $197, and for July to October, 1906, $88. G. A. Johnston was paid $144.50 from July, 1905 to June, 1906. H. W. Ross was paid from July, 1905 to June, 1906, $229, and from July, 1906 to October, 1906, $110. L. J. Kehoe was paid from July, 1905, to April, 1906, $85. James White from July, 1905, to June, 1906, $245, and from July, 1906 to October, 1906, $104. Or to these five agents, $1,297.50 was paid for Pullman cars. For meals to these gentlemen on the dining cars there was paid the sum of $2,989; or a total of $4,286 was paid to these five agents for riding on Pullman cars and dining and looking after these distributing agencies. Every dollar of this money was paid by the department. But when the accounts went to the Auditor General he refused to pass them, and they called on these five agents to refund the money. Has the hon. minister got it all back back?

Mr. OLIVER. Some of them have repaid and some not.

Mr. TAYLOR. And the country has lost it. James White has not refunded I am bound to say, $4,000 of the people's money wasted in this way besides other large expenses and big salaries. These men were up at night and thought they ought to work in some little extras, as appears by their letters. I have other accounts here. Mr. Dan. McGillicuddy wanted to do immigration work out in the west just at the time of an election. He went to the Minister of the Interior and they handed him $150 as an advance although at the time he was a servant of this House working for the Debates Committee, working up an index, and an index which was not needed at all except for the purpose of giving him a job. They thought he was a trustworthy man to send out with boodle during the election and they gave him $150. He went out and then sent in a Bill for $700 for attending the affairs of the immigrants on Pullman and dining cars. The time has come when a stop should be put to this kind of expenditure. Canada is advertised enough and people will come here without our paying $5 to the North Atlantic Trading Company or anybody else to bring them here. This work that we are doing today is just a duplication of the work which the province of Ontario is doing itself. It is not needed, and we do not want a Dominion election agent in my county or any other county. The Ontario government is looking after that and distributing all the people who come in. But this government for the purpose of throwing a little pap to some of its supporters and have them there handy to do a little work that is needed appoints one agent in every constituency in the province. That is the way our money is wasted.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Were the Ontario government agents or the Dominion government agents appointed first?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say anything about the Ontario government agents.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I can tell the minister, then, that the Ontario government agents were at work for years before the agents of this government were in the field. It was only when the system was perfected and found to work well that his department—I do not know whether under the hon. minister (Mr. Oliver) or under his predecessor—appointed men to these jobs.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) is now in his place. A few minutes ago he made a severe attack on the Salvation Army. I am sorry the minister (Mr. Oliver) has not seen fit to——

Mr. BOURASSA. The hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Reid) is mistaken. I did not make a severe attack on the Salvation Army. On the contrary I praised the Army. But I did make an attack upon the Department of the Interior in connection with their work so far as Canada is concerned. In case my hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Reid) has understood that the advertisement I read was of the Salvation Army, I may explain that he is mistaken. This is the advertisement of an institution called the Church Army, and it is in connection with another organization called the League of the Friends of the Poor, of which the Princess Louise Augusta of Schleswig-Holstein is the President.

Mr. J. D. REID. I thought he objected to the Salvation Army being paid a certain amount to assist immigrants to this country.

Mr. BOURASSA. For a similar kind of immigrants to these.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am not wrong then in saying that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) objected on that ground. I understood him to say that the Salvation Army were bringing into this country hooligans, loafers and drunkards.

Mr. BOURASSA. No, that is the other organization.

Mr. J. D. REID. So far as the Salvation Army is concerned, I think it has done a great deal of good, not only in this country, but throughout the world, and I believe they bring in a great deal better class of immigrants than some of the agencies of the government do. For instance, take the North Atlantic Trading Company. This concern got $5 a head for every immigrant they brought into Canada.

Mr. TAYLOR. For every one that came.

Mr. J. D. REID. There was no way of having these immigrants selected, and many of them were of the classes mentioned by the hon. member for Labelle. If I had to choose between the system of bringing in immigrants through the North Atlantic Trading Company and through the Salvation Army, I would certainly choose the Salvation Army.

Mr. BOURASSA. My hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Reid) knows that I condemned the system of the North Atlantic Trading Company.

Mr. J. D. REID. I know it. It appears that I misunderstood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) in thinking that he condemned the Salvation Army. As to the question of immigration from France which was mentioned here, so far as I am personally concerned I should be pleased to see a large immigration from that country. I was in Paris and while there I tried my best to find a Canadian agency. It was with great difficulty that I found it, and if my memory serves me right, I had to go through a little lane and up a back stair to find the office.

Mr. TALBOT. When was that?

Mr. J. D. REID. Four years ago.

Mr. TALBOT. Does the hon. member mean the Bureau du Canada?

Mr. J. D. REID. Yes—where Mr. Fabre lives.

Mr. TALBOT. Surely the hon. gentleman is not serious.

Mr. J. D. REID. I say that when I went to Paris and tried to find the office of the Canadian agent, I had to go through some kind of a little lane and up a back stair.

Mr. TALBOT. The hon. gentleman made some mistake in the place.

An hon. MEMBER. You must have gone in at the back door.

Mr. J. D. REID. I went there and saw Mr. Fabre.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. gentlemen need not try to belittle what I say. There was no front entrance, but you had to go into a little lane and up a back stair.

Mr. TALBOT. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Reid) will allow me to correct him: the Bureau du Canada in Paris—I have been there twenty times—is on the Rue de Rome, one of the leading thoroughfares and in the very heart of Paris.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then, it is not in the same place where I found it.

Mr. TALBOT. It has been in the same place for twenty years.

Mr. J. D. REID. The place where I found it I thought not a suitable place to advertise such a country as this. They should have better rooms, they should have more on the staff. When I was there there were only two or three people there, and they did not seem to take the interest that, I think, should be taken in our work of immigration from France. If that is all there is for advertising Canada in France I do not think it sufficient.

Mr. BENNETT. In view of the fact that there are two agents of the department in East Simcoe, I should like to know how the farmers in that county will approach these gentlemen. One of them is Mr. Henderson. Certainly he has time on his hands and is an active man. He would be pretty busy this summer on the voters' list, but he will be able to give some attention to this immigration in the meantime. The other agent is an active politician and a hardware merchant. Will these agents find out what farmers want men and write to the department, or what will be done ?

Mr. OLIVER. They are expected to inform themselves by whatever means may be suitable and convenient, as to the requirements of the farmers in their vicinity. As I have already informed the House they are given authority to spend up to $10 in advertising. The idea is that when they receive appointment they will either advertise or take other means to let the farmers know that they will deal with the department on their behalf. They are supposed to take a list of the farmers in their vicinity who require help, the wages they will pay, the kind of employment they will offer, and so on. They will forward this to the office in Ottawa, and the office in Ottawa will communicate with the port of arrival and also with our agencies in Europe. It will then be known that a certain number of farmers, say in the neighbourhood of Orillia, require help of a certain kind and offer such-and-such wages, and that if the immigrant will go to Mr. Henderson he will be afforded means of finding employment.

Mr. BENNETT. And for this the agent will get $2.

Mr. OLIVER. If he places the immigrant he will get $2.

Mr. BENNETT. But if the immigrant does not like the job and stays only two days ?

Mr. OLIVER. That is a pretty fine point. I think we have not brought it down quite as fine as that, but certainly it would not be the intention to pay a commission unless the labourer remains a reasonable time with the farmer. That is a matter the adjustment of which will have to be worked out.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the department pay the agent a second time on the same immigrant ? Suppose the agent places the immigrant with John Smith and gets his $2. The immigrant remains with John Smith a few days and then comes back to Mr. Henderson who places him with Mr. Brown. Does the agent get $2 again ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, I can guarantee the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) on that point. We won't allow ringers.

Mr. M. E. PAQUET (L'Islet). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, On the occasion of a famous debate on April 9, instant, parliament sought to solve the immigration problem. It is not my intention to discuss this question from a party point of view, but I feel that I am called upon to make certain observations which I consider as timely when this sum is asked for by the government to cover immigration expenditure. The first chapter of this important question might properly be headed : 'Let us keep our people at home.' In the southeastern districts of the province of Quebec, emigration to the United States caused an awful lot of harm, the cause of which it is useless for me to state. We must look forward. Year after year a number of our families feel compelled to cross the border, and our aim should be to adopt such steps as will bring about the absolute cessation of such a condition of things. Canada needs all of her sons to ensure the prosperity of the country, and it behooves the government to build as expeditiously as possible the National Transcontinental Railway in order to provide new fields of colonization, agriculture, commerce and industry to our people. It belongs to the government to encourage and develop the co-operative societies, the object of which is to properly improve the economic conditions of the farming community and the labouring classes. It pertains to the various governments to establish and improve a system of technical schools so as to promote the industrial welfare of the country. It pertains to this government to encourage and assist our colonization societies and to give them a proper direction in order that they may be fruitful in their results. Those colonization societies are working very actively towards the repatriation of our countrymen, as unquestionably evinced by the 26,547 Canadians who were brought back to Canada since the 1st of January, a most encouraging showing.

What is said of the work of repatriation by our leading agents ? Mr. W. D. Scott states in his report of July last, that 'the repatriation of French Canadians from the United States attracted the attention of the department a few years ago and is meeting with satisfactory results.' The 'Courier de L'Ouest,' a paper friendly to the Minister of the Interior, stated on January 10, 1907 :

> We ask that the stream of emigration which flows towards the United States be directed here. Of course it is too late to form a solid group, but we have established numerous strong-holds here and there in the Northwest.

Again on February 14, the same paper said :

> We gather pretty authoritatively that 3,000 settlers at least would yield to the first attempt at repatriation in Fall River alone.

What is the object of that constant emigration of our people to the United States ? Our neighbours lead a strenuous industrial life. If we wish to keep our people at home and induce those that have left to come back, we must, according to an author, initiate an industrial policy by which it will be possible for the government to better the national life and ensure permanency to the development of the intellectuality, the wealth and the welfare of the community at large.

According to the Auditor General's report we have spent during the fiscal year 1905-6, $90,629.95 in advertising Canada's resources and opportunities in the United States. Of that amount $79,742 were for printing in the English language, $4,046 in the Flemish language and $6,837 in the French language. Would it not be more suitable that a higher percentage be spent in the Franco-American press towards advertising Canada's possibilities. I am aware of the difficulties that are being met with in repatriation. I am aware that our brethren to the south are desirous of coming back to their country, but I believe that greater efforts should be made by our agents with that object in view. The question of French emigration was fully discussed in the House on the 9th instant, and I will make but a passing observation on that subject. I will ask the government to make a more intelligent and more active propaganda in France, where we have but two agents. I should think that our efforts should be directed especially towards securing emigrants in the provinces. It seems to me that much better results could easily be obtained in our old motherland in these days of political, religious and civil oppression for a large part of the community. It is admitted by Mr. H. Lorin in his masterly work, 'France as a Colonial Power,' that 'Canada affords a good ground for the economic expansion of France.' Belgium is over populated and it becomes more imperative for her every day to expand over the world through her people and her products.

Here is what Mr. D. Tréau de Coeli, our agent in Belgium says in his annual report:

> There has been a decrease in the number of my correspondents, because I did not advertise Canada in whose interests I am here working. I am fully confident that the most difficult period in the way of emigration work in Belgium is now over and that henceforth a good class of Belgian settlers will go to Canada.

The French and the Belgians have invested large sums of money in the Northwest, in Algeria, in the Congo, in South America. They are now investing more heavily in our country, where such a bright future is open to the civilized nations, and I invite the government to better advertise Canada's resources in France and Belgium. We have magnificent lands and rich mineral deposits and our neighbours cast an eye of jealousy on our water-powers, and we should endeavour to secure French and Belgian capital as eagerly as we receive American investments.

Mr. Gerald Adams, delegate of Canterbury to the Board of Trade Congress held in Montreal in 1903, wrote an important article on immigration in the British Isles, in the 'Empire Review' of February, 1907. According to that economist our agents should never be suspected of performing their work through the medium of private companies. It is a grave mistake to concentrate one's efforts in cities and practically ignoring rural districts. The British citizen who is at all familiar with the agricultural life is not easily reached by our agents. The Canadian government should establish immigration bureaus in the heart of all rural districts, especially in those counties affected with a depression in farming, such as Essex, Kent, Surrey and Sussex.

Sir, I do not ask the government to close our ports to immigration from Southern Europe, but I ask it to exercise a most careful and a most watchful supervision over all classes of people coming to us from those countries, if we want our own to be happy and prosperous materially, morally and socially.

Hon. Mr. LEMIEUX. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend from L'Islet appealed to the Postmaster General, I will gladly answer the questions which he puts to me. He spoke of the French Canadians emigrating to the United States. Of course this debate originated to-night not on emigration but on immigration. No other hon. gentleman more than I would sincerely deplore such emigration if it really existed, but let me set my hon. friend's mind at rest on that score, because Canadian emigration to the United States has wonderfully diminished, if not practically stopped, in the last ten years.

Mr. PAQUET. (Translation.) I have stated a while ago that emigration from the southeastern districts of the province of Quebec had caused inestimable damage to our population. I stated also that every spring a good many families in my district feel obliged to emigrate across the border. I should have added perhaps that when the government has brought the construction of the Transcontinental Railway to a practical solution, new fields will be open to our people for colonization and agriculture, and then emigration will have come to a stop.

Hon. Mr. LEMIEUX. (Translation.) I am not personally aware of that state of things which my hon. friend (Mr. Paquet) complains of as actually existing in his constituency, but I do say that generally speaking the migratory movement of our people towards the United States has considerably subsided, if not completely ceased in the province of Quebec of late years. Of course it is impossible that, owing to the important French centres lying in the eastern states, there should not be here and there a slight exit to the United States, but as I stated, emigration has practically stopped.

I am happy to say, Sir, that I have secured much information in the past few months at the Department of the Interior concerning the work of our agents and their propaganda for the repatriation of our people. There are in the eastern states and in certain western states of the American Union, a number of agents appointed by this government and also by the government of the province of Quebec, whose duty is to promote repatriation. I learn by the reports of the Lake St. John Colonization Society and the North of Montreal Colonization Society that their efforts are meeting with much success indeed.

My hon. friend is quite right in stating that the construction of the National Transcontinental from Winnipeg to Quebec and from Quebec to Moncton will open up new fields of operation for our people in that part of the province where he lives. In fact that will be our New Quebec. I am all the more pleased to hear that statement in the hon. gentleman's mouth, that some of his colleagues occupying seats around him have strenuously opposed at the time of the discussion on the Bill, the passing of that national highway across the province of Quebec.

The government should doubtless encourage the establishment of technical and commercial schools, and endeavour to spread education. A very strong move in such a laudable direction has lately sprung up in Montreal and Quebec. I speak from a province of Quebec view point, as I hope the hon. gentleman does not ignore the fact that deputations come to us every now and then from the manufacturers' associations and workingmen's unions asking that the government should promote technical education in the country. To what extent would the federal government be allowed to use the people's money for that purpose ? This is a question of constitutional law which my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) is more in a position than I to pronounce upon. At all events, every body is satisfied that the government of the province of Quebec and our great national institution, Laval University, have taken up for good the question of higher commercial education and technical schools. There already exists in Montreal a technical school established by the English-speaking community. Our own people are following in their footsteps and quite recently the government of the province of Quebec, giving way before public opinion, apportioned a considerable sum for the purpose of establishing technical schools.

Concerning the co-operative societies to which my hon. friend (Mr. Paquet) has alluded, he cannot ignore that I am personally in accord with the views which he has expressed on that subject. We had occasion, during the present session, thanks to the patriotic initiative of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) to have a special commission, whose object was to secure information from experts. We have listened to Mr. Alphonse Desjardins, who has founded a people's bank in Lévis, a co-operative society for savings and discounts. We even had the good fortune to listen to His Excellency the Governor General, Lord Grey, who is honorary president of the International Co-operative Association. And I may say that if my hon. friend's from Jacques Cartier Bill is not passed at this session, it will be owing to the fact that the government has decided, after hearing the evidence adduced before the commission, to embody the principle of it in a government measure.

My hon. friend (Mr. Paquet) also referred to the fact that the government should endeavour to secure more French settlers for the province of Quebec by carrying on a more active propaganda in France. I may say that ever since 1896 and even prior that the Canadian government has had an agency in that country. Hon. Hector Fabre, a former senator in our parliament, a distinguished gentleman, one of the most remarkable literary men Canada has ever produced, has been acting as our commissioner in France for a good many years now. He publishes in the French capital a paper called 'Paris-Canada,' the main object of which is to spread throughout the country better knowledge of Canada and its advantages. He was successful for several years in stimulating emigration to Canada by successfully carrying out a scheme by which lectures were to be delivered throughout France on the great possibilities of our Dominion. Since then, two more agents were appointed to help him along, Mr. Paul Wiallard and Mr. Foursin-Escandre, the latter being widely known in Canada, having lived among us for several years. He was instrumental in settling several French groups in the North-west Territories and his proficiency in matters pertaining to colonization is beyond question. He was for several years employed with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I doubt very much if we have in Europe an agent better able than he to direct immigration to our ports. I may say the same thing for Mr. Willard, who has been represented as a mere amateur absolutely ignorant of conditions in Canada. True, such language did not emanate from my hon. friend (Mr. Paquet), but the public press in the province of Quebec tried to have him pass as utterly unfit for the position he holds, a thing I cannot agree with. Not only is Mr. Wiallard fully qualified, but he is thoroughly informed on our country, he is an honourable man, he is fully aware of the requirements of colonization in Canada and he has worked wonders as such since his appointment as emigration agent in France. I will observe, however, to my hon. friend what I already observed before the House some time ago, and that is, first, that the French do not emigrate ; this is a notorious fact in Europe. They do not emigrate even to their own colonies, Algeria, Madagascar, Tonquin, &c. The number of French immigrants is so restricted that indeed it is not worth while talking about. Moreover, owing to a system of military conscription which prevails in France and which compels the government to treat with severity whoever attempts to dissuade young men from performing service, all recognized immigration agents are meeting with no quarter from the authorities. But some will say : Do not go to Paris to secure immigrants, we don't want the French from the large cities, we don't want graduates from universities, literary men, intellectuals who know nothing of farm life and who are unable to earn a living by strength exertion; those are not the desirable class of people we need, but get us the agricultural class, the peasants from the provinces. But, as I said, statistics will prove, and they cannot lie, that not only the citizens of the large cities such as Paris, Bordeaux, Lyons, &c., do not emigrate, but the peasantry as well.

As far as French investment are concerned, I may say to my hon. friend from L'Islet that they have acquired wider proportions in Canada in the last few years. The 'Crédit-Foncier,' a French institution in Montreal, is doing very good business. As a rule, French savings have been very timid ever since the Panama failure. The French country people are used to saving their doubloons in the traditional woollen stocking. At most do they buy the state stocks, and French capital, as I said, is seldom seen to emigrate since the Panama crisis.

Mr. PAQUET. (Translation.) Does not the hon. minister think that we could secure more French capital in this country if our efforts in France led to more active emigration work, and a better system of advertising our resources and possibilities.

Hon. Mr. LEMIEUX. (Translation.) My hon. friend will allow me to say that like Frenchmen, French capital does not care much for the outside world. It is universally recognized to-day that France in the richest country in the world ; in no banks in any country is there such accumulation of gold as in the Bank of France, and yet that gold does not go much out of the country, at least not out of Continental Europe. Russian loans have been negotiated there, however, and the Bank of England is a frequent borrower, but America seems to have but little attraction for French gold. Still and all, I hold, like my hon. friend from L'Islet, that with more activity on the part of our commercial agents, with amended treaties and owing to the intense development of our young country, French capital may some day come to stay in Canada.

Such are, Sir, the few remarks that I wished to make in answer to my hon. friend from L'Islet.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Some allusion has been made, both to-day and in previous discussions on immigration questions, to the character of the immigrants brought to this country by the Salvation Army. I am in a position to speak from experience as to the quality of that immigration. To the constituency which I have the honour to represent there have come quite a large number of people sent there by the Salvation Army. This immigration has been going on for the last two or three years, so that we now have there quite a large number of these people. I have taken considerable interest in the matter and have watched the character of these people sent there from time to time, and I can state as a matter of fact that there is no reason whatever to quarrel with the character of that immigration so far as I have observed it. I know of only one case that proved unworthy, and the Salvation Army authorities took charge of it. I make this statement in order to meet the attempts that have been made on the part of some interested parties, or on the part of some body who may not be interested to discredit the character of this immigration. Now some complaints have been made to the Minister of the Interior that sufficient immigration was not coming to certain quarters of this country. I am not in a position to make such a complaint ; on the contrary, complaints have reached me within the last few weeks that too much immigration was coming to my constituency. I have several communications from people in my constituency to that effect. The mayor of Sydney, for instance, has written to me on more than one occasion pointing out that too many immigrants were coming to that town, and asking me to see if the tide could not be arrested.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I desire to draw the attention of the minister to a subject which, although it is not covered by any of these items, perhaps he will allow me to mention on this occasion. In 1885 a number of loyal men met their death in the Northwest rebellion in outlying points ; for instance, at Frog Lake a couple of men from my own county met their death, one of them being a young man named Gilchrist. I understand that they were buried where they fell. A former minister of the Interior, the Hon. Thos. White, proposed taking this matter up, but he passed away about the time it was brought to his notice, and I understand nothing has been done in the matter since. I take this opportunity of drawing the minister's attention to the fact that the graves of these men have never been marked, although they are known. The intention was, I think, to have their bodies brought to some central point and decently interred. I would like to suggest to the minister that it would be a proper action on his part to detail some of his officers to take charge of this matter, and see that these men are properly interred. Has the minister any data in connection with it ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am sorry to say I have no data on the subject except that which my hon. friend has just given the House. I do not know what the understanding of the previous government was, or what promise was made by a previous minister ; but if there was a promise of that kind, certainly I would feel bound to see that it was carried out.

Mr. MARSHALL. A good deal has been said to-night about farm labourers, but nothing about women. Would it not be well to encourage women to come into Canada, good strong women and girls ? Manufacturers in this country are handicapped very much by shortness of female help, particularly the canners. I would like the minister to consider whether it would not be well to encourage women to come over, and give a bonus on bringing them as well as the men. Another question. Can any one that has not been appointed by the government get a commission for bringing in immigrants to different localities ? I ask this question because I notice that the agent the minister has in Aylmer, Ontario, has not brought in many immigrants, but they have been brought in to that town by other parties, and the farmers have paid $2 a piece for them.

Mr. OLIVER. To whom did they pay the $2 ?

Mr. MARSHALL. To the party that located the help.

Mr. OLIVER. By what means were these people located with the farmers ?

Mr. MARSHALL. By the clerk of the town, I think. I do not know who got the fee but I think the farmers paid the $2.

Mr. OLIVER. If our agent had anything to do with it of course he was not entitled to any consideration, but if our agent is found taking any money from a farmer for any services not rendered, his connection with this department ceases forthwith. ;

Mr. MARSHALL. I do not think he got a cent.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I do not at all agree with the idea of appointing local agents to distribute immigrants in this country. Last year the local government had the immigrants come to Toronto, and applications were made to the local member, who located them all over my riding, and I heard of no trouble and no complaints. I think it is a waste of money. We are always complaining that we are spending too much money as it is. I agree with a good deal that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has said about the kind of immigrants that we ought to get in this country. In fact I almost thought that the hon. Minister of the Interior had forgottten himself and was making one of his old time speeches because it was so much like what he used to say when he was a private member of this House. I wish also to refer to the security we are getting for advances. We were told over and over again by deputy minister Smart that the Doukhobors have given security for advances on the lands that were given to them by the government and at the same time they did not own a foot of land in this country. They would not take it on the terms upon which the government offered it to them. There is another matter in regard to which I differ with members of this House, and that is that the government should not make any provision for transporting people from one part of this country to the other. The old provinces are complaining of being depopulated. At the last general election we in the province of Ontario lost six members because we had not increased our population in keeping with the increase in the province of Quebec. I say it is not the business of the government to move people from one part of the country to the other.

Mr. BOURASSA. In case there is a tendency on the part of some people to go to the United States does my hon. friend not think it would be well to try and keep them here and to send them to western Canada rather than to allow them to go to the United States ?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Yes, but where are you going to draw the line ? My hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) thinks he can decide everything, even points of order. He thinks that everything he says in this House has to go. We cannot keep people from going to the United States. If they want to go and if they can get good openings there they will go, but I am opposed to the government helping people to go from one part of this country to the other.

I understand that the North Atlantic Trading Company are making a claim on account of the cancellation of their contract. We had paid them up to last September $306,000 and for the last three years we paid them $228,178.42. They had expended $84,428.61 leaving a balance to them for the three years of $133,749. or about $43,000 a year for each of the last three years as profits. They were required to expend $15,000 a year but they spent in three years something like $24,000 more than that. I would like to know what position the government is in in reference to the North Atlantic Trading Company at the present time. I do not know whether this comes under this item or not. I have contended for a good many years that the government ought to itemize the immigration estimates a good deal more than they do, ought to give us details of them, but they generally pass them in two or three large amounts and I do not think it is fair to this country or to parliament, because this information should be given to the public before their money is spent. I would like the minister to tell us what position the North Atlantic Trading Company is in in reference to a settlement with the government.

Mr. OLIVER. The North Atlantic Trading Company have still a balance coming to them.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How much ?

Mr. OLIVER. We have not settled how much. They claim on all the immigrants received in Canada before the 30th November last, a balance of about 1,500. We are in negotiation with them on that point. We have not come to a conclusion yet, but that is the amount that is in dispute between us. Perhaps we will pay it all and perhaps we will not.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. There must be more than that in dispute between you.

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that is all. Of course they have written claiming in a general way that they are entitled to some special consideration because of the cancellation of their contract, but they have not stated anything definite in that regard and we have not entered into any discussion with them on that point.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. They are not being paid for any immigrants now coming in ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, they are not being paid for any one coming in after the 30th November.

Mr. FOWLER. Are they suing you on account of cancellation ?

Mr. OLIVER. They have not so far. They have written us letters in which they claim an indefinite consideration because of the cancellation of their contract.

Mr. FOWLER. By way of damages ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that they say damages but that would be the inference. We have not discussed that point with them. When they take proceedings it will be time enough to consider the matter and discuss it with them.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand that the hon. member for Labelle was making some objection to the character of the immigrants that are being sent out by the Salvation Army and kindred associations. For the benefit of the hon. member for Labelle I might read an article that appeared in the 'Witness' to-day with respect to a number of immigrants who have just arrived by steamer at the port of Halifax.

A despatch from Halifax reports the arrival there yesterday afternoon of the Dominion Line steamship 'Southwark,' chartered by the Salvation Army, with 1,365 immigrants. The steamer had an uneventful voyage. The newcomers are all English——

That will be sad news for the Minister of the Interior who objects to English people.

—with the exception of a party of Dutch people, numbering about thirty-five. The immigrants are in charge of Colonel Rathwell, of London headquarters ; Staff-Captain Patterson, of Quebec, and Captain Vienstia. The Halifax Salvation Army band was at the pier when the 'Southwark' docked. The passengers are reported to be the finest looking class of settlers landed at Halifax this season.

These are all English with the exception of 35 Dutchmen.

There were 1,125 adults, 225 children under fourteen years of age, and fifteen infants. Colonel Rathwell says he has seen nearly all the Salvation Army people who have come to Canada, but this shipload surpassed them all in quality. Nearly every man in the party is a tradesman, or experienced farmer, and has a position waiting for him. 'England can ill afford to lose the people the Salvation Army is now bringing into Canada,' said Colonel Rathwell.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. What is the name of the officer in Prince Edward Island and what are his duties ?

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman's name is McLaughlin. We are trying a little experiment in regard to Prince Edward Island, something on the line of the discussion which has taken place already. We have been a little cautious in undertaking such experiments, but we thought we would be safe in undertaking this one in regard to the island. It is no doubt a very fertile agricultural country and it no doubt has suffered from a depletion of population and a depression in the price of land. We thought that under such circumstances it might be that we could find in the old country some people on the small rented farms who would be glad to purchase land of their own and who would be glad to accept conditions as they are in the island, that possibly they might transfer their capital and ability and industry from the old country to the island and be willing to pay a fair price for the sake of having their own land and in this way add something to the population of the island and tend to increase the value of the farm lands. With that view we prepared some literature last fall and sent Mr. McLaughlin to the old country to see what he could do in attracting the small farming class in the old country, who would be able to buy the cheap farms of the island and thereby increase the general value of farm land and possibly add to the wealth of the province generally. It was thought that in the event of success we might extend our operations to the other maritime provinces and perhaps to all the eastern provinces, but we wish to be a little cautious and do not want to experiment on a large scale until we have some idea of how the experiment will work. A month or two ago we sent a similar agent from Nova Scotia to bring before the small tenant farmers of the old country the opportunity offered them of acquiring cheap and good farms of their own in Nova Scotia.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What is the government going to do about this North Atlantic Trading Company after sending their own officer to Amsterdam, having him make a thorough inspection of the books and report that the company had not only carried out their bargain with the government, but had spent in three years $24,000 more than the bargain called for. The minister said that results are what was bargained for. The bargain was that they should spend $15,000 a year. They wrote the minister a letter dated the 12th of November in which they point out their view of the reasons for the cancellation. They state in the first place that the minister is a new man and knows nothing about the transaction, that the deputy minister is also a new man and that Mr. Preston is too far away and as a matter of course cannot be consulted, while Mr. Scott, the Superintendent of Immigration, has never taken much interest or had much to do with it. That is what they say about the fitness of these gentlemen for their office. I do not say that in a fault finding way, because new men would naturally be in that position and I do not blame Mr. Scott as he has had his hands full without that. After talking about the onslaught by the opposition, they say:

> We must conclude that your government felt itself totally unable to resist these attacks, not having a sufficient knowledge of the services we were rendering and was therefore driven to take the responsibility of cancelling the agreement, even though in absolute repudiation of its very definite terms.

The minister knows as well as any body in the House that this was a contract for ten years; that it could not be cancelled except on four years' notice given in writing as long as both parties kept up their part of the agreement, but the minister has not only cancelled it, but he said a little while ago that this government is being asked by the company what they are going to do about it; they had made arrangements for a propaganda for years, had been well equipped with a staff and everything and had just got things nicely into operation when the contract was cancelled. Now they are claiming damages—

I have not heard of their committing suicide. I suppose the government has saved them from that by not giving the names. There was a clause in the contract providing that they were not to break the laws in any country in which they operate, and I do not see how the government can assist them in breaking the laws or upholding them if they break the laws of any country, after their agreement not to break them. I do not see any excuse for the government withholding the names; the public have a right to know them, and when the government shield these men and refuse to give the names to the public they are parties to the crime—and I will call it a crime because I do not think we should encourage agents to go to any country and violate the laws. We want to live at peace, to be honest and we would despise that kind of thing in private life. I hope the minister will tell us how he gets around that clause in the contract which is for ten years. These men are reported by his own agents to have fully complied with the arrangement and are now claiming damages for the opportunities they should have had to earn money.

Mr. OLIVER. We propose to deal with the matter according to our understanding of the terms of the contract and of their fulfilment. In regard to the cancellation of the contract and our liability under it, I took advice from the Department of Justice before giving notice of cancellation and was informed by that department that the government was not liable——

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Is that in writing, and will you bring it down?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, it is in writing and I shall bring it down. I was under the impression that it was down. I cannot give the words exactly, but the meaning is that the government was to pay according to the contract, provided the money was voted by parliament; that is to say, the company in their contract took the chance of parliament——

Mr. URIAH WILSON. That is too small.

Mr. OLIVER. It may be small or large, but they took the chance of parliament voting the money to make the payments required by the contract.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not think the government could have done it, after the discussion that took place here.

Mr. OLIVER. At any rate the contract was cancelled before the discussion took place and the advice of the Minister of Justice was received considerably before the contract was cancelled. I had that advice before I gave notice of the cancellation or of course I would have felt that there was a possibility of being compelled to pay damages which I think we are not subject to pay.

I wish to refer to a number of statements made in this debate, the first in connection with the policy of the department as to the class, kind or quality of people it is the purpose of the government to induce to come to this country. Our friends a few days ago were very funny in reading from 'Hansard' of some years ago expressions which I had used in the House on the subject of immigation, indicating what my views then were on the subject, as to the necessity and propriety of selection in immigration, and they seemed to be under the impression that the views which I expressed then were not the views which I hold now. I beg to inform my hon. friends that the views which I expressed then I have the honour of putting into force now, and that the policy of the department to-day is essentially and distinctly a policy of selection in immigration, and not a policy of indiscriminate immigration, and that the practice of payment of bonuses to steamship agencies is adjusted on that principle, so that the bonus, being payable only on people who fill certain requirements, is not an inducement to the booking agent to send the class of people my hon. friend spoke about, but is an inducement to him not to book that class of people, because he gets $5 a head for the people who are desirable, while he does not get a cent for the people who are not desirable. In regard to the immigration of people to the eastern provinces of Canada, I have had occasion to say before, and I think everybody here will agree with me, that every interest of every part of Canada is served by the settlement and development of the western provinces. It would surely be a mistake, if we have say a thousand farmers coming to Canada, to settle those farmers in the lake St. John district of the province of Quebec rather than on the prairies of Manitoba or Saskatchewan, if we are looking to agricultural development that will assist the industrial, commercial and financial development of the country at large. Is it not true that a thousand farmers, men of capital and enterprise, settling in the province of Saskatchewan will add to the wealth of the country in five years, five or ten or fifty times as much as they would if settled in the Lake St. John district? Then, why should we use the public money of the Dominion to send people to where their opportunities are less rather than to where their opportunities are greater, when the very purpose of bringing them is that they shall take the best advantage possible of their opportunities, for the benefit of everybody in all parts of the country? Under the change of circumstances that has taken place by reason of the development of the western country, partly because of the attraction of people from the east to the west, but more because of the industrial and commercial prosperity in the east resulting from the development of the west, there exists to-day a demand for labour in the eastern provinces of Canada such as was never known before in those provinces. Now, surely nobody would want a government to bring from continental Europe or from the British islands to this country, people who are looking for daily wages when our own wage-earners were seeking their wages on the other side of the line? Surely we were not doing wrong in turning to account and developing the Northwest before we ran a labouring population into eastern Canada to crowd out our own workers. But when the demand for labour in eastern Canada has increased to such an extent as no man has ever seen it before, then is the time when the government may take account of that fact, and may, with the consent of parliament, take some means to provide for the need of labour as it exists in the eastern provinces. We are trying an experiment in Ontario, and it will be noticed by the House that whereas the members representing the other eastern provinces are strongly in favour of this policy, the members on the opposition side at any rate, from the province of Ontario, are almost unanimously against it. These are some of the difficulties under which we labour in administering the Immigration Department. However, I think it will be admitted that there is a demand for farm labour in the province of Ontario, and that whoever meets that demand will be doing good, whether he gets credit for it or not.

Mr. FOWLER. It has been stated that the government of the province of Ontario, has already taken steps to look after that branch of immigration work. In the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island the local governments have not been doing that work. Why then did the Federal government not devote its attention to those provinces rather than to the province of Ontario where the work was already being done?

Mr. OLIVER. The reason is that we did not consider what the one government or the other government was doing. The demand for farm labour came to us from Ontario; it did not come to us from the maritime provinces to anything like the same extent. It is not our business what the Ontario government is doing, whether it is doing well or ill. If there is a necessity for work to be done along the line of the effort we are engaged in, it is our duty to fulfil that requirement as far as we are able to do it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the minister think it right for the Dominion government officials to take charge of immigrants brought in by the agencies of the Ontario government, on their arrival at Quebec and side track them from their destination ?

Mr. OLIVER. If my hon. friend has been informed to that effect, he has been misinformed.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have been informed by the gentleman in charge of the work in Ontario.

Mr. OLIVER. I have heard some statements attributed to that gentleman, and I am bound to say that they are not always close to the fact.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He is a good sound Liberal.

Mr. OLIVER. Whether he is or not, I can only say that the statements credited to him in the past have not always been accurate. As long as the demand exists in Ontario for farm labourers, which the Ontario government is not filling, we surely are not doing wrong in trying to fill it. Now, I want to draw a distinction absolutely and strongly between the responsibilities which the government has assumed in regard to farm labour and in regard to any other kind of labour. We are out to assist farm labour, and we are not out to assist any other kind of labour. That is to day we are not out to bring competitors to the artisan class in the province of Ontario or any other part of the Dominion. With regard to the bringing out of women, we are assisting, as far as possible, the bringing of domestic servants, but we are not attempting to assist or facilitate in any way the bringing out of any other class of female workers. Nor are we assisting to bring any class of male workers except those who want either to go on the land and cultivate it themselves or engage in its cultivation for others or to work in railway construction. Canada is constructing a vast mileage of railways and needs railway labourers very much. We believe that the wages given in the construction of railways afford a magnificent opportunity to the poorer industrious workers of the older countries to earn money which will enable them afterwards to go on free lands, and we are offering inducements to railway labourers to become settlers.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Have you any systematic arrangements with the railway companies?

Mr. OLIVER. No, we are simply advertising the facts of the case. We are not engaging railway labourers as such. We do not want the man who only comes to Canada to earn a wage in working on a railway, but we want to get hold of men who are hardy, industrious and ambitious but have not the means to come out and settle on farms. To that kind of man we say here is work and wages for you which will enable you later on to take advantage of the offer of free lands which Canada holds out to you.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I would like the minister to tell us when the supplementary estimates will probably come up on immigration as I have something more to say and will reserve it until then.

Mr. FIELDING. They will be down Tuesday or Wednesday and discussed as soon as possible afterwards.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I would like to know when because I do not want to stay here all summer.

Mr. FIELDING. You are not more anxious to get away than we are.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I want to say a word about the minister's excuse for cancelling the North Atlantic Trading Company's contract. We have this government, with a majority of fifty to sixty, saying it cannot pass certain estimates. My experience of the past twenty years is that if the government brings down an estimate, it matters not what it is for, it will likely go through.

Mr. McKENZIE. From a remark dropped by the Minister of the Interior to the effect that, to all appearances, the Ontario members were opposed to this experiment for supplying Ontario farmers with farm help, I wish to say that such is not the case. From my experience in going through the counties of Ontario, especially the western counties, this movement is a very popular one; and when some hon. members state that the Ontario government is engaged in this work and consequently it is unnecessary for the Dominion to take part in it, I have to say that the Ontario government has never reached more than a few counties outside of Toronto to any great extent.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. They have reached Lennox and Addington.

Mr. McKENZIE. I say not to any great extent. I have personal knowledge of the necessity for farm help in the western parts of Ontario, and I ask the Department of the Interior to turn its attention in this direction with the object of getting out young men from the old country who would spend two or three years on Ontario farms and then go west and obtain homes for themselves. If the department would do this and keep up the supply, according as these young men left us after we had trained them, their places would be taken up by others. There is room for both governments in this work, and if other provinces want to have the work extended to them, as the experiment is perfected, they have the right to ask for it. The experiment is very popular and necessary in the interests of agriculture in the older provinces, especially Ontario.

Mr. LAKE. Would the Minister of the Interior kindly tell me if he has calculated the relative cost of immigrants from the United States, from the United Kingdom, and from other countries?

Mr. OLIVER. It is impossible to give my hon. friend an answer that would really meet the question. We may take a number of figures and strike an average, but the result need not be really a very satisfactory answer. I am informed that, as we calculate it, the cost is about the same from Great Britain and the United States, and it averages really about the amount of the bonus, which averages about $5 a head. The House will understand that under our system, we do not pay on more than about one-third of the immigrants who come, as only about one-third are eligible to receive the bonus. That is how the cost amounts to not more than about the amount of the bonus.

Mr. LAKE. The hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) the other day gave us some figures which he said he had received from the Immigration Department. He said that so much money had been spent in each country and that from each we had obtained so many immigrants. His figures showed that the immigrant from the United States cost on an average $4.28, from Great Britain, $1.75, and from all other countries, $2.32. I have been making calculations myself on such figures as are supplied by the Auditor General's Report, and my figures work out somewhat on the same lines. That is to say, that the British immigrant costs much less than the American and less also than the continental. I would like the minister to give instructions to have that calculation made, as it is very important that we may see what he is spending in each country and have it brought before the House when the supplementaries come down. One matter I would call attention to it is this. As the cost of every immigrant from the United States is so very large, is it worth while to continue those orders of a million copies of the Winnipeg 'Free Press' which each year involve an expenditure of some $30,000 ? When it was decided to send out a large number of copies of an eight page newspaper, was the job put up to tender ? It seems to me that, in a case of that sort, it would be desirable that tenders should be called for.

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot answer the question as to the amount of money spent in proportion to the number of immigrants received. But I will get that information. At the same time I do not agree that it will be a statement that will have any pertinence to the real point at issue. There is no means of knowing what proportion of these immigrants have come as a direct result of the expenditure made. There might have been an immigration from some of these countries without any expenditure.

Mr. LAKE. It can be arrived at very nearly. Does the minister include in the present estimate another edition of a million copies of the Winnipeg 'Free Press' ?

Mr. OLIVER. No such item is included. At the same time I consider that the order to the Winnipeg 'Free Press' was a wise and prudent expenditure. The Winnipeg 'Free Press' is the newspaper which, above all others, is the great journalistic representative of Western Canada. The special edition contained a vast amount of valuable information, and, being in this particular newspaper, it carried weight such as it could not have carried in any other publication. As to the immigration induced by this publication, my hon. friend is perfectly well aware that the tremendous appreciation in the value of farm lands in the Northwest is due to the movement of people into our country from the United States more than to any other cause, and that that movement has been promoted mainly by such publications as this and by the efforts of our agents in that country. It is possible that the time has come when we can get on without further immigration effort; but, if my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) holds that opinion, I think he will be alone in the Northwest in holding it. At the present time, every town in the Northwest has its fifty thousand club or its hundred thousand club. The people are spending their own money in large sums for the purpose of keeping up the flow of immigration which has been the cause of the prosperity of that country and the prosperity of this.

Mr. LAKE. The hon. minister (Mr. Oliver) seems not very anxious to get his estimates through, when he is continually raising contentious questions. He suggests that I want to put a stop to immigration effort, which he knows is not the case. No such suggestion was ever made by me.

Mr. OLIVER. Did not my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) say the time had come——

Mr. TAYLOR. Sit down.

Mr. LAKE. I will answer a question, if the minister wishes to put one ?

Mr. OLIVER. I want to put this question : Did not my hon. friend say that the time had come to cease such effort as this ?

Mr. LAKE. Nothing of the sort. The minister cannot show in 'Hansard' any statement of mine to that effect. I know it is a very favourite trick of his to impute statements to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House which they never made.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, are we allowed to use such expressions as that ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think that that word should be employed in debate.

Mr. LAKE. What word ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. 'Trick.' It suggests a taking of advantage. I do not think it should be employed.

Mr. LAKE. I withdraw the word 'trick' and will say, it is a favourite habit of the minister, as I have noticed over and over again, for he has used it often in relation to my own remarks. What I am suggesting is that when it is proposed to issue a newspaper with specially prepared matter such as was issued in the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' the contract should be put up for public tender. There are three newspapers in Winnipeg each of which has a great name in the west, and they should all have an opportunity to tender on a work like this. I do not want to follow the example of the minister and obstruct his estimates, but, there is one question which I should like to ask. Has there been a great leakage from the immigration that went into the Northwest? The census returns indicate that there has been a leakage. Has the minister found many of the people who have gone to the Northwest leaving it soon after their arrival?

Mr. OLIVER. There is always a considerable back-wash of immigration. Not every one who comes into the Northwest finds it desirable to remain. And, of course, we have no means of holding them.

Mr. LAKE. Can the minister give us any figures? Is any note taken of those who go out?

Mr. OLIVER. We are busy counting the people who come in, not the people who go out. The census gives the necessary tally. It shows the number of people who are in the country, and the Immigration Department tells the number of people who have come in. We do not keep track of people coming in and going out in the ordinary course of travel.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister stated that this gigantic issue of the Winnipeg 'Free Press' and the labours of his agents in the country to the south of us, were largely responsible for the great influx of settlers from the United States into Canada. I take exception to that statement. To my mind the fact is that the much abused real estate agents are responsible for the greater part of this valuable immigration. They have done five times more than all the literature which has been distributed by the government and the labours of its agents who get so much per head for every body who comes in, whether they bring them in or not. But there is one matter to which I wish to direct the attention of the minister, a matter very important to the success of future immigration and very important for the welfare of the people already in the country. If the hon. gentleman has seen the bulletins, he will know that a strike has been declared among the coal miners in the Crow's Nest Pass.

He will remember the great suffering that was caused last winter by reason of the scarcity of coal in that country, a country where coal is a very necessary article. If this strike continues for a considerable length of time there will be much worse difficulty during the coming winter than there was during the last; because, in addition to the difficulty of obtaining coal at the mines, is the very great difficulty of obtaining cars to haul that coal from the mines and distribute it among the people. This is a very serious matter, and I earnestly direct the attention of the government to it. It is of the most intense importance, it seems to me, that the government should at once take up this question and endeavour to have this strike settled so that the mines may go on working, and coal may be mined in order to keep the people warm next winter. I trust the government will not lose a moment. Perhaps the Minister of Labour has already taken steps in order to avert this calamity which is impending.

Mr. DANIEL. Before this item is carried I would ask the minister if he could not give some promise that he will take into consideration the view that has been expressed in regard to providing literature to be sent to the old country pointing out the opportunities of the eastern provinces. The member for Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) said there was too much immigration into his part of Nova Scotia; but the immigration he is getting there is not that to which I refer. I presume he refers to miners and helpers about the large industries in that part of Nova Scotia. The men I speak of are farm labourers and farmers. We have in New Brunswick, I am sorry to say, many farms that are not being worked, or have been worked and are now lying idle, the people have gone away, and they are such farms as would yield a good return to any one who cultivates land properly. We have many opportunities of that kind. I would like the minister, if he feels like doing so, to state that he will take this matter into consideration and get up some literature in regard to that part of Canada, and show that the eastern provinces will not be neglected in the future as they have been in the past.

Mr. OLIVER. I think my hon. friend is rather blunt in asking me to give a pledge offhand that a certain policy will be adopted. What I have said has been done in the case of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, Ontario and Quebec should be sufficient guarantee to him that the interest of New Brunswick will also be looked after in due course. But I would not like to pledge myself to a definite course of action until I am fully satisfied as to what course would be the best. I think it is not well for us to jump to conclusions too hastily. The responsibility of inducing people to change their place of abode and cross the ocean is a serious one, and I hesitate to take it without being satisfied that I am warranted in doing so. I will promise the hon. gentleman that the interests of New Brunswick shall have as full consideration at the hands of the immigration department as the interests of any other province of the Dominion.

Mr. TAYLOR : Perhaps the Minister of Labour will be prepared to make a statement, if not to-night, then to-morrow, in answer to what my hon. friend from King's-Albert (Mr. Fowler) has said with regard to the strike that has taken place to-day in British Columbia.

Mr. LEMIEUX. With regard to the reported strike in the Crow's Nest Coal mine I think that what has been published in the papers is not quite true. According to the last communication I had at about six o'clock, there will be no strike but a full investigation will take place. It is to be hoped that there will be an investigation and that it will prevent a strike. What has been published in the newspapers is that a referendum took place amongst the men, a majority of whom declared in favour of a strike. But they have not struck, and they will submit themselves to the law and go before a board. They have sent me the name of their representative on that board, so have the mine owners. There is, however, a discussion between the department and the mines owners as to whether we will accept the name that has been suggested by them. We find that the gentleman whose name has been presented to us is himself more or less connected with the coal mines and should not be on the board. We have given the company 24 hours to select another name. So far as I know, unless something new has taken place since six o'clock, there is no fear of a strike ; on the contrary, everything goes to show that there will be a happy settlement of the difficulty.

Mr. HERRON. Has the minister any news with regard to the Edmonton coal strike, which I see by the bulletin board this evening is declared ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have no information as to that.

Mr. FIELDING. I would suggest that the Minister of the Interior suspend his estimates in order that we may pass a number of other items which are of a purely routine character and are not likely to provoke discussion. If there is any one who objects to any vote it may stand for future consideration, and in this way we may dispose of a good deal in a short time. If the suggestion is adopted, I will begin at the beginning and if any objection is taken to any item we will reserve it, but if there is no objection we will pass it.

Dominion police, $37,500.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. There is an increase of $500 because five men have become entitled to increases by reason of going up in the classification from one grade to another.

Mr. DANIEL. I heard the other day that some constables of the city were around this building. Have the Dominion police control of this building ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The Dominion police in the building are attached to the Department of Justice and are in charge of the superintendent of Dominion police. I am not aware that any officers about the building are connected with the city police force. I have always assumed that they were Dominion police only.

Mr. DANIEL. I did not see them but I was told that there were constables belonging to the city in this building the other day.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. On duty ?

Mr. DANIEL. I believe so. I do not know if there was any infringement of a provincial or city law, but it appears to me that it ought to be decided whether this building is under the control of the Dominion authorities or under the control of the provincial or city authorities.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I will make inquiries about it. It is entirely new to me. I took it for granted that there were no police constables on duty in this building or on the premises except the men belonging to the Dominion police.

Mr. FOWLER. Speaking of the police, are they in charge on Sundays as well as on week days ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Not the full staff.

Mr. FOWLER. Because there seems to be sometimes occasion for the services of the Dominion police. This very last Sunday an occasion of that kind arose. One of the messengers had to take hold of a drunken man and put him out of the corridor of the House. This has got to be quite a resort for people around town who come up here on Sunday. I do not know what particular attraction there is for them unless it be the bar that was abolished some years ago but which seems to have attained quite a vigorous growth since that time. I know that when I came up on Sunday one of the messengers was engaged in putting a drunken man out of the corridor.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am informed by the sergeant-at-arms that there are not supposed to be any city police about the premises. The only police officers are the Dominion police who are on duty while the house is in session. If any necessity for a police constable arises when the House is not in session, I suppose it would be simply a matter of city police jurisdiction.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Have the Dominion police anything to do with the control of the bar in this House on Sunday ?

Mr. FIELDING. There is no bar in this House.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. When you see a continuous train of gentlemen coming into this building on a Sunday morning there must be something in the House to attract them.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I do not think there is any such feature of the House under the charge of the Department of Justice.

Library of parliament, $42,737.50.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Who selects the books for the library.

Mr. FIELDING. The librarians largely although there is a joint committee of both Houses in connection with the library.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There are quite a number of works of reference that one wishes to get in connection with the library and it is very difficult to find them. One will search in vain for anything like an accurate life of Samuel De Champlain. The works are not works of accuracy. They are written with the object of giving a false history in many instances.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. gentleman would call the attention of the librarian to any works he misses I have no doubt that he would be very glad to supply them.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance if the books in the library are purchased under the direction of the library committee or by the librarians themselves ?

Mr. FIELDING. I must not answer too positively because my knowledge is very limited, but I understand that while the committee directs the business the librarians have a very considerable measure of authority in purchasing books. There are certain classes of books which it would be proper that they should purchase, although on special matters I have no doubt that the committee give them directions.

Legislation—printing, binding, &c., $186,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. In reference to the printing of the voters' lists, I have received the following letter, and I think there is a good deal in it :

It strikes me that there is no very good reason why the Dominion government should continue the practice of printing the voters' lists in the way they do. These sheets are very unhandy, and it would be very little more expense and a great deal more convenient if the lists were printed in book form like the Ontario voters' lists. It would be convenient if the lists were printed separate in each polling subdivision in book form with a blank page opposite each printed page.

Mr. AYLESWORTH.

I think that suggestion is a good one, and I do not think it would cost much more. The Ontario lists are printed in that form but in the Dominion election we have the big sheets which are very cumbersome and inconvenient and I do not think would cost more to get them out in pamphlet form.

Mr. FIELDING. I would be glad to call the attention of the Secretary of State to this suggestion.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I agree entirely in the suggestion.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I would like to join my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) in his suggestion. It seems to me that the lists as printed are prepared with a scientific desire to give as much trouble as possible.

Mr. FOWLER. How often are they printed, and to how many copies is a member entitled ?

Mr. FIELDING. They are always printed on the eve of a general election and they are printed for by-elections. My recollection is that each member and each defeated candidate at the preceding election is entitled to 25 copies.

Some resolutions reported.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 164) to incorporate the Fidelity Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Johnston.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. We may take up one or two non-contentious Bills but at an early stage the House will be moved into Committee of Supply and the acting Minister of Public Works will continue his estimates.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.25 a. m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 16, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. GEOFFRION moved :

That the 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd and 24th reports of the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts be concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER. Unless the House consents this will have to stand as a notice of motion.

Mr. FIELDING. I notice that there is quite a number of reports and motions made to concur in them. Perhaps it would be well to let them lie on the table for a day or so until they appear on the order paper. I am not aware of any objection to them but I think it is as well that we should pursue that course.

Motion allowed to stand.

THE PETAWAWA CAMP.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I draw the attention of the leader of the House to a report from Toronto which appears in the 'Citizen' this morning, in regard to the confiscation of the Petewawa camp site, by the government, under the British North America Act. I do not suppose the leader of the House knows the details of the case and I have merely to ask, if, without any formal motion, he would be good enough, to bring down the papers in connection with this matter before the House closes.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is right in saying that I am not familiar with the details, and therefore I would not like to give an answer now. If there is any information which can be brought down quickly I will be glad to have it done. More than that I cannot say now.

YUKON—EX-COMMISSIONER CONGDON.

Mr. FOSTER. I asked the Minister of the Interior some days ago for the report with reference to the investigation made into Mr. Congdon's business in the Yukon. I fear the minister has forgotten it.

Mr. FIELDING. I will draw the attention of the minister to it.

JUDICIAL VACANCY—NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. BOYCE. I ask the leader of the House if any appointment has yet been made to the vacancy in the judiciary of Nova Scotia.

Mr. FIELDING. There have been two vacancies, one of which has been filled; the second vacancy which occurred recently has not yet been filled.

NEW BRUNSWICK JUDICIARY.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask the Minister of Justice whether the government has yet received information as to legislation passed in the province of New Brunswick, looking to the appointment of another and seventh judge in the Supreme Court; and if it is intended to ask from this House at this session an appropriation to pay for such proposed judge?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The only knowledge I have of the circumstances to which the hon. gentleman has alluded is derived from the public press. It was not the intention of the government to introduce any legislation on the subject in this House at the present session.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—Mr. SAM. HUGHES.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I notice in one of the morning papers a heading that in the House of Commons yesterday I made an onslaught, I believe, on the clergy. I do not wish to enter into a discussion of that matter, further than to say that I made no onslaught on the clergy; I simply recited a few facts.

REPRESENTATION OF SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 51) to readjust the Representation of the Provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta in the House of Commons, and to amend the Representation Act.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. FIELDING. This Bill was reported by a special committee of which my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) was the chairman and I will leave the matter in his hands.

Mr. FOSTER. When we discussed this Bill in the House last time, there were some errors discovered which could only be corrected by a careful reference to the map, and it was understood that the two sections of the committee were to meet and correct these inaccuracies. I do not see Mr. Lake here, but I imagine that has been satisfactorily arranged.

Mr. TURRIFF. The committee met and went carefully over the Bill from beginning to end, and there were three clerical errors all told that had been pointed out before, and we arranged it and made the corrections on the Bill which is now in the hands of the chairman of the committee. It was perfectly satisfactory.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

REVISED STATUTES — SCHEDULE A.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 148) to amend schedule A to the revised statutes, 1906.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I want to bring to the attention of the House a discovery that has recently come under my notice in connection with the revised statutes, and which is of great importance to the public of Canada. It is this: that the revised statutes in so far as one particular Bill is concerned has resulted in a direct change. The greatest liberties have been taken with the statute; there has been a reduction in the effect of the statute in some cases and an enlargement in others. I direct the attention of the Minister of Justice to what has happened in regard to section 9 chapter 110 of the statutes as revised in 1886. I hope the minister will get the revised statutes of that year in his hands and follow what I have to say. What I now propose to state to the House, has been prepared for me by able counsel in Toronto, and I think is worthy of attention; it is in reference to the law in regard to railways and railway tickets which was under discussion not long ago.

By section 9 of chapter 110 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1886, every railway company in Canada was compellable to repay to every holder of a ticket, the cost of his ticket if unused in whole, or in part less the ordinary and regular fare for the distance for which such ticket had been used. Such repayment had to be at any station or office of the railway or company between and including the points covered by the ticket.

By section 8 of said statute every person guilty of an offence against said statute was liable upon summary conviction before any justice of the peace to a penalty not exceeding $50, and not less than $20 and costs, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ninety days and not less than ten days, or to both penalty and imprisonment in the discretion of the justice.

By section 7 of said statute and by subsection 4 of said section 9 of chapter 110, the sale by any person of an unused portion of any ticket, otherwise than by the presentation of the same for redemption, as provided in said section 9 was declared to be an offence and was declared to be punishable as in said section 8 provided.

62 and 63 Victoria, chapter 38, section 2, amended section 7 of said statute by making the prohibition of sale of tickets apply to steamboats and ferries as well as to railways.

By the revision of the Statutes of Canada in 1906, chapter 110, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1886, became chapter 38, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, and by said revision sections 7 and 8 and subsection 4 of section 9 of chapter 110, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1886, are eliminated ; section 7 is amplified and re-enacted as section 10 of chapter 38, 1906.

The elimination of said section 8 of chapter 110, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1886, did away with the means provided for punishing railway companies, or their agents, for neglect or refusal to comply with the provisions of said section 9.

Section 10 of chapter 38 of Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, reads as follows :

10. Every person who—

(a) except those authorized as hereinbefore mentioned, sells, or offers for sale any railway, steamboat or ferry passenger ticket, or pass, ticket, certificate or other instrument, enabling any person or purporting to entitle any person to travel on any one railway, steamboat or ferry, or more than one railway, steamboat or ferry, or any part of one railway or parts of several railways to which this Act applies, or,

(b) issues the unused portion of any ticket, otherwise than by the presentation of the same for redemption under the provisions of this Act ; or

(c) fraudulently alters, changes or imitates the signature of the agent or the date written or stamped upon any ticket ; is guilty of an offence against this Act and shall upon summary conviction hereof before any justice of the peace, be liable to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars and not less than twenty dollars and costs, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ninety days and not less than ten days, or to both penalty and imprisonment, in the discretion of the justice.

The penalty provided in this section is provided for the breach of this section only and there is no penalty provided in this statute for breach of section 8 of this statute or for any other section of the statute.

There being no provision by way of penalty made in chapter 38, Revised Statutes of Canada for breach of section 8 of said statute, it might be urged that section 164 of the Criminal Code, chapter 146, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, which reads as follows :

164. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence, and liable to one year's imprisonment who, without lawful excuse, disobeys any Act of the parliament of Canada or of any legislature in Canada by wilfully doing any act which it forbids, or omitting to do any act which it requires to be done, unless some penalty or other mode of punishment is expressly provided by law; would apply, and it is clear that said section 164 would apply were it not that section 11 of chapter 38, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, provides that every complaint respecting an offence against this Act shall be prosecuted under the provisions of part 15 of the Criminal Code, and as part 15 of the Criminal Code relates only to summary convictions before a magistrate it is just as clear that the Criminal offence named in section 164 of the Criminal Code could not be so tried.

The result of the revision of chapter 110 of Revised Statutes of 1886 and of the consolidation of 62-63 Victoria, chapter 38, section 2, is to free all railways and their agents from the possibility of punishment for refusing to obey the provisions of section 8. chapter 38, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906.

Was the elimination of clause 8 of chapter 110, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1886 made purposely at the behest of the railway companies, or was it accidental ?

This statement has been very carefully prepared by a learned counsel in Toronto who has been following this statute and the effect of the revision of the law of 1886 as it is embodied in the revised statutes of 1906. He finds that while in the original Act a penalty is provided for disobedience of the Act both as against the railway company and as against the citizen, in the revised statues of 1906, that penalty is limited expressly to the passenger, and the penalty that formerly existed as against the railway company is removed. If that is true, and again I am advised that it is true, I wish to know and the people of Canada wish to know if similar liberties have been taken with all the statutes of this country in that revision. I am also told by other gentlemen who have looked into the matter personally that they have found changes of this character, and if that be the case it is time we knew about these things. If it is the case we cannot afford hereafter to accept a revision of the law as we accepted it this session. Nobody had an opportunity of reading the statutes; we took the word of the Minister of Justice and the assurance of the government that the commissioners to whom was entrusted this delicate duty of revising the statutes had taken no liberties with them, but as a matter of fact had consolidated them in such a way that no substantial changes had taken place, no changes from the original intention. It makes the public suspicious that in a case where the railway company is involved and there is a penalty as against the railway company and also as against any individual of the public, if that penalty is removed as against the railway company and is continued as against the ordinary individual a great wrong has been committed, and while I would not, just at this moment, ask the Minister of Justice to answer what I say, I intend to hand him the statement and hope before he has finished with this Bill that he will make a statement in regard to this very important matter.

Mr. LENNOX. I have noticed in looking up the statutes that there are changes which seem to me to go beyond the mere revision, changes which amount to amendments of the Acts. For instance in the General Railway Act, in section 199 and section 237, if I remember the numbers correctly, there are, in my judgment, very material changes, and I also see that in the opinion of Mr. McMurchy who has issued an annotation of the statutes there are changes in those sections which will probably affect cases which have been decided under that. I do not wish to go into the matter now but I would call the attention of the Minister of Justice and of the government to the fact that if the revisers have taken the same liberties throughout the revised statutes they have in the case of the Railway Act it will be found that they have far exceeded their jurisdiction and their duty, that they have practically made an amendment of the various provisions instead of confining themselves to mere verbal alterations in order to make the statutes more harmonious. I shall take occasion before the next session to look carefully into the matter and see to what extent this practice has prevailed; I did not wish to bring it up this session as we have not time to deal with it.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I would suggest that this discussion is scarcely germane to the matter before the committee, which is simply the consideration of some amendments with regard to the Northwest Territories in the schedule to the revised statutes. The matters referred to are matters, as the hon. gentlemen have said, which have not previously been brought to my attention. In reference to the point raised by the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) I find that chapter 38 of the present revised statutes appears to repeat every section of the enactment of chapter 110 of the statutes of twenty years ago. The sections are not arranged in the same order but every section of the statute of 1886 is to be found, so far as I am able to see, in chapter 38 of the present revised statutes, and I am unable to appreciate the point that has been attempted to be made with regard to the matters referred to by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) who has not been very specific. I venture to think, however, that if the Railway Act as contained in the new revised statutes is studied it will be found that no liberties whatever have been taken with that legislation in the existing law.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I hope that what the minister says is the case, but the case as I have put it to him has been prepared after a very careful examination of both laws, and I trust that he will read the statement over carefully and see whether there is not justification for the statement as I have presented it to him.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

EXPORTATION OF ELECTRIC POWER.

Amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 60) to regulate the exportation of electric power and certain liquids and gases, read the first time.

Mr. AYLESWORTH moved second reading.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the amendment?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The only alteration is the substitution for the word 'three' of 'six months' in the third section, which provided that any person who, before the passing of the Act, was lawfully engaged in the exportation of power or fluid should not be compelled to obtain a license until three months after the coming into force of the Act. The Senate has changed this to six months.

Amendment read the second time and concurred in.

INSPECTION OF MEATS AND CANNED GOODS.

Amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 33) respecting the inspection of meats and canned goods read the first time.

Mr. FISHER moved second reading.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Explain the amendments.

Mr. FISHER. Section 12 of the Bill, as it came from the Senate, which is section 10 (b) of the Bill as reprinted for the House of Commons, provides for the stamping of the names and addresses of the canners on the canned goods. We have had very urgent representations from a number of dealers to the effect that they are satisfied with the provisions of the section in every respect except as regards the export to certain markets. In England the importers insist that the goods shall have no mark. They put their own trade mark on. I think that is rather an unfortunate condition of affairs, but the trade is so set in that way that until they have been educated to a certain extent it seems impossible for our people to get over that difficulty. The following amendment was inserted in the Senate to this clause:

Provided, however, that if it be established to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council that such marking would hinder the sale of such articles in a British or foreign market, he may exempt such articles from the provisions of this section.

I was told recently that also in some parts of the United States they objected, and our fish and lobster canners in the maritime provinces have been sending goods to markets in the United States which require that the cans shall not bear any mark at all. This amendment does not exempt them when sold in our home market, and will only apply in case it is proved to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council that the marking will interfere with the sale abroad.

Mr. LALOR. Does this apply to all canned goods?

Mr. FISHER. It does not apply to meat goods, but only to vegetables, fruit and fish.

Mr. SPROULE. But what is there to prevent these goods, the marking of which is not insisted on, from being sold in Canada?

Mr. FISHER. They cannot if not marked, because the rest of the Act requires them to be marked if sold in Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the package be marked with any certificate that it has been inspected by officials of the government?

Mr. FISHER. This does not relieve them at all from the necessity of inspection and the government stamp of inspection where that is required but that is not required in the cases I have referred to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought that the reasons given in support of the Bill included the consideration that it was necessary, when goods from Canada went to foreign markets, that they should be accompanied by some certificate that they had been inspected in this country. That is the case with regard to meats. Does it not equally apply to goods of this character?

Mr. FISHER. The whole Bill did not apply, as far as that point is concerned, to goods of this character. It only applied to meat goods. The others were only to be stamped with the marks of the manufacturer.

Mr. LALOR. But it is not necessary these goods for export should be marked?

Mr. FISHER. If this provision passes the goods can be exported to a foreign market without any mark at all, but cannot be sold at home, and the foreign market must be specified in the order in council. My idea would be that this exemption should only be granted on its being proved that it was absolutely necessary for the trade.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If these goods are sold in Canada will they bear any certificate that they have been inspected by officers of the government?

Mr. FISHER. Only the meat goods.

Mr. BERGERON. How many inspectors?

Mr. FISHER. For the meat inspection about forty or fifty, for the canned goods general inspection as many as will be found necessary, probably half a dozen to ten.

Mr. BERGERON. And will these fifty or sixty inspectors be moving around the country?

Mr. FISHER. There will be one for every large canning establishment.

Mr. LOGGIE. I would draw the attention of the minister to the fact that France and Germany import more canned goods without labels than any other foreign countries. The United States import them in that form to some extent; and England, to a very limited extent. The greater proportion of the canned lobsters sent into France and Germany go in with unlabelled tins, the buyers holding the packers responsible for the class of goods they sell. I would like the minister to take note of these two countries, and also of Russia. In this last named country they have a special bronze label which they put on their tinned lobsters.

Mr. FISHER. This amendment made in the Senate covers the case to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Loggie) refers, and includes foreign countries as well as Great Britain.

Mr. BERGERON. How many inspectors are there now?

Mr. FISHER. None as yet.

Mr. BERGERON. Was there not an inspector for meats at the abattoir in Montreal?

Mr. FISHER. That was a local inspector.

Mr. BERGERON. Will there be any conflict between the local and the Federal inspectors?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. LALOR. Will poultry be included as meats under this Bill ?

Mr. FISHER. That whole question was threshed out before. Poultry will be included as meats.

Mr. LALOR. I may say, on behalf of the canning industry, especially all those canners who put up poultry, that there seems to be a certain amount of suspicion of the material packed in cans and called poultry. We are most anxious, therefore, that that part of our industry, especially should be rigidly inspected.

Mr. J. D. REID. What means has the minister of knowing that it is poultry that is put into these cans instead of something else ?

Mr. FISHER. That is proved by the fact that it passes inspection.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the Minister sure that there will be no conflict between the local and federal inspectors ?

Mr. FISHER. No, there will be no conflict.

Motion agreed to, and amendments read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. FISHER. Before leaving this Bill, I would like to move that it be sent back to the committee to make one small amendment. In section 12 of the Bill as printed for the Senate, or 10 (b) of the House of Commons Bill, it is provided that every can shall be stamped with the initials of the Christian name, the full surname and address of the packer. I wish to add 'or of the dealer for whom such articles are packed.' It has been represented to me that, in a number of cases, firms have their goods packed for them, they becoming responsible for the goods and the quality of the goods, and that, in such a case, it would be a hardship if the individual packer's name was required to be put upon them. I think all necessary safeguards can be thrown about the Bill with this additional amendment ; and, as I have wished all through to interfere as little as possible with the course of the trade, I have asked the House to add these words, which would enable the dealer, or the packer who was having goods packed for him outside of his own packing house, to put his name upon them and be responsible for them instead of the actual packer.

Mr. SPEAKER. It would be well to consider for a moment whether it is regular to propose such an amendment or not.

Mr. FISHER. If you rule, Mr. Speaker, that it is not in order to amend a Bill coming back from the Senate in this way, of course, I must not present the amendment in this form.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would suggest that it be allowed to stand that we may have an opportunity to look into the matter. I think, without having had opportunity to give the point full consideration, that where a matter has been concurred in by the other House, that cannot be amended here. If something had been amended by them, it could be amended here. If I am correct in that, it would not be in order to go beyond that point.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In that case, the same point could be practically covered by introducing a new Bill. I imagine that no difficulty would be raised by any one in the House.

Mr. FISHER. Perhaps, the better way is to allow the Senate amendments to be adopted, and I will consider a Bill to amend this. I move that the Bill do now pass and that the title be as in the order paper.

Motion agreed to and Bill passed.

INSPECTION AND SALE ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 162) to amend the Inspection and Sale Act—Mr. Fisher—was read the second time.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the House go into committee on the Bill. He said : The Bill contains practically two points. The first is to amend section 326 of the Inspection and Sale Act, chapter 85 of the revised statutes, which deals with the size of fruit baskets, and makes a little change. The second part is in regard to the balls of binder twine, and provides that offences under that section shall be dealt with on conviction before one magistrate instead of two ; further, that the fines shall not be shared with the inspector or informer, but shall be disposed of by the minister, and shall form part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. These are the main objects of this Act. I may add, with regard to the size of the baskets which is dealt with by this Bill, that in the revised statutes, chapter 85, section 326, the size of the baskets in which berries or currants are to be sold in Canada is regulated. Clause 2 of that section says :

> Every basket of fruit offered for sale in Canada, unless stamped on the side plainly in black letters at least three-fourths of an inch deep and wide, with the word 'quart' in full, preceded with the minimum number of quarts, omitting fractions, which the basket will hold when level-full, shall contain, when level-full, one or other of the following quantities :—
> (a) fifteen quarts or more ;
> (b) eleven quarts, and be five and three-quarter inches deep, perpendicularly, inside measurement, as nearly exactly as practicable.
> (c) six and two-thirds quarts, and be four and five-eighths inches deep, perpendicularly, inside measurements, as nearly exactly as practicable.

The amendment changes that to say in subsection (b) :

Eleven quarts, and be five and three-fourth inches deep perpendicularly, eighteen and three-fourths inches in length and eight inches in width at the top of the basket, sixteen and three-fourths inches in length and six and seven-eighths in width at the bottom of the basket, as nearly exactly as practicable, all measurements to be made inside of the veneer proper and not to include the top band.

Section (c) in the present clause :

Six and two-thirds quarts and be four and five-eighths inches deep inside measurement as nearly exact as practicable.

The amendment changes that to say :

Six quarts and be four and one-half inches deep perpendicularly fifteen and three-eighths inches in length and seven inches in width at the top of the basket, thirteen and one-half inches in length and five and seven-eighths inches in width at the bottom of the basket, as nearly exact as practicable, all measurements to be inside of the veneer proper and not to include the top band.

Then it goes on to say :

Provided that the Governor in Council may by proclamation exempt any province from the operation of this section.

This has been done in deference to a demand from the fruit growers who have asked, the last two years, that this change should be made. They made representations to the Department of Trade and Commerce and to the Department of Agriculture a year or more ago asking for this change. I may say that the statute as it stands and the definitions of the baskets were based on the request of the fruit growers. At that time they believed these were the ordinary baskets of commerce, and they asked that these provisions, with these definitions, should be incorporated in the Act, which was done when the Act was passed some five or six years ago.

Mr. J. D. REID. How do they compare with the size of baskets in the United States?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say exactly, but there is no regular standard in the United States.

Mr. J. D. REID. This won't prevent United States baskets coming in?
