Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I, for one, do not object to any reasonable, even generous, expenditure for the purpose of equipping the ports which are regarded as the national ports of this country. What I would like to see is some definite policy for the development of these ports and not a mere system of loaning money or postponing our payments and getting along from hand to mouth as we have been doing for many years. I do not regard this proposal as essentially differing from a loan by the government to this Quebec Harbour Commission. We are postponing our own claim and if ever the government has to take over the maintenance of the harbour they will be obliged to discharge this claim. So that the proposal is not substantially different from a loan by this government to the Quebec Harbour Commission. I am not very much disposed to quarrel with expenditures upon works of a certain character by a commission, but the point that my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) made was not so much that. The point that he made was that we did not seem to have any very definite information in regard to it. I would like to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) whether in respect of this expenditure and of past expenditures and whether in respect of the expenditure at Montreal the accounts are audited and gone over by any officer of the government. That is the essential point of my hon. friend's remarks.

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot say in regard to the past. When the government were advancing money they probably provided for a check and an audit. These moneys are not being advanced by the government.

The power is given the harbour commission to deal with this matter, they have their accounts audited, and I do not know there is a government audit of the moneys which are borrowed or loaned. I find by the report of the Harbour Commissioners for the year 1905, which my hon. friend has just handed me, that the accounts are audited and certified to as follows :

> We hereby certify that we have examined the statement of the assets and liabilities of the Quebec Harbour Trust and we find the same in all particulars to be the true position of the trust at that date.
> (Sgd.) L. BERGEVIN,
> ALEX. J. MESSERVEY.

I presume that these auditors are not government auditors but that they are appointed by the Harbour Commissioners themselves.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would be inclined to think that where we are practically loaning the money, or, as in some cases, practically making a gift of the money, we should have a government audit. I have already pointed out that in my humble opinion it is practically the same as a loan by the government, because we postpone our claim, and we must eventually pay this off if we ever take over the harbour. I do not know anything about the expenditure in Quebec, and I am not prepared to say that a dollar's value has not been received for a dollar's expenditure, but there are persons in the country who think that such is not the case.

Mr. FIELDING. Recently?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, I have heard that within the last three or four years, and in Quebec itself. I do not know that there is anything in it, but I have heard apprehension expressed as to the work. I do not say this with the idea of reflecting on the commissioners, because there may be no foundation for it ; and even if the expenditure had not been of the best possible character, it might not have been the fault of the commissioners ; they may have employed contractors who did not do their work well and whose default was not discovered in time. It seems to me that first of all we should have the work done under the supervision of a government engineer, who should certify——

Mr. FISHER. The works have to be submitted to and approved by the government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I know the plans of the work must be approved, but that is not what I am speaking of. I am sure that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher), upon reflection, will as a business man agree with me that where we are practically expending public money we should not only approve of the plans, but we should have a government engineer to certify that the work is properly done. In addition, we should have a government audit of the accounts. That would be an assurance to parliament and a safeguarding of the public interest.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think the suggestion to have a government engineer supervise the work would be practicable. The Harbour Commissioners of Quebec have their own engineer, Mr. Boswell, who is a very reputable man and an engineer of the highest standing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) does not understand me. When we grant subsidies to a railway we do not supervise every detail of the work, but before that subsidy is paid we have a government engineer to inspect the work and see that the company's money as well as the government's money has been properly laid out. When we are expending the country's money on a harbour in Quebec, or in Montreal, or in St. John, or in Halifax, or anywhere else, we should have the government engineer to go over that work, report to the government that the work is there, that in his judgment the money has been properly expended and that the work is of a character to be useful to the public. That is no detriment to the interest of the harbour, and it safeguards the public interest.

Mr. FISHER. I would sympathize with that view if we considered this to be the country's money, but I do not think that has ever been considered, or that it is the principle upon which these loans to the commission are authorized. The harbour commission is a fully constituted body, with the organization necessary to carry on its work. When the parliament of Canada decides to authorize by statute this commission to do certain work, it is the duty of the commission to carry out that work ; and if there is any doubt of its capacity to do so, parliament ought not to give it that authority. There is a difference between this case and the payment of a railway subsidy, which is contingent upon the carrying out of certain work. The authority of the Harbour Commission of Quebec to make a loan is of a totally different character. They have their own engineer, they plan their own work, they do it ; the only thing the government requires is that the plans should be submitted for approval, because it is work done in a great port and of such a public nature that it must necessarily be approved by the government, just in the same way as the building of a bridge across a navigable river has to be approved, even though the municipality or any other authority should build it. But the conduct of the work, and the question as to the specifications being carried out, is left to the authority which builds the bridge and is responsible for the work. In the same way, the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec are responsible to see that the work is carried out. The principle of making these advances to the commission may be questioned, but my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) does not question it, although my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) seems to. The existing principle has been adopted by our predecessors in office, has been carried on for decades, and we have not seen our way to make any change. If parliament thinks it is better that this work should be carried on under a department of the government, that is open to fair discussion. But until we do make that change, we have to continue as we have been doing. To say that the government engineer would criticise and perhaps interfere with the work of the harbour engineer would not be practicable. As to the details of the work now proposed to be carried out with this money, the Minister of Finance read over the different items. I was with the Prime Minister when these matters were laid before him by the representatives of the Quebec Harbour Commission, and I know that most of the work proposed here is due to the requirements of the Canadian Pacific Railway to make the harbour of Quebec more convenient as a terminal port, where they propose to have their great ships come, and to facilitate the transfer of their passengers and their export and import freight. I remember seeing the plans, and I know that the work was almost entirely for that purpose.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as the development of these harbours is concerned, I am prepared to go even further than the government seems disposed to go, but I want a definite policy, and I want an intelligent supervision of the expenditure of the public money. I am afraid I must revise my opinion of my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) as a business man. He does not seem to remember that in respect to the expenditure on the Grand Trunk Pacific every one of the details of that expenditure must be submitted to an officer of the government appointed for the purpose, and that solely for the reason that we are guaranteeing three-fourths of the bonds. It is not a question of guaranteeing bonds here; it has been a question of having government money expended in the harbour of Quebec without any expectation of that money being returned. Yet the hon. gentleman says there should be no supervision and no auditing. I take issue entirely with him on that point. I say there should be supervision and there should be auditing. When he endeavours to draw a distinction by saying that this money is not being paid out by the government, I point out that we are postponing a claim of $6,000,000 owing to the people of this country, nominally at least, for the purpose of enabling $200,000 to be borrowed elsewhere. We are simply postponing our claim with the probable result that we will have to pay it off ourselves. Therefore, we are as much interested in the expenditure of this $200,000 as if we were lending it or giving it out of the public treasury of this country. I sincerely trust that so far as the expenditure on all these harbours is concerned, it will be such as will make them up-to-date harbours, able to compete with the ports of the United States, but I also most sincerely trust that whatever public money is expended on these public harbours will be expended under such conditions that the representatives of the people in parliament will be able to obtain all possible information, will be able, if necessary, to make inquiries in the Public Accounts Committee, and that no sum of public money will be paid over until there has been a fair and reasonable examination of the work by a suitable officer appointed by this government.

Mr. TALBOT. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has lashed himself into a very furious argument about the harbour of Quebec and the expenditures of the Quebec Harbour Commission. Probably if the hon. gentleman were aware of the composition of that commission politically he would not insinuate as he did a moment ago that at election times some of that money might have been used to forward the interests of some of the Liberal candidates in that particular part of the province of Quebec. I know that Mr. Macpherson, who is one of the leading members of the commission is a strong Tory, a fine business man, but a prominent Conservative of the city of Quebec. That Mr. William Dobell is also a prominent Conservative and that Mr. F. Carbray is a prominent Conservative, an ex-member of the local legislature and also that Mr. James Wood, the secretary-treasurer, is a Conservative, George Boswell, the chief engineer is a prominent Conservative and John C. Sullivan, the harbour master is also a prominent Conservative. If anything of the kind suggested was attempted, I imagine that these gentleman would raise their voices in dissent, and if my hon. friend had known their politics I am sure he would not have insinuated what he has done.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not know by whom these gentlemen are appointed. If they are appointed by the government, whether they are Conservatives or Liberals would not make any difference to my argument. I said I was opposed to a commission, I did not descend to the point of view of my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) who seems to see nothing but colours.

Mr. TALBOT. You spoke about the elections.

Mr. BERGERON. It is all the same to me whether the Harbour Commission is composed of Conservatives or Liberals so far as my argument goes. We have had examples of that in Montreal, we know how things have been carried on there, they have been carried on in a loose way. Commissioners are not interested as a minister of the Crown would be who knows that he would have to face this House the next session and be called upon to answer many questions. One or two of them did the work and the others simply went to the meetings of the board but did not take much interest in its work. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has touched the centre of the question by saying that there is no official inspection of what is going on, there is no auditing by an official of the government here under the authority of a minister of the department. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) mentioned the fact that in the Grand Trunk Pacific contract there is a clause saying that no moneys shall be paid unless the accounts are audited by an official of the Department of Railways and Canals. We had during this session an example of the good result of that clause when he was shown that an officer of the department in charge of the auditing, had prevented the government from paying out $160,000 for nothing. These harbour commissioners may be good honest and conscientious men, but that does not overcome my objection that a commission cannot do as well as a department would do, a department with an engineer responsible to the minister and the minister answerable to this House as to the manner in which the expenditure had been made. This is the position I have maintained for many years. I am opposed to commissions, I have always been. I questioned the Minister of Public Works (Sir Hector Langevin) here twenty-eight years ago about the moneys being expended in Quebec and Montreal and I was told we had nothing to lose by the commission. Still it was all public money and I have proved that to-day the $8,000,000 given to Quebec are moneys belonging to Canada on which not even the interest has been paid. Am I not right in saying that if we have a House of Assembly where the representatives of the people meet to find out how the money is expended we ought to have some one responsible for the expenditure and not be told as we are now that it is expended by a commission, however honest and respectable its members may be. A commission is not what I would like, I would prefer these works to be under the direct supervision of a public department at Ottawa.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) know at what rate they disposed of the $200,000 bonds and about what they brought in ? It may be a very expensive way of raising money or the bonds may go at par. I do not know, does the Finance Minister ?

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a very proper question and before the matter is through I will be able to get the information. I have not heard anything on the subject so I presume they must have disposed of them at a reasonable rate, as, if they had been sacrificed, I think I would have heard of it. It is a fair question.

Mr. FOSTER. If they went at a discount of twenty or twenty-five per cent it would be a very expensive way of raising money. The whole point in it is that we are the first mortgagees there, that the property is ours, upon which we have advanced money. We are now giving up that first mortgage and taking not even a second mortgage and when we do that I think the contention is perfectly right that we should know what amount of money can possibly be realized from those bonds, and we should also have some supervision so that we can inform ourselves as to whether that money had been in the hands of proper authorities and properly expended.

Mr. FIELDING. I wish to say a word in answer to an observation by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) which has occasionally been made also by other members, that before we can deal with any of these harbours we must have a clearly defined and definite policy. I want to take exception to that. I think the best way to deal with these harbours is to deal from year to year with the necessities as they present themselves to parliament and to the government. The idea that because we have had a Transportation Commission which has recommended a large amount of work, running into scores of millions of dollars, nothing can be done until we adopt the whole plan, is something from which I dissent entirely. I think we can best meet this question by dealing with it from time to time as needs arise. We have already done so every year in the past, we are constantly dealing with some part of that transportation problem, and while it is desirable that we should look ahead and that we should have matured plans, it would be a very unreasonable thing to say that because we are not able to adopt a matured plan as to what we are going to do in all its details at Port Colborne, Midland or some other place, therefore we cannot do anything to-day for the harbour of Montreal, the harbour of Quebec or any other harbour. I quite agree that it is desirable that in all this we should look ahead as far as possible, but I certainly do not for a moment agree that we must have a matured plan for the whole Dominion before we can make any improvement at all. I say that in justification of the course we have pursued in dealing with the harbours at Quebec and the harbour at Montreal, and the elevator of Port Colborne, in dealing with each and every one of these things we are dealing with part of what will ultimately be a great scheme, but there is no reason why we should delay action in the required improvements that lie nearest to our hands because we cannot say what will happen years hence.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very sorry the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) has made this declaration. It is a very disappointing declaration.

Mr. FIELDING. It is a very sensible one, I think.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it is even sensible. It is certainly not business-like. No sound business man can be found anywhere who will declare it to be a sensible business statement. My hon. friend says that we should not be shut out from doing anything for any particular port until the whole plan is matured and ready for operation. No one goes to that extreme. Some things have to be done every year, and no one goes to the extreme of saying there should be absolutely no work done until the whole plan is matured. But here is the difficulty. As the necessity arises the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) says, these expenditures should be made, but the necessity is extremely apt to arise in his mind when some particularly strong political influence is brought to bear which makes the expenditure opportune in any particular case, more opportune than an equally necessary expenditure in respect of other ports, which are not in a position to bring the same pressure to bear. You ask parliament to discuss expenditures with reference to one particular port and you cut parliament out from any discussion of the comprehensive interests and necessities of all our principal ports. But if you had the report of your transportation commission, if you studied the information given in that report and the information you obtained elsewhere, and came down to parliament with that digested information, applied to the different ports, where expenditures on improvements are most pressing in the public interest, then parliament would have a chance to discuss the whole thing on its merits. As it is we have only the chance of discussing it by piecemeal. But instead of doing that, you ask for a portion of the expenditure one year and another portion another year, and all the time there is nothing to show how each particular expenditure has any connection with a systematic plan under which our national ports are to be put in a proper position to meet the demands of commerce. You have gone entirely outside the report of the transportation commission which you created for the purpose of obtaining information, you ignored its representations, and you go on and do the work piecemeal here and there, regardless whether it was recommended by that commission or not. This parliament has never yet been given the opportunity of taking up that report and the information gathered by that commission and the plan it suggests, we have never yet had a plan submitted to us by the government, which might be called a national comprehensive plan, upon which we could come to conclusions regarding any particular expenditure submitted to us. We have had no chance of taking a full comprehensive view of the whole matter from anything the government has submitted to us, but we are simply asked to pass upon each single appropriation as it comes—a little one year and a little another. We are told that these are all to make a grand comprehensive scheme in the future. I would suppose that the business way would be to formulate your scheme at first and then discuss the particulars from the point of view of their relation to the whole. But what the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) proposes is to make a little expenditure here and a little expenditure there, build a little piece here and another little piece elsewhere, and some ten years or so later you will have a comprehensive scheme made up out of all these little bits. Whereas the business-like stand, the plan which any business man, architect or engineer, would adopt, would be to come to a conclusion and formulate at first a comprehensive scheme and then carry out that scheme in each particular, and not incur any expenditure which would not be in furtherance of the whole plan. Why should not the government do likewise? They do not formulate any plan because they will not take the time to do it, but simply go on making expenditures where they will best meet political exigencies. They prefer going on in this piecemeal fashion rather than go to the trouble of collating the information they have and giving parliament a chance to discuss and pass upon a comprehensive scheme of transportation, particularly with reference to our Dominion ports.

Mr. FIELDING. I entirely dissent from the view of my hon. friend. It is all very fine to talk of some grand comprehensive scheme, but we must not neglect dealing with the things which lie nearest to our hands. I will risk the displeasure of business men when I say that because we may not know what we may do ultimately at some port on the lakes or on the Pacific coast, that because we have not prepared some grand comprehensive scheme, which includes the development of places perhaps now unknown, therefore we should not deal with the immediate needs of our present harbour.

Mr. FOSTER. No one says that.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the logical conclusion of the gentleman's argument.

He says we are doing a little here and a little there, but when we come to propose any expenditure he does not say it is a little but a great deal. He says we are doing the work piecemeal. Certainly, we have to. Many of our great works have to be done piecemeal. They are not all prepared in advance, they are not all the result of a grand comprehensive scheme, but are done from time to time to meet the needs of the country as they arise. That is what the government is doing. It is looking to the future, it is not closing its eyes to what may be needed in many ports which to-day are of small importance. We are meeting the needs of the day as they arise; and if every time we come down with an appropriation for the dredging of a harbour or the construction of a dock or pier, we are to be met with the objection: What is the use of this, why have you not a grand comprehensive scheme? and if we were to listen to such an objection, we would be simply obstructing the wheels of progress. The hon. gentleman says that parliament is shut out from discussion. Surely not. Surely in the last three years, we have had over and over again discussions on this general question. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has a standing motion every session which brings up a discussion of the whole transportation question, and every phase and form of that question has been debated in the house. So that the House has had ample opportunity of dealing with it. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has only to think of the consequences of his view to see that the policy he advocates would never work out satisfactorily. I am not saying that we should not look into the future. I do not say that we should have our eyes fixed on the port of Quebec alone and do nothing elsewhere. The general needs of to-day are engaging the attention of the government. We are dealing with the harbour of Montreal by resolutions before the House. We are assisting the Quebec harbour; we are doing dredging at St. John, we are extending our facilities at Halifax. These are practical ways of dealing with the transportation question; and the fact that we have been dealing with the necessities in each case as they arise is the best guarantee that as other needs arise, a grand comprehensive scheme will be worked out.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Every word the hon. gentleman has uttered is contradicted by the terms of an order in council which he and his colleagues brought down in 1903. That order in council was about the ablest state paper this government ever presented to this House. It dealt with the transportation question, and it was as absolutely different from this last statement of the Finance Minister as one could possibly imagine. It emphatically declared that there must be a comprehensive scheme. It showed the necessity of such a scheme, complete in all its details, and pointed out how from the first to the last each part of that scheme must be worked out as a part of one grand whole. But now the minister, after public money to the tune of many thousands of dollars has been spent in carrying out the terms of that order in council, says that, so far as the promulgation of any such scheme is concerned, that is all nonsense, that the proposition of the government of that day was all nonsense. Does he not know that the port of Quebec is not to be classed as an unknown place?

Mr. FIELDING. I did not say it was an unknown place.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Not expressly but by inference because, by way of illustration, he said that every time an appropriation for dredging was proposed at some unknown harbour——

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.——an opportunity for discussion more or less of a general scheme is afforded. The port of Quebec is one of the national ports of this country. It was included in the scope of the order in council and in the scheme which was to be promulgated under the scope of that order in council. And, when we ask that the government, before embarking upon further lavish expenditure of public money, shall frame some comprehensive scheme in compliance with what they themselves have said to be necessary, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) laughs at that order in council, which, however, is much better in scope, quality and tone, than anything the Minister of Finance has uttered to-day. We are only asking the government to do what they themselves have said to be absolutely necessary in connection with this question of transportation. The Minister of Finance seems to have forgotten the terms of this order in council. In order that he may refresh his memory, I shall send him a copy of it; and I hope that when he has read it, he will rise here and retract something of what he has said.

Mr. PATERSON. Is the improvement of the Quebec harbour not a part of that scheme?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Certainly it is. But the government is not carrying on that improvement with a view to attaining general results. It is simply going on with a piecemeal expenditure of $100,000 here and $100,000 there. They do not know how the money is to be applied; they do not afford any safeguard for the public interest; they do not audit the accounts. Why, do they not submit some comprehensive scheme to show what results are actually aimed at in the improvement of the Quebec harbour?

The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) himself could not tell me, except in the most general way, what the scheme is.

Mr. PATERSON. Does the hon. gentleman think we should not improve any of the points involved in the scheme until we begin the whole work that is necessary for the future?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) is as difficult of comprehension as he was yesterday.

Mr. PATERSON. Not more so, I hope.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. About the same—he could not be much worse. This order in council was brought down to this House in June, 1903. Practically four years have elapsed since the government, in the most formal way, pointed out that a comprehensive scheme was necessary. Up to this time, have we had any comprehensive or intelligible scheme in regard to the matters included in that order in council and the report that was made?

Mr. PATERSON. I think improvements have been made at many points.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not talking about a little dredging here or a bit of cribwork there, but about the comprehensive scheme which the government, in their order in council, said was necessary before the problem of transportation in this country could be effectively dealt with. That comprehensive scheme I have not found from 1903 up to the present time, in any measure proposed or in any outline given by any responsible member of the government.

Mr. FISHER. The comprehensive scheme the hon. gentleman will find in the practical working out of it, if he will but look at it. The scheme dealt with by the Transportation Commission was one for the transportation of our products, especially from the plains of the Northwest to the sea-board for the purpose of export to Europe. We have been doing that in the most practical and effective way. We have dealt with the necessity of a great port at the head of Lake Superior to which the products of our western plains could be brought. That port is being provided by the expenditure, altogether, of over $1,000,000, the money being given for dredging breakwaters and other improvements at Port Arthur and Fort William. Facilities for the bringing of the grain to this port are being provided, not only by the assistance given to the building of the Canadian Northern, but also by the assistance given to the building of the National Transcontinental or Grand Trunk Pacific. These lines will afford better facilities than ever were given before for the transportation of these products to the port at the head of Lake Superior. We have done work on the Georgian bay ports. We have effected great improvements at Port Colborne to enable the grain brought down from the upper lakes to be transhipped in barges for transportation further east. We have improved the harbours on the lower lakes and St. Lawrence, not only between Kingston and Montreal and at the great harbour of Montreal itself, but between Montreal and Quebec and eastward to the gulf. Part of this scheme is work that we have been doing at Quebec. The hon. gentleman wants that work defined in an elaborate scheme. But the general scheme can easily be understood. We are carrying it out piecemeal, but, as the Minister of Finance has said, we are taking first those pieces which are most urgent and necessary and the accomplishment of which will do the greatest good at this time, besides helping in carrying out the general scheme. The report of the Transportation Commission was given some three or four years ago. But conditions are changing every day. As I have pointed out, there are things demanded by our great railway transportation interests which, at the time of this report, were undreamed of. At that time, for instance, the Canadian Pacific Railway was not making Quebec its terminus on this side of the Atlantic for great steamships which do not go up to Montreal. That report dealt largely with the harbour of Midland on the eastern shore of Georgian bay. It dealt also with Depot Harbour. But we know that railway interests to-day are looking at these places on Georgian bay with different eyes from those with which they regarded them at the time when that report was laid on the table of parliament. To-day, the Canadian Pacific Railway is insisting on a port at Victoria Harbour as a great terminal and transhipping port on the eastern side of Georgian bay, a port which was not in existence when the report of the Transportation Commission was made. The Grand Trunk Railway is now making Midland a great terminal.

Mr. HAGGART. How far is Victoria Harbour from Midland?

Mr. FISHER. Six miles.

Mr. HAGGART. And Midland is mentioned in the report?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, but if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) will consult his friends of the Canadian Pacific Railway he will be told that they cannot go into Midland and that they do not want to make Midland their Georgian bay port. Here, for instance, is the detail in which the report of the Transportation Commission may be amended. But that detail can be changed without affecting the great scheme which we have been working out and which we have not changed—the completion of the chain of communication from the west to the eastern sea-board.

My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) says we have had no chance to discuss this scheme. Perhaps he has not followed the proceedings of this House closely enough to know that this session the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) brought this question forward. He did not deal with it as a comprehensive scheme, but only as it affected the port of Midland which he happens to represent. And, on every occasion when this question comes up, it is found that the whole discussion turns on some detail in which one or more members of the House happen to be interested, and the general question seems to sink out of sight altogether. But the government are keeping in mind the general problem, and are working toward the solution of it. It may be, as my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) says, that we are doing it piecemeal, but we are doing it in the only effective way, the practical businesslike way. We are doing it so effectually to-day that the facilities of trade between our western plains and the Atlantic seaports are immeasurably superior to any that ever existed before this government came to power. The result is to-day that our western grain can be carried to the European markets cheaper than ever before, and imports can be delivered to the western consumers cheaper and more promptly than ever before.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There never was so much complaint about transportation in the west as at the present moment.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the system in the ports of St. John and Halifax? Are they managed by commissioners?

Mr. FIELDING. There is no commission at either port. The St. John harbour is owned by the municipality; the city has retained to itself the harbour interest. In Halifax the wharfs are all owned by private interests.

Mr. BERGERON. And whenever any improvement is needed this government votes the money to make the improvements under the supervision of the Department of Public Works?

Mr. FIELDING. As a matter of fact, I think there have been no improvements whatever in the harbour of Halifax except as relating to the terminal facilities of the Intercolonial. The harbour at Halifax does not require the same kind of improvement as other harbours.

Mr. HAGGART. If I remember rightly, the Department of Public Works have done some improvements there.

Mr. FIELDING. Not in late years. There may have been something done by the Public Works Department, but it was in connection with the terminals of the Intercolonial.

Mr. BERGERON. If there is any port where improvements are needed, according to information given me by gentlemen acquainted with the situation, it is the harbour of Halifax, and the harbour of St. John is also deserving. I do not grudge any amount of money well spent, under proper supervision, in harbours like Halifax and St. John. As a matter of fact I am not objecting to any expenditure in the harbours of Quebec or Montreal, but I am only objecting to the way in which the money is expended. The Minister of Agriculture says that the Canadian Pacific Railway steamships have in contemplation to make Quebec harbour their terminus. Well, Quebec harbour is a natural harbour. A lot of money has been expended there although it is a natural harbour, but it is not the same kind of harbour as that of Montreal. True, the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers are going at present to Quebec, but they do not say that they intend to go there permanently; they declare that whenever the channel is in a proper condition to allow them to go to Montreal they will go there if they find it to be to their advantage. Now, the Minister of Agriculture speaks about their great schemes since they came into power and their good intentions. But we know that there is a certain unpleasant place paved with good intentions. The hon. gentleman knows that the intention of parliament years ago was not to do what they are doing to-day. They have changed their intentions altogether.

Mr. FISHER. The country is growing and the revenue is growing.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, and the expenditure is growing, too, so much so that whenever a Liberal politician dies there is not a public subscription to bury him and help his family. My hon. friend speaks of their various schemes. I was in the House when that Port Colborne scheme was first propounded. What is the use of it to-day as a matter of fact? The transportation is altogether inadequate. That expenditure at Port Colborne does not answer the purpose for which it was voted. You need to make transportation of the products of the west as short as possible, instead of passing by Port Colborne, which is too far south. The same thing at Georgian bay. If you follow out all these schemes it is a procession of scandals from first to last. We have heard before the Public Accounts Committee this session some of the scandals ventilated about the Georgian bay scheme that my hon. friend was talking about. The same thing has happened in Port Colborne. Take your elevator in Montreal which was built a few years ago and which has cost an immense sum of money, it has hardly been used since, scarcely any grain is passing through it. That is one of these great schemes. Follow out all these works and you will see a trail of scandal behind them from first to last. Were it not that the government desire to benefit some of their friends by a liberal expenditure of money, we would not have heard at all of these great schemes.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to make one remark. The Prime Minister in reply to the hon. leader of the opposition on May 26, 1903, page 3439, says a good many things that I would like to read, and I will pick out this because it is so apropos of the present position of the Minister of Finance. The Prime Minister speaks about the different kinds of water and land transport, and the like of that, and says :

> Now I think it may be said that all these works have been carried on not under any general system, and I do not think from the local point of view of each particular place. We deem it of the greatest importance to have if possible all these different works carried on under a general comprehensive system. But we ask for more money to be expended upon them. We think that it is advisable to have a report of a commission of the best experts we have in the country in order that we may be able to lay before parliament at this session or next session a comprehensive plan as to what should be done in these different localities, or any other localities, in order to meet the objects in view. I will say to my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) that the commission has been organized, and not later than to-morrow its terms will be laid on the table of the House.

That was said by the Finance Minister's own leader, the Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and to-day the Minister of Finance has nothing better to do than to get up and make fun of that comprehensive general plan that his own leader told this House that he was going to adopt.

Mr. FIELDING. On the contrary, we have received the report and we are acting upon it day after day.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

On section 2,

Mr. BERGERON. What is the interest to be paid ?

Mr. FIELDING. The Act requires that they shall not pay more than four per cent.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION.

Bill (No. 166) to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal—Mr. Fielding—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,—$3,000,000 may be advanced to Montreal Harbour Commission.

Mr. BERGERON. In the discussion we had the other day I wanted to ask my hon. friend the Acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fisher) what is going to become of the guard pier. I understood some years ago that it was going to be used as part of the harbour, that wharfs were going to be built on the pier where vessels could land, and that railway tracks were going to be placed on the pier to transport merchandise just as it is done on the inside wharf. Since then the Harbour Commissioners have put up their workshops on the pier. At first it was intimated that this was only a temporary arrangement. Are those workshops going to remain or is the pier going to be put into such shape that it may be used as part of the harbour, and will facilities be provided which will enable vessels to load and unload there ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Acting Minister of Public Works). There is no suggestion in the plans which are now being submitted that they expect to utilize that pier for wharfs for the accommodation of ocean going vessels. But the harbour is being deepened out towards that pier by dredging and when they get the harbour deep enough the work of providing facilities on the pier will be undertaken and proceeded with. In the plans as submitted there is no proposition to do any special work on the pier beyond what I have indicated in the way of dredging.

Mr. HAGGART. Does any amount which is advanced to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal appear in the expenditure of the government during the year ?

Mr. FIELDING. It does not appear as part of the ordinary expenditure but it appears as a loan to the Harbour Commissioners.

Mr. HAGGART. It adds so much to the debt of the country.

Mr. FIELDING. It adds to the gross debt but not to the net debt because it is an interest bearing investment and it appears in the assets as well.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to ask the hon. minister if the elevator at Montreal is of any use or if it has ever been used? I have heard marine men complaining a good deal about it and saying that it cannot be used at all, that it is not safe.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think there is any thing in that at all. I think the difficulty has been to get the vessels close to it, or in not having carriers to carry the grain to the wharfs where the vessels lay.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why can they not get to it ?

Mr. FISHER. One vessel can get close to it but this loan is going to enable them to provide a system of carriers which will enable the grain to be carried from the elevator to the different berths in the harbour.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Grand Trunk have a large elevator on the canal only built a short time ago and they take the grain out by lighters to the different vessels. The government elevator has not been used at all. I suppose it is in the same position as the Grand Trunk elevator or any other elevator there from which grain can be taken out in lighters to the vessels. Why has it not been used? I understand that it was because they could not take grain out of it and put it in the steamers.

Mr. FISHER. I never heard that.

Mr. J. D. REID. I heard that it was not safe.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think there is any thing in that at all.

Mr. BERGERON. In the case of a few of these wharfs, like the Allan wharf, which are made of cement all through, I suppose there would be no danger, but in the case of these wooden wharfs there might be danger, and before erecting these immense steel structures intended to carry heavy freight, it might be well to see that the foundations are sufficiently solid to carry the superstructure and the added weight of freight. I have been told that there is great danger of these wharfs sliding in as in the case of the Sorel wharf. It might be a good thing to have that investigated and precautions taken beforehand.

Mr. FISHER. The plans were prepared by the engineer of the harbour commission and approved by the engineers of the government, and I can hardly think that well known men in their profession like Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Cowie and others, would not take all these things into account.

Mr. BERGERON. I know Mr. Kennedy to be a very good engineer and I understand that Mr. Cowie is a good man also, but there was so much wrangling at the time between the harbour commissioners and the Department of Public Works, that proper attention may not have been given to these considerations. When the elevator was built very long piles had to be driven to make that part of the wharf solid and similar work may be necessary in this case. I throw the suggestion out to the minister for what it is worth.

Mr. FISHER. I will call the attention of the harbour commission to it.

Mr. SPROULE. What provision is made for loading and unloading vessels at the elevator; is there a marine arm?

Mr. FISHER. There is now a marine arm to the wharf in front of the elevator, but long carriers will be required to the other wharfs and I understand these are not completed yet.

Mr. SPROULE. How rapidly can you load or unload grain and at what cost is the transfer made?

Mr. FISHER. I have not that information now.

Mr. J. D. REID. I cannot understand how you can get an arm to run along all the wharfs, because some of the wharfs in Montreal must be three or four miles distant from the elevator.

Mr. FISHER. I will not say that there will be carriers down to the wharfs at Hochelaga for instance, but there will be carriers to these wharfs which are not more than one-third of a mile from the elevator. I understand there will be a carrier to the furthest west shed near the canal. The vessels lying at any of these wharfs can then be loaded from the elevator. I am not positive that to-day the elevator can take grain out of a barge. I understand the elevator takes grain from the cars which is then transferred to the ships, but I think when a barge comes with grain the custom in Montreal is to take that grain by floating elevators direct into the ocean-going ships. The harbour elevator would only be used where the lake grain was intended for storage or where the grain comes by railroad.

Mr. J. D. REID. In my opinion that elevator at Montreal should be equipped to take the grain out of the lake steamers. These steamers are always anxious to be unloaded as quickly as possible so that they may clear for their return voyage. When a vessel is ready to take a cargo and the grain is there, the floating elevators are all right, but it is seldom that the ocean going steamers are ready offhand to take the grain, and then the lake vessels would be delayed. I understand that the elevator in Montreal has not been used for the last three or four years because it does not take grain from the lake vessels, and the Grand Trunk have built a new elevator on the canal for that purpose. It is uncertain when an ocean going vessel may require her grain; she may require from 15,000 to 50,000 bushels, and it is very convenient to be able to take that from the elevator. The Buffalo elevators are equipped in that way and the Montreal elevators should be of the same class. Every minute a lake vessel is detained at the port of Montreal she loses money, and I am informed it is because the Montreal elevator cannot take grain from these lake vessels, that it has not been used for the last couple of years.

Mr. FISHER. Is my hon. friend personally aware whether the elevator is supplied with that leg or not?

Mr. BERGERON. I am informed that it is not.

Mr. FISHER. I have sent to find out. I quite agree with my hon. friend that it should be. I know that heretofore for years the great mass of grain handled at the port of Montreal has been transferred direct from the vessels which have come down the lakes to the ocean-going vessels by means of floating elevators. The Harbour Commissioners believe that another arrangement may be made in addition, and I quite agree with my hon. friend that it should be possible to take the grain from the lake vessels, store it in elevators, and transfer it to the ocean vessels when required.

Mr. BERGERON. My opinion is that when that elevator was built it was intended to store the grain coming down on the cars before the opening of navigation, so that when navigation opened it could be immediately loaded into the ocean vessels. I am told that the floating elevators are those most favoured by the navigators, because the steamers coming down from the west can discharge part of their cargo on the wharfs at one side while the elevators unload the grain at the other side. I am told that the more floating elevators that can be had the better. Although I am not in favour of having a harbour commission, I do not think the commissioners are paid too much if they do the work properly ; but I would like to ask the minister if they should not devote all their time to the work. I understand that the chairman of the commission, Mr. Stephens, is required to give his whole time, although I believe that he sat for one of the divisions of Montreal in the local legislature last session. I do not blame him for that ; I suppose it was a duty he owed to the electors ; but I understand that he resigned in order to devote all his time to the work of the Harbour Commission. I understand that one of the other gentlemen at any rate is in business. If the work of the commission is to be of value, I think these gentlemen should give all their time and energy to it.

Mr. FISHER. The question of the commissioners devoting the whole of their time to the work was thoroughly discussed and threshed out prior to their appointment. There are many reasons why it is desirable that they should do so, and I quite agree with the hon. gentleman in that respect. But it was difficult on the spur of the moment to get men thoroughly competent for the work, business men of youth, energy and experience, ready to sever their relations with other business matters and to give their whole time to this work. There would be no difficulty in getting elderly men of business experience who have passed the age of energy and hard work. It is true, Mr. Stephens devotes the whole of his time to the work of the commission. The hon. gentleman mentions the fact that he was a member of parliament. He sat in the legislature at Quebec for a few days last session, but only long enough to put through some particular legislation he had in hand before he was appointed to the Harbour Commission, and I think that was in the public interest. The other two members on the board do not give their whole time to the work, but I know that their practice is to spend two or three hours a day at the Harbour Commissioners' office working with Mr. Stephens, giving him the advantage of their advice and assistance on all questions of policy ; the details being attended to by Mr. Stephens and the staff in the office. The three commissioners together deal with all the plans and arrangements for work and decide upon what is to be done. We have the advantage of their mature and deliberate judgment, and we are satisfied, and I think the people of Montreal are satisfied, that the work is not neglected. It has been pushed on with energy since the new harbour commission was appointed. It may be that in the future we shall need to have men, either these or others, who can give their whole time and attention to the work. If, however, we do that, we can hardly expect to secure men of the ability and experience necessary for the salaries we are paying. Mr. Stephens receives $7,000, and Mr. Geoffrion and Mr. Ballantyne each $5,000. But I think the policy we have pursued hitherto has been justified by its success.

Mr. BERGERON. What wharfs are under the jurisdiction of the Montreal Harbour Commission, and what wharfs are built by the government ?

Mr. FISHER. All the wharfs, whether built by the government or not, fall under the jurisdiction of the harbour commission —everything in the port of Montreal from the Victoria Bridge and the mouth of the canal down to within a mile of Longue Pointe.

On the preamble,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I submit the same considerations, which I shall not repeat, with regard to this Bill, as those which I put forward with regard to the Bill respecting the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec. This is an advance of public money, an interest-bearing investment, and I believe the interest on it has been paid up to the present time ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. At some future date, the government may find it necessary or desirable to take over these works and assume the responsibility of their maintenance. In view of what may take place in the future, it would be wise to have the expenditure subject to public audit and also that the general character of the work should be subject to supervision by the engineers of the government.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there any scale of charges ? And on what standard are they made ?

Mr. FISHER. I have not the details of the charges but they are arranged by the harbour board and are what are called harbour dues.

Mr. BERGERON. Could we have them down ?

Mr. FISHER. Certainly, they are arranged every year. I may say that the rates were lowered very materially in 1896 and again in 1902 or 1903. The harbour commission have been reducing the charges on freight landed at Montreal very materially of late years. In consequence, however, of the immense stimulus to our trade, the revenue has kept up, and the commission has been able to meet its obligations.

Mr. BERGERON. What is paid by the different companies for the different berths at which their steamers lie ?

Mr. FISHER. That is fixed by the harbour commission.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it one price for all or how are the charges made?

Mr. FISHER. I am not certain that they pay for the berths. They pay for the use of the sheds so much per ton or cubic foot according to the character of the freight landed, very much in the same way as in the case of railway freights.

Mr. BERGERON. How are they allotted their berths ? Last summer there was a good deal of complaint that all were not treated alike. Is there any principle adopted or is it left to the caprice of the harbour master or the harbour commission ?

Mr. FISHER. It is generally arranged that the shipping companies have the same berths from year to year.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it the case that the government have no opportunity of investigating these accounts of the Harbour Commission of Montreal at any time ? Are you in the same position as was instanced with respect to the Quebec commission ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think the government have undertaken to audit the accounts. The reports are published from year to year, and the commission have their auditors who audit the accounts.

Mr. J. D. REID. Have we the right to do that ?

Mr. FISHER. I am not sure. I cannot give a legal opinion as I am not a lawyer.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

TWO-CENT PASSENGER RATE.

Mr. FIELDING. There was an understanding between the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition that an opportunity should be afforded to bring up item 32 of Public Bills and Orders which relates to a question of certain business in the hands of the Railway Commission. I move that item 32 be called.

Motion agreed to.

On further consideration of the proposed resolution of Mr. Borden :

That it is expedient for the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada to inquire, determine and report with the least possible delay whether or not the tolls charged in standard passenger tariffs should be reduced so as not to exceed two cents per mile upon all or any of the railways of Canada. That the government under the provisions of the Railway Act, and especially the 24th section thereof, should forthwith take such steps as are necessary for this purpose;

And the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Emmerson, namely:

That all the words after the word 'that' be struck out and the following be substituted : It appears from the correspondence laid on the table of this House that the Board of Railway Commissioners is now engaged examining the tolls to be charged on standard passenger tariffs, and that in consequence there is no occasion for the government to exercise the powers vested in it under section 24 of the Railway Act of 1903.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have spoken on the amendment and have nothing more to say about it.

House divided on amendment.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA.

House went into committee on Bill (No. 146) to make certain amendments to the statute law in its application to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). This Bill stood over yesterday, after the several clauses had been gone through in committee, for the purpose of further consideration with special regard to the possible necessity of making provision for the trial of Dominion controverted elections in the new provinces. But on reference to the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, as it appears in the revised statutes, I find that there is no necessity for any such provision, and I have nothing, therefore, to suggest to be added to the present Bill.

Bill reported.

Mr. AYLESWORTH moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) to state that the trial of controverted elections in the new provinces is provided for under the present law, and therefore there is no necessity for making any amendment to the present Bill to cover that point. I have not looked into the matter, and I ask for information.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am speaking, of course, of the Dominion controverted elections. The present statute with reference to Saskatchewan and Alberta provides that, until the new courts are constituted, the jurisdiction to try Dominion controverted elections shall rest, as before, with the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories; and that upon the new courts being constituted, the jurisdiction shall be vested in such new courts in each province.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

YUKON PLACER MINING ACT—AMENDMENT.

Consideration of an amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 135) an Act to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act—Mr. Oliver.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I desire to have this Senate amendment amended by substituting the words 'nor until' for the words 'and only' in section 2. The section will then read :

No claim shall be relocated within ten days of its being so abandoned, nor until after notice of such abandonment has been posted up for at least one week in the office of the mining recorder.

That is the reading proposed by the law clerk.

Amendment agreed to.

SUPPLY—CAR FERRY BETWEEN PORT HOPE AND CHARLOTTE, N. Y.

Mr. H. A. WARD (Durham). Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to bring to the attention of the House an Act of injustice recently committed by the government, affecting adversely the interests of the town of Port Hope in the county I represent, and favouring in the most remarkable manner the town of Cobourg in the constituency of West Northumberland. I do not offer any apology for engaging the attention of the House for a short time at this late stage of the session, because I believe it is a matter of sufficient importance to justify me in doing so. I think it is of more importance than the government themselves consider, and will have more far reaching consequences than they are inclined to realize. I cannot imagine the reason for the action of the government in this instance except it be that the town of Cobourg is represented by my hon. friend from West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) a well known adherent of the government, while I am not recognized, I imagine, as a very warm supporter. There might be another reason, and it is found in a rumour I have heard that the hon. the Minister of Justice has expressed himself as desiring to give the county of Durham a few object lessons. This possibly may be one of those object lessons, but it is one for which we are not thankful to that hon. gentleman. Now it will hardly be believed that political considerations can be carried so far as to involve the confiscation, as I believe it is a confiscation, of the rights of one community in favour of another, involving as it does the taking away of all the advantages which the enterprising town of Port Hope have secured for themselves by a very large expenditure of money in the past, money that they are now paying interest on, and giving all these advantages to the town of Cobourg, taking away, as I say, what has actually been paid for in hard cash and is now being paid for in interest on that hard cash, and giving to the town of Cobourg all the advantages which the town of Port Hope should possess. I do not think that is an act of justice to the town of Port Hope, and I hope before I finish my remarks that I will be able to convince the House on that point. I am informed also by friends of the Minister of Justice in the town of Port Hope that that hon. gentleman assured them that the matter is in no sense one in which the government was interested. But I will prove to the House that the government did take upon themselves to decide the matter, and adversely, as I say, to the town of Port Hope, in a way that is not creditable to them.

Now it is necessary for me to give a brief history of the matter which I desire to bring to the attention of the House. About a year ago Sir Charles Rivers Wilson, president of the Grand Trunk Railway, in his address to the shareholders announced that a ferry was about to be established, a car ferry capable of carrying twenty-seven cars, between Charlotte in the State of New York, and the town of Port Hope. The town of Cobourg was never thought of. It is a well known fact that the town of Port Hope possesses the best harbour on the lakes between Kingston and Toronto, and has been recognized in all these years since the harbour was built as a harbour of refuge on the long stretch of Lake Ontario beween these large cities. As I say, the town of Cobourg was never thought of. But as soon as this announcement was made by the president of the Grand Trunk Railway, people in the town of Cobourg, considering no doubt that it was a gross outrage that any such plum should fall to the lot of their sister town, made themselves busy with the government of the day and brought to the attention of the government, no doubt, that it would be an outrage to give to a town that is not represented by a supporter of the government any advantage no matter how just it would be to confer it upon the town of Port Hope. For nearly a year action was delayed as to which port should be selected ; the final decision has been given in favour of the town of Cobourg. I will show, by reading from the Cobourg 'World,' that the decision was actually made by the government :

Last week our member, Mr. J. B. McColl, M.P., received a letter from the acting Minister of Public Works, stating that the government had decided to make the necessary repairs to the Cobourg harbour in order that it might answer the purposes of the Grand Trunk Railway car ferry. An appropriation will be made for that purpose in the supplementary estimates. The government will not only do the necessary dredging, but will complete the harbour as a harbour of refuge. That will involve the extension of the present piers about 700 feet. We think this solves the question of who got the ferry. We must congratulate Mr. McColl upon the results of his efforts, not only in succeeding in landing the ferry at Cobourg, but in getting our harbour completed.

Now it will be interesting probably to the House to know in what manner the government was sufficiently interested to take into their own hands the decision of locating the terminus of the ferry. I suppose, but it is only conjecture on my part that the government were approached by the Grand Trunk Railway and induced to do some dredging that was necessary in order to establish the ferry at one of these ports. Now in connection with that dredging, I may state that I was informed by Mr. Hyman, the Minister of Public Works during last session, that from the reports of his engineers it would take about $75,000 to place the harbour of Port Hope in a proper condition for a ferry, but that it would take a slightly less amount to do the necessary dredging in the town of Cobourg. That estimate of the Hon. Mr. Hyman, which was given as he told me from the reports of his engineers is corroborated by Capt. Lyman, of Grand Haven, who commands the ferry between Grand Haven and Milwaukee, and who came down to Port Hope and Cobourg at the instance of the Grand Trunk Railway to examine the two harbours. I intend to read the declaration of Capt. Peacock, who has been for the last forty years a mariner on Lake Ontario and other lakes, to show what the opinion of Capt. Lyman was after his examination of these two harbours. I am reading the whole document now, although it refers to other things. I wish to show that, in Capt. Lyman's opinion, the sum which it would be necessary to spend to place the Port Hope harbour in a condition for a ferry, was exactly the same as stated to me by the Minister of Public Works upon the report of his engineer. The declaration is as follows :

I, James H. Peacock of the town of Port Hope in the county of Durham, master mariner, do solemnly declare, that :

1. In the early part of January, 1907, captain Lyman, who I understand commands a ferry boat running between Grand Haven and Milwaukee, came to Port Hope at the instance of the Grand Trunk Railway, as I have been informed, for the purpose of reporting upon the harbours of Port Hope and Cobourg, as to their fitness for the terminus of the car ferry about to be established between Charlotte, New York, and a point on the north shore of lake Ontario.

2. I was requested by a committee of Port Hope citizens in charge of the matter to accompany Captain Lyman and furnish him with any information he might ask for, and I was further requested to drive over to Cobourg with him, which I did.

3. I may say that I have been sailing on the great lakes since 1867, and have been a master mariner since 1874, and have been in command of the 'Oliver Mowat' for seventeen years past and am now in command of the 'E. B. Maxwell.'

4. After examining the Port Hope harbour Captain Lyman stated that there would be no difficulty in entering it with a ferry steamer, and that the good feature of the entrance was, that it gradually widened inside.

5. He afterwards went over to Cobourg and met Captain Rooney who is, I believe, in charge of the harbour there. Captain Lyman looked over the entrance of the present harbour, and then questioned Captain Rooney as to undertow and surge. Captain Rooney stated that there was no undertow or surge to which Captain Lyman replied that it was the first lake shore harbour he had known where there was no undertow, he also asked what caused the ice banks to form on the inner side of the harbour if there was no surge, and Captain Rooney remarked that the ferry slip was not to be in the inner harbour, but on the west side of the outer harbour, inside the piers. Captain Lyman then inquired as to depth of water, and was assured by Captain Rooney that plenty of water could be had with a little dredging. He also asked about the open lake, south of where the ferry boat was to land, and Captain Rooney informed him that the government was going to make it a safe harbour. Captain Lyman then inquired about the cost and the length of time required to complete the works, to which he received no definite reply. He then stated that in his opinion, it would take two years or over to complete the necessary cribwork, and would cost something like $250,000, and Captain Rooney said he thought the government would do it.

I may say that he made the remark at the same time, although it is not in the declaration, that about 1,300 feet of cribwork would be necessary in addition to the dredging and that he thought the government would do it.

Captain Lyman then remarked that it was necessary that the ferry slip should be in quiet water.

6. Upon our return to Port Hope we examined the inner basin of the west harbour. This, Captain Lyman claimed, was the proper place for the ferry slip, if the necessary depth of water could be obtained. He asked me as to the bottom, and I informed him that it was shell rock and mud. He claimed that rock bottom was much the best for a ferry, as the slips could not be undermined by the action of the screws which was very heavy. He said that at Grand Haven the company was put to a considerable expense in keeping the slips filled up with stone, in order to prevent undermining, but this would not occur where the bottom was rock. He further stated that he thought an expenditure of $75,000 ought to put the Port Hope harbour in excellent shape. He also expressed the opinion that if the right people were employed it could not cost much more in shell rock than in ordinary clay or sand dredging. He also said, after I had informed him as to the distance between the east and west sides of the basin, which is about five hundred feet, there would be no difficulty in handling the boat.

7. Captain Lyman also stated that they had sometimes to make repairs to a ferry boat which occupied ten or fifteen hours, and in such cases absolutely quiet water was necessary.

8. I have had a great deal of experience with both harbours, and I am convinced that in its present condition a ferry boat could not land at Cobourg in any southerly or easterly wind, but would probably have to lie outside.

9. In my long experience of sailing Lake Ontario, I have always considered the Port Hope harbour a safer one than Cobourg, either to make or lie in, in bad weather.

That declaration, and the opinion that Captain Lyman has expressed therein, agree that the expenditure at Port Hope harbour would not exceed $75,000 but the hon. acting Minister of Public Works evidently did not think the disparity between the expenditures necessary at Cobourg and Port Hope were sufficiently marked to justify the government in coming to the conclusion in favour of Cobourg which they evidently did, but the minister procured another engineer's report on the two harbours and I am informed by one who has a copy of that report, which I have never seen, that the report simply states the bald figures of $147,000 as being necessary at Port Hope and $67,000 as being necesary at Cobourg. That, as I understood from the gentleman who informed me about the report, was merely for the dredging. From what I have heard from other engineers, from the opinion expressed by Mr. Hyman on the reports of his engineers and on the strength of what has been stated by Captain Lyman, I believe that report is, to say the least, very inaccurate and that it only reflected the desire of the members of the government to make the conditions of Port Hope as onerous as possible in order to justify them in coming to the conclusion they did. I do not know who the engineer is who made that report, but I have no hesitation in characterizing it as not an honest report because the conditions are well known there and I do not think there is the difference which has been stated to exist between the expenditures necessary on these two harbours.

The letter written, as stated in the Cobourg 'World,' by the hon. acting Minister of Public Works to the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) goes on to say that the Cobourg harbour will be made a harbour of refuge, that is that the expenditure will be made which is necessary to make it a harbour of refuge. I have been so informed personally by the member for West Northumberland, and I would like to ask the hon. acting Minister of Public Works, if he does make any reply to the statements I am making here to-day, to state whether the expenditure put in the estimates for the town of Cobourg means the only expenditure which is to be made there. According to Captain Lyman and every one who knows anything about the subject 1,400 feet of crib-work cannot possibly be built in 20 feet of water, and the necessary dredging, be done for $67,000. It seems to me that the estimate for the expenditure at Cobourg is simply the commencement and that before the completion of the work we will find the country saddled with an expenditure of $300,000. For what? To make a harbour of refuge which is about as useful to the mariners on Lake Ontario as a fifth wheel would be to a coach. It is a well known fact that Port Hope has been a harbour of refuge for the last fifty years when the shipping on Lake Ontario was twenty times in volume what it is at present. I can tell the minister that during the winter of 1874-5, thirty-nine sailing vessels wintered at Port Hope. These thirty-nine vessels were all owned by the people of Port Hope while to-day there is only one vessel in Port Hope which is owned by a resident of that town and that is a vessel owned by the captain whose declaration I read a few moments ago. What can be the reason of a harbour of refuge being required for Lake Ontario when, as I say, the shipping has decreased about twenty times what it was years ago when all the lumber and grain were shipped from that and other ports to the United States, whereas these shipments all go by train at the present time?

In regard to the question as to the value of the two harbours I want to call the attention of the acting minister to the fact that the inner basins of the harbour of Port Hope are excavated inside the shore line. They are surrounded on three sides by high hills while the Cobourg harbour is virtually open to the lake. There are only piers extending out from the shore line and every wind that blows sweeps across the harbour no matter from what direction it may happen to come. There is no doubt in the world as to the relative merits of these two harbours, and I cannot understand for one moment why the government are entirely ignoring a harbour which was built fifty years ago and more and which has satisfied the mariners all these years unless it be that the government are undertaking this large expenditure simply because the hon. member for West Northumberland is one of their supporters.

In order to justify what I said as to the superior claims of Port Hope, I desire to point out that years back, in the early fifties, when the parliament of Upper Canada established what is known as the Municipal Loan Fund debt, both Port Hope and Cobourg borrowed largely from that fund. The first move was, I believe, made by the town of Cobourg, and their intention was to build a railway running from Cobourg directly across Rice lake in a straight line to the town of Peterborough. The Port Hope people approached the authorities of the town of Cobourg at that time and requested them to join with Port Hope and run the railway around the head of the lake at Bewdley to Peterborough, and they would build a branch from Port Hope to Bewdley and thus both towns would be served by that railway running to the north. The Cobourg people refused to entertain that proposition but preferred to run a bridge four miles across Rice lake which disappeared within two years, and ever since that time the railway from Cobourg to Rice lake or Peterborough has only been operated at times from Cobourg to Harwood on the south shore of Rice lake. The Port Hope people then borrowed $800,000 from the municipal loan fund for the purpose of assisting in building the Midland railway, which, I think, every one will agree has done very much towards the development of the northern part of central Ontario. That amount was put into the railway, and railway development stimulated in that way, and the terminus of that railway has always been at Port Hope.

At the same time, Port Hope borrowed $354,000 from the Municipal Loan Fund for the purpose of constructing the harbour I have spoken of. That large debt was incurred by a town of about 5,000 inhabitants, and when the settlement of this municipal loan fund came to be taken up by the Ontario government, the town of Port Hope was adjudicated to pay $93,000 in full settlement of that large loan. Cobourg, as I understand from the records of the Ontario government, settled for $80,000. I wish to call the attention of the House to the manner in which the two towns have been treated in regard to the settlement of the Municipal Loan Fund. The Port Hope share was $93,000 and they were obliged by the Mowat government to sign their bonds for that amount. In addition to that they issued debentures to complete the harbour on the security of the harbour, for $60,000, and to this day they are paying 4½ per cent interest on that total sum of $153,000 or $6,885 a year. That is the burden, in addition to the ordinary debt of the town, that Port Hope with 4,300 people has to undertake and has undertaken to pay ever since the settlement of the Municipal Loan Fund.

Let me examine for a moment how differently Cobourg was treated. The settlement in respect to the town of Cobourg was $80,000. But a kind and benevolent government in the province of Ontario did not insist upon the town of Cobourg signing their bonds. Thirteen years afterwards, when that debt at 4½ per cent interest had amounted to $125,000, the Mowat government settled with the town of Cobourg for the small sum of $25,000. The Mowat government thus threw off $100,000 of the indebtedness of Cobourg, while Port Hope was not allowed one single cent of abatement. I desire to read an extract from the budget speech of the Hon. A. W. Ross, provincial treasurer, delivered in 1888:

> It will be recollected that in 1886 I stated that a settlement was then in progress with the town of Cobourg as to the unsettled balance due from that municipality which had been in the accounts of the province for the past thirteen years. I stated at that time that a proposition had been made and partially accepted to issue new debentures to the amount of $42,768 running for twenty years. That proposition was not consummated owing to the refusal of the town council to pass the necessary by-law. They contended, looking at the financial condition of the town, that the settlement was more onerous than they were able to meet, and the matter was left in abeyance until the close of last year, when they made an offer to the government of $25,000 cash, in full settlement of their liability. The government agreed to accept that $25,000 subject to the approval of the legislature, and it is now in the estimates of receipts for the current year.

Hon. Mr. ROSS. The money was paid and is now at the credit of the province in the bank.

I desire to point out that the town of Port Hope has shown a great deal of enterprise in building what was then called the Port Hope and Peterborough railway. Port Hope is now paying a large sum in interest every year on the cost of that railway, and on the cost of the construction of its harbour, and the government of this country—simply because the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) is a supporter of theirs—are taking away all these advantages which should accrue to Port Hope, and handing them over to the town of Cobourg. The town of Cobourg claims now that the Grand Trunk Railway have undertaken not only to give them the ferry, but to give them the terminus of the Midland Railway as well. That means a great deal for the town of Port Hope, and, the act of injustice which has been committed by this government has affected us very seriously.

Let me point out that the town of Cobourg has received considerable benefits from this government. You have only to look at the Public Accounts to see that in the last few years Cobourg has received $40,000 for an armoury and about $13,000 for buying the land for a rifle range and putting the necessary improvements thereon. But the town of Cobourg was costly to the government in another sense. When the Trent Valley canal was under discussion and the town of Cobourg was afraid that some little advantage might go to Port Hope, they asked that a survey should be made to the town of Cobourg and it cost $11,300 to satisfy the people of Cobourg that the Trent Valley canal could not possibly be constructed in their direction. The result of that survey showed that the town of Cobourg was not the place for the Trent Valley canal because the cost by that route would be $9,000,000, whereas the cost via Port Hope would only be $3,900,000. That is another little expenditure that the government found it necessary to make for the town of Cobourg. It was money absolutely thrown away, simply to show to the supporters of the hon. gentleman for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) that he had done what he could to get the Trent Valley canal to go to Cobourg. Then, there is $67,000 which the government have brought down in the supplementary estimates for the dredging at Cobourg.

It is stated in the estimates to be for the extension of piers and dredging; but I think the chief part of it must be expended in dredging and a mere flea bite will be for the extension of piers. If these piers be extended 700 feet, amounting to 1,400 feet in twenty feet of water, there cannot be less than $300,000 spent in the town of Cobourg, before these works are completed in a manner suitable for the ferry. We find that all these favours have been showered on Cobourg by different governments: $100,000 of debt remitted by the Mowat government, $40,000 for an armoury, $13,000 for a rifle range, $11,300 for the survey of the Trent Valley Canal, $67,000 on the harbour and $250,000 on piers to be built. A very expensive constituency that must be for the government to keep up. I venture to say that there is not a constituency in this country that has anything like the money expended on it that that constituency seems to be able to worm out of this government and others. It reminds me very much of a remark of a statesman in a country not very far from this—I will not mention any names—who had a rather recalcitrant follower, and who said that he had to buy him every day, and then he was never sure of him. I think that is the way with the town of Cobourg; the government have to buy it every day, and then they are never sure of it.

Now, I am sorry I cannot say that the Minister of Justice has shown that justice to the town of Port Hope that one would expect from a gentleman of his character. As I have said, I have been assured by his friends in the town of Port Hope that the government had nothing whatever to do with this matter; but I think I have shown very conclusively that the government had something to do with it, and that they took the matter entirely out of the hands of the Grand Trunk Railway company and decided it for their own purposes. I may mention a little incident that occurred in the early stages of this ferry controversy; it was in connection with the visit of a prominent railway official to the town of Port Hope. I refer to Mr. McGuigan, who is now translated to another sphere. That gentleman visited Port Hope in his car and he stated to the deputation that there waited on him, that they were a foolish lot of men, because if they had elected the hon. Minister of Justice when they had the opportunity of so doing, they would have had the ferry beyond a doubt. That was Mr. McGuigan's opinion, and I have no doubt he was correct. Another incident that occurred—and I have it from one of the prominent Liberals in the town of Port Hope—was this: that at a banquet given to the premier in the City of Toronto shortly after the last general election, he was very much surprised to hear the premier make this statement, that the electors of Durham, who had recently rejected a very great friend of his, might possibly be forgiven in the next world, but never would be forgiven in this. The gentleman who told me that was the vice-president of the Reform Association in the town of Port Hope, and he told me that he immediately retired from the banquet and declined to remain there any longer where such statements were made. I am only mentioning these matters to show that there is a certain amount of animus against the County of Durham on the part of this government.

These are not the only object lessons which that county is receiving at the hands of this government. I might refer to the Trent Valley Canal, which my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) represented very strongly in his campaign would come to Port Hope if he were elected. I do not make that statement from anything I myself have heard the hon. gentleman state, because I never heard him speak during that campaign; but the newspaper part of the struggle was carried on by a very clever lawyer who was sent down from Toronto by my hon friend to conduct the campaign in his interest. That gentleman took over the Liberal paper in the town of Port Hope and was I am sure, responsible for every advertisement and statement that appeared in that paper. I am sorry to say that I have not kept very many of them, but I want to give you a sample of the advertisements that were issued at that time by that gentleman from the Liberal headquarters. Here is one:

A chance of a lifetime. Aylesworth and the canal for Durham electors. The Liberal government will undoubtedly be sustained, Candid Conservatives all over the country admit this fact. Then consider your own interests for once regardless of political ties. The canal to Port Hope would mean the expenditure of millions of dollars in Durham and a great reduction of taxation in Port Hope. The government is now pledged to all you asked.

What does that mean? I am sure the hon. gentleman must take some responsibility for the advertisement that his own organ and his own agent brought out. It was not as if they were written by a gentleman in the town of Port Hope. They were got up by this clever man who came from Toronto to conduct the campaign. I will not read all these advertisements; but another one says something about Col. Ward being responsible for bringing the canal question into politics in the Durham campaign:—

Colonel Ward in opposition has failed to accomplish anything for the Port Hope outlet, and in the presence of Hon. Mr. Borden has told us that to get a survey from the present government on an 8 feet 4 inch basis was a hopeless task. Mr. Aylesworth, a cabinet minister, has in a few short days secured this survey from the government.

Now, what was the object of the hon. gentleman getting that promise of a survey? The hon. gentleman, I am informed, at several public meetings read the telegram from the premier, promising that an 8 foot 4 inch outlet would be given; and, although I am quite sure the hon. gentleman veiled his language in such a way as not to make a direct promise, yet he read this telegram at the different meetings and represented to the people of Port Hope and the surrounding country that his election would mean the canal for the town of Port Hope. Here is another advertisement:

Trenton people say that Aylesworth's election secures the canal to Port Hope. Peterborough and other papers say so too. With such definite, positive and satisfactory assurance from the government, and having unbounded confidence in the merits of the Port Hope route as compared with that of Trenton, we believe that the Port Hope route will be found not only shorter, quicker, cheaper and safer, but less expensive route to operate.

That is quite true ; the Port Hope route is shorter, quicker and less expensive to operate, and will cost less for construction. I want to know from the government if that is the case. If it was right to promise the electors of Durham that the canal would be constructed, why was it not right when the report of the engineers came down ? If it was right to hold out to the people of Durham that the canal should go there and if it was right according to this advertisement—and every one of the statements therein have been corroborated by the report of the engineer—why is it not right now, and why is the terminus taken to Trenton ? That is another object lesson which the town of Port Hope has been given by the hon. gentleman and his associates. While I am speaking of the ferry, I desire to give to the House, and especially to the members of the government, the opinion of their friends in the town of Port Hope regarding their action in this matter. I am about to read an article from a Liberal organ, the Port Hope 'Guide,' of Tuesday, April 16th. After quoting from the Cobourg 'World' as to what was said there, the article continues :

All the Cobourg papers have been very jolly at Port Hope's expense. It has to be at the expense of some other place ; nothing is ever originated or paid for by our counties' town. This generosity for themselves has extended through every avenue. Local, counties, Ontario government, Dominion government and the Grand Trunk Railway. Nothing that Port Hope first originates but Cobourg like a spoiled child reaches out and cries for.

The counties' buildings are largely owned by Durham, and had it not been for the treachery of some one in Durham, the county house of refuge would not have been at Cobourg. It is hard though for the 'Post' to call it a house of 'refuse.'

The sooner Durham is separated from its blood-sucking eastern neighbour the better for Durham.

Take too the Trent Valley canal outlet. The Cobourg people never had the remotest hope for it, but they insisted on their route being surveyed because Port Hope had put in a valid claim, and the Dominion government would have less hesitation in turning down Port Hope's feasible and cheapest route when both were so treated, in favour of the grafters along the Trent river who would thus save their stake. It will cost more money to build the canal by Tory Trenton and maintain it, but what of that, the county is rich and Port Hope must be made to suffer.

Cobourg has usually contrived to have a representative with both the local and Dominion governments, and no government could change so quickly that Cobourg could not as rapidly right about face. Port Hope on the contrary has stool loyal to the Liberal cause through every discouragement, but owing to the almost impossible Tory handicap of Cartwright, Manvers and Cavan our plucky work fails to elect even an Aylesworth, one sure of a portfolio.

Port Hope and Hope, with their 400 Liberal majority, cannot get common justice while insatiable Cobourg—secures its armoury—steals the Durham field battery from Port Hope to ornament the new building, and compels the Dominion government to undertake the initial steps of building their harbour that cannot fail to run up an expenditure of $300,000 at least.

Port Hope, on the other hand, builds its own harbour, contributes heavily towards building the Midland Railway, and now Cobourg decides that it must have the terminal of the Midland to match the robbery of the Grand Trunk Railway ferry which was first planned and annouced to be for Port Hope. On this as in other matters Cobourg appears to have the backing of the full power of the Dominion government.

Port Hope is the only town on the front which has stood continuously Liberal, and this is how Port Hope is rewarded for its Liberal loyalty by its 'friends'.

Port Hope certainly owes no extra good will towards J. B. McColl, M.P., for it is largely through his efforts that Port Hope has been robbed. Not satisfied with what has been done, insult is added to injury to our citizens who have the misfortune to visit the counties' town. Mr. McColl is reported to have guyed one of our citizens about losing the ferry, and also said 'Oh, we will give you $5,000 for your old harbour'.

A stranger at first coming to Port Hope cannot at first understand the deep resentment toward Cobourg, but when the wrongs of Port Hope are explained wonder ceases. Words fail to express the utter contemptible meanness of our counties' town.

That is the opinion of a Liberal organ in the town of Port Hope on the action of the government in this respect. In conclusion I wish simply to point out that if this very large expenditure is to be made at the town of Cobourg, not only for dredging but for making it a harbour of refuge, it means simply the taking away of the rights which Port Hope has enjoyed in return for its large expenditure on the Port Hope and Peterborough Railway and the handing over of these advantages to the town of Cobourg. This expenditure at Cobourg is in no sense reasonable or justifiable. The town of Port Hope, in common with the rest of the country, has to bear its portion of this large expenditure for the purpose of establishing a harbour of refuge where there is not the slightest necessity for it. In this respect the action of the government is in the highest degree reprehensible.

Before sitting down I desire to say a few words about the Trent Valley Canal, as I have referred to it in the course of my remarks. The contention of the people of Port Hope for the last five or six years, based on the early surveys made of that route, has been that Port Hope really was the cheapest and best outlet for that canal; and although the decision has been come to that Trenton is to be the outlet, I wish to point out that, according to the report of Mr. Walsh, the engineer who made the latest surveys, the contention of Port Hope as to the cost of the canal by the way of that town is fully borne out. In the first place take the cost of the actual construction of the canal between Rice lake and Port Hope and Rice lake and Trenton, and the engineer shows that for a six-foot canal, the cost by Port Hope would be $3,541,917.34, and by Trenton, $3,118,811.63. For an eight and one-third foot canal the cost by Port Hope would be $3,958,051.91 and by Trenton, $3,997,482.53, showing that for an eight and one-third foot canal the advantage in favour of Port Hope is something over $40,000. I am just going to read three or four short extracts from that report to show that the other contentions of Port Hope are correct.

Cost of Operation.

In considering the cost of operation as applied respectively to the Port Hope and Trenton routes, it seems obvious that at least from twice to three times the number of employees would be required on the latter as against the former. Capitalizing the excess cost in this respect and including the amount with the estimate for the Trenton route would bring the cost of the latter almost, if not up to that of the Port Hope route for six feet draught in proportion to the greater for nine feet, and eight and one-third feet draught.

Cost of Maintenance.

The cost of maintenance of the canal would perhaps be somewhat lower on the Port Hope route than on the Trenton route. On the former some difficulty might be expected from time to time in the deep cutting near Rice lake where it passes through blue clay, but the greater length of the Trenton route with the larger number of structures, perishable material, &c., would, in my opinion, more than counter-balance this.

Distance by Length.

The distance from the mouth of the Otonabee river to Kingston via Trenton route and Bay of Quinté is 135·72 miles; via Port Hope, Lake Ontario, Murray canal and the Bay of Quinté, 134·32 miles; and via Port Hope open lake around Prince Edward county, 126·73 miles, showing the mileage in favour of Port Hope of 1·40 miles and 8·99 miles respectively. On the same principle, the latter route affords the shortest distance to each of the places on detailed list.

There is a long list of these places. Especially to Toronto and to other places in the west the advantage of the Port Hope route would be proportionately greater.

Distance by Time.

During calm weather on Lake Ontario the matter of sailing time between the mouth of the Otonabee river and Kingston would also be in favour of Port Hope, notwithstanding the blockage would be the same in either case, the lesser mileage from Rice lake to Port Hope and the unobstructed open lake would contribute to this.

Navigation Facilities.

In so far as open lake navigation is concerned, the Port Hope route would have superior advantages over its rival in respect to trade with such ports on Lake Ontario as Toronto, Hamilton, Dalhousie, Niagara and Oak Orchard (the latter in New York state) but not so as regards Fair Haven, Oswego, Sackett's harbour (all in New York) and Kingston.

One advantage always spoken of in connection with the Port Hope route was that no railway crossing was necessary by that route, whereas it was necessary to cross five different railways by the Trenton route. As against all these advantages—the smaller cost of maintenance and operation and the shorter distance both by length and by time, the only disadvantage that Port Hope had was the open lake for twenty-six or twenty-seven miles down to Presqu'Ile harbour. That is the only thing on which decision was given in favour of Trenton, and I believe it was not sufficient to counterbalance all the other advantages which were certainly on the side of the Port Hope route. If this canal were ever to be a great grain route, I might admit some of the arguments which have been put forward in favour of the Trenton route and agree that the open lake was a dangerous factor. But I think it will be many a long day before we find this a great grain route. The canal will be more of local importance than anything else. I see my hon. friend from West Peterborough (Mr. Hall) in his place. His city, Peterborough, will probably derive more advantage from the construction of the canal than any other place on the route. And I am sure it would be a greater advantage to the people of Peterborough to have the outlet at the town of Port Hope than to have it at Trenton.

Mr. Speaker, I desired to save the time of the House so far as was consistent with a fair statement of this case. I thought that to bring it up now and lay the facts before the House would probably be the briefest way in which to deal with it. I have, nothing further to say as to the position of the government with regard to the Trent Valley Canal except that in this case as in the case of the ferry which I have described—I fear at too great length—justice has not been done to the town of Port Hope.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Acting Minister of Public Works). Mr. Chairman, I must say to my hon. friend from Durham (Mr. Ward) that I am rather surprised and disappointed at the tone of his remarks and the very evident desire that he has shown to drag this question into the political arena and to make political capital out of it, not only in his own favour in Port Hope but against my hon. friend from West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) and against the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth). I do not think it was at all necessary. It seems to me that this is a business question that ought to be dealt with in a business way. I venture to think that it would have been very much better for my hon. friend to have dealt with it in that way. However, he himself must be the judge of that. But my hon. friend (Mr. Ward) seems to think that the Minister of Justice has had a spite against Port Hope because the county of Durham did not elect him in the general election. He seems to think that that spite has influenced the decision of the government to do the work in connection with this car ferry at Cobourg instead of at Port Hope. I want to say at once that this had no influence whatever upon the decision. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice entertained and manifested a most friendly feeling for the people of Port Hope as residents of a riding, which, although it did not elect him, gave a most substantial expression of opinion in his favour. Especially did the town of Port Hope do this because it gave the hon. gentleman (Mr. Aylesworth) a very substantial majority over the present hon. member for Durham (Mr. Ward). The question came up in a business way and was dealt with by myself as acting Minister of Public Works, from a public standpoint. When my hon. friend the Minister of Justice was informed of the respective claims, and advantages of Port Hope and Cobourg, in order to make one or other the Canadian terminus of the car ferry, no personal desire on his part to confer advantage on Port Hope would cause him to seek to influence the government in favour even of a place that had been so kind to him in the election. In this he showed what every one would have expected of him, the determination to regard the matter simply from the point of view of the public interest without fear or favour. But I regret that my hon. friend from Durham has not shown the same feeling towards Cobourg. I think when he reflects upon that he will regret having intimated that Cobourg has been bought, and that Cobourg is one of those places that do not stay bought.

Mr. FOSTER. That was the opinion of the Port Hope 'Guide.'

Mr. FISHER. I gathered that my hon. friend endorsed it, and I am sure when he thinks it over, he will regret making that statement. I am sure that it is an unfair imputation on the town of Cobourg. I have been informed that the town of Cobourg has generally given a Conservative majority.

Mr. WARD. Not very often.

Mr. FISHER. But sometimes it has; therefore the government would have no motive, from political favour, to carry on this work in Cobourg instead of Port Hope. My hon. friend knows that for years and years Port Hope has given a Liberal majority, and it would be more to our political interest to give Port Hope that terminus instead of Cobourg. But that was not the reason which guided us in making the decision. I say that although it was not altogether the government which decided that question. It was a question largely for the Grand Trunk Railway Company to decide, after a consideration of the advantages of the two ports. The Grand Trunk did tell the government that if we wished them to go to one port rather than another, they might try to do so if we would do the necessary dredging in order to make the port selected a suitable one for the terminus of their car ferry. But my hon friend has gone further, and has drawn into this discussion a large number of what I think are extraneous subjects. He has pleaded in forma pauperis for Port Hope.

Mr. WARD. That is what Cobourg always pleads.

Mr. FISHER. Well, perhaps it would be better to hear from Cobourg herself on that point, and I regret that my hon. friend who represents that constituency is not present. My hon. friend from Durham (Mr. Ward) is of course jealous of Cobourg, so it would be better to allow Cobourg to speak for itself. As I say, he is pleading in forma pauperis for Port Hope, and why? Because the terminus of the Trent Valley canal has been taken away from Port Hope and because Port Hope, from some municipal loan fund question, has suffered. Because Port Hope wanted to be made a harbour of refuge and has not been——

Mr. WARD. Excuse me. I never said anything of the kind. I said Port Hope was a harbour of refuge, and had been for fifty years, and it was absolute nonsense to expend money on making Cobourg a harbour of refuge when there was already a good one in existence seven miles away.

Mr. FISHER. Then my hon. friend is complaining that Cobourg is not a harbour of refuge, and that therefore it ought not to be made a terminus of the car ferry. I do not think it is necessary for us, from a business point of view, to consider whether Port Hope or Cobourg has had favours from the federal government, or has been discriminated against by the provincial government. As I said before, the government, through the Department of Public Works, have tried to deal with this matter from a purely business standpoint. There had to be established a car ferry to cross Lake Ontario and carry coal from the coal fields south of the lake to be distributed through the province of Ontario. The Grand Trunk were interested in that matter. There was no port on the north shore which was suitable for that purpose in its present condition. They required a port for a car ferry furnishing a considerable depth of water and affording a safe harbour, and the question arose between these two ports. The Grand Trunk appealed to the government to aid them by dredging and improving a suitable port. The government said, very well, for the sake of the trade of the country we are willing to aid you and dredge out a port for your car ferry at whichever port you may find the most suitable terminus on the Ontario side of the lake. The natural proceeding for the government would be to have an engineer make an examination of the ports which had been suggested for this terminus and ascertain which one would be the most economical and the most suitable for a terminus. I have here the report of the engineers, which says distinctly that Cobourg is the most economical and the best, and under these circumstances the government had only one duty to perform.

Mr. WARD. When the Grand Trunk Railway was well acquainted with the harbour, which they have rented for years and years, and were also acquainted with the Cobourg harbour which they have also rented and when they had decided that Port Hope was the best place for them to go, why should the government interfere? And I want to say here that Mr. McGuigan told me he was the only official of the Grand Trunk who was in favour of Cobourg, and that every official except himself was favourable to Port Hope.

Mr. FISHER. I am not aware what the Grand Trunk officials may have thought. Mr. McGuigan may have said that, but I have it from Mr. Wainwright, the representative of the Grand Trunk, when they came before the government, that so far as they were concerned they were willing to go to either harbour; and if the government decided that in their opinion it was better to make Port Hope the terminus the government would acquiesce in that decision.

Mr. WARD. I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I wish to tell him that Mr. Wainwright told me that if the government would allow them to settle the question they would settle it in two minutes, but the government would not allow them to settle the question.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think Mr. Wainwright could have said that to my hon. friend; but if he did, he must have said something very different to what he told me. He told me most emphatically that the Grand Trunk was ready to abide by the decision of the government, and would go to either place which the government thought was the best place in the public interest, and which they could make a suitable terminus the most economically and the most effectually. At the same time I am not violating any confidence when I say that Mr. Wainwright told me that so far as he was concerned he believed it was to the best interests of the Grand Trunk to go to Cobourg.

Mr. WARD. He told me a very different story.

Mr. FISHER. I am sorry if he said something different to the hon. gentleman from what he told me. However, believing that the Grand Trunk was ready and willing to go to either place, believing that either place must be made a suitable and convenient harbour for this purpose, believing perhaps that in either case the general distribution of goods throughout the country must be served, there was one question which the government must reasonably be expected to look to in the interest of the whole country. When public money is asked to be expended for a certain purpose it is the duty of the government to see whether that purpose can be accomplished economically in one case, or less economically or perhaps extravagantly, in the other case. I have here the first report which the engineer sent in. I do not think it is necessary for me to read the whole of it, but here is a description of what is intended to be done, or what will have to be done at the two places, and a comparison of the cost as between the two harbours:

Cobourg—
Excavation of sand and clay.. .. ..$	13,725 00
Breakwaters on each side of entrance..	53,707 00
Total..	67,432 50
Port Hope—
Excavation, sand and clay..	22,414 50
Excavation of rock..	117,800 00
Total..	140,214 50

More than double the money is required to make Port Hope a suitable harbour for this terminal as compared with what it would cost the government to make Cobourg a good and suitable harbour.

Mr. WARD. I say that report is absolutely false.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend may say that. I am not going to accept his opinion as against the opinion of a well known and efficient servant of the government of long standing and one of the best known engineers in the country.

Mr. HAGGART. Who is he?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Valiquette. My hon. friend no doubt knows him because he was in the service of the government for many years—I do not know how many—but before this government came into power. He was a nominee of hon. gentlemen opposite. My hon. friend (Mr. Ward) is but voicing what the people of Port Hope said, that this report is not a very good one, because it is based on making what is known as the outer harbour of Port Hope, the harbour, and they said that the inner harbour should be made the harbour and that it would cost less. I immediately required from Mr. Valiquette a report on that question and this is the report which he sent to me afterwards:

The quantities and cost of excavation of channel leading to inner harbour will be as follows :

Earth excavation	$ 16,530 00
Rock..	258,000 00
Total..	275,345 20

Making the additional cost for the inner harbour at Port Hope, which the deputation told me was going to be much cheaper and better, a sum of no less than $135,000. My hon. friend is simply voicing the opinion of the people of Port Hope. The opinion of the people of Port Hope was that they could come to me with a plan or scheme by which Port Hope could be made a harbour more economically than the plan referred to in the original report of Mr. Valiquette. I have the report here and what is the result ? That their suggestion and their scheme are going to cost $135,000 more than Mr. Valiquette's own scheme for the improvement of the harbour at Port Hope.

Mr. WARD. Did Mr. Valiquette go back to make that report?

Mr. FISHER. He did not go back; he did not require to go back.

Mr. WARD. I thought not.

Mr. FISHER. No, he did not require to go back. Before Mr. Valiquette made his first report he had taken soundings and borings all over the harbour of Port Hope. He knew exactly how much rock there was under it, what depth of water there was above the rock, what depth of sand and clay there was above the rock, he had every sounding. If my hon. friend will go to the Department of Public Works and examine the plans of Port Hope harbour, he will find that every ten feet square has been tested, sounded and bored. Mr. Valiquette did not require to go back to Port Hope because he had already made a careful examination of the whole of Port Hope harbour and all he had to do was to make a calculation based on the proposal which was made, which calculation was made by the regular standard of engineers and he was able to make that second report as I have given it here. I know my hon. friend will say that it was not fair to Port Hope, but if Mr. Valiquette had gone to Port Hope again he would not have got any more information than he had already obtained when he was there before.

Mr. WARD. I am informed Mr. Valiquette never went near the inner basin at all when he was at Port Hope.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Valiquette has a plan on about every ten feet of which there is shown a sounding of the harbour of Port Hope. I cannot say that Mr. Valiquette took every sounding with his own hands. He is one of the chief engineers of the department and he has his assistants, but I know that these soundings were taken in the harbour of Port Hope, that the harbour was examined by reputable engineers, that they have a record which shows exactly the soundings that were taken over the whole harbour, that Mr. Valiquette had information which enabled him to make his first and second reports, that both are based on the actual soundings and borings made in the harbour and which are well known to whoever chooses to deal with this matter in a fair minded and judicial spirit. The deputation which came here to interview me, claimed that their scheme could be carried out more cheaply than the one which Mr. Valiquette originally proposed, but when it was tested by engineering skill and properly worked out as it had to be by the engineering staff they were not only shown to be incorrect, but the scheme they proposed was shown to involve nearly double the expenditure involved in the scheme which the engineer himself at first proposed after he had examined the harbour of Port Hope. Under these circumstances it seems to me that the clear duty of the government, without reference as to whether Port Hope was represented by a Conservative or whether Cobourg was represented by a Liberal, without reference as to whether Port Hope was a strong Conservative town or Cobourg was a strong Liberal town, to consider how the treasury of the country would be least depleted by the adoption of a place which would make a successful, efficient and suitable terminus for this car ferry. We came to that conclusion properly. We came to it in the interest of the transportation facilities of the country. The question of politics of the town or the fact that it was represented by an honourable gentleman opposite did not present itself and my hon. friend's accusations against the Minister of Justice and his accusations against the general conduct of the government in this regard are unworthy of himself, are baseless and are only the result of his own feelings in regard to political questions which he has allowed to carry him away and to lead him to commit an injustice which, in his calmer moments, I am sure, he will regret.

Mr. WARD. I asked the hon. gentleman particularly in the course of my remarks as to one thing, and he has in no way referred to it.

Mr. FISHER. What was that?

Mr. WARD. That was in the opinion of Captain Lyman the necessities of Cobourg harbour called for 1,300 feet of cribwork in twenty feet of water. In addition to that, according to the hon. acting minister's own letter to Mr. McColl, the piers are to be extended 700 feet. That is 100 feet more than Capt. Lyman stated. How in the world, for $67,000, are the government going to build 1,400 feet of cribwork in twenty feet of water, which is absolutely necessary according to Capt. Lyman and the acting minister's own letter to Mr. McColl?

Mr. FISHER. I am glad that the hon. member has drawn my attention to what I have omitted to state. I will just read the report which will show my hon. friend that the piers at Cobourg represent the chief expense. There is very little expense for dredging at Cobourg.

Mr. WARD. I saw that.

Mr. FISHER. Very well. I am going to read my hon. friend just what is stated:

> It is proposed to extend the eastern breakwater a further length of 350 feet and the western one a length of 425 feet which makes a total of 775 feet; both extensions having a width of 30 feet, built of timber cribwork sunk after dredging the berth to a depth of 21 feet at low water. For the present the dredging is to be done over the area tinted red in the plan, to a depth of 20 feet from the entrance to the proposed landing slip as shown on the plan. The mean depth to be removed is somewhat over 6 feet; the average mean depth is about 15 feet. It will amount to 91,500 cubic yards of sand and clay. The estimate is: excavation, sand and clay 91,500 yards at 15 cents, $13,725.

In the view of this engineer, breakwaters on each side of the entrance are necessary to make this a safe harbour for the car ferry, and they will cost $53,707.50, making the total cost of the work at Cobourg, on piers, breakwaters, and dredging, $67,432.50.

Mr. WARD. Does my hon. friend believe that that amount of cribwork can be built for $53,000.

Mr. FISHER. I certainly believe the report and the estimate of my own engineer.

Mr. WARD. Then the hon. gentleman has a great deal of credulity.

Mr. FISHER. I would prefer to take his word to that of Captain Lyman or any one else who is travelling on the lakes. If I was not prepared to accept my engineer's statements and estimates, I would dismiss him from the service and not rest my case on his estimate.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who is the engineer?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Valiquette.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the cost exceeds that amount you will dismiss him?

Mr. FISHER. No, I won't. I did not say that, but I do say that I believe it is a just and fair estimate, because I have known something of Mr. Valiquette, and I do not think there are many people in this House or in the country who will dispute the fact that Mr. Valiquette is an efficient and successful engineer and that his estimates are worthy of credence.

Mr. WARD. Does he propose an excavation to twenty feet in the inner basin, in that last report?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, that is what the car ferry requires.

Mr. WARD. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the car ferry draws 19 feet or 18 feet or even 17 feet?

Mr. FISHER. I believe she draws about 16 feet when she is loaded.

Mr. WARD. Captain Lyman says his vessel is larger, that it does not draw quite 15 feet, and that the ferry will not draw 15 feet. The inner basin is absolutely quiet water, not a ripple can get in there and why you want four or five feet more than the vessel draws is a mystery to me. That is the way this report is padded. That is the way you require this enormous amount of money by making it necessary to excavate to 20 feet or 21 feet. It is absolute nonsense.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend may say that, but we are comparing the same depth in Cobourg with the same depth in Port Hope, and my hon. friend thinks we should favour Port Hope by allowing a shallower harbour there than in Cobourg.

Mr. WARD. Cobourg is open to every wind that blows, and when there is a sea running there——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member is not in order.

Mr. WARD. I know, but my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) will not mind. Every wind that blows from certain quarters goes into Cobourg harbour, and it is necessary you should have a much greater depth of water when there is a sea running in the harbour, but no possible ripple could get into Port Hope harbour.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). As the hon. gentleman from Durham (Mr. Ward) has made some observations in regard to me, I want to say a few words. The part which the government had in the matter of the car ferry question, and the only part they had in it, has already been explained. It was a question of improving the one harbour or the other to make it a terminal suitable for this ferry. The question for the decision of the government simply was, whether for that purpose it should expend the amount which is included in the estimates for the improvement of the harbour of Cobourg, or, as the government was advised by its engineers, a very substantially larger sum, a sum more than double, to make the Port Hope harbour suitable. It has been said by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ward) that rumour had it, that the choice of Cobourg had been made with the intention of giving to the county of Durham an object lesson, because the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ward) secured a majority over myself in the general elections two and a half years ago. I wish to say it is the first I ever heard of that rumour. It is the first occasion on which anybody has said in my hearing that there was intention on my part or on the part of the government to do any thing in the way of giving an object lesson to the county of Durham. I should have been very gratified if my hon. friend (Mr. Ward) had favoured us with the authority for the rumour, and had been able to give us some foundation for the statement. So far from any such rumour, if there is one, having any foundation in fact, the exact contrary is the truth, and I have to say so far as my friends in the county of Durham, and especially in the town of Port Hope, are concerned, that in this matter there is nothing more that I could have done had I been member for Durham than I have done in my efforts to see, in connection with this whole controversy, that the interests of Port Hope as against those of Cobourg were fairly represented and were fairly considered by those upon whom it fell to decide. There was every reason why I should have taken that position. I came into the county of Durham, some four weeks or less before the voting day. I had never made any venture prior to that in political life. I had scarcely any acquaintance with the county of Durham. My opponent, the present member, was a gentleman who had lived in the town of Port Hope and had carried on his profession, so far as I know, for the whole of his life there. He was well known, he had represented the county for more than one parliament before, and he had been in the field for weeks if not for months before I had set foot in the county. The county of Durham consists of six townships, three bordering on Lake Ontario which generally give a Liberal majority, and three situate in the north of the county which give a very strong Conservative majority. The townships in the north of the county have their business interests more directly connected with the towns to the northward than with those to the southward. The people residing in the northern three townships have their main business connection more with the town of Lindsay and the city of Peterborough, than with Port Hope. The people in the northern part of the county, are little if at all interested in this question of the ferry terminus as between Cobourg and Port Hope. The counties of Northumberland and Durham are united for municipal purposes, Cobourg is the county town, where the court house is, and so far as the rivalry between Port Hope and Cobourg is concerned as to this question of the ferry, I do not suppose the people of the three northern townships care one cent which way the decision may go. The whole interest in it is in the southern part of the county, and particularly in the town of Port Hope itself and in the immediately surrounding township of Hope. With regard to political affairs in connection with not merely the whole front of Durham, but particularly the township of Hope and the town of Port Hope in it, I have every reason to be gratified. I came into Port Hope absolutely unknown. I think my only acquaintance there, when I first set foot in that campaign, was my hon. friend himself. Under these circumstances, I felt not merely pride but gratitude as well when the result of the election showed a majority in my favour in the town of Port Hope of some 120 votes, which was, I am told, a majority two or three times larger than had ever been given in the town before.

Mr. WARD. Will my hon. friend allow me to state that in the previous election there were eighty-five votes against me, and that there were only sixteen turned for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Well, if in the previous election there was a Liberal majority of eighty-five, and if in this election, under the handicap I am describing, and which I assure my hon. friend I felt very strongly, that was increased to a majority of one hundred and twenty. I think it was an occasion for pride and gratitude on my part. Under the circumstances, in view of the friends I found in the town of Port Hope, and the very generous support accorded me there on that occasion, I have every reason to feel grateful to the people of that town and to wish them well in every respect. I am but stating these things to rebut the attack that has been made by my hon. friend on the government and particularly upon myself, as if there had been in some sense an effort of spite on my part to punish the town of Port Hope for the result of that election.

But my hon. friend has not limited himself to the particular matter which he has brought to the attention of the House. He has taken occasion to bring into the discussion also the question of the outlet for the Trent canal, and in that connection to state—although he said he did not hear it himself—that he believed that I had in the course of that campaign represented to the people of Durham on more than one occasion that the canal outlet would come to Port Hope if I were elected. I am very glad to have the opportunity of saying here—and I hope to a larger audience than simply those who hear my voice to-day—that there is not one word of truth in that statement, which has been the stock in trade in Tory newspapers throughout Ontario from that day to this. No opportunity has been lost for repeating it, in spite of my having taken every possible opportunity for repudiating utterly any foundation for it, and I suppose it will continue to be repeated as long as it is thought that the repetition of it will do any good. Now, I want to state simply what the facts are. When I came into the town of Port Hope, about the 10th or 12th of October, 1904, I was told, I do not know whether rightly or not, by political friends there that about ten days or a fortnight previously, when the hon. leader of the opposition in his tour through Ontario, had held a meeting at Port Hope, my hon. friend the present member for Durham (Mr. Ward) had discussed at that meeting the question of the outlet of the Trent canal, and had stated to the audience that they need never expect to get fair play, so far as Durham or Port Hope was concerned, until the advent of the Conservative party to power; that if and when the hon. leader of the opposition became premier of this country, Durham and Port Hope would, in the matter of the Trent canal outlet, have fair play, and they never could expect it until that millennium should arrive.

Mr. WARD. Did the hon. gentleman hear that?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I was not present, certainly not; it was before I had any thought of being a candidate in the political campaign then started. When I came into Durham, between the 10th and the middle of October, I was told by political supporters of mine that at a meeting in the end of September, at which they said they had been present, that language had been used by my hon. friend. I was astonished to be told that fair play in the matter of the survey for the outlet of the canal or any other public work was something which any town in this country could not expect from the present government; and I at once put myself into communication with the right hon. the First Minister to ask what had taken place in regard to the surveys for the outlet of the Trent canal, and what the position of the matter was. It was something that I knew absolutely nothing about; it was something in regard to which I was then hearing and learning for the first time. In reply to my communication I received from Sir Wilfrid Laurier the following letter:

Toronto, October 13, 1904.

My Dear Aylesworth,—In answer to your communication requesting that there be made, without any delay, a full and detailed survey and report showing details of the work and of the estimated cost of the proposed outlets of the Trent Valley canal at both Port Hope and Trenton, by competent, reliable and impartial engineers, such report and survey to include hydraulic liftlocks and also locks of any other design which might be considered or adopted, also electrical power for mechanical and lighting purposes, buoys, cost of operation and maintenance, together with the cost of construction of any railway and highway bridges that may be necessary, also the damages for abstraction of water, flooding of lands, or injuring lands or other properties, on each route, and also including construction and maintenance of all necessary harbour facilities and lighthouses, with respect to each route, I beg to say that this subject has already engaged the attention of the government, which, some time ago, decided that such survey and report of estimated cost should be made.

I regret to learn from your letter that the work in question is possibly not proceeding on a satisfactory basis, and beg to assure you that the government will with all possible speed cause the survey and report, which you ask for, to be made. It is further intended to have such survey and report made with reference not only to a work of the depth and capacity of the completed portion of the Trent Valley canal, but also, of a work of greater depths and capacities, and therefore, the instructions to the engineers will be given in accordance with such intention.

From memory, I cannot go more fully into the details of the survey plans and report, but it is the intention of the government to have the most complete inquiries made as to the relative merits of the two routes in all their bearings, and therefore, the survey and report in question will be sufficiently comprehensive, not merely to cover the details above-mentioned, but any other details which it would be either proper or necessary to know before making the selection of an outlet.

If the details of the respective surveys and reports fall short of what is necessary or advisable, the government will be glad to supplement them in any manner that you recommend, in order to have both the government and the country in full possession of all information touching the relative merits of the various routes before a selection is made.

Yours very sincerely,
WILFRID LAURIER.

Hon. A. B. Aylesworth.

Mr. BERGERON. Has my hon. friend a copy of his own letter?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. No, I have not; I did not keep it. That letter, written on the 13th of October, was read at a public meeting in Port Hope, I think on the following evening; and forthwith it began to be asserted, not merely in the newspapers, but from the housetops apparently, that this political campaign in Durham was a question as to the terminus of the Trent Valley canal, that my election meant the selection of the Port Hope route, while the election of my hon. friend meant of necessity that some other route would be selected. I am not responsible for that. I could not have prevented it if I had tried my utmost. I read this letter at the public meeting I have referred to, practically without comment. I certainly did not, in anything I said, step one jot or tittle beyond the language of that letter. I should have been, I think, very foolish indeed if I had dreamed of doing so. I had before me the answer to what I was told had been an unfounded attack made upon the government by my hon. friend upon the previous occasion to which I have referred.

Mr. WARD. I would like to contradict that by saying that I never made such a statement.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I had this reply as a sufficient answer to any such attack, if any such attack were made. And I limited myself to simply assuring the people of Port Hope that they would get fair-play from this government, and that before the outlet of the canal was decided there would be the comparative survey which that letter promised. The matter however was not allowed to rest there. It became the subject of newspaper controversy between the Conservative organ and the Liberal organ in Port Hope and apparently a matter universally considered and discussed in that community. On the occasion of my next visit to Port Hope in that campaign I was told that this letter had been criticised by the Conservative newspaper and the opponents of the present government as being ambiguous and unsatisfactory and as not indicating particularly the kind of survey that was being made—as being in fact a mere subterfuge out of which the government was going to crawl when the proper time came. I communicated with Sir Wilfrid Laurier who had then reached London, and on the 17th day of October, 1904, he wrote me as follows:

My dear Aylesworth,—I had no opportunity, on Friday, in Toronto, of speaking to you on the subject of the Trent canal survey. Mulock represented to me since that my letter was satisfactory as far as it went, but that it would have been more so if it had mentioned that the survey for each southern route would provide for a canal eight and one-third feet on lock sills, nine and one-half feet in canal cutting, and ten and one-half feet in lake and river channel, with canal cuttings seventy-five feet wide on bottom with proper slopes, and river and lake channels two hundred feet wide on bottom.

I am not in a position to answer categorically on this point as it is a purely engineering question, but I need hardly tell you that the officer who shall be put in charge of such surveys shall have special instruction to ascertain if canal of such dimensions would be practicable, or if any other dimensions would be necessary to give effect to the original intention that the government had in undertaking such a canal. Whether the canal should be of eight or ten feet or more on the lock sills, is more than I can be expected to answer at this moment. All I can say is that the survey must be thorough and as desired by the people of the locality.

Yours very sincerely,
WILFRID LAURIER.

On the 20th of October Sir Wilfrid Laurier wrote me this other letter, and that is the whole of the correspondence:

Toronto, October 20, 1904.

My dear Aylesworth,—With reference to the surveys which are to be made to Port Hope and Trenton to ascertain whether or not a canal can be built from Rice lake to Lake Ontario, it is well understood, and there can be no ambiguity, that the depth of such a canal shall be at least eight feet four inches on the lock sills.

Yours very sincerely,
WILFRID LAURIER.

That is the whole of this matter from beginning to end. I do not think these letters were read, but certainly nothing was said by me, or by any speaker in my hearing, that was not fully borne out by their language. There was a perfectly definite promise to the people of Port Hope and the people generally that there would be a comparative survey, on the same footing, as between these respective routes, and nothing more. There was no language used nor was any inducement or expectation held out by me or by anybody in my presence, in any manner whatever, to the effect that my election meant giving this canal outlet to Port Hope and taking it away from Trenton. When the matter came before council for consideration, on the report of the engineers who made these comparative surveys, certainly I was not trammelled by anything that took place in the election from considering impartially the report of the engineers and the surveys made with regard to these two outlets and deciding which of them it was better, in the interests of the country, to adopt. That was a matter free from any political sentiment, and my hon. friend will find it very difficult to persuade anybody that the Trenton outlet was chosen in preference to that of Port Hope because of any political obligation which either I or the government were under to the constituency of West Hastings. That is something the hon. gentleman can settle with the representative of West Hastings and is a political matter as to which this government is reasonably indifferent.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Aylesworth) has spoken with the sensitiveness and warmth of a new candidate in the political field. He evidently has been treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath, and has come to the conclusion that just now is the day of wrath, when this transaction must come out. With excessive warmth he seized the occasion to berate my hon. friend from Durham (Mr. Ward) and clear his own political skirts from what he considers an imputation. When he gets older and has run several other political campaigns and has gone through several sessions of parliament, he will not feel so extremely sensitive on such points. He plumes himself on having made a splendid run although he only got in at the last moment and had but four weeks or so in which to do the work, and takes that election as an appreciation of his merits and capability. He says he was handicapped. Of course he was. He went through Durham with a canal in the one hand and a town clock in the other, and made his campaign on those two immensely strong questions in that county. My hon. friend knows that he must hold himself somewhat responsible for his agents. Being a business man and a man of the world, he knows that he cannot go through a campaign and shut his eyes to everything his friends are doing openly, above board, on the housetops and in the party press, taking every advantage that comes to him in these ways, without saying a word in public or, as far as we know, in private, in reproof of the methods of canvass, and yet be held entirely clear. If such were the case, there would be no use for any election laws and none we could have would be at all efficacious. It is impossible that my hon. friend did not know just the kind of canvass which was being used in his favour. He has placed all these letters which he received in reply from Sir Wilfrid Laurier on the pages of 'Hansard.' They are there embalmed. The letters he wrote Sir Wilfrid Laurier or the telegrams he sent him with such urgency do not appear on the pages of 'Hansard,' so that what they were we are not permitted to know at present. But they evidently found a sympathetic response at the other end. Sir Wilfrid Laurier declares: Yes, you want a letter, here is one; you want another, here is a second; you want another, here is a third. If there is anything else you want just say so, and you shall have it to help you in this canvass.

What did the hon. gentleman's friends, what did his own newspapers, what did his own canvassers, use, as the great argument in his favour? It was not simply Mr. Aylesworth they were voting for. Mr. Aylesworth, in one respect, was a lay figure in that contest. In Port Hope it was the canal they were voting for, and in Bowmanville it was the post office clock. Leave aside politics, was the cry, vote for Aylesworth and the mouth of the canal; vote for Aylesworth and the post office clock. That was the language—not in wicked, vicious Tory newspapers—bless you, no; they would not give prominence for that kind of thing, they would not put arguments in favour of the stranger in Durham. You find this kind of things in the Port Hope 'Guide' and in the Bowmanville 'Statesman.' The hon. gentleman's own agent in the town of Port Hope in the flaming advertisements that were put in and paid for in the party paper, made this appeal on behalf of the Liberal candidate. Here is a friendly paper—not a Grit paper, but friendly to the hon. gentleman, which condemned this line of canvass and wanted to see the hon. gentleman elected on different grounds. It said:

> Both mouths of the Trent Valley canal are working for the government. Mr. Byron Lott, the Liberal candidate for West Hastings, declared at the nomination meeting that he was confident that the canal terminus would be by way of Trenton and not by way of the sandhills of Port Hope. He had not said he would resign if the canal were not constructed within a year, but 'he would place his resignation in the hands of any man Mr. Porter might name, and if he were elected and his party defeated, that resignation could be sent to the Speaker, for he knew that as an opposition member he would be no good to the riding.' On the other hand, Mr. J. A. Culverwell, speaking at Port Hope, said: 'I can do nothing else but advise the people of Durham and Port Hope to cut out politics and vote for Aylesworth——
> Aylesworth alone? No.
> —Aylesworth and the canal.'

'And' is a conjunctive of emphasis which in this case, seems to join candidate and question, with the most important one last. The canal was what they wanted. Aylesworth might be in heaven, or anywhere else, for all they cared so long as they got the canal. That is what the voters were asked to vote for—'Vote for Aylesworth and the canal.'

But the 'Guide' is remorseless. In large type it makes its final appeal:

> 'Port Hope, wake up, Trenton is getting desperate. Port Hope's future rests in electing Hon. A. B. Aylesworth, a cabinet minister. Conservatives and Liberals in Trenton are uniting to elect a Liberal member. Men of Durham: Trenton interests are also said to be sending in men and money to elect Mr. Ward—by electing Mr. Ward in Durham Trenton knows that the Port Hope outlet will be killed for ever.'

That is not a Tory argument; that appears in my hon. friend's (Mr. Aylesworth's) own organ that was giving his canvass its full support, putting in his advertisements—well paid for, no doubt, because they always have an eye to matters of pecuniary importance. Here is the Bowmanville 'Statesman':

> Bowmanville wants that clock in the new post office tower. Who is so weak as to imagine that we'll get it if Colonel Ward is elected? He will never get a ten-cent grant for Durham from the Liberal government. Grants don't go that way. Party government is synonymous with party favour.

And again :

Hon. A. B. Aylesworth has been appointed to Sir Wilfrid Laurier's cabinet. If by chance he be defeated in Durham, he will be elected for some other constituency sure, then we lose not only his good-will——

That is the opinion of his own friends about it—not a Tory opinion. One of his strong friends and supporters—known him for a month and a little more in that campaign, and come to the conclusion that that was the kind of man he was.

—we lose not only his good-will but——

He is going to go further than that in his vindictive course.

—but that of his colleagues in the cabinet.

Wicked man. If he is not elected he will poison the minds of the other members of the cabinet, and so these trusting electors will lose the government's favour.

Don't we want the favour of the government of the day ? If so, then vote for Mr. Aylesworth and place a strong advocate at court for Durham.

And still again :

Laurier will be returned by a stronger backing than he had in the last parliament. What earthly use to send Colonel Ward to Ottawa to sit in idleness on opposition benches for four or five years? He could get no patronage for the county. If there were prospects of Mr. Borden gaining power, this might suffice as an excuse.

It does not make any difference, apparently, they will vote for a Tory as soon as for a Grit—the question is simply, do they want the clock and the canal? In other times, Liberals used to have principles, they used to favour certain policies. But these people are not thus limited—the clock for Bowmanville post office and the mouth of the canal for Port Hope, and candidates, policies and principles be blowed—we vote for the man who will give us what we want. Another newspaper says :

Mr. Aylesworth has his card in the Port Hope 'Guide' and his policy there is announced to be : 'Laurier——

By way of compliment of course, he must go first.

—Aylesworth——

Because he is the man to be voted for, he is the string to be pulled.

—and the Port Hope route.'

That is the great thing—the Port Hope route. And here is the final appeal, after Sir Wilfrid Laurier's letters have all come in and are all published in the 'Guide,' and the last desperate appeal is made to the voters signed by the president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer of the Liberal Association, two medical men, J. S. Helm and S. S. Smith :

Government grants all Port Hope's demands.
A second letter from Sir Wilfrid Laurier.
Canal to be eight feet four inches on lock-sills.
Everybody satisfied.

There you have it. That is the final appeal. And the committee goes on to say, in closing :

With such definite, positive assurances from the government, having involved confidence in the merits of the Port Hope route as compared with that of Trenton, and believing that the Port Hope route will be found not only the shorter, quicker and safer, but less expensive route to operate—we feel that the Port Hope Canal Association has won the first half of the battle and that it now only remains for the people of Port Hope and government to elect Mr. Aylesworth to secure the canal outlet for the Port Hope route.

There you have it—the whole thing.: The post office clock at Bowmanville and the mouth of the canal for Port Hope. That was the whole issue. Mr. Aylesworth came in as an essential part of it, no doubt, but not the main part—he was the string to be pulled.

I give these quotations to moderate the great pride my hon. friend (Mr. Aylesworth) had in the mistaken notion he got into his brain that he went down there and in three or four weeks, made himself so popular that he came pretty near being elected. What he did was to arouse the expectations of the people and make his best friends think that he was the kind of a man who, if not elected, would take a spite against the riding and try to influence his colleagues to injure its interest and make it an object lesson to constituencies that would refuse to vote for a town clock and a canal supported by Mr. Aylesworth.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY—THE PETAWAWA MILITARY CAMP.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). Before you leave the chair I would like to bring to the attention of the House certain matters connected with the supposed assumption by this government of about 560,000 acres of land belonging to the province of Ontario at Petawawa. It would appear from the information before this House and before the legislature of Ontario, that for some years past there have been negotiations between the government of Canada and the government of the province of Ontario with reference to the acquisition of these lands as a sort of training camp for the militia. These negotiations were inconclusive, and sometimes in the latter part of the year 1906, the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) came to Toronto and had an interview with the Prime Minister of the province and with the Hon. Mr. Cochrane, Minister of the Department of Lands, Forests and Mines.

Subsequently, on January 21, 1907, the Minister of Militia and Defence wrote asking that the Crown Lands Department of Ontario should issue direct to the Department of Militia and Defence patents for lands contained within the proposed camp site area, and which the Department of Militia and Defence had purchased from settlers; secondly, that the Department of Militia and Defence should be given a lease or allowed to purchase the remaining lands which were vested in the Crown in the right of Ontario. The Minister of Militia and Defence requested that the lease should be given at a nominal rental for as long a period as the lands should be required for military purposes without reference to the holders of the timber licenses, 'leaving the question of the acquisition of the rights of the timber licensees or otherwise compensating them for any encroachment to be adjusted between this department and the licensees themselves.' The Minister of Militia and Defence further asked that in the event of sale the government of Ontario should sell the lands required at 25 cents an acre. The total area required was approximately 73,000 acres, 12,175 of which had been acquired by the Department of Militia and Defence by purchase from settlers; 5,730 acres of this being unpatented. There were also 5,989 acres additional to be purchased from settlers, of which 2,870 are unpatented. The unpatented lands in the hands of the settlers would therefore approximate 8,600 acres, and the area remaining in the Crown would be approximately 55,000 acres.

Then after some further correspondence between the Department of Militia and the Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines of Ontario, the latter gentleman replied that:

Patents would be issued to the Minister of Militia and Defence for such lots as that department had purchased from the settlers upon filing in the Department of Lands, Forests and Mines of Ontario proper assignments from the settlers and paying in the balance of the purchase money due the Crown with interest thereon in accordance with the conditions under which the lands were sold, that the government of Ontario would be prepared to issue a lease for the lands in the Crown required for military camp purposes by order in council at a nominal rental for such term of years as might be agreed upon, the lands to revert to the Crown in Ontario when no longer required for camp purposes, the proposals in both cases to be subject to the rights of the timber licensees being acquired by the Department of Militia and Defence and their consent to the issue of the lease being filed here, also the Crown dues, which would accrue on the timber as cut would have to be paid by the Department of Militia and Defence. The Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines for Ontario further went on to say that he had a conversation with representatives of the Pembroke Lumber Company and had been supplied with an estimate of the kinds and quantities of timbers on their part of the territory, that he knew the man who had made the estimate and considered him well qualified, and regarded it as a conservative estimate although it was not as yet fully completed. The minister inclosed for the information and consideration of the Department of Militia and Defence a copy of the estimate referred to and intimated that if the Department of Militia and Defence acquired the rights of the licensees upon the estimate furnished, the Department of Lands, Forests and Mines would be prepared to accept payment of the dues upon the basis of such estimates at the rates fixed by the Crown timber regulations.

On February 21, 1907, the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence wrote to the Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines of Ontario, that with reference to the issue of patents for the lots purchased from individual owners, the proposal of the Department of Lands, Forests and Mines was quite satisfactory, and the assignments would be forwarded at an early date so that the matter might be speedily adjusted; that with respect to the lands under license the Department of Militia and Defence had no desire to interfere with the rights of the licensees, but would undertake to facilitate the cutting and removing of the timber if a lease were granted by the Department of Lands, Forests and Mines.

The Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence again put the question: Would the provincial government grant a lease of 55,000 acres to the Department of Militia and Defence for ninety-nine years at a nominal rental, or would it sell to the Dominion government the 55,000 acres at 25 cents per acre?

On March 1, 1907, the Deputy Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines of Ontario, by direction of the minister acknowledged the receipt of this letter and said that with respect to the proposed lease of 55,000 acres the department could not grant any rights which would interfere with the timber licensees, that if the Department of Militia and Defence could make arrangements with the licensees and file their consent a lease would be issued at a nominal consideration for the period mentioned, but without the consent of the timber licensees being procured it is not possible at the present time to give such a lease.

On March 5 the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence of Canada acknowledged the receipt of the letter of the Deputy Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines and informed him that the papers had been referred to the Minister of Justice. A despatch was subsequently received at Government House, Toronto, and transferred to the Department of Lands, Forests and Mines. That despatch informed His Honour the Lieutenant Governor:

That His Excellency the Governor General had under consideration the urgent necessity for the defence of Canada of acquiring certain lands convenient to the capital for military purposes; that several localities had been examined and that certain areas in the province of Ontario had been found to be the most suitable.

Then the despatch goes on to deal with the right of the timber licensees and continues:

That it was not intended to interfere with the rights of the said licensees or with the rights of settlers in possession, but that subject to these rights and interests as they now exist all the lands are to be assumed under section 117 of the British North America Act of 1867, in the right of the Dominion of Canada for the defence of the country.

The description of the lands was set forth in the despatch. Some correspondence then took place by telegram between the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence and the Prime Minister of Ontario. It is not very pertinent that I should quote it for this purpose. According to the view of the Ontario government, as appears from documents brought down in that House and from the discussions which have taken place :

The timber licenses affected have been granted by the government of Ontario and have been renewed for a great many years although some of them have been acquired by purchase within recent periods from former owners. Under the Crown timber regulations, made under the Crown Timber Act of Ontario licensees are entitled to a renewal of their license upon payment of an annual ground rent of $3 per mile and Crown dues at such rates as may be fixed by regulations.

It is estimated by the Department of Lands, Forests and Mines of Ontario that the stumpage value of timber on the territory approximates $100,000. It is also claimed that in addition to the value of the timber standing the province has a direct pecuniary interest to the extent of probably $25,000 or $30,000 dues payable on this timber as it is cut. It is also claimed that the safety of this timber will be seriously jeopardized by the presence of a large military camp as bodies of soldiers will no doubt be moving about through the territory using matches for lighting their pipes and fires and for other purposes without any thought or care of consequences to the property of the licensees. It is then claimed that :

The effect of the order in council, if the action is constitutional, is to take away from the province the surface rights and all rights in the timber and to deprive the licensees of their property unless some provision is made for compensation, both to the province and the licensees.

On the third day of April in this House the hon. Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) in response to a question asked by the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) made this reply in reference to the land so taken :

The government has not taken the interest of the lumber licensees, and they have, therefore, no claim to compensation. The Ontario government is not by the British North America Act, entitled to compensation, and it is not intended to pay that government any compensation.

The position which this government has taken in connection with these proceedings is, to me, somewhat startling. The action is attempted to be justified under section 117 of the British North Americ Act, which is as follows :

The several provinces shall retain all their respective public property not otherwise disposed of in this Act, subject to the right of Canada to assume any lands or public property required for fortifications or for the defence of the country.

If one were going into a strict construction of this section from a legal standpoint there would be room for a great deal of doubt, I would think, as to whether or not a training camp would bring this land within the expression 'public property required for fortifications or for the defence of the country.' I observe that the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) has somewhat enlarged upon that section in an interview which he gave to the correspondent of the Toronto 'Globe' on April 17. He says :

In view of the fact that it was being used for military purposes, that is, for defence purposes, in the rightly accepted sense of the word, the right to the land should be vested in the federal authorities, and the British North America Act so provided.

I will not stop to consider that question except to say that it is not at all plain that this camp is within the meaning of the word 'defence' in that section, but I have every possible doubt as to whether or not the executive of this government would have the right to assume that land without the provision of a statute. I do not find anything in the section or elsewhere in the British North America Act, which confers upon the Governor in Council the right to assume that land, and unless there is some expressed or implied provision which would enable the Governor in Council to take that step, it is a step which can only be taken by the Governor in Council under or by virtue of a statute of this parliament. But then, coming to the more essential consideration, let me point out that there is not one word in section 117 which declares that this government, whether by statute or otherwise, shall have the right to assume this land without compensation. It is a very elementary rule of law that where one person is authorized by law to take the property of another against the will of that person he must pay compensation for it and that compensation is usually assessed upon a fairly generous scale. In the courts of Great Britain and of this country as well, the usual practice is to add ten per cent to the value of the land, to give to the owner what that land is worth to him plus ten per cent. I do not find in section 117 any provision that this land may be taken without compensation, and if it is the construction of section of 117 that land may be taken without compensation I should be very much surprised that such a result could be brought about under the provisions of that section. Let me point out certain provisions in the Militia Act which I think have a certain bearing upon the question coupled with the provisions of the Expropriation Act as well. I am quoting from the Militia Act, chapter 41 of the Revised Statutes of 1906, section 8:

> The minister shall have the control and management, including charge of the maintenance and repair, of all military buildings, and also of the construction, maintenance and repair of all forts and fortifications and other works for defence in Canada.

Now, certain powers of expropriation are conferred upon departments of government, including the Department of Militia and Defence. The statute which confers these powers is the Expropriation Act, chapter 143, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906. By section 2, subsection (d) of that Act 'public works' is defined to include fortifications or other works of defence, and by section 2, subsection (a) 'minister' means the head of the department charged with the construction and maintenance of the public work. By subsection (f) of the same section:

> Land includes all granted or ungranted, wild or cleared, public or private lands, and all real property (&c.), for which compensation is to be paid by His Majesty under this Act.

So that, land includes public or private lands, and the expropriation of public lands must include, I would think, not only lands of a municipality but lands of a province as well, where this government has power to take them over. By section 8 of the Expropriation Act—

> Land taken for the use of His Majesty shall be laid off by metes and bounds.

By section 10 and 11 of the Act:

> A plan and description of any land so taken must be deposited in the registry office for the distance in which the land is situated.

By section 14 of the same Act:

> If the land taken is Crown land under the control of the government of the province in which said land is situated, a plan of such lands shall also be deposited in the Crown Lands Department of the province.

Section 26 and subsequent sections make provision for the filing of an information, by means of which information the compensation to be paid for such land shall be determined. In this case no action whatever was taken except the passing of an order in council which was transmitted by His Excellency the Governor in Council to the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario. Let us look for one moment at what would be the consequence of the construction which has been placed by this government upon section 117. I do not understand that there were any fortifications raised upon this land; it is simply a training camp site for militia used during a portion of the year. There may be some buildings of a more or less temporary character on it, I do not know about that, but it is not strictly speaking a fortification, nor is it a work of defence, unless a camp for training militia can be so regarded under section 117. If the government of Canada is in a position to take this land from the province of Ontario by order in council, and to make good its claim that no compensation is to be paid to that province for the land so taken, it can take all the Crown lands of the province of Ontario provided during certain seasons of the year, for two or three days at a time, it should see fit to march some of its militia force to these lands for training purposes. It could take the railway owned by the government of Ontario provided it conveyed its troops on certain days in the year over that railway. It could take all the hospitals and asylums of the province of Ontario provided it used these hospitals and asylums on certain days in the year for the billeting of its militia, and it could do all this without paying to the province of Ontario one dollar of compensation. I do not think any such action would be justified by the statute, and if it were so justified it would certainly be tyrannical and oppressive in the extreme. It would seem to me therefore that the government of Canada ought to afford a reasonable opportunity in the courts, to the government of Ontario to have the question determined.

I have in my hand a memorandum addressed by the Prime Minister of Ontario to the Lieutenant Governor of that province which has already been made public, but which has perhaps not been brought to the attention of this parliament. It is as follows:

> To His Honour,
> William Mortimer Clark, Esq., K.C., &c.,
> Lieutenant Governor of the province of Ontario.
> Sir,—With reference to the despatch from the Under Secretary of State for Canada, addressed to your honour, and dated March 22, 1907, notifying your honour of the assumption of certain lands for the militia camp at Petawawa the undersigned begs leave to report as follows:
> 1. We are not prepared to concede that lands desired by the Dominion for a camp come within the words of section 117 of the British North America Act as 'lands or public property required for fortification or for the defence of the country,' neither does it appear from section 117 that lands of the province can be assumed without compensation to the province.
> 2. From the despatch it appears that the Minister of Militia and Defence, after referring to the existing rights of timber licensees and the present interests of the settlers in possession, goes on to notify your honour of his recommendation that 'subject to these rights and interests, as they now exist, all the lands hereinafter described be, under the authority of section 117 of the British North America Act of 1867, assumed by His Excellency the Governor General in the right of the government of Canada for the defence of the country' and of the approval thereof by His Excellency the Governor General. The description and boundaries of the land so assumed appear in the despatch.

This action on the part of the government of Canada has come to the knowledge of the provincial government, without either notice or warning and is a distinct surprise. Negotiations have been in progress between the two governments for some time looking to the granting by the Department of Lands, Forests and Mines, of a lease of the said lands to the Department of Militia and Defence for as long a time as the lands might be used for the purposes of a militia camp, and at a nominal rental, or for 99 years—the application of the Department of Militia and Defence asking for a lease for the latter term. For the information of your honour, as to the facts, I inclose report made to me by the Deputy Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines, together with telegrams to and from the Minister of Militia and Defence.

From statements made by the Minister of Militia and Defence, and the interview mentioned in the said report, the undersigned understood his views regarding the rights and property of the timber licensees to differ widely from the views held by the Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines. As stated by the deputy minister in his report 'under the Crown timber regulations made under the Crown Timber Act, licensees are entitled to a renewal of the licenses upon payment of an annual ground rental of $3 per mile and Crown dues at such rates as may be fixed by regulation. It must not be forgotten either that the provincial government has, besides the ownership of the said lands, an interest in the said timber, under the terms of the licenses, equal to about one-quarter of the value thereof. An estimate of the value of the timber,—not of course necessarily conclusive,—was made by an expert, whose qualifications were well known to the department, but this estimate has been characterized by the Minister of Militia and Defence as exorbitant. In any event, the value could have been easily ascertained and the Department of Lands, Forests and Mines would have been ready at any time to consider any method by which the value could have been satisfactorily arrived at.

And, it is a little difficult to understand why, if the government of Canada recognize the rights of the licensees in the timber which they hold under their licenses, it does not equally recognize the rights of the province of Ontario, because as is explained in this despatch, and also in the summary of the facts which I gave a moment ago, the province of Ontario has by virtue of these timber dues an interest equal to about one-fourth of the total value of the timber upon this land. The report of Mr. Whitney to the Lieutenant Governor continues :

Instead of co-operating with the department to this end, viz.: the determining the value of 'the existing rights of the said timber licensees' the Department of Militia and Defence has peremptorily, without any notice being given to either the provincial government or the licensees, taken over the lands indicated and confiscated, as far as possible at any rate, the property both of the licensees and of the province.

If this proceeding is constitutional, the rights of ownership of the provincial government have been taken away absolutely and without compensation, while the licensees must simply depend upon what may be called the bounty of the Department of Militia and Defence, the head of which has already, in a manner entirely ex parte, characterized the claims of the licensees as exorbitant. In other words, one of the parties to the dispute is to pronounce final judgment on the claim of the other party.

Further, if this proceeding is constitutional, the existing licenses cannot be renewed at the expiration of the present year (April 30, 1907), at least, according to the view held by the Department of Militia and Defence, their renewal would have no legal effect, the property having been assumed by the Dominion government and there being now no 'existing rights of the timber licensees.'

The situation is this, the government of Canada says to the province of Ontario : We will not pay you one dollar compensation although you have an interest to the extent of one-fourth the value of all the timber standing upon that land under arrangements, partly by virtue of law and partly by virtue of convention, which exist between you and your licensees. It says to the licensees : We will pay you compensation but, inasmuch as you have no absolute legal right as against the province of Ontario to renew your license at the end of the year we will give you compensation up to the end of this year only, and from that time on you will not get one dollar—although but for this action of the government of Canada those licensees would have continued in the enjoyment of the property, in the enjoyment of their right to cut upon payment of the proper dues, and in that way were possessed of a property of very considerable value.

Mr. Whitney's memorandum or report continues as follows :

The undersigned hazards the opinion that this is a strange condition of affairs to obtain in a British country, and desires respectfully to inform your honour that, in the opinion of his colleagues and himself, the action of the Department of Militia and Defence in this matter was unnecessary, unwarranted and arbitrary in the extreme.

Respectfully submitted,
(Sgd.) J. P. WHITNEY.

Toronto,
April 2, 1907.

It appears further that by a resolution passed without any dissenting voice, concurred in by both political parties in the legislature of Ontario it was declared as follows :

This House has learned with surprise and regret of the action of the Dominion authorities in taking, without the consent of the province, 55,000 acres of its lands, with the timber thereon, and with the avowed intention of making no compensation for the lands or the timber, and this House cordially approves the course taken by your honour's advisers of earnestly protesting against the action taken.

This House also desires to assure your honour that it will, by all the means which it can command, assist you honour's advisers in maintaining the rights of the province.

I think this is a matter of sufficient importance to bring to the attention of the government and of the House and to ask the intention of the government as to taking the proceeding pointed out by the Expropriation Act for the payment of compensation in such cases. There seems to me grave doubt as to whether the action of this government is not absolutely void, but if it is not void, then the province should at least have an opportunity of making its claim for compensation under the Expropriation Act. If the action of the government in the present instance can be sustained we have this condition of affairs under the British North America Act, that the government of Canada can, in its own judgment, in its absolutely unfettered discretion, declare the whole on any portion of the Crown lands of Nova Scotia, Quebec or Ontario to be required for purposes of defence, and pass an order in council to that effect; and, having passed that order in council, can enter into possession, set the province at defiance and refuse to pay the province a dollar of compensation. If the action of the government can be justified in the present case, it can be justified on the same legal grounds in the extreme cases which I have put. I do not think that such a result was intended by the British North America Act and even if such a result were intended by that Act it seems to me that so extreme an exercise of the power as that to which I have just now alluded would be tyrannical and oppressive, and that the government of Canada, when it required the Crown lands or property of any province for such purpose, ought, in all fairness and justice, to pay to the province from which that property is taken a fair compensation therefor.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I had not until late to-day an opportunity of looking very hurriedly over some of the papers connected with this matter and therefore I have to confess that I am not as familiar with all its details as I should like to be in order that I might reply to the observations of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). I need hardly say that so far as the question is a legal one, I should speak with great diffidence and deference and if I venture to refer to that aspect at all, it will be with due recognition of the fact that these are matters not for laymen but for members of the legal profession. My hon. friend, however, went off from the purely legal phases of the case and talked of the equities of the matter, talked of its being a proceeding that was tyrannical, despotic and in every respect unjust. I think a little examination of the case will show that so far as the broad equities are concerned, if any one has the right to complain it is not the government of Ontario but the government of Canada. My hon. friend has given the substance of such papers as were furnished to him and if I caught the dates correctly he began the history in 1907.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I said there had been negotiations before that for some time.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no doubt my hon. friend gave the House the substance of the information in his possession but whoever furnished his information and the information used in the opposition press for some days past is open to the charge that he omitted—suppressed may be a strong word—he omitted the most vital facts of the whole case. What are the facts?

Some years ago the Militia Department determined that it needed a new camp ground and it began to take observation of various places within measureable distance of Ottawa with a view to obtaining a site. After examining a number of places the question came down to choosing between one site in Ontario and one site in Quebec, the site in Quebec being at Kazabazua on the Gatineau river, and a site in the province of Ontario within measurable distance of Ottawa. The province of Quebec offered its Crown lands free; the province of Ontario, the House will be surprised to learn in view of what my hon. friend said of the despotic character of the proceedings of this government, offered its Crown lands free—and that fact has been concealed by the parties who furnished my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) with the information he presented to the House to-night.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has my hon. friend the document in which it was offered?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, I have the document. I find that at the time the selection of a site was being considered by the Militia Department. Col. Pinault, the Deputy Minister of Militia, addressed on the 3rd October, 1904, the following letter to the Commissioner of Crown Lands for the province of Ontario. I had these papers prepared in order to bring them down to the House, and at the proper time will lay them on the table, but in the meantime I shall make use of them as my hon. friend has made use of those which have been brought down:

A number of communications have passed between Mr. Southport of Southworth of your department, and Colonel. Biggar, of this department, in reference to the site for the central camp. It is the desire of this department to procure a site, and one has been found in your province, embracing the Crown lands in the townships of Petawawa, Buchanan, McKay and Wylie, as per the attached description. Please say whether, if this site is selected, you will grant on behalf of the province of Ontario, a lease for ninety-nine years, or for so long as such territory is required for military purposes, to this department, of the ground above-mentioned at a nominal rental. It is thought that a camp in this district would have a good effect, insomuch as supplies would be required for the men when in camp there, which would create a good local market. An early answer will be greatly appreciated.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

Col. L. F. PINAULT, Colonel,

Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence.

The argument that the selection of this site at the point intimated would be an advantage to the community and in that way an advantage to the province in which this land was situated, seems to have had weight. Either for that or for broad patriotic reasons, or for some other reasons, the government of Ontario, through its constituted officer, the Commissioner of Crown Lands, agreed to grant a lease of this property for ninety-nine years at a nominal rate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the date?

Mr. FIELDING. The 12th October, 1904, about three years before my hon. friend's history began. The letter is addressed by the Commissioner to Col. Pinault:

Toronto, October 12, 1904.

Yours of the 3rd to hand and note what you say with reference to site for the central camp in connection with the militia of Canada, embracing parts of the townships of Petawawa, Buchanan, Wylie and McKay, and in reply would say the Crown Lands Department will be very glad to comply with your request as to a lease of said property as belongs to the Crown within the area mentioned, or such other tenure as may be mutually agreed upon, for the period you mention, and at a nominal rental or charge, the details of which we will work out at our earliest convenience and have an order in council passed covering the area and the terms and conditions agreed upon.

Yours sincerely,

E. J. DAVIS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does that speak of a sale or simply a lease?

Mr. FIELDING. A lease for ninety-nine years at a nominal rent, which is equivalent, as my hon. friend knows, to practically a sale. This was the undertaking, on the part of the government of Ontario, to give to the Militia Department of Canada what rights and interests the government of Ontario had in these lands for ninety-nine years, at a nominal rent, which was practically giving them as a free gift. The government of Canada accepted this arrangement and put aside the proposal of the government of the province of Quebec. It rejected the offer of free lands in the province of Quebec and accepted the offer of free land in the province of Ontario, and proceeded to buy other land which it required to complete the tract. It went on to make all the arrangements to carry out in good faith the plan proposed and establish a camp ground, and then the government of Ontario coolly repudiated the bargain it had made and then urged the Conservative press to abuse this government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was any arrangement made concerning the licensees?

Mr. FIELDING. None whatever.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was to become of them?

Mr. FIELDING. It was not proposed to disturb the licensees. That question came up later. Here was the engagement of the province of Ontario, for a consideration, the consideration being that this government should abandon the negotiations they had entered into for the purpose of obtaining a site in the adjoining province. But after the government of Canada had abandoned the proposed site in the province of Quebec, after it had purchased other land to complete the tract, then we had the government of Ontario turning around and coolly repudiating the bargain they had made. In the face of that condition of things, the statement of my hon. friend that there has been despotic and tyrannical action on the part of the government of Canada is somewhat absurd.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did I not read a statement to-night, in the hon. gentleman's hearing, that the government of Ontario had offered to grant a lease at a nominal rental provided the licensees were taken care of?

Mr. FIELDING. What right had the government of Ontario to put new conditions into the bargain they had made some years ago?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where is the written acceptance?

Mr. FIELDING. This is my reply to that question. After negotiations had taken place personally between the various authorities concerned, the matter took a written shape by the Deputy Minister of Militia writing the Commissioner of Crown Lands of Ontario, stating that they had made this proposal and asking if it was agreeable, and we have the local Minister of Crown Lands saying they would give a lease for ninety-nine years at a nominal rent. What answer had this government to make? We asked: Will you do so and so? And they said, we will.

Mr. FOSTER. None of the details were settled.

Mr. FIELDING. I grant you that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The licensees were not even mentioned.

Mr. FIELDING. The next letter on the file is dated 27th December, 1905, from Colonel Pinault, Deputy Minister of Militia, to the Commissioner of Crown Lands at Toronto :

His Excellency the Governor General in Council has authorized the acquisition of land at the junction of the Ottawa and Petawawa rivers, county of Renfrew, as a site for a central camp, as per blue print plan hereto attached. It has been understood that the government of Ontario would donate such parts of the area to be acquired as are still Crown lands, and I have been directed by the Minister of Militia and Defence to now make application to have such lands set apart and transferred from the Department of Crown Lands to this department. I shall be glad to be informed at an early date that the transfer of these lands to this department has been authorized by his honour the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

L. F. PINAULT, Colonel,

Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence.

On the 5th January, 1906, Mr. White, Deputy Minister of Crown Lands for the province of Ontario, replied to that letter. And what was his reply?

Toronto, January 5, 1906.

Sir,—In reply to your favour of the 27th ultimo to the hon. the Minister of Lands and Mines inclosing the blue print plan showing part of the townships of Wylie, Buchanan and Petawawa, in the county of Renfrew, covering the territory you wish to acquire for a central military camp, I find that the area embraced within the red border on the blue print plan is 74,000 acres approximately. Of this area about one-quarter is really patented or located. About 52,000 acres is still in the Crown.

The matter has been before the minister and he directs me to say that in view of your department being likely to dispose of the old military camp grounds at Niagara he would be pleased if some arrangements could be made for a transfer of these lands to the province in exchange for the Petawawa lands, as the province is desirous of making an addition to the Queen Victoria Park at Niagara.

I would be glad to hear from you with reference to this suggestion.

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) AUBREY WHITE,

Deputy Minister of Lands and Mines.

It appears that a little later, these gentlemen of the Ontario government became very much disturbed about the position of the timber licensees. Up to that time there was not a word about them. Having made a bargain with the government of Canada to give the lands free, the Ontario government now proposed something else. Instead of giving the land free, as they had agreed to do under the arrangement they had made, they coolly asked us to purchase the land, and the purchase price was to be the giving by this government to the provincial government of public lands in the Niagara district which now belong to us. Is that the sort of bargain which my hon. friend says has been approached in a spirit of fairness and equity? Col. Pinault, Deputy Minister of Militia, replied as follows on the 3rd January, 1906:

Ottawa, January 13, 1906.

Sir,—With reference to your letter of the 5th instant, in which you state that the Minister of Lands and Mines would like this department to consider the question of giving the Niagara military grounds in exchange for the Crown lands at Petawawa which this department is desirous of acquiring as a site for a central camp, I have the honour to inclose, herewith, copies of a letter which I addressed to the hon. the Commissioner of Crown Lands on October 3, 1904, and the reply of the Hon. Mr. Davis thereto. From these inclosures it will be seen that the Hon. Mr. Davis promised a ninety-nine years' lease of the lands at Petawawa, at a nominal rent. It is only right that I should point out to you, that it was chiefly if not entirely due to such promise that Petawawa was finally decided on as a site for the central camp. A very suitable site had been located at Kazubazua, Quebec province, and probably would have been decided on had it been known that the Crown lands at Petawawa would be charged for.

In view of the foregoing, the Minister of Militia trusts that the hon. the Minister of Lands and Mines will be able to see his way to carry out the promise of his predecessor.

As regards the Niagara camp grounds, they are too small for the annual training of the militia in No. 2 military district, and it has been decided to dispose of them and to acquire a site in some other part of the province, probably in the county of Simcoe.

When this question was before the Governor General in Council, the intention was that the proceeds from the sale of the Niagara grounds should be used for the acquisition of a site elsewhere. The final disposition of the Niagara camp grounds has not yet been decided on. Certain parts are of great historical value, and it is the intention of the minister to recommend that those parts be retained and preserved. If you have any proposition to suggest with reference to the remainder, I shall be glad to submit it to the Minister of Militia for his consideration, who trusts that the question will be considered apart from the Petawawa matter.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) L. F. PINAULT, Colonel.

Here we find the issue between the two governments. The government of Canada proposing to establish a camp grounds, entered into negotiations, and receiving the assurance of the government of Ontario that the lands would be given freely, made its arrangements on that basis, putting aside the offer it had from the province of Quebec. And when the time came for the government of Ontario to fulfil its obligations, that government first said : Before we fulfil the bargain give us some of your lands at Niagara. And when it was found that there were good reasons against that, they started the new line of raising questions about the timber licensees. There is not a word in that letter about timber licensees—it was a question of swap at that time. But afterwards came this question of timber licensees. As I understand it, it is not necessary for the purposes of the Dominion government that the timber licensees should be disturbed. It is desirable, of course, that the government of Canada should control the whole property; but I am told that, even though the timber licensees continue to occupy their timber berths, their work can be carried on without serious inconveniences to those who have to use the camp ground. The camp only uses the ground for a short time in the summer, while the timber licensees carry on their operations in the winter. Therefore, the two do not necessarily conflict. However, the government of Canada, desiring that there be no friction in the matter, entered into negotiations to acquire the rights of the timber licensees. It appears, however, that the government of Ontario were very anxious that these licensees should be compensated on a very liberal scale. One company, occupying a considerable tract of land, demanded $98,000 for its privileges.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Who were the licensees?

Mr. FIELDING. The Pembroke Lumber Company is the company to which I refer. I do not know the gentlemen who compose it. The Minister of Militia thought that if one company demanded such a price, to purchase the interests of all would make the transaction a very expensive one, and so declined to go on. This brings us back to the provisions of the British North America Act to which my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) referred. I have already said that I did not presume to discuss the legal aspect of the case, but I think that this section 117 is so plain that a way-faring man, thought a member of parliament, may understand it. It says:

> The several provinces shall retain all their respective public property not otherwise disposed of in this Act, subject to the right of Canada to assume any lands or public property required for fortifications or for the defence of the country.

There is nothing in that about expropriation or compensation. If the view we have taken of that section be correct, that land does not belong to the province of Ontario but belongs to the Dominion of Canada for the purpose of fortifications and defence whenever it suits the pleasure of the Dominion government to demand it for that purpose. These lands went into the possession of the provincial governments subject to that qualification. I grant that the case is somewhat different where land has passed into private hands. Where land has passed from the Crown into the hands of private parties and is required for public use, the private interest should be compensated. But this was Crown lands in respect of the province of Ontario, but subject to the right that I have indicated, and when the moment arrived that the Dominion of Canada wished to exercise its right they were taking possession of their own lands and not of the lands of the province of Ontario. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) says that this land is not taken for fortifications. The Act says: The land may be assumed—not expropriated, but assumed; we simply take it into possession—when required for fortifications or for the defence of the country. My hon. friend says that this is not for fortifications or defence. But what does 'defence' mean in the Militia Act, if this does not come within its scope? What other form of defence have we? We have not a very aggressive army. We have a minister and a Department of Militia and Defence. And surely everything which relates to the organization, equipment, and management of the militia of Canada comes within the meaning of the word 'defence.' Surely, it will not be contended for a moment that we could not use the power conferred under that section until there was a declaration of war and we wanted to erect a fortification? It must mean that the land can be taken for purposes of Militia and Defence. The government of Canada have the right, not to expropriate but to take into possession the property. By the terms of the British North America Act that property belongs to the Dominion and does not belong to the province.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Under that interpretation, the Dominion government could assume possession of all the Crown lands of all the provinces.

Mr. FIELDING. For purposes of Militia and Defence. And, if the issue were raised in court, it would be for the court to determine whether the quality taken was reasonable for the purpose.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It does not say anything in the British North America Act about its being reasonable.

Mr. FIELDING. But I need not tell my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden)—for he knows more about these matters than I do—that the questions of what is involved in a statute may be raised and it will be decided by the courts according to the reasonable meaning.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) think that if this went before the courts it would be a question for the courts to decide whether the action of this government had been reasonable or not?

Mr. FIELDING. Whether it had been bona fide and reasonable, yes If the government of Canada were to take possession of a great deal of provincial property on the plea that it was to be applied to some purposes in connection with Militia and Defence, and then should apply it to other purposes, clearly it would be wrong. For instance, if we were to take possession of a property on this plea and proceed to sell it to other people, that would be wrong.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think executive action of that kind is reviewable in the courts.

Mr. FIELDING. If we took the land in good faith for the purpose of Militia and Defence, I hold, with all deference to my legal friends, that we are within the four corners of that section. I do not want to dwell upon that aspect of the case, and perhaps I should apoligize when I as a layman deal with such questions at all. But even though my contention be incorrect, no action has been taken by this government which should preclude the province of Ontario from setting up any claim for compensation which it thinks it is lawfully entitled to receive. We have notified them that we desire to take the land. If our action is not legal, I think, that ways can be found whereby the legality of the proceeding of this government can be called in question. But we will not stand upon that. I will say on behalf of the government that if the government of Ontario think they have been badly treated and if they have acted in good faith—and I am free to say that I believe they have not acted in good faith—they claim that they have acted in good faith and have been badly treated by the government of Canada, and if they will take any proper procedure such as the Attorney General of the province and the Minister of Justice of the Dominion can agree upon, as to the proper method of raising the question in the courts whether this procedure is reasonable and proper, we are here to say that we will help them to do it and obtain a legal decision upon it. From the information we now have, they have no legal right to get compensation for these lands. But if that is a mistaken view, and I admit that they claim differently, and we have a right to treat their view with respect, we will undertake to facilitate any means which they may desire to take to bring that issue before the court, so that for whatever rights they may have under the law and which have for the present been set aside, they shall have the most ample opportunity of receiving the compensation that they are entitled to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister has made a rather serious charge against the members of the government of Ontario; he has distinctly stated two or three times that they have not acted in good faith, that they have acted in a bargaining spirit.

Mr. FIELDING. I thought I showed the proof in the official letter of the Commissioner of Crown Lands of the province of Ontario. When they were aware that we were negotiating for sites in different parts of the country, when they were aware that we were offered a site in another place, and had set aside that offer to accept the offer of the province of Ontario, and bought other lands from private interests in order to complete the tract, I say that these facts constitute a binding obligation upon the government of Ontario, which, although not enacted by an Act of parliament, is an obligation that the government of Ontario should recognize, and in a denial of which they are repudiating an obligation of the great province of Ontario.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the Minister of Finance say that although no provision was made for the rights of the licensees in this informal letter, and no provision was made for their compensation, the raising of the rights of the licensees afterwards constituted a breach of good faith by the government of Ontario ?

Mr. FIELDING. The licensees can protect their own rights, and I have pointed out that the rights of the licensees were only raised after they had made the interesting proposal that we should swap some Niagara lands of Petawawa.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. A further question: Does the government propose to deal with the licensees upon the basis of their rights, and the tenure of their leases as they would have been enjoyed under the usual practice of the Ontario government, or does this government propose to deal with the licensees simply upon the basis of persons who have no further claim whatever after the 30th of April of this year?

Mr. FIELDING. I would not like to answer that. Whatever legal rights the licensees possess must be upheld. But as the Ontario government has not been willing to consider the equitable rights of other people, I do not see why they should expect their own equitable rights to be better treated.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN. If the province of Ontario does not seem anxious to retain this Petawawa camp, and has imposed conditions upon the Dominion government which this government does not feel disposed to accept, would it not still be possible for the province of Quebec to keep open its offer of a site at Kazabazua in the county of Wright? We will be quite willing to accept it.

Mr. FIELDING. I will have to reserve an answer to that.

Mr. E. BRISTOL (Centre Toronto). I listened with care to the statement of the Minister of Finance with reference to the offer of Mr. Davis, and what I understood Mr. Davis to offer was to give the lease of the interest of the province in these lands. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if that is not correct, if that letter written on behalf or by Mr. Davis did not offer to lease the interest of the province, whatever it was, and if this was so, the province was not dealing with any interest of timber licensees which might not have been referred to in that letter, but which would be just as much an outstanding interest to be dealt with as a mortgage, but which the province could not give away because it did not have the power. I think this is the fair construction of Mr. Davis' proposal. Now the Minister of Finance seems to feel hurt because when, a year or two later, this matter is brought to the attention of another provincial minister, the other minister, acting I think in the public interest, suggests that if the government of Canada are going to give up certain lands which they now have at Niagara Falls, they should go into a public park and be kept for the benefit of Canada. That is not what you would call a bargaining proposition. The province of Ontario were not making a five cent piece out of that. We are all proud of the park at Niagara, and if the Dominion of Canada did not happen to want this land they now have here, I would like to ask what better purpose could it be used for than for a great public park? How could it be said that was a bargaining proposition ?

Mr. FIELDING. Why should that be mixed up with another different transaction ? If the government of Ontario have any suggestion to make about another transaction on its merits, all right. But why should they demand that as a condition of a bargain they have previously made?

Mr. BRISTOL. The letter does not demand that as a condition of a bargain. No lawyer in this House will say that this was suggested as a condition of the bargain. After a new administration comes in and the new minister hears of this land at Niagara not being required, and he knows the Dominion government proposes to make Petawawa take the place of the camp at Niagara, he makes, as a public official and nothing more, a friendly suggestion, not a bargain, a friendly suggestion that this land which would no longer be required for public purposes, that this camp which contains certain historic sites which the government want to preserve, should form part of Niagara Park. Now I say that is a fair and reasonable suggestion to make, and it was in no sense a bargain. I ask any fair minded man to read the letter which the minister has read, and I say that is a fair and reasonable interpretation to put upon it. Now there is a hiatus there, nothing is done after this suggestion. If at any time the Dominion of Canada had presented any lease that they desired the province of Ontario to sign, and the province had refused, they could naturally make some objection. But suppose they had done that, and had presented this ninety-nine year lease and said : Agree to that and sign the lease ; if the province had refused they might have had a cause of complaint. But instead of that the Dominion assume to take the lands of the province in the way they have done. I do not think the political friends of this government in Toronto, who ought to have some knowledge of the acts of the previous ministers and of what took place between the two governments, will approve of the action of this government. I venture to say that every Liberal member in the provincial legislature will unanimously support the present administration in their action. They are unanimously opposed to the principles enunciated to-night by the Minister of Finance on behalf of his party. If under these circumstances, I say, the government had presented to the province of Ontario a lease for ninety-nine years of the interest of the province, I venture to submit that they would still have had to consider the matter of these licensees. Why, dealing with the enormous amount of public lands thoughout this country, does the minister think for a moment that every minister or deputy minister keeps in mind that on every paltry 55,000 acres of timber lands, there may be timber licenses outstanding? It is not a fair and reasonable view that if there was nothing said about it it would be because the minister in Ontario would know that the minister in Ottawa would have enough knowledge to know that most of the timber lands in Ontario were licensed and when the minister was dealing with this land for the province of Ontario he would expect that the minister in Ottawa would look after the licensees and not the province of Ontario, that if Ontario made a free gift of land for a military camp the government here would look after these people who had their business interests at stake as timber licensees.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN (Wright). Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that this question relating to the military camp has come up. For a considerable length of time the people in this section of the country have taken a deep interest in the establishment of a military camp at Kazabazua. It seems apparent that the government of Ontario is not over anxious to retain the camp in that province. Therefore I ask, would it not be wise, in view of this circumstance, to establish the military camp at Kazabazua. It may be possible that this House is not aware of all the advantages which would be offered for the establishment of a military camp at Kazabazua. Kazabazua is in direct communication with the city of Ottawa by the Canadian Pacific Railway line. Soldiers could reach the camp without any difficulty by taking the Canadian Pacific Railway at Ottawa and when they found themselves at Kazabazua they would have a great area of land which we in the province of Quebec are quite ready to give to the government. We have already made an offer to the government and we are still ready to make a free grant of this land. I may say to my hon. friend who has asked me the question that there are no timber licenses that would bind us and that the government will not be bothered by timber licenses. In Kazabazua the government would find that the camp could be supplied by the farmers of the locality. We have in that section of the country a very rich farming community and the camp would be offered all the advantages that any military camp could expect.

An hon. MEMBER. Is the water good?

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN. It is within easy reach and they would have every possible requirement both for men and horses. I am glad that hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House are annoyed that this camp should have gone to the province of Ontario. I do not know myself why the camp went to Ontario. I for one urged very strongly upon the government the establishment of the military camp at Kazabazua. I still urge the establishment of the camp at Kazabazua and I hope the government of Ontario will persist in their efforts to impose impossible conditions upon the government of Canada and that we will have the camp at Kazabazua.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I perhaps misunderstood the hon. leader of the House (Mr. Fielding) in regard to what he said respecting the right of the Dominion government to take this property by virtue of its right under section 117 of the British North America Act. As I understand the hon. gentleman's contention it was that under section 117 of the British North America Act the government of Canada had the power to take such of the public domain of the province as it desired for the purpose of the defence of the country. The section reads as follows:

> The several provinces shall retain all their respective public property not otherwise disposed of in this Act, subject to the right of Canada to assume any lands or public property required for fortifications or for the defence of the country.

Now, that is very plain and very simple, and if I apprehended the hon. gentleman's remarks correctly, I quite agree with the construction he put upon it which is that it only applies to such public property in the province as remains in the Crown in the province or as remains undisposed of by the province, or which has not been sold by the province. I agree with the construction put upon it by the hon. minister that it only applies to that portion of the lands that the province of Ontario retains at the present time. As I understand the controversy, the fee in this land remains in the Crown in Ontario. There is no objection on the part of the province of Ontario to parting with the fee in the land, but previous to these negotiations the Crown in the province had parted with a certain right in the land; that is the right to cut timber. The hon. gentleman's own construction of the Act would preclude the right of Canada to confiscate or acquire the rights in the timber which had been previously granted by the Crown. In other words, the right of Canada was confined to such property or interest in this property as the Crown in the province of Ontario retained. That being so and the Crown in the province of Ontario being willing to give all it retains, namely, the fee in the land, and simply saying: we have parted with a certain interest in the land; we have given licenses to cut timber on this land, we have not got this right, and section 117 cannot apply to it, I cannot see, why the province of Ontario is in error in asking this government to settle with these timber licensees. The Crown in the province of Ontario has parted with an interest in the land, namely, the right to cut timber. This section only applies to such portion of that right or title to the land as remains in the Crown. Now, how can this government say that the province of Ontario should not only give them such portion of the land as remains in the Crown and also shall acquire at its own expense the rights which have been previously granted to timber licensees? Surely a position of that kind is not reasonable or tenable. It is not warranted under the construction which the minister puts upon section 117, and I think that no lawyer would put the strained construction that is now sought to be put upon this section. In so far as that view of the controversy is concerned and in view of the minister's own construction of the section I do not see what legislation this government has to stand on and in that respect I would like to know if I am correct in my statement of the hon. gentleman's view.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL (Glengarry). In reference to the ownership, or fee, or right, in a timber license, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. C. Macdonell) if the right of the licensee does not extend to the land so long as he pays the dues upon the land?

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. J. T. Schell) must know that the rights which the licensee or any other grantee from the Crown receives depend upon the language of the license or the grant absolutely and entirely. The usual rights of the license to cut timber are simply the rights to cut timber within a certain territory, the licensee being required to pay certain royalties to the Crown.

Mr. TAYLOR. And the right to remove the timber.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Yes, the right to remove the timber.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. The right under a timber license in Ontario and Quebec extends beyond the right to simply cut the timber. You have the right to the control of the area covered by the timber license so long as it remains under license and you pay the ground rent. If the government of Ontario gave these people licenses they had the right to extinguish the rights of the licensees not only to the timber, but to their right to the timber license so long as they continued to pay the ground rent.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I would like to know if I have made myself plain to the minister ?

Mr. FIELDING. Whatever the rights of the licensees are they can be trusted to settle them with this government. If they have vested rights we must respect them. I cannot say more than that.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). I cannot allow the leader of the House to charge the Ontario government with a breach of faith of so serious a nature as this. The hon. gentleman thought fit to read certain correspondence, and he began with a letter of the 3rd of October as being the original proposal made by this government to the government of Ontario. But the hon. gentleman must have known of the previous correspondence between this government and Thomas Southworth of the Department of Lands, Forests and Mines in Toronto.

Mr. FIELDING. I read the first letter which appears on the file sent to me. It has reference, as I read it, to some previous correspondence, but I have not at this moment seen this other letter.

Mr. BOYCE. The leader of the House did not hesitate to commence with a letter of the 3rd of October, which is not the first letter, and which eliminates some of the terms mentioned before and after. The leader of the House had no hesitation in citing that correspondence, and upon the construction he placed upon it, he charged the government of Ontario with bad faith.

Mr. FIELDING. The only letter I cited as affecting the government of Ontario is the letter of the Commissioner of Crown Lands.

Mr. BOYCE. I will read one or two letters of the Commissioner of Crown Lands, and surely one of his letters is as good as another, and if one letter imposes conditions and the other does not, surely my hon. friend should have read both. I will start with this letter dated October 21, 1903:

Toronto, October 21, 1903.

Dear Colonel Biggar,—While in Ottawa a week ago, I endeavoured to see you, but was advised that you were in Montreal, and I was not able to wait to see you.

I wrote you some time ago regarding the subject of our conversation, and have been waiting to hear from you as to what was being done. I have noticed the minister's proposal to establish some sort of permanent camp, and sincerely hope that it may be established in Ontario, preferably in the vicinity of the lands selected, referred to by you. There would be no question as to the land as I wrote you, and our department would be glad to co-operate in any way to make the establishment a success.

Would you briefly let me know what is being done, or if this land is likely to be required at any time for the purpose.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) THOMAS SOUTHWORTH.

On June 3rd Mr. Southworth writes :

Ontario Department of Crown Lands,
Bureau of Colonization and Forestry,
Toronto, June 3, 1904.

Dear Colonel Biggar,—I am sending you a four section map of the province of Ontario, showing the location of the proposed camp site at Petawawa, and the means of access by rail. I have been making some figures showing the comparative distances that would have to be traversed by the different batteries in reaching this point compared with Kazabazua. It figures out as follows : The total mileage consumed by the batteries at London, St. Catharines, Guelph (2), Hamilton, Quebec, Montreal, Toronto (2), Cobourg, Kingston, Gananoque, Ottawa, 3,495 miles, leaving a difference in favour of the Petawawa site of 88 miles, practically no difference at all.

I have had tracings made of parts of four township: Petawawa, Buchanan, McKay, and Wylie, with all occupied lots in them. A good many of these would of course require to be freed, but as the settlers have not very valuable improvements, I do not think there would be much difficulty about this.

Respectfully submitted for your consideration.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) THOMAS SOUTHWORTH.

Taking the letter to which the leader of the House referred of October 3, it is followed by the acceptance of October 12, and by a telegram of the 5th November from Colonel Biggar to the Commissioner of Crown Lands, Parliament Buildings, Toronto :

Will you please pass order in council with reference to the central camp.

On November 7, Mr. Southworth writes :

Ontario Department of Crown Lands,
Bureau of Colonization and Forestry,
Toronto, November 7, 1904.

My dear Colonel Biggar,—The minister advises me that he answered your wire this morning. He was anxious to have the order in council put through to-day but it will be impossible to do that because we have not sufficient information as to the condition of all the land asked for by you to enable us to do so. Mr. White has asked the chief clerk of the sales branch to look over the land rolls to find out how many and what lots applied for by your department are already in private hands. When that is done it will probably be necessary to have an inspection made to ascertain what other lots are squatted upon, before the lease can be formally issued.

I have your small sketch map, but if you should send me the tracings you have with the area marked on them that you desire, it would help us somewhat.

I will have the matter expedited as much as possible and it ought not to take many days before it will be in shape to have the order passed.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) THOMAS SOUTHWORTH.

On the 9th of November, Thomas Southworth again writes to Colonel Biggar:

Ontario Department of Crown Lands,
Bureau of Colonization and Forestry,
Toronto, November 9, 1904.

My dear Colonel Biggar,—I am very sorry that the minister's instructions to the secretary were not carried out, as I know that he gave instructions to answer your wire, and a copy of his dictated message was sent to me.

I am glad to receive the plans as it will expedite our work in finding what lots in the territory asked for are located, and I will have the necessary information forwarded to you just as early as the clerks in the sales branch can obtain it.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) THOMAS SOUTHWORTH.

That is somewhat different from the very positive statement of the leader of the House that an agreement had been made by the province of Ontario to convey these lands. It will be seen that both before and after the letters he cited to this House upon which he had no hesitation in charging bad faith on the part of the government of Ontario, there were conditions and stipulations attached to that very arrangement; conditions with regard to the rights of third parties, and conditions which give rise to the very claim now of the Ontario government, that those who had these lots which had been located either by settlers or by timber licensees, should be compensated. That is a very different state of facts from those presented by the leader of the House. The papers show that the department gave instructions to a gentleman at Pembroke by the name of Forgie, a lawyer, to try and settle with these squatters and other settlers in order to make the matter plain. That gentleman went to work and he was very liberally paid for his services, and by a strange coincidence it is found that this very gentleman himself obtains an amount of money for some property in that locality as squatters rights. That is a very extraordinary business, and one to which I would invite the attention of the leader of the House if he desires to see who has committeed any breach of faith. Here is a payment by this government to J. G. Forgie of $1,000 for land as squatters rights, out of the very fund appropriated for the purpose of settling with these so-called settlers, or those who had acquired rights on this camp ground, which the leader of the House says the Ontario government positively agreed ot grant.

In addition to that Mr. Forgie was paid by the Department of Justice a considerable sum in fees, $890.55 and another account of $506.80. The settlement effected by Mr. Forgie was referred to the Justice Department, and there is some interesting information in the report of the deputy minister as to the titles which were obtained by Mr. Forgie. The Department of Militia gave a free hand, so far as money was concerned, to Mr. A. T. Mackie, of Pembroke, who had authority to go to the Bank of Ottawa in Pembroke, overdraw his account some $40,000 and give his promissory note to the bank for any amounts he would require in payment for such sums as might be required to pay off the so-called squatter's claims. He expended that amount and more in such settlement, and in connection with this illegal transaction the government paid over $700 illegally in interest to the Bank of Ottawa, because the government took up Mr. Mackie's notes to the Bank of Ottawa, and that is how the squatter's claims were paid. The whole transaction forms the subject of certain correspondence which I shall not quote in full, between the Justice Department and the Auditor General. There are some very strong comments by the Auditor General upon the transaction, which he characterizes as at least being exceedingly irregular. But when the report was made by Mr. Mackie as to what he had done with the claims of these settlers it was found that he had expended:

Purchase money of patented lands..	$26,950 00
Purchase money to locatees and occupants of unpatented lands..	12,810 00
Interest on Mr. Mackie's notes to Bank of Ottawa..	711 68
My bill against him as inclosed.. ..	528 32
	41,000 00

As a consequence of this transaction the matter was referred to the Justice Department to inquire how it was that these large sums appeared to have been paid to persons as locatees or occupants and to find out, after the money had been paid that, whatever title the locatee, the local settler had, had been obtained in the name of Mr. Mackie and had been paid for by him and that his note was paid by this government. There was a reference to the Justice Department and here is a letter from the Justice Department to the Deputy Minister of Militia——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do you mean that they paid first and investigated the title afterwards?

Mr. BOYCE. They paid first and investigated the title afterwards, strange as it may seem, and the papers to which I will invite the attention of the leader of the House (Mr. Fielding) will bear that out, that Mr. Mackie, of Pembroke, was given carte blanche to go to the Bank of Ottawa there and get what money he wanted on the credit of this government; a letter was written by the Department of Finance to the manager of the bank at Pembroke, authorizing Mr. Mackie to do so, and to use that money buying up these claims and then the money was paid in order to retire Mr. Mackie's notes. In short the government had pledged itself to this illegal and most irregular transaction and the money was paid by Mr. Mackie on the credit of the government through the Bank of Ottawa before it was ascertained what title, if any, these people had. Under date the 28th December, 1905, the Deputy Minister of Justice writes to the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence as follows:

Petawawa Camp Grounds.

Sir,—Referring to your letter of the 29th ultimo, No. 67, 17, 1, I have the honour to inclose herewith reports upon the title of the lands contained in the memorandum attached to your letter. Some of the lands are patented, some not patented but located in the Crown land office, others not patented nor located in the Crown land office.

Below you will find a separate list as to each of these classes :

Lots Nos. 7, 24, 27, 28, 38, 39, range 'A.'

Lots Nos. 23, 24, 25, 32, 35, 36, 38, in lake range.

Lot No. 15 in concession 1, township of Buchanan.

Lot No. 14 in concession 15, township of Petawawa.

Lot No. 14 in concession 16, township of Petawawa.

Lot No. 15 in concession 16, township of Petawawa.

Patents for the foregoing lots have not been issued but are located in the Crown land office in the names of the various parties mentioned in the reports.

In the following cases neither patents have been issued nor has any person located for the lots, viz.:

West half of lot No. 8 in range 'A' in the township of Buchanan.

Lot No. 12 in concession 1, township of Buchanan.

Lot No. 20 in concession 10, township of Petawawa.

Lot No. 15 in concession 16, township of Petawawa.

Lot No. 39 in 'lake' range, in the township Petawawa.

Lot No. 29 in range 'A,' in the township of Petawawa.

In the following cases the lots have been patented, viz.:

Lots Nos. 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, in the township of Petawawa.

Lots Nos. 5, 6, in the township of Buchanan, all in range 'A.'

Lots Nos. 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 33, 34, 37, in 'lake' range, in the township of Petawawa.

Lots Nos. 13, 14, in concession 1, in the township of Buchanan.

Our agent, as you will notice from these reports, in all the cases where the patents have already been issued by the Crown certifies that the title is in Albert T. Mackie, and in the other cases, all the rights of the locators and those in possession have been transferred to him.

In the case where patents have not been issued by the provincial government I suggest that your department should arrange with the provincial government to have a patent issued to Mr. Albert T. Mackie who is to transfer all his rights in the land to the Dominion government. I am awaiting a description of these lands, and the assignments of the different persons to Mr. Mackie. When these are received they will be sent to your department for transmission to the provincial government. I also inclose the accounts of our agent in all these matters certified in duplicate. Will you please send me a cheque in his favour for the total amount of the same ?

Send me also a cheque for the amount of the purchase price of the lands in question, payable to Mr. Albert T. Mackie and our agent, Mr. J. G. Forgie. The amount of the cheque is to include interest up to the date of payment. Your department will have to calculate the interest up to the date when the cheque will probably reach the hands of our agent at Pembroke.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) E. L. NEWCOMBE,
Deputy Minister of Justice.

That so far shows how much breach of faith there was on the part of the province of Ontario. I may say, before I pass on to the other part of the subject, that there were very substantial amounts paid by Mr. Mackie, on behalf of this government, for the acquisition of those very lots which were subsequently reported by the Minister of Justice not having been located or applied for or squatted upon.

I find, from the letter of the Deputy Minister of Justice which I have just read, that neither had any patents been issued nor had any person located the lots.

I find that in the west half of lot in range A. Township of Buchanan, John Berger was a somewhat lucky man, because for lots 7 and 8 he received $1,800, as shown by this return. In the township of Buchanan, lot 12 in concession 1, D. F. Landry received $1,000. Why was he paid this amount ? The Department of Justice says that neither patents have been issued nor has any one located on the lot, yet $1,000 is paid this gentleman for his rights in that lot.

Mr. McCOOL. Does the hon. gentleman say that a squatter who has been resident for ten or twenty years on the lot has no right ?

Mr. BOYCE. Does the hon. gentleman say this money was paid to squatters ?

Mr. McCOOL. Yes.

Mr. BOYCE. Does he know that ? Was he in the deal ?

Mr. McCOOL. No, there was no deal about it. I know something about it.

Mr. BOYCE. I am merely reading what is on record here. My hon. friend can put whatever construction he likes upon it, but I am endeavouring to show where the good faith and the bad faith exists in this transaction. There was in the township of Petawawa, concession 10, lot 20, for which a Mr. Monet got $60. In concession 16, for lots 15 and 14, one Mr. Sparling got $250, and he was not a squatter. In the Lake range for lot No. 39 in the township of Petawawa, Mr. Martin Woito seems to have got $1,800. For what he got it perhaps the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. McCool) can tell us. When the department of Justice says, after the money was paid, that there was neither patent issued nor any person located on the land, how comes it that this sum was paid ? No one had applied for the lots, yet $1,800 were paid by this agent of the government and repaid by the government to that agent.

Mr. McCOOL. Do you ask me the question ? Perhaps I could give you some information.

Mr. BOYCE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can explain it.

Mr. McCOOL. Yes, I can, if you wish.

Mr. BOYCE. In lot 24, range 9, in the same township, William Selkirk got $150. It will be noticed that it is required to certify these to the department of Crown Lands of Ontario so that before the letter written the 3rd of October, 1904, which the hon. leader of this House (Mr. Fielding) said was the official letter containing the proposals, the late Ross government of Ontario never agreed to, and never intended to do any thing more than grant the land on the condition that the rights of those who had any claims upon them through the government should first be settled with. Let us see how this is proved. The correspondence subsequently carried on with the Ontario government shows that the government of Ontario was all the time waiting for those conditions to be fulfilled, which the government were trying to fulfil in this very extraordinary manner by buying out the interests of the settler and that only, when those conditions had been fulfilled, would the Ontario government be called upon to carry out the arrangement discussed in the letters of the 3rd and 12th of October, 1904, to which the hon. gentleman has referred. So that it is perfectly clear that since this Ontario government came into power, letters were written by it carrying out exactly the arrangement they had agreed to. For instance there is a letter of October 30th, 1905, from Mr. Forgie to the deputy Minister of Militia in which he states that he has been acting for his department along with Mr. Mackie in purchasing these lands for the militia camp in the township of Petawawa in order to prevent speculators from holding up the Crown Lands Department of Ontario, in the event of more lands being required than were purchased. He proceeds to say :

> I afterwards had a conversation with the Hon. F. Cochrane, Minister of Crown Lands in Toronto, and asked him to withhold the lands referred to in my letter, from settlement or location, when he promised to have the deputy minister write me. I now send you a copy of the letter received by me on the 1st November. If you have any instructions for me in respect reference to the matter you might drop me a line.

That is what Mr. Forgie said, and that was exactly what was carried out by the Department of Crown Lands in Toronto, as evidenced by the letter of October 30th, 1905, from Mr. Aubrey White, deputy minister, to Mr. Forgie, of Pembroke, acknowledging receipt of his letter regarding the military camp and saying that he was under the impression that he had some time ago given instruction as to what townships in Petawawa, McKay, Wylie and Buchanan, were to be withdrawn from sale or location. There is the extent of this charge of breach of faith against the Ontario government. First it is seen that there was a distinct understanding that those who had claims were to be settled with and secondly that the government of Ontario were ready to grant this government land in connection with the Petawawa camp, that the government of Ontario desired it to be established and still desires it. This government went on in a most imprudent and extravagant manner to deal with the squatters, but, afterwards went back to the Ontario government asking that the lands be withheld from sale to prevent speculation in them. And the present government of Ontario carries out exactly what was agreed and says that, pending an arrangement the lands shall be withheld from sale. I think it was due from the leader of this House to the House, especially when his remarks reflected upon the government of Ontario, that he should state the whole facts, and read the whole correspondence, instead of reading only the letters of the 3rd and 12th of October, and building upon these the theory of a special arrangement and charging breach of faith in connection with it.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). This debate has certainly taken a rather sudden turn. I have no desire to prolong it unnecessarily. but it may be as well to call the attention of the House and the country to the singular descent which this case of provincial rights in Ontario has had from the pinnacle it reached a week ago in the Ontario legislature. A week ago the traitor's hand was on the throat of Ontario, the rights of that province were being torn from her by a despotic government at Ottawa. And, if I am not mistaken, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) sang the same song and asserted almost with equal vehemence that this government had attempted to deal with Ontario and her rights in the most despotic manner. I read in the Toronto 'World' the resolution which Mr. Whitney asked the Ontario legislature to pass just a week ago. He made that call with all the vehemence which is so characteristic of his utterances. He seemed to summon every possible atom of energy and feeling to spread the belief that the province of Ontario was being trodden under the heel of the Ottawa tyrant.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) can hardly be as prolific of adjectives——

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid my hon. friend (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) is a sprouting autocrat.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Well, at least, that is much more polite in form and much less harsh in sentiment than the things which were said by the Prime Minister of Ontario a week ago. I am glad that my hon. friend from North Toronto is in better humour.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What did the Liberal members of the Ontario legislature say about it ?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. They did not join with the premier of the province in his denunciatory language. While prepared to uphold the rights of the province, they did not join in the resolution in the terms originally proposed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In what way did they dissent from the resolution which I read to-night?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I was not in my place when the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) read the resolution. But I refer to the resolution which the Premier of Ontario presented to that legislature in the first instance.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am referring to the resolution that passed. In what way did the Liberal members dissent from that ?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is referring to the address that was passed, and he would like to take advantage of the lack of knowledge prevailing at that time on this subject—a lack of knowledge which need no longer exist since the Minister if Finance (Mr. Fielding) has enlightened the House and the country to-night. For the evidence is so absolutely clear and explicit that it is evident that, instead of the rights of Ontario being pillaged and torn from her, successive governments of the province stood ready to hand over in fee simple the land necessary for this camp. As the Minister of Finance has indicated it is evident that the province of Quebec stood ready to give the necessary land absolutely free ; and the province of Ontario, under the Ross government were willing to do the same thing. To use the language of the letter of the then Commissioner of Crown Lands :

> The Crown Lands Department would be very glad to comply with your request as to a lease of such property as belongs to the Crown within the area mentioned, or such other tenure as may be mutually agreed upon, for the period you mention, and at a nominal rental or charge.

And what do we find when the present government of Ontario came into power ? Was it then supposed to be a case in which the rights of the province were being disregarded, by this ruthless invader from the capital ? On the contrary, the tone of the correspondence did not indicate any fear on the part of the Commissioner of Crown Lands in the Whitney government. In the first instance it was suggested that the Dominion government wanted to get some 55,000 acres of land. And as the Dominion government was likely to dispose of its military camp ground at Niagara, it was suggested that some arrangement might be made to transfer part of that land to be added to Queen Victoria park. But, as suggested by the Minister of Finance, it was pointed out to the Ontario minister that these lands were peculiarly used for the training of the militia of No. 2 district.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman allow a question ? Does he find in the correspondence anything to intimate that the proposition was that the government should exchange their Niagara lands for the Petawawa lands ?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (reading) :

> The matter has been before the minister and he directs me to say that in view of your department being likely to dispose of the old military camp grounds at Niagara he would be pleased if some arrangements could be made for a transfer of these lands to the province in exchange for the Petawawa lands, as the province is desirous of making an addition to the Queen Victoria Park at Niagara.

So the total estimate of the value of these lands in Petawawa, was the value from a historical or park standpoint of the lands at Niagara. That was the value put upon them in January, 1906. But, as I have said, it was pointed out that these Niagara lands were peculiarly for the training of the militia in No. 2 district, that it was intended to use certain parts of them as historical mementoes, and the remainder would be sold to provide funds to acquire elsewhere a camp for the militia of No. 2 district. But in 1906, one year ago, when the traitor was beginning to feel his way to the throat of Ontario, the value of all this vast domain, as the Premier of Ontario would call it, was simply the value of these camp grounds in Niagara. There was no word of licenses, no word of the rights of anybody else, no suggestion that any invasion was being made of the rights of the province which would warrant resolutions of the legislature against the ruthless acts of this federal government. On the contrary, down to May 15, 1906, what was the position taken by Mr. Whitney? He says, writing to Sir Frederick Borden:

> We have decided that as soon as you have completed your settlement with the timber licensees we will grant leases of 52,000 acres owned by the province for 99 years, at an annual rental of $10 for the whole quantity of land.

So the Hon. J. P. Whitney, less than a year ago, wrote to the Minister of Militia declaring that he was willing to give this whole 52,000 acres of land to the federal government for a nominal rental of $10 a year, and on this basis he asks the legislature of Ontario to present an address to the lieutenant governor asking him to protest against this invasion of the rights of the people of that province by this federal government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why did'nt they accept it ?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Because the Premier of Ontario practically said to the Minister of Militia and Defence : there are some of my political friends there that have some timber licenses, and as soon as you settle with my political friends in the county of Renfrew and have given them the amount they are asking, then I will come around and do business with you.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The letter to which he alludes speaks of the rights of the licensees does it not, the letter which you have just read ?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I will read it again. This is the position taken by Mr. Whitney on May 16, 1906, speaking on behalf of his government :

> We have decided that as soon as you have completed your settlement with the timber licensees——

That is, as soon as you have settled with my political friends in the county of Renfrew we will give you a lease of the 52,000 acres of land for $10 a year. Those are the facts disclosed in the correspondence.

Mr. SPROULE. How does the hon. gentleman know they are his political friends?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend need only turn to the hon. gentleman who sits behind him to get his answer.

Mr. MACDONALD.

Mr. SPROULE. That is an unworthy suggestion.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I do not want to be unfair, I dont want to mention names, but if my hon. friend will read the papers he will find them.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman is throwing out insinuations.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. If he wants to know who they are he had better ask the hon. member for North Renfrew who sits behind him (Mr. White); he knows. I am not here to make insinuations but to discuss the facts found in the papers. I am here to say that this hysterical action on the part of the Conservative government of Ontario in passing this silly resolution, followed up as it is by this discussion in this House, is a burlesque on free government in this country. When parliaments are asked solemnly to seek the intervention of the Crown in regard to the alleged invasion of the rights of a province, parliaments should be regarded as serious bodies who will deal with conditions as they are. Now what is the real position of affairs ? It may be said in all fairness that it was not right for this government to go in there and take this land and absolutely to disregard the rights of the timber licensees. What do I find in regard to this subject as indicating the spirit of this government on that phase of the question ? I take the memorandum presented to Council by the Minister of Militia on the 20th of March, 1907. The minister states :

> It is not intended by the present recommendation to interfere with the existing rights of the said timber licensees, or with the present interests of settlers in possession. But he recommends that subject to these rights and interests as they now exist.

Here is a memorandum which shows that the minister is reserving all the rights of the timber licensees in these lands. As to whether the Crown had a right to take the course it did in regard to the matter of obtaining the title to these lands, I have under my hand the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice, and this is what he says as to the 55,000 acres :

> I suggest that this government should assume these lands as being required for fortifications and for the defence of the country, under section 117 of the British North America Act, and that they be so assumed subject to existing interests of the timber licensees. This should be done by order in council, and notified to the Ontario government.

Now, to sum up briefly, the Ontario government places a value of $10 a year upon these lands which, by resolutions passed in their legislature, they assert that this government is filching from them. This vast domain of incalculable value, according to the letter of the Hon. Mr. Whitney, they consider worth $10 a year. Now who else was injured by the action of this government? The recommendation of the Minister of Justice was to the effect that this government had a clear right to take these lands, but as to whether they were to take them under statutory rights of the British North America Act, or whether they were to take them at a nominal rental, is simply the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee, from a legal standpoint. As to the question as to whether the rights of the timber licensees were interfered with, the Deputy Minister of Justice reports that these rights should be reserved, and in addition to that, the order in council expressly reserves these rights for future determination. So it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that in the light of these facts the attitude of the provincial government in asking the lieutenant governor to protest against the action taken by this federal government, is to the last degree fatuous and absurd.

Mr. G. O. ALCORN (Prince Edward). Mr. Speaker, it would appear to me, after listening to the various documents which have been read in the hearing of the House by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and those submitted by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and having regard also to the remarks with respect to compensation in the speech delivered by the hon. Minister of Finance, I think the position is simply this that this government, being under criticism and finding itself detected in a high handed act of spoliation in regard to the province of Ontario, takes refuge in an imputation as against the government of that province that it has repudiated its agreement. I wish to say to the minister that the government of Ontario are not of the class of people which repudiate agreements. They are gentlemen of integrity who have a history behind them very much to their credit and in respect to which the people of Ontario have the utmost confidence in them. It is quite natural for this government, having no such history behind them, to talk of repudiation of agreements or of a want of good faith. This government have a history of Robin's deals, of Halifax purchases, of Moncton land purchases and a score of similar transactions, and surely they are the last people who should throw insinuations of this kind gratuitously at the province of Ontario or at its government. As far as I am able to discover from the documents submitted there has simply been no agreement to repudiate. In so far as there has been any repudiation it has been on the part of this government itself and not on the part of the government of Ontario. I would like any hon. gentlemen advocating the government side of this controversy to suggest the period of time at which any enforceable agreement came into existence as between these two governments. I assert, and I think I am correct in doing so, that no such time can be pointed out. There is simply no enforceable agreement between these governments and never was in regard to these Petawawa lands. The simple fact is this, in so far as I am able to understand the controversy, that up to the time that the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) was advised by the Department of Justice that this government, under section 117 of the British North America Act, had the right to assume these lands—whatever the proper construction of the word 'assume' may be—the whole matter was one of negotiation. There had been no agreement and when the minister was so advised he took the position that he had the right to assume this land without compensation. It will be found in the course of the correspondence that the Minister of Militia refers to the matter of the licensees upon this land as having no vested rights with respect to which compensation should be given. His contention was that because the licenses are from year to year and the end of the license year expires with the end of the month of April in each year, as soon as the end of the present month of April should arrive these licensees would cease to have any rights in respect to which compensation could be claimed. I am advised, and I believe it to be true, that under the regulations and the terms of the license which is granted by the Ontario government each licensee is entitled as a vested right to the renewal of that license upon the same terms by making a certain payment. Therefore, it appears to me that the right to compensation attaches to the rights of these licensees quite as fully as it could attach to any person having an interest in this land. The defence raised by the government and contained in the speech delivered by the hon. Minister of Finance is what I have indicated, namely, an attempt to throw upon the government of Ontario the aspersion that they have violated their agreement, that they have repudiated some contract which they had made with this government. That seems a very peculiar position to take. If the Ontario government have made a legally enforceable agreement this government are in no difficulty with regard to the matter. They can proceed in the ordinary course in the courts and enforce the agreement. Therefore, it appears to me to be a lame position for the government to take to say that the government of Ontario are refusing to carry out their agreement and that that is the excuse for the action of this government with respect to this matter. As indicated by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, section 117 of the British North America Act gives this government the power to 'assume' land for the purpose of fortification and defence. That is quite true, and a proper question then, it seems to me, to be decided is what is the proper construction to be placed upon this operative word 'assume' and in what respect, if any, does it differ from synonymous terms used in other statutes having the like object? If we turn to the Expropriation Act, which has also been referred to, we find in section three that the operative word used in that Act is the word 'take'. That Act, as well as the British North America Act, provides that land may be taken for fortification and defence. The Expropriation Act expressly deals with the whole subject of the right of this government to take land for military purposes and in section 14 of that Act provision is made for taking lands belonging to the provinces. That is what has been done in this case. So we have the same circumstances and the same objects dealt with by both of these Acts, and there is, in both of them, the right given to assume or take lands for military purposes and for the purposes of fortification and defence. The Expropriation Act, of course, proceeds to provide for full compensation being given by the government which takes the land. The only difference is that the British North America Act is silent upon the subject of compensation. Certainly there can be no distinction raised between the term 'assume', used in the British North America Act, and the term 'take', used in the Expropriation Act, and therefore it appears to me that the same consequences ensue in each case, namely, the liability to make compensation. I submit that it was not necessary that the British North America Act should say in express or explicit terms that compensation should be given for lands taken by virtue of section 117 for the reason that it is a universally recognized principle of law attaching to all cases in which governments, corporations, or other bodies, are given the right to assume the property of third parties, that the right should only be exercised upon full compensation being given. Lawyers will be cognizant of the ordinary rules which apply to the construction of statutes. These will be found in Endlech on the Interpretation of Statutes, page 94 and ensuing pages. One of these canons is:

> Words are to be construed not according to their mere ordinary general meaning but according to their ordinary meaning as applied to the subject matter in regard to which they are used.

The subject matter in regard to which the word 'assume,' as conveying a right under section 117, is used, is the subject of the taking of land. Surely it will not be argued in a British country that that right should be exercised contrary to the universally recognized and well understood principle of law, that compensation should follow the exercise of any such right. Another canon of construction is that, against needless changes in the law—changes which cannot be fairly said to have been intended by the legislature which passed that law. Certain instances cited of that are, for example the case of the Wills Act which empowered 'all persons' to devise lands. The courts in construing that statute very properly held that the words 'all persons' did not include minors, lunatics, or infants, for the reasons that these classes of persons had theretofore been well understood in the law to be incapable of dealing with property and were not bound by their contracts or undertakings. Nevertheless they would fall within the term 'all persons,' but the courts held that they were excluded. It was decided that these words 'all persons' with reference to the power to devise, did not give right to any person to make a will in favour of a corporation, because gifts to corporations had for many years been interdicted as being in contravention of the statutes of mortmain. Here the principle, from the earliest time, has been established, that 'assumed' lands or other property can only be when full compensation is given. Therefore, it is not right to assume that the rule as universally understood, is changed in this particular instance. I think I am safe in saying that the government will be unable to point to any instance either in England or in this country in which this rule as to compensation has been disregarded by any statute passed. No such instance exists. We are familiar with the fact that in making grants of land throughout the country, the government has very properly seen fit to reserve from time to time from these grants, certain parcels of lands situate in such position as might lead to the assumption that at some future time they might possibly be useful for purposes of defence. But that is a very different thing from the contention raised by this government, that under section 117 of this Act, it has the right to arbitrarily assume or take these lands without paying any compensation therefor. This assumed right under section 117 is an instance of a grant of an exceptional privilege and therefore such grant must be most strongly construed against the grantee. I would therefore argue that this word 'assume' does not mean 'assume arbitrarily.' This then is another reason why the recognized principle should be fully complied with and compensation made. We have the Imperial statutes collated and commented upon in 'The Law of Compensation,' by Balfour and Allan. The first of these Acts is the Military Lands Act, 1892. It is there stated this Act consolidates and amends various Acts dealing with the acquisition of lands for the building and enlarging of barracks and camps, and for the erection of butts and providing ranges for drill grounds. In section 1, it provides that a Secretary of State may purchase lands in the United Kingdom under the Act for the military purposes of any portion of His Majesty's military forces.

This Act is certainly drawn with more care than the section of the British North America Act under which the government now raises this contention, because this Imperial Act specially provides that the land may be 'purchased,' so that no express provision with respect to compensatioin becomes necessary. By subsection 3, of section 2, it appears, that the Secretary of State who makes the purchase, actually has to give his bond in the first place, that the terms of the agreement will be carried out, for the protection of the vendor, and further that under section 4, the Secretary is bound to obtain the sanction of parliament to each particular transaction of that kind. In England, liberty is apparently not accorded to the government to make this arrangement by order in council; each case comes before the parliament by way of an Act. Further by the following section, particular provision is made for the method to be pursued for assuming the land. The Secretary of State has to serve a notice on every owner, reputed owner, lessee or reputed lessee and occupier of any land intended to be so purchased, stating the intention of the purchaser to obtain the sanction of parliament to the purchase. By the next section the Secretary has to cause public inquiry to be held by a competent officer into the objections made by any person whose land is required to be taken. All of which shows that the principle of compensation is absolutely taken for granted and that no such contention as is now raised by this government was ever mooted in England. In section 9, it is provided that if the Secretary of State is satisfied the land ought to be taken he has to submit a Bill to parliament in respect to the transaction. In section 26 of the Act, compensation is provided for in the following words:—

> The person or authority acquiring the land may require compensation to be paid for the land to be settled by arbitration, and not by reference to a jury.

In section 23, it is said:—

> In this Act the expression 'military purpose' includes rifle or artillery practice, building and enlargement of barracks and camps.

And at page 57 of this work we have the Defence Act, 1842, an Act to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the service of the Ordnance Department and the purchase of lands for the service, and for the defence and security of the realm. By section 9 of that Act it is provided that the principal officers of Her Majesty's Ordnance may from time to time 'contract for and purchase' lands for the defence of the realm and may enter into any contract for that purpose. And so, the power to arbitrarily assume, is the furthest possible removed from the whole principle of these Acts. From all of which it appears that my contention in the first place, that the principle of compensation is indissolubly connected with the whole idea of the taking of lands by the government, or of any body empowered to exercise that right. I can only add that it appears to me that the defence raised by the government is an extremely weak one, and one which they would not have thought of raising had it not been that they are detected in a most arbitrary proceeding for which there is no possible excuse.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I wish to put one or two questions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) with regard to the financial features of this transaction. I have before me a memorandum reading:

> Bank of Ottawa, Pembroke, December 4, 1905.
> Mr. A. T. Mackie, Pembroke.
> Dear Sir,—The interest on your demand loan of 15th December, 1905, amounts to $580.96.
> Yours truly,
> (Sgd.) F. V. MULKINS,
> Manager.

I would like to know on what authority the Minister of Finance gave Mr. Mackie the right to go to any bank and make demand loans for any such purpose. Has the Dominion of Canada got down to such a state that we have to borrow money from banks at 6 per cent? I could understand in the case of public works, letters of credit being issued to an individual as against the bank, but I do not understand on what authority the government can give such a power into the hands of any private individual. If such powers are given where are they to stop? How many of these outstanding loans have we in different parts of the country and how much money have we borrowed at the rate of 6 per cent interest? Does the Minister of Finance think that it is a good business transaction? What justification has he for giving such a right to any individual?

Mr. FIELDING. I must confess that that phase of the transaction has not engaged my personal attention; I confined my inquiry to the matter of the difference between the government of Ontario and the Dominion government. The other aspects of the matter, that is the dealings about private lands have not occupied my attention. In consequence of what was said by hon. gentlemen to-night I looked up the Auditor General's Report. All the information I have is in the Auditor General's Report, and if there is anything beyond this I would like an opportunity of making inquiry in my own department. I find in the Auditor General's Report this letter:

> Department of Militia and Defence,
> Ottawa, April 6, 1906.
> Sir,—In reply to your letters of February 14, and the 4th instant, relative to the acquisition of land at Petawawa as a site for a central camp, I have the honour to inclose, herewith, a blue print plan showing the area to be acquired. Only 4,272 acres of this area have been as yet purchased, which is but a small part of the whole.

Of course this relates to the property of private individuals and not to the interests of the Ontario government.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Some of these very lands were not patented.

Mr. FIELDING. Perhaps not. The letter continues:

I also inclose a list of former owners of the lots purchased, and the prices paid in each case.

*For list and prices paid see page Q—

As regards the means adopted to ascertain the value of the lands purchased, I have to say that circumstances compelled our proceeding differently than usual, in this case.

Before the authority of His Excellency in Council was obtained to acquire the lands, whether compulsorily or as a result of negotiations, it was decided, after an officer of the headquarters staff had seen many of the owners, to have this year's training of the artillery at Petawawa. That officer, from the replies he received from the owners, was able to report that there would be no difficulty in arranging for the training at a very small cost.

When the troops assembled it became evident that somebody had been among the owners, as they refused to allow the training to proceed without their being paid what were considered exorbitant demands. Lieutenant-Colonel Rutherford, of the headquarters staff, who was at Petawawa in connection with the training, immediately came to Ottawa, late on the night of September 9, accompanied by Mr. A. T. Mackie, one of the most prominent residents of Pembroke, and went to Colonel Pinault's residence where the whole situation was thoroughly discussed. The undersigned was telephoned for, and was present during the greater part of the discussion. Lieutenant-Colonel Rutherford and Mr. Mackie brought a memorandum showing what certain of the owners would take. Rather than to abandon the training, it was decided to proceed at once, if the minister approved, with the acquisition of the land. The following telegram was immediately despatched to the minister, who was on an official trip to the Pacific coast, viz.:

Settlers at Petawawa claim large indemnity for disturbance, over two thousand dollars, and some wont move unless properties purchased. Mr. Mackie has obtained options from all for thirty-six thousand dollars, representing twenty-five hundred acres of best farm lands. Am advised price very reasonable. Shall I instruct Mackie to close with them. Pending practice held up.

It will be seen that the minister was told, from the best information available, that 2,500 acres would cost $36,000, or $14.40 per acre. We actually acquired 4,272 acres for $40,340.96, including legal expenses and interest, or $9.44 per acre.

To make good terms with the owners it was absolutely necessary to have cash to pay them on the spot, and as there was no way of obtaining money out of the parliamentary appropriation until the titles had been searched, we could not have proceeded without such assistance as Mr. Mackie rendered. His only concern in the matter has been a keen interest in having the camp located in the neighbourhood, and in the militia, his brother being the commanding officer of the 42nd Regiment. He has taken a great deal of trouble and given much of his valuable time to assist us, which the department very much appreciated.

I regret having taken up so much of your time to explain this transaction, but have thought it well to furnish full particulars. If you wish any further information I shall be glad to go over to see you.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
E. F. JARVIS,
Acting Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence.
The Auditor General.

I have no knowledge except what is contained in that, but it appears that having no appropriation and having the camp actually in operation at the time, and these private owners having held up unexpectedly the proceedings of the camp, arrangements were made with Mr. Mackie to obtain the amount required from the bank, which he was repaid with interest. Mr. Mackie acted in good faith, and with the assent of the Militia Department obtained that money which was repaid to the bank with the interest charged by the bank. It was an exceptional proceeding and one which I would not care to have repeated, but under the circumstances it was justifiable and there was nothing wrong in the whole transaction, although somewhat unusual.

Mr. SPROULE. How many of these transactions may we not have throughout the country? How many people may have received authority to go to a bank and raise money for the purposes of the government? And how are we to know anything about such transactions?

Mr. FIELDING. They would all come out in the Auditor General's Report and my hon. friend would know about it.

Mr. SPROULE. We have no guarantee that they would.

Mr. FIELDING. Oh, yes.

Mr. SPROULE. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) speaks of Mr. Whitney's conduct as unbusinesslike and unbecoming, I am quite willing to put it alongside of that and let the country say which of them shows evidence of lack of business ability.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend must assume that it was desirable the camp should go on, and these private owners were holding up the camp arrangements and forbidding their going on. Would not that be an exceptional circumstance which would justify an exceptional proceeding, always assuming the price was a reasonable one and that the transaction was made in good faith ? What does my hon. friend see wrong in it ?

Mr. SPROULE. There were two features wrong. In the first place, it shows want of business management on the part of the Militia Department or they would not have been held up. They should have known that they had the authority and the right to use that ground before taking possession of it. They would have taken the precaution, which any intelligent business man would have taken under the circumstances, and have made sure of their right to occupy these grounds and not run the risk of being held up at the last moment. They were doing, in my judgment, what they had no authority for doing when they gave the right to any one to borrow money for them. I wonder if our ex-Auditor General, had he been in office, would have passed that.

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly he would.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think so. I think it was presuming on the good nature of the Auditor General and on his gullibility—though perhaps that is too strong a word—but certainly the government had no right to expect that he would be likely to pass this payment when this order was given Mr. Mackie. We have heard from the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) about the government of Ontario dealing with its own friends. Was there anything of that nature in this connection when Mr. Mackie was given authority to go to the bank of Ottawa and draw $40,000 on behalf of the government at 6 per cent interest ? Was Mr. Mackie, who, I presume, is the son of a former liberal member of this House, authorized to make the best bargain he could in the interests of the friends of the government. I presume that these people who were paid these moneys were friends of the government and supporters of Mr. Mackie, because they were in the riding which his father represented and in which he, the son, has such large holdings to-day. Mr. Mackie, junior, was dealing with the friends of his father and paying them these moneys, whether the prices charged were fair prices or not. He had everything in his own hands. He made the purchase and paid the prices asked. Whether these prices were exorbitant or unreasonable did not make the slightest difference, and this amount of $40,000 was paid to friends of the government, in violation of the law of the land, without any check in the world and without any independent valuation being made, and without any evidence that the country received a fair return for the money.

Mr. FIELDING. If there is the shadow of a ground for suspecting anything wrong, I hope my hon. friend will bring the matter up before the Public Accounts Committee next session.

Mr. SPROULE. Very likely we will. The whole thing is shrouded with mystery. It bears suspicion on its face. It was not a business transaction.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it was.

Mr. SPROULE. Would any business man allow himself to be put in such a position at the moment the soldiers were going into camp, that he did not know whether he had the right to go on the land or not ? No business man would be found in such a fix at the last moment as that in which the Minister of Militia found himself in connection with this transaction. It is said that the government may be held up yet. How much money has been paid to friends of the government, I do not know.

Mr. FIELDING. If you owned the land, would you not want to be paid ?

Mr. SPROULE. That is not the question. What is in question is the way this money has been used without parliamentary authority. I do not know on what principle, under our system of government, the Finance Minister could authorize to pay out the money in that way.

Mr. FIELDING. The bank advanced the money and it was paid out ultimately on parliamentary authority. There would be no reason in the world for getting the money unless we were to get the parliamentary authority to repay it. We borrowed the money, and when parliamentary authority was obtained we repaid it.

Mr. SPROULE. You first spend the money and then ask parliament to authorize the expenditure. Can the hon. minister justify any such proceeding ? Why, before an item is voted for militia purposes, we scrutinize the expenditure before authorizing it; and unless the expenditure is justified, parliament will not vote it. But here is the government first spending the money and then trusting to its majority authorizing the expenditure. That is radically wrong. And besides the government paid 6 per cent interest. Is the financial standing of the country so low that it cannot borrow money cheaper than private individuals can ?

Mr. FIELDING. There is an item in the supplementary estimates to pay 8 per cent on a bargain made by the late government.

Mr. SPROULE. That does not justify this transaction. How many outstanding loans are there of this kind to-day

Mr. FIELDING. I do not believe there are any.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman is not positive. He simply says he does not believe. Let him prove there is not any.

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot prove a negative.

Mr. SPROULE. But the hon. gentleman can make a positive assertion, which he has not done.

Mr. FIELDING. At the moment this transaction was made, I was a thousand miles away.

Mr. SPROULE. Under what authority was it done ?

Mr. FIELDING. That has been explained very fully.

Mr. SPROULE. No, the circumstances surrounding the camp going into exercise were explained but not a word was said about the authority to raise the money. That was conveniently kept from the House and there was no justification for it whatever. I am told by my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) that there is a letter from the Auditor general declaring the whole thing to be illegal. I was not aware of that fact.

Mr. FIELDING. Will the hon. gentleman quote the letter ?

Mr. BOYCE. It is in the return brought down.

Mr. FIELDING. It is not in the blue-book.

Mr. BOYCE. No, it is in the return.

Mr. FIELDING. I have not seen the return. The hon. gentleman is not referring to anything in the Auditor General's Report ?

Mr. BOYCE. No, it is not there. I am taking the word of the hon. member who went over these returns, and he correctly drew attention to them. I cannot understand that there is any justification for borrowing money on the credit of the country by any individual, and allowing him to spend it in this careless way. The Minister of Finance speaks about the Premier of Ontario and the Ontario government having refused to give this land without being paid for the timber leases, which he characterizes as very improper and unbusinesslike. Now if it is unbusinesslike for the Premier of Ontario to ask for a payment for these leases, was it not unbusinesslike when this government provided that in the lands which they took in the Northwest for Dominion reserves they provided for paying the leasholders of timber there ? Was it any more reasonable that they should pay these leaseholders in the Northwest than that they should pay the leaseholders of these timber rights when the land is taken for militia purposes ?

Mr. FIELDING. We say that the timber lessees are grown men, they can settle their question with the government and let them do so. The Ontario government parted with their interest to the extent of the licenses, and the licensees can settle that matter with the Dominion government.

Mr. SPROULE. But the Ontario government are the parties who had the granting of these licenses, and to whom payments must be made ; it is they who are responsible to the leaseholders, because the lease is made by the Ontario government. Who would the leaseholder fall back upon if he failed to receive the consideration he was entitled to on account of his lease ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will my hon. friend allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman sit down. He is always interrupting, and to no purpose in the world, and I am getting tired of it. If he wants to speak he may speak after I am down. I say that the Ontario government are responsible to the leaseholder, and it is their duty to see that the leaseholder is compensated before he gives up that right.

Mr. McCOOL. The Ontario government demands $93,000 in satisfaction of the rights of the license holders.

Mr. SPROULE. That is no proof of their value. Some members of this House asked an exorbitant figure for their timber licenses in the Northwest. There is a way of adjusting these differences when it is necessary to expropriate land for public purposes. The parties have to go to the Exchequer court. It is the right of an individual to ask whatever he pleases. But the Ontario government would not be doing their duty if they did not attempt to protect the rights of leaseholders and to see that they were settled with before their land is given over to the Dominion, even for defence purposes. The Minister of Finance said that the Ontario government gave these lands away at first and they did not say a word about those licenses. Well, what kind of a business transaction was that ? That was done by the Ross government and not a word said about it, as was supposed. But afterwards it came out that there was an understanding that these parties should be paid for their rights, and the letters were read by my hon. friend from Algoma (Mr. Boyce) which were not read by the Minister of Finance. Now the member for Wright (Mr. Emmanuel Devlin) says, Well, it served you right, why did not you take the land we offered you in Quebec free ? What authority has he for offering these lands free ? Who are 'we' ? We killed a bear. Is he the government of the province of Quebec ? He represents the county of Wright, and I am told these lands were in his county. Does he think he owns the land because he represents the county ? It looks like it.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN. The hon. gentleman is seeking for information. The province of Quebec is anxious to have this military camp established in the county of Wright at a place called Kazabazua, and made a free offer of the lands, and that free offer is still open.

Mr. SPROULE. That is quite a different thing. If he had stated that in the first place I would not have had a word of comment to make. Now the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) charges Mr. Whitney with corruption in connection with this transaction. I would like to ask him in what respect? Where does the corruption come in? Is there any thing to justify such a statement? Not one word that I have heard in connection with it. I do not think there is a single item of the transaction from first to last that indicates any thing but the most honourable conduct on the part of the Prime Minister of Ontario. Had there been corruption, would the opposition have supported unanimously the motion which was passed before the legislative assembly closed? I think they would not. Is it not in evidence that they agreed with him in every particular in condemning this high-handed transaction of the Minister of Militia, which is on a par with the desire shown all along the line by this government to interfere with provincial rights, to take arbitrarily what does not belong to them? What belongs to Ontario may be taken from Ontario to-day, and what belongs to Manitoba or Saskatchewan may be taken from them to-morrow. I say it was a barefaced attempt to interfere in a tyrannical and improper way with provincial rights. An hon. friend hands me the Auditor General's Report, which shows something significant, and for the benefit of the Minister of Finance I will read it, Q—128:

PETAWAWA CAMP LANDS—METHOD OF PURCHASE.

Audit Office, Ottawa, February 14, 1906.

Sir,—In your statement of cheques drawn against the letter of credit for January last there is one, No. 6576 for $40,471.68, in favour of Albert T. Mackie and J. G. Forgie, for purchase of lands for Petawawa camp grounds.

Mr. FIELDING. I referred to that.

Mr. SPROULE. (reading).

In this connection I should like to be furnished with a sketch of the territory included in the camp grounds, a list of the parties from which the lands were purchased, with the price paid to each party and the means adopted to ascertain the value of the lands purchased.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. FRASER, A.G.

The Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence,
Ottawa.

Now, there is no answer to that here so far as I can see. Again, the Auditor General addresses the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence, in the following manner:

Audit Office, Ottawa, April 4, 1906.

Sir,—I have to remind you that I have not received an answer to my letter of February 14, 1906, asking for certain information in reference to a payment by cheque, No. 6576 for $40,471.68 to Albert T. Mackie and J. G. Forgie for lands for Petawawa camp grounds.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. FRASER, A.G.

The Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence,
Ottawa.

The next letter is from the Department of Militia and Defence, and as I presume, it is the one read by the Minister of Finance. I need not read it again. Then we have the following letter:

Audit Office, Ottawa, April 10, 1906.

Sir,—Let me acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th instant, inclosing blue print plan re Petawawa central camp grounds. Refering to the fourth paragraph of your letter, in which you state that an officer of the headquarters staff, after having seen many of the owners, reported that there would be no difficulty in arranging for the 1905 training at a small cost, please furnish me with a copy of the report referred to. I should also like to see the memorandum of Lieutenant-colonel Rutherford and Mr. Mackie, showing what a certain owner would take, referred to in the 5th paragraph of your letter. Please forward as well as the deeds, options and other papers in your possession in connection with the transfer from the original owners to Mr. Mackie and from Mr. Mackie to the Crown.

There is the go-between again.

These will be returned to your department after inspection by this office.

The memorandum of lots purchased sent me shows an outlay of $39,760, while the payment to Albert T. Mackie and J. G. Forgie was for $40,471.68, a difference of $711.68, which is still unaccounted for.

So, there must be a commission or rake-off.

Mr. FIELDING. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) need not jump to that conclusion, let him read the next letter.

Mr. SPROULE. I am reading the letter of the Auditor General and he is trying to see whether he is justified in paying this amount. The difference referred to is $711.68 which, I presume, was for making a temporary arrangement. It goes either to Mr. Forgie or to Mr. Mackie or to both.

Which is still unaccounted for. This amount of $40,471.68 is exclusive of Mr. Forgie's expenses which amounted to $890.55, (cheque No. 6577), so that the total coast of the 4,272 acres would be $41,361.23 and not $40,340.96, as stated in your letter.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. FRASER, A.G.

The Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence.

Mr. FIELDING. Now, read the next one, for he answers that question.

Mr. SPROULE. (reading):

Department of Militia and Defence,
Ottawa, April 12, 1906.

Sir,—In reply to your letter of the 10th instant, with further reference to the acquisition of the lands at Petewawa as a site for the central camp, I have the honour to say that a return of the correspondence, &c., is being prepared to be laid on the table of the House of Commons, which will be done not later than the end of next week, and that if you will wait then, a copy of the return will be sent to you for your use. It is considered that with copies of the whole of the papers before you, further explanations will be rendered unnecessary. In the meantime, I may say for your information, that the $711.68 referred to in the last paragraph of your letter was interest on Mr. Mackie's note in the Bank of Ottawa, being money advanced for the purchase of these lands.

Your statement that the total expenditure, including all legal expenses, was $44,361.23, instead of $40,340.96 as stated in my letter of the 6th instant, is quite correct, and I regret the error, but I would invite your attention to the fact that the correction increases the price per acre from $9.94 to $9.68 only, which price must be admitted is a moderate one for a good farming land with quite a number of farmhouses and out buildings thereon.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
E. F. JARVIS,
Acting M.M.D.

The Auditor General.

He admits the error, and that explains the whole thing. I do not think there is any ground for the Minister of Finance making any adverse criticism of Mr. Whitney in connection with this transaction. I think that Mr. Whitney did what was proper, manly, courageous and businesslike throughout. And I think that it is not creditable to the Dominion government to make the attempt that they have made, in an arbitrary and tyrannical way to take authority into their own hands and confiscate property that did not belong to them.

Mr. SAM HUGHES, (Victoria and Haliburton). As I understand it, there were two sites available, one at Kazabazua, up the Gatineau line, and this Petawawa camp on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in the county of Renfrew. The Kazabazua site in some respects is, possibly, better for military purposes, but in other ways it is not so desirable. Its isolation is against it—the cost of carrying troops to and from the camp would be a very large item as compared with this expense in connection with the other camp. I do not know anything about the details of this case except through the returns that, I understand, were brought down to-day, or at any rate appear to be in the hands of hon. members.

Mr. FIELDING. I intended to bring them down to-day, but this discussion anticipated me.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The property was acquired by purchase, and also by grant from the Ontario government. The issue in this discussion seems to be the action of the government in taking hold of these lands under the British North America Act, and now the attempt to blame the Whitney government for failure to carry out a contract entered into with their predecessors in office. All there is in the world to justify the statement that the parties in this case had made a bargain is simply a letter from the Commissioner of Crown Lands stating that the provincial government would be willing to grant the lands at a nominal rental. Mr. Whitney stands to that ground to-day. But the timber licensees have to be settled with. This is the whole thing in a nutshell. I do not see why the government should take the radical step of taking these lands as they are doing. Let the government have the matter referred to arbitration as far as these licensees are concerned and pay whatever the license holders are entitled to receive. If these licenses are worth anything the government should pay the holders of them, while on the other hand the claim need not be paid if it is found that the license holder is not entitled to it. I would certainly deprecate the action of the government in taking forcible possession of this land which I look upon as a very excellent camp. But, I would suggest that the government proceed in a business way. I would recommend the Minister of Finance to cancel the order in council taking possession of the land, refer the matter to arbitration and carry out the deal which Mr. Whitney from start to finish says he is most willing to carry out, that is to give the government the land at the nominal rental of $10 a year for ninety-nine years.

Mr. C. A. McCOOL (Nipissing). Mr. Speaker, I do not intend at this hour to make any extended remarks upon this subject. I do not think it is necessary to do so but I cannot allow the remarks made by the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) in reference to the purchase of these lands from the settlers there to pass without some notice. The hon. gentleman charges the government with having been guilty of an improper transaction in regard to the purchase of these lands because the farmers there did not actually hold the deeds of the land. Any one who is familiar with the new sections of Ontario knows very well that a very large proportion of the settlement of these new districts is made up by squatters. They have not the money in the first place or do not feel that they can afford to pay for the lands that they settle upon, and while they are not encouraged to do this they are not forbidden to squat on lands which are open for settlement. It was in that way that these lands were taken up in many instances. As a matter of fact I think the greater portion of this territory, if not the whole of it, is free grant land, and any one who made application for it would just be at the small expense incidental to the cost of making the application. The settlers were principally Germans, thrifty, hard working people who had succeeded so well as to be possessors of splendid farms. There was one man mentioned by the name of Wioto who had a splendid farm, good outbuildings, and who was as comfortably situated as any farmer one could meet with. That man did not want to sell his farm and I think that the purchase of his property for $1,600 or $1,800 was cheap enough. I am quite sure that there was no money got improperly by Mr. Mackie in connection with the purchase of these lands. I happened to be right in the neighbourhood. I was a visitor at the camp almost every day during that time. I did not have anything to do with getting the options on this land but I talked the matter over daily with the officers. I, like everybody else in that section of the country, was most anxious that the camp should be established there. There could be no better site in or out of Canada for a military camp. I found the officers in the camp were endeavouring to make an arrangement with the farmers there to allow them to fire the large 4·7 guns. The officers were most anxious to test the shooting qualities of these large guns; in fact, guns of that character had not, previously to their being fired at Petawawa camp been used at all in this country. When the farmers refused to leave their farms and give them the privilege of firing these guns they undertook to buy the land in order that they might be enabled to practise with these guns which was one of the principal reasons for the artillery going there for their training on that occasion. I think I have explained the reasons why that was done. If there was any one who took any risk in connection with it it was Mr. Mackie because, if the money was not voted by parliament or the payment was not sanctioned by the Auditor General, the loss would fall upon Mr. Mackie. Mr. Mackie advanced the money and offered to do so to the officer in charge, Colonel Rutherford.

In regard to the timber licenses, the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) has been referring to the great value of these timber limits and the great wrong that was done by the government in taking over this land and dealing with the licensees instead of allowing the Ontario government to deal with them. Any one who knows that country must admit that the putting of any such valuation as $98,000 upon those timber limits could not be done for any other purpose than for the purpose of helping the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite. I believe and believe firmly that if the ground covered by these licenses had not been required for a military camp any one could have purchased the timber on it for $10,000 or under.

Mr. WHITE. I understand that there is considerable timber on a limit in the Petawawa district which has not been cut on for some ten or twelve years, and I was led to believe that that limit has been estimated by an outsider at a figure not any less than this estimate.

Mr. McCOOL. I may say that I know the country very well. I lived for years right opposite this military camp; in fact I was born within four miles of it and I lived there during almost the whole of my life up to the present. I can tell you that the timber on the ground covered by this military camp was used up years and years ago.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would not that be settled by arbitration ?

Mr. McCOOL. That is what the government offered to do. But the offer was not accepted. The Ontario government say that the limit holders want $98,000 for the property and unless you pay that——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No.

Mr. McCOOL—we will not put through the Bill. There is no doubt about the $98,000 that the license holders want. There is one company only, the Pembroke Lumber Company, which happened to hold the land covered by the military camp.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman says that the Ontario government say that unless that is paid they will not surrender the land. The government do not say anything of the kind.

Mr. McCOOL. That is the inference. That is the ground they take.

Mr. FIELDING. They say that we must pay and the parties put that valuation on.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The government take the ground that they are to settle with the licensees. My hon. friend is in the lumber business ; does he ever offer to sell a timber limit that he does not ask four prices for ?

Mr. McCOOL. The Ontario government ask that the Pembroke Lumber Company shall be paid $98,000 for the timber limits in that territory.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Read the correspondence. You have it right there.

Mr. McCOOL. At least four fifths of the territory has been burned over and there is no timber on it. There are miles and miles of territory on which not a stick of merchantable timber is growing, nothing but scrubby jack pine and on a great portion of it not even scrubby jack pine, nothing but blueberry plains. That is the character of the timber lands about which hon. gentlemen opposite are raising all this trouble. I may say that were it not for the fact that the president of that company happens to be a member of the Ontario legislature it is altogether probable that his demand would not have been made.

Mr. WHITE. I do not think the hon. gentleman is justified in making any statement of that kind whatever.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Intercolonial Railway—increased accommodation New Glasgow, $14,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Will this be let by contract?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Acting Minister of Railways and Canals). Yes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Who is the contractor?

Mr. FIELDING. The happy man will be the man who puts in the lowest tender.

Increased accommodation, St. John, $35,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is to provide the necessary accommodation to take care of the flour business, which will amount to $30,000, and there are some small items.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will it be let by tender?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

To put railway between Indiantown and Blackville into condition for operation, $89,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is a portion of the Intercolonial Railway which has fallen into disuse and it is desired to revive it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the length?

Mr. FIELDING. The deputy says he thinks it is about seven miles, but I would not like to be bound down to that.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. You could build a new road for $13,000 per mile.

Mr. FIELDING. The largest item is for a bridge, $40,000, approaches $5,000, masonry $5,000, culverts $3,000, ballast $4,000, and other items. Work under contract at Indiantown $19,000. This was started last year.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it part of the Canada Eastern?

Mr. FIELDING. No, it is part of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. BERGERON. Why did you let it run down?

Mr. FIELDING. It is difficult to answer that. The people have been agitating for a long time to have it opened.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What stream does the bridge cross?

Mr. FIELDING. Tributaries of the Miramichi.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This is at the mouth of the Miramichi?

Mr. FIELDING. It is up the river a bit.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is there any increased business that makes it necessary to open this seven miles?

Mr. FIELDING. There are some stone quarries opening up along the line.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does this road join to the Canada Eastern?

Mr. FIELDING. It is part of the Intercolonial Railway, and the Canada Eastern is now part of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Who owns the quarry? I suppose that is the important point?

Mr. FIELDING. The quarry is owned by Hood & Sons, of Montreal.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This is to help their business?

Mr. FIELDING. It is to benefit the people generally; we are glad to have one large industry along the line.

Mr. BERGERON. Was there formerly a bridge over that river?

Mr. FIELDING. A wooden bridge and we are replacing it by a steel bridge.

Intercolonial Railway—rolling stock, revote, $1,775,000.

Mr. BERGERON. How many Intercolonial cars have been lost?

Mr. FIELDING. I gave the answer the other day and it is in 'Hansard.'

Mr. BERGERON. Will these cars ever come back?

Mr. FIELDING. They are going and coming all the time; there is an effort made to keep as many as possible on the road.

Mr. BERGERON. There seems to be more going than coming about it.

Mr. FIELDING. There are some coming and others going all the time as is the case of all railways.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Where are you getting these cars made?

Mr. FIELDING. The cars are made almost invariably in Canada by the various makers.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are you getting any made of iron or steel?

Mr. FIELDING. We have not yet; that is one of the coming movements but we have not yet adopted the iron and steel cars. An hon. gentleman asked what this is for. There are ten locomotives, 25 stock cars, 25 refrigerator cars, to equip 500 platform cars with racks for pulpwood; 400 box cars of 60,000 pounds capacity; 400 box cars of 80,000 pounds capacity, 310 platform cars, 80,000 pounds capacity, 2 auxiliary cars, 4 motor cars, 100 15-ton hoppers; 70 convertable dump cars; with a small sum for inspection, &c., making $1,775,000. The crying need everywhere not only on the Intercolonial Railway but on all lines is more rolling stock to move the business, and I am sure this is a vote that will be very gladly made.

Prince Edward Island Railway, $124,000.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I wish to call attention to a matter which I had on the order paper early in the session in regard to a claim of two parties in Alberton whose houses were destroyed by fire caused by a spark from a locomotive. An investigation was held at Alberton by the superintendent and the Hon. A. B. Warburton of Charlottetown who went up in a private car, and, after looking into the situation apparently reported against the claims of these two parties. Some evidence, I believe, was adduced showing that the fire was started by the locomotive and that these parties lost their property, if not through negligence on the part of the railway people, at least through its being set on fire by a spark from the locomotive. A gentleman came to Ottawa in regard to this business, interviewed the department and asked if this matter could be opened up again and new evidence adduced. He was informed that new evidence could be brought forward and he then returned to Alberton, a further investigation was held and a number of affidavits taken before Chas. A. Woodman, notary public, were sent up to the department. These affidavits all went to show that the fire originated from sparks from the locomotive and gave estimates of the damage caused to the property of the claimants. The witnesses were all worthy people, absolutely reliable, whose word could be depended upon and their testimony agreed. The affidavits were made by John Yeo, the engine driver, conductor Gillis, baggage-master Edward Martin, the crew of the train in question; Captain John Ireland, of Alberton, and Rev. A. E. Burke, of Alberton. In January I asked the Minister of Railways and Canals if any additional evidence had been brought forward with regard to those cases and the minister replied that there had been none. I now call attention to the five affidavits to which I have referred as to the cause of this fire, all of which evidence is brought in after the making of the report against the payment of those losses. I would ask the acting minister (Mr. Fielding) to again take this case into consideration. We have a case very much in point referred to in the Auditor General's Report for 1905. That case will be sufficiently explained by a letter there published from the Auditor General to Mr. A. B. Aylesworth which reads as follows:

Audit Office, Ottawa, May 6, 1905.

Sir,—Inclosed please find the correspondence relating to a claim by Mr. Thomas Poiré, of St. Charles de Bellechasse, for $1,200, as compensation for a house destroyed by a fire said to have been started by sparks from an Intercolonial Railway locomotive.

You will notice at page 29, that the Justice Department expressed an opinion that the Crown is not legally liable for the loss.

At page 27 you will find my opinion that only parliament, and not the executive, can authorize payment as a matter of grace.

Please let me have your view on this subject at an early date.

The case is important, as a fair type of such claims, if perhaps not so from its own amount.

Yours sincerely,
J. L. McDOUGALL,
Auditor General.

Hon. A. B. Aylesworth, K.C., Toronto.

The Hon. A. B. Aylesworth replied to that communication to the effect that while the railway was not legally responsible unless there could be proof of negligence on their part it was in the disposition of the minister to say under all these circumstances, if it had been found that the fire was started by sparks from the locomotive, whether the man should be paid or not. The important distinction is that in the case to which Mr. Aylesworth referred there was no contributory negligence on the part of the railway shown. In this case the fire started a few moments after the locomotive passed and we have the affidavit of the train crew and of others who were there that was the origin of the fire. I wish to call the attention of the acting minister to the fact that in this case I think the discretion of the department should be acted upon and that the claim these people who are not able to bear the loss themselves should be paid without the necessity of legal proceedings.

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that the matter is engaging the attention of the law officers of the department. We will consider it and have the additional benefit of my hon. friends' remarks.

Soulanges canal—lodging for electrical staff (revote) $4,600.

Mr. BERGERON. Can the Minister of Finance give any information about the old fort at Coteau? I am informed that it has been leased or sold by the government.

Mr. FIELDING. My deputy cannot remember, but the general practice of the department is not to sell land but to lease it during pleasure in cases which command themselves to its judgment.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to know if it has been leased and to whom and for what amount. My information is that it has been leased for commercial purposes and that when it was deeded to the government, the deed contained a proviso that it must never be used for commercial purposes.

Trent canal—construction, $700,000.

Mr. WARD. Where is that $700,000 for construction to be expended ?

Mr. FIELDING. This will be about all that can be expended during the fiscal year. It will be expended as follows : Rice lake to Trenton $450,000 ; Lake Simcoe to Georgian bay $250,000.

Mr. LENNOX. As to the expenditure of $250,000 between Lake Simcoe and Georgian bay. There is a survey going on between the head of Kempenfeldt bay and Georgian bay by way of Nottawasaga river. In that connection the interests of my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) are different from mine. He wishes connection to be made by way of the Severn river. What I desire is an exhaustive survey before the government commits itself any further with regard to the Severn route. My hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. L. McCarthy) takes the same ground. There has been a complete survey of the Severn river route. We asked the late Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) to have a survey made of this route by way of Nottawasaga river and we asked that before any more money is expended on the Severn river there shall be a complete survey of this new route. Further I would ask that I should be notified by the department when the report is made and be allowed to see the report—and I presume that my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. L. McCarthy) who is not present would desire the same—because there are a number of people interested in that route who want to make representations when that report is in. We are also interested in the expenditure from Rice lake to Trenton. That money might very well be expended in opening up connection to Trenton in the meantime until the survey is completed. I would have been glad if more money could be spent this year because there are now upwards of $5,000,000 invested in this enterprise on capital account ; and the sooner the work is completed, the sooner it will be an interest yielding investment. I hope I shall have the assurance of the acting minister that both myself and the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) will be advised when the report of the survey is made to the department so that we can make our representations. We should like to be in a position to present our views, when the proper time comes, before the department decides on the one course or the other.

Mr. FIELDING. I shall see that my hon. friend receives notice when the report is completed and I do not see any reason why he should not see the report. He will be made aware when it is ready, and will have access to it or reasons be given to him why he should not. While the money is voted in this way, the department would not wish to be tied too closely to that, but would like to have a free hand in spending the money from year to year according to the conclusions that may be reached.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. By the 24th May there will be continuous navigation throughout the entire length of the canal except at the two ends. I would urge upon the government the necessity of having the work completed by the construction of the two ends at the earliest possible moment.

Beauharnois canal—repairing leak in south bank, $6,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Whereabouts is that ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is a bad leak developed in the south bank about half a mile above the bridge at St. Timothee. The lessees will have to bear the burden of it.

Mr. BERGERON. Might I ask the hon. minister again to do the work in Valleyfield promised by the Minister of Railways and Canals and the Prime Minister, through his colleague the Postmaster General, not to me, but to the people at Valleyfield ? It has nothing to do with the leasing of the canal but is a work which the lessee will never do, and when it was promised there was no intention of leasing the canal.

Mr. FIELDING. I have had no opportunity of inquiring into the matter since last evening, and would ask my hon. friend to leave it for the present and I shall make further inquiry.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the investigation that took place at the canal last summer? What has become of it and what is the report ?

Mr. FIELDING. Was it moved for by way of a return ?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, I moved for the return and got it but there was nothing in it.

Mr. FIELDING. I shall give instructions to have the information furnished the hon. gentleman. It may be rather late to bring it down now, but my deputy will see that the hon. member is furnished with the information.

Mr. BERGERON. There were some difficulties among the employees and the superintendent suspended a man. The man was replaced during the whole summer. Whether both were paid I do not know, but would like to know. There were proceedings before the criminal court, and while the matter was before the court a nolle prosequi was presented, leaving the public at a loss to know what it all meant. I would like to know whether the man who was suspended has been reinstated, who was guilty and who not guilty, and the result of the whole story.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) shall have the information.

Rideau canal—to complete purchase of tug, $5,775 ; compensation for damages in connection with break in Poonamanile dam, $12,133, $17,908.

Mr. J. D. REID. Can the minister give the name of the tug the department are buying ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is being built.

Mr. J. D. REID. By the government ?

Mr. FIELDNG. By the contractors in Toronto—the Polson Iron Works Company.

Trent canal—to construct a road across McLaren's creek, $2,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Along these waters in the townships of Verulam and Emily, the dams for the Trent canal have raised the water in some streams, so that the municipalities have been at great expense in keeping up the roads. Now, I do not want to go into details on this matter, but I want to point out to the minister that the same principle is involved here as has been recognized in some of these other votes. Where municipalities are put to great expense on account of flooding caused by government works, the government should afford compensation. It is the same case as this roadway or waterway under the Chambly canal, in which case we voted compensation.

Mr. J. D. REID. There is an item here: 'Remuneration to A. Brunette, government director, Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, $2,000.' It seems to me that this man could not be doing his duty when he passed $165,000 of accounts in which there were reductions when they reached the Department of Finance. I suppose this man was entitled to see these accounts. Either he has not done his duty, or he has not been allowed to see the accounts. And if he has been allowed to see these accounts, we in the Public Accounts Committee should have been allowed to see them also.

Mr. FIELDING. I fancy they were of a preliminary nature.

Mr. J. D. REID. Before there was a government director on the board ?

Mr. DANIEL. There is an item here 'to pay expenses in reference to cases before the Railway Commission, $10,000.' What expense is this $10,000 supposed to pay ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is for counsel to be employed by the Justice Department, but chargeable to the railway account.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is this for the new appointment, Mr. Shepley ?

Mr. FIELDING. It will cover that class of expenditure.

Mr. J. D. REID. I understand that in the Railway Department there is a staff of American auditors auditing the accounts of the department. I would like to know if there is any truth in that report ?

Mr. FIELDING. The officers referred to are not auditing. They are a staff of officials employed through Mr. Falconer of Montreal, who is the Canadian representative of a concern in the United States, which is specially engaged in the adjustment of accounts for large concerns. These officers have been at work in the Railway Department for some time—on the Intercolonial Railway. The work will involve considerable expense, but the deputy minister assured me that the expenditure is a wise one.

Mr. BERGERON. What does the Railway Commission cost a year ?

Mr. FIELDING. The vote in the main estimates was $75,000, and we have here a vote of $15,000 further, making $90,000.

Mr. BERGERON. And $10,000 for the expenses of counsel under the commission. So the commission will cost about $100,000 ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, I think it will cost more.

Mr. BERGERON. I see an item here of stationery for the department. How is that stationery procured? Is it bought in Canada or imported from England ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is got through the King's Printer. He buys in quantiites and sells to the several departments.

National Transcontinental Railway—surveys and construction, $28,360,000.

Mr. CROCKET. I desire to call attention to a few matters in connection with the return which the Finance Minister laid upon the table of the House this morning in reference to the selection of the route for this railway in the province of New Brunswick. As members of the House are aware, two routes were surveyed at first through the province of New Brunswick in the fall of 1904 and the winter of 1905. The commission decided, after receiving the reports of the engineers, to adopt what is called the central route. That fact, however, was not known to the public for many months after the decision was arrived at. In the meantime there had been great dissatisfaction in regard to the manner in which these surveys were made, and as a result the government ordered a resurvey. That was made during the winter and summer of last year. On the 29th of December as I find by reference to a return brought down to-day the district engineer reported in favour of what is called the central pusher grade route.

That recommendation was passed on to the chief engineer of the commission, Mr. Lumsden, and he approved of it. On the 26th of January it was passed on to the Railway Department, and it was approved by the late Minister of Railways and Canals and forwarded to the government. The Minister of Railways and Canals has a memorandum to the Governor in Council dated the 2nd of March, in which he also formally approves of the recommendation. I find that the government, on the 9th of April, passed an order in council deciding that the railway should be located along that route. I may say that I have made several attempts, since the beginning of this year, to secure this information. In the first place, I made a motion for papers. A return was brought down, but no reports were produced. I subsequently asked the Minister of Railways during a discussion in the House whether the reports would be brought down before the government reached a decision. He was not able to answer, and I asked the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister intimated that he would see that the return was laid on the table of the House before a decision of the government was reached. Two or three times subsequently I questioned the Prime Minister, and was put off each time with a promise of definite information in a few days, and not until the other day was I able to receive an assurance from any member of the government that the report would be tabled, even before the House was asked to appropriate any more money for the construction of this railway.

Now I desire to call attention to one or two matters in connection with this report. In the first place, the district engineer recommends the adoption of the central pusher grade route which contains a section twelve miles in length that exceeds the grades which the commission instructed the engineers to confine themselves to, the pusher grade rising as high as 1·10 per cent or 52·8 feet per mile. The interim report of the Transcontinental Commission in 1904 states that the engineers were all instructed to confine themselves to grades not exceeding four-tenths of one per cent rising eastward, and six-tenths of one per cent rising westward. Notwithstanding that fact, the district engineer of district A takes it upon himself to recommend a route which exceeds that grade, and is in contravention of the instructions which the Transcontinental Commission determined upon. Then the report of Mr. Lumsden on the first survey, recommending the central route, not the pusher grade route, but the central standard grade route was based upon several statements contained in that report, which have been already shown to be inaccurate and misleading. The first point which he made on behalf of the central standard grade route as against the St. John river route, as set out in the report of April, 1905, was that the difference in bridging and minor structures would be very great, that is that they would be much more costly on the St. John river valley route. The second point he made was that all the minor structures would be larger and more costly than on the back line. The third point was that the earthwork on the back route would be considerably lighter than on the river route. He says :

> I am of the opinion that the difference in cost between the two lines will not be less than $1,500,000.

Then he says that the increased cost of operating the river route as compared with the back or standard route, will be $95,850 per year, which, capitalized at four per cent, he puts down as giving an operating value of $2,396,252. Then he says :

> Should the pusher grade be adopted a further saving in distance of, say thirteen miles, will be affected, but the expense of operating will be considerably increased.
> The back route opens up a new country well adapted for settlement, and at present without transportation facilities.
> The river route is already supplied with railway facilities and will be connected with the Transcontinental Railway at a number of points.

These are the chief points in the report of Mr. Lumsden dated in the month of April or May, 1905, and the points upon which he recommended the adoption of the central route as against the St. John river route, and upon which the commission approved of that recommendation. Now I took occasion last session to discuss this report of Mr. Lumsden, and to point out how inaccurate and misleading it was in several particulars. With reference to his statement that the river route is already supplied with railway facilities and would be connected with the Transcontinental Railway at a number of points, that is known to everybody along the St. John river to be an absolute misrepresentation. There is absolutely no railway accommodation along the St. John river between the towns of Fredericton and Woodstock. This railway by the back route will leave St. John river at Grand Falls and go across the country to Chipman and does not again touch the St. John river. That is a matter known to everybody in the province of New Brunswick, and yet Mr. Lumsden declares in this report that the river route is already supplied with railway facilities and will be connected with the Transcontinental at a number of points. Further, with reference to the settlement of the country which is to be traversed by the railway if constructed through the so-called central route, he says the back route opens up a new country well adapted for settlement and at present without transportation facilities.

I wish to refer in this connection to the report of the Geological Survey for this year, which contains an account of the exploration of that country by Mr. A. A. Johnson, which flatly contradicts the statement contained in Mr. Lumsden's report. Mr. Johnson says at page 130 of this year's Geological Survey report in reference to the land along the route of this railway :

Most of the lands at all well adapted to agricultural purposes have already been taken up. The most important of these lie along the St. John river and its tributaries and are embraced in the settlements of Chamford, Commeau Ridge, Ennishone and New Denmark and a strip along the Tobique. A less important area is that to the north and northeast of the village of Stanley, embraced in the Williamsburg, Cross Creek, Green Hill and Maple Grove settlements. Along the Tobique the red clays derived from the distintegration of lower Carboniferous rocks afford excellent crops of grain and grasses. The cleared ground about the four last mentioned settlements furnishes fair crops of oats and grasses. The remaining portions of the country—

That is the principal portion which will be traversed by the back route between Grand Falls and Moncton.

—traversed by the back or central route of the National or Transcontinental railway are generally unsuited to agricultural pursuits since, even where the soil is otherwise fertile, the great accumulation of boulders with which the ground is cumbered rendered successful tilling well nigh impossible.

That is the statement of an officer of the Geological Survey as the result of an exploration that he made of that country. Yet, Mr. Lumsden, in the report which he presented to the commission in the year 1905, stated that this line would open up a new country well adapted for settlement and at present without transportation facilities. I called attention last session to the fact that neither the district engineer nor the chief engineer, nor the chairman of the Transcontinental Railway Commission, made any reference to the fact that great danger would ensue to the lumbering interests of the province of New Brunswick by the construction of this road along the proposed central route. If that country has any value at all it is in those timber lands which are among the most valuable timber limits in New Brunswick, and those who are interested in the timber industry of that province have been very much alarmed at the possible danger which will ensue from the construction of lines of railway through that country. Experience has taught the people of that province that railways are most dangerous to timbered areas. In the province of New Brunswick great areas of valuable timber lands have been destroyed by fire caused by railways. That, to my mind, is about the only effect that the construction of this railway will have upon the resources of that portion of the province.

Now, I want to call attention to some statements that appear in this year's report which contradict absolutely the position that Mr. Lumsden took in his first report. I have already called attention to the fact that he said in his first report that the construction of the railway by the river route would cost $1,500,000 more than by the central route and the difference that there would be in the cost of the structures and the nature of the earthwork. In this year's report Mr. Guy Dunn sets forth the total estimated cost of construction of this railway by the central route, standard grade, at $8,227.072 and by the river route standard grade at $8,217,745 which gives an amount of $9,327 in favour of the river route, notwithstanding the estimate of Mr. Lumsden in the year 1905 upon which he based his recommendation that the river route would cost $1,500,000 more than the central route. Furthermore Mr. Guy Dunn sets out in reference to the curvatures that the curves on the central route, standard grade, will be 5,893 degrees as against 5,576 degrees by the St. John river route so that, in the matter of curvatures also the St. John river route is shown to possess the advantage notwithstanding Mr. Lumsden's statement of 1905. The ground upon which his latest recommendation of the route which has finally been adopted and upon which he made his estimate as to what is called the operating value of the two routes —the central pusher grade route and the St. John river route—is thus stated by Mr. Lumsden :

Figuring out the traffic for only twelve trains daily in place of twenty, on the same basis the figures would be $1,584,000 in favour of the central route standard grade and $4,041,000 in favour of the central route pusher grade over the river route. With a traffic of twenty trains daily the result of combining the estimated cost of construction and operating values shows that when constructed the amount in favour of the central route pusher grade would be $7,682,000 or by the central route standard grade $2,670,000 as compared with the river route. With traffic of twelve daily trains, in place of twenty, the result would be $5,891,-000 in favour of the central route pusher grade or $1,575,000 in favour of the central route standard grade as compared with the river route.

That is absolutely all that is put forward in favour of the back route pusher grade as against the river route aside from the small difference that there is in distance. I have already referred to the passage in Mr. Lumsden's report of 1905 where it says that should the pusher grade be adopted a saving in distance of 13 miles would be effected but the expense of operating would be considerably increased. Yet we are asked in this year's report to believe that the adoption of the pusher grade is to decrease the operating expenses of the railway. It seems to me that this is rather a remarkable position for Mr. Lumsden to take. I am perhaps not very familiar with railway construction or operation but I think that the people generally would take it for granted that it would cost very much more to operate a line of railway by a pusher system, which involves the employment of additional engines to haul the trains, than it would to operate a railway that had a gradient of not more than four tenths of one per cent. The pusher route gradient is given as 1.10 per cent in this report, which, as I have said, is very much in excess of the grades which the commission insisted all the engineers should confine themselves to. It is very evident to me that there has never been any serious intention on the part of either the Railway Commission or this government to give the St. John river valley route a fair show in connection with these surveys. The records which have been brought down and what has taken place in connection with these surveys establish to my mind—and I think that is the belief of the great majority of the people in the province of New Brunswick—that the government were determined from the beginning at all costs and regardless of advantages or disadvantages to construct this line through the central portion of the province of New Brunswick notwithstanding that the interests of New Brunswick—and I do not put it upon that ground entirely—but the interests, I may say, of the whole undertaking from a national standpoint required that the railway should be built down the valley of the river St. John which would have afforded the shortest possible route to the nearest ocean port. The government were determined, notwithstanding, that this route should be built through the central portion of the province of New Brunswick, and the engineers have strained every nerve to put forward every possible imagined advantage on behalf of the central route so called, and to minimize or suppress all the advantages that were possessed by the St. John river route. However, Mr. Chairman, I suppose it is too late now to speak with the hope of accomplishing anything. The government has at last decided the matter, and we in the province of New Brunswick will have to submit. I make these remarks simply to call the attention of the people of the province of New Brunswick who are particularly interested, to these facts as they have appeared to me in the light of the report which was tabled to-day.

Mr. FIELDING. On one point the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) is correct and that is when he says that the government have determined that this line should be constructed through the central part of New Brunswick. My hon. friend stated that as if it was something that was very wrong; something that the government had of recent date been determining.

Mr. CROCKET. If the minister will pardon me; I meant that they had determined that from the beginning regardless of advantages or disadvantages.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. Regardless of what the surveys should show.

Mr. FIELDING. No, I object to the additional words. When the hon. gentleman says the government determined from the beginning that this road should be constructed through the central part of New Brunswick, that is quite correct. That determination is to be found in the Transcontinental Railway Act of 1903, which speaks of the route through New Brunswick as follows :

> The eastern division shall comprise the portion of the said railway to be constructed from its eastern terminus through the central part of the province of New Brunswick, and through the province of Quebec——
> Not regardless of anything, but——
> —by the shortest available line.

That is the point. What the government have been doing is to carry out the Act; what the engineers have been doing is to carry the Act. I have always tried to impress upon the hon. gentlemen from the province of New Brunswick who treated this as a political question, that it never was a political question. It was from the beginning an engineering question. From the outset it was to be the shortest available route from the city of Quebec to the city of Moncton, and having laid that down as the rule, to the engineers was left the laying out of the shortest route. That was the position of the government in the beginning; that was the position of the government in every stage; that was the position of the government in the end. It was from the beginning to the end purely an engineering question. The whole matter is well summed up in a report made by the late Minister of Railways, which is to be found in these documents, and in view of what my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) has said, I think I will put it on 'Hansard':

> Department of Railways and Canals,
> Ottawa, March 2, 1907.
> To His Excellency the Governor General in Council :
> Memorandum.
> The undersigned has the honour to represent that, under date the 28th of February ultimo, the Commissioners of the Transcontinental Railway have submitted, for the approval of Your Excellency in Council, route maps showing the results of the first location surveys, now completed, over the two alternative routes between Chipman and Grand Falls, New Brunswick, district 'A,' such routes being known as the 'central or back route' and the 'river route.' They furnish a report from the chief engineer, dated the 26th of January, with which he submits a report from their district engineer, Mr. G. C. Dunn, dated the 31st of December last. Mr. Dunn's report is of a detailed character, going fully into the several conditions ascertained, and his conclusion is that the 'central' route should be adopted with a pusher grade of 1·1 per cent, or 58·08 feet per mile, compensating for curvature, this he emphatically recommends. In this recommendation, the chief engineer, Mr. Hugh Lumsden, concurs, stating that when the cost of construction and operating values of the two lines are taken into consideration, there is no question but that the 'central' route should be adopted. He observes that the central route is 29·2 miles shorter than the river line, if standard grades be used, or 46·4 miles shorter with the pusher grade. He states that if the pusher grade be used for 12 miles of the central route the cost of construction will be $1,856,666 less than the river route ; he further gives details as to the prospective comparative financial results of the operation of the two routes, respectively, which are greatly in favour of the central route with pusher grade. The commissioners recommend the adoption of this central route with pusher grade.

The undersigned submits the said reports, the route maps, and condensed profiles, and recommends that the central route, pusher grade, be adopted.

Respectfully submitted,
(Sgd.) H. R. EMMERSON.

There you have the whole story in a nutshell. The Minister of Railways recommended this for the consideration of council and it was adopted. My hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) has made a vigorous fight for what he regards as the interest of the section of the province from which he comes, but it is his misfortune that these particular interests, important though they be, seem to come in contact with the terms of the Transcontinental Railway Act. I am content to put the summary of the whole matter in the words of the ex-Minister of Railways and let it go as an answer to what my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) has said.

Mr. DANIEL. How much money has already been spent on the Transcontinental Railway?

Mr. FIELDING. The expenditure is:

1903-4.. .. ..$	6,294 40
1904-5..	778,491 23
1905-6..	1,841,269 93
1906-7 up to 31st January..	3,623,897 74
Total..	6,249,953 37

There has been some expenditure since the 31st of January at which date this memorandum was prepared.

Mr. DANIEL. Were there not $10,000,000 spent last year?

Mr. FIELDING. That was the appropriation, but not the expenditure.

Mr. DANIEL. How many miles are under construction?

Mr. FIELDING. West of Quebec 590 miles; east of Quebec 262 miles.

Mr. DANIEL. How many miles will be put under construction this year?

Mr. FIELDING. I have given the mileage now under construction. As to what further may be done within the year I cannot at the moment tell. It is expected there will be further contracts during the year.

Mr. DANIEL. Is this $28,000,000 to pay for the mileage now under contract?

Mr. FIELDING. It will be largely called for by the contracts already issued.

Mr. LENNOX. Do you expect to be able to spend this much this year?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, it is so represented to me.

Mr. LENNOX. I suppose there is none of the line actually completed yet?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. CROCKET. Will tenders be called for the construction of any portion of the line between Grand Falls and Chipman during the present summer?

Mr. FIELDING. Probably yes.

Department of Marine and Fisheries, to increase salaries $900.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it true that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is going to Russia to investigate the ice-breakers there ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I believe it is true that he is going to the continent to inspect the ice-breaking boats.

Life saving stations, &c., $10,000.

Mr. DANIEL. With regard to the increased amount for life-saving stations is it intended to create any new stations?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes, by the vote taken this year it is intended to establish new stations in the maritime provinces, particularly in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.

Mr. DANIEL. When the matter was up before I called attention to the fact that they have established and now maintain a life-boat in St. John harbour. I then said it did not seem right that the city of St. John should keep up a life-boat service when the Dominion government are keeping up that service.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am advised the department has that under consideration.

Mr. DANIEL. That is rather indefinite.

Lighthouse and coast service—maintenance and repairs to lighthouses—further amount required to pay for the services of expert and staff re-organizing the system of book-keeping to assimilate with all the branches of the department throughout the Dominion, $25,000.

Mr. DANIEL. This matter was held over to permit the minister to give some information with reference to it. Here is an amount already due and we have no information as to either the necessity for the expenditure, the method in which it is expended, to whom it is due, or the results of the efforts of these accountants to create a new system of book-keeping, nor have we been informed why the officers of the department themselves are unable to create a new system of book-keeping if it was found necessary that such a system could be introduced. I think we should be told to whom the money is to be paid, the rate of payment, the length of time these people have been on duty and what results they have accomplished.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The minister some time last July made an engagement with chartered accountants of Montreal of whom Mr. Falconer is the head to make a thorough examination of all one year's transactions in the Marine and Fisheries Department. Mr. Falconer, with a number of assistants, had a room in the department placed at his disposal and opened a complete set of books on a new system covering the entire fiscal year. I have had an interview with Mr. Falconer who has given me a memorandum of the work he has been doing. Probably I cannot do better than read to the House what he says with regard to the work that has been accomplished.

Sometime about the beginning of the fiscal period just ended, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries took up with me the question of the installation in the head office at Ottawa and all branches of his department of a modern and up to date system of books, accounts and records.

After several conferences and some preliminary examination of existing methods and conditions, it appeared advisable that I should write up according to logical bookkeeping practice, all records of disbursement and of revenue of the department for the then current period. Besides securing proper and complete records for the period 1906-7, this would enable me to study the requirements of the case and to intelligently plan any reorganization or modification of methods which might appear necessary. It is self-evident that however complete and satisfactory a system of accounts may have been when designed to record transactions of a department spending say $800,000, it would require some modification and change when the expenditures had increased to seven or eight millions.

The work authorized by the minister covers a very much larger field than the installation of a new system of book-keeping. The chief object sought may be stated to be :

The installation of a proper and complete set of accounts, recording in double entry all records of expenditures and revenue of the department and susceptible of proof by balance :

The carrying of such accounts in the books so that any information asked for regarding expenditures and revenues or relating to the work of the department will be available immediately upon demand, the accuracy of the information furnished being guaranteed by the fact that all the books and accounts are in balance :

The keeping of all records concerning the work of the department in such form that statistical information relating to the operations and transactions of each month shall be supplied to the minister promptly after the close of each month, thus keeping those interested in constant and close touch with the workings of the department :

The installation of a modern and up to date purchasing system on lines similar to those regarded as best practice by the most advanced railways and industrial organizations. The object being to enable the officer in charge to form intelligent opinions as to probable quantities required in a given district for a given period, and thus to facilitate economical buying as regards quantities and seasons ; also to keep him currently posted as to proper market prices and enable him to criticise prices at which goods are purchased at outside points, and in addition, to keep record of all contracts between the department and vendors, and see that the full quantity of materials contracted for, no more and no less, are received and billed at correct prices :

To enable vouchers of expenditures and records of revenues to be examined, criticised, and certified as correct by officers of the department before payment of such vouchers or final record of such revenues; it is an acknowledged fact that such examination and criticism should be made as stated and not some months after the transactions :

To install in the branches and agencies and wherever materials and supplies belonging to the department may be proper stores and material records, recording expenditures and disbursements and surrounding such expenditures of materials with the same safeguards with which any proper system of accounting is supposed to surround expenditures of cash.

To install at the different branches and agencies of the department where manufacturing work is done a proper system of cost finding such as all modern industrial organizations now have. This to enable the officer in charge to keep currently posted regarding costs of operation and of maintenance of his department ; such costs can only be controlled to the best advantage if records regarding them are promptly available at frequent intervals for study and comparison either with similar records of preceding periods, or with items of related interest.

When this work was first discussed with the minister it was, naturally, quite impossible to estimate the amount of work involved or state the expenditure which would be required. It was agreed that the work should be done and my accounts rendered on a per diem basis, my charges for services to represent only the time actually devoted to the work and to be made at my regular schedule rates for different members of the staff. This agreement has been scrupulously carried out and my bills as rendered represent exactly the same rates and amounts which are charged to other clients for similar services. It was understood that as soon as the records for 1906-1907 were up to current date, my staff would be lessened, and so far as possible, the services of employees of the department would be used to carry on the work. This agreement has been carried out and the closing entries in the books of 1906-1907, as well as the opening entries in the books for the current fiscal period are now being made by employees of the department.

It was also understood that in so far as work at the branches and agencies was concerned, my work should, as far as possible, be that of instruction and supervision. At Prescott and at the Sorel shipyards the new systems have been outlined and will be carried on by employees of those agencies. At the other branches and agencies the matter of inventories and stores accounting is having attention, the details of the work being done by employees of the agencies under the supervision of the inspector of agencies, who is a permanent employee of the department. To this officer has been intrusted work of installing at the agencies the methods outlined by me.

KENNETH FALCONER.

I have here a list of those employed, the rate per day, and the amount earned up to the present. Mr. Falconer, of Montreal, gets $40 per day.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does he get his expenses in addition ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes. He called to his assistance two eminent accountants of the city of New York, who received $75 per day each. They were employed only twenty-three days so that the amount is not $2,000 all told. There are on the list :

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are they from Canada ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Messrs. Gunn and Roberts are members of a prominent New York firm of chartered accountants, who charge their regular fee.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are any more of these names from outside Canada ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I cannot say but I am advised that they are nearly all Canadians except the two first named.

Mr. BERGERON. Who fixed the price per day ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is their regular fee.

Mr. BERGERON. The Canadian ones also ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that what Mr. Falconer charges in Montreal, $40 per day ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. He said he could get all the work he could do at that rate.

Mr. LENNOX. There is one at $50 per day.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes; G. E. Fawcett. eight days at $50. I do not know where he comes from. There are two at $30 a day.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Have any charges been made against any of the officials of the department by any of these gentlemen?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. None whatever. After investigating the matter as well as I could, my conclusion is that the work they have done is excellent and in the interest of the public service. While it has cost a good deal, a very good purpose will be served.

Mr. DANIEL. How long will it be before this work will be accomplished ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is practically finished now with the exception that a certain amount of supervision has still to be given several weeks more by Mr. Falconer himself and a little work done in some of the outside agencies.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Falconer explains that the object was to introduce a system of double entry bookkeeping into the department. Has not that system always been in vogue ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am told it is an improvement of the double entry system.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Have they made any report yet ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There have been a number of reports.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Do they reflect on any of the officers of the department ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Not at all. I am pleased to say that no discrepancy has been found in the keeping of the accounts, but Mr. Falconer thought that the system was not all up to date, and while it might be suitable for a department spending a million dollars, it was not suitable for a department spending seven or eight million dollars.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Do any of the reports reflect on any of the officers in the department ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. None whatever.

Mr. BERGERON. Will this occasion the appointment of new men in the accountant's branch or will the old officers be able to continue the new system ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The old officers are, under the supervision of Mr. Falconer, working on the new system. It is very probable the minister may desire to place a couple of more accountants in the department with the view of carrying out the system practically.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is the accountant?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Mr. Owens.

Mr. BERGERON. What is his salary ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. $2,400.

Mr. BERGERON. How can you expect him to keep books at $2,400 per year when you pay $40 a day to other men to examine them ?

Mr. LENNOX. Is this the first item of expenditure in connection with this matter?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. Will this complete it ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am inclined to think it will not.

Mr. LENNOX. How much will it take to complete it ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am advised that it would cost possibly $30,000 or $35,000.

Mr. LENNOX. Is this system being put in operation in other departments ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not know. As explained by the leader of the House (Mr. Fielding) these chartered accountants have done a good work on the Intercolonial Railway. As a matter of fact they were recommended very strongly by the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals to the Marine and Fisheries Department.

Mr. LENNOX. As a member of the government, can the hon. gentleman tell us if it is contemplated that they shall go through all the departments reorganizing the books at an expense of $30,000 or $35,000 for each department?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not know that to be the case.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the hon. gentleman know anything to the contrary ?

Mr. LENNOX. Let us have a little semblance of decency, in this matter, Mr. Chairman. I am willing to facilitate the passing of these votes, but I am not willing to allow votes running into hundreds of thousands to be passed so rapidly that hon. members have not time to look up the items. No man in this House would like one of his constituents to sit in that gallery and see him take part in this sort of work. I know I would not, and I am not prepared to be a party of it.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is this Mr. Found, and why do we pay him $300 in the form of a special vote ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Mr. Found is a junior second-class clerk at a salary of $1,100 a year. He is also meteorological observer at the Ottawa station, for which extra service he is allowed $300 a year. The work is very exacting and demands attention early in the morning and late at night every day in the year. The work is done out of office hours and does not interfere with Mr. Found's work in the office.

Mr. BERGERON. Why not pay him a salary instead of giving him this extra allowance ?

Mr. DANIEL. What are the facts about this hydrographic steamer?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Tenders were invited in England and Canada and ten offers were received, including three from British Columbia. The lowest tenderer was from the Armstrong-Whitworth Company, of England, but they refused to put up their deposit claiming that they had made a mistake in making their tender, and withdrew. The contract was given to the next lowest tenderer, the British Columbia Marine Railway Company, at $143,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What was the Armstrong-Whitworth tender?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It was $107,750.

Mr DANIEL. What are the dimensions of the steamer ? Is she being constructed of steel or wood ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I have not the dimensions here, but I shall be glad to get the figures if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Daniel) desires them. She is an iron vessel.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is this the firm that fitted up the 'Quadra' some years ago ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I fancy so. They have built a number of vessels including some for the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. DANIEL. The hon minister will bring down the figures to show the dimensions of the steamer ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. Would the minister tell us how many fish-breeding establishments there are on the Great Lakes ?

Mr TEMPLEMAN. Two.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the object of this steamer on Lake Winnipeg ? Where is she being built, and what is she to cost ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There was an item in the estimates of 1906-7 of $12,000 for a steamer for the fisheries protection work on Lake Winnipeg. Tenders were called for, but they were so much in excess of the sum appropriated that it was impossible to consider the building of one. Negotiations are going on and the department expects to get a vote suitable for the purpose within the present estimate.

Governor General's Secretary's office—allowance to A. F. Sladen, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $300.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Sladen, in addition to his other duties, is private secretary to His Excellency, and we are giving him this increase of salary. He now gets $1,900.

Department of Militia and Defence—to provide for Mr. R. L. Fuller, second-class clerk, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act as to age limit, $1,200.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the matter with Mr. Fuller ?

Mr. FIELDING. The only objection is that he is outside the age limit. He is otherwise qualified.

Mr. SPROULE. The objection to many of these increases is that while there is no provision made for the whole service, you pick out one here and there and bestow upon him a special favour. That is either an injustice to the others or else you are doing more than justice to those whose salaries you increase.

Mr. BERGERON. I understood there was a demand on the part of the civil servants generally to have their salaries increased. What is the government going to do about that ?

Mr. FIELDING. In these items there are a few special cases which the ministers felt able to deal with at once, and in each case I think for good reasons. But it was found that to deal with the demands of the civil servants generally was quite impossible, because the ministers had no time to take up the matter in detail. In fact even if they had time, I am not sure it could be conveniently done, because one minister may have a different standard in his mind as to what salaries should be paid, from what another minister would think proper. We have thought it better that the whole question should be taken up by some gentleman who could give ample time to it. An item will be found in another place to provide for the expenses of a commission of gentleman to inquire into the services and compensation of public officials generally. I may say at once, although no appointments have been made, I can give the names of the gentlemen whom we have selected for the purpose. The chairman of the commission will be Mr. J. M. Courtney, late Deputy Finance Minister. He will have with him Mr. Thomas Fyshe, former manager of the Merchant's Bank of Canada, and the third gentleman will be Mr. Garneau, present mayor of the city of Quebec. The only difficulty we may have is in persuading these gentlemen to undertake the service. We are taking a vote of $5,000 for expenses. We desire that these gentlemen shall sit down and leisurely discuss the matter after inquiry into the operations of the various departments, and if thought advisable, revise the Civil Service Act. Although we think in principle the Act is all right, in some details it may be capable of amendment. But the question of the classification of the service, and the scale of salaries upon which the civil servants should be paid, might well be inquired into by a body of gentlemen so well acquainted with the various interests as these three gentlemen, Mr. Courtney from his large experience in the civil service, Mr. Fyshe from his large experience in handling a great financial institution and numerous employees, and Mr. Garneau, who is well known in the city of Quebec as particularly well qualified. We hope that before next session we will be able to revise the scale of salaries, and that the really deserving members of the service may find their work better recognized hereafter.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is it understood that an official in the employ of the government for instance the translators, or the 'Hansard' reporters, are allowed to engage in any other business than that for which they are paid by the House?

Mr. FIELDING. That opens up a large question. The officers of the House in some cases do, out of session, engage in other line of work.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. During the session ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, I think not. I fancy that the 'Hansard' reporters hardly have time to do any other work.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There has been a good deal of complaint about the translators, and I am told that they engage in other work.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know about that.

Mr. BERGERON. The gentlemen named to serve on this commission are all very good men. But I am opposed to that commission, as I am to all others. It seems to me the matter could be settled in a shorter way. There is no question that the cost of living to-day is about fifty per cent higher than it was ten years ago, maybe more, and a higher standard of salaries than the present one might well be adopted. A man coming into the employ of the government to-day, a messenger for instance, comes in at $500 a year. Why not say that in future it will be $600 or $700 a year, and in the same way with the higher officials. You have in the service of this government men of the very highest attainments and responsibility. For instance, take the chief engineer of the Department of Public Works who comes to my mind at the present moment. That gentleman is paid a salary which is not at all adequate to the responsibility of the position which he holds. He has to pass judgment upon millions and millions, probably eight or ten millions of dollars worth of work a year and we give him the paltry sum of $3,500 or $4,000. A man like that can live with such a salary but the poor employee who gets a salary of $1,000 a year cannot live on it, and in conversation with public servants in Ottawa I find it is impossible for them to live without being heavily in debt. This is only postponing the matter again and it will cost the government $25,000 to find out what they know themselves without the aid of any commission.

Mr. FIELDING. This will not cost them $25,000.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend will find it out before they are through.

Mr. FIELDING. You could not get these men to stay long enough in the work to cost $25,000. There is more in this than increasing the salary of a messenger in the service of the government. The question is one of providing for the special recognition of the technical officers in the employ of the government, including some of the class to whom my hon. friend has referred. These are matters well worthy of the consideration of any one who can give them the time. A minister cannot command the time to take these things up in all their details and even if he could, one minister might have a different standard from that of another minister. It will be money well spent, the gentlemen are most competent and they are not men who will spend an hour at the work longer than is necessary for the purpose.

Mr. SPROULE. We have had three or four commissions and every time that commission is said to be composed of most able and intelligent men who are going to reorganize the service in some wonderful way and every one is going to have justice done. The new arrangement is not long in operation when the agitation commences for a change. If the work of these commissions was of a permanent character, if there were any special benefits we would be less disposed to adversely criticise them. I am afraid that this commission would just follow in the same line as that which has been pursued by others.

Mr. FOWLER. It is all very nice to hear the generous remarks made by the hon. member for Beauharnois with respect to the low salaries paid to the civil service of this country, but there may be two opinions in respect to that and I think that if our constituents were consulted the great majority would perhaps think that the civil servants are now being paid enough. I think we should be just before we are generous. We must remember that we are not providing all the taxes in this country that go to pay these gentlemen. I believe in paying a fair day's wage for a fair day's work but at the same time I think we should be just before we are generous.

Mr. BERGERON. I would say in answer to my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) that there may be too many civil servants and that there are some persons who do not deserve to be employed by the government, but at the same time there are many in the service who are not paid sufficiently. I will take the case of the accountant in the Department of Marine and Fisheries who gets a salary of between $2,000 and $2,400 ; his books are in such a deplorable state that we have to have a commission costing $35,000 to put them in shape, and these accountants composing this commission are paid from $40, to $60 or $75 a day. How can you expect to get a good accountant if you do not pay him the salary he is entitled to?

Mr. FOWLER. I can tell my hon. friend that $2,000 a year will get a very good accountant, an accountant perfectly competent to do the business of this country. I think that a man who is getting $2,400 a year ought to be a first-class accountant who would not require a commission to get his books in shape.

Civil government—Department of Justice—to provide for an increase in the salary of J. Mullin, first-class clerk, to $1,850 per annum, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $200.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The explanation of that item is that Mr. Mullin finds himself in a peculiar position. He is a very valuable clerk and he had been discharging the work of private secretary to the former Minister of Justice jointly with the clerk who is now private secretary to myself. The allowance of $800 in addition to their salaries as clerks had been divided between the two men. Upon my taking charge of the Department of Justice the Solicitor General who is now the Postmaster General took with him to the service of the Post Office Department the private secretary who had been previously doing his work as Solicitor General and in consequence the Department of Justice has saved the salary of that clerk and of the private secretary to the Solicitor General. Mr. Mullin, however, has by the exchange suffered to the extent of $400. He has done his work as a first-class clerk and he receives a salary of $1,650. He has been utilized as private secretary upon occasions when the regular private secretary was incapacitated by illness or otherwise by absence. He has received no remuneration for that and it is proposed by this item to give him an increase of salary of $200. That leaves him $200 worse off than he was before, even although he is continuing to do the same work. I think I am in a position to certify, after eleven months experience, that he is a very capable clerk, that he is doing excellent work and that the $1,650 which he is now receiving is hardly an adequate remuneration for the services which he is performing.

To provide an amount required to promote a junior second-class clerk to a second-class clerkship, from April 1, 1907, $175.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This is to provide for an increase necessary to promote a junior second-class clerk to a second-class clerkship. The clerk whom it is intended to promote is Mr. McGillivray, a barrister who had been a long time in the department as a temporary clerk. He was made a permanent junior second-class clerk in July, 1903, and his salary is $1,025. The work he performs is work entirely of a professional nature. He is reported to be a faithful officer. I have not any personal knowledge of his work except from seeing a specimen of it occasionally, but I think that the committee will agree with me that $1,025 is a very inadequate remuneration for a barrister doing professional work.

Mr. BERGERON. Will that be permanent ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Yes.

Department of Finance and Treasury Board—to increase the salary of Fred. Toller, controller of currency, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $300.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Toller who is controller of the currency is one of the most important and responsible officers in the service of Canada. He is handling millions of the funds of the Dominion and his salary of $2,800 a year is out of all proportion to his responsibilities.

Mr. BERGERON. They are picked out here and there and increased while there are others who are not increased but who are equally deserving of it.

Mr. FIELDING. We have taken the principal ones and left the rest to be inquired into by the commission.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I agree with the remarks made by the hon. member for King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler). I do not want to delay the passing of these estimates but I want to go on record as stating that the tendency to multiply these sums which certain increases in the salaries of civil servants is one that ought to be checked in the interest of the taxpayer. There are too many anxious to serve this country, without holding premiums out to them once they are in, to get their salaries increased except on the ground of absolute merit. I want to say that as my honest conviction.

Mr. BERGERON. You are entitled to your opinion.

Mr. MILLER. The people of this country are willing to pay good salaries to good men. There may be some men in the service who are not earning even poor salaries, but the other day the deputy of one of the departments told me that there was great difficulty in getting suitable men into the departments to take the places of the older officials who are retiring. He said business houses were taking some of the best men from the departments and giving them better pay than the government did. It would be a good thing to get rid of some of the men who are not earning their pay, and to give proper salaries to efficient men who give good service.

Mr. BERGERON. This session, Mr. Bain, of the Customs Department left the service because his salary was not sufficient.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BERGERON. Another instance of this is, that a few years ago, a certain minister in charge of the Railway Department asked Sir William Van Horne to suggest to him a man to manage the Intercolonial Railroad, and when he mentioned the salary, Sir William said: Don't ask me to recommend a man; you will not get a good man for that price. And we know where the Intercolonial Railway is to-day.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. That is another question altogether.

To provide for the salary of an Assistant Deputy Postmaster General, $3,600.

Mr. LEMIEUX. When I took charge of the department I was confronted with the resignation of Mr. Laschinger who had been in the department for ten years, and who is one of the most able officers in the whole civil service. Mr. Cawthra Mulock had offered him a position to administer his estate, and Mr. Wilson, who is in the carbide business, had also offered him a position at a much larger salary than we are providing. The expansion of the Post Office Department is such that I thought we should retain his services, and it was decided to create this position of assistant deputy postmaster general.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is that a new office?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Dr. Coulter, the Deputy Postmaster General, is overworked and Mr. Laschinger will help him in the general work of the office.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. He is a first-class man.

Mr. BERGERON. Is $3,600 the maximum?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Why do you increase Mr. Verret's salary?

Mr. LEMIEUX. He was my secretary as Solicitor General, and I brought him over to the Post Office Department. He has been in the office for eleven years; he works day and night; and like the other secretaries he has been made chief clerk. The work is greatly increased owing to the expansion of the department.

Mr. FOWLER. You might expand it more in the way of giving a greater number of post offices in the country.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am doing it.

Mr. MILLER.

Private Secretary to the Minister of Labour, $300.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you two private secretaries.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Department of Labour is assuming such importance that I found it necessary to get Mr. Giddens to act as my secretary, and he also helps Mr. Mackenzie King as stenographer and typewriter.

Mr. FOWLER. What is his salary now?

Mr. LEMIEUX. $1,000 I think.

High Commissioner's office, London, $250.

Mr. FOWLER. What is this for?

Mr. FIELDING. I think it is for the statutory increase.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I want to say right here that when officials are required in the high commissioner's office in London, Canadians ought if possible to be obtained. A number of the men in that office in London—I speak of the under officials particularly—are not the proper people to be in the office of a colonial government. They do not know anything about Canada, and they are rather disposed to be pert to those who come from this country, and to regard themselves as not occupying a position which the Canadian taxpayer has to pay for. I am not referring to the higher officials although I think they should also be Canadians. If you can find in Canada half a dozen young Canadians who would be willing to accept these subordinate positions in the London office for the sake of the experience which London life would give them——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What part of London life?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. The business life, the educational life, and the wide experience they can acquire. If the government can get young Canadians for that office they would be an improvement on the class of men to be found in the high commissioner's office to-day.

Mr. FOWLER. You know we are paying $5 a head for bringing people to this country, and now my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) wants to send them out.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. Send Canadians there.

Mr. FOWLER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Derbyshire) is in favour of that I bow to his wide knowledge.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it true that the present high commissioner has never drawn his salary since he has occupied the office?

Mr. FIELDING. I would rather ask the item to stand as I have not the information here. My recollection is that Lord Strathcona, has drawn his salary but I think there are some allowances which he did not draw. I do not wish to be too positive however. I think a certain amount was allowed him which he did not draw.

Mr. BERGERON. If it be true that he does not draw his salary from patriotic motives we know he does not need it,—I would suggest that the money he does not take might be supplied to paying these extra expenses of the office.

Library of the Supreme Court of Canada, $5,000.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is reported to me by the chief justice of the court as being very important.

Mr. GERVAIS. What was the total amount of expenditure recommended for the library to the registrar of the Supreme Court?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. $35,000, and we are making a beginning.

Mr. GERVAIS. Will any of it be expended for French law books?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It is intended principally for the improvement of the French section of the library.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this part of the $35,000?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. All we are asking this year.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up today?

Mr. FIELDING. The address to His Majesty in relation to provincial subsidies, the Bills on the order paper and estimates, as many of them as we can reach.

THE COAL STRIKE IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the Minister of Labour any additional information to give regarding the condition of the strike in the west?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have received two telegrams from Mr. Mackenzie King to-night. The conference is still pending, and all I can say is that I hope in the morning, from the hopeful tones of the telegrams I received, that a settlement will have been reached.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is it the intention in case the settlement is not reached for the government to bring in labour from any other part of the empire or any other country?

Mr. FIELDING. We are so hopeful of good results that we have not worked that out.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But the hope may not materialize.

Mr. FIELDING. We must have faith and hope together.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.35 a.m., Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 25, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

JORDAN-ERIE POWER COMPANY.

Mr. W. M. GERMAN (Welland) moved:

That the following order be placed on the order paper for this day:

House in committee on Bill No. 115 (letter N of the Senate) an Act to amalgamate the Jordan Light, Heat and Power Company, and the Erie and Ontario Development Company, Limited, into one corporation under the name of the 'Jordan-Erie Power Company' (reported as amended), and that rule 25 be suspended for this purpose.

Mr. SPROULE. Why is it necessary to do this? We are changing the rules every day or two for the purpose of one Bill or another, without any reason being given therefor. We are so near the end of the session that it is quite impossible for these Bills to go through, and why should we take up the time of the House irregularly discussing them when they should be entirely dropped?

Mr. GERMAN. I have no interest in this matter one way or the other, and if there is any objection to it I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. SPROULE. I certainly object to it.

Mr. SPEAKER. Objection being taken, the motion cannot be entertained.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 175) to amend the Canada Shipping Act. He said: This Bill is intended to correct an omission in the revised statutes. In the revision of the Acts relating to steamboat inspection a proviso has been omitted. I have shown the Bill to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, who agrees that it is of sufficient importance to be corrected.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the Bill be now read the second time.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). I do not wish to object to the second reading of this Bill; but we have had to do the same thing two or three times this session. It shows a lack of attention on the part of the officers whose duty it is to attend to these matters that parliament has been called on to correct its own work during the session.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I may say that this is the third error which has been discovered in a compilation extending over thousands of pages. It seems to me remarkable that in such a work the errors have been so few.

Mr. BERGERON. I can tell my hon. friend that when the revision of the statutes was made in 1886, there was no error at all, because the officers took good care of their work.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. One would think that there were a sufficient number of revisors and that they had occupied sufficient time to ensure accuracy in the work. I do not know whether this error is attributable to one revisor or to all; but there is an idea somewhat prevalent throughout the country that some of the revisors did not do much work and that the main portion of it devolved on three or four of them. It seems to me that it should teach us to be more careful in the future to select thoroughly competent men. I know that some of the revisors are the best that could be got in Canada, but I have not that opinion as to all of them, and possibly the mistakes that have occurred are due to the fact that not in every case was the most competent man selected.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny). If there are so many mistakes in the revised statutes, I do not see what reason there was for rushing the English version before the French version. I only rise to ask when the French version will be printed? To-day the criminal court is sitting in Quebec, and the French lawyers are at much disadvantage because they have not a copy of the criminal code in French. I think the people of this country have waited long enough for the French version of the revised statutes.

Mr. LENNOX. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if the extra volumes of the revised statutes are available for the various parties entitled to more than one set?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I would like to take this opportunity of saying what probably it is not unnecessary to say, because I find a very general impression prevalent that I or the Department of Justice have something to do with the printing or the distribution of the revised statutes. That is altogether an error. The Department of Justice has nothing whatever to do with the matter. It is entirely in the hands of the Printing Bureau, which is attached to the Department of the Secretary of State. Therefore I am not able to answer the question officially or to say more than probably any member of the House might say on the subject. I understand that three copies are to be distributed to each member of the House, that one has been already distributed and that the other two will follow just as soon as they can be prepared, but it was thought better to send one copy to each member in the first instance, reserving the other two until they are prepared.

Mr. BERGERON. I wish to call attention to the fact that it would be very important that the translation of these statutes be well made, so that we will not have to move next session to have the French statutes amended. There is more danger in this than in not having the English version of the statutes properly attended to. It is a most important thing. A French lawyer going before the court may have a French copy and may meet an English lawyer with an English version of the same statute, but the two statutes may not be the same, and it is very annoying. I call attention to this now so that the translation will be made carefully and we will not have any trouble at the next session of parliament.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, read the third time, and passed.

MARRIAGES BETWEEN YOUNG PEOPLE.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 176) to empower the courts to declare certain marriages invalid.

Mr. BERGERON. Would the hon. minister explain the purport of this Bill?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This is a Bill which, if the House is unanimously willing to pass it, is of some practical importance, but which is of such a character that, if it is objected to, I do not think it would be right to press at the present session. It is introduced, I may say, at the desire of the government of the province of Ontario. The secretary of that province was here last week and saw me on the subject, urging that, if possible, this Bill might be considered by the House and, if approved, passed at the present session. It is a Bill in the same language as a statute which has just been passed by the legislature of Ontario on the subject, to provide for such a case as seems to have happened (in one instance at all events) recently, perhaps in more than one, of marriage between a young boy and girl under the age of eighteen and without the consent of the parents of either. A case of that kind, has, I am told, taken place, the ceremony of marriage not being either preceded or followed by that which, if the marriage had been a valid one, would have constituted consummation, and the parties, in the case I have referred to, before they had either of them attained the age of nineteen years, seeing the folly of their act and desiring to be relieved of the effect of the ceremony, which, possibly, had been gone through with some idea that it was more a joke than a very solemn contract and obligation, proceedings were instituted in the High Court of the province to relieve the parties to this proceeding of the consequences, and upon the trial of the action, or in the course of the proceedings, the need of legislation such as I am proposing was made apparent and, at the suggestion of the learned judge, with the concurrence of the other judges of the province a statute has been passed by the Ontario legislature to meet the circumstances of cases such as I have described. The British North America Act, as hon. gentlemen will remember, assigns to the jurisdiction of the provinces the right to legislate in regard to the solemnization of marriage, but at the same time assigns to the Dominion parliament, as something exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Dominion, legislation in regard to the subject of marriage and divorce. The particular form which this legislation takes is the authorization or the empowering of the court to declare a marriage such as I have described, taking place under circumstances such as those mentioned, invalid. That possibly trenches upon the subject of divorce. At all events, the right of the provincial legislatures to enact such legislation is not free from doubt and, the matter being of such serious consequence, the government of the province of Ontario, thinking that this was legislation which ought to be put upon the statute-book, has so enacted; but in passing that legislation has asked, through their provincial secretary, that this parliament supplement the legislation by passing an Act in the same words, which Act should be applicable to the province of Ontario or to any other province which thought well to pass the like provincial legislation.

The provisions of this Act are simply that in case a form of marriage is gone through between two persons, either of whom is under the age of eighteen without such consent as the law of the province requires—that is, in the case of the province of Ontario, the consent of the parents or guardians—any superior court of the province shall, notwithstanding there may have been a license obtained, or a proclamation of the intention to marry made, as required by law, have jurisdiction and power in an action brought by either party to declare and adjudge that a valid marriage was not made or entered into, provided the parties have not lived together as man and wife or cohabited as such, and that the action is brought before the person bringing it has reached the age of nineteen.

The second clause provides that the court is to have the like jurisdiction where a marriage has been gone through before the Act comes into force.

The third, that nothing in this Act is to affect any case where the marriage is absolutely prohibited by the law of the province, as, for instance, if the children were under the age of fourteen.

The fourth section provides that nothing in the Act is to apply where, after the ceremony there has occurred that which, if a valid marriage had taken place, would have been consummation; and finally the court is not bound to grant relief in case there has been sexual intercourse before marriage.

Those are the provisions of the Bill, clause by clause, as passed by the Ontario legislature. The Ontario statute is to go into force only on proclamation, and the provisions of this Bill are to apply only where there is reciprocal and similar legislation. Those are the general features of the Bill, and those are the general circumstances. I move its first reading, and if it commends itself to the consideration of the House there is no practical difficulty in passing it, even at this late stage of the session.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. This is very important legislation which requires to be thoroughly discussed before we decide on passing it. The subject of divorce is one to-day which belongs to the Senate, and I think we should be very careful in doing anything that would alter our existing laws on that subject. Is there any doubt that the provincial legislature has not the right to pass a Bill of this kind? Either it is a question of divorce or of the application of the civil laws of any province. If it be a question of divorce, we have the law as it exists to-day. If it is simply a question of civil contract, the provincial courts can deal with it. I think that the hon. minister would do well to hold the Bill over until next session.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If this Bill was intended to establish anything in the nature of divorce, I would be inclined to entirely agree with the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne). But I understand it is nothing of the kind. The Ontario law requires the consent of the parent to the marriage of persons under eighteen years of age. The marriage of such persons without such consent is not absolutely void even if false declarations are made. At least that is open to question. The legislature of Ontario has seen fit to provide that where a marriage has taken place under false declarations and without the consent of the parents, and where there has been no consummation of the marriage either before or after the marriage, the courts may declare the marriage void. The provincial law makes the marriage absolutely void if contracted before fourteen years of age, and this Bill provides that if the marriage should take place when the parties are between fourteen and eighteen and there has been no consummation either before or after, and an action is taken to set it aside before the complainant has attained the age of nineteen, the court has jurisdiction, not to pronounce a divorce, but to declare the marriage void. It therefore does not trench on the province of divorce at all; and inasmuch as the provincial judges sanction the proposed legislation and as the Ontario legislature has unanimously approved of it, and as this Bill will have no force or effect in any province which does not adopt similar legislation, I do not see that any great harm can be done by our passing it.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Is the hon. gentleman sure that the provincial legislature has not the power to pass such legistion?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This Bill is intended to remove doubt. In difficult matters such as that before the House, it is almost impossible to speak with certainty as to whether the legislature of a province has the power to pass a Bill of this kind. Instead of permitting such a case to be carried from one court to another and then eventually to the Privy Council, it is proposed to make it perfectly clear that this Act will have effect in Ontario but nowhere else.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Is not the object sufficiently important to let the Bill stand for another session when it can be fully discussed?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I should think it could be discussed sufficiently this session, and if it be held over for another session, one very grave case could not come within its provisions.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The parties I have referred to are now nearly nineteen years of age.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not quite understand the provisions of the Bill, and I agree with the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) that, unless there are very pressing reasons to the contrary, it should stand for anotner session. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition says it has no relation at all to divorce, but it seems to me we are asked to make a general law for one particular province. The case mentioned by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) brings to my mind one that was before the House a few days ago, namely, a divorce granted by the Senate in the case of two parties, one aged sixteen and the other fourteen, who were married against the consent of their parents. I think they came from the province of Quebec, where our laws are very broad with regard to separation from bed and board, but where divorce is not recognized. Well, if those two parties from Quebec could come here and get a divorce from the Senate, why cannot those two in Ontario do likewise without having recourse to any special law?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The Bill may receive its first reading to-day and then after distribution be considered.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. What I am opposing is a general law to meet a very special case. I have no objection to the first reading, but that does not imply that I consent to the passing of the Bill this session.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

MILITIA HEADQUARTERS STAFF.

Mr. WORTHINGTON—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. What officers compose the headquarters staff of the militia, giving names, rank, duties and seniority ?
2. What is the greatest age attained by any officer of the above staff since August 1, 1906, previous to retirement ?
3. What is the age of the oldest officer in the employment of the Militia Department at Ottawa ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (for the Minister of Militia). The information desired is much too extensive to be brought down in answer to a question. As at this stage, a motion cannot be made, I shall see that the information is furnished the hon. gentleman directly.

THE BERNE CONVENTION.

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN asked :

1. Has the government received any communications from the colonial office with respect to the proclamation by the Canadian courts of the Berne convention ?
2. If so, what were the terms of the answer forwarded by the government to the colonial office ?
3. Has any action been taken, and have any instructions been issued to the Canadian courts in this matter by the government ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). We have received no communication from the Colonial Office with respect to a proclamation by the Canadian courts of the Berne convention.

THOMAS D'ARCY McGEE.

Mr. THOMAS CHISHOLM—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

Is it the intention of the government to erect a monument to the memory of the late Thomas D'Arcy McGee ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The estimates for the current year make no special provision for this item; but no one doubts that the record of the late Mr. McGee is one that entitles him to recognition the same as that given other distinguished statesmen, and at a future session provision will undoubtedly be made for the erection of a monument to his memory.

PERMITS TO CUT HAY IN SASKATCHEWAN.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I wish to give a further answer to the question put yesterday by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa).

1. Has the Department of the Interior, or any of its officers or agents, granted one or more permits to pasture or the right to cut hay on any of the following lands in the district of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan : section 1, township 44, range 10, 3rd meridian ; section 23, township 43, range 10, 3rd meridian ?

2. If so, at what time, to what person, for how long, and on what conditions ?

The answer is. No.

SUBSIDIES TO PROVINCES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I beg to move the following address of which I have given notice. His Excellency the Governor General having been made acquainted with the subject matter of the resolution, recommends its consideration to the House :—

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty :

Most Gracious Sovereign :

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada, in parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty for the purpose of representing that it is expedient to amend the scale of payments authorized under section 118 of the Act of the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, commonly called the British North America Act, 1867, to be made by Canada to the several provinces of the Dominion for the support of their governments and legislatures by providing that :

A. Instead of the amounts now paid, the sums hereafter payable yearly by Canada to the several provinces for the support of their governments and legislatures, to be according to population, and as follows:

(a) Where the population of the provinces is under 150,000..	$100,000
(b) Where the population of the province is 150,000, but does not exceed 200,000..	150,000
(c) Where the population of the province is 200,000, but does not exceed 400,000..	180,000
(d) Where the population of the province is 400,000, but does not exceed 800,000..	190,000
(e) Where the population of the province is 800,000, but does not exceed 1,500,000..	220,000
(f) Where the population of the province exceeds 1,500,000..	240,000

B. Instead of an annual grant per head of population now allowed, the annual payment hereafter to be at the same rate of eighty cents per head, but on the population of each province, as ascertained from time to time by the last decennial census ; (or, in the case of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, respectively, by the last quinquennial census or statutory estimate), until such population exceeds 2,500,000, and at the rate of sixty cents per head for so much of said population as may exceed 2,500,000.

C. An additional allowance to the extent of one hundred thousand dollars annually for ten years to the province of British Columbia.

D. Nothing herein contained shall in any way supersede or affect the terms special to any particular province upon which such province became part of the Dominion of Canada or the right of any province to payment of any special grant heretofore made by the parliament of Canada to any province for any special purpose in such grant expressed.

We pray that Your Majesty may be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the imperial parliament at its present session repealing the provisions of section 118 of the British North America Act, 1867, aforesaid, and substituting therefor the scale of payments above set forth, which shall be a final and unalterable settlement of the amounts to be paid yearly to the several provinces of the Dominion for their local purposes and the support of their governments and legislatures.

Such grants shall be paid half-yearly in advance, to each province ; but the government of Canada shall deduct from such grants, as against any province, all sums chargeable as interest on the public debt of that province in excess of the several amounts stipulated in the said Act.

All of which we humbly pray Your Majesty to take into your favourable and gracious consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order, namely, that we have no right to pronounce the second time on a question that has been the subject of discussion already in the same session and pronounced upon. The authority I quote is 'May's Parliamentary Procedure,' 10th edition, page 286, which reads as follows :

It is a rule, in both Houses, which is essential to the due performance of their duties, that no question or Bill shall be offered that is substantially the same as one on which their judgment has already been expressed in the current session.

A resolution may, however, be rescinded, and an order of the House discharged, notwithstanding a rule urged (April 2, 1904), 'That a question being once made, and carried in the affirmative or negative, cannot be questioned again, but must stand as a judgment of the House'. Technically, indeed, the rescinding of a vote is the matter of a new question ; the form being to read the resolution of the House, and to move that it be rescinded ; and thus the same question which had been resolved in the affirmative is not again offered, although its effect is annulled.

Then he goes on to give an instance where the British parliament was obliged to be prorogued and a new session opened for the purpose of taking up a question that had been dealt with in that session, and which could not be offered substantially the second time. Now I find that the judgment of this House has already been passed on this resolution, which was sent to the Upper Chamber. It is returned to us, and we are asked to commence de novo and express judgment on it the second time in the same session. I have a distinct recollection that at different times we have been obliged to introduce another Bill to amend a Bill the current session where it was essentially necessary to make some change; but I do not think we have on record any precedent for the course which is proposed to be followed with respect to this resolution. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would like your ruling on this matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before your Honour proceeds to deal with it, I would like to point out a very important decision during this session in which your Honour decided that a motion to be found on page 794 of the Votes and Proceedings was so essentially the same as another motion which is to be found on page 820 of the Votes and Proceedings, that the second motion could not be moved. It seems to me there was much more difference between the two motions to which I refer than there is between the motion moved some time ago in this House by the Prime Minister, and that which is proposed to-day by the Minister of Finance. On the 26th of March the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) moved this amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply:

That all the words after the word 'that' be left out and the following added instead thereof: The report of the Royal Commission on Life Insurance and the evidence connected therewith have made public various transactions in which members of this House participated, namely, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), the hon. member for King's, New Brunswick (Mr. Fowler), the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), the hon. member for Prince, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Lefurgey).

That such transactions have been commented upon by several organs of public opinion in terms reflecting upon the honour, the integrity and the independence of the above-named gentlemen.

That references to such transactions have been made in this House, during the present session, namely, by the hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick (Mr. Carvell), on the 7th and the 21st days of February, and by the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Ross), on the 19th day of February—in terms indicating that in the opinion of those two hon. gentlemen, the above-named hon. members are guilty of improper conduct.

That on the 26th day of November last, the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Devlin) referred to the hon. member for North Toronto as being unworthy of a seat in this House, on account of the transactions above-mentioned.

That on the 19th of February last, the hon. member for King's, New Brunswick (Mr. Fowler), addressing the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Ross), stated: 'We will show your connection with Mr. Hill—and we will give you the true insight of the Hyman story, too'; and added: 'I shall discuss the character of hon. members opposite, whether they be ministers or private members, and their connection with women, wine and graft.'

That these statements have become a matter of general comment and have aroused public opinion throughout the country, so that an immediate inquiry is imperative.

That the Prime Minister and his colleagues, being the principal guardians of the honour of parliament, should take the initiative in such an inquiry.

That the government should therefore ask the House to constitute a special committee to conduct a strict and impartial inquiry as to whether any ministers of the Crown or members of parliament have improperly made use of their positions as such for their private gain or have otherwise been guilty of personal misconduct under such circumstances or of such a character as to justify the intervention and censure of this House.

That any charges that may be preferred against any member of the government or of the House should be formulated before that committee, and that members of this House or other persons who have material or data at their disposal with reference thereto should divulge them to that committee.

That such committee have power to employ and hear counsel, to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses on oath or affirmation, and to report to the House during the present session.

That was the motion moved in the first instance by the hon. member for Labelle. The motion which was held to be essentially the same and which therefore could not be discussed the second time, was moved by the hon. member for Labelle on April 3rd:

That on the 19th of February last, the hon. member for King's, New Brunswick (Mr. Fowler), stated: 'I shall discuss the character of hon. members opposite, whether they be ministers or private members, and their connection with women, wine and graft.'

That the hon. member stated further that he had 'data' and 'material' at his disposal with respect to such charges.

That such a statement, undefined as it is, with regard to the parties concerned, reflects on the honour of the House and of the government.

That the hon. member for King's be therefore invited either to name the ministers and members of the House to whom he was referring on the 19th of February, and to specify his charges against them, or to withdraw his accusation.

That unless the hon. member complies with that request and adopts one of those two courses, he stands censured by this House.

Now it cannot be doubted that there are a great many material distinctions between these two resolutions. For example, the second resolution does not at all set out what is set out in the first resolution, namely, the remark of the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler), respecting the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Duncan Ross). The second resolution does not touch that at all, whereas the first resolution set it out and demanded an inquiry. The first resolution did not propose any censure on my hon. friend from King's and Albert. The second resolution did distinctly propose censure upon that hon. member. If these distinctions do not suffice I could name many others, were it not for fear of wearying the House, which would show that these two resolutions were absolutely distinct. Therefore, as I understood, Mr. Speaker, at the time—and as the decision undoubtedly was—the real point which induced him to come to that conclusion was that the same subject could not be debated twice in the same session of parliament. This undoubtedly is the same subject, and even if the point which I now make is not the real point upon which His Honour decided, nevertheless, there is the other remaining that the resolution now proposed is quite as similar to that before proposed by the Prime Minister as was the second resolution proposed by the hon. member for Labelle to the resolution which he proposed in the first instance. In my opinion there is a much closer resemblance between the resolution now proposed and the resolution moved by the Prime Minister than there was between the second resolution moved by the hon. member for Labelle and that which he moved at a subsequent time.

Mr. FIELDING. I respectfully submit three points in answer to the observations made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). First, I say if there be no direct rule against this procedure the course which has been taken is so obviously sensible and reasonable that we should be only too happy to make a precedent. Of course if we had any direct rule against it it would be a different thing. But, if there be no rule against such a course and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) has not been able to find a precedent which would weigh against such a course——

Mr. SPROULE. I thought I quoted two precedents, one in which the English parliament was obliged to prorogue and open a new session before they could deal with the same subject twice in the same session.

Mr. FIELDING. The second point I venture to submit is that there is a substantial difference between the former address and the present address and it is only because there is a substantial difference that the matter comes before us at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the Minister of Finance show me in what respect there is a greater difference between these two resolutions and the two resolutions I quoted.

Mr. FIELDING. The difference is a substantial and material one. It is not merely dealing with the same subject but it is dealing with the same subject in a substantially different way. The difference is regarded as being substantial by excellent authorities, although I must say that I am not absolutely clear that the change is as necessary as they believe it to be. It is a legal point.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then it must be almost exactly the same.

Mr. FIELDING. No, but it is a question of legal interpretation as to which doubts have arisen. I claim that there is a substantial and material difference and it is because of that very change that we bring the matter before the House. The third point is that it has not been dealt with finally by this House and that before it was taken up in the other chamber this House, of its motion, recalled the address in order that it might be given further consideration. My hon. friend will see that the records of this House so declare. The matter was not finally disposed of, the House had the right to recall the address and it has recalled it for the purpose of further consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it was on the notice paper in the Senate and that it was discussed.

Mr. BERGERON. The discussion appears in the 'Hansard' of the Senate.

Mr. FIELDING. It was not dealt with by the Senate, but the matter was withdrawn from consideration in the Senate in order that this House might correct an omission. That was a very proper procedure.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would most respectfully submit that the recalling from the Senate cannot put it in any better position than it was in one hour after we passed it. It is in the same position.

Mr. FIELDING. I think so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The question is whether one hour after we pass a resolution another resolution of practically the same character can be moved during the same session. I would submit that it could not be.

Mr. FIELDING. I would submit in answer to that that if that point is raised it should have been raised when the motion was made to reconsider. The question is resolved that we shall reconsider this matter and send a message to the Senate requesting the Senate to send the address down here that it might be considered further. The question has been decided that it shall be considered further and we are now only in the committee stage dealing with it in detail.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend admits that it puts it in the same position one hour after we pass the resolution, therefore he cannot rely upon that obligation in the light of the admission he has made.

Mr. FIELDING. Suppose the House, an hour after had discovered that there had been an omission and had decided to reconsider it, it would have been perfectly in order and it is perfectly in order now.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. Minister of Finance said a moment ago that the time to have taken up this question was when the motion was made to send the message to the Senate. I called attention to it at the time the hon. gentleman made his motion to send a message to the Senate, and I recived a reply from the hon. gentleman that the question would be considered later on.

Mr. FIELDING. Not that particular question but that the address would be brought up for consideration later on.

Mr. LENNOX. The motion was merely a request to the Senate to return the message.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. If I understand the decision of Your Honour, on the motion of my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) the other day it was that a subject could not be discussed twice in the same session even if there were substantial changes. The second motion of my hon. friend was substantially different from the first. It censured the hon. member for King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler) while the first one called for an investigation. Your Honour's decision was that the same subject, even though in a substantially different form, could not be discussed twice in the same session. Therefore, I think the point of order is well taken this morning.

Mr. BERGERON. In answer to my hon. friend the leader of the House (Mr. Fielding) who says that the address was brought back immediately it was received in the Senate, I may say that it was brought back by force. There was a vote taken upon a point of order which was raised. The Speaker of the Senate mentioned that he was creating a precedent.

Mr. FIELDING. It is here.

Mr. BERGERON. It is here by force, which shows that the hon. gentleman was making a mistake when he said that it was not discussed in the Senate.

Mr. FIELDING. I said that the Senate did not dispose of it and I do not think that has been questioned.

Mr. BERGERON. The question came up on a point of order and it was in the Senate to be discussed.

Mr. FIELDING. It was in the Senate.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) been advised of this proposed change ? If he has gone to the imperial authorities with the resolution that was adopted first, if he has presented that resolution and if you pass another resolution it will put matters in a most difficult position.

Mr. FIELDING. I can relieve any anxiety in my hon. friend's mind in that respect because the Prime Minister has no authority to take any resolution. The address has not been adopted by this parliament and he would have no right to present it to the imperial authorities.

Mr. BERGERON. If my hon. friend is very anxious to prorogue parliament to-morrow or the day after I would advise him not to do this because I have reason to believe that it will provoke a very long discussion, if not here, somewhere else.

Mr. FIELDING. Not to do what ?

Mr. BERGERON. Not to try to pass this resolution now.

Mr. FIELDING. Oh, well !

Mr. SPEAKER. It seems to me——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before you give your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the language of your decision of the 3rd of April with regard to the motion to which I have just alluded. After citing Mr. Bourassa's motion, your Honour gives your decision as follows :

> The Chair rules that this motion is out of order because the subject matter to which it refers has already been dealt with, discussed and decided upon by the House. In the course of the debate reference has also been made to the fact that, according to the rule, the words complained of, having not been taken down at the time they were uttered, they could not now be taken as a basis for a motion of censure.

There seems to be two branches of the ruling, the first of which is very pertinent to the question under consideration. The Chair ruled that Mr. Bourassa's motion was out of order because the subject matter to which it referred had already been dealt with, discussed, and decided upon by the House. That seems absolutely to be the point in the present case.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Is not the principle underlying the question before us, that this House having once decided on a certain course and expressed its judgment, that expression has to continue during that session? The reason for that is obvious. If this House can commit itself to one policy, and if immediately afterwards it can recommit itself to an entirely different policy, surely all you would have to do during a session, if the parties were at all evenly divided, would be to sway to and fro, and this House could commit itself half a dozen times to one view and another. Suppose, when this measure comes back to the House, the House should on further discussion, come to an entirely different conclusion, would it not be a great absurdity to have this House on record as having requested His Majesty solemnly to take a certain course, and then a week or two later to solemnly urge His Majesty not to take that course.

Mr. FIELDING. If that were the rule, then we could reconsider anything. If we pass a resolution and an error is later discovered, say through an omission by the clerk, we never could reconsider it.

Mr. NORTHRUP. The House is supposed to know what it intended to do, and right or wrong the House did it, and the House is committed to that. That is absolutely different from the correction of a clerical error.

Mr. SPEAKER. It seems to me that the House determined this question the day before yesterday when Mr. Fielding moved, and it was agreed to :

That the address to His Most Excellent Majesty the King which was adopted by this House on the 25th March last, transmitted to the Senate, and at the request of this House returned for further consideration, be taken into consideration to-morrow.

So far as the record shows, on that day the House determined unanimously that today it would take this matter into consideration, and it is now up for consideration. It seems to me that the question now raised should have been raised when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) made that motion, and the motion having been adopted the question is now in order for consideration by the House. I may say further that when the motion was made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) the point was raised by the hon. member for North Toronto, as to whether the address should stand as passed originally, or, should be added to or amended and the addition or amendment attached to the original address. It was suggested at the moment that perhaps that would be an awkward form in which to send an address to his Majesty the King, and, as I understand, it was decided to bring the address back for the purpose of incorporating the amendment in the address. I think that whole matter of consideration was disposed of by the House when the motion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) was adopted on Tuesday last.

Mr. SPROULE. The point I desired to have your ruling on, Mr. Speaker, was, whether, the House having once expressed its judgment on a subject matter, the same subject could be taken up a second time that session.

Mr. FIELDING. I submit that the House can always reconsider its own action.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That seems extraordinary.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the records show, as it seems to me they do show, in this case, that the House has decided to reconsider a matter, the House can do so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The House decided to consider but not to reconsider.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know that it is necessary for me to add any explanation as regards this matter.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the real change.

Mr. FIELDING. In the address provision is made for the payment to the provinces, instead of the annual grant per head of population as now allowed, an annual payment hereafter to be at the same rate of 80 cents per head, but upon the population of each province as ascertained from time to time by the last decennial census. The words in parenthesis are proposed to be incorporated in subsection B, and these words are :

Or in the case of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, respectively, by the last quinquennial census or statutory estimate.

The explanation of it is, that while as respects the Dominion generally provision is made for a decennial census, in view of the rapid growth of the western country the legislation with respect to the constitution of these provinces provided for the taking of a census every five years as the basis of its calculation for subsidy. There was a further provision that in the interim, between the two five years terms, there should be an official estimate made of the probable population of these provinces, and, that upon that official estimate the subsidy estimate should be made. While in respect of the older provinces you only make your calculations once in ten years, as respects these western provinces you practically make them every two and a half years. There is a saving clause in the address in the form of subsection D which reads :

D. Nothing herein contained shall in any way supersede or affect the terms special to any particular province upon which such province became part of the Dominion of Canada or the right of any province to payment of any special grant heretofore made by the parliament of Canada to any province for any special purpose in such grant expressed.

It was thought when that section was framed, that that saving clause would protect the special provision which exists in the constitution of Manitoba and of Alberta, and of Saskatchewan, with respect to the period at which the census should be taken, and I think excellent lawyers would even now say that that would be a fair interpretation of the Act. However, a doubt has arisen in the minds of gentlemen whose opinions are entitled to respect, and as the matter has to be arranged by imperial statute it is not well there should be room for any doubt. And, not because we believe the doubt is a very grave one, but for abundance of certainty, to make assurance doubly sure, we have thought it well to recall the address and ask that these words be inserted so that the right of the province of Manitoba, the province of Saskatchewan, and the province of Alberta to have a computation of their population as provided in their own constitution, shall be preserved and continued under the terms of this address.

Mr. SPROULE. As we are reconsidering these resolutions, I think the first one is defective as well as the others. This resolution says that it is expedient to amend the scale of payment authorized under section 118 of the British North America Act. Now, that section refers only to the first four provinces that came into confederation, and cannot in my judgment refer to the provinces that came in since, which came in under special and different terms. The resolution goes on to say that instead of the amounts now paid, the sums hereafter payable yearly by Canada to the several provinces for the support of their governments and legislatures, shall be according to population, and it sets out, in (A) where the population of the province is under 150,000. Now, the resolution does not state upon what basis the population in each of the provinces shall be ascertained. In my judgment it ought to do so, if we are going to apply it to all of them. If we apply it only to the four provinces that originally came into confederation, this provision does not apply to them, because the population of every one of them is over 150,000. If it applies to any province whose population is under 150,000, it must apply to Prince Edward Island as well as to the western provinces ; and, if so, I submit that it should set out how the population shall be ascertained, whether by a decennial census, a quinquennial or any other. With regard to resolution B, I called attention before to this point, as to how it was possible to take a decennial census or even a quinquennial census as the basis of population, when there was a provision that in three of the provinces there should be a census every two and a half years. I drew attention to that, because I thought the matter ought to be made so plain, that every one who examined the principles on which this distribution was made, whether a lawyer or not, would understand them. It appears now that there were just grounds for the contention I set up, although at the time, it was waved away as if unworthy of consideration. Coming to resolution D, there is another question on which I think we ought to have more explanation. What distinction do you draw between 'terms special' and 'special grant' ? I think we ought to have set out, in the first place, what provinces come in under terms special, and what those terms special were ; secondly, what special grants were made that would apply to any of the provinces in the future, and whether they are to be in any way supplanted or supplemented by the provisions of this redistribution. I think we ought to know these things, so that there will be no grounds for misunderstanding or difference of opinion in the future.

Mr. FIELDING. This matter is technically at large, and I quite admit the right of any hon. gentleman to discuss the whole question if he wishes. I do not think, however, that is a practical way of dealing with it or that any practical purpose is to be served by going over the whole question of the provincial subsidies. I think I am justified in taking the view that we are to consider the provision we are now making. However, I will answer my hon. friend in brief, that I understand terms special to be the terms given to a province at the time of the union for any special reason, and that these and any special grants given afterwards shall be preserved to that province, and shall not be taken away by these resolutions. As to what they are, we went over all that before, and I do not think it will be profitable to go over the whole question again.

Mr. SPROULE. What observation has the minister to make as to the basis on which the population shall be ascertained under resolution 'A' ? There is none set out.

Mr. FIELDING. It will have to be the latest official census, of course.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why would it have to be if the statute does not say so ?

Mr. FIELDING. For all purposes, in every matter where the population of Canada is concerned, I would think the last official census as a matter of course, as a matter of law, would be the prevailing rule.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The official census has nothing at all to do with it unless the statute says that it shall.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. In the first place, I want to put aside the reproach that will be made to me to-morrow by the party press of Quebec that I am against an increase of the subsidies.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. We know what the party press of Quebec does. I was one of those who spoke before on an increase of the subsidy for the province of Quebec, and the views I then expressed were condemned by the government. I think the policy of Mr. Mercier in 1887 has been dropped by some of the members of the government. Now, these resolutions were adopted by the Prime Ministers of the different provinces when they were in Ottawa. To-day the Prime Minister of the province of Quebec is in Europe and these resolutions are amended in the most uncalled for way. We are making a direct exception for the provinces of the Northwest. I have no objection to increasing the subsidies for the Northwest provinces, but why should those provinces be not treated in the same way as the older provinces in the east ? The Northwest provinces have been established and fed by the old provinces and their subsidies are to be increased every five years, while those of the old provinces are to be increased only every ten years. Why this exception ? It seems to me that if the subsidies of the provinces are going to be increased, every province of the Dominion should be treated in the same way.

It seems to be the policy of this government that on every question that interests the Dominion there is a general law for the Dominion and also a special law for the western provinces. I claim that this is not fair to the older provinces, and that this resolution instead of discriminating between the provinces of the east and of the west should treat all equally. Exceptions are made in the cases of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, but what of British Columbia ? British Columbia has been complaining about the manner in which her subsidies are treated and no exception has been made. The Hon. Mr. Gouin, Prime Minister of Quebec, who started the campaign in favour of increased subsidies, was here when the resolutions were adopted by the government to be submitted to parliament; and to-day these resolutions are altered in a most shocking manner, but the Prime Minister of Quebec is away and does not know, I am sure, that this change has taken place in the legislation. I claim that it is the duty of the ministers from Quebec, of the hon. the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux), for instance, who was laughing a moment ago, to see that the older provinces of the Dominion are treated in the same way as the new provinces and that there should not be two laws in this country, one for the new provinces and one for the older provinces. If there is to be an increase in the subsidy, let it be just, let it be the same for every province according to population and according to the census taken every ten years. The Minister of Finance has said that in the western provinces it would be according to the official census of the probable population. Can there be an official census of the probable population? I cannot understand that. But there could be an official census of the population of every province of Canada and that is the census taken every ten years by this government. I claim it is only justice to the old provinces as well as justice to the newer provinces that they should all be treated in the same way by this government, and, therefore, I purpose voting against the resolution notwithstanding the fact that I have always been in favour of increased subsidies to the provinces.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I would like to call the attention of the government to the wording of this address. It looks as if the schoolmaster must have been abroad when the resolution was being drafted. At least we ought to send an address to the British Crown in good English—or let us translate it and put it in good French, but whichever language is used, let it be good English or good French. Take the first sentence :

> We, . . . humbly approach Your Majesty for the purpose of representing that it is expedient to amend the scale of payments . . . by providing that—

That part of the sentence reads all right, but subsection (a) reads :

> A. Instead of the amounts now paid, the sums hereafter payable yearly by Canada to the several provinces for the support of their governments and legislatures, to be——

Then subsection (b) reads :

> B. Instead of an annual grant per head of population now allowed, the annual payment hereafter to be at the same rate of eighty cents per head——

Then in subsection (c) we have :

> C. An additional allowance to the extent of one hundred thousand dollars annually for ten years to the province of British Columbia.

And there you stop, you have no verb at all. It is the strangest kind of English I ever saw. Has there been a change of policy as regards the general construction of the English language, an advanced policy ? I think it is simply disgraceful to have such drafting.

Mr. FIELDING. This has been confirmed by the Interprovincial Conference, including the many eminent judges of English who were then present.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the conference draw this up ?

Mr. FIELDING. The resolutions of the conference are interpreted and incorporated in this resolution.

Mr. FOSTER. It is the fault of the interpreters.

Mr. FIELDING. If they get the money they will not quarrel about the English.

Mr. FOSTER. I believe of course that the Interprovincial Conference put it in good English but it has not been continued. It is really absurd.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). Of course the point is of the finest. If the word 'to' is struck out it becomes good English.

Mr. FOSTER. But you have still no verb for British Columbia.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The manner in which it has got into this condition is manifest enough. These are the Quebec resolutions as penned at the time of the Quebec Conference among the premiers who were jotting down what was to be done. This language was then used and these very words have been adopted in the body of the address which it is proposed to present. If the word 'to' is omitted from clause (A) and clause (B) and the words 'be paid' are inserted after the word 'allowance' in clause (C) you have exactly the same idea expressed in a manner to which even the traditional schoolmaster could not take exception.

Mr. FOSTER. I think even the commonsense schoolmaster ought to try to write good English. It is the fault of the Justice Department of course.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Might I be permitted to say one word with reference to the point that has been discussed by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule). He has referred to the language in clause (D). That was inserted in the address upon its previous consideration in this House, to make it clear that nothing in this address was proposed to affect special terms upon which any particular province became part of the Dominion. There were special terms, as has been pointed out to the province of Manitoba, in respect to the special manner in which the population of that province was to be computed for the purpose of its annual subsidy. There were, in the next place, special terms for Prince Edward Island, when that province was admitted to the federation, in that the 80 cents per head of population subsidy payable to that province was subject to be increased but never subject to be diminished. The population of that province has, in fact, not remained at the maximum and as a consequence, by reason of the special terms upon which the province of Prince Edward Island was admitted into confederation, the annual grant payable to that province is to-day being computed upon a maximum population several thousands greater than the actual population of the island as shown at the last decennial census. That is exactly the kind of terms special to that particular province which these resolutions were not intended to affect.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Is that the provision which is protected by the new clause (D) ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is not being protected by the new clause, it is not referred to in clause (B).

Mr. LEFURGEY. By the amendment in the resolution as discussed before the House.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That was included in clause (D) which was inserted when the address was before the House before; clause (D) provides that nothing in this address is to affect the terms special to any province. There were terms special to Manitoba in that Manitoba was to have a quinquennial census and was to have an estimate of the population between the decennial and the quinquennial and between the quinquennial and the decennial census. There was, therefore, special provision as to the way in which the population of Manitoba was to be computed for the payment of this 80 cents. Then there came the special provision with reference to Prince Edward Island, which was one of the terms of the bargain upon which Prince Edward Island came in, that the basis of population for the purpose of computation as to this 80 cents per head, for that province could go up but never could go down.

Alberta and Saskatchewan were constituted provinces of the Dominion two years ago, and the same terms which were made special to Manitoba were inserted in the Autonomy Bills or statutes constituting those provinces. Accordingly it was provided in clause (D), which was inserted here, that nothing which we were doing in this address was to be understood as in any way affecting those special terms which were contemporaneous with the admission of these particular provinces into the confederation. And further that if there had been, as we know there have in the case of some of the provinces, special provisions in the way of better terms—such for instance as were given on more than one occasion to the maritime provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick—those special grants should not be interfered with by the basis on which the 80 cents per head was to be calculated.

Mr. SPROULE. At different times we increased the grants to each of the provinces. We did so in 1884, I remember distinctly. In all such cases, will these be regarded as special grants?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The idea of these resolutions is simply that we are not touching any of those special grants or superseding them in any way whatever, but we are providing a different method of computing the population on which the 80 cents per head is payable, and are substituting for the lump sum mentioned in section 118 of the British North America Act the new figures contained in clause 1 of the resolution and are not interfering with anything else.

Mr. SPROULE. Clause 118 of the British North America Act only refers to the four original provinces and provides for the support of their respective governments and legislatures. When a new province comes in we provide a sum for the same purposes, but it does not come under that clause in the British North America Act. Are these to be regarded as special terms?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Section 118 of the British North America Act has reference to the sums payable yearly by Canada to the several provinces.

Mr. SPROULE. There were only four then.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It mentions the four provinces which then constituted Canada, but the statute speaks during all time, and it expressly provides by section 4 that wherever in the Act the word 'Canada' is used that is to be taken to mean Canada as constituted under this Act. And Canada, as constituted under the British North America Act, means the Canada as it exists at the time any legislation is enacted. The word 'Canada' in the British North America Act is flexible, including every part of the Dominion as it may be constituted from year to year. Accordingly, as has been held in fact by the judicial committee of the Privy Council, the word 'Canada,' when used throughout the statute, is not limited to the four original federating provinces but means all the provinces of Canada which may from time to time constitute the whole Dominion, so that we have to interpret that clause now as if it had been amended by the additions of these provisions for the various provinces which have come in since the original confederation of four.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queen's, P.E.I.) I would ask why it is we are giving special favours to these western provinces.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. We are not. This address is not proposing any special terms to the western provinces. Those were given in the case of Alberta and Saskatchewan two years ago and in the case of Manitoba thirty years ago, and we are here making plain what I venture to think is reasonably plain to most people, and are not affecting these special terms by anything we are now proposing.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. You are doing it in this way. You are giving them a per capita allowance on a more favourable basis than in the case of the other provinces. Why should they have any better right to this than the older provinces? They are perhaps on a firmer footing than the older provinces, and are not in any way entitled to more favour than the other provinces, especially the maritime provinces. The latter are not in really as good a position to-day as the western provinces, and I agree with the hon. member from Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) that the western provinces should not receive these favours granted under those resolutions.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The hon. gentlemen must not forget that these special terms were secured to these western provinces in the statutes which brought them into confederation, and this parliament is powerless to touch these better terms.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY (Prince, P.E.I.) The grant of $100,000 to British Columbia was not a part of the agreement.

Mr. FIELDING. Do you say it is too much or too little?

Mr. LEFURGEY. Neither one nor the other, but I say that Prince Edward Island deserves much more consideration than she got at the conference of the premiers.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Does the hon. minister say that Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan have the right to have their subsidy increased every five years, according as their population increases?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.) Is this address to the King meant to carry out the intention of the conference of the provincial premiers held here last autumn, and is clause (D) meant particularly to carry out the proposals of that conference, which perhaps were not clearly expressed by the resolutions passed by it? Are these resolutions intended to make more clear the resolutions passed by that conference?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. We are exactly interpreting the intentions of the conference.

Mr. LEFURGEY. It is not very strange that these resolutions should be brought forward at this time by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Hughes) after the recent events in Prince Edward Island, and that he should have the Minister of Justice trying to smooth over the situation which caused so much turmoil and trouble in our local legislature. When the conference of provincial premiers was held, there was no clause (D) adopted to protect Prince Edward Island by providing that she would always get 80 cents per capita on the maximum of her population.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Does the hon. gentleman suggest that there was any idea of interfering with Prince Edward Island?

Mr. LEFURGEY. I mean to say that the clause, as introduced in the conference, did not safeguard the special rights she had. Otherwise why introduce clause (D) to protect her rights?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Clause (D) is simply carrying out the intention of every one present at that conference.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Without clause (D), Prince Edward Island was not protected. Would the Minister of Justice say that under clause (B) as address was first brought down, Prince Edward Island was protected as regards the per capita allowance on the maximum population she had at any time since she joined confederation?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The province of Prince Edward Island was in no peril without clause (D).

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Why then did the Prime Minister move a resolution amending it?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. So that nobody would raise these silly points.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). I want to answer the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) who also has raised the silly point mentioned by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. That silly point brings you to your feet.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend is always raising such points. One day it is the question of Dominion notes, another, it is the question of the postage stamps, and last summer he was endeavouring to excite the province of Quebec at large by raising an agitation over the Sunday Bill. Now that Mr. Gouin must be consulted as regards the readjustment of provincial subsidies, he is anxious lest Mr. Gouin should be denied certain rights belonging to the province. My hon. friend need not be afraid. Mr. Gouin is perfectly satisfied with the legislation that is brought before the House, and I may tell him that if he had worked for the province of Quebec as much as Mr. Gouin has, he would enjoy a higher reputation in that province than he does to-day. My hon. friend wishes to make a point as regards the quinquennial census in the western provinces. In the constitution of our country, it is clear that a quinquennial census shall be taken in those provinces, and consequently the payment of subsidies to those provinces can be made every five years. Why does not my hon. friend raise another trouble because the representation of those provinces is changed every five years? It is in the constitution; and a similar provision does not exist for the other provinces whose representation is changed only after a decennial census. My hon. friend should have raised that question at the last general election. We all know that after the last census the province of Ontario lost some of its members, but was there any agitation in that province that the rights of Ontario were being trampled upon because it lost a few members? Not at all, because such reduction was based on the constitution. The province of Quebec remained with 65 members only, although its population had increased, whereas the province of Ontario, in consequence of a proportionate decrease, had to submit to a reduction in the number of its representatives. But there was no agitation. Because the west has a quinquennial census, does the hon. gentleman think that the province of Quebec should also have a quinquennial census? The constitution is there, it is the law of the land, and my hon. friend will not be able to wave his little flag in the province of Quebec over such a petty matter.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I rise to a point of order. The Postmaster General has put into my mouth words that I never used. It is an act of cowardice on his part.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will have to withdraw the word 'cowardice.'

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I will not withdraw.

Mr. FIELDING. I appeal to the hon. gentleman to abide by the judgment of the Speaker. He must realize that his expression is out of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will have to withdraw that word.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I understand that when a question of order is raised I have a right to speak on that point of order. Is it not a rule of parliament that any member has a right to speak on a question of order?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member will have to withdraw that word before he proceeds.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I have a right to make an explanation.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. You will have to withdraw the word.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the hon. member not a right to discuss a point of order? I do not remember any parliamentary decision that the hon. gentleman is out of order.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman can not raise a question on a point of order.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Well, I withdraw the word, and I will say that the Postmaster General was very brave.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am much obliged for the compliment.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). I think we are all agreed that the resolution now before the House deserves the best attention that we can give it. We know that the House has once passed this address, presumably using its best judgment, and to-day we are reconsidering the same question. Now it is quite clear either that we expressed ourselves as we wished to do the other day, or else we failed to do so. It seems to me that nobody can contend that we did express ourselves as we wished to then and that to-day it is right that we are asked to express ourselves in a different way. We are asked to consider a request to amend the British North America Act so that it shall be a final settlement of the amounts to be paid in to the several provinces of the Dominion for their local purposes and the support of their government for legislation. We see how final and unalterable the amended Act will be; therefore we cannot give too much time and take too much pains not merely to express ourselves in a way that will carry out our opinions, but to express ourselves with such clearness that there can be no room for a difference of opinion hereafter as to what the British North America Act does mean with respect to these amounts. Now this motion I observe only asks the imperial authorities to amend the British North America Act in one single respect. The address to His Majesty says that it is expedient to amend the scale of payments authorized under section 118 of the British North America Act, and the prayer is :

> That Your Majesty may be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the imperial parliament at its present session, repealing the provisions of section 118 of the British North America Act.

So there cannot be much doubt that what we do will be utterly void and of no effect beyond repealing section 118 and substituting something for it. Now look at that clause. That clause does not refer to any other than the four original provinces, Quebec, Ontario, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. It gives them a certain fixed sum per annum, and a certain per capita allowance. Now then, bearing in mind what I have suggested, all we are here asking the imperial authorities to do is to amend this clause 118 by striking it out and putting something else in its place. Suppose that power is granted and that clause 118 is stricken out, who would be affected by striking it out ? Let us assume that clause 118 is stricken out of the British North America Act and nothing else should take its place, who would be hurt ? The four original provinces only. The Minister of Justice may say that by the terms of the British North America Act all the other provinces are brought in under clause 118. I dispute that. If clause 118 is stricken out what position would the four original provinces be in ? Clearly they would forfeit the sums payable under section 118. What position would the other provinces be placed in ? They would not lose a dollar. Every other province is especially provided for in some other way. So I submit that if clause 118 was stricken out and nothing else were put in its place, only the four provinces would be affected in the slightest degree. It would not hurt the other provinces at all outside the four and that is because the payments of the other provinces are made under entirely different authority. The British North America Act provides that on a petition from the provinces and a concurrent petition from the Dominion, an order in council shall be passed by the imperial authorities bringing in the provinces, and such order in council shall have the same effect as an Ontario statute. So that British Columbia, Prince Edward Island and the other provinces, although they were brought in legally by order in council, were practically brought in by imperial statute. Then, if they are dealt with by an imperial statute which provides that they shall be paid so much money in express terms, how can any body say that the repeal of clause 118 would affect those who get nothing under clause 118 ? But, let us go a step further. I think I have shown that only the original four provinces would be affected. Then clause (D) comes in :

> Nothing herein contained shall in any way supersede or affect the terms special to any particular province.

How is that going to affect the position when clause 118 is already stricken out and nothing is put in its place ? Will not that clause be superfluous if you merely strike out 118 ? Of course, you are not taking away from those provinces anything they got outside of this section 118, and they never got anything under it. Therefore I submit that the province that obtains its annual grant under an imperial order in council, which has the force of a statute, or, as Manitoba did, under special legislation, and which is not affected at all by the repeal of section 118 will, under section D, not be affected. When we look at clause A we find that certain changes are made, that instead of the sums payable under section 118 certain other sums will be paid to the different provinces. It is perfectly clear that the original four provinces have forfeited all they got under section 118 because that has been repealed. It is perfectly clear that the other provinces are still entitled to what they have been receiving in the past. Therefore, when we come to consider clause A the practical result is that clause A takes, in so far as the original four provinces are concerned, the place of section 118 which has been repealed and therefore they will receive the sums which will be payable under clause A. But, as to the provinces outside of the four original provinces, they have lost nothing. The repeal of section 118 does not affect them in so far as you leave them all they are drawing to-day and in addition you give them whatever they are entitled to under clause A. There is no word in clause A which would be inconsistent with any province holding all that it has to-day and getting in addition what it is entitled to under clause A. I think the House is entitled to know that what the government are preparing to do is to take from the four original provinces every dollar that they get under section 118 and give them clause A in place of it, and at the same time allowing the other provinces to retain every dollar they have to-day and giving them clause A in addition and the sums payable under it. That is a tremendously important question. There is really a vast difference between that policy and the one which has hitherto prevailed. Surely, in a matter of this kind, when we are asking the imperial authorities to intervene by legislation, it is highly desirable that such legislation should be final. It should be made sure that we are not through ignorance or negligence taking from one province to give another, but rather doing justice to all. The hon. Minister of Justice states that section 118 has been practically extended so that to-day it includes all of the nine provinces. That is perfectly true, but as he also said : Canada' is a flexible term and we cannot say that section 118 covers all the provinces because it could not be worked out in that way. All the provinces will get what they are entitled to under special agreements and any part that they may be entitled to under the British North America Act in so far as that Act is to apply. Of course, it applies. I shall not discuss that but it would be inconsistent to say that the subsidies which they received under the bargain made when they came into confederation will be taken away by the repeal of a clause under which they took nothing.

There is another point as to the question of population which, with all due respect to the government, is not so simple as the hon. leader of the House would suggest. The sums payable under clause A are to be paid according to population. I would like to ask, is any man prepared to say with certainty what the word 'population' means under this clause ? We take a decennial census. It may be held that the population would be that which was shown in the last decennial census. But, there are parts of the country in which a quinquennial census is taken. I think it might be argued that this is the census referred to. Then, certain parts of the country may take an annual census. How would any judge decide whether this is to be a decennial or a quinquennial or an annual census ? Would not the practical result be that if matters continue as they are, if a decennial census is taken in the east and a quinquennial census is taken in the west and is not taken in the east, the west is in a vastly better position than the east ? The very fact of this amendment to clause D shows that the government understand and recognize that and I submit, that, taking clause A as it stands and clause D, it shows that the government are well aware of the effect of a quinquennial census and that therefore they provided in clause D that the quinquennial census shall apply. Why did they not apply it to clause A ? Why distinguish one and not the other ? They recognize the fact that there are three kinds of censuses. Suppose a court were to decide that the population is to be taken according to the last census and if in the east our last census was the decennial census which had been taken eight or nine years before the provinces in the east would be getting their allowance—and the province of Prince Edward Island perhaps needs the allowance more than any other province—on a census eight or nine years old, whereas, in the west, where they are going ahead by leaps and bounds, where the population is increasing rapidly, their census will be taken quinquennially and the allowance, at the utmost, will be on a census only four or five years old. I do not think it is necessary to find fault with the fact that one part of the country is getting more than another, but I think this is a matter in regard to which we should understand what we are doing. Do not let us put one part of the country in a better position than another unless we understand what we are doing ; so that we will not have to come back and apologize to one part of the country and say that owing to an unfortunate blunder you are not as well treated as you would have been if the government had looked after your interests as carefully as they have looked after the interests of another part of the country.

In the consideration of this question I submit, that, as it was conceded by the hon. leader of the House that we have a right to consider every part of the resolution, we should look at every part of it and particularly at the part in which it is proposed to give $100,000 a year for ten years to British Columbia. I do not know how it strikes the other members of the House, but it does strike me as rather extraordinary and it is rather an abrogation of our duties and of the duties of the government that a conference should be held of the local premiers and their resolutions should be binding upon this House. The local premiers are elected for a certain purpose and we are elected for a certain purpose, but while I quite agree that the meeting of the local premiers was a most proper procedure and that their recommendations should be treated with the utmost respect by the government of the day, I hold that when we come to deal with public moneys the government are wholly and entirely responsible. It will not do for the government to say that the local premiers agreed upon this matter because they were not elected to deal with these matters while we were elected to deal with them. So I think the government must bear the responsibility apart altogether from what the local premiers have done in giving British Columbia $100,000 a year. Again and again during the present session, and not later than yesterday, the government has confessed its belief in the principle of arbitration. It is recognized in the civilized world that in dealing with disputes between people and nations, instead of the old brute way of settling them by force of arms, arbitration is the most successful way to settle these difficulties.

Then the premiers of the different provinces met and when British Columbia asked to have her rights settled by arbitration, why is it that the Dominion refused? Only yesterday this government was ready to leave certain disputes with Ontario to arbitration; why does not this government submit the case of British Columbia to arbitration before we settle for all time by imperial legislation the grant she is entitled to get. If British Columbia is not entitled to $100,000, she should not be paid $100,000; if British Columbia is entitled to double that amount it is an injustice to deprive her of it. What man in this House has the necessary information to stand before an intelligent body of men and to say that he knows of his own knowledge from an examination of the facts on their merits that British Columbia is entitled to $100,000 a year or to $200,000 a year, or to any other fixed sum? Is it not monstrous that we should be asked by this government to vote such a proposal without a single word of information in regard to it from the leader of the House down to the humblest member on the government benches? Considering that this resolution has been so unfortunate so far; considering that it is not clear on its face as worded at present, would it not be better to let the resolution stand until the government has time to see that it is properly worded so that there will be no possibility of misunderstanding and no necessity to resort to the courts, at enormous expense, to find out what parliament means. During the interval between now and next session let a proper investigation be made by arbitration so that we may know what British Columbia is properly entitled to. To a great and growing and rich country like Canada a few thousand dollars may be of small importance, but it is of the utmost importance for us to know that a province of our country, a province which deserves our sympathy and which deserves justice at our hands, does not feel that she is unjustly treated. I would rather see British Columbia given half a million dollars, even though that were more than she is entitled to, than to give her $100,000 and have the people of that great province believe that the representatives of the Dominion in this parliament were so indifferent to her rights as to refuse her an adequate opportunity even to present her case. I do not say that British Columbia is entitled to one dollar more than $100,000. I frankly admit that I have not the information in my possession to say whether she is or not. But I protest against being called on to vote that British Columbia is only entitled to $100,000, when for all I know she may be entitled to three times that. In making the frank admission that I have no information to guide me, I believe that 99 out of every 100 members of this House could confess the same, and, therefore, I submit that before fixing the compensation for Brtish Columbia we should give that province an opportunity to be heard and to present her case so that we may know the real truth.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. H. BOURASSA (Labelle). Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is not only a very important one but comes to us in a most extraordinary form, with changes which should call for more attention from the House than the government seems disposed to give to them. Before entering upon the merits of the question. I may say that I was absent this morning when there was a little exchange of words between two of my good friends, the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) and the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne). The Postmaster General is a kind hearted gentleman, and is by nature and by education a broad-minded man ; but I have noticed that every time he feels bound by his duty of office to discuss any question which requires from him as from the rest of the government an abandonment of Liberal principles, he shows a bitterness which is entirely foreign to his kind nature. This is not the first time, nor do I suppose it will be the last, for the Postmaster General to accuse either my friend or myself of trying to arouse racial prejudices when we enter our protest against some measure of the government which we think detrimental to the province of Quebec. Now, Sir, here is a question upon which the parliament of Canada is called to vary the conditions that have been made with the various provinces of Canada either by the British North America Act or by the terms governing the entrance of any of these provinces into the Dominion of Canada. Either my hon. friend from Montmagny or myself would be untrue to our duty as representatives of the people if we did not call the attention of parliament and the attention of the country to what we deem to be an injustice not only to the province of Quebec, but to the other provinces which formed the basis of confederation ; and it ill becomes either the Postmaster General or any one else to try to raise these racial prejudices by giving to our protest and our argument a basis which is entirely unfounded, and which fortunately is losing its strength every day. I would advise my good friend the Postmaster General not to follow the bad example of the Minister of Justice, who tried the same thing in a by-election in the province of Ontario.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will my hon. friend allow me ? I do not wish to reopen the debate, even if I were entitled to do so ; but as my hon. friend was not here this morning, he should not impute motives to me.

Mr. BOURASSA. I am not imputing motives to the hon. gentleman ; but I am taking the attitude of the Postmaster General, as evidenced not only this morning but on previous occasions. I know what happened this morning, and I know moreover the argument which has been used for the last eight years in the province of Quebec against me—not very often I must say by the Postmaster General, but by some of his colleagues and some of his friends. Every time we have tried to discuss public issues or the policy of the government, we have been met with the accusation of being racial firebrands and of interfering with the policy and the power of the Prime Minister, the only French-Canadian Prime Minister of this country we have ever had or will ever have. These gentlemen for the years past have had no other argument in the province of Quebec than a racial argument. Every time we have discussed questions of public policy, they have tried, not in the province of Quebec, but in the parliament of Canada and in the province of Ontario, and in their press, to raise against us the racial prejudices of the English-speaking community, while carrying on their little game of raising racial prejudices in the province of Quebec for the benefit of the government. Now, Sir, that game is exploded. During the last two years I have discussed public issues much more in the province of Ontario than I have in my own province, and I am happy to say that I have been confirmed in my opinion that the great bulk of the people of Ontario are willing to listen to arguments on any question of public policy, with courtesy and respect to the various nationalities in this country.

Now, Sir, what is the question before the House? The government, after having had this resolution carried in this House, perhaps too hastily—and I am ready to take my share of responsibility for having allowed it to pass without perhaps having looked sufficiently into the merits of the case—are now coming back to us and asking us to change the terms under which three of the provinces of this Dominion are asked to share in the benefits granted by the parliament of Canada. These terms are to be changed, so that for all time to come the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba will be entitled to an increase of subsidy every five years, whilst the other provinces of the Dominion will be entitled to an increase only every ten years. The Postmaster General this morning tried to assimilate this to the case of the representation of the various provinces. He has accused my hon. friend from Montmagny of not having protested against the law by which this parliament has given to the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan an increased representation based on the census of 1906. But the Postmaster General should not forget so quickly the dispositions of that law. By section 6 of the Saskatchewan Act, as well as by the Alberta Act, although it is provided that these provinces shall be entitled to an increased representation after the census of 1906, it is positively declared that 'the representation of the said provinces shall thereafter be readjusted from time to time according to the provisions of section 51 of the British North America Act, 1867.' That is, the exception that was made in favour of Alberta and Saskatchewan is confined entirely to the five years from 1906 to 1911, and after 1911 these provinces will be exactly on the same footing as the other provinces of Canada; whilst by the resolution which is re-introduced to-day—strange to say, after the precedent that has been laid down in this House with regard to past debates during the same session—it is provided that for all time to come not only the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, but also the province of Manitoba, which has heretofore received no special favour with regard to the provincial subsidy will be entitled to an increased subsidy every five years.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Is my hon. friend under the impression that this is a new provision now being introduced for the first time?

Mr. BOURASSA. I am saying it is a new position, so far as the province of Manitoba is concerned.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is not so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It is in the revised statutes.

Mr. BOURASSA. Does the hon. minister mean so far as the census is concerned, or the increased subsidy?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. As far as the increased subsidy is concerned, it is already on the statute-book and has been——

Mr. BOURASSA. By what section?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. By the Subsidy Act.

Mr. BOURASSA. Anyhow, it is provided by the Alberta and Saskatchewan Acts, so far as the subsidy is concerned, by section 18, subsection 6, that the subsidy of 80 cents per head will be based on the following:

> On an estimated population of 250,000 at 80 cents per head, $200,000, subject to be increased as hereafter mentioned, that is to say:—a census of the said province shall be taken in every fifth year reckoning from the general census of 1901, and an approximate estimate of the population shall be made at equal intervals of time between each quinquennial and decennial census; and whenever the population by any such census or estimate, exceeds 250,000 which shall be the minimum on which the said allowance shall be calculated, the amount of the said allowance shall be increased accordingly, and so on, until the population has reached 800,000 souls.

So that by the constitution, the quinquennial increase to Alberta and Saskatchewan, at the time of their entering confederation as provinces, was limited to the period previous to the time when they should have reached a population of 800,000. By the present resolution it is provided that the increase will be based on the population of each province as ascertained from time to time by the last decennial census, or, in the case of the new provinces—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—by the last quinquennial census or statutory estimate, until such population exceeds 2,500,000 people, and at the rate of 60 cents per head for so much of said population as may exceed 2,500,000.

So that, instead of limiting the 80 cents per head rate until the population reaches 800,000 people, you extend its operation until the population amounts to 2,500,000 people, and as far as the 60-cent subsidy is concerned, it is extended for all time to come. More than that—and here is a point to which I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Justice—anything we may have done in the past was a matter of the free will of the parliament of Canada. The parliament of Canada could, for good reason, modify any conditions thus made; but now you are asking the imperial government to lay an iron rule upon us so that we shall not be able to change those terms, and you are creating by this legislation a barrier against the free will of the people of Canada in all time to come. You come in the last days of the session to carry such an important measure, to change the condition upon which those provinces have entered confederation, and to change the condition under which they will remain——

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That barrier was upon the parliament of Canada before, because the imperial statute of 1871 provides that a constitution once granted to a province can never afterwards be changed by this parliament.

Mr. BOURASSA. Exactly; the constitution which we granted to Alberta and Saskatchewan bound the Dominion of Canada, as far as this subsidy is concerned, only for such at time as the population of Saskatchewan and Alberta did not reach the figure of 800,000 people; whilst now the Minister of Justice is asking the parliament of Great Britain to bind us for all time to come and to provide for that exceptional favour for Alberta and Saskatchewan for all time. That is exactly the point I want to lay before the House, and I thank the Minister of Justice for giving me his authority in support of it.

But there is more than that. In this resolution it is stated that:

> D. Nothing herein contained shall in any way supersede or affect the terms special to any particular province upon which such province became part of the Dominion of Canada or the right of any province to payment of any special grant heretofore made by the parliament of Canada to any province for any special purpose in such grant expressed.

I am not a lawyer, but if I read this disposition of the resolution concurrently with section 118 of the British North America Act, that is the section as proposed to be amended by this resolution, what will be the result, at least according to the ordinary common sense reading of these documents? It will be that the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan will be entitled to the subsidy based upon section 118 as amended by this resolution, with the proposed increase every fifth year, and besides that they will remain entitled to the subsidy which is provided for them by section 18 of the Saskatchewan Act and of the Alberta Act, so that not only will you create an exceptional favour for the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, but you are giving them a double subsidy, one based upon the population of these provinces, as ascertained through your quinquennial censuses, and the other provided by section D, by which you are maintaining the subsidy accorded to them by the statutes of 1905. It may be that my interpretation of the context is not correct, but I do not think it is proper for the government of Canada to come in the dying days of the session and ask an expression of the will of parliament, ask for the adoption of a petition to go before the parliament of Great Britain for sanction and embodiment in the Imperial statute, without having first made perfectly clear that we are not giving such exceptional favours to those provinces without recognizing the rights of other provinces. The Postmaster General may talk about provincialism, may talk about appealing to the sentiments of one province or another—I am not raising my protest against this resolution upon the feelings of one province or another, I am raising it upon the principles of justice and equity which should remain as the basic principles of our constitution. If you betray the good faith of parliament, if you betray the good faith of the people of Canada and you afterwards get the sanction of the imperial parliament to embody a disposition, the operation of which you do not yourself now conceive, you are doing more to bring about a bad result, more to develop feelings of animosity betwen the various provinces of Canada, than we are doing by entering our protest. We are now entering our protest, not because you are creating any position unfavourable to the province of Quebec; we are entering our protest because in a hasty way, without having considered the principle and the bearing of your action, you are asking the parliament of Great Britain to sanction a disposition which, when fully understood by the whole people of Canda, will do more to bring about bad feeling between the various provinces than any racial campaign could do. It has been well stated by one of the most prophetic statesmen of Great Britain that whenever you touch the question of money you touch one of the basic principles of the development of the British constitution. Edmund Burke once stated that questions of money have done more to bring about changes in the constitution of Great Britain and in the revolutions which have agitated the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, than any questions of theory or of ethics, because the right to control the public money as well as to see that public money is properly appropriated and equitably distributed between the various individuals and the various constituent parts of the British people, is one of the basic principles for which the British people have fought throughout their history. There is something more. You are now asking the British parliament to declare, in so many words, that we must have a quinquennial census in this country. What is the provision of our Act relating to census ? You have section 11 which says there must be a census every tenth year from 1911 for the whole of Canada, and you have section 12 providing for a special census for the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta every ten years from 1916. There is no question of a quinquennial census at all. There is a general decennial census for the whole of Canada and an exceptional decennial census for the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan. But now you are asking the imperial parliament to declare that there must be a quinquennial census for the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the quinquennial census, under the statute, is only to be taken every ten years ?

Mr. BOURASSA. There is no quinquennial census but two decennial censuses.

Mr. HAGGART. How do you interpret the clause ?

Mr. BOURASSA. At present it comes to the same thing from a practical point of view. Does the hon. gentleman not see the difference between two independent censuses, one being a decennial census every ten years from 1911 for the whole of Canada, and the other a decennial census every ten years from 1916 for three provinces only ? They are two independent clauses which may be amended; but by this proposition you are providing by an Imperial Act for a quinquennial census for the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, and you are taking from the parliament of Canada the right to declare at some future period that these provinces shall be put on the same basis with regard to the censuses as the other provinces. Your are providing for a quinquennial census for each of those provinces.

Mr. BERGERON. For ever.

Mr. BOURASSA. Yes, for ever. Surely that is a question which we may discuss without being accused of racial demagogy. Surely the results involved are sufficiently considerable to call for calm and judicial consideration on the part of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) and the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux). Surely we have the right, not only as the representatives of one province—and whether it be English or French what does that matter ?—to ask that this change should be looked into carefully before we adopt it, especially before it is made a part of our constitution by the imperial parliament in such a way that we shall be deprived for all time to come, from amending it except by passing through the same stages as we are now asked to pass through. I would ask my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) to bear in mind one of the most important truisms in the political history of the world. I would ask him to remember that while it may be easy to get the parliament or the people to consent to a change in its constitution, it is very difficult once that change is made, to reverse it. I know that in the history of Great Britain and Canada, at first sight, without going by the book as my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) is wont to say, this book which he opens whenever he has to make a speech—without going through all the books, which my hon. friend like myself has read, but which he has read with his superior ability as a lawyer and greater experience of the varied political questions and principles, I would ask him if it is not one of the great lessons to be drawn from the history of parliamentary institutions in the British possessions that once you have granted special favours to a large part of any community, even if afterwards you find out that in so doing you committed an injustice and were unfair to the rest of the people, and perhaps the majority of the people, you cannot retrace your steps and remedy that injustice because, owing to the varying causes which influence public opinion and have weight with governments, it is almost impossible to withdraw from one province any special favour, once you have granted it. It is before you have satisfied the appetite, before you have granted special favours, that it is important you should weigh carefully and consider thoroughly the importance of your act. I do not say this in disparagement of the legitimate requirements of the new provinces of Canada. As any other Canadian, I am interested in the development of the western provinces, but it is not in the best interest of those provinces or of the Canadian people at large to lay the roots of disagreement and a sense of injustice in the minds and hearts of the other parts of the Dominion. The Dominion as a whole, like the British empire, is based upon compromise and adjustment among conflicting rights and claims. No doubt my hon. friends from the new provinces are convinced that they are entitled to this special favour ; but after all they must understand that the parliament of Canada cannot be animated only by the feeling of pleasing these provinces this year and the next but rather by the feeling of dealing equitably and justly with all the provinces.

It does not seem to me that these new provinces have met ill-treatment at our hands. When we passed the Alberta and Saskatchewan statutes we provided that they should be given $50,000 annually for the support of their respective governments and legislatures; and we provided also for an annual grant, to no defined purpose, based on the population. I do not wish to impute motives, I do not wish to say that there was a deep and sinister motive in the framing of this article; but is not that disposition really strange, when it is remembered that the other provinces under section 118 of the British North America Act, were given, for the one purpose, both a fixed sum and an annual subsidy. That double grant is now to be abolished, and an annual subsidy given in its stead? Both those amounts were, in so many words, in that section 118, devoted to the support of the provincial governments and legislatures in the older provinces; while in the case of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, they were kept entirely separate. The $50,000 was devoted to the support of their respective governments and legislatures, but the annaul subsidy given as a free grant from the parliament of Canada. So that interpreting the resolutions now introduced with the application of section (D), this annual subsidy, instead of being repealed and replaced by a new subsidy, will remain as one of the special terms under which those provinces entered confederation and they will be further entitled to the same subsidy as the other provinces. Those are points which require a little consideration and discussion by the legal minds of this House before they are passed upon as the expression of the free and intelligent will of the legislators and people of Canada. How many members of this House knew, before this legislation was introduced, that it provided for a double subsidy to the western provinces? It may be that some of our friends from Alberta and Saskatchewan will say, 'So much the better for us.' But I repeat, and I insist, that it will be a bad thing for those two provinces if the idea obtains among the rest of the people of Canada that they have taken advantage of some discrepancies in the text of the resolution to get the better of the rest of the people. Not being animated by any hostile feeling, I would strongly advise the Postmaster General to be assured of that fact,—animated as I am by a desire that harmony, justice and equity should prevail among the various races and provinces of this country, I would urge this government to pause and to study the consequences of this legislation forced upon us in the dying days of the session. What harm will be done by waiting until next year?

You have, moreover, the case of British Columbia. It may be that $100,000 is sufficient for British Columbia, it may be that it is not enough, it may be that it is too much. It may be said: But the members of the different provinces have agreed to this. I have not before me the result of the conferences, but I do not remember that the Premier of British Columbia has accepted the sum of $100,000 for ten years as a full and equitable settlement of the claim of his province. But even though the Prime Ministers have agreed to that, are we going to abdicate our rights and duties as the sovereign parliament of this country, having been charged by the imperial authorities with the responsibility of doing justice throughout the length and breadth of the land, and that, because the various provincial premiers have closeted themselves together and have dictated their terms?

Sir, I want the various provinces to get what they are entitled to. As was stated by my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne), long before the Prime Minister of Canada, long before the Postmaster General, ever touched that question, I raised it myself in the city of Montreal and in the city of Quebec. I stated then most positively that if it were desired to meet the wishes and views of the fathers of confederation, we should put the provincial legislatures and governments upon a footing where they would be able to live, instead of giving them merely famine subsidies. We should not keep them on such a basis that they will be unable to perform their constitutional functions, or fulfil their duties to the people of their respective provinces. It has been said time and again: The people of the provinces are the same ratepayers as the people of the Dominion. True, Sir, but by our constitution, and this is a basic principle of any federal constitution, while the aggregate population of all the provinces constitute the aggregate population of the Dominion, it is also true that the corporate aggregation of the people of a province constitute a constitutional person so to speak, and that constitutional person must have all that he requires to live and carry on his business. But I repeat, although I am in favour of an increased subsidy and advocated it in the province of Quebec when the Prime Minister was opposed to it and refused the request of the Premier of Quebec, I remain where I was upon this question as well as upon some other questions. I say that although I am in favour of an increased subsidy, although I would have preferred to see it given in another form, although I would have preferred, instead of giving a fixed sum to each province, to see the federal government help the provinces in a different way, as for example, in the construction of railways and highways for colonization, in helping the fishing interest of the east and the mining interest of the west; although instead of giving them lump sums which the provincial governments will spend without having earned them, I would have preferred a reasonable subsidy based upon the principles of our constitution, such for instance, as assuming the expenditure for the administration of criminal law, the expenditure for the maintenance of jails, lunatic asylums and so forth; although I would have preferred to see a more logical and more equitable distribution of the expenditures between the federal and provincial governments, at the same time I have to acknowledge that public opinion is not prepared for that yet, and therefore we must adopt the next best means and accept the policy of increased subsidies. But I repeat, we must go upon lines of reason, upon lines of equity. When we are asked to grant a special favour, as is mentioned in sections C and D of this resolution, when it is a question of giving a special favour to British Columbia, we must inform ourselves as to the needs and requirements of British Columbia, as to her equitable rights, we must ask if she is entitled to that sum. If she is entitled to it, I am ready to grant it; if she is entitled to more than that I am ready to grant it. But I say that we should be informed before deciding in an arbitrary way that the province of British Columbia shall receive $1,000,000, without knowing if that is sufficient, without knowing whether it is too much, or whether it is equitable. With regard to Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, I repeat that I am ready to give them all that they are entitled to, but I am not ready to vote for a measure the result of which may be to give to two at least of those provinces twice as much as the parliament of Canada intended to give them, and twice as much as the premiers of the other provinces intended to give them when they passed these resolutions.

Now on the one hand we are asked to ratify the grant that the provincial premiers have asked for; on the other hand, when it is pointed out that although we may be adding to the subsidy which the premiers decided upon, we cannot wait, we have no time to ascertain the will and views of those premiers. You must either grant what they have asked for, or, if you wish to exercise your own judgment, you must exercise it completely after informing yourself as to what the legal consequences of this resolution will be, and its financial results. Now in closing I wish to submit to your judgment, Mr. Speaker, a question that seems to have been entirely forgotten. Of course it may be said that I should have raised it at first, but as I was not quite sure what the decision would be, I thought it better first to present my views. Here is an address which, if voted, will have the result of increasing the indebtedness of the people of Canada, and will also have the result of increasing the annual sums to be raised from the taxation of the people of Canada. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if the assent of His Excellency was obtained before he introduced this resolution?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, obtained in the customary way.

Mr. BOURASSA. I would also like to point out that this resolution cannot pass the House until it has been considered in Committee of the Whole. It was ruled some years ago, and has not been controverted since, that resolutions affecting the indebtedness or taxation of the people of Canada must be considered in Committee of the Whole before they pass the House. Here is the decision of Mr. Speaker Cockburn on this point. On a similar motion, but different from this one in that it did not call for any appropriation of money, the Speaker has first decided that section 54 of the British North America Act applied, but later on he corrected his decision and stated this :

> I observe that it is entered on the journal of the 9th March, that upon objection taken by the hon. member for Bothwell, the motion of the hon. member for Quebec county, was declared out of order, for the reason there alleged. I desire to correct that entry. The motion was out of order, in my opinion, not because it proposed an appropriation of public money, within the meaning of the 54th section of the British North America Act, and should have been preceded by message, but because it involved an increase of the public debt, and should, therefore, have been first considered in Committee of the Whole.

To show that the motion was similar to this in that respect I will read it. It was moved by Mr. Dorion, seconded by Mr. Fournier :

> That an humble address be presented to Her Majesty, representing that an equitable and satisfactory division of the surplus debt of the late province of Canada, between the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, is not likely to be effected in the manner provided by the British North America Act, 1867, and that the difficulties which beset the question have been greatly aggravated by the award rendered by the arbitrators appointed by the Dominion government and by the government of Ontario, in the absence of any arbitrator for the province of Quebec, which is regarded by the government and the people of Quebec as illegal and unjust, and praying that Her Majesty be pleased to recommend the passing of an Act by the imperial parliament, so amending the British North America Act as to authorize the parliament of Canada to deal by legislative enactment with all questions connected with the said surplus debt.

Thereupon an objection was raised and the Speaker ruled the motion out of order because of section 54 of the British North America Act, and later on, as I have read, he declared that it was not that section which applied but the rule which required the resolution to be carried through the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. FIELDING. I may say to my hon. friend that I entirely agree with his contention on this point. I stated to the clerk that the motion must be expressed in that way. It has not been done, but if the hon. gentleman gives his assent to it at once we will go into committee on the resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER. The point is quite clear under rule 77 :

If any motion be made in the House for any public aid or charge upon the people, the consideration and debate thereof may not be presently entered upon, but shall be adjourned till such further day as the House thinks fit to appoint; and then it shall be referred to a Committee of the Whole House before any resolution or vote of the House do pass thereupon.

Mr. FIELDING. If the House will permit, the motion can be made now, the House will go into committee and we will still go on with the discussion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did we not get it through before without first going into committee on it ? I was not present at the time.

Mr. FIELDING. There is a question whether the procedure was quite correct.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There does not seem to have been anything correct about the whole resolution.

Mr. BOURASSA. I was discussing the point of order in my argument. May I ask if His Excellency's consent was obtained when the first resolution was introduced ?

Mr. FIELDING. It was not formally conveyed to the House.

Mr. BOURASSA. I want to have all that information in order to show the House and the country how this question has been brought before the parliament and people of Canada. We see that the government have forgotten the most elementary rule of parliamentary procedure in carrying out this proposal, and that they have not considered the important constitutional problems which are raised by these resolutions as well as the financial results of them. When we see that they have not considered the most elementary forms connected with the resolution, what guarantee have we that they know what the results will be of the conflict between section 18 of the Saskatchewan and Alberta Acts and section 118 of the British North America Act as they propose to amend it ? What assurance have we that they have considered the results that will accrue from the fact that they are asking the British parliament to declare that we must have a quinquennial census in the west whilst the rest of the Act does not provide for it ? By this amendment you are simply changing the Census Act and you are practically bringing about changes in some of our most important and basic constitutional laws. I repeat that this resolution has been thought over, that this resolution has been introduced only with regard to the various political results it will have, that the government have not thought of their constitutional duty, they have not thought of the duty they owe to Canada, they have not thought even of what they owe to the various provinces because they have laid down in this resolution, the basis and germ of more trouble between the various provinces than has been created by any of those campaigns which the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) is pleased to call racial campaigns, but which I will carry on as long as I have a voice in this parliament and as long as I have an audience in the Dominion of Canada, whether in Toronto, Quebec or elsewhere, that will listen to me.

Mr. SPROULE. In the event of this going through what guarantee has the minister that British Columbia will consent to it because British Columbia is not a consenting party ?

Mr. FIELDING. We have none.

Mr. SPROULE. Then does he think it is right that we should, without the consent of one of the important provinces of confederation, go on and pass a constitution which binds it for all time to come ?

Mr. FIELDING. That is a question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to what the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) has observed in regard to a question by one of the members from Prince Edward Island. I cannot think that the insertion of clause D in these resolutions was for the purpose of avoiding silly questions, because I observe that the hon. gentleman treats it quite seriously in a letter which has been published in the press and which has been attributed to him bearing date the 30th March, 1907. The letter is addressed to Hon. Lomer Gouin, premier of the province of Quebec, and is as follows:

Dear Sir,—I have your letter of yesterday with reference to the position of Prince Edward Island in regard to the amount of the Dominion subsidy in the event of its population further decreasing.

I had assumed that it could not have been the intention of the Interprovincial Conference, at the meeting last October, to take away from Prince Edward Island or from any other province, any special terms which had been conceded to such province on its entering confederation and in this view had drawn an additional paragraph to the address which it is proposed to present to the King on the subject. This address was passed by the Commons here on Monday last, and sent to the Senate.

My hon. friend the Minister of Justice does not there speak of it as a paragraph introduced for the purpose of avoiding silly questions, but he deals with it seriously and he declares that having gathered that as the intention of the conference he has prepared an additional paragraph for the purpose of carrying out that intention. He was only doing in that way what had been done by a previous resolution which is to be found at page 5464 of the unrevised 'Hansard,' being a resolution which was passed in 1902 at some meeting of the provincial premiers. By section C of the resolutions passed at that conference special provision was made, as it is made in the resolutions submitted to the House, for the purpose of safeguarding the rights of British Columbia, Manitoba and Prince Edward Island. I observe also that during this session, in response to a question by the hon. member for Prince, P.E.I., the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) declared that :

> The question of my hon. friend——

That is the question with which paragraph D is concerned——

> —is engaging the attention of the Minister of Justice and my hon. friend will have an answer when the address to His Majesty, of which notice has been given, is brought up for discussion in the House.

Under the circumstances I do not think that the answer of the Minister of Justice to the member for Prince was a very courteous answer. The question was one that was fairly put and should have received a fair answer.

So far as the terms accorded to the province of British Columbia are concerned, there is a great deal in what my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has said. Either this matter is being dealt with by this House, not upon its own responsibility alone, but upon the responsibility of the resolutions of the provincial premiers, or, we are dealing with this matter as a matter which is confided to us by the terms of the constitution and which we may pass whether we have the sanction of a resolution of the provincial premiers or not. The Prime Minister seems to have taken the position at the conference of the provincial premiers, that whatever they were prepared to agree to he would be prepared to carry out by a resolution in this House and by an address to His Majesty for imperial legislation. If that be the position which the right hon. gentleman takes, I would point out that the attitude of the government is not a very safe one, in so far as they are relying upon a resolution passed at a gathering of provincial premiers. One province of this Dominion has not concurred ; the premier of that province withdrew from the conference because he did not think the conclusions arrived at was fair to his province. He had asked that special terms be conceded to his province—and it was admitted that some special terms (in the absencee of an agreement between himself and the other provincial premiers or between himself and the premier of this Dominion) should be submitted to a tribunal of impartial persons and he states he would be prepared to abide by the award and judgment of these persons. The conference did not comply with his view, and the result was that the other provinces of the Dominion practically settled the special terms which should be awarded to the province of British Columbia, and they did that in the absence of the Prime Minister of that province. It does not seem to me to be a very safe principle to base legislation in this House solely upon a resolution of that kind. If you hold that you may ask this House to adopt additional subsidies to some of the provinces, which are not acceptable to other provinces, what result will you have in the end. You will have this result: That the resolution of a bare majority of the provinces will in the future be regarded as a safe test upon which this House shall act in asking for an amendment to the constitution. The time may come when the present great provinces of the west, with perhaps other provinces to be constituted hereafter in the west, may seek to impose upon the eastern provinces some amendments to the British North America Act which may not be regarded as in the interest of the eastern provinces. If you are to base imperial legislation upon the action of eight provinces out of nine, then why should you not base imperial legislation upon the action of five provinces out of nine ? May it not be that at some future time three or four provinces of Canada, whether in the east or in the west, will have this precedent raised up against them as one which has been acted upon by the parliament of this country and one which it is safe to follow. I do not believe that the precedent which the government proposes to establish now is a safe one. I was not present in the House when this subject was discussed on a former occasion. It comes before us again after having been once debated and considered. I do not desire to go into the merits of the question, but I do say that the proposals of the government seem to have been characterized by a most extraordinary series of accidents; I do not wish to use a harsher word. In the first place, I do not know whether any assent of the Crown was expressed when the proposal was first submitted to the House.

Mr. FIELDING. It was not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Thus, in the first instance, you neglected one of the safeguards which is expressly imposed by the British North America Act. In the next place, it was passed through the House without being referred to Committee of the Whole or considered in Committee of the Whole, and finally it went through in such a form as not to carry out, according to the judgment of the government, the very proposals to which they had assented at that conference. And so we have been obliged to send to the Senate and solemnly ask them to return this address to us in order that we may do properly now what we did not do properly in the first place. And after it does come back to us, we propose once more to repeat the mistake, and but for the intervention of my hon. friend from Labelle, to put this motion through the House without that safeguard of the constitution which requires us to go into Committee of the Whole upon measures involving financial aid. I think there is a very good reason to attach some importance to the remark of my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) when he says that if these matters of form which are before our eyes in the constitution have not been observed, we may be fairly justified in presuming that the merits of this measure have not been very fully considered by the government.

Let us look at the amended motion for a moment. Section A provides for an amount to be paid by Canada to the several provinces for the support of their government and legislatures according to population. There is not one word in that as there is in British North America Act as to how the population is to be ascertained. There is not one word in that section as there is in section B to show how that population is to be ascertained. The Minister of Finance says that without any express provision it must be ascertained, as a matter of course, from the census. I do not know how that can be argued. If this provision, the absence of which I have remarked upon, was necessary in section 118 of the British North America Act and in paragraph B of this resolution, why is it not necessary in paragraph A of the resolution? That is the question which the Minister of Finance has not answered to my satisfaction. The same reasons which made that provision necessary in section 118 of the British North America Act; the same necessity which has caused its insertion in paragraph B of this address, should have caused its insertion in paragraph A. Without it I do not know on what basis you are to estimate the population as set forth in paragraph A. Then there is a curious phrasing in section B of the address about which I have a good deal of doubt:

> B. Instead of an annual grant per head of population now allowed, the annual payment hereafter to be at the same rate of eighty cents per head, but on the population of each province, as ascertained from time to time by the last decennial census; (or, in the case of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, respectively, by the last quinquennial census or statutory estimate), until such population exceeds 2,500,000, and at the rate of sixty cents per head for so much of said population as may exceed 2,500,000.

My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has called my attention to the very curious phrasing of that paragraph. Apparently the meaning to be derived from it is that whereas the other six provinces of Canada are to have their population ascertained by the last decennial census, in the case of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the estimate is to be made upon the last quinquennial and not upon the last decennial census. So that in the case of six of the provinces you are to estimate always upon the decennial census, and in the case of the other provinces you are to estimate always upon the quinquennial census. So that, after all, we do not very greatly alter the position of these three provinces. If the construction I am now pointing out be the correct one, I would have thought the proper phrasing would have been, 'and in the case of the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba respectively, by the last decennial census, or by the last quinquennial census or statutory estimate as the case may be.' That would have made it perfectly plain, but that is not what the resolution says. It seems to provide that, as far as six of the provinces are concerned, you are to proceed always by the result of the last decennial census, and, so far as the other three provinces are concerned, you are to proceed always by the result of the last quinquennial census. The provisions of the Census Act with regard to that, section 12 of chapter 68 of the revised statutes of 1906, are as follows:

> A census of the population and agriculture of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta shall be taken by the office, under the direction of the minister, according to special forms and instructions to be approved by the minister, on a date in the month of June, in the year one thousand nine hundred and sixteen, to be fixed by the Governor in Council, and every tenth year thereafter.

Then section 14 says:

> Each general census, commencing with the year one thousand nine hundred and eleven, shall be so taken as to ascertain with the utmost possible accuracy, for the various territorial dominions of Canada——

——certain data which I need not quote, because they do not concern the point I am discussing. Then, the Alberta Act—and the Saskatchewan is the same in this respect—in section 18 provides:

> A census of the said province shall be taken in every fifth year, reckoning from the general census of one thousand nine hundred and one, and an approximate estimate of the population shall be made at equal intervals of time between each quinquennial and decennial census.

The quinquennial census is taken at intervals of ten years, and the decennial census is taken at intervals of ten years. The expression 'quinquennial census' and the expression 'decennial census' seem to have been taken from the constitutional Acts of Alberta and Saskatchewan to which I have just referred; and, looking at the language of section B in the light of the statutory provisions to which I have called attention, it is open to a good deal of doubt whether you have simply provided in both cases that there shall be an interval of ten years, but that the interval in the case of the six provinces shall be between the decennial censuses and in the case of the other two provinces between the quinquennial censuses. If that be the case, it was hardly worth our while to send to the Senate for the purpose of having this address returned to us. However, when we go into Committee of the Whole House, we shall have an opportunity to discuss that. I thought it my duty to bring it now to the attention of the government, so that some amendment might be made if the government are inclined to attach any importance to what I have suggested. I suppose it would be necessary again to refer to the Governor General to get his assent to the amended resolution if any amendment were proposed.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not wish to repeat what I said before, because after the speech of the hon. member for Labelle and after what has fallen from the hon. leader of the opposition, there is very little to say either as to the form or the principle of the measure. I am opposed to it on principle. In the first place, I believe it is very unsafe to do anything in the way of changing the constitution of this country. Secondly, I do not believe it was in the mind of the fathers of confederation that there would be any change in regard to the local legislatures. As has been said by the hon. leader of the opposition, we are giving a great deal more money to the local legislatures than was intended by those who framed the constitution of Canada, who knew what they were doing. They were great men. I do not suppose I am insulting any member of this House when I say that those men were probably higher minded men than we are to-day. In reading the debates of confederation one cannot fail to be convinced that they were broad in every sense of the word—men who were strongly opposed to each other on certain questions, but who came together and framed the basis of what I believe is to be a great country. The idea of the fathers of confederation was that the local legislatures would be carried on in an economical way, and that if they required to increase their revenues they would have recourse to direct taxation. But politics in these provinces has taken another course. The Liberal party in the province of Quebec has made direct taxation such a bugbear that they have got the people to believe that they can carry on their affairs without paying for them. That is why the conference of provincial premiers was held at Quebec in 1887. The present leader of this House was present at that conference, with the other provincial premiers. I do not know that they were very anxious to obtain what they were asking for. I know that Quebec was; but Ontario did not seem to be very anxious. That was twenty years ago. The leader of this House has been here for eleven years, holding the purse strings of this Dominion, and he has never shown any anxiety to frame this law or to accede to the resolutions of the conference of 1887. But something happened last summer in the province of Quebec. The present government of Quebec came into power because it talked against taxation, and by trying to induce the people to believe that the Liberals would rule the province without making them pay the expense. They found that they could not do that. and rather than resort to the honest method of taxation, which was done by their predecessors, they have been imposing some indirect taxes and have been able to carry on the affairs of the province only by selling its assets. Then seeing the end of all this, the premier of Quebec came here and took the Prime Minister of Canada by the throat and said: Without the support of the Liberals of Quebec you cannot carry on the affairs of the Dominion or maintain your government for twenty-four hours, and unless you accede to our demand, we will not stand by you any more. The government here acceded to that demand, although they did it reluctantly. That is why this measure has been brought before this House, in such a blundering way. As the leader of the opposition said, when it came first, it was entirely illegal. It ignored the British North America Act; the Governor General was completely ignored; it did not pass before the Committee of the House of Commons where it should have come.

It was sent to the Senate and it was only returned to this House by a vote in the Senate, the Speaker declaring that he had created a precedent by sending it to this House. Even when it came back to this House the leader had to acknowledge he did not know. Whether it was really brought before this House yesterday or not, is a point worthy of consideration. If, yesterday, the question was really brought before the House as Mr. Speaker has declared in rendering his decision this morning that yesterday the House agreed to it unanimously, I say it was out of order because the leader of the House (Mr. Fielding) did not say that he had the assent of His Excellency the Governor General in bringing this question before parliament. It was only this morning that my hon. friend declared before the House that he had obtained the consent of His Excellency. Thus if this question was accepted unanimously by the House yesterday that does not amount to anything since the question was then before the House in an irregular manner. What do we find in this resolution? We find that we are going to give large sums of money to the local governments. As has been remarked here, clause (D) provides that we shall give them all the moneys which are mentioned in this resolution above all that they receive to-day.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I do not think that is correct.

Mr. BERGERON. The local legislatures which we created only two years ago will have very large amounts of money.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. We are not giving all the money mentioned here over and above what they are receiving to-day.

Mr. BERGERON. Certainly if my hon. friend reads clause D he will find it says:

D. Nothing herein contained shall in any way supersede or affect the terms special to any particular province upon which such province became part of the Dominion of Canada or the right of any province to payment of any special grant heretofore made by the parliament of Canada to any province for any special purpose in such grant expressed.

We are giving that above everything they receive to-day. That is why the Prime Minister of Quebec declared in the legislature last session that they were going to have a revenue of $140,000 more than usual. That is to say the province of Quebec to-day receives, under clause 118 of the British North America Act, $70,000. It declares here that the province of Quebec, if its population is over 1,500,000 will have $240,000; it will have $240,000 besides the $70,000 it now receives. It shows that this has been done in a hurry, that the resolutions have been prepared without care. We have the proof of it already, but there is more than that. Why should we load all the local governments with so much money? Why make the local politicians believe that they are to look to Ottawa for funds to carry on the affairs of their respective provinces? Why should we make little lords of them? They are to-day increasing their indemnities right along. If you read the debates on confederation you will find it is entirely against the spirit of the fathers of confederation that the local legislatures should be anything else but large municipal councils, yet to-day they are parliaments; they call themselves parliaments, they have all the regal appliances we have here in Ottawa whether we have them here properly or not, they are becoming very costly and the people are asking themselves what will be the end of it.

Mr. CONMEE. My hon. friend must not lose sight of provincial rights.

Mr. BERGERON. No, I am going to promenade on the Pigeon river very soon.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Clause A provides:

Instead of the amounts now paid, the sums hereafter payable yearly by Canada to the several provinces for the support of their governments and legislatures, to be according to population, and as follows:

Mr. BERGERON. I mean to say it shows the blundering way in which these resolutions were prepared. There is no doubt that there is a conflict between clause A and clause D.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN. The other is for a special purpose.

Mr. BERGERON. It is not at all clear. The province, particularly Quebec, will find means of showing that clause D is in their favour. I was saying a moment ago when interrupted that we are giving too much money to the provinces and making them forget how and why they exist as local legislatures. Sir, it is not good for these legislatures to have too much money. They ill-use that money. What do we see in Quebec? We have had a government composed of six or seven men. Why, four men could carry on the affairs of the province very well; there are always one or two travelling in Europe at the expense of the province.

Mr. HENDERSON. The same here.

Mr. BERGERON. Oh, yes, but this government is not in question here at all. The more money these governments have the more they spend and if you make them believe that they can come here and by threats obtain from the government whatever they want there will be no end to these demands.

Let me place on 'Hansard' for the information and edification of this House, something which occurred in connection with the last session of the local legislature of Quebec. I am very sorry to have to do so but it is a duty we must perform before granting over $3,000,000 of the money of the people of this country, because after all whether you give that to the local legislatures or any one else, you are taking the money from the pockets of the taxpayers of this country. We here know where the money which we spend goes. We are here, the representatives of the people to ask questions and to criticise expenditures, but when you give it to a legislature over which you have no control you must consider seriously before taking such a step. I may be told that the local legislatures are elected by the people of the country and can be changed at any time the people wish. I know that, but I also know that in 1897 there was a local election in the province of Quebec, shortly after the Dominion elections, and the people of that province voted as they had done for the federal legislature; and in 1900, after the dissolution of this House, when the local legislature had still a year and a half to go on, they dissolved three weeks after the Dominion general election and again they carried the province on the same lines as the Dominion election had been won on three weeks before. The very same thing happened in 1904, they had the same thing in view.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN. Does the hon. gentleman complain that the provinces are getting too much money under these terms ?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, I said that long ago.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN. Is it not a fact that the Conservative Premier of British Columbia has gone to England to complain that he is not receiving enough ?

Mr. BERGERON. And why not? He is a very intelligent man but he sees that others are getting a grab and he wants more than the others. You cannot stop that, that is what I am complaining of.

An accusation against the local legislature of Quebec was published in a Montreal newspaper. It was there stated that there were grafters in that House, that there were men there who sold their votes, that there were men there for sale. That article is signed and the man who wrote it and signed it dared the local government of Quebec to call him to the bar of the House, saying that if he were called he would name the men who sold themselves and would make his case as clear as possible. He was never brought before the House and now let us see what he wrote. I quote from 'Le Nationaliste.' The article is signed by Mr. Asselin, a man who calls a spade a spade. The article is as follows :

Prayer to Mr. Gouin.

The lobbies of the House are becoming a sort of market where the votes are considered, estimated—and paid for. Some members are more bold-faced than others; they speak for themselves and give out their own price. Others, more timid, ask the money for some colleagues whom they wish to set in good humour, but quite willing to keep it for themselves if circumstances permit. There are, thank God, a pretty large proportion of the members who do not deal in that kind of broker's trade, but unfortunately, unless a serious inquiry is held and exemplary punishment is meted out to offenders, the honest members will become more and more precious because they would be rare indeed.

Men who have sold their influence under Mr. Parent are still of the House, and it would be a matter of surprise if they had changed their habits in changing chief. If 'L'Avenir du Nord' is so fond of the honour of the House, if it is truly convicted that we are slandering our law-makers, it will strenuously second the request that we address to Mr. Gouin and his colleagues, to kindly call us to the bar of the House.

'LE NATIONALISTE.'

That was not acted upon and when a Conservative member in the House asked the Premier of Quebec whether he was going to take any action upon this the Premier did not answer, he did not dare to, he was afraid to do it. He was afraid to do it, and it is common talk in the province of Quebec that you can carry any measure you want in the local legislature. I object to our giving any more money to these people. They have one of the richest provinces in the Dominion and ought to be able to administer their own affairs without coming to us for more money. We will be simply giving them greater means and facilities to carry on in a larger degree such schemes as they have carried in the past. Where are these Quebec ministers to-day ? There are always some of them promenading all over the world at their country's expense. We are encouraging the commission of political crimes by this proposed action and that is the reason why I for one am opposed to this measure.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN (Wright). I do not think that I could allow the remarkable speech made by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) to go without entering my protest. That hon. gentleman started out by saying he was opposed to these grants on principle. He was opposed to the provinces getting increased subsidies, and then he wound up his remarks, which were not based upon any argument legal or otherwise, by an onslaught on the administration of the province of Quebec and the members of the Quebec legislature as well as the representatives from that province in this House. It is very depressing indeed that we should have to go to the province of Quebec to find gentlemen who are ready to slander the representatives of that province. I am not here to raise any racial question. That would be the last thing I would desire to do, and I regret the more deeply that the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) should have seen fit to approach the discussion of this question in the spirit he did. We are here not as members representing any particular province but as members representing the Dominion as a whole; and in the consideration of all questions affecting this Dominion, we should rise above that provincial spirit and act solely in the interests of the Dominion as a whole, of which the different provinces form part. It is to be regretted that some of the provinces should get a little more by this distribution than any other province; but in the building up of a nation, in the welding of the different provinces together as a united Dominion, we should bury our own little provincial differences and be ready to make some sacrifices for the development of this great nation. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) spoke of mal-administration in the province of Quebec. We have perhaps the richest province in the Dominion, one certainly which has the most glorious history, and to-day we have the best administration there we ever enjoyed. Never before in the history of that province has the Conservative party been so poorly represented in that legislature as at present. The people, weary of the mal-administration of that party, swept it out of office and deemed it unworthy of representation in the legislature. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) complains of members of the Quebec legislature going on trips abroad, business trips. Does he not remember that when the Conservatives were in power, their ministers went abroad to contract loans which were useless and extravagant, on which they paid exorbitant rates of interest, and which the people condemned in the most emphatic manner? I think that the hon. gentleman would have done better had he remained silent. I agree with the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) that if the province of Quebec should get more in the way of subsidy, so much the better. I would be glad to see her get a larger subsidy, but I agree with the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) that rather than lose all chance of an increased subsidy, we should support these resolutions, and we should do this in order that the province of Quebec and the other provinces may have their subsidies increased. It is in the interests of the other provinces, that our newly created western provinces should develop as rapidly as possible. It is in the interests of the great St. Lawrence route that these provinces should increase their products and thus increase the trade and commerce which find an outlet by that route. There is not a man in the province of Quebec who is not earnest in his desire to see those western provinces prosper; and if we can help them on either by this money or in any other way, we are prepared to do it. The growth of the western provinces will help the growth of Quebec. We are not afraid of losing our population, we have magnificent farm lands, we have room for immigration and we are getting immigrants, and therefore need not fear the growth of the western provinces. We want all the products of that country to pass down through the ports of the province of Quebec. Therefore it is in the interests of our province to help on this western country in every possible way. I shall support this measure because I believe it to be in the interests of the province from which I come as well as all the provinces of this Dominion. I believe it will lessen the burden of debt on the people of the province of Quebec. I believe it will help us in the administration of justice and in all the departments of local government, and I trust that this House will not hesitate a moment in passing this resolution by a very large majority.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee.

Mr. SPROULE. How are you going to convert an address into a resolution?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend's point is too fine and I do not think he is serious in pressing it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have inserted the word 'resolved': 'Resolved that the following address be presented.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You have done well, but where is your authority?

Mr. SPROULE. No matter what observations I happen to make I seem to be most unfortunate in making them, and I am told that they are not worthy of any consideration.

Mr. FIELDING. I never said that.

Mr. SPROULE. That was the reply I met with when I raised the question that these resolutions could not be worked out in accord with the Saskatchewan and Alberta Acts which provide for a two and a half year census, whereas these resolutions on our part provide for a decennial census. I would like to ask if there is any difference between a resolution of this House and an address to His Majesty, in our parliamentary procedure. If it is a matter of no importance, and if we can change the one to the other at will, then what does our parliamentary procedure mean? Is there any virtue in it? I have always thought it was for the purpose of throwing safeguards around our action.

Mr. FIELDING. Of course what my hon. friend states is the obvious intentions. It appeared in the usual form on the notice, because the word 'resolution' is used. I do not think my hon. friend should raise the point he does. This being a money matter, it is held, that it should be considered in Committee of the Whole. There was a doubt at a former stage as to whether this was strictly speaking a money matter, and to remove the doubt it was thought best to treat it as such.

Mr. SPROULE. When the provincial resolutions were considered with regard to confederation the same question was raised, the decision was that it was a money matter.

Mr. FIELDING. When the Prime Minister brought the resolution on at an earlier stage that appears to have escaped his attention. But nobody raised any objection. The proceeding took that form, but if the point had been raised he would have been obliged to proceed in the present form undoubtedly. It is not a direct appropriation of money. It is an address to His Majesty asking the imperial authority to do certain things. There is a shade of difference between it and the ordinary form of an appropriation. But in this case it is well that we should proceed so that to put it beyond question.

Mr. LENNOX. There is a shade of difference, and it was decided against the contention of the hon. gentleman in 1871. The House of Commons held at that time that inasmuch as we could not possibly repeal it ourselves, as it was an Act necessarily final, there was greater reason for regarding it as a money appropriation ; and also because the imposition upon the country was greater than was occasioned in an ordinary Bill involving taxation.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Since the resolution was yesterday brought before the House illegally, as there was no royal assent, it seems now that we can raise again the point that this resolution is out of order involving an increase of taxation. This morning the Speaker did not give his decision that this address could not be discussed again to-day, because the point of order was not raised yesterday. But as the resolution was illegally before the House yesterday, I claim the point of order can be raised now, and that having been discussed already by parliament, it cannot be discussed again.

Mr. FIELDING. It is not correct to say that the resolution was illegally before the House. The consent of His Excellency is not obtained when the motion is first put upon the order paper, it is obtained when we proceed to take action in the House of Commons.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This is not the time to raise a point of order. This resolution has been referred to the commiittee and we have to deal with it. The question of procedure should have been raised when the Speaker was in the chair.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I thought the point of order could be raised at any time.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. My decision is that as this resolution has been referred to us by the House, we have to consider it as it is.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Then I shall have to consider it as it is. I feel rather nervous in trying to do so, because I may be accused of raising racial prejudices if I speak of this resolution, although it is a question of figures from first to last. Whenever an independent opinion is expressed in this House it appears to be considered as an appeal to racial prejudice. This resolution is to take the place of the British North America Act, section 118. Now I understand that the first part of section 118 provides that the following sum should be paid yearly by Canada to the several provinces for the support of their governments and legislatures, namely : Ontario, $80,000; Quebec, $70,000; Nova Scotia, $60,000 ; New Brunswick, $50,000, or a total of $260,000. That is to be replaced by section A of this resolution, and section 18 of the Alberta and Saskatchewan Act. I would ask the Minister of Justice if I am right in supposing that the first part of section 118 is to be replaced by section A of the present resolution. Of course the Minister of Justice won't answer me, because I do not think he understands it himself. I have asked a fair question and cannot get any answer, so I will endeavour to put him right. I succeeded last year, on the Sunday Bill, in putting him right, and I can succeed again. Last year my amendment on the Sunday Bill, although defeated in this House, was accepted by the Senate and accepted by the Minister of Justice when it came back to this House.

An hon. MEMBER. Why did you not support it ?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I did support it after it was improved. But if my contention is correct that the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan will receive 80 cents per head until they have 800,000 of a population, and that the subsidy can he increased every year under section 18 of the Alberta and Saskatchewan Act, then the subsidy will be increased by 60 cents per head until the population of each province is 2,500,000. Now one thing I can't understand is what section B of this resolution means :

> Nothing herein contained shall in any way supersede or affect the terms special to any particular province upon which such province became part of the Dominion of Canada, or the right of any province to payment of any special grant heretofore made by the parliament of Canada to any province for any special purpose in such grant expressed.

I do not understand what that section means, unless it is that apart from the 80 cents per head, these provinces receive this subsidy of 60 cents per head which is granted by section 18 of the Alberta and Saskatchewan Act ; therefore they will be receiving a double subsidy. I claim this is an injustice to the older provinces. These subsidies will be paid by the older provinces as well as by the new provinces. I claim that every province in the Dominion should be treated in the same manner. My hon. friend the Postmaster General may say that this is a postage stamp policy. If it is the policy of the postage stamp, I have nothing to be ashamed of on account of the policy of the postage stamp, I have that the dual languages should appear on the official records of this country. I claim that the dual races which are sharing this Dominion should appear united upon the records of this parliament and especially on the postage stamps going all over the world so that people of the world will see that French and English Canadians are united and claim their union everywhere. The hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) claims that it should not be so. I do not know what he will claim in the province of Quebec. He will say that I am agitating my little flag. I am agitating my little flag, I admit. In the Spanish circus when they put a little flag before a certain animal he gets wild. I do not want to be disrespectful and I do not want to compare this parliament to a circus which comparison comes to my mind. But, there is this difference between my little flag and the flag of the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux). He has a big flag that floats to the breeze of his breezy speeches. My flag is the little flag that I am agitating in Quebec, in the Dominion parliament and in Ontario. But the big flag of the Postmaster General is one colour in Quebec and another colour in Ontario. This loyal little flag of mine is a Canadian flag, while I do not know what the big flag of my hon. friend is. I do not know whether it is the tri-colour red, blue or white. It is a very French flag in the province of Quebec and a very British flag in the province of Ontario. We have heard the hon. gentleman agitating his big flag in the county of Quebec and telling the people that they should vote for Laurier because he is a French Canadian. To-day in this House he knows how to appeal to racial prejudices because we claim in this parliament what we claim in Quebec and Ontario. We have an opinion which the hon. Postmaster General does not share and that is that the English-speaking maority of this country is broad and just enough to give us what the constitution gives us and what we rightly claim according to that constitution. We have heard my hon. friend, if not my hon. friend especially, we have heard the party press, which supports my hon. friend and in which he writes beautiful articles, state that the English majority was too narrow, too fanatic to give us all the constitution gives us. That is the kind of argument that is used against us in the province of Quebec. I claim that if there are racial appeals made in this House they are not made by my hon. friend from Labelle and they are not made by myself. Therefore, having always been, as I said this morning, in favour of an increase of subsidy, I will go on agitating my little flag for this increase in the endeavour to secure a just and fair sum for every province and I shall continue to maintain that there should be no discrimination. Then, I will leave the Postmaster General to get up and belch fire like a volcano against myself. I do not care; when we read his speeches they are only frozen lava and dead ashes. He can get up and say: I will make racial appeals; I do not care. I always thought that the Postmaster General was a very broad-minded man but I find that his chief characteristic is love for his portfolio.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) to tell us whether clause A in the resolution will be substituted for section 18 of the Saskatchewan Act, clauses A and B which provide as follows:

The following amounts shall be allowed as an annual subsidy to the province of Saskatchewan, and shall be paid by the government of of Canada, by half-yearly instalments in advance, to the said province, that is to say:

(a) For the support of the government and legislature, $50,000.

Now, in the Alberta Act it says:

(a) For the support of the government and legislature, $50,000.

And

(b) On an estimated population of two hundred and fifty thousand at eighty cents per head, $200,000, subject to be increased as hereinafter mentioned, that is to say: a census of the said province shall be taken in every fifth year reckoning from the general census of one thousand nine hundred and one, and an approximate estimate of the population shall be made at equal intervals of time between each quinquennial and decennial census.

That is each two and a half years will have the advantage of it.

—and whenever the population, by any such census or estimate, exceeds two hundred and fifty thousand, which shall be the minimum on which the said allowance shall be calculated, the amount of the said allowance shall be increased accordingy.

In this case would A, B, C, D, E and F be substituted for A and B of section 18 of the Act or would what is set out in these resolutions be in addition to them?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I want to premise, in reference to the question that the hon. gentleman has asked, or any other question which may be at a later stage of the sitting asked of me, that I do not consider my opinion on these matters as of any more value than that of any other member of this House. The language is here speaking for itself. It is not my language; it is the language which has been adopted at the meeting of the provincial premiers and it has been incorporated in this address. I simply have to speak of the matter in the way in which I understand it. I understand that the proposed address in clause A is dealing with the lump sum grants which in the constitution as it now stands do not depend upon population. In the British North America Act there was, by section 118, a certain lump sum grant provided for, irespective of population and at the same time there was an annual grant of eighty cents a head provided for. Now, clause (A) deals with the lump sum grant.

Mr. SPROULE. But it is increased by population.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Now is adopted the principle of a sliding scale depending on population, but until now these grants other than 80 cents a head annually, were simply lump sum grants that did not vary according to population.

Mr. SPROULE. That was to certain provinces, but not to all.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. But any special terms any province had by the bargain under which it entered confederation, it retained from that date to the present time. But the original four federating provinces were given for the support of their government and legislatures an annual grant of a different amount in the case of each one of the four provinces, which amount was independent entirely of the fluctuations of their population.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think my hon. friend the Minister of Justice appreciates what my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) means. Reference is made to the scale of payments authorized under section 118 of the British North America Act. That provided only for four provinces: Prince Edward Island and British Columbia were provided for under orders in council; Manitoba was provided for under the Manitoba Act, Alberta and Saskatchewan are provided for by the respective constitutions of those provinces. But my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) desires to know whether the intention is, as undoubtedly it must be, to substitute this resolution, not only for section 118 of the British North America Act, but for the provision made in the two orders in council and in the three other Acts to which I have alluded. If my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) is right, and it seems to me that he is, it would appear to me that some modification should be made in the opening paragraph of the address. Because, you are making a substitution not only in respect of section 118, but in respect also to the two orders in council and the three Acts to which I have referred.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. If that be the question of the hon. member for East Grey, I suppose the short answer is, yes. The intention of these provisions in clauses A, B, C and D, taken together, is to be a substitute for not merely the lump sum payments, but also the 80 cents per head payment for each and all of the nine provinces. Now, with regard to the wording of the resolution, it would seem to me that the language as framed is perfectly plain. What is the basic authority for these payments, not only in the case of the provinces originally federating, but also in the case of the subsequently admitted provinces? Why, it is the legislation of the imperial parliament, as expressed in section 118 which deals not merely with the four provinces expressly mentioned, but which deals by implication with any new province that was afterwards to be constituted and admitted into the Dominion. It authorizes and requires certain annual payments to be made by the Dominion of Canada as it might be from year to year. That being the authority upon which the Dominion has the right to make these payments, it seems to me that it is proper to base this address upon that authority and to say, that the scale of payments authorized under that section is the one we are asking the imperial parliament to amend.

Mr. BERGERON. Does my hon. friend contend that 80 cents a head must be paid on the population of any province that may be created hereafter?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I did not say anything of the sort. That would depend on the constitution which was given to that province when it was created.

Mr. BERGERON. The 80 cents a head only applied to the four original provinces?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Certainly until Manitoba was admitted; and then by provisions of the Manitoba Act based upon section 118 of the British North America Act, it applied to Manitoba, and so when the other provinces came in.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The difficulty is that section 118 does not make any provision as to terms for these provinces; section 146 makes provision so far as British Columbia and Prince Edward Island are concerned.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. For the way in which they are to come in.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And for the terms.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Those were fixed by order in council.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as these two provinces are concerned the terms do not depend on section 118, but upon orders in council based upon section 146. So far as the other provinces are concerned, it would depend upon the Manitoba Act, the Alberta Act, and the Saskatchewan Act, and that is what I think was in the mind of my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) and it was also in my own mind.

Mr. BARKER. Section B reads:

> B. Instead of an annual grant per head of population now allowed, the annual payment hereafter to be at the same rate of eighty cents per head, but on the population of each province, as ascertained from time to time by the last decennial census; (or, in the case of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, respectively, by the last quinquennial census or statutory estimate), until such population exceeds 2,500,000, and at the rate of sixty cents per head for so much of said population as may exceed 2,500,000.

Is it not at least prudent to take care that you are not leaving these special terms open under section 140?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is the very purpose of clause D which preserves to any particular province any terms which are special to that province, upon which it entered confederation. I referred this forenoon to the special terms which as a matter of contract Prince Edward Island stipulated for and received, as to the number of its population upon which its 80 cents per head annual grant should be based. That is somehting covered by the first part of clause D. Now, there is in the same way, something to be covered by the second half of clause D, viz.: The right of any province to retain the payment of some special grant which heretofore has been made by the parliament of Canada to that province for some special purpose. An instance of it is a special grant which was made to New Brunswick in 1873 of $150,000 a year as compensation for loss of the export duty on logs under the treaty of Washington of 1871. In the same way Prince Edward Island in 1901 was allowed an annual grant of $35,000 for the failure to provide regular communication winter and summer with the island. These special grants are to be preserved by this rider, clause D.

Mr. BERGERON. Since it has been decided to amend the British North America Act, would it not be better to replace section 118 by a new section ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is the office of the imperial parliament.

Mr. BERGERON. Then why do you put in section D ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. In order that our request to the imperial parliament may be clear and unmistakeable, and that that body may know what we mean.

Mr. LEFURGEY. When we were discussing this matter before, the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. A. A. McLean) asked the Minister of Justice why this clause D was being introduced, and the hon. minister replied in very unparliamentary language and in a very undignified way, that it was to prevent silly people asking questions.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Oh, no—to prevent such silly questions.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The hon. Minister of Justice now seems to attach a great deal of importance to this clause. I want to say that such remarks from the Minister of Justice do not do him any credit, as we have only to point to the fact of this Bill being referred back to this House to show the necessity of a revision. Clause D was put in to protect certain interests, and among those interests are those of Prince Edward Island under the constitution. I want to go back a little in order to clear up the situation. The hon. member for King's (Mr. J. J. Hughes) asked the Minister of Justice :

Is the address meant to carry out the intention of the conference of premiers, and is clause D meant particularly to carry out the proposals of that conference which perhaps were not very clearly expressed by the resolutions passed by it ? Are these resolutions meant to make more clear the resolutions passed by that conference ?

The Minister of Justice replied :

We are exactly interpreting the intention of the conference.

How does the Minister of Justice know the intention of the conference?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I was present.

Mr. LEFURGEY. If the Minister of Justice knows as much about this as he apparently knew about the insurance inquiry, I would allow him to father it all right. But I want to point out that the Premier of Prince Edward Island said that this matter was not discussed at all at that conference, and said further that the per capita allowance was regarded as a minor question. This is his language :

A great deal of misapprehension exists as to the constitution of the conference. Sir Wilfrid Laurier called together all the local premiers.

The premiers were among themselves to discuss their claims, come to a conclusion about them and then present them. When these subjects had been discussed we sent for Sir Wilfrid. As strongly as I can I want to impress upon this honourable House how this conference was constituted.

The question before the conference had nothing to do with per capita. The question was what each province was to get for a specific subsidy.

That seems to be entirely contradictory to what the Minister of Justice has put forward; and my hon. friend from King's, feeling the position in which the provincial premier and his associates put themselves in not protecting the rights of Prince Edward Island in regard to the per capita allowance, thought to draw a red herring across the trail, and fix up the situation by the help of the Minister of Justice by putting the question in the light he did this morning.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I had no feelings at all in the matter. I only desired to obtain the facts.

Mr. LEFURGEY. All right. I want to point out that in the conference of 1902, this was thought to be a matter of sufficient importance to justify an exception being made with regard to Prince Edward Island, British Columbia and Manitoba, as follows :

(c) The population as ascertained by the last decennial census to govern except as to British Columbia, Manitoba and Prince Edward Island, and as to these provinces the population to be taken to be that upon which under the respective statutes and terms of union in that behalf the annual payments now made to them respectively by the Dominion are fixed until the actual population is by the census ascertained to be greater and thereafter the actual population so ascertained to govern.

At the conference held a year ago this exception was left out of the resolutions. So that, as a matter of fact, we had a perfect right to find out whether Prince Edward Island was protected or not. To give a little more of the history of this case and to show how many more silly people there were under the castigation of the Minister of Justice, on March 14, I put a question on the order paper as follows :

Under the proposed arrangements at the recent conference between the representatives of the provincial governments and the Dominion government, relating to increased subsidies and other matters, does Prince Edward Island receive eighty cents per head of her maximum population since she entered confederation, and does she so receive eighty cents per head on this population until her population increases? If not, how or on what basis is the eighty cents per head to be paid?

There were several sittings of the House after that on which questions were brought up and on each occasion the Prime Minister asked that the question be allowed to stand, as the Department of Justice were looking into it. It did not look as if it were a silly question at that time. Not until March 21, did I get an answer to that question, and this is what the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier said :

The question of my hon. friend (Mr. A. Martin) is engaging the attention of the Minister of Justice, and my hon. friend will have an answer when the address to His Majesty, of which notice has been given, is brought up for discussion in this House.

Of course, I could not have in mind what the Minister of Justice suggested to the Prime Minister as a means to remedy the address, and so I put an amendment on the order paper, on March 21, with the view of procuring protection for Prince Edward Island under the terms under which it came into confederation, as follows :

In the case of Prince Edward Island, the population to be taken to be that upon which under the law, in that behalf, the annual payments now made by the Dominion are fixed until the actual population is by any census ascertained to be greater, and thereafter any increase of population so ascertained, to govern.

As the hon. Minister of Justice and myself apparently had the same happy thought that some amendment ought to be introduced, and as we had our amendments on the order paper at the same time, I dropped this amendment, as I was assured the per capita allowance was amply protected under clause D. I am very pleased, of course, that the situation is so cleared up in the mind of the Minister of Justice, and that we are to get our full per capita allowance in accordance with the terms under which we entered confederation; and I can only say in closing that I trust that the hon. minister when he is again civilly questioned on the floor of the House, will at least give a civil answer.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to refer to the question as to Saskatchewan, because it seems to me that this will not work out very well. Under the present law that province would have eighty cents per head for its government and legislature when it had a population of 250,000, but subject to the increase as provided in the Act. According to the Alberta Act, when her population is 400,000 she gets $320,000, whereas under this Act she will get only $180,000.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I cannot understand my hon. friend's figures, if she gets the lump sum plus the 80 cents per head.

Mr. SPROULE. In one case for the government and legislature it is not a lump sum but it is for the same purposes, it is for government and legislature.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Both the payments are for the support of government and legislature.

Mr. SPROULE. But they are said to be for two different purposes. I asked if this resolution would substitute the payments here given in clauses A. and B. for those provided by section 18 of the Autonomy Acts and I understood the Minister of Justice to say yes. I say that Saskatchewan will not be paid as much under this as she is now paid under her own constitution. When we come to consider larger populations she loses more and more, because when her population is 400,000 but not up to 800,000 she gets only $190,000 whereas under her own constitution she would get a great deal more than that. If, on the other hand, this is given in addition to the present payment, she will be getting something which I do not think was ever contemplated. The Minister of Justice says that this is what was decided on by the Governor in Council and he is not responsible, but to whom do we look for enlightenment as to the meaning of an enactment ? We look to the Minister of Justice. Under this the western provinces cannot tell what they are going to receive until they go into the courts for a decision. In enacting laws we should make them so plain that reference to the courts will not be necessary to ascertain the meaning of our enactment. We should at least know what we are enacting when framing a law.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. My hon. friend will understand that in saying what I did as to the value of any opinion I might express on the meaning of what is before us, I was saying what every one who practises in the courts hears from the judges themselves on every occasion when the suggestion is made to refer to what was said in parliament for the purpose of interpreting a statute. The individual opinion expressed by a member while a statute is under discussion, even although that member may be the very one whose hand has framed the language, is something that is not even allowed to be referred to, as indicating what the intention of parliament was. The courts simply take the words as they stand and by the words they judge the meaning, because the meaning or the intention that may have been in the mind of one member may be entirely different from that in the mind of another and what any particular member may think these words mean, or what he may say in the House was his intention or idea of their meaning is no guide as to the meaning which afterwards should be assigned to them by the court interpreting them.

Mr. SPROULE. I am asking what the cabinet intended them to mean.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I have tried to say all I can say in reference to my expression of my opinion of the language used. I think that necessary in order that hon. gentlemen may not attach more weight to my words than they would to the words of any other member who might have uttered those words.

With regard to the effect of this legislation on the province, say of Saskatchewan. Saskatchewan at the present time is entitled, under its constitutional Act, to the annual payment of $50,000, together with 80 cents per head on an estimated population of 250,000. The recent census of the province has shown that the population at present exceeds 250,000 and accordingly the Saskatchewan Act provides that whenever the population exceeds 250,000, then the amount of this 80 cents a head allowance is to be increased accordingly until the population reaches 800,000. Accordingly Saskatchewan is being paid at the present time 80 cents a head on its actual population which happens to be over 250,000 but not 800,000 and this is to be arrived at every two and a half years, every five years by actual count and every intermediate two and a half years by estimate according to the rate of progress. That 80 cents a head is one sum, not a lump sum, a fluctuating sum and under the present law Saskatchewan would receive that 80 cents a head whatever it would come to, together with the lump sum of $50,000, those payments being for the support of their government and legislature. Under the new system they will, in lieu of that, instead of the amount now paid, receive the amounts set out in clause A of the resolution. On a population of 287,000, which is approximately the present population, they receive $180,000 lump sum together with 80 cents a head on the actual population, because that actual population is under 2,500,000. In other words they get the same 80 cents allowance that they get to-day, but they get a lump sum of $180,000 instead of $50,000 as they get under their constitutional Act of three years ago.

Mr. SPROULE. That was the question I asked, and I understood the minister to say they got this in lieu of the other because if they get it in addition to the other, the situation would be quite different.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. They get the new in lieu of the old.

Mr. SPROULE. Then they do not get the old at all under their constitutional Acts ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. They get the old until the new takes its place ; they never get both the new and the old at the same time.

Mr. SPROULE. You now provide that that subsidy should be increased every two and a half years, but there is nothing in this except that it shall be increased every ten years, because there is no provision to say in what manner you shall estimate the population. A moment ago the Minister of Finance said that of course it means the regular census, the decennial census. The province, to me, seems to be up against the situation that instead of getting the increase every two and a half years it will get it only every ten years.

Mr. BERGERON. I believe I was right when I said a few moments ago that the Prime Minister had been taken by the throat by the local legislatures. If I understood the Minister of Justice this has been prepared altogether by the local premiers, prepared by the conference and not by himself or his department. It came from the various premiers, who prepared it themselves, and gave it to the Prime Minister of Canada to try and put it through this House. Some provinces are taking better care of themselves than others. It seems to me it would be a better method to strike out clause 118 of the British North America Act and replace it by another clause. My hon. friend says that that would be done by the imperial parliament. Are we going to leave to the imperial parliament the framing of our constitution? If so we are not as jealous of our prerogatives as our fathers were. They would not have left it to the imperial parliament forty years ago. If we leave it to the imperial parliament we cannot tell what they will do, they may say whatever they please. Will the minister say what we may expect to have in exchange for section 118 of the British North America Act ? The answer given by the Minister of Justice was not clear, and we do not know any more now than we did when the resolutions were submitted to the House. It may mean a great deal of money we are giving and may mean less to some of the provinces but it is not clear at all.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The language in this address, word for word, from the beginning of paragraph A to the end of paragraph B, is the resolution passed by the Quebec conference in 1887 and which was adopted verbatim by the conference which met in October last.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Then the Minister of Justice is accountable for all the bungling that has taken place in the address ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I do not think there is any.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I asked the hon. minister a civil question this forenoon, and he gave me an insolent answer. It seems to me that regard for the dignity of his position should have led him to control his natural propensity and give the answer that one might expect in an assembly of this kind.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. If any offence was taken at the language I used I am very sorry for it. It was spoken in a moment of irritation because I thought I was being plied with questions which quite deserved the retort I made.

Mr. FOSTER. You are making it worse.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to suggest to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) to insert in the first paragraph after the figures '1867' the words 'or by or under any terms or conditions upon which any other provinces were admitted to the union.' Then, in amending the scale of the four original provinces he will amend the scale of those which came in afterwards and substitute the provisions in this motion.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I cannot see any necessity for this. It seems to me entirely clear. But if the hon. gentleman has any doubt about it, I see no objection to the amendment.

Mr. NORTHRUP. As there seems to be a difference of opinion about the construction of this clause, does the hon. minister consider that these payments we are now making to Saskatchewan and Alberta are made under or by virtue of section 118 of the British North America Act ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think that that clause is the basic foundation upon which the right to make these payments rests, because that is the authority from the imperial to the Canadian parliament to pass the legislation which was passed when Alberta and Saskatchewan became provinces.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to explain why I moved my amendment. I understand that the Minister of Justice sees no objection to it but does not consider it necessary. A number of gentlemen, on this side at any rate, are very doubtful whether by amending the scale of payments authorized under section 118 of the British North America Act you at the same time amend the scale of payments for the provinces which came in afterwards. The object of my amendment is to make it quite clear that these payments you are now inserting do amend the scale of payments of all the provinces and not alone of the original four, to which some of us think section 118 of the British North America Act alone applies.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I have no objection to the insertion of the words, but it seem to me the meaning is abundantly clear when section A starts out with the very words 'instead of the amounts now paid, the sums hereafter payable to the several provinces.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would think they would be limited to payments under section 118 as that is the only section which has been mentioned up to that time. I would also suggest that the word 'payable' be used instead of the word 'paid.'

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am not in any way wedded to this language. It is not mine.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Section B agreed to.

On section C,

Mr. A. MARTIN. In comparing section 118 of the British North America Act with the section intended to replace it, I see that a new departure is made. Section 118 says :

> The following sums shall be paid yearly by Canada to the several provinces for the support of their governments and legislatures :
> | | |
> |---|---|
> | Ontario | $80,000 |
> | Quebec | 70,000 |
> | Nova Scotia | 60,000 |
> | New Brunswick | 50,000 |

Quebec gets within $10,000 of Ontario, Nova Scotia gets within $10,000 of Quebec and New Brunswick gets within $10,000 of Nova Scotia. When Manitoba was admitted later she also received $50,00; when British Columbia came in she was given $35,000; when Prince Edward Island came in she was admitted with $30,000. Now I want to point out that the difference between these figures is not large. The difference between the lowest and the highest is only $50,000, but in the new scale the difference between the lowest and the highest is $140,000. I think that is not fair, especially to the smaller provinces.

Let me also point out that in the conference of 1902 a resolution was offered by the premier of Ontario, the Hon. Mr. Ross, which I think was much fairer than this arrangement. For my part I do not see why a province should get $100,000 when its population is at a certain figure and $50,000 more when it has a few thousand more of a population. It does not cost any more to govern a province which has only a few thousand more people in it. The first thing you have to do is to establish the machinery of government, after that a few thousand people more or less does not signify. Evidently the fathers of confederation had that in mind. But under this new scheme you follow the principle of payment by population. Now it does not require any more money to govern Prince Edward Island with a population of 150,000 than it does with a population of 100,000. In this division you leap at once from $100,000 to $150,000 and you make a difference of $50,000 on an addition of 50,000 people. But when you go a little further, and when this population is 400,000 and not exceeding 800,000 you only make a leap of $10,000. Now I say that is very unfair to the smaller provinces; it is so unfair that in the conference of 1902 the unfairness was recognized by Premier Ross. He proposed in that case that:

> To provinces with a population of less than 1,000,000 an annual subsidy of $200,000 should be paid in addition to the subsidy in the preceding paragraph mentioned for the maintenance of civil government and legislation, and that in the case of provinces where the population is 1,000,000 or over, an annual allowance of $300,000 for similar purposes should be paid.

I think that would be an arrangement fairer to the smaller provinces. I heard the Minister of Finance expanding on this question a few nights ago, but he did not satisfy my mind. He knows very well that it does not cost a province $50,000 more, nor anything like it, to govern a few more people. In the case that is before us, supposing there was a difference in the population of 149,000, then the province would only get $100,000 if there was a thousand people more it would get $50,000 additional. But here is another thing I consider most unfair, and that is when you come to paying 80 cents per head. The British North America Act provides that the provinces of Quebec and Ontario shall receive 80 cents per head of the population of 1861. You are going to change that, and there are only three provinces in the Dominion which will benefit by the change, but they will benefit very largely. It seems to me that this House does not properly realize the immense amounts that are at issue. For instance, the province of Ontario, at the 80 cents per head, even with the population it has to-day, will get an increased subsidy of $629,437 a year. What does that mean? That represents a capital, at 3 per cent, of over $20,000,000; that is to say, that under this new arrangement the great province of Ontario, whose finances are in such a healthy condition, which has such a large annual surplus, is getting this immense increase by which you augment the debt of the country by $20,000,000. Quebec the same. Quebec gets $429,000 under this new arrangement, which would represent a capital, at 3 per cent, of $14,000,000. Nova Scotia gets $147,000 a year; under this arrangement this represents a capital of $4,920,000. New Brunswick will get no more than she is getting now. British Columbia will get no more with the exception of the $100,000 given her as a special subsidy. Prince Edward Island will get no more; Alberta will get a little more; Saskatchewan will get no more. Now all these sums that I have mentioned represent an additional burden that you are imposing upon the Dominion of Canada of about $40,000,000 a year, and to do that you have to upset the British North America Act. That is the present burden, but what will it be when these payments have gone up for a number of years? What will it be in twenty years, or in ten years? In ten years the payments to Quebec will represent a capital of $40,000,000, and the payment to Ontario a capital of $80,000,000, and in fifteen years a capital of $100,000,000. In fifteen years the population of Ontario, Quebec, Saskatchewan and Alberta will be so increased that they will get three times as much as they are getting to-day. And to-day, under the present arrangement, you are paying annually a sum which capitalized at 3 per cent represents $40,000,000. You are adding so many millions to the debt of this country, while my province does not receive a dollar. New Brunswick does not receive a dollar. The province of Nova Scotia, from which the hon. Minister of Finance comes, gets a trifle; British Columbia gets nothing; Manitoba gets nothing, and then they divide between a few of the other provinces. But what I stood up to say was something else. I stood up, Mr. Chairman, to move an amendment to subsection (c) of the resolution proposed. Subsection (c) says:

> An additional allowance to the extent of $100,000 annually for ten years to the province of British Columbia.

I have heard it stated in this House that there was no basis before the House for paying this $100,000 extra to British Columbia. I have heard it stated and I dare say it is true that we are not very certain whether it is enough, whether British Columbia will be placed in a sufficiently good position by getting this $100,000, or whether they are getting too much. But, there is one thing that we have to be guided by. British Columbia came before that conference and laid certain statements before it. I propose to read some of the statements that were placed before the conference by British Columbia and I think I shall prove, Mr. Speaker, that every claim that was made by British Columbia for an increase applies equally to the province of Prince Edward Island. As the resolution that I propose to move is on those lines I think I will go over some of the reasons which British Columbia gave why this subsidy should be paid to British Columbia, and I will ask this House to decide whether or not the claim put forth by British Columbia does not apply equally to my own province. If it applies equally to my province I think there is sufficient justice in this House to say that the province which I have the honour to represent should be placed on an equal footing with the province of British Columbia. The document which I hold in my hand is signed by Mr. McBride, the Premier of British Columbia. It was laid before the premiers of the provinces and no doubt largely on the strength of this document this $100,000 was voted as a special grant to British Columbia. I want to see whether or not the arguments which were used by Mr. McBride are equally applicable to the province of Prince Edward Island. We have a statement of the proceedings of the conference which opened on the 10th October, 1906. The statement of British Columbia's claims will be found commencing at page 7 of the return which has been laid on the table of the House:

> This contention is strictly in line with what is promised in the resolution of the Quebec conference of 1902, to the effect that at the time of the passing of the British North America Act, 'it was impossible to forsee the development of the Dominion,' and to provide in an unalterable and fixed way for the requirements of the various local governments for all time to come, except that the conditions are so peculiar and exceptional in the case of British Columbia as to demand exceptional consideration in the revision of the financial terms now deemed necessary.

Then follow the reasons which Premier McBride advanced. The first of these reasons is:

> The cost of administration, owing to the physical character of the country.

The very same reason can be put forth with equal force from my province. Physically it is situated in as exceptional a position as British Columbia and, while in regard to the administration of justice there may be something to be said in favour of British Columbia, the condition of British Columbia is otherwise the same as that of Prince Edward Island. Its isolation puts it in a much more unfavourable position with respect to the rest of the Dominion than does that of British Columbia. So much for the first claim. Then, comes claim No. 2:

> The distance from the commercial, industrial and administrative centres of eastern Canada.

What does that mean? British Columbia claims that it is situated far away from the commercial centre of Canada. Is not that a claim that can be put forth by Prince Edward Island? Is not Prince Edward Island in the same position as British Columbia in that respect? British Columbia is, on the west, far from the commercial centre of Canada and has to put up with heavy freight rates to and from the commercial centre. Is there any one in this House, who, knowing the disabilities under which Prince Edward Island labours in regard to communication, barred out as it is for three or four months in the year from the rest of Canada, and considering that you have given $100,000 a year to British Columbia, would refuse to extend the same consideration to Prince Edward Island? Prince Edward Island is cut off much more seriously and effectively from the commercial centre of Canada than even British Columbia is. I do not say that British Columbia is getting too much. I do not say whether British Columbia is getting enough or not, but I do say that when you pay $100,000 to British Columbia you have just as much right to pay $100,000 to Prince Edward Island. Now, we will take up No. 3:

> The non-industrial character of the province, as compared with eastern Canada, whereby a large percentage of goods are imported and consumed, increasing the contributions to the federal treasury in the way of taxes in a ratio of three to one.

There is no province in Canada to which that argument applies more than to my own province. There is no province which has fewer manufactures or that has to depend on other portions of the country for the goods which it consumes than Prince Edward Island. We have no manufactures there simply because we are cut off from the rest of the Dominion by water. The Dominion government has failed to give us that communication with the mainland which they promised us and there is a barrier against establishing manufactures in Prince Edward Island. The barrier is the want of communication with the rest of Canada and argument No. 3, on which I presume, the $100,000 was granted to British Columbia, applies with threefold force to Prince Edward Island. I am not saying that British Columbia should not have received this $100,000 but if they have received it my province has a right to receive as much. If they had gone into the case or if it had been referred to arbitration as of independent men who would take all it was proposed to refer it to arbitration the circumstances into consideration, I think that my province would at least get as much as British Columbia.

An hon. MEMBER. Did the Premier of Prince Edward Island ask for it?

Mr. A. MARTIN. The premier is opposed to me in politics and when they came up here they were wined and dined and I do not believe they knew what they were doing. I believe they took advantage of the impecuniosity of the poorer provinces. The province of Nova Scotia is not the poorest altogether; she has large revenues from coal royalties to keep her afloat, but this system is a drying up system and in 30 years the maritime provinces will be the worse for it. And the Minister of Finance, because he has got a good position here he trys to sugar the pill and swallow it, but I am sure if he were not a minister he would be up in arms crying for secession as he did a few years ago. This new subsidy is not doing justice to Nova Scotia, it is not doing justice to New Brunswick, it is not doing justice to Prince Edward Island. Their limited territory, compared with the unlimited territory of Quebec and Ontario, confines their population, while the possibilites of increasing the population of Quebec and Ontario are unlimited, and so in a few years they may draw immense subsidies which we cannot to-day compute.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. A. MARTIN. In discussing this address before recess, I pointed out that the basis of settlement for the different provinces provided by section 118 of the British North America Act is by these resolutions very materially changed. I showed that the sums provided for the support of the governments and legislatures of the different provinces, were not very far apart. I showed that Ontario had received $80,000 a year, Quebec, $70,000, Nova Scotia, $65,000 and New Brunswick, $50,000. I pointed out that Manitoba was admitted with $50,000 a year, British Columbia with $35,000 a year and Prince Edward Island with $30,000 a year. I pointed out that the differences between these figures were not very large. The difference between Nova Scotia and Quebec was only $5,000 a year, and the difference between British Columbia and Prince Edward Island only $5,000 a year. The old basis had no regard for population. Section 118 of the British North America Act does not mention population. But this address provides that the subsidies shall be according to population. We say that is very unfair, because while the difference under the old scale between Nova Scotia and Quebec was only $5,000, the difference between Nova Scotia and Quebec under the proposed scale is $30,000; and between Prince Edward Island and British Columbia the difference under the old scale was $5,000, while under the proposed scale it will be $40,000 or $50,000. Under these resolutions if one province has 50,000 more population than another, it gets $50,000 more subsidy. Indeed, if it has a hundred or even ten more people after a certain figure is reached, it will have $50,000 a year added to its income. I would like the Minister of Finance to justify that. We are told that the premiers of the provinces agreed to this. Well, if the premier of my province agreed to it, I am going to quote a resolution which he got passed by the legislature at its last session only a few days ago, stating that every claim the province had against the Dominion was to be renewed, and that the settlement that was made by this address was not binding on the province. The Minister of Finance assumes that this is going to settle every claim of the provinces for the next twenty years. Well, the resolution which the premier of my province got passed by the legislature mentions the following claims against the Dominion government:

Damages for non-fulfilment of the terms of union;

Interruption of telegraph communication this winter;

Our share of the fishery award;

A refund of freight paid on hay;

Cost and expenditure in connection with criminal prosecutions;

Proportion of railway subsidies and railway construction;

Reaffirmation of address to Governor General re winter communication and tunnel;

Six representatives in the House of Commons.

So this is the end of it all. This is to be a final settlement for the next twenty years, and yet this is what is done by one of the premiers who the Minister of Finance says agreed to these terms. He says that he does not abide by this arrangement—that there are claims against the Dominion government which were not taken up by the conference at all, one of them being the question of representation. The main point and the worst point is the first section, which turns upside down the constitution of Canada as laid down in section 118 of the British North America Act, which says that the provinces of Ontario and Quebec are to receive a subsidy of 80 cents a head on the basis of the population of 1861.

But the Minister of Justice comes up here and says that they could not help themselves in regard to giving Alberta and Saskatchewan the basis that has been accorded to them. Why? Because it was in a local Act. The Minister of Justice in the argument which he propounded here practically said that they could not do anything else but give those provinces what they were giving them because there was a statute which was still in force as regards those provinces by which they could draw their allowance of 80 cents under existing legislation. Does the Minister of Justice know that he is not only trampling on local and Dominion Acts, but trampling on the constitution, and if he can trample on the constitution in order to change this, is it not equally easy for him to trample on a Dominion statute? He says that must be so because this is a Dominion statute, while on the other hand here is the constitution of Canada, section 118, which he tramples under foot. When my colleague (Mr. A. A. McLean) pressed that the resolution be amended so as to do some little justice to Prince Edward Island and asked why it was put there, the minister said because some silly person like my friend would likely ask that question. I do not think that is a very dignified attitude on the part of the Minister of Justice. I think the minister, in view of all the blunders in legislation he has made since he entered this House, should be the last man to say that another man is simple-minded because, notwithstanding the great reputation which I believe he had in the province from which he came, I do not think there has ever been a Minister of Justice who has committed the number of blunders that he has during the time he has been here, blunders in regard to this very address, and I think it comes with very bad grace from him to refer in this way to my colleague who, by the way, is able to take care of himself and has a crow to pick with him and who I am sure will show the Minister of Justice that he cannot throw slurs on gentlemen on this side of the House without retaliation.

As I said, the gravamen of what I have against this resolution is it commits this Dominion to very large expenditures. The expenditures involved, even according to the population which we now have, will amount to $3,000,000 or $4,000,000. What capital does that represent? At 3 per cent $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 annually will represent a capital of $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 which this arrangement is going to saddle on Canada, and who is going to get it? One or two provinces only will get the bulk of it. My province is going to get very little, New Brunswick is going to get very little, Manitoba is going to get very little; it is going to be divided among the larger provinces. Capitalized on the basis of the present population, this charge amounts to about $40,000,000; in ten years it will amount to about $80,000,000 owing to the increased population, and in fifteen years it will amount to about $100,000,000. That is the burden you are placing on the shoulders of the people of this country, a burden which will increase yearly until it reaches the enormous figures I have mentioned. We should hesitate before we do this. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs place high duties on the goods consumed by the people of this country, the highest we have ever had, in order to raise a large revenue, then you say that you have too much money and are going to distribute it among the provinces and you have to admit that you are distributing it very unfairly indeed, because some provinces receive too much and others receive none at all.

I want to move an amendment to this subsection 3. I shall not move the same amendments that were proposed on the previous occasion and which I had the pleasure of seeing supported by practically every member on this side of the House and by some hon. members on the other side. Those amendments were defeated and they were defeated, I believe, because this question is brought up in this House at the end of the session when we have not sufficient time to consider it. It is an important question which will decide the financial position of different provinces in the Dominion for twenty years, and it should not be brought up in the last few days of the session, it should be discussed with great deliberation. The consequence was that when these amendments were proposed, amendments which were fair and which I have reason to think every person who pays any attention to the position of the provinces would support, they were defeated, all owing to this lack of opportunity for consideration. Since they did not carry I propose to move this amendment to clause C:

That clause C be struck out and the following be substituted in lieu thereof:

C. An additional allowance to the extent of $100,000 annually for ten years to the provinces of British Columbia and Prince Edward Island.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. In the discussion which has taken place in this parliament when changes to the British North America Act were under consideration heretofore, it was conceded by this House that no changes should be made without the concurrence of the legislatures of all the provinces interested in the change, and that a resolution of the legislature of the province interested, together with a resolution of this parliament, should be the basis upon which the imperial parliament should be asked to make a change in the constitution. This has not been done in this case. We have the Premier of British Columbia going to Downing Street to-day protesting against the passage of this address and the passage of legislation in the imperial parliament in the line of this address. We have the resolution unanimously passed by the legislature of Prince Edward Island in which it is stated that Prince Edward Island has claims against the government of Canada and that those claims should be taken into consideration before this legislation passes. The resolutions which are the basis of this address were before the conference in Ottawa in 1906 (in November last), and it was resolved at that conference that any claim of any province should be presented or submitted by members in writing to the government for additional consideration or recognition.

This was done by the Premiers of Ontario and British Columbia, but for some reason unexplained, the representative of Prince Edward Island in that conference did not put in any claim before it. To-day however seeing that they made a blunder, the legislature of Prince Edward Island have presented to the government of Canada a resolution passed at its last meeting setting forth their claim. This resolution was passed unanimously in the legislature of Prince Edward Island. This legislation is changing the constitution of the provinces, and I think that when the constitution is to be changed, that change should have the unanimous consent of every legislature in Canada. Under those circumstances, I think it is premature for this parliament to take this matter up at this stage of the session. The government have not given it the consideration to which it is entitled. Before asking the imperial parliament to enact this law, we should have the consent of all the provinces. This parliament ought not to pass a resolution when any province protests against it. Will the imperial parliament, in the face of the protests of British Columbia and Prince Edward Island, pass this legislation? Before we should ask the imperial parliament to do so, this government should have the consent of all the provinces to it. The hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) looks upon this matter very lightly. When it was brought up some time ago with reference to the per capita tax to which the province of Prince Edward Island was entitled, under the resolutions of 1873, when it became part of the Dominion, he treated the matter very cavalierly. He drew up this address to His Majesty without reference to any of the grants made the different provinces and to the per capita tax to which Prince Edward Island, under special legislation was entitled, and he comes to-day and tells this House that it was not necessary to put in the address this clause with reference to these special grants; but for some reason unexplained he did at the instance of some member of the government or of parliament, insert the clause amending the address. What are the facts with reference to it? This matter came up before the legislature of Prince Edward Island, and the premier of that province wrote a letter to Mr. Gouin, First Minister of the province of Quebec, and that hon. gentleman communicated with the Minister of Justice, and the Minister of Justice on the 30th of March last, wrote a letter to Mr. Gouin in which he said:

> I had assumed that it could not have been the intention of the interprovincial conference, at the meeting of last October, to take away from Prince Edward Island, or any other province, any special terms which had been conceded to such province on its entering confederation, and in this view had drawn an additional paragraph to the address which it is proposed to present to the King on the subject. This address was passed by the Commons here on Monday last and sent to the Senate.
> The clause I added provides that nothing contained in the resolutions shall in any way supersede or effect the terms special to any particular province upon which such province became part of the Dominion, or the right of any province to payment of any special grant heretofore made by parliament for any special purpose in such grant expressed.
> In these circumstances, I am very pleased to have your letter saying that this was the understanding last October with regard to Prince Edward Island.
> I am, yours faithfully,
> (Sgd.) A. B. AYLESWORTH.

Under the circumstances I am very pleased to have that letter declaring that this was the understanding of last October with regard to Prince Edward Island. What does this show? It shows that the Minister of Justice did not know, when he drew the address originally, what the understanding was, but got his information from the Premier of Quebec. In this letter the hon. minister admits that the position he took in this House was not the position he should have taken, and it would have been better if he had acted calmly and admitted he had made a mistake in drawing the address. I beg therefore to support this amendment.

Amendment negatived.

On section D,

> Nothing herein contained shall in any way supersede or affect the terms special to any particular province upon which such province became part of the Dominion of Canada or the right of any province to payment of any special grant heretofore made by the parliament of Canada to any province for any special purpose in such grant expressed.

Mr. SPROULE. Under that section, provision is made to give to the new provinces a certain amount in lieu of their public lands. Does that come under the special provision?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I would think so.

Mr. SPROULE. There is another provision in lieu of debt, I suppose that would come under the special provision also?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think so.

Mr. BARKER. In accord with the amendment proposed to the first paragraph, I propose that after the figures '1867' in the prayer of the address, be inserted the words 'and the other terms and conditions' so that it will read: Section 118 of the British North America Act of 1867 and the other terms and conditions aforesaid:

Mr. AYLESWORTH. My hon. friend sees the practical difficulty of that proposition. He is asking the imperial parliament to repeal provisions of the Dominion of Canada statutes.

Mr. BARKER. No, I am asking the imperial parliament to do precisely what the resolution proposes as to the British North America Act, that is, to repeal the provisions of the orders in council admitting other provinces on special terms as to allowances, just the same as the address proposes to repeal section 118. The provisions as to allowances when a particular province entered the union, are to be repealed, according to the minister's own opinion. He thinks they are repealed as the address now stands, but as we have added to the first paragraph a reference to provisions which became law with regard to provinces which came in by order in council, a like reference should be made in the clause we are now discussing.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think what my hon. friend has just said, and the circumstance that he feels it necessary to make his amendment in the request of the address to His Majesty, demonstrates the fact that there was no necessity for the amendment which was proposed and adopted in the preamble of this resolution. The practical situation is, as I have pointed out, that with regard to the provinces of British Columbia and Prince Edward Island, the terms upon which they came into the confederation was fixed by imperial orders in council, and it is certainly an anomalous thing to request any amendment by the imperial parliament to orders in council. The amendment to orders in council would be by His Majesty himself promulgating a new order in council varying the terms of the former. But with regard to the provinces which were created by legislation of this parliament, Manitoba, Alberta, and Saskatchewan, there is no imperial legislation to amend. It certainly would be a very peculiar situation if this parliament were to ask the imperial parliament to amend statutes passed by this parliament.

Mr. BARKER. At all events we should have proper words to request the imperial parliament to repeal such orders in council as relates to the allowances to the provinces which entered the union after the British North America Act was passed.

Amendment (Mr. Barker) negatived.

Resolution reported, and read the first and second time.

Mr. FIELDING moved :

That a message be sent to the Senate, informing their honours that this House has passed an address to His Most Excellent Majesty the King, humbly representing that it is expedient to amend the scale of payments authorized under section 118 of the Act of the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, commonly called the British North America Act, 1867, or by or under any terms or conditions upon which any other provinces were admitted to the union, to be made to the several provinces of the Dominion for the support of their governments and legislatures, and praying that His Majesty will be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the imperial parliament at its present session, to repeal the provisions of the above section of the British North America Act, 1867, aforesaid, and requesting their honours to unite with this House in the said address, by filling up the blanks therein with the words 'Senate and.'

Mr. SPROULE. The minister is sending up an address while we have only just passed the resolution.

Mr. FIELDING. I thought that we had considered it rather fully.

Mr. SPROULE. We have passed a resolution of this House upon which to base an address to His Majesty. Is it an address or is it a resolution ?

Mr. FIELDING. The resolution is that an address be presented to His Majesty in the terms set forth. That is the resolution that has been adopted by Committee of the Whole, and has now been adopted by the House. I think the proceeding is all right.

Mr. HAGGART. The resolution should only embody the money part of it, and be confined to that.

Mr. FOSTER. I must object to this. As a matter of fact we have not passed the address. We went into committee on the resolution, a resolution referring to money charges, and nothing else. Now we have got out and passed the resolution that should be embodied in the address but we have not passed the address.

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot see the point of my hon. friend's objection at all. We have in committee discussed the resolution that an address be presented to His Majesty. We have reported that, have concurred in it and this House has agreed to the resolution as reported that an address be presented to His Majesty and the words are set forth.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose that is true that we passed a resolution, that an address be presented, the resolution is not the address. That authorized the address to be prepared and passed by the House. Now then, as we have passed the resolution that is all right. Of course, the resolution was not in proper form. That address should never have been called a resolution. The resolution which you can bring in has reference to a grant of moneys or putting a charge on the public and those parts which refer to the grants to the provinces and in which moneys are concerned are what are embodied in the resolution. When we pass the resolution the address is very different. It embodies the resolution but it embodies more than the resolution. You do not pass a resolution that the imperial parliament shall do so and so. The address states the whole matter and embodies the resolution in reference to the money part of it, but to say that the resolution is the address is to say what is not the fact.

Mr. FIELDING. If we had passed a resolution that did not include the address but merely included some reference to money matters my hon. friend's criticism would be well founded. But, every word of the address is in the resolution. It includes all the money matters—indeed, there is nothing but money matters from beginning to end—which were debated in committee, which were reported to the House and the House has concurred in the resolution that an humble address be presented to His Majesty. I cannot see any difference.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the minister reads whatever he wants to read into the thing. Now he says that we passed a resolution that certain words forming the address should be made into an address. I cannot accept that at all. I take the order paper as my guide. The order paper is the official paper of this House, and must rule. The government notice of motion is :

April 23—Mr. Fielding—Proposed address——

There is nothing said about a resolution. But the Finance Minister found that they had bungled things, that he and his Minister of Justice had forgotten altogether that there was such a rule as 77, and when it came to the impasse this resolution was to be gone with to the committee. There was no resolution prepared, and so, by a free and easy method of doing things which no parliament ought to countenance, the address was called a resolution. Called so by whom? It is not on the order paper at all. Simply called so because the Minister of Finance had got into a hole and he wanted a thing called a resolution which he declared was an address. So that we have been talking of something which is an absolute fiction. The whole thing is bungled and wrong from beginning to end. They commenced without having the authority of the Governor in Council, they forgot all about rule 77, and when they find that out instead of preparing a proper resolution and bringing it before the House they bring what they call an address before the House, then they call it a resolution and then we find that what they call a resolution becomes an address full-fledged. The minister says that we have passed the address in the committee, but what we passed was a resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER. The resolution which is placed in my hands as having been passed reads :

Resolved, that an humble address be presented to the King's Most Excellent Majesty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I inquire where the blank is which the Minister of Finance wants to fill in? There is no blank in the address on the order paper as it has been submitted to me.

Mr. SPEAKER. Blank ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, the minister called attention to the omission and said that there was some blank which should be filled in. I am anxious to know where the blank is.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have not that motion.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, that is correct.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think if your honour will look at the papers in your hand you will find that it is there.

Mr. FIELDING. That is correct. The blank is for the insertion of the words 'Senate and Commons of Canada.'

Mr. FOSTER. There is no blank.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will it assist the Minister of Finance if I should move that there should be a blank.

Mr. SPEAKER. The resolution which was reported from the committee to the House reads as follows :

Resolved, that an humble address be presented to the King's Most Excellent Majesty.

The report of the committee was brought to the House and upon that being done I asked the House: When shall the said resolution be considered? It was determined to consider it now. Thereupon the resolution was read the first time and, upon motion, was read the second time and agreed to. The resolution, then having been agreed to, and it embodying in itself all the terms of the address—the entire address—the address was therefore passed by the House by adopting the report of the committee. It then reached the stage when this motion was moved by Mr. Fielding, seconded by Mr. Fisher :

That the message be sent to the Senate informing their honours that this House has passed an address——

It seems to me that what the House did was to pass the address because in adopting the report of the committee which comprised the entire address they passed the address. The motion is in order and it reads as follows :

That a message be sent to the Senate, informing their honours that this House has passed an address to His Most Excellent Majesty the King, humbly representing that it is expedient to amend the scale of payments authorized under section 118 of the Act of the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, commonly called the British North America Act, 1867, or by or under any terms or conditions upon which any other provinces were admitted to the union by Canada to the several provinces of the Dominion for the support of their governments and legislatures, and praying that His Majesty will be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the imperial parliament at its present session, to repeal the provisions of the above section of the British North America Act, 1867, aforesaid, and requesting their honours to unite with this House in the said address, by filling up the blanks therein with the words 'Senate and.'

Mr. FIELDING. The statement of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that in the paper as it is printed there is no blank is correct. In the original draft of the address there was a blank for the insertion of 'the Senate and Commons.' In the printing the blank has been filled in. It is improper, and I am glad he has called attention to it. I ask now that a blank be left after the word 'the.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You had better go back to the motion that there should be a blank.

Mr. FIELDING. I think my hon. friend is aware that there was no mistake on the part of the Minister of Finance, but that the error was made in the clerical work of the House. In the original draft it will be found to read '——— and the Commons of Canada.' It simply means that in the typesetting the words have been changed. Now, I ask that the blank parts should be left to be filled in by the Senate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If it is merely a clerical error I will say nothing more about it except that the proper way to have dealt with the matter would have been to pass a resolution of the House dealing with the money features.

Mr. FIELDING. It is all money.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. At all events, not embodied in an address to His Majesty. Such an address has never been considered in Committee of the Whole so far as I am aware.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is not my view. I do not propose to take up any further time except to say that I am still of the opinion that paragraph A and paragraph B are not well expressed; that paragraph A is defective inasmuch as it does not provide any means of determining the population as provided in section 118 of the British North America Act for which it is a substitute, although such provision is made for another purpose in section B of this very resolution. I think paragraph B of the resolution is also defective for the reason I have mentioned in committee and I think it should read in this way:

In the case of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, respectively, by the last decennial census or by the last quinquennial census or statutory estimate as the case may be.

That would make it perfectly plain; at present it is not. It is open to the construction that so far as the six provinces are concerned, the basis shall be altered once in ten years at the decennial census; in respect to the other three provinces the basis shall also be altered once in ten years, but only after that which is termed a quinquennial census. It would be perfectly easy to make that quite plain; it is not plain now. I would not have thought it possible to have had quite so many accidents to any resolution as have happened in this case.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think this precedure should be perfectly regular in every respect. The Minister of Finance said the resolution was seconded by Mr. Aylesworth, but the Speaker said it was seconded by Mr. Fisher. You had better get that right.

Mr. J. D. REID. Has the Governor General given his consent?

Mr. FIELDING. I would ask my hon. friend not to put a question of that nature; he will have to accept my statement that His Excellency authorized this as also any other matter which I may convey to the House in his name.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have no doubt about that, but I want to know whether His Excellency gave his consent before the notice was put on the order paper?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend will have to leave that to be settled between His Excellency and myself.

Mr. FOSTER. Are you sure you have not an authority in blank?

Motion agreed to.

REPORTS PRESENTED.

Report of the Secretary of State for the year ending 31st December, 1906.—Mr. Fielding.

List of shareholders of the Chartered Banks.—Mr. Fielding.

Bulletin No. 1, census of wage-earners by occupation.—Mr. Fisher.

INQUIRY FOR REPORT.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the report of the Minister of Militia and Defence been laid on the table?

Mr. FIELDING. I think it was laid on the table some weeks ago.

SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. LENNOX. As we are now probably within twenty-four hours of prorogation, I ask the Postmaster General whether or not he is in a position to lay before the House a scheme for increased remuneration to the postmasters?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). I have decided to prepare a new scale of salaries for the rural postmasters. That scale has not yet been prepared, but the principle has been admitted, and I expect within a few weeks I will be able to give some substantial remuneration to the postmasters.

Mr. LENNOX. I understood a scheme would be submitted to the House before parliament prorogued, and I certainly think that ought to have been done.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is not necessary to incorporate this in a statute as it can be done by a departmental regulation. I can reassure my hon. friend that the scale will give the rural postmasters a substantial remuneration for their services. If my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) will trust me I hope it will be satisfactory.

Mr. J. D. REID. Won't they come within the jurisdiction of the Royal Commission on the Civil Service ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No.

POSTMASTER AT CENTREVILLE.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I would like to know whether the postmaster of Centreville in the riding of Lennox and Addington has moved back from Belleville to take charge of his office or whether it is still in charge of the deputy postmaster?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have been so busy for the last few days that I have lost sight of the Centreville post office, but I will have an eye on that postmaster.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The Postmaster General told us the other day that the postmaster of Centreville would have to take charge of his office or he would have him removed.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will have two eyes on that postmaster.

SALARIES OF JUDGES—MANITOBA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolutions :

1. Resolved, that it is expedient to provide that the salaries of the judges of the Courts of Appeal and of King's Bench of Manitoba shall be as follows : The chief justice of the Court of Appeal, $8,000; and three puisne judges of the said court, each $7,000 per annum; the chief justice of the Court of King's Bench, $7,000; and three puisne judges of the said court, each $6,000 per annum.

2. Resolved, that it is expedient to provide that the salaries of eleven judges and junior judges of the county courts of British Columbia shall be $3,000 each per annum.—Mr. Aylesworth.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). The only change which these resolutions contemplate with reference to the province of Manitoba is to make provision for three puisne judges of the Court of King's Bench, instead of two. With reference to the Court of Appeal which consists of the chief justice and three puisne judges, there is no change. This is done to satisfy what the Manitoba government, though the Attorney General, communicates it to us as a necessity. The like remarks apply to the second resolution, which increases the number of the county court judges in British Columbia from ten to eleven, this step being taken at the request of the Attorney General of that province, who has written stating that the services of an additional judge are required in the county court of Vancouver, where the work has become too heavy for one judge. To these explanations let me add a word. It is also represented by the Attorney General and by several of the judges of the Court of Appeal and the Court of King's Bench in Manitoba that an additional county judge is urgently needed for the work of the eastern judicial district of that province, that is, the city of Winnipeg and its vicinity, the work of the court being at present considerably in arrear and so increasing that it is utterly impossible for one judge to cope with it. I am therefore proposing, with the consent of the committee, to add a further resolution, as follows :

That it is expedient to provide that the salaries of seven judges of the county courts of Manitoba shall be each $2,500 per annum for the first three years of service, and, after three years of service, each $3,000 per annum.

There are at present six county judges in Manitoba, and this is to increase the number to seven at the salary at present being paid.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend will have to give notice of that resolution. It is entirely new matter.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It is entirely new, and if any hon. member of the House objects, it can be dropped for the present session. It is something requested by the present government of Manitoba.

Mr. TAYLOR. I presume that when these resolutions pass, a Bill will be brought in founded upon them ; and when the Bill comes to be read the third time, I purpose moving an amendment, seconded by Mr. Daniel :

That Bill (No.) be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend the same by adding the following words to section thereof :

Provided that as to any judge who fails to deliver judgment in any case which has been tried before him within three months from the date of trial, the salary of such judge shall, after the expiry of said three months, cease, and that payment thereof shall not be resumed until such time as judgment in the said cause is actually delivered.

I may say that I brought this matter before the House one or two sessions ago in reference to Mr. Justice Magee, who has tried cases all through the province of Ontario for two or three years, and in most of the cases has failed as yet to deliver any judgment. Solicitors from several towns have written to me since I brought the matter up first, and I have promised that I would bring the matter to the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice this session, either in Committee of Supply or when any Bill respecting the judges came before the House. One letter from a prominent lawyer says :

You can understand the diffidence that we lawyers have in making an attack upon the Hon. Mr. Justice Magee. Remember we have to practise before him. Judges are human, and are not apt to forget affronts or anything of that kind. But the fact is that Mr. Justice Magee is a failure, and what the government ought to do is to pension him or put him in some job where he will not be a detriment to the public service as he is now.

Another lawyer writes to me :

With reference to the delay in delivering judgments by the Hon. Mr. Justice Magee, permit me to say that the other day I heard on the very highest authority of a case that was argued before him by Mr. Justice Clute prior to his appointment to the bench, 10th February, 1905, has not been decided yet. Hence, the learned judge has had this particular case under consideration for considerably upwards of two years. Do you consider that to be 'administration of justice' ? Surely not. There is no doubt about the truth of the above statement, for I have unquestionable authority for making it.

Another writes to this effect :

By next Wednesday it will be exactly eight months since the Hon. Mr. Justice Magee was here as presiding judge at the assizes in October, 1905. The learned judge reserved judgment in two of the cases tried before him, and he has had them reserved ever since. Apparently the interested parties are no nearer to getting a deliverance or decision than they were sixteen months ago. What about suggesting that the government make some provision for the learned judge by way of retirement? Please look at the Act respecting the judiciary and see what it says with regard to 'permanent infirmity.' Delay in delivering a judgment is surely an infirmity and a serious one at that. I do not know how the learned judge came to be appointed, but certainly the appointment has been a most unfortunate one.

These are the opinions of prominent lawyers in the province of Ontario. I have several others, but I think I have read sufficient to bring the matter to the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice. In view of these statements, I think the amendment I suggest should be added to the Bill, so that judges will understand that they must give judgment within three months after they try a case. If three months is insufficient time, in the opinion of the Minister of Justice or the other legal members of the House, I am willing to extend it another month or even to six months. But when a judge draws his salary for doing justice, and then leaves litigants to wait so long for judgment as is shown in these cases, I think it is an outrage, and the suggestions of these lawyers should be accepted by the government, and this judge retired. I think it would be a good thing for all the judges of the country if they knew that if they did not deliver judgment within three months after the hearing of the case, their salaries would cease until they did deliver judgment. Therefore, I have drawn this amendment and purpose moving it on the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. As my hon. friend has mentioned his intentions at this stage of the consideration of this resolution, perhaps I might, without impropriety, say what occurs to me to say now with reference to the matter he has discussed. I assume from the remarks of the hon. gentleman that he has not in mind any present judges of the province of Manitoba as being in any respect amenable to the criticism he has pronounced with reference to the judge whose name has been mentioned in the province of Ontario.

Mr. TAYLOR. My amendment reads so that it will cover not only Ontario but any province.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I did not misunderstand my hon. friend, but I premised that much as what I supposed was but just to the gentlemen who occupy the position of judges in the courts of Manitoba and British Columbia.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have heard nothing in reference to them.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. With reference to the particular judge in Ontario whose name has been mentioned, I had some personal experience before coming into this House as the gentleman was appointed to the bench some time before I became a member and I have been in that way personally aware, as well as in the way of common report, of the difficulties to which my hon. friend has alluded. They have been also the subject of correspondence, not of an official character but of a friendly nature, between myself and the justice in question who happens to be a man with whom I was for many years before he ascended the bench personally and intimately acquainted, and I think it is no more than right that I should say this on his behalf or with reference to this matter to which public attention has been in that way called, that I am sure the delay to which my hon. friend refers in the delivering of judgments is not in any sense the result of indolence or lack of industry on the part of the learned judge, but that, if it is to be attributed to any one thing more than to another, it is due to his exceeding conscientiousness and exceeding care. It may be what some people would call a defect of mental constitution to be over cautious, to be over careful and to be over anxious that any judicial pronouncement should be absolutely correct and unimpeachable, but if the result to which attention has been called to-night is attributable to any defect in the mental constitution of the gentleman in question, it is to characteristics of the nature I have tried to describe. I think also that while I do not question the entire accuracy of the statements to which the hon. gentleman has referred in, I think, three letters, the substance of which he has given to the House, that it cannot be correct to say that the same condition of things exists as to the greater number of the cases which have been, since that learned judge was appointed to the bench, tried before him. I think some such phrase fell, possibly unwittingly, from the lips of my hon. friend to-night. There are no doubt several cases, I do not know how many there may be, possibly a number which is considerable, still standing for decision by Mr. Justice Magee, but I have been assured that several, I think I might go further and say many or even most of the cases tried before him in which judgment was not given at the time of trial, have by this time been disposed of, and that not many now remain in the unfortunate position which has been described by my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER. Has any addition been made to the number of the judges comprised in the resolution with reference to Manitoba ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. There has been one additional judge appointed to the Court of King's Bench, none to the Court of Appeal. The resolution is but a repetition of the present statute except that the word 'three' where it occurs last in the first resolution, that is three puisné judges of the said court, to wit, the court of King's Bench, is substituted for the word 'two'. The court at present consists of one chief justice and two puisné judges. The legislature of Manitoba has constituted that court now as consisting of one chief justice and three puisné judges, and this resolution changes the word 'two' as applied to the court of King's Bench to 'three'.

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to the matter that has just been discussed in part, has there not been some trouble in reference to delay in trying cases owing to their not being set down for trial. During the last year or so I have seen some very strong strictures in some of the newspapers in reference to the delays that have occurred, not in giving judgment after the trial has been completed but in setting down cases for trial. That has occurred in different cases, but a notable instance occurred in Manitoba where a contested election case commencing shortly after the late election, has gone on until, within the last day or two, I see that it has been settled by the dismissal of the suit. But I saw some very strong strictures in a paper from Manitoba and also in a Toronto paper upon this form of delay. That is as much to be regretted as delay in giving judgment after the cases have been brought to trial and the trial has been completed. Is it not a fact that we are gradually giving to our judges too much extra work on commissions and the like of that which takes them from their judicial duties ? Does the minister think that this is for the best in the administration of justice ? It seems almost incredible that you would have a trial completed and that two years afterwards the litigants had not had a judgment from the court. I suppose that almost any litigant would rather have a wrong judgment from which he could take an appeal than be hung up for such a long time. In the other cases if judges are dilatory in setting down cases for trial—I do not know whether that matter rests entirely with them or whether the solicitors for the litigants are also to blame—I have seen these strong newspaper criticisms, and it would seem as though some of this trouble is apt to take place where you take judges off the bench from their judicial duties and put them on commissions. There are some few commissions on which judges may be appointed, which do not bring them into the arena of partisan judgment and criticism, a thing to be regretted with reference to the bench. Certainly in the province of Ontario we have had cases, in the last three or four years where it has not resulted in increased respect for the bench. At the same time, it has taken them off from their real judicial duties and has given them work of quite a different kind. It is also, I think, reprehensible that judges who are favourable to a government or were, before they became judges, partisan of a party or the government, should be in any position to look forward to extra appointments and remunerations in that respect, because it is a matter of fact that a leader of the government, especially this government, will appoint on commissions judges who have been adherents of that party before being appointed to the bench, which is not the best thing for the dignity of the judiciary.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It is perhaps not desirable, at all events it would seem to me not opportune, that I should enter into any discussion at the present time of the general question which has been started, as to the desirability of asking judges to take part upon commissions. So far as I recall there has not been any occasion since I became Minister of Justice on which I have had practically to consider the question. There have been no commissions and no appointments of judges upon commission, at least that I recollect, which have in any way proceeded upon my recommendation.

Mr. TAYLOR. What about Sir Wm. Mulock ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I do not know to what my hon. friend refers.

Mr. TAYLOR. I thought that Sir Wm. Mulock was just appointed arbitrator in reference to a dispute in the west ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I do not know whether the newspaper reports in that respect are correct, but if they are that is not any appointment in the nature of a commission issuing from the Crown upon the recommendation of the Minister of Justice; it is something under a special statute, which would rest, I presume, upon the choice of the parties to the dispute, or the nomination of the Minister of Labour. But with reference to the other point that has just been stated by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), as to the practice of the present government, at all events, let me remind the committee of what at once occurs to my memory, whether it occurs to that of other members of the committee or not, that on one of the commissions, a commission of an especially political character which has been the subject of discussion recently in this House, namely the commission to investigate alleged frauds at elections for years past, and which was appointed after the investigation of a committee in this House into the West Huron election, Chief Justice Falconbridge was one of the commissioners and he certainly was never, prior to his ascent to the bench in anyway a follower of the principles of the Liberal party, a member of that party, or in any way favourable to it; but on the contrary he was a warm and well known and prominent Conservative of the province, so prominent, in fact, that he received the nomination of his party shortly before his elevation to the bench as their candidate for the constituency of Centre Toronto. Let me say that whatever the cause may be for the unfortunate and greatly to be regretted condition of things to which the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has called attention, it cannot be, I am safe to say is not, in the case of Mr. Justice Magee, in any way attributable to his engaging in any kind of work outside his judicial duties.

He has never, to my knowledge, taken part in any sort of work outside his judicial duties since his appointment to the bench, and he has been assiduous, faithful, industrious and earnest and in every way anxious, to the very best of his ability to carry out to the full his judicial duties. The only complaint I have ever heard of his action or services on the bench is the single one that has been mentioned to-night—a very serious one I admit—but not in any way to be attributed to any lack of willingness to work or to any lack of honest effort on his part. Regarding what has been said by the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Foster) as to delay in trials, let me say, speaking of the practice of law in Ontario—with which alone I have any familiarity—that the delay in bringing an action to trial is in no sense attributable to the judge, who has no control unless he chooses to summon the litigants before him and take them both, figuratively speaking, by the throat and say, this cause must be got ready for trial. That, however, is something which he is not in a position very well to do. He knows nothing of the reasons which may actuate the litigants. They may not have their evidence ready, they may be negotiating for a settlement and consequently are not prepared to go on; and I think that, generally speaking, the judge has plenty to do trying the cases which are ready for trial without looking through the records of the court to find out other cases and compel them to be brought before him. These matters are entirely in the hands of the litigants. If the plaintiff, upon whom the obligation naturally rests to press forward the case, delays unduly, the defendant may take charge of the litigation, under the Ontario practice, and set the cause down for trial himself. Any delay, at any rate, in bringing an ordinary civil action to trial in any court of Ontario is the fault solely of the litigants and not in any sense of the judge. The same may be said with regard to election petitions whether in Ontario or any other province. Under the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, the trial must begin within six months or the proceedings fall to the ground; and if the trial is not begun within three months, any other elector in the constituency may apply to be put in the place of the petitioner who unduly delays. The sitting member himself is not usually interested in forcing on the trial, but presumably the petitioner is; and if he neglects to bring the petition to trial in the constituency to take up the elector in the constituency to take up the case and, with the leave of the court, proceed on the original petitioner's deposit. So that any delay in that regard can scarcely be attributed to the judge.

Mr. FOSTER. How then can a case run on two years?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It must be simply due to the neglect of the petitioner or the willingness of the sitting member to let sleeping dogs lie. I was going to add, however, that in some provinces it is the custom of the judges with regard to election petitions, inasmuch as they are matters of public interest, to have the officials of the court present to them lists of the petitions that have been filed and remain untried and summon the parties, of their own motion, before them and inquire when it would be convenient to them to proceed with the trial and require some explanation if there appears to be undue delay. That, however, is a duty which is not by statute put upon the judges; and if they take that course, it is because of their sense of public duty and responsibility for their position.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.) As far as allusion has been made to one of the learned judges of the High Court of Ontario, although I have no personal acquaintance with that gentleman, I have always heard that he is a very conscientious man, of great industry and, as my hon. friend the Minister of Justice has said, any delay on his part seems rather to arise from a constitutional difficulty in coming to a conclusion, through his being very conscientious and extremely anxious to do right. Perhaps he may outgrow a difficulty of that kind. It is reported of an English judge that he declared himself to have passed through three stages in his judicial career. In the first period he was always afraid that he was not right; in the second he was always sure that he was right; in the third period he did not care a continental whether he was right or not. So that possibly the learned judge in question may gradually pass from one of the stages to the other, and in the end his judgments may come with less delay. I have had a good deal of experience of delay on the part of judges during my practice. I remember one case in Nova Scotia where a learned judge, not now upon the bench, after promising to deliver judgments for a period of about two years in two cases, which had been brought before him, finally denied most strongly that he had ever heard the cases at all, and no judgment has ever been pronounced to this day. We have had difficulties of that kind to such an extent in that province, that the legislature passed an enactment to this effect, that in every case tried before any judge, judgment must be pronounced within sixty days after the conclusion of the trial. It was understood, however, by the judges and in the profession that that might be modified by agreement of the parties and accordingly in any particular difficult case, where it was desirable there should be longer delay, the parties, at the request of the judge, always agreed to waive that provision and consent that judgment might be pronounced afterwards, if it appeared necessary that the judge should take a longer period for making up his mind. So far as the trial of election petitions is concerned, I would be disposed to concur almost altogether in what the Minister of Justice has said, with this qualification, that I think the judges, in some of the provinces at least—I cannot speak as to very many of them—are rather too much inclined upon slight evidence to extend the time for commencing the trial. The statute, if I remember it correctly, provides that the time can only be extended on affidavits setting forth grounds for the extension; and sometimes it seems to me that upon very slight grounds the judges are disposed to extend the time, and in that way great delays have taken place. Whenever some agreement exists beween the parties to the petition, an affidavit is prepared setting forth some very slight ground for delay, due to an understanding between the parties and in conjunction possibly with some arrangement about another petition; thus the time is allowed to run on, and the petition is kept alive, and delay is allowed which sometimes amounts to a public scandal. When we come to amend the election laws—as I hope we will next session—we may be able to devise amendments which will alter the practice somewhat in that regard.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice, if any calamity should befall Mr. Justice Magee, in what position would litigants in all these cases he has tried, be placed? Would the cases have to be heard over again and all these costs doubled? I understood the Minister of Justice to say that in only a few cases Justice Magee had not delivered judgment. I have here an extract from another letter received from a legal gentleman in his own locality, saying:

> Judge Magee presided at the non-jury sittings held here in June or July, 1905, and of the cases heard by him he reserved judgment in five, of none of which has anything since been heard. And I understand that our experience in this connection is similar to that of many others throughout the province.
> Now, while the judge is a good lawyer and one of the best fellows living, and one is reluctant to make any complaint against him, such delays are becoming utterly intolerable, and something drastic should be done to remedy such conditions. Is a judge to be permitted to ignore with impunity demands of both parliament and people?
> Of course, you understand that lawyers do not wish to make complaints openly in such matters. And you will not mention my name please in this connection. But it seems to me the matter should be spoken of in the House, and with some firmness.

I know myself of two cases that were tried in the fall of 1905, in a constituency close to where I reside. In both cases he reserved judgment. In one of them a woman is interested, and on account of judgment being delayed, she is practically living to-day on charity, waiting for Mr. Justice Magee to deliver his judgment. These things are unbearable. Besides, the lawyers interested in these cases have not received their fees, and will not do so until His Honour sees fit to give judgment one way or the other. They have received a retainer, but the balance of the costs are not taxed against either of the litigants. I think it is high time the Minister of Justice should deal, not only with this judge, but with any others who may be in the same position. I think three months is ample time for judges to make up their minds and deliver a judgment. That limit should either be put in this Act or in some other Act, and let the judges understand that they are paid a salary by the country, and it is their duty to try cases and render judgment within a reasonable time.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I do not wish my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) to be under a misapprehension. I do not think the Minister of Justice has any power in the matter excepting that of expostulation, of representation. But so far as action is concerned, I am not aware of anything the Minister of Justice could do in any shape or form. The learned judge, as all others, is amenable to the jurisdiction of this House, liable to be impeached for any defect or for any misconduct which would render him unfit to be a judge. But I take it that such a proceeding ought to go forward upon the representation of the Attorney General of the province, who would be the proper authority to bring such a matter to the notice of this House, if such extreme proceedings were seriously contemplated.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then if the Minister of Justice has not power, and parliament has, it should be the duty of the government to introduce a law to regulate this matter so that the Minister of Justice can say : There is a law, and I have got to enforce it. I think the Minister of Justice should amend that law immediately.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. My hon. friend's amendment, which he has read, will probably bring that about.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will move it at the proper time.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. With regard to the amendment, I may say that I introduced this proposal to provide for the other county court judge, on the express request of the Attorney General of Manitoba, whose letter I received after this resolution was on the notice paper.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any increase of salary ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The same salary as the other county court judge, but there is one more county court judge, and one high court judge. Here is the letter :

Winnipeg, April 12, 1907.

The Hon. the Minister of Justice, Ottawa, Ontario.

Sir,—I have the honour to request that an appointment be made of another county court judge for the eastern judicial district of this province, as I am satisfied that another judge is necessary for disposing of the business brought before the county courts in that district. The judges of the court and benchers of the Law Society concur in this request.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

COLIN CAMPBELL,

Attorney General.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think under the circumstances I would not be disposed to press any objection. The appointment seems to be desired in the public interest, and has the sanction not only of the Attorney General of the province but of the benchers as well.

Mr. FOSTER. My objection was solely on the ground that no notice had been given of a resolution proposing an extra burden on the finances of the country. As the letter has been received since, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I should have stated in moving the House into committee, that His Excellency has consented to this appropriation and recommended it.

Resolution reported, read the first and second times and agreed to.

Mr. AYLESWORTH moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 177) to amend the Judges' Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and second times, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. TAYLOR. I beg to move that the following proviso be added :

Provided that as to any judge who fails to deliver judgment in any case which has been tried by or before him within three months from the date of trial the salary of such judge shall, after the expiry of said three months, cease and that payment thereof shall not be resumed until judgment in the same cause is actually delivered.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I have no doubt that the grievance of which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) spoke a little while ago is of so serious a character that this proposal would not unnaturally commend itself to individual members of the committee ; and yet, I would hope that my hon. friend would not press his motion to a vote on this occasion. It would certainly appear as a very serious reflection upon the judges of the court of Appeal, of the court of King's bench and the county courts in Manitoba and British Columbia, because this will be, if it is carried, a provision in a Bill relating solely to these judges or a rider upon a clause in a statute respecting the salaries of these judges and be limited to these judges and these only.

Mr. TAYLOR. Oh, no ; it is general.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I would think that as it is it would necessarily have reference to the judges mentioned in that particular section of the statute and would certainly seem to be inserted in regard to the judges of these three courts in Manitoba and the judges in the court of British Columbia.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would amend it by saying 'any judge in Canada' so as not to cast any reflection upon judges against whom I have heard no complaints.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. While I cannot say that it would not be competent for the hon. gentleman to change the wording of his resolution in the way he suggests, it is presented in the shape of a proviso to this particular piece of legislation, not in the shape of an independent section of the Judges' Act at all, but as a proviso to this particular clause. In any event I would suggest for the consideration of my hon. friend and the committee whether the full purpose which he had at heart in bringing this matter to the attention of the House and of the country has not been served by what has already taken place without putting upon our statute-book that which would be such a radical departure from anything we have previously had.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will accept the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Justice, but if the complaints I have received this session are continued next session I will introduce a separate amendment to the Act and ask to have it pressed to a division.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would say to my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) that it is a little too drastic in its present form because if a judge had four or five judgments pending for four or five months, he would be indebted to the country to the extent of $4,000 or $5,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. This does not take his salary away. It only suspends it until he delivers judgment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I know, but you suspend it three or four times.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. FIELDING moved that order (No. 21)—Second reading of Bill (No. 156) to amend the Civil Service Act—be discharged. He said: I move for the discharge of order (No. 21), as we do not intend to proceed with the Bill this session. It contains a number of small amendments which might possibly cause delay.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, before that is passed I notice that in reference to the civil service there is a statement made that a commission had been appointed.

Mr. FIELDING. Would be.

Mr. FOSTER. Or would be appointed and that the names of those who would compose this commission were spoken of last night. Has the Minister of Finance thought out a plan at all? I hope if he has or if he has not that there will be full permission for all the members of the civil service who wish to appear before that commission as witnesses, or to make an application, or as a deputation, or in some way or other, so as to get their views before the commission. It may be that they might wish to be represented by counsel. If we are going to have a civil service commission which is going to do anything more than draw its pay and make a recommendation which is not to be acted upon we ought to make the investigation thorough. In order to make it thorough the members of the civil service should have free access to the commission either by deputation or by being called as witnesses or by having counsel if they wish to better represent their case than they themselves could individually. Then, I suppose the evidence will be reported in the same way that the evidence of the last Civil Service Commission was, because parliament needs to have the evidence in order to base its succeeding action upon it. What would the minister think of that?

Mr. FIELDING. I imagine that the commission would hardly undertake to hear every individual member of the civil service.

Mr. FOSTER. That would not be asked. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that if the civil servants are anxious to be heard by deputation they should have full opportunity. We have not yet appointed the gentlemen who will act as commissioners, although I mentioned names last night, because the matter came up incidently. I would see no reason in the world why any individual member in the civil service should not be heard, if those requiring to be heard are not too numerous. If they are they might be heard by deputation. In one way or other every branch of the service ought to have full opportunity to be heard. As to counsel, we had not thought of that, I should hope that it would not be necessary.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Would this inquiry include men in the outside service such as lighthouse keepers and men working in the government dry dock?

Mr. FIELDING. It will simply deal with the civil servants at Ottawa, but if time permitted, we would be pleased to have them extend their views to the outside service. There may be some branches of the outside service that can be dealt with easily, and if so we would be glad to have the commission do it, but the main thing is the Ottawa service and that would have the first consideration.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister did not say whether any class or branch of the service might be represented by counsel, Of course, you could not hear every civil servant, but is it the intention of the government to permit a class or branch of the service to be represented by counsel or by somebody speaking on their behalf?

Mr. FIELDING. I had not thought of that, and I confess I hope they shall not require counsel. I had supposed that a gentleman representing any class of the service and a member of the civil service himself would be able to make adequate representation before the commission. However, I would not like to rule out the view that counsel might be present although I would hope that it would not be necessary on either side. In fact there are no sides; it is an inquiry in the public interest; everybody interested would be heard:

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is a good deal in what the Minister of Finance has said. I merely mentioned the matter because I have heard in some quarters an expression of opinion that counsel ought to be permitted to appear before the commission.

As to the scope of the commission, is it purely with regard to the salaries, or is it proposed it shall take a somewhat wider range and go into the whole question of civil service reform? We have done very little in this country along lines which have been successful in Great Britain and in the United States, and for my part I would be infinitely glad to see some such reform brought about in this country. I have not been troubled as no doubt hon. gentlemen opposite have been troubled in regard to matters of patronage; but looking forward to immediate changes that are likely to take place in Canada, I am a little anxious because I know how much we will be disturbed as soon as we get into power.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Speaking seriously, it is very desirable indeed that some move should be made along these lines. It may require to be gradual in the first instance, but as this government has been in power for ten years and has made very considerable efforts, though perhaps not with entire success, to satisfy its political friends, it ought to be in a position to do something for civil service reform. Why should we stand still in this matter, while Great Britain and the United States have made enormous strides in bringing about civil service reform? I presume my hon. friend from Nicolet (Mr. C. Devlin) knows better than I do how far I am correct in this regard because he has had experience in Great Britain. I understand that a member of parliament in Great Britain has practically nothing to say about patronage, so far as appointments to office are concerned. Nine-tenths of these appointments about which members of parliament on the government side are continually agitated in this country, are made solely upon competitive examination in Great Britain. I do not for one moment venture to say that appointment by competitive examination will always result in the best selection, but I do say it will conduce to the public interest and that it will result in better appointments than those made simply by reason of party pressure and for partisan reasons. I should be very glad indeed if this commission would take the wide scope I have suggested. I should be very glad if it would take up the question of civil service reform along the lines which have been followed in Great Britain and in the United States as well, with infinite advantage. I venture to hope that the suggestion may be accepted by the government, and if legislation is based upon it, a step will have been taken by this government of as great importance in the public interest as any taken since it has assumed office.

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN (Nicolet). I regret that I cannot satisfy the leader of the opposition in regard to the question which he has addressed to me. I have had no experience of patronage in my career as a member of the British House of Commons. I am quite sure that if the hon. member (Mr. R. L. Borden) had been member for the city of Galway he would understand why it is that I have to give this answer. I belonged to the Irish parliamentary party, and it is a rule of the party that we should never ask for any positions or any office for our constituents.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. C. Devlin) carry out that rule now that he represents Nicolet?

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. I would be very glad to be in a position to carry it out, because the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) must himself remember the past, and I am sure he had many a day of trouble over this very same question of patronage.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was not referring so much to my hon. friend's own personal experience, as to the knowledge which he must have acquired, as a member of the British House, of the system which pervailed there.

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. I understand perfectly well what my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) refers to, and I must say that I think it is a very general opinion that if competitive examination such as it is understood in the British service, could be carried out here, it would be a good thing for the country. I am quite sure that it would most certainly conduce to the comfort of the members of this House on both sides. I think a movement was made here some years ago to have the competitive examination, but with what success I am too recently back in Canada to be able to say.

Mr. FIELDING. The scope of the commission has not been yet clearly defined. In fact, we have not anticipated the making of any very radical changes in the Civil Service law. Of course, if in the conduct of the inquiry anything occurs that would lead to a suggestion, we would be happy to have the benefit of the advice of the commission. What we desire as the immediate subject of the inquiry (not to the exclusion of others) would be, that they would inquire into the classification of civil servants, the character of the service required from the different classes, the compensation to be allowed to them, the conditions under which they receive that appointment, promotion, and everything of the sort. The scope would be somewhat broad. We had not in view any very radical change, however. Nevertheless the scope of the commission will have to be defined, and we will try to make it broad enough to serve most of the good purposes hon. gentlemen on both sides have in view.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto). As I understood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fiedling), this commission is going to sit at Ottawa, and to be largely concerned with the conditions of the inside service here ?

Mr. FIELDING. That would be their first duty.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I also understood from the minister that this commission is to be appointed for the benefit of the service and for the improvement of the condition of the civil servants themselves. If that be so, it would seem to me only right and proper that this commission should afford ample opportunity to the various branches of the service in different parts of the country to present their case. These civil servants are paid very small salaries, and it is quite impossible to expect them to come to Ottawa at their own expense to make their representations. If justice is to be done to the service in all parts of this country, this commission ought to sit at least in certain large centres for the purpose of enabling the civil servants in those districts to appear before them and give their evidence as to the betterment of the service and to present any complaints they may have to make. It seems to me the commission ought to be more or less a perambulatory one so as to hear what is to be said and at no expense to the civil servants themselves.

Mr. FOSTER. I very strongly recommend the government to enlarge the scope of that commission so as to take in not only the question of salaries and classification, but also the basis of the civil service. That would be advantageous, particularly for two reasons. In the first place, you have proposed as one member of that commission a man who has a personal knowledge of the systems of civil service both in Great Britain and in this country, who understands both probably as well as any one here, and who from his long experience is an invaluable man on a commission of that kind. I think Mr. Courtney has already served on two commissions in relation to the civil service, certainly on one, and I do not think it would take very much more of the time of the commission nor add very much to the expense if they reported on the basis of the civil service as well as on the matter of salaries and classification. The two matters are closely conjoined and the thorough knowledge which Mr. Courtney has of both systems would render it advisable that the scope of the commission should be enlarged to that extent. I do hope that Canada will make a move forward in this direction. My hon. friend said we had not been going ahead. I am afraid that we have really been going behind, and that our civil service, in its basis and administration, is not any better than it was many years ago, and maybe is not quite so good in its essential features.

Mr. BRISTOL. I would like to ask the hon. leader of the House if it is intended that this commission shall deal with the question of increased remuneration, which I understand has been asked for by the post office clerks and the custom house clerks in various places throughout Canada?

Mr. FIELDING. The question of increased remuneration is not especially assigned to the commission. It is possible that the commission might suggest decreased remuneration in some cases; that would be entirely within their power. Their chief duty, however, will have reference to the civil service at Ottawa, so that next session we may have the benefit of their report. That will not exclude them from extending their inquiry to certain branches of the outside service, which will be desirable if time and opportunity permit them to do so.

Mr. BRISTOL. I understood that application had been made to the government by the post office clerks and the custom house clerks of various cities, and I wanted to know what action the government proposed to take in regard to that matter. I understand from the leader of the House that they do not propose to take any action unless the commission has superfluous time.

Mr. FIELDING. The ministers of the various departments might take action with regard to these outside parties without waiting for the report of the commission. I would hardly hope that the commission would have time to deal with the outside service this year ; it is rather a large order for so short a time, and perhaps some of the officials my hon. friend refers to would prefer not to wait for the commission, but to trust to the tender mercies of the Minister of Customs.

Mr. BRISTOL. They have waited some ten years for him.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I think the commission should extend its inquiries beyond Ottawa. There is no doubt that the cost of living has increased very materially in the country, and I think there is a general demand for increased remuneration on the part of both the post office employees and the customs employees. This commission should take into consideration everything that relates to the public service. As the minister has said, perhaps the salaries of some might be reduced. There may be some cases where value is not given, and it is as much the duty of the commission to investigate those cases as any others. But I do not see why the inquiry should be confined to the city of Ottawa. Many employees both of the Customs Department and of the Post Office Department have written to me in reference to an increase in their salaries. This whole matter should be very carefully gone into. In my humble judgment, promotion in the public service should be on the same principle as in a business establishment, that is, pay according to the value received. If that were done, there would be some material changes. A good man who is found doing his work ably and well should have more reward than a man who is doing as little as he can in the public interest. A department is not justified in losing the services of men who have proved themselves very valuable. I think there have been cases of men withdrawing from the civil service because they could do better in private concerns. I think the Minister of Customs lost one of his able men, Mr. Bain, because a private concern offered him more than he was getting in the department. It becomes a question whether the salaries of such men should not be advanced so that they will be kept in the service. It takes time, training and judgment to get a man fitted to perform these valuable duties. I quite agree with the hon. member for South Toronto that the outside service should be taken into consideration. The whole matter should be gone into carefully and a great saving can be secured for the country if the commission does its work wisely.

Motion agreed to, and order discharged.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

House went into committee to consider the granting of subsidies to railways.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the special votes are brought in would the minister say whether or not any of these are new? It seems to me that all of them are subsidies in lieu of other subsidies.

Mr. FIELDING. I was about to make a statement.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the subsidy in the case of any of these greater than the former subsidy? You might make a subsidy in lieu of another and yet make it greater than the first that had been granted.

Mr. FIELDING. No. We have decided not to have any new subsidies this session and so the resolutions now before the committee are in lieu, as the hon. gentleman says, of other subsidies, and in no case is there any increase in the mileage. That was my direction for their preparation and I am advised that they have been prepared accordingly, so there is really nothing new. It is simply a renewal of things disposed of at previous sessions. I have had a map prepared and put on the table, but in view of the fact that each of these is a renewal of a former vote, I did not think the House would want to examine them very closely.

Mr. FOSTER. There might be a question in reference to some of them as to whether they should have been renewed or not. They might have been proper at the time they were first passed, but circumstances might have changed. Where nothing has been done I suppose you are extending the time four or five years longer; the question is, how long you are to keep these things open.

Mr. FIELDING. This is a point upon which the government and parliament have always taken a very lenient view. That is to say where a subsidy was granted and an application was made for its renewal, in almost every case, I think, the grant once given is continued, even although the prospect of immediate construction might not be very strong. The community concerned always looks forward with great interest to having the road built, and although there is not rapid progress in the construction of the roads, if it seems likely that when built they would be of use to the community, the citizens always wish for a renewal of the subsidies with the hope that the companies will be able to construct the lines.

Mr. FOSTER. What amount is involved in this?

Mr. FIELDING. The mileage I think is 1,081 miles. On the basis of $3,200 per mile that would be a little less than $3,500,000. Of course some of these roads if constructed would probably get more than the ordinary subsidy and allowance would have to be made for that. If they should all get the double subsidy, as it is called, that would be a little under $7,000,000. Assuming all the roads to be built that would add to the expenditure of the country anywhere between $3,500,000 and $6,500,000 or nearly $7,000,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many miles did the minister say?

Mr. FIELDING. 1,081.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was made up for me at 1,128 miles.

Mr. FIELDING. One of us has made a mistake. I had it made up in the department and I was informed in the memorandum it was 1,081 miles.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I think that while these are old subsidies that have been granted heretofore, the minister who asks for their renewal ought to be able to go over each of them and give a reason why it should be renewed. I do not see much difference between renewing old subsidies and passing new ones. There may have been great changes since the subsidies were voted and there may be very good reasons why they should not be revoted. It is the duty of the minister, now that these are before the House, to take up each of the railways and give a reason why we should revote the subsidies.

Mr. FIELDING. The reason would be largely the general one that these votes having been originally granted because the roads were necessary for the opening and development of the country, we should not allow them to lapse because the companies have not been very successful, but should rather give them another chance. As regards any particular item, I shall be glad to give the information as to what has been done, if anything has been done, though in most cases no progress has been made. The general reason for these revotes is that the construction of these lines is desirable for the general development of the country.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Why not take up each road as it comes and give the reasons for the subsidy ?

Mr. FIELDING. I would be simply repeating the general reason in each particular case.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. There ought to be some good reason why these roads are not being built in the particular localities where they are subsidized.

Mr. FIELDING. Suppose there were companies that failed, would you on that account punish the communities ?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I am not in favour of subsidies anyway. If we cannot get these roads built by reputable companies on a business basis, the government ought to build and own them themselves.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a large order.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Yes, and we have been giving a good many large orders. We are voting three times as much as we did in the old days when the Liberal party promised that, if they were elected to office, they would reduce the expenditure. But instead of reducing it, they have increased it three times. They seem to think that all they have to do is to ask for the money and not give any reason why we should vote it.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that first resolution read exactly the same as the resolution we have been passing from year to year or is there any change ?

Mr. FIELDING. The first resolutions are the same all through.

To the Central Ontario Railway for an extension of its railway from a point at or near Bancroft to a point on the Canada Atlantic Railway at or near Whitney, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 4, not exceeding 40 miles.

Mr. FIELDING. In that case there has been litigation between the company and the bondholders, in consequence of which the railway was placed in the hands of a receiver.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the only reason for giving this subsidy ?

Mr. FIELDING. That is only an incident. If the road was desirable before, it is still desirable.

Mr. FOSTER. Both reasons may be questionable.

For a line of railway from Woodstock to the international boundary in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 15, not exceeding 26 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. Which Woodstock is this?

Mr. FIELDING. Woodstock, N.B.

Mr. HAGGART. What line does it connect with in the states ?

Mr. FIELDING. It does not connect with any. It is on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway and would connect with that line at one terminal. I do not think that at the other terminal it connects with any road.

Mr. FOSTER. What route does it take ?

Mr. CARVELL. It runs in a northwesterly direction from Woodstock to the International boundary line at a place called Bridgewater. Centreville is the principal point on the road. A company was incorporated by the New Brunswick legislature some years ago, but I think it has become extinct.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the government is granting a subsidy without there being any company to get it ?

Mr. FIELDING. There was a charter as far back as 1887.

Mr. FOSTER. But the company is extinct.

Mr. FIELDING. This subsidy is not voted to any particular company but for the line of railway.

Mr. FOWLER. I would not think there should be any objection because of there being no company. Most of the companies chartered in this way are simply chartermongers who get a charter for the sake of selling it to somebody. It is much better to vote the subsidy for the building of the line without voting it to any company.

Mr. CARVELL. This subsidy was revoted in 1903 and this is following the precedent then laid down.

Mr. HAGGART. You do not take power under the resolution to grant a charter by order in council.

Mr. FIELDING. No, that has been done in some particular cases but not in the general subsidy Act.

For a line of railway from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway at or near Welsford or Westfield, or between the said two points, to Gagetown, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 16, not exceeding 30 miles.

Mr. HAGGART. Is there a railway company there?

Mr. FIELDING. I think there is.

Mr. FOWLER. When was that subsidy granted?

Mr. FIELDING. In 1903.

Mr. WILMOT. As far back as 1896 a subsidy was given for thirty miles on that line of railway from at or near Fredericton to Gagetown. In 1897 the subsidy was transferred from that portion of the road to the lower portion, viz., from Westfield to Gagetown. I approve of the subsidy, but I cannot understand why it was transferred from the other portion.

Mr. FIELDING. We are not making the change now.

Mr. WILMOT. The change was made in 1897.

Mr. HAGGART. Is there a chartered line?

Mr. FIELDING. They have a provincial charter.

Mr HAGGART. Why not grant the subsidy of the railway company?

Mr. FIELDING. I think the point raised by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) was well taken. It is not wise to grant these subsidies to particular companies, unless to well established companies which you are morally certain will go ahead with the work. In my own province, I have known of instances where, in good faith companies, to which subsidies were given, undertook to build and then failed, and you could not give the subsidy to any one else. Unless you are dealing with well established companies, such as the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Northern no good purpose can be served by granting a subsidy to a company. When you grant it simply for the line of railway, that leaves you free to give it to any company that may come along.

Mr. FOWLER. Although I am a protectionist on principle, I believe in free trade railway charters. That would put an end to all this charter-mongering of which we have so much. People see where there is a prospect of a railway and they get a charter. They sit on that charter until somebody else buys them out. They don't intend to build a road, and never did. They often have no financial means of building a road, sometimes it is as much as they can do to scrape enough money to get the charter through the House. They get a charter, and then a subsidy, and by means of the subsidy they sell out to somebody who is able to build the road and they make a handsome sum for themselves. I think if we had free trade in granting subsidies to railways it would be better for the country all round.

Mr. WILMOT. I think that a subsidy should be given to that portion of the line between Fredericton and St. John. It passes through a country that has stood patiently by and seen railway development all over the province of New Brunswick and all over the Dominion. It is the best portion of New Brunswick, but the farmers are much handicapped by the want of railway facilities. They are forced to place their farm products on the market when the river is open to navigation, and at a time when all kinds of products are at the lowest price, simply because they have not the railway facilities to enable them to carry forward their products when the prices are higher. I may say in this connection that the New Brunswick legislature, at their last session, voted aid to a railway coming down the River St. John, and it would include that portion. Inasmuch as the subsidy was given for another portion, it is very important that it should be revoted. Is the government going to give any new subsidies?

Mr. FIELDING. Not at present.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the minister say whether there is a change from one particular part to another?

Mr. FIELDING. In this case and the one following, we are dividing the subsidy into two parts, so that the company may complete a part, leaving the rest for a separate company. It is the same distance and between the same points.

To the Inverness Railway and Coal Company for a line of railway from Cheticamp to a point on the line already built between Broad Cove and Point Tupper, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 24, not exceeding 37 miles.

Mr. FIELDING. I wish to strike out the name of the company and let it read 'for a line of railway,' not because the company is not a very substantial one, but they have not given any assurance of their willingness to build the balance of this line. By voting it in this way we leave it open to anybody else to take hold of it.

For a line of railway from a point on the Dominion Atlantic Railway to the government pier or wharf at Canning, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 25, not exceeding 1 mile.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a change. The mileage is the same, it is a branch of the same road, but the location is changed. It is a branch of the Dominion Atlantic, but shifting the branch from one point to another.

To the Nicola, Kamloops and Similkameen Coal and Railway Company for a line of railway from a point at or near Spence's bridge on the Canadian Pacific Railway, to Nicola lake, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 26, not exceeding 47 miles.

Mr. FIELDING. In that case there is an addition of two miles. The road has been built, and the actual mileage is proved to be two miles greater than was estimated.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the minister know whether any subsidies have been granted by the provincial or municipal authorities?

Mr. MACPHERSON. There is no provincial grant in this case.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this road operated by an independent company or by the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. FIELDING. It was built by an independent company, but the Canadian Pacific Railway are taking it over. It is really a branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, though it is still being operated, I understand, by the company, but the Canadian Pacific Railway will take it over this spring.

To the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company for a line of railway from the town of Strathcona to Edmonton and thence westerly towards the Yellowhead Pass, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 28, not exceeding 50 miles.

Mr. FIELDING. I think that is taken over by the Canadian Northern system, though the charter is in a different name. A few miles are completed.

Mr. HAGGART. It is operated, I suppose, from Strathcona into Edmonton?

Mr. FIELDING. I think they run over the Canadian Northern.

Mr. FOWLER. This seems to be rather indefinite; it says 'thence westerly towards the Yellowhead Pass.'

Mr. FIELDING. Well, it is a portion of the line to the Yellowhead Pass.

Mr. FOWLER. It does not say the line runs to the Yellowhead Pass, but towards it.

Mr. FIELDING. There is not mileage enough to take it to the Yellowhead Pass.

Mr. FOWLER. That is not the whole length of the line, it means that you are granting a subsidy to a part of the line.

Mr. FIELDING. To the road which has its objective point towards the Yellowhead Pass. Fifty miles won't take you to it.

Mr. FOWLER. This resolution should state what is the objective point of the road. Now if the road goes to the Yellowhead Pass, then it has some certain defined point, but if you only say toward the Yellowhead Pass, it is an undefined point.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the line is defined in its charter: they would be obliged to follow that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the minister certain that these subsidies include only 1,081 miles?

Mr. FIELDING. They were made up by my officials.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They certainly make a total of 1,128 miles. Here are the figures as I have made them up.

Mr. FIELDING. The explanation is that the road is partially constructed and while we are voting 47 miles a part of the road is actually constructed and there are only two miles additional. I was having it made up from the monetary point of view and the official, taking the view that it was already under construction and voted, treated it as only two miles. That accounts for the difference.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This really covers only two miles.

Mr. FIELDING. There are really only two miles.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You must have deducted the entire 47 miles.

Mr. FIELDING. I have the figures somewhere but at all events that explains the major part of it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the subsidy paid on that?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Is the Yellow Head Pass one of the objective points of the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway?

Mr. FIELDING. I think it is going through the Yellow Head Pass, but if my hon. friend wishes, before this vote goes through, I will look up the character.

For a line of railway from Fredericton to Woodstock, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 29, not exceeding 59 miles.

Mr. FOWLER. That is granted generally and not to a company?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. From Fredericton to Woodstock the line passes along the St. John river?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. It will be virtually the line of road which is advocated by the Premier of New Brunswick, Mr. Pugsley ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, I think the provincial government are granting aid or contemplating doing so.

Mr. HAGGART. The Dominion government are subsidizing a line of railway along the river and they are subsidizing the Grand Trunk Pacific line to Moncton.

To the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company for a line of railway from Toronto, via the east side of Lake Simcoe, to a point at, near or beyond Sudbury through Parry Sound, in lieu of the subsidy granted to the James Bay Railway Company by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 39, not exceeding 265 miles.

Mr. HAGGART. I think that they have built a portion of the 265 miles of the Canadian Northern railway and that they have received the subsidy ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is under construction.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, but has not a large portion of this 265 miles been paid for ?

Mr. FIELDING. The road is under construction and a considerable amount has been paid on it. I have not the exact sum.

Mr. HAGGART. The road is nearly completed up to the Georgian bay, and of that 265 miles the greater portion must be paid for.

Mr. FIELDING. Still the grant would expire and it has to be renewed and kept alive.

Mr. FOWLER. Then you are taking a vote for the full amount ?

Mr. FIELDING. We would not pay them twice.

Mr. FOWLER. You are so generous that I did not know but what you might.

For a line of railway from Connors, at the terminus of the Témiscouata Railway, to a point on the boundary line between New Brunswick and Quebec, at the foot of Beau lake, being a revote of part of the subsidy granted by chapter 7 of 1901, section 2, item 2, not exceeding 18 miles.

Mr. HAGGART. Does this line parallel the Grand Trunk Pacific ?

Mr. FIELDING. I understand it does not.

Mr. HAGGART. It must be pretty near it.

Resolved, that the Governor in Council may grant, towards the construction and completion of a railway bridge and approaches over the Nicolet river at Nicolet, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 3, item 1, a subsidy of $15,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Why do you give more than the ordinary subsidy to the Nicolet bridge ?

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. FOWLER. There is a new member in.

Mr. HAGGART. Did the old bridge get washed away.

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. They are only beginning the construction of the bridge now. It is expected that it will be completed at the end of August or the beginning of September. It is a bridge in connection with the Quebec, Montreal and Southern Railway.

Mr. HAGGART. Why is this unusual percentage given as a subsidy. What will the bridge cost ?

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. It is a very costly bridge.

Mr. FIELDING. It will cost about $125,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Under one of these resolutions this bridge should only receive $12,500.

Mr. FIELDING. The usual grant is 15 per cent and so they are getting less than usual.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Paragraph 3 simply relates to the subsidies and does not deal with the specific bridge at Nicolet, that is the answer to my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) ?

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. That is it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am pleased to know I am right.

Mr. FIELDING. These resolutions are copied from the statute exactly as it exists.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the amount of subsidy paid upon the James Bay Railway ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am informed that it is a very expensive road and that they will probably get the full subsidy of $6,400 per mile.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 178) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first and second times, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

RAILWAYS AND CANALS ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 170) to amend the Department of Railways and Canals Act (Mr. Fielding) read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. FIELDING. This Bill is prepared at the request of the department and I cannot state its purpose better than by reading a report prepared by the deputy, which is as follows :

The proposed revision of the Act arises out of the fact that it has been found necessary to revise and consolidate the existing canal rules and regulations, which, after a lapse of many years, have been found to be in a very unsatisfactory condition, and unsuitable to present-day requirements.

At the present time, there is no direct parliamentary authority for compelling owners of vessels, rafts or other things doing or causing damage to private property, directly or as the result of an accident, to pay for such damage.

The private persons affected look to the department as primarily responsible, and the usage has been to detain the offending vessel until a sufficient sum of money, or sufficient security, is lodged by its owner to secure such payment.

For example, a vessel breaks a lock-gate, causing a downward rush of water, which may flood the adjacent country, resulting in damage to lands, buildings and other private property, and though the regulations made by the Governor in Council may provide, as one of the conditions for admission of the vessel to passage through the canals, that such damage should be paid for, it is thought advisable to have definite authorization from parliament for such action.

Further, inasmuch as an offending vessel may happen to be in such position as to escape detention for violation of rules, or for causing damage, or, if detained, may be of insufficient value to cover the penalty imposed or the cost of such damages, it is thought advisable that power should be given to detain, seize and sell, if necessary, other vessels, things and goods, the property of the same owner, on any government canal property, so as to secure payment.

Further, under the approved canal rules and regulations, minimum and maximum amounts are set down as fines and penalties for violation of the rules. The actual amount, however, is determined, from time to time, by the superintending engineer or superintendent of the canal. It is thought well that these officers, in dealing with these matters, be strengthened by statutory provision, and further, that parliamentary authority be given for vesting in these officers the duty of estimating damages caused and for making release of a detained vessel dependent on the deposit of the amount of such estimate or equivalent security.

It appears that the department has no statutory authority to remove, and destroy, if necessary, sunken or grounded vessels, &c., in a canal, at the cost of the owner; the present Bill provides such authority, including power to sell to cover costs.

The department, feeling that such authority was necessary, referred the matter to the Department of Justice and the Deputy Minister of Justice advised that it was very desirable to have the regulations take the form of an Act of parliament.

Mr. HAGGART. This Act gives to the officer of the department the power of estimating the damages. There does not seem to be any appeal to a jury or any one else. his decision being final except when he does not estimate enough. It is a great power to give to an officer.

Mr. FIELDING. That estimate is made for the purpose of a deposit.

Mr. HAGGART. There is nothing here to show that it is not a final estimate of damages.

Mr. FIELDING. I think we ought to have the Act in hand for reference, and I will leave this Bill over until to-morrow morning. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. HENDERSON. This is rather an important Bill to rush through at this stage of the session, and I would suggest that the acting Minister of Railways allow it to stand over. There is no time to give it the consideration it requires and we had better make no law than make a bad one.

Mr. FIELDING. It was represented that the Bill was urgent. If when it is brought up to-morrow it is found that there is any serious objection to it I will not ask the House to go on with it. But I think my hon. friend will find that it is a necessary measure and not likely to be objectionable.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think we had better defer it until we can have a well considered Bill.

Mr. FIELDING. It has been well considered by the Justice Department.

Mr. HENDERSON. We had another Bill to-day which was said to have been well considered by the Justice Department.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the Bill gives power to an officer of the government to fix the amount of damages, I would think that would be an extreme power, provided there is no opportunity given for resort to the courts. In all these cases there should be opportunity to have the matter tried out before the courts. There is another rather extreme provision. I do not see why goods on board a vessel should be made liable for damage to the vessel. I know that in the admiralty law there are liens of that kind, but I do not see any necessity of going that far in legislation of this character. The vessel itself is surely always sufficient security for the damage done.

Mr. FIELDING. I will have these suggestions referred to the Deputy Minister of Justice. I think they have been anticipated and met by the form of the Bill, but I would rather proceed in that way than go on with the Bill now.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Census and statistics, $30,000.

Mr. DANIEL. I hope the minister will take the opportunity of improving the Year-book during the next year.

Experimental farms, $140,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it proposed to establish any new experimental farms?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, we are proposing to establish additional branch farms. I am arranging for two in the province of Alberta; I am looking for a location in the province of Saskatchewan and I have arranged with the local government of Prince Edward Island to establish one on one of the main roads close to Charlottetown.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Where are the farms in Alberta?

Mr. FISHER. One at Lethbridge and one at Lacombe.

Mr. FOWLER. Last session there was some criticism on the part of some of the practical farmers in this House in reference to the conditions of the barns on the Central Experimental farm, which were said to be not in proper condition for an up to date model farm. It was also said that there was mustard in the fields. There are farms in Ontario and also in Quebec far superior to the experimental farm. Has the minister done anything in reference to the improvement of the farm?

Mr. FISHER. If my hon. friend visits the farm he will find one of the best horse stables in the Dominion, built last summer. I built it so as to take the horses out of the big barn. This summer I hope to rearrange the cattle stables on the most modern principles. I saw that the cattle stable was not first-class, although it was when built. My hon. friend will find in the supplementary estimates an item for that purpose.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Where is the hon. minister getting the farm in Saskatchewan?

Mr. FISHER. We have not located one yet but hope to do so this summer.

Mr. FOWLER. I think that the most important work you are doing at that farm is the distribution of seeds. Good pure seeds are the most important things in our farming industry, and I trust that the hon. minister will honour all orders sent in by the different farmers throughout Canada for seeds in the most generous way possible.

Mr. MARSHALL. I wish to compliment the hon. minister on the stable he has at the farm, and I know something about stables.

Mr. FISHER. I was not far wrong in saying it was a good one. And——

Mr. MARSHALL. No, Sir, you have an up to date horse stable.

Mr. FISHER. And I intend having an up to date cattle stable before next session.

Mr. W. JACKSON. I do not think that you are giving attention on that farm to keeping our live stock up to the mark. You are doing a great deal to improve the manufacture of our cheese and butter, but you have nothing out there which I consider of any benefit at all as regards the improvement of our beef. Our beef trade is not increasing as it should. We produce as good beef in Canada as that in any part of the world, but our beef is not uniform. I hope the minister will take a note of this and see that our cattle for beef purposes are brought up to the condition in which they should be. Go to Toronto or to any of our central markets, and you find as good cattle as are under the sun, but the majority are not as good as they should be. Out at this farm you are not encouraging improvement in that line. Instead of buying the cattle you do and feeding them, you should introduce a few pure bred cattle and distribute them in localities which are not furnishing the kind of cattle they should. When our farmers visit your institution, you ought to give them an object lesson which would induce them to give up their present system of breeding inferior stock. Not fifty miles from Ottawa I went a year ago last spring, where there were over a hundred two and three year old steers, and not five out of the bunch were fit for export. If that man had instead good ordinary Shorthorn grade steers, he would have made out of that bunch $1,200 or $1,500 more than he did. I said to him: Why do you not get better stock? and he replied I cannot buy better in this locality. If the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) would distribute a few stock animals of the right kind for beef throughout those districts, he would be doing good work. Our farmers are keen to grasp at new ideas; and by distributing in those localities a few of those stock animals, he would do more than his professors are doing to improve present conditions. I see an old cattle dealer from Montreal on the benches opposite, and I am sure he will admit that our cattle as a whole are not what they should be. I intended going further into this subject. I had prepared quite a paper on this line, but at this hour I shall not detain the House at any length. I will content myself with simply saying: Do not put your energy into the encouraging of the production of cheese to the detriment of our beef trade. The beef trade is an industry which does not require the labour that the making of cheese does, and that is of great advantage in a country where labour is scarce. We have a good cattle country; and by encouraging our farmers to produce good beef, you will be increasing their revenue by millions of dollars. The raising of beef is a cheap way of farming as it does not require the labour that the manufacture of cheese and butter does, and the fact that you are devoting most of your energy to encouraging the butter and cheese industry, as you have been doing, has been detrimental to our beef trade. This is an honest criticism. I have been all my life working in that line, and I must say that we are not producing the kind of beef this Canada of ours is able to produce if that business were properly managed; and if the hon. the minister would secure a higher grade of stock at the experimental farm, he would be giving an object lesson to our farmers which would be worth millions to this country.

Mr. FISHER. I am fully in sympathy with the view my hon. friend has expressed. No doubt around Ottawa Valley, there is not as fine a quality of beef cattle as is desirable, and we shall try and stimulate improvement in that respect as much as possible.

Mr. CHRISTIE. From present appearances, the experimental farm is giving more interest to the dairy industry than any other. My idea of a model farm is that whatever animals are kept there should be ideal stock, so that when our farmers from different parts of the country visit it they would see live stock of the very best type. I know that the county I have the honour to represent produces as good live stock as any in Canada. No one of an observing nature walking down Bank street, would have to go very far before he would find that out. I was walking down that street with a friend of mine, and on our way we saw some beef of very fine quality exposed in a shop window. We entered and asked where it was from and were told it was from the county of Ontario and that it was going out to Rideau Hall. In that same shop he showed us some beef that was grown on the experimental farm and it was not of nearly so good a quality. There ought to be ideal beef fed on this experimental farm, and the minister should pay a little more attention to getting cattle of the best beef type and thus give an object lesson to those who visit it. If you watch the trade, you will see that there is a great demand now for baby beef. Is there any reason why the best kind of baby beef should not be produced on that farm so that we could see what can be done by feeding them right from the time they are dropped? I think that is the kind of beef that commands the highest price. I think the minister ought not to pay more attention to the dairy cattle than any other animal on the farm. I think all kinds of animals, sheep, cattle, horses, ought to be ideal on that farm.

Mr. FISHER. Have you been out on that farm?

Mr. CHRISTIE. Yes. There is a very fair lot of steers out there. Now if you had some shorthorn steers put in there and attended to them so that you could make a comparison that would be of some advantage to the farmers.

Mr. FISHER. We brought in a new shorthorn bull there lately that the hon. gentleman must have admired. We had one lot of steers that we considered to be very good though perhaps not as good as come from Ontario county. Then we have two or three sets that are not so good, a medium lot and a poor lot. We are showing how much more expensive it is to put beef on poor animals than on good animals. I may say that last year we sold $4,000 worth of beef.

Mr. STAPLES. I regret that the Minister of Agriculture should leave this important matter of the experimental farm until the eleventh hour, when we have not sufficient time to discuss it. It is a singular thing that the Minister of Agriculture can find time to manage the Department of Public Works, while he leaves the Department of Agriculture until the day before prorogation. I think there is sufficient work in that department to occupy all the time of the minister. When I was out there I saw many things that I thought ought to be criticised. Since last year he has put up one building out there that is some credit to the farm; but outside of that, the buildings are no credit to the farm. Take the hoggery, for instance. When they want to clean that out they have to pitch the manure from one pen into another, and from that into still another before they can get rid of it. Now does the minister think that is the proper way to promote the agricultural interests? Then as regards the stock, I must say that they are of an inferior quality, and even the shorthorns that the minister has spoken of are no credit to this country. If you cannot get better shorthorns in this part of the country, I would suggest that the hon. minister go to South Huron and bring down a few good cattle and show the people what can be produced in the way of beef. The only good animal I saw on that farm was the shorthorn bull that he speaks of. He is a credit, but outside of that I failed to find one good animal. Then take the sheep. I would suggest to the minister that he should place them in quarantine, for they are the scabbiest lot of sheep that I ever saw. As for the hogs, they are also of an inferior quality. I think the minister should devote more attention to agriculture, instead of giving us flowery speeches on departments that belong to other ministers. Instead of taking charge of the Department of Public Works he should leave that to some other minister and devote more time to agriculture. I say that the industry of agriculture is deserving of greater attention than he is giving it. The other experimental farms are also deserving of more attention than they are getting. Again

I protest against the minister bringing down his agricultural estimates until the very close of the session and expect us to sit quiet and not criticise them. I would like to know what appropriation there is in these estimates for improving the buildings out there.

Mr. FISHER. $30,000.

Mr. STAPLES. Will the minister tell me what the new stable cost out there, the new horse stable ?

Mr. FISHER. Something over $4,000. It is built by days' work.

Mr. STAPLES. I think a building like that, if constructed by contract, could be done for much less than $4,000. How many horses will that new stable out there hold ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not remember but I think there is room for twenty-four horses.

Mr. STAPLES. How is that $30,000 going to be expended at that farm ?

Mr. FISHER. There is another vote coming later on and I will explain it then.

Towards the encouragement of the establishment of cold storage warehouses for the better preservation and handling of perishable food products, $100,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he has had any applications for the expenditure of this $100,000 ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, we must have at least twenty but a good many of them will not work out.

Health of animals, $350,000.

Mr. LENNOX. I want to call the attention of the minister to a matter that comes under that item. I have, within a few days, sent forward to the department the request of Mr. John Kelly of the township of Adjala for payment for a steer that was slaughtered. He had it slaughtered under the provisions of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, 1903. That Act, as the minister remembers, provides for the destruction of animals suffering from certain classes of contagious and infectious diseases, among others actinomycosis. That is what this animal was suffering from. I applied to the department and I have a letter back from the Deputy Minister of Agriculture in which he calls my attention to the fact that the regulations which are provided for under the Act declare that :

The disease of actinomycosis is hereby exempted from the operations of sections 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, 1903.

Except that

No animal affected with actinomycosis shall be exported from the Dominion of Canada.

The minister has the law on his side, of course, but I submit with a good deal of confidence that it is a very unfortunate and a very bad law in that respect. Every man is bound to know the law and if he knows the statute law of this country he knows a lot. The minister has spread out on the statute that this animal is to be destroyed and then there is an order of the Governor in Council, of course provided for in the Act, that certain sections are not in operation. This man has destroyed the animal in good faith, he has sent forward certificates as to values and other matters and I submit that under these circumstances he ought to be paid. I suppose there are not a great many cases of this kind. He looked at the statute. The veterinary that he consults and who seems to have some knowledge of the statute certifies as follows :

This is to certify that I have this day examined a steer belonging to Mr. John Kelly, of the township of Adjala, and found it necessary to have him destroyed as he has been suffering from actinomycosis, and is incurable and is liable to convey the disease to other cattle.

(Sgd.) THOMAS KAIN,
Veterinary Surgeon.

I have two points in view. I want to call the minister's attention to the statute with a view of having him direct his attention to the question whether it is fair to have that kind of a statute at all or not, and also more particularly I want to appeal to the minister on behalf or this man who has in good faith, destroyed this animal under what he considered then was the provision of the law.

Mr. FISHER. The question of compensation is permissive all through. We have had, for the protection of the treasury and of the country, to make it a rule which we hold inviolate that we will not pay any compensation except where an animal has been slaughtered on the order of an officer of the department. If we were to allow men to slaughter their own animals even on the certificate of a veterinary who is a practitioner in the neighbourhood and who is probably an employee to a certain extent of the owner of the animal and then to come to us for compensation it would lead to results which would be quite impossible When I got the power from the House here a year or two ago to slaughter animals suffering from glanders I was counselled to take the greatest pains to see that no compensation should be given except on the report of an officer of the government. I think that was a right provision. I remember that the hon. member for North Toronto especially asked me to give a pledge that in no other way would compensation be given and I think that if we were to undertake to give compensation in any other way we would be open to tremendous claims on the department which would be very unjustifiable. I will look into this particular case and see what the circumstances are.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would refer the minister to a case that came up in this House a great many years ago—the widow Kelly's cow. When the Usher of the Black Rod came to the door he could not come in unless a promise was given that the cow would be paid for. The minister promised to pay for the cow. I would suggest that the minister take that as a precedent, promise to pay for the cow and then let the estimates go on.

Mr. LENNOX. This man has acted in perfect good faith and I have a letter from him saying that he has preserved the head of the animal. I called his attention to the fact that the Act seemed to require that he should apply to a government inspector and he has therefore preserved the head of the animal.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What did they do with the body ?

Mr. LENNOX. I do not know, I suppose they buried it.

Mr. FISHER. I will look into that case.

Mr. R. N. WALSH. I would like to ask the hon. minister if any consideration has been given in regard to compensation for animals which are found to be diseased especially where tuberculosis exists. If the cattle are sold out of the country and they are tested and found to be defective they are simply ear-marked and allowed to go. I know that this is a very hard matter to deal with but I know it is a matter that requires a good deal of attention because these animals simply become the means of spreading disease. Farmers will buy these cattle and put them amongst their herds and I think there should be some steps taken in regard to their slaughter and in regard to compensation if the disease is going to be eradicated or stamped out.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman is quite right. It is a very complicated and difficult question. I do not think there is as much tuberculosis among the cattle of this country as among the cattle of any other country ; but to undertake to slaughter all the animals which may be found by the test to be afflicted with tuberculosis would be a pretty big contract. It was, I understand, attempted in some parts of the United States and was a failure. I am quite sure it would be ineffective here, and would have to be stopped pretty soon. The question will have my best attention, but I have not seen my way clear to anything better than the ear-marking of the cattle, and any one who buys them, buys them with his eyes open. I know some ignorant people do buy them and do not pay any attention to it, but we are trying to the best of our ability to educate them.

Mr. STAPLES. What has been your success in exterminating glanders in the western provinces ?

Mr. FISHER. There has been a marked reduction of cases.

Mr. STAPLES. How much compensation did you pay last year ?

Mr. FISHER. About $225,000 in the last fiscal year. The accounts coming in show that the amounts will be considerably decreased.

Mr. STAPLES. Where is the disease most prevalent now ?

Mr. FISHER. I think that probably Saskatchewan has suffered most.

Mr. CHRISTIE. Is the disease found in the older provinces ?

Mr. FISHER. There is not much in Ontario to-day, there is some in Quebec, and very little, if any, in the maritime provinces.

Mr. CHRISTIE. Where do we get so much glanders in Canada ; is it imported from the United States ?

Mr. FISHER. Until recent years we did not pay compensation ; the disease was very much neglected and it spread very much indeed. The provinces undertook to deal with it, but they did not do so effectively. It got so bad that we were obliged to take the matter up from a Dominion point of view. If the disease had been handled ten years ago as it is at present I do not think we would now have any in the country. The amount paid in compensation is decreasing yearly and I think that last year it was not more than sixty per cent of what it was the year before.

Exhibition—further amount required, $100,000.

Mr. CHRISTIE. Where is this amount to be expended ?

Mr. FISHER. There is an exhibition of the products of French and English colonies next year in London and we are arranging to take part in it.

Mr. STAPLES. What kind of building are you putting up at the Dublin exhibition?

Mr. FISHER. A very fine one, it will cost $120,000 or $130,000.

For the construction of an electric railway track on the Experimental Farm at Ottawa, $15,000.

Mr LENNOX. What is this for ?

Mr. FISHER. This will enable the electric cars to run to the experimental farm. The company will run the track up to the fence of the farm and they have asked us to construct a track within the farm.

Mr. LENNOX. How much track will be constructed within the farm ?

Mr. FISHER. About three-quarters of a mile or a mile. The chief expense is that we have to build a bridge across the Canadian Pacific Railway there.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. The track will cross the dam ?

Mr. FISHER. The bridge will be the most expensive part of the work.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is a good idea.

Mr. STAPLES. How will the work be done ?

Mr. FISHER. We are going to construct the track by contract, and the electric company will operate it in connection with their city system. We only build the track within our own farm, and keep it in order.

Mr. LENNOX. Will you have any contract with the company by which they undertake to operate it?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, they undertake to operate it, and the tickets used on their system will be good on the farm.

Mr. LENNOX. Has the minister any estimate of what the total cost will be ?

Mr. FISHER. I got the Railway Department to make an estimate of the cost of a single track, and it is covered by this vote of $15,000, including the bridge. If we build a double track, which the electric company wish us to do, it will cost about $19,000.

Mr. STAPLES. Might I ask the minister if he has any information with regard to the Royal Grain Commission which has been up in the west taking evidence?

Mr. FISHER. That is not in my department, but I can inform the hon. gentleman that the commission has not yet reported. The grain people have urged it, before reporting, to visit England and investigate the conditions of the grain trade there, and I think they are going almost at once.

Mr. STAPLES. Is the amount of $10,000 which was voted last year sufficient to defray all the expenses of the commission?

Mr. FISHER. No. I think $5,000 more is to be asked for.

Transportation facilities—Georgian bay to Montreal—survey for waterway via French and Ottawa rivers, $48,000.

Mr. WHITE. Will this finish the Georgian Bay canal survey ?

Mr. FISHER. I expect that it will.

Mr. WHITE. Has the hon. minister any idea when the report will be down?

Mr. FISHER. I had hoped that they would be finished before the close of this session, but I am afraid now that they will not be finished before June or July 1. There has been an enormous mass of work involved in working out the details.

Mr. WHITE. Will the plans be down then also?

Mr. FISHER. Oh, yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. I wish to suggest to the hon. minister that Room No. 6 in the House of Commons should be enlarged in some way. If the partition between it and the room adjoining were taken down, it would be a suitable room.

Mr. FISHER. I confess that I have not been in that room for a good many years, but I will take an early occasion to visit it and examine it.

Mr. TALBOT. I wish to appeal to the minister to employ some one to answer a telephone on the fourth floor of this House, called 2282. It is for the use of about forty-five members who have rooms there, including the ex-Minister of Finance and fifteen or twenty other Conservative members, and there is nobody to answer it.

Mr. FISHER. I would ask the hon. member to give me a memorandum of the matter.

Postal station at Pointe St. Charles, $25,000.

Mr. FISHER. That is to provide for a branch station at Pointe St. Charles.

Montreal general post office—enlargement, $300,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What is being done there ?

Mr. FISHER. I have bought the 'Gazette' building and propose to replace it with a modern fireproof building adjoining the main building.

Kingston Tête de Pont—repairs to walls, &c., $5,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is part of this to recap the old forts that have been destroyed by storms ?

Mr. FISHER. I will try to see about that.

Belleville drill hall and armoury—interest re option, $145.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the total appropriation for the Belleville drill hall ?

Mr. FISHER. There is enough appropriated to continue the contract. The tenders were received yesterday and were opened yesterday or this morning but of course the contract has not yet been awarded.

Leamington—public building, $7,000.

Mr. MARSHALL. Is that a new post office ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, for a public building.

Ottawa departmental buildings—renewal of skylights, $6,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would draw attention to the ventilation, not in this Chamber, but in the rooms all over the building. Take for instance the rooms occupied by the whips. Look at the emaciated condition of our whip (Mr. Taylor) owing to the bad ventilation. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has a room that is not ventilated and the decaying condition that we are all in is owing to the bad ventilation. Room 16 is in the same condition. The paresis which has seized on the government this session is largely due to want of ventilation. The chief whips on both sides are completely exhausted.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. Demoralized.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would suggest some such ventilation as there is in the old Railway Committee room.

Mr. FISHER. Certainly they need something of that kind.

Mr. BERGERON. It seems to me very unfortunate that we should have different rooms, 16 and 6 ; the members should all be in the one room as in the imperial parliament. They should have a large room where the members would be together as in a club.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have heard it reported that there are rooms in this building that are really sub-let for some reason or another, and it is a well known fact that rooms are very scarce. I do not know whether this sub-letting occurs or not.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say.

Mr. J. D. REID. I feel very strongly with the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). A room like No. 16 should be for the use of all members and each party should have a separate room in addition. There are a great many members on the other side of the House whom I do not know but whom I would be glad to know, and my not knowing them comes from our not associating as we should. I really think there should be more sociability than there is.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. When we have the new wing we will have the whole thing fixed.

Mr. J. D. REID. Probably we were to blame when we were in power but that is no reason why there should not be some change now so that we would meet each other and be more sociable.

Mr. FISHER. We see that exemplified in the smoking room ; I do not smoke and consequently I have not the opportunity of going there, but we see the men of both parties meeting there sociably. I would think in the new building there should be a room of that kind.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will it be built next session ?

Mr. FISHER. Oh, no.

Mr. TAYLOR. In the new building the government should grapple with the question and give the officers resident in the House, residence outside, allowing the space occupied by them to be used by members.

Mr. FISHER. I certainly agree that except the caretaker and the Speaker every one else should move out of the building.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why not take up the question of the ventilation of these rooms ?

Mr. FISHER. I certainly will.

Mr. BERGERON. When is it expected the new wing of this building will be completed ?

Mr. FISHER. Twenty months is the time allowed the contractor.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it intended to put the Speaker's apartments there ?

Mr. FISHER. It is a question whether the Speaker's apartments should be moved or not, he needs to be very near this Chamber.

Peterborough armoury—additional amount, $30,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the total cost ?

Mr. FISHER. The contract is $130,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Victoria, the county adjoining, has no military building ; all we want is an ordinary, plain armoury.

Mr. FISHER. You will have to see the Militia Department about that.

Parkhill—public building, $5,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Is that a new post office ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, it will cost about $20,000.

Renfrew—public building, $7,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Is that a new post office ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, in the town of Renfrew. Total cost about $20,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Who furnishes the site ?

Mr. FISHER. It is not bought yet.

Wingham—public building, revote, $3,000.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Is this a new building ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, it will cost about $20,000.

Manitoba—Dauphin—public building, $5,000.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice that all these Manitoba items are in government constituencies. How is that ?

Mr. FISHER. Most of the constituencies are government constituencies.

Mr. STAPLES. They are not all represented by government members, and if we had had a fair deal in the last election there would be more Conservatives representing them. The hon. minister has had petitions for many years from the town of Carman for the erection of a post office. It is a town equal to any country town in the province of Manitoba. It has a population of over 2,000, and is larger than other towns getting this consideration from the government. It has three lines of railway running into it, and should be made a port of entry. I was in the Customs Department looking over the letters from the board of trade from that town, and I think the government should give it a little consideration. It has appropriated out of its own revenue $60,000 for public improvements, and when you have a town so progressive, this government ought to appropriate sufficient to erect a post office there and make it a port of entry.

Mr. FISHER. I am sorry my hon. friend did not tell me this before the estimates were prepared. If instead of going to the Customs Department, he had come to the Public Works Department, he might have fared better.

Mr. STAPLES. It is not too late yet.

Mr. FISHER. It is for this year but next year I shall look into the matter.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Did the hon. minister consider a request I made for a wharf at Pelican lake ?

Mr. FISHER. That is at that summer resort. I could not see my way to giving it.

Battleford—public building, $7,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Where is this to be built ?

Mr. FISHER. At Old Battleford. It will cost about $20,000, and will be for a post office, Dominion lands and immigration office.

Edmonton public building—additional amount, $60,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What is that for ?

Mr. FISHER. This is to finish a large public building, in which there will be post office and custom house.

Mr. BERGERON. I understood there was to be a new post office at Edmonton.

Mr. FISHER. This is the amount to be expended this coming year to be used in connection with the main estimate. We let the contract not very long ago for $214,000.

Humboldt public building, $5,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is this to cost ?

Mr. FISHER. About $12,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the population ?

Mr. FISHER. This is a place which is growing very rapidly. It is a divisional point on the Canadian Northern.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why is there not something for the other divisional points ? The town of Vermillion is five times as large as this.

Mr. FISHER. We have no application on behalf of Vermillion.

Yukon commissioner's residence at Dawson, $25,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is to repair the damages by the fire.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This is a little one horse place, not as big as a small Ontario country town, and it is perfectly absurd to spend all this money on the commissioner's residence there.

Mr. FISHER. We have to provide a residence.

River St. John—extension of wharf at Lincoln, New Brunswick, $950.

Mr. WILMOT. What is the nature of the work to be done here?

Mr. FISHER. It is to repair and extend the wharf on the southwest side of the river. It is 56 feet long, 30 feet wide at the top and 16 feet wide on the outer face.

Dover—wharf on Petitcodiac river, $800.

Mr. FOWLER. What are you doing here?

Mr. FISHER. This is the estimated cost of building a public wharf on the west side of the Petitcodiac river. The structure will be 70 feet long and 17 feet wide on the top.

Dorchester wharf—addition to, $5,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What are you doing here?

Mr. FISHER. This will be 200 feet long, and is down stream on the northwest side of the river.

Great Salmon river—combined groyne and breakwater extension, $8,700.

Mr. FOWLER. What are you doing here?

Mr. FISHER. Extending the breakwater 200 feet further south.

Mr. FOWLER. How much has been expended on that wharf?

Mr. FISHER. The breakwater was completed under contract in 1906-7, at a total cost of $5,000. It is 160 feet long originally and we are now adding 200 feet more. It is let by contract.

Mr. FOWLER. That is to accommodate an American company ?

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it built on private property?

Mr. FISHER. This is an addition to our own wharf.

Mr. FOWLER. It was built on private property, and the minister promised that the title should be obtained to the property, but I do not know that the title has been secured.

Mr. FISHER. My officer says he thinks it has not. I will look into that and try and get it.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it the policy of the government to build wharfs on private property?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Petit Rocher breakwater, including connection with shore, additional, revote $7,600, $27,800.

Mr. FISHER. That is under contract.

Mr. FOWLER. When I was speaking the other day about what the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) was getting for his county, I did not notice this. I thought you were acting unfairly towards the hon. member for Kent (Mr. LeBlanc) because you were not giving him anything.

Richibucto habour—extension of north pier, revote, $3,800.

Mr. FISHER. That was not paid out last year. It is to complete a 300 foot extension to the new pier. The contract was $70,000.

Richibucto wharf, $2,000.

Mr. FISHER. That is to purchase an old wharf.

Mr. FOWLER. St. Mary's wharf is not in Kent also?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, $2,000 is the cost of building a ramp 47 feet long.

Mr. FOWLER. I think my remarks have had some effect, you have given Kent something?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. You should give Albert something also.

Lake Aylmer—wharf at Garthby, $3,000.

Mr. BLAIN. There is a wharf to be constructed on Lake Aylmer. Will the minister kindly explain what that is for?

Mr. FISHER. Lake Aylmer is a large lake in the eastern townships and there is a farming population around. There is a small steamer running on the lake and people bring their produce down and ship it. Without a small wharf they cannot make use of the navigation of the lake.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it a public wharf?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. On government property?

Mr. FISHER. It will be bought before the wharf is built.

Mr. BLAIN. Who owns it now?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know.

Mr. BLAIN. How much will be appropriated for the purchase of the property?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the total cost?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How many miles long is Lake Aylmer?

Mr. FISHER. Forty or fifty. The total cost will be $4,500.

Mr. FOWLER. Are you paying the total cost or does the province pay a portion?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. FOWLER. On the River St. John which is a navigable river the wharfs which are built there are paid for, half by the local government and half by the Dominion government. Why do you make this distinction?

Mr. FISHER. I am afraid I must refer the hon. gentleman to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). This arrangement was made when he was Minister of Finance, under which the local government contributes a certain portion and the Dominion government a certain portion. It is not our arrangement and I really cannot say on what ground it was made.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you not think it was about time to disturb the arrangement?

Mr. FISHER. May be. I do not know that it is my place exactly to press for a change.

Mr. FOWLER. If you do that for another province you should do it for the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. BLAIN. I hope the minister is nearer the mark in estimating the cost of this wharf than in stating the size of Aylmer lake. He stated that the lake is fifty miles long. I understand that it is only 15 miles long.

Mr. FISHER. I am speaking only from memory.

Mr. TOBIN. I think the hon. gentlemen (Mr. Blain) is right. It is from 14 to 16 miles long.

Mr. FISHER. I thought it was longer than that. I must apologize to the committee.

Mr. BLAIN. What county is it in?

Mr. FISHER. Richmond.

Lake Megantic—piers, $7,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the total cost?

Mr. FISHER. I think that will cover them. They are two small piers.

Mr. BLAIN. Is this for a municipal bridge ?

Mr. FISHER. No, one is to replace the old wharf in the village of Agnes and the other is to be a small new wharf some miles away, where the people in the country come down to the lake to meet the steamer.

Mr. BLAIN. Are there any steamers there ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, there is a regular steamer running on the lake.

Mr. BLAIN. My information is that a portion of the town is built on one side of the water and a portion on the other, and that these piers are to be constructed for the purpose of providing a municipal bridge.

Mr. FISHER. There is the village of Agnes on one side of the river and the village of Lake Megantic on the other side. Lake Megantic is in Wolfe county and Agnes is in Beauce county.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend will give his word that these piers are not for the purpose of building a bridge from one part of the town to the other ?

Mr. FISHER. There is only one pier or wharf at each place. The other is quite a number of miles up the lake and at another place altogether.

Mr. BLAIN. Will my hon. friend state that no portion of this money is to be expended for municipal purposes ? He made a statement last year on this point in reference to another place just close to this town.

Mr. FISHER. It is Disraeli, I suppose, that the hon. gentleman means?

Mr. BLAIN. Yes. The hon. gentleman representing the department states that none of the money is for municipal purposes but the fact is to-day that the Disraeli wharf is the municipal bridge and the only bridge there is connecting one part of the town with the other.

Mr. FISHER. What I said last year was that if the government of Canada did build a wharf there and if afterwards it was found more economical for the people to start the bridge from that wharf on the side of the river or the lake instead of building it alongside of the wharf I would justify that and I believe that it would be very foolish not to do it.

Mr. BLAIN. The Minister of Public Works said to the House last year that no application had been made by the municipality requesting permission to connect the municipal bridge with this wharf. The fact is to-day that there is no municipal bridge there and that half the distance is covered by the government wharf which was paid for out of the treasury of this country, while the other part was constructed by the municipality. They made in that way a municipal bridge. My hon. friend would not suggest that the portion which was constructed by the government was a wharf. If my hon. friend would go down there and walk over the bridge I am quite sure that he would not suggest that it was a public wharf.

Mr. FISHER. I will repeat what I said last year. I am quite ready to fight that out in any constituency in the country. I said that if the government has built a wharf for navigation purposes and if the municipality is about to build a bridge parallel with such wharf it would be very foolish, and uneconomical for the municipality to put parallel with the wharf and alongside of it a continuation of the bridge instead of stopping at the wharf.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend will say that it is quite in order that where there is a distance of 700 feet as there is in this case for the government to build about 300 feet and for the municipality to build the balance and join the two pieces together to make a municipal bridge.

Mr. CONMEE. Do you think that is wrong ?

Mr. BLAIN. I think that is wrong.

Mr. CONMEE. If there was a portion of the wharf built to serve the purposes of the wharf that can be used as part of a bridge why does the hon. gentleman think it is wrong ?

Mr. BLAIN. I think it is wrong for the reason that there is no navigation whatever on that water.

Mr. CONMEE. I am assuming that there was navigation, that the wharf was built to be used as a wharf, and that incidentally it was used for another purpose.

Mr. BLAIN. I accept that apology ; I knew when my hon. friend (Mr. Conmee) spoke he did not know that there was no navigation there.

Mr. TOBIN. My hon. friend (Mr. Conmee) does know something about it, because there is navigation there.

Mr. BLAIN. Have any steamers called at this wharf last year ?

Mr. TOBIN. I am not the wharf keeper ; I represent the county.

Mr. J. D. REID. Are there any steamers on the lake ?

Mr. TOBIN. Certainly.

Mr. J. D. REID. I challenge the hon. member to name next session, for it is too late to-night to do so, any steamers running on the lake.

Mr. TOBIN. I accept the challenge.

Mr. BLAIN. With reference to the St. Francis wharf for which $6,000 is voted, what will be the total cost, and will this cover the contract ?

Mr. FISHER. There are two wharfs there, and they are under contract.

Mr. BLAIN. Are they constructed on government owned property ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. In both cases ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the minister not think that this vote for the so-called wharf was got under false pretenses?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. FOWLER. What the government did was to build a wharf where there was no navigation, where there were no steamers to call, and where there was no water to float them.

Mr. TOBIN. That is not correct.

Mr. FOWLER. In order to help the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Tobin) and in order to help the people of that place, the government built a wharf where there was no navigation, and where in the summer time the cows are wont to pasture knee deep in luxuriant grass. They have built it and called it a wharf, knowing full well that its only purpose was for the municipality to build an addition to it and make it a bridge. If the minister says he is prepared to go into any constituency and defend this, it shows a great deal of nerve on his part.

Mr. FISHER. If the facts were as stated by my hon. friend, I would perhaps acknowledge his conclusion, but when there is navigation and when vessels do ply—

Mr. TAYLOR. There is not a vessel in the neighbourhood.

Mr. FISHER. If there is navigation, and if vessels do ply there, then, if the municipality has to build a bridge it would be absurd to demand of them that they should continue along side the wharf for a distance of a hundred feet or so, when they might just as well stop at the wharf and go over that wharf to the shore.

Mr. FOWLER. If my hon. friend's premises were correct, I would have no fault with his conclusion, but my information is that there are no vessels plying on this water to call at the wharf.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tobin) has agreed to give you a list of them next session.

Mr. FOWLER. I accept the offer but he might call a Peterborough canoe the Virginian, and so I want him to give me not only their names but the tonnage of these vessels, the ports at which they call, and the regularity of the service they give.

Mr. MORIN. I simply desire to say I stand by every word that I have said for the last two sessions with regard to this Disraeli wharf. I know what I am talking about, and I defy any man inside this House or outside this House, minister or member to contradict what I have said. However, I will devote my attention to the general question of the policy of the government with regard to these public works. The government does not erect them in the public interest but simply in order to try and help one of their supporters to be returned to this House. There are demands upon the government to build wharfs, to dredge channels, to construct public works of all kinds and the supporters of the government are favoured. You take a poor blacksmith who works at his trade with the sweat of his brow all his life, and if he were to come here and ask the government for fifty dollars to help him they would set the dogs on him, but when corporations apply to the government for large grants of money, they have no difficulty in getting it. The poor farmer who goes to the west with his family will starve for years until he can make a living, and if he does that, it is all he can do. But these companies, if they want a wharf or a channel or a bridge or a lighthouse, they ask the government for it. Why should they be more favoured than anybody else ? That is not all. These companies appeal to the member for the county, and the member is half the time shivering for fear that he may not be re-elected, and he goes to the government to urge these expenditures. Why should the Minister of Finance, who is the trustee of the people, grant money to every one who asks it ? I have heard members about this House speak of getting a wharf built at such a place or a bridge built or a building put up, because these things will help them to be elected. Again, I often hear the question asked in the country : how can we defeat such a man ?—he got $20,000 or $50,000 spent in his county. The Minister of Finance seems to have no mercy on the public money chest. If any member of this House cannot be elected on his merits, let him stay at home.

Mr. WILMOT. I wish to emphasize what my hon. friend from King's County (Mr. Fowler) has said with regard to the joint construction of wharfs by the local government and the Dominion government. I think it is most unfair and unjust that such discrimination should exist. New Brunswick is a poor province compared with the great provinces of this Dominion, and yet it is called upon to contribute from its limited funds towards the construction of these wharfs. The acting Minister of Public Works has said that the old government adopted that policy. If it was an unfair policy on the part of the old government, I do not think it is becoming in our Reform friends to follow such an example. I earnestly urge on the minister to put New Brunswick on a fair footing with the other provinces of this Dominion with regard to the construction of wharfs, and I would ask my Liberal friends from New Brunswick to join with us, and I am sure the government will accede to our fair request.

Mr. J. D. REID. I want, even at this late hour, to enter my protest against these estimates being brought down at this late period of the session. Last night $31,000,000 was voted by this House, one item of $28,000,000 being for the Transcontinental Railway, without our having any chance to discuss the various items. It is not fair to the members on either side of the House that the estimates should be kept till so late a period in the session. The government keep them back till eleven o'clock at night, and then force the members to stay and debate them or to pass them through without debate. The hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Morin) struck the keynote and gave the reason why. These wharfs are being built everywhere throughout the Dominion for private parties, often where they are not used. I think it is an outrage that this government should bring estimates down at this late hour and try to force them through—the very estimates on which we should have information, such as railways and canals, public works and immigration. It is a serious matter for this country, and I wish to enter my protest against it.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I wish to join my protest with that of the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. R. Reid). There is a very strong feeling on this side of the House that this is the last session in which estimates or Bills can be put through as they have been this session. I think there is not one hon. gentleman on the other side of the House who will not admit that it is not fair that large estimates and important Bills should be brought down at this late stage of the session when it is utterly impossible to discuss them. No one can say that any gentleman on this side of the House has endeavoured to obstruct business. I am speaking, not for myself alone, but as one who has heard protests made by members on this side, when I say that in the coming session we will fight Bills and estimates just as acutely at the close of the session as we shall if they are brought down at an earlier date. We hope the government will meet us by not protracting the session with unnecessary discussion, but enabling us to give the necessary consideration to measures brought before the House.

Mr. FISHER. There is no disposition on the part of the government to force the estimates through. I shall be glad to give any information any hon. member desires.

Mr. J. D. REID. The day is set for prorogation. The Minister of Finance told us that two or three days ago.

Mr. FOWLER. If the Minister of Public Works intended that as a challenge, we will take it up.

Mr. FISHER. It is no challenge, but a statement of the fact.

Mr. STAPLES. Just a few moments ago I asked for information in regard to agriculture, and I was informed by the minister that he had not the data at hand. We have been here for five months, and I think he should have the data.

Mr. MORIN. In regard to the Transcontinental Railway, I am sorry I was not here last night. I was sick. I remained until 12 o'clock, but I was told that the railway estimates would not go through last night, so I went home. This morning I learned they had been passed. I would like to ask the Minister of Railways, whoever he may be—I have not found one yet—I have been asking the Minister of Railways some questions about the railway from Quebec bridge east, but the only answer I received was: I do not remember, and I do not know. People in my county write me for information about the road and of course I cannot give them information until I get it. I would ask the minister if the contract has been given for the road from the Quebec bridge east and, if it has been given, when construction will be commenced? Has the line been located? They have partly located four lines, but no one knows which line they will adopt. I would be glad to receive any information on this point.

Mr. FIELDING. The road was located and the contract has been let from Quebec east.

Mr. J. D. REID. Has much of it been built yet?

Mr. FIELDING. They are making good progress.

Mr. J. D. REID. How many miles have been built?

Mr. FIELDING. I could not say how many miles have been built, but I gave information last night of how many are under contract.

Mr. J. D. REID. Has there been much actual construction?

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman knows the contract was only let about a month ago.

Mr. MORIN. How many miles are under contract from Quebec east?

Mr. FISHER. I could not say to-night, but I could to-morrow.

Mr. MORIN. I will tell you, 150 miles.

Ontario—public works, $685,060.

Mr. CONMEE. In connection with some of these votes the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) made some remarks on the 5th when this subject was under review. He is not in his place now and I would ask the minister if he will allow that item to stand over as it is late. I will require at least half an hour and if I am forced to go on to-night I am willing to do it.

Mr. FISHER. We will let it stand.

Item allowed to stand.

Manitoba, Red river—bank protection at West Selkirk, $3,000.

Mr. STAPLES. Where is the minister going to spend this money on the bank protection on the Assiniboine river?

Mr. FISHER. A short distance below West Selkirk government wharf there is a neck of land separating the river proper. The slough serves as winter quarters for the lake vessels and this is to put a pile and stone work protection to the bank to keep the channel open for vessels to get into their winter harbour.

Mr. J. D. REID. Would the minister give a copy to us of the explanations he has about all these wharfs?

Mr. FISHER. I have to keep the information.

Mr. J. D. REID. Could the minister not prepare a copy and let us have it at the next session?

Mr. FISHER. This is the first time I ever thought of it and I would have to work it out a little before I could say positively.

Mr. J. D. REID. Could he not say he would let us have some information? We are getting no explanations at all of this whole thing.

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. member asks for it at any time next session.

Mr. J. D. REID. I ask it now, so that at the beginning of next session we can obtain a copy of it and we would know exactly what this money is for.

Mr. FISHER. I think I could prepare a copy and lay it on the table.

Mr. J. D. REID. By the first of next session?

Mr. FISHER. I will try.

Last mountain lake navigable route—improvement of, $13,200.

Mr SAM. HUGHES. What is this?

Mr. FISHER. This is the lake that used to be called Long lake. Dredging is required on the lake to enable them to get to the wharfs along the shores. There is navigation there and it was suggested that we should have a dam at the river outlet of that lake to prevent the water escaping in the dry season and making the water so low as to prevent navigation.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the Minister of Public Works had his engineers inspect the route between Last Mountain lake and Quill lake?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would suggest that the engineers should take that into consideration. I think a great deal of land could be reclaimed by a little more dredging towards the head of Last Mountain lake, connecting it with Big Quill lake.

Old Man's river—diversion of stream into its original bed at Macleod, revote of lapsed amount, $8,000.

Mr. HERRON. What work is to be done here?

Mr. FISHER. This is a revote, this is the whole amount required. It is called for to make provision for the diversion of the river into its original northern channel opposite Macleod by constructing a dam 1,000 feet long and the protection of the southern bank of the stream by means of cribwork of brush and stone.

Mr. HERRON. If that is all the money which the minister is going to spend in my riding, I do not think that $8,000 will be sufficient, despite the evidence of his engineer.

Mr. FISHER. That is the engineer's estimate. If the amount is not quite sufficient we will take a supplementary vote to finish.

Royal Northwest Mounted Police, $800,000.

Mr. FIELDING. The police estimates for the last full year of twelve months, 1905-6 were $1,065,000. The estimate for the year 1907-8 are $800,000, showing a reduction of $265,000. Had the estimates for the last nine months been calculated on the basis of three-fourths of the previous fiscal year, they would amount to $798,000. We only ask $698,000, and it is expected the expenditure will be within the estimate. The department thus reduces the expenditure during the nine months by $100,000 and will further reduce the expenditure next year by $165,000, making $265,000, and in addition we shall recover from the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan $150,000, showing a total reduction in the costs of $145,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How are you going to recover from these provinces?

Mr. FISHER. An arrangement was made with the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan under which the police force is continued in these provinces but they agree to contribute this amount.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Have you reduced the force as well as the expenditure ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, in the Yukon principally.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Has it been reduced in Alberta ?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. The advice I have received is that you have. I have received complaints from places where they have had a member of the police force, at Obahon and Cochrane, both in the constituency of Calgary. For some reason a member of the force has been taken away from both these places.

Mr. FIELDING. Some men have been brought from one place to another. That is a mere temporary arrangement and it is not comtemplated to make any reduction.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. A member of the force stationed at Cochrane has been sent to Regina in Saskatchewan, and the people complain that Cochrane is a place where they should have a man stationed, and the same complaint is made with regard to the town of Obahon between Calgary and Edmonton.

Mr. FIELDING. There is always a little movement from place to place. There is a little shortage in the members now, but that is only temporary, it will be filled up.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Does the minister say that the force has not been reduced in Alberta within the last year ? Have the government got the same number of mounted policemen that they had a year ago ?

Mr. FIELDING. Excepting about 25 vacancies which will be filled up, there is no reduction in the force in those provinces. There has been a movement from place to place.

Mr. HERRON. I desire to repeat a statement I made a year ago. I do not think the members of the Northwest Mounted Police are properly paid in proportion to the work they are doing, and in proportion to their character. Those men are the very best men in that country, and I do not think this government should expect such men as we have on that force to work for 50 cents or $1 a day. I regret the government has not seen fit to increase the pay of the mounted police in proportion to the pay that other men are getting.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to ask if any men of the mounted police have been sent to the mines where the trouble is on now ?

Mr. FIELDING. No. We have some men in that region.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. FOWLER. I am instructed—I will give the minister the information, because evidently it is news to him and to the hon. gentleman who is prompting him—that ten men of the mounted police have been sent from Regina this afternoon to the mines.

Mr. FIELDING. The movement of ten men anywhere is not of great significance.

Mr. FOWLER. It is likely they are sent to maintain order in the district where the difficulties are existing. Perhaps the Minister of Labour would have some information with respect to that.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have none.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have seen a telegram this evening saying that there is an absolute disagreement, a general breakup, —all the negotiations have fallen through. Has he no word of that ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No. The only telegram I have received was dated the day before yesterday, I received it yesterday morning. It was to the effect that last night there was to be a large meeting at Fernie and that an agreement was in sight. I have received no confirmation of that news since; but I am hopeful.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. A telegram was received from the spot to-night saying there is a regular break up, and the entire negotiations are called off.

Mr. FOWLER. It is singular that neither the acting minister in charge of the Northwest Mounted Police has any information about the movement of men to the affected district, nor has the Minister of Labour any information from his deputy since the day before yesterday. It seems to me that the Deputy Minister of Labour, who is on the ground, is treating his chief with scant respect. I think the chief owes it to his own dignity to call down the deputy minister, and compel him to keep him better posted. It cannot be from motives of economy, because the cost of a telegram is very slight. It simply shows on the part of the deputy minister an utter disregard, both for his chief and for the members of parliament who are deeply interested in the events that are taking place in the Crow's Nest Pass. The members particularly representing western districts are deeply interested in this matter, and it seems to me the very least thing the deputy minister, who is there, can do is to keep the department posted all the time as to the progress of the negotiations.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is due to Mr. King to say that he has kept me posted from the moment he left Ottawa last week.

Mr. FOWLER. But there is quite a hiatus.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have received four or five or six telegrams a day from him, until the last minute. But my hon. friend can understand that when the conflict has reached a stage when one party is about to agree with the other, it would not be prudent on the part of the deputy minister to send telegrams across the continent saying that they had agreed, or that a point had been reached where they could agree. Mr. Mackenzie King is a very wise officer, and I think it is best to let him use his own judgment; I think it will be in the interest of the country. In the meantime, early in the morning I hope we will have good news.

To compensate members of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police for injuries received while in the discharge of duty, $3,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is the usual vote to make compensation in case of accident.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. For a number of years I have drawn the attention of the government to the fact that the members of the Northwest Mounted Police did not receive their grant of script the same as other volunteers did who served in the Northwest in 1855. I again urge upon the minister the justice of taking up this matter and seeing that these men, in the new arrangement that is being made in relation to the militia should be treated like the volunteers who served in South Africa. I would like to see the police who served in 1885 included in that grant of scrip.

Mr. FIELDING. I will make a note of it.

Some resolutions reported.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL—FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) delivered a message from the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the message as follows:

GREY:

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons further supplementary estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending on the 31st March, 1908, and in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, the Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House,
Ottawa, April 25, 1907.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, the message, together with the estimates, were referred to the Committee of Supply.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. Probably the Bills which remain on the order paper—the Quebec bridge—and then we will take the remaining estimates in supply. At some time during the forenoon session supply will be moved.

Mr. TAYLOR. I thought it was understood that the estimates would be the first thing moved?

Mr. FIELDING. I can arrange it accordingly. That will necessitate our going out of committee later on.

Mr. TAYLOR. We will probably get the vote before noon.

Mr. FIELDING. Well let it be understood then that at an early stage we will move the House into Committee of Supply.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the leader of the government expect that prorogation will take place on Saturday?

Mr. FIELDING. In so far as the business of this House is concerned I am sure we could prorogue on Saturday, but it will depend on the information received to-morrow as to condition of business in the Senate.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.50 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 26, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

Mr. CAMPBELL, (Centre York.) I would draw attention to the fact that the Orders of the Day are only printed in the French language. If our proceedings are to be regular, the Orders should be printed in both languages. I am sure that the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne), and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), if they were here, would call the attention of the House to this unfair discrimination; but as they are not here, I consider it my duty to take their place in this respect. Instead of the Orders being printed in both languages, we have them only printed in French, which is altogether irregular.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is economy.

COAL STRIKE IN THE WEST.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX, (Minister of Labour). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to give the House the latest news I have concerning the miners' strike at Fernie. I received late last night a telegram from Mr. MacKenzie King as follows:

Fernie, British Columbia, April 25, 1907.
Differing interpretation given to yesterday's proposition at conference to-day. Consequently failure to agree. Executive board now holding meeting with Fernie miners to have miners return work pending investigation. Will wire result later.

This morning I received the following telegram:

Fernie, British Columbia, April 26, 1907.
Sessions of week resulted owing to misunderstanding of Industrial Disputes Act. District executive having failed to agree with operators, have decided to advise miners to resume operations immediately. This advice has been accepted by Fernie men. Have reason to believe that operation will be resumed at all mines this district as soon as possible. Will refer all our disputes to investigation board, believing your government want to see justice to all parties.

POSTAL ACT AMENDMENT.

Amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 113) amending the Postal Act—Mr. Lemieux—read the first time.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX, (Postmaster General), moved second reading. He said: Section 4 of this Bill provided for the establishment of dead letter branches at Calgary and Edmonton. After further consideration with the officers of the department, we found that the development and expansion of the postal service, especially in the west, was so great that we should not confine ourselves to one or two places for the establishment of dead letter offices, but that it would be more practical to give the department power to establish dead letter branches at such places as the minister may designate. In so doing we shall follow the postal rules and establish such offices only according to the postal needs of the country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You continue Dawson as a dead letter office by statutory enactment. So far as Calgary, Edmonton and Winnipeg are concerned, you leave them to be dealt with by departmental regulations. Is that the fact?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The present law requires specific mention of the places where we want to establish dead letter branches, and in the statute there is a long list of such places. This year I proposed to establish such branches at Edmonton and Calgary, but after conferring with the officers of the department, I found that we had to establish such offices in so many places to suit the development of the country, that it would be better to enact a general rule authorizing the Postmaster General to establish a dead letter office at any place where the postal business requires it. Of course we shall follow the postal rules and only establish such offices where they are actually required.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not quite concur in the view my hon. friend takes. The result will be that about 25 per cent of the post offices will apply to be made dead letter branches.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend has himself told us that he was in receipt of continual applications

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think it better to leave it as it is. I can see no good reason why this should be made a matter of departmental regulation. It is surely of sufficient importance to entrust it to the Governor General in Council and to the Governor General in Council alone. The minister is at the head of the department and he is subject to claims, some of which will probably be rather absurd and yet he will not know very well how to resist them. As it is the statute seems to be in a rather curious condition, because you have Dawson established by statutory enactment, which can only be repealed by parliament, as a dead letter branch, if that is the proper expression, whereas Winnipeg, Calgary and Edmonton are not included in the statute.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Winnipeg is.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Calgary and Edmonton are not.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Calgary and Edmonton were intended to be and will be dead letter offices, but my officers say that the expansion in the west is so great that cities are growing from month to month in that section of the country——

Mr. FOSTER. That is absurd.

Mr. LEMIEUX——and they think it is better to leave it to the officers of the department to establish such branches according to the postal rules.

Motion agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES.

House proceeded to consider amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 131), to establish a Department of Mines.

Mr. FIELDING. The Senate have made some verbal amendments to this Act. In the first section, instead of the wording that was in the Bill as it left this House, 'the Department of Mines Act,' the citation is amended by the Senate to read 'the Geology and Mines Act.'

They also insert 'Resources and Industries' at the end of section 6, which refers to the duties assigned to the department in relation to the collection and preparation of exhibits illustrating our mining industry.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems a rather incongruous amendment; it is the Geology and Mines Act and yet the title of the Department of Mines has not been changed.

Mr. FIELDING. The title of the Bill has not been changed but the reference has been.

Amendments read the second time, and agreed to.

MARRIAGES OF YOUNG PEOPLE.

House in committee on Bill (No. 176) to empower the courts to declare certain marriages invalid.—Mr. Aylesworth.

On section 1,

Mr. LENNOX. I am not distinctly opposed to this Bill; I am simply in the position that I do not know, and I think there probably are a good many gentlemen in the committee in the same position. It is a decided departure from existing conditions, it is a very important question, nothing could be more important. I do not want to oppose the Bill unnecessarily, but I think it would be better, having regard to the vital importance of this question, that it should be left over until another session. It has been brought on hurriedly, the members have had no time to consider it, it has not been discussed in the press, the minister has introduced it, and the attention of the public will be drawn to it in the meantime, if it is allowed to stand over.

On section 2,

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that this Bill especially refers to one province. On reading the first clause it does not strike me as badly now as it did at first, but I do not see the provision confining it to any one province.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Perhaps my hon. friend has not noticed the sixth section.

Mr. LOUIS LAVERGNE. I would like to have this Bill postponed until another session because we have not time enough to study it. I have a special objection to it in that it is not printed in French, and we have a right to have it printed in French before it passes the House. If it passes, it should apply only to Ontario. I do not see that we have any need for the Bill in Quebec. I ask the Minister of Justice to be so kind as to limit his Bill to the province of Ontario.

Mr. BERGERON. I would remind my hon. friend that this Bill only applies to Ontario, and can only apply to other provinces when the legislatures of those provinces have adopted it. So I do not think there is any danger.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I explained yesterday in introducing this Bill that it was done at the instance and upon the wish of the members of the government of the province of Ontario. The Provincial Secretary of the province was here on Saturday last and a part of his business was to explain the special circumstances which have led to the passing of this measure by the Ontario legislature at its session which was prorogued on Saturday last. Hon. gentlemen possibly may not have noticed that this Bill contains six clauses, not five; the sixth clause, on the opposite page, provides that this Act is to apply to the province of Ontario when the legislation I have mentioned comes into force in that province, and it is to apply to any other province only when the legislature of such province provides that it shall do so. The reason and the only reason why the matter has been brought before this House at the present session is the circumstance that there is a doubt whether any province could, without supplementary legislation, lawfully enact a statute of this character. The province of Ontario has passed this Act containing a clause that it is not to come into force until it is proclaimed, the view being that if this parliament passed legislation in the same language, that is to say, passed this statute, the Ontario statute would then be proclaimed by the government and brought into force in that province. No other province would be affected unless and until it chose to pass legislation of the same character and so make it at all applicable. In these circumstances, and as there is one case at all events, the circumstances of which have given rise to this legislation, and as it is of course a matter of supreme importance, one might say, to the two people interested and to their families, it was thought that if there was no objection this legislation might be passed at this present session of parliament, late as it is. But certainly if any hon. gentlemen feel that this legislation is objectionable in principle, that it ought not to pass even in the province of Ontario, and even though the legislature of that province asks for it, it is in such a situation to-day that I feel the views of hon. gentlemen on such a matter ought to be recognized and that this Bill ought not to be pressed.

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN (Nicolet). I was rising a moment ago to express my hope that the Bill would not be pressed. My reason is that we have not the Bill in our hands at the present moment. I have tried to get a copy of the Bill in French; I could not, nor could I even get a copy of it in English. I understand a few copies of the Bill have been distributed to members sitting close to you, but the Bill has not reached this part of the House, and it is impossible for us to get it. I for one am not prepared either to support or to vote for a Bill which I have not read and which I have not studied. The subject is a very serious one. No doubt we are sorry to oppose anything that might be introduced by the Minister of Justice, and sorrier still to oppose any request from the province of Ontario. But this is a question that interests, not only the province of Ontario, but members coming from every part of the country. We who are Catholic members of this House take a deep interest in all questions of marriage, and we are not prepared to give a vote upon a question of that nature without knowing exactly what the Bill means. I must ask the Minister of Justice to drop this Bill, and therefore I move, seconded by Mr. Johnston, that the committee rise.

Mr. LOUIS LAVERGNE. I wish the House to understand that it is only on principle that I am opposed to this Bill.

Mr. M. MARTIN (St. Marie, Montreal). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to retain the attention of the House for more than one moment, but I wish to add my protest to that which was made by the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska (Mr. Lavergne) against the adoption of this Bill. I must say that, as a Catholic, I am opposed to the principle of this Bill itself, and I may add that, having not had the advantage of examining the Bill, because it has not been printed in French, I would ask the hon. Minister of Justice that it be put off till next session, for further inquiry.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN (Wright). Hon. members of the House will readily understand that the Catholics of this country are opposed to divorce on principle; they cannot, according to the teachings of their religion, give a vote on any question dealing with divorce. But I go further than that, and regarding the Bill from other than a Catholic standpoint, I feel that if it were to become law and become effective, say in the province of Quebec, it would lead to all kinds and species of litigation. We have in the province of Quebec our established laws respecting marriage, different from certain others. We have our laws respecting separation of property and our laws respecting separation from bed and board. In the province of Quebec the lowest age for marriage is fixed at 12 and 14 years; so that until the laws respecting civil statutes of the parties in that province, and until the laws respecting marriage in that province, are changed or amended, I do not see how this House could pass legislation which would in any way affect the status of married people in the province of Quebec. I ask the Minister of Justice, therefore, as one coming from the province of Quebec, to reconsider this Bill, not to press it upon us at the present session, because we, although willing to support the government in all its measures, would be forced to oppose this measure. It would be well for him to take advice from the legal gentlemen of the province of Quebec respecting the marriage laws of that province, and to inquire how it will affect the laws of that province apart from all questions of religion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. From the tenor of the hon. gentleman's remarks he does not seem to realize that the Bill has not the slightest application to the province of Quebec.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN (Wright). I understand it can be made to apply to the province of Quebec and in that event it will affect Quebec.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It can be made to apply to the province of Quebec only by Act of the legislature of that province, in that and no other way. In that respect it follows exactly the principle of the Bill passed in this House about four years ago, a Bill introduced at the instance of Dr. Roddick, with regard to the medical profession. At the instance of hon. gentlemen in the province of Quebec, and with the unanimous approval of the House, a provision was inserted that that Bill should have no force until it was approved by the legislatures of the different provinces. This Bill is founded on exactly the same principle. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken seems to consider that it affects the question of divorce. It does not touch the question of divorce at all. It touches the question of the solemnization of marriage and where the solemnization of marriage has not been carried out in accordance with the law and where there has been no consummation of the marriage, it does not declare the marriage void, as I think the legislature of the province would have the right to do, but it declares that it shall be committed to the courts of the province to determine whether or not the marriage was void.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN. In every part of the Catholic world the Catholic view is this—and that is why we must hold to that position—that the courts of the land have no right but that the Catholic church alone can declare for Catholics whether the essentials of the marriage had existed and whether the marriage has really taken place. It is not a matter for the courts to annul a marriage or to declare it void.

Mr. SPROULE. That is to deny the right of the state in a matter of civil contract.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN. That is the position. I am speaking for Catholics.

Mr. BERGERON. I raised that question yesterday because I had not seen the Bill, I did not know what it was and it struck me that it might be dangerous. But, having read the Bill, so far as I am concerned, and I think I am just as good a Holy Roman Catholic as the hon. member for Wright (Mr. E. B. Devlin) or the hon. member for Nicolet (Mr. C. Devlin)——

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN. Better.

Mr. BERGERON—I do not want to be looked upon as one who, from the province of Quebec, will prevent a law from passing this House which will benefit another province and which does not do any harm to my own province. If this Bill is good for Ontario it is not a childish demand. It must be a serious one when the Minister of Justice, in compliance with the wish of the province of Ontario, has introduced a Bill. In this Bill he has inserted a clause providing that it does not affect my province at all unless the local legislature of Quebec declares it to be in force there. I have no objection to the Bill passing and I would be sorry that our province would endeavour to prevent a Bill from passing this House which might be for the benefit of another province and which would not affect our province at all.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN. No, but it affects your fellow-Catholics in Ontario.

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand it, from what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) has said, it is simply in this position; Ontario, as each province, has a perfect right to make laws in reference to the solemnization of marriage. The province of Ontario passed a law in reference to the subject which was its undoubted right. It is essential in matters of that kind that there should be no doubt at all cast upon the legislation. There is some doubt and Ontario comes to this Dominion parliament and asks the Dominion parliament to pass such legislation as shall remove all doubt so that the powers of the province in reference to the solemnization of marriage may have complete control in their own province. I am not going to stand up as a member from any other province, or as a member of any other church and, because my scruples or the tenets of my church are not in accord with the general principle, deny to a province, the great majority of whom do not belong to that church and who have no such religious doctrines as that, the exercise of their civil powers. I think we must be pretty careful how far we press these things. Reasonably a man must have his own religious belief and nobody has the right to break within the pale of it, but we are in a different position when we are legislating for this Dominion and for provinces in which undoubted civil rights are vested and in which the only thing they ask is that all possible doubt may be removed in a matter of this kind. We must be very careful I think that we do not go too far with our personal or even with our religious scruples when we try to translate these into the legislation of the country. We have to give and take in this Dominion. I know a great many people who had strong views in reference to the Lord's Day Act. The Lord's Day Act was brought down in this House and the government itself planted both feet on a principle and declared that it should be a uniform Act with the same power and application in every province, but, in reference largely to the province of Quebec which had different customs and different legislation in reference to that subject, we agreed that it should really become operative in the province only on the will of the province as shown through their properly constituted authorities. Men who had very strong views in reference to the observance of the Lord's Day might have got up and protested very strongly against that for the general good of the country in accordance with their own well held principles, but it would have been rather arbitrary and after it was considered the legislation was framed in that way. It seems to me that we have no right here unless the legislation is altogether vicious and unless we are prepared to withhold from the provinces their full rights, to deny that right in this parliament from a scruple personally held or held as a matter of religious belief.

Mr. TALBOT. Would not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) think that under the circumstances it would be better to postpone the passing of this Bill?

Mr. FOSTER. As the Minister of Justice has brought it to us as a matter of some urgency in a particular case and as it has been passed by the legislature of Ontario, I do not see what we are to gain by delay while, on the other hand, if the Bill is a proper one a wrong might continue that it might never be possible to remedy.

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Foster) read us a lesson on toleration——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) has the floor.

Mr. LENNOX. I was unable to get a copy of the Bill until a few minutes ago, but after seeing the Bill and hearing the explanation from the Minister of Justice and of others, I see that the Bill does not go nearly as far as I thought it did. Among other things it is provided :

> Nothing herein shall apply where, after the ceremony there has occurred that which, if a valid marriage had taken place, would have been a consummation of the marriage.

There is a saving clause as regards the various provinces. I do not now see that there is any objection in our concurring in the Act of the province of Ontario. I spoke a few moments ago as to the probability that it might be better for us to delay it, but after having seen the Bill I do not think there is any necessity for delay.

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was very severe in his remarks with respect to some who had spoken from this side and I think very unjust—exceedingly unjust.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the hon. gentleman say?

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. I say that I think the hon. gentleman was exceedingly unjust in the manner in which he twisted the remarks from this side—very unjust.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman tell me in what way I twisted them? If I twisted them, and if he will show me how I twisted them, I will untwist them. I do not desire to twist the remarks of any one.

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. The hon. gentleman has had a good deal of twisting in his career.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I made the hon. gentleman a manly request. He complained to me that I misrepresented him. I asked him as a member of parliament to say where I misrepresented him. I do not desire to misrepresent him. If I have misrepresented him I will make proper amends. But let him show where I have misrepresented him.

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), in the course of his remarks, said that we must understand that we are living in a country in which different religious denominations exist and that we must give as well as take. What inference is possible from such a remark but that we refuse to give as well as take? I would like to know from the hon. gentleman when we have so refused. Again he took the position that we were trying to deny to the province of Ontario a certain right because we come from another province. Sir, we never took that position. When I moved that the committee rise, I simply said that I had not the Bill in my hand, and claimed the right to refuse to vote upon a measure which had not been placed before me and which I had no opportunity to study. I have this moment received a copy of the Bill, but I have not had time to read it, and certainly I am not going to vote on a Bill that I have had no time to read and study. When I stated a moment ago that I was a Catholic, and, as a Catholic I would like to study this Bill before giving a vote upon it, I knew what I was saying. I was not speaking out of mere bigotry. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) knows how serious every phase of this question of marriage is to the church to which many members of this House besides myself belong. This Bill does not affect the province of Quebec—I admit that. But it does affect the province of Ontario, and in Ontario there are Catholics as well as Protestants, and this Bill will affect Catholics as well as Protestants. When we offer our objection to the Bill, therefore, we have good grounds for doing so. It was not that the Bill was desired by the province of Ontario; it was not because we were opposed to the ideas of Protestants with respect to marriage. Our thoughts are very far from these, and the hon. gentleman has no right to try to cause this House and this country to draw such inference concerning us as the only one which can be drawn from his remarks. I moved that the committee rise. I did it for the reason that I have just explained—that we have not had a moment to study the Bill. We would like to have an expression of opinion from Ontario and those with whom we are connected in that province, and who, as residents of Ontario, will be affected by this Bill. Further as the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska (Mr. L. Lavergne), stated, this Bill is not printed in French. The French members of the House have not had an opportunity to study the Bill. On this ground I must press my motion.

Mr. LANCASTER. I understand that the motion is that the committee rise, and that this will have the effect of postponing the Bill for this session?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have not pronounced on that question. The Bill is not printed in French. That point I would leave to Mr. Speaker, who would naturally rule that the Bill could not be proceeded with, because it is not printed in French. The motion is that the committee rise, which if carried, would have the effect of stopping further proceedings on the Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think that this Bill, even if we were not embarrassed by the fact that it has not been printed in both languages, ought not to be dealt with at this late hour of the session. It is a serious matter to interfere with the marital rights of young or old. I represent a constituency in Ontario, and I am not prepared at this moment to vote on the very serious questions involved in this Bill. Without saying whether or not, six months hence, after due consideration, I would vote for this Bill, I think that none of us are prepared at this moment to pronounce on the very serious questions involved. For that reason, I shall vote for the motion.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Possibly, in view of the observations of the hon. member for Wright (Mr. E. B. Devlin), I ought to say, with regard to the position of the Bill upon the government orders, that it is placed there in the circumstances I have described—placed there at the request of the government of Ontario and because it was considered, in the special circumstances of one case at all events in the province, a matter of urgency that it should be passed at the present session. But, certainly, in this matter, as I understand it, whether the Bill should be gone on with during the present session or not, the hon. member for Wright or any other member who has confidence in the government and who is found ordinarily supporting the government is in no sense, under any obligation to vote otherwise upon this measure than as he individually may see fit. It is not, in any other sense than I have described, a government measure. It is upon the government orders simply because in the urgent circumstances and upon the request I have described from the government of Ontario that was the only way in which it could be brought up for consideration during this session ; and this was thought to be only an ordinary courtesy extended to the members of that government by the members of this government.

Mr. TALBOT. May I ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) if, in the particular case he refers to a divorce has not been granted for the relief of the parties ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am told that there has been no proceeding of any kind for divorce, and the urgency which at present exists in the particular case before us arises from the circumstance that the parties will have attained the age of nineteen years before another session of this parliament ; and the provision of this legislation in the Ontario statute is that, to obtain relief, the parties must apply before they reach the age of nineteen.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN. May I ask the Minister of Justice if it is not true that in Ontario it is necessary to get the consent of the parents in the case of minors marrying ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is the very difficulty. Here are two young people under the age of eighteen, who perhaps with some foolish idea that it was rather a joke to go through the ceremony of marriage, have gone through that ceremony without the consent of their parents. Are they married or are they not ? The statute of Ontario declares that the consent of the parents is necessary where the parties contracting the obligations of matrimony are under the age of eighteen.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN. And your courts have no power——

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The courts will have no power to deal with the question unless that power is given by legislation.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does the minister intend to press this Bill ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I intend so far as I am personally concerned, to vote against the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. BRODER. I understand the minister to say that this Bill is really for the relief of the parties in one particular case which he has in mind. If that be so, why not bring in a Bill mentioning their names, and not a Bill to apply to people generally ? Why not deal with the case on its merits ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is a matter for the parties interested. I may say that, when the subject was brought to my attention, that was the very suggestion I made to them—that they should present a private Bill.

Mr. J. D. REID. Now that the government have decided to press this Bill, I wish to say, that so far as I am concerned, I am strongly opposed to it, and am prepared to say here and fight it, no matter how long it lasts. The very fact of bringing the Bill down at this late hour of the session, a Bill which will be so important to so many people, is an outrage upon this parliament. Only a few days ago we had the Ontario government making complaint that private legislation was brought in at such a late date that we had no time to properly consider it. And now the Ontario government come and ask us to pass this Bill at this time. I think it is unfair. From what the Minister of Justice states, it would seem that this Bill is brought in really to meet a certain particular case. I for one would not hesitate to pass a Bill for the relief of these two parties, and I think that would be the proper course in cases of this kind. We claim to have in this country one of the best systems in the world in regard to divorce, and this, I believe, is the first step towards introducing a system into this country which will result in immorality. So far as I am concerned, if there are members of this House willing to stay with me and fight this Bill, I will stay and fight it, and I am a member from the province of Ontario, and I believe I am speaking for many people in that province. I hope and trust that the Minister of Justice will not grant this Bill. I think it is an outrage for the government to bring it down at this late stage of the session.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The hon. gentleman speaks of the government being guilty of an outrage in bringing in this Bill. It is not in any sense of the word a government Bill at all. It was brought to us at a late stage of the session, and representations were made to us that it was of so urgent a character that there would probably be no objection to it. For that reason we consented to have it brought up. At this stage of the session it had to be placed on government orders, and only in that technical sense can it be regarded as a government Bill. I myself regret that divorce cases have to come here at all. It is a great pity that we cannot have divorce courts to deal with them ; but I recognize that on that point I am not in accord with many of my fellow citizens. However, in view of the objections raised to the Bill, in view of the fact that it probably could not be passed in any case this session, in view of the fact that it is not printed in French and would be objected to on that ground, for all these reasons, I will support the motion of the hon. member for Nicolet, that the committee rise, and do not proceed any further.

Motion agreed to, and committee rose.

SUPPLY—THE PUBLIC EXPENDITURE.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.) Mr. Speaker, some of the time which I intended to devote to the consideration of the public expenditure of this country has already been occupied in the discussion of the motion which has just now resulted in the defeat of the government. Therefore it will be necessary for me at this stage of the session very greatly to curtail my remarks. I desire to point out, in the first place, that the public expenditure of this country has increased at an enormous rate during the past ten years. No one would say that the expenditure might not have properly increased during that time; but what I do desire to point out is that a very considerable portion of that expenditure has been due, not to the increasing development of the country, but to extravagant and unsystematic methods of this government. We have from time to time, especially during the past few sessions, brought to light in the Committee on Public Accounts transactions such as that known as the Moncton land deal, in which the government has paid out of the public treasury a profit—an unnecessary, foolish and absurd profit—of $8,000 on a transaction involving the purchase of $14,000 worth of land. I will not go over many of these transactions. Let me refer to another—the expenditure in connection with the Arctic expedition. In that case not only did the Conservative minority in the Committee of Public Accounts, but the Liberal majority as well, report to this House that tobacco, which could have been purchased by this government at sixty-seven cents a pound, had been paid for at $1.34 a pound. From that day to the present we have not had one word of explanation from the minister in charge of the department concerned, nor from any other member of the government, as to why the government saw fit to pay that unnecessary absurd and fraudulent price for that article. In the same inquiry it was demonstrated beyond a doubt that $10,000 had been paid out of the public treasury for 8,000 pounds of pemmican, which could have been supplied by one of the largest and most reliable firms of this country for $2,800.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? The people who said they could supply that said that at the same time that they never made pemmican.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know that there is very much force in that observation, since it was also shown that what is called pemmican is merely a fancy name given to an article made out of shredded beef, currants and some fatty substance, none of which would cost $1.25 a pound, nor one-fourth of that, nor anything like it. So that I do not see that there is any great force in the objection of my hon. friend. But what happened was this, that certain gentlemen made up this substance and called it pemmican, and they might as well have called it something else——

An hon. MEMBER. Mince meat.

Mr. FOSTER. Hash.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, they might as well have called it mince meat or hash—and sold it to this government for $1.25 a pound.

Mr. MACPHERSON. My hon. friend is unfair, because the people who supplied it swore positively to the contrary.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What did they swear to the contrary?

Mr. MACPHERSON. That as a matter of fact, it was not manufactured as my hon. friend suggests or as was suggested by the expert brought by the Conservative members of the committee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How was it manufactured?

Mr. MACPHERSON. I am not going into that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The zeal of my hon. friend considerably outruns his discretion. It was stated by an expert in the employ of the firm to which I allude that this firm would have been prepared to put up exactly that article, packed in the same way, and delivered at any place in Canada, for thirty-five cents a pound, and in doing that would have made a fair and reasonable profit.

Mr. JOHNSTON. There is absolutely nothing in the evidence given to bear out the language of the hon. leader of the opposition.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, now my hon. friend from Cape Breton has come to the rescue, and we will see whether or not his efforts will be any more successful. It is perfectly true that although this inquiry was closed three weeks before the end of that session, the Liberal majority on the committee refused to examine that witness, who was in attendance on the committee for that purpose. The hon. member is to be congratulated on bringing that fact to the attention of the House. But it is also true that that gentleman made a declaration, having all the force and solemnity of an oath, and for which, if it were untrue, he could be punished in the criminal courts of this country, in which he set out exactly the facts I have stated, and I have his affidavit under my hand if my hon. friend from Cape Breton desires to controvert it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The evidence will controvert it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does my hon. friend deny that the affidavit to which I refer contains the statement to which I have alluded ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I deny the language used by the hon. leader of the opposition a short time ago, when he said that certain gentlemen offered to supply pemmican.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I said they were prepared to do so, and that the gentleman I refer to had stated that they were so prepared. I shall read his affidavit.

Mr. BERGERON. Why did they not ask for tenders ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. That is another question.

Mr. CONMEE. The idea of asking for tenders for pemmican. That is not practicable.

Mr. BERGERON. Not with that government.

Mr. CONMEE. Or any government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In order to set at rest any doubt on the subject in the minds of my hon. friends, who seem somewhat disturbed over this particular case, let me quote the solemn declaration to which I have referred :

In the matter of the 'Arctic' investigation into the supplies purchased for the 'Arctic,' under reference to a special committee of the House of Commons, by a resolution in the House of Commons, on May 18, 1906 :

I, Léon Constant Van Bever, of the city of Toronto, in the county of York, manager of the Canadian departments of the William Davies Company, Limited, do solemnly declare :

1. I have been for a number of years engaged in the manufacture of meat products, including meat extracts, such as fluid beef, solid extract of beef, beef cordial, powdered, dried and fresh beef and various products made therefrom.

2. I have examined a sample of the pemmican (so-called), furnished for the 'Arctic' expedition, and the firm with which I am connected would be pleased to furnish to the government, or any institution, or individual, an article similar and equal in quality to such sample in lots of 1,000 pounds or over, packed in ten pound tins, boxed, strapped and ready for shipment, freight prepaid, to any railway station in Canada at the price of thirty-five cents per pound.

3. My said company have been willing to supply the same article at the same price at any time during the year 1904.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

L. C. VAN BEVER.

Declared before me at the city of Ottawa, in the county of Carleton, this 26th day of June, A.D. 1906.

L. M. BURBIDGE,
Notary public for Ontario.

That is the document to which I have alluded. It is perfectly true that the witness was not examined before the committee, but that was due to the fact that although the session had still about three weeks to run, the committee decided they had not the time to examine him.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Decided unanimously.

Mr. NORTHUP. Does the hon. gentleman say unanimously ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. Yes, let me say exactly what took place. My hon. friend was the gentleman himself who moved that the committee should rise and report and we accepted his motion ; and after having moved that, the next day he said : We will open it up again. He knows that to be the fact.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman has taken up about one-third of my time already and perhaps he will restrain his enthusiasm now, and I will get through in about ten or fifteen minutes. I did not intend really to have spoken so long, but as those gentlemen seem to have a somewhat slippery recollection of the facts, it is necessary to remind them of what actually took place.

I would like to refer also to the Merwin contract, and I trust it will not have the same exciting effect on my two hon. friends who are seated side by side. However, I must take the risk of that. In the case of Merwin, this government saw fit to pay that gentleman a little over $18,000 for articles which he purchased for a little less than $12,000. There was no reason why the government should not have purchased these articles themselves for the sum of $12,000. There was no reason why the Department of Marine and Fisheries should not have taken that course. It was not taken, and the net result was that Mr. Merwin put into his pocket a little over 50 per cent profit, simply because he acted as middleman and went to the manufacturers or wholesale dealers who supplied these articles and placed with them that order of the government. I need not go into other transactions which have been explained before the Public Accounts Committee and in this House, such as the outrageous alienations of the public domain, for example, the Saskatchewan land deal, the Roblin land deal. But let me mention that transaction which was discussed not long ago in this House, and which resulted in placing in the hands of the gentleman, who was the Liberal candidate in the last general election for the division of Alberta, the town site of Blairmore, valued now by political friends of hon. gentlemen opposite at $200,000. This fortunate gentleman acquired that property, although the only possible claim he had to it was absolutely tainted with fraud as proven by the report of the referee to whom the transaction was referred for investigation. The government had three alternatives before it. They had first the alternative, manifestly in the interests of the country, of retaining that property as a town site to be offered for sale at a moderate upset price to persons in that vicinity. They had the second alternative of transferring the property to the man who had made application for it and had made the first permanent settlement on it and whose conduct was not tainted with fraud. And they had the third alternative of handing over to a political supporter upon a claim absolutely tainted with fraud, that property worth $200,000, and they did not hesitate for a moment to adopt this third alternative. It is by transactions such as these that certain gentlemen in this country have grown very prosperous during the past eight or ten years. We hear a good deal about the prosperity of the country from hon. gentlemen opposite, but not so much about the prosperity of some of their political friends; and perhaps it will be well one of these days to make a few comments on matters of that kind when we hear this prosperity spoken of so much.

Let us look at the way the estimates and expenditures have grown during the past ten years. I have before me a memo. of the estimates which were brought down to parliament by this government in the session of 1897. They relate to the fiscal year 1897-8 and they amount altogether to the sum of $47,868,798. I have under my hand a memo. of the total estimates brought down to parliament during the present session, and I find that, including the small amount of $77,000 or thereabouts brought down last night, the estimates of this year foot up to no less a sum than $118,813,179. That is the estimates alone, because when we add to that certain other expenditures proposed to be authorized by parliament this session. we find that the total grows to a very much greater sum. As that total is fully set out in the resolution I propose to move and as I desire to fulfil my promise of not taking up any unnecessary time, or even the time necessary to debate the subject—because to debate it properly would take all the time still available if we are to prorogue this week—I shall simply place the resolution I have to offer before the House namely:

That all the words after the word 'that' be left out and the following substituted therefor:

The enormous and rapidly increasing expenditure by the present administration is a matter of grave concern to parliament and to the people;

That the expenditure authorized and the liabilities incurred at the present session are as follows:

Main estimates		$105,689 519
Supplementary estimates		10,941,555
Further supplementary estimates		77,050
Minor items—
Judiciary, new	$50,000
Jamaica fund	50,000
		100,000
Bounties (estimated)		2,500,000
Nicolet bridge subsidy		15,000
		119,323,124
To which must be added supplementary estimates for over-expenditure in 1906		2,105,105
		121,428,229
Railway subsidies (from $3,500,000 to $7,000,000, according to cost of construction) say		5,000,000
		126,428,229
In addition the following loans have been authorized:
Quebec bridge		6,678,200
Montreal harbour		3,000,000
		136,106,429

That this sum is equivalent to about $22 for every inhabitant of Canada, or $110 for every family of five persons;

That the taxation (customs and inland revenue duties) has increased from $27,759,285 in 1896 to $60,074,818 in 1906, and the per capita tax has increased from $5.46 in 1896 to more than $10 in 1906;

That the public assets have been depleted and the public expenditure has been largely and unnecessarily increased by reason of the unsystematic, improvident and extravagant methods of the present administration which, while denying certain legitimate requirements of the public service, lend themselves to the aggrandizement of designing partisan intriguers who are thus enabled to enrich themselves at the expense of the people.

That the disclosures in the Committee on Public Accounts during the present and past sessions continually demonstrate that large sums of public money are misapplied in providing for middlemen absurd and unnecessary profits, which can have been allowed only in the expectation that recipients will in turn provide funds for party purposes.

That recent disclosures have exposed frauds in elections, which frauds could not have been successfully carried out without the expenditure of large sums of money and the aid of such middlemen.

That this House desires to place on record its strong condemnation of the maladministration and corruption thus brought to light.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I welcome the motion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) as an old and familiar friend.

Mr. FOSTER. Largely grown.

Mr. FIELDING. These are growing times. The evidence of growth, in contrast with the evidences of that which was not grown for a certain period of former times, naturally arouses the jealousy of my hon. friends opposite. It will be in the recollection of those members who have been sitting in this House for several parliamentary terms that year after year, when my hon. friends were approaching the conclusion of a session, they deemed it necessary to frame a motion of this kind. They gathered from the estimates and from all other statements and resolutions, from every possible source, all the appropriations that were made, and, if there was any doubt, they gave themselves the benefit of the doubt; they gathered them all and rolled them into a huge lump and said: See this vast expenditure you are entering upon! See the tremendous risk the country is taking! See the financial disasters that are sure to follow! And then we solemnly debated the resolution, the year was closed, the public accounts were made up, and as often as they made their dire predictions, just as often, at the close of the year, there came down the very satisfactory statement that the country was prospering and that the finances were flourishing. One is reminded of the very old fable of the boy and the wolf. Year after year my hon. friends are telling us all the dreadful things which are going to happen, but they never do happen; and if, at last, the wolf should come, I am afraid that my hon. friends by that time will have so tired out the public with motions of this kind that the public will not believe them, even although the wolf may be likely to come.

Mr. BERGERON. There will be nothing for him to eat.

Mr. FIELDING. With regard to the general charges of corruption in my hon. friend's resolution, he is old enough in public affairs to know that general charges of that character have no weight with the public, and he is also old enough to know that there is no reason why this government and the Liberal party need fear comparison with the governments of former days on questions of that character. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) has referred to several things in passing as evidences of wrong-doing and corruption. For example, he talks about the land transactions. Any transaction in regard to immigration and to the lands of the Northwest naturally aroused the curiosity and the envy and the jealousy of my hon. friends opposite, because one thing they know has been strongly impressed upon the public mind of Canada, which they would rather would not be impressed on the public mind, and that is whereas in former years, though vast sums of money were spent in the development of the Northwest, there was a condition almost of stagnation when they went out of power in 1896, while under the administration of this government, under the vigorous administration of the Department of the Interior, there has been such a development of that Northwest country as has made Canada known better than ever before throughout the wide world. When the hon. gentlemen look upon that record and compare it with the record of their own times, we must allow them surely the privilege of doing a little grumbling, a little complaining, that this or that other transaction was not as they could have wished it. The prosperity of the Northwest has been due to the vigorous administration of the Department of the Interior. The very land transactions to which these hon. gentlemen have referred from time to time have been but the instruments whereby people have been brought into the Northwest, the country has been opened up and its prosperity developed in a much larger degree than ever before.

My hon. friend had something to say about the 'Arctic.' That is another case in which the hon. gentlemen find that they have made charges that could not be sustained. What was the charge in the 'Arctic' case? The allegation was, as appears from the public records, that goods had been charged against that ship which never went on board, that there was a gross fraud, that the ship could not carry the goods charged up in the public accounts as having been placed on board her. That was the 'Arctic' charge, and it was to investigate that that the committee was appointed. When the investigation took place it was shown that the charge was absolutely groundless, and that every dollar's worth of goods charged went into that ship. Whether they were wisely purchased or not is another matter of debate, but every dollar of goods mentioned went on board the ship, and therefore the charge to investigate which the committee was appointed was absolutely groundless. Then, failing in their purpose on the main charge, and, in order to cover their defeat, they began to inquire whether a few pounds of tobacco had been bought at the cheapest price or not. The people of Canada are reasonable in all these things; the people of Canada know that in the transaction of a vast business, extending over this tremendous territory, with thousands of officials employed, where the public business can only be carried on by giving a large measure of confidence to the men placed in authority in the various departments, it is utterly impossible that every dollar of expenditure can be closely scanned, and I should not be surprised if at any time some hon. gentleman, who is particularly critical, like my hon. friend for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), occasionally, over the price of a bushel of potatoes or something of that sort, should produce evidence of occasional high prices —I expect they will always find some ground on which they can complain. I fancy there never will be a time when some hon. gentleman will not be able to stand up in this House and, with the Auditor General's Report in his hand, say: I see you bought a barrel of potatoes at $1.50, and I can prove that some one bought them in another part of Canada for $1.25. It will always happen. My hon. friends nearly caused trouble for one of their own friends the other day by these criticisms. Allusions were made to the purchase of supplies of a certain article at a certain price. I happened to meet a gentleman interested in the manufacture of that article, and he said jokingly: I will have to make trouble with the people who complain; the fact is that we get from other customers a great deal more than the government pay; you will get us in trouble; you will cause our customers to complain that we are selling to you at too low a rate. In all seriousness, I say the public are not going to be led away by charges of that nature. In the vast expenditure of the Dominion, of the hundred and odd millions of which my hon. friend speaks, that we are voting to-day, naturally there will be here and there a case of perhaps unwise expenditure, an occasional case where some expenditure may not be absolutely honest, where there may be some official who fails to do his duty. We have no expectation of a system of human government whereby perfection can be obtained. But I say that these things are all drops in the bucket. Take all the expenditures to which the hon. gentlemen have called attention, and they are but trifles as against the vast expenditure of the Dominion, and if that is the best indictment the hon. gentlemen can offer, it is a testimony to the vigourous and careful administration of this government.

With regard to the amounts of these expenditures, I have not checked over my hon. friend's figures, but I take it for granted they are substantially correct.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think they are quite correct.

Mr. FIELDING. I assume they are. I observe my hon. friend is not content with taking the ordinary appropriations of the year but he takes everything that it is possible to take, everything that is in sight, everything that is not nailed. He takes the appropriations for the ordinary works, he takes the appropriations for capital account, he takes the appropriations for railway subsides, he takes the appropriations for everything that can be thought of. Well, that is all legitimate enough as a statement of the appropriations of the year, but it is apt to convey a very misleading impression; it is apt to convey the impression that it is proposed to expend these moneys within the year. Now, as respects a considerable part of these moneys, they are not expended within the year and are not likely to be expended for several years. There are millions in that vote to which my hon. friend refers, which have been included in his calculation two or three times. Take the railway subsidies. We are voting not one dollar of new railway subsidies this session, but a revote of appropriations of former years. They have appeared in the calculations of my hon. friend, they have appeared in his budget of gloom at the close of each session; but they were not expended, they never added a dollar to the obligations of the Dominion of Canada. But now that they are being revoted they afford an opportunity to my hon. friend to include them again in his budget. I am afraid some of them will turn up in future years and he will be able to include them again, because it is quite likely that a number of these expenditures will not be made within an early time, though we would be pleased if they were. If we could be assured that every mile of these railways would be built within the next four years, far from complaining, we would be pleased to have it so, because it would make for the general improvement and development of the country. But we know as a matter of fact these railway subsidies, placed as they have to be in the hands of railway companies, very often have to be voted again and again. Therefore, I do not think that my hon. friend is likely to alarm the country by his references to the magnitude of the expenditures, having regard to the fact that a large portion of these expenditures are not likely to be incurred in the early future.

Now, the expenditures of Canada have grown to a very large volume, and it is the fashion of my hon. friend to compare them from time to time with the expenditures of former years. Well, these comparisons are legitimate enough, provided that due regard is had to the changed conditions of the country. The Canada of to-day with which we are dealing is a very different Canada from that of ten years ago. It is not fair to make comparisons of former expenditures with those of the present day without reference to the vast change which has come over the condition of the country. In the matter of revenue, ten years ago the revenue was thirty-six millions and a half, in round numbers; last year, with a reduced rate of taxation, with a lower tariff than the hon. gentlemen had, with a tariff which most of them say is too low, —but with a reduced rate of taxation in the customs tariff we have a revenue of eighty million dollars as against their thirty-six million and a half. Now, if that increased revenue had been brought about as a result of a higher tariff, and if we had taken more money from time to time out of the pockets of the people by a higher tariff rate of taxation, then there would be some reason to complain. But this increased revenue which hon. gentlemen occasionally parade as an increase of taxation is but the evidence of the growing and improving conditions of the people. It is an evidence of the fact that in the great prosperity that has come to Canada during the last ten years the people are better off, they are able to buy more goods. They are not taxed in a way that is a burden to them; they are taxed at lower rates than before. But they are able, out of their greater prosperity, to buy more goods and to contribute more liberally to the revenue. So, without increasing the burden of taxation, but rather with a reduction of that burden, we have this splendid revenue of eighty million dollars as compared with only thirty-six and a half ten years ago.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the taxation per head in 1890, and what is it now ?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not the figures, but I will give the hon. gentleman the benefit of his argument, whatever he makes it. The question is this : Which was the better condition of the average man of Canada, that of ten years ago when he paid a little less per head, or the condition to-day when, out of his greater employment, and his higher wages, and his greater prosperity, he is able to enjoy comforts and luxuries of life which were denied to him in the days of yore ? Now, I will take as an illustration again the total trade of the country. These are things which measure the changing conditions of the country. In the year 1896, ten years ago, we had a total trade of $239,000,000 ; in the year 1906, ten years later, the total trade had grown to almost $551,000,000. What is the use of comparing, in these financial matters, the expenditure of to-day with the expenditure of ten years ago, if you do not take into account the tremendous change which has come over the condition of the people ? Here is another point. If my memory serves me right, the whole increase in the total trade of Canada during the eighteen years the Conservative government were in power, amounted to about $66,500,000. I think I am correct in that. We have not yet completed the returns for the fiscal term just closed—but so far as we can make the calculation and get the information, subject to a few corrections, we find that in the nine months of this last period the increase was $65,500,000, whereas it was $66,500,000 in the whole eighteen years of the Conservative government. Need we talk of the other figures, the increase in the wealth of the people as shown by deposits in the banks, both in the chartered banks and the savings banks, the discounts, all the things which go to make up the evidence of the prosperity of the country ?

Then take the matter of immigration. I refer to it again only as a reminder that in the period to which my hon. friend sometimes refers with so much pride, though they spent a great deal of money on immigration, it was not always well spent. Many people came that did not seem to stay here, for whenever the population was counted we discovered that the rate of progress was very small indeed. Now, there has been during the last few years a tremendous immigration into Canada, and everybody I am sure is gratified therewith. From 1896 to the end of February last the number of immigrants brought into Canada was nearly one million. Now, in connection with this, let me give you an interesting fact. The statistical documents of the United States represent that the citizens of the United States born in Canada number about 740,000. There are many others no doubt who were born in other places and who passed through Canada. But the statistics show that the number of Canadian born citizens in the United States is 740,000. I do not know whether I should rely too much on these, I thought the number was larger. But if the figures are correct, then we find that in the last ten years we have brought into the Dominion of Canada from abroad not only a number equal to every Canadian born citizen who lives in the United States, but a very much larger number; we have brought in nearly a million people. I am rather surprised that the figures showed that result. My impression was that the number of Canadian born citizens in the United States was larger than that.

Then we may turn to other questions relating to the finances of the country. The tenor of my hon. friend's speech and of his resolution would be to alarm the financial people if they did not take pains to look more closely into the conditions of the country. Now, we know that year after year, while my hon. friend was presenting this gloomy outlook, the country was in fact in the most flourishing financial state of any colony in the empire. I do not need to weary the House by going over the figures. My hon. friends know that when they managed the affairs of the country—although it was not entirely their fault, they had good and bad times like everybody else—we know that their financial statements were by no means as satisfactory as they could desire. We know that during the whole period of our administration, notwithstanding the annual attack they have made upon our expenditure, we have been able every year to present a very strong statement as to Canada's affairs, a strong statement with regard to her revenue, a strong statement with regard to her public credit, a strong statement with regard to her debt. It would not be a marvellous thing if Canada largely increased her debt in these times of great activity. But the truth is that during the whole period of the administration of this government, when the figures come to be made up at the close of this fiscal period ending the 31st of March, I believe it will be shown that there has been a very trifling increase in the public debt; I believe it will be found that on the average, for the ten or eleven years, if we count the last year as one, it will be shown that on the whole the increase to the net debt of Canada will not average more than three or four hundred thousand dollars, as against an average of six million and a half dollars for every year my Conservative friends were in power.

Now, Sir, in face of the records of the public accounts, in the face of the prosperity which Canada has enjoyed, in the face of the splendid credit she has as compared with any other colony of the world, we think that our hon. friends need not expect to alarm the public mind by these annual motions. We quite realize that the expenditure has grown. But, after all, it is scarcely a graceful thing for them to attack us for the volume of our expenditure. If we were to take seriously all they say in this House, if the conditions were reversed, if these gentlemen were here and I and my friends were there, and I had to make a similar motion to this I would be able to include not $119,000,000, but probably twice that as the probable expenditure and obligations of the Conservative government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FIELDING. Ah, well; the only reason why it will not be so is that hon. gentlemen may not be serious when they say certain things.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the convention of 1893?

Mr. FIELDING. Last night we were discussing the civil service and almost every gentleman who spoke on that side of the House declared that we should increase the civil service salaries in Canada.

Mr. LENNOX. Only one gentleman spoke against it.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is wrong. Who is the one?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. member for King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler) distinctly repudiated the contention of the government that the salaries of the civil service should be increased.

Mr. FIELDING. The night before the hon. member for King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler) on that side dissented and the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) on this side dissented, but every other member who has spoken on the opposite side of the House has spoken in favour of increasing the pay of the public officials.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. FIELDING. Not only of the civil service in Ottawa, but hon. gentlemen opposite, again and again, have been pressing my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) to know when he is going to grant increases to the poor postmasters. It is only fair that we should recognize the fact that in this respect they are all extravagant. They require us to spend more money. You may take for illustration the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) who was here a moment ago. One of his pet schemes is that we shall build, right away, quick, the Georgian Bay canal costing $100,000,000. That is a large and an important scheme and there are some of the younger gentlemen in this House and some even who are old gentlemen, who will realize the fulfilment of this project, because the canal will have to be built.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. We want the Trent canal to be built also.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, and the hon. gentleman wants it to be built soon.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It would be a benefit to the country.

Mr. FIELDING. But, I am taking the volume of expenditure about which our hon. friends want to alarm us. They say: Look at its tremendous volume! It is a hundred and odd millions. But if the hon. member for South Lanark were here he would have the country committed to the expenditure of another hundred million dollars and it would not be $119,000,000 but $219,000,000. Our hon. friends, a dozen times this session, have rebuked us because we have not hastened to carry out the report of the Transportation Commission. It is difficult to compute what the cost would be of all the works included in the report of the Transportation Commission, but these would cost, I think I am fair in saying, at least $100,000,000. And yet these hon. gentlemen want us to rush in and undertake at once all the important works recommended by that commission. Here and there our hon. friends opposite have called attention to some item here and there; an item of a few hundred dollars or several thousand dollars, it may be, is attacked. But these are but trifles after all in comparison with the great volume of our expenditure. The general trend and tendency of the criticism of hon. gentlemen opposite is not in the direction of economy but in the direction of larger salaries and of hastening public works which, important though they may be, this government is disposed to carry on moderately and reasonably, with due regard to the conditions and requirements of the country. Then, we are building now the Transcontinental Railway and the vast sum of $28,000,000 properly belongs to that one item.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought we were to build it for $14,000,000.

Mr. FIELDING. That is one of the delusions of my hon. friend.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. Minister of Finance said himself that the surplus this year would be practically equivalent to the whole expenditure.

Mr. FIELDING. I had that out with my hon. friends opposite more than once. I have never said that the Transcontinental Railway could be built for $13,000,000 and the hon. gentleman knows it. They are not serious when they make that statement. All these things are but indications that after all our hon. friends opposite are obliged to recognize the growing needs of the country. Although they may come on an occasion like this, summon us to the bar of the House and declare that we are spending very large sums of money, and although they are, by implication, leading the public to believe that if they were in power they would not spend this amount, if these hon. gentlemen opposite undertook the public works of the country that we find them urging us to undertake, they would spend much more. The general trend of their criticism is not that we should have less expenditure but that we should have a great deal more. Sir, we quite recognize that in these growing times the need of the country in regard to expenditure is greater. If these expenditures could only be made by increasing the burdens out of proportion to the ability of the country to pay, then there would be something to complain of. But if we are able to point to the fact that each of these expenditures—cut out if you will the trifles which have been referred to here and there, trifles in comparison with the magnitude of the outlay of the country—is an expenditure which is necessary for the development of the country, and if we are able to show that we have provided for these great expenditures with no increase of taxation, and with the maintenance of the highest state of the credit of Canada, we have no reason to fear the answer of the public to the resolution which my hon. friend has put upon the table.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I understood that this debate was to be a very short one as we wanted to take a vote before dinner, but the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has taken so unusual a flight, has made such assertions and has begged the question in such a way that it is impossible to allow it to pass without a few remarks. The hon. gentleman has not touched the kernel of the question at all. He slid over all the difficult points that were brought up by my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) and which have been brought to the attention of the House each session for the last four or five sessions. He begs the question altogether when he assumes that we took the position that as Canada grows there should not be a hightened expenditure. There is quite a difference between that position and the position which we did take, really that there should be some reasonably fair measure to that expenditure, that the burdens of the people should not be unnecessarily increased, and that the amount of money that is actually put into the expenditure should go to effect the real object of the expenditure and should not be squandered by the way. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman knows very well when he speaks about only the drops from this great bucket of expenditure being found fault with, that that is not the position which was taken by the opposition and that is not the position which the country will take in the end. The position which they have tried to take is that they have tried again and again to investigate into the expenditure of this government.

They have brought examples of reckless expenditure; they have brought examples of illegal expenditure; they have brought examples of frittering away to favourites and friends of immense portions of the public domain. And what we complain of, and what the country will ultimately complain of, is that the forces of the government, in committee in this House, in every case have set their faces determinately against proper investigation of these expenses, these extravagancies, these wrongdoings, and by the brute force of a majority have rendered it impossible for the opposition to get at the facts and for the country to get under the surface of these expenditures. It is not to the credit of this government that, from the day when they came into power up to the present time, in not one single case have they disapproved of peculation and extravagance even of the worst kind, or of middlemen's profits or the giving away of vast portions of the public domain to the supporters in this House and political favourites outside. In every case when we have come on the trail of these wrongs, and have brought out evidence to prove them, we have been met by the united forces of the governmnt in this House, the investigations in certain cases have been rendered futile, and, in others where the charges have been proved to the hilt, the majority in this House have declared the government not guilty and have stood behind the ministers in every case.

Now, the government will have to reckon with a larger jury than the packed jury of this House; it will have to reckon with the country at large. Take the case of a recent expenditure in Halifax. The government had simply to buy a certain amount of property for a public improvement. There was a business like straight-ahead way to employ the people's money by buying the necessary properties and paying the proper price for them. But, instead of doing it in that way, the government employed a middleman and paid to that middleman nearly $25,000. This was the people's money, and ought not to have been paid in this case—and would not have been paid on any fair business deal. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) treats public opinion with sublime disregard. But public opinion is not dead, and these hon. gentlemen will hear its voice sooner or later. This very Halifax deal was pronounced as graft by a public-spirited newspaper. That newspaper was proceeded against for libel. It did not evade the issue but acknowledged publication and courted inquiry. And a jury of nine men, good men and true, gave a verdict upon the facts of the case as they were developed, and that verdict was against the transaction. Practically the jury denounced this government for graft and that judgment stands in the face of the people to-day. Sir, that is a small portion of the public opinion of Canada. But when that small portion of public opinion had a chance to declare itself on all the facts of the case it gave a verdict against this government and gave it unanimously. The great public jury which is to be summoned upon the expenditures and administration of this government will come to the jury box one of these days ; the facts will be placed before them—and we have the facts—in as full, strong and comprehensive a manner as we can ; and when that jury becomes apprised of the facts, like the jury in the city of Halifax, it will give its verdict against the reckless extravagance of this government. Why, Sir, take the public accounts and the estimates as we have them ; it is impossible for any person to uphold these expenditures as reasonable expenditures. They are made for all kinds of objects and they are made indiscriminately—with no method or plan. But in all their variations and convolutions they are in too many cases made in carrying out a mere system of public patronage and of reckless expenditure for the sake of making hon. gentlemen opposite solid in their different constituencies. These things go on for a little time; but they cause their reaction and when the public are aroused to the danger involved in this course they will turn against the government.

And how futile is the answer to all this given by the leader of the House (Mr. Fielding)—that if his opponents were in power they would place upon the country an expenditure of $200,000,000. There might be shifting of expenditures, some expenditures that are now made would not be made then and some that are now made would be made then, but that the extravagance on the whole would be much greater than to-day is simply drawing upon a fertile and self-justifying imagination as an offset to this expenditure of $130,000,000 or $140,000,000 for which the hon. gentleman is responsible. Driven to extremity, he simply calls upon his imagination for a sum for which there is no justification, but which he wishes to place over against his own expenditure in the vain hope of making a favourable contrast. The hon. gentleman says that taxation is not increasing—that the government has $80,000,000 of revenue. But $60,000,000 of that total revenue is taxation. Does not the hon. gentleman know that every dollar he extracts is just so much more money taken out of the pockets of the people, just so much money taken from the working capital of the people and diverted into government expenditure? Years ago these hon. gentlemen opposite, in convention assembled, and for years afterward on the public platform, attacked their opponents for taxation which amounted to only $27,000,000 or $30,000,000 a year. This they denounced as an outrage upon the country and demanded that they themselves should be put in power in order to effect a reform. The right hon. gentleman who is now Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) promised a reduction of taxation—and to-day the Minister of Finance stands up and boasts of his $80,000,000 taken out of the pockets of the people, the greater part of it taxation. He thinks that because they are able to draw this great sum from the pockets of the people it is somehow a God's gift, instead of coming out of the capital of individuals working in this country. The taxation now is double or treble that which these gentlemen fought against in the years of their novitiate, and which they pledged the people they would retrench. And yet, when they come into power, waxing strong in the prosperity to which they have contributed almost nothing, they boast of the amount of money which they take from the pockets of the people.

When my hon. friend talks about the barren years of the Liberal-Conservative government, he knows, and so do the people of this country, that the prosperity of the party opposite in an administrative sense, and the prosperity of this country, is due almost absolutely to the Liberal-Conservative party. Hon. gentlemen opposite may put all their millions on one side because very little of their millions have gone into the great transportation and productive works which have so far made the prosperity of the country. That is a matter which will be proved, maybe ten years hence, when the results of the big expenditures which they are making to-day come to be shown in the actual productive work of the country. But that is to come, and in the meantime these gentlemen sit in seats which were fashioned for them by the Liberal-Conservative party, enjoy a prosperity which was framed and made possible for them by the Liberal-Conservatives; have the spending of millions in a productive and growing country, the foundation of which, in all its great lines of prosperity and progress, was laid in the good and patient work of the Liberal-Conservatives. They find themselves in the possession of other people's earnings; they find themselves in the enjoyment of other people's prosperity, as the results of the work of a party, every one of whose progressive methods and policies these gentlemen opposed tooth and nail when they were in opposition. What would be the prosperity of this country to-day if the unrestricted reciprocity of 1891 had been carried out? Where would have been this glorious Dominion if the secession policy of the Finance Minister had been carried out? There sits the man who, foiled in his attempt to take the maritime provinces out of the confederation and so break it up, foiled entirely by the Liberal-Conservative party, foiled in his attempts to burk the progress of their policy, foiled in his attempts to disintegrate Canada, and afterwards by a wave of change brought into power, after the country, against his efforts, was kept consolidated, after the country against his efforts was built up in all its great lines and was made ready for the prosperity it enjoys to-day, taunts us on the fact of this growing prosperity to which he never contributed a single honest day's work in his life. Where would this country have been, Sir, if your continental free trade had been brought about? You and your Prime Minister, and all your leaders through many dreary years, advocated a policy which if it had been successful would have torn this country asunder instead of building it up, would have made our great lines of traffic and of commerce north and south instead of east and west, would have gone in every particular against, instead of in favour, of the prosperity of this country. Why need I go further? The people of this country are discerning people. Public opinion is not dead. They will value all these influences at their true worth; and by and by, when we get to the great forum of public opinion, we shall be able to thresh out these things on the ground of right and reason. Even the Minister of Agriculture, who opposes the preference, who presumes to tell the people of Great Britain just what the farmers of Canada think of the preference, who tilts at Lord Dundonald in a business which he ought never to have had a hand in, who butts in against the wishes of the farmers of this country at an inopportune time—even he will have to meet public opinion. Now, Mr. Speaker, out of deference to the dinner hour, I shall have to close my few remarks.

House divided on amendment of Mr. R. L. Borden.

COAL STRIKE IN THE NORTHWEST.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Minister of Labour). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I would like to communicate to the House the latest news I have from British Columbia. I received the following telegram to-day :

Fernie, British Columbia, April 26, 1907.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, Ottawa.

Mine operators and executive board of district union have been continuously in conference since Tuesday with the hope of effecting a settlement of disputes between the several companies in this district and their employees. It was announced at noon to-day that this conference had failed to effect any settlement. On my arrival Tuesday night union officials invited me to meet executive board of district union at 9 a.m. yesterday. Board stated there had been no intention of violating Act, that men had misunderstood purpose of notices posted, and not knowing law or protection it afforded against any change in wages prior to or during investigation, had stopped work of their own accord and without authority of union officials who have refused to sanction a strike. They assured me that board of conciliation and investigation having been constituted they would if agreement were not speedily come to as result of joint conference at once take steps to secure return of men to work pending investigation. Having this assurance, I thought it advisable not to jeopardize outcome of joint conference by having its proceedings even temporarily stopped to enable union officials to meet with men. It was understood, however, that conference would not be prolonged beyond to-day without situation being fully explained. Conference having failed to effect settlement a mass meeting of Fernie miners was called this afternoon at which, on the request of the union officials I explained to the men the nature and provisions of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. To-night a meeting of the local union was held, and I have since been informed by Mr. Sherman, district president, that it was unanimously decided the men would return to work at once and continue at work pending reference to disputes under Act. Members of district board have arranged for meetings at other mining camps where men are out, and will leave immediately to explain situation and law to men. As soon as majority of members of district have decided to return to work, executive board will issue instructions for all miners in district to immediately return. President Sherman informs me that by Saturday there should be a resumption of work at all the mines.

W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Mr. King carefully ascertaining all the facts of the dispute from the beginning under the culmination, whatever it may be, in order that we may have a thorough knowledge impartially gained, of exactly all the steps that were taken, mis-steps or proper steps whatever they were, so that we will be able to form our opinion with reference to it ? We have had many rumours in the newspapers and we have had a good many things said in the House, some in blame of one party and some of another. It is very essential that justice should be done to both parties by having a complete record of the negotiations and transactions.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear.

FORMS OF OATH FOR ELECTIONS.

Mr. S. BARKER (East Hamilton). Before the motion is put, I desire to bring before the House a matter that I consider of very great importance to the country. It relates to the forms of oath sent out by the government under order in council to be administered to voters at the Dominion elections. This question was brought up two years ago by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) and was discussed then at some length. On that occasion the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) replied and we had some difficulty as regards the law of Ontario, because that minister was almost of necessity not accostomed to the Ontario law. However, the question with which I am dealing is not confined to Ontario alone, it relates to all the provinces, and although my remarks will be confined to the law of Ontario as it affects the Dominion Elections Act, it is certainly an interesting question and of importance to all the other provinces in the Dominion.

Mr. BERGERON. We have the same thing in Quebec.

Mr. BARKER. The question was brought up in 1905 and the allegation was made that the forms of oath issued for the general election of 1904, and subsequently, were different from the forms that had been issued for every other election up to and inclusive of the general election of 1900. Exception was taken to that statement by the Minister of Justice who said that he had just had some conversation with the Secretary of State, Hon. Mr. Scott, who informed him that there had been no change whatever, that the forms of oath issued for 1904 and that were then being issued, were precisely the same as those that had always been issued. Upon that contradiction being made, the hon. leader of the opposition got up in his place and said, I have in my hand the form of oath issued for the election of 1900—and he explained that it was a very different form from the one issued in 1904. That statement was confirmed by other gentlemen. I have here in my hand the form of oath issued in 1900, and I have the form, brought down this session, of the oaths sent to the deputy returning officers in all the by-elections for the last two years, the forms for East Elgin, North Bruce and London, and in each the oath sent to a deputy returning officer is what was called in the previous discussion the emasculated form of oath. The difference between the two oaths, Mr. Speaker, is shortly this: In the 1900 election the form of oath ordinarily administered to the voter contained all the provisions that are in the Ontario form of oath, including the clause against the hiring of teams and the clause regarding bribery and corrupt practices. The form of oath issued for 1904, and issued for the several by-elections since, omits these two most important clauses. There is not a word about the hiring of teams, not a word about bribery or corrupt practices. I do not suppose that any hon. gentleman will fail to see the importance of that omission from the ordinary form of oath sent to every deputy returning officer to administer to a man who tenders his vote, an omission of the very clause which, in nineteen cases out of twenty is the main object of administering the oath.

Now, in order that hon. gentlemen may understand the question, I will as shortly as possible refer to the statutes. First of all, under section 5a of the Dominion Franchise Act of 1898, it is said:

> The qualifications necessary to vote in a Dominion election are those of the province for the right to vote at a provincial election.

That is, in every province the qualification of the Dominion voter is that of the voter at a local election in that province. Now, in the Dominion Election Act there is this provision, section 65 :

> An elector if required by the deputy returning officer, the poll clerk, one of the candidates, or an agent of the candidate, or by any elector present, shall, before receiving his ballot paper, take such oath of qualification as by the law of the province he may in a like case at a provincial election be required to take; such changes having been made in the form of oath as are necessary to make it applicable to the election being held,——

I may pause here to say that the only changes necessary to make for that purpose are to refer to a 'Dominion constituency' instead of a 'provincial constituency'; and a slight alteration in respect to the voters' lists. In the one case they refer to the list in the poll book, in the other to the voters' lists now shown to the voter. The clause then goes on to say :

> —and shall also, if so required, take the oath in the form U.

Now, the form U is a special oath hardly ever administered; it is an oath administered where the voter is suspected of having been convicted before a court of justice of corrupt practices and disqualified in consequence, and in administering that oath the form covers the bribery clauses. But that you will observe is an additional oath, 'and shall also be required to take the oath in the form U.' It was argued in the course of the discussion that the bribery clauses in the form U justified omitting the bribery clauses in the ordinary oath, as if they always administered the oath U, whenever they swore a man at all. That is clearly an absurd pretension. There are four special or unusual forms of oath for certain cases; they are T, U, V and W. T is a form of oath where a man's name has been omitted from the list by reason of some provincial disqualification ; as for example he may be an officer of the Dominion not allowed to vote in the local. U is the form of oath I have just spoken of, administered to a man who is suspected of having been convicted by a court of corrupt practices. V is the oath for an elector who has been personated, and W is the oath for an illiterate. But the ordinary oath, is the oath of qualification, the one that is essential. Now if we turn to the form of oath required by the Ontario Act—the forms in the Acts of other provinces are somewhat different—but taking the form of oath required by the Ontario Act we find in section 98 of the Ontario Elections Act this provision :

> The deputy returning officer shall receive the vote of every person whose name he finds on the proper list of voters in the poll-book furnished to him, provided that such person, if required by the candidate, or the agent of the candidate, or by the deputy returning officer himself, takes the oath or affirmation hereinafter mentioned which the deputy returning officer is hereby empowered to administer.

Then follows subsection (a) which refers to the several forms of oath in the Ontario

Act. Those are numbered 16, 17, 18, 19 and 20. Sixteen is the ordinary form administered to a franchise voter; 17 is the ordinary form administered to a franchise voter where there are registrations; 18 is the form of oath used in unorganized districts; 19 and 20 relate to Indians. Now, there are five forms, 16, 17, 18, 19 and 20, and these forms are given in the schedule to the Ontario Act. They contain the usual clauses about a man being 21 years of age, a British subject, the person named on the list and so on. Then follow clauses 8 and 9 which, as I say, relate to a man hiring teams or having been guilty of bribery or corruption. Now I do not suppose anybody ever heard of a portion only of an oath being administered. It is the practice when a man is sworn to mark the word 'sworn' opposite his name in the poll-book. There is no mark of 'sworn' 1 to 7 or 8 to 9, or anything like that; the whole oath is administered or nothing. But when the Minister of Justice in 1905 was driven from the position he was led into by the Secretary of State, that there had been no change, he then took up this position, that clauses 8 and 9 of the oath were not qualification clauses at all, but disqualification clauses; and apparently he surmised that the form of oath was altered because these clauses were disqualification clauses. It was a most extraordinary view to take, and I should like very much to know whether the Minister of Justice, who is in his place, would take that view of it knowing, as he does, so much about the laws of Ontario and of the Dominion with regard to elections. If there had been a possible doubt about that it is settled by another section of the Ontario Act which refers to these same qualification oaths, and I will read that. Section 94 of the Ontario Act, subsection (5), says:

> No person who receives a certificate under this section, whether a deputy returning officer, poll clerk or agent, shall thereafter, either at the polling place named in the certificate, or at any other polling place, vote at the election, until he has taken, at the polling place where he proposes to vote, one or other of the oaths of qualification prescribed to be taken by voters.

So, in the Ontario Act, section 94, these voters' oaths that I have just referred to are called the oaths of qualification, and in the Dominion Act the voter is required at a Dominion election to take that oath of qualification. The then Minister of Justice, who probably had not had much time to look it up, as he was taken rather by surprise on finding there had been a change, argued that the government were entitled to eliminate these two clauses, because they were not strictly qualification clauses. But the form of oath, as stated with all its clauses in the statute, is the qualification oath. There is another peculiar circumstance about this, Mr. Speaker. The Secretary of State said there had been no change in the form of oath. If there had been any authorized change in the form of oath, there would be an order in council changing it, and it is very odd indeed that the Secretary of State, if there had been an order in council, did not know it. How then was the change made? It could only be made by order in council. Who, without an order in council, undertook to change that form of oath? I think that requires some explanation from the government, and especially, Mr. Speaker, because, since 1905, when that question was brought up, the emasculated form of oath has been used again and again by the government in spite of the protest which was made. I have here the form used in 1900. I will read the heading of it:

> Ontario form 16. Form of oath in ordinary cases to be administered at an election to a voter by virtue of manhood suffrage, made applicable to Dominion elections.

That is what was required by section 65 of the Dominion Act. And then, to make it absolutely clear:

> Ontario Election Act, section 98; Dominion Elections Act, 1900, sections 21 and 65.

Then follows, word for word, with one or two clerical alterations—you might call them—the Ontario oath, including clauses 8 and 9, the clauses against the hiring of teams, bribery and corruption. Any person who has any knowledge whatever of elections knows that these are the material clauses. If a man is sworn, nine times out of ten, these are the points that are called in question; that is, whether a man has been bribed or has he been hiring teams. When these two clauses were struck out of the form for the purposes of the general election of 1904, who struck them out? Was there an order in council to strike them out? If there was, I suppose the order in council will show why they were struck out. If there was not an order in council, how did the extraordinary thing happen that for the general election of 1904 that change was made? I do not know myself what possible explanation there is for it. I would like to hear some hon. gentlemen on the opposite side explain it. I say that the almost absurd explanation that clauses 8 and 9 were not qualification clauses will not hold. There must be some better explanation than that, and I think we are entitled to ask the Minister of Justice if he can explain what the facts are.

I have one word more on that point. Not only has this emasculated form been used in the general election in London in 1904, but in the notorious by-election of 1905. It was used in East Elgin and North Bruce, and on inquiry in the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, I am informed it is about to be used in Wellington.

That circumstance is enough to justify me in bringing this matter to the attention of the House if for no other reason, but especially is it proper that I should bring it forward considering that the government have not chosen this session to carry out their promise to bring in an election law to amend and correct a number of defects which are in the present law.

When the question was up in 1905, I pointed out to the House how the absence of these two clauses from the form of oath had apparently affected certain suspected voters in the riding I represent. We had taken unusual precautions to try and check such voters. We had put in the hands of the scrutineer practically a duplicate of the form kept by the clerk of the poll, in which he was to mark every man sworn just as the clerk of the poll did. Some few weeks after the election I took the trouble to go over many of these returns made by the scrutineers. I should say that we discovered about eleven o'clock that this emasculated form of oath was being used, and upon application to Colonel Logie, a most respectable lawyer, who was the returning officer for East Hamilton, he issued instructions at once to every deputy returning officer to use the whole form. Up to eleven o'clock I found that the men who had been marked to be sworn, being suspected of bribery, generally took the oath. After the form had been changed, and the bribery clause had been put in, we found that they were being checked. I think that was a very strong circumstance to show two things—to show that the worst class, the bribed men, did not fear the form actually used; and, secondly, that some people knew the difference between the two forms of oath, and that the bribed men had been instructed accordingly. There is perhaps a more signal reason why this thing should be stopped. I have not the slightest doubt that the use of this emasculated form of oath in the by-election of London contributed very largely to the frauds which were perpetrated in that election. I do not think there can be the slightest doubt of that from the evidence. The men who handled that election from first to last were men who never have been ignorant of any change in the law. They were experts at every trick known to tricksters in elections. The celebrated John O'Gorman, who handled Brockville so well and deprived Hon. Peter White of the seat he had honestly won——

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. No, he never won that—never won Brockville.

Mr. BARKER. Hon. Peter White could not win Brockville when John O'Gorman had bought twelve deputy returning officers and got them to change from ten to fifteen votes apiece, but outside the manipulation of these deputy returning officers Mr. White was elected.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. No, we had 400 majority. No use Peter White going there.

Mr. BARKER. There are members here from Ontario who know thoroughly the history of the gang of scoundrels who have manipulated elections, both local and Dominion, throughout that province for the last ten years. Everybody knows that John O'Gorman was the arch conspirator of that gang.

Mr. CONMEE. What about Birmingham ?

Mr. BARKER. You can say as much as you like about Birmingham. But John O'Gorman——

Mr. CONMEE. He is not in it with Birmingham.

Mr. BARKER. All right. If you name a thousand men, all the more reason why the law should be amended, and that is all that I am talking about.

Mr. CONMEE. That is right—that part of it.

Mr. BARKER. I was saying that O'Gorman was the arch conspirator and head of that gang. They had a legal adviser too—Alexander Smith known to this House probably. They had the celebrated Tom. Lewis ; they had Pritchett ; they had Mulloy ; they had the whole gang of them. Oh, yes I must not forget Preston—W. T. R. Preston was one of the gang. They used to meet in the Walker House, in Toronto. From there the men were sent out into the various constituencies by O'Gorman, and in that way election after election was handled by them, as is proven on oath in the Toronto police court. Now, this man O'Gorman was brought up to London three or four weeks before the by-election of 1905. He took up his quarters at the Liberal rooms in Hyman Hall.

Mr. LENNOX. Hyman Hall ?

Mr. BARKER. Hyman Hall, yes—Hyman. O'Gorman took up his quarters there; he slept there. There he employed the men proven to have committed the bribery. He employed Mulloy and also the celebrated Collins, who were to receive $100 each for their work. And what was that work ? Their work was bribery. They were to pay $10 a vote, or $5 if they could work it for that amount. But the order was given, Collins swears, that Hyman must be elected at any cost—those are his own words. Collins and Mulloy had charge of one subdivision, No. 8 in ward 2. In that subdivision 249 votes were polled, and of these 102 were bought, at a cost of $958. Collins and Mulloy, and other men, would go around and see voters and make appointments with them at night at the committee room. The man whom they sought to bribe would go there, and $10 would be put in an envelope and the man would be told that he would get that if he would vote right. They would get him to sign his name on the envelope, or they would put his name upon it themselves. Then the man would be asked if there was any one with whom he would like the money to be left for him. Many of them chose Collins. He was the favourite—he seems to have been a man, who, in his own way, dealt squarely with the electors. He held $750 for No. 8 subdivision and $250 for an adjoining subdivision—$250 being only a portion of the money devoted to that polling subdivision. As I have said 102 votes out of 249 were bought for Hyman. When you consider that Hyman had a majority of only 24 in the whole city in the election of 1904, you can see the importance of such a purchase as that. There are 44 divisions in the city of London. One division cost these bribers $958. What the others cost we do not yet know. But Collins was told by some of his co-workers that the adjoining subdivision No. 7, cost something like $1,000. Of the 249 votes cast in subdivision No. 8 Grey polled 105 and Hyman 144. Of the unbought votes in that division Gray had a majority of 65, but, as a matter of fact, the return showed a majority of 39 for Hyman. As I have indicated what was done in No. 8 subdivision was done also in the adjoining subdivision. They were so close together that their work was interwoven. Tom Lewis and a man named Sifton, who was manager of a construction company in London, acted in No. 7 precisely as Collins and Mulloy did in No. 8. We have not had the full particulars concerning No. 7 yet, because, when the men were arrested in Toronto and elsewhere and warrants issued for witnesses, Sifton disappeared—bolted for the United States. He did not return until near the end of the inquiry in the police court. But he came back a few days before the close of the case and made a written and sworn confession which he handed into the police magistrate. I understand that he is to be called next month as a witness on behalf of the Crown. Until he is called, we shall not know exactly what was done in subdivision No. 7. Now, when Collins got at his work, he and Mulloy, and one or two others, roped in—as they call it—about 102 votes. They told the men that the way they voted would be known, and gave them to understand that the reason why the money was not paid to them at once but was put into an envelope and deposited, was that they might not have the money unless they voted right. As a matter of fact, one of the men who was promised $10 for voting for Hyman voted for Gray. These bribers knew that and stopped the man's pay—a pretty clear evidence of how good their check was and under how complete a system they worked.

But the most extraordinary thing is that, after Collins had got the division pretty well bribed, after all the work was done that could be done, Mr. Reid, the treasurer of the Liberal Association, suggested to Mr. Collins that he ought to be the deputy returning officer, that he would know all the men and the men would know him; and actually Mr. Collins was appointed deputy returning officer to take the votes and administer this emasculated oath to the men he had bribed. If one had not had it on oath, one would hardly have believed it, but there is the fact. That man who, as Mr. Reid knew, and as every man there knew, was bribing, was actually chosen to preside as a judicial officer in the taking of the vote. Well, Mr. Collins himself was a little squamish about that; but they pointed out the importance of it and so he acted. Then there was another difficulty. There was a Mr. Spence, a Liberal, who for years had been the deputy returning officer, and they had to get rid of him. So they induced Mr. Spence to retire paying him $15, more than he would have got if he had acted; and so Mr. Spence was got out of the way, and the more useful Mr. Collins was put in his place. That is shortly the story, except this, that on the Sunday before the election, after Mr. Collins had got his box with the ballots and all the papers, Mr. Wylie, a clerk in the customs at London, called on Mr. Collins and told him he wanted to show him how he was to conduct the election, and he did instruct Mr. Collins. What the nature of the instruction was is not very clear; but at the conclusion of the lesson, Wylie took up a packet of ballots out of the box, and said: 'I want to take these to John O'Gorman and show them to him.' Collins thought that was going a little too far, and he objected; but finally they arranged that Collins should go with Wylie to the hotel, where O'Gorman was waiting for Wylie. The two went together with the packet of ballots and showed them to O'Gorman. O'Gorman handled them, and then showed him how, by folding the ballot in a particular form, the deputy returning officer, when pulling off the counterfoil could see how the ballot was marked. Then, not yet satisfied, he asked Collins to let him keep that packet of ballots, so that they could show the same thing to the other deputy returning officers; and they kept them from Sunday morning till five o'clock the same afternoon, instructing the other deputy returning officers how to conduct the election and fold ballots. Mr. Collins got them back by five o'clock. Collins says he did not fold the ballots as instructed, because he knew how every man would vote. Whether he did or not, they gave him the chance of looking. But in order that that part of the business might be carried out to perfection, they had an additional and entirely new plan concocted by John O'Gorman. It was obvious that it would not be much use for the returning officer to know how a man voted unless he had a particularly good memory and was able to keep in mind how every man voted, and memory would not be sufficient for people who were paying $958 for carrying that division. So they had two scrutineers. One was the ordinary kind of scrutineer, who had a voters' list with a canvassers' mark opposite the name of every man showing how he was pledged to vote. But they had an additional scrutineer who had simply a voters' list without marks; and when Mr. Collins saw that a man voted right, as they called it, that was for Hyman, he put the ballot into the box with his right hand, and number two scrutineer immediately put an x opposite that voter's name as having voted for Hyman. When a man voted against Hyman, Mr. Collins put the ballot into the box with his left hand, and down went the 'o' mark opposite his name as having voted for Gray. In that way they had a record of how every man had voted, according to Mr. Collins; and an extraordinary feature of it was this: A man named Trudel, who did not get his $10, was evidently doubted by Mr. Collins. When Trudel voted Mr. Collins was not quite sure how he did vote and he said he hesitated whether he would put the ballot in with his right hand or his left hand; and when the book of that second scrutineer was examined in the court it was found that opposite Trudel's name there was both a naught and a cross, showing that he had almost automatically followed what was in Collin's mind. Mr. Collins understood this scrutineer to be a Mr. Pearce or a Mr. Pearson, he was not sure which, a lawyer, he said, from Toronto; but in justice to Mr. Pearson, a lawyer of Toronto, who was supposed to be the man, I may say that it was discovered that he was not the man at all. There was another man who gave that name, but who is known and will be heard of later. The man supposed to be Pearson, at the close of the poll at five o'clock, not wanting to go back to the committee room, handed his book to Mr. Collins and said: 'Will you hand that in at headquarters?' Here is the scrutineer, a stranger, knowing that Collins was in the business, handing his book to the deputy returning officer to take charge of it. It was like a thief handing a paper to the judge. The result was that this book, with marks showing how every man had voted, came into the possession of the court, and is now in its possession. On the following morning, the day after the election, Mr. Collins went to the hotel of Mr. Tom Lewis, the celebrated Tom, the man of Brockville, and many other places, and got a private room upstairs; and these voters who had been bought went to that hotel, and Collins with either Wylie or somebody else present paid them what was in their envelopes; and so systematic was he that he took a sheet of paper and wrote down the name of every man he paid with the amount, and made every man sign his name opposite; and later that paper was handed to Mr. Reid, the treasurer of the Liberal Association of London. Collins was a business man, and he wanted to show that he was doing everything properly. They got that paper from him about three days before the last day for the protest. Twelve of the men had not been settled with at that time, and Collins refused to give up the paper until they had been paid. He told Wylie that he would not give up the papers until $120 was furnished to pay the twelve men who were unsettled with. Wylie said: 'Give me the papers and I will go to Reid and get the $120.'

He came back with $120, Collins went out with another man, Wylie, if I remember right, and settled at once with seven of the twelve, but five they never settled with. Wylie and Collins divided the $50 between them—$30 to Collins and $20 to Wylie.

Division No. 7 appears, so far as the investigation goes, to have been quite as bad. A man named Milne, was appointed deputy returning officer. He says he was instructed by Collins how to fold the ballots so that he could see for whom they were marked. But he said to Collins: No, I will not do any dirty work of that kind; that he would not do it. But he admitted that he saw how forty or fifty men voted, so that he must either have taken Collins' plan or adopted some other. Mr. Sifton was not at court to give information, and they were not able to find out all that was spent in that division. Next month no doubt they will have him and two or three other witnesses. There were in all forty-four divisions and only three or four were inquired into. I do not think I need say much more about Mr. Collins, but I may mention, for the information of the gentlemen in this House who were on the Public Accounts Committee, that this Mr O'Gorman, who takes such a prominent part in elections, is the Munro & Company that was investigated before the Public Accounts Committee last month. He is a gentleman who, elections not being on, becomes a middleman, a commission merchant; and this commission merchant goes down to Ottawa and calls on Mr. Reid, of the Transcontinental Railway Commission, a brother of Mr. Reid, the treasurer of the Liberal Association in London; and the Transcontinental Commissioner introduces Mr. O'Gorman to the purchasing agent of the Transcontinental Railway, and Mr. O'Gorman makes a deal for supplies for the Transcontinental Railway, without tender. And in his first transaction, he, or rather Mr. Ellis, who dealt with him, got into trouble as the public accounts proceedings show.

Just to illustrate what a fine class of judicial officers we have, under the present system and under the present elections

Act, let me cite a few instances. Collins, as I have said, was deputy returning officer in No. 8 division. His poll clerk was William Cochrane. Cochrane was poll clerk, but was paid for his vote. Then Archer, the constable, in No. 8 division, got his fee of $2 and was paid $10 by Collins for his vote. So there you have the whole staff at No. 8 division—Collins the deputy returning officer and briber, William Cochrane the poll clerk, and Archer the constable—all receiving money corruptly. The whole staff at No. 8 division were bribers or bribees, and such were the gentlemen who were carrying on the election.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Give us some of the previous elections.

Mr. BARKER. The more you can say of that kind of thing, the more necessity for alteration of the law.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Give us some of the facts recently investigated in Toronto with reference to the license commissioners. They would be very edifying to the House. Tell us about your Minister of Education.

Mr. BARKER. Cannot the hon. gentleman see that the more talk he gets off of that kind, the more need there is of reform ? We are not proposing a reform of the election laws to apply to one side alone, but we want the election law to apply to both sides. If the hon. gentleman can cite other instances that only makes stronger the case I am trying to establish.

There was a certain John McIntosh, who was deputy returning officer both at the elections of 1904 and 1905. In 1904 Mr. McIntosh was a worker and was paid by Mr. Reid $80 for his work. He was again a worker in 1905, and he says that Mr. Reid paid him $50. There you have that McIntosh, a partisan worker in both elections, appointed deputy returning officer in both. And now for the satisfaction of the hon. gentleman from Centre York (Mr. Campbell), I shall read what his worship the police magistrate said, on hearing that man's testimony:

> I think it is high time that the Canadian people should take hold of this and try to correct it.

That was a much more sensible remark than that of the hon. gentleman from Centre York (Mr. Campbell), whose only reply, is: 'You're another.' There is another official, a Mr. W. R. McKay, a grocer. It appears that a Mr. Graves had told one John McAlpine, a voter, that 'there would be something in it if he voted for Hyman.' After the elections McAlpine was passing McKay's, the returning officer's store, and McKay called him in and handed him an envelope. There was $10 in it, and Cochrane said the $10 was just handed to him by this Mr. McKay. At page 1053 of the evidence, there is this question:

> This is the gentleman, McKay, you got the money from ?—A. Yes.

There you have another gentleman, Mr. McKay, acting as a reputable judicial officer, and yet handing out the envelopes, the money envelopes, to the men who were bribed and who had voted at his polling place. A pretty man he would have been to administer the oath. Does any one believe that this deputy returning officer did not know there was nothing in the form of the oath about bribery. These men were prepared to administer the oath because there was nothing about bribing in it, and whenever they found a voter who might be timid about an oath, because he had been bribed, no doubt they pointed this out to him. McKay was examined as follows:

> Q. What position had you in the committee ?—A. I was chairman for a subdivision.

So he was chairman of a subdivision committee. He was also acting as deputy returning officer, and actually delivering over money as bribes after the election. His worship says :

> Q. You were appointed deputy returning officer ?—A. Yes.
> Q. You handed out one envelope afterwards?—A. I have a recollection of handing out one envelope afterwards.

He was questioned about a number of others. This particular one was the only case where the man who received the envelope from him was called as a witness ; and he did recall that he gave an envelope to this one man. Milne I have already referred to. He is the man who said that Collins showed him how to fold ballots so that he could see how the elector voted. He said he refused to act but admitted that he saw how forty or fifty men voted. That is a sample I have culled from a number. I could not pretend to go through the thousands of pages of this evidence. About 200 witnesses were examined, the larger portion of their evidence relating to this London election, and I have gone carefully through the evidence of about forty men who were bribed and who admitted receiving bribes. These men confirmed Collins down to the letter. Ordinarily, of course, very little trust would be put in the testimony of a man of Collins' character, but witness after witness was called, officials, men who were bribed, all classes of people, and they confirmed Collins' story. As to Mr. Collins being employed for the Liberal Association, a Mr. Brown was called, who tells of a conversation with Mr. Reid, the treasurer. The conversation was about Collins' complaint that he had not been given what was promised by the party for his services. That, I may say, was the cause of the rupture between Collins and the party. Mr. Collins had been promised unofficially an office and after the election it was not found convenient to give him an office ; there was a row and so all these facts came out, as they generally do. This is what Brown said on page 1066 ; he gives Mr. Reid's reply, as to Collins' complaint :

Mr. Reid said to me : 'Whatever Collins ever did for us he was paid for it by the week the same as anybody else in election expenses.' He gave me to understand that whatever he (Collins) did for the party he had been paid for it.

I think it will not be pretended that Collins was not acting for the association ; true he was not appointed to an official position as he expected ; but he was active and did everything that it was possible to do corruptly. According to Collins' story he was to get in cash $100 for himself, and at first he was only to do the bribing ; but when they wanted him to act as deputy returning officer, he kicked a little at that, and apparently some of those working with him assured him he would get an office ; he was fool enough to accept that assurance, which was repudiated ; he did not get the office ; and as a result honest men come by their own, or at least the truth comes out.

There is another feature in this case that, perhaps, the government will take into careful consideration when they amend the election law. We find government contractors up there. The evidence of Mr. James White, of Ottawa, one of these, will be found in volume 2, page 682. Mr. White was interested, he was an Ottawa contractor, and being at Ottawa he was interested in the by-election and thought he would take a trip to London. He was there about four days, he went away again the day before the election. His interest seemed to have weakened : he was there until the day before the election and then left and did not hear the result of the election until he saw it in the Toronto 'Globe.' He was accompanied, he said, by the secretary of the Ottawa Liberal Association. Neither of them helped in the election. Mr. White says he might have offered some suggestions as to checking lists. Just fancy Mr. White, a government contractor, and the secretary of the Ottawa Liberal Association going up to London to teach John O'Gorman and Collins how to check lists. The absurdity of it, a government contractor here in Ottawa going all the way up to London with the secretary of the Ottawa Liberal Association to give suggestions about checking voters' lists when they had the most expert men in the trade on the spot and had had them for weeks.

Mr. CONMEE. He might not have been aware of that fact when he left Ottawa.

Mr. BARKER. Perhaps he would not have gone if he had known John O'Gorman was there. Then there was a Mr. James A. Corry, another government contractor, who happened to take in London on his way to St. Joseph on Lake Huron. Mr. Corry is described in the evidence as a large government contractor. He also rents large buildings here to the government ; and he appears to be a very particular friend of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. FOSTER. His contracts are under the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. BARKER. He said he had a contract at St. Joseph in connection with improving that harbour, for which I believe estimates have been taken this session. He is asked how many men he had working at St. Joseph and he is very vague, ten to twenty or twent-five, possibly 150. He said that on his way he stopped off at London and he met White, O'Gorman and Reid. He gave Reid $300. He was on his way to pay his men for a month's work and he could not tell whether he was going to pay ten, twenty or one hundred and fifty men, but he gave Reid only $300. He could not tell the bank from which he drew it or whether it was in tens ; he had three bank accounts in different banks and he did not know out of which bank he drew the money. He returned to Ottawa without going to St. Joseph. Fancy that man going all the way from Ottawa to London on his way to St. Joseph, stopping at London, paying out $300 and then going back—a man who keeps three bank accounts. Do you not think that such a man would have gone on to St. Joseph, that he would have drawn for the $300 if that is all he paid out, and then gone on and finished his work, paid his men and returned to Ottawa ? I never heard a more flimsy pretext.

I think it is well that we should see, apart from the story of these officials, how some of the bribery was done. A man named Arthur S. Fitch, one of the men who got $10, was asked as to the man who bribed him. Collins was asked to stand up in the police court. The witness said (vol. 1, p. 420) :

Yes, that is the gentleman.

The witness says, 'Yes, that is the gentleman.' Then he is asked :

Then what took place ?—A. Collins picked up an envelope and a $10 bill and he put money in the envelope and wrote my name upon it, and he said, if you vote for Mr. Hyman you will get the $10 bill. I said, I will vote for him anyway. He said, I will be to-morrow at the polling booth, and I am the only man who will know how you vote. If you vote right I will give you $10. I went to Serviss's house and Mr. Serviss told me to wait, and he wrote a receipt on the envelope and I signed my name on the envelope. I asked him, why did he do that ? He did not say. I said, there will be no trouble back of this, and he said, no, there will be no trouble. We will cover up the tracks.

Then there was a man named Charles House who was bribed (vol. 2, p. 486) :

Q. You live in London do you ?—A. I do.
Q. I believe you voted at the general election between Hyman and Gray ?—A. Yes.
By His Worship :
Q. That would be the by-election ?—A. Yes.
By Mr. Duvernet :
Q. Do you know Mr. Lewis ?—A. I do.
Q. Did he come to see you ?—A. Yes.
Q. Did he give you anything ?—A. No, sir.
Q. What did he tell you?—A. There was another fellow with him.
Q. Who was he? Mr. Sifton?—A. Sifton I think; I wouldn't swear positively to it, but his friend was with him.
Q. What took place ?—A. He handed me $10 and I told him I didn't want it.
Q. Was Mr. Lewis present when it was handed?—A. Yes.
By His Worship :
Q. Was that before the election or after?—A. Before the election.
By Mr. Duvernet :
Q. You were a Conservative voter ?—A. Yes.
Q. What did Mr. Lewis say to you ?—A. Vote for Mr. Hyman.
Q. Then what did he say ?—A. He said I will tear $10 in two and give you half and keep five. I said no.
Q. You would not do that ?—A. I would not do it.
Q. He wanted to tear the $10 bill, you keep half and he keep half, then if you voted right the two halves would come together?—A. Yes.
Q. Did that strike you as reasonable ?—A. I never gave him any satisfaction for that.
Q. Then what took place ?—A. Then he gave me the $10 to vote for Hyman and I did not say who I would vote for.

Here they were playing an entirely different game. They were not buying this man's vote, they were giving him money to prevent a vote.

Q. Did they want you to come up to the committee rooms?—A. No.
Q. How many times did they come after you? —A. Three or four times in a week.
Q. Mr. Lewis must have been quite busy?—A. Oh, yes.
Q. The two gentlemen came together every time?—A. Yes.
Q. Always urging you to agree to vote for Hyman?—A. Yes.
Q. And you would get $10?—A. Yes.
Q. Up to that time did you get $10?—A. I got it just the day before the election.
Q. Had you promised to vote for Hyman?—A. I did not. I did not promise for any one.
Q. Then what did they say to you ?—A. He said, if I come over there he will have me sworn by a friend of his.

Observe, Mr. Speaker, he wanted him to take the money so that he could not take the bribery oath, he would have him sworn by one of their own side.

Q. If you went to vote for Gray he would have you sworn?—A. Yes.
Q. You had the $10 ?—A. Yes.
By His Worship :
Q. Who did you vote for?—A. For Mr. Gray.
Q. And you got the $10?—A. Yes, and I will vote for him again if he was running.

By Mr. Duvernet :
Q. He said they would have you sworn ?—A. Yes.

Then he is cross-examined by counsel. This is not one of those commissions where counsel are not allowed to appear for each side. There were two counsel on each side here. He is cross-examined by counsel for O'Gorman and others, and I call particular attention to this language :

Q. Did you take the oath ?—A. Yes.
Q. That you had received no money?—A. No, sir. they did not, they never asked me.
Q. And didn't you know what that oath meant ?—A. They never asked me.
Q. Wasn't it read to you ?—A. Yes.
Q. You understand reading ?—A. Well, I read a little, not very much ; I can write my own name, that is all.
Q. You took the oath and the $10 at the time ?—A. Yes.
Q. You say you always intended to vote for Gray ?—A. Yes.
Q. The man who handed the money to you, you say, was Sifton ?—A. I am positively sure he is—I know the gentleman if I see him.

There you see that man was warned that he would be sworn. That was sufficient I have no doubt to keep a great many men, if they got the $10, away from voting for the Conservative candidate. This man listened to what was read, and as there was not a word in it about bribery or corruption, he took the oath.

Then there is some evidence of Mr. Thos. Lewis, at page 795, speaking of the 7th subdivision :

Q. Well now, you and Mr. Sifton were looking after that division ? I think you told us before ?—A. Yes, I was assisting Mr. Sifton. I recollect Sifton promising people $10.
Q. How many people would you say you heard him promise ?—A. I could not say how many.
By His Worship :
Q. Do you remember him tearing any bills in two ?—A. No, your worship, not in my presence.
By Mr. Duvernet :
Q. How many people did Sifton promise?—A. I could not say.
Q. That was the ordinary thing; they were taken in there and promised that $10 for their vote?—A. Yes.
Q. You and Sifton were attending to that part of the work ?—A. I didn't have anything to do with it at all. I was there.
Q. Sifton was attending to that part of the work?—A. Presumably; he had the money any way.
Q. Who held the envelope?—A. I don't know.
Q. Did you hold any?—A. No, he held it himself.

I may say that witness after witness who had received money, swore that Lewis did take part in bribing and holding the money.

By Mr. Duvernet :
Q. Where was the committee room ?—A. It was in Collin's hall—Collin's block.
Q. But not this Collins?—A. Yes, that Collins or his brother—the Collins estate.
Q. The system was, they would be brought in there; the money placed in the envelope and they would be told if they voted right they would get that $10, by Sifton?—A. I don't know. Sifton was there in the room. When Sifton put the money in the envelope he talked to them quietly. They would go and talk to him and he would arrange with them and put the money in the envelope.

I may add that Lewis says in his evidence that at No. 7 they had a double scrutineer officer.

I will read from another witness, John Stevly :

Q. You gave no money to anybody for votes?—A. No, sir.

Q. Directly or indirectly ?—A. Directly or indirectly; I didn't canvass a man's vote and promise him one cent.

By His Worship :

Q. Did you give anybody else money to pay men for their votes?—A. I believe there was some went that way.

Q. How much?—A. I couldn't tell.

Q. Some that you gave to other people?—A. Yes.

Q. They used it to buy votes ?—A. I presume they did.

Q. You don't know how many?—A. No. sir.

Q. Do you know how much money?—A. No, sir.

Q. What would be the limit, do you think?—A. I don't know I am sure.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. $500 ?—A. Yes, I guess it would.

Q. Where did you get that $500 ?—A. I didn't have $500; I say that would be the limit.

By His Worship:

Q. How much did you get?—A. I don't know.

Q. $400?—A. No.

Q. Three?—A. No.

Q. Two?—A. I don't think so.

Q. Will you swear that you didn't get two?—A. I think I would be safe in saying I didn't.

Q. Would you be safe in saying you didn't get $150?—A. I don't think I would.

Q. Where did you get that $150? You said all the money you got was from Mr. Reid, $15; and $30 you spent yourself, and it appears you gave other men $150. Where did you get it?—A. The money was sent to me.

Q. Who sent it to you?—A. I can't answer that.

Q. Why?—A. Because it was sent to me from some source that I can't tell you.

Q. How did you get that?—A. I got it in envelopes.

Q. And had nothing ever been said by anybody to you as to how you got this money or what you got it for? Didn't you know it was coming?—A. This money was sent for the persons to whom it was to be delivered.

Q. Who told you it was coming to you ?—A. I suppose there was a list sent in of some that were to get it.

Q. How did you know what you were to do with it—A. Because the names were on the envelopes.

Q. How much money in those?—A. I don't know.

Q. You say about $150?—A. Well, possibly there was.

Q. How much did you get in actual money, not in envelopes ?—A. I didn't get any.

Q. It all came in envelopes addressed to the people who were to get it?—A. Yes.

Q. In which division?—A. Division 10 I believe it is.

Q. About $150?—A. I should think so, possibly about that.

Q. Do you know how much was in each envelope?—A. No, sir, I do not.

So he goes on :

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. Who did you give those envelopes to?—A. I gave them out to two or three parties.

Q. Who were they?—A. Lee, he was one.

Q. That was the man on the committee?—A. Yes, Lee and I think Lake.

Q. They were to deliver them to the people whose names were on the backs of the envelopes?—A. Yes.

Q. Who gave them to you?—A. They were sent to me.

Q. Who delivered them to you?—A. I couldn't tell you that; they came from an unknown source to me.

Q. How did you get them?—A. They were sent to me.

Q. How did you find them?—A. They came to my office.

Q. In what way?—A. In a large envelope.

Q. Addressed to you?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you mean to tell me on your oath you didn't know anything about who sent them to you?—A. I had possibly an idea where they came from; I presume they came from——

Then he stops.

Q. You told me you had an idea where these came from?—A. Yes.

Q. Who from?—A. I have an idea it came from the Liberal Club.

By His Worship :

Q. You just got a bundle of money with no instructions ?—A. Except these envelopes.

Q. How did you know what to do with them?—A. The names were on them.

Q. How did you know you were to get this money?—A. I suppose I was made a distributing medium.

Q. How did you know the money was in them?—A. You could see that plainly by looking at them.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. When did you hand these envelopes out?—A. I handed them out, I think the most of them, after the election.

Q. You say most of them after the election?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you hand any before the election?—A. Yes.

Q. Who did you hand the envelopes to before the election?—A. I couldn't say as to that. I handed some of them I know before the election.

Q. How many people did you hand them to before the election?—A. One or two.

He says there were bands around two packages, that they were in two bundles.

By His Worship :

Q. And you mean to tell me in the face of all that arrangement and preparation and everything that you don't know who they came from?—A. I told you that I have my idea they came from the Liberal rooms.

Q. Was there anything to indicate that the money would come that way?—A. Only that list.

Q. Why should the man who got that think that list was for money if he had never said anything to you before?—A. The money came back.

He sent the list and the money came back.

Q. They knew what those lists were for?—A. Yes.

Q. You knew what was going to happen when you sent them?—A. Yes.

Now, I will just read the evidence of a gentleman who acted in a sort of guerilla way, an independent supporter of the Minister of Public Works. His evidence is of a different character from that of any other witness; otherwise I would not trouble you with it. Gentlemen who were on the Privileges and Elections Committee will recollect Mr. James Duffield, a very intimate friend of the Minister of Public Works who conducted the correspondence with him in regard to the resignation. Mr. Duffield was one of the witnesses in the police court:

By Mr. Duvernet:

Q. You are manager of the gas works in London, are you?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you give out any money to anybody?—A. At the works there?

Q. Anywhere in connection with the election?—A. I may have, yes.

Q. Did you give out one sum of $400?—A. Yes.

Q. Who was that man?—A. Mr. Charles Depper.

Q. He was a Conservative worker, was he?—A. I presume he was.

Q. You wanted him to work for the other side?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you paid him $400 for that purpose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long before the election?—A. It might have been a couple of weeks.

Q. Where did you get the money from?—A. Out of my own pocket.

Q. Did you make any other contributions to the elections?—A. No, sir, I don't think so.

Q. You ought to be able to know?—A. Yes, I am quite sure I didn't.

Q. Did you give any money into the central office?—A. No, sir, I wasn't asked.

Then, speaking again of Depper:

Q. Did he work then for Hyman?—A. I supposed he did.

Q. Did he vote for Hyman, do you know?—A. I really don't know.

Q. Did he promise he would?—A. No, I didn't ask him to.

Q. What did you ask him to do? Just gave him $400 promiscuously? Wasn't there any understanding about it?—A. The understanding was that if he would use his influence and cut down that majority there I would give him $400.

Q. Did he use his influence?—A. He must have.

Q. Did he cut down the majority?—A. Yes.

Q. What was it cut down to?—A. I couldn't tell you from memory, but he reduced it nearly fifty votes.

Q. You told him that if he did you would give him $400?—A. Yes.

Q. He had been previously working for Gray?—A. I presume he had.

Q. It was changed by fifty votes and you gave him $400 after the election?—A. Understand me, he reduced the majority against us by about fifty votes; I wouldn't say fifty, but about that.

I might read for a week out of this evidence, comprising as I said before, the evidence of about 200 witnesses, a great many bribed men and many bribers. I think I have shown the House enough to convince the House and the country that there should be some remedy and that it ought to be applied at the earliest moment. It is a disgrace to the country that elections—by-elections and general elections—should be held under the forms of oaths sent out to the deputy returning officers by this government. There could be no more effective means adopted to enable men to commit bribery and all kinds of corruption to carry on elections against the will of the people than to send out the emasculated form of oath which has been issued again and again by this government in spite of the protests that we made in 1905.

Nothing could better facilitate the efforts of the bribers, of the fraudulent returning officers, of the whole gang led by O'Gorman, than furnishing such a form of oath to be used in the elections. I repeat that it seems very strange that we have no reasonable explanation of these two clauses being taken out of that form of oath. Could any person connected with this gang have anything to do with it? Who suggested it? It was evidently not done by the Justice Department, because the Minister of Justice of that time was taken by surprise by it. He inquired of the Secretary of State to know how it came about, and was told that there was no change. He was evidently astonished and could not explain when he found that that change had really been made. How had it happened? We know—there is not a gentleman in this House but knows—that you see Mr. Alexander Smith prowling about the lobbies of this House during every session. He seems to have access to all offices here. When the Railway Committee is in session you see him behind the chairman and facing the committee. Go into a minister's room on business and you are likely to find him there with a black bag—he is retained for somebody. He is retained in the Justice Department to do work throughout the country. Yet he was notoriously connected with this gang of which I speak. Why you might with as much decency employ O'Gorman himself. We do not know that Mr. Alexander Smith's presence had anything to do with this change—we only know that no minister can give us any information about it. We know that some information is called for from ministers, and as they cannot give it the duty rests upon them of making an investigation. And, above all, some means should be taken at the earliest possible moment to rectify what has been done. To pass an order in council, and restore the proper form of oath and to make sure that the form which has been used in the past three or four years shall not be used again.

Now, just one other point in closing. We know that in England whole constituencies have been disfranchised because of corruption. Why should not the government, with a view to putting down election frauds in Canada, and as an example to every part of the Dominion, disfranchise every man shown in this inquiry to have been guilty of corruption?

Mr. JOHN CRAWFORD (Portage la Prairie). I am glad that there are times when I can see eye to eye with our friends on the other side of the House. I certainly agree with them that our election law and our franchise law need amending. There is possibly nothing of greater interest to those of us who come from the province of Manitoba than a reform of the system by which members are elected to this House. I do not wish to weary the House at this late hour of the session with detailed recital of the conditions that we have to face in our elections and in the preparation of our voters' lists, but a general explanation should be made. In the last few years conditions affecting this matter in our province have been exceptional. During our recent campaign in 1904 we had to work under conditions which the people of no country should be asked to submit to. The situation is made more intense and the difficulties increased by the manner in which our laws have been manipulated by the powers that be in that province. Our election law provides that we must use provincial lists in connection with federal elections. But in the election of 1904, difficulty arose that the electoral divisions for the Dominion did not coincide with those for the province, and consequently an adjustment of the voters' lists had to be made. The lines of polling subdivisions overlapped in different places. Unless the voting was to be a mere confusion, changes in the voters' lists had to be made. Let me give one instance of what occurred. This was the case of a polling division right at my own home. It has been referred to in this House before, and an unfair statement has gone forth to the country that in making changes we disfranchised many people. There is one township, a part of which is in the division of Daulphin for electoral purposes, while the other portion is in the district of Portage la Prairie, which I have the honour to represent. On the provincial list there were 49 names of voters belonging to Dauphin, the others being properly voters in Portage la Prairie. To get a true list for Portage la Prairie district we had to omit these names from the list. The returning officer took the list and ran a red line through the 49 names. Conservatives there have been pleased to say that on that occasion we disfranchised 49 electors. This is not at all in accordance with the facts. Had these 49 names been left on the list, these voters might have voted in two divisions—they would have been entitled to do so so far as the lists are concerned. Now, our provincial authorities who have charge of the administration of justice have undertaken to prosecute the returning officers and others who had charge of the elections in that province for doing that work. They have continued these prosecutions right up to the present time, and charges are before the courts to-day in connection with the matter. We have just had a provincial election in the province of Manitoba. Now, the provincial authorities are carrying on these prosecutions, the attorney general being mainly responsible in connection with the matter. I have here a provincial voters' list used in the last provincial election in the province of Manitoba.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. By whom is the list prepared?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is prepared by the provincial authorities, and is the same list as that used for the federal election.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who are the officials in the province of Manitoba who prepare the list? Is it the county court judge or the revisers?

Mr. CRAWFORD. In the first place, there is a registration clerk appointed, who goes to certain districts and announces that he will sit at certain points to receive applications for names to be put on the list. He prepares the list, which is afterwards submitted to the revising officer, who may be a judge or some other person appointed by the executive council.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As a matter of fact, who are the revising officers?

Mr. CRAWFORD. In this case it was Judge Myers. The list was certified by him on the 26th of June, 1906. Now, as I have said, we had an election in the province of Manitoba on the 7th of March last. There was a redistribution in the province, and to get a list for the new divisions, the provincial authorities, no doubt under the direction of the Attorney General, who had prosecuted the Liberals for what they had done in 1904, did exactly what the Liberals had been prosecuted for; that is, they took the lists which had been prepared, and ran through a number of the names, not a red line, but a black line..

Mr. JOHNSTON. The black hand.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes, the black hand instead of the red hand. In the first polling division they struck off 95 names and left on 45. What I am now waiting for, and what the people of Manitoba are waiting for, is to see what action the provincial authorities will take in the way of prosecuting the parties who interfered with these lists in this way. In the same electoral district, in polling subdivision No. 2, we find the black line run through 57 names, and 95 names left. According to the position hon. gentlemen opposite took with regard to the Liberals, they disfranchised 57 men in this subdivision. In polling subdivision No. 1 they went further and added to the list 235 names without any authority whatever after the revising barrister had certified to the list.

Mr. HAGGART. Who does that?

Mr. CRAWFORD. This is done by some person after the list has been prepared and certified to by the judge. No doubt the returning officer for this particular electoral division did this work, in the same way as it was in the federal elections in 1904. But the point I am asking is: What is the position of the government of Manitoba, who prosecuted the Liberals for doing this in 1904, while a provincial officer who does anything of that kind is allowed to go scot free.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman should get the Minister of the Interior to answer him, because he always takes the ground that private persons under such circumstances should enforce the law.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the hon. leader of the opposition were not so free in small matters I think it would be just as well.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I agree with the hon. gentleman's argument. I think both parties should be prosecuted.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have another list which was used in the last Manitoba election, with names struck off in the same way.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who struck them off?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The officers who took charge of the elections, or possibly the King's Printer who sent the list out. But there has been no prosecution of the people who did it, because it has been done by the Tories. I take exception to the way in which our laws are administered in Manitoba in that respect, and the outrageous position in which the Liberals of Manitoba are placed owing to the kind of election law and franchise law we have at the present time.

Mr. J. D. REID. Have any charges been laid against them by the Liberals?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not know. I have another list, used in another electoral division, in which 153 names have been struck off and some others added. I may say that there have been exceptional additions in the district from which I come. We have had most scandalous outrages committed in that district by some of our Conservative friends in the recent and previous election campaigns. I would like to read to this House a little of the doings in connection with some of our election campaigns in that country.

Mr. TAYLOR. We will take it as read.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I suppose my hon. friend would rather do so. In 1896 we had a most exceptional election in connection with which some evidence was taken before the Public Accounts Committee of this House in 1898. The Conservative candidate who was then running in Macdonald was, I have no doubt, very anxious for success in the election, and he worked his campaign in his own fashion. He thought it necessary to import some manipulators from the province of Ontario, one of whom was a man named Freeborn, who was considered by our Conservative friends to be all right. I have a telegram here which was sent to the Conservative candidate at that time by Robert Birmingham, of whom no doubt hon. gentlemen have heard before.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the date?

Mr. CRAWFORD. May 20, 1896.

Mr. TAYLOR. An old chestnut.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is old, but the same Conservatives who were operating then are still in our country, and I do not know that they have improved a great deal since that time.

Mr. BLAIN. What about the red line?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The red line was necessary or some other line. When the Conservatives used a line, only of a different colour, for the same purpose, that was all right; but when we used the red line, it was all wrong. Here is some of the evidence given at some of the trials following the elections of that year. Mr. Freeborn swore that Boyd and Waller—Waller is still an elector in the district of Portage la Prairie—met him one night, and Boyd approached him for the purpose of getting his services. A couple of days later Freeborn saw Boyd in Carberry, and showed him a telegram from Birmingham addressed to Mr. Boyd. Mr. Boyd engaged Freeborn to work for him in the election and told him that a man would see him the next morning, and the next morning Waller went to Freeborn's room and taught him the trick of manipulating ballots. This trick consisted in switching the ballots of the voters. The deputy returning officer had his pockets full of marked ballots, and when a Grit elector came in and marked his ballot and handed it to the deputy returning officer, the latter would exchange it for one of those he had in his pocket, and thus convert a Liberal into a Conservative vote. Later on I shall read evidence showing that some of the deputy returning officers admitted they had a double set of ballots. In the election of that year, it was figured out during the election trial that about 300 ballots were switched in that way, and by that means the election went for the Conservative candidate. Mr. Freeborn further swore that he instructed George Saunders how to manipulate the ballots, and afterwards Waller instructed Saunders in the presence of Freeborn, and this Saunders was found guilty by the jury. It was from this man that Freeborn obtained the ballots which Saunders had got from the voters and for which he had substituted the Boyd ballots. Uriah Scammell, deputy returning officer at Rothwell, was arrested on one of the charges, and confessed that he had substituted Boyd ballots for Rutherford ballots and had thus made many well known Liberals vote for Boyd. He was called as a witness against Waller. Waller asked him if he knew how to play cards. It seems that a qualification necessary in order to be a deputy returning officer at that election was skill in card playing, because a skilful card player would naturally be a good switcher. Having said that he was quick at cards, Waller showed him how to substitute ballots, and upon the evidence of Freeborn and Seamwell, Waller was committed to trial. Freeborn swore that each deputy returning officer was supplied with marked ballots which they were to substitute for those marked in favour of the Liberal candidate. At poll No. 8, the returning officer was a Mr. Richardson, and those extra ballots were no doubt dealt out by him. Freeborn swore that Richardson directed him to Brown, that he saw Brown and got thirty ballots from him, ten of which he gave Saunders, and Brown was afterwards arrested for manipulating ballots at his own poll. Further at poll 45 the deputy returning officer voted on a certificate not signed by the returning officer at all. A number of deputy returning officers and poll clerks voted on certificates not signed by the returning officer. Thirty-two voters swore that they had voted for Rutherford, and yet there was considerably less than that number in the ballot box when the ballots were counted. At poll 47, thirty-nine electors swore that they voted for Rutherford, and only thirty-one of these ballots were in the box when the ballots were counted at the close of the poll. The deputy returning officer at this poll described how they were doing business. He had his table in a corner of the room and a great many voters swore they could not see their ballots, when the counterfoils were torn off, as they disappeared beneath the table. At poll No. 49 the deputy returning officer acted in the most arbitrary manner. When Mr. Curry, the scrutineer for Mr. Rutherford, objected to the vote of Alexander McKenzie, the deputy returning officer threatened to arrest him. This McKenzie was not upon that polling list at all, and there does not seem to have been any certificate for him. Men who were not on the list at all were allowed to vote at some of the polls. McKenzie was allowed to vote at this poll without a certificate although his name was not on the list. At Glenboro' poll seventy-eight voters swore that they had voted for Rutherford, and at the close of the poll there were only found seventy ballots in the box in his favour. In reference to another poll here, twenty witnesses at the trial swore that they marked their ballots for Rutherford. Other Liberal voters were away at the time of the trial and did not testify, yet at this poll there were only sixteen ballots in the box when the ballots were counted at night. At another poll, Pleasant Point, the poll book showed that one hundred and nineteen voted and the scrutineers swore that the poll book agreed with the tally, and no pretense was made by the defence that more men voted. There was one ballot more in the box than the number initialled by the deputy returning officer. All the counted ballots were marked in the disc, two were marked for both Boyd and Rutherford. In the first trial before the jury thirty men swore that they marked ballots for Rutherford and one for both Boyd and Rutherford. The evidence of three or four well-known voters for Rutherford could not be got ; they were out of the country.

There is a very large amount of evidence of this same kind, all going to show that there was a united, well-organized effort on the part of our Conservative friends to carry the election through this means ; in fact a few days before the election some eighteen of the deputy returning officers were summoned into Winnipeg and were instructed how to switch the ballots. I shall not discuss the matter more fully owing to the late stage of the session. The point I wished more clearly to bring out here is the importance and the necessity, the extreme necessity, of some changes in our election law, something that will get us away from the possibility of a recurrence of such abuses. I hope that next session this will be one of the first matters with which our government will deal. I am sure that in this they will have the hearty support not only of all the Liberals but of a great many of our Conservative friends as well. I believe the great majority of the members would welcome any change that would do away with this election corruption. That, I believe, is the wish of all honest Canadians, whether they are engaged in politics or not.

DREDGING CONTRACTS AT PORT ARTHUR.

Mr. J. CONMEE (Thunder Bay). I desire to make some remarks with regard to a subject brought up last evening. An item in the estimates was allowed to stand in order that I might refer to the speech made by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett).

Mr. HAGGART. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Porter) rose to discuss the subject of the motion that the hon. gentleman has introduced, the election law. The hon. member who has the floor is bringing up another subject.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no motion before the House, except the motion to go into Supply. Upon that motion I cannot direct that any particular line should be followed.

Mr. CONMEE. I shall ask the indulgence of the House in order to refer to this subject, as I believe that the statements made by the press as coming from the hon. member (Mr. Bennett), whose absence I regret, might militate very seriously against an important section of the riding which I have the honour to represent. They also reflect unfairly and inequitably upon a number of gentlemen whose names were mentioned, and I think also that they cast very unfair and unjust reflections upon myself. I refer to the debate which took place, in regard to the harbours of Port Arthur and Fort William. Before dealing with the hon. gentleman's remarks as they have been reported in the press, I wish to call the attention of the House to the importance of the harbours at the head of the lakes. I may properly do that by making a reference to the report of the Transportation Commission. In giving the view which they hold in regard to these particular harbours they say :

> The ports on Thunder Bay, and known as Fort William and Port Arthur, occupy the only ground on the west coast of Lake Superior suitable as an outlet for the products of the provinces of the west, and are of similar relative position and value to the Canadian Northwest as the ports of Duluth and Superior are to the United States Northwest. The harbours of Thunder Bay are, from their very position, of national importance.

I shall not detain the House by reading the whole report. In another paragraph they say :

> And in developing the ports of Thunder Bay through which, in the future, must flow so large a portion of the commerce of the great west, it is of great importance that they be developed on a comprehensive scale.

And so on. They point out the very great national importance of these two harbours. They deal with them together as the harbours on Thunder Bay for the reason that they are situated in Thunder Bay, the most westerly point of Lake Superior, but although they are dealt with by the commission as one harbour, they nevertheless divide themselves naturally into two harbours. Fort William is situated on the Kaministiquia river and may therefore be called a perfectly protected harbour. That stream divides itself, about two and a half or three miles from Thunder Bay into three branches, one known as the Mission river, the other known as the main channel and the third as the McKellars river, all of which are navigable. The bay itself is a protected harbour ; it may be said to be a land-locked harbour. It is protected on the northeast by Thunder cape, which is nearly twenty-one miles in length, jutting out into Lake Superior, and which rises 1,300 feet above lake level. To the southeast it is protected in the first instance by Isle Royale an American island about forty miles in length, which forms a very great protection to the harbour in that direction. But further towards the west shore occurs what is known as Pye island. another high mountain, rising to the same height as the cape, which further protects the harbour from the southeast and especially the outlet which is known as the Mission river. Still further toward the shore and in the gap beween Thunder cape and Pye island, occur the Welcome islands which afford further protection to the harbour. So that Thunder bay affords not only an inland harbour situate on the Kaministiquia river, but a land-locked harbour which is known as Thunder bay upon which the city of Port Arthur is situated. It is true that a breakwater is there, and that a breakwater is very much needed there, not so much for protection against storms on the great lake as against storms on the bay itself, which is a large sheet of water over twenty-five miles in length from north to south.

Now, Sir, having said that much as to the national importance of these two harbours, I think hon. members will agree that it would be unfortunate if anything should fasten itself on the public mind through misrepresentation that would militate against that necessary development and necessary improvement which alone can make these harbours meet the wants and requirements of the transportation passing to and from the north west of Canada. I do not know that I need dwell upon the conditions which exist at these harbours. But for the moment I may say that ninety per cent of the total grain of the Northwest is transferred from railway to vessel at these points. Fort William has at the present time by far the largest elevator capacity in this Dominion. It is a point of manufacture, it has the terminals of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, and the Canadian Northern Railway, and the Canadian dian Northern Railway has a terminus in that city. So it will be seen that it is of very great importance, not only to that particular locality but to the Dominion as a whole. About the same conditions prevail at Port Arthur. It, too, has the Canadian Pacific Railway. In that city are the main lake terminals of the Canadian Northern Railway. The Grand Trunk Pacific is under contract, and is now building its lines into that city as well. There is situated there the Canadian Northern elevator, one of which is the largest elevator. I am informed, on this continent. The Canadian Pacific Railway has two elevators in that city; there are also the iron works and the largest coal docks, the largest plant for handling that class of freight in the Dominion of Canada, exist on the shores of Thunder Bay at this point. So it is of the very greatest importance that the development which has gone on there in the way of deepening and improving that harbour should continue.

Now coming more to detail in regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Simcoe. That hon. member saw fit to criticise the work that has been done there in the past, especially in the years 1903-4-5. I am not charging the hon. member with saying that these developments should not go on, but I am charging him (and I have the report before me here which I will refer to in a moment), with saying that there was a waste of money, that there was extravagance, that the condition of things there was not in the public interest, was not well managed, and for which not only the government but a good many other people to whom he made allusions, were blameable. Now, Sir, I take issue with these statements. I hope that I will be able to convince hon. gentlemen that there has been no waste of money, that there has been no extravagance, and that the charges which the hon. gentleman made were not founded upon fact but upon falsehood, that there was the grossest of misrepresentation, which never ought to have been made by an hon. member in this House. I may remind the House that the language used by that hon. gentleman——

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order. Is it permissible to refer to a previous debate?

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule is that it is not permissible to refer to a previous debate in the same session.

Mr. CONMEE. I am referring to reports in the newspapers, in the press.

Mr. TAYLOR. They are cut from the 'Hansard.'

Mr. CONMEE. I have some out of 'Hansard' and I have some out of newspapers, and I am referring to the newspapers.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member said that the statements he was referring to were a falsehood and a misrepresentation, and that they were made in this House during the present session, referring to a previous debate.

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule is quite plain. No reference to a previous debate which occurred in the same session can be made.

Mr. CONMEE. I did not make any reference to a previous debate, I did not use the word 'debate.' I made no reference to the 'Hansard.' I was making reference to the remarks made by an hon. member in this House as reported in certain newspapers; one of them is the Port Arthur 'News,' and the other is the 'Mail and Empire' of Toronto.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the point of order is well taken. We all heard the hon. gentleman refer to that debate. He may not have used the words, but he certainly referred to the member for East Simcoe, he referred to the charge made by the hon. member for East Simcoe, and declared his intention of proving that that charge was not founded, and that is what he now proposes to do. It seems to me that the point raised by my hon. friend is perfectly correct, and that the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) cannot get round it by a side wind. Besides that, we have some important business to do.

Mr. CONMEE. I submit that the hon. member has not quoted me fairly. I did perhaps use the word 'charge' but I have a right to use that word according to the information that comes to me. I was not in the House when the hon. gentleman made his remarks, but I have information in regard to what he said which appeared in the public press, and I think I am within my rights in making reference to that.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have only to repeat that if the reference is to what has occurred during a previous debate in the same session, it is out of order.

Mr. CONMEE. Well, Mr. Speaker, I must of course bow to your ruling. But I would desire first to understand the ruling, to understand where I am. I do not profess to be an expert in the rules of this House. I may say to the House that I delayed bringing this question up for the reason that I understood the rules allowed me, on the supplementary estimates, to make any reference I pleased. I may be wrong in that, but I do not think I ought to be cut out of a position which I occupied last night, nor do I think that it is quite fair for hon. gentlemen, after they have permitted me to go on, with the privilege of the House, in my opening remarks, to raise this question now. What I wish to say, if I may be permitted to go on.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. CONMEE. I shall endeavour to keep within the rules. Now, for instance, here is the statement I am reading and I assume I have a right to read from a newspaper article.

Mr. TAYLOR. If it has reference to this session it is out of order.

Mr. FOSTER. If it is a Grit paper you may read from it.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) proceed ?

Mr. CONMEE. Well, I do not know that I am a greater sinner than other hon. members have been during the session, and I would expect that they would give me the same fair play that has been extended to other members of the House. I do not know how I can get at the question without making some reference to this statement. It is reported from parliament, this statement says, that Mr. Conmee, member of parliament and Mr. A. F. Bowman, his partner, had put in a tender for dredging works with the fraudulent intention of withdrawing that tender if there were no intervening tenders, and that the Minister of Public Works would be dishonest enough to enter into that sort of conspiracy, to permit that to be done and to move the contract from the lowest up to the highest tender. Mr. Speaker, that statement is entirely false and without foundation. In the first place, I never was a partner of Mr. A. F. Bowman. I never had anything to do with a tender of that kind in any shape or form. But, I want to consider for a few moments the question of these tenders and the question of the work that was performed in 1903 and 1904. According to this information it is reported that there was favouritism in the years 1903 and 1904, that $108,000 worth of work was done without contract, and that the Great Lakes Dredging Company had obtained for the whole of the work a price of 25 cents a yard, whereas they were now doing the same work for 9 cents a yard. I just wish to point out that that statement is absolutely without foundation.

Mr. SPROULE. Who makes this charge against the hon. member ?

Mr. CONMEE. I will try my very best to enlighten the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) as to who made the charge. I submit that the prices paid in 1903 and 1904 were, in the Port Arthur Harbour, less than the prices paid in 1905. Now, Sir, according to this information which I have here, it is alleged that there was some criticism of the Department of Public Works, as the time for putting in tenders was extended and that the gentleman of the opposition deserved the congratulations of the country, that they had done their duty to themselves and to the government because it was their action that had brought about this great reduction in price from 25 cents to 9 cents, as the tenders that came in response to the extended advertisement were reduced in price from 25 cents to 9 cents. That is the allegation made here. I desire to point out that there are several inaccuracies and several statements that are absolutely false. In the first place there never was any work to the extent of $108,000 or half of it, or quarter of it, paid for at 25 cents a yard. Secondly, the comparison which is here made as between the work performed in 1903-4 and the work which is now being carried on, is not a fair comparison. It is a comparison not between prices that were paid in 1903 and the prices that were paid on account of the tenders in regard to which a postponement took place—not at all ; the prices of 9 cents that were paid later were paid in a different harbour and under different conditions altogether which I will be able to point out. But, before I do that I wish to point out that the price of 25 cents a yard which was paid—and that was not in 1905 but in 1904—was paid in Fort William harbour and under conditions which warranted that expenditure. There was a return brought down to the House in 1905 and it is shown by that return just what the character of the work was for which that price was paid. It is alleged in this article here that the Minister of Public Works admitted that work had been carried on for two years without contract, and the allegation is further made that he had resisted the change in the advertisement at the time that a request of that kind was made. That statement was quite untrue for the reason that the minister did not admit that there had been any such quantity of work done without contract, but, on the contrary, he makes a statement which hon. gentleman can find at page 4460 of 'Hansard.' I am not now referring to the debates of this session but to the debates of a previous session.

Mr. BLAIN. What year ?

Mr. CONMEE. 1905. Referring to the extension of time for the reception of tenders the minister denied the allegation that there was any favouritism in regard to the notice. He said :

> I have not heard of any request for an extension of time. The advertisement has been published for some time, and there has not been one recommendation to me to extend the time, but if there should be any request to the department for an extension of time, I have no objection to granting it.

There never was any objection to that at all. Then at page 4463, the minister goes on :

> The tenders that are invited are simply for the present season's work.

I wish to ask hon. gentleman to pay a little attention to that for the reason that it established the absolute falsity of the allegation which was made that the work which is now being done is being done at the price resulting from the tenders which were received in response to the notice which was under review in the debate to which I have referred in 1905.

The minister stated :

> I recognize that there is a very large amount of work to be done at Port Arthur. I hope that the officers of the department will be able to make a thorough survey of the whole work there, allowing time to advertise for tenders for work extending over two or three years, in which case there is no doubt that the cost of the work could be materially decreased, for the reason that proper and up to date plant could then be supplied. At the present time the plants that are being used are not of the latest type of dredging plants. The dredging that has been called for is for the present season's work, but I understand that before we reach another season the department will ask for tenders for a more extensive work and giving sufficient length of time to enable those tendering for the work to provide plant to do it at the least possible cost.

Now I submit that that is evidence first that the minister did not object to the extension of the time, and second that he pointed out at that early day that the tenders then called for were for that season's work only, and that they intended to call later for tenders for a large amount of work extending over a period of years and that tenderers would have ample time to prepare the necessary and up-to-date plant. Now, the allegations made are intended to lead one to believe that it was the extension of time that brought about the change of prices from 1903 the prices paid in to what they are at the present time. I wish to show that contention to be unfounded, and also how these prices have ranged, and how the difference really arises. As I have shown, the contract price in 1903 and 1904 was 15 cents. That was the basis of the work being done, so far as the Great Lakes Dredging Company was concerned. It is true there were other prices paid, and it is necessary for me to refer to the return which was brought down in order to explain that matter. This return furnishes all the information that hon. members can desire, I have a copy of the report here, and it shows quite clearly that the dredging of the harbours in 1903-4.

Mr BLAIN Would the hon gentleman (Mr. Conmee) have any objection to stating who the members of the Great Lakes Dredging Company are ?

Mr. CONMEE. Not at all. So far as I know them, I will give the names before I sit down. The dredging that was required for 1903-4 was required for this reason : As hon. gentlemen know, dredging has been going on in these harbours for the last fifteen or twenty years. As in a great many other cases, 18 feet was supposed to be a good depth of water. But, as larger vessels came into the trade and as the great grain elevators were established and the traffic grew in volume, it became imperative that the depth of water should be increased to 22 feet. As a result of that, there had to be redredging of certain of the areas previously dredged and deepening of other sections so as to afford a uniform depth of 22 feet. Now, the basis of the contract for that class of work, so far as the Great Lakes Dredging Company was concerned, was 15 cents. The only change in that figure from 15 cents to a higher price was fixed, as this return shows, upon correspondence and contracts as between the dredging company and the Public Works Department after the fullest investigation and report of the resident engineer and afterwards of the chief engineer.

Mr. BLAIN. But without tender ?

Mr. CONMEE. I will explain that question of tender to my hon. friend (Mr. Blain). I have already alluded to it, but I will come to it in regular order, and I hope to put it so that my hon. friend will understand it. Now, I have just stated that these were contract prices, and they were entered upon by tender previously at 15 cents. Why was there a change from 15 cents to a higher price ? The explanation of that is to be found in this return which was brought down and which is at the disposal of any hon. member.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that the increased price was given to the Great Lakes Dredging Company without tender. Am I correct in that ?

Mr. CONMEE. I will answer that in this way : There never has been any dredging done in that harbour or in any other harbour in this Dominion in which there have not been higher prices given without tender for certain works. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) knew as much about these works as he ought to know, and as he can learn if he will investigate them, he will be convinced of that. But that is the very trouble; some hon. members do not understand exactly what they are combatting or there would not be so much agitation. I submit that there is no justification for any fair-minded person to criticise adversely the work in these harbours since 1902 which is as far as I have investigated it.

Mr. BLAIN. If the hon. gentleman will allow me ; I do not wish to interrupt him——

Mr. CONMEE. I do not object. I want to get out all the truth of the matter.

Mr. BLAIN. Did I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) to say that no dredging had been done in any harbour in Canada when the price was not increased without tender ?

Mr. CONMEE. No, I did not say that.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. gentleman tell me what he did say ?

Mr. CONMEE. I said there was no dredging done in any harbour that I know of without the government having to give some extra prices for special work, not under the contract but outside the contract.

Mr. BLAIN. In every case.

Mr. CONMEE. In every case so far as I know. I do not think it is practicable for any harbour to be dredged otherwise.

Mr. BLAIN. My understanding of the case is this: The government advertise for tenders——

Mr. CONMEE. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. The contract is made fixing the prices—so much for clay, so much for rock, so much for sand. Now, are we to understand that, after these conditions are fixed, there are still other prices given by the government without tender?

Mr. CONMEE. No. Let me explain to my hon. friend. As he states, tenders are invited for classified work, or, if the conditions do not warrant classified work, a uniform price is fixed for the whole work. What the tender is based on is not the advertisements in the newspapers, but the plans and specifications which the engineers in the department prepare, and to which they invite attention by these advertisements. They show the soundings, the character of the material and the area that is to be let. The contractor tenders upon that information. If it turns out that he is required to go outside of that, as is very often the case, and the work is of the same character, he is not paid anything extra. If he has to deal with the same class of material he ought not to get any higher price, and he does not get it. But if he is asked to do something for the improvement of the harbour which is not in his contract, then I think my hon. friend will admit that he ought to be paid what it is worth.

Mr. BLAIN. Certainly, but my point is that that does not very often occur.

Mr. CONMEE. I am explaining to my hon. friend that it does, but I will convince my hon. friend that this is a very small thing. I grant that if anything large were to crop up in that way, there would be room for suspicion, but that is not the case. I do not pretend to speak of other harbours, because I do not know the conditions; but I know enough of that class of work to say that in my opinion no harbour in this Dominion has been dredged without it having been necessary to do some little work of a different class from that provided for in the contract, and for which it is perfectly right that the contractor should be paid a fair price. Let me refer to the prices paid in 1903-4, which were the prices of the contract for which tenders were invited in the previous year; tenders were not invited in 1903-4. In Port Arthur harbour in 1903 there were dredged under the contract 19,500 cubic yards and again 86,575 cubic yards at 15 cents a yard. Now, I will call attention to the correspondence of the engineer of the department to show why 23 cents was paid for a portion of the work. It was paid because the contractors were asked to go into a different class of work altogether, in a different section of the harbour, a mile or more from the place covered by their contract. Under the 23 cent price we find one item of 7,900 yards and another of 47,000 yards. Then, there is another price of 40 cents, at which 8,700 yards were done. There were also 7,334 yards at 90 cents. There was a still higher price, and I do not know how the correspondent could have missed such an opportunity—$1.25 a yard; but at this price there were only 454 yards. If you make the comparison you will see that the quantities for which the high prices were paid were very small indeed, a very inconsiderable portion of the work. In Fort William harbour, or the Kaministiquia river, which is the same thing, in 1903 the basis there was the same. The contracts were let at 15 cents, the price of the year previous. Then there was a price of 20 cents and a price of 25 cents paid for certain classes of work, having regard to the character of material and distance of haul. The quantity at 15 cents was 43,980 yards, and the quantity at 20 cents was 20,839 yards and the quantity at 25 cents, the price which has been made so prominent in these attacks, was only 9,000 yards. Under the head of Fort William again we find at 15 cents 19,000 yards, 190,000 yards, 70,554 yards, and so on; at 15 cents and at 20 we find 2,798 yards, and at $1.25 just 91 yards. The reasons why these prices were paid, the character of the material, and other particulars, are set out in the correspondence of the chief engineer of the department. So that I say it is absolutely incorrect, it is a misrepresentation, the grossest kind of slander and falsehood, to make the statements which have been made. Now, hon. gentlemen will understand that the harbour is dredged, according to the plans the engineer has prepared down to a certain line. There must be of necessity an entrance channel from that line to the harbour line. It was in connection with the new elevator which was built by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that such a channel had to be made from the main harbour to a certain harbour line, and it was in that connection that this 90 cents a yard was paid. Why was it 90 cents? The return discloses the information, which was concealed in these references, that it was because the material was hard pan and boulders, where blasting had to be resorted to. Is it reasonable to assume that a dredge company should be taken away from their contract and set to handle a class of material where blasting was required for the same price that they would do ordinary work for? Nobody would contend that. I submit that that is a very low price. I do not believe you will find the same class of hard pan handled anywhere else for the same money.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. FIELDING. I would suggest that we go on with the unopposed private Bills and let the others stand. If there be any private Bills to which there is no opposition, it would not be fair to prevent their passing because the hour for private Bills may be taken up in the discussion of an opposed measure which has precedence on the order paper.

THE JORDAN-ERIE POWER COMPANY.

Bill (No. 115) to amalgamate the Jordon Light, Heat and Power Company, and the Erie and Ontario Development Company, Limited, into one corporation under the name of the Jordan-Erie Power Company.' —Mr. Campbell.

On section 1,

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like a short explanation as to what this is intended to bring about.

Mr. GERMAN. It is an amalgamation of the two companies, one of which has a charter of incorporation by Act of the parliament of Canada and the other is incorporated by letters patent of the Dominion under the Dominion General Companies Act. There was another company in the field, the Erie and Ontario Power company.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is that going out of existence ?

Mr. GERMAN. Not absolutely, but all the parties interested in both companies have agreed to amalgamate the two interests into one. It was found impractiable to have two companies operating over the same ground.

Mr. FOSTER. Do they ask any new powers ?

Mr. GERMAN. No, except that by clauses 6 and 7 they ask to have their capital stock and bonding powers made respectively $10,000,000 instead of $8,000,000.

Mr. FOSTER. There are no new powers as to construction and the like ?

Mr. GERMAN. No. Their powers formerly were to construct power canals from the Welland river to Lake Ontario, and they now ask power to construct from Lake Erie to the Welland river. The Erie and Ontario Power company had a charter allowing them to build a power canal from Lake Erie to the Welland river and thence north over the same ground as this company is operating on.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is it intended to go to lake Ontario or to stop at the Welland river going north ?

Mr. GERMAN. There will be only one company instead of two. It will go to Lake Erie and the Welland river and thence north to the mouth of the Jordan at Jordan harbour or the Sixteen Mile creek.

On section 4,

Mr. GERMAN. After the first clause in section 4, these words were added by the committee on railways and canals :

Provided also that the works of the company shall in no way interfere with the undertaking of the Erie and Ontario Power Company, as shown on the plans of the said company now on file in the Department of Railways and Canals, without the consent of the Erie and Ontario Power Company.

Mr. LENNOX. That is the company whose application was withdrawn yesterday.

Mr. GERMAN. It is the same company, and there is a signed agreement between the parties in both to settle their differences.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does subsection 2 of this section confirm new powers or is it merely re-acting the powers conferred by the previous charter ?

Mr. GERMAN. There are no new powers. The only power they get is that of amalgamating the two companies.

On section 6,

Mr. GERMAN. I would move to amend that by making the capital stock $10,000,000 instead of $7,000,000.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 7,

Mr. GERMAN. I would also move to amend that by giving power to the company to issue bonds to the extent of $10,000,000 instead of $8,000,000. I have discussed this matter with financial people and they consider that this is advisable. I am free to admit that I know nothing about the financial end of it, but men in good financial standing say that in order to finance it and to make it a success, there should be a capital stock of $10,000,000 and $10,000,000 bonds. If this is gone on with it will be gone on with in absolute good faith under contracts which will be in the highest interest, in my opinion, of the people of the province of Ontario. I would move to strike out the word 'eight' before 'million' and substitute the word 'ten.'

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 10,

Mr. LENNOX. I think section 10 should provide that this will not affect any claims as well as pending litigation or actions.

Mr. GERMAN. There are no claims and that should perhaps be inserted.

Mr. LENNOX. I would move to amend the section so that it will read 'no claim, action or proceeding.'

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. W. McINTYRE moved that the House go into committee on Bill (No. 154) respecting the Canadian Northern Railway Company.

Mr. CONMEE. I rise to a question of privilege. I find that Bill (No. 167) to incorporate the Port Arthur Power and Development Company has been shifted from its proper place, if I am not mistaken, on the order paper. That Bill has been on the order paper for a considerable time and stood next to the Bill just passed. I find that Bill (No. 158), which appears to-day for the first time on the order paper, has been given precedence and I would ask that Bill (No. 167) be given its proper place on the order paper.

Mr. SPEAKER. I can hardly see how that can be so. Order (No. 47) is ready for the Committee of the Whole, it must have gone to the committee and been reported; the other Bill, order (No. 48), has not had its second reading yet.

Mr. CONMEE. I submit that Bill (No. 154) passed the Senate after Bill (No. 167). This is its first appearance in the House.

Mr. SPROULE. No, it was on the order paper before and was sent to the committee and returned.

Mr. CONMEE. Not at all; I do not think the records will bear that out. Even if it is so, I do not see why it should have precedence.

Mr. SPROULE. Has not the Bill to go to the committee after it is read the second time? The hon. gentleman's Bill has not been read the second time and after that it would have to go to the committee and be considered and come back.

Mr. CONMEE. I would like to see the record where this Bill as had its second reading and to know how it comes to be placed where it is.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman suggest that the Bill never had a second reading?

Mr. CONMEE. Yes, I do. I have no recollection of it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That Bill was before the committee and we discussed it for three hours.

Mr. LENNOX.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. CONMEE. I understand that it was before the committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think rule 28 would have application in any event. Rule 28 provides:

Bills reported after second reading from any Standing or Select Committee, shall be placed on the Orders of the Day following the reception of the report, for reference to a Committee of the Whole House, in their proper order next after Bills reported from Committees of the Whole House.

I find the second reading of the Bill took place on the 12th of April. I am afraid we will have to accept the record as it stands.

Motion agreed to, Bill considered in committee, reported, read the third time, and passed.

HAMILTON RADIAL ELECTRIC RAILWAY.

House went into committee on Bill (No. 158) respecting the Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Company.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In reference to the Bill that is now under consideration I desire to say a few words. It is a Bill that has evoked a great deal of discussion, not only in the House, but in the press of the country. I think in the criticisms of this Bill, the objects and motives of those who have been promoting it have been misrepresented in a way that is extremely unfair to those gentlemen. One paper in Toronto has characterized this as a most infamous Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Which paper is that?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Toronto 'Globe.' If this criticism had appeared in some of the Tory papers we would not have considered it of much account.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. member kindly read the editorial, there are some of us who never read the Toronto 'Globe.'

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, I intend to read it. It was read once by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) the other night, and I propose to read it a little more. I was saying that if these criticisms had appeared in some of the Toronto papers, they would not have counted for much and would have had but little effect. But when we consider the high standing of the Toronto 'Globe', a paper that has a reputation of being the fairest and ablest conducted paper in the whole Dominion of Canada, it is almost inconceivable that such an article should appear in that journal. In its issue of April 23, in a very conspicuous place on the first page of the paper, under the heading 'A very grave issue,' appears the following:

The issue raised at Ottawa yesterday in the discussion of the Hamilton Radial Bill is the most serious that has yet arisen between the city of Toronto and the federal power. Mr. Archibald Campbell, M.P., and those siding with him, bluntly take the ground that the 'sacred city limits' are as liable to invasion against the will of the citizens, when the Dominion parliament gives the word, as any remote territorial road or any private right of way in Canada. If the Dominion parliament can give one company power to build car tracks——

Notice this expression, Mr. Chairman.

—can give one company power to build car tracks and collect fares on the streets of Toronto, it can give that right to an unlimited number, and so utterly destroy the street railway franchise that the city of Toronto regards as its most valued possession.

Then it goes on to say :

If the Dominion parliament gives to any company the right to collect car fares and take up and put down passengers in the city of Toronto, it will confiscate in the most arbitrary and anarchistic fashion a franchise worth not less than eight million dollars to the people of Toronto. Surely the legislators at Ottawa do not know what is involved in forcing the Hamilton Radial Railway into the city without the consent of the city council.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not all the editorial.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The editorial is on the 'Hansard' now, and I need not read it again. Now, Sir, this editorial, coming as I say from a paper of the high standing, and reputation, and the ability with which it is edited, of the Toronto 'Globe,' is certainly startling to the people of Canada. If the claims made in this article are correct, I do not wonder that it would be justly characterized as a grave issue and an invasion of the rights of the city of Toronto. But if the writer of this article had read the copy that was furnished him by the able representatives of the 'Globe' in the press gallery, he never would have written that article. If he had read the Bill or knew anything about the subject at all, he would not have made any such remark as that. Now, Sir, in the Bill before the House, what do we find ? Here is a clause that I want to bring to your attention, subsection 3 of clause 4 :

Suburban lines of railway within the limits of the county of Wentworth and the city of Hamilton, but shall not construct or operate its railway or any extension thereof along any highway or public place, without first obtaining consent expressed by by-law of the municipality having jurisdiction over such highway or public place, and upon terms to be agreed on with such municipality.

Now, this writer would lead the public to believe that the Hamilton Radial Bill was asking the right to run along the streets of Toronto, to collect fares, and take up and put down passengers on the streets of Toronto, when there is not a solitary word in this Bill from beginning to end that gives them that right at all. Everybody knows that the Railway Act expressly prohibits that. Subsection 235 of the Railway Act says :

The railway may be carried upon, along or across an existing highway upon leave therefor having been first obtained from the board as hereinafter authorized; provided that the board shall not grant leave to any company to carry any street railway or tramway or any railway operated or to be operated as a street railway or tramway along any highway which is within the limits of any city or incorporated town, until the company has first obtained consent therefor by by-law of the municipal authority of such city or incorporated town.

Could anything be plainer than that ?

Mr. LANCASTER. What about villages and townships?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Or any municipality. We are speaking now about the city of Toronto. The article to which I have called the attention of the committee expressly leaves the impression that this railway company was asking the right to run along the streets of the city of Toronto and to take up passengers and put them down on the streets of Toronto by the authority of the Dominion parliament. It is plain to be seen from the Railway Act that this parliament, if it saw fit to do it, could not do it at all. It could not possibly give power to a railway company to run along the streets of Toronto or of any town or city without first getting the consent of the city and without the passage of a by-law embodying that consent. If the writer of that article had consulted, had even looked at the bill or if he had read the copy that was furnished by the reporters from the press gallery, he would have seen at once that there was not one single word either in the Bill or in the discussion that took place in this House that would warrant him in making such an assertion as that—not one. The charge that he has made regarding the action of the parties promoting this Bill, is, in my opinion, an insult to the parliament of Canada. I venture to say that in my experience, and it has been a pretty long experience in the House of Commons—I have always been a member of the Railway Committee, I think, ever since I have had the honour of a seat in this House, and I have had the very distinguished honour of presiding over the meetings of the Railway Committee for the last two sessions—there never was a Bill that came before parliament that there was less lobbying and touting about than there was about the Hamilton Radial Railway Bill. The charges which have been made about lobbyists filling the corridors of this parliament lobbying members are all moonshine. I have been here a good many years and I have never yet been asked or lobbied to support or oppose any Bill that came before this parliament.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does that apply to the Senate too?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not speaking for the Senate, I am speaking for the House of Commons, and I think it is due to the members of the House of Commons to say that they are not men who can be whipped around the post by everybody who comes here. Any man has but to look at this Bill and see how it has been cut to pieces and amended and altered to realize that the House of Commons gave this Bill its most careful consideration for about three hours, and when the Toronto 'Globe' or any other paper says that there were touters and lobbyists around the corridors of parliament lobbying and importuning members to support the Bill I say there is not one word of justification for a charge of that kind.

Mr. BERGERON. We always thought the Toronto 'Globe' was not correct.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The article to which the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. A. C. Macdonell) called attention and which was headed 'Resisting Usurpers' was quoted at length by that hon. gentleman and placed upon the pages of 'Hansard' with a great deal of gusto. It seemed to roll under his tongue like a sweet morsel. The Toronto 'Globe' is a paper that stands at the very head of the journals of this Dominion, a paper, that, I am sorry to say, my hon. friend does not believe very much in, but if anything appears like that by some misadventure or through ignorance on the part of some obscure writer on that 'Globe,' then the hon. member for South Toronto rises in his might and with a great deal of gusto rolls that editorial under his tongue like a sweet morsel.

Mr. LANCASTER. Cannot the 'Globe' have a lucid interval once in a while?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think it is usually most lucid but it sometimes, like my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster), has lapses. I think that in justice to the promoters of the Bill I shall read the reply to that editorial. It appears over the name of the Hon. James Gibson and is dated, Hamilton, April 23. It is addressed to the editor of the 'Globe' and it reads as follows:

There is never much to be gained by any one entering into a controversy with a newspaper, but your editorial of this morning about 'resisting usurpers' is extremely unfair and unjust, and it is not the first time within the past two or three months that you have made, and circulated throughout the country, most erroneous and misleading statements about the Hamilton companies in which I am interested and I claim the privilege of a few words in self-defence.

You are wrong in referring to this company as a 'company operating an ordinary street railway,' and using the expressions with reference to the Hamilton Radial Electric Railway that have been so glibly used by the 'blockers' at Ottawa. The company is a railway under the Ontario Railway Act, and not under the Street Railway Act, and has never done a street railway business in Hamilton or anywhere else.

You are wrong in stating what you cannot possibly know, viz.: 'That the promoters have no intention of constructing a line from Niagara to Detroit rivers.' Other electric lines have such charters, and I do not remember that they were treated by the 'Globe' with the scant courtesy we are receiving.

You are wrong, and every one else is wrong who proposes that we should do as much as we can under the present charter; and, having completed the construction as far as our charter rights go, apply for an extension of charter powers. That is not the way railway lines are built; that is not the way they are financed; and that is an application of an entirely new departure in railway legislation, and we are, forsooth, selected by you as a proper subject to treat exceptionally.

You are wrong in leading the public to believe (as your editorial certainly does) that we ever proposed to operate cars along the city of Toronto highways. The Railway Act would prevent that, and the company never intended to get such power by this Bill, and would not have been given such power if the Bill had passed in its original form. We did ask the power to buy our way into the city of Toronto, just the same as any other Dominion railway has done; the route, plans, conditions, &c., all being settled by the Railway Commission.

Let me add that there is no intention to force the company's line into Toronto in opposition to any reasonable objection on the part of the citizens. Our engineers have not yet been able to definitely recommend a route into Toronto, but when our plans are ready we will be glad to consult the city council, believing that the fast electric transit we propose to provide will be to the advantage of the people of Toronto as well as those outside. Our plans entirely preclude the idea of doing business as a street railway, and I desire most sincerely to assure the people that the Toronto Street Railway franchise is in no danger from us. We believe that when our plans are matured and our proposals made public it will be found that our mode of entering the city, which may be by a tunnel, will be quite unobjectionable.

You are wrong in stating or conveying to your readers the impression that there was any authorized objection from the council of the city of Hamilton to the Radial Railway crossing public streets in connection with its private right of way into the city. The Railway Committee very naturally pooh-poohed any objection to the mere crossing of streets.

You are wrong in quietly ignoring in your editorial the fact that this Bill was carefully considered by the Senate Railway Committee and in the Senate before coming to the House of Commons, and that its various features were discussed in that branch of the parliament of Canada, and that in talking about the Dominion parliament 'granting rights by this Bill with a waive of its hand,' you are leading the pubilc to believe that both Houses of parliament are passing a Bill without knowing what they are doing, as to which you are wrong.

You are wrong, and insulting as well, in talking about the 'touts of the interested corporation haunting the lobbies of parliament.' I have yet to learn that a person who is interested in legislation before the committees of parliament cannot be present when such legislation is up for consideration. Personally, I am not very fond of running down to Ottawa, but when in connection with questions that have been raised, or are likely to be raised, I have been specially required to go down, it seems to me that I ought not to be referred to by any such coarse language as you have used. I will venture to say that it is seldom that any contested Bill has ever gone through either parliament or the legislature in which there has been so little 'lobbying' or so complete an absence of anything at all approaching to improper procedure of any kind. Your criticism and insinuations are most foundationless and unfair.

You are wrong in making no mention of the embarrassing position in which this company finds itself by reason of the Dominion legislation of 1883 and 1888.

The Minister of Justice expressed the opinion yesterday that, under that legislation, when the company crossed the Grand Trunk tracks at Burlington it went under Dominion jurisdiction, and that there appeared to be no power in the British North America Act to take it out of the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada.

Mr. A. H. Clarke, K.C., M.P., expressed the same views, and other able lawyers hold the same opinion; and, in view of this perplexity as to jurisdiction, where a company may be called upon any day to do things—either under the one law or the other—you were wrong in opposing the company securing any relief.

You were wrong, either editorially or otherwise, in basing arguments and attacks on false premises, and in forgetting the old adage, 'Falsehood flies and truth comes limping after.'

I do not suppose this letter will by any means remove the misapprehensions which your editorial will give rise to; but I think you will, in fairness, concede the right to have corrected some of the mistakes which you have made.

(Sgd.) J. M. GIBSON.

Hamilton, April 23.

Now, Sir, I think that answer to the editorial of the 'Globe' is so complete and so fair in its terms, and so true that there is no possible rejoinder to it. And the 'Globe,' although it has devoted two editorials to it, has failed to controvert one single assertion that Hon. J. M. Gibson made. The writer of the original article—I do not say purposely for, no doubt, it was in ignorance of the real facts of the case—wrote without any basis of facts for his conclusions. There is not one word of foundation in the Bill or anything said against it on the other side of the House. Now, my name had also been drawn into this discussion——

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) keeps on two minutes longer he will have talked the Bill out.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope that when I get through the committee will pass the Bill without discussion. I hope that I shall be able to convince the committee that this is a good Bill. Now, Sir, the 'Globe' articles have stated that Archibald Campbell, M.P., was in favour of letting the Hamilton Radial Railway run on the streets of Toronto. There is not a word of foundation for that statement. The company proposes to buy its own right of way into the city of Toronto. There was a clause in the Bill which the promoters finally dropped—clause 6—which reads as follows:

The company may also issue securities to the extent of seventy-five per cent of its actual expense upon or in respect of a bridge, including the approaches thereto, across the old Welland Canal in the city of St. Catharines, a bridge, including the approaches thereto, across the Niagara river——

Now, mark:

—the purchase of right of way and the terminal station buildings in the city of Toronto.

Of course, when the promoters agreed to drop the first clause which authorized them to go into the city of Toronto and concluded to stop 'at or near,' then this clause 6 was not needed, and so it was dropped. But in the Bill as it was brought down, they proposed to issue securities for the express purpose of buying their right of way into the city of Toronto—not running on the streets at all. Now, I see I have five minutes more—it was ten minutes after eight when we started. I wish to say a word as to my own position. The 'Globe' said in justification of its assertion that this Bill proposed to give the company the right to run on the streets of the city of Toronto, that if they were to read the speech of Mr. Campbell they would find in it support for their assertion. I defy any man here to show in my speech one single word that justifies any such statement. On the contrary I expressly said that what I wanted was that the cars should run down into the city of Toronto, but let an extra fare be charged if desired or let the city authorities take control of the cars as they entered the city. Here are the words I used, as reported in 'Hansard,' page 7483:

We should insist on the same provisions being made that are made in every modern city in the United States. We should insist that whether you have come one hundred or five hundred miles, you should go in your railway car right to the centre of the city. I do not care whether they pay another fare. The city may take control of the cars if they like; that is a minor detail. But provision must be made that these people will not be put to that inconvenience, and be able to get right into the heart of the city.

Now, what are the facts with regard to the country around the city of Toronto? The cars from Scarboro and Highland Creek connect with the tracks of the Toronto Street Railway and are of the same grade, and why cannot these cars run on into the city of Toronto instead of dumping passengers as soon as they reach the border of the city and make them change cars ? The same is true of the Weston line and the Lambton Mills line. Many times I have seen women and children standing for three quarters of an hour waiting to get a car into the city of Toronto, and when they come back from the city they have to wait again for their connection to any of these outside points. Something must be done to prevent that. Go to Detroit, Buffalo or any other modern city, and you will find cars for one hundred miles running right into the city. We voted last night hundreds of thousands of dollars of the people's money to go to the city of Toronto, and the people of Scarboro, Markham, Etobicoke, Halton and Peel all pay their proportion of that money. These people want to go to the city of Toronto to take the boats to Niagara Falls or to Montreal, and I say it is an outrage that they cannot be carried into the city. This Bill will come up at the next session of parliament, unless in the meantime the city of Toronto or the Street Railway Company make arrangements to overcome this difficulty. The people of the country around Toronto will not submit to it much longer. The county council of the county of York has been agitating this matter for some time. I say it is not in the interest of the city of Toronto. I venture to say that the Business Men's Association, the Board of Trade and Manufacturers' Association will all hold up both hands to remove all the obstructions, to take down the toll gates and to let these railways come into the city of Toronto. The hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) says that no railway or car shall cross the borders of the city of Toronto, although he is quite ready to give the city of London or the city of Brantford that advantage. Therefore I say—

Mr. MACDONELL. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The order for private Bills having expired, I leave the chair.

Mr. MACDONELL. Before you leave the chair I would like, to ask the leader of the House, in view of the notice of motion that appears on the order paper, for Saturday next, that from this date to the end of the session government orders have precedence on Mondays, and also in view of the fact that the government has already taken all the days for government business, whether the order for private Bills will again appear on the order paper this session ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, I should say not.

SUPPLY—DREDGING CONTRACTS AT PORT ARTHUR.

Mr. CONMEE. Mr. Speaker, before six o'clock I had made some reference to the prices that had been paid for dredging in the harbours at the head of the lakes during the years 1903 and 1904. I had shown that, generally speaking, the prices were under contract, except for certain special work, and I had quoted the figures to show that the special items were very small compared with the bulk of the work in the harbours referred to. I made the statement that the minister, when this question was up, on April 13, 1905, had made certain statements in regard to it. He repudiated the inference that the work was done without contract, and went on to say :

> It is quite true, I believe, that tenders were not called for last year, but it is quite untrue at the same time that no contract was made.

There the minister is defending the course that has been taken of excluding certain irresponsible persons in regard to tenders. Further on, at page 4463, he states :

> The tenders that are invited are simply for the present season's work.

He goes on then to make the statement which I read to the House this afternoon that he recognized that a large work was being done, and expected to call for tenders at a later date in another season for that class of work, and have the prices extend over a period of years. Now, Sir, the inference has been drawn, that there was some design in the advertisement to prevent fair competition, because it was said that the work should be started within ten days. The minister pointed out that that had been the original practice of the department, and said :

> The department would not expect any one to go and work there until such time as it was possible for him to do so.

Let me say this, and I think it will appeal to hon. gentlemen. Tenders were called for on the 14th of April, 1905. The time was extended until the 1st of May, on which fact a great deal of stress has been laid. I submit that no conditions could arise, or no information could be furnished or obtained, between the 14th of April and the 1st of May, that would make one iota's difference to any of the parties tendering. Under no circumstances and at no place that I know of would a company tendering look for information otherwise than from the plans and soundings exhibited by the department, covering the area to be put under contract and showing the character of the material to be dealt with. It is a fallacy to assume that there was any desire or could possibly have been any injustice to anybody who wished to tender. That could not possibly have been the case, although a good deal of newspaper notoriety has been given that particular feature of the matter. I think I can substantiate that upon other grounds. I think that the mere mention of the facts and the conditions and how these works are tendered for, should be sufficient to satisfy any reasonable person that there could not have been any particular design or any particular advantage intended in favour of any one. It is said that the Great Lakes Dredging Company, had its plant upon the ground, would practically get the work at its own price. That could not possibly have been the case. They had no greater advantage than any other company. I am not finding fault with the opposition for criticising the particular advertisement to which I have referred; it was not that character of advertisement which an individual would have put out. I submit however that every branch of the different departments and every great railway company which published advertisements or invite tenders could be criticised in the same way. All these advertisements are one-sided like the handle of a jug, and the same criticism might be levelled at any of them. I want to show what did happen, and I think that will prove my position. According to the tenders that came in, in response to the notice on the 1st of May, to which I have made reference, no less than four local companies tendered for the work. It is not true that the Great Lakes Company was the only local company which tendered or could tender. There were eight tenderers altogether, namely, A. F. Bowman, Heckler & Macdonald, the Great Lakes Company, C. S. Bole, E. W. Davis & Sons, of Ottawa, The Fort William Dredging and Harbour Company, Robert Miller, of Ingersoll, and J. B. Haney, or Toronto. A great deal of credit was sought to be given to some particular political party and a great deal of discredit was endeavoured to be thrown upon the department and some other people including myself. It was claimed that there was a drop in the prices from 25 cents to 9 and 9½ cents. That is not true. There was no such drop in the prices, in fact there was no drop at all in the prices in Port Arthur harbour. It was said in the article to which I have referred that the reason for that was the course which had been taken in parliament and that the Weddell Company had come in and forced down the prices. That is not true. That company did not tender at all in 1905.

Mr. BERGERON. They were wrong.

Mr. CONMEE. They were very wrong. I have read the names of the different tenderers, and A. F. Bowman was the lowest. I am speaking now of 1905 and of the tenders that came in for the Port Arthur work. Now then for the Fort William harbour and dredging, number the tenders that came in in response to the postponed tenders. There were ten. The same parites tendered whom I have mentioned, but in addition there were William Davis, as well as Davis & Sons, and Randal McDonald, who is a dredge owner, and Mr. Heckler of the 'Soo.' So that the same parties tendered and besides them there were two additional tenders. The lowest tender for the Fort William harbour was A. F. Bowman, and the work was awarded to the lowest tenderer in each case. I may be permitted to refer to the prices in the Port Arthur harbour. I have shown that the prices were the previous year, speaking generally 15 cents, 23 cents and again 40 cents. The prices tendered in 1905 were these: 14 cents for clay, 22 cents for clay and boulders, 29 cents for quicksand and 50 cents for hard pan. I submit that these figures worked out higher than the prices of the previous year which have been so severely criticised. Then in the Fort William harbour, the prices were 12 cents for the short haul and 14 cents for the long haul. Let me call attention to the reason why there was a reduction in the prices in the Fort William harbour in the tenders of 1905 as compared with the prices in 1904. The drop in prices is very little. It only amounted to a few cents. The reason is this. The work previous to 1905 was going over the bed of the river which had been previously dredged or what is called scraping. In part it was at a point three or four miles further up the river, between the power house and the Canadian Northern Railway, upper docks from which there was a haul of six miles or a round trip of twelve miles and at which point the material was quicksand. Had work at that point been asked for in 1905, the parties would have asked a higher price than in the tenders they put in. That is what the return shows and what the facts are. It is absolutely untrue that there was a drop in the prices as represented. In the first place it was a falsification of the record and the facts, when the statement was made that 25 cents was the price. I have shown by the returns what the prices were. I have shown that they were very moderate.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to draw attention to the fact that the hon. member is referring distinctly to a previous debate of this session.

Mr. CONMEE. No, I am referring to the debate of a previous session.

Mr. SPROULE. No, this has reference to a debate which took place this session. The hon. gentleman has been doing that right along. That is the debate brought up by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) on this question this session. The hon. gentleman is repeatedly referring to it and alluding that the statements there made were absolutely false.

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot gather from the hon. gentleman's speech that he is making any definite reference to anything that occurred this session, and I have been listening very attentively since the first objection was taken. Since that point was taken there has been no reference that I can gather to a past debate of this session.

Mr. CONMEE. I submit that I am referring to a newspaper report and to the debate of 1905.

Mr. SPEAKER. A newspaper report purporting to refer to a past debate in this House would be equally out of order.

Mr. CONMEE. I am not referring to a newspaper report of a debate in this House but to statements in regard to the work in these two harbours, which affect the constituency I represent and in which my own name was mentioned.

Mr. TAYLOR. And these statements were made in this House this session and quoted by the paper to which the hon. member referred. It has been that all through his argument.

Mr. CONMEE. I was not present at any such debate, I know nothing about that.

Mr. SPEAKER. If an hon. member points out any reference of that sort bearing on a former debate, I would have to rule it out of order. I cannot recall it at the moment.

Mr. SPROULE. His whole argument is controverting statements made a few weeks ago by the hon. member for East Simcoe, (Mr. Bennett). I wish to draw attention to the fact that what he cannot do directly he cannot do indirectly. Even although he pretends to hold a paper reporting the debates in this House, it is the debates of this House all the same. He reads the arguments given in that speech and controverts them right along.

Mr. CONMEE. I think my hon. friend is mistaken, there are no such figures given in the Hansard report of that debate.

Mr. SPROULE. Not with reference to the cost of dredging?

Mr. CONMEE. Not at all, there are no figures for the cost of dredging in 1903.

Mr. SPROULE. Is not the hon. gentleman trying to show that the price of dredging did not drop during last year?

Mr. CONMEE. I am trying to show that statements made in 1905 were untrue, that they are not founded on fact, that there were insinuations made in the debates of that year and since in the press of the country, accusing the department of extravagance, and in which the member will see I was myself attacked.

Mr. SPROULE. The statement was made by the hon. member for East Simcoe, (Mr. Bennett) that because so and so took place, the cost of dredging dropped in the last year from twenty-five cents to eight cents.

Mr. SPEAKER.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Is not the hon. member referring to a past debate?

Mr. SPROULE. I am referring to the argument the hon. gentleman is advancing.

Mr. CONMEE. If any hon. gentleman has done that I did not hear it, and if that statement has been referred to elsewhere I submit that I am within my rights in refuting it.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member is not within his rights.

Mr. CONMEE. I am not discussing——

Mr. TAYLOR. We will have the ruling of the Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. If any hon. member will point out that the hon. gentleman who has the floor, (Mr. Conmee) is referring to statements used in a debate this session he will be quite out of order. I cannot, of course, recall all the debates.

Mr. TAYLOR. He admits he is reading from papers.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. member must not say that.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understood the hon. member to say he is dealing with a debate which occurred in 1905.

Mr. TAYLOR. No.

Mr. CONMEE. I am also dealing with a return brought down to this House on the 26th July, 1905, that is the return to which I have alluded in which these figures are all mentioned. Hon. gentlemen know all about the return, they have it. I assume I am at perfect liberty to refer to what is stated in that return. I say further that there was no such price as 9½ cents which it is alleged was paid. That statement is wrong, that is not the contract price at which work is being done to-day.

Mr. TAYLOR. When was that statement made and where ?

Mr. CONMEE. That was made in the Port Arthur 'News.'

Mr. TAYLOR. When?

Mr. CONMEE. I think the date was about the 7th or 8th of this month.

Mr. TAYLOR. And it refers to a speech made in this House this session?

Mr. CONMEE. I do not know whether it does or not, my hon. friend can look that up.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it would be out of order to refer to that.

Mr. FIELDING. I submit that the newspaper might have editorial comment which would be perfectly legitimate to refer to, but if it reported the speech of any hon. gentleman it should not be used.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it goes further than that.

Mr. CONMEE. I submit to that ruling; I will do my best to keep within these rules. Let me state the prices in the tenders in 1906. I will give the figures, perhaps hon. gentlemen will be interested in them. There was a large number of tenders and amongst other tenderers there was the Weddell Company. The price is not 9½ cents as represented; it is 9½ cents with the addition of 1 cent a yard——

Mr. TAYLOR. Represented by whom and where? Who says anything to the contrary?

Mr. CONMEE. Represented by the information which has come to me.

Mr. TAYLOR. From what source?

Mr. CONMEE. From these papers which I have obtained from the department.

Mr. TAYLOR. But who contradicts these papers?

Mr. CONMEE. I am not saying that any one contradicts them. My hon. friend is at liberty to contradict them if he wants to. The price is not 9 cents, it is 9½ cents in the Port Arthur harbour with the addition of 1 cent a yard for each mile of extra hauling, over 3½ miles. If you add that to the conditions which existed in 1903, you will not have so much difference in price. It is the same thing in Fort William harbour, the price there is 9 cents with the same condition for extra payment on extra haul, and thus if you have regard to these figures I am pointing out for the information of hon. gentlemen the difference in price is not so much when you have regard to the character of the work. Why? Because the work that is being done to-day in the Fort William harbour is six or seven miles away from the work done at any previous time. It is the opening of an entrance channel to the Mission river, practically a different harbour altogether. It is not scraping work, it is all bank work and that is the reason for the price being lower than on the previous occasions. It is so in the Port Arthur harbour. The area previously dredged had been gone over, had been brought down to a uniform depth. New erections, new elevators and new works, required the harbour to be deepened in another section to the south and new tenders were asked for a large block of work, covering an area there, and providing a turning basin. That is not scraping work but bank work. Every one will understand that deep excavations where there is face work is a different class of work altogether, so there is a reason for the change in the price. I think every one will admit that the prices for which the work is being done to-day are perhaps the cheapest at which any work of the same character is being done in Canada. I have already read to the House the statement of the minister in 1905 that the intention was to call for new tenders for a large block of work, extending over a period of years. That is what brought down the prices, it was the business-like method in which the department dealt with the question. Instead of letting it in little pieces and subjecting the contractors to a competition for their existence year by year, it was let on conditions which enabled them to properly equip their outfit. It is said that their contracts might be withdrawn at the end of any year. But while that may be so the advertisement showed that the intention was that these prices should extend over a number of years, in order, as the minister stated, that an up-to-date plant, efficient in its strength and equipment to do the work cheaply, might be provided. Now if there are congratulations. If credit is to be given to any one it must be given to the Department of Public Works for the business-like manner in which they dealt with this undertaking. If a large sum of money is to be saved, as I have heard stated, it is due to the business methods with which this matter was dealt with.

Now there were other matters that I might allude to. I might ask the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), who asked me a question, what he meant by his question. He wanted to know who were the stock holders of the Great Lakes Dredging Company. Now if the hon. gentleman will tell me what he had in his mind by that question, I will do my best to answer him.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not wish the hon. gentleman to misunderstand me. I took no part in the debate and am not particularly interested in it. But my hon. friend seems to have a complaint because of the fact that his name has been used in connection with the dredging, and my point was that the members of the House were entitled to know the names of the Great Lakes Dredging Company, and for myself I would like to know.

Mr. CONMEE. Well, I will accept the hon. member's explanation, but I had assumed that he had quite a different purpose in asking his question, if I may be permitted to divine what was the purpose beyond that which the hon. gentleman has seen fit to divulge. It is true that my name has been connected with this tender, that was in the newspaper reports. Of course I need hardly tell the House that statement was absolutely untrue. I am no partner of A. F. Bowman, and never was. I joined in no tender with A. F. Bowman, either in 1905, or 1904, or since that time. I made a statement to the House in 1905, I do not know whether it was satisfactory or not.

In a debate at that time the insinuation was made that I was connected with this Great Lakes Dredging Company, and I used this language :

> I came here entirely within my rights. I do not owe my election to any person or corporation.

Then a little further on, after some comment by some other members, I said :

> I have already stated to my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) that if he thinks I am here upon any wrong footing, if he thinks I am interested directly or indirectly in anything that I should not be interested in, it is his duty to get at that in a business way.

Now it may be insinuated that that is not a clear statement. I meant at that time that I had no interest, direct or indirect, that contravened the Independence of Parliament Act. That is what I meant, and what I mean to-day. I also stated this :

> I have no interest in or anything to do with the Great Lakes Dredging Company.

Now, Sir, if there is any further statement that any hon. gentleman can desire me to make that will make my position perfectly clear, I would be very happy to make it.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand then that my hon. friend has no interest, direct or indirect, in the Great Lakes Dredging Company at the present time, or in any other company that is doing dredging for this government ?

Mr. CONMEE. Yes, Sir, I repeat the hon. gentleman's words exactly, I have no interest, direct or indirect, in the Great Lakes Dredging Company, and I have no interest in any other company, direct or indirect, that is doing any dredging in the Dominion of Canada. Now, Sir, I want to say something further along that line. I think I have answered the hon. gentleman's question. So far as I know, the owners of the Great Lakes Dredging Company are A. F. Bowman, James Whalen and C. M. Bowman. I believe there is another party, a Mr. Manion, who has some interest in it, but I do not know for certain, these are the principal owners, so far as I know. Now I wish to make a further reference to an insinuation that has been cast out from time to time in this House. I have seen the insinuation somewhere, I do not say my hon. friend from Peel made it, but it has been made. Insinuations were cast upon the good faith of the inspectors because, forsooth, it was stated that one gentleman, A. M. Eastwood, was before the Public Accounts Committee and admitted improper action. Now I believe that it is not a fair proposition to say that if one man commits a crime a whole community should be executed for that particular crime. Reference was made to the appointment of inspectors, as to how they were appointed, whether they were recommended by the member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River. Well, I want to meet every insinuation that can be made. I do not know that that information was given to the House, but I will give the information so far as I have it, speaking of these particular ports at the head of the lakes. The inspectors are appointed by the minister. There is no want of responsibility, because the minister has power to appoint the inspectors. They are only appointed by the minister, I believe, when they are recommended by the engineer as to their fitness and ability to perform the work, not only by the resident engineer, but by the chief engineer, as between men so recommended the minister may favourably regard a recommendation made by a member. I do not know that there is any better method of appointing them. I must say that so far as regards any insinuation made in this House, or through reporters or otherwise, no reflection can be cast upon the resident engineer. I want to tell hon. gentlemen opposite that this engineer is a capable man, that he has been twenty or twenty-five years in the service of this country that he is just as strong a Conservative as the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) ; I think he has just as good an opinion of Liberals generally as my hon. friend has. But he is a competent and painstaking engineer, and every one who knows him respect him for his good qualities and his integrity. There is no reflection to be cast either upon the staff, or upon the efficiency of the work, or upon the price of the work that was done at the head of the lakes. It was said that the Waddell Company came in and reduced prices. The Waddell Company happens to be composed of Conservative gentlemen, Mr. Poupore, Mr. Randolph Macdonald, and other Conservatives.

Now, Sir, I know these men. I do not know Mr. Weddell, but I do know the other men and they are men for whom I have the highest regard. The question of their being Conservatives is no reason why they should not get a contract if they want it and that is the best evidence that the insinuations which have been made broadcast in this country that favouritism was shown towards some particular interest or individual are absolutely without foundation. Sir, I have the return here, I invite hon. gentlemen to look it over and if they do they will find that there is no favouritism to the Great Lakes Dredging Company. They were held to contract prices and the prices that were agreed upon from time to time. If the charge of favouritism can lie, if there is any shadow of justification for it, and I say there is not, it can lie, against Mr. Boone, a Conservative, and not against the Great Lakes Dredging Company because there happened to be some Liberals connected with it. Mr. Boone had his large dredge in that harbour from 1902 up to last year—it may be there yet for all I know—it was there in 1905, Mr. Boone undertook work at fifteen cents a yard. I am not going to say anything disparaging of Mr. Boone. I happen to know him. I believe he is a good, energetic contractor, that he does good work and is satisfied with the terms of his contract if he gets fair-play. But, in 1904, Mr. Boone said: My contract is for 18 feet of water, you are making me increase the depth to 22 feet, you are putting me in closer to the shore where there is tougher material, it is not fair and I refuse to go on. How was that settled? It was settled by letting Mr. Boone go to work. This return gives the power and equipment of his dredge. It is a first-class machine, capable of doing the work well and cheaply. Mr. Boone was put to work at $10 an hour and some time later, when expenses had increased, the amount was increased to $12 an hour. I submit that that is a moderate figure having regard to the work and the outfit. But, while the same class of work was being done by the Great Lakes Dredging Company at 15 cents a yard, Mr. Boone's work by the hour process was costing 16 cents a yard. Therefore, I contend that there is no ground, in view of the information contained in these returns, for the suspicion or the statement that there was favouritism shown to the Great Lakes Dredging Company. In so far as I am concerned I want to make this statement: My name has been connected with these matters and it has been insinuated that I was connected with Mr. A. F. Bowman. I have already contradicted that statement. But Mr. Bowman was accused, if I am not mistaken—I do not say in this House—of wrong intentions because it was alleged that his was the highest tender. I have proven by the record that his was not the highest tender but the lowest tender. The question is asked: Why did Mr. Bowman tender because he was a stockholder of the Great Lakes Dredging Company and that company tendered too? Well, now, let me say this: Mr. Bowman is a well known owner of dredges. He owns an entire separate fleet on the great lakes. He had worked in that harbour with his dredges previous to the time that they were taken over by or included in the plant of the Great Lakes Dredging Company. Why should there be any suspicion because Mr. Bowman, a well known dredge man, put in a tender? In 1905, in answer to the advertisement, his was the lowest tender, not the highest tender, the work was awarded to him and it was completed under the contract. If he arranged with the Great Lakes Dredging Company or any other company to employ their dredges can anybody suggest any thing wrong in that so long as the work was done under the lowest tender?

Mr. SPROULE. If Mr. Bowman, as a member of the Great Lakes Dredging Company, tendered for the work there for that company, surely he would know the rate at which that company had put in their tender, and then, if Mr. Bowman individually is the owner of dredges outside of the Great Lakes Dredging Company and was tendering for himself he would know what this company tendered for of which he was a member?

Mr. CONMEE. No, I think the hon. gentleman is assuming quite an improbable case. Mr. Bowman was the owner of a separate set of dredges. He would naturally tender for himself if he tendered on behalf of the company. That may be a different thing. I do not know anything of that. I have no knowledge of it. The hon. member has no knowledge of it, why then should Mr. Bowman be under suspicion——

Mr. SPROULE. Did not the hon. gentleman try to controvert the statement that two tenders were put in, one by the Great Lakes Dredging Company in which Mr. Bowman was a partner, and one by Mr. Bowman individually for himself?

Mr. CONMEE. I did not do that. I read the tenders from the record. I gave the names. I am pointing out that his was the lowest tender in 1905, that the work was awarded to him and that he completed the work. How monstrous it is, how culpable it is that any member or individual should endeavour to cast suspicion in this way is in the judgment of the House. Is it dishonesty because a man being the owner of a dredging plant puts in a low tender or a higher tender either than a tender put in by company in which he was a stockholder. No such insinuation should be made by a member of parliament or anybody else who has any regard for fair dealing unless he has some evidence to establish it and follow it up. If he has no evidence such an insinuation should not be made. Why should the Minister of Public Works be slandered in that manner? Why should Mr. Bowman, a respectable citizen of this country, be subject to the slander which has been uttered simply because he put in a tender? Let me put it in another way. Mr. Bowman is a separate entity. I think I have heard that word in this House. I believe the hon. member for East Grey understood what it meant a week or so ago and if he does not understand it I believe that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) can pound it into his head. Mr. Bowman was a separate entity. Why should he be subjected to that suspicion? In so far as I am concerned I am quite conscious of the fact that I have many faults. Nobody can be more conscious than I am, and nobody can regret them more than I do, but to say that I am using my position for selfish purposes, or for my own advantage, or for the advantage of any relative of mine, is to say that which is untrue. It does not lie in the power of any man on either side of this House to sustain a charge of that kind against me. I want hon. gentlemen to understand that. I stand on that statement and I say further that I have been 25 years in public life. No relative of mine ever held an office in this Dominion and no relative of mine is holding one to-day. So, these suspicions that have been cast out in so far as I am concerned I repudiate, and I think it is pretty nearly time that some hon. gentlemen ceased to do that sort of thing. What is the cause or motive for these slanders; is it because Mr. Whelan happens to be a son-in-law of mine and happens to be connected with the Grand Lakes Dredging Company.

Now, Sir, is there any rule of this parliament, or of any deliberative body in the British empire, making it a crime for a member to have a son-in-law? I do not know of any rule of that kind. Let me carry this argument just one step further. Is it wrong for such a person to have a contract with the government? I submit that it is not, if he got the contract fairly. If it can be shown that a member of this House could or did influence the government in making contracts, there would be some justification for fault finding. But I doubt very much if any member could assist a friend under these circumstances—I have more confidence in this government than to believe that. But, in any case, I submit that there should be some evidence supporting an insinuation, some evidence of the facts before the assertion is made to the injury of any member of this House. Unless a member could, or he did, influence a government contract in favour of his friend, why should the attacks be made upon him that have been made upon members of this House? Is there anything wrong in that position? I think those who know Mr. Whalen will agree that he is an active man of business, and that he would be just as active if he were somebody's else's son-in-law.

I hope I have stated enough at least to defend my reputation I am not here under any false colours. I have my faults —I know it. But I do not carry two faces; I am not built on those lines. Hon. gentlemen opposite have talked a good deal about double-dealing in tenders. And we heard something this afternoon about slipping votes. Let me give them one or two facts about slipping tenders. There was a Canadian Sault Ste. Marie canal built some years ago. Tenders were called for that work. And what did the Conservative government of that day do in relation to those tenders? Did they give the contract to the lowest tenderer? They did not; they gave it to the third lowest tenderer whose offer was $118,000 higher than the lowest. I have the tenders here, if any hon. gentleman would like to look at them. The lowest tenderer was George Goodwin, a pretty well known contractor. But, perhaps, I have special reasons to know that there was wrong-doing in this matter. The government gave this contract to the Ryan tender, which was higher not only than Mr. Goodwin's offer, but higher than the next. The second tender which was that of myself and associates. We were $56,577 below the successful tenderer. Nevertheless, without a word of reference, the contract was awarded to the Ryan tender.

The Conservative government of that time had a deposit in respect of the tender with which I was connected. But they had more, because we went to the then Minister of Railways and Canals and said: You have asked for a certain deposit, and we have given it; if you want more security, say how much you want and we will give it to you. But he gave no answer. And to whom did he give the contract? Not to the lowest tenderer; not to the next lowest tenderer; but to a gentleman who was in partnership with him in another business, the business of cattle raising. That is the kind of thing which the hon. gentleman for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) supported. There was a piece of public robbery, to the extent of $118,000 perpetrated by hon. gentlemen opposite in the face of public policy, and contrary to the public interest. These hon. gentlemen answer: Well, that may have been wrong, but we are not doing that now, and whatever was done wrong before is no justification for wrong-doing now—two wrongs do not make a right. I quite acknowledge that, and do not hold hon. gentlemen opposite responsible—at at least not all of them—some of them I do hold responsible because two men sitting on the front bench among hon. gentlemen opposite, one of whom (Mr. Foster) is before me now at this moment, were members of the cabinet that perpetrated that wrong. Just fancy my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) discovering such a condition of things in the affairs of this government. Fancy him turning himself loose on that subject. What a monstrous thing it would appear in the light of his denunciations. How he could ring the changes upon it. How he could tell this House where the deviltry came in and all that sort of thing. I have heard him at it, and he does it well. But, given a case like this and he would turn this parliament inside out. He would tear off the roof. And my hon. friend from East Hamilton (Mr. Barker) would be so shocked at the wickedness of these Grits that I do not think he would speak for a week. Now, let me show just where a little bit of the deviltry came in in that case of the Sault Ste Marie canal. It was said that the lowest tender was a little too low and that the next lowest tender was also a little too low. But there was one item in the tender which made a great difference. This was the filling in of the trenches and tamping with puddled clay in the outlying trenches around the lock-pit to exclude the surface water from the walls. The advertisements for tenders—and this is where some of the deviltry came in ; they knew how to work it better than I did, and I only speak of what was done by them—stated that unless the tender was consistent and each item was put in at a price for which it could be done, the tender would not be considered. Now, Sir, I put in a price for which that work could be done. But the Ryan tender had a price on this item which was only about half enough for the work. Had the Ryan people been held to their tender, they would have lost $50,000. They did not do the work at all. Then, again, these gentlemen excavated a great lock-pit, and then the plans were changed ; instead of making it so many feet wide—say 100 feet—it was to be made longer and narrower. And the contractors were paid a bonus and extra price for filling the excavated space, with the material they excavated in lengthening the lock-pit. This matter was investigated, so that hon. gentlemen know something about it. Talk about scandal ! There is a scandal that hon. gentlemen opposite might well consider for a little while. They would then understand why it is that the people of this country feel that their interest would not be very safe in the hands of men who carried on such transactions or supported those who carried them on, and who, if given power, would repeat to-morrow what they did then. Why have they not done this kind of thing since 1896 ? They lost the key in 1896, and have not had opportunity. Nobody need thank them for their innocence since that time.

Now, I regret to have detained the House so long. And I regret also to have felt obliged to say some of the harsh things that I have said ; but I am in the judgment of the House as to whether I have not been provoked to take the ground I have taken. Hon. gentlemen wanted to know just where all these insinuations and statements come from. I have done my best to enlighten them. And I think they can make a pretty shrewd guess as to who the perpetrators of these lies and misrepresentations were. To borrow the phrase of the hon. member for East Hamilton these statements to which I have referred are reeking with falsehoods, misrepresentations and false accusations. Nobody would make these statements except for a political or malicious purpose. The gentleman who is responsible for these accusations is in the judgment of the House and the country.

Mr. BARKER. With the permission of the House I will occupy just a moment. I would ask the leader of the House (Mr. Fielding) whether he can give the House the assurance that, until the cabinet has considered the question as to the form of oath in elections, there shall be no further issue of what I have called the emasculated oath in any election in the Dominion ? I do not mean to ask the hon. gentleman to judge the question, but I do ask him not to issue that form of oath for any other election until the subject has been considered by the cabinet.

Mr. CONMEE. Mr. Speaker, I crave for one word. I had intended to make some reference to the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. J. T. Schell). That hon. gentleman is now in his place and as I see in the press some statements that fell from him, I think it is only fair that we should hear from him.

Mr. FIELDING. I am happy to answer the question of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) as the Minister of Justice, whose department it rather concerns, is not in his place. I would be surprised if it turned out that there was any real departure from the Act, but of course in view of what the hon. gentleman has said it will be our duty to look into the matter very carefully. Certainly I will give the hon. gentleman the assurance that the matter will be inquired into and the Act carried out in its proper letter and spirit.

Mr. F. L. SCHAFFNER (Souris). Mr. Speaker, I would not have delayed the House one minute at this stage of the session had it not been that the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) saw fit this afternoon to attack the Franchise Act of the province of Manitoba. It is strange that so many of these questions have been left to the last days of the session. Earlier in the session it would have given me a great deal of pleasure to have refreshed the memories of the members from my province on the other side of the House, and perhaps to have given them a little information by going over the different Franchise Acts which we have had in that province during the last twenty years. I would have liked to show this House the kind of Franchise Act we had under the late Greenway government, and how difficult and almost impossible it was for the Conservative party to carry on an election in that province when that government had the making up of the lists, how many names were added, and the large amount of money that the Conservative party had to expend in order to get the least fair-play. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that it was a most difficult task to follow the hon. member for Portage la Prairie this afternoon; he spoke in such weak and faint tones, so characteristic of one who is saying something of which he is ashamed or which he does not want others to hear. But I have some idea of the motive that caused the hon. gentleman to make these remarks. I gathered from his remarks that he was paving the way for a Franchise Act to be produced next year, at least with regard to the western provinces, different from the one which we had at the last Dominion election. It is well known to the members of this House that the franchises of the various provinces were utilized in the Dominion elections of 1904. It is also very well known to this House, or to those of us from the west, that a great effort was made by the late Minister of the Interior to do away with the Franchise Act of the province of Manitoba, and I am glad to be able to say that it was due to the fairness and the justice of the late Minister of Justice that the late Minister of the Interior was prevented from doing so. Our Liberal friends in Manitoba were sure that they were going to have a new Franchise Act. They went so far as to say to us when we were revising our lists: 'Why do you bother with that list? We have no intention of running the election on it.' But it was due to the honour and fairness of the late Minister of Justice that they were compelled to run their election on the Manitoba Franchise Act. The praise of that Act has not all come from the Conservative party. The Toronto 'Globe' and Liberals all over this Dominion have not ceased to praise it. That Act provides for personal registration. It is a most fair and just Franchise Act. It is one which I think cannot be very well improved upon. Now, when the late Minister of the Interior was unable to carry out his sinister purpose in regard to that Franchise Act, what was the next thing to be done? The situation had to be met in some way, and it was met in this way. As you well know, the voters' lists were reprinted at the Dominion Printing Bureau in Ottawa, and should in all fairness and justice have been sent to the different returning officers. This was not done in Manitoba, but they were sent to a man named Leach in the city of Winnipeg, who was not even an election official. They were sent to him with his instructions, and it came out afterwards, a fact we did not know at that time, that this gentleman had been engaged in this undertaking for some time. He had found from that list who were the friends of the Liberals and who were the friends of the Conservatives, and he had taken pains, with his staff of officers, who were in two important buildings in Winnipeg, to draw a red line through a large number of names, and I am surprised that a Liberal member from the province of Manitoba, who owes his election to these thin red lines, would be brave enough to say anything against the Franchise Act of the province of Manitoba. Now, let us see for a moment how that thin red line worked out. It is a wonder, Mr. Speaker, that there are in this House any Conservatives at all from the province of Manitoba; it is a wonder that three men were ever elected in that province to represent the Conservative party, when it is remembered what the Conservative party had to go up against. I am not going to refer to all the constituencies, but I will take the constituency of Provencher, in which the Liberals had a majority of ten, and that thin red line went through 568 names. Take the constituency my hon. friend represents, Portage la Prairie; he had a majority of 385, and that thin red line did its work on 1,395 names. The hon. member for Selkirk had a majority of 507, and in that constituency the thin red line cut through 1,406 names. Take the constituency represented by my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway). He had 180 majority and the thin red line went through 1,131 names.

In the face of these facts, how is it any man from the province of Manitoba can stand up and find fault with our Franchise Act, which I believe to be the very fairest Act possible. And he does not live very far from the west, for that transaction was carried out in the election of Prince Albert. There was no need for them to bother with stuffing ballot boxes there because the returning officer in that province is authorized to fix polling places where the proclamation does not establish them. So this returning officer fixed three. What was his duty? His duty was to notify, not later than six o'clock on the day of nomination, the two candidates, that these polls were so fixed. Was that done? No, he went out thirty-five miles from the town of Prince Albert, to a small town from which only two mails a week go, and there he posted up these new polling places. And although he was meeting the Conservative candidate every day in the town of Prince Albert, he was neither honest nor fair enough to tell him where these polling places were. What was the result? They did not need to fix the ballot boxes. This Mr. Moberley—and I would like very much to go on and describe the kind of man he is—sat down in a quiet nook, there pitched his tent, and began to vote everybody in sight, men, boys and children. Is it to be wondered at that Mr. Scott said, on the evening of the election, when the places which were adjacent, were giving a Conservative majority: Wait until you hear from the back townships. He knew exactly how they would vote. In the face of so much fraud in connection with the franchise in that western country, practised by the Liberal party, I am surprised that any Liberal member from Manitoba would get up here and find fault with our Franchise Act. I want to tell hon. gentlemen opposite that although there are but three men here from Manitoba, and although their voices have not been much heard during this session or even during this parliament, when this government, this year or next, attempts to substitute a machine franchise, such as the one described by my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) this afternoon in connection with the London Hyman election, for our franchise, which is one of the fairest that could be made, those three men will hold this House up, if necessary, ten long months before we allow any such franchise to be substituted for the one we have at present.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL (Glengarry). I intend only taking up the time of the House a few minutes by briefly referring to the remarks of my hon. friend from Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) on the dredging question. I do not wish to discuss this question on the same lines that he did but simply to refer to the discussions that take place in this House yearly, since I have been here at all events, and almost invariably promoted by one gentleman. When the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) delivers his budget speech, he is usually answered by a man conversant with finance. But I have noticed since I have been here, that when this question of dredging comes up, which is a technical matter, it is always discussed on the opposition side by a lawyer or a person equally ignorant—and I use the word advisedly—of the conditions attaching to contracts of this kind. And the result is that we have language used which is not at all necessary in discussing public matters in this House. If I may be permitted just to refer to what took place a few days ago, I would say that I then rose upon my feet to call in question some remarks made by an hon. gentleman on the subject of dredging, I did so, not for the purpose of discussing it in a general way, but simply to give him a chance to state the conditions which were not then stated, but which have been stated to-night, although my hon. friend from Rainy River (Mr. Conmee), in discussing the transactions of a few years, finally led up to the contract of 1906. All I propose to say about that, in this connection, is just this. Throughout the length and breadth of the country, the public press have been probably dealing this session more than for many years in the epithets of graft, lobbying, and casting insinuation which do not at all tend to give the public a high opinion of the standing of members of this House. And I think that one reason for this is the criticisms such as as we have been listening to year after year, and in that connection I would instance the dredging contract because it has been brought up to-night. I knew the figures and the conditions at the time that statement was made in the House, and I knew what the impression was which the hon. gentleman who made it sought to convey, and I notice that he was very successful, in so far as some members on the opposite side are concerned, because when he indulged in his most extreme statements and made the most damaging insinuations, he was always applauded most loudly. I do not think that that method of discussing public subjects should be encouraged ; and I hope that when dredging contracts or railway contracts or wharf contracts and matters of that kind come up in the future, hon. members opposite will, for the sake of the good name of this country, put up some expert to discuss them, who will talk from the knowledge that is in him, and I trust that his knowledge will be absolutely correct before he proceeds to criticise. In that way hon. gentlemen opposite would avoid many of the false accusations in which they are ever too ready to indulge, and we would be thus spared these allusions and comparisons which have no basis in fact. They were not correct this year and they have not been correct any year since I have been in this House. They have been shown to-night to be entirely incorrect according to the record. I knew they were incorrect at the time they were made. Let me give this advice to members of the opposition, that when they undertake to criticise technical matters, whether of finance or dredging or the construction of public works of any kind, they will leave that duty to an expert who is conversant at least with the ordinary conditions of the work, and let the lawyers and the doctors do the applauding, for as a rule, I do not think they are competent to do much else in discussing such matters.

INTERMEDIATE TARIFF NEGOTIATONS.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the motion is put I would ask the Minister of Finance if he can give the House any information as to the items that have appeared in the newspapers referring to statements in another place a day or two ago as to pour parlers with reference to the introduction of the intermediate tariff with certain European countries. I notice that this is attracting a good deal of attention and some very positive statements are being made about it in the press.

Mr. FIELDING. There are no formal negotiations on that subject. We are occasionally brought in contact with gentlemen interested in foreign trade who offer suggestions to us as to what might be done in the way of exchange between Canada and other countries. We are always glad to discuss these matters. But there are no formal negotiations of any sort, nothing that could be put before the House, in fact nothing formal at all.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose that the gentlemen referred to are not accredited, they are business men from these countries.

Mr. FIELDING. If they were accredited, so much the better; but in either case it would be so very informal that it could not possibly be presented to the House.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Mr. FIELDING. To facilitate progress I shall move that the committee report progress and ask leave to sit again this day. I propose to drop the Bill to amend the Department of Railways and Canals Act. I have information that there are some matters of controversy in it and at this stage a Bill of that kind could only get through with consent. We will discuss the Quebec Bridge Bill and afterwards I shall ask the House to again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Progress reported.

QUEBEC BRIDGE COMPANY.

Mr. FIELDING moved the second reading of Bill (No. 169), to authorize a loan to the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company.

Mr. L. ROBITAILLE (Quebec County). I am sorry that such an important Bill is brought up at such a late stage of the session but I shall make my remarks as brief as I possibly can. During the past few years this bridge and railway company has been the subject of much newspaper criticism, and efforts to obtain information about it from the government have failed, because it was said that the bridge company was supposed to look after its affairs and the government did not know or did not seem to know anything. The Quebec Bridge Company was by chapter 69 of the statutes of 1897 revived and confirmed in certain powers which were conferred on it by this House in 1887. Those then promoting it were Hon. S. N. Parent, then mayor of the city of Quebec. Premier of the province of Quebec and president of the bridge company. I shall show how his association with these three corporations gave him easy access to sources of revenue for the support of this wonderful scheme. There were interested with him at that time, Hon. John Sharples, Gaspard Lemoine, and several others not of special interest. In 1899 this same company, owing to pressure which it brought to bear on this government, succeeding in getting a subsidy of $1,000,000 as an encouragement for the building of this bridge. In 1901, after having secured this subsidy, a company was formed called the Quebec Terminal and Railway Company. Associated with Mr. Parent were Hon. John Sharples, E. Taschereau and Gaspard Lemoine. The fifth director required by law is Mr. D'Arcy Scott, the present mayor of Ottawa. To show the close connection existing between the two companies, I shall refer you to the statutes of 1901 and 1903 and to the agreement which they were empowered by parliament to make. One company has the right to deal with another according to the statutes and the powers of both companies are similar.

The second point to which I wish to call the attention of the House is the estimated cost of the bridge. In August 1899, as reported at page 9574 of 'Hansard,' Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that the cost of the bridge would be $4,000,000. This figure was given as the result of the investigations of an expert, Mr. Cooper. Later, in 1903, a statement was made by statute that the estimated cost was not $4,000,000 but $6,866,882. Later on, in 1907, the Minister of Finance stated a day or so ago that the estimated cost would be $7,500,000 to $8,000,000. How is it that the estimated cost for the completion of the bridge on the same plans has varied so at different times? It was even stated that the $8,000,000 would not be sufficient, that something additional might be needed for terminals, and, as I shall explain in a few minutes, the terminals are the most interesting subject of discussion in the city of Quebec. What was the prospect of financing this company? In 1903 they admitted having a subscription list of $200,000 and an authorized capital of $3,000,000. The province of Quebec voted a subsidy of $250,000, the city of Quebec a subsidy of $300,000, and the federal government a subsidy of $1,000,000. That gave a total prospective amount of $1,750,000 in exact figures. What was the actual amount received for construction? A statement is filed somewhere in the sessional papers that the actual paid up capital was $65,000 by the then shareholders. Of that $65,000, $50,000 was actually paid in cash, and some $15,000 represents the paid up shares that were given to the promoters for their attendance, and the trouble they took in forming this company. They were given part of this stock which permits its entry in the books as capital paid on $200,000 of subscribed stock on a million of authorized capital, on a million of federal grant, on a municipal grant of $374,353, with a Quebec city municipal subsidy of $300,000, and Quebec provincial subsidy of $250,000. They have negotiated their own bonds to the extent of $472,000, which they have passed through a local contractor, M. P. Davis, who is well known to be receiving favours of all kinds in the construction of the Transcontinental and of the Quebec bridge, also the Quebec harbour, cribwork, &c.

Mr. TALBOT. When the hon. gentleman says that Mr. Davis is getting all sorts of favours in connection with the construction of the Transcontinental, I would like him to explain what he means.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. I do not wish to delay the House, nor the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot). It is useless for me to discuss with him these points, because there is no good faith in any thing he asks, it is merely to try to sidetrack the subject. But anybody who reads the newspapers and sees the contracts that are given, whatever you call them, they are favours just the same. You buy a hat from a friend of your own, you give him $3, it is a favour to him to buy the hat. Business is business, a fair exchange is no robbery, and any kind of transaction is a favour to the party with whom you deal. At all events, this is a very minor subject, as well as the hon. gentleman who interrupts me. Now, this M. P. Davis took $472.000 worth of bonds at a discount of 40 per cent, thereby causing a loss to that company of $188,-800 the actual money received was $283,-200, and on a finance of $1,273,217.70 they admit having a floating debt of $779,550 in 1903. Now the value of the work was then estimated at about $1,400,000. That was the estimate of the government engineer, and it is natural to suppose that he was given a hint to make his estimate excessive rather than exact. If on a sum of a million and a quarter there is a difference of $779,000, the shrinkage it about fifty per cent. What guarantee has the government to-day if it lends $6,000,000 ? Judging the future by what we see in the past, a shrinkage of fifty per cent will represent a floating debt of three millions on the six or seven million dollars granted to this company as is proposed by the present Bill.

Now the mismanagement of these funds is due to either of two causes, one is boodle or graft, and the other is incompetency. I am charitable enough to suppose that the latter is the chief cause. What care did the government exercise over the work? It seems to me that if the government lends money, guarantees bonds, &c., it should exercise a supervision over the expenditure of that money. We are told that the Governor in Council is supposed to ascertain the truthfulness of the statements that are brought before him. I do not want to cast any reflection on the government, but I know for a fact that in every business, let it be politically or otherwise, there is always a question of confidence in a minor official by a higher one. The Governor in Council says it is all right, and naturally it is all right in his eyes, and that is all the supervision you have. The government engineer is supposed to exercise the next degree of supervision. Now I have been acquainted with several government employees for eight or nine years, and I know for a fact that it is not advisable for any man holding a public office to show an excessive zeal in the performance of his duties, because he risks his own position by the fact that he probably tramples on the ambitions or on the little schemes that may be floating in the minds of his superior officers.

Mr. TALBOT. How old is the hon. member ?

Mr. ROBILTAILLE. Old enough to know of one case, where the member for Bellechasse was a little while opposed to S. N. Parent, but to-day he is glad to support not only his bridge and its pillars, but any dirty work that needs to be done.

Mr. SPEAKER. The statement that the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) is ready to support any dirty work, is not parliamentary.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. I will withdraw it. The second point I wish to call to the attention of the Finance Minister, is his own statement which I find in the 'Hansard' of a few days ago, that there was no permanent officer at the works, and no official was sent to look after the works. Well, we know an official who is a brother of the president of that company, a man who keeps a small retail grocery store in my own parish, and who does not know the difference between a cross beam and a purlin in bridge work. He is a very worthy man, but he allows the wool to be pulled over his eyes, and is ready to sign any report that is presented to him. I do not believe that he even gives himself the trouble to go to the bridge, but the papers are sent to his place to be signed.

Another important question. The company has power to work with terminals, this company has the power as I said before, by statute to transact business with that Quebec Terminal Company. Now what is the operation ? Both are interested parties, the one company is the same as the other. The Quebec Bridge Company gets a guarantee from the government, gets money from the government, and buys property from the Quebec Terminal Company, who has options all along from the bridge to the entry of the city, and they will buy at an enhanced price which the said terminal company will fix, and the bridge company will be too glad to purchase, because the chief officials will be buying their own property. And what control has the government over its own buying their own property. And what control has the government over its own moneys paid out to these people? What guarantee have they got that their money will be well expended ? Now they have to come to parliament, as in 1903, and ask parliament to help them out of a floating debt of $779,000. I can guarantee that the floating debt will be found much greater. The government has no correspondence relative to the terminals. It was also stated by the premier himself in January that the entry to the city of Quebec was left to the good-will and discretion of the Bridge Company who actually naturally operate things more to their advantage than to the general advantage of Canada.

Not very long ago the president of the company came down to one of my most loyal supporters and as they were walking along St. Peter street in Quebec, he was depicting to him the speculative possibilities if such and such a property were purchased, trying to draw him into the ring. What is the use, he said, of lagging behind and supporting a man who cannot give you anything? We see in the local newspapers a discussion relative to the disadvantages of the proposed entry and terminals in the city of Quebec which the railways do not want to support. The fact that the railway companies do not approve of the proposed plan explains why the Minister of Finance not long ago stated in this House that the scheme by which the railway companies were to have full control of the bridge had not proved successful, and that the government found it necessary to finance the project in order to execute the work. The real reason was that the railway facilities which the bridge company want to give the city of Quebec are not adequate having regard to what the port is going to be. The entry which is now used by way of the valley of the St. Charles and leading down to the river front where the Louise docks and the immigration buildings are, and where the Allan and Dominion liners and the Empress land is the natural entry which has been chosen by the railway and steamship companies instead of coming by a roundabout way and bringing the tracks down by way of the St. Lawrence river front where all kinds of topographical and engineering difficulties are encountered, where they have to cut away the rock, where they have to construct cement work, iron and channel work in order to get down to the river front. Any one who will go down to Quebec city and drive in a caleche along the proposed terminal line will find there are places at which two rigs cannot pass side by side, and how can you expect the wonderful traffic which is predicted for the future and which will be handled by eighteen or nineteen railways having their own sidings and tracks to come into the city if natural space be so limited? A grant of fifty feet of land to the Ross Rifle Company has stirred up the city of Quebec, and has caused a huge deputation to come here to remonstrate with the government. The city of Quebec is aware of the speculative provisions of this bridge company. As to the line of the bridge company the government will have no more control over it in the future than it has had in the past. If the country is disposed to hand out $20,000,000 for the development of the port of Quebec, the government should see that the money is expended advantageously with respect to railway facilities because it is possible that the money may be squandered to such an extent that the amounts required to finish these works may not be granted and when the railway companies decide to make the port further down where to-day a large amount of business is handled then Quebec may find that they have lost their opportunity as being a national port. Why have not these bonds been negotiated? We know that they have not been offered for sale. It is because there is no financier abroad who will take the prospectus of a company which says that with $65,000 of capital actually paid up by the subscribers they can incur a liability to the extent of $8,000,000. Before long you will see whether my words come true that the bridge and the terminals will not cost very far from $15,000.000 to $20,000,000. At all events, I desire to enter my protest against the adoption of this proposed loan and ask the government to take over the works and complete them. It is not my intention to extend my remarks on this question. I have placed before hon. members as succinctly as I could the reasons why I object to this grant. The government have the right by statute, if they are not satisfied with the present operation, to take the bridge over and not ask the permission even of the bridge company. It states in this special statute, chapter 54, 1903, that:

> Notwithstanding anything contained in the five next preceding clauses, the undertaking, assets, property and franchises of the company shall at all times be and remain the absolute property of the government and the sole right of control and management shall be and continue absolutely vested in the government.

If the government is really interested in giving to Quebec satisfactory railway facilities such as independent engineers will recommend and not allow the terminal system to be controlled and handicapped and operated by a private concern which is more graft than a real advantage to Canada, it should proceed upon the lines which I am now suggesting. I am aware that the railway companies will never use the tracks which are now being constructed. They will not oppose them because that would not be a wise policy for them to pursue. Every day they have to deal with the Railway Commission and with the Transcontinental Railway Commission, the chairmen of these commissions are vested with large powers and these commissions can make things uneasy for these railways in the daily transactions that they have with them. These two boards seem to have absolutely autocratic power in this country. I know that these arguments are useless notwithstanding the fact that we are supposed to be enjoying constitutional rights in this country. There is no country in the world where despotism is more prevalent than it is in this parliament. In Russia or anywhere else where the people have not representative government and constitutional rights they are aware of the methods of legislation and of government and they therefore expect harsh treatment, but here in Canada to-day we have only a sham constitutional or representative government. It is not according to the ordinary conceptions of what constitutional government means. So, I say that it is useless to discuss any of the issues if you differ from the majority on one side, or another, let it be Liberal or Conservative. It is immaterial. Whichever party is in power secures a good strong majority and it is satisfactory to them to retain a certain policy irrespective of whether it is to the advantage of Canada or not if it favours the interests of certain party supporters, certain men who, at election time, can hand out funds to be used against a particular candidate, and, if it favours any particular politician by giving him an opportunity to invest in companies under a blank name and to make a few dollars for himself, so that if he comes into the ministry in four or five years afterwards he can say, I am going out of politics a poor man, but when he dies we find that there is $400,000 or $500,000 on his balance sheet. I hope the House will excuse me for having delayed it a little longer than I expected. At all events my duty is performed to my city and to the riding in which these works are located. I am not against the work but I want it to be done to the advantage of Canada as well as to the advantage of the city and at a cost compatible to proposed work——

An hon. MEMBER. Oh.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all right.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. I know it is all right. But some words that are not customarily used in the prize ring or on the street strike the hon. member as wrong. With these critics even a slip of the tongue is not permitted, or an unconsidered remark is met with a threat to slap the mouth of the man who makes it. I am satisfied with what I have said.

I desire to ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) this: When he took part in an election in Quebec county and supported a gentleman running in opposition to one who is now a member of this House was he aware that he was supporting the schemes and plans of this same man whom he (Mr. Lemieux) was so eager to guarantee federal support for local ministers to force a rival out of the provincial premiership. Was he willingly a party to these schemes of saw-offs and legal whitewashing of political friends by which this man sought to establish himself as a dominating influence in his party. Was he among those who said that this same man had to be translated to a higher sphere in order that he might do more work and better for his party in organization, wire pulling and collecting funds for election in the province of Quebec? We know that this man has been translated to a higher sphere, and that he has been increasing in popularity with parties whom he has assisted in obtaining political patronage, both federal and provincial. Is the Postmaster General a party to promoting the following of this man a following made up of blood suckers and money grabbers? I fully realize the effect of my present attitude on the next general election. But I am indifferent to these considerations which seem so important to the hon. gentleman. If the people of Canada do not believe in choosing a representative who will claim his rights as a man to express his personal views, to declare his own convictions in this parliament, to support what he honestly believes to be to the advantage of the public, then, for my part, I have no wish to represent them. And if I am to learn that my views of the duties of a public representative and those of the people do not now coincide it is better that I should learn it now when I am young and drop out of public life when I can do so with no injury and little disappointment. Far better so than to go on, as so many have done until at forty-five or fifty years of age, having devoted themselves to politics as a career, and have abandoned other business, they find that, for some little cause of dissatisfaction they have given the leaders of their party, they are forced out of public life. If my utterance here means my political death, I am ready; I would rather meet it as a young man than later. I know the efforts, the strategy, the pull, the weight, the financial backing of this organization. But it is immaterial to me. I have done my duty. Next session this question will be brought up again and I shall have engineering figures and other statistics to show that what I contend for in the case of this work is true—that the work will cost three, four or five times the present prevision for both bridge and terminals. And all this has to be paid for. The money does not all come out of the city of Quebec nor out of the province of Quebec; the burden must fall upon the whole Dominion.

Mr. SPROULE. When this subject was discussed on a former occasion, the acting Minister of Railways (Mr. Fielding) was good enough to promise to give us some information with regard to it.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance.) I took note of the questions asked by the hon. gentleman opposite—which were fair and reasonable questions—and procured a report to be made by the inspecting engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals covering the ground which, as I understand it, hon. gentlemen desire to have covered. This is the report of Mr. E. V. Johnston, inspecting engineer as follows:

Ottawa, April 22, 1907.

M. J. Butler, Esq.,
Chief engineer,
Department of Railways and Canals.

Sir,—I beg to submit, for your information, the following statement in connection with the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company's works.

This statement embraces the approaches on both sides of the St. Lawrence river and the superstructure of the main bridge.

Total cost of works to March 31, 1907	$4,415,598 01
Made up as follows :
Phœnix Bridge Company's estimate	$3,053,023 77
M. P. Davis' estimate for work on approaches	734,136 96
Engineering pay-rolls, right of way and contingent expenses.	628,437 28
Total	$4,415,598 01

Details of Phœnix Bridge Company's estimate:

Metal rolled at mills, pounds, 70,303,547	$1,828,411 83
Metal manufactured at shops, pounds, 63,081,529	647,011 49
Metal delivered at bridge site, pounds, 33,649,344	168,145 85
Metal erected, pounds, 31,540,451.	427,687 00
Timber delivered	2,667 60
Total	$4,073,923 77
Less retained for unbolting riveting, &c.	20,900 00
Amount of estimate	$3,053,023 77

Details of M. P. Davis' estimate :

Earth excavation, cubic yards, 330,075	$ 82,518 75
Rock excavation, cubic yards, 116,905	196,050 50
Concrete arch culverts, cubic yards, 3,461	34,610 00
Other line works	49,838 70
Chaudière bridge	208,052 08
St. Nicholas road bridge	22,778 56
Highway bridges in north approach	79,693 97
Materials delivered	60,594 40
Total	$ 734,136 96

The third item, $628,437.28, includes salaries of staff, office expenses, cost of right of way, customs' duties, &c.

The Phœnix Bridge Company's estimate I have regularly checked with the monthly statements of our own checking officer, Mr. Tomney, stationed at Phœnixville.

The M. P. Davis' estimate comprises work done on the two approaches, amounting to about nine (9) miles of very expensive railway construction, that on the south side being about 2½ miles, extending from the bridge abutment to the junction with the Intercolonial Railway, and that on the north side about 6½ miles from the north abutment to Quebec city.

Work on the south approach consists of a large amount of rock excavation, very heavy embankments ; the costly steel bridge over the Chaudière river, a 20 feet concrete arch, and several smaller concrete arches, the high bridge over St. Nicholas road with massive concrete abutments and steel superstructure and other works entering into railway construction. This work is practically completed.

On the north approach there is also a large amount of rock cutting and heavy embankments. A number of highways are crossed by overhead bridges of steel and concrete. This work is well advanced, rock work being nearly completed and concrete abutments built in a number of the road crossings.

Mr. FIELDING.

I have verified these estimates by examining the engineers' field notes and office records, from month to month, and by periodical inspections of the works, as far as practicable, once each month during the progress of construction.

As to general expenses under the head of engineering pay-rolls, &c., &c., the company furnished each month original vouchers for every item of expenditure. These I have personally examined and checked with the company's monthly statement submitted to the department, and found them to cover, in my opinion, only reasonable and necessary disbursements in connection with the bridge and railway works.

During the last year good progress has been made in the erection of the main bridge, the heaviest of its class ever undertaken.

The two shore spans, the south anchor span and canteliver arm are completed and there remains now to erect the north anchor span, cantilever arm and the suspended span.

The amount—$4,415,598.01—given as the total cost of works to March 31, represents the gross cost ; from this has been retained as drawback ten per cent (10 per 100) from M. P. Davis' estimate and $100,000 from the Phœnix Bridge Company's estimate, hence the actual net expenditure, on which the bond issue has been based, as follows :

Phœnix Bridge Company's estimate	$2,953,023 77
M. P. Davis' estimate	660,723 26
Engineering pay-rolls, right of way and contingent expenses.	628,437 28
Total net expenditure.	$4,242,184 31

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
E. V. JOHNSON,
Inspecting engineer.

I gave instructions that the various questions put should be inquired into, and, as far as I know, this furnishes all the information that was asked for.

Mr. SPROULE. I have only this observation to make, that a statement handed to us at the last moment, when we had no time to look into it or analyse it, is hardly satisfactory. That is scarcely fair to the House or to those who desire to look carefully into the Bill.

Mr. ALEX. MARTIN. Will the minister give us the total length of this bridge ?

Mr. FIELDING. 3,300 feet is the length of the bridge.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. I would like to ask the hon. minister why the government do not take over the bridge, under the powers conferred on them by the Act of 1903, and build it as a government work; because they will be obliged to take it over after this money is spent? That would stop all cause for remarks such as those made a few moments ago.

Mr. FIELDING. I may say to my hon. friend that I explained that very fully at a previous stage—I do not know whether he was in the House or not. The reason why we have not done that at once is that the government have entered into negotiations with a number of the railway companies with a view to forming a terminal company in which the various railways which may use the bridge would be interested; and if that company be formed, the government will either take over the bridge and lease it to the terminal company or transfer it to them in some other way. The idea of the government is that the terminal company, if formed, should have the management and operation of the bridge, and that pending the accomplishment of that end, we should assist the bridge company by becoming its banker and lending it the money instead of guaranteeing its bonds.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. What guarantee has the government for the repayment of the loan that it proposes to make instead of endorsing the bonds?

Mr. FIELDING. Instead of issuing the bonds, we propose to put them into our treasury, and we will lend the company the money just as we do in the case of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Would that not be a good argument for taking over the bridge as a government property?

Mr. FIELDING. Ultimately, when we have time to mature the scheme, the government will no doubt exercise the power to take over the bridge; but the question will then arise whether the government will undertake the management and operation of the bridge themselves, or whether it would not be in the interest of the trade of the country to lease it to a terminal company which it is hoped will be formed. It seems to me that if we could induce the various railway companies, with their experience and practical knowledge of such things, to form a terminal company to take the bridge by lease or in some other way and manage and operate it, that would be a desirable thing. We may not be able to accomplish it.

Mr. MORIN. I would like to tell the Minister of Railways that the government would be saving money if they would take the bridge over now. Some years ago the minister stated in this House that the government had the right to take over the bridge before its construction or during construction or after its completion, by paying the company 6 per cent of interest on their money and 10 per cent of a premium. The two would equal 16 per cent, which the government would save if they would take the bridge over now.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I wish to protest as strongly as possible against a piece of legislation like this being brought down, and late too, in the night preceding what is expected to be the day of prorogation.

Mr. FIELDING. It is not brought down to-night. It has been on the order paper many days.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose it is possible to put a measure on the order paper a week after the session opens, and then leave it until the very last before giving any explanation or information, and then plead that you have done your whole duty because you gave notice that a Bill would be brought in.

Mr. FIELDING. It was discussed many days ago.

Mr. FOSTER. And without any information. To-night is the first time that any specific information has been given. The other night the Minister of Finance had not the information and when we asked him for it, he had to promise that he would get it. He agreed that it was perfectly proper that this information should be given, but he had not taken the precautioin to get it.

Mr. FIELDING. It was not necessary.

Mr. FOSTER. If the government had been dealing with this legislation as they should have been, would it not have been like business and treating this House with respect, for the Finance Minister, or whoever was charged with it, to have had this information months ago and laid it before the House, so that the House would have been informed with regard to the whole matter? But he comes without a shred of information that is authentic until just five minutes before he wishes to go into committee on the Bill, and until we are within the shadow of prorogation.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a very unfair statement. The hon. gentleman will find that I gave plenty of information.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman need not say that. My statement will approve itself to the country. The other evening the Finance Minister, while he made a note of the questions asked, admitted that he had not the information, but that it was fair that the information should be given and promised that he would get it. He did not even bestir himself to give us the information a day or more before the matter came up for final decision, but throws it on the table just five minutes before we are going into committee on the subject. No man can take a statement like that and analyse it sufficiently to discuss that question as it should be discussed unless there is some little time to do it. Here you are proposing to do a most extraordinary thing. Here is a company without any capital. What is a capital of a few thousand dollars as compared with the $8,000,000 or $10,000,000 which it will take to complete the work? The men who went into the undertaking, for whatever purpose they went into it, put nothing adequate into it. All they put in was a few thousand dollars compared with $8,000,000 or $10,000,000. Surely the investment of a few thousand dollars is no substantial basis on which to warrant their going to capitalists or to the government and asking for a vast amount such as $10,000,000. These gentlemen went into this as a private speculation. They have their own ways of doing it; they have their own purposes; they have sufficient influence with the government to get their bonds guaranteed, and after proceeding a certain length of time they have sufficent influence with the government for getting a loan of $6,000,000 or $7,000,000. It is a tremendous undertaking. And now, at the dying hours of the session, we are called upon to discuss and decide as to whether under the conditions laid down in this Bill we will make a loan of $7,000,000 to a few men who have subscribed in capital but some few thousand dollars. What do we get in return ? My young friend (Mr. Robitaille) asked what was the security? The security is simply paper. All you have is a paper security. And a security represented by what? Represented by something which is not built, and you are giving the money in order to build it. You are not even taking the supervision of it, which is essential and fairly protective. You are putting the whole expenditure of this money into the hands of a few people, and they are not under the same bond with reference to you that a commission would be. Here is a company which has subscribed a little money and then has influence enough to get $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 from this government. The government have no reply. They know they are furnishing all the money. They are building the bridge although they are not making the profit. Somebody else who steps in between makes all the profit. My hon. friend has made some statements which I think are worthy of investigation. I thought they were worthy of a reply by members of the government, but not one of them has felt it worth while to reply to these statements made by an hon. gentleman who professes to have knowledge of the circumstances and who has made his statement in good faith as a member of parliament. We have on this slender basis the credit of the country pledged and the money of the country poured out to the tune of $8,000,000 or $9,000,000, and yet there is no finality in the plans or the purposes of the government. When asked a simply question by one of the members of their own party, when asked why, since they are furnishing all the money, they do not build the bridge themselves, the answer was that their negotiations were not complete. They might get this kind of a company and they might get that kind, but what they will get they do not know. Whether they will get any company at all or not they do not know. This thing has been before the government for years. They have known for years that these men were not putting their own money into it; that they were working for their own profit and advantage, on the credit of the government; that whenever they wanted the money of the government all they had to do was to ask for it, and they could go on working with the money of the government as they are doing to-day—yet not a single thing has been brought to a completion as regards this terminal question and no negotiations have been brought to completion with the railways which will use it. It is well known what railways, if any, will use it, yet the government has not a complete plan with reference to it. They shove out the people's money, $6,000,000 or $8,000,000 put it into the hands of a company who have invested only a few thousand dollars of their own in the undertaking and who get all the profits, who have all the management, and, so far as we can see, manage it as they please. The government is going to try to make some arrangement with a terminal company, but in the meantime independent people are managing this as they please, and the government simply provides the money and has in return some little certificate provision with reference to engineering supervision. I would ask the Minister of Finance whether in all this expenditure made with the government's credit and money there is any audit of these gentlemen's accounts by an officer of the Dominion government, or are they simply allowed to dispose of their bonds at what prices they please, and to expend the money in whatever way they please without any audit except their own? Surely if there ever was a case for having the expenditure of government money thoroughly audited by a government auditor this is one. It may be that the Minister of Finance has arranged for such an audit. I would like to know whether that is so or not.

Mr. FIELDING. I will let the hon. gentleman finish.

Mr. FOSTER. I think I have finished until we go into committee. I rose to make a protest against this kind of legislation. I do not know that ever we have had similar legislation in the history of this parliament, and it does seem to me that, particularly in this instance, there is complete disregard of all the safeguards of proper legislation. Certainly the safeguards of proper legislation are thorough information and plenty of time to digest that information so that we may come to wise conclusions. But what conclusions can we come to now on any basis of wide or digested information? My hon. friend from Grey has a quick intellect and a ready grasp of information, but when we throw before him a statement such as this, within a few minutes of the decision of the question, I do not think he is able to come to a conclusion on that information.

Mr. SPROULE. The information here given simply consists of estimates. This document does not give the actual figures of the work done. It reads as follows:

I beg to submit, for your information, the following statement in connection with the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company's works. This statement embraces the approaches on both sides of the St. Lawrence river and the superstructure of the main bridge.

Total cost of works to March 31, 1907, $4,415,-598.01.

Made up as follows :

Phœnix Bridge Company's estimate.$3,053,023.77

There is no data of the actual expenditure, but simply an estimate. What I want to know is the actual expenditure that went into the work, because if the information we get is correct, a great deal of the money said to have been spent never went into the work at all, but into the hands of interested parties. What I desire to know is the amount of money that went into the work.

Mr. TALBOT. You get that a little further.

Mr. SPROULE. That is all estimates. The Phœnix Bridge Company's estimate is $3,053,025—$3,000,000 out of $4,000,000 is made up of an estimate.

Mr. TALBOT. There are details further on.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. M. P. Davis' estimate is equally vague.

Mr. TALBOT. You will get explanations further on.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, I am going to deal with them further on. What we required was definite information of the actual expenditure on that work up to the present time. There is nothing like detailed information such as we would require in order to verify the expenditure. In the details of M. P. Davis' estimate we have such items as earth excavated, cubic yards, 330,075, an estimate not giving any accounts of what was actually done, and it is the same with other parts of this estimate. Here is an item, 'other lines of work, $49,838.' 'Other lines of work'—that is valuable, definite information which would enable one to judge whether there is a return for every dollar.

Mr. TALBOT. Is not that certified by a government engineer ?

Mr. SPROULE. What is the value of a certificate when I see 'other lines of work, $49,830.' We should know something about this, so that we would be enabled to judge whether the expenditure was properly made or whether it was greater than it should have been.

It refers here to nine miles of very expensive railway construction. We are told that if a proper route had been taken it would not have been nine miles of very expensive railway construction but nine miles of moderate railway construction.

Mr. TALBOT. Who says that ?

Mr. SPROULE. I am not going to tell the hon. gentleman who says that. It is as far as I know, reliable information from parties living in the locality who ought to know.

Mr. TALBOT. No reliable man ever said that.

Mr. SPROULE. No reliable man ever said that ? That is a venture without knowledge which is absolutely valueless because the reliability of that man may be quite as good as that of the hon. member who is denying it, and his intelligence may be very much better.

Mr. TALBOT. Let us have the name.

Mr. SPROULE. I have been told—I do not know whether it is correct or not—that the whole design was that friends of the government and friends of the enterprise managed to secure property in a certain locality and then they afterwards, with their influence, brought the railway along through it at very much greater expense to the country, with the result of enhancing the value of that property out of which they hoped to make money in the future.

Mr. TALBOT. You are referring to the St. Charles branch of the Intercolonial Railway ?

Mr. SPROULE. I am referring to the statement I have made. I want to get some information so that I can verify my information, but I regret to say that I have not obtained it. Reference is made farther down to verifying statement by the engineer's field notes. Is there no better criterion than that ? Are there not the actual accounts paid for work done ? Engineer's field notes—these things do not always pan out in accordance with the engineer's field notes. How do we know the work was done exactly as laid down in the engineer's field notes ? Surely we have not been given the information the House should have to enable us to ascertain whether the money has actually been put into the work that is represented to have been. The pay-rolls ought to have been copied instead of estimates of them being given. We ought to have other things as well. I asked how much of this is actually paid how much bonds have been issued for the payment, how much has been lost on this bond issue, where it has gone to, who has received it, and whether there was anything put into this work, which will ultimately I presume belong to the country, which represents a loss that has been sustained on that bond issue; is there any debt hanging over it? I asked what is the difference between the estimated cost of the bridge itself and the actual cost as ascertained up to the present time. We have no information on these points, therefore we cannot determine whether the enterprise has been wisely or unwisely conducted. I asked again for an estimate from some reliable source as to what was required to build this work provided it was taken over by the government, but we have no information about that. So I say we have no information that would justify us in acceding to the proposal of the government to provide $6,000,000 for this bridge. In the absence of this information we could not do our duty as we should, and we are left under the conviction that there has taken place here the most scandalous work that has ever been done on a public work in the Dominion of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee.

Mr. FIELDING. The fallacy running through the whole speech of the hon. member for North Toronto, and it is a very serious fallacy, is that we are now entering upon some new obligation in regard to the Quebec bridge, that we are shovelling out money, that we are imposing upon this country some tremendous obligation at this midnight hour which the country never heard of before. There is not one penny added to the obligations of Canada by this Bill before the House. If the Bill did not pass, the obligations of Canada are precisely the same. Now there is the vital point. If we were coming here with some new project, with a matter that had not been heard of before, and asking the country to commit itself to some large obligation, there would be some force in the hon. gentleman's observations. But when the fact is that there is no new obligation, when the fact is that there is an obligation resting upon the government for some years, and that we are merely changing the form of that obligation without adding one cent to it, how very ridiculous the speech of the hon. member for North Toronto must appear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In both cases, we do not assume responsibility while the other party has the control and the profit?

Mr. FIELDING. Nobody has shown here that the other party has made any profit. As to the question of control, that also is one of the delusions of hon. gentlemen opposite. I say again, and that is the most important point in the whole transaction, that practically we are not to-night, by this legislation, adding one cent to the obligations of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. But are we ensuring the completion of the work by this obligation? Have we any assurance that they will not come back a year or two hence asking us for aid to complete?

Mr. FIELDING. Possibly, but that would be no reason why we should not do this thing to-night. We are committing ourselves to the exact number of dollars and cents that we committed ourselves to four years ago, and not one cent more.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the estimate of the cost of this bridge when we committed ourselves to this obligation?

Mr. FIELDING. When I presented the Bill three or four years ago I gave the figures from an authority in the department, and the estimate furnished then was $7,503,725. That was an estimate of the probable obligation. We have a statement now that the cost will somewhat exceed that; the present estimate is, in round numbers, about eight million dollars, and I gave in a previous discussion the reasons for the increase. But suppose we have to come forward, by and by, and ask for a further grant; it is quite possible. Large works of this kind often cost more than was anticipated. Is that any reason why we should not meet the situation to-day? It is about as reasonable as to say that a man should not order his breakfast on Monday morning for fear that he might not get a bill made out of what he was going to eat on the following Saturday night.

Mr. SPROULE. Ought we not to know how that money has been applied before we undertake further obligations?

Mr. FIELDING. Perfectly reasonable, if my hon. friends would confine themselves to that. But when they start in here talking about the new obligations, about shovelling out money, when they tell us of grave scandals in connection with these improvements and are not prepared to point to a single fact indicating scandal, I say that is not a fair way to discuss a measure of this kind. Take one or two more points. The hon. member for North Toronto said, there is no provision for supervision. Is that a fair statement? What are the facts? Before they can commit the country or this fund to one dollar, plans and specifications have to be submitted to the government and approved. Then there is no provision for a competent engineer, he says: A gentleman who has been thirty-seven years in the service of the government of Canada, and who has dealt with many millions of dollars of works, is exercising supervision over this work. But will the hon. gentleman define what kind of supervision he means? Does he mean supervision to see that the work is properly constructed, or does he mean a supervision over the expenditure?

Mr. FOSTER. Supervision of both.

Mr. FIELDING. The largest item in this whole transaction is for the manufacturer of the steel bridge, which is done at a place in the United States. It is a question of weight. You pay for the bridge according to weight. The only thing to supervise is to see that you get the exact weight, and for that purpose we have an officer of the government who camps at the works and weighs every pound of steel that is charged against this fund. What better supervision can you have than that? So much then with regard to the biggest item. Then with regard to the substructure. That is a matter of inspection by the railway engineer, who goes from time to time and examines the work, who measures the work, and can tell you in the ordinary way of engineers whether the value is that which is placed upon it. This gentleman, who is a competent engineer, goes down from time to time and examines the work, and if he certifies, in the light of his thirty-seven years experience, that every dollar of the expenditure correct should they not be entitled to their money? Then, there remains the question of engineering, pay-rolls and various other charges, and he tells us that he has examined every voucher, that he had an opportunity to examine them, that he did examine them and he certifies that they are all right, that they cover only such reasonable and proper charges as should be made against a work of that kind. So, you have all reasonable and proper supervision and the statement that there is no supervision is entirely unwarranted.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he remembers an engineer who was supervising the business on the Cornwall canal and who recommended the payment of a certain sum of money and that by the action of the Auditor General it was cut down by some $29,000?

Mr. LENNOX. And it was the same Mr. Davis.

Mr. SPROULE. The same Mr. Davis.

Mr. FIELDING. Suppose it were so, there is no evidence here that the engineer had done wrong. The engineer who certified to that was the engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, Mr. Collingwood Schreiber, and if the hon. gentleman wants to assail the record and standing of Mr. Schreiber I want to say he is not justified in doing it.

Mr. SPROULE. But the minister gives the fact that an engineer belonging to the government supervises this work as a guarantee that it must be right.

Mr. FIELDING. There is no system of human supervision that will not depend upon the honesty of the officer. You cannot conduct public business without trusting some one, and if you have the certificate of a man of high standing and long experience in the public service you would be justified in accepting it. Suppose that Mr. Schreiber were a scoundrel and that he would be guilty of rascality in connection with the transaction to which my hon. friend refers, is that any reason why you should cast a reflection upon another man? I do not understand why a man who has been thirty-seven years in the public service should be challenged or why you should say that he is not beyond suspicion. Then the hon. member for North Toronto said that they may dispose of the bonds as they please. May they? Does he know that they have not disposed of a dollar of the bonds? Does he not know that this Act says that they shall not dispose of a dollar of these bonds, but that they must put these bonds in the hands of the Minister of Finance? Why has he tried to mislead the country by saying that we leave them to deal with the bonds as they please? It is not a fair criticism. The hon. member for East Grey is apprehensive about the use of the word 'estimate.' He says that it is not a certificate, but that it is only an estimate of the Phœnix Bridge Company and he asks what such an estimate is good for. My hon. friend falls into a mistake there. The word 'estimate' in this respect is an engineering term which refers to actual expenditure on the work.

Mr. SPROULE. Why did the engineer find it necessary to say in one case: I have verified by the actual pay-roll these items and vouchers and in the other that it is an estimate?

Mr. FIELDING. The reason why he would examine the pay-rolls and vouchers in relation to the engineering and clerical service is because you can get at the facts by examining the vouchers, but in the case of the great body of this work, which is a steel superstructure, all you want to know is how many pounds of steel went into the work and nothing else, and if you have the certificate of the man who stands in the place at Phœnixville, Pa., and sees every pound of steel that goes on the scale, that is all you want.

Mr. SPROULE. Apply that to the right of way.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend's complaint comes down to this, that we have not in this report given a copy of every voucher and every single dollar separately.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not ask for anything of the kind.

Mr. FIELDING. Surely when a statement of this kind is asked for, it must be a general statement, classifying the different works and services, and when the engineer says that so much work has been done on the superstructure and so much on the substructure, I think that is a fair and reasonable statement. If there was any ground for suspicion that there was anything wrong, my hon. friend would be justified in seeking another statement. But, there is nothing to warrant any such suspicion. I thought the information which I gave at first was all that was necessary for the purpose, but my hon. friend asked a question which seemed fair and reasonable and I was happy to answer him. I did not think this information was necessary because we were not creating a new obligation. We owe this money and whether we owe it in the shape of a loan or an endorsed note it makes no difference; our obligation is the same. All we do is to allow them to place their bonds in our strong box and loan them money on them just as we did with the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal. Our obligation is no more and no less. We retained good security before and we are not doing anything more now. There is no change in the present situation as far as the government of Canada is concerned.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you think it would be well for the House to consider whether it would not be wise for the government to take over the work and control it and know that every dollar that the country raises will go into it ? We may have to do it in the future.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. And we are going on with this expenditure, allowing it to drip through the hands of others who may misapply it, and if there is any misapplication of that money the country will lose it. We might be obliged to take it over and raise more money by bonds or a loan to finish the work.

Mr. FIELDING. I think we shall probably take it over later.

Mr. SPROULE. If that is in anticipation, the earlier we do it the better. The more money we will save and the less risk we will run.

Mr. FIELDING. I thought I gave my hon. friend good reasons for it, but perhaps he was not convinced.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. How can the minister explain the different estimates ? There are three different estimates. One was made by Sir Wilfrid in 1899 from the report of an engineer named Cooper that it would cost $4,000,000, and it was estimated in the statutes of 1903 that it would cost $6,866,882.

Mr. FIELDING. I will answer my hon. friend at once. I cannot give any information as to an estimate made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier years ago. But of course the hon. gentleman knows that all great enterprises of this kind are likely to be under estimated at the beginning. When the matter was first taken up and represented by hon. members from the city of Quebec, we were willing to make a grant of $1,000,000, which was thought at that time to be a large and generous grant. At that time, apparently, the engineers had not fully estimated the cost of the work. When we found that the work was going to be a very expensive one, we saw that our grant of $1,000,000 would not be any help. We cancelled it after paying $370,000 and adopted the new form. I do not know the source of the information given by Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the words which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Robitaille) now reads, but he must have got them from some engineer—Sir Wilfrid, not being an expert in these matters could not have undertaken himself to make an estimate of that kind.

Mr. LENNOX. We must only hold the minister responsible in this matter, and it will probably have to be gone through with. But I would like to ascertain some facts, and if they were stripped of eloquence they would be none the less welcome to me. I understand that the total amount said to have been paid up to 31st of March last, was $4,415,000. I understand that that covers every disbursement in connection with this bridge and the terminals. Is that correct ?

Mr. FIELDING. I would have to have the figures to answer that.

Mr. LENNOX. But the figures have been given, and I want to know what they cover. Does this include all the expenditure up to March 31 ?

Mr. FIELDING. I would rather answer in the words of the engineer's report. It says :

> This statement embraces the approaches on both sides of the St. Lawrence river and the superstructure of the main bridge. The substructure had been completed when the Bill of 1903, was passed. So, without the substructure, the expense was $4,242,184.31 net.

Mr. LENNOX. And with the substructure ?

Mr. FIELDING. The company's statement of the total outlay, including balance due to the banks on March 1 showed a total expenditure of $5,422,238.38. If you compare that with the amount of the bond issue, you will find that there is a difference of about $1,255,000 which is the sum that will be available under this arrangement for carrying on the work for the next year or so until further steps are taken.

Mr. LENNOX. This $5,422,238.38 represents all the moneys that have been paid out, as I understand ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. That covers the total outlay, including the indebtedness to the bank.

Mr. LENNOX. That is, they got their money out of the bank and paid it out ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. But I understand that outside of this there are liabilities ?

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that represents everthing.

Mr. LENNOX. Everything ? Are there no liabilities ? For instance, is there not a further amount to go to contractors ?

Mr. FIELDING. For work to be done—yes.

Mr. LENNOX. No, but for work done up to the present time ?

Mr. FIELDING. As the work progresses more money will have to be paid.

Mr. LENNOX. Is there in addition, a certain amount of drawback, 10 per cent or something like that ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, in Mr. Johnson's report he alluded to the drawback, but in the memorandum I have, showing the total expenditure that is not mentioned, and I am not quite sure how that stands.

Mr. LENNOX. I would like to know that. What I want to know is this : Is the minister perfectly sure that he has the information which will justify him in saying that, up to the present time, the money which is represented to have been put into the construction of that bridge has actually gone into it fairly and honestly.

Mr. FIELDING. I am bound to tell my hon. friend in all frankness that I have no reason to doubt. Some work was done years ago before the present officials had charge of it. I never heard that it was not done in the same way as that under the present officials. If hon. gentlemen opposite know anything to the contrary, their knowledge is greater than mine.

Mr. LENNOX. I know nothing of it. But I understand it to be my duty to have some basis of information for my action in this matter. And I venture to suggest that it is the duty of the minister, before bringing this matter before us, to ascertain that the money which was represented as having been expended in the construction of this bridge has not been frittered away on other objects. Having first granted that subsidy and then, within a very short time, guaranteed the expenditure it is the duty of the government to keep close watch upon what was being done, so that they might be able to tell parliament that the money we have guaranteed, every dollar of it, has gone honestly into this work. If the government does not know that, it is not in a position to come before parliament and ask it to pass this Bill. The minister might as well understand that he will not be in a very fortunate position if, when this matter is looked into—as it must be looked into at last—it appears that of this $5,422,238 a considerable portion has not been expended bona fide upon this work. That is what I would like the minister to answer specifically—can he assure the committee that he has sufficient knowledge to enable him to say that there has been an honest expenditure of this money ?

Mr. FIELDING. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) tell me how it is possible for me, as acting Minister of Railways and Canals, or how it could have been possible for my predecessor to know these things except from the reports of the engineers ? If the engineers who are in the public service have deceived us, if somebody has put up a job on us, and it so turns out by and by, I can only say that I shall be much surprised. But, as a minister, I have done all I could do. If we employ honest, capable men and give due weight to the reports of those men, what more can we do ?

Mr. LENNOX. If the government were constructing a work of this kind directly it would be their duty to scrutinize with care every item of expenditure. And if in this case the same precaution is not taken, then the ministry are going it blind and they are asking the members of this parliament to follow them in voting this money. They have not taken any pains to find out whether this money is expended bona fide in carrying on this work——

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) must not say that we have not taken any pains in this matter. I am sure that the information in the department on this subject is as thorough and complete as it could be if we had to do the work ourselves. But, suppose we were carrying on the work ourselves, how could the minister know anything about it except from the reports of his officers ? My hon. friend is a reasonable man, and he must see that. In nine cases out of ten the minister is not an engineer. How, then, can he know anything of these matters except on the advice and information of those under him whose business it is to understand them.

Mr. SPROULE. Can you not know by accounts and vouchers actually before you?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is not content with them. We say, as respects the largest part of this transaction, the steel superstructure, that we have a man there who watches the weight of every ounce that goes into it. What more can we do ?

Mr. SPROULE. The minister is unfair in that. I quoted the amount of steel put into it, and, if the amount is right, it indicates quite clearly the price of that. But in nearly all the other lines, you take one of the items, and the engineer says, this is the result of an examination of the vouchers and the accounts. If the whole of it had been like that, it would be all right. That is one way you can get knowledge, and the other way is by the estimate.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. Has the government had an engineer since the work started, from the first dollar spent to the present day ?

Mr. FIELDING. The government engineer is not stationed there all the time. As in the case of other public works, he visits it often enough to enable him to measure and certify to the character of the work. We do not have an inspecting engineer for all the works the government is carrying on. An engineer visits a work from time to time, varying the number of his visits according to its importance.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. Does the minister admit that every dollar of expenditure should represent a dollar of actual value ? For example, certain excavation costs $200,000, and the government engineer should estimate the work done as worth $200,000. How does the minister explain the deficit of $779,000 in 1903, if according to his statement every dollar of expense represents a dollar of value ?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not understand about that deficit; but I can say that where there has been a work of excavation done, an engineer can examine it and report the quantity of material taken out and what its value is; and I am assured that the engineer has done that and is able to certify in every such case that the quantities are correct and that the work has been done.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. Then the estimated value of the work done must have been under the actual expense since there was some kind of deficit. Another question I would ask the minister is this : In view of the past administration, which admits its incompetency, from the fact that it admits a deficit in its finances, and also in view of the close connection of the two companies which I mentioned a few minutes ago, what guarantee has the minister that once this bridge and its approaches are completed, the bridge company will not take the government money and buy the Quebec Terminal Company, which is their own, at an enhanced value, which its buildings and other properties. Even supposing that a valuation of the land and the buildings thereon should be considered as actual value, what guarantee has the government that it will cost less or more to cause the railway to pass one way instead of another way ? I am not so much discussing the past operation of the bridge company as its present disposal of things, especially the fact it is causing the approaches to the bridge by the St. Lawrence to be more expensive than by the St. Charles valley. When these expenses have been made, the engineers will certify that the works have cost so many thousands of dollars; but what guarantee have we that they will not have cost four or five times what they would if there had been proper engineering, unless private speculation or political influence caused these expenses to be made at certain stipulated places. There are certain rumours circulating in Quebec, and I have been discussing the matter with several railroad officials, one of whom has told me : 'They cannot oblige us to pass over a bridge and enter into the city if we cannot get the facilities for loading and unloading the steamers.'

Mr. POWER. Is the hon. gentleman aware that there is no such company in existence as the Quebec Terminal Company ?

Mr. ROBITAILLE. It may have changed its name. It is in the statute, and you can see its name on St. Peter's street in Quebec. I must tell my hon. friend before long that he shall have some interest in that speculation, and there will be full disclosures of this.

Mr. POWER. I regret the language that has fallen from the lips of this young man, the member for the county of Quebec, who stands in this House to-day and dares to cast a slur upon hon. gentlemen in the city of Quebec, men in my own division, men like the Hon. S. N. Parent, whose character stands above reproach in this country, who has enjoyed the confidence of his fellow citizens of the city of Quebec for twelve or fifteen years. The hon. gentleman also dares to asperse the character of a man like Rudolphe Audette, a member of the old established firm of Thibaudeau & Co., and president of the National Bank, who has raised that bank to the high standard it maintains to-day, as if a man who possesses the confidence of the French-Canadian people to the extent of handling their money cannot be trusted to handle this bridge company. The hon. gentleman also dares to asperse the character of a man like the Hon. Edward Garneau, whose ability and energy has established one of the largest industrial works, not only in the province of Quebec, but in the Dominion of Canada, giving employment to thousands of people. This young man, who is presumptuous enough to cast slurs on men of the highest character in our community and who, from the height of his inexperience, passes judgment on them and says they are unworthy to handle the funds of this country, has a good deal yet to learn. And I think I can safely predict that when the day comes when this bridge will be completed and the work of that company has stood the test of experience, that most severe of audits, it will be found a credit to the country, and the country will have reason to congratulate itself on having had this work under the control and management of such men as the directors of the Quebec Bridge Company.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. The hon. gentleman has allowed himself to be led away by his extreme partisanship. I have not said anything against the members of the board or any one else but have simply stated what is said openly in the streets and in the daily newspapers. There is an extraordinary similarity between the names of the directors of the Quebec Terminal Company and the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company. The hon. gentleman made the statement that the Quebec Terminal Company never existed. Does he deny the existence of the statute? In the statutes of 1901 he will find the incorporation of that company.

Mr. POWER. I said it did exist but that it has ceased to exist.

Mr. SPROULE. I made the statement that I was quite sure there was a company and the hon. gentleman emphatically denied it. I have the statutes here showing its existence.

Mr. POWER. I did not deny that it did exist, but I said the company was not in existence to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. He said there never was such a company.

Mr. POWER. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong.

Mr. SPROULE. There is the statute which brought that company into existence, and which shows by whom it was controlled up to the time it may have been merged into something else, and it was only by virtue of that statute that it could build one mile of that railway. So that the company always has existed in some way or another or the terminus could not be built to-day.

Mr. POWER. I have never denied that it did not exist at one time. All I say is that there is no such company now.

On section 1,

The Governor in Council may from time to time advance by way of loan to the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company, hereinafter called 'the company,' a sum not exceeding six million six hundred and seventy-eight thousand two hundred dollars, for the purposes of the undertaking of the company as set forth in chapter 54 of the statutes of 1903, and the agreement a copy of which forms the schedule thereto, which loan shall bear interest at the rate of three per cent per annum, payable half-yearly on the first day of April and the first day of October in each year.

Mr. FOSTER. I notice the rate is 3 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. That will entail a direct burden on the country.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, we treat it the same as the Montreal Harbour Board.

On section 3,

The remainder of the said sum may be advanced as the undertaking is proceeded with to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council, and in such sums as the chief engineer of government railways, or such other officer as the Governor in Council appoints for the purpose, certifies to be justified.

Mr. FOSTER. What audit is there to be over this expenditure?

Mr. FIELDING. It has the close audit indicated in Mr. Johnson's report. The greater part of the whole undertaking is in the steel.

Mr. FOSTER. Less than half of it.

Mr. FIELDING. That large item has the best possible audit one could desire. We have an officer whose duty it is to be present at the weighing and to certify to the full weight.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is very partial to that steel part of the contract. But that is not quite one-half of the total expenditure. He clings to that as being very clear and definite as regards the audit, and I have no fault to find in that particular, provided you have a proper man at the steel company's works who will oversee the whole matter, who will weigh the steel and make the calculations and give his certificate. But there is about $4,000,000 more to be expended outside of that. It is with reference to the audit of that expenditure, that I wanted to ask the minister. In the explanation he gave the other night, he said, he had two things. In the first place, you send your engineer. The engineer, he said, was not a resident there, but went there occasionally.

Mr. FIELDING. That is right.

Mr. FOSTER. And this engineer gave his certificate; and in his explanation the minister made use of a good deal of unnecessary thunder and lightening. Were we going, he asked, to attack the bona fides of such men as Mr. Schreiber and Mr. Johnson. But it is not necessary, in discussing these questions, to throw any doubts on the good faith of the engineers.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend did.

Mr. FOSTER. We have engineers who certify to almost every item in the different departments, yet, notwithstanding that, each item goes to the auditor and the auditor makes a thorough examination into it. My hon. friend's own department would not go upon the certificates of its engineer, but refused to pay to the Grand Trunk Railway, on account of the Grand Trunk Pacific, a very large sum, and have not paid it to this day. In numerous instances it happens that even though you have the best and most reliable engineers to give certificates, that is not considered enough and you require to have your independent audit over and above that. We had an example a few years ago in the case of a subsidy for a bridge down in the province of Quebec. I forget just now the name of the bridge. Certificates of engineers were given and even accountant's figures, and the report went to council and a subsidy was voted by council, yet afterwards it was found out, when an independent engineer was sent by the Audit Department, that the engineer's certificate was all astray and that the subsidy which had been authorized by council was far too great, and it was afterwards either taken back or was not paid. These cases occur in a multiplicity of instances. It is not sufficient to say you have the certificate of an engineer who makes occasional visits of inspection. Another point which has not been explained is this. Granted that the $3,000,000 of steel is all-right, there are $4,000,000 more to be expended, and probably more than that, before the bridge is through. We want not only the measure of steel but the measure of the other $4,000,000 or $5,000,000. Before bonds were guaranteed at all, there was $1,000,000 of subsidy by this government, and an amount of stock and the money paid for it, and a subsidy paid by the province of Quebec. All these amounted to pretty nearly a million of dollars which were actually paid in, a part having been taken back of that million dollar subsidy and changed on to the bond system. What knowledge has the government or what steps were taken to get that knowledge that the million dollars of this previous expenditure, before any bonds were granted at all, actually went into the work? Was there any constant supervision of the earlier building of that work into which that amount of from $900,000 to $1,000,000 went, and what was the nature of that supervision?

Mr. FIELDING. Just the same as we have now, but by a different officer. The officer in charge was Mr. Douglas, of the Department of Railways and Canals, who was selected because of his particular knowledge of the work going on. We had from Mr. Douglas the same class of certificate as respects that as we now get from Mr. Johnson for the present work.

Mr. FOSTER. And that was also occasional visitation.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, because on all public works it is found that we do not need to have an engineer there constantly; he can measure the work that has been done in his absence. We have to trust the engineers and we have no reason to believe that in this case everything is not right.

Mr. FOSTER. Why should you not have, over and above all this, a government audit? It is to all intents and purposes a government work. The Minister of Finance said the obligations were exactly the same under a guarantee of bonds as under a direct loan of the money. I think there is a difference but we will not discuss that at the present time. Does the Finance Minister see any objection to a government audit?

Mr. FIELDING. No. The manner in which the bridge shall be taken over, the degree of compensation to be allowed to the company and the manner in which the city and province of Quebec are to be dealt with in respect of their interest, my hon. friend will find set forth in the Act of 1903. As a work of this character approaches completion and the time approaches when we may take it over, I quite agree that it is well to have it audited. I do not think that class of work has ever come under the Auditor General, but that is no reason why some competent auditor should not be sent down; so far from objecting to what my hon. friend says, I think it is reasonable, I would not oppose his view.

Mr. SPROULE. It would seem to me to be better to have the auditing when this money is being expended rather than wait until the completion of the work.

Mr. FOSTER. If any irregularities were found it would check them and they would not probably be repeated.

Mr. FIELDING. I see no objection to that view.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Yukon Territory, living allowances, judges, $15,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Have any changes been made in the living allowances of the judges?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). No, they are just the same as last year.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the minister made any further investigation into the living allowances generally with a view to revising them? I remember last year we had some discussion on it and the minister quoted from a newspaper to show the local prices of different commodities. I am afraid it will be found that the authority the minister gave for the prices he quoted from a newspaper will hardly fill the Bill. I am informed that the newspaper was defunct about two years and a half before we discussed the matter last year, consequently it would be a pretty antediluvian authority for discussing the cost of living in the Yukon in the year 1906.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I have communicated, since the last sitting of the House, with Judge Craig on the subject, and I have before me a detailed statement from this gentleman. He enters a mild protest against the regular recurrence of the apparent necessity to give the same details annually with regard to these expenditures. He gives some data with respect to the prices of the necessaries of life in the Yukon. The statement I have from this gentleman is that the cost of living in the Yukon to-day is at least three times what it is in the province of Ontario. Mr. Justice Craig had spent, I think, the whole of his life in the county of Renfrew prior to his appointment in the Yukon. In the matter of necessaries for the table alone he makes the following comparison :

—	Ontario.	Yukon.
Flour, per brl.	$4.50	$14 to $17
Potatoes, per bush.	40c.	$10 often $20
Eggs, per doz., fresh.	15c. to 20c.	$3 to $4
Eggs, packed.	10c.	50c. to 75c.
Fowl, per lb.	10c. to 15c.	50c. to 75c.
Milk, per qt.	5c.	35c.
Wood, per cord.	a $4 to $5	c $15
Beef, mutton, pork, per lb.	10c. to 15c.	50c.
Coal, per ton.	b $5 to $6	$15 lignite
Fish, per lb.	10c.	30c. to 40c.
Fruit—
Oranges, per doz.	25c.	$3
Strawberries, per box.	5c. to 10c.	$1

a Hardwood. b Hard coal. c Soft—useless.

Other details are given about in the same proportion. Apples, for instance, are $2 a barrel in Ontario, and $30 in the Yukon. Servants whom you pay $8 or $10 in Ontario per month are $75 to $100 in the Yukon. A charwoman, 75 cents a day in Ontario, is 60 cents per hour in the Yukon. The servant question is a very vital one for men occupying a judicial position. The conditions in the Yukon, as he states them to me, are that for servants they must depend mainly upon Japanese who will do cooking, but will not do laundrying or other work, which either has to devolve upon the women of the family or additional help must be hired. He deprecates the necessity for going into such details and speaks of his own efforts to live within his salary and the fact that he is unable to live within his allowance and have a second servant within the house. He refers to the amounts he has to pay for laundry charges. A gentleman's collar would be laundried in Ontario for 10 cents a piece cost 50 cents, the regular charge in the Yukon. Water, 10 cents a pail, or if it is taken from the tap, $7 per month for each tap. His electrical light bill was $174 for the year, with the most economical use. I suppose six months of the year he would use it about twelve hours a day. Then with regard to the luxuries of life, a daily newspaper is $48 per annum; magazines, 75 cents to $1 a piece, which can be bought here for 10 cents. Rent of post office box, $8 a year, whilst it would not be a quarter of that in Ontario. Medical service, $10 a visit. Nursing, $10 to $15 a day, if one has the misfortune to have illness in the family. In regard to apparel, the prices are so high and the finances so low that it is necessary to bring in ladies' clothing, at all events millinery and any luxuries of that character, from the outside, and then the express charges are almost prohibitive. The judge tells me that in the week of writing this letter in January last, he had been obliged to pay $28.85 for express charges on a parcel containing simply a woman's frock and some other little articles. If he has to hire a horse, the charge is $15 per day for a single horse, or $25 a day for a team, where it would be $2 or $3 in Ontario. Every charge is of a like character except the single item of rent. Rent, he says, has decreased since he went there, by reason of the fact that there are plenty of houses now, the supply of residences exceeding the demand. But in his own case, at all events, and probably the case of each one of the judges, they are not living in rented houses, but in houses they have built for themselves when they first went into the Yukon ; built when prices were high and when material was very high, upon which they are paying to-day interest at the rate of 12 per cent per annum. In these circumstances he certainly seemed to me to make out a very strong case for a continuance of at least the living allowance which is contained in the item in the estimates. Since I have been on my feet I see the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Thompson) is in his place and I think he could give a statement which will bear out what I said.

Mr. MARSHALL. I would like to ask the minister if he knows the freight on potatoes which he says are worth $14 a barrel. The freight is about $55.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The freight is certainly high. The judge says that the freight from Vancouver to Dawson is from four to five cents a pound.

Mr. MARSHALL. If the freight is $55 a ton the potatoes would not cost any more than $11.40 if there are three bushels to the barrel.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. $10 and even $20 per bushel.

Mr. THOMPSON. Ten cents a pound is the usual price at Dawson. Potatoes are a very perishable article and they shrink as well as rot and in the spring of the year they often will be as high as ten cents a pound and everything else in proportion. A freight rate of $55 a ton has prevailed on some of the heavier articles such as nails, flour and hay and things of that kind until recently. The freight on furniture would be anywhere from $75 to $250 a ton. It is impossible to compare the living in Dawson with the cost of living in any of the other provinces of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. It undoubtedly is high.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is extremely high. That holds good with respect to practically all the things that go to make up the necessaries of life. Besides that we must not overlook the fact that these gentlemen are living in what is at best an isolated community and the wage they get is I consider not at all too large.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the minister if any commissioner has been appointed yet for the Yukon ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think I may say no ; not to my knowledge.

Penitentiaries, $552,300.

Mr. FOSTER. Generally what changes are there in these estimates ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. What increase there is, is due practically to the increases of salaries to the officers throughout the Dominion which took place under the statute of last session, and by reason of which there has been some increase in expenditure as the items, item by item, will show. Other than that there is no substantial difference between the estimates of this year and the preceeding year.

Grant to the imperial government to cover Canada's portion of probable losses in connection with the operation of the Pacific cable, $125,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the comparative condition of that as to revenue and expenditure ? Is the gap lessening between the expense and the government ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am advised that the conditions are about the same. There is a considerable loss, I am sorry to say.

Expenses of litigated matters between the Dominion of Canada and the provinces of Ontario and Quebec (payments on account of services rendered may be made to any member of the Civil Service notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act), $3,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought that item was to stop and that we had got through with that litigation ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. There are different items of that litigation cropping up continually.

Consolidation and translation of Dominion Statutes, which may be paid notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act respecting the Departments of Public Printing and Stationery, $4,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I see that there has been a distribution of one copy of the Revised Statutes to each member. Is there to be the same distribution which is usually made of the statutes ; that is two copies ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Each member of the House is to receive three sets of the Revised Statutes. Only one for each member has yet been distributed, because the number bound and ready is not very great, and it was thought better not to wait until there were enough to send all at once.

Mr. SPROULE. Then each member gets three copies ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Three sets of four volumes each.

Printing 5,000 copies of the evidence taken before the Royal Commission on life insurance, $9,500.

Mr. BERGERON. I observe that in another place they have reported against having this evidence printed in French. I do not wish to insist upon the point, but I would call attention to the fact that the committee in this House recommended that it be printed in both languages. I do not suppose we shall have any difficulty about it.

Mr. FIELDING. As it stands, under the order of this House, we shall have to print it in French. When it is being printed for one House there will be little or no expense in printing it for both. Therefore, the economical action of the Senate will not save us very much money.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand it will be printed in French ?

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly—that was the order of the House.

Legislation House of Commons—to provide for the promotion of a third-class to junior second-class, $50.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is that ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Mr. Asselin in the post office.

To provide for increase of salaries of nine translators of debates from $1,500 to $2,000 each, $4,500.

Mr. BERGERON. This has something to do with a matter which I mentioned in the House the other day—that the Committee on Debates has not made a report for the last two sessions. I am very glad to see this amount here, because it was recommended by the Debates Committee, though that report was not put before the House and was not accepted. This is an act of justice to a class of employees who do good work. But I regret that the report of the Debates Committee was not accepted when it was made, because it comprehended another class of officers to whom, I am sure, the House desires to do justice as it is doing to the officers for whom this vote is intended—I refer to the reporters of the House. I understand that the reporters submitted a request to the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and, no doubt, my hon. friend the leader of the House (Mr. Fielding) has heard of it. Their request was that the report of the Debates Committee should be adopted. They have been employed for many years, without an increase of salary. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee just now with reading the memorial of the reporters, but I may mention some of the points covered by it. They say that there has been no increase in their salaries for over twenty years.

Mr. FOSTER. What are they getting now?

Mr. BERGERON. Two thousand dollars a year. They are about the only officials whose salary has not been increased during that time. They refer to the fact that the cost of living is a great deal higher than it was. They also point out that their work is much heavier than it used to be, the average length of the sessions having nearly doubled as compared with what it was in 1887, and the business of parliament has vastly increased in volume and is conducted under greater pressure. We can judge of that for ourselves, because where we used to have two volumes of 'Hansard' we now have four or five. The reporters claim that they are underpaid, considering the work they do. The work is of a technical nature and—this is a point they do not mention, but I think it will be generally admitted—it would be hard to find in the whole Dominion a set of men who could do the work they have to perform. They are old newspaper men, and most of them have had training in the press gallery before being appointed to their present positions. All old members of the House will understand that no man could do the work required of our reporters unless he had had a training as a parliamentary journalist. I do not want to insist upon the comparison, but these gentlemen point out that in England, although 'Hansard' is published by contract, the stenographers are paid nearly double what they are paid here; in Australia they are paid $3,500 a year, and in the United States $5,000 a year.

Mr. LEMIEUX. How much are parliamentary reporters in France paid?

Mr. BERGERON. I have not that information at hand. The reporters, for the last three weeks have been working from eleven in the morning until one or two the next morning. In their memorial they mention the fact that their corrector of proofs does a great deal of work, and is underpaid. Altogether their demand is that their salary be increased in proportion to the increase given to the translators, which I think is proper. They also ask that Mr. Boyce, their proofreader, be given a salary of $1,500 a year. I call the attention of the leader of the House to this memorial. I do not know whether he has seen it or not.

Mr. FIELDING. I have seen it.

Mr. BERGERON. We have been told by the Prime Minister more than once, and have generally followed his opinion, that reports of committees should be accepted by the House unless there is some strong reason against that course. The Committee on Debates has recommended twice, last session and this session, an increase of salaries, although the report has not been put before the House, and therefore has not yet been accepted. I regret that very much. I have been pressing on the chairman of the committee very often to make this report, even if only as a matter of dignity. The translators have taken another means of getting what is being voted to-night. They went straight to the Committee on Internal Economy, and I am very glad they have obtained it, and I would thank Mr. Speaker for what he has done in that regard. But I regret very much that the reporters have been omitted, and if there is yet time, I would ask the leader of the House to see that justice is rendered to them.

Mr. ETHIER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few remarks in addition to what my hon. friend from Beauharnois has said. As a member of the Debates Committee, I agree with his remarks concerning the translating of the debates. Two years ago the Committee on Debates passed a resolution recommending such increase as has been recommended to-day by the Speaker, and I may add my thanks to Mr. Speaker for this increase, which was recommended by the committee in June, 1905, and also in July, 1906. I am not disposed to compare the merits of the translators with those of the reporters; but I would say that the special qualifications required to be a good and reliable translator for the House of Commons of Canada are such that it would be difficult to duplicate in the whole country, such a staff as we have now. I wish to take this occasion to enter my protest against what was said in this House a few days ago, I think on the 24th of April, by the hon. member for Victoria, concerning the translators of the Debates of this House. The hon. gentleman is absent, and I would not like to attack him in his absence; but I wish to protest against his words when he says:

> There has been a good deal of complaint about the translators. I am told they engage in other work.

I am sure that the hon. member, when he said this, was misinformed. In answer to this statement. I here refer to what took place only at the last meeting of the Committee on Debates, and if the committee had had the opportunity of making a report to this House, he would not have pronounced those words. At that meeting, at which I think my hon. friend from Beauharnois was present, and also the hon. whip of the Conservative party, Mr. Dawson, the King's Printer, was asked if there was any complaint in regard to the translators, and he answered that there was nothing against them, that they were up-to-date with their work, and were performing their duties as well as they possibly could. I think the hon. member for Beauharnois will join me in saying that that statement forms part of the minutes of the Debates Committee in the hands of Mr. Panet. The declaration of Mr. Dawson is an answer to the statement made by the hon. member for Victoria, made I am sure not in bad faith, but because he was misinformed. I join with the hon. member for Beauharnois in thanking the Speaker of the House and the Minister of Finance for having put in the supplementary estimates this recognition of the special qualifications of the staff of French translators. As to the reporters, I have not made any comparison. I have nothing to say against them. They have a salary of $2,000. It is the right of anybody to ask for more salary, and I think it is something very proper now in the civil service to ask for more. Without interfering with the rights of the reporters, I may say, in comparing the services and qualifications of both officers, that the translators we have are just as qualified as the reporters we have now, and that if the translators are put on the same footing as the reporters, the reporters should not be jealous of the increase in the salaries of their confreres, who deserve the same as they have.

Mr. BERGERON. But my hon. friend will remember that at the meeting of the Debates Committee to which he refers, it was recommended that the salaries of the reporters should be increased as well as those of the translators, and if we ask the House to accept the report of the committee with regard to the translators, we must also ask it to accept the report with regard to the reporters.

Mr. ETHIER.

Mr. ETHIER. The Debates Committee made such a suggestion, but, as my hon. friend stated when he first spoke, no report was made by the chairman of the committee. So that the House has before it no official report of the Debates Committee making such a recommendation, and I suppose some other course was taken on behalf of the translators which the reporters did not take. If the Chairman of the Debates Committee had taken the proper steps or made the proper report, perhaps the reporters would have received from the government the same attention as the translators had.

Mr. FOSTER. A query that comes to my mind is why there should be a difference in this matter as between the reporters and the translators ? Why should the Committee on Internal Economy raise the salaries of the one staff, whilst the Debates Committee makes the recommendation and this House says whether or not the salaries of the others shall be raised? Has it always been so that the Committee on Internal Economy have taken charge of the translators? I do not think so, and it seems to me as though a portion of the duty which properly belongs to the Debates Committee and to this House has been transferred in some arbitrary and undemocratic way to the Committee on Internal Economy. I would like to know why this change has been made.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is hardly correct in saying that it is the practice to allow the committee to settle the salaries of anybody.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say so at all. I said that the committee reported to this House and this House decided whether to adopt that report or not.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not agree that the House can settle money questions in that way. These matters have to be dealt with in proper form and that is by a money vote submitted by the government.

Mr. FOSTER. The House can deal with it as far as giving an expression of opinion is concerned, and that it may do it by either adopting or rejecting the report of the committee. My hon. friend cannot object to such a report being adopted. It would be taken and laid on the table and then it would be for the government to decide what course it should take with reference to it. This year there has been no report presented of the Debates Committee, and the reports of that committee of the previous year was laid on the table and not adopted. The Debates Committee have still the power to make a recommendation which the House may or may not adopt.

Mr. FIELDING. It is considered objectionable to adopt a report recommending expenditure. The proper way is for the government to submit a vote.

Mr. BERGERON. The salaries of the reporters were increased before on a report of the Debates Committee adopted by the House. These official reporters and translators of the official debates are employees who belong entirely to the House, and this is the first time that a part of them has passed under the Board of Internal Economy. I do not object to the translators having done this in so far as they have obtained justice and in that way have been granted what the Debates Committee recommended. But it is a new departure. What I complain of however is that justice has been rendered only to one section of the staff. Only one part of the report of the Debates Committee has been accepted by the Internal Economy Committee, and that is the part which recommends an increase to the translators. I would ask now that the report be accepted in toto.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Board of Internal Economy has had under consideration the suggestion to increase the salaries of the 'Hansard' reporters as well as the translators. But in that connection, there is the question of reporting for government purposes in the interim between sessions, and that question the board considered should be taken up and considered at the same time as the increase of salaries of the 'Hansard' reporters. Some members of the staff do reporting for the government during recess and earn something in that way and others do not.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they paid extra for that?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Did we not formerly have their services during recess?

Mr. SPEAKER. No, never free of charge. It was thought by the board that if this proposal to increase their salaries to $2,500 were entertained, it was only fair that the government should have use of their services during recess. Some negotiations did take place but unfortunately did not come to completion in time to submit any recommendation for an increase. In the meantime perhaps the matter may be adjusted and a satisfactory arrangement come to. If we increase the salaries to $2,500, the question of reporting during recess should be dealt with at the same time. After being given a substantial holiday at the close of the session, which they are entitled to owing to their arduous duties during the session, the remainder of their time should be at the call of the government, subject to some additional compensation which would be reasonable.

Mr. FOSTER. Do the translators give up their time to the government during recess?

Mr. SPEAKER. No, only during the session. It is suggested that it is hardly fair that we should call upon the reporters to do work during recess without giving them something in addition to the $2,500, or perhaps we might give them a less advance, say $2,300, and then fix a certain definite sum to cover the estimated cost for this extra reporting during recess. That extra sum could be divided among the members of the staff who do the extra work. That question is being worked out, and I think we shall be able to arrive at some satisfactory adjustment.

Mr. FOSTER. No doubt the translators require somewhat different qualifications from the reporters, but I doubt very much, when we take everything into consideration, the qualifications are not quite as onerous in the case of the reporters as in that of the translators. They must have special knowledge. They require a wide range of knowledge of parliamentary affairs and to be well versed in our political history, and that is a knowledge which cannot be gained in a short space of time. Besides while the translators do their work more leisurely, by themselves so to speak, the reporters have to do theirs at full speed as long as the House is in session. Their work is harder while it is going on than that of the translators. The translators have had two increases within a few years of $500 each, and I do not quite see the justice of an increase in the one case and not in the other. I would rather myself be a translator than a reporter from the point of view of hard work.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am an old journalist myself and have a great deal of sympathy for both the official reporters and the translators. I fully concur in what has been said regarding the official reporters, and would be pleased to see them receive a substantial increase at the hands of the Committee on Internal Economy. As regards the French translators, if the House will accept my views as it has accepted those of the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) and the hon. member for Two Mountains (Mr. Ethier), I will say that no abler translators could be found in the province of Quebec. The nine gentlemen who do the work of translating our debates have given us, during the last five or I should say eight years, very good translation indeed. It is by no means an easy task to give a fair version in French of speeches pronounced by such men as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) or the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) or some of the hon. gentlemen who admittedly are masters of the English language in this House. With the knowledge I have of the French language, my mother tongue, I am pleased and proud to say that the French 'Hansard' is a most creditable work and is appreciated as such by all the lovers of that language.

Mr. BERGERON. You seem, Mr. Speaker, to forget, that when 'Hansard' was established some years ago, these gentlemen were named employees of the House. They are not ordinary employees of the government. They are not supposed to be on duty after the session, although whenever the House is sitting their time belongs to it completely. I have heard discussions on that point very often. When their services are required by the House, they belong to it, but as employees of the House, they are only supposed to work when the House is sitting. The translators are not supposed to do any work after the House is prorogued.

You might say that the translators may be called upon to translate the revised statutes for the Minister of Justice. They are the best translators to be had, they have never been called upon to do that and I do not think they should. I think when they have been at work six months, they should not be called upon for further work. That was not the purpose when we created the 'Hansard.' The reporters are in the same position. When they have been working for six months in the House, I am sure if the government needed them they would be at the disposal of the government, they belong to the House and I do not think that should be brought into consideration at all in the discussion. The basis of my remarks is this. The Debates Committee have made a report, it has not been accepted, which I regret very much, and I can tell the leader of the House that at the next session we will bring that before the House, because I think it is a slur upon the Committee on Debates that for the last two sessions no report of that committee has been laid before the House and accepted or even discussed. The translators have taken a short way about it, I congratulate them on their success. They went to Mr. Speaker and he rendered justice to them although the recommendation made in the same way by the Debates Committee in reference to the reporters has been ignored. That is the position and I say it looks unjust. The work of the reporters is very hard; I am told by reporters, not only by members of the 'Hansard' staff but those who do similar work outside, that a man cannot last very long at it, they are working on their nerves all the time and when they have been working here for six months it would be a very hard thing, I think it would be, if I may use the word, cruel to ask these men, at least for a month or two after they have finished their work, to do something else. This part of the discussion to my mind should be eliminated altogether and we should discuss only the question whether the report of the Debates Committee, having been accepted in part by the Speaker, should not have been accepted in full, and that the reporters should have been treated in the same way as the translators. Their salaries are higher. Some seem to think that because the salaries of the reporters and the translators are the same to-day, that is correct. It has never been that way, the reporters have always had a higher salary than the translators and any one who reads what was said at the time of the creation of 'Hansard' would understand immediately that the work is not at all of the same class. Without belittling the work of the translators, I may say that the work of the reporters is supposed to be different entirely and it is supposed to be more remunerative. You can get translators anywhere in the country for a certain price but you cannot get a reporter for the same price.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I beg to differ from my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER. Fight it out somewhere else.

Mr. FISHER. I must say I do not agree with my hon. friend that translation is inferior work to stenography.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not think it is inferior.

Mr. FISHER. And I venture to think to-day that in Canada it would be easier to find good stenographers than it would be to find thoroughly competent translators. My hon. friend, I think, has rather tended to prejudice a future increase of salaries for these gentlemen in my mind. He has said that their salary is for six months' work, that they must only be expected to work six months in the year. I think that $2,000 a year for half a year's work is good pay.

Mr. BERGERON. If they cannot earn more in the recess—

Mr. FISHER. Then they get a good rest and I know a lot of people who would be glad to work for half the year and get $2,000 and rest the balance of the year. The work I think is trying while it lasts. The reporters are excellent officers, do their work excellently well, but when we come to consider as my hon. friend seems to think it right we should, that this is $2,000 a year pay for six months work and that for the rest of the year they are not to be called upon to do any thing, and if they do it for somebody else, they can earn what they can get for that, it does not seem to me there is a very strong argument for an increase of salary, and if by this arrangement the translators are put upon the same footing as the stenographers and given the same pay, I think it is perhaps but a measure of justice to put them on the same footing because their work is quite as important.

Mr. HENDERSON. I sympathize with those men as I do with any hard working man who does his duty faithfully, but I recall to mind the very severe lecture that was read to us this morning by the Minister of Finance for having favoured increases of salary from this side of the House. Remembering that, I hesitate to offer any suggestion that anything should be done for those deserving men. I must throw upon the Finance Minister the full responsibility if anything is done, because he called us to account very severely to-day, charging the entire party here with advocating a general increase of the salaries of the civil servants when I think that what he might have urged was that we are advocating increases for the outside service. The argument has been advanced by my hon. friends here on this side of the House, and it is an old argument, that the cost of living has increased and that these men should be remunerated to a larger extent. I often wonder when I hear that argument what advantage the preferential tariff has been to this country if it has caused the cost of living to increase so much. It seems to me it is a very strong argument for its repeal. If it is becoming so extremely costly to live in this country I think the Finance Minister had better take some action along that line and see if he cannot make it more convenient for the people to eke out an existence in the country on a reasonably moderate salary. I am not going to say whether I approve of any increase in the salaries of these gentlemen for whom an appeal has been made because I do not want to have the same lecture read to me again by the Finance Minister that was given to us this morning and, having that view, I will defer expressing any opinion and throw the responsibility entirely on the government.

Militia and Defence, chargeable to income, $152,233.35.

Mr. FOSTER. Here is a tremendous increase. I do not see how we are to get information about this, there is no Minister of Militia and Defence.

Mr. FIELDING. I have the officials here.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see that at this hour of the night and at this stage of the session, we can do anything more than pass it.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the total expenditure of the Militia Department now ?

Mr. FIELDING. The main estimates include capital charges of $5,249,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Has my hon. friend the figures of 1896 ?

Mr. FIELDING. Those were the days when we were too poor to indulge in a militia system.

Mr. BERGERON. There is a difference of about $4,000,000.

Mr. FIELDING. We were not so safely guarded then as now.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the item for gratuities include Lord Aylmer.

Mr. FIELDING. No, these are gratuities, not pensions.

To provide for the expenses of the Prime Minister in connection with the Colonial Conference, $8,000.

To provide for the expenses of ministers in connection with the Colonial Conference, $16,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought the British government were paying the bill.

Mr. FIELDING. They will pay some of the bills, but it is well to have a little margin. The British government will no doubt pay the hotel bills in London.

Mr. FOSTER. But why do you need $16,000 ?

Mr. FIELDING. At the time that item was inserted it was contemplated that four ministers might go to London. At present there are only two, and if the others do not go, one-half of that amount will not be used. The hotel bills of the Prime Minister and his associates who are now living in London, will no doubt be paid by the British government. But there are always a good many other expenses.

Post Office Department—outside service, $253,990.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the Postmaster General reached any conclusion yet as to what percentage of increase he is going to give the postmasters ? We have been trying to get some definite information to-day, and it seems to me that he could give it without difficulty.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have been so busy recently that I have had no time to give proper consideration to this matter. But I informed the House the other day that immediately after the prorogation of parliament I intended to prepare a schedule myself that would be a substantial increase to these salaries. I do not think I should be asked to commit myself any further.

Mr. HENDERSON. The minister informed us the other day that he had made up his mind as to the principle on which this would be done. I think it would relieve the minister of a good deal of work if he would enunciate the principle, and we will work out the details.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The minimum salary paid to postmasters throughout the country is $25 a year, being a increase from $12, as it was some years ago. Surely I could not go very far in doubling that amount as a mimimum, saying that without committing myself definitely. It is to be remembered that there are nearly 14,000 postmasters in the country.

Additional to cover expenses of a Royal Commission to investigate matters in connection with the grain trade of Canada, $20,000.

Mr. FIELDING. The Grain Commission was appointed in response to petitions of the western grain growers, and on the recommendation of the Committee of Agriculture, to inquire into the whole question of the grain trade and the manner in which it is being handled. They have held a number of meetings, and are likely to have to go to the United States and perhaps to Great Britain, and it is necessary to have this further sum to pay their expenses.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House. If the present anticipations that we have now are realized, and if no difficulty occurs in the forwarding of the messages between the Senate and House of Commons, we expect that His Excellency will attend to prorogue parliament at three o'clock to-morrow afternoon. In the morning we shall proceed with concurrence and close up the business.

Mr. FOSTER. There will be nothing but concurrence ?

Mr. FIELDING. Nothing but concurrence except to attend to messages passing to and fro.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.45 a.m., Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, April 27, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PROROGATION.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication from the secretary of His Excellency the Governor General :

Ottawa, 27th April, 1907.

Sir,—I have the honour, by command of the Governor General, to inform you that His Excellency will proceed to the Senate Chamber, this afternoon at three o'clock for the purpose of proroguing the present session of parliament.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) C. J. JONES,
For the Governor General's Secretary.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the House of Commons.

Mr. LEMIEUX.

QUESTIONS.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY—PAYMENTS TO MR. WILLARD KITCHEN.

Mr. A. MARTIN asked :

What amounts, if any, have been paid Mr. Willard Kitchen, railway contractor, for extras in connection with the construction of (a) the Murray Harbour Branch Railway; (b) the Montague Branch Line ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Acting Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. Ten thousand two hundred and ten dollars and thirty-one cents ($10,210.31) was paid to Contractor Willard Kitchen for additional work done on the Murray Harbour Branch, which was not included in the schedule contract. No extras were paid on the Montague branch.

TRACKS ON MILL STREET, MONTREAL.

Mr. AMES asked :

1. Has the government granted to the Montreal and Southern Counties Railway the privilege of laying railway tracks on Mill street, Montreal ?
2. If so, when was said concession given and have the privileges been embodied in the form of a lease?
3. What length of track and between what points on Mill street does the lease cover?
4. At whose demand was the same granted?
5. Were there any protests on the part of persons doing business on Mill street, and were they given an opportunity of stating their views in opposition to the granting of the said lease?
6. Will the minister furnish the House with a copy of said lease?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Acting Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. Yes.
2. The privilege of laying railway tracks on Mill street, was granted the above railway company, under lease dated March 7, 1906.
3. From a point marked 'B' on plan submitted, being the interesection of Riverside street with Mill street, along the middle line of Mill street, 1,700 feet, to point 'C' on the said plan.
4. The Montreal Southern Counties Railway.
5. Yes.
6. I now lay on the table a copy of the lease for the information of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames).

INSURANCE COMMISSION—FRENCH TRANSLATION.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny). Before the Orders of the Day are called, Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the Minister of Justice to a decision reached in the Senate yesterday, that the evidence given before the Royal Commission on Life Insurance shall not be printed in French. I desire to ask if this means that the evidence is not to appear in French ?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I was not aware of the action of the Senate. But action was taken in this House in the form of an order that this evidence shall be printed in French, and that, I have no doubt, will be complied with.

IMMIGRATION—ACTION OF LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny). I have a question to put to the leader of the House. A despatch was printed in the Senate this morning saying that the Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia has refused to assent to a Bill respecting immigration passed by the legislature of that province. I would like to know if the government intends taking any action on the subject.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The matter has not been brought to the attention of the government.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). I mentioned, yesterday, three or four returns which are rather urgent. One of them has already been brought down,—that from the Department of the Interior relating to grazing leases or timber leases. But the others have not yet been laid on the table.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Acting Minister of Public Works). The Deputy Minister of Public Works promised to have three returns here this morning. I have not received them yet, but I have no doubt they are on their way.

COAL STRIKE IN THE NORTHWEST.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). Has any further news been received as to the strike condition in the west ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I would not like to answer in the absence of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux). But I think the situation is as described by him yesterday.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No change since then ?

Mr. FIELDING. There had not been up to the time when I last spoke to my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) last night. There is nothing new, unless he has received a telegram this morning.

SENATE AMENDMENTS.

On the order

Consideration of an amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 174) respecting the Manufacture of Binder Twine in Canada.—Mr. Fielding.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). This amendment is purely of clerical nature. The sentence should read ⅝ of 1 cent per pound. The word 'per' was inserted, making it read '⅝ of 1 per cent per pound.' I move to strike out the word 'per.'

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Are these amendments to the Senate made simply by second reading and concurrence ?

Mr. SPEAKER. That is all that is required, we concur in these amendments in the case of Bills originating in this House.

Mr. SPROULE. Are we to pass a long amendment like that without explanation from the government? In the Railway Act there is a very long amendment of which no explanation is offered.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I did not offer any explanation as none was asked, and I supposed that none was asked because hon. gentlemen had the measure before them and saw for themselves what its provisions were. The amendments made by the Senate are additions, nothing is struck out, and the additions which have been made by the Senate really reduce themselves to two. The first is a provision with regard to mortgages upon rolling stock in the same lines and of the same general effect as the second clause in the Bill when it left this House. That is to say that mortgages of that character, if filed with the Secretary of State for Canada, shall be valid as against subsequent encumbrancers upon the property without the necessity of filing such mortgages in the various offices of the counties in which the rolling stock might be. It is a provision not only on the same lines as the provision which was made the second clause of the Bill while under consideration in this House, but perhaps of greater practical importance because of the extreme difficulty there would be in determining. in the case of rolling stock, what particular county it was in which the property was situated and in which the mortgage ought to be filed if it were to be filed in the county of location of the property.

The other provision is a very minor amendment to the clause of the Railway Act which provides that bonds of the company must be signed or countersigned in the handwriting of the secretary. The Senate has amended the clause by adding the words 'or assistant secretary,' the reason being, i understand, that in some instances where a bond issue consists of a great number of documents the signing of 40,000 or 50,000 instruments by the hand of the secretary himself would be a very tedious and burdensome piece of labour.

Motion agreed to, and amendments concurred in.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Building and maintenance of wireless telegraph stations, $23,310.

Mr. FIELDING. The House will observe the substitution of the word 'wireless' for the word 'Marconi.' The object is that we do not confine ourselves to any particular wireless system, although we are using the Marconi.

Harbours and rivers, Quebec, $747,450.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before this item is concurred in, I do not know whether any of this refers to public buildings at Ottawa or not, but I might as well say what I have to say now. There are some improvements being made to the public buildings at Ottawa and I want to draw the attention of the hon. acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fisher) who, I expect, will be the Minister of Public Works when we meet next year, that the whips of the opposition are not provided for. We have a little room about 7 x 9 which is not large enough to hold the whips of the opposition. There is only room for three, and two of them are out in the corridor. I want to ask of the acting minister the special favour of providing another room for the extra whips. The chief whip should have that little room to himself. There are other rooms which could be secured with very little inconvenience to some of the servants of the House in the same corridor and these should be set apart for the whips of the opposition. The government have two or three rooms for their whips and I think, although we fight the government pretty hard sometimes, that we are entitled to better treatment than we receive. Therefore I hope the acting Minister of Public Works will take a survey of the situation, that he will look at the room which is at present set apart for the whips of the opposition, ask himself if five or six men should be huddled in there during the winter time when they cannot get any ventilation, and see if he cannot make any better arrangement than that under which we have been suffering without much complaint in the past.

Mr. FISHER. I sympathize with my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) but I confess I do not know the room he refers to.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is room No. 3½.

Mr. FISHER. I will try and see what can be done. There should certainly be proper accommodation.

Mr. A. MARTIN. I would also draw the attention of the hon. acting Minister of Public Works to the needs of the members from the province of Prince Edward Island. We have never succeeded in getting a room. I think there is an addition to be made to the building this year and I trust that the members from Prince Edward Island will be provided with a room.

Mr. FISHER. No doubt more accommodation around the House is required. We will have to see what can be done.

Department of Agriculture—development of live stock products, $5,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Before that item is concurred in, I want to draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to a matter concerning his department, and which I think he should look into. I have a letter from Kemptville, N.S., which states that one, Rufus Starr, placed a cow to be sold at auction and which was afterwards found to be suffering from tuberculosis. That cow was purchased by B. W. Benjamin. A few weeks afterwards Benjamin received a letter from one Cleveland of Wolfville, telling him that the cow was affected with tuberculosis, and that Starr, the vendor, had so informed him. Benjamin acknowledged this to Starr, but said he did not think Cleveland was fool enough to tell. On February 16, a firm of lawyers at Kemptville wrote as follows to the Minister of Agriculture :

Dear Sir,—B. W. Benjamin of this town purchased a cow a short time ago at a public auction and discovered she is affected with tuberculosis. He is anxious to have the cow examined at once, and if so affected to have her destroyed. There is the regular army veterinary here (Sir Frederick Borden will know him), B. H. Illsley. Could you authorize him to make an examination as the party does not wish to be at too great expense. Kindly telegraph instructions on receipt of this letter. We intend prosecuting the party from whom the cow was purchased as soon as we find she is affected.

On February 21, the following reply was sent from the Veterinary Director General at Ottawa, by telegram :

Letter received. Cannot take action.

The writer of the letter then comments on this telegram and asks it to be pointed out where the difficulty lies. I take up the statute with reference to diseased animals (Consolidated Statutes, chapter 75) and I find that tuberculosis is given amongst the contagious or infectious diseases. Section 3 says :

Every owner of animals and every breeder of or dealer in animals, and every one bringing animals into Canada, shall, on perceiving the appearance of infectious or contagious disease among the animals owned by him or under his special care, give immediate notice to the minister and to the nearest veterinary inspector of the Department of Agriculture of the facts discovered by him as aforesaid.

Any veterinary surgeon practising in Canada shall, immediately on ascertaining that an animal is labouring under an infectious or contagious disease, give similar notice to the minister and to the nearest veterinary inspector.

Section 5 provides that the minister may from time to time cause to be slaughtered animals suffering from infectious and contagious diseases. Section 6 provides for compensation. Section 11 says:

Inspectors or other officers appointed as aforesaid, on receiving information of the supposed existence of any infectious or contagious disease among animals shall proceed to the place mentioned with all practicable speed and execute and discharge their duties pursuant to the regulations made under the authority of this Act and the instructions received by them.

Now, that is the law and it appears to be that Mr. Starrs has taken the proper steps under that law to get the animal examined by a veterinary representing the Agriculture Department, and yet the department answers that they cannot take any steps in the matter. He asks that the animal be examined with the view of having it destroyed, or returned or some disposal made of it, because it would not be legal for him to sell it, knowing it to be diseased. I would like to ask what explanation the minister has to give, and whether he thinks the department did its whole duty in connection with this case, or whether he does not think that the veterinary surgeon representing the department was derelict in his duty when, on receiving that notice, he refused either to examine the animal or to go to the place, much less destroy it or give compensation for it.

Mr. FISHER. This question of the treatment of tuberculosis as a contagious disease has been threshed out in the House year after year. It has been proposed that we should deal with it, as with other contagious diseases, by destroying all animals found to be affected and paying compensation; but the cattle men will not submit to that. The difficulty is to persuade people that an animal is affected with tuberculosis, even when the tuberculine test shows it to be.

Mr. SPROULE. But this man desires to have the animal tested, and is quite willing to be controlled by law.

Mr. FISHER. Still, we have to deal with the matter on the general feeling of live stock owners, and not on any individual case. We have not undertaken to pay compensation for tuberculous animals at all. We have only gone so far as to supply tuberculine where an application is made for a test. The regulation is that when an animal is tested with tuberculine and is found to be affected, it must be earmarked or cached, so that anybody buying it will know that it is tuberculous. I would like to go further if it were possible, but we have not been able to see our way to doing so. I think the disease is decreasing somewhat in the country.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the law not compulsory on your veterinary surgeon?

Mr. FISHER. Part of it is compulsory and part of it is not. It is not compulsory on the minister to pay compensation. It is compulsory upon any individual who knows that he has an animal affected with tuberculosis not to offer it for sale. One difficulty in the way of dealing with this disease is that, as the letter says, a man is supposed to be a fool to say anything about it. I do not mean to say that what we are doing is the ideal, but it is as far as we can go in the present state of public opinion among livestock men. Any attempt to go further would probably render the whole work ineffective.

Mr. SPROULE. May I be permitted to draw attention to clause 11, which is compulsory upon the owner of an animal to give notice, and upon the inspector, when he receives that notice, to go with all possible speed and inspect it. The inspector refused to go, in obedience to the law. I frankly confess that if that is the way the law is carried out, it had better be repealed entirely.

Mr. FISHER. I would point out to my hon. friend that we proceed under the regulations.

Mr. SPROULE. You can only regulate in accordance with the law. You cannot regulate to do away with the provisions of the law.

Resolutions reported and agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS—TUBERCULOSIS IN CATTLE.

House went into committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. FIELDING. The officials of the House in accordance with the established custom have taken these resolutions which the House has now concurred in, and having made the necessary additions and calculations have prepared the following resolutions which I beg to move now:

1. Resolved that towards making good a supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the period of nine months, ending March 31, 1907, the sum of $2,101,022.08 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

2. Resolved that towards making good a supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1908, the sum of $68,279,774.75 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the resolution is adopted, I would like to refer to a matter which has been mentioned by my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) concerning the administration of the Department of Agriculture. I understand that the Minister of Agriculture is acting apparently on the idea, that although there is a statute which provides that he and his officials shall take certain action with regard to animals suffering from tuberculosis, he is enabled by some regulation entirely inconsistent with the provisions of the statute, to set the provisions of the statute absolutely at naught. I do not think the statute means that at all. I would venture to think that if any person should contract tuberculosis and lose his life in consequence of failure to enforce this law, the minister would be guilty of a criminal offence for which he could be sent to the penitentiary. I think that is perfectly clear, and Sir John Thompson, when Minister of Justice, so advised one of his ministers with regard to a certain matter. That minister went to Sir John Thompson with the owner of a steamboat for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the minister could permit the steamboat owner to run his steamer in defiance of the regulations enacted by this parliament. The minister afterwards told me that Sir John Thompson said: You can grant permission if you see fit, but if any accident happens you and the owner can be sent to the penitentiary. There is not the slightest difference in principle between one statute and the other so far as I can understand. The minister must carry out the statute. There may be some question as to whether or not it is imperative; I think it is imperative. But whether it is imperative or not it has to be acted upon and when we find correspondence by which the minister apparently takes the ground that he is not obliged to carry out the statute at all, I think it is time some vigorous protest should be made in this House.

Mr. FISHER. I quite agree with my hon. friend that the regulations have to be in exact conformity with the Act. The regulations which I have alluded to, and which we are carrying out, have been passed upon by the Department of Justice, and agreed to as being in strict accordance with the provisions of the Act. I am not going to express a legal opinion contrary to that of my hon. friend. I am willing to accept his statement, but I have to be governed by the opinion of the Department of Justice. We have been acting under the regulations and I believe in strict conformity with them. However, as my hon. friend says that I am liable to be sent to the penitentiary, I am bound to look into the matter, and I will consult the Department of Justice again.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. All I have to say is that I spoke somewhat impressively in order to impress upon the hon. minister that where the safety of life and the prevention of disease are concerned, it is absolutely impossible for any minister to ignore with impunity the imperative provisions of a statute. Executive irresponsibility, if I may call it so, does not go that far. It does not relieve any one from the operation of the criminal law, and the state of affairs which exists in King's County, N.S., is described with great earnestness in the letter which I have in my hand as a devilish state of affairs. Here is this man with this animal, suffering from tuberculosis, which, as the information comes to me, a prominent Liberal sold to him, and the facts seem to indicate that when he sold the animal he knew perfectly well that it was suffering from tuberculosis. I must do him the justice to say that it is said that he probably would be wiling to take the animal off the hands of the purchaser now that trouble has developed about it; but Mr. Benjamin has been advised by his solicitors that he could not permit the animal to be taken back without rendering himself amenable to the criminal law. So there he has this animal in his stable. He has advised the officers of the department about it, and the only answer he has received from them is: 'Letter received; cannot take action.' It seems to me that this is a case in which the department should take action. Here is a man with a diseased animal in his stable, liable to spread contagion not only through his own herd, but through those of his neighbours; and although this has been known to the department for months, no action has been taken. I am quite aware that the minister cannot be expected to bear all these facts in his mind; but I do most earnestly desire to impress upon him that this matter should be looked into at the earliest moment.

Mr. FISHER. To one remark made by my hon. friend I must take exception. He states that this animal had been sold by a prominent Liberal, as if that had some bearing on the case. I wish to say that that had nothing whatever to do with it. Every person, whether he is a Conservative or a Liberal, is treated in exactly the same way.

Mr. SPROULE. I cannot understand why we are keeping up a large number of veterinary surgeons all over the country, and paying them each $1,000 a year and expenses, if they are not allowed to examine animals suspected to be suffering from contagious disease. My understanding of the law was that any one had a right to call on them to examine a suspected animal at any time on giving them a reasonable notice, and that if, on receiving that notice, they did not come and make the examination, they would be regarded as not doing their duty and be amenable to the law. I would like to ask the minister if that is not his understanding of the law?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot allow my hon. friend to think that we undertake to send government veterinarians to examine every case of a diseased animal reported to us. If we did that, I am afraid that we would have to augment the staff and change our organization very materially. I grant that when the officers are freed from their ordinary duties, they do a great deal of that kind of work, but we do not undertake to examine into every case.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister pretend to say that when any person, in compliance with the law, notifies the department or a veterinary surgeon belonging to the department that he has reason to believe that an animal is suffering from an infectious or contagious disease, there is no obligation to go and make an inspection?

Mr. FISHER. As I have explained, the regulations govern that.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think the regulations exonerate them. I think the statute law is to be obeyed. I am not complaining of the veterinary surgeons of the department; I think they are good men; but I cannot see the use of having them all over the country and paying them $1,000 a year and expenses, if they are not to examine diseased animals when notified to do so. What are they for, and what are we paying them for?

Resolutions reported, read the first and the second time and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 179) for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the period of nine months ending March 31, 1907, and for the financial year ending March 31, 1908.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time, and passed.

At 1.30 o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock p.m.

An Act to amend the Post Office Act.

To these Bills the Royal Assent was pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate in the following words:

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General doth assent to these Bills.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General, as follows:

May it please Your Excellency:

The Commons of Canada have voted the supplies required to enable the government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following Bill:

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the period of nine months ending the 31st March, 1907, and the financial year ending the 31st March, 1908.

To which Bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this Bill the Clerk of the Senate, by His Excellency's command, did thereupon say:

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks his loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the Third Session of the Tenth Parliament of the Dominion with the following:

SPEECH:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In bringing to a close the third session of the tenth parliament of Canada, I desire to express to you my thanks for the care and assiduity you have shown in the discharge of your important duties, the results of which are apparent in many important Acts which must prove of great benefit to the country.

I am glad to observe that the fiscal period terminating on the last day of March was, in proportion to its length, the most prosperous in the history of the Dominion, and that the present indications are that the expansion of the country's trade and revenue will continue during the year that we are now entering upon; a fact that is particularly gratifying in view of the important undertakings to which Canada is committed.

The stream of immigrants entering the Dominion continues yearly to expand, and it is very satisfactory to note that a larger number is coming from the British Isles than in former years.

The recent revision of the tariff will, it is believed, meet with the general approval of the trade, removing as it does many inequalities heretofore existing.

One of the most important of the subjects which have engaged your attention is that of the subsidies and allowances to be paid out of the Dominion treasury to the several provinces. I trust that the proposed changes in the imperial legislation respecting which you have adopted an address to His Majesty will, if enacted, go far towards removing the grievances of which the provincial governments have complained as to the insufficiency of their revenues.

The substantial aid now offered towards the establishment of cold storage should stimulate the erection of those necessary adjuncts for the preservation of perishable foods.

I have observed with gratification the passage of an Act having for its object the maintenance of industrial peace in all public utilities. This legislation has already been applied with success. It is confidently expected that when the provisions of the Act for the settlement of industrial disputes are fully understood, both employee and employers will be ready to refer their differences to boards of investigation and conciliation and thus avoid the evils following strikes and lockouts.

The arrangements lately made between the imperial and Canadian postal departments, providing for a substantial reduction on newspapers and periodicals coming from the United Kingdom, have, I am glad to know, been received with much satisfaction as a measure likely to promote a freer communication between the mother country and Canada.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I thank you in His Majesty's name for the liberal supplies you have granted for the public service.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In now relieving you from your duties let me express the fervent hope that when we meet again at the next session, an equally prosperous condition will prevail throughout Canada, and in the meantime let us not forget to express gratitude to a kind Providence for the many blessings conferred upon our country.

The SPEAKER of the Senate then said:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

It is His Excellency the Governor General's will and pleasure, that this parliament be prorogued until Saturday, the first day of June next, to be here holden, and this parliament is accordingly prorogued until the first day of June next.

INDEX

THIRD SESSION—TENTH PARLIAMENT, 1906-7.
