Mr. FISHER. It will unless the Governor in Council exempts any province from the operations of this section. I understand that gentlemen in the Senate from the western provinces desired this clause to be inserted. A considerable quantity of United States fruit enters those provinces in baskets, and they consider that at certain seasons it would be a great hardship to be cut off from that source of supply. I may say that any basket larger than provided for in these definitions is free to be legally sold in Canada, and any basket which is smaller may be sold, provided the word 'short' is stamped upon it. As a matter of fact, these very dimensions which are now being made legal have been used for some time back very largely, with the word 'short' stamped upon them. But the fruit growers, especially those in the province of Ontario, have been making an insistent demand for this change. They made the demand last session, but the Department of Trade and Commerce was not prepared to make the change without inquiring into the matter more fully, in order that the interests of all classes might be best served. The fruit growers believe that these are the proper dimensions which the trade demands, that they are the most convenient, and the department decided this year to grant their request.

Mr. SPROULE. And the exemption of any province by the Governor in Council?

Mr. FISHER. During certain seasons of the year in Saskatchewan and Alberta they get a large quantity of fruit from the United States, and they felt that it would be a hardship to be shut out from that source of supply. I may say that if these baskets coming in from the United States are larger than these dimensions it would not be illegal to sell them. Ontario people have made no such request, but if the Ontario people desire it, the government may exempt the province of Ontario as well as the Northwest. It gives the Governor in Council authority to exempt any particular province from its operation.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it not be better to make provision that it should not apply to goods coming from abroad ?

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend would scarcely say that foreign goods should be free from the provisions of this Act. I do not think that our own fruit producers would like that.

Mr. SPROULE. We are proposing to make them free.

Mr. FISHER. These foreign goods can all be sold here by a simple arrangement of marking on the basket the word 'short' if the basket is smaller than the size called for by the law.

Mr. SPROULE. We are providing for their exemption from the operation of the Act.

Mr. FISHER. If it is necessary or advisable. I do not think it would be advisable to frame the Act in such a way that generally such an exemption would take place. I think it would be better to only make an exemption when it was shown to the Governor in Council to be necessary in the interests of the general trade. We would consider the interests of the public as buyers as well as the interests of sellers but we should hope that the exemption would be very rarely and very charily used. Personally I think that foreign goods coming into the country should be subject to the same restrictions as our own goods are. It would only be under exceptional circumstances that advantage would be taken of that power.

Mr. SPROULE. The fruit grower in California or elsewhere puts up his fruit in a certain kind of packet. He finds that it is best for the transportation and preservation of the fruit and if this law prevails it would prevent that fruit from coming in. There may or there may not be a good reason for doing that. If there is a good reason it seems to me that the Act should be universal and apply to all. If there is not a good reason I do not see why we should not make it apply to the home product or to everything but imported goods.

Mr. J. D. REID. There is another point. There is a great deal of fruit imported from other foreign countries. For instance, one or two large vessels come in at the opening of navigation with a lot of fruit and there is no doubt at all that that fruit would not be put in packages of this size. They might be smaller.

Mr. FISHER. The packages that the fruit comes in are not provided for in this section.

Mr. J. D. REID. At certain seasons of the year we can get fruit from the United States and there are certain parts of Ontario where very little fruit is grown. It seems to me it would be a hardship in that way. I am glad to see the fruit trade getting greater protection but if it is done for that purpose I would like to see them get more protection in another way and let the fruit come in in such a way that people can have the advantage of using it. There are certain seasons of the year when we cannot get home-grown fruit, and there are some parts of Canada where it has to be brought from some other country. Under this clause it seems to me that it would be very difficult for people to get fruit and people would be liable to a fine for selling fruit contrary to this Act.

Mr. BERGERON. Does that Act apply to people selling fruit in Canada in packages about railway stations or steamboat landings ?

Mr. FISHER. In baskets. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Will not that be imposing a hardship upon these poor people?

Mr. FISHER. That has been the law for a number of years.

Mr. BERGERON. It has not been put in force.

Mr. FISHER. It has been the law for a number of years.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask the minister if the exemption provided for applies to the province where the fruit is packed or where it is sold ? For instance, if the province of Ontario be exempted from the operation of this clause would that permit the fruit growers of Ontario to sell in Manitoba even if the exemption did not apply to Manitoba ? It seems to me it is complicated and a little difficult to understand.

Mr. FISHER. Perhaps we had better go into committee and then we can discuss it.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

On section 1,—Content and dimensions of baskets of fruit.

Mr. BERGERON. If that has been the law for years what is the use of this Bill ?

Mr. FISHER. It is simply to change the dimensions of the basket.

Mr. J. D. REID. Making it larger ?

Mr. FISHER. No, making the basket a little smaller. All the provisions of the law are just the same. The law has been in force for a number of years but the fruit growers who sell this fruit have asked that there should be a slight change in the dimensions of the basket. I would like to read the first part of the clause which is in the existing law

Every box of berries or currants——

Not fruit such as my hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Reid) speaks of as being imported in ships.

—offered for sale and every berry box manufactured or offered for sale in Canada shall be plainly marked on the side of the box in black letters at least half an inch square with the word 'short' unless it contains when level full as nearly exactly as practicable.

Then follow the dimensions. If the box or basket is marked 'short' it may contain anything a man choses to put into it, but if it is not marked 'short' it must have one or other of these two defined quantities in it. The Act now gives a description of three sizes of boxes or baskets. The first is not interfered with. That is it must be at least four-fifths of a quart or two-fifths of a quart. These are not interfered with. The next clause which deals with another definition is changed. That is the whole of this Bill. The change is to make the required and legal size a little smaller that it was before, so that baskets and boxes which heretofore had to be marked 'short' according to what I have read in the first part of this clause will now not have to be marked 'short' because they will be legal. Others again which are still smaller will still have to be marked 'short' if sold. It applies, as all the provisions of this Act do, to all fruits whether imported or raised at home. If foreign fruit coming in is sold in smaller boxes or baskets it will have to be marked with the word 'short' or its sale will be illegal. If it is marked, and sold in larger boxes, it can be sold just as before, and the change makes it a little easier for foreign or Canadian fruit to be sold without the word 'short' on the package.

Mr. BERGERON. This demand, I understand, has been made by the Fruit Growers' Association, and I suppose the change means that the measure will contain less fruit, and will be sold to the public at the same price as before ?

Mr. FISHER. The public need not pay the same price.

Mr. MARSHALL. Will this apply to fruit bought by weight ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. MARSHALL. We can buy fruit in any sort of package, so long as we buy it by weight ?

Mr. FISHER. It does not interfere with that at all.

Mr. LALOR. Would it not be better to legislate that there should be a standard weight for a box of strawberries or any kind of berries ? If that were done the public would know just what they are getting. It would be much easier for a buyer to know the standard weight than to know the standard size.

Mr. FISHER. That whole question was threshed out when the Act was originally passed, and the understanding was that the measure system would better protect the public. I am familiar with the apple trade more than others, and I know that a 40-pound box of one variety of apples would weigh a great deal more than a similar sized box containing another variety. It may be the same in the case of small fruits.

Mr. J. D. REID. How much does this change reduce the quantity of fruit in the package ?

Mr. FISHER. The law to-day reads simply :

> Eleven quarts and be five and three-quarter inches deep.

The amendment reads :

> Eleven quarts and be five and three-quarters inches deep perpendicularly, eighteen and three-quarters inches in length, and eight inches in width at the top of the basket ; sixteen and three-quarters inches in length and six and seven-eighths inches in width at the bottom of the basket.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. MARSHALL. Now, we sometimes send packages to the growers ; would we have to mark these 'short,' or, if we buy by weight can we still have use of package?

Mr. FISHER. Assuming that the baskets are now the legal size you would not have to mark them short, because this amendment diminishes the size and they would be more than legal hereafter.

Mr. HENDERSON. Would the minister explain the meaning of the exemption ?

Mr. FISHER. My interpretation of the provision is that if the fruit was packed in Ontario and sold in Manitoba both provinces would have to be exempted under this provision. It may be a matter that might have to be tried by the courts.

Mr. HENDERSON. Why not introduce some words that will make it plain, so that a decision by the courts will not be necessary ?

Mr. FISHER. I think it is plain now.

Mr. HENDERSON. I gathered from the discussion which took place here some time ago, that in Ontario there are two fruit associations, one of fruit growers and the other of fruit sellers. The hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. Wright) championed the cause of one association and the hon. member for Wentworth the cause of the other. I am more interested in the fruit growers, because many of them are constituents of mine, and I wish to know whether this recommendation came from them or from the other association.

Mr. FISHER. I am not aware of two fruit growers' associations.

Mr. HENDERSON. One is a fruit growers association, and the other is, I understand, connected with the sale of fruit.

Mr. FISHER. The representations have come to us from the provincial fruit growers' association, from a number of local fruit growers associations, from the box manufacturers, and from individuals. I think the difference between the member for Wentworth and the member for Renfrew was, that one was speaking of a meeting of the executive council and the other of a general meeting of the same association. That is my recollection.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is not what I gathered from the discussion. I remind the minister that the discussion took place with reference to a petition said to have come from the Michigan fruit growers association with regard to reciprocity in fruit.

Mr. FISHER. That is another matter altogether.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that one association approved this suggestion and that the fruit growers of Ontario were not in sympathy with it. On whose recommendation does the minister propose the present Bill ?

Mr. FISHER. I have the assurance of the head of the fruit division of my department, that there is absolute unanimity in the request for this change. It has been discussed in the fruit journals ; it has been asked for about eighteen months now ; there has been absolutely no suggestion that it is inadvisable, while there have been abundant resolutions passed by the general fruit growers' association urging it. I cannot recall to mind the association to which my hon. friend refers, but I am perfectly sure that if there was any such association interested in this, they would have let themselves be heard if they had any objection to it. This has been on the tapis for at least eighteen months without the least objection.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Have the co-operative associations been consulted in any way?

Mr. FISHER. The co-operative associations have been informed of this.

On section 2,—Summary proceedings.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the difference between this and the old Act ?

Mr. FISHER. Under the existing Act the charge had to be heard before two magistrates. By this one magistrate is sufficient.

On section 3,—Confiscation.

Mr. FISHER. The original Act simply says it shall be confiscated to the Crown, and this caused difficulty in the disposal of it. This authorizes its disposal by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS ACT—AMENDMENT.

House in committee to consider proposed resolution to amend the Customs Act, cap. 48, R.S.C., 1906.

On resolution to amend chapter 38, respecting customs entry of vessels entering the Gut of Annapolis.

Mr. PATERSON. Under the existing law vessels entering the Gut may be entered and the duties on the goods therein paid either at Digby or Annapolis. There has been some local friction and difficulty between the two ports and the amendment gives the department the power to change the place of entry from time to time.

On section 41,

Mr. PATERSON moved :

That section 41 of the said Act be repealed and the following substituted therefor :—

Such market value shall be the fair market value of such goods, in the usual and ordinary commercial acceptance of the term, and as sold in the ordinary course of trade ; Provided that a discount for cash in excess of 2½ per cent, shall not be allowed for duty purposes nor unless such discount has been actually allowed and deducted by the exporter on the invoice to the importer.

The object of the change is to remove friction with reference to petty cash discounts. At present you are only allowed to enter the goods, without adding the cash discount, when the article is sold for cash and never quoted on terms of credit. The object of this amendment is to allow two and a half per cent bona fide cash discount to be deducted from the invoice value. Under the old Act that two and a half per cent was charged duty. This is virtually a remission of the duty where cash discount is allowed equal to two and a half per cent. This concession will remove a great deal of the friction that arises at all the ports and is giving a great deal of trouble. It may reduce slightly the revenue derived, but will be a compensation to those parties who felt that in the change we made in the package clause, we were virtually increasing the duty.

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose what is meant by commercial value is the value all over the whole country where the article comes from.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. But there are six or seven different prices of articles, and where will the hon. gentleman find the real commercial value ?

Mr. PATERSON. We take the value at the place of export.

Mr. BERGERON. But even there you have different values. We have had cases in my office of some agricultural implements imported from the United States and we found that the prices are different in the different states of the union. I think the hon. minister is giving his department a lot of work for nothing. He is giving too much protection, but of course there is no one so zealous as a convert, and my hon. friend is to-day too much of a protectionist.

On section 2.

That section 43 of the said Act be amended by adding thereto the following words :—

Provided that duty shall not be assessed on less than the invoice value of the goods in any case, except on account of reduction in the fair market value of such goods between the time of their purchase by the Canadian importer and their exportation to Canada ;

Provided further, that the appraiser or collector acting as appraiser, in estimating the value for duty may disregard trifling fluctuations in market values occurring after the purchase of the goods by the Canadian importer, and may allow a bona fide discount for cash, not exceeding 2½ per cent, when allowed and deducted by the exporter on his invoice.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is to be the judge?

Mr. PATERSON. The appraiser.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is to be the judge as to whether the appraiser was correct or not ?

Mr. PATERSON. The dispute would be reported to the Dominion board here. There is a provision that there may be an arbitration. The importer appoints one arbitrator, the government another and the third is a Dominion appraiser.

Mr. LALOR. Are trade discounts allowed ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, the only trouble is with the cash discount. That used to be dutiable and we now make it free to the extent of two and a half per cent.

Mr. LALOR. What difference between a trade and a cash discount ? Sometimes the discount is made without saying whether it was for cash or not.

Mr. PATERSON. The trade discount has always been free. In that case we take the net amount.

Mr. BERGERON. Suppose an exporter in the United States tells his client in Canada: Send me your note at four months without interest and I will call that a cash discount.

Mr. PATERSON. That would be shown in the invoice.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not see anything to safeguard the Customs Department. For instance I buy a bill of goods from a man on the other side and he will give me better terms than he will his American customers. He therefore makes a certain discount without saying it is for cash or not. How is the department able to determine whether they charge duty upon that discount or not?

Mr. PATERSON. It would be determined by the invoice. And these matters, of course, are always subject to our review.

Mr. SPROULE. How would it necessarily be revealed by the invoice ? The invoice need not show how the goods are to be paid for.

Mr. PATERSON. Then, the duty would be levied on the invoice price without a discount. Suppose the invoice shows a total of $100 with a discount 2½ per cent, the duty would be levied on $97.50. If no discount were named, the duty would be levied on $100.

Mr. HENDERSON. Suppose that the discount were marked on the invoice, and the purchaser did not pay cash, but took his time ?

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) lays his finger on the weak point. That is one of the difficulties we experience. But you have to depend on the affidavits and the invoice, backed by the honesty of our people. Should there be an exception, some importer who does not really belong to us, of course, by any misrepresentation he makes himself liable to prosecution for fraud.

Mr. LALOR. The value of the goods for customs duty should be a certain amount less the cash discount. If the importer is so unfortunate as not to be able to pay cash and claim the discount, he should not be charged extra duty for that.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, there is that in it. I think it will be seen that this is a wise change. There may be a case, where, as the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) points out, advantage may be taken of it. But we cannot make a perfect customs law.

Mr. SPROULE. Take a case like this: I buy an article in a foreign country. The seller knows that I have to pay duty, and offers, if I buy the article from him, that he will invoice it at a reduction equivalent to the duty. In that case the invoice price at his reduction would be the amount on which duty could be collected.

Mr. PATERSON. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is dealing with a question which is covered by another section and not by these amendments. These are merely half a dozen minor changes which seem necessary.

Mr. SPROULE. But this seems to be covered by the minister's explanation—it is a question as to whether the duty shall be paid on the discount or not. If the seller in a foreign country says to the Canadian buyer : I will make a reduction on the article equivalent to the ordinary duty—say $5—how is the duty levied ?

Mr. LALOR. The best explanation of that is that it is not permissible.

Mr. SPROULE. But how are you going to get at it ?

Mr. LALOR. The certificate of the manufacturer or seller covers that. It is not allowed to enter these things at a less price than that at which they are sold in the country from which the article is exported.

Mr. SPROULE. But here is a case : A man in Dayton, Ohio, sells me certain goods and makes a reduction of $5 on the price, to make up for the customs duty I have to pay. On that invoice I pay the duty. The effect of such transaction is to relieve the goods of the ordinary duty.

Mr. LALOR. But the manufacturer in Dayton, Ohio, who sells the goods must make a certificate to the effect that this is the regular price of the goods and that he has not made any discount.

Mr. PATERSON. On the invoice there is a double column, in one of which the exporter must state the price at which the goods are sold in the United States and in the other the price at which they are sold to the Canadian purchaser, and he must make declaration that these figures are correct. If he makes a false declaration he is liable to prosecution for fraud, and the importer is liable to have his goods seized.

Mr. SPROULE. How long has that been in force ?

Mr. PATERSON. Ever since we adopted the dumping clause.

Mr. MARSHALL. The goods coming to us are invoiced in the way the minister states. But we have machines for which we actually pay $750, yet we have to pay duty on $1,000. This seems a hardship, and I hope we shall be able to get a rebate.

Mr. PATERSON. Speaking, not of this individual case alone, but generally, we want no man's money that is not due under the law, but we want all of that.

Mr. LALOR. If I am in order, I would ask if the department have taken any precautions as to foreign goods coming in from Great Britain and getting the advantage of the preference? I was informed a few days ago by a Germen manufacturer, a reliable man, who is in Canada on business, that it is a most common occurrence in Germany for manufacturers there to make up goods as British goods, even the boxes prepared and the labels 'Made in England' put upon them—the whole manufacture carried on in Germany for export to Canada through British channels. While I do not wish to speak in a fault-finding way of the department, I hope the hon. minister will spend some money to provide the necessary precautions against this sort of traffic. This kind of thing means not only that the Germans escape the surtax, but they get the advantage of the British preference.

Mr. PATERSON. This matter has given us a good deal of concern. It is a point that we watch very closely. The hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) brought it up yesterday, and read a report from our officers, in which it was claimed that this was done. We occasionally make seizures of these goods, which makes it very expensive for the parties carrying on these operations. The English merchants should not lend themselves to this traffic, because, not only is it fraudulent, but it injures their own trade. The English exporter must make a declaration concerning the goods in order to have them enter under the preference. Of course, it must not be forgotten that the law as passed by parliament—and that includes hon. gentlemen opposite—provides that if a certain proportion of British labour be put upon an article in the completion of it, it shall be entitled to the preference. So if an article in Germany or any other country was partially manufactured and came in in that raw, unfinished state to England, and then there was put upon it the proportion of British labour that is required, it could come in. But anything like a systematic attempt to defraud by bringing in the finished article, or changing the stamp, or anything like that, of course could not be permitted. Occasionally there are instances of goods imported in that way, and then there are severe penalties imposed upon the parties bringing them in.

Mr. LALOR. I am informed that it is not the English purchaser who is guilty of these contraventions of the law, but it is the German Jew.

Mr. PATERSON. We are watching these importations we have special officers.

On subsection 2,

Mr. PATERSON. The object of that is that if goods are damaged and the damage is proved, we allow a reduction in the fair market value. If a dollar's worth of goods are damaged, we only allow a reduction on 75 per cent ; with this change, we allow a reduction on 85 per cent.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. When we rose I asked the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) if he would be good enough to tell me how he enforces these provisions of the law, for instance, this one :

Every one is guilty of an offence and liable for such offence on summary conviction to fine or imprisonment.

Who does certain things that are set out here. Would the minister tell me how he enforces the law in this case ? Who are the officers who enforce this law ?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). We will lay an information.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Then the Minister of Customs confesses that he will lay an information to enforce the Customs Act ?

Mr. PATERSON. Certainly, we will see that the law is carried out.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Section 146 of the Customs Act, chap. 48 of the Revised Statutes, reads as follows :

POWERS AND DUTIES OF OFFICERS.

Every officer and person who is employed under the authority of any Act relating to the collection of the revenue, or under the direction of any officer of customs, shall be deemed and taken to be duly employed for the prevention of smuggling and for the enforcement of this Act in every respect, whether such officer or person is or is not the holder of assistance.

So that the Minister of Customs tells the people of Canada to-day that in regard to the Customs Act he and all the officers under the Act are empowered to enforce the customs law. I thoroughly approve of that; it is a good thing to have in the customs law. The customs law is provided to secure for the King and for Canada the revenue necessary for the maintenance of the government of this country. We have this Customs Act for the purpose of raising a revenue. In this Act we have provision for the enforcement of it and a number of individuals are specified as being in duty bound to enforce the law. Now, I turn over the leaf from section 146 to section 158. I am sorry that the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) and the hon. acting Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Fielding) are not in the House now to hear me read section 158. It is as follows:

The judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada, or any judge of any of the superior courts in any province of Canada, having jurisdiction in the province or place where the application is made, shall grant a writ of assistance upon application made to him for that purpose by His Majesty's Attorney General of Canada or by a collector——

And so on. In this Customs Act we have the Attorney General of Canada directed to take steps to secure a writ of assistance for the enforcement of this Act. Then, I turn over a few pages and I find a splendid provision. I compliment the Minister of Customs that he has in his law the following:

All penalties and forfeitures imposed by this Act, or by any other Act relating to the customs or to trade or navigation, shall unless other provisions are made for the recovery thereof, be sued for, prosecuted and recovered with costs by His Majesty's Attorney General of Canada, or in the name or names of the commissioner of customs, or any other officer or officers of the customs.

And so on. So that in this section of the Customs Act which is being administered every day we have a provision that every officer in the service in connection with the customs shall enforce this Act and that the Attorney General is at the service of the Minister of Customs any day and every day. I suppose he is even at the assistance of the Commissioner of Customs in the enforcement of this Act. The fact that that is the case is commendable and I am glad to hear the Minister of Customs say that he enforces this Act, that every officer under him is a party to the enforcement of the Act and that he has the assistance of the Attorney General of Canada in the enforcement of the Act. I would be out of order if I went any further but I would say that I am sorry that the Attorney General of Canada is not in his place just now because I would like him to hear the confession just made by the Minister of Customs that his officers enforce the law and that there is provision in this law for its enforcement by every officer in the customs service with the assistance of the Attorney General of Canada.

Mr. PATERSON. I hope I have not got into trouble by any confession I have made, but in order to get on we will say no more about this just now. It will, of course, be in the Bill when probably the acting Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Fielding) and the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) will be in their places. I want to say here that the reason of this change is that the penalties under the present Act are very severe. They are so severe that we do not proceed against an individual officer because he is liable to from one month to one year's imprisonment. This new clause reduces the penalty but we take the express power to prosecute the clerk or the officer of the railway who violates that provision. We can get at them direct. It is a serious matter if you remove one or two cars and stop a train. We are reducing the penalties very much but we will make the officer of the railway company who violates this law liable to be punished. He can be brought before a magistrate and fined.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I advise the minister not to go for Mr. Hays, or the president of any of these railways, because, if he does he will elude him. The courts have held that the Railway Act does not apply to the officers of the company but to the president who is in England. Again, I commend the minister for making provision in the law under which he will go after the actual employee of the railway who is guilty of a violation of the law.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, the Customs Department is no respecter of persons, it takes no man's money when it should not do so and it sees that every man pays what he owes.

On section 7,—exportation of goods subject to bounty,

Mr. PATERSON. This is a new clause. Under the amended iron bounties no bounty will be paid in the future on iron or steel which is exported from the country. Hitherto the bounty has been paid whether the iron and steel were consumed in the country or exported. It is not proposed in future to allow them to export any iron or steel on which a bounty has been paid. Therefore, we want this provision so that if the bounty has been paid we can make them pay it back.

Mr. KEMP. There is a little matter in regard to which a gentleman wrote me a letter a few days ago. Perhaps it should have come up under the preceding section. I will just read the letter which is only a short one, in order that the attention of the Minister of Customs may be drawn to it.

While travelling from Windsor to St. Thomas by the Michigan Central Railway, I observed the sale of cigars, manufactured in the United States, not bearing the Canadian import stamp. This occurred in the buffet car.

I referred this matter to Mr. Floodey, inland preventive officer, and he reports back to me that the Michigan Central Railway has an arrangement with the Canadian government, whereby they pay so much per year for this right. How this can be possible, I cannot understand, as the duty on cigars is so much per pound, &c.

He refers to cars running through Canada where the supplies are American and there is an arrangement with the government.

Mr. PATERSON. The commissioner explains to me that the railroads make a return here once a month stating what cigars they have used in that way and the duty is paid.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Some time ago I called the attention of the minister to a serious matter affecting the revenue under the operation of the Compounders' Act by which Canadian spirit is put up and labelled and sold throughout this country as imported Scotch whisky, French brandy, Holland gin, &c. Of course the excise tax is paid on the Canadian spirit so used, but as the excise duty is much lower than the customs duty on the imported article, there is through this practice a serious loss to the customs revenue. Since I made that reference I have had further information and everything I said is borne out by it.

Mr. PATERSON. I see the point, and will call it to the attention of the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman).

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This matter comes under the operation of the Compounders' Act. When the hon. member (Mr. W. F. Maclean) brought this question up before I had a conversation with the officials of the Department of Inland Revenue, and it was pointed out that the Compounders' Act was somewhat defective. It gives extraordinary powers and privileges to parties taking out licenses to compound liquor, of making, practically under the law, imitations of French brandies, &c. I shall be pleased to again bring it to the attention of the officials. It is possible that if we drove the Canadian manufactured liquor out of the market its place would necessarily have to be taken by imported goods and the customs revenue would be increased, but the excise revenue would be decreased, it is as broad as it is long——

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Oh, no.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN—in respect to how the revenue is affected, although I quite agree that it is possible that the purity of the liquor is not what it might be and that the Adulteration Act is being violated under the Compounders' Act.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the difference between the excise and customs ?

Mr. PATERSON. Fifty cents a gallon on proof spirits.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The Customs Act provides material for enforcing its provisions, but in the Inland Revenue Act and this Compounders Act there is no such provision. It is time that the Minister of Inland Revenue should get his Department Act into the same shape as the Customs Act in this regard. If the Inland Revenue Act is defective, as the minister confesses his officers have informed him, he should have it amended so as to protect the Canadian public whom he says he would like to see protected. He is given charge of a great department in the public interest, and he must find a way to make his Act efficient and effective.

Resolutions reported and agreed to.

Mr. PATERSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 165) to amend the Customs Act ;

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—ELECTIONS ACT—AMENDMENT.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). In the first place, I wish to bring to the attention of the government, the somewhat extraordinary situation which exists with regard to the resignation of Mr. Hyman as a member of the House and as a minister of the cabinet. Shortly before the opening of this session, Mr. Hyman delivered his resignation to the Prime Minister as a member of the government, and for certain reasons should have been declared to the House, the Prime Minister did not accept that resignation. Also, the resignation of Mr. Hyman, as a member of this House for the electoral division of the city of London, which was delivered to Mr. Speaker, has been pronounced invalid.

Mr. FIELDING. Would my hon. friend permit me to make a statement which may be useful in this discussion ? I have received a telegram from Mr. Hyman stating he has forwarded his resignation to Mr. Speaker. That telegram I received on Saturday, and no doubt Mr. Speaker has not yet received the resignation.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Resignation as what ?

Mr. FIELDING. Resignation as a member of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was about to say that it is remarkable that a proper resignation had not been forwarded to Mr. Speaker before this. We know that the Prime Minister approved the action of the Minister of Public Works in resigning his seat, and that the right hon. gentleman spoke of the seat as a tainted seat, and yet no proper resignation has been tendered by Mr. Hyman up to the present time although we are now told by the Minister of Finance that it is in the course of transmission. As far back as the 2nd of February, 1907, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) was able to send to the Prime Minister at Ottawa a telegram in these words :

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Ottawa.—Improved health and the assurance that a few weeks more of rest will find me able to resume work of the department, permits me to comply with your request to withdraw my resignation as Minister of Public Works.

One would have supposed, that the Minister of Public Works, being in a condition of health to prepare and forward that telegram, would have been equally able to send to Mr. Speaker a valid resignation of his seat, which he said in November he intended to resign. Later, on the 1st of March, 1907, the Minister of Public Works was able to send to Mr. James C. Duffield, of London, the following telegram :

Any statements or insinuations that my resignation either as member or minister was prompted by other motives than those contained in my letter to Sir Wilfrid Laurier are absolutely untrue.

One would suppose that on either of these occasions it would have been a simple matter for the Minister of Public Works to forward a valid resignation to Mr. Speaker. I will not stop to allude to the somewhat curious position which has prevailed during the past five months under which we have had a Minister of Public Works 'de jure' but not 'de facto.' A very appreciative letter was written to Mr. Hyman by the Prime Minister in response to his resignation, and one might be tempted to contrast it with the somewhat curt letter of dismissal which was tendered to the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals. The difference between the two was most striking. I do not purpose alluding at any length to the remarks of the Prime Minister with regard to his relations with the Minister of Public Works, but I may point out that the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals not only gave to the Prime Minister the denial, which was also given by the Minister of Pubic Works, but he did more ; he immediately took steps in the courts to vindicate his character by instituting actions against those, who as he claimed, had traduced him. Yet, in the case of the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals we have had his resignation accepted in somewhat curt and abrupt terms, while in the case of the Minister of Public Works not only was his resignation not accepted, but the Prime Minister expressed the hope that he would still continue to discharge his duties.

The immediate subject which I purpose discussing this afternoon, is, the necessity for some amendment to the electoral laws of this country. This necessity was regarded as so grave and so urgent, that the government put into the mouth of His Excellency at the opening of this session, a promise that during the session an amendment to our electoral laws would be submitted to parliament. That has not been done up to the present ; and at this stage of the session I suppose it is impossible to expect it. We have had a good many illustrations during the past eight or ten years of the necessity both for amendment of the electoral laws and for their better enforcement. Electroal corruption of a very remarkable character has been brought to light during the past ten or twelve years. I might instance the West Huron election, the Brockville by-election, the by-election in St. James division of Montreal, the elections in the St. Antoine and St. Ann's divisions of Montreal, the election in West Hastings in 1904, the London election of 1905 the Queen's and Shelburne election, and as an illustration of the delays of the law, because the case is not yet finished, I might be tempted to allude to the Halifax election. I do not propose to go at any length into frauds attending the West Huron and Brockville elections, because they occupied the time of the House in 1899-1900. I took a very considerable part in the investigation which went on before the Committee on Privileges and Elections in regard to them, but I would like to make one remark regarding the action of the government in that connection. The action which the government deliberately took in this House, after full discussion in the session of 1899-1900 made it possible for the electoral frauds to be perpetrated which have just recently been disclosed in connection with the electoral division of London. There cannot be any doubt of that. If strong, stern and prompt action had been taken in connection with the West Huron and Brockville cases, if the men who were shown to have been connected with those frauds had been punished as they deserved, I venture to think no such frauds would have been committed as those to which I have called attention, and which have caused a great many people in this country both sides to be thoroughly ashamed. What happened in the West Huron and Brockville elections ? I shall not go through the record of both, but take only the former. It was absolutely demonstrated by the evidence before the committee that in one poll alone, although forty votes only were counted for the Conservative candidate, as a matter of fact, fourteen more were deposited by Conservative electors. There was no doubt about that. It was shown by the fraudulent ballots and by the evidence of the witnesses themselves. You could see the fraudulent ballots. You could see that they did not correspond with the original ballots or with the counter foil ; and in addition you had the sworn testimony of the men who came forward and who not only by solemn declaration outside the committee, but by sworn evidence in the committee, declared that they had deposited their ballots for the Conservative candidate. You had another poll in the same election of West Huron, where no less than fifteen ballots, marked and deposited for the Conservative candidate had been removed by the deputy returning officer, and fifteen false ballots substituted in their place. What took place? Every one who was a member of this House at the time and was a member of the Committee on Privileges in Elections, knows the obstruction I and my colleagues met in the committee on that occasion. We were greeted by high sounding words from the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), but when we got into the committee and undertook to prove the fraudulent and corrupt acts committed by officers of this House, we were met by every possible obstruction by hon. gentlemen opposite. There is no doubt about that. But we did prove what I thought ought to have been sufficient to satisfy the committee and the House beyond question that these frauds had been committed. Owing, however, to these obstructive tactics, we were not able to complete our report that session. We came back the next year, and that which had been regarded as a matter of privilege and principle, that which the First Minister had said should most worthily engage the attention of the House was buffeted about week after week and every possible obstruction resorted to until it was only towards the end of the session I succeeded in bringing on my motion as an amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply, and the government saw fit to vote it down. I say that the approval by the government, because it amounted to such, the approval and protection of the government extended to those deputy returning officers in respect of their fraudulent acts during that election had the effect of encouraging what was done in the St. Antoine division of Montreal, in West Hastings and in the election in London in 1904-1905. If stern and prompt justice had been meted out to those men there would have been a more wholesome fear of, and a greater respect for the law than has prevailed during the last ten years. I pursued for some time a gentleman by the name of Farr, who was a deputy returning officer in the West Huron election on that occasion. I got a subpœna from the committee for his attendance. The chairman of the committee was good enough to entrust to me the duty of having that subpœna served because I thoroughly realized the likelihood of that witness endeavouring to evade service. I put it into the hands of a competent solicitor in the city of Toronto ; but when he endeavoured to effect a service, it was found that the witness had departed. As the witness has since stated in his evidence, and in a declaration I am about to read to the House, he was warned that a subpœna had been issued and provision was made for his departure to the United States. He did not go to the United States, but wandered around the province of Ontario under assumed names. We have since learned that he turned up in various towns in the province of Ontario. In one case he was arrested, but as soon as those who arrested him discovered his identity he was immediately released and sent on his travels in order that he might not be available as a witness before that committee He never was available, but after the investigation was over he made a declaration denying all fraud and denying that he had assisted in any fraud, and that declaration was published in one of the leading newspapers in Ontario, the Toronto 'Globe,' shortly afterwards. I have here a declaration made by Mr. Farr, on the 8th of December, 1906, with regard to his conduct in that case :

Dominion of Canada—Province of Ontario, to wit :

In the matter of the election of a member for the West Riding of Huron county to serve in the House of Commons.

I, James Farr, of the town of Goderich, in the county of Huron, and province of Ontario, carpenter, make oath and say as follows :

1. That I was deputy returning officer at polling subdivision number three in the said town of Goderich at the election held between Robert Holmes and Robert McLean on February 21, 1899, for the West Riding of the county of Huron.

2. That I had been deputy returning officer in former elections at the said polling subdivision.

3. That on the day preceding the election one, James Yates, Division Court clerk for Goderich town, came to my house and asked for the ballot-box and papers and ballots which I had received from the returning officer. He wished me to resign my position in his favour and asked me to do so. I concluded that it was thought that I could not manipulate the false ballots as it was intended I should. W. L. Horton, of Goderich town, had previously asked me to resign.

4. After the said James Yates had interviewed me and had left my house after I had refused to grant his request, I went down to the neighbourhood of John Martin's hotel and I there met the said W. L. Horton, who again requested me to resign in favour of James Yates, which I refused to do.

5. After the last mentioned refusal to give up my ballot-box and papers, the said W. L. Horton asked me to go with him to Craig's hotel in Goderich town, which I did. Both the said Horton and I went upstairs in Craig's hotel together and I was then introduced to a man by the name of Garrett and also to a man named O'Gorman. These two latter persons were introduced to me by the said W. L. Horton.

I should interpolate that the man to whom he was introduced, Garrett, was not Garrett, but a man by the name of Pritchett, the man who made a confession as to his conduct in the two elections to which I have alluded and in other elections for the province and for the Dominion also.

6. After I had been introduced by the said Horton to the said Garrett and O'Gorman, the said Horton and O'Gorman left the room and Garrett and I remained alone.

7. The said Garrett then instructed me to switch ballots, and I practised the method of doing this with him for a short while.

8. The said Garrett gave me thirteen ballots marked for Robert Holmes, and I placed them in my pocket. However, before doing so, the said Garrett placed my initials on all the thirteen ballots These ballots had no counterfoils

9. The said Garrett's instructions to me as to the method of switching was as follows :

I was told to keep these thirteen bogus marked ballots in my pocket so that I could readily have access to them, and I was further instructed to always put all counterfoils in my pocket so that I could take out a bogus ballot when I desired to do so, without raising suspicion. When a person came in to vote, whose ballot I desired to switch, I would take from my pocket a bogus ballot, which the said Garrett had provided me with and would keep this ballot hidden under my left hand which would be resting on the table. When the voter would tender to me his ballot paper with the counterfoil properly attached thereto, I would place this good ballot under the left hand fingers as if for the purpose or tearing off the counterfoil and with a sudden movement of the right hand the genuine ballot and counterfoil would be quickly removed together and placed in my pocket and the bogus ballot marked for Robert Holmes would be quickly deposited in the ballot-box.

10. Just prior to this said election, I met several other strangers around Craig's hotel, other than Garrett and O'Gorman, but the only other name that I at present remember is that of Mr. Mulloy.

11. At the British Exchange hotel, in the said town of Goderich, just prior to this election, I saw Alexander Smith, James Vance and Captain Sullivan.

12. During the hours of the polling on said election day, I was present in the polling booth as deputy returning officer and succeeding in switching the thirteen ballots which Garrett had given to me, marked for Robert Holmes, and placed in my pocket thirteen ballots marked by voters for Robert McLean, instead of depositing the last mentioned ballots in the ballot-box.

13. About April 10, 1899, after the said election, I went to Toronto city and worked there in the employ of the D. W. Thompson Company until July 12 of the same year.

14. Just prior to my quitting the employ of the said D. W. Thompson Company, James Vance, the Liberal organizer, came to see me at my boarding-house on Church street, in the city of Toronto, and there interviewed me as to my going to the city of Ottawa to give evidence before the Committee on Privileges and Elections as to the West Huron election inquiry.

15. I know that certain parties were attempting to serve me with a subpoena issued by the said committee to give evidence before them, but I did not attend, having for a considerable length of time, evaded service.

16. The said James Vance provided me with a single ticket for Hamilton, North Dakota, United States of America, which was the place I told the said Vance I wished to go to, if I left the country. He, the said Vance, also gave me some money, but I have forgotten the exact amount.

17. Instead of following the said Vance's instructions and going to Hamilton, North Dakota, I remained in various places in Ontario, evading service of subpoena issued by the said committee for my attendance before them.

18. After the adjournment of the said committee investigating the said West Huron election, I returned to Toronto and in the month of August, 1899, I was asked to sign a certain document which had previously been prepared by some party or parties unknown to me, and I signed the said document without any knowledge of the contents thereof and without having the same read over or explained to me in any way.

19. Afterwards in the said town of Goderich, I was shown an article published in the 'Globe' newspaper of Toronto, which article purported to give the contents of a certain declaration signed by me as to the conduct of the said West Huron election.

20. I absolutely deny having any knowledge of the statements contained in the said declaration at the time it is purported to have been signed, nor did I give any person any authority to prepare the said declaration as published in the 'Globe' newspaper.

21. I returned to Ontario on November 28 last, from North Dakota, where I have resided during the past three years, and upon my arrival in the said town of Goderich I concluded to reveal all knowledge which I had of the said election held in West Huron between Robert Holmes and Robert McLean, and to deny all knowledge of the said declaration purported to be signed by me and which declaration was published in August, 1899, in the Toronto 'Globe.'

22. My object in returning to Ontario last month was simply for the purpose of rejoining my family, who do now and have during my absence resided in the said town of Goderich, and my return was not brought about through any inducements whatsoever made to me to give the information contained in this affidavit, nor do I expect any pecuniary benefit for so doing.

(Sgd.) JAMES FARR.

Sworn before me in the city of Toronto, in the county of York, this 8th day of December, 1906, after the same had been read over to the said deponent and explained to him and read by him.

(Sgd.) ARTHUR D. GEORGE,

A notary public in and for the province of Ontario.

That is Mr. Farr's account of the circumstances under which the Committee of Privileges and Elections failed to obtain his evidence as to his conduct as a deputy returning officer in the West Huron election.

I need not refer at great length to the election which took place in the St. James election in Montreal. My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) brought that matter before the courts after it had been declared that his opponent had been elected. He brought it before the courts on an election petition; and in that case, he succeeded in having the election set aside and his opponent disqualified. But he did not stop there. He went into the criminal courts, taking proceedings against the men who had been paid for violating the law of this country, the men to whom reward had been paid from some source of which we do not know, to violate the electoral law of this country, and defeat the will of the people and overthrow my hon. friend from Beauharnois by fraud and crime. Two of these men were convicted and imprisoned. One of the two was discharged after about two months, although he had been sentenced to the very moderate term of six months' imprisonment.

The circumstances attending the election for St. Antoine division in 1904 are also worthy of attention. I mention these instances, because they indicate a widespread organized system, devised by persons of great skill who evidently have not yet been disclosed to the public, by persons who have ample funds at their disposal—by persons who have sufficient funds at their command not only to reward the men who commit these frauds and who thus defeat the will of the electorate, but also to support these men for years in the United States when they seek an asylum there by reason of their fear of the criminal justice of this country. But, I must say that, so far as the criminal justice of this country in some provinces is concerned, they had not very much to fear. For, under the administration of the late government of the province of Ontario, as is well known it was impossible to set in operation the machinery of the criminal law against the men who had committed fraud for the Liberal party either in Dominion or provincial elections. Let me read to the House a short statement which has been handed to me concerning what took place in the St. Antoine division during the election of 1904.

At the time of the federal elections of 1904, there was an extensive conspiracy to personate votes unearthed in St. Antoine Division. A party by the name of Bissonnette, an ex-convict was employed by parties unknown but in the Liberal interests to organize a band of personators to operate in the lower part of the division. Bissonnette secured a room, organized a staff and systematically secured from the various Liberal committee rooms lists of names of parties who could not be found. He gathered about him a group of five men who in turn would secure the services of about twenty more. These men were to be supplied with cards giving names and designations of absentee voters, and they were to present themselves on election day at the several polls and 'telegraph' votes. Mr. Ames, getting an inkling of what was going on, secured the services of a detective who succeeded in being taken into the councils of the conspirators and becoming fully acquainted with their intentions. They actually succeeded in having a large number of envelopes addressed to different parties, containing votation cards passed through the Montreal post office by the connivance of an employee and stamped as though they had gone through the mails. On the night prior to the election, when Bissonnette and his gang were assembled in a saloon for the purpose of receiving their final instructions and when they were actually discussing the price that should be paid for each personated vote, they were surrounded by detectives and the ringleaders captured and brought down to the Central Police Station. On being searched Bissonnette was found to have about $600 on his person in small bills; the other members had various cards and a code book showing their line of work. A search warrant was procured and the houses of the ringleaders visited that same night when all the lists of absentee voters and the paraphernalia necesasry to sysmatic 'telegraphing' were discovered. The six ringleaders were brought before the magistrate and committed for trial before the Court of King's Bench. The trial brought out conclusively the connection of the Liberal association with this band; as one Lesperance, the paymaster, whose headquarters were at the Reform Club, was shown to have also suplied funds to Bissonnette. Lesperance skipped the country to avoid arrest. The son of the Liberal candidate admitted that he had given large sums —several thousands of dollars—to Lesperance for which he asked no detail of expenditure. When the case came up for trial Judge Trenholme charged strongly against the prisoners stating in his remarks to the jury. 'As for myself, I have no doubt of the prisoners' guilt.' The counsel for the defence, however, made strong partisan appeals likely to secure the sympathy of any Liberal members of the jury, also represented the case as one of persecution on the part of a wealthy man against a poor man, also as a vindictive attack by an Englishman upon a Frenchman. The result of these appeals to prejudice was that the jury failed to agree as to a verdict. As the prosecution had by this time cost Mr. Ames and his friends upwards of $2,600 and as it was evident that the Crown would not put through a new trial with any degree of vigour unless further large disbursements were made for special counsel, the prosecutor decided to drop the case.

I will refer also to what has taken place in the election of St. Anne's division, Montreal, when, after an exhaustive investigation, it was proven that a large sum, amounting to $7,000 or $9,000, had been distributed at the various committee rooms without reasonable precautions that this should be used for legitimate purposes.

The result was that the Liberal candidate on that occasion was elected by a majority of 730. At a subsequent by-election, which was held under fairer auspices, the majority was reduced to a little over 200, although, as is well known, the experience of this country shows that a government candidate at a by-election usually receives a larger majority than at a general election.

I will not pause long to deal with the outrageous frauds and attempted frauds which were disclosed through the energy of my hon. friend from West Hastings (Mr. Porter). We know that certain persons were brought over from the United States to carry in the Liberal interest the riding of West Hastings, the riding of Frontenac, and perhaps a good many other ridings in the province of Ontario, by the use of fraudulent ballot boxes. These facts were exposed by my hon. friend from West Hastings during the last session, or the previous session. There is no doubt as to the plot, there is no doubt whatever that justice failed, inasmuch as two of these men succeeded—the two principal criminals—in escaping to the United States. Whether they are being supported there out of the same funds which were used to support Pritchett during his enforced absence, I do not know. But it is proper to note on this occasion that the counsel for the Dominion government were only sent to West Hastings after public attention had been aroused to such an extent that the government felt that they must take some action. Instead, however, of displaying the same vigilance, and persistence, and indefatigable energy which Mr. Shepley displayed in the insurance investigation, he was remarkably lax and indifferent on that occasion, and would only act on the most absolute proof that some fraud had been committed. I have a letter which indicates the action which counsel for the government took there. The charges were made on the 4th day of November, it was not until the 18th or the 19th of November that warrants were issued at the instance of the Crown. One man was arrested and was liberated on nominal bail. Perhaps my hon. friend from West Hastings can tell me the amount of bail?

Mr. PORTER. $2,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The bail was fixed at the sum of $2,000. The witness went to the United States; I do not know whether the bail has been forfeited. The other criminal was not arrested at all. The counsel who was employed by a member of this House, the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) says:

> The responsibility for allowing these men to escape rests entirely with the Ontario government. I must also point out that the charge that bogus ballot boxes were used in the election in West Hastings was published in the press of the 4th November, yet the first warrants in the case were not issued until the 19th. This delay can only be attributed to the laxness of the provincial authorities in refusing to act. In estimating the importance of the failure of the provincial authorities to act, it must be remembered that these charges were published on the personal responsibility not of obscure or unknow persons, but of men of high standing and respectability in the community, among whom was a former Premier of the Dominion of Canada. Mr. Shepley, K.C., took the position quite frankly so far as he was concerned, that he would only take action when we gave substantial evidence that people were guilty. He would not act on suspicion or information. The result of this procedure is self evident.

Suppose in St. Antoine division, Montreal, Mr. Ames, and those who were assisting him in that election, had taken the same position which Mr. Shepley, counsel for this government, took in West Hastings, what would have been the result? Criminals were employed to switch ballots and to have the Liberal candidate elected by fraud, although the will of the people was such as to bring about a precisely opposite result, and the undoubted outcome would have been a failure of justice, the Liberal candidate would have been declared elected, and Mr. Ames would have been left in the most uncertain proceedings of an election court.

Now, the election in Queen's and Shelburne might also be allued to. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance yesterday was not very clear as to what the duty of this government was with regard to some of the officials who took part in that election. I would like to point out to him that one of them, to whom I alluded incidentally yesterday, Mr. Dexter, the harbour master at Liverpool, took a remarkably active and partisan part in that election. I have under my hand the evidence of the hon. Minister of Finance himself, in which he is asked this question:

> Would you place J. Harris Dexter in the same category as John Selden, of Liverpool?
> Mr. Selden being an active political supporter of the hon. gentleman.
> I don't know how I would classify them. If he is the Dexter I believe he is, I count him as a political supporter. I don't know how active.
> Q. If you were asked if he was an active supporter you would say yes?—A. I expect so. We don't always realize expectations.

I understand this to be the same Mr. Dexter who is the harbour master at Liverpool.

Mr. FIELDING. As a matter of fact it was not, but I do not attach any importance to that. Mr. Dexter, the harbour master at Liverpool, was afterwards referred to in the case, so that there is not so very much difference as to that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There was one Mr. Dexter who was found guilty of an act of bribery.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That was the harbour master of Liverpool?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, that is the gentleman.

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The evidence showed that a witness testified that Mr. Dexter bribed him or attempted to bribe him. Dexter denied that. There was, however, evidence from Dexter himself that he had attempted to bribe a man by the name of Craig.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not remember the name, but Dexter's name was mentioned in that way.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And the evidence which was extracted from Dexter amounted in the end to this: At first he denied that he had bribed Craig but in the end he admitted that Craig had driven away from the poll with him, that he had placed in the side pocket of his coat a five dollar bill that by some mode of telepathy it was communicated to Craig, that there were five dollars in the pocket of Mr. Dexter for his use and benefit. So, in the course of driving away from the poll the witness Craig, while Dexter was admiring the scenery, inserted his hand into the side pocket of Dexter's coat and extracted this $5 bill and he went away much comforted and refreshed by the fact that he was so much the richer. One of the judges, if not both of them, had some doubt as to whether or not Dexter was technically the agent of the Minister of Finance, but whether that be the case or not there is no doubt whatever that not only was Dexter the harbour master of Liverpool interfering actively and zealously in that election, but he actually made himself a party by connivance to the bribing of an elector. There can be no doubt that all these facts were disclosed to the hon. Minister of Finance who was present at the trial when this evidence was given and yet, in so far as I am aware, this same man Dexter is to-day harbour master at Liverpool just as he was harbour master at Liverpool before he interfered in this partisan way in that election.

Mr. FIELDING. That only shows how, in the desire of my hon. friend to make a point—I will not say unfair—but how careless he is about his facts. Mr. Dexter is not the harbour master at Liverpool. When these events occurred I told him that he could not be the harbour master at Liverpool any longer and he sent in his resignation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am very glad indeed to hear it and perhaps the hon. Minister of Finance will apply the same measure of justice to another gentleman whom I am now about to refer. I have in my hand the declaration of Mr. Avard L. Davidson, Halifax, as follows:

I, Avard L. Davidson, of Halifax, in the county of Halifax, barrister at law, do solemnly declare:

That I was appointed by Dr. R. C. Weldon, the Conservative candidate at the by-election held October 31, 1906, to elect a member for the House of Commons of Canada for the electoral district of Shelburne and Queen's, in writing under his hand, to be the agent of the said Dr. R. C. Weldon at the polling booth at Port Mouton, in the county of Queen's.

That John E. Payzant, a custom house officer in the employ of the Dominion government at Port Mouton aforesaid, was the deputy returning officer at the said booth.

That on the morning of election day, October 31, 1906, at the hour of 8.40 o'clock in the forenoon I went to the said polling booth at Port Mouton aforesaid, and there found the said John E. Payzant alone in the said booth. I thereupon introduced myself to the said John E. Payzant and delivered to him my appointment as agent of the said Dr. R. C. Weldon as aforesaid. The said John E. Payzant asked me if I were a voter in the county of Queen's. I explained to him that I was not, but that by the law it was not necessary for a person to be a voter in a county in order to act as an agent of a candidate in that county. In very imperative tones he replied to me that as he understood the law, no one but a voter could act as an agent and that he did not propose to allow me to so act. I, however, insisted upon acting in the capacity of agent at that booth, and after much threatening and profane language upon his part he finally yielded on this point.

That at 8.50 o'clock in the forenoon the poll clerk, who was a son of the said deputy returning officer, arrived at the booth together with J. L. Bain, of Liverpool, the fishery officer for the said Queen's county, one of the agents of the Liberal candidate, W. S. Fielding, and Allister Cook, an agent for the said Dr. R. C. Weldon, for the said polling booth. As soon as these persons arrived, I requested the said deputy returning officer to count the ballots before the opening of the poll according to the provisions of the law. The said deputy returning officer refused to count the ballots as requested, alleging as his reason that I had not made the demand at a quarter to nine o'clock. I explained to him that at that hour the poll clerk was not present and that I had taken the earliest opportunity after the arrival of the clerk to make the demand. He objected that he had not then time to count the ballots before nine o'clock and proceeded to read aloud to those present the document appointing him returning officer. I explained that the law did not require him to do this and he was merely using time unnecessarily which might be used in counting the ballots. He then said he would show me 'damn quick' who was running this booth and deliberately struck me in the face. Throughout the whole day he acted in the most partisan and high-handed manner. [illegible] his spare minutes in boasting what a change in the vote in Port Mouton in favour of the Liberal party he had made since he began working in the party's interests.

Remember that this gentleman is a customs officer in the employ of the Dominion government at Port Mouton, and that during this election, according to this statement and while acting in a semi-judicial capacity as deputy returnng officer he not only struck the agent of the Conservative candidate for demanding that he should do his duty but he occupied his spare time boasting what a change he had made in favour of the Liberal party since he had resided in that vicinity. Does the hon. Minister of Finance think that is not partisan conduct of the most reprehensible character ? I do not know how you can describe partisan conduct if that is not partisan conduct. An officer of the Inland Revenue in the county of Halifax was dismissed by this government without investigation shortly after it came into power because, at a public meeting at Dartmouth, he had asked a question of the Liberal candidate, Mr. Russell. He was dismissed for that and for no other cause.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think that is correct.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is the only reason I ever heard assigned. If there were any other reason I do not know it and as a matter of fact I am quite sure that that particular individual to whom I allude did not take any active or partisan part in that election.

Mr. FIELDING. Who was the officer ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I forget his name.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Ryan ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Ryan.

Mr. FIELDING. I have seen Mr. Ryan myself playing the part of an active partisan at public meetings in connection with elections in Halifax, and Mr. Ryan is too sensible a man to pretend anything to the contrary.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did the hon. Minister of Finance ever know him to do anything quite so partisan as that which I have read from this declaration ?

Mr FIELDING. I have no evidence of it one way or the other.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We have this sworn declaration. Will my hon. friend say that this witness is not worthy of credence ?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not say that but it is a very queer way to bring it forward.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When we bring it forward on our unsupported statement in this House not much attention is paid to it. How are we to bring it forward ? The government are not very anxious to investigate these matters when we do bring them to their attention. We moved a resolution declaring that the actions of a man named Wagner should be investigated, but the hon. Minister of Finance stood up and voted against any such investigation. We set forth a statement proved by the records of a department of this government as to that man's conduct, as to his partisan conduct and as to his criminal conduct, and a resolution was moved in this House that if he denied the charges there should be an investigation, and if he did not deny these charges he should be dismissed. The hon. Minister of Finance stood up and voted against this motion. How are we to bring these matters forward? The Conservative officials have been dismissed on the unsupported word of a defeated candidate or of a member of this House and dismissed without investigation. We do bring these matters up in this House ; my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) has brought them up, my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) has brought them up and no action is taken. I have come to the conclusion that it is necessary to support our word, and therefore I am bringing these matters to the attention of the government by solemn declaration.

That the night previous to said election I went over to the voters' list for the polling district of Port Mouten with a committee of Dr. Weldon's friends residing in the district. I then discovered that in the opinion of this committee there were about twenty voters upon this list who were supposed to be under the influence of the fishery officer J. L. Bain. Some of these were persons against whom Bain had recovered fines for infractions of the fishery regulations and which fines were still outstanding ; others had applied for licenses to pack lobsters or set certain kinds of nets and felt that the granting of the same depended upon keeping upon the right side of Blain, Others from treatment which they had received in the past at the hands of Bain had made up their minds that it did not pay to oppose the fishery inspector politically. Opposite the names of such voters I placed the letters 'D B' on the list which I marked for reference in the polling booth.

It is absolutely impossible for hon. members in this House to appreciate the influence which I am told that particular government officer exercises over the fishermen of that district. He absolutely terrorizes them so that the men who have voted Conservative all their lives are afraid, and are rendered afraid purposely by this officer, to deposit their ballots as their inclination and their conscience bid them to do. The declaration proceeds :

That during the polling I observed that with one exception each of the voters against whose name I had marked the said letters 'D.B.' as aforesaid, when delivering their ballot to the deputy returning officer had it folded in a peculiar manner. Instead of being folded with the counterfoil on the outside as the law directs the ballots of these voters were delivered with the counterfoil folded in. This gave an excuse for the deputy returning officer in order to tear off the counterfoil to open up the ballot first and thus be in a position to see how it was marked. This the returning officer was particular to do in each case.

That I am informed by the workers for Dr. R. C. Weldon throughout the constituency and verily believe that this method of folding the ballots was employed in nearly every polling district in which a majority of the voters were fishermen.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

AVARD L. DAVIDSON.

Solemnly declared before me this 21st day of November, A.D. 1906, at Halifax, in the county of Halifax.

ALF. WHITMAN,
A Commissioner of the Supreme Court, in and for the county of Halifax.

There is a remarkable significance in the method, which according to Mr. Davidson was observed in that poll to his personal knowledge, and which according to his information and belief was observed in other polls where fishermen were voters. It displays a remarakable similarity to the procedure and methods which have been adopted by the Liberal machine in the province of Ontario with regard to the folding of ballots.

I have referred on a previoius occasion to the conduct of Mr. E. M. Farrell, now and formerly speaker of the legislature of Nova Scotia, in the general elections, in 1904, in Queen's-Shelburne. Mr. Farrell left the province of Nova Scotia and went to the United States for his health, about three weeks before that election trial opened. He remained in the United States for his health, until a few days after that election trial concluded, and then he came back to Nova Scotia, but I understand that those who observed him remarked no special difference between the health when he went away and his health when he returned. He has been re-elected speaker of the legislature of Nova Scotia, since the late provincial elections. It was proved in the trial of this action that Mr. Farrell had handed over to one person between $500 and $600 not very long before election day, and I quote from the evidence of John F. Seldon on the trial :

Q. Will you tell me where you got this $100 you paid to Henry Tupper ?—A. From E. M. Farrell.

Q. E. M. Farrell is the local member for Queen's county ?—A. Yes.

Q. And Speaker of the House of Assembly at that time ?—A. I do not know.

Q. He has represented Queen's for a number of years in the local legislature ?—A. Yes.

Q. How much mony did you get from him altogether ?—A. I cannot tell you exactly; somewhere in the neighbourhood of $500; between $500 and $600 probably.

Q. Not any more than that?—A. Not any more than that I don't think.

Q. When did you get it from Farrell?—A. Sometime before the election, probably a week.

Q. Where ?—A. In my office.

Q. What did you do with it ?—A. Put it in the safe.

Q. Ultimately I mean?—A. Paid it out. I gave the last witness some money, I could not say how much. The rest went to different sections of, the county in small lots.

Q. To be used in connection with securing the return of the respondent, that is your idea ?—A. I presume so.

He is re-examined by counsel for the petitioner and I quote from his evidence :

Q. You said you did not authorize improper expenditures ?—A. Yes.

Q. You knew this money might be expended in buying votes ?—A. I did not know.

Q. You knew they might ?—A. They might.

Q. Can you give me items of the expenditure? ——A. I do not know what they did with it.

Q. You just gave them the money without any instructions at all ?—A. Yes.

Q. To use in the interest of the respondent? —A. To use as they saw fit.

Q. In the interest of Mr. Fielding ?—A. I gave them the money and that is all.

The learned chief justice, one of the judges who tried the election petition, delivered judgment with regard to this incident ; he is dealing in the first place with the question of agency, and he says :

If Farrell, Selden, Tupper, and Mulhall and possibly some others mentioned were not agents, the respondent had no agents in a most important district.

He left these men, prominent, active experienced and full of resources to manage the election in his absence. He was long enough in the county—about ten days I think—to take in the situation. And I suppose no one can say that his election was quite sure. He must have known that much depended on his old and more recently tried friends.

If he were not depending on these men on whom could he depend? He was not depending in vain on their activity. The respondent most frankly admits to the fullest extent that he did depend on them—he put himself in their hands.

Then the learned chief justice goes into a discussion of the question of agency, and he quotes certain language of Mr. Justice Armour in the Cornwall election case, and he continues :

Before these trenchant words were read it seemed impossible that we could hold Mulhall and Farrell liable as agents. After reading the authorities and weighing such facts as were with great difficulty extracted from witnesses under serious obligation to disclose unpalatable truth, I submit it is—however, hard upon the sitting member—out of the question to hold that the relations in question in election cases, though difficult of definition, have not been made out.

With respect to the unlawful use of money—most of which was suddenly produced within a week of the polling day from the hands of Farrell—between $500 and $600—what can be said.

The proof is clear that it was used, as it was intendede to be used in the election.

The Farrell fund in addition to what was otherwise used or that disappeared and of which not the slightest trace or record remains, was about $600. This seems to have been absorbed among a population of about 600—an average of a dollar per head.

If, unfortunately, every district and the whole population had been treated in the same manner, no one could count on a fair election.

Hendry was president of the only organization of the Liberal party in the entire district, and this society had no knowledge of its existence.

Certainly it was not intended they should have. The proof seems strong that it was a secret fund. I said it is in proof the fund was for the election. The intention is to infer, I think, that the whole fund was to be secretly used. There were no restrictions on any part of what Farrell handed over to Selden who gave without any limitation or condition to Tupper $100 to do with it as he wished—of course in the election.

If a dark scheme of this kind could be carried on with impunity the freedom of election would be endangered.

With respect to what part was used directly for bribery and corruptly within the Act, suffice it to say that the proof is clear beyond doubt, enough was so used to void the election.

There seems to be a good deal of similarity between some of the methods pursued in this election and some of the methods pursued in the London election. In that London election of 1905 we find that electors were systematically bribed by an arrangement made with deputy returning officers at a figure of about $10 per head. In this case $600 was used in a district which had a total population of about 600. I am sure if you take into consideration the fact that a very great majority of the electors in that district must have been men whom it would not have been possible to corrupt, you would have a figure of $10 or $12 or $15 per head used in corrupting individual electors. This case, not only in that respect but in respect to the mode of folding the ballots, bears a very marked similarity in the methods used to the London case to which I now propose to refer for a few moments.

Other hon. gentlemen in this House are no doubt more familiar than I am with what took place in that election because they have made more of a study of the evidence that has been taken and made public. But is is sufficient to say that in the London election of 1904 and the London election of 1905, there was an organized, systematic scheme of bribing which depended for its effectual carrying out on the collusion of the deputy returning officers. There is no doubt whatever that certain deputy returning officers were appointed for the express purpose of carrying out that scheme, and there is no doubt also that those deputy returning officers most thoroughly and effectually carried out that scheme. In one polling division alone, in the election of 1904, some 88 voters were bribed at an average of about $5 per head. In the by-election of 1900 in one single polling division of that riding 102 electors were bribed at an average expenditure of about $10 per head. This was done in a most systematic manner. The men did not receive their money in advance; they were told that the deputy returning officer would know how they voted; the money for each elector was put in an envelope marked with his name and was left with a person on whom they could rely and after the polling had been concluded each one of these men went to this person; if he had voted right he received the sum which had been promised, but in one or two cases I think it was believed that the electors had not voted right and accordingly the sum which had been promised was not paid.

This indicates, as I have said already, a thoroughly devised, systematic scheme having behind it not only great skill and intelligence devoted to a vile purpose, but also a very large sum of money and it is of some moment to the people of this country to inquire how it is that huge sums such as those which were used in the London election and smaller sums which were used in the Queen's and Shelburne election were supplied for the purpose for which they were used. The London election has created a great deal of interest in this country. It has had the result of inducing a minister of the Crown to come to the conclusion that he ought to resign his seat—although up to the present time he has been a little over five months in attempting to do so. It has brought to light a system which must be put down in this country if the men who are to be elected as the representatives of the people in this parliament are to represent anything more than the money which can be used to bribe the electors and to pay men for committing corrupt acts.

I think I have made it clear then that some remedy is necessary either, by amending the provisions in the law or by a better enforcement of the existing law. No law that we can possibly put on the statute-book will be effective in its operation unless provision is made for its enforcement, and there are many defects in the existing law which I think might very well be remedied and which ought to have been remedied before this. Let me say in this connection that the extraordinary and remarkable delay which we have seen in this country in connection with some election petitions is noteworthy. Let me refer to the election petition for the county of Halifax. I have a summary: here which embodies a chronological record of the various parts of the proceedings in that case:

On December 13, 1904, the petition was filed. On December 31, 1904, preliminary objections to the petitions were presented. On July 7, 1905, Chief Justice Weatherbe gave judgment dismissing these preliminary objections. On November 28, 1905, an appeal from Chief Justice Weatherbe's decision dismissing the preliminary objections was argued before the Supreme Court of Canada. On December 1, 1905, minutes of judgment of Supreme Court of Canada affirming the decision of Chief Justice Weatherbe were finally settled. On January 20, 1906, an order was made by Mr. Justice Meagher fixing 13th February for examination of the respondent in aid of discovery. On February 7, 1906, a motion was made by counsel for the resepondent before the court en banc to dismiss the petition upon the ground that the time for the trial of the same was not properly extended. On February 13, 1906, counsel for the respondent asked for adjournment of this examination until February 16 on the ground that the Supreme Court has not yet given judgment on motion to dismiss the petition. This application was granted. On February 16, 1906, counsel for respondent asked for another adjournment of examination until March 27, as the court had not yet given judgment on motion to dismiss the petition. Application granted. On March 27, 1906, counsel for respondent asked for a third adjournment of examination until April 27 as the court had not yet given judgment on motion to dismiss petition. Application granted. On April 20, 1906, judgment was given by court en banc dismissing respondent's motion for dismissal of the petition. On April 27, 1906, respondent did not appear in obedience to subpœna and the examination was adjourned until April 28. On April 28, 1906, neither respondent nor his counsel appeared and the examination was adjourned sine die. On July 17, 1906, the trial of petition to unseat and disqualify the respondent finally came on—after one year and seven month of preliminary technicalities — when respondent's counsel objected to the jurisdiction of the court to try the petition. On July 18, 1906, the judges dismissed the petition on the ground of want of jurisdiction. On October 4, 1906, the Supreme Court of Canada reversed the decision of the trial judges dismissing the petition against the respondent and sent it back for trial. On October 22, 1906, the minutes of judgment on appeal were settled by the Supreme Court of Canada. On November 15, 1906, an order was issued by Mr. Justice Townsend fixing the date of the examination of respondent for Saturday, November 17. On November 17, 1906, respondent did not appear in obedience to the order ; a letter was produced from his counsel saying that he did not know where his client was.

From that time up to the present the respondent has not been examined nor has it been possible to proceed with the petition owing to the session of parliament.

I think that what I have just set out shows the interminable delays which are possible under the system that we have at present and indicates also that there should be some amendment of the law in that respect. I would be very much in favour of abolishing preliminary objections altogether and of leaving most of the matters now raised by preliminary objections to be raised by the respondent at the trial. ,

There is another curious feature which has developed out of the election petitions presented in the province of Nova Scotia after the general elections of 1904. Preliminary objections were filed by the various respondents setting up that the petitioners in each case had been guilty of some corrupt act and therefore were disqualified from filing the petition as not having the right to vote at the election. I think judicial opinion was divided in Nova Scotia, but the Supreme Court of Canada, before whom the matter finally came, decided that while corrupt acts in the main would not disqualify the petitioner unless he had been tried and found guilty before the filing of the petition, nevertheless if any petitioner had been guilty of hiring a term or controverting that provision of the law which made it unlawful to pay money for the conveyance of voters to a poll, then he could not file a petition. In other words, if any person in the Dominion files an election petition and this question is raised, to which I have alluded, by a preliminary objection, then instead of trying the respondent in respect of his right to represent that particular constituency, you proceed to try the petitioner and ascertain whether or not he has been guilty of paying fifty cents or a dollar or five dollars for the conveyance of voters to the polls. The petitioner, in other words, is the first person to be tried, and the trial of the respondent does not take place unless the petitioner is acquitted. If it be found that the petitioner was guilty of having paid a dollar for the conveyance of a voter to a poll, then he is adjudged to be disqualified from filing a petition and his petition falls to the ground. There is no provision in the law that the petition shall be merely abated and that another petitioner may take the place of the first one. The petition and all proceedings absolutely fall to the ground, and several petitions in Nova Scotia fell to the ground in that way.

I am under the impression that in several respects the law ought to be amended. There should be provision made for the more effective suppression and punishment of bribery. There should be better provision to prevent the fraudulent marking, counting and substitution of ballots and other similar frauds. There should be better provision for ensuring the proper conduct of elections on the part of both officials and candidates, and especially there should be some means devised by which men of respectability and character shall be appointed as deputy returning officers. There should be a provision to prevent collusion between a deputy returning officer and candidates or their agents. A great many of the disgraceful frauds which have taken place during the past eight or ten years have arisen through collusion between deputy returning officers and the agents of the candidate. We find that in the London election and in the election in the St. James division of Montreal, and we would probably have found it, if we did not find it, in the West Hastings and Frontenac elections.

Mr. PORTER. We did find it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As my hon. friend from West Hastings informs me, we did find it. At present the government candidate nominates the returning officer and the returning officer nominates the men who are to be his deputies in the several divisions. The candidate himself may do that from a fraudulent motive. In most cases I do not think he does. But the men who are behind him, the men who are running the election for him, give the names of the deputy returning officers to the candidate, who in turn recommends them to the returning officer. Some means must be discovered by which men of respectability and character, who have some stake in the community, in whom both parties have confidence, shall be selected as deputy returning officers. If that could be accomplished, one very effective means would be taken away from those who are not scrupulous, of perpetrating the nefarious work in which they have been engaged on so many occasions.

We should also have some legislation to prevent the accumulation of huge campaign funds and the subscriptions by corporations, contractors and promoters to such funds. No doubt the time has come when some measure should be put on our statute-book in that regard. We must not be afraid to look these facts in the face. If there is money provided by which people can be induced to commit these frauds and run the risk of the penitentiary, that money is not a small sum, and these frauds would not be committed unless that money is forthcoming. From what source does it come? For undoubtedly it has been forthcoming or a great many of these frauds would not have been committed. It would be a move in the right direction to place on the statute-book of this country what was placed on the statutes of New York in 1906. In that state there is a provision that no contribution shall be made to a campaign fund of either political party by any corporation which has received its charter from the state of New York, under very heavy and severe penalties. I would be prepared to go further. I say that we ought to have in this country a provision preventing any man in Canada from supplying any money whatever for any campaign fund unless an account of that money is attested to and placed on file, before the candidate takes his seat in parliament. That is the law in Great Britain at present. Funds subscribed and expended by political associations in Great Britain must be accounted for by the candidate. They must be disclosed in a declaration filed by him in court before he can take his seat. So strict is the law, that the Hon. Edward Blake, through some inadvertence on the part of his election agent, was not able to take his seat in parliament after the last general election in Great Britain because that statement was not filed. He had to go before a court and make a declaration based on sufficient material excusing the non-filing of this declaration within the proper period.

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. If the hon. gentleman will allow me. It is not necessary that this statement should be filed before the member takes his seat but it must be filed within thirty days after his election.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I accept at once the hon. gentleman's declaration on his personal knowledge of these matters but it does not at all affect my argument. My argument is that a declaration should be made within a specified time. If it is not made within that period of thirty days, the member cannot take his seat.

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. If the member happens to be absent from Great Britain even for many months after his election, then provided he makes the statement within two weeks after his return, he is within the law. Should the House be called and be in session, even before the thirty days have expired, it is not necessary for him to make that declaration until the thirty days after his election.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If he does not make it within the thirty days, can he take his seat ?

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. If he votes he is subject to a heavy penalty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is in effect the same thing. While I cannot recall from memory the exact provisions of the British enactment, I am convinced that it has been found necessary, under the provisions of that law, for members of the House of Commons of Great Britain to go to the courts and obtain, upon sufficient material, an order excusing their default before they can continue to sit and act as members of parliament, and I think that procedure was enforced against Mr. Blake because he had failed to comply with this provision, through some inadvertence on the part of his election agent.

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. The trouble was that Mr. Blake had made his return through his agent, whereas the law requires that a member shall also make his own return, and this Mr. Blake had omitted to do. Therefore, he had to go through the extra procedure to which the hon gentleman (Mr. R.L. Borden) has referred.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And in the meantime, I think, he did not take his seat.

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN. He had been sitting in the House when he discovered the omission; and, from the moment when he discovered the omission he withdrew from the House until the law had been fully complied with.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is practically my recollection of the case. Then, I think we should have amendments to the election law to expedite the hearing of election petitions, to prevent collusive arrangements for discontinuing petitions, to provide for thorough investigation of corrupt practices and to simplify the procedure. There has been a good deal of scandal in the country concerning what is known as 'sawing off' election petitions. Ten or fifteen petitions are entered on one side, and ten or fifteen on the other side; and, in the end, only two or three come to trial, the rest are supposed to be arranged under an agreement made between the representatives of the political parties. There has been a great deal of comment on this throughout the country. It is not desirable that that comment should continue. No election petition can be filed in this country except on an affidavit that the applicant has reason to believe, and does believe, that the allegations set forth in the petition are true.

Mr. FIELDING. What is the remedy ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Any one taking a false oath in such a case is liable to be indicted for perjury.

Mr. FIELDING. But people file these petitions and make affidavits who do not pretend to have the shadow of information on the subject. Take my own case, for instance—the man who made the affidavit never came into court and never pretended that he had any knowledge of corrupt acts in the election.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is not necessary that he should have personal knowledge. He makes the declaration that he has reason to believe and does believe. But if he makes that declaration on mere surmise or conjecture, it might reasonably be held that he had made it so recklessly that he would be subject to indictment for perjury if the statements were untrue. Theoretically, we have a provision for carrying on an election petition, even if the original petitioner does not see fit to proceed. As a matter of fact these provisions are altogether ineffective. We have provisions in the statute law to prevent the withdrawal of a petition except on application to the court, and by order of the court. But practically these provisions amount to nothing, because it has been held by the courts in my own province—and I think by the courts in other provinces as well—that, unless the time has been extended, the petition under the statute, lapses at the end of six months. In that case you cannot proceed further with it; and though, the petitioner may experience some trouble in securing the withdrawal of his deposit, nevertheless nothing more can be done upon the petition. In Great Britain they have a more effective procedure, under which the public prosecutor can intervene in any election petition where he fears withdrawal of the petition, or where he thinks there is collusion between the parties, and can go into a thorough investigation of the acts complained of in the petition, and, in that way, carry out the true intent and object of the law. These are amendments which, I think, ought to be made in the statutes of this country. I do not for a moment deny what was stated by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) during this session, that it is a matter of some considerable difficulty to frame amendments so that they will be satisfactory and work out effectively. But, we have some precedents, in the statute law of Great Britain. We have other precedents in the laws which are being placed on the statute-books of certain states of the American Union. I think we might obtain valuable hints and suggestions from both quarters. I greatly regret that the government have not carried out during this session the promise contained in the speech from the Throne to bring down for consideration during this session of parliament a measure to amend both the Controverted Elections Act, and the Election Act itself. In view of declarations during former sessions from members of the government and from gentlemen who are not now members of the government, and from the Minister of Finance, in view of the government's pledge to parliament and the people of the country, in view of the necessity of these amendments, I regret that no action has been taken. Therefore I move :

That all the words after the word 'that' be left out and the following substituted therefor :

This House deplores the existence of corrupt and fraudulent practices at elections as evidenced by the disclosures during recent years of bribery, personation, ballot switching and other similar frauds carried on by organized methods and upon a very extensive scale.

This House strongly condemns the organized system of corrupt practices by which the election of a minister of the Crown as member for the city of London was secured in 1905.

This House is of opinion that the existing electoral laws should be amended forthwith, and that provision should be made.

(a) for the more effective suppression and punishment of bribery ;

(b) to prevent the fraudulent marking, counting or substituting of ballots and other similar frauds ;

(c) for the better regulation of the conduct of elections on the part of both officials and candidates ;

(d) to prevent the accumulation of huge campaign funds and to prohibit contributions thereto by corporations, contractors and promoters;

(e) to expedite the hearing of election petitions, to prevent collusive arrangements for the discontinuance thereof, to provide for thorough investigation of corrupt practices and to simplify the procedure therefor.

(f) to carry out more effectively the law so amended.

This House regrets that notwithstanding the pledge of the government contained in the speech from the Throne, and notwithstanding the declarations of members of the government from time to time during the past four years, no such measure has been submitted to parliament at the present session and no effective steps have been taken by the administration either to amend the laws or to punish their violation.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, I am sure that there is no member on this side of the House who does not sympathize as warmly as the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) or any hon. gentleman sitting on your left with any well-considered measure designed to improve the electoral laws of this country. If my hon. friend had addressed the House during his entire speech in the terms and in the manner which he employed for the last five or ten minutes, during which time he offered some suggestions for the improvement of the law, I could have found no fault with his address. But, unfortunately, both the terms of his amendment and the manner in which he has presented it, the whole spirit in which he has addressed the House, make it impossible for us to do otherwise than condemn the motion he has presented. First, with regard to the position of the member for London (Mr. Hyman), I am at a loss to know what ground of complaint the hon. gentleman could have. Mr. Hyman tendered his resignation in two capacities. He was both a minister of the Crown and a member of this House. Let us first take the position in regard to his membership of this House. It is well known to hon. members that Mr. Hyman some months ago sent to you, Mr. Speaker, what he, in all good faith, believed to be the resignation of his seat. It turned out that Mr. Hyman, acting hastily, not giving thought to details in the matter as one would be likely to do who acted under legal advice, had failed to sign his resignation in the presence of witnesses. You, Mr. Speaker, decided that it was not a valid resignation—it counted for nothing. Then Mr. Hyman, being absent, tried in good faith to give that resignation validity—I speak of the facts as I recollect them, and as they have been disclosed to this House. He telegraphed to some friends in London to sign his resignation as witnesses, in order that the document might be complete and his resignation put in in the form required by the House. If no exception had been taken to the resignation in that form, I do not think that any difficulty could have been raised as to the bringing on of an election at an early date. Unless the resignation had been called in question, it would have stood as a valid resignation and the seat would have been declared vacant. For some reasons best known to hon. gentlemen opposite they saw fit to move that that resignation be referred to the Committee on Privileges, and after an investigation that committee, unanimously if I remember right, reported that the resignation was void. Therefore, not by any action of Mr. Hyman, but by the action of that committee, the resignation which the member for London had sent in all good faith, bearing the signatures of what purported to be witnesses to the resignation, was set aside. The report of that committee was made to the House a short time ago, and I presume it has reached Mr. Hyman, and in consequence of the knowledge he has received, Mr. Hyman has now communicated to His Honour the Speaker his resignation, which I presume has been witnessed in due form and will in all respects comply with the rules of the House. These are the facts in relation to the resignation of Mr. Hyman as a member of this House, and if that resignation has been delayed for some weeks past the responsibility for the delay rests, not upon Mr. Hyman, but upon those who took the trouble to refer the matter to the Committee on Privileges and then reported that that resignation should not be recognized.

With regard to Mr. Hyman's position as a member of the Cabinet, what is there to it? Mr. Hyman is absent through illness. Is that an unusual thing? Is it an unexampled thing that a member of the cabinet being ill should go away and that during his absence his place should be filled by a brother minister? Such things have occurred repeatedly; such things will occur again. It is enough simply to state the facts. The Minister of Public Works being in ill-health and being obliged to go away, tendered his resignation to the Prime Minister; the Prime Minister declined to act upon it, and asked him to reconsider that resignation and remain in the Cabinet. Then arrangements were made with another minister temporarily to discharge his duties. Such a thing has occurred a dozen times, it will occur again within the knowledge of many members of this House, and I do not see what in the world there is for any body to find fault with concerning it.

Now, my hon. friend says the election laws need reforming. I wish to say that I entirely concur in that view, and if he had devoted his speech to the purpose of showing that there was need of such reform, if he had approached it in the spirit of a reformer, I should not find any fault with it. But unhappily he was not content with that, unhappily the tone of his address was a sort of 'I am holier than thou' declaration, a declaration that there are faults in relation to the operation of our election laws, but they are all on the side of the Liberal party. Now, I must protest most earnestly against such an idea as that. I do not say so by way of extenuation or justification. I do not pretend that the wrong-doing of some other man in times past is a justification for wrong-doing which I may do now or may propose to do hereafter. But I do insist that those who approach these questions shall have some sense of fairness and not try to pose before the public with the idea that all the virtue is under their hats, and all the faults are to be found in the persons of their opponents. One would think from what the hon. gentleman said to-day that the record of the Conservative party in the matter of purity of elections was something to be proud of. One would think they could safely compare their record with that of the Liberal party. Indeed the only difficulty one would have in reading my hon. friend's speech would be to imagine that anything could possibly have occurred in the history of the Conservative party unfavourable to them in regard to corruption at elections. Why, the history of the Dominion of Canada is full of the records of corruption by hon. members on the Conservative side. Again I do not say that this is any justification whatever for corruption on the part of Liberals. Not one word I may say here to-day must be for a moment taken as an excuse for wrong-doing, or as any reason why we should not have whatever remedy is possible applied to our election law. But I do again protest against the idea which my hon. friend sought to convey that all the faults are on the side of the Liberal party. Who would imagine, after listening to what my hon. friend has said as to the voiding of an election in Queen's and Shelburne, that such a thing had ever happened as the voiding of an election of a Conservative member? One would think such a thing never happened. My hon. friend knows surely that the great Prime Minister of the Conservative party, Sir John A. Macdonald, was unseated twice for corruption, and that in one case he was almost disqualified in the city of Kingston. In the record of parliament there is a declaration by the judge that corruption was wide-spread on that occasion. Yet the hon. gentleman says that the Liberal party is a party of corruption. Does he know that Sir Hector Langevin was unseated for corruption?

Mr. BARKER. Supposing Sir John A. Macdonald was unseated twenty times that would be no justification for the Reform party.

Mr. FIELDING. That is what I have just said. My hon. friend must have been asleep. I wonder if the leader of the opposition knew that Sir Hector Langevin was unseated for corruption? I wonder if he knew that Sir Charles Tupper was unseated for bribery and corruption? I wonder if he knew that the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was unseated in the province of New Brunswick? I wonder if he knew that up and down the whole ranks of the Conservative party we can point to the names of men who have been unseated? I wonder if he remembers another Conservative Prime Minister, Sir John J. C. Abbott, who was unseated for corruption practically. Why, it is marvellous that the hon. gentleman should presume to lecture the Liberal party on corruption. If we were to search the facts disclosed by the journals of parliament itself we could find the names of many other Conservative members unseated for corrupt practices. But let us come down to more recent times. There is an hon. gentleman who sits behind my hon. friend usually; he is not in his seat to-day, a respected member of this House, who represents Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington). Does my hon. friend know that since the general election his friend, the member for Sherbrooke, confessed to bribery and corruption and was unseated? If I had been willing to confess to bribery and corruption I need not have had the election trial. I was not content to have the seat voided in that way. I was willing that they should go to trial and prove their utmost. But the hon. member for Sherbrooke said to his opponent, as Davey Crockett's coon said: 'Don't shoot —I will come down.'

Mr. LENNOX. It was the other way, was it not?

Mr. FIELDING. No, it was not, and if the hon. gentleman chooses to read the records he will find that the seat was voided for bribery by agents. The record is at hand. I want to call the attention of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition to the fact that these cases are not altogether matters of ancient history. The case of the member for Sherbrooke is a matter of present history. But there is another thing in connection with the election in Queen's and Shelburne to which my hon. friend referred; a very interesting incident occurred which I will mention in a moment. Meantime let me say that in that case my opponents were scraping the two counties, if one might use that expression, with a comb to find witnesses. After calling scores of witnesses, after having an investigation which occupied many days, they were able to disclose only two or three cases of petty corruption, or three or four cases, I forget the exact number ; they were but trifles. They called, I think, fifty or sixty witnesses from all parts of the two counties, and the result of it was three or four petty cases. Then they say that $500 or $600 passed through the hands of Mr. Farrell. Now, my hon. friends opposite must smile when they hear of an election in which only $500 or $600 was spent. I fancy there is not one of them whose election did not cost him, in one form or another, five to ten times that amount. My hon. friend knows something about elections in the county of Halifax. I forgot to mention that his predecessor in this House as member for Halifax, Mr. Thomas E. Kenny, was unseated when a petition was filed against him. I do not know whether my hon. friend was professionally concerned in that matter, but he knows enough about elections in Halifax and in other places to know that the mention of the sum of $500 or $600 in an election contest is calculated to provoke a smile.

I want to say, in regard to Mr. Farrell, that there is no more honourable man in the public life of Canada to-day than Mr. Edward Farrell, of Queen's county. I have never met a more honourable or unselfish man. Any man who, out of this transaction, attempts to cast any reflection upon that man, does him a grave injustice. What was the evidence ; that he was given $500 or $600 in connection with the campaign? Which one of the hon. gentlemen opposite has not had to handle perhaps $500 or $600 in connection with an election campaign? There is nothing which implies the slightest reflection upon Mr. Farrell. Mr. Farrell is a member of a church which, in the constituency he represents, embraces but a handful of people, but so strong is he in the confidence of the people that, although he is a dissenter from the faith of the majority, he has again and again been elected to represent that constituency in the local legislature. I hope Mr. Farrell will be spared to run another election ; and if so, I would wager a sum that no matter who runs against him, Mr. Farrell will head the poll. In the full light of all that occurred in the constituency, the members of the Nova Scotia legislature, knowing him as well as anybody could know him, with little less than unanimity, again invited him to preside over their deliberations as their Speaker, and, not only was he supported by the members of the Liberal party in the House, but one gentleman—I was about to say an opposition member, but it would be more correct, perhaps, to say an independent member, who had been elected against a member of the local government, and who had known Mr. Farrell for many years—proved his faith in him by leaving his party associates and casting his vote in favour of Mr. Farrell as Speaker of the House of Assembly.

In regard to the customs officer at Port Mouton, Mr. Payzant, we had a reference made to him yesterday. Mr. Payzant, to the best of my knowledge and belief, is a good officer of the customs ; he is a good citizen, and he is just the kind of man that my hon. friend has described as making a proper returning officer. He would have the deputy returning officers to be reputable men in the localities in which they live. There is no more reputable man than Mr. Payzant. He was chosen as a semi-judicial officer—a deputy returning officer. What is the complaint against him to-day ? It is that he had a difficulty with a Tory organizer ; and, as the story goes, he was assaulted by Mr. Payzant. It is a strange thing that this story of an assault upon the organizer, Mr. Davidson, has been kept in cold storage for six or seven months, and now comes to us in the form of a declaration in the House of Commons. Why did he not go to the nearest magistrate if he had any complaint against Mr. Payzant? Why did he not send a complaint to the Minister of Customs if he had any complaint to make? The whole thing bears upon its face the evidence of a political story brought in now in the hope of making some political capital out of it. We were told that Mr. Bain, the fishery officer, has been a notorious partisan, exercising his influence unduly for the benefit of the Liberal party. Mr. Bain has been in that office now for some years—I forget how long. I explained yesterday that he has not an office which gives him a living wage. This is a case where a man devotes a portion of his time to the public service, and during the remainder of his time he engages in private business, in order that he may eke out a livelihood.

Mr. SPROULE. Especially in election time.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes ; and a man who takes part in elections in a legitimate way is the best kind of citizen. I do not regard it as evidence against him that he takes part in elections. Mr. Bain has been in this office for years. I have heard these gentlemen complain, as they do to-day, about Mr. Bain being an officer who interferes with politics. But it is a very curious fact that when my return at the general election was investigated in Liverpool, where Mr. Bain resides, and where Mr. Bain was attending every day in the court house, Mr. Bain was not called as a witness, nor was any person called to question any act that Mr. Bain did. How is it then, if Mr. Bain has for years been pursuing this course, how is it that when hon.

gentlemen chased from one end of the county to the other for evidence, they never called Mr. Bain to testify, and how is it that they never offered any evidence in respect to any act Mr. Bain performed? Mr. Bain is, to the best of my knowledge and belief, a faithful and efficient officer; and if, in the exercise of his duty, he has brought any undue pressure to bear upon any of those fishermen, depend upon it my vigilant opponents would have found out. They would have haled Mr. Bain before the election court. As they failed to call in question any act of Mr. Bain's, it is my belief that this story about Mr. Bain is very largely exaggerated, if not wholly invented.

But, in connection with that election, there was a curious incident. I have made some reference to what I might call the ancient history of the Conservative party, and I have made some reference to the facts of modern history in the case of the hon. member for Sherbrooke. I am not alluding to him in any offensive terms, because that which was done in his case might be done to any other member. I mention it because it is a fair illustration to the House. I come now to another incident which occurred in connection with the election in Shelburne and Queen's. The hon. gentleman who was my opponent in the recent election in Shelburne and Queen's was a very eminent citizen, Dr. Weldon, professor in Dalhousie University at Halifax, who formerly was the representative in this House of Albert, N.B. Dr. Weldon made a very remarkable statement. Dr. Weldon is a competent witness, certainly from the point of view of hon. gentlemen opposite. Dr. Weldon made this statement in the presence of hundreds of people in that electoral district. He stated that at the last general election he was waited upon by a deputation of the Conservative party, who desired that he should become the candidate of the party in a certain county. I do not think that he mentioned the county. He said that a deputation of influential men waited upon him at the last general election, when the hon. leader of the opposition filled the same position as he does now, and presumably was guiding and directing the policy of his party in that election. Dr. Weldon stated that he was asked to become the candidate, and that he told the people who had waited upon him—he mentioned the name of one gentleman, who has since passed away, and I do not wish to introduce his name here, but they were representative men in the Conservative party—that he would be willing to be their candidate if they would run an honest election. They said they would not, and he refused to be a candidate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did the hon. gentleman hear him say that?

Mr. FIELDING. I did not, but there are men in this House who did.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I can testify to those words that I heard used by Dr. Weldon.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I confronted him with those words at a public meeting at Lockport, and he did not deny them.

Mr. FIELDING. I have not heard them denied up to this moment, and I do not think they are denied now. Now, we have the Conservative party led by the hon. leader of the opposition coming into this House with these professions that they are holier than those poor miserable wretches who sit around here, undertaking to lecture us on political morality, when one of their most eminent men declares that he could not be a candidate in the last election because the Conservative party deliberately refused to accept an honest election.

Mr. LALOR. That shows the class of candidates we put up in Nova Scotia.

Mr. FIELDING. That shows the class of candidates you put up in Nova Scotia? If my hon. friend wants to put any censure upon Dr. Weldon, let me say that I resent it; that he is an esteemed citizen, and that I shall not allow any Conservative opponent of mine to say one word against him. If the Conservative party did not win in Nova Scotia, it was not because they did not have good candidates; it was because they had a bad policy.

Mr. LALOR. I did not speak in a sneering way; quite the opposite. We put up good, honest candidates, and they were defeated because our opponents had too much money.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend fails to see the point. He did not put Dr. Weldon up, but he put up twenty others who are not so scrupulous as Dr. Weldon, and I am glad to be able to say for the free and independent electors of Nova Scotia that the whole twenty were bowled out.

Mr. LALOR. Bought out.

Mr. FIELDING. If they were bought out, why didn't you petition against the elections; why didn't you prosecute?

Mr. LALOR. I think there is a sample of that in Halifax that has already been cited by the leader of the opposition, where the courts have not allowed justice to be meted out.

Mr. FIELDING. The Halifax election is still in the courts, and there are two election petitions in Halifax, and one of them is intended to disclose how the Conservative party conducted its elections. By and by, when they are tried out and the records are before the country, it will be time enough for my Conservative friends to shout about the purity they have in Halifax, for I know enough about elections in Halifax under Conservative management in days gone by, to know that the Conservatives are the last to be able to throw a stone at their neighbours. I repeat that I do not refer to any one of these things with the slightest intention of justifying wrong-doing or corruption ; far from it ; I realize as fully as the leader of the opposition does the evils which have been disclosed in the courts of the country. But let me say that down in the eastern provinces, with which I am most familiar, while there have been occasional charges of wrong-doing, I think I am correct in saying that never in the history of our Dominion elections—or, for that matter, our local elections—have there been, to my recollection, any charges in the nature of ballot stuffing or ballot switching. Our people down there, both Grit and Tory, have their faults, but their weakness in politics does not run in that direction. If there is anything of that sort in any part of the Dominion, no one would be more anxious than I to see it prevented as far as possible. I say again that if my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) had been content to approach the question simply with a desire to bring about reform ; had he not yielded to the unfortunate temptation to throw insinuations at hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, I would have sympathized very heartily with him. As it is, I sympathize with him in the object which he says he has in view. I realize there is need of electoral reform, but we know from experience there are great difficulties in the way of accomplishing such reform. Two years ago a committee of the House submitted a draft Bill containing some things which were beneficial, but the Bill, when it came to the House, was received with coldness on both sides ; many hon. gentlemen believed it impracticable, and no one was willing to press it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are you referring to Mr. Charlton's Bill?

Mr. FIELDING. To the Bill which arose out of Mr. Charlton's Bill. Mr. Charlton brought in a Bill which I think was chiefly composed of some clauses taken from the New York state law, and it was submitted to a committee on which, I think, the hon. gentleman from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) sat, and that committee made an honest effort to secure reform. Still, the members of the House thought the Bill open to great objection, and that it was unworkable. I have had ideas of my own which I have never been able to crystallize into legislation. I have the view that if we could have something like a coroner's inquest at the close of every election, while the facts are fresh in the minds of the people ; if we could have, as part of the electoral machinery, an investigation into every election, possibly we might have avoided some of the troubles and scandals which have arisen. But those who are better acquainted with the working out of election machinery than I am, tell me that this would not be practicable. As to how this reform can be carried out, I will not presume to say ; that is particularly a matter for the legal members of the House, whose skill in drafting, and whose knowledge of the operation of our electoral laws, particularly qualifies them. All I can say is that, while the resolution of the leader of the opposition is couched in terms I cannot approve of, and while I cannot entirely concur in all he has said, while I must dissent from much he has said, still the object he has in view, namely, the greater safe-guarding of the electoral vote in this country, has my hearty approval and the hearty approval of the government, and there shall be no failure on the part of hon. gentlemen on this side to do that which may be within their power to bring about electoral reform.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). The Minister of Finance has given a very remarkable exhibition of verbal criticism, but I venture to say that no one who has carefully followed his remarks can touch upon any one point as to which he fairly and squarely met the proposition of the leader of the opposition. The first thing that strikes one, in reference to the bona fides with which Mr. Hyman's resignation was put forward, is that a man of the long parliamentary experience of Mr. Hyman, and one who had at his elbow the benefit of the advice of the law officers of the government, could have made such a palpable mistake in the form of his resignation. The people of the country feel that it is rather extraordinary that, under such circumstances, Mr. Hyman should have put in the hands of Mr. Speaker a document which any ordinary member of parliament would know was an illegal resignation. The Minister of Finance ventures to condemn the action of the opposition in having an investigation into that matter, but let me remind him that it was the Prime Minister who suggested the investigation, and, notwithstanding the taunts of the Finance Minister, let me point out that had there not been an investigation and a report of that committee, you would have had an election in London, and, the Conservative candidate being elected, it would be open to any elector of that constituency to say that the Conservative was not legally entitled to his seat, because Mr. Hyman had never legally resigned. And yet the Finance Minister is driven to such a pass in attempting to make out a case, that he has to resort to such an absurd argument. The hon. gentleman says it is not unusual for a minister to be absent during the session. That is what we complain of. Not only is it not unusual, but it is usual. This is my seventh session in this House, and I do not think there has been one session in that time in which one or more of the ministers has not been conspicuously absent during the whole or the greater part of the session, and the result has been that in dealing with estimates we have had acting ministers who have been unfamiliar with the transactions under discussion, and have not been able to give the information to which we were entitled.

The hon. gentleman referred to the record of the Conservative party but he did not pursue the subject; it did not seem to take well on the other side. His followers did not cheer his allusions to Sir John Macdonald and others because they recognized that it was a poor argument by any body, a miserably weak argument by a minister of the Crown, to go back into ancient history, years and years gone by, barred by the statutes of limitation, almost beyond the memory of living men, out of the range of practical politics at all events, and resurrect these incidents in answer to the allegations made on this side of the House. If these abuses existed in the past whether brought about by Conservative or by reformer, why does not the government bring about a remedy? At the beginning of each of the last three sessions, in the speech from the Throne, promises have been made in this respect and yet nothing is done.

The minister says that $500 or $600 in an election is a small amount. But it was not a question of $500 or $600 in an election, it was $500 or $600 handed out by one man to be expended in a community of 600 people, representing not more than 100 electors. I hope for the honour of the constituency that only a few of these votes were purchasable, and so if we measure it by this, as one of the learned judges says, we will see that it indicates to what an extent corruption would be prevalent if it prevailed throughout the riding on the same scale, and we have no knowledge that it did not. My hon. friend refers to Mr. Bain and to the evidence in reference to him read yesterday and again to-day. The minister in connection with that made a suggestion that I am sure will be a surprise to the people of Canada and I venture to say a disappointment to the better class of his Liberal supporters; that suggestion is that the policy which was adopted deliberately in 1905 on the motion of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake), and adopted unanimously by the House, has not only not been carried out, but is not supported by the Finance Minister to-day. The House on that occasion unanimously resolved that:

Whilst it is desirable that every official in the employ of the government of Canada should enjoy perfect freedom of political opinion and the untrammelled exercise of his franchise, in accord therewith, no official should be engaged or be permited to engage in partisan work of any description in the election of a representative to a provincial or Dominion legislature.

That resolution was adopted on July 17, 1905, supported by the Prime Minister; yet the minister says that the policy of the government to-day is that so long as one dollar of the living of one of these officials is earned from any source except the public revenue, that official is the right personage to be employed in promoting the elections on behalf of the government candidate, and, as the statements recently placed before this House show, even in the election of the hon. gentleman himself, and seemingly to an alarming extent, alomst universally, the people employed as the representatives of the government candidate were people in the service of the country and receiving government pay. What did the Prime Minister say was the policy of the government speaking in 1903, 'Hansard,' page 3200:

Mr. Jonasson, I understand, is one of our officials. I do not know in what capacity, but he is in the pay of the government. He ought not take any part in any politics. I say deliberately that for my part I feel as strongly now, in 1903, as I did in 1896, that when a man has taken a position in the civil service, he should take no part whatever in politics.

On the other hand my hon. friend says that it is quite proper for Mr. Bain, a fishery overseer, to engage in the election, because, forsooth, he does not get his whole living from the government. He gets the main part of his living from the government, and he is employed during the election with his livery team, he drives the Minister of Finance around the country, introduces him to the electors, attends the meetings, is with him on the 25th of November and is appointed on the 24th and yet the minister does not know he has been appointed his agent for the election. The minister says it is all right because he does not earn his entire living from the government.

The hon. gentleman did succeed in getting a little measure of applause from his following upon the Weldon incident. He says that Dr. Weldon made the proposition to those who went with him: If you will run an honest election, I will run an honest election, and Dr. Weldon did run against my hon. friend last fall—

Mr. FIELDING. That was not the time.

Mr. LENNOX. I know it, but that is the difference between the Conservative party and the Grits, that while the Conservatives will generally be honest the others never will, and whatever may have been the case in the past we are a party progressing towards better conditions.

Mr. FIELDING. 'When the devil was sick'—

Mr. LENNOX. And when the election was run last fall it was run on those conditions which my friend referred to—

Mr. FIELDING. And I had 1,000 majority.

Mr. LENNOX. And my hon. friend himself is the man who certifies to the honour and integrity of Dr. Weldon.

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly.

Mr. LENNOX. And does he want to take it back now ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, certainly not.

Mr. LENNOX. What surprises hon. gentlemen opposite is that any one could be honest. They never look for it, and when they find a speck of honesty in their ranks they are all astonished and say : Weldon is an honest man.

Mr. FIELDING. Dr. Weldon ran an honest election and was beaten by 1,000.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, but by what means ? The same agencies as were at work in 1904, and when I refer to the facts in connection with that election it will not be surprising at all—when we hear of $600 being spent on 100 electors—it will not be surprising that Dr. Weldon was beaten in running an honest election.

Will my hon. friend tell me, for he is an old politician, when any Grit ever asked that any one on their side should run an honest election ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. I have a letter here which I shall read :

Halifax, December 1, 1906.

Dear Mr. Borden,—Your letter of 28th ultimo just to hand with the 'Hansard' inclosed. If the matter referred to should again come before the House I should like some one to read the subscribed statement.

The 'Hansard' of November 26 reports Mr. Johnston, page 166, as saying that in the recent Shelburne-Queen's campaign Dr. Weldon declared that in 1904 he had declined a party nomination in a Nova Scotia constituency because the party leaders would not agree to rnn a clean election.

That is the matter my hon. friend referred to. Let me read further what Dr. Weldon says :—

My statement in reference to that tender of a nomination in 1904 was that I asked my party to give me a free hand in making an agreement with the government candidate in the county whereby we would both bind ourselves and our friends to run a clean election. My party friends thought my plan impracticable for the reason that the bargain would not be kept by our opponents. Therefore I declined to accept.

I am yours faithfully,

R. C. WELDON.

Mr. LENNOX.

And I think he was a wise man. If there is any gentleman on this side, with the knowledge of the Liberal party that we have, who wanted to enter into such a fool bargain, I am not the one. I think I have referred to every subject to which the hon. minister alluded. I think it is right now that I should pay a little attention to a matter with which my hon. and distinguished friend was closely connected, namely, the election in Shelburne and Queen's. I shall refer to some paragraphs in the evidence in order that I may put on record just what position the hon. gentleman occupies with regard to that election trial. On page 2 of the evidence—the examination for discovery—my hon. friend was being examined :—

Q. Do your know Mr. E. M. Farrell, of Liverpool ?—A. Yes.

Q. He is the local member of the county and speaker of the local legislature?—A. Yes.

Q. He was an active supporter of yours in 1904 ?—A. He is at all times and was then a cordial friend and active supporter.

Further down the hon. gentleman is asked :—

Q. He has been the man principally with whom you have corresponded with regard to the affairs of the county ? The chief man in Queens with whom you correspond ?—A. I have had correspondence with others, but from his position as local member he takes a prominence.

Q. He has a paper ?—A. I have always understood he is proprietor of a paper in the town of Liverpool.

Q. His paper always supports you ?—A. Yes, it is not a political paper. As far as it has any politics it supports me. I know it is classed as a Liberal paper, and I am sure any support he could give me he does.

I do not know what the hon. minister meant by saying it is not a political paper but that it is classed as a Liberal paper and gives him support.

Q. You would so class it ?—A. Yes.

Then on page 4, identifying Mr. Selden, he is asked :—

Q. John Selden ?—A. Yes, I do not know the extent of his support. I count him as one of my active supporters.

Further on he is asked :—

Q. You know J. L. Bain ?—A. Yes.

Q. He is the Dominion fishery officer ?—A. Yes.

Q. He is an active supporter ?—A. He has always been in sympathy with me. I do not know the extent of his support.

Q. Don't you know he was in active support of you in 1904 ?—A. He probably did. He is a public official. I rather discourage public officials taking part.

Pretty moderate, was it not ? The hon. gentleman rather discouraged public officials taking part. That is tantamount to saying, do not be found out. Then he went on :—

I have no doubt he was an active supporter. I dont know to what extent.

Q. You have no doubt he was a strong supporter during that campaign?—A. I have no doubt he probably was there.

What is the meaning of that ?

Q. Don't you know that he was working at Port Mouton ?—A. I may have heard it. I cant contradict it. I would not be surprised if he was an active supporter——

Why, he was driving the hon. gentleman about the country and was at meetings to which he drove him. On page 6 he was asked :—

Q. Do you recollect I. V. Dexter, the harbour master ?—A. Yes, I have no doubt an active supporter. He has always been in sympathy with me. I am only answering from the general fact that they are gentlemen in sympathy with me.

Then on page 7 :—

Q. In regard to appointment of agents, you signed them and gave your friends carte blanche —A. Agents at the polls. I was going to the country.

Q. You delegated that to active supporters in the county ?—A. I had to leave them in blank. I had to trust my friends to appoint trustworthy persons in the booths. It was confined to the representation of me in the booths. I signed nothing for any other purpose.

What is the position of the hon. gentleman with regard to that ? That, after the resolution had been passed in this House that officials should not engage in elections, he was driving with these gentlemen ; that he knew what had been done in the Queen's election; and that he does not give a word of warning to his followers not to appoint government officials to represent him in the election.

Q. John E. Payzant, Port Mouton ?—A. I know he was in sympathy, beyond that I know nothing about him.

Q. Would you place J. Harris Dexter in the same category as John Selden, of Liverpool?—A. I dont know how I would classify them. If he is the Dexter I believe he is, I count him as a political supporter. I dont know how active.

Q. If you were asked if he was an active supporter, you would say 'yes' ?—A. I expect so. We don't always realize expectations.

Now one other reference with reference to this branch of the case. Page 26 of the evidence :

Q. Name any others with whom you would originate corespondence ?—A. I have named those with whom I would correspond. Others might write to me and I would reply.

Q. In Queen's?—A. I have seldom except with the local members Mr. Farrell and Mr. Cooper.

This is for the purpose of showing that not only in this election, but in the election of 1900, Mr. Farrell was the gentleman upon whom, above all others, the hon. gentleman relied. Now, to show the way this thing was manipulated (not going back into ancient history) in the interest of the honest man of the government—because the supporters of my hon. friend delight in pointing to him as being the one honest gentleman in the cabinet ; and I think they exercise a certain amount of judgment in that, for, financially he is undoubtfully honest ; as a politician I do not want to certify. I should have been more inclined to do so if I had not read the evidence in this case. Just a few words from the evidence to show the methods resorted to—merely as samples. Here we have the evidence of Mr. Dexter.

Isaac V. Dexter, sworn, examined by Mr. Ritchie.

I live in Liverpool. I am shipping master, for five or six years. I think.

Q. I need not ask you if you are a good active supporter of the Liberal party ?—A. I might be good, but not very active. I am a government official.

He forgets that afterwards.

Will you tell me who you made this statement to, that on election day some of these fellows got money out of your pocket ?—A. No, I have no recollection who it was.

Q. Did you make the statement more than once?—A. I don't know. I can only say what I remember.

Q. Is your memory subject to these absolute blanks ?—A. Yes.

Q. There must be something in the Liverpool air ?—A. Yes.

Q. How often do you have these blanks ?—A. Sometimes we wish we have poor memories.

'when there is a note due at the bank he afterwards adds.

Q. You have told me that you made the statement since election that on election day some one got money out of your pocket ?—A. I said I might have made it.

Q. Now, I ask you as a matter of fact whether you did make that statement or not ?—A. I think I did. . . .

Q. How much money was taken from you that day ? (Objected to.) A. I could not tell you.

Q. Give me some idea ?—A. It might have been a few dollars.

Q. Can you come a little nearer than that ?—A. No, I don't think so.

Q. What do you mean by a few ?—A. Four or five, something like that, two or three.

Q. Will you say that was all you meant when you made these statements ?—A. Yes.

Q. Who did you suspect got it ?—A. I think Tom Craig got it.

Q. How much ?—A. I don't know, two or three, something like that.

Q. Where was it ?—A. From my pocket.

Q. Where were you and Tom ?—A. In a carriage, I think.

Q. Were you driving him to the polls ?—A. No.

Q. Where were you going ?—A. I don't know just where.

Q. Were you driving from the polls ?—A. It may have been, I am not sure.

And further on :

Q. How did you come to get into the wagon together ?—A. He went up to vote.

Q. And you went up with him ?—A. Yes.

Q. You were driving him to the poll ?—A. Yes, I suppose so.

Q. From your store ?—A. No, somewhere on the main street. I can't remember that.

Q. You think it was then he got the two or three dollars ?—A. No.

Q. When do you think it was he got it ?—A. It was after he had voted, I think.

Q. You were driving together in a wagon when he got it ?—A. Yes.

And, up to this time, he did not know that he had given it, but he knows the time he gave it.

Q. You drove this man up to the poll to vote and after he had voted you were driving with him when you think he got the two or three dollars from you ?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you driving together from the polls ?—A. No, I think it was from the store up the street. I don't know where I was going.

Q. After you took him to the polls and after he had voted you took him for a little drive and it was then you think he got this money out of your pocket ?—A. Yes.

Q. Which pocket was it in ?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. Was it in your waistcoat ?—A. No.

Q. In your coat pocket ?—A. Probably.

Q. Outside coat pocket ?—A. Yes.

Q. The side nearest to Mr. Craig ?—A. I think it is likely.

That is the kind of men they have engaged. Now, if we turn over a page or two, we come to something more :

Q. In fact you were willing for him to have it, and knew he got it and made no objection ?—A. Yes.

Q. You intended he should have it ?—A. Yes, I suppose so.

Q. That is what you put it there for ?—A. Perhaps so, I can't go back to bring up all these points.

Q. You say perhaps you put it there for him to get, have you any doubt in your mind, don't you know that is what you put it there for ?—A. Yes, I suppose I did.

Q. Craig knew the money was going to be there for him ?—A. I don't know.

Q. Had you not told him ?—A. I suppose I had.

Q. When was it you told him the money would be in your pocket for him ?—A. I don't know.

Q It was that day ?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Was it not as you were driving to the polls to vote you told him that the money would be in your pocket ?—A. I could not tell you. I don't remember. I don't know. There was no promise.

Q. Your idea was that you were not going to promise him out and out any money ?—A. I did not make him any promise.

Q. You intended that he should get the money, and he did get it ?—A. That is it, I think.

Then he is asked :

Q. Do you know Roscoe Hatt ?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you canvas him?—A. Yes.

Q. Asked him to vote for Mr. Fielding ?—A. Yes.

Q. What employ was Hatt in ?—A. I think he was in our employ. I think in one of the packets.

Mr. LENNOX.

Q. Did he get any money from you ?—A. No.

Q. Or any credit on the books ?—A. No.

Q. Any money, directly or indirectly ?—A. No.

Q. What inducement did you hold out to him to vote?—A. No inducement of any kind.

Q. Did you take any drives with him ?—A. No, not to my knowledge. I can't remember.

Q. Do you know of any more money being taken out of your pocket besides the money Craig got ? A. No.

Q. Did you pay any money to any person other than Craig ? A. No.

Q. Directly or indirectly?—A. No.

Q. Did you canvass Wm. Waggoner ? A. I think I did

Q. Ask him to vote for Mr. Fielding ? A. Yes.

Q. Did not give him anything at all ? A. No.

Q. Did you have any other scheme for Waggoner ? A. No, gave him nothing.

Q. Nothing for Hatt?—A. No.

Q. Did you see Mr. Fielding during the campaign ? A. Yes. He was there only a day or so. I think I saw him.

Q. He knew you were a prominent supporter ? A. I don't know about that. I was not supposed to be. I am a government official.

Q. Appointed by Mr. Fielding ? A. I suppose so. I think five or six years ago.

Q. You have known Mr. Fielding before that ? A. Yes.

Q. Intimately ? A. Yes.

Now we come to the evidence of Mr. Roscoe Hatt. This witness has sworn that he did not pay any money to Hatt, but this is what Hatt says himself :

I live at Liverpool. I voted at the last Dominion election. I know I. V. Dexter.

Q. Did he have any conversation with you before the election about your vote ? A. Yes. He asked me how I was going to vote. I told him I did not know. He asked me to give him a lift. I suppose that meant a vote for Mr. Fielding. I said I would not give him any answer. He said he would see me later. He saw me later on election day in his shop. We had a conversation there. He asked me then how I was going to vote. I told him how I was going to vote. He told me when he was asking me the first day 'If you help us out I will make you a present.' He did not say of what. That was the first occasion when I told him that I did not know.

Q. How long before the election did he see you the second time?—A. It was election day.

Q. What took place then?—A. I saw him two or three times. He asked me when I was going to vote. I said I was not in a hurry. He said: When you get ready to go up come in the office. He said: There will be a little something there for you. I went in and got a little something. It was an envelope. There was money in it, $3. I got that not from his hands.

Q. Who did you get this envelope from ? A. I got it off the desk. There was nobody in the office. I got it in the office of I. V. Dexter, the last witness.

Then under cross-examination the witness says :

Q. You seemed to be in the market when he asked you how you intended to vote and you would not give him any answer ? A. I would not give him a decided answer.

Q. Trying to see how much you would get ? A. No.

Q. Were you offering it for sale to both sides, were you trying to see what you would get from both sides ? A. No, I did not deal with anybody else. I was in his vessel.

A government official working under a government official, the consequence of having these government officials take part in elections comes out in this way.

I was in his vessel. I never asked him for anything.

He might have been forced to vote, he was under the pressure of a government official. He is here being cross-examined by the defence in order to break down his evidence, and try to show that we were as guilty as they. Then he is asked by the judge :

Q. How did you know it was for you ? A. He said before you go to vote, go to the office and there will be an envelope on the table for you. I went to the table and got the envelope. There was nobody there. I did not know what was in it before I voted. I am not in his employ now. I left that fall. I am in the government employ on the bridge.

And so he ought to be in the government employ. He was not in the government employ then, he is in the government employ at the time this examination is going on. Now I will refer to the evidence of Mr. Selden. John F. Selden sworn and examined by Mr. Ritchie :

Q. Would you mind telling me where you got this $100 you paid to Henry Tupper ? A. From Mr. E. M. Farrell.

Q. E. M. Farrell is the local member for Queen's country ? A. Yes.

Q. And Speaker of the House of Assembly at that time ? A. I do not know.

Q. He has represented Queen's for a number of years in the local legislature ? A. Yes.

Q. How much money did you get from him altogether. A. I could not tell you exactly, somewhere in the neighbourhood of $500, between five and six probably.

Q. Not any more than that ? A. Not any more than that I don't think.

Q. When did you get it from Farrell? A. Some time before the election, probably a week.

Q. Where ? A. In my office.

Q. What did you do with it ? A. Put it in the safe.

Q. Ultimately I mean ? A. I paid it out. I gave the last witness some money. I could not say how much. The rest went to different sections of the country in small lots.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. A. CAMPBELL (Centre York) moved :

That in accordance with the recommendation contained in the 17th report of the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, said committee be granted leave to sit while the House is in session.

He said : I may say that there are several Bills yet before the committee, they are of quite a contentious character, and I think they will require a good deal of consideration. We find that one hour, from ten to eleven o'clock, is hardly sufficient and I hope the House will allow the committee the privilege of sitting while the House is in session.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE. I wish to say a few words in regard to a question I was bringing forward earlier in the day. That is in regard to what I consider rather an abuse of the privileges in having these Bills introduced in the Senate after the date at which they can be introduced in the Commons. Rule 88 is systematically and persistently violated this year. It is as follow :

Any person desiring to obtain any private Bill, shall deposit with the clerk of the House, at least eight days before the meeting of the House, a copy of such Bill in the English or French language, with a sum sufficient to pay for translating and printing the same ; the translation to be done by the officers of the House, and the printing by the Department of Public Printing, and if such Bill is not deposited by the time above specified, the applicant shall, in addition to the charges for printing and translation pay the sum of five dollars for each and every day which intervenes between the said eighth day before the meeting of the House and the date of the filing of the Bill; but such additional charge shall not exceed in the aggregate in any one case the sum of two hundred dollars.

2. After the second reading of the Bill, and before its consideration by the committee to which it is referred, the applicant shall in every case pay the cost of printing the Act in the statutes, and a fee of two hundred dollars.

ADDITIONAL CHARGES.

3. The following charges shall also be levied and paid in addition to the foregoing, viz :

(a) When any rule of the House is suspended in reference to a Bill or the petition therefor, for each such suspension one hundred dollars.

(b) When a Bill is presented in the House after the eighth week of its session and before the end of the twelfth week, one hundred dollars.

Then it goes on to provide that after the twelfth week of the session the charge shall be $200. The rule provided a penalty for those who do not introduce their Bills within a reasonable time. One reason for the introduction of these Bills into the Senate is to avoid these penalties ; another is because they could not be introduced unless this rule was suspended in this House, and while we suspended the rule once or twice this session it was decided by the House that it could not hereafter be suspended except for very good cause. Since that I have noticed that a great many Bills have been introduced in the Senate and in due course they come to us here. That is due to the fact that they have no standing rule in the Senate in regard to the introduction of Bills. It is becoming a very common procedure to introduce private Bills into the Senate and then bring them down here. This session it has resulted in sending us a lot of Bills after the date at which they could be introduced here and it tends very materially to lengthen the session and to increase the amount of work we have to do. I think that there should be a consultation held between the two Houses with the object of reaching an understanding that the rule for the introduction of Bills shall be the same in both Houses, and that the examination by the clerk of the Private Bills Committee should be the same. I merely bring this to the attention of the hon. acting leader of the House (Mr. Fielding) because I think it should be taken up and dealt with in order that we may reach some finality in regard to the observance of the rules of the House if it is possible to do so.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I think that the promoters of private Bills hardly escape the penalties as easily as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) suggests by introducing their Bills in the Senate. There is a provision in the rules that in order to avail themselves of the claim for exemption from the penalties when a Bill is introduced in the Senate they must within six weeks of the opening of the session have sent a petition to this House.

Mr. SPROULE. By what rule ?

Mr. FIELDING. The latter part of the rule that my hon. friend referred to. He will find that there is a provision made as follows :

> The additional charges provided for in section 3 of this rule shall also apply to private Bills originating in the Senate; provided, however, that if a petition for any such Bill has been received by this House within the first six weeks of the session, the additional charges made under subsections (b) and (c) of section 3 shall not be levied thereon.

Mr. SPROULE. What rule is that ?

Mr. FIELDING. The latter part of rule 88.

Mr. SPROULE. Of course these were introduced long after six weeks.

Mr. FIELDING. Of course this rule would apply where no good reason could be given for the delay. The rule of this House is that these Bills must be introduced earlier but if we were to ask them to comply with the six weeks rule I do not know that any great confusion would arise. I think it is rather desirable that these private Bills should be introduced into the Senate.

Mr. SPROULE. I admit that.

Mr. FIELDING. In the early part of the session the Senate is not too busy, while we are apt to be. I would rather encourage the idea that Bills of that character should be introduced into the Senate, but of course they should not be so introduced for the purpose of evading any wholesome rule of the House. Recently, a professional gentleman interested in a Bill wished a return of extra fees imposed on him by virtue of this rule, but I pointed out he had not protected himself by sending the petition to this House.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think the rule has been complied with in any of these cases.

Mr. FIELDING. Then the fees will have to be paid.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to depend on the date on which the petition is presented to this House. I would think they cannot escape. It would be very desirable that the rules as to fees should be the same in both Houses.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They do not escape the fees. I saw a cheque the other day for nearly $5,000 for one Bill that came from the Senate. I agree that it is desirable that some of these Bills should be introduced in the upper House.

Mr. SPROULE. I agree to that, and I think if we could divide the work more it would be better. I object, however, to the introduction of Bills so late, because it does prolong the session.

Motion agreed to.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 163), to incorporate the Predential Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Gervais.

Bill (No. 164), to incorporate the Fidelity Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Johnston.

SUPPLY—FRAUD IN ELECTIONS.

House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Fielding to go into Committee of Supply, and the motion of Mr. R. L. Borden in amendment thereto.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe) (resuming). Mr. Speaker, when you left the chair at six o'clock I had dealt with that portion of the election petition against the return of the Minister of Finance, which concerned bribery by agents. As showing the necessity for legislation such as has been advocated by the leader of the opposition, I am reminded of the very broad statement made by the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) that nearly all the government candidates in the province of Quebec were furnished with money to run their elections ; emphasizing the desirability of passing stringent laws against contributions to electoral funds. I now come to a branch of the case which is much more serious than bribery by agents, although that is very grave, having regard to the fact that the chief agent of the Minister of Finance in 1904 was the same gentleman who engineered his elections in 1900. There is also the fact, that the Minister of Finance, one of the very prominent members of the government, the mainstay of the leader of the government, stands charged on the records with personal bribery, and that being so charged he saw fit to take the position that he would refuse to answer certain questions which would have established his guilt or his innocence. The courts have maintained his pretension in that regard. The Minister of Finance, is in the unfortunate position that there is upon the records of the Supreme Court of Canada a statement that the Minister of Finance is guilty of personal bribery, and that he has refused to answer certain questions which would have elucidated the charge.

Mr. FIELDING. So that there may be no misunderstanding will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) permit me to say : I did not refuse to answer any questions having any relation whatever to the election which was at issue in the court. I was asked questions regarding elections of previous years ; I was advised by my counsel that these questions had nothing to do with the issue, and the court so held.

Mr. LENNOX. That is perfectly true, and I was about to bring out that point because I want to be fair to the Minister of Finance for whom I have the greatest personal respect. The inquiry was directed to transactions in the election of 1900, but only for the purpose of establishing that Mr. Farrell was agent of the Minister of Finance at that election, that subsequent to 1900 Mr. Farrell presented an account, and while the Minister of Finance saw good reasons why it should not be paid, he ultimately decided to pay it and in defiance of the law, because it was beyond the time that you could legally pay election expenses. The Minister of Finance then took the position that he would not divulge the items of that account or any particulars in regard to it. If we had the details of that account, it would have gone to the question as to whether or not, in employing the same chief agent in 1904, the minister had in his mind a desire to adopt the unlawful methods pursued in 1900. I will do better, however, by referring very briefly to the actual records before the court and the evidence and let the House and the country decide as to whether it is a happy spectacle to find the Minister of Finance in the position in which we find him and whether it is not the most glaring instance of the necessity of amending the law and of the duty particularly laid upon the government to amend the law so that such a failure of justice shall not occur again.

Turning to the factum presented by the petitioner, I find this statement, as taken from the records, as to the ground on which the petition was presented. Sections 23 and 24 of these pleadings set forth :

> That before, during and after the said elections of 1900 the respondent was guilty of bribery, treating and other corrupt practices within the meaning of the Dominion Elections Act, 1900, and the Acts in amendment thereof.

And in the next section that :

> After the said election of 1900 the respondent paid money. . . in discharge or repayment of money wholly or in part expended in bribery and corrupt practices at said election of 1900.

It goes on then to allege that :

> At the trial the examination in aid of discovery of the respondent was put in evidence and it appeared from such evidence that on said examination the respondent admitted that after the election of 1900 he paid some election bills which he had not authorized and that the respondent on such examination refused to answer as to whom he had paid these bills to, or what they were for, or the amount of them....

Now, Sir, we have this, as a result in connection with the election of 1900, Mr. Farrell, in a way which the minister refused to disclose, expended money which the minister first refused to repay. That the same chief agent of the minister was again employed and expended large sums of money in 1904, from a source which is undisclosed, establishing evidence of a system, as was contended by the counsel for the petitioner, and that with the knowledge of the wrong-doing of 1900 the minister secured the services of the same chief agent again in 1904.

Now, having referred to what was in issue, I shall refer to the attitude of the minister in reference to these disclosures :

> Q. After the election of 1900 would you tell me whether you received or were called upon for any unpaid election bills ?
> (Objected to on the ground that all the charges in connection with the 1900 election had been struck out of the petition.)
> Mr. RITCHIE.—The ground is to show a system. The same gentleman supported Mr. Fielding in 1904 as in 1900.

And the chief agent was a gentleman whom my hon. friend saw fit to laud today as being one of the whitest men he had ever known.

Mr. FIELDING. Hear, hear.

Mr. LENNOX. I will show something about that presently.

His Lordship. I will allow the question.

His lordship says he will allow the question for the purpose of showing the system, and mark the adroit way in which the minister answers it—and it is not a very full, complete or satisfactory way :

A. Adopting His Lordship's ruling if bills were paid on the eve of the election having relation to the former election, they might have a corrupt influence on this one, and answering it in that way no such bills were paid.

Bills were paid, the minister afterwards admitted it. He will not tell the amount, but that is the first answer, saying that he adopts the ruling of the judge that no such bills were paid.

Mr. FIELDING. That is not the point. The ruling of the judge was that if it could be shown that if the bills in question were paid on the eve of the second election, they might be held to have connection with the previous election ; and I said that I would accept that view of His Lordship, and say they were not paid on the eve of the second election or anywhere near it.

Mr. LENNOX. I accept that as what the minister believes it to be, but that is not what is on record, and by the record I will have to go. The record is:—

Q. After the election of 1900 would you tell me whether you received or were called upon for any unpaid election bills ?

(Objected to on the ground that all the charges in connection with the 1900 election had been struck out of he petition.)

Mr. Ritchie—The ground is to show a system. The same man supported Mr. Fielding in 1904 as in 1900.

His Lordship—I will allow the question.

His Lordship does not allow it on any ground but on the ground mentioned as showing the system. Then my hon. friend makes the adroit answer I have referred to. Proceeding :

Q. Did you, after the election of 1900 receive any unpaid election bills ?—A. I refuse to answer the question.

Q. Did you within a few months after the election of 1900 receive any bills for election expenses ?

A. I have no recollection of the particular time of receiving them. I did receive some bills, but not at any time in relation to the following election. I did receive bills soon after the election of 1900. It was represented that the bills were unpaid and I was asked to pay them. I had never authorized them but I reluctantly paid them. That was years before this election.

Q. Who presented them to you ?

(Objected to on the ground that it was put in the petition but was struck out on the ground that it was entirely foreign to the election now in question.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. Ritchie says he tendered it as evidence of a system.)

A. Under the advice of counsel I refuse to answer.

(His Lordship to Mr. Ritchie—Confine yourself to the time of payment.)

Q. When did you pay them ?—A. I paid them shortly after the election. It would be at least two or three years before the last election. I think the bills were presented in 1901 and arranged in 1901 or 1902.

Q. How many bills were presented to you ? —A. On the advice of counsel I refuse to answer that question.

His Lordship—I do not supppoe I am in a position to do anything except to report to the court.

Q. How much did you pay ?—A. Under the advice of counsel I decline to answer.

Q. How many separate bills were sent to you?—A. Under the advice of counsel I decline to answer.

Q. Who made these claims upon you?—A. Under the advice of counsel I decline to answer.

Q. Were any of these claims made by any of the persons whose names you have mentioned as supporters of yours at the election of 1904 ?—A. Under the advice of counsel I decline to answer.

Q. You decline to give any information in regard to the amount of money that was actually paid by you for illegitimate expenditures in the campaign of 1900 ?—A. The use of the word ' illegitimate ' is improper.

Q. You decline to state what amount of money you personally paid after the election of 1900 for illegal and unauthorized expenditures at that election ? (Form of question objected to.)

Q. Do you decline to state what amount of money you personally expended after the election of 1900 for unauthorized expenditures on your behalf at that election ?—A.Under the advice of counsel I decline to answer any questions except those already placed on record about the previous election.

Q. I understand you to have said you did make payments—A. I stated that certain representations were made to me that money was due. I did not authorize them and was reluctant to pay them, but decided after consideration to pay them, which I did.

Q. You won't tell us what they were for ? A. My answer is the same as previously.

Q. What was the amount ?—A. Under the advice of counsel I adhere to my answer.

Q. Who made the demand on you?—A. I adhere to my answer.

Q. You won't give us an idea of the amount? —A. I adhere to my answer.

Q. You won't give us any inkling as to the persons to whom payment was made ?—A. I adhere to my answer.

Q. Tell me whether you received any bills for 1904 ?—A. I have received some bills for 1904.

Q. From whom?—A. I could not from memory tell you. I made returns to the agent.

Q. I do not mean these, I suppose it is not the time yet for you to have any other bills sent in ?—A. That is not the question.

Mr. RITCHIE. I propose to ask if the persons who sent these bills were among the list of the men whom he named as active supporters.

His LORDSHIP. I think that would be legitimate

Hon. Mr. DRYSDALE. I have instructed him not to answer.

Q. Having heard the judge do you decline to answer ?—A. Under the advice of counsel I decline to answer.

That is the position the hon. gentleman took.

Mr. FIELDING. Did my hon. friend never pay any bills after election ? Let him that is without sin cast the first stone.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not know what I would do if they came in late. I do not recollect that any did come in late, as a matter of fact ; but I can tell the hon. gentleman that I never paid or had knowledge of the payment in any election of any one dollar or cent for illegitimate and illegal expenses.

Mr. BERGERON. You would have been able to answer.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, I would have answered all right. The position I take is this that the hon. minister knows whether they were legitimate expenses or not. It was in his power to clear that up, but the minister had the right to refuse under the law —a law I admit and deplore. He took that position and stuck to it and that is the position in which he is to-day.

Mr. FIELDING. My electors seem to have been well pleased with it.

Mr. BERGERON. We have no answer in the trial.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend has the answer of the court on a matter of personal bribery.

Mr. LENNOX. The answer of the court is this, that in the absence of any right to go into this, there was no evidence about it.

Mr. FIELDING. The court did not say in the absence of any evidence, but denied the right to go into it.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand exactly the stand taken by my hon. friend. He took the position that the court had no right to inquire into the facts. He did not ask the court to go into the facts and clear him of the slightest imputation if he was innocent, but he refused to allow the facts to be gone into and consequently allowed that imputation to rest on him for all time to come. That is the position in which he stands to-day. I want to say a word about Mr. Farrell, and I do not think I can do better than quote the language used by my hon. friend at a meeting in Halifax on November 2nd, 1907 and reported in the columns of the Halifax 'Chronicle'. There was a reception in the Masonic Hall and a grand time on the 1st of November. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance was there and spoke with his usual eloquence, and he made use of one terse, concise phrase which I wish to quote. 'The Chronicle' says:—

He paid a well deserved tribute to Mr. Farrell, M.P., than whom, he said, we never found a more loyal co-worker, never a cleaner, whiter public man.

Now we have the record of Mr. Farrell and we know his career. We know that he was the chief agent of the Minister of Finance in 1900. We know that he was the disburser of the election funds at that time. He was not the authorized disburser of funds, because he was not the legal agent, but he was the man who through whom percolated that portion of it which did not appear in the election returns. He went to the Minister of Finance and made a demand for how much we do not know, but probably much more than $500 or $600. The minister did not like to pay it but he was held up and did pay it. Mr. Farrell was the man who got it. And if we look backward to what occurred, we must conclude that this gentleman was no whiter in 1900 than he is at present. But we find that in 1904 this gentleman, who was spoken of by the Finance Minister as a man than whom none could be cleaner or whiter, is the man who handed out this $600 of which we have no track and for the corrupt disbursement of which the court set aside the election of my hon. friend. Let me look at this place again. It is terse and concise but I do not know that it was judicious or wise. But there must be a quid pro quo for these things in some form or other, and I am not surprised that my hon. friend was inclined to describe by this phrase the gentleman who had worked well and effectively in the election and whom he described as a co-worker. Mark the phrase 'co-worker.' What does that mean ? They were working hand in hand, with the same common object in view. They were strengthening the moral foundations as the Hon. G. W. Ross used to say in Ontario. Mr. Farrell we know of. We know the nature of his work. We know his object and aims. We know how he disbursed the boodle in this election of my hon. friend, and he is the gentleman whom my hon. friend designates as a co-worker, and we can judge of the position of matters by that description.

I want to refer in closing just to a line or two of the judgment. The judgment was by Mr. Weatherbe, Chief Justice, and by a gentleman of whom we all have some recollection, Mr. Justice Russell. Mr. Justice Russell is out of the tainting atmosphere of politics, but our recollection of him is that he was not colourless while he was here, and we may be right in assuming that he would not go further than the evidence warranted in the case. He gave a pretty clear presentiment of a good many of the deeds of bribery that occurred in this matter :

The respondent in the present case, in consequence of circumstances that had occurred in connection with a previous election, had given his principal supporter in this country, Mr. Farrell, M.P.P., to understand, long before the election that he would not hold himself responsible for any but legitimate expenses and no doubt intended that his election should be fairly and purely conducted.

That statement may be well founded, but with the knowledge of what occurred in 1900, it is rather marvellous that the hon. gentleman saw fit to employ the same chief agent in the subsequent election.

While the respondent had had correspondence with others, he admits, in answer to the question whether Mr. Farrell was not the principal person with whom he had communicated in regard to the affairs of the county, that while he had corresponded with others, Mr Farrell 'from his position as local member would take prominence.'

He was also the proprietor of a paper which, although not a political paper, was classed as a liberal paper, and respondent is sure that any support Mr. Farrell could give him he did give.

And further on,

It was necessary that he should have some person or persons who should attend to the various matters requiring attention in the course of the campaign. It would not be common sense to assume under the known and well recognized conditions of public life in this country that he intended or desired that the issue of the contest should be left to be determined by the unsolicited and spontaneous action of the electors. He had had several persons, among whom was Mr. Farrell, actively engaged in the previous contest of 1900 and the interview and the admonition, already referred to suggests an inference very obvious, though not of course conslusive, that the intended and expected that Mr. Farrell should exert himself in like manner in any future contest.

Then turning to a few of the cases of bribery which cropped up in the course of the election, we come to this summary from the learned judge :

As these acts done by Tupper have been proved by what I consider sufficient evidence and in themselves must lead to the avoiding of the election it is not necessary that I should examine the evidence in the other cases. I have some doubt whether I. V. Dexter, who bribed Hutt and Craig, has been proved to be an agent of the respondent, and rather incline to the view that he was not. The agency of D. C. Mulhall is not so clear or conclusive as that of Seldon or Tupper, but I incline to consider it sufficient to make the respondent liable for his acts in the bribery of Wolf, Hanson, and Morrison, I doubt if the agency of Freeman is proved who gave a bribe to Keens, or of Locks, who hired teams (or a team?) from Hall for use on the day of the election.

Now, let me give an extract or two from the judgment of Chief Justice Weatherbe :

Now, I think with regard to this question of agency we are well within the authorities of the ablest judges.

In the case before us there is no other crucial point.

If Farrell, Seldon, Tupper and Mulhall and possibly some others mentioned, were not agents, the respondent had no agents in a most important district.

He left those men prominent, active, experienced and full of resources to manage the election in his absence.

Very full of resources they appear to be.

He was long enough in the country—about ten days, I think—to take in the situation. And I suppose no one can say that his election was quite sure. He must have known that much depended on his old and more recently tried friends.

If he were not depending on these men, on whom could he depend ? He was not depending in vain on their activity. The respondent most frankly admits to the fullest extent that he did depend on them—he put himself in their hands.

I think if Mr. Justice Armour in the Cornwall case (1 Hodgins 803) or in the North Ontario case (1 Hodgins 785) had had the evidence now before us for consideration in determining whether these four men at least were not agents within the law relating to elections, it is quite evident by his language that he would not have thought it necessary to elaborate reasons. . . . .

With respect to the unlawful use of money—most of which was suddenly produced within a week of the polling day from the hands of Farrell—between five and six hundred dollars—what can be said ?

The proof is clear that it was used, as it was intended to be used on the election.

The Farrell fund in addition to what was otherwise used or that disappeared and of which not the slightest trace on record remains, was about $600. This seems to have been absorbed among a population of about 600—an average of a dollar per head.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) allow me to ask him a question ? Is he able to find any evidence which will sustain that finding of Chief Justice Weatherbe—that last portion which he has just read ?

Mr. LENNOX. I think I read evidence this afternoon that sustained it. If my hon. friend (Mr. A. K. Maclean) thinks that evidence is not sufficient, I can say that I am quite clear that I came upon abundant evidence to sustain it in going through the documents. I have finished with the matter, and I am in judgment of the House as the Minister of Finance is in the judgment of the country.

Mr. FIELDING. I have had judgment passed.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) has had judgment to the effect that the man whom he had in charge of his elections in 1900 was the same man whom he left in charge of it in 1904, and that man was proven guilty of distributing money for illegal and corrupt purposes. And with the knowledge that he selected that man for such a position he has the hardihood—and having that hardihood, it is no wonder that he interrupts me now—to describe Mr. E. M. Farrell as one; 'than whom he never found a more loyal co-worker, never a cleaner, whiter public man.'

Mr. ALEXANDER JOHNSTON (South Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to detain you and this honourable House at great length this evening. I would not have been induced to participate in this discussion at all, were it not that certain events of the past year with which I have been somewhat connected have been referred to in this debate, as they were in the debate of yesterday. The observations of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) this afternoon in support of the present motion, and his observations in support of his resolution yesterday were founded largely upon the events in the election in Queen's and Shelburne last October, in which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance was returned. There are some facts in connection with that election which must be known to the leader of the opposition, but which that hon. gentleman, no doubt for reasons satisfactory to himself, did not give to the House either in his speech of to-day or his speech of yesterday. It will be my privilege to state certain of those facts for the benefit of the friends of the leader of the opposition. I think they should be in possession of certain information which he did not seem disposed to give them. My hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), towards the close of his observations had a good deal to say in regard to the election trial which resulted in the unseating of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. The leader of the opposition also had a good deal to say about that judgment. But, for some reason, the leader of the opposition did not feel disposed to make known to this House certain features of that judgment, and the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), taking his cue no doubt, from his leader also refrained from disclosing these features of the judgment referred to. I call the attention of the leader of the opposition to this judgment. He has it in his desk. I should be glad if he would produce it and read the very first paragraph of Chief Justice Weatherbe, which exonerates absolutely the Minister of Finance. Why did the leader of the opposition withhold from this House the opening paragraph of this judgment? For some time we have been accustomed to hear my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) spoken of in this House and in this country as being eminently fair. But, if he desires to maintain his reputation for fairness, he must not continue to pursue such tactics as those which he has adopted this afternoon. If he desires to maintain any reputation for fairness he must see to it that he not only produces all the facts to suit himself, but he must produce the facts as they are, and not any garbled version of the judgment of the court. This House and the country are entitled to the whole facts, and my hon. friend this afternoon saw fit to withhold the facts. For what purpose? Evidently not for the purpose of being fair, and in withholding the opening paragraph of that judgment of Mr. Justice Weatherbe which distinctly exonerates my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, he was not pursuing tactics which will add to his reputation for fairness.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In what way does any other part of the judgment qualify anything that I read?

Mr. JOHNSTON. My hon. friend was careful to select from the judgment certain paragraphs that he thought would answer his own purpose, and to omit those which were distinctly favourable to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In what way, I say, does any other part of the judgment qualify what I have read?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do not say that it qualifies it in any way, but I want to get at the real facts which this House and this country are entitled to know.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was I bound to read all the evidence, too?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do not know that my hon. friend was bound to read all the evidence, but I do say that if he had been careful to maintain the reputation for fairness which some people in this country thinks he has, he might have felt constrained to read some portions of the evidence which he saw fit not to read.

Mr. BOYCE. What are they?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Well, my hon. friend from West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) must not expect too much. I will send him a copy of the evidence; it is easily available.

Mr. BOYCE. You read it, I don't want to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Now so much for that.

Mr. BARKER. Why don't you read it?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I will since my hon. friend is so anxious. The opening paragraph of Mr. Justice Weatherbe's judgment is as follows:

> What impresses a judge with the hardship of the position of a respondent who strives to serve his country during the best years of his life, in parliament, and who is guided by the instincts of a statesman, is that he has to suffer for the illegal conduct of mere politicians.

Absoultely exonerating the Minister of Finance in that connection. I say it was only fair that that paragraph should have been read by the hon. gentleman as well as the others that he chose to read for his own purpose. I need not dwell further upon this judgment. The people of Nova Scotia have given their verdict and they have spoken in no uncertain terms. They knew all the facts that have been mentioned here to-day, and they, who were the people most interested, have given their verdict upon them. I am sure, however, that their verdict was not quite palatable to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, but it was entirely favourable to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. Now, the Conservative party on that occasion had their candidate in the county of Queen's and Shelburne, and reference has been made to certain observations of his this afternoon. My hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) read a letter from Dr. Weldon, which purports to be an answer to certain observations made by myself on the 26th day of November last in this House. This letter is addressed to the hon. the leader of the opposition, who of course did not see fit, very properly so, to bring this letter to the notice of the House, because he recognized in this letter not a denial of the statement I made on the 26th of November, but a distinct confirmation of the position I then took. If the House will permit me I will read a paragraph of my speech on the 26th of November. What I said was this :

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman can only read it by consent of the House, as it forms part of a previous debate of this session.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I realize that I am somewhat out of order, but in order to make my position better understood I think it is only fair that I should read the paragraph.

Mr. FIELDING. There is also this position to be considered, that the hon. member for South Simcoe read a letter for the purpose of contradicting an hon. gentleman, and I certainly think my hon. friend has a right to reply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Nobody is objecting.

Mr. JOHNSTON. In the course of my speech I said this :

Dr. Weldon was a candidate in 1896 and in 1900. He was not a candidate in 1904, but he was closely identified with the Conservative party, and it is a fair presumption that he knew well the history of the Conservative party in that province. In the recent contest in Queen's and Shelburne he was giving to the electors some sidelights on the history of the Conservative party. He told the electors of that county over and over again that he was asked in 1904 to become the candidate of the Conservative party in one of the constituencies in Nova Scotia. He said he was waited upon by the leaders of the Conservative party in the city and county of Halifax who were running my hon. friend the leader of the opposition as their candidate, and asked him, Dr. Weldon, to become their candidate. We do not know where he was to become their candidate, we only know that he was asked by the leaders of the Conservative party in the city of Halifax who were running the leader of the opposition as their candidate, to stand for one of the counties and he says that the proposition he made to them was this : If I become your candidate will you consent to run a pure and clean election in the constituency ? They instantly told him that they would not, and the moment they told him that they would not, he refused to become their candidate.

That was the statement I made.

Mr. BARKER. Does the hon. gentleman mean to assert that all this is confirmed by the letter of Dr. Weldon?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I certainly do, and I shall be able to satisfy the hon. member for Hamilton, difficult proposition as it may be. I think I shall be able to satisfy even him that the statement I made on the 26th November last is absolutely borne out by the testimony of Dr. Weldon himself, as given to this House by the hon. member for South Simcoe. I shall take up the letter and read it for the information of the hon. member for Hamilton. I am quite satisfied that every other hon. gentleman on the other side of the House is already convinced that what I say is correct, and therefore I will devote my attention exclusively to the hon. member for Hamilton. Here is the letter of Dr. Weldon :

Halifax, December 1, 1906.

Dear Mr. Borden,—Your letter of the 28th ultimo just to hand, with 'Hansard' inclosed. If the matter referred to should again come before the House I should like some one to read the subscribed statement.

The 'Hansard' of November 26th reports Mr. Johnston, page 166, as saying that in the recent Shelburne-Queen's campaign Dr. Weldon declared that in 1904 he had declined a party nomination in a Nova Scotia constituency because the party leaders would not agree to run a clean election.

My statement in reference to that tender of a nomination in 1904 was that I asked my party to give me a free hand in making an agreement with the government candidate in the county whereby we would both bind ourselves and our friends to run a clean election.

I direct especially the attention of my hon. friend from Hamilton to the paragraph that follows :

My party friends thought my plan impracticable——

Mr. BOYCE. Why ? Go on.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am going on.

My party friends thought my plan impracticable for the reason that the bargain would not be kept by our opponents.

Mr. BOYCE. What a difference a comma makes !

Mr. JOHNSTON. The hon. member for Algoma West and the hon. member for Hamilton are the only members of the opposition who are not satisfied that my statement is correct. I am absolutely satisfied that they shall extract all the comfort they can out of this letter, but by the time I am through very little comfort will be theirs. Let me repeat:

My party friends thought my plan impracticable for the reason that the bargain would not be kept by our opponents. Therefore, I decline to accept.

Mr. BOYCE. Therefore——

Mr. JOHNSTON. 'Therefore I declined to accept.' Why? Why was it that Dr. Weldon did not accept the Conservative nomination in 1904? For the simple reason that his friends, the Conservative leaders, who desired him to become a candidate, would not pledge themselves to stand behind him and run a clean election. Surely there can be no question about that? But let us, for the sake of charity, put the other construction upon it. Let us put the construction upon it that our hon. friends opposite are only desirous of running a clean election when their opponents run a clean election. Do I understand that to be the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite? Do I understand that to be the policy of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), who stood up this afternoon and delivered a homily on the purity of elections? Do we in this House and in this country understand that the policy of the leader of the opposition is to run a clean election only when his opponents run a clean election? I take it that, in view of the fact that he put forth this letter this afternoon as a defence of his position, it is a fair presumption that his policy is to run a clean election when he is satisfied his opponents are running a clean election. But if my hon. friend has any idea that his opponents are not conducting a clean election, then, of course, he will not feel himself bound to run a clean election. That is the position taken by hon. gentlemen opposite. It is well you should understand the position taken by my hon. friend from Hamilton. There should be no question whatever as to his position in regard to this matter, and in view of the fact that this letter was submitted as a piece of testimony to this House and this country this afternoon, there surely can be no doubt as to the policy also of the hon. leader of the opposition. I have read this letter in order to show that Dr. Weldon does not seek to get away from the position that I took in this House on the 26th November last.

Mr. BOYCE. Does the hon. gentleman understand Dr. Weldon's letter as acceding to the proposition laid down by the hon. gentleman in his speech, and as having been written for that purpose?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Nobody who understands the English language, or is capable in the slightest degree of analysing what that letter contains, can put any other construction upon it.

Mr. BOYCE. Does the hon. gentleman say that Dr. Weldon's letter appears to have been written for the purpose of endorsing the hon. gentleman's speech?

Mr. JOHNSTON. The purpose for which the letter of Dr. Weldon is written, I am bound to say, is not known to me, for the reason that the hon. leader of the opposition has chosen not to give to this House and the country the letter that he addressed to Dr. Weldon on the 28th November.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. The letter asked me to have that statement read in the House if the matter should be referred to again. This is the first occasion upon which it has been referred to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am content that my hon. friends should applaud a statement of that kind, but all I can say is that we are denied the privilege of knowing what the intention of Dr. Weldon was in writing this letter by reason of the fact that the hon. leader of the opposition wrote to Dr. Weldon on the 28th day of November last, presumably asking for this letter, but the hon. leader of the opposition has not seen fit to inform this House or the country as to what the exact terms of his letter were.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What letter are you referring to?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am referring to the letter which the hon. leader of the opposition addressed to Dr. Weldon on the 28th November last.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is my hon. friend curious about that?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Well, I am not; but the point has been raised by the hon. member for Algoma. He is curious to ascertain what Dr. Weldon's idea was in writing this letter. Now, I am bound to say to the hon. member for Algoma that I am not in a position to unfold to him what Dr. Weldon had in his mind when he wrote this letter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I merely sent the 'Hansard' to Dr. Weldon, and asked him if he had any observations to make about the statement which the hon. gentleman had made in the House, and in reply to that he sent me that letter.

Mr. JOHNSTON. That is quite proper. We are getting further information all along. It would have been rather interesting to complete the transaction and have the whole of the correspondence given to us. The hon. member for Algoma would then have known what prompted Dr. Weldon to write this letter, and he would have been able to understand what influenced him in regard to it.

Mr. BOYCE. I did not ask for that.

Mr. JOHNSTON. But I was going to depart from that letter for a moment, and submit to this House further testimony in regard to this matter. The hon. member for Lunenburg and myself took part in the campaign in Queen's-Shelburne. We attended all, or nearly all, of the meetings addressed by Dr. Weldon in that campaign, and both my hon. friend from Lunenburg and myself have a very distinct recollection of the utterances of Dr. Weldon at the various meetings at which he spoke. If my hon. friends opposite have any doubt whatsoever that Dr. Weldon, over and over again, at various meetings, made this statement, without any qualification whatever, that he had been waited upon by the leaders of the Conservative party of the city of Halifax and asked to become a candidate on that occasion, that he had submitted to them a proposition that the only condition upon which he would become a candidate was that they should run a clean election, with the further statement that these same leaders of the Conservative party of the city of Halifax declined to accept this proposition, and that therefore he declined to become a candidate, I want to say to my hon. friends opposite, one and all, that there are hundreds of people in Queen's-Shelburne, whose testimony is well worth receiving in this connection, and whose testimony is that on more than one occasion Dr. Weldon used that language, and used stronger language than that which I have used in this House. It is too late for Dr. Weldon, it is too late for the leader of the opposition, it is too late for hon. gentlemen opposite, to come forward now with any half-hearted denial; and that is the best construction that can be put on Dr. Weldon's letter.

Mr. BOYCE. Does my hon. friend understand that Dr. Weldon is denying the episode now?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I consider he is not denying it.

Mr. BOYCE. You call it a half-hearted denial.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It is that.

Mr. BOYCE. And a moment ago the hon. gentleman stated that Dr. Weldon endorsed the position.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Dr. Weldon does certainly, unintentionally perhaps, for I do not suppose that Dr. Weldon was asked to furnish this letter as a confirmation. He was asked to forward it as a denial, but as a matter of fact the letter turns out to be not a denial but a confirmation of the position he took during that campaign.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman say that Dr. Weldon was referring to the nomination for the county of Halifax?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I was careful to say on the 26th of November last, that Dr. Weldon did not give us to understand in which of the constituencies in Nova Scotia he was asked to become a candidate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman spoke as if the nomination were tendered by the county of Halifax.

Mr. JOHNSTON. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You did not speak in that sense?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Not at all. Dr. Weldon was explicit on that point. Over and over again he said that the leaders of the Conservative party in the county of Halifax had waited upon him on the eve of the election of 1904 and asked him to become a candidate in one of the Nova Scotia constituencies. At no meeting addressed by him did he make any statement, as to in which constituency they desired him to become a candidate. If Dr. Weldon saw fit to deny the truthfulness of the statement made by me on the 26th of November, he had ample opportunity, but he did not do so. I have here the report of a meeting held at Greenfield in the county of Queen's-Shelburne on the 26th of October last, and Dr. Weldon is reported as follows:

> Dr. Weldon then dealt with purity in elections following the lines of his previous speeches. He created somewhat of a sensation by announcing that just prior to the last election he was waited upon by a number of leading Conservatives in the city of Halifax, including the late John F. Stairs, who pressed him to accept the nomination for a Nova Scotia constituency. Doubtless he referred to Hants. His reply was in effect that if they consented to run a clean election he would accept the nomination. To this proposition, the prominent Tories would not assent and though feeling confident that he would win declined the nomination.

I, as well as my hon. friend from Lunenburg, have a very distinct recollection of the words used by Dr. Weldon at that meeting. He said he looked upon his election as absolutely secure, that he felt satisfied he could win that constituency, but that he would not run in view of the fact that the leaders of his party (naming Mr. John F. Stairs who was a member of this House, at one time the leader of the Conservative party in Nova Scotia, prominent in the councils of the Conservative party in that province) would not consent to his proposition. That statement was publicly made and Dr. Weldon saw that statement published on the evening of Saturday, 27th of October last. If that paper did not report Dr. Weldon correctly, he had ample opportunity of denying it. But not only did he not deny it, but at meetings subsequent to the publication of that report, he made the same statement over and over again. Surely then, it is too late for hon. members opposite to attempt to create the impression that Dr. Weldon has sought to deny the charge he laid against them upon that occasion, when as a matter of fact his letter does not constitute a denial at all. But there is other testimony——

Mr. BOYCE. Before my hon. friend leaves the subject of that letter, would he kindly allow me to ask him this: He has intimated in one instance that Dr. Weldon's letter is a half-hearted denial, and he has also stated that it is a confirmation; would he make it clear by stating whether his view is that this letter is a denial or a confirmation?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I have already endeavoured to give to the House my view of that letter, and that is, that Dr. Weldon does not for one moment undertake to deny that at several meetings in the county of Queen's-Shelburne, he stated that the leaders of the Conservative party in the city and county of Halifax waited on him on the eve of the general election of 1904, and asked him to become a candidate; that he proposed to them that they should run a clean election before he would accept the candidature, that they refused to agree to his proposition, and that therefore he refused to become their candidate. That is my position, that is the position of my hon. friend from Lunenburg, and that is the position of hundreds and hundreds of electors in the counties of Queen's-Shelburne whose testimony is equally as good as mine, or that of my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) or that of Dr. Weldon.

Mr. BOYCE. I am exceedingly sorry to have to interrupt my hon. friend again.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It does not make a particle of difference.

Mr. BOYCE. Does my hon. friend say that Dr. Weldon was not making a true statement in that letter?

Mr. JOHNSTON. The letter is here and it speaks for itself.

Mr. BOYCE. The statement of my hon. friend is a little ambiguous.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The letter is a substantial admission of the statement I made in this House.

Mr. BOYCE. My hon. friend called it a half-hearted denial a moment ago.

Mr. JOHNSTON. My hon. friend can call it whatever he will; he may draw whatever comfort he can from the letter, but I submit to any impartial man who understands the English language, that he cannot find one single sentence or word in that letter denying that such a proposition was made by Dr. Weldon and refused. It is almost worth while to read the concluding paragraph of Dr. Weldon's letter:

> My statement in reference to that tender of a nomination in 1904 was that I asked my party to give me a free hand in making an agreement with the government candidate in the county whereby we would both bind ourselves and our friends to run a clean election. My party friends thought my plan impracticable for the reason that the bargain would not be kept by our opponents.

Does Dr. Weldon say in that letter that his party friends approached the other side with a view of ascertaining whether they would do that or not? He does not. He dare not because no such approach was made. His party friends in the city and county of Halifax who were running the leader of the opposition as their candidate would not permit Dr. Weldon to approach the Liberal party to suggest such an agreement as he refers to. Dr. Weldon was regarded in many quarters as the candidate of the Conservative party, in other quarters he was not. I am quite sure that my hon. friends opposite will in their discussion of this matter treat Dr. Weldon as the candidate of the Conservative party. I wonder whether Dr. Weldon has been asked as to whether some other statements that were attributed to him in the campaign were correct or not? For instance, at several of his meetings he was rather severe upon the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden); indeed I have a distinct recollection of Dr. Weldon in answer to certain observations of my own, condemning the conduct of the leader of the opposition as being nothing short of disgraceful. Is any hon. gentlemen opposite prepared to deny with equal fervency that Dr. Weldon used that language on that occasion? At several of his meetings which were attended by the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. A. K. Maclean) and myself such language was used. It would be interesting to ascertain what my hon. friend from Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Boyce), for instance, thinks of this charge levelled against the devoted head of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) during the by-election in Queen's and Shelburne. It would be curious to know what the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) thinks about the charges made against him by Dr. Weldon. In the course of the speeches which he delievered this afternoon and yesterday he did not venture any expression of opinion as to what he thought of his candidate in that by election. He was careful to give us the opinion of certain other people about the Minister of Finance, including that of a certain Mr. Davidson who was the Conservative organizer in Queen's and Shelburne. The leader of the opposition did not choose to tell us whether Dr. Weldon's estimate of himself during that by-election was a proper and correct estimate. He has not told us whether he wrote Dr. Weldon on the 28th of November last and said: Dr. Weldon, did you say so and so about me?

This debate has turned entirely upon the election in Queen's and Shelburne. It is interesting to note that the leader of the opposition was not in the riding during the course of that by-election. It was his own native province; we were told it was a very important election, that the Minister of Finance should be defeated and his return to this House prevented at all costs. It was open to my hon. friend to go before the electors of Queen's and Shelburne and discuss the questions he has discussed here to-day and yesterday. For reasons of his own he chose not to do so, and I think it would have been well for him, before undertaking to give a one-sided version of the election trial, to have gone down and participated in that election if he thought his case was of sufficient seriousness to take up the attention of the House during this discussion. Yesterday he made certain statements with regard to Mr. Davidson, the organizer of the Conservative party. It is well known that the information furnished to the leader of the opposition in this connection has come from Mr. Davidson, the Conservative organizer, who took a prominent part in that election. I wish to point out the character of the campaign conducted by this gentleman whom the leader of the opposition brings to the notice of the House as a man of sufficient importance to found a debate upon statement made by him. I am sure the people of Canada, after I have made known some of the statements sent out by that organizer, the people of Canada will be capable of drawing a proper conclusion as to the merits of any man who undertakes to stand behind any man who would make such statements as were made on behalf of the Conservative candidate in that election. For instance, it is well known that the fishing industry, especially the lobster industry, is important in that constituency, and efforts were made by our friends on behalf I am quite sure of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) in their anxiety to secure for him one supporter at least from Nova Scotia, which I have no hesitation in characterizing as probably the most discreditable ever resorted to in Nova Scotia. In the Halifax 'Herald,' a paper which supported the leader of the opposition and upon every occasion asked the electors of Queen's and Shelburne at all hazard to beat the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), resorted to the publication of falsehoods to deceive the fishermen of Queen's and Shelburne. Is that the way in which the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) desires to secure support in this country? A dispatch appeared in the Halifax 'Herald' of the 25th October, dated from Sydney, which reads:

> In response to an urgent telegram from Premier Murray, H. E. Baker, the well-known lobster packer and alleged head of the lobster packers' combine for Nova Scotia, left yesterday for Queen's and Shelburne counties, presumably to do missionary work for the Finance Minister among the fishermen in those counties. The message which Mr. Baker received is said to have contained reference to a certain 'John' as having arrived, and it is believed that this 'John' means the boodle fund.

This is one of the items sent out, and although dated from Sydney it was never sent from there, but was sent from the town of Liverpool and was sent, I say unhesitatingly, by the man who undertakes to furnish the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) with the information upon which he based his speeches of to-day and yesterday. He sent out statements absolutely devoid of the essential element, knowing well that they are thus devoid. But here is another—not dated from Sydney, but from Liverpool, and sent by the same person, this same respectable gentleman who supplies the leader of the opposition with affidavits—and when this House and this country learn the character of the statements sent out by this same gentleman, I think the electorate will hesitate to give any credence even to affidavits which that gentleman places in the hands of the leader of the opposition. Here is what he says:

> Particulars of the scheme for the formation of a big lobster packing combine have just leaked out. It will be remembered that the Department of Marine and Fisheries of late years has been limiting granting licenses to pack lobsters only to a few concerns. This is proving but the thin edge of the wedge. A few large concerns such as H. E. Baker, Cape Breton, Whitman, of Canso, John A. Neville, of Halifax and a large packer in Yarmouth county, have decided to form a combine and induce the government to issue licenses to them only. This means putting the small packers out of business, and permitting the combine to fix the prices to be paid to fishermen. This partially explains the anxiety shown by these packers, to elect Mr. Fielding in Shelburne-Queen's. Harry Baker and John A. Neville are in the county working tooth and nail for Mr. Fielding.

That is one of the gems sent out by Mr. Davidson on the eve of this election in Queen's and Shelburne. I cannot do better than give to the House and the country the denial of Mr. Baker. His words are clear and distinct. His attention having been called to the statement used by the papers of the Conservative party and the leader of the opposition on the eve of the election he replied as follows :—

The statement in the Halifax 'Herald,' of the 25th inst., that I had left Sydney for Queen's-Shelburne on the 23rd, supposedly for the purpose of doling out boodle, is an absolute falsehood. I was not asked to go to Queen's-Shelburne, have taken no part whatever in the contest there, nor have I been there for over twenty years.

And yet, this furnisher of affidavits sent out this absolutely untrue statement—a statement that he knew to be absolutely untrue—on the eve of the election. And; in the face of this, hon. members of this House are asked by the leader of the opposition to treat seriously information supplied from such a source. Mr. Baker goes on :—

The further statements in the 'Herald,' of the 26th and 27th inst., that I am connected with a 'Lobster Packers' Combine in Nova Scotia.' are equally false, and I hereby agree to pay the 'Herald' one thousand dollars if it can show that I am either directly or indirectly interested in any such combine.

As to my going to Queen's-Shelburne to distribute money for campaign purposes, as insinuated by the 'Herald,' I have only to say that I was never offered in my life any money by either political party for any such purpose nor for any other purpose whatsoever, except once——

And I call the attention of my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker)) particularly to this :—

——when a parliament leader of the Conservative party offered me a large sum which I declined to accept.

Of course, the leader of the opposition would never think of entertaining doubts of the excellence of any man who would dole out money for the Conservative party ; but he would regard it as utterly nefarious for any one in the Liberal party to offer any money in an election. If the people are going to take seriously the propositions of the leader of the opposition he must not go about with only one eye open ; he must not see only one side of the shield. The hon. gentleman would do well to look at both sides. I commend to him, as well as to my hon. friend from Hamilton the statement of Mr. Barker :—

If the 'Herald' and the Conservative party in their zealous efforts for pure and clean elections desire to know more about this matter, I will be glad to give it to them publicly or privately under affidavit.

We have indeed fallen into evil ways, when a newspaper, professing to be the exponent of purity and cleanliness, resorts to publishing slander, libel and falsehoods against private individuals and their business in order to create prejudices for party purposes.

The man who goes to the polls and deliberately buys votes has to some degree the courage of the highwayman who knows that he will be punished if detected. Such a man, though vile indeed, is superior to every sense to the newspaper scribe who resorts to such villainous tactics as those recently published in the Halifax 'Herald,' and if the 'Herald' is not a willing party to such tactics, it will not only retract its false statements, but will publish the name of its Liverpool correspondent from whom they are supposed to have emanated.

I have only to say, in that connection, that the 'Herald' knew well that these statements were false. Dr. Weldon the Conservative candidate knew that they were false. And the gentleman who supplied the leader of the opposition with the information upon which he has based two speeches knew that they were false. All these were given ample opportunity to retract and make amends for their slander. And both Dr. Weldon and the informant of the leader of the opposition declined to make amends to the electors of Queen's-Shelburne. Just on the eve of polling when Dr. Weldon was holding the last meeting of the campaign, he was telegraphed the substance of Mr. Baker's denial. He knew that the denial was correct. He was asked before it was too late to make amends, and state to the electors that there was absolutely no foundation for the statements sent out from Liverpool by agents on his behalf. And this man, who came before the electors of Queen's-Shelburne and virtually told them that, of all men on earth he was about the only pure one, yet, though he knew that these falsehoods were being circulated on behalf of himself and his party, and though a telegram was placed in his hands asking him to be fair, to maintain the reputation he had sought to make, and contradict these statements, would you believe it, Mr. Speaker, this gentleman, the candidate of the leader of the opposition absolutely declined to correct the statements though he knew them to be false and to be sent out on behalf of his own party.

Well indeed has it been said that the man who goes out to the polls and buys votes for dollars and cents acts the part of a highwayman. I say, reprehensible as is the conduct of a highwayman, it is not one whit more reprehensible than the conduct of a man who deliberately goes out on the eve of an election and places before the electors slanders, fabrications, absolute lies, in order to secure votes. Now, Sir, the hon. member for South Simcoe and the leader of the opposition are very much alarmed by reason of the fact they have discovered that $600 was spent in the constituency of Queen's and Shelburne. We know that considerable money is being spent in every election held in this country, and I think most members of this House will not regard $600 as a very large amount to conduct an election. I point to the constituency which my hon. friend the leader and I think most members of this House for one or two terms, and I ask him what does he think of his former associates in the city and county of Halifax upon this question of money in elections? Only a few months ago the leaders in the city and county of Halifax met together to discuss this question—the friends of my hon. friend, who on two occasions had elected him as their representative. I do not know whether the leader of the opposition had written to them to tell them that the sum of $600 was an appalling one to expend in an election, and they must carefully guard against any similar expenditure.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not make any comment upon it; I simply read what the judge said.

Mr. JOHNSTON. My hon. friend did not intimate that he dissented from the view of the judge.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. $600 for 600 people seemed to be fairly generous.

Mr. JOHNSTON. So far as the expenditure of $600 among 600 people is concerned, I want to tell the hon. the leader of the opposition that I was one of those who, along with the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. A. K. Maclean), went into those districts of Queen's and Shelburne in which this money is supposed to have been expended; there were also with us Dr. Weldon and some of his associates in the by-election. Dr. Weldon was not extremely anxious to discuss the expenditure of this $600 before the people who were immediately concerned and who knew the actual facts. But we did not shrink from a full discussion, and we pointed out to the people that the friends of my hon. friend charged that this money had been expended in Caledonia, the two Brookfields and Kempt, in the former election; and, as was to be expected, they resented the idea that they had been purchased in the general elections of 1904. I say, with some knowledge of the facts, that there is absolutely no ground for the position taken by the leader of the opposition. He has no justification for endeavouring to point out that these people are a purchasable people; and, with some knowledge of them, I desire to resent the imputation that the leader of the opposition has sought to cast upon them.

Now, to return to the question of money. The gentleman who was the colleague of the leader of the opposition in the last election in the city and county of Halifax has been heard from with regard to the money question in elections. He is a factor in the Conservative organization in the city and county of Halifax. A call was sent out to the people by the friends of my hon. friend, and among the gems which are to be found in that circular I wish to cite one or two:

The organizers feel——

That is, the organizers of my hon. friend's party—the friends of my hon. friend's friends.

The organizers feel that unless the financial difficulty referred to can be grappled with and settled no permanent, effective, organization can be built up. There should be a definite, sure and constant fund which could be drawn upon at the right moment for party purposes——

It would be curious to know just what the right moment, in the estimation of these gentlemen, is, whether it is two or three years before an election, or whether it is on the eve of an election.

—and this fund should be allowed to accumulate between elections, if not necessarily expended, so that it will be there when needed.

That is, let this fund accumulate between elections so it will be there when needed—when needed on the eve of an election, of course.

An hon. MEMBER. Who says that?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Well, it is not a hundred years old.

Not a great deal of money is required, and if the burden of providing it be well distributed as to time of payment and number of contributors, that burden need hardly be felt. $5,000 per annum judiciously, and above all, legitimately used, would be ample so the organizers feel to place Halifax within the Conservative ranks as of yore.

$5,000 a year for five years, $25,000—that is what my hon. friend's friends think is required to bring the constituency of the city and county of Halifax within the ranks of the Conservative party once more. I wonder if my hon. friend, who was so alarmed at the expenditure of $600 in the county of Queen's and Shelburne, would have been alarmed had he seen this circular. I am sure that if the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) had been aware of this circular, he would have shrunk from the task imposed on him this afternoon and have refused to take up a brief against the Finance Minister. I am sure that he would have shrunk from the proposition, set forth in this circular, to spend $25,000 in the county of Halifax in order to bring back the constituency into the fold. He could not have been aware of that circular, or he would have condemned it as roundly as he did his expenditure of $600.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Queen's and Shelburne election would have required $80,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON. That brings us to another phase. We have some testimony as to the money that was available to the friends of the leader of the opposition in the constituency of Queen's and Shelburne in the election of 1904. That testimony does not come from the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Maclean) or myself or any member on this side but from men who are near the leader of the opposition, and whose duty it is night and day to stand up before the people and proclaim his virtues. I refer to the 'Toronto News' and its correspondent here, who professes to know a great deal about my hon. friend; and I am quite sure he will admit that he has no stauncher advocates in this country during the last few years than that paper and its correspondent in the press gallery. And these people, presumably with some knowledge as to what they were saying, stated that the fund available to the Conservatives in Queen's and Shelburne in 1904 was away in excess of the amount available to the Liberal party in that campaign. I am sure the leader of the opposition has seen that statement. I am sure that, in common with the rest of us, he reads the Toronto 'News' and the articles contributed to it by its bright representative in the press gallery here. When he was declaiming this afternoon about the iniquity of spending money in elections, he did not tell this House and country that it was a most iniquitous performance on the part of his party in 1904 to spend such a large amount in the constituency of Queen's and Shelburne.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not know they had made any estimate and never heard of it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Then it will be worth the hon. gentleman's while to read the statement of the 'News' in that regard.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did they make any estimate on behalf of the other side?

Mr. JOHNSTON. They did.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I have not the exact figures.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Better look that up.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I make this statement now, and challenge contradiction, that the 'News' declared that the fund which belonged to the Conservative party in Queen's and Shelburne in 1904 was away in excess of the fund available to the Liberal party.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the date of the paper?

Mr. JOHNSTON. That also I do not know.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You do not seem to know much about it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I know this much about it. I assert most positively that the statement I am making is correct. I had not intended to refer to it at all because it had completely escaped my observation until the question of the expenditure of money in Queen's and Shelburne was raised in the shape of an interruption by the leader of the opposition. I thank him for the interruption because it has enabled me to place before the people the facts, and surely the newspaper which made that statement and is so doughty a champion of my hon. friend must certainly have had some knowledge of what he was doing in that campaign.

I have spoken at greater length than I intended. I had intended to refer to the fact that in the course of his speech this afternoon my hon. friend the leader of the opposition seemed to have very clearly and distinctly before his mind the opinion that during the last eight or ten years electoral corruption has existed in this country. But most hon. members, not particularly on this side of the House but on his own side as well, were somewhat surprised that his memory seemed incapable of going back beyond the comparatively short space of eight or ten years. One would have supposed that the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden), with his well known knowledge of public matters, would have been competent to throw his memory back somewhat beyond that period; and I would say to him that when he undertakes to suggest measures for the reform of elections and the manner in which they should be conducted, it will not do for him, if he wants to make any impression on the country, to shut his eyes to what for years took place in the ranks of his own party. It will not do for him to say that during the last eight or ten years only has this country been growing in wickedness and corruption in the conduct of elections. Any body who takes the trouble to inquire will know well that if any corruption has existed during the last eight or ten years, it is of a very kindergarten variety as compared with that which existed in 1896 and in the days when my hon. friend's party were in control of the affairs of this country. If my hon. friend desires to institute reforms, if he is really in earnest, it will be well for him to stand up and say that not only has corruption existed in the ranks of the Liberal party but that, he is in possession of information which convinces him that corruption exists in the ranks of his own party. Surely he will not contend that the corruption which existed in the ranks of the Liberal party during the last eight or ten years is of a more grave character than that which exists in the ranks of the party of which he is the representative to-day. When the hon. gentleman spoke on the 26th November last, I made some observations regarding this subject. I pointed out that in the ranks of the party, to which he did not belong at the time, corruption on the most gigantic scale existed. Of that there can be no question. I desire to call the attention of this House and country to what will be regarded as somewhat of an omission on his part. I am quite sure that if he had reflected, he would not have confined his speech this afternoon to a review of the political history of the last eight or ten years. If he had recollected carefully he would have reached the conclusion that it would have been well for him, in order to appear before this country as a big and fair man, to have gone back and seen what it was that his own party stood sponsor for. I direct your attention to the fact that in the session of 1900 this question was before the House and before the country. I am going to direct your attention for a moment to the observations made, not by a man who was fighting the battles of the Liberal party on that occasion, but by a man who was fighting the battles of the leader of the opposition who had proposed a resolution in regard to that question. I am going to give for the benefit of this House and this country, and more particularly for the benefit of the hon. member for Hamilton these observations. This gentleman said :

Mr. Speaker, in discussing this matter I propose to be perfectly frank. I took a prominent part in denouncing the corruption that was practised by the Conservatives, and to be consistent I do not propose to-night to defend corruption that has been proved to have been practised by the Liberals. After the Winnipeg frauds, came the frauds practised in the electoral division represented by my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford). I think, Sir, that the history of political corruption would be searched in vain—even if the Pritchett affidavit in regard to Brockville is correct—for a parallel to the scoundrelism and scalla-waggery that was practised in the electoral division of Macdonald.

That was practised by a party of which the hon. leader of the opposition is the recognized leader in this House and yet with the knowledge that he must have had of what had taken place so short a time ago he did see fit to endeavour to convey the impression that the Liberal party was the only one which was corrupt. This is not the testimony of anybody on this side of the House but it is the testimony of one who was assisting my hon. friend on that occasion in supporting his resolution :

We had there a man named Freeborn, who came to Manitoba recommended by no less a personage than Mr. Robert Birmingham, the organizer of the Conservative party at that time. I myself had in my possession for a year or more a telegram furnished me by the counsel for the prosecution, signed by Robert Birmingham, saying that Freeborn was a good man in North Bruce, or that he did good work in North Bruce. I am not exactly sure of the words. But we had this man Freeborn there, who, like Pritchett, turned Queen's evidence and he exposed an amount of fraud that was simply appalling. We had card sharpers sent into that constituency hired in Winnipeg, for the purpose of destroying ballot and manipulating ballots. I think 15 or 20 arrests were made in that connection.

This is a statement made by the hon. member who represented the constituency of Lisgar on that occasion. This speech, as I have said, was the speech not of any of our friends, but the speech of a friend of the hon. leader of the opposition. On a former occasion, when I was addressing this House, I made mention in connection with Freeborn of a circular which was issued to the people of this country and the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) undertook to say that the statements made by Mr. Richardson were denied. I say, Mr. Speaker, that these statements have never been successfully denied up to this hour and that the only denial of the Freeborn circular which I will not waste the time of the House in reading as I do not suppose that my hon. friends are anxious to hear it——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Read it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Well, I will. Here is circular of this man Freeborn, which a friend of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has submitted for the consideration of this House :

We have the printing of the ballots, therefore a sufficient number should be printed extra to enable the deputy returning officer to have them marked for our candidate and ready to use after the count to replace those read out wrongly to the scrutineers. Or the deputy returning officer can have them marked and folded in his pocket to slip into the box in place of an opposition ballot if the opportunity happens. This, of course, will occur quite frequently if we have control of both scrutineers.

To get control of both scrutineers have one of our men, not a prominent one, but a supposed kicker, for instance, apply to the opposition to be put on as scrutineer inside. They are generally short of workers—

That is the Liberals are generally short of workers. They were in those days.

—and a few plausible men will turn the election in a close constituency. Or the man can write to their headquarters for scrutineer papers if he lives in the country.

Efforts should be made to make these methods work in wards that give the heaviest opposition vote.

That is in wards that give the heaviest Liberal vote. It was proposed that these efforts should be put forward particularly in those districts.

Having control of both scrutineers, a large vote can be polled—dead and absent voters, &c.——

Yes, the hon. member for Hamilton's long suit was dead or absent voters in those days :

—can have their ballots marked—there is no redress ; both scrutineers were present.

A friendly constable should be present to keep the poll clear of loungers and inquisitive people.

I am not going to dwell upon the merits of this magnificient circular. I will only say that if the hon. member for Hamilton undertakes to point out, as I have no doubt that in the course of this discussion he will, that this circular is not a genuine one, there has never been a successful contradiction of the fact that this circular is the genuine article and that it was issued and circulated by the organizer of the Conservative party. My hon. friend will direct my attention to what purports to be a denial from Mr. Wm. J. Tupper of the city of Winnipeg. My hon. friends opposite wrote from Mr. Wm. J. Tupper, of the city of leader of the opposition in the city of Winnipeg and asked him regarding this circular. The leader of the opposition in that day, Sir Charles Tupper, wrote to his son in Winnipeg, in regard to this circular. We have not a copy of that letter before us. We do not know what the terms of the letter sent by Sir Charles Tupper on that occasion to Winnipeg were. We are denied knowledge as to what the terms of this letter were but knowing the old and venerable leader of the Conservative party as we do know him we do not suppose that he wrote to his son in Winnipeg and asked him to expose the whole thing. At any rate this is the denial as some hon. gentlemen opposite desire to call it :

Winnipeg, March 31, 1900.

My dear Father,—I return herewith editorial published in the Almonte 'Gazette' referring to instructions alleged to have been given to the Conservative workers in Manitoba. I never heard of anything of the kind, and I saw Mr. Haggart, Mr. Andrews, Hon. Colin Campbell and Mr. Bonner, all lawyers here who acted in the cases brought against the Conservatives charged with manipulation of the ballots in 1896, and they all informed me they never saw any such letter. If the Grits had had anything of the kind, they could have secured convictions by producing them. Hogue defended most of our men, but he is in Vancouver. However, I am satisfied the thing is a forgery, and never saw the light of day in this province. I had an article written by the editor of the 'Morning Telegram' and sent you a copy of the paper yesterday.

Your loving son,
(Signed) WM. J. TUPPER.

My hon. friends opposite must not suppose for one moment that anybody in this House expects William J. Tupper, son of the leader of the Conservative party to write down to the leader here and say : Yes, it is quite true that that circular was issued. On the contrary, I am bound to place the letter written on that occasion by Mr. Tupper very largely in the same column in which I placed the letter of Dr. Weldon this afternoon. If it is a denial of the facts set out by Mr. Richardson to this House, it certainly is a half hearted denial and I do not think that even my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) will characterize this letter of Dr. Weldon as a very strong denial. There is abundant evidence that corruption has existed within the ranks of the party led by my hon. friend opposite. I merely want to point out to the House and to the country, that if the leader of the opposition sincerely desires that our election laws should be reformed, he should look at both sides of the picture and recognize, that while corruption may have existed within the ranks of the Liberal party, the record of his own party in that respect is worthy of his attention. During the course of his whole speech, the leader of the opposition did not see fit to mention that his party is not one whit better than the Liberal party. It was his duty to the country, to state that in order to bring about purity in elections, we have to recognize that corruption has to some extent existed in both political parties. So far as I am concerned I state frankly, that I am as anxious as any one can possibly be that our elections should be conducted purely and honestly ; and personally I have always endeavoured to do my utmost to see that my own elections were carried on in conformity with our election laws. I go further and I say, that in my opinion, every member of this House, whether sitting on your right or your left, Mr. Speaker, is actuated by a similar desire. When the time comes, the leader of the opposition will find that the Liberal members in this House will not be lacking in their efforts to see that the most perfect election laws shall be placed on the statute-book, and their observance enforced. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, speaking for myself and I am quite sure for those who sit around me, that we are sincerely anxious to have the franchise of this country exercised as becomes the high character of our people.

vative party were actually true, surely that in itself would be unanswerable reason why the motion of the leader of the opposition should be adopted. It is evident from the disclosures made in the courts and in the press, that election frauds and corruption are general throughout the country. In Manitoba we had the thin red line revelations and I shall not refer to the evidence taken before a committee of this House on that matter, further than to say that we have sufficient knowledge of the facts to lead us to the belief that hundreds if not thousands of Conservative voters in Manitoba were deliberately and maliciously deprived of their right to vote. In the province of Saskatchewan, to such a length did corruption go, that the judges having declared their powerlessness to deal with the matter, the legislature in order to clear its own honour, has awarded one of the seats to a provinical rights candidate who was corruptly deprived of it.

In the province of Ontario we have, at long intervals, through the proceedings before the election courts, obtained a lifting of the veil to a very small extent, and we have had very restricted glimpses behind the scenes as to the methods pursued by the Liberal party, or by men in their pay—the fruits of whose work they have accepted, and by that means we have become to some extent informed of the electoral enormities practised on behalf of that party. Before the Privileges and Elections Committee of this House we also had certain revelations. Both in the courts and before that committee the principle was invoked that no person should be allowed to state for whom he had voted in an election brought into question. To my mind, that is a matter that should be dealt with in any election law which is introduced in this House by the government or any one else. I am quite aware that some of the judges of the Supreme Court have expressed very decided opinions to the contrary, but I think no person can view the history of election questions in the courts and before the Privileges and Elections Committees of the legislatures and of this House without being convinced that a revelation by a witness, or a series of witnesses, as to whom they cast their votes for is sometimes absolutely necessary, and is in many cases the only way in which the truth can be evolved.

As has been stated by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) to-day, were it not for the fact that the Hon. Mr. Whitney and Mr. Foy, his attorney general, have attained control of the administration of the criminal law of the province of Ontario, we would probably still be very much in the dark as to the conduct of the employees of the Liberal party in that province in respect to many elections that have been questioned in the courts in the past.

Fortunately, the Hon. Mr. Whitney is now in control of the administration of that law, and through his efforts and those of his attorney general, we have had lately perhaps the best exposition of the electoral crimes perpetrated in the name and for the benefit of the so-called Liberal party that we have ever had. During the time that the Liberals were in control of Ontario no such revelation was possible, because every attempt made by the Conservative party to probe into the doings of their opponents in that respect was met with failure in the courts of the country, owing to the practice, almost universal, that when a petition was being tried, if the petitioner proved bribery by an agent or perhaps two, with which the candidate was not connected, the candidate would throw up the seat and prevent further disclosures. That is also a matter which might most properly be dealt with by any future legislation with regard to election laws. Through the efforts, as I have said, of Mr. Foy, we have now obtained a body of evidence to which I shall direct the attention of the House for a time, and I think that no hon. gentleman, after a perusal of these pages of that evidence, or after listening to the extracts which I shall read, can say that the charge, as stated in the resolution presented by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) to-day, is incorrect. While the Liberal party were in power efforts were made from time to time to get at the truth regarding electoral corruption. One was the famous McTavish Commission, which sat in the West Elgin case. I do not think that any person seriously contends that the doings of that commission were intended to ascertain the truth. No person in Ontario, having a knowledge of the facts of the case, first the election trial at which extensive corruption was not only proved but specifically admitted, followed by this commission finding that no such corruption took place, thought this commission ever intended to elicit the truth. Its efforts were confined to a whitewashing of all the parties concerned.

We have obtained through the proceedings before Magistrate Denison in Toronto in connection with the conspiracy charges arising out of the London by-election at which the Minister of Public Works of this government (Hon. C. S. Hyman) was lately returned, the best view and history of electoral methods in Ontario that has been presented, and I shall trouble the House with some rather lengthy extracts from that evidence. I quote from page 344, volume 1, of the evidence, in the testimony of J. G. Pritchett :

Question 5. Do you know the defendants, do you know Mr. O'Gorman the defendant ?—A. I do.

Q. Do you know Mr. Reid ?—A. I do.
Q. Do you know Mr. Mulloy ?—A. I do.
Q. Do you know the other defendants ?—A. I don't know the gentleman between Mr. Mulloy and Mr. O'Gorman.

Hon. gentlemen will notice that all these names are familiar and have been for years familiar in connection with electoral corruption in Ontario.

Q. Did you and the defendant O'Gorman ever work together in connection with any election in any part of this province ?—A. Yes.
Question 18. Where did you meet to arrange matters ?—A. As to the work ?
Q. As to the work ?—A. Well, I met Mr. O'Gorman in London first.
Q. Where else ?—A. In Toronto.
Q. Where would you meet ?—A. At the Walker House.
Q. Where else ?—A. Well, I do not know as I met him anywhere else.
Q. Had he an office here ?—A. Yes.
Q. Did you meet him there ?—A. I went to his office.

At page 348, question 27 :

Q. Who would meet ? You said you would meet in the Walker House ? Where would you meet ?—A. Generally met in the reception room.
Q. That is the Walker House in this city ?—A. Yes.
Q. Who would meet there ?—A. Well, I have met O'Gorman there.
Q. Who else ?—A. Mr. Smith.
Q. What Mr. Smith ?—A. I don't know his initials.
Q. Alexander Smith ?—A. I don't know his initials, he was the Liberal organizer, I think.
Q. Who else you know who you met there ?—A. I met a great many people there.
Q. Who else ?—A. I met Mr. Lewis there.
Q. Mr. Thomas Lewis over there ?—A. Yes.
Q. Do you know the defendant Mulloy ?—A. Yes.

Question 40 :

Q. What others then ?—A. That is all I can remember distinctly or know anything about.
By Mr. Duvernet :
Q. Just tell his worship what the plan of campaign was, who handled the money ?—A. Your worship, have I got to answer those questions ?
His Worship. Yes, you have got to tell the truth.
Witness. I understood that this was an investigation in the Hyman-Gray election, and I know nothing of it.
His Worship. This is not an investigation in the Hyman-Gray election. It is an investigation to investigate the charge of conspiracy between a number of people to affect the elections by bribery and by corruption and setting the laws at defiance, and we want to know the truth, and if you are being used as King's evidence you will be free if you give your evidence as King's evidence. If you make statements that are not true you will be, of course, open to a charge of perjury. You have to tell the truth and not stand on any technicalities.
Q. Who held the money, who was paymaster? —A. To me.
Q. To all of you ?—A. Mr. O'Gorman, as far as I know.
Q. Did you have any doubt about it ?—A. I had none.
Q. Now, what did you meet for ? Just explain to his worship, and I don't want you to hesitate about it, explain to his worship what the system was, and what you arranged ?—A. Well, I don't know hardly how I can.
By His Worship :
Q. Just tell me to the best of your recollection exactly what you arranged to do. You can certainly do that ? A. I am prepared to tell the truth but it covers a lot of ground.
Q. We will cover the ground ? A. If you have any specific matter——
His Worship—Just tell us all you remember about it and then we will go on that which is available in this case. Mr. Duvernet does not wish to lead you as yet, so you can just tell us all you know about it.
By Mr. Duvernet :
Q. What sort of money was paid you ? A. Money of Canada.
Q. What sort of money would be used for bribing voters ? A. Any that I ever handled was Dominion money.
Q Who would get that ? A. The voters.
Q. Who would that be got from ? Who would get that money—who would have that money ? A. Well, I don't know. Any what I ever handled I got from a man named Macdonald, I think his name was.
By His Worship :
Q. Here in Toronto ? A. No, I never handled any here.
Q. Did you ever get any money from O'Gorman ? A. Yes.
Q. You just said this minute all the money you got was from Macdonald. You got it from Macdonald and O'Gorman ? A. This gentleman asked me who I got money to bribe voters. I never got any money from O'Gorman for that.
By Mr. Duvernet :
Q. Was that one of your duties to handle the voters, that is for the money to go to the voters ? A. No, sir.
Q. Whose duty was that ? Who was to have the money for the voters ? A. Well, any that I remember of Mr. Lewis.
Q. Just let us get down to business. Mr. O'Gorman and you used to meet with Mr. Lewis and Mr. Smith and then it was arranged to go out and bribe the electors ?
Mr. Robinette : He doesn't say that.
A. Well, I had nothing to do with bribing.
Q. What was your part, switching ballots ? A. Well, I instructed others to do it.
Q. You instructed others to switch ballots —who were to switch ballots ? A. The deputy returning officers.
Q. Why were they to do that ? Was it cheaper than buying votes ? A. I thought so.
Q. Did you discuss that with Mr. O'Gorman ? A. I might have.
Q. Do you know whether you did or not ? A. I think I did, yes.
Q. Have you any doubt about it ? A. No.
Q. And you would meet before every election and before a number of elections and you discussed the methods of corrupting or depriving the electors of their votes. That is right ? A. If you term it that.
Q. Is there any doubt about it ? Isn't that the way of it ? A. Well yes, it was of course defrauding the voter to a certain extent.
Q. And you met in Toronto ?—A. Yes.

Q. And O'Gorman would be there, Smith would be there Louis would be there and you would be there?—A. Yes.

By His Lordship—You say O'Gorman gave you money ?—A. Yes.

Q. What was that for ?—A. Work and expenses throughout.

Q. That was for your work and expenses ?—A. Yes.

Q. And your business was not the bribing of voters but the switching of votes ?—A. No, I didn't switch votes.

Q. You superintended it or arranged for it. That is what you said ?—A. Yes.

Q. You were paid for doing that work ?—A. Yes.

Q. And O'Gorman gave you the money for doing that work. Have I got that right ?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. How much did he give you ?—A. Various sums.

Q. How much at one time ?—A. I think I received $40 or $50 at one time.

Q. How much at another time?—A. $100.

Q. Now, just explain to His Worship how this was done. As I understand it you and O'Gorman, and Lewis, and Smith would meet either at the Walker House or at O'Gorman's office here before the election ? That is right ?—A. When there was any elections in this end of the province.

Q. Then now just tell His Worship how it was arranged. You would come from where ?—A. London.

Q. And you would meet here ?—A. Yes.

Q. And Lewis would come from London ?—A. Yes.

Q. Then this plan would be arranged. Now, you told me a little while ago that there were two methods you had, methods of paying voters. That is right ?—A. Yes.

Q. And paid them after election ?—A. Well, I had nothing to do with that with one exception.

Q. I am not asking you whether you had anything to do. Did you know about it ?—A. Yes .

Q. Was this discussed between you and O'Gorman and Lewis ?—A. No.

Q. Will you swear you didn't discuss that with O'Gorman ?—A. Not the buying of votes.

Q. But the system ?—A. That was talked over, undoubtedly.

Q. And then the smaller men would some in afterwards ?—A. Yes.

Q. Mulloy and the others ?—A. I don't know anything about him.

Q. You know about Mulloy. You would meet him through the various ridings ?—A. Occasionally.

Q. And you knew he was to go ?—A. Yes.

Q. Where would he come in ?—A. He would usually appear in the constituency some days later than I would be there.

Q. You knew that Mulloy was one of the workers ?—A. Yes.

Q. He was one of the under men that had to carry out the head men's instructions. You knew that ?—A. I supposed so.

Q. Did you have any doubt about it ?—A. No, I had no doubt in my own mind.

Q. That is from what had taken place ?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, when you and O'Gorman were in Toronto it would be arranged. Who was it first suggested it would be cheaper to switch the votes and pay the deputies than to buy the voters. Who suggested that ?—A. The possibilities are that I suggested it myself.

Q. Where did you discuss it with Mr. O'Gorman ?—A. In London.

Q. And in Toronto ?—A. Yes.

Q. Then you arranged to meet in Toronto how long before a constituency would be opened up ?—A. Oh sometimes a week, sometimes 12 days. 12 days was the longest that I can remember.

Q. Than you had arranged to go out into the constituency ?—A. That is right.

Q. And would you arrange as to the number of deputies you would train as to how you would switch ballots ?—A. No, that was left with myself.

Q. Then you go into the constituency. You would go back to London first or would you go straght into the constituency ?—A. From here into the constituency.

Q. You and Lewis would go into the constituency from Toronto. When you got there who would you find there? Did you find the defendant O'Gorman?—A. Quite often.

Q. Did you always find him when you had made those arrangements ?—A. Oh yes.

Q. Then having arranged that Lewis should go out and do his work and that you should go out and do your work you would go to the constituency that you were to defraud and you would find O'Gorman there ?—A. Some place in the constituency, yes.

Q. Who would bring you the deputy to corrupt and train in this switching business ?—A. Sometimes one person—sometimes a local man and sometimes another.

Q. Did O'Gorman do that ?—A. Yes.

Q. Wasn't he the man whose word you would have to take before you would train him ?—A. He would bring him in and if I found a man was satisfactory I would take him, and if I didn't I wouldn't take him, no matter what Mr. O'Gorman said.

By His Worship :

Q. You would train him up as a returning officer ?—A. Yes, his duties.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. The principal thing was to switch ballots. If there was Smith and Jones running the votes that would appear for Smith would go for Jones ?—A. That is right.

Q. You used to do that yourself ?—A. I did.

Q. How many have you switched in one place in that way ?—A. Probably 25 or 27, may be more.

Q. And they would appoint you to a constituency where you didn't belong as a deputy returning officer ?—A. They did.

Q. For the express purpose of switching votes ?—A. I suppose so.

Q. You knew that. Who did that in the West Elgin case ?—A. Who appointed me ?

Q. Yes ?—A. The gentleman who is sheriff.

Q. Who sent you up there ?—A. Mr. O'Gorman. Not this Mr. O'Gorman here.

Q. His brother ?—A. His brother.

Q. Did you see Mr. Reid ?—A. In the constituency ?

Q. No. Did you see Mr. Reid ? Did Mr. Reid ask you to go up ?—A. No.

Q. Any Mr. Reid ?—A. Yes.

Q. Which Mr. Reid ?—A. A brother of the gentleman sitting there.

Q. Asked you to go up and do this switching business ?—A. No.

Q. Did he know what you were going up for ?—A. Quite possibly.

Q. Didn't he know from your conversation ?—A. Yes.

Q. What did he say to you ?—A. In regard to it ?

Q. Yes ?—A. Nothing previous to the election.

Q. What did he say afterwards ?—A. Well, I think probably I broached the subject to him myself. He telephoned over to my house to go to his office and I went to his office and we talked the matter of my work over.

Q. That is switching ballots ?—A. Yes.

Q. You were threatened with arrest ?—A. Yes.

Q. Tell us what took place ?—A. Well, I told him I would go down and fix the ballot-box. That is the words I used.

Q. What did you mean ?—A. Put in ballots for the ones I substituted in that case.

Q. What did he say to that ?—A. He said no; that will be all right, a man by the name of Grant would attend to that.

Q. From where ?—A. From Toronto.

Q. How would you determine the number of deputies that you should train in this switching business—by the closeness of the contest ?—A. It depended largely on the closeness of the constituency how many.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I ask leave to interrupt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Alcorn). I may be wrong, and I am not in a position to argue the point. But I venture to suggest that the hon. gentleman is not in order. If he is in order in reading as he has been doing, it will be quite in order for him to read all the evidence taken in the London trial to serve some purpose. He has been reading matter for fifteen or twenty minutes past that has no relevancy to the resolution. Surely, there must be some limit. Surely, he could not make this country pay for the printing of all the evidence in the London trial, for the purpose, let us say, of campaign literature. He must have some reason for reading at some length. Apparently he intends to put in all the evidence, and, if that be correct, it seems to me it is out of order. I think he should make a declaration that he does not intend reading it all and also say that he is reading it for some certain purpose.

Mr. SPROULE. Before you decide the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the motion relates to bribery and corruption. And the hon. gentleman is giving evidence with regard to extent of bribery and corruption that have been practised in this country, and this is directly relevant—I do not see how it could be more so.

Mr. FIELDING. According to the contention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) if we wish to do so we could bring in here and read the evidence in the Kingston election trial some years ago in the case of Sir John Macdonald. The question of time and how far we go back, cannot affect the question of order. If it is right for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Alcorn) to read the evidence in the London case—which by the way, is still before the courts—we could read the evidence in any other similar case. But I am not raising any objection and if the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) wants to put in an hour or two in this way, let him do so.

Mr. ALCORN. It seems that the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. K. Maclean) objects to having this on 'Hansard' and before the country. The resolution affirms that bribery and corruption have been practised in this country in recent years. I have a perfect right to put in the evidence to prove that resolution.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Let the hon. gentleman put in the evidence to prove that statement, but he is putting in questions and answers which do not establish such a statement.

Mr. ALCORN. That is precisely what I am doing, and I know of no method by which I can do it, except by putting in the questions and answers, and if I put in the questions I must put in the answers also.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The objection a short time ago was that not enough was being read, that part was being omitted.

Mr. TAYLOR. Take it as read and put it in.

Mr. FIELDING. No, no :

Lend to rhyme, poet, the music of thy voice.

Mr. ALCORN (reading) :

Q. How high would you run up with these fraudulent deputies—how many in one constituency ?—A. Eight to ten, and as low as four or five.

Q. It depended on whether it was a close constituency or not ?—A. Yes.

Q. You were able to meet all the exigencies of the case ?—A. Quite.

Q. And do you know how many ballots these deputies would switch—how many they would forge ?—A. Yes.

Q. How many ?—A. Some would forge five and some would go as high as twenty-three ; I think that was the highest of any person doing.

Q. How much would they get a ballot ?—A. Different prices.

Q. What was the regulation price ?—A. $5

Q. $5 a ballot for the deputy ?—A. Yes.

By His Worship :

Q. For every one that he switched ?—A. Yes.

Q. How was this switching done ?—A. I think that would be pretty difficult to explain.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. You taught the deputy, teach me, so that if any of us were made deputy returning officers ?—A. It wouldn't be a good idea.

Q. Just show His Worship how it was done ?—A. I think I can explain the thing. I am acting as deputy returning officer and two gentlemen are running of course, one a Conservative and one a Liberal, and if I am working in the interests of the Liberal, why I empty the ballots out ; we see they are all initialled and then I drop the ballots into the box and if it is for Mr. Denison, I call out somebody else.

Q. That was a——A. Yes.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Alcorn) sure that he is reading from a correct copy of the evidence ?

Mr. ALCORN. It has the affidavit of the two reporters who took it in extenso.

Q. Would you open it up and call it out and they were not looking at the ballot ?—A. No, no person had a right to look at the ballot.

Mr. DUVERNET. The deputy is the only one that has a right to look.

Q. Wouldn't you allow people to see how the ballots were ?—A. No sir.

Q. What is the good of having scrutineers ?—A. They are to check off.

His WORSHIP. The deputy returning officer has a right to elect a member then ?

Mr. DUVERNET. It has been done for years.

Q. It is just done in that way, call out when you read it ?—A. The reverse of what it is.

Q. And you did that in the West Elgin election yourself ?—A. Yes.

Q. With the Conservative scrutineer watching you ?—A. They were there to watch me.

Q. They knew about you ?—A. I don't know.

Q. You switched to how many ?—A. I think twenty-seven. I think it was twenty-seven difference.

Q. You switched twenty-seven. That would be, I suppose, twenty-seven of a difference you made ?—A. No, nineteen. Twice nineteen is thirty-eight. The majority was usually from twelve to seventeen the other way and I put it twenty-seven the way I wanted it.

By His Worship :

Q. That was the result of a conspiracy here in Toronto—a discussion and dividing up of work ?—A. No.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. The origin of it was ?—A. Yes, it was a finale to it I suppose.

Q. This was only carrying out the result of the conclusion you had come to that it was cheaper to buy the deputy returning officers and switching the ballots and buying the voters ?—A. Yes, it was safer.

Q. It was surer ?—A. Yes.

Q. The results would be more certain ?—A. Quite.

By His Worship :

Q. If there was a disputed election how would this turn out ?—

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. Just following that up, it was in the West Elgin election this took place ?—A. Yes.

Q. And it was such a flagrant case there was trouble ?—A. Quite a lot.

Q. And there were arrests even threatened in a mild way. You were threatened with arrest ?—A. Yes.

Q. Who came to see you ?—A. A gentleman by the name of Mr. Going seen me first.

Q. Did Mr. O'Gorman see you?—A. Yes.

Q. What did he want you to do ?—A. Get out of town.

Q. Give you any money ?—A. Yes.

Q. How much ?—A. Couldn't go very far without it.

Q. How much money did he give you ?—A. $100.

Q. Get any more money?—A. Yes.

Q. Who from?—A. Sent through my brother-in-law in the city to where I was.

Q. For this work you have been doing—who would pay you ?—A. Mr. O'Gorman with the exception of once, that in Mr. O'Gormans', I had better put it that way.

Q. How many times would you say the defendant here had paid you ?—A. Three.

Q. Now you say with the exception of once, when was that once?—A. In South Ontario.

Q. Is that the case where you invited Mr. Lewis to hold the envelopes and did the bribery yourself?—A. I never held any envelopes.

Q. Did you do the bribing that time yourself ?—A. Some of it—I did the paying, at least.

Q. Who employed you then—did Mr. O'Gorman engage you ?—A. I went down under his instructions.

Q. Arranged here and went down under his instructions ?—A. Yes.

Q. Who gave you the money ?—A. A man by the name of Preston—of McDonald.

Q. Preston. you said ?—A. Preston gave me some.

Q. What Preston was that ?—A. W. T. R.

Q. What position was he holding then ?—A. I don't know.

Q. Where did he give you the money ?—A. The Commercial Hotel in Whitby.

Q. How much did he give you ?—A. I think it was $40.

Q. How much did McDonald give you ?—A. I had twenty people to see. He gave me the balance.

Q. You had twenty people to see and he gave you the balance ?—A. Yes.

Q. Where ?—A. In the room.

Q. At the same place ?—A. The same place.

Q. Was O'Gorman there ?—A. No.

Q. Was he in the riding ?—A. I don't think I met Mr. O'Gorman——

By His Lordship :

Q. How much money was given to you altogether ?—A. I think I spent $80.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. How much did you say Preston handed you ? Was it $40 or $50 ?—A. I couldn't positively say. It was the difference between what I had and what I had to pay that night.

Q. What was that handed to you in ?—A. Bills.

Q. What sort of bills ?—A. $2.

Q. Dominion government bills were they ? A. They were new bills, yes.

Q. Was that always the way the money for the voters was supplied, in new government bills, $2 bills ?—A. All that I seen.

Q. Over a number of years, that is the way it would take place?—A. I never seen very much of it because I had nothing to do with that part of it.

Q. That branch of the business?—A. No, sir. That was outside of me.

Q. Outside your jurisdiction ?—A. Yes.

Q. Who arranged for the payment of those twenty people, do you know ?—A. Not positively the local men I presume, it was local men went with me.

By His Worship :

Q. Was that after the election or before ?—A. The night before.

By Mr. Duvernet:

Q. When did you pay ?—A. On the spot.

Q. Then who did you make your returns to of these items—how much did you pay altogether ?—A. I think I paid somewhere in the neighbourhood of $80.

Q. Who did you make your returns to ?—A. Well, I don't know as I made any.

Q. Just think ?—A. No, I don't think I did.
Q. Do you know Mr. Smith ?—A. I do.
Q. Did you make any returns to him ?—A. I told him what my expenses were.
Q. Did you give him the items ?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did they show the payment of these voters ?—A. Well. I gave him it verbally, of course, not in writing. I told him what I had spent.
Q. That is what took place ?—A. Yes.
Q. Did O'Gorman pay you for that ?—A. No.
Q. He would arrange for you to go down and you got paid in this way ?—A. Yes.
Q. With that exception O'Gorman always paid you himself for your work ?—A. No.
Q. Who else paid you ?—A. I received some from Mr. Con. O'Gorman, that is his brother.
Q. Now, did you train any of the deputies in the South Ontario case ?—A. I don't think Your Worship that I have a right to answer that question. I have no right to implicate others.

By His Worship :

Q. You have a right to tell the truth ?—A. I understand that, but why implicate others.
Q. Because if others are implicated I want to know it ?—A. Well,——

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. I want to show how it went to the root of the whole administration of justice, that these men would go into a riding and although warrants were asked for, nothing could be done to stop it. Now who met you when you went to South Ontario ?—A. I met Mr. O'Gorman here in Toronto.
Q. And you have told us that you arranged with him—where did you go to, Oshawa or Whitby ?—A. I went to Whitby.
Q. Who met you at Whitby ?—A. Nobody specially.
Q. I am not asking you specially, who met you ?—A. Nobody.
Q. Did any body go up to the hotel with you? —A. No.
Q. Nobody ?—A. Mr. Smith was on the buss with me.
Q. He is the gentleman that paid you afterwards ?—A. Yes.
Q. You just happened by accident I suppose to meet ?—A. Well, I did not associate with him much.
Q. Perhaps you avoided him when you were there ? When you got to Whitby just explain to His Worship how you arranged with these deputies. Was any switching done in that riding ?—A. Well, I instructed one or two.
Q. Who got them for you ?—A. I think it was a local man there that brought them in.
Q. Who was the local man ?—A. They called him John Brant, I don't know——
Q. Who were these deputies that you instructed to switch, and where did you instruct them ?—A. I can't recall any of their names. I have no memorandum and I can't remember their names, but I instructed one of them in a hotel in Oshawa.
Q. Whose hotel was that ?—A. I don't know what the name of it was. I think it was the Commercial. It was not the Conservative house any way.
Q. Did it require much training to do this skilfully ?—A. Sometimes.
Q. And, I suppose, you had to see the men to make sure they wouldn't give you away ? —A. I did, yes.
Q. That was a very important thing to get proper men, men who were not afraid to do this crime, that was important ?—A. Quite so, for my safety.
Q. And sometimes Mr. O'Gorman would be a little careless in the men and you would cull them out ?—A. I have done so, yes.
Q. Now, do you know Brockville ?—A. A portion of it.
Q. Did you ever go to Toronto and arrange with Mr. O'Gorman and others to go into Brockville, or into that riding to do this work? —A. I met Mr. O'Gorman here.
Q. Where ?—A. At the Walker House.
Q. Who else ?—A. Mr. Smith was there.
Q. Who else ?—A. Mr. Lewis and myself.
Q. And then how long before the election, how long before the riding was to be open ?—A. That was the longest I was ever at, that was twelve days.
Q. That was a special time ?—A. Yes.
Q. Were there special reasons for that length of time ?—A. Well, I don't know.
Q. Generally you would, if it was a case of a by-election, get pointers when the by-election was to be brought on, to get ready before the date was announced ?—A. I usually knew when they were coming off.
Q. And you did that twelve days before the Brockville election ?—A. No, not in Brockville twelve days.
Q. It must have been a bad riding. You say this had been arranged with Mr. O'Gorman, Mr. Smith, Mr. Lewis and yourself, you had discussed it and arranged it, and I suppose just as in the other cases you were to attend to the switching part and Mr. Lewis to the bribing part, under Mr. O'Gorman ?—A. That was the part I attended to.
Q. And Mr. Lewis attended to the other part? —A. As far as I know.
Q. You knew from what was said —A. That is what I supposed he was there for.
Q. You knew from what was said between you and Lewis and O'Gorman and Smith ?—A. I knew he had done that.
Q. You knew that was what he was there for ?

Mr. ROBINETTE. He didn't say that.

A. I knew he was there to help win the election.
Q. And you knew the way from what was said ?—A. Yes.
Q. Then you went down there twelve days— did you go to London at all before you went to Brockville ?—A. No, sir.
Q. You were operating from Toronto ?—A. Started from here.
Q. Who went with you ?—A. Mr. Lewis.
Q. And where did you go when you got there? —A. To a hotel.
Q. What hotel ?—A. Some little dingy place at the end of the town, the Western Hotel.
Q. Did you stay there or take another hotel? —A. We didn't stay there at all only meal. We wouldn't stand for it.
Q. And you went where ?—A. The St. Lawrence Hall.
Q. You and Mr. Lewis ?—A. Yes.
Q. Were you busy for twelve days?—A. I was.
Q. Did Mr. O'Gorman go down ?—A. Yes, he was down.
Q. How long was he down there ?—A. I met him there the night I got there.
Q. Then did he begin to bring the deputies in, or who brought them in ?—A. Well, there was none of them brought in for a few days, they hadn't been appointed.
Q. I suppose the local people had to be seen.

You always required a certain number of local men to co-operate with you ?—A. Yes.

Q. You were the star players and the cast would be filled up from the local talent ?—A. If you like to term it that way.

Q. That is a fair way ?—A. Well, that would apply.

Q. Then these deputies that were brought in—how many were brought in ?—A. From memory I couldn't say now. It is a number of years ago, but there were eight or ten.

Q. Who brought them in ?—A. Mr. O'Gorman.

Mr. Robinette. When was the Brockville election ?

Q. Just tell how this thing worked, how these men would come in and what would be done and said ?—A. They would be introduced to me.

Q. One at a time ?—A. Oh, sure.

Q. Then what would you do ?—A. They were left in my care then. I would be merely told this was a gentleman who would be acting as a deputy, not always getting his name.

Q. Would you explain to him how he would do the switching ?—A. I would look them over, and if I thought he was good material I would instruct him and if not I wouldn't have anything to do with him.

Q. If you thought you couldn't depend on him? —A. No.

Q. Suppose it was a man and you thought he was a straightforward man and would carry it out just as you wanted it, what would you say ?—A. I would proceed to show him how he could make a dollar or two by switching the votes.

Q. How were they paid for this when you made an arrangement with any man ?—A. So much per ballot.

Q. For every ballot he switched ?—A. Yes.

Q. Now then, what check had you on him for the number of ballots he did switch ?—A. His word, as a rule.

Q. If he said he had switched ten ballots you would say, very well, we will pay you for ten ?—A. Yes.

Q. Had you any way of checking it ?—A. In one election we did.

Q. How ?—A. Dominion election.

Q. How was that done—how did you check it?—A. Got the ballots—in that case the ballots were really switched, they would be taken, but they would be never in the box.

Q. And other ones put in ?—A. Yes, other ones put in.

Q. Spoiled ballots ?—A. No, spoiled ballots would not count.

Q. How would it be ?—A. A good ballot would be substituted in place of the one handed to the elector by the deputy returning officer.

Q. The returning officer would have a ballot exactly like this for the candidate you were working for and he would have that rolled up—A. Folded up.

Q. And when one came that he thought was going to vote the other way—he couldn't see it ?—A. No.

Q. He would make sure ?—A. If you had the scrutineer he would instruct you he was a Conservative to their knowledge.

Q. They would instruct you who would vote the other way ?—A. When you would get the tip he was a Conservative and you wanted to make a grit out of him you would substitute the ballot.

Q. How would that be done ? Were they hidden ?—A. He would have them in his pocket—keep it in the palm of his hand and when you tear the counterfoil off you would leave the substituted ballot there—pretend to tear the counterfoil and take the whole thing, the elector thinks he sees his ballot and it is dropped into the box.

Q. He has the satisfaction of seeing it is his own ballot put in ?—A. At least he goes away with that impression.

Q. Now then he would then have in his pocket the ballots he had held ?—A. Yes.

Q. With their numbers on ?—A. There is no numbers in the Dominion.

Q. How would you account for his having the ballot—would you have some printed to look like them ?—A. There were generally some ballots.

Q. How would you get those ballots, the ones you had ready ?—A. I would usually find them in a convenient place for my use. I dont know who put them there.

Q. Printed exactly the same ?—A. Yes.

Q. There was no number, so it didn't make any difference ?—A. No.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. You know in the Brockville case where they were printed ?—A. No, I don't know where they were printed.

Q. You knew you were supplied with dupliclate ballots ?—A. I know I had them ; they may have been printed here ; I don't know.

By His Worship :

Q. You would take out one all folded up and put it down that way, and then tear away the other ?—A. Pretend to tear away.

Q. And put the bogus ballot in ?—A. Yes.

Q. And then the returning officer would produce these that were marked as his proof that he had put in the others ?—A. The deputy would.

Q. Who would pay him the money and how much would they pay him apiece ?—A. Well, I arranged how much would be paid. It was left entirely to me.

Q. How much ?—A. $5 in the Brockville one.

Q. For each one ?—A. Each ballot.

Q. Who paid it ? Did you pay that to them? —A. No, sir

Q. Who paid the money for it —A. Well, after the ballots were brought to me and I seen what what was right I took the men to a room and they were paid there.

Q. Who paid them ?—A. Mr. O'Gorman. At least I suppose he did. I never seen him pay them; they would come out satisfied.

Q. They would go in there to be paid ?—A. Oh, yes, I arranged with them that way.

Q. Did you give them their ballots or give them a certificate of how much they were to get ?—A. Yes.

Q. You would give them a little memorandum? —A. I would go to the door with him.

Q. And say $20 or $40 ?—A. Yes.

Q. Mr. O'Gorman being there alone, and they would come out ?—A. Yes, in this particular case you are speaking of.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. When you had put these men through their examination and thrown out the unworthy ones what would you do as far as Mr. O'Gorman was concerned—so that the proper deputies would be appointed you know ?—A. The deputies were always appointed previous to my having anything to do with them.

Q. How would you report—would you report to Mr. O'Gorman who the ones selected were ?—A. Yes, I would tell him so and so was all right.

Q. Would there be a special place selected for those deputies to operate in—how would that be worked ?—A. What do you mean ?

Q. Would there be a safe place or unsafe place ?—A. As a rule I instructed them in my hotel.

Q. Would you choose a polling sub-division where the general majority was one way ?—A. No, indiscriminately if I thought they were all right. I didn't know where they were going.

Q. It didn't make much difference ?—A. Not to me.

Q. How long after the election were they paid ?—A. That night—are you confining yourself to Brockville ?

Q. Yes ?—A. That night.

Q. Who was present in the room besides yourself and Mr. O'Gorman ?—A. I wasn't in the room, I didn't go in.

His WORSHIP. He simply called out the amount.

Q. That was in pursuance of your arrangement with O'Gorman ?—A. Yes.

Q. And they would come out satisfied ?—A. Yes.

Q Who were some of these men do you remember ?—A. No, I can't recall any of their names. I never kept a memorandum of any.

Q. I suppose it was convenient not to ?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether O'Gorman took receipts or not ?—A. I know nothing about it no more than what I said, I took them to the room and left them there.

Q. Well, what local men did you meet in connection with this ?—A. The deputies.

Q. And would you and O'Gorman confer from time to time as to how he was getting on. You say you were busy ?—A. Naturally.

Q. Where would your conferences take place ?—A. Anywhere we met, anywhere in the house, anywhere in the sitting room—no need of a private place for that.

Q. I understand then really what His Worship has brought out that the way you could check the matter was that the deputy had to bring the genuine ballot to you or O'Gorman and then he would get the $5 ?—A. To me.

Q. That was the arrangement you made ?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember how many there were ?—A. No, I can't remember, there were various—some there and some more—none less, I think, than three.

Q. How many would the most of them be—more enterprising ones ?—A I think if my memory serves me right between twelve and fifteen.

Q. How long would it take you to train a man ?—A. It would depend how soon he would pick it up.

Q. What did you do with the counterfoil, do you remember ?—A. What counterfoil ?

Q. Would you do anything with the ballot ?—A. Put it in your pocket. What do you refer to ?

Q. Would you have any ballots when you were training these men ?—A. Oh yes, but I didn't use the genuine ballot—that would be wasting.

Q. Then would you hand any of these deputies ballots to substitute ?—A. Oh yes, they wouldn't use them if they didn't.

Q. That is for substitution ? You would supply a ballot for substitution—that is if it was a vote between Jones and Smith, you would put in so many ballots that he should put in for Smith ?—A. I would have them marked in front of me and initial them.

Q. So that the vote would take place some time before the election ?—A. That vote.

Q. Where would you get those ballots from ?—A. I usually found them in a convenient place in my room. I don't know where they came from

Q. Just dropped there like manna from the skies ?—A. I can't make a statement that I can't bear out.

Q. They were there ?—A. Yes.

Q. How would people get into your room ?—A. By being introduced.

Q. Where abouts would you find them ?—A. The ballots.

Q. Yes ? What would you consider a convenient place ?—A. Under the bed—under the mattress .

Q. Did you always know where to look ?—A. I always found them.

Q. Did you generally know where to look ?—A. I don't know—I got them ; I can't tell you.

Q. Just let me know—did you generally know where to look ?—A. Well, I evidently did look or I would not find them.

Q. If you knew where to look you knew where they put them or some body told you where to look ? Did some one tell you where to look ?—A. No, I don't think they did.

Q. You say sometimes you knew where to look. In those particular cases how did you know where to look if no one told you ?—A. I may have been given a hint.

Q. Who gave you the hint ?—A. I can't remember.

Q. It would be some person having the ballot ?—A. Yes, but I was dealing with one or two people and I don't know.

Q. Who were the one or two people there—they were all working with you ?—A. Mr. O'Gorman and Mr. Lewis and I generally worked together.

Q. So you think it was either one of those two ?—A. I would not like to say.

Q. It was not yourself ?—A. No.

Q. It must have been one of the others or some body else ?—A. It was some body.

Q. Do you remember a man named Upham, he was one of the best experts ?—A. In Brockville, yes, I remember him now you mention the name.

Q. And you were quite pleased with him being such a skilled pupil, and Mr. O'Gorman too ? Gave him a good deal of praise ?—A. He done very well.

Q. And you took him into Mr. O'Gorman's room with the fifteen ballots ?—A. I took him to the room.

Q. How many prizes did he have—how many scalps ?—A. I don't know, I did not see his scalps.

Q. Fifteen ballots ?—A. He had ballots.

Q. How many ?—A. I won't say positively—the amount went up around fifteen to the best of my knowledge.

By His Worship :

Q. He would be considered one of the best ?—A. He was.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. Where did you take him when he came with his ballots ?—A. To Mr. O'Gorman's room.

Q. And I understand that Mr. O'Gorman expressed himself as satisfied with the work—praised him—it encourages a man to be praised ?—A. A man doing good work deserves it.

Q. But when the payment was being made you thought it better to leave the two together ? Were you present when the money was paid ?—A No, sir.

Q. How long was he with Mr. O'Gorman when he came out with that satisfied expression ?—A. Five or ten minutes.

Q. And did Mr. O'Gorman say anything complementary to you about the way in which these men had operated—express his satisfaction ?—A. Not any very satisfactory terms to me.

Q. How did he say—what did he say to you ? —A. He was satisfied of course, the result was all right.

Mr. O'Gorman never gave me very much praise I dont think I stood in very well with him.

Q. It was more money he gave you ?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you tell His Worship just for information for how many years you and Mr. O'Gorman were operating in this way—and Mr. Lewis, I shouldn't leave him out?—A. I couldn't tell exactly. I have no——

Q. Four or five years ?—A. Oh, more than that. It is four or five years since I quit it.

Q. What place did you go to next ?—A. From Brockville ?

Q. Yes ?—A. Here first.

Q. What other constituencies were you in that you had arranged in Toronto to go out to ?—A. We went over to South Ontario, I think.

Q. What other ?—A. West Elgin was not arranged for in Toronto, or Mr. O'Gorman there had nothing to do with me in West Elgin.

Q. It was Mr. Reid sent you down ?—A. No.

Q. Who was it ?—A. Mr. O'Gorman's brother.

Q. Was there in West Huron ?—A. Yes, I was in West Huron.

Q. Was that arranged for in Toronto ?—A. No, I dont' think so. That was west of here.

Q. Were you in West York at all ?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were in South Ontario and Brockville and West Elgin ?—A. And West Huron.

By His Worship :

Q. Any other election ?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Tell us the others ?—A. I was back in the mines—up in North Hastings.

Q. What year ?—A. I couldn't tell you ; I kept no date of the years.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. Was that arranged for in Toronto?—A. Yes.

Q. Who had arranged that ? The same four ? —A. No, I don't know whether I met Mr. Smith in that connection or not.

Q. You didn't tell how much you got for your Brockville work ?—A. I don't think that concerns you.

His Worship. I think you might as well mention it and give all the facts.

Q. That was pretty good work ?—A. Not to me.

Q. How much did you get ?—A. I don't know how much I got. I wasn't very well satisfied, however. I think I got somewhere in the neighbourhood of $60 or $70.

Q. Who did you get that from ?—A. Mr. O'Gorman.

Q. Where was it paid ?—A. Just coming into Toronto on the Pullman car. I had to pay my expenses out of that of course.

Q. That wasn't very good pay. Now, you went to North Hastings ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have the pleasure of Mr. Lewis's company as well ?—A. Some of the way.

Mr. ALCORN.

Q. Mr. O'Gorman, did he go up with you ?—A. No.

Q. He just arranged that you should go up. How many days before the election did you go up in North Hastings ?—A. I put in my Christmas there ; I don't know just when the election was. I presume I was up there six days—seven days at the outside.

Q. About a week was the usual time ?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Mr. O'Gorman feel it necessary to go up there at all ?—A. I don't think so.

Q. Was he there ?—A. I didn't see him.

Q. It was the local men arranged for the supply of deputies ?—A. Well, of course the local men arranged. Mr. Vance was my superior there.

Q. What is his first name ?—A. I couldn't tell you.

Q. James Vance?—A. I don't know.

Q. How did you get in touch with Mr. Vance? —A. I met him there.

Q. And he was your superior officer there ?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it he who brought these deputies to you ?—A. Yes.

Q. And these deputies—how many were there? —A. I don't think I instructed over three or four there. It was too cold and a long way to get them. I had to go a long way.

Q. And how much were they to get for their votes ?—A. I think I promised them—some of them money and some of them jobs.

Q. Who were you that you could promise jobs ?—A. Promise anything.

Q. What sort of jobs ?—A. Government jobs.

Q. What sort of government jobs ?—A. Almost anything they wanted.

Q. And these deputies were to be honoured in that way by getting a government job—those that had too high a standard to be taken with money you dangled out the government job ?—A. Well, I promised them.

Q. Whose authority did you have ?—A. My own in that respect.

Q. Did you talk that over with Mr. Vance ?—A. I guess we did.

Q. Do you have any doubt about it ?—A. No.

Q. How many did you promise jobs and how many money and how many both ?—A. I only had anything to do with about three or four there.

Q. What was the price of a vote there ?—A. I don't think there was any money consideration at all in that. I don't remember promising any particular one any money.

Q. These were pure patriots who were doing it for love of the country ?—A. Doing it for the love of the promise of the job, may be.

Q. Do you know how many ballots they switched ?—A. No, I can't say.

Q. And were they paid anything by anybody? —A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did you report to Mr. O'Gorman when you got back to Toronto ?—A. No.

Q. Did you see Mr. O'Gorman —A. I see him shortly after.

Q. Did he pay you ?—A. Vance paid me in that case.

Q. How much did he pay you ?—A. $50, I think.

Q. For that cold trip ?—A. Yes.

Q. Did your expenses come out of that ?—A. Yes.

Q. You weren't making a fortune out of it ? —A. No.

Q. Who asked you to go to West Huron ?—A. Mr. O'Gorman.

Q. Where did he see you about it ?—A. I think he came to my house or my place of business, I don't know which at that time. I can't just remember.

Q. Did you go up ?—A. Yes.

Q. Did your friend Mr. Lewis accompany you or did you meet him up there ?—A. I met him up there.

Q. It seems almost a work of supererogation having Mr. Lewis when you had this skilful method ? Was it necessary to take him up ?—A. Well he usually was around.

Q. And you usually went up together or met him there ?—A. As a rule we went together but he was in West Huron when I went up there.

Q. He had gone up ahead of you ?—A. I didn't go with him, I went up myself.

Q. Who did you meet there ?—A. I met Mr. Smith.

Q. How had Mr. O'Gorman asked you again to instruct deputies ?—A. Yes.

Q. Was this to be a case of money or jobs ?—A. Money.

Q. Did you go up to West Huron and who did you meet ? Who submitted the deputies to you for education ?—A. A man by the name of Grant.

Q. What profession does he belong to ?—A. I think he was a teacher or inspector.

Q. He presented these candidates to you ? How many ?—A. Some six or seven. No, I am wrong, some five or six at the room.

Q. Did they all qualify or were some of them plucked?—A. Oh yes, I plucked several of them.

Q. They were weak-backed fellows that wouldn't qualify—poor stuff ?—A. They didn't suit me.

Q. What was the trouble ? What were the esential qualifications for this position ?—A. Nerve.

Q. These men didn't have the nerve that was required. How many did you instruct ?—A. Some five I think.

Q. Then you had seven or eight presented to you and you had three thrown out and about five you could rely on, had the sufficient nerve?—A. I think so.

Q. And you instructed them did you ?—A. Yes.

Q. And did Mr. O'Gorman take any interest in that after you had gone down—did he appear on the scene ?—A. He was there.

Q. Was he there when you were giving these instructions, or did he introduce the candidates to you ?—A. Some one or two.

Q. He stood sponsor for a few ?—A. Some one or two.

Q. You wouldn't pluck any he brought to you ? A. Indeed I did.

Q. You had to be pretty careful I suppose ? A. I acted that way, yes.

Q. Then did you find this little package under the bed at this time ?—A. It was convenient.

Q. It seemed indispensible to every properly regulated room in any hotel when you went out ?—A. When I was in that kind of rooms.

Q. Where did you find it this time ?—A. On the bed.

Q. Had Mr. O'Gorman been in before ?—A. It was his room.

Q. Oh, I see. Were you occupying the same room ?—A. No sir.

Q. This time you found the mysterious package on Mr. O'Gorman's bed ?—A. My room wasn't convenient.

Q. This business required a certain amount of suitablity ?—A. Certainly.

Q. And Mr. O'Gorman's room was more convenient ?—A. Yes.

Q. And you found the prize package on his bed ?—A. I found the ballots.

Q. Right on top ?—A. Yes.

Q. He was reckless. What did you do with these ballots ?—A. Took possession of them.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. O'Gorman about them ?—A. No, it wasn't necessary.

Q. As you have explained I suppose, you got the ballots and had them marked ?—A. The same process was adopted.

Q. And then they were to bring the real ballots back—the same process ?

By His Worship :

Q. How did the election turn out ?—A. You might know pretty well.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. It generally turned out well when you and O'Gorman and Lewis went ?—A. Yes.

By His Worship :

Q. You won the election ?—A Yes.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. How many ballots did you switch altogether—was it enough to make the difference ?—A. I couldn't tell you that.

Q. It turned out all right anyway ?—A. Yes. that is right for those——

Q. Your side ?—A. Yes.

Q. Then where were these generally paid—the same process of paying them ?—A. Not in this case.

Q. What happened, just tell his Worship ?—Another cashier was appointed.

Q. Who was he ?—A. I expected any people I had anything to do with to see another man there.

Q. Who was it ?—A. His name was Horton, or something like that.

Q. Why was Mr. O'Gorman slighted ?—A. I don't know.

This fits in with the affidavit read by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) at an earlier stage of this debate to the effect that Horton was in Goderich and that Pritchett was introduced to him under another name.

Q. Who did you get your instructions from to refer them to the other man ?—A. I think Mr. O'Gorman told me to refer them to him.

Q It was Mr O'Gorman told you ?—A Yes.

Q. To refer them to this other man ?—A. Yes.

Q. Where were they paid at that time ?—A. That I don't know.

Q. Well, sometimes you extended your field of operations in your field of usefulness. Did Mr. O'Gorman request you to take any official position at that time ?

By His Worship :

Q. Just before he answers that. You say at this time Mr. O'Gorman told you to refer the people to another man ?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you take them to the other man ?—A. No sir, I sent them.

Q. What did you send with them so that the other man would know they ought to be paid or how did you arrange that with the other man ?—A. I don't think—I think they just took the ballots to him.

Q. In this case ?—A. Yes.

Q. And then he paid them for the number of ballots ?—A. I don't know.

Q. You didn't give any certificate ?—A. No.

Q. And didn't go over the ballots yourself ?—A. Of course, I went over them.

Q. And then sent them with their ballots to this other man ?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. You had arranged they ought to get $5 a ballot ?—A. I made arrangements for different prices there.

Q. Was it bargain day ?—A. No.

Q Higher prices ?—A. Cheaper.

Q. How much ?—A. Oh, some $10 for five or $15 for twenty.

Q. Wholesale rates, ?—A. We needed them up there.

Q. So you got into the wholesale rates, $10 for five or $15 for twenty or $20 for fifteen ? That was the West Huron ?—A. Yes.

Q. You know Mr. Grant up there, do you ? —A. I have met him—never met him before or never since.

Q. Was it arranged you should hold any official position ?—A. In what respect ?

Q. Looking after the interests of those who employed you seeing that no crooked work was done by the other side ?—A. Yes, I acted as scrutineer in one polling subdivision.

Q. What was the object of that ? Who was the deputy there—who spoke to you about acting there ?—A. I am not positive. Mr. O'Gorman spoke to me about going up and of course I took any position they gave me.

Q. From returning officer down ?—A. Yes.

Q. Who was the deputy returning officer there—he was a valuable man, wasn't he ?—A. Fair.

Q. More than fair, the results show. He was the deputy sheriff of the county, you know that ?—A. Yes.

Q. And he had arranged to do a little switching right there while you were present? —A. Yes.

By His Worship :

Q. Switching on the same side ? Who was he to switch for ?—A. Not the Conservatives.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. He was a deputy sheriff ?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you do together ?—A. I went out to the polling subdivision and acted as scrutineer the same as anybody else would in a division, and I suppose I had to prod him up a little bit now and then.

Q. Was he slow ?—A. Too slow, yes.

Q. What was he slow about ?—A. He didn't seem to do the work.

Q. What work ?—A. The switching the ballots.

Q. He was slow on the switch ?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you get him working honestly—did you get him working properly ?—A. He worked all right.

Q. What was the result—what was his capacity ?—A. I can't remember, he took some few.

Q. Try and recollect—were there ten ?—A. I couldn't say positively, I don't want to——

Q. Do you recollect that he did switch a number there ?—A. He did.

Q. You kept prodding him ?—A. Yes, I seen him do it.

Q. You didn't object ?—A. I wasn't there for that purpose.

Q. Then did you give instructions—you seemed to be an all round useful man. Did you instruct the scrutineers as well how to switch Conservatives ballots ?—A. Yes.

Q. Who brought this new class of students up to you, the school teacher ? Mr. Grant ?—A. I think it was.

Q. Perhaps they were pupils of his—how many did he bring up to you ?—A. Quite a number.

Q. What did you instruct them to do ?—A. Oh, I don't know—I am getting tired.

Q. What were you to do with them ?—A. Oh, I just showed them how to put on a double cross.

Q. What was the purpose of putting on the double cross ?—A. To spoil a ballot.

Q. Whose ballot ?—A. Well, the Conservative, of course.

Mr. SINCLAIR. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question ?

Mr. ALCORN. Certainly.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would like to get an explanation of the fact given in the official returns that in the county which my hon. friend (Mr. Alcorn) has the honour to represent in the elections of 1896, there were 115 spoiled ballots under Conservative rule and in the election of 1900 there were only 25. I am referring now to the county which my hon. friend represents and I would like to get an explanation of that fact.

Mr. ALCORN. When that matter is pertinent I will discuss it :

Q. You showed these distingushed gtntlemen how to put on a double cross for the purpose of spoiling a Conservative ballot —

By His Worship :

Q. How could they do that ?

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. Just as in the North Grey. There is one cross for the one candidate and then the other cross for the other one, when a Conservative ballot wants to be spoiled there is an X put in favour of the Conservative and then he puts one on for the Liberal one.

Q. Just tell his Worship how that was ?—A. In putting the cross ?

By His Worship :

Q. How did they do it—what time ?—A. When the ballots were being looked over.

Q. When they are being counted ?—A. Not when they are counted for the final but when they are counted with the deputy returning officer and the scrutineer assists in counting to facilitate matters to get it done quickly, than it is done.

Q. How would he do it, a pencil ?—A. A bit of lead under his thumb nail.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. Was that supplied, the little piece of lead, and sometimes they had appliances little pieces of skin ?—A. I dont know, I never required any skin, not for that.

Q. Where did you get the pieces of lead pencil from—who supplied them ?—A. I generally had them myself.

Q. You carried them around—that was part of your stock in trade—Mr. O'Gorman and you? —A. Mr. O'Gorman did not carry no lead pencils for me. I carried them myself.

By His Worship :

Q. It was put in underneath the nail ?—A. Yes, underneath the thumb nail and in taking a ballot it is easy to make a mark.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. That would be a bad ballot and thrown out ?—A. Yes.

Q. Now how would you reward these patriotic gentlemen who spoiled the ballots on the other side. Would they do that for jobs or money ?—A. I presume for money.

Q. Who would pay them ? You say you presume—was that arranged ?—A. Sometimes.

Q. In this particular case that I am asking you about, was it arranged ?—A. You are not referring to any particular case.

Q. Yes, I am referring to the West Huron case ?—A. Oh yes.

Q. That was arranged in that case ?—Yes.

Q. We would like to know the rates for spoiled ballots ?—A. The same as for the others.

Q. The same price ?—A. Yes.

Q. $5 a ballot or $10 for fifteen or how was that ?—A. Along that class.

Q. The market for switching ballots would govern the rates for spoiled ballots—about the same ?—A. About the same.

Q. Of course both would have to take the oath, both the deputy and the scrutineer—wouldn't there be anything extra for the perjury, or would they have a system by which they wouldn't take the oath ?—A. Quite possible.

Q. Did they have a system by which the oaths wouldn't be taken ?—A. I told them a way they could overcome it.

Q. We would like to know ?—A. They could kiss their thumb instead of the book.

Q. Did they think that would make any difference ?—A. I suppose they thought it did.

Q. Now do you know who paid these gentlemen ?—A. I already stated who paid.

Q. The same person paid the scrutineers as the deputies ?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, I have overlooked to ask you that in connection with the other cases—did you combine this second class of work in the other elections as well—were you in the double capacity ?—A. Sometimes.

Q. What cases did you do it in ?—A. I am now speaking of the scrutineers with the nail and the lead pencil—what other elections did you instruct scrutineers ?—A. Oh, West Elgin and Brockville.

Q. How many were there in Brockville ?—A. I dont know how many switched.

Q. How many did you instruct ?—A. I dont know ; some half-dozen may be.

Q. And who brought them to you—who introduced them to you ?—A. I dont remember whether they were introduced by Mr. O'Gorman or by another person.

Q. Was this a specially prepared pencil that you would have or would you just manufacture it yourself ?—A. I would buy a certain pencil that would suit and cut it up myself.

Q. You would make it more suitable yourself ?—A. Yes.

Q. Now in the West Elgin case you say Mr. O'Gorman's brother spoke to you ?—A. Yes.

Q. About how long before the election ?—A. I arranged to go down with him some three or four days before.

Q. In that election you had the distinguished honour of being a deputy yourself ?—A. Yes.

Q. That had been arranged for ?—A. Yes.

Q. You weren't in the riding at all ?—A. I was there.

Q. But it was at the poll your services were needed ?—A. Yes.

Q. Who arranged that, do you remember ?—A. That I would be a deputy ?

Q. Yes ?—A. Well, some gentleman by the name of—I dont know his name. He was a railroad man.

Q. When Mr. O'Gorman's brother saw you you understood you were to be deputy ?—A. I went down for that purpose.

Q. Now when you got there what took place—did he tell you who wanted you to go down ?—A. Mr. O'Gorman ?

Q. Yes.—A. No, I don't think he did.

Q. Just think Did he say anything about Jack ?—A. He may have mentioned his name.

Q. Just think. Tell us what he said ?—A. I cant, positively.

Q. What is your recollection ?—A. Of course I never acted under him before but I acted in places he was.

Q. Did he tell you his brother Jack wanted you to go to West Elgin ?—A. He may.

Q. Do you recollect that ?—A. Not positively.

Q. Do you remember any other distinguished gentleman—Captain Sullivan ?—A. Yes.

Q. And our friend, Thomas Lewis, esquire ?—A. Tom. Lewis was there.

Q. When did the distinguished party arrive ?—A. Who ?

Q. Yourself, Mr. Lewis, Captain Sullivan and Mr. O'Gorman ?—A. I came home every night and went back the next morning.

Q. What took you there before the election ?—A. To see some of them.

Q. Tell us what you did—was the position you were to fill occupied ?—A. As deputy ?

Q. Yes ?—A. Yes.

Q. Who arranged that ?—A. Some of the people there.

Q. Who was the returning officer ?—A. The sheriff of the county, his name has just slipped me. I would know it if I heard it.

Q. Did you go under your own name ?—A. No, Sir.

Q. What name did you take ?—A. Well, a gentleman loaned me his name.

Q. Who loaned you his name—Mr. O'Gorman?—A. No.

Q. Who loaned you his name ?—A. A man by the name of Johnson.

Q. Any addition to it ?—A. In what way ?

Q. Had he a Christian name or just a surname ?—A. J. B. I think.

Q. Who was it introduced you to the sheriff Mr. Lewis ?—A. No.

Q. Who was it introduced you to the sheriff ?—A. I dont know whether it was Mr. Lyall or Mr. O'Gorman.

Q. Who is Mr. Lyall ?—A. A gentleman I met there.

Q. Who is he—what does he do ?—A. I don't know, a farmer I presume.

By His Worship :

Q. Did the sheriff make any inquiry about you, as to who you were or what you did ?—A. Yes, your Worship, he made a few inquiries but after I was represented as this man Johnson that was quite satisfactory

Q. Did Mr. O'Gorman do that ?—A. He was not there.

Q. You said Mr. O'Gorman—who introduced you ?—A. This railroad man I spoke of previously. He went up with me.

Q. Do you know who he was ?—A. I wouldn't like to say.

Q. He was a railroad man ?—A. Yes, that I know.

Q. What took place between you and the sheriff ? Were you appointed ?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you given your ballot box ?—A. Yes.

Q. How long before the election ?—A. Probably a day or two days.

Q. And did you act ?—A. Yes.

Q. And I suppose you wanted to make a record on the switching business. How did you do, just tell his Worship ?—A. I already explained that to you.

By His Worship :

Q. How many did you switch ?—A. I gave the Grits 27 majority ; they usually got from 13 to 20 the other way.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. Who paid you ?—A. Connie O'Gorman.

Q. How much ?—A. $25.

Q. That would be a change of 40 ?—A. Twenty votes—thirty-eight votes.

Q. Did you instruct any deputies ?—A. Yes.

Q. How many ?—A. Two.

Q. Who brought them to you ?—A. I think Con. O'Gorman.

Q. Was Mr. O'Gorman the defendant there at all ?—A. No Sir, not to my knowledge.

Q. Did you see Mr. Lewis ?—A. I did.

Q. What was he doing ?—A. I could not tell you. I had no communication with him at all in this election.

Q. You did afterwards did not you ?—A. I met him afterwards.

Q. He came to your house. They told you there were warrants out ?—A. No, Mr. Ewing done that.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Some time ago the hon. gentleman said that the evidence he was reading was relevant to the resolution. Now he has just read a question in that evidence 'Was a warrant issued ?' That surely is not relevant to this resolution. It does not establish anything.

Mr. ALCORN. The hon. gentleman can consider that omitted if he chooses.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Will he make a motion to strike that from the 'Hansard ?'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Whenever the circulars about Mr. Baker are struck out, he will.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. The hon. leader of the opposition cannot complain. Nobody transgressed the rules of the House, in discussing the resolution, to a greater extent than he did up to the time this hon. gentlehad the floor.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is entirely a matter of opinion.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I am not finding fault with it, but I certainly have the right to object to the hon. gentleman reading every question and answer in the report which he has in his haud. There is surely some rule against it.

Mr. BOYCE. Some of it is not very nice.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. A. K. Maclean) should not obstruct the business of the House.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Alcorn) is not reading loud enough.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That should please the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. K. Maclean) for he does not want to hear it.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. It is no good to the House if the hon. gentleman does not read it so that it can be heard.

Mr. ALCORN. Let the hon. gentleman sit over here.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. The voice of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Alcorn) is not so agreeable that I would care to do that. I prefer my own place. I think the hon. gentleman should turn this way and read louder.

Mr. ALCORN. There. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. K. Maclean) content now ?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I object to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Alcorn) turning round again.

Mr. ALCORN (reading) :

Q. Did Lewis come to your house at all ?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he ask you to get out ?—A. Well, yes.

Q. What did he want you to get out of the country for ?—A. He didn't ask me. He said I would have to get out or I would be arrested. That is the part he took.

By His Worship :

Q. Who was it said that ?—A. Lewis.

Q. Did he tell you to go to Detroit, or where? —A. He didn't tell me to go anywhere, only to get out.

Q. And you did ?—A. Yes, very quick.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. Then did you go to any person's house ? Did you go to see O'Gorman or did O'Gorman see you ?—A. Yes.

Q. And he gave you money, $100 ?—A. Yes.

Q. And you got another $100 did you, or how much ?—A. I got $525 all told for a year's banishment.

Q. How did that come to you ?—A. With the exception of the first $100, through letters.

Q. Did you write to Mr. O'Gorman here in Toronto ?—A. Concerning this election ?

Q. Yes, or any election ?—A. I did concerning a certain thing that took place in one election.

Q. Did he write to you ?—A. He did.

Q. Have you got those letters ?—A. No, sir.

By His Worship :

Q. Who sent the money to you ?—A. The money came through a brother-in-law of mine.

Q. What is his name ?—A. Thomas D. Hastings.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. Where does he live ?—A. London.

Q. Have you ever heard as to any person who sent the money—did O'Gorman ever tell you he had sent the money since ?—A. No, sir.

By His Worship :

Q. Did you ever find out ?—A. I was told the money was paid over, but I never got it. It didn't reach my brother-in-law or I would have got it.

Q. More money as well ?—A. I was entitled to $100 a month until my return.

Q. Who made that bargain with you ?—A. Mr. O'Gorman.

Q. And you only got $500 ?—A. $525.

Q. They owe you $675 now ?—A. That is what I claim.

Q. When did he tell you he had given this to anybody ?—A. No, sir, he didn't.

Q. Who did ?—A. Well, there was a member of parliament now dead told me that the money was drawed and paid over.

Q. Drawn where from ?—A. Well, he didn't tell me where from. He told me he knew it was paid in Toronto.

Q. To your brother-in-law ?—A. No, if my brother-in-law had got it I would have got it.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. He said he knew the money had been drawn in Toronto and paid over ?—A. Yes, he could swear to it, but it didn't reach me.

Q. Have you had any talk with Mr. Lewis about it, because he was one of the men ?—A. Yes, I wrote him.

Q. What did he say ?—A. He came over and seen me.

Q. Where ?—A. In Detroit.

Q. Were you staying over in Detroit ?—A. Not all the time, no, Sir.

Q. You came back to Detroit ?—A. I got tired being away and I came back to Detroit.

Q. And then Lewis came over to see you ? —A. Met me there.

Q. Did anything take place between you about coming back or anything ?—A. No sir.

Q. Did he talk money matters ?—A. He told me they couldn't pay me the $100.

Q. Why not ?—A. He didn't give me no reason, not per month ; he came and offered me $50.

Q. $50 a month ?—A. Yes.

Q. You wouldn't take it ?—A. I took what I could get.

Q. Did you take any money from Mr. Lewis? —A. No, I don't think I did direct. He offered me some but I told him I had enough. He wanted to give me $25. I think, or somtthing and I refused it.

Q. Did you give receipts for this ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see Mr. O'Gorman at all after that about the matter ?—A. No.

Q. Did you see Mr. Reid ?—A. No.

Q. Then you say that just before you went away and just after the West Elgin election that Mr. Reid spoke to you—that is not this Mr. Reid, his brother ?—A. His brother.

Q. What Mr. Reid was it spoke to you ?—A. Mr. Robert Red.

Q. What position does he hold ?—A. Now ?

Q. Yes?—A. He is on some commission, railroad commission—I am not positive about that, I think it is on the railroad commission, though.

Q. He wanted you to do what or what was it took place between you ?—A. He telephoned me the morning after the election to come up to his office and I did so. That is where the conversation took place with regard to fixing the ballot box.

Q. I don't quite understand about the fixing of the ballot box ? What do you mean ?—A. I volunteered to go down to St. Thomas to change the box, making it as it was reported instead of having in the event of an investigation, the ballot box would be found correct according to my statement.

Q. You had switched those and what were you to do ? You were to make ballots ? Just tell His Worship ?—A. All I had to do was to go down and take some of the ballots out of the packages that were left, taking out a sufficient number of those ballots, the ballots that I called, McDermot—19 or 20. I would have to take out 20 or 19 of McDermot's ballots and put in McNeish ballots.

By His Worship :

Q. How did you expect to be able to get at them ?—A. Well, I thought I could go to the sheriff.

Q. You thought you could get the sheriff to let you look at them ?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Duvernet:

Q. What was it took place ?—A. He said, oh, never mind not to bother with it, it would be attended to.

Q. He told you who would attend to it ? Did he tell you who would attend to it ?—A. Yes, he did.

Q. Who ?—A. A man by the name of Grant from here. I think he said he was a lawyer; he told me his business. I think it was Laywer Grant.

Q. Then what position did the defendant Reid here occupy ?—A. In respect to me ?

Q. Yes ?—A. None at all.

Q. What position did he occupy in London in regard to money matters there ?—A. Well, he was supposed to be the head of the Liberal party there. . . .

Q. Did you ever discuss with this defendant—that is the defendant Reid—what you and O'Gorman or you and Lewis or you and Mulloy were doing ?—A. I think—yes, we spoke about it.

Q. When did you speak to him first about it ?—A. I couldn't tell you.

Q. How long ago ?—A. A number of years ago.

Q. You have discussed with him the practices ?—A. No.

Q. You had spoken to him about it ?—A. Yes.

Q. Just tell his worship in what way you had spoken to him about it ?—A. Just in a casual conversation.

Q. What did you tell him—what would he say to you ?—A. I couldn't recall the man's conversation to me, or mine with him. I know I spoke about the way things were working.

By His Worship :

Q. What did he say to that ?—A. I couldn't recall his words.

Q. Try ?—A. I couldn't.

By Mr. Duvernet :

Q. What was the substance of it ?—A. Satisfactory, that is all—to that effect.

Q. What was ?—A. The method

Q. That the method was satisfactory ?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he say any words at all of approval ? —A. I couldn't recall a conversation that took place a number of years ago. I couldn't recall a conversation of yesterday hardly.

Q. Can you tell the substance of it ?—A. No.

Q. Why did you speak to him ?—A. Being he was the head of the party.

Q. You told him about the methods you and O'Gorman and Lewis were employing ?—A. Yes.

Q. And you say he spoke with satisfaction ? —A. It was. It was satisfactory, yes.

Q. Why did you speak to him ?—A. Well, he was the head of the party and I thought he would be interested in knowing.

Q. Were you ever with O'Gorman and the defendant Reid yourself ?—A. In the committee room.

Q. Where ?—A. In London.

Q. Had you arranged with Mr. O'Gorman who was to go ? Was Mulloy one of the parties that had been arranged for ?—A. I don't know. I was to meet him and did meet at the station.

Q. Who told you to meet Mulloy at the station ?—A. I think Mr. O'Gorman told me that he would be down on that train and to go and meet it and I did.

Q. Now you say at Brockville Mulloy came down and O'Gorman had arranged that he should go. For what purpose was he going ?—A. That I could not say ; I was not present at any——

Q. For what purpose had O'Gorman told you he was coming up ?—A. To assist in the work, of course.

Q. What work ?—A. I don't know ; I couldn't tell what Mr. Mulloy's business was. As I told you in the beginning I had no particular connection with any of the people only by meeting them and coming on the train.

Q. The purchasing of voters wasn't your department ?—A. No.

Q. You knew from your conversation with O'Gorman what Mulloy was coming there for ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For the purpose of purchasing the voters, you knew that ?—A. Well, I suppose you would put it that way.

Q. Well, wasn't that the way. You knew that from that conversation you had with him ?—A. I knew he was coming down to do some work in connection with the election.

Q. And you yourself did meet them in the committee rooms ?—A. Yes.

Q. What rooms ?—A. The committee rooms in the city.

Q. Since you had told him these matters—since you had had these conversations ?—A. One time I spoke to him there—we were alone for a few minutes.

Q. Was that at the London election ?—A. It was a London election.

Q. Which one ?—A. Colonel Lees, I think.

Q. You spoke to him there about it ?

Mr. Robinette. Not about it.

Q. About the methods ?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you tell him—just tell His Worship, what did you tell him ?—A. I can't give the substance—I can't give special——

Q. Did you tell him like you are telling us to-day about the ballots and the rates ?—A. Never spoke to him about the switching.

Q. About the substitution of ballots ?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, after you and O'Gorman and Lewis had arranged the preliminaries, the smaller men would come in, you said Mr. Mulloy was one of these—what election do you remember him in ?—A. Mr. Mulloy was in Brockville.

Q. And you were instructed to meet him.—A. Yes, to meet him.

Q. Where did you take him ?—A. To the hotel.

Q. The same hotel you were staying at ?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Mr. Lewis come down too ?—A. Mr. Lewis was there—not at the station, he was at Brockville.

Q. Why didn't Mr. Lewis meet him—Mr. Mulloy was in his department ?—A. I don't know ; Mr. Lewis was probably out of the city.

Q. Then did you take Mr. Mulloy down to the hotel ?—A. Yes.

Q. And did Mr. Lewis come there ?—A. I met him there quite often.

Q. And did you talk matters over there ?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ask him or find out ?—A. Not with Mulloy.

Q. With Lewis ?—A. Yes.

Q. How many voters they were buying ?—A. No.

Q. You knew they were bribing voters ?—A. Yes.

Q. You knew that was the purpose that Lewis and Mulloy were there for ? You knew that ?—A. From previous elections, of course.

Q. You knew that from what took place ?—A. Yes.

Q. Did they tell you how many voters they had bought ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who looked after that branch ? Who paid this money ?—A. I couldn't tell you that. Mr. O'Gorman, I presume.

Q. Mr. O'Gorman looked after that too—how long were Lewis and Mulloy there ?—A. I think Mr. Mulloy came down within the last three days of the election and Mr. Lewis and I were there twelve days.

Q. Now you knew about this system of telling how the voters would vote and giving him his money afterwards. You knew about that ?—A. I knew about it, yes.

Q. Your system was an improvement on that again ?—A. I thought so.

Q. But what part of it, the part as to giving the envelopes or money afterwards to the voter that was the part that Lewis and Mulloy looked after ?—A. I didn't have anything to do with that.

Q. Did they look after that ?—A. They looked after the paying of the votes.

Q. They looked after that in Brockville. You weren't in Waterloo ?—A. No.

Q. When Lewis was reported ?—A. No.

Q. Were they in West Elgin ?—A. Mr. Lewis?

Q. Was Mulloy in West Elgin ?—A. I didn't meet him.

Q. Was Mulloy in Huron ?—A. Yes, I think he was.

Q. Was Lewis in Huron ?—A. Yes.

Q. Was Mulloy in Hastings ?—A. I am not positive, because I was alone in that.

Q. Where would most money be spent in connection with the switching of votes or the purchasing of votes ?—A. Well, I couldn't tell you. It would depend largely on the people, I presume.

Q. It would vary in different ridings, it would depend on the number of people you could buy ? If you couldn't buy, you could switch ?—A. Yes.

Two o'clock p.m., adjourned till 3.15.

Q. Did he want you to make an affidavit saying you were not in Brockville ?—A. Not in Detroit.

Q. Where was it he wanted you to make it ?—A. In the city of London.

Q. When was that ?—A. I couldn't tell you when.

Q. It was after the West Elgin case ?—A. I dont know—yes, it was.

Q. Now you say Mr. Lewis came to you at your house ?—A. Yes.

Q. Just tell his worship what took place ?—A. As to what ?

Q. As to trying to get you to swear an affidavit—a false affidavit—just go on and tell it ?—A. I dont know as I can just recall it now.

Q. What did he want it for ?—A. To the best of my recollection he wanted me to make an affidavit that I was not in Brockville.

Q. That you were not in Brockville at all?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he know you were there ?—A. I think so.

Q. Had he seen you there ?—A. Yes.

Q. He knew you were there if he saw you ?—A. Yes he did.

Q. And he wanted you to make an affidavit you weren't there at all ?—A. Yes.

Q. How much were you to get for that ?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. What page is the hon. gentleman reading from ?

Mr. ALCORN. I am reading from page 409.

Mr. Wilkie : That is improper. It assumes he was to get something.

Q. Was anything said ?—A. Yes, I think he had a paper in his possession.

Q. Just tell his worship what he said ?—A. I am like those gentlemen there ; I dont see it bears on the case.

Q. Just tell his worship ?—A. Have I got to answer ?

His Worship : Certainly. This is a conspiracy and you were in Brockville and he was asking for an affidavit to cover up what you were doing and help on the conspiracy and therefore would be a part of the conspiracy, so it is very material in this case.

A. Well, Mr. Lewis came over or telephoned over and I went up to his hotel. He had a paper in his possession and he asked me to sign it and I wanted to know what it was and he told me and I told him positively I would not.

Q. Was that all that passed ? No inducement of any kind held out ?—A. Yes.

Q. Out with it ?—A. He offered me $100 if I would sign it.

Q. Sign this affidavit which he knew was false. Was it to sign it ?—A. To sign the affidavit—to sign the paper in his possession. I asked him what it was and he said it was an affidavit pertaining to me not being to Brockville.

Q. Who were you to swear it before ?—A. I don't know I wouldn't have nothing to do with it.

Q. That was the end of it ?—A. That ended it.

Q. What took place next ?—A. He offered to pay me any back moneys that were coming to me if I would sign it.

Q. To pay your arrears of $100 a month if you would sign it ?—A. Yes.

Q. How much ?—A. $625.

Q. Did you refuse ?—A. I did, positively.

Q. I believe there was a commission going to sit at that time, was there ?—A. That was in Detroit. The commission was not going to sit in Detroit. They were going to sit in West Elgin.

Q. And you were to have this before the commission sat—you were to make this affidavit ?—A. Yes.

Q. Then you told us in West Elgin you went under a wrong name there. What became of the money you were entitled to as returning officer—what did you do with that ?—A. I gave an order to the man who was appointed previous to my being appointed.

Q. An order to what you might call the real man that he should get the money. Where did you give that ?—A. In the Willcox House in St. Thomas.

Q. Did he get the money ?—A. I presume so ; I never made any application for it. He was the original appointee.

Q. You just went and represented him —A. He resigned and I was appointed in his stead.

Q. Did the returning officer know that ?—A. I presume he did.

Q. You went under the other name ?—A. He knew Mr. King was appointed for the polling subdivision—he knew that Mr. King resigned and I was appointed under the name of Johnston.

Q. I thought you took the name of the man who had been appointed ?—A. No.

Q. That was King ?—A. Yes.

That is an extract, somewhat lengthy, from the deposition of Mr. Pritchett. I might go on and give extracts from the evidence of Jerry Collins which might be found equally interesting, but as the hour is growing late I forbear. I think I have read enough to show the different methods of election frauds practised by this gang of election thieves.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question ? I have had some difficulty in following the argument of the hon. gentleman, but if I mistake not he has been discussing the question of spoiled ballots.

Mr. ALCORN. Nothing has been said about spoiled ballots at all..

Mr. SINCLAIR. The question I wanted to ask the hon. gentleman is this : In the year 1896 there were, in thirty-two counties in the province of Ontario, according to the official returns, 4,190 spoiled ballots, that was the year when the election was run by the friends of the hon. gentleman ; whereas in the election of 1900, according to official returns, in these same counties, there were only 850 spoilt ballots, and one of these counties was the county represented by my hon. friend. I wish to get some explanation of that fact from my hon. friend, if he will be kind enough to give it.

Mr. ALCORN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sinclair) will get no explanation from me at the present time. That is the same question that the hon. gentleman propounded some time ago and I think I answered it very explicitly at that time. I will make no further remarks upon this resolution than to say that a vote against the passage of this resolution is a vote in favour of a continuance of a state of affairs disclosed by the evidence that I have read.

House divided on amendment (Mr. R. L. Borden).

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Mr. FIELDING. I would suggest that we should take the items in their order, and we might be able to dispose of those which are only matters of routine ; we can let the others stand.

Dominion Police—Retiring allowance of Constable Angus McCuaig, $1,111.73.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is there no superannuation for the Dominion police ?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why not put them on the same level as the other servants of the country ?

Mr. FIELDING. That is rather a large question.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Nearly every one else is pensioned.

Mr. FIELDING. There are large numbers who are not.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. All are pensioned except the ex-ministers.

Mr. DANIEL. Why do you give this retiring allowance ?

Mr. FIELDING. Let the item stand.

Legislation—House of Commons, $103,260.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Each member is entitled to about 5,000 ' Hansard ' envelopes, but he should be entitled to one of these envelopes for every voter he has. I have 15,000 voters and I have to buy 10,000 envelopes if I send one to each of my electors. Others have only 3,000 voters and could do with 3,000 envelopes. The proper thing would be for each member to have one envelope for each voter in his constituency.

Mr. BERGERON. This item had better stand as there is something to be said about the printing of the revised statutes in French.

Exhibitions—Further amount required, $50,000.

Mr. DANIEL. What is that for ?

Mr. FISHER. We had to make preparations for the Dublin exhibition which is just commencing.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is this vote all for the Dublin exhibition ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. We finished up the Milan exhibition with the vote we had.

Mr. BERGERON. How much did the Milan exhibition cost ?

Mr. FISHER. Speaking from memory, about $120,000.

Mr. BERGERON. How much will the Dublin exhibition cost ?

Mr. FISHER. About the same, not quite so much.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the exhibit at Milan be transferred to Dublin ?

Mr. FISHER. All that will stand transportation ; for example the agricultural decorations must be renewed.

Mr. BERGERON. What will you do with the buildings at Milan?

Mr. FISHER. The contract is that the contractor shall put up the buildings and then remove them. He takes the materials back, and that is considered in the price. We have been following that system for the last few years and we find it is much cheaper.

Mr. BERGERON. There is no possibility of taking the Milan buildings to Dublin ?

Mr. FISHER. We tried to have the Milan building taken down and put up in Dublin, but the contractor agreed to put up a new building at a lesser price than that would cost.

Mr. BERGERON. How are these buildings constructed ?

Mr. FISHER. Steel girders and wood.

Further amount required for expenses in connection with visit of Prince Arthur of Connaught ($6,000 being a revote), $11,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the $4,000 for ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is an additional amount required to pay the bill ; royalty comes high.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. We want to know what royalty consists of.

Mr. FIELDING. In this case Prince Arthur of Connaught.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It might be champagne.

Mr. BERGERON. There is $5,000 voted and we do not know what it is for ?

Mr. FIELDING. Except it is to close up the accounts for entertaining His Royal Highness. There are officials in the civil service to whom additional sums are proposed to be paid.

To compensate R. Wainwright for injuries from runaway team of Mounted Police horses, $425.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would call the attention of the minister to the fact that there are many claims for injuries received in camp to both men and horses that are held over sometimes for several years and I would suggest that he should expedite the adjustment of claims which are even now before the department.

Legal services in connection with Sunday legislation, $1,840.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Who gets that ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It goes to Mr. R. U. Macpherson who was retained to assist in the preparation of the Bill.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the effect of that Sunday observance law ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That remains to be demonstrated.

Mr. DANIEL. Was Mr. Macpherson retained by the government or by the Lord's Day Alliance ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. He was retained so far as I am aware by my predecessor for a year or perhaps eighteen months before the introduction of the Bill to assist in its preparation and did very materially assist, as I am told, prior to my taking charge of the Department of Justice in the preparation of the Bill, and in attending on the special committee which considered it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Was there not $2,000 paid to him last year ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. At the moment I am not able to say but if so it was for services prior to these services.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is Mr. Shearer not to get something ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think not.

Mr. AMES. There were accounts before the Public Accounts Committee showing that $1,000 or $1,500 was paid to Mr. Macpherson in 1905-6. Was this in addition ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. If there were such sums they would be for services prior to the services covered by this item.

Unprovided items as per Auditor General's Report, page C—4, $69,328.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the Auditor General's Report at the page indicated he will find there certain sums of money, small balances which are practically over-expenditures. An appropriation is made for one branch of the service and some small portion may pass to another branch. Technically it is an over-expenditure but at the end of the year the Auditor General covers these in his report and a vote is taken.

Administration of the Chinese Immigration Act, including remuneration to Trade and Commerce and Customs officers..	$ 4,000 00
Canada's proportion of expenditure in connection with International Customs Tariff Bureau..	600 00
Commercial Agencies, including expenses in connection with negotation of treaties or in extension of commercial relations or miscellaneous advertising and printing or other expenditure connected with the extension of Canadian trade.	70,000 00
Bounties on iron and steel, manufactures of steel or lead contained in lead, ore, and on crude petroleum. To cover expenditure in connection with administration of the Acts..	11,000 00

Mr. FIELDING. I move to amend the item with regard to bounties on iron and steel, &c., by adding to the word 'petroleum' the words 'and on manilla fibre used in the manufacture of binder twine.' This does not touch the bounties themselves. It is for the special service in connection with the bounty, such as the payments of salaries of the inspectors who have to watch the operations of the various concerns.

Mr. DANIEL. The first item for administration of the Chinese Immigration Act takes in a very large question in which the people of British Columbia are particularly interested. And I think we should have a little explanation as to how the Act is working and how it is likely to work out in the future.

Mr. FIELDING. If we pass the item the hon. gentleman can take the opportunity of discussing it in any form he likes on any other item.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 12.50 a.m. Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 17, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

RIDEAU CANAL—LEASE OF RESERVE LAND.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

Has the government leased the reserve land on the banks of the Rideau canal between Kingston and Jones' Falls to a company, or a person, for the purpose of making brick and tile ? If so, to whom, and on what terms ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Acting Minister of Railways and Canals) : The government have granted a lease to Messrs. Robert F. Rowan, John H. Birkett and Alexander M. Chisholm, giving them the right to dredge from the bed of the waters between Kingston Mills and Jones' Falls, material suitable for the manufacture of brick tile, &c., for the term of 21 years, at $500 a year, under proper restrictions that do not permit of any injury to the banks of the canal or adjacent property.

ST. CHARLES DE CAPLAN, BAIT FREEZER.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE—by Mr. A. Johnston—asked :

1. How many reports have been made to the government by the Refrigerator Association of St. Charles de Caplan ?
2. Did the said association receive any bounties from the government in 1904 for the freezing of fish ?
3. How many pounds of fish did they freeze ?
4. What is the amount of bounties received by them from the government ?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Monthly reports are required from all the fishermen's bait freezers to the outside officer of the department in charge of the establishment of these freezers, through whom they are received at the department.
2. Yes.
3. 38,800 pounds in 1904.
4. $97, in 1904, and $100 in 1905.

MR. ULRIC DION.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE—by Mr. Louis Lavergne—asked :

1. Is Mr. Ulric Dion, of St. Charles de Caplan, in the employ of the government ?
2. If so, what is his salary, and how much is he paid by the month or by the year ?
3. Are his expenses paid by himself or by the department ?
4. How much did the government pay to Mr. Dion in 1906 ?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Yes.
2. $2.50 per day, Sundays excluded.
3. His expenses connected with his departmental work are paid by the department.
4. $704.50 for wages ; $421.38 for expenses.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY PASSENGER AGENT.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE—by Mr. J. J. Hughes—asked :

1. Is Mr. John Matthews in the employ of the Intercolonial Railway at Quebec, as passenger agent ?
2. If so, is the government aware that Mr. Matthews does not speak French, and that the travelling public is greatly put about in consequence ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Acting Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Mr. John Matthews is not employed by the Intercolonial Railway as passenger agent at Quebec ; he is employed as city agent and his duties are to solicit freight and have a general supervision over the business of the railway in Quebec city.

2. Mr. Matthews does not speak French. There are passenger agents at both the upper and lower town offices of the Intercolonial whose duties are to sell passenger tickets and these agents speak both languages. The travelling public are in no way inconvenienced.

CROW'S NEST COAL.

Mr. LAKE—by Mr. Uriah Wilson—asked :

Referring to the statement of the Minister of Railways, given on the 14th of March last 'Hansard' page 4776, that he was taking steps to secure information in regard to coal on the Crow's Nest line of railway, will the government now answer the questions asked by Mr. Lake on that occasion as follows :—

1. Referring to the agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the Crow's Nest line of railway, what is the maximum price now being charged for coal, free on board the cars, on that railway ?

2. What steps has the government taken to fulfil the assurances made, if any, by them on the 18th of June, 1897, that the price would not exceed $2 per ton?

3. If the government has taken no steps, when do they propose to do so, and what is their policy in regard to this question ?

4. What are the freight rates now charged on coal delivered at, say, Moosejaw and Brandon ?

5. Are these rates lower than when the railway first commenced operation ? If so, how much lower ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Acting Minister of Railways and Canals). The department is endeavouring to obtain the information to answer this question ; but so far has not been placed in possession of it.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Allow the question to stand.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend had better renew it. Information has to be obtained from a distance and my hon. friend had better renew the question at a later date.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. This session ?

OTTAWA IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN—by Mr. Bennett—asked :

1. How many meetings were held by the Ottawa Improvement Commission last year ?

2. On what dates in 1906 were the meetings of the commission held ?

3. Did the senatorial members attend any of the meetings of the commission last year ? If so, on what dates ?

4. How many meetings of the Ottawa Improvement Commission have been held since the 1st of January last ?

5. If any held this year, on what dates, and were they attended by the non-resident members of the commission ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) :

1. Five meetings were held in 1906. Seven meetings in all were called, but two of them could not be held for want of a quorum.

2. Wednesday, April 4th, 3.45 p.m. ; Saturday, April 7th, 3.15 p.m. ; Friday, June 15th, 4 p.m. ; Tuesday, September 4th, 3.45 p.m. ; Wednesday, November 14th, 3 p.m.

Meetings were called for 3.30 p.m., Monday, March 12th, and 3.30 p.m., Wednesday, November 7th, but for want of a quorum were not held.

3. No.

4. None.

5. Answered by No. 4.

QUEBEC BRIDGE AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House do to-morrow go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide as follows :

1. The Governor in Council may, from time to time, advance by way of loan to the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company, hereinafter called 'the company,' a sum not exceeding six million six hundred and seventy-eight thousand two hundred dollars, for the purpose of the undertaking of the company as set forth in chapter 54 of the statutes of 1903, and the agreement, a copy of which forms the schedule thereto, which loan shall bear interest at the rate of three per cent per annum, payable half-yearly on the first day of April and the first day of October in each year.

2. So much of the sum hereby authorized to be advanced as is required for that purpose may be applied in repayment of any moneys heretofore advanced to the company by any bank or banks for the purposes of the undertaking, on the pledge or hypothecation of bonds of the company, issued under the provisions of chapter 177 of the statutes of 1903 and of said chapter 54, and the stipulated interest on such advances, said pledged or hypothecated bonds being a part of the $6,678,200 of bonds authorized to be guaranteed by the government pursuant to the provisions of said chapter 54 and said agreement.

3. The remainder of the said sum may be advanced as the undertaking is proceeded with to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council, and in such sums as the chief engineer of government railways, or such other officer as the Governor in Council appoints for the purpose, may certify to be justified.

4. Before any moneys are so advanced the company shall deposit with the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, or arrange to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council for such deposit, all the bonds so authorized to be guaranteed, whether the same have been already issued or remain to be issued, and the said bonds shall be held by the government of Canada as security for the loan herein provided for.

5. The Royal Trust Company, which is the holder as trustee under the mortgage trust deed, to the Royal Trust Company, dated first February, 1904, of the bonds not yet issued, is authorized, notwithstanding anything in the said agreement or mortgage trust deed, to issue and deposit with the Minister of Finance and Receiver General all the said bonds remaining to be issued.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General having been made acquainted with the subject-matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. SAM. HUGHES.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). Before the Orders of the Day are called, Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. In the Montreal 'Star' of yesterday—a very excellent journal so far as its news matter is concerned—is an editorial directing some attention to myself. I do not as a rule complain of all the abuse that newspapers choose to heap upon me; on the contrary, I am rather inclined to follow the principle laid down by Barnum a good many years ago, that I would infinitely rather be condemned by my opponents than praised by them. As, it seems, I can rank the Montreal 'Star' as one of my opponents, I therefore feel complimented, in a sense, by its opposition. Consequently I would not have referred to this matter had my honour not been touched upon. Reference is made by the 'Star' to collusion between myself and the Minister of Militia in regard to militia matters. I would say only one word in reference to that: That anything that has transpired between the Minister of Militia and myself is done with the absolute knowledge of my former leader Sir Charles Tupper, and my present leader Mr. R. L. Borden; the policy being that everything connected with the militia should be as far as possible kept out of the arena of party politics. I am not complaining of the news columns of the 'Star'; it is one of the finest journals in that regard, but I do complain of the editorial which is one of the weakest—the editorials are always weak in the Montreal 'Star.' A few weeks ago there appeared a very unfair article in the columns of that journal against my hon. friend, Mr. Fowler, and I took the liberty of reasoning with the Montreal 'Star,' and in the course of the reasoning I undertook to tell them finally that their article was unfair, unmanly and cowardly.

Mr. FIELDING.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The Montreal 'Star' therefore I presume is merely getting back at me in its usual way for having defended my friend Major Fowler on that occasion. I may point out that the Montreal 'Star's' editorial policy is yet influenced by its conduct on the eve of last election, when it having undertaken—I would not say criminal conduct in relation to that election; found itself at the mercy of the right hon. the leader of the government, and then after trembling and chattering in the teeth for a few months, finally succumbed and surrendered itself, and since that time it has been under the control of the leader of the government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. gentleman charges that the 'Star' is under the control of the government I am afraid I will have to rise to a question of privilege myself.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not know what the compromise with Sir Wilfrid Laurier was, but at all events we do know that after being in a state of mental paralysis for a number of weeks, the 'Star'——

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman is now going beyond the question of privilege.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am merely explaining why the 'Star' is slating me. I bow to your ruling.

Mr. FIELDING. I think you ought to be allowed to finish that sentence.

COAL STRIKES IN THE NORTHWEST.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY (Calgary). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw to the attention of the government a telegram which I have received in relation to labour disputes in mines in the west. I am in receipt this morning of the following telegram:

Calgary, April, 1907.

M. S. McCarthy, M.P.,
Ottawa.

Calgary Board of Trade strongly urges immediate action board of conciliation miner disagreement. Freight traffic ceased entirely; passenger traffic stops for a few days; miners leaving work in large bodies, though no strike apparently officially declared; output coal practically ceased; manufacturing plants closing; situation most serious in the history western Canada; ask your co-operation prevent fatal demoralization western business.

(Sgd.) E. L. RICHARDSON,
Secretary Board of Trade.

I desire to draw the attention of the government, the Minister of Labour in particular, to this matter.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). I beg to say that I also have received this morning a message similar to the one read by my hon. friend. It looks as if there were, in one of the mines at least, a little disagreement between some of the operators and some of the miners. The miners—I mean the men working in the mines—have agreed to appoint a representative on the board. This gentleman is Mr. Eckstein. The cause of the difficulty was that the operators suggested at first the name of a gentleman as their representative who himself was directly interested in the operation of the mines. We remonstrated, as the men did, because the law clearly provides that no one directly interested can be a member of the board. I am glad to say that the operators have changed their mind, and have suggested the name of an independent party, a Mr. Parker, who was only appointed yesterday. I received a telegram last night from the representative of the miners, which reads as follows :

Hon. Minister of Labour, Ottawa.

Am hopeful of clearing misunderstanding and reaching temporary settlement when companies' representative meets me. Shall do my utmost to bring about peace. Am now working in that direction.

L. P. ECKSTEIN.

I hope that in a few hours the representative of the men and the representative of the operators will have met and agreed upon a third arbitrator, and put an end to the situation which now unfortunately exists. But, as I have stated, the disagreement is not as considerable as the message which my hon. friend has received would seem to indicate.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the minister if in the meantime the men have gone out from work? Has the operation of the mines ceased?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. Eckstein does not speak of a strike. Some of the men have left, I know ; but there is not a general strike.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the telegram which the minister mentioned as similar to the one received by the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) the one he has read just now ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No ; it is another one from the secretary of the Board of Trade of Calgary, Mr. Richardson—the same as the one the hon. gentleman has read. Mr. Richardson is probably unaware of the fact that the company has appointed Mr. Parker as its representative.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is Mr. Eckstein at Calgary or at the mines?

Mr. LEMIEUX. At the mines.

AMERICAN WARSHIPS ON THE LAKES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have been waiting patiently for a statement from the government as to permitting American warships to enter the great lakes, and as to the attitude of the government with regard to the matter.

Mr. FIELDING. I stated to the hon. gentleman at the time that I had an impression, but that I did not wish to reply until I looked up the records, which I have done. No such permission has been granted, and no such permission has been applied for.

THE PETAWAWA CAMP.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the minister obtained any information in regard to the Petawawa camp?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not been able to get it yet, but I will send to the acting minister for it.

SUPPLY—ERIE AND ONTARIO DEVELOPMENT COMPANY.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I wish to call the attention of the House to a somewhat remarkable account of a proceeding that happened yesterday in the city of Ottawa, and for full reference I will read the article which is in the Toronto 'News' of Tuesday, April 16, 1907 :

Ottawa, April 16.—The members of the Private Bills Committee of the House of Commons this morning witnessed an unusual scene when Mr. German, Liberal member for Welland, made a few unexpected remarks about a minister of the Crown. The scene occurred in connection with the consideration of the Senate Bill which proposes to amalgamate the Jordon Light, Heat and Power Company and the Erie and Ontario Development Company. Mr. D'Arcy Scott, mayor of Ottawa, and son of R. W. Scott, appeared in the interests of the Erie and Ontario Development Company.

Mr. German, speaking on behalf of the Erie and Ontario Power Company, which is not included in the proposed amalgamation, stated with heat, that the promoters of the company represented by Mr. Scott got their powers in a secret way from a minister of the Crown. Mr. German further alleged that the Secretary of State had also given the company more power than was authorized by the statutes. An amendment was inserted on Mr. German's suggestion, to the effect that the powers of amalgamation should not in any way interfere with the rights of the Erie and Ontario Power Company.

Now, I think that is a fair comment in part on what actually occurred at that committee. As one who was present, I am going to state my recollection of it. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) appeared on behalf of one of these companies, and at the very outset of his remarks said that a very unfair advantage had been taken of the parties, whose interests he was advocating.

Mr. FIELDING. Has this committee reported on the Bill to which this transaction refers? If not, I question the right of the hon. gentleman to refer to what occurred in the committee in a matter that has not been reported to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What goes on in a committee, which is not a private but a public committee, is reported through the press and becomes a matter of general observation, general comment and general information. That is all my hon. friend is discussing. He is not discussing the measure or the merits of the measure.

Mr. FIELDING. He is discussing the proceedings of the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. Which are public proceedings.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think my hon. friend can say that they are public proceedings in the sense that they can be discussed in this House before the measure is reported upon by the committee. That is the general rule.

Mr. FOSTER. He could not go into the merits of the Bill.

Mr. FIELDING. Everything that takes place in the committees is publicly referred to in the press ; and if that were a reason, an hon. member might discuss anything.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think the rule excludes from discussion or comment in this House everything that transpires in a committee. Suppose a member of parliament should commit an assault in a committee upon my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, would the mere fact that the proceedings of the committee had not been reported prevent a reference to that in the House?

Mr. FIELDING. Even so I think they would have to report.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think so. I should be very much astonished if any parliamentary rule of that kind could be cited. I think my hon. friend the Minister of Finance on reflection will concede that to be a most ridiculous suggestion.

Mr. FIELDING. It might be brought up as a question of privilege.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Besides I would like to know whether or not, as a matter of fact, the Bill has been reported.

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the point is well taken. At page 551 of the last edition of Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, it says:

As soon as the evidence is before the House it may be debated at length, but members will not be permitted to discuss the conduct or language of members on the committee except as far as it appears on the record.

Mr. BENNETT. I think the Bill was reported yesterday by the gentleman who acted pro tem. as chairman of the committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. We had better ascertain if that is the fact.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know what my hon. friend is reading about. I am taking the general principle.

Mr. SPEAKER. I find from the clerk that this Bill has not been reported.

Mr. BENNETT. Can I comment on the article in the newspaper?

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that would be indirectly doing the same as the other.

LEASE OF RESERVE LAND OF RIDEAU CANAL.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (Leeds). I wish to read to the leader of the House (Mr. Fielding) a letter which has been placed in my hands referring to a question answered by the Minister of Finance this morning in reference to the Rideau canal. I wish to give the letter to the government as a notice from the farmers of this district. It reads as follows :

Kingston Mills, April 6.

Sir,—The farmers of the district from Kingston Mills to Jones' Falls whose lands border on the Rideau canal desire to call your attention to a matter in which they are deeply interested.

It is reported that a company has been formed to manufacture brick and tile, and that said company has obtained from the government a lease of the government reserve between Jones' Falls and Kingston Mills. The material of these reserves to be used in the manufacture of brick.

This reserve consists of sixty-six feet of land on each side of the canal.

In the deeds or patents issued to the farmers of their lands the Act governing these reserves states plainly that these reserves are held for the use of the Rideau canal for the use of the Public Works Department or for any other public use. Now we contend that the leasing of these reserves to said company for abovementioned purpose is not a public use but a purely private one. And that these lands are not only being leased for private purposes, but they are to be removed and used in the manufacture of brick.

If this is permitted the bed of the canal would be widened and the government reserve which acts as a water break would be removed thereby allowing the banks to crumble and wash into the canal thereby damaging all farm lands bordering on the canal.

The government has never fenced or inclosed its reserves, the farmers whose lands the canal crosses running their line fences dividing the farms to the water's edge. Now if these reserves are to be leased and the ends of the line fences removed which crosses the reserve at the canal it will necessitate a great expense to either the farmer or to the government in the erection of fences. Each farmer has always had the use of that portion of the reserve which is on his own farm.

We contend that the leasing of these lands to private parties or companies for private purposes is contrary to the deeds or patents issued to us, we also contend that if these reserves are to be leased at all, they should be leased to each farmer to whose lot they belong. Surely the farmer who bought the balance of the lot is entitled to the first chance to lease or buy the reserve on his own farm, it being a portion of his own lot.

You will confer a great favour on all farmers in that portion of your constituency by investigating the matter, and if necessary bringing the matter before the House, thereby preventing the land grabs of the west being introduced in Ontario.

All landowners on the Rideau river from Kingston to Ottawa are interested, for if one portion of these reserves can be leased they can all be leased. We inclose clippings from a Kingston paper which will further explain matters.

Yours sincerely,
Landowners of District.

I understood the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to say they had only leased the bed of the canal. I read this letter so that it may be on 'Hansard' and the government can look into the matter. If the patents have been issued as the landowners say I think the government will be making a mistake if they allow these reserves to be interfered with to the injury of the farmers and particularly if they have been in possession for a number of years.

Mr. FIELDING. My only information is the answer I gave this morning. I have no other knowledge, but in view of what the hon. gentleman has said I will see that some inquiry is made among the officials.

REPORT OF INSURANCE COMMISSION.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I desire, in accordance with the notice I have given to the government, to bring up the question of the Royal Insurance Commission. Owing to the action of the government we are to have another year of chaos in this matter. The commission was appointed in great haste. Complaint was made at the last session that the government, after leaving the matter so long, had seen fit to make the appointment on the eve of the session, and the explanation given to the House was that the urgency of the matter was the reason the appointment had been made at that time. It was then stated that the probability was that the report of the commission would be in the hands of the government in time to enable them to introduce legislation during that session. The fact is that that hope was not realized and we are again approaching the close of a session and it is evident that there is to be no legislation in reference to this matter this session. The result is that we are to have another year in which the people do not know in what position they stand in regard to insurance matters, a year in which every life insurance company which has been condemned by the Insurance Commission will be to a large extent powerless and paralyzed in its efforts.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) the other night drew a pathetic picture of the widows and orphans of the policyholders. We must not forget that during this period of uncertainty men will not insure, they will allow their policies to lapse and the widows and the orphans will suffer irretrievable loss in consequence. In addition to that we will have standing upon the records of this House embodied in the report of this commission, a condemnation, unrefuted, of every home insurance company in this country, and although the Insurance Commission did authorize an inquiry into the acts and proceedings of every insurance company doing business in Canada there will not be the same condemnation in regard to foreign companies operating here, and so their operations will be extended and to that extent the operations of our own home companies curtailed. It may be said that this is a matter that affects the companies alone. That is not so. Every policy-holder is interested in the success of the company in which he is insured. The success of the company must be to a large extent the success of the insured as well. I propose at the close of my remarks to move a resolution along the lines of my criticism. First I want to call the attention of the House to the scope of the inquiry which was committed to the Royal Insurance Commission. The order in council provides :

That the commission shall inquire into :

(a) The general subject of life insurance and life insurance systems in Canada ;

(b) The operations of the various companies chartered by the parliament of Canada or by any province, and licensed under the Insurance Act, transacting life insurance in Canada, including expenses of management, investment of funds, and other allied questions.

2. To make the like inquiry, as far as deemed necessary, into the operations of companies other than those chartered by the Dominion or a province, transacting in Canada the business of life insurance.

What would be the scope of the inquiry as regards the home companies because, as regards the other companies doing business in Canada, the commission, as I understand, actually did nothing at all. Would the scope of the inquiry be different at all from what it would be if directed say to the operations of a bank? They are to inquire into the subject of insurance and insurance systems in Canada. There is no need of elaborating that branch, because that is clear. And they are also to inquire into the investment of funds. If their inquiry were into the operations of banks and their investments, it is perfectly plain what scope the commissioners would have. They would have the right to inquire into what had been done with all the moneys of the bank, to whom these moneys had gone and what securities had been taken in return. But beyond that they would not be empowered to go. They would not have the right to inquire into the particular methods by which the customers of a bank had acquired their property, the prices they had paid, or the chain of title through which it had come. That would all be foreign to the subject of the inquiry. Take the case of a loan company, the commission would have the right to inquire into the various loans which had been made by the company, the expenses they had incurred, the class of securities they had obtained. But what the men the money had been lent to had done with it, whether they had dealt with it honestly or dishonestly, how they had acquired their property in the first instance, by what title it had come to them, would be recognized by all thinking men as matters thoroughly foreign to the investigation. But if we take the methods which were adopted by this Insurance Commission, we are at once struck with their complete departure from any such principle. We may take it for granted as preliminary that any investigation into banks or loan companies—and I submit also in the case of insurance companies—should be perfectly impartial—one in which the parties interested would have the right themselves to show their position. It would not be assumed that the counsel appointed to conduct the commission would paint these companies either black or white, but that these companies would be permitted to bring forward all the evidence they thought would bear on the question and be allowed, through their own counsel, to cross-examine the witnesses produced by the commission and bring forward witnesses of their own. But instead of that we had a one-sided inquisition and trial, and we had an absolute and distinct denial by the commissioners to allow these companies to cross-examine the witnesses or produce evidence on their own behalf, and we have spread upon the reports and the record a condemnation clear and straight of every life insurance company in the Dominion. We had Mr. Shepley employed by the government, and I submit that he should have been in an impartial position. I believe that was the expectation of the country when he was appointed and I do not know but that it was the intention of the government, and if I refer to the language of Judge MacTavish at the opening of the investigation, I would understand that the counsel was merely in the position of assisting the commission and should be exactly in the same position as counsel who would appear on the other side as regards the right to examine and inquire into the various matters that come before the commission. But instead of that the evidence shows that Mr. Shepley throughout this investigation was the pursuer, the persecutor, the inquisitor and the judge in this investigation. In the annals of British or British-Canadian history you cannot find a case in which a gentleman occupying the position that Mr. Shepley occupied in that matter, afterwards took his place as a judge beside the men who were appointed as judges, and decided upon the very points he had been himself advocating during the case, and to show what an impartial judge Mr. Shepley made, I shall refer to a sentence in the examination as a sample of the position he occupied when he assumed to take the position of judge. On page 2603 of the evidence we find this question :

> Q. Mr. Shepley, what do you think, having regard to all these circumstances, can you say with certainty, having regard to the fact that you do not find your signature in the attendance book, and having regard to the fact that the subject was never brought to your attention, have you any doubt there never was any such a meeting ?—A. I do not think there would be any minutes in the minute book unless there was a meeting ; but the minutes would be signed of course.

I call attention to this statement in this question.

> Have you any doubt that there never was any such meeting ?

And yet this gentleman whom the government saw fit to employ as a judge, had before him at that time, and the commission had before them at that time, the clear and implicit evidence of Mr. Stephenson, which I read the other day, who stated that he sailed from New York on the 15th of November, that the meeting in question was said to have taken place on the 13th of November, that on the 13th of November he was in the city of Toronto, that he moved a resolution which was seconded by Col. McGillivray, that the resolution was not put into writing because, as he says,—and he challenges the attention of Mr. Shepley and of the commission to that fact—he was in a hurry on the eve of his departure, and wanted to get to New York so as to sail for Europe. And yet Mr. Shepley, with that knowledge before him, was endeavouring to get Col. Davidson to swear to the fact that there never could have been such a meeting, although he knew as well as mortal man can know, both by the statement of Mr. Stevenson sworn five or six days before, and by the documents which were under his hand at the moment, that that meeting did take place, as a matter of fact, and beyond all question.

I do not intend to go very fully into this matter at present, but I submit that the line of investigation pursued by the commission was wholly unauthorized by the scope of the commission. In reference to that I may be permitted to refer to a matter to which the Minister of Justice referred the other day, namely, that this question had already been brought up in the Senate by the Hon. Senator Cox, and I think it well to read a short extract from the statement of Senator Cox, made in the Senate, with reference to the manner in which this investigation proceeded, and as to whether they confined themselves to the scope of the investigation. He says :

This was something that occurred in the interval——

Referring to the loans that had been made to Ames & Company.

This was something that occurred in the interval, and it seems to me the commission travelled a long way out of their jurisdiction to do this institution harm by raking up a transaction of that kind, a loan which had long since been paid, and in which there was never a dollar risked.

That I have nothing to do with, that is a matter beween the senator and the commission.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY. It was not the first time the commission travelled out of their way.

Hon. Mr. COX. No it was not. They have travelled out of their way a long way to do a great deal of injury to Canadian institutions. In that report of several hundred pages there is not one solitary word of commendation with regard to the thirty or forty different Canadian companies that are doing business in this country, and all over the world, practically. Everything that could be said, and everything that could be done, and everything that could be withheld to injure our Canadian companies in the eyes not only of Canadians, but in the eyes of the public outside of Canada, where neither the commissioners themselves nor the officers of the company are known, was resorted to.

I cannot put it any stronger than that. What the senator means by saying 'where the commissioners are not known' I do not know, whether it would be more injurious where the commissioners are not known, or whether that is the point he desired to make. Hon. Mr. Edwards, a pretty good supporter of this government, says :

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS. An advertisement for outside companies as against Canadian companies.

Hon. Mr. COX. Yes, an advertisement for outside companies—doing everything they could in that way. Our Canadian companies are in competition with several United States and English companies and nothing has been said derogatory to these companies whatever. No examination of them has been made to show whether they could have the same kind of charges brought against them. They have been left untouched, and the Canadian companies have been weakened, injured and prejudiced in every possible way. I think the report of the Royal Commission on Insurance does no credit whatever to that body.

Now, I charge that this commission not only was conducted in a way that was thoroughly unBritish and thoroughly unjustifiable as regards the various interests that were involved, but it was conducted from a political standpoint, and had for its object the prosecution of a political search. Read the pages of evidence; turn to the evidence, for instance, of Mr. Griffin, and see the long and tedious investigation that was made there with the object of trying to show that this land was paid for at an undervalue by the Fowler-Pope syndicate, page after page, column after column and day after day, spent with the object of proving if possible that this land which was sold by the Canadian Pacific Railway for $3.50 an acre, was worth probably twice that amount. And what was the object of that ? If the commission were pursuing a line within the scope of their investigation we can understand that it might be proper for them to inquire whether fair security was obtained when the Foresters invested their money. But when their object is to find out that this land was worth probably double $3.50 an acre, what could have been the object of such an inquiry ? It was, if possible, to blacken the character of public men, members of parliament who were in this syndicate, and to show that they were abusing their position, prostituting their position as members of parliament, had in fact sold themselves to the Canadian Pacific Railway, that the Canadian Pacific Railway bought these men by giving them land at an undervalue. Is there any honest man in this country who, leaving political prejudice aside, can find one scintilla of reason which will justify the Insurance Commission investigating a matter of that kind ? Is there one honest man in this country who can say that the investigation, with Mr. Griffin, of the books and records of the Canadian Pacific Railway advanced one iota the special object which had been committed to this Royal Insurance Commission?

Then we have the evidence of Mr. Fowler. We have that extended over page after page and the object is the same. It starts out by asking Mr. Fowler what papers or documents he has. Column after column is devoted to telling Mr. Fowler to make a jotting of this or that. Mr. Fowler says that he wrote to some people endeavouring to sell his land. Produce these letters or copies of them. Every ramification, every matter from the first day that these gentleman began to think of acquiring these lands, every step and every idea was pressed upon Mr. Fowler by Mr. Shepley, the examiner, and when that branch is exhausted and when he is told by the commission that he must produce every document, every map and every scrap of paper he has in connection with the beginning of the transaction and how the transaction originated in his mind, they come down to another point, and on this point I will take the liberty of reading a few sentences. Not only do they want to know what was the real value of the land at the time, but they insist upon knowing where Mr. Fowler got the money. Was there any right, was there any necessity, if Mr. Fowler had not been a member of parliament and a Conservative, to inquire into these matters ? Is there any one who believes that this inquiry would have gone into the question of how Mr. Fowler financed this transaction had he not been a member of parliament and a Conservative ? We have Mr. Shepley examining Mr. Fowler as follows :—

Q. Not only the surveyed, but the unsurveyed part ?—A. Well, of course, the unsurveyed part would have to be very general.

Mr. Shepley is asking as to the line of railway.

Q. That would be approximate ?—A. That would be approximately, of course, that any one could pretty well tell from the map, because, as far as it was surveyed they would know that they had to go by a certain route, they were going to Edmonton, and I suppose a layman could arrive at a fair guess with respect to that. However, that is what we did.

Q. That is what you thought was the easier way, but you have not told me what was done in pursuance of that ?—A. Oh, well, in pursuance of that, the route was indicated on the map.

Q. By whom ?—A. I don't know.

Q. Not in your presence ?—A. No.

Q. You left the map for that purpose ? And it was returned to you ?—A. Yes, the map was given to us. We got the map afterwards with a mark in red ink.

Q. You left it with whom ?—A. Oh, I cannot remember.

Q. With Mr. Mann ?—A. I don't think it was with Mr. Mann, but it was left there in the office.

Further on the examination proceeds :

Q. Did anything else take place between yourselves and Mr. Mann then ?—A. I think he invited us over to the Toronto Club.

* * * * * * *

Q. Was there anything then suggested about their having an interest ?—A. Oh, no.

Q. How long afterwards did that come up ?—A. About their having an interest ?

Q. Yes ?—A. I never had any conversation with them about their having an interest ; never the slightest.

Q. Did you have any conversation with them about raising money ?—A. Never in the world.

Q. Did you get any money from them ?—A. Never got a dollar.

Q. They did not assist you in financing your first payment ?—A. Oh, well, I would not say that. They may have done that. As a matter of fact they did not do that, but I never got any money from them.

Q. Do you think you are answering me quite fairly, Mr. Fowler ?—A. I think so.

Q. You think you are ?—A. Yes.

Q. Tell me the arrangement that was made for financing with Mackenzie & Mann?—A. I don't know it.

Q. Did you make it ?—A. I did not.

Q. Who did ?—A. Whatever arrangement was made would be made by Mr. Pope. I was not there at all.

Q. Did he tell you what it was ?—A. He said they would help us in financing the thing here. This was a long time subsequent to that, you know. But I do not see Mr. Shepley, again I may say Mr. Commissioners, I do not see what this has to do with the matter.

And would not any honest man who was pursuing an insurance inquiry feel the same? What on earth had this to do with the question of insurance inquiry that was committed to this commission ? Then, we go on a few pages, and what do we find ? We find that these gentlemen are interested in finding out if the Fowler syndicate obtained from Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann an endorsement of a note, Mr. Fowler again protests against going into the matter, and he is directed by the commissioners to answer the question. That is merely a sample. If we turn to the evidence of Mr. Lefurgey at page 2502—I am not going to read it—we find that the whole ingenuity of the Insurance Commission is directed to the task of finding out, if possible, whether my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) was connected with this matter. And for column after column again, by all the devious methods that could be adopted—not by a straight, open manly question : Was Mr. Borden a partner in this transaction, or had he anything to do with it—but by a surreptitious and hidden course, Mr. Shepley devotes all his energies to finding out if Mr. Borden was connected with this transaction. Mr. Speaker, you are a lawyer, you know how to analyse evidence, you know how to look at both sides of the case ; I appeal to you, if my hon. friend the leader of the opposition had committed himself up to the hilt in this matter, what on earth had that to do with the question that was submitted to these gentlemen for investigation ? Not one thing. I shall not read that evidence because it was read more effectively the other night than I could read it to the House. But, they were not contented with following a political investigation as respects hon. gentlemen in the House. They also went to Australia and tried by putting in newspapers scraps which would not be evidence in any proper official investigation and by cross-examining Dr. Oronyatekha, after he had pointed out to them that the matter had absolutely no connection with the Foresters whatever, and after being told by Dr. Oronyatekha that any money paid by Dr. Montague, if there ever was any paid, was paid out of his own private pocket and had nothing to do with the Foresters, they endeavoured to blacken the character of Dr. Montague, a former political opponent and one whom they anticipated might give them trouble in the future.

Then, they turned their attention to the Hon. Colin Campbell. We have the evidence as to the matter of the commission paid. That has been sufficiently explained. It is in evidence and it has been dealt with in this House that of the $10,000 commission half of it went to the syndicate and the other half was retained by Mr. Pritchard. You would have thought that the investigation would have ended there? Nothing of the kind, Mr. Speaker. These gentlemen are still upon the war path and endeavouring if possible to fasten some insinuation upon some politicians or upon some gentlemen in the other rank of politics. And so, with the absolute knowledge in their minds before they asked a single question as to what is the fact, they followed up question after question to elicit the information that the Hon. Colin Campbell got $1,000 of that money from Pritchard. What had that to do with the matter committed to these commissioners? At every stage of the investigation we have proof that the main object of these commissioners was to turn this investigation into a political inquiry if possible, to do injury to their political opponents. I need not refer to the method pursued in regard to the hon. member for North Toronto. Every page of the evidence, so far as it relates to the Foresters, is bristling with proof that the main object was to try and get rid of a political opponent whom the government feared. That this was not accidental is illustrated by the whole drift of the investigation, but there is one little piece of evidence to which I would like to refer. With that I am content to leave the case for the present. I leave it with the knowledge that the hon. member for North Toronto will deal with other branches of the case, but I refer you to a letter of the 12th of May, contained in the correspondence brought down, in which Mr. George F. Shepley, writing from Toronto to the Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick, the Minister of Justice says, among other things :

> Pressure is being brought to bear upon the one fraternal society here, and it is anticipated at the end of another fortnight we shall have matters completed as to it so that the public investigation may proceed satisfactorily.

There is pretty good proof in black and white, as to what line these gentlemen were taking with regard to the Foresters.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Who wrote that letter?

Mr. LENNOX. It is written by George F. Shepley to the Minister of Justice :

> Pressure is being brought to bear upon the one fraternal society here.

What was the nature of that pressure? I think the evidence, I think the report, furinshed pretty cogent evidence as to what the nature of that pressure was. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like very much to have a fuller investigation into this matter. It is unfortunate that the attitude of the government has been such, that the engagements of the ministers have been such as to render it impossible for them now to bring down an Insurance Bill. Other legislation foreshadowed at the opening of the session has not been brought down. This great measure, this important measure, this measure without which the business of the country is to a large extent stagnant, has not been submitted to parliament. I deemed it my duty to draw attention to a few questions which arise in connection with this report, other than those I spoke of the other day, and I therefore beg to move :

> That all the words after the word 'that' to the end of the motion be left out and the following substituted therefor :
> This House regrets that the Royal Commission on Insurance did not confine its investigations within the reasonable scope of the powers conferred upon it for the purposes of its inquiry.
> That by its action in conducting unnecessary and irrelavent inquiries into private and personal affairs with which it was in no wise concerned, coupled with its partial and discriminating treatment, its arbitrary and unBritish procedure, its concealment and misrepresentation of material facts in the summary issued as its report, the commission has lent itself to improper and reprehensible partisan purposes, caused grave injustice to companies and individuals and materially lessened the confidence which otherwise would have been felt in its legitimate work.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). There is only one point in the observations of my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) upon which I desire to offer a passing remark, and that will be exceedingly brief. I refer to that part of his speech in which he represents that the failure of the government to bring down an Insurance Bill this session is most unjust to the insurance companies, is paralyzing their business, and treating them badly. I am surprised to hear that from the hon. gentleman. It is the first intimation I have had from any one that that view is taken. Far from being endorsed by the insurance companies of Canada, I am satisfied the hon. gentleman will find he is at variance with them. In so far as I have learned anything from casual conversation with gentlemen connected with the insurance companies, I think the sentiment of the insurance companies is approval of the action of the government. I have reason to believe that the insurance companies would much prefer that the Bill be not dealt with this session, but that further time be taken in order that the matter may receive full consideration. Therefore, the suggestion of the hon. gentleman that the action of the government in not proceeding with insurance legislation this session is adverse to the interests of the insurance companies and disproved by them, is, I think, founded upon a mistake. That is the only point in the remarks of the hon. gentleman which I think calls for special remark. As to the general question, we have had it fully threshed out in a previous discussion. It will be no injustice to my hon. friend if I say that everything he has said to-day was said by himself or others on that occasion, and therefore we have nothing before us now that was not before us in another form a few days ago. Feeling satisfied that the matter has been fully threshed out, and that it is not likely anything new can be added ; at the present stage of the session, with the desire expressed on both sides to advance the public business, I can say on the part of the government, that we shall be quite content to have the hon. gentleman's motion submitted to the House upon the record as it now stands.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I did not take part in the previous debate on this question, but I would have said a few words then were it not that the hour was so late. I do chance to know something about the lands that Messrs. Fowler and Pope purchased from the Canadian Pacific Railway and which formed the subject of inquiry before the Insurance Commission. I chance to know that about the same time these lands were being purchased by Messrs. Fowler and Pope, the famous Barr colony secured options on better lands, lands more contiguous to the railway, for $3 per acre. I was very much surprised when I learned of this arrangement between Messrs. Fowler and Pope a year or so later, and that they had been charged $3.50 per acre for their lands. Of course, there was a month or two intervening, and the price in the meantime had gone up, but the retail price of lands at that time was only $3.50 an acre, and my own opinion is, and I have so told Mr. Griffin of the Canadian Pacific Railway on more than one occasion, that they rather buncoed Messrs. Fowler and Pope in getting $3.50 an acre for such a large wholesale transaction.

Another point that has been used in connection with this investigation is that a tip was given to these gentlemen as to where to select the lands. Now, reference to the records will show that long anterior to the purchase of these lands by Messrs. Fowler and Pope, other persons had selected thousands of acres all along the route of the railway, far beyond the locality where these gentlemen had selected theirs ; and, as a matter of fact, the lands selected by Messrs. Fowler and Pope between what is known as the Elbow and Battleford, were the remnant of the Canadian Pacific Railway lands in that locality. The lands selected in ranges 3 and 4 west of the 2nd meridian were also lands that had been passed over by others, while the large block which they purchased south of the Birch Hills was not in the field in competition with any other lands at all. So far as the route of the road is concerned, for more than a year it had been known almost exactly where it would go, and long before these gentlemen purchased, stakes had been there, and these stakes had been followed by hundreds of land seekers. A word with regard to the British Columbia transaction. I happen to know something about that, because Mr. McCormick is an old personal friend of mine, with whom I may say that Mr. McCormick, acting for Mr. Fowler, had pointed out these timber lands to me, and I had them cruised by men to find out what quantity of timber they contained, and what its value was, a considerable time previous to the connection between Messrs. Fowler and Foster in that matter. Those lands were offered to me and an American syndicate in the fall of the year, months before the hon. member for North Toronto was connected with the matter at all, and I presume that the conversation which I then had with Mr. Stevenson of the Foresters, and some data I gave him on the subject, had a good deal to do with cooling that gentlemen off in regard to coming back on Mr. Fowler in relation to the proposed sale of those lands to the Trust Company. I merely, in justice to the gentlemen concerned, place before the House these facts which came to my knowledge long anterior to the deal between the Foresters or the Trust Company and Messrs Fowler and Pope at all. Messrs. Fowler and Pope went into the land transaction previous to any association with the Trust Company or the Foresters. I do not know what their intention was, but I know that if they had consulted persons familiar with the land along the line, they would have been able to make a much better selection of lands, and I believe they would have got them at fifty cents an acre less than they paid ; so that no favours were shown to them by the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Canadian Northern or any other railway in the Northwest.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, after what has been stated by the Finance Minister and on the general principle, probably it is not best to make a very long discussion at this particular time. I acknowledge that on this question I have taken up quite a large portion of the time of the House within the last week. As I stated on a previous occasion, this was not of my own choice, but rather because it had been forced upon me by circumstances over which I had no control, and it was my duty even at length to make the statements which I have been obliged to make in this House. It is gratifying to me in this respect, that whereas the atmosphere was full of thunderings and mutterings of thunderings, when the time came to sit down in this House or to stand up one against the other and discuss the whole question, I did not find, and you did not find, Mr. Speaker, that charges that were bandied about outside of the House were pressed to the issue in the House. With reference to the whole matter, the discussion upon it has not by any means ended, as I have said. In my mind an injustice was perpetrated upon companies and private individuals, through the action, permitted or otherwise, of the Royal Insurance Commission, by its methods of procedure, and by the extent to which it allowed the procedure to be carried out, it overstepped the bounds of the powers which were given to it by the government, and unnecessarily, and without any reason at all therefor in the way of elucidating the matters under inquiry by the commission, did cause grave injustice to individuals and to companies. In the course of my preceding addresses to this House, I pointed out certain ways in which I thought that had been done. We do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that a commission is necessarily autocratic and possessed of any powers that it wishes to arrogate to itself simply because it is called a Royal Commission. That commission was appointed simply to inquire. If you will take the scope of the commission as laid down by the order in council, you will find that it was commissioned simply to inquire and report what amendments it considered to be necessary to the Insurance Act; and if it had confined itself absolutely to the instructions of the commission appointing it, it would have simply made its inquiry, as full, as broad, as strict, as impartial, as thorough as was necessary to accomplish the object which had been confided to its care. It would have reported the evidence and simply the evidence to the government which created it and to the House before which that evidence was to come. It would not have given a single judgment. It was not a court and was not appointed in order to give judgment; but it was appointed to report, after certain inquiries and after consideration, what amendments it thought were necessary to the Insurance Act of this country. That was the scope and these were the duties imposed upon that commission; and I hold that when they went beyond the ground of inquiry into facts, and strove to get convictions, they went beyond the powers that were confided in them. When, outside of reporting the evidence even if gained by fair and impartial inquiry, they undertake to pass judgment upon certain companies or certain individuals, they again go beyond the powers that were conferred upon them. This House was the court which was to pronounce judgment according to the facts that were obtained. This House was the court which was to make its findings upon consideration of that information, and to embody those findings in legislation, which should cure what was evil, and which should make the companies stronger and better for their particular work of protecting the money of policy-holders and the interests of shareholders and the general public, while having their proper scope and freedom of action.

When the commission attempted to analyse that evidence and to present findings they undertook a most delicate task. They had four large volumes of evidence, running up to 4,000 or 5,000 pages, closely printed as hon. gentlemen will see. To place before this House or the government in the form of findings all the truth with reference to one particular individual or one particular company out of that mass of evidence would be a very delicate and a very discriminating piece of work. To present a conclusion which should treat all sides fairly and be an absolutely impartial and truthful reflex of the evidence—was a most difficult thing to do and the fact of its difficulty—nay, of its impossibility—within the compass of a fairly readable report should have deterred the commission from attempting in their findings or judgments to insert a summary of the evidence in any particular case unless they were prepared to give the evidence pro and con, and make their report an absolutely perfect and an absolutely fair presentment of the case. They did not do that in case after case and they have therefore shown that when they assumed the position of a court and undertook to deliver findings or judgments, they embarked on a piece of business which they have imperfectly and badly performed and that is one of the charges, one of the counts in the indictment which is made against the work of the commission.

Then again that commission clothed with royal authority, with mighty interests confided to their charge for inquiry should have been very careful indeed that they did not themselves, and did not allow the counsel under them to transgress the line which divided what was absolutely necessary to the elucidation of the question before them as regards the insurance problem or the insurance system and the irrefragable rights of individuals personally and of individuals in their private or their corporate business.

Now, Sir, take the prosecution as it developed before that commission; here was an investigation, which involved a security, a mortgage security of farm lands, which security was taken by the Union Trust Company and endorsed to the Order of Foresters. When the inquiry went on as to what money had been loaned on that security, when it went further as to what that security was, when the Union Trust Company and the Great West Land Company opened up their books and their information as they freely did in order to enable the commission to get back to the ultimate basis of that security, namely, the lands themselves, their values, the title by which they were held and everything connected with them, it would seem to me that a commission would have thought and would have accordingly directed that when you had got to the final validation of the security, and could get beyond that nothing which would add in the least to the goodness or the badness of that security that if was time to call a halt. But, Sir, what took place? The commissioners allowed the prosecuting attorney to go behind the sale of the lands to the syndicate and the sale of the lands to the Great West Land Company, behind the valuations which lay there in the office, to the persons who bought the lands from the Canadian Pacific Railway and to follow that up into the railway office itself, into the private negotiations between the railway managers and the gentlemen who bought the lands, away up and off on a line which developed itself afterwards, and is, I imagine, a little too bald to give very much comfort now to either the prosecutor or the commission. The commission went into an examination as to whether or not members of parliament received lands from railways in this country at prices which were wrongfully placed as to the minimum because of implied or open agreement that if they got these lands on these considerations, these companies would get their support and their influence for legislation in this House. If there were no other circumstances than that, it would prove that the commission was going outside of its province and undertaking, without to my mind any reasonable shadow of establishing greater validation or otherwise of the security held by the Union Trust Company and the Foresters, into a region which busies itself with private rights, which goes still further and busies itself as to the duties and responsibilities of members of parliament in transacting business with great companies in this country.

If that were the only case, that would be strong enough, but, Sir this inquiry has been pursued for purposes beyond the scope of the commission. What purpose could there be? Why the answer to that is simple. The use that has been made of that since shows the purpose. Not a moment after the excursion had gone so far as to take in the negotiations of members of parliament in that way, not one moment thereafter were the party press throughout the country on the heels of these hon. gentlemen and pointing out to the electors of the country by and large, that here were members of parliament recreant to their duties, who had been getting favours from great railways to the abnegation and the wrongful use of their rights and powers as members of parliament. And to this day that is not diminished, to this hour that same propaganda is going on in the party press. What greater proof not only that they had gone beyond their powers, but that they had in thus going beyond their powers loaned themselves to partisan work, could be got than the action of the Minister of Justice himself who, when he wanted a dart to throw at the hon. member for North Toronto, dived into and delved into the work and the findings of this commission in order to barb a dart and throw it at his political enemy. The Minister of Justice himself seeks an arsenal for what he supposes are efficacious weapons and goes to hunt for it in the very report of the commission which he appointed, and finds it because that commission overstepped its bounds and went into an investigation of what was not committed to its powers and what it never should have touched.

Take another example. Why was it necessary for this commission to place in black and white the names of the Hon. R. R. Roblin and the Hon. Colin Campbell and to state upon the pages of that report that Mr. Pritchard was the private secretary of the Hon. Mr. Roblin? The transaction was between Mr. Whitla and the Union Trust Company, in trust for the syndicate. The document that Mr. Shepley had did not point to Mr. Roblin. It was a contract of sale and purchase between Mr. Whitla and the Union Trust Company, in trust for the syndicate. There was the obligation, there was the document, there were the lands that were bought, the value of the lands, the titles, everything necessary. Yet, would you believe it, the prosecutor in the case spent—I was going to say hours—but spent a long while with me, while I was in the witness box, trying to make me say that Mr. Roblin had some interest in those lands. What was the purpose of that? There could only be one purpose, and that was the purpose shown by the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) the other day, namely, to try and show that I had bought lands from my political friends and forsooth there was some consideration of favours or otherwise in it. There is the arsenal prepared, the ammunition taken from it, and there is the use which is made of it.

But, speaking outside of myself one of the boldest and worst statements is the characterization of the Hon. Colin Campbell. This commission, in its report, declares in so many words that the Hon. Colin Campbell—they are careful to say that he is Hon. and that he is the Attorney General of Manitoba—received $1,000 from Pritchard as commission upon these lands, and that he forced Pritchard to pay him that sum, or, to use the words of the commission, that he stipulated for it. When they make that bold statement that the Attorney General of Manitoba was concerned in taking a commission on the sales of land of a company of which he was president, they are careful to say that he was the president of the company. They state that in so many words. But they have not the common fairness to state that the Hon. Colin Campbell had been called as a witness, and that he had denied on oath that he ever received a dollar of commission in any shape or form. Instead of doing that they say: 'For Mr. Campbell's evidence, vide page so and so of the evidence.' Where is the evidence? In Hades? It might just as well be there for everlasting burning because in England and different parts of Canada where men read this report and say: The Hon. Colin Campbell, the Attorney General of Manitoba, a Conservative statesman, took a commission on lands he was selling for his own company and twisted it out of poor Pritchard. I say that it a ghastly piece of business. There is no warrant for it in common fairness or under the scope of that commission. Why was that done? There could be but one reason.

I am not going to take up my own grievances; I am not going to take up the statements made there with reference to myself—the false findings, the concealments, the misrepresentations. I simply cite again one or two—the one being that the commission in some way declared to the world, in that little blue-book, that I took a commission in the Kamloops transaction of a certain amount; and after stating that in so many words, it then says: '-For Mr. Foster's evidence, see page so and so in the evidence.' So far as my oath, my testimony, everything connected with it is concerned, it might just as well be burning in Hades for all the ages as regards those who will read it. With reference to that, I was prosecuted by Mr. Shepley, on an undeclared charge of taking a bribe or a commission for doing work for the Union Trust Company in that matter. I was examined on oath, there is the evidence, and it is dead against it. There is the explanation of it as private business and I said to the commission: If you are not satisfied with that, I will give you all my private business and you can look into it. They were satisfied and they asked no other questions. Not another man was asked to give evidence in that connection. My testimony was the only testimony taken. Yet that commission, as long as that report lasts and as widely as it goes, has recorded that I took a commission on the transaction of that business. Instead of, in human fairness, saying something like this: It is but fair to state that Mr. Foster on oath denied this and that no evidence supporting the charge, undeclared though it was, was ever produced before the commission—instead of doing this they simply refer to my evidence, which cannot and will not be seen by those who read the report. Is that the sole transaction? No, there is transaction after transaction—I have a list of them here—in the investigation of my own case alone, but I shall defer giving it to this House to-day. That gives me the ground to say that this commission not only went beyond its powers but it made false and mis-representing findings, that it concealed the truth where it should have shown it, and thus produces the impression of bearing false witness against your neighbour, and puts on the records of the House what is absolutely untrue and is shown by the evidence to be absolutely untrue, which evidence is suppressed in the report and not even the purport of which is given. I do not propose to go any further with this at this late period of the session; but there is to be another session, and if God gives me life and health and strength, this will be taken up at the next session, and I have firm faith that this country does not want any kind of political warfare in which the game is not fairly played. If there is any charge to be brought against any man, let it be brought where he can defend himself in the open light of day. Do not go before a commission which was established for another purpose and there tie his hands and feet and almost his tongue and then condemn him in a partisan and political way on a charge which was undeclared at the time and which you prevent him from meeting fairly and squarely. I believe the people will be fair in this matter. The trouble is that they must be got to see the whole facts. It will be no fault of mine if the people do not have the facts laid before them. Again I challenge this House or any member of it to take up this question and discuss it. Let them bring their charges and laches as they think they have them and meet me face to face right here in the floor of this House and thrash them out. If ever a document was designed for use in the elections of this country this report is one. Wherever I go to run my election, I know what I have to meet.

I have to meet the opponent with the report of the Royal Commission under this arm. He will go no further to substantiate his charges than to say: That is the report of a Royal Commission which investigated this matter. It will not be the sins of the government that will be put in issue, or the virtue of the government's policy, it will not be my political record, but it will be the misuse of a document of that kind and statements in it which will be made the most of in the election, in my case and may be in the case of many others. That is not fair political warfare, but here it is, and I can come to no other conclusions than that this matter has to be fought out, and that all the light possible must be shed upon it. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I do not shun the fullest investigation that can be made, nor do I propose to shun any effort to that end.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Just one word before the question is put, and that is respect of the inquiry made by the commission as to the conduct of certain members of parliament. That was discussed before the commission day after day, and page after page of the evidence is taken up with it. I simply desire to make one remark. If that matter was worth investigating at all by the commission it was worth reporting upon. If the commission had any power or duty to investigate the question as to whether those members of parliament improperly used their position as such, then it was equally their power and duty to report as to whether or not that charge was sustained. Although page after page of the evidence is taken up by this inquiry in the conduct of four Conservative members of parliament, not one word of that report from end to end show that that charge was absolutely disproved, as it was disproved by the evidence before the commission. 'That, in my opinion, stamps the conduct of this commission from beginning to end as partisan, and I have not the slightest hesitation in voting for the amendment which has been offered.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Lennox) :

Amendment negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I beg to call the attention of the House to the fact that the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has not voted.

Mr. BERGERON. I am paired with the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Harbours and rivers, Ontario—Belle river, $1,450.

Mr. BENNETT. Will this complete the work?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Acting Minister of Public Works). Yes.

Beaverton—harbour improvements, $1,500.

Mr. BENNETT. Will this complete?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the total expenditure there?

Mr. FISHER. $21,000.

Blanche river—improvements, $8,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Where is that?

Mr. FISHER. In Nipissing.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the nature of the work?

Mr. FISHER. Removing snags and other obstructions to the navigation; the work was commenced in 1904.

Bronte—dredging, $4,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is that work nearly completed?

Mr. FISHER. This will not quite complete it, but this is what will be spent this coming year.

Mr. HENDERSON. Was the $2,200 expended last year?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. How much has been spent on this harbour and the wharf in connection with it?

Mr. FISHER. Nearly $29,000.

Colborne harbour—wharf, $8,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is to complete.

Collingwood—harbour improvements, $22,000.

Mr. BENNETT. There is a vote for Collingwood in the supplementary estimates of $47,100.

Mr. FISHER. That $47,100 was work done in dredging over the appropriation of last year. The dredge did more work than was anticipated when the appropriation was taken, and the people were very anxious the work should proceed and the government allowed the dredge to go on. The $22,000 now asked is for the coming season.

Mr. BENNETT. Last year a contract was let for dredging in Collingwood, and the fortunate contractor received $47,100 worth of work more than he had tendered for.

Mr. FISHER. The contract was at so much per yard, the contractor to do as much as he could during the season. He worked energetically and did considerably more than was provided for. If the department had been confined to the appropriation, the work would have had to stop long before the end of the season, but the people of Collingwood were anxious to have it go on and the contractor continued at the same rate. As a consequence of that, we are only asking $22,000 for the coming season, when, otherwise, we would have had to ask probably $60,000.

Mr. BENNETT. The system is to advertise that so much dredging will be done, and contractors at a distance expecting that the work will be confined to the small amount specified are not disposed to tender, and so a favoured contractor gets the work. I suppose this dredging is done by the Boone Company?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. It is a political company. They are made free from competition owing to the fact that the amount to be expended is small, and when they get the contract the government gives them nearly $50,000 more dredging than was contemplated at first. Are there any complaints before the department as to the nature of the work done by the Boone people?

Mr. FISHER. The engineer says he does not know of any complaints. My hon. friend is not quite fair in his statement of the case. This contract was for dredging to go on during the season, and it is well known that more dredging would be done than the appropriation of last year would cover. The contract was let by open tender and public advertisement, and the work has been continued at the same rate.

Mr. BENNETT. How much dredging did you call for originally; how many yards or how many days work?

Mr. FISHER. There was no definition in the original advertisement of how many yards would have to be dredged. The appropriation limited the amount for the year, but it was well understood that the work was to go on beyond that appropriation for another year.

Mr. BENNETT. That is it exactly. The department intimates so much money will be expended on this work.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. BENNETT. The advertisement did not say what quantity of work was to be done or how much was to be expended. What were you inviting tenders for?

Mr. FISHER. We were inviting tenders for dredging in Collingwood harbour at so much a yard. No quantity was specified, and the contract was not given for a quantity. That is not the way contracts for dredging are let. The only possible intimation of the amount would be the appropriation of parliament for the purpose.

Mr. BENNETT. I said at the outset that this was an unfair way of dealing with the question. It is well known who is behind this contractor; it is a crowd of politicians, and the department so framed the advertisement calling for tenders that an outsider who had a dredge would say: I do not know how much work is to be done there, and it is idle for me to make a tender. There are complaints in the department about the nature of the work being done in this harbour. I am going to read from the Collingwood 'Enterprise' to show what the country is getting; and I am sorry that my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Leighton McCarthy) is not in his place; however, I am not responsible for his absence. This is what the Collingwood 'Enterprise' says:

> The regular board of trade meeting was held in the court room on Tuesday night last, and was largely attended.
> The principal question was the harbour. The president wanted to get at the actual condition of affairs. It was generally understood that we had a depth of twenty feet of water in the channel at low water, but facts did not bear out this supposition. He wanted to know who was responsible for the incomplete and unsatisfactory condition of the channel.
> Mr. Hughes, the inspector, produced a chart of the soundings showing bumps and lumps dotted all over the channel, which was explanation enough of the trouble.
> The board will take energtic steps to have the channel cleared up, as the contractors are evidently digging out the soft spots where it pays the best, and the engineer is either indifferent or ignorant of what is going on. Mr. Hughes only does as he is told, and has no discretionary powers on the work.

That is a peculiar state of affairs. Here is a gentleman, appointed, I assume, on the recommendation of the local member, my hon. friend from North Simcoe, and he goes before the board of trade and tells them that boats are continually scraping and bumping their keels on the bottom, and that this contractor, C. S. Boone, is simply passing over all the hard spots which he is supposed to take out, and is digging out only the soft stuff. I am not saying this out of any ill-will to Collingwood, but the reverse. I want to see the people of Collingwood and the country generally get something for their money. But Mr. Boone snaps his fingers at all complaints, because he knows that the men behind him are well known politicians. Is Mr. Hughes employed in the department now, or has he applied for the work of inspection for this season?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Hughes is not now in the employ of the department.

Mr. BENNETT. For what reason was he discontinued?

Mr. FISHER. The work was discontinued, and therefore Mr. Hughes's services were discontinued. I might say that if Mr. Hughes made such statements as my hon. friend has read, they are a more severe reflection upon himself than upon anybody else, because if he knew that lumps were being left in the channel, he should have complained of the contractor to the department. I am informed by the engineer in charge that there is no such report from Mr. Hughes in the department. I can only say, if that is the condition of affairs, that as long as I am acting Minister of Public Works I will see that that kind of work shall not go, I do not care who the contractor is.

Mr. BENNETT. Has Mr. Hughes been recommended by the hon. member for North Simcoe to act as inspector this season?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. BENNETT. Has any recommendation been made?

Mr. FISHER. Not that I know of.

Mr. BENNETT. It is stated in this Collingwood paper that Mr. Hughes was superseded last year. Is that correct?

Mr. FISHER. No; he was there the whole season.

Mr. BENNETT. There is no partyism in this matter. The president of the Collingwood Board of Trade, Mr. Peter Patton, is a leading Liberal of the town, and is the right-hand man of the hon. member for North Simcoe; and yet he makes these sweeping charges, which he would not make unless he knew them to be true. I am sorry the hon. member for North Simcoe is not here, because he would not contradict what Mr. Patton said. Has any recommendation been made for inspection this year, and has Mr. Hughes been recommended?

Mr. FISHER. No recommendation has been made to me personally, and the chief engineer informs me that no recommendation has been made to him.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will Mr. Hughes be appointed again?

Mr. FISHER. I think not, if that statement is correct. I would not appoint a man who said that such work was going on, and who allowed it to go on.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that when an advertisement is put in the papers calling for tenders for dredging it simply asks for tenders at so much a yard, without indicating the quantity of material likely to be taken out? Does the hon. gentleman think that is a good policy for the department to follow? It seems to me that we might expect much better competition if the department were to specify the estimated quantity of material to be removed. Would my hon. friend produce a copy of the advertisement calling for tenders?

Mr. FISHER. I would say, in the first place, that the department has tried a number of different ways of advertising for tenders for dredging, and after a number of years' experience the officers of the department have decided that this is the best way, and it has been attended with the best results. But I would go a little further, and say that the men who tender for dredging, being thoroughly familiar with dredging work, know very well how much dredging is going to be done in a particular harbour or river.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not understand how the public would be in a position to know when my hon. friend says the department does not know.

Mr. FISHER. I did not say that the department or the public know, but they can pretty nearly gauge the quantity of dredging from the votes which have passed the House. Sometimes a contractor does not do as much as he hoped to do in the season, and sometimes he does more. If the work is expected to extend over several seasons and the appropriation for a particular season was for a certain amount, the department does not necessarily confine the work during a season to the appropriation for that season. That, I think, would be short-sighted. It would not be in the interest of the community for whom the dredging was being done to stop the work if, about two-thirds or half-way through the season, an efficient, prompt, energetic dredge-owner had done all the work that could be paid for out of that appropriation and was willing to go on for the rest of the season on the understanding that the rates would be the same and that he would have to wait for his money until parliament voted it. I think that would be a short-sighted policy, and the people of the community would be dissatisfied, and rightly so. That is the case here. Collingwood harbour was known to be a large work, and it is expected and intended that the harbour should be dredged to a depth of twenty feet. The men who tendered for contracts knew about how much work there was to do there, and were, I think, justified in supposing that they would get paid for all the work they could do at the price at which they tendered. That is why there is a considerable amount in the supplementaries for last year for over-expenditure in the past season. That means that there will be less expenditure in the coming season, because it is expected that the work will be finished this season.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not think the engineer in charge of that work is the man responsible, and he should be asked whether Mr. Hughes ever made that statement to him. If he did the engineer and not Mr. Hughes is the man to be dismissed.

Mr. FISHER. I quite agree. I said distinctly that if the statements that are contained in the newspapers were true, then Mr. Hughes was to blame. I have inquired whether there is a report from Mr. Hughes giving an account of that kind of thing and I am told there is not. I believe there was not a report from Mr. Hughes to the engineer, Mr. Sing, of Toronto.

Mr. J. D. REID. It would only be a verbal report to Mr. Sing.

Mr. FISHER. It would be his duty to report that the contractor would not obey his orders in such a way that it would be on record.

Mr. J. D. REID. It is never done.

Mr. FISHER. It ought to be done and if an inspector fails to do that and then goes to the board of trade or the newspapers and makes statements of that kind it is a reflection on him and not on the department.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not agree with you there.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know much about the Department of Public Works, but I have had some experience in administration, and an official who does not report the shortcomings of any one to his next superior officer has himself to blame if he is held responsible for improper conduct.

Mr. BENNETT. In order to show that there are no politics in this thing among the people of Collingwood, I wish to quote from the Liberal newspaper there, the Collingwood 'Bulletin,' which on March 14, says editorially :

> None regret the charges which have been made against the manner in which Mr. Robert Hughes has conducted his work as inspector of the harbour improvements more than the 'Bulletin.' Although we never held that Mr. Hughes was qualified for the position, the 'Bulletin' has always had confidence in his determination to do what he believed to be right and it is certainly regrettable to have to change our opinion in that respect, as will necessarily have to be the case, as will many others if absolute proof to the contrary is not forthcoming. . . . . As gathered from his remarks at the board of trade the question is neither political or personal with Mr. Patton. It is simply one that affects the interest of the town as a whole and which as president of the board of trade, the representative organization of the business interests, he believed it his duty to bring to the attention of his colleagues in the work of advancing the welfare and promoting the interests of the town. Now that it has been laid bare and the alleged defects in the conduct of a public official have been publicly declared, the poopoohing of it will in no wise clear the air, nor will the attempt to throw the onus of the stated case on a political party tend to place Mr. Hughes in any better standing in the community.

That is from a Liberal paper, and as I before stated, Mr. Patton is probably one of the most prominent Liberals, and I say unreservedly the strongest friend of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. L. G. McCarthy). His father is postmaster of the town of Barrie, one of the best situations in the riding, through the grace of the hon. member (Mr. L. G. McCarthy). I do not altogether agree with the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid). I know something of this dredging operation. As a rule, the dredge is placed on a certain course, buoys are placed out and the dredge is supposed to keep on the line of these buoys, and having completed that line to return and work over another line. Evidently from what Mr. Hughes stated at that public meeting he was not allowed to keep the dredge on that line because there were these banks and boulders.

Mr. FISHER. Who prevented him?

Mr. BENNETT. I assume the party who always does, the owner of the dredge.

Mr. FISHER. That is a pretty large assumption.

Mr. BENNETT. Take the case at Fesserton. The dredging inspector was a brother of a part owner of the dredge and assisted in perpetrating a fraud. Gendron was paid to look after the dredge, but Eastwood made an arrangement with Gendron to assist in defrauding the country, Gendron receiving $1.25 a day and Eastwood $1.75—and the minister will have Gendron on the dredge this year, the man who helped to swindle the country. Why? Because his brother is one of the part owners of that dredge, and the local influence will be so great through the gentleman who has the patronage for that riding that the minister will not dare to put Gendron off the dredge. Time will prove if he is not on the dredge this year.

Mr. FISHER. Suppose he is not what will you do?

Mr. BENNETT. I shall be wonderfully surprised and I will give credit to the minister for being the first man who has shown any backbone in that part of the country in stopping outrages, and I will publicly testify to the courage of the minister in throwing down the gang. He will be the first minister who has ever dared to turn down the gang in East Simcoe.

Mr. BLAIN. What does the minister intend to do with this inspector who defrauded the government?

Mr. FISHER. I shall see; I shall deal with him.

Mr. BLAIN. But how and when?

Mr. FISHER. That is a matter for the Justice Department to settle.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. BLAIN. It having been proved out of the witness's own mouth that he hired a man to do his work, paid him $1.25 a day and took $1.75 himself, does the minister intend to keep him in the employ of the government this coming summer?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. BENNETT. When did he arrive at that conclusion? He said that he was not yet sure that Mr. Hughes was to blame.

Mr. FISHER. I was answering a question about another man, not Mr. Hughes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I certainly think the manner in which this work in Collingwood has been conducted deserves the severest condemnation. I want to ask the minister whether he intends to continue the issue of such tenders as this.

Mr. FISHER. That is the intention.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then I would like to ask him what position will a man be in who is politically opposed to the minister, were he to consent to send in a tender that is lower than those of his political friends; would he be allowed to go on and take out a few scow loads of material, and then, finding the department opposed to him in some particular, would be held up? I would like to ask the minister how any reasonable man would be expected to make a tender under those conditions?

Mr. FISHER. They not only do it, but they get them.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. But the minister well knows that the men who get them are political heelers of the hon. gentleman. He knows that no man would dare to put in a tender and expect to receive an acknowledgment of it unless he was a supporter of the present government. I believe this is one of the most rascally things that can be perpetrated upon the people of Canada. The people don't expect their money is to be turned into the coffers of supporters of this government, and taken in such a manner as this has been taken.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know that my hon. friend is in very good order in talking about a rascally performance, but I am not going to take advantage of that, because he has shown himself so utterly ignorant of the whole matter that it is not worth while. The hon. gentleman is absolutely wrong. There are dozens of Conservative tenderers who get contracts, get them because they put in the lowest tenders. The contract is given to the lowest tenderer, whether he is a Conservative or a Liberal.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the hon. gentleman mention one for dredging?

Mr. FISHER. I can mention Mr. Poupore, who was formerly a member of this House, and I can mention Mr. Morgan, of Sorel, who is a well known Conservative who never supported the Liberal party in any way. These are the first two names that occur to me, because they are in the province of Quebec and I am acquainted with them.

Mr. SPROULE. This business was mapped out some years ago on a large scale. There was to be a channel I think 400 feet wide for a portion of the way, and 300 feet wide the rest of the way, with a uniform depth of 19 or 20 feet. How much of that work has been done, and what is the channel like to-day ?

Mr. FISHER. I understand the plan is somewhat modified. The channel is to be 300 feet at the mouth and 210 feet going into the harbour. That work is expected to be completed with the vote now being asked for. I am told the work generally is completed. If the condition of affairs spoken of there is correct, those lumps will have to be dredged out. The first thing the contractor is obliged to do this year is to dredge them out.

Mr. J. D. REID. On the same contract ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, the contract continues for the coming season, with the same people. I am informed this contract is for the whole work, so the same contractor will go on at the same rate until the work is finished. I shall certainly see to it that if there are any lumps in the channel such as described, they will be taken out first thing this spring.

Mr. BENNETT. When were the tenders called for ?

Mr. FISHER. In August, 1905.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in understanding that this channel is practically dredged out to the proper depth so that it may be made an even bottom ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. What rate per yard is being paid for that, and what kind of material is taken out ?

Mr. FISHER. The schedule rate under the contract is 30 cents for clay and sand and $2.30 for rock. The work this summer was done at those rates.

Mr. SPROULE. How many tenders were received for that contract ?

Mr. FISHER. The number of tenderers is not put down here.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not wish to be understood as objecting to this work at Collingwood, I think it is only proper and right. As long as ten or twelve years ago I advocated in this House that what should be done there was to make a narrow channel, but above all things to make it deep. There is a grain elevator there, it will be on the direct line of the Grand Trunk to Montreal via Orillia and the Midland division of the Grand Trunk. What the people of Collingwood want is value for the money, and they think they have a right to expect that. I do not think 20 feet is too deep at Collingwood. It is on the Georgian bay, a very large body of water, and at certain seasons, under prevailing winds, the water will be lowered sometimes over a foot. The class of vessels that go into Collingwood should have without any delay a clear 20 feet of water, it not more. Make the channel narrow, but above all things make it deep.

Mr. SPROULE. You have reduced the channel from 300 feet to 210 feet a portion of the way, I presume that is towards the wharf, and further out the width is increased.

Mr. FISHER. To 300 feet.

Mr. HAGGART. How much did the quantities paid for by the government exceed the prism quantities estimated by the engineer ?

Mr. FISHER. I could not tell here.

Mr. HAGGART. The engineer ought to be able to inform you what the prism quantities were, what the calculations were at first, and how the dredging turned out.

Mr. FISHER. These figures will all be in the department. They were given four years ago when the work was begun but I have not got them now.

Mr. HAGGART. You will have the figures in the estimates first prepared. Your engineer ought to be able to tell whether the two quantities are nearly similar or not.

Mr. FISHER. The difference between the measurement in situ and the scow measurements for the rock work was about 40 per cent. These measurements are checked, as the work goes on, by actual sounding, so as to see that the amount has been taken out. The sounding would show the measurement in situ, and a percentage of allowance is made for the difference between the measurements in situ and the scow measurements. These are compared from time to time with the dredge returns.

Mr. HAGGART. Of course the engineer has a book in which he shows the actual quantities taken out and the quantities estimated at first. Then the quantities paid for are 40 per cent in excess of the original estimate of the prime quantity.

Mr. FISHER. That is on rock.

Mr. HAGGART. I mean the whole.

Mr. FISHER. Of the balance not rock, probably not 15 per cent would be the excess.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Are there any men sent from the department to inspect this work ?

Mr. FISHER. There is a resident engineer who from time to time makes an inspection of the work. The actual work from day to day is under the local inspector. The resident engineer goes, on his own initiative from time to time ; or if any question arises, he would go on instructions from Ottawa.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What are the names of the inspector and engineer ?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Hughes was local inspector last year, and Mr. Sing, of Toronto, was the resident engineer in the district.

Mr. BLAIN. When this item was up last year, I complained that in different parts the government had appointed men who had no qualification at all for the duties. I produced a letter showing that in Collingwood harbour this very gentleman had no qualification at all for this position and he was defended by the minister. I pointed out that his business was that of a hosiery manufacturer and enlarger of photographs, and I wanted the minister to explain what qualifications he had for the position. Also at the same place another man, who was a sewing machine agent, was superintendent of part of the work at Collingwood. I want now to draw the attention of the acting minister to the fact that he has men in charge of the works at different parts who are not qualified. In this very town of Collingwood, where the money is being expended, the board of trade passed a condemnation on this man because he allowed dredging to be done by taking out the soft parts and leaving the rock, although the minister announced last year that all that was necessary to complete the work was to take out some rock to finish up a one hundred and ten feet course so that vessels could pass in and out. Does he propose continuing the hosiery manufacturer and sewing machine agent in charge of this special work, which would need special qualifications ?

Mr. FISHER. I will try the best men I can find. I do not know who the men are to whom the hon. gentleman has referred.

Mr. BENNETT. Not only did the minister have Mr. Hughes as inspector at $3 a day but also Mr. D. Williams, and the latter covers almost exactly the same time. Mr. Hughes' services are from May 1 to November 2, 1905, and Mr. Williams' services are from June to September, 1905. What was Williams doing?

Mr. FISHER. There were two dredges. He was on the second dredge.

Mr. BENNETT. One of the qualifications of Mr. Williams is that he is editor of the Liberal newspaper there.

Mr. FISHER. Newspaper men are supposed to know everything.

Mr. SPROULE. Who had the determining of how much was rock and how much clay?

Mr. FISHER. The whole thing had to be taken up, whether rock or clay. Any man would be able to judge as to whether the stuff in the scows was rock or clay. A newspaper editor might do that.

Mr. SPROULE. Rock is paid for at $2.50 a yard and the other clay at 30 cents. If there is any shell rock or anything at all that could by any process be paid for as rock work, the contractor would charge it as rock work at $2.50 per yard. Who determines what was rock work and what was clay ? It is not solid rock there I am told but largely shelly rock, and there are some places where you have rock and patches of clay underneath, or between the layers of rock, and you work from one to the other, so that it would be very easy to make a calculation showing that a much larger proportion was rock work than was actually the case, and the inducement to do this would be the larger price paid for rock.

Mr. FISHER. We have to rely on the inspector's judgment as to that. In this particular case there was a thin layer of clay over the rock, and when that was removed there was a large quantity of rock bottom taken out.

Mr. HAGGART. How were these quantities paid for—by the prism quantity or on the estimate of the inspector as to what the barges removed ?

Mr. FISHER. By scow measurement as estimated by the inspector.

Mr. HAGGART. Surely the contract must be for prism quantities.

Mr. J. D. REID. It would be an outrage to pay for rock by scow measurement. They generally have a profile of the work and they are to take out so many feet of rock and be paid for it as solid. Was that $2.50 per yard scow measurement or as it was solid in the bottom of the river ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think that makes any difference. When the scow measurement is made and compared with the prism measurements and the returns of the inspector, the two balanced. The basing of an estimate on scow measure is simply a convenient way of doing this. It is all checked by the soundings to see that the rock has gone. The rock must have gone if the proper depth of water is found to be there. The scow measurement is checked and confirmed by the prism measurement of the rock.

Mr. J. D. REID. But I mean after it is blasted and put upon the scow. Is the price of $2.30 a yard for the solid rock in the prism?

Mr. FISHER. The price is on the prism measurement.

Mr. HAGGART. That is what I wanted to know. I understood that it was scow measurement.

Mr. FISHER. I did not mean as to price. That is only a convenient way of estimating as they go along in order to arrive at the progress estimate. The price of $2.30 a yard was for rock in situ.

Mr. HAGGART. Do you not think it was too much of a blunder when a mistake was made of 40 per cent on rock and 15 per cent on earth?

Mr. FISHER. I do not understand the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman told me that he overpaid on earth 15 per cent.

Mr. FISHER. No, the hon. gentleman misunderstood me. What I said was that the in situ measurement was 15 per cent more than the scow measurement on other things except rock, but on the rock the in situ measurement would be 40 per cent more than the scow measurement. But, that was not the measurement upon which payment is made; it is simply the measurement upon which the progress estimate is based. The payment is made on the quantity in situ.

Mr. HAGGART. On the original prism measurement?

Mr. FISHER. On the original prism measurement.

Mr. J. D. REID. I cannot understand the way the measurement is made except that as the dredge goes along they take the measurement; but how are they going to take the measurement of the solid rock?

Mr. FISHER. Progress estimates are made every month.

Mr. J. D. REID. The measurements are taken as the dredge brings the material up. Have they to take soundings to be sure that the quantity is dredged.

Mr. FISHER. The dredge owner does that. We do not take his measurement. We take our own measurement.

Mr. J. D. REID. You have no engineer on the dredge at all?

Mr. FISHER. No, we have an inspector.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to know if after you struck rock from that down it was measured as rock?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Was there any blasting done there?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, the rock ledge had to be blasted under water.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you mean by the ledge?

Mr. FISHER. Solid rock underneath the clay. The ledge has to be blasted before it can be dredged out.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that there was shaly rock and that below that there was clay. If the measurement was taken from where you reached the rock first and from that down and calculated as rock then I think the minister would find that he is paying for rock work when a large proportion of it was only clay. Evidence was given to me to verify that. A new lighthouse was built there. After it was erected a certain height it suddenly sank 7 to 9 inches. It was supposed that it was on a solid bed of rock but it was found afterwards that it had broken through the shaly rock. There was shaly rock on top. I have seen this rock many times. I have no doubt that below that shaly rock you may find considerable clay and that there will be a great deal of clay dredging to be done. I am not sure whether that is really the case or not, but I was told by some men there that it was on account of the lighthouse going down that they came to find out that it was not solid rock but that it was clay underneath.

Mr. FISHER. Is that in the Collingwood harbour?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

Mr. FISHER. In the first place let me say to my hon. friend that if it is shaly rock such as the dredge can scoop up without blasting it is not counted or paid for as rock. It is counted and paid for as clay, but when it comes to solid rock it is paid for as rock. In the channel the bottom is all rock. You do not go through a rock layer at all. You go through a clay layer which is rather thin and then you come to the solid rock.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the minister tell us what quantity was originally estimated for?

Mr. FISHER. I have not got that.

Mr. HAGGART. Ninety thousand dollars seems an enormous sum of money for a dredge to earn from May to November.

Mr. FISHER. There were two dredges at work during that time.

Mr. HAGGART. No, there is a separate amount stated as having been paid to the other dredge of $12,400. The amount of money paid to dredge No. 14 from May to November, 1906, was $90,000, less paid in 1906-7, nearly $10,000, leaving a balance of $76,784.

Mr. LALOR. Who is the owner of the dredge?

Mr. BENNETT. That is the Boone crowd.

Mr. J. D. REID. Were there any other tenders received?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know. The work was given out over two years ago.

Mr. J. D. REID. How many papers was it advertised in?

Mr. FISHER. It was advertised in the usual way all over the province.

Mr. J. D. REID. The amount stated as having been spent for advertising is very small. I have never heard of such prices as these—30 cents for mud and $2.30 for rock. They seem very big prices.

Mr. FISHER. What my hon. friend calls mud includes what is called hard-pan.

Mr. SPROULE. I am told that there is a good deal of that shaly rock which was taken out with a fork that practically ripped it up. Was that measured as rock or clay?

Mr. FISHER. As clay at 30 cents.

Mr. SPROULE. Who made the measurement?

Mr. FISHER. I suppose the inspector, checked over by the engineer in charge.

Mr. SPROULE. That was Mr. Hughes. But, there was no engineer on the work.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Sing is the engineer in charge and he goes there.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Sing would not be there very often in the course of the season?

Mr. FISHER. No, not very often.

Mr. SPROULE. And the rest was left to the inspector. That would be paid for as clay dredging?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. That is not my information.

Mr. J. D. REID. I guess there is a nigger in the fence.

Mr. LALOR. Who are the owners of dredge No. 14?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. C. S. Boone is the contractor. I suppose he is the owner of the dredge although he may have chartered it; I do not know.

Mr. LALOR. Has the minister any explanation to make of the record as read by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) showing that one dredge earned $76,000 in one season?

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that there are dredges which have earned a great deal more than that.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, but they would be very different dredges from this.

Mr. FISHER. This is a very powerful dredge, I understand.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many men are employed on that dredge?

Mr. FISHER. I could not tell.

Mr. J. D. REID. Has the minister any information to show that any of the government dredges have earned that much?

Mr. FISHER. We do not charge for our dredges in the same way. We simply pay the running expenses and nothing else. Of course, the contractor has to make his profits, and to charge for interest, wear and tear.

Mr. LALOR. I have seen some of the work done in my own constituency by this C. S. Boone Company, and of all the extravagant and wasteful expenditures of public money by this government, I do not think there is anything worse than this. I represent a county in which the honest Liberals, who knew what was going on with reference to this extravagant payment for dredging, voted against the Liberal candidate. The minister can turn his attention to no better way of saving money for the country, than to prevent extravagance and wastefulness in these charges for dredging, and he should change the system of inspection also.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think the department has been doing any dredging in my hon. friend's constituency.

Mr. LALOR. Just before the last general election you spent $42,000, and it was absolutely wasted and not worth a dollar to the country or to the constitutency.

Mr. SPROULE. I have heard, I do not know whether it is correct or not, that although other tenders may have been put in for this dredging, there was no bona fide intention to do the work by any except the Boone Company. I am told that all the other dredges were employed to their fullest capacity, and that the other tenders were probably put in just to show there was competition, and on an understanding among dredge men. They say amongst themselves: You put in a tender for such a place but I am getting that work there, and I will put in a tender for another place where you are getting the work. I have been told that tenders were put in in that way, but it was understood that Boone would get the dredging, and I am told he got it at such a price that if he had a few seasons work he would make a nice little fortune out of it. I am not prepared to say that is correct, but I am told it on reliable authority and I am bound to draw the attention of the government to it. I do believe that a great deal of the money of the country is absolutely wasted under the present system of dredging. Now, Collingwood is a live and important town and it is necessary to do this work there, but in doing it we should see that while it is done efficiently it is done economically as well.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend may be correct in saying that tenderers connive with one another, but the department cannot very well find that out, and we know nothing about it. He must not forget that the expert engineers of the department have declared that these prices are fair and reasonable. No contract is let until that is done by the engineer, and the engineer is of course obliged to take the judgment of his experts. It seems to me that if this is such a profitable contract, as is alleged, enterprising men in the province of Ontario and in the Dominion would have tried to get the work.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister knows he has not been able to get a dredge on the Georgian bay for some years to do half the work that is required to be done, and consequently the dredge owners get their own prices.

Mr. FISHER. The only alternative then would be to stop the work.

Mr. LALOR. There is another alternative, and that is that the government should own their own dredges and do away with the extravagance.

Mr. HAGGART. We have the distinct promise of the minister that no payment will be made to these contractors beyond what the actual prism quantities show.

Mr. FISHER. What I said was that the price paid would be to quantities as measured by the prism. If a larger prism is required we will have to pay for it.

Mr. HAGGART. Of course, but the understanding is that you are only to pay according to the prism quantities.

Mr. FISHER. That is the contract.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister stated, on the authority of his deputy, that there were other dredges in the country earning a much larger amount than this dredge. I do not believe there is a dredge in Canada of the same capacity as this one, which earns from $19,000 to $20,000 a month.

Mr. FISHER. It is not fair to say that the dredge alone has earned that, because there is drilling and blasting to be done and machinery for that has to be provided.

Mr. HAGGART. I doubt very much if there is any dredge of five or six times the capacity of this dredge which earns as much per month. I understood from the member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) that this is a shaly rock and that there is no blasting or drilling to be done.

Mr. SPROULE. That was represented to me, but I do not know it of my own knowledge.

Mr. FISHER. I stated, on my information, that the shale rock was paid for as clay but that the bed rock there was solid rock.

Mr. BENNETT. As a matter of fact I have seen them boring at Collingwood.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I notice that Boone & Co. are doing the dredging at Rondeau Harbour for 13¼ cents per yard, whereas at Collingwood harbour they get 30 cents per yard. We have several dredges in the vicinity of Rondeau harbour and possibly the competition may account for the price we are paying there. The difference between 13¼ and 30 cents, is an absolute waste of public money.

Mr. FISHER. It is different material altogether.

Mr. CLEMENTS. We have good solid clay at Rondeau, and the inference is that we are getting the work done there at a proper price.

Goderich harbour—improvements, $50,000.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I wish to ask the minister what the special improvements are that are proposed in Goderich harbour, and what the depth of water in the harbour will be when they are completed? Is it intended to deepen the harbour or to increase the wharfage or otherwise to provide for terminal facilities for railway purposes?

Mr. FISHER. I would say to my hon. friend that a small amount of the vote is for repairs on the wharf, but the bulk of it is to be applied to the breakwater to protect the harbour. About two years ago a contract was let for the building of 500 feet of breakwater. The contractor went on and built a portion of it, when a great storm arose and washed away a good deal of what had been constructed, and the contractor did not go on with the work. After a good deal of negotiation and difficulty an arrangement was come to by which he was to be paid a certain amount for what he had done and damages, and the work was to be taken from him. I have just advertised for new tenders for the completion of the work.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Can the minister say what the depth of water is in the harbour at present ?

Mr. FISHER. Nineteen feet at ordinary water; about 18 feet at very low water.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Is the work under contract at the present time?

Mr. FISHER. I have just advertised for tenders for the completion of the work. Tenders have not yet been received.

Mr. BENNETT. What will it cost altogether?

Mr. FISHER. The estimate is that it will cost a little over $70,000 to complete the 500 feet of breakwater.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Was any dredging done there last year or is any contemplated this year in connection with this expenditure?

Mr. FISHER. Some dredging was done there last year and some will have to be done this year. Some dredging is required in the harbour every season.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Can the minister remember who had the contract for this particular work?

Mr. FISHER. The Mareton Dredging Company had the contract last year.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Is it possible to use the breakwater as a pier?

Mr. FISHER. No, it is simply for the protection of the harbour.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It will not increase its facilities as a railway terminus?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. My inquiry is with reference to its facilities as a port for a railway. Goderich was thought to be a favourable point and I was in hopes that these improvements would be such as to increase its facilities as a railway terminus.

Mr. FISHER. We think it well to finish the work on the breakwater before taking up anything else.

Mr. BENNETT. I see that W. L. Horton was the lowest tenderer. Is he the same as the Mareton Dredge Company?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. In order that the public may know whom they are dealing with, I want to go into this matter. We cannot have the advantage of knowing whom we are dealing with in the case of the North Atlantic Trading Company, but we do know that we are dealing with Mr. W. L. Horton under the name of the Mareton Dredging Company. Who is Mr. Horton? He has been rather in the public eye of Canada in late years. I will read from the evidence before the investigation in the police court in Toronto which one Pritchett gave in connection with Pritchett's record of crime through western Ontario. This was in connection with the theft of ballots in the memorable election in West Huron:

Q. What happened, just tell his worship?—A. Another cashier was appointed.

Q. Who was he?—A. I expected any people I had anything to do with to see another man there.

Q. Who was it?—A. His name was Horton, or something like that.

Mr. FISHER.

Now, there was an affidavit read yesterday by the leader of the opposition, made by Mr. James Farr, one of the deputies who stole a lot of ballots in that election, and this is what he says:

After the last mentioned refusal to give up my ballot box and papers, the said W. L. Horton asked me to go with him to Craig's hotel in Goderich town, which I did. Both the said Horton and I went upstairs in Craig's hotel together and I was then introduced to a man by the name of Garrett and also to a man named O'Gorman. These two latter persons were introduced to me by the said W. L. Horton.

Now, there can be no mistake as to the W. L. Horton. One of the contractors dealing with this government is the same W. L. Horton who was introducing Mr. Pritchett to innocent men and paying him for the theft of ballots. It is just as well that the country should know whom they are dealing with in connection with these dredging contracts. Who has the work of supervision at Goderich? The work is done by the scow load, and if Mr. Horton has a friend looking after the scows he is bound to make quite a stack of money out of the work. No wonder, as was stated by the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. J. T. Schell) the other night, he is pestered to death by people coming to him and asking him to go into dredging companies. Other gentlemen on that side of the House have informed me of the same thing. It is a notorious fact, as was pointed out by the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), that men are making colossal fortunes out of these dredging contracts, because this swindling game is allowed to go on. May I ask the hon. minister if J. M. Proudfoot was the inspector at Goderich last year?

Mr. FISHER. I think he was the inspector on the breakwater, not on the dredging.

Mr. BENNETT. William Watson appears to have been the inspector of the dredging. Both of these men are unknown to me. Who had the contract for the pier?

Mr. FISHER. Battle & Conlon.

Mr. BENNETT. They are very reputable contractors, so far as I have ever heard. $9,389 seems to have been spent for dredging, and the quantities are given here. Some of it was rock at $1.50 a yard. What was the contract price, or was there a contract for the different qualities?

Mr. FISHER. 25 cents per cubic yard for all kinds of material except rock.

Mr. BENNETT. They work in something under the name of hard-pan at 80 cents.

Mr. FISHER. That is for 1904-5.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister should remember the record of Horton, and if there is anything more to be done by him, send out a reliable man from Ottawa to watch him.

Mr. J. D. REID. I think we should have a royal commission, as in the case of the Insurance Commission, trace this money to the man to whom it was finally paid.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that some of this work was destroyed by a storm last year.

Mr. FISHER. It was seriously damaged; the contractor declined to go on with the work, except at a greatly increased rate, which was declined by the department, and finally an adjustment was made with the contractor by the board of arbitrations and awarded, composed of departmental officers at something under $13,000, although his claim was $60,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the same man doing that work now?

Mr. FISHER. No, he gave up the contract; tenders were advertised for; he tendered again, but his tender was so much above the estimate of the department that it was not accepted. We recently advertised for tenders again, but the time has not yet expired.

Mr. BARKER. I see that the answer by Sir Wilfrid Laurier as to who tendered for this Goderich contract in 1904 was that Mr. W. L. Horton tendered. Did he sell out to the Mareton Dredging Company?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that Horton is a member of the Mareton Company, that he got the contract which the Mareton Company are carrying out in his name.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is the breakwater at St. Joseph going to be completed?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed it is to be completed by the contractor at his own expense, so that we do not have to vote any more money for it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How much money has been spent on the Grand Bend pier?

Mr. FISHER. I see last year there was $599 for repairs.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the total expenditure?

Mr. FISHER. I have not the details here, as there is no special vote for it this year.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If the minister is going to take an active interest in the affairs of the Public Works Department, I wish he would investigate the manner in which the money is being squandered at some of these piers, especially at St. Joseph, where he will find some of the pier scattered along the beach. No boat has stopped at that place, and the pier is of no benefit to the people at large. If he investigates, I think he will find justification for my remarks.

Hamilton harbour, $32,800.

Mr. BARKER. What is this money intended for?

Mr. FISHER. This is to carry on a contract which is already in existence. The total work is expected to cost $75,000. There was $10,000 spent last year. This will make $41,000 more, and there is an item in the supplementaries for last year of $6,000.

Mr. BARKER. Will this complete the work?

Mr. FISHER. I think so.

Mr. BARKER. Is it intended to do all the work the coming season?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, but if not, there will be an amount required in the supplementaries of this coming year.

Mr. BARKER. With the supplementaries of this year, will the work be completed?

Mr. FISHER. It will provide for its completion and I hope we will be able to complete.

Mr. BARKER. It is intended to have enough in the supplementaries to complete the work?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Kincardine harbour—repairs to piers and dredges, $4,500.

Mr. BLAIN. Is this supposed to complete it?

Mr. FISHER. This is for repairs and will no doubt put it in perfect order.

Little Current—improvement of north channel in Georgian bay, $50,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the explanation of this?

Mr. FISHER. A contract is being let for dredging out that channel north of Manitoulin Island, so as to provide a good channel for the largest vessels on the lake from Sault Ste. Marie to Georgian bay ports. There was one point the vessels could not pass and they had to go out to the lake to avoid it. When that is dredged out, a sheltered course will be available.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the total cost?

Mr. FISHER. $532,000. It has been let by contract, and the contractor has been pushing on the work very assiduously, so much so that there had to be an item in the supplementaries for last year of nearly $100,000.

Mr. SPROULE. There was $50,000 voted last year, surely you did not do $150,000 worth of dredging.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, it is all rock dredging.

Mr. SPROULE. Who is the contractor ?

Mr. FISHER. C. S. Boone. There is an item of $50,000 in the estimates for this coming year. If the contractor goes on with the work as expeditiously as he did last year, there will have to be another item next year.

Mr. SPROULE. The government voted $50,000 and the contractor earned $150,000 That looks rather suspicious or your estimate was sadly out.

Mr. FISHER. The contractor pushed the work very energetically and has not been paid for anything he did not do.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it understood, when he took the contract, that he would earn $150,000 in one season ?

Mr. FISHER. He got the whole contract and it was understood he would do the work as rapidly as possible. If he can do it in two years, it is better than three years.

Mr. SPROULE. How can you account for making an estimate that he would do $100,000 worth of work last year and then pay him $150,000 ?

Mr. FISHER. It is in the interests of the public that the work should be done as rapidly as possible.

Mr. SPROULE. Did the contract cover a certain number of years ?

Mr. FISHER. There was no such condition. The contractor may do it all in one year.

Mr. SPROULE. Why then did the government not provide money enough ?

Mr. FISHER. Because we did not anticipate that he would do so much.

Mr. BENNETT. Everybody concedes that the engineer, Mr. Lafleur, is a competent man ; he has been in the department a number of years and enjoys a high reputation. He knows very well how much work can be done in a year by reason of the construction or formation of the bottom. He knows that the contractor can reasonably at Little Current do so much work in a season and consequently estimates what appropriation is required for that purpose. But in this case the engineer, no doubt to his amazement, is told by Mr. McLean and another man named May that the contractor has dug out so many scow loads of rock. Was all this rock formation ? Has that been measured ? Has the bottom been swept and measured in situ ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. By whom ?

Mr. FISHER. By either Mr. Sing or his assistant engineer.

Mr. BENNETT. Who would be his assistant engineer ?

Mr. FISHER. He has two or three. Mr. Marrick is his assistant and a man called Pence.

Mr. BENNETT. Who was it measured this rock bottom at Little Current ?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Sing signs the report.

Mr. BENNETT. It may be a matter some day for investigation in the committee. But it is certain that your chief engineer tells the acting minister. If we vote so much money for the work at Little Current it will in all probability be earned. And to our amazement, after the work is all done, not only has the amount voted been earned, but $100,000 worth more, and here you are asking in the supplementary estimates for, in round figures, $95,000 more. That $95,000, the minister says, is for work done last season. It is a surprise to people to learn that Mr. Boone is the possessor of as many dredges as he seems to have, two at Collingwood and one at Little Current. A few years ago nobody ever dreamed that Mr. Boone, was going to blossom out into a millionaire contractor. Now who are the clerks of this work. Mr. Maclean and Mr. May ? I assume they were both recommended by the member for Algoma, or are they sent from Ottawa ?

Mr. FISHER. They are not sent from Ottawa, I do not know who recommended them.

Mr. BENNETT. It is fair to assume, by the local member. Now I contend that only work should be performed for which money is voted, or if more is going to be performed, then let parliament vote the money and let us know what is going to be done. This, I assume from the Auditor General's Report, is all rock work ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. But the real wrong doing was pointed out by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule). If you would tell the contractors openly that they could go in there and do as much work as they possibly could, you would have wider competition. Suppose a township council were to say, we are going to spend $300 in gravelling a road and give the contract on the basis of $300 would it not be an astounding thing if the contractor should go on and do $1,500 worth instead of $300 ? The public will see that this government is still doing business in the same way as they did in the case of Collingwood. Vote a certain sum of money, invite the contractors to tender, and once a man becomes the contractor he has carte blanche to go on, under the supervision of a couple of local men, and after that is done the department says, we have swept the bottom, and by measurements in situ of the rock we certify there is that much. It may be a matter perhaps for inquiry before a committee some day to find out who really did this work.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend is too suspicious. He has perhaps made out a plausible statement to show how extraordinary it is that last year there was only about $50,000 spent on this work, and this year about $150,000. The explanation is as simple as A B C. I am informed by the engineer that during the first season the contractor set to work and did a great deal of blasting and loosening, and got his plant on the spot, for all of which he was not paid at all until he had finally removed the loosened rock. During the last season he did remove that loosened rock, and took away so much of it that he earned $140,000 instead of the $50,000 which he earned a year ago. The way in which the contractor carried out his contract was concurred in. He did it in the most convenient way for his own work and the way in which he did it was accepted by the department. There is no question about it, no impropriety and no suspicion about it. The contract is to do this work, the whole work, to take out the rock all through that Little Current passage and give a channel of 22 feet right through. It is to the great advantage of the trade of the lakes that that work should be done. If the contractor does it rapidly, I dare say he will earn more profit; at the same time he will be doing a great service to the country and to the trade, and probably he will then be able to apply for another contract somewhere. He has set an example to contractors generally that I wish they would follow. It is not going to cost the country any more, but rather less; because all the money to be expended is going to be of no use until the work is finished. They might spend $300,000 or $400,000 there, and if there were $50,000 or $60,000 worth of rock left in the bottom of the channel, vessels would not be able to pass through, and it would be of no use to the country. But when it is finally completed, and swept, and measured, and accepted, the work will be right. The contractor deserves a good mark for it, and I hope he will go on in the same way.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was the chief engineer's estimate of the total work before it was commenced?

Mr. FISHER. $615,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. How much has been spent?

Mr. FISHER. When the accounts of this last year are paid for work up to the present time, there will be nearly $300,000 worth of work alone.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does the contract provide for $600,000?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. Then in the original tender was it intimated that there would be expended at that point $600,000 under the contract, and that the lucky tenderer would receive work to that extent?

Mr. FISHER. The contractor had a plan which had been prepared by the department, on which to base his calculations. The contract was for the completion and carrying out of that plan. It was awarded in 1904?

Mr. J. D. REID. When the minister advertised for these tenders, the quantities were given, at least, they know about what the quantities were?

Mr. FISHER. I am told not.

Mr. J. D. REID. Well, the government have estimated the quantities in the department.

Mr. FISHER. Yes. When the engineer makes a plan he knows what that plan means. The estimate of the cost is based on that plan.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is not the contractor shown that about so much work is to be done?

Mr. FISHER. No, he is given a plan and has to figure it out himself.

Mr. AMES. It is highly desirable that this work should be completed as rapidly as possible in the general interest of trade and not as a local improvement. I was there last summer and I had an opportunity myself to see the importance of that work. The channel is very narrow at Little Current, there is a sharp elbow opposite the town and vessels coming in have to go very slowly and very carefully in order to get by. There is a fair depth of water but the channel is extremely narrow at the present time. All that work is rock. I can testify to the fact that the dredges were working day and night and without cessation while I was there, because the drills continued to pound from twelve o'clock Sunday night until twelve o'clock on the following Saturday night. It is very important that the work should be finished as rapidly as possible. The channel is narrow, the dredges necessarily have to be placed in the channel while the work is proceeding, and vessels have to proceed at almost a snail's pace in order to get around the dredge at the turn. I trust that the contractor will put on as many dredges as possible so as to finish this work at an early date. The channel is very dangerous. When the wind blows in one direction the current is westward and when it blows in another direction the current is eastward. Sometimes the current runs three or four miles an hour and it might very easily take a vessel out of the channel. I would like to ask the minister if there will be anything done this season to clear the obstruction in the channel at Little Detroit near the mouth of the Spanish river ?

Mr. FISHER. My information is that no provision has been made for that. That is a name which has not come before me at all. I am glad to have a confirmation of what I have just said by the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Ames). If he has been on the spot he knows more about it than I do, but what he has said is an exact confirmation of the information that I have given the committee.

Mr. AMES. Little Detroit is twenty-five or thirty miles west of Little Current and it is a very narrow place between two high promontories through which all boats that take the northern part of the channel have to pass. This last season a large vessel was stranded on the ridge of rock that runs out from the southern side and it almost closed the entrance ; in fact the channel is almost unserviceable at the present time, and I sincerely trust that the department is not only preparing to clear away the wreck, if it has not already been done, but to take away the hog's back of granite rock which caused the wreck.

Mr. FISHER. I shall see that a report is made of the situation and we will consider what can be done.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to say one word with regard to the statement that the minister made that Mr. Boone had done a great deal of blasting one year and had removed it the next year, and therefore an enlarged amount of money was earned. I would imagine that the engineer who was preparing the estimates to be submitted to council would have taken into account that fact and would therefore have asked the government to provide money enough to pay for that extra work. Surely that could have been estimated pretty closely if the work was partly done this year and it was to be paid for next year. The minister smiles as though there was something wonderful about it.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought so.

Mr. FISHER. I had no intention of doing so.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought so and I thought he might be as near it as when he told us that a boat, to pass through the north channel, had to go out into Lake Huron. I think he was a little out in his geography then. I have had some experience extending over a number of years in regard to this matter of dredging. Dredging was done at various places in the Georgian bay in years gone by and just as soon as the amount of money voted by parliament for the year was spent the dredging stopped and had to remain in that condition until more money was voted. It was not the custom to allow a contractor to commence dredging where there was only a vote of $50,000 and go on and earn $150,000 without the money having been voted by parliament. I think that principle is a bad one, that it is a wrong one. It is a very loose way for the government to do business. Suppose parliament refused to vote that money, where would the contractor be ? Where would the government be which allowed that contractor to go on without the money having been voted to pay for the work ? They would be in awkward position. I think this is just one of the abuses that are creeping in. Mr. Boone has been doing the same thing in Collingwood. Some years ago, when we were asked why did you not finish a particular work the answer was, that there was only so much money voted and available this year and that was all that could be spent. It is a new idea that when there is only $50,000 voted a contractor can go on and earn $100,000 in addition to the original appropriation. I think that is a very improper system and one that is likely to lead to very grave and absurd abuses. It would be well to know the explanation of it, because I do not think the committee has been given the proper explanation.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman understands that there are two different kinds of contract. One is a contract under which a man will go on and dredge a certain amount in a season. The other is a contract for a given piece of work. This is a contract for the whole work in the Little Current passage which nobody expected would be done in two or three seasons.

Mr. SPROULE. You have the same at Collingwood ?

Mr. FISHER. Well, Collingwood is exactly the same. But there is this work that no one expects will be done in a season. A man has a given contract to do as much dredging as he is able to do during the season and he is not given any work for the next season. I find that a lot of contracts were given for last year. A man was given a contract for the season or for as much as his dredge would enable him to do, and in some cases, as is shown by these supplementary estimates, he has earned more money than was voted. I have to ask for a lot of little items and some considerable amounts to pay for the work last year. That is one class of contract, and under those circumstances I do not think that a man should be allowed to do very much more than the vote which was given by parliament, although I would not like to tie him right down to a few dollars or to ten or fifteen per cent as to what he must do. But, when you give a contract as in this case, and as in the Collingwood case, which is not terminable in a season, and which is for the whole work, I think that it is in the interest of the work that it should be pushed forward as rapidly as possible and if by a miscalculation by the department enough money was not put in the main estimates for the year to accomplish the work which the man was afterwards found able to do, it would be unfortunate if we did not allow him to go on and do the work. My hon. friend knows, that that has been a very common practice for many years under similar circumstances.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know. That is just the difference between what the minister imagines I do know and what I do not know.

Mr. FISHER. I can remember when I sat over there, supplementary estimates coming in for work during the year which had passed. I do not know the exact terms upon which it was done but I know that there were expenditures which had to be supplemented in the supplementary estimates and that this kind of thing has been going on for years. In this particular instance it happens to be a large amount but the principle is just the same.

Mr. SPROULE. Some years ago I pressed very hard to get the Collingwood work gone on with on the ground of urgent necessity, but the government always answered me that they could not expend more money than had been voted. I can understand a small amount of over expenditure, but here you have $150,000 ; you have expended three dollars for the one that parliament has voted. How do you know that next year some one might not tender to do the work cheaper, or had the contract been let in the first instance on these lines, that it might not have been taken cheaper ?

Mr. FISHER. It was let on these terms.

Mr. SPROULE. Has all the work at Collingwood been done in that way from the first plan ?

Mr. FISHER. So I am informed.

Mr. SPROULE. Parliament should not be deprived of its right to exercise its judgment on the voting of this money, before the country is committed to the expenditure.

Mr. FISHER. That is quite right.

Mr. BENNETT. Here we are asked for $50,000, and no doubt more than that amount of work will be done by Mr. Boone this year.

Mr. FISHER. I will have an item in the supplementaries to provide for that.

Mr. BENNET. Then there will be $100,000 in the supplementary estimates if Mr. Boone does $150,000 of work this year ?

Mr. FISHER. I hope so.

Meaford harbour—improvements, $21,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What work are you doing now at Meaford ?

Mr. FISHER. It is under contract.

Mr. SPROULE. Will this complete the work ?

Mr. FISHER. It will complete the breakwater and do some dredging besides.

Mr. SPROULE. Will it complete the dredging ?

Mr. FISHER. No. We will do what we can this summer.

Mr. SPROULE. Who had the dredging last year ?

Mr. FISHER. Weddell, of Trenton.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this work under contract ?

Mr. FISHER. It will be advertised for.

Mr. SPROULE. What about the pile works ?

Mr. FISHER. That is under contract to Kastner and Porter, of Wiarton ; there were five tenders and the lowest accepted.

Mr. SPROULE. What dredging do you provide for ?

Mr. FISHER. We think $6,000 will be done this summer.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand this harbour is laid out on a definite plan. If the contractor does all the work he can do this summer and it is over the estimate, could you pay for it as you did in the case of Collingwood ?

Mr. FISHER. I am told the plan as prepared by the department would be covered by about $6,000 worth of dredging this summer.

Mr. SPROULE. That is not the whole work ?

Mr. FISHER. I believe not. If the contractor goes on and does more than provided for we should pay him, if it is on the plan of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. How much will it cost to do all the dredging and pile work in the whole harbour according to the plan ?

Mr. FISHER. We have had requests for very large work there, which we have not agreed to. The plans prepared to be put into execution by the department would be covered by $6,000 of dredging and the completion of the breakwater.

Mr. SPROULE. It needs a good deal more than that.

Mr. FISHER. It may be we will have to ask for something in the supplementary estimates next year.

Mr. SPROULE. It is needed badly.

Mr. FISHER. I remember some representations, but I cannot give the details.

Midland harbour—dredging, $40,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Where will this $40,000 be expended for the next fiscal year ?

Mr. FISHER. On dredging the whole harbour so as to permit vessels drawing 20 feet to safely approach at low water all the quays and wharfs built along the harbour front from the inner lumber docks on the east side to the outer end of the wharf on the west side ; and dredging to 26 feet of water in front of the new Grand Trunk Railway Tiffin elevator wharf.

Mr. BENNETT. How will the expenditure be divided ?

Mr. FISHER. The total required for the two items would be $62,500.

Mr. BENNETT. How much will be expended at the elevator ?

Mr. FISHER. I am told $40,000 in the old harbour proper, and about $20,000 at the new wharf.

Mr. BENNETT. With due deference to the department I would think that in the transportation interests of the country, these figures should be transposed. A very large elevator has been constructed there without any government aid, and there should be deep water facilities in front of that elevator. I am at a loss to understand how $40,000 is to be expended in what the minister calls the old part of the harbour around the docks. In what particular place is this $40,000 to be expended ?

Mr. FISHER. Along the quays and wharfs of the harbour front from the inner lumber dock on the east side of the bay, to the outer end of the wharf on the west side of the bay.

Mr. BENNETT. I think there should be some expenditure made near the old elevator in the upper part of the bay, but as to these lumber docks, I do not think that the work there is quite so urgent.

Mr. FISHER. Do I understand my hon. friend to say that there ought to be less spent there and more at the Tiffin elevator?

Mr. BENNETT. My idea is that there should be at least twenty-four feet of water to accommodate the large class of vessels which go there, some of which carry 300,000 bushels of grain.

Mr. FISHER. The plan is to give 26 feet of water.

Mr. BENNETT. That is quite necessary. Are tenders to be invited for this expenditure of $40,000 at Midland?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. Below the place where this dredging has been done there is now in course of construction a 2,500,000 bushel elevator, which is being so constructed that it can be made capable of holding 10,000,000 bushels. That I understand will be built by the Grand Trunk Pacific at Tiffin. There was one finished last year by the Aberdeen Company which had a capacity of 1,500,000 bushels. There will be a large amount of dredging necessary at this new Grand Trunk Pacific elevator, and I hope there will be in the supplementary estimates a very substantial sum for that purpose, because I understand that it is the intention of the owners to push the elevator to completion so that it will be capable of taking in grain next fall. I would like the minister also to impress on the Department of Marine and Fisheries the absolute necessity of placing a gas buoy on the shelving rock in the middle of the bay, where there is now only a little spar buoy, besides a couple of little flickering lights on the hillside.

Mr. FISHER. I will draw the attention of my colleagues to the matter.

Owen Sound harbour—dredging and pile protection work, $20,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Is this to complete the work?

Mr. FISHER. This is supposed to complete the work at present planned.

Point Edward—dredging, $29,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the nature of that?

Mr. FISHER. This is to deepen the channel to 21 feet, and to obtain 21 feet of water in the main natural channel of the St. Clair river.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The people of that vicinity are anxious to know what is the nature of the dredging work that has been going on there year after year. There has been an expenditure of from $25,000 to $30,000, and it would be of some interest to know whether the department have a definite plan of expending that money in the river.

Mr. FISHER. Great difficulty has been found in keeping the main channel open, and dredging has to be done there right along. Then, we require dredging to provide landing facilities in connection with the elevator and the wharfage to a distance of about 800 feet to the lower end of Point Edward.

Mr. BENNETT. Will that be placed under contract this year?

Mr. FISHER. This is for last year's contract. It will be advertised again this year.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Who had the contract last year?

Mr. FISHER. A company called the Sarnia Bay Lumber, Timber and Salt Company. The rate was 22 cents a yard.

Port Burwell—improvement of harbour, $60,000.

Mr. MARSHALL. I find that about $37,000 has already been laid out on Port Burwell harbour. The inspection of that cost nearly $3,000. I would like to know whether these inspectors are practical men or not. Their names are McCrimmon, Jones and Ford.

Mr. FISHER. We have had no reports or complaints to the contrary. I do not know the men at all.

Mr. MARSHALL. My reason for bringing the matter to the minister's attention is that I know one of the inspectors, Mr. Ford; he is a farmer.

Mr. FISHER. That is no harm.

Mr. MARSHALL. No, he is none the worse for that if he is practical; but as a matter of fact he is not practical. He is a political worker. I know this gentleman. He has been kept on the harbour at $3 a day for some time. It is the general talk of that district. That is why my vote was so large there. The acting minister has been frequently there, and I am surprised that he would allow this thing to go on. There are others besides Ford who are not practical. I find that the former Liberal candidate, Mr. Hepburn, has been paid for a pile driver. I did not know that a candidate would be interested in any machinery doing work for the government. The item is not a large one, but as a matter of fact since the general election of 1904, Mr. Hepburn has been working this scheme. He has had control of certain moneys laid out at Port Burwell, and he has had this class of men around him. Mr. Ford is a first-class farmer, but he is not capable of inspecting a dredge, as he has had no experience at all in that line; yet he was drawing $3 a day and doing a little electioneering at the same time. I am quite well acquainted with Mr. Ford, and I know that he was very active in my election. Though he was still inspector on the dredge, he was out through the country doing electioneering work. I just want to make the hon. minister aware of what is going on.

Mr. LALOR. The hon. member for East Elgin is one of the new members of the House, and he does not understand that that is one of the necessary qualifications of an inspector.

Mr. BLAIN. Might I ask the hon. minister how it comes that there are four inspectors at Port Burwell?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that there were two dredges working there, and that one of the inspectors was looking after the cribwork and not the dredging. I do not think there were four at any one time. They were changed around somewhat apparently, but I have not the information as to the dates of their appointments.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Jackson) has pointed out that Mr. Ford who is on the pay-roll was a very active supporter of the government in the recent by-elections. Did he receive $3 a day for inspecting the dredge during the contest?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister should be in a position to supply the information as to the days on which Mr. Ford was at work and paid by the government.

Mr. FISHER. I have no doubt I could obtain the information in the department.

Mr. BLAIN. As the minister has been informed that this gentleman is an active politican with no special qualifications for inspecting dredges, we may expect that he will not be employed during the coming summer.

Mr. FISHER. I shall make inquiry as to his qualifications.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it necessary where two dredges are working to have an inspector for each dredge?

Mr. FISHER. I am told so.

Mr. BENNETT. I would suggest the employment of marvels like the one at Midland who inspects three dredges at one time. Last year Mr. A. G. McKay, of Owen Sound, who is the Owen Sound Dredging Company, had two dredges employed, and in order that this $20,000 that we have been rather unexpectedly asked to vote could be expended, some friends of the hon. gentlemen opposite having brought in a dredge she was placed on the work as well, I suppose on a subcontract. This marvel, Mr. W. H. Hacker, succeeded in doing the trick of looking after three dredges. I shall not ask that his services be dispensed with as he is such an admirable vote maker for me that I would rather have him kept on.

Mr. W. JACKSON. In connection with the Port Bruce wharf there is an item at page 252 of the Auditor General's Report for white oak, 510 feet at 15 cents. That seems an unusual item.

Mr. FISHER. I suppose we had to buy it.

Mr. W. JACKSON. It is the price.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know what it means exactly. I do not know if this is for heavy timbers.

Mr. W. JACKSON. It is at the rate of $150 per M. for inch oak, and it seems to me to be a little out of the usual.

Mr. FISHER. This is the first I have heard of it.

Mr. W. JACKSON. There is another item for $30 for pile driving at Port Bur well. Would the minister say who owned the pile-driver?

Mr. FISHER. I have not the information here. Perhaps my hon. friend has it.

Mr. W. JACKSON. F. E. Shepard, rent of pile-driver, $30.

Mr. FISHER. It does not convey anything to me, but I suppose it does to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WARD. It is significant that Cobourg is not mentioned in these estimates, why is that?

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend will have to possess his soul in patience. The supplementaries are not yet down and perhaps he will derive some information from them.

Mr. WARD. I may give notice now that I intend to bring that matter of the ferry before the House to-morrow.

Port Stanley—harbour improvements, $75,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is under contract.

Mr. W. JACKSON. Who is the resident engineer?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Lamb.

Mr. W. JACKSON. How long has he been in that employ?

Mr. FISHER. He has been in the department I think ten or twelve years. He was assistant in Toronto for many years and has been in charge of that district for about two or three years.

Mr. W. JACKSON. What are his duties?

Mr. FISHER. His duties are to superintend the works under the department in a certain district of western Ontario.

Mr. W. JACKSON. After the work is completed and the account rendered what are his duties or how is the department advised as to whether the work has been done or not?

Mr. FISHER. The accounts have to be transmitted to the department for payment; he has to certify them.

Mr. W. JACKSON. Some pile driving was done in Port Stanley, who received pay for that?

Mr. FISHER. There is an item in the Auditor General's Report:

C. A. Shepard, rent of engine and pile-driver, 28 days at $5, and rent of pile-driver, $43, $183.

Mr. W. JACKSON. That is not the first item. On the fourth line there is the name of James Arniel, I believe. This is the same driver that was in Bruce. This man, F. E. Shephard, is the foreman in Port Stanley and in all these accounts the Bruce part of the work is the only case in which the driver is given as belonging to Shepard. The first payment for this pile driving business is to James Arniel which was $142.45, while according to the accounts we find that C. A. Shepard received $183 for the same driver. The acting engineer there was not doing his duty when he allowed those items to pass and when in each of those cases the driver did not belong to either of those men.

Mr. BENNETT. Is F. E. Shepard the same as C. A.?

Mr. W. JACKSON. No, that is one of the boys. I will ask the Minister of Public Works if he is aware that that pile-driver should partly belong to this government and that the government partly if not wholly built it?

Mr. FISHER. I am not.

Mr. W. JACKSON. Would it not be the duty of your acting engineer to find out whether that pile-driver was built or almost wholly constructed by this government or a private individual?

Mr. FISHER. If that pile-driver belongs to the government the department ought to know it.

Mr. BENNETT. Where does this Mr. Lamb live?

Mr. FISHER. His headquarters are in London.

Mr. BENNETT. That explains it.

Mr. W JACKSON. Is it proper that cheques should be made out to parties who do not own the properties they purport to rent this government for government use?

Mr. FISHER. If the government get the services of a pile-driver from any individual and he is paid a reasonable price for the work, it does not matter to us in the slightest whether that driver belongs to that man or not. But if it belongs to the government, of course we should know where it is and have control of it. I do not know that it does.

Mr. W. JACKSON. Is it proper for this department to make out cheques to a man who is not entitled to a cent?

Mr. FISHER. I should think not, but I have yet to know that that has been done.

Mr. W. JACKSON. The minister is hard to persuade that there is anything wrong. There were returns asked for in the beginning of the session with reference to the work at Port Stanley. We had that report brought down and I find that no less than twenty-eight accounts were placed in that report, but they were not itemized. I made some inquiry from the deputy minister and he said he would get me the itemized account, but he brought down only twenty-six out of the twenty-eight. He brought one that was not in the original—a very peculiar thing. Why was an account brought down in a subsequent return which was not brought down in the original ? We have in these itemized accounts what I consider shows a condition of things which proves that the resident engineer was not doing his duty. Look at what they are doing in the harbour of Port Stanley where they are employing eight or ten men repairing old work and putting in some new. I would like to ask the minister what he would consider would be a fair amount of one class of hardware to use in two years. How many ordinary cross-cut saw files would have been sufficient for those men to use in the carrying out of their work?

Mr. FISHER. I am not prepared to give an opinion.

Mr. W. JACKSON. Would he think that twenty-one files used in Port Stanley an amount to use?

Mr. FISHER. I can quite understand several files being worn out in a month.

Mr. W. JACKSON. Compare the two classes of work, the one at Port Burwell, where there are more men employed and more new work being constructed with the work at Port Stanley. Yet there were only thirteen files used in Port Burwell at the same time as there were one hundred and twenty-one files used at Port Stanley.

Mr. FISHER. It would be a better comparison to find out how many saws were filed at each place.

Mr. W. JACKSON. I do not think the minister wants to be enlightened but I will enlighten this House. In two years in that work there were one hundred and twenty-one files used in Port Stanley and thirteen in Port Burwell.

Mr. FISHER. How many saws were used ?

Mr. W. JACKSON. How many would you expect to be used on a piece of work of that kind? This is not a jesting matter. You would not think they would require on a piece of repair like that very many padlocks but I suppose those files had to be locked up. I find there were twelve padlocks bought.

Mr. FISHER. In Port Bruce ?

Mr. W. JACKSON. No, in Port Stanley. In that time there were twenty-eight axes bought. I can go through those accounts and see an immense waste of material. I am not saying that the material was not bought from the hardware in the village. I believe it was. But if the minister thinks that that is not a condition of things which should be looked after, then I am afraid there is no use of my offering him any assistance towards obtaining a better condition of things. There are accounts here for padlocks, saws, ropes and oil cans to an extent that seems almost incredible. Perhaps that is the reason these itemized accounts were not brought down as they should have been in the original return. Let me read some correspondence I find in that return. Here is a letter dated Welland, April 7, 1906 :

Secretary Department of Public Works, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—We inclose herewith copy of invoice in triplicate, of material supplied Mr. F. E. Shepard, foreman of works, Port Stanley, Ontario, October 17, 1905, which has not yet been paid, although we have sent several statements to Mr. Shepard at Port Stanley and to the department at Ottawa. We have also written Mr. Shepard, but have received no reply from him.

Will you kindly look into this matter, and advise us why this bill has not been paid.

Yours truly,
M. BEATTY & SONS, Limited.

Now should it not be ? Where is the communication itemizing that account in the public accounts ? Should that not be brought down in this return ? There is a letter from Mr. Beatty saying he had written to the department in Ottawa rendering this account. Is there anything in this return ? I have hunted for it from A to Z, and there is nothing. That letter should have been in this return, and we have not got it. Here is another letter addressed to Beatty & Sons, Welland :

April 27, 1906.

Messrs. M. Beatty & Sons, Limited, Welland, Ontario.

Gentlemen,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 23rd instant, in regard to an invoice for materials supplied in connection with the work at Port Stanley, and to state that the chief engineer has been requested to give the matter his attention.

(Sgd.) F. GELINAS,
Secretary.

Now here is another letter from the secretary :

Welland, Ontario, April 25, 1906.

Secretary Department of Public Works, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—On April 7 we wrote you regarding some material supplied Mr. F. E. Shepard, foreman of works, at Port Stanley, October 17, 1905, which have not yet been paid for, and inclosed copy of invoice in triplicate. Not receiving any reply from you, we think our letter may have gone astray. Kindly look into this matter and advise us why the bill has not yet been paid.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) M. BEATTY & SONS, Limited.

Where is that letter ? It does not appear in these returns brought down. There was a letter sent out to the Department of Public Works in Ottawa, and are they not supposed to keep these communications ? If they are, why was the letter not brought down ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Something in it they don't want you to see.

Mr. W. JACKSON. Now there is the winding up letter in connection with that:

Welland, Ontario, May 26, 1906.

Mr. Fred. Gelinas,
Secretary Department of Public Works, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Referring further to our letter of May 14, in reply to yours of April 25, No. 156,-081, we received cheque for this account from Mr. W. F. Hepburn for Mr. F. E. Shepard.

Yours truly
(Sgd.) M. BEATTY & SONS, Limited.

Hepburn is the defeated candidate. Here is an account sent to this department which the department refused to pay, and afterwards we find a man that is not the foreman, but I believe he is the man that had the patronage in East Elgin, sending that money to this manufacturing establishment in Welland. Here is another letter that don't seem to have any head or tail to it.

The Waterous Engine Works Company, Brantford, Canada.

July 9, 1906.

The Department of Public Works, Ottawa.

Dear Sirs,—On the 25th June we received a communication from the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries of Ottawa, in reference to one F. E. Shepard at Port Stanley, in regard to a grate of the value of $10.50, in which he said that he was referring this matter to the Department of Public Works for attention.

Where is that communication that the Department of Marine and Fisheries say they have referred to the Department of Public Works? We cannot find anything of it in these returns.

Will you be kind enough to look into this matter and let us hear from you at your earliest convenience.

Yours truly,
WATEROUS ENGINE WORKS COMPANY, Limited.
(Sgd) Walter T. Mair, Accountant.

As I say, there is no head or tail to that letter. There must have been a communication leading up to it, but we find nothing of it here. We have no knowledge of what that disputed account was which this department refused to pay and which was afterwards paid by the defeated Liberal candidate in East Elgin. Let me say that the repairs for this pile-driver, although the minister makes light of it, has been paid by the government over and over again, and they have been until quite recently paying for the use of it. Now, I am not through with Port Stanley yet.

Mr. BENNETT. Who is the contractor there?

Mr. W. JACKSON. Boone & Manley. Now we have here accounts paid in the first part of this item, over 54,212 yards at 15½ cents a yard, and we have another item of clay, sand and boulders at 19½ cents a yard. Now what are we to understand from that kind of figuring?

Mr. FISHER. I can hardly understand what the hon. gentleman is driving at.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the minister might very well understand that—what kind of work is it?

Mr. W. JACKSON. I want to know what that word 'boulder' means.

Mr. FISHER. I think the engineers call boulder a large stone.

Mr. W. JACKSON Let me tell the acting Minister of Public Works that there are no boulders in Port Stanley except what are running out of the bottom of the pier into the harbour, and I think the residents of Port Stanley will corroborate what I say, that it is not a harbour where there are boulders at all. What is your inspector there for? Is he the only check you have to see whether they shall be paid the lower price for clay digging or the greater price for boulder digging?

Mr. FISHER. If the contractor was getting 19 cents a yard for clay, sand and boulders, the probability is that there were very few if any boulders, otherwise he would not have done the work at 19 cents a yard.

Mr. W. JACKSON. He was doing this work at 15½ cents a yard, and for quite an item here he received 19½ cents for boulders, a part of it, and I submit that outside the stones that drop out of the cribwork into the harbour there is no such thing in Port Stanley harbour as a boulder at all.

Mr. FISHER. If he did have to take out any boulders he would be paid for them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What rate is he paid for boulders

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that the contract was 19½ cents for sand and clay including any boulders that might happen to me there.

Mr. J. D. REID. How much for the sand alone?

Mr. FISHER. I think 15 cents.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Auditor General says 21 cents for sand, and 19½ cents for boulders. There were 14,488 yards at 21 cents for sand, clay and boulders and 7,448 yards at 19½ cents.

Mr. FISHER. That was the lowest contract price.

Mr. J. D. REID. I cannot understand you should pay more for sand.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot understand it.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minster has treated lightly the statement made by the hon.

member for West Elgin that a pile-driver has been built out of government property and used by a contractor.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to know on what the hon. gentleman bases that statement. I do not know that a pile-driver was built out of government property.

Mr. J. D. REID. That may all be, but the minister treats it lightly and refusee to make inquiries about it.

Mr. FISHER. I will make an inquiry when I get the opportunity, but I will not accept the statement that this is a pile-driver belonging to the government and that it was used by another man.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. gentleman treated it lightly.

Mr. FISHER. Well, I cannot believe it.

Mr. J. D. REID. Well, then we will take the opportunity perhaps at another session of making the hon. gentleman believe it.

Mr. FISHER. I will take the opportunity myself of finding out, before another session.

Mr. J. D. REID. Last year we proved that we have enough files to last us for forty-eight years and six months, bought from Straube of Montreal, and now the government are buying a lot of files for this work.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I think the minister should take into consideration the contracts given at Port Stanley and at Rondeau. They are only a few miles apart, it is precisely the same lake bed, the soil is the same, there seems to be a great difference between these contract prices, and I think the matter is worth looking into.

Mr. FISHER. These contracts were let by public advertisement and tender. I have no means of knowing why the contractor asked more at one place than at another. The contract was given to the lowest tenderer, and if a lot of men tendering at one place believed that they could do the work for a certain price and that they could do it for a lower price at another place. I take it for granted that they knew what they were about when they made this difference between the two.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The contract seems to be of a very indefinite nature. The minister says if there are sand, clay any boulders, the department pay 19 cents a yard. If there is one boulder in a thousand yards, do you pay 10 cents instead of 15 cents?

Mr. FISHER. As I understand it there is a contract given to take out everything that comes—sand, clay or boulders altogether—the boulders being mixed with the sand and clay, at so much per yard.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. At 19 cents per yard ?

Mr. FISHER. At 19 cents or 19½ cents per yard. If boulders are met with they have to take out the boulders and if no boulders are met with they do not have to take out any boulders. All they take out is the sand and clay.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If there is one boulder in a certain amount of sand and clay you pay 19 cents. If there are 100 boulders in the same amount of sand and clay you pay 19 cents. Is that what we are to understand ? Is there any proportion ? Suppose 90 per cent is free of boulders, does the contractor get exactly the same ?

Mr. FISHER. I understand that it is a matter of luck or of knowledge on the part of the contractor when he makes his offer. He is obliged by his contract to take out whatever boulders there are. I have just had an explanation which will probably solve the question. There used to be a classification of different materials, and so much was paid for each. Under the new arrangement under which this contract was made, there are only two classes of material—one solid rock and the other everything else. In some cases in the other materials may be included boulders; in other cases where there are no boulders they will not be included. But, if a man makes an offer and gets a contract he is obliged to take out any boulders that are reached. He probably makes his tender on his knowledge of the material that he is obliged to dredge under the contract, and he will be obliged to take all the boulders at the price at which he tenders.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I understand it, you have two classifications in so far as prices are concerned; one in solid rock, and the other in everything else ?

Mr. FISHER. As I understand it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. One price is fixed for solid rock and another price is fixed for everything else. The contractor takes his chance and the government takes its chance too. Of course, there are chances on both sides.

Mr. FISHER. The government, in a sense, takes no chance, because everything has to be taken out.

Mr. R. L. BORDEIN. The government takes its chance in this way that it may be paying 19 cents for that which may not be worth more than 13 or 14 cents, and the contractor takes his chance because he may be receiving 19 cents for that which may cost him 21 cents. There are chances on both sides. I do not understand, then, why a different price is fixed for sand alone.

Mr. FISHER. There is not now. That was under the old classification which has been given up.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is the old contract ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why did you make the change ?

Mr. FISHER. They found that a great deal of trouble used to occur in classifying and there were so many disputes between contractors and the department and the resident officers that it was found impossible to deal with it, so they gave up the classification and adopted the single one of solid rock which can be easily determined and everything else.

Mr. W. JACKSON. When was the change in the regulations put in force ?

Mr. FISHER. Last season was the first that we worked under the new arrangement.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. W. JACKSON. At six o'clock I was trying to get some information, without much success, as to what was meant by boulders in the contract for dredging Port Stanley harbour.

Mr. FISHER. As I understand it, the boulders are large stones and they have to be moved by the contractor without extra charge.

Mr. W. JACKSON. In this contract there is a special item for removing boulders. The account in the Auditor General's Report is :

C. S. Boone, dredging, April 10 to October 15, 1905, clay and sand, 54,212 yards at 15½ cents; clay, sand and gravel, 101,130 yards at 17 cents. clay, sand and boulders, 7,748 yards at 19½ cents; sand, 14,488 yards at 21 cents.

I know Port Stanley harbour very well, and there are no boulders or large stones in that harbour except those that came out of the pier, and I fail to see how they would amount to 7,500 yards.

Mr. FISHER. At the time that contract was let there was a classification of the material according to its description, and 'boulders' are included in one class. If there was no such material found there would not be a report that it was found, and the contractor would not be paid according to that classification.

Mr. W. JACKSON. I repeat that that class of material does not exist in the harbour at all. I find from the accounts that C. S. Boone was paid for taking out 177,278 yards and the lowest price for that was 15½ cents. There were 54,212 yards charged at the low rate and 125,066 yards at the higher price. That was under the old contract, and under your new contract you are getting all that material taken out for 14 cents a yard, which is 1½ cents a yard lower than the lowest price in the old contract, and at that lowest price only about one-third of the material was taken out. I say that the digging in Port Stanley harbour under the old contract was paid for at an altogether too high price. If any one should think that under the new contract at a low price, there is a great deal more dredging than under the former contract to be done, and that hence it can be done cheaper, that is a mistake, because Boone received over $30,000 on the scale contract whilst under the new contract it will not exceed over $5,000, and the price is 1½ cents per yard less than the lowest former price. I shall go further with this criticism and it is an honest criticism. If you were doing work in that harbour that was for the public good, there would not be so much fault found with it, but what do we find? We find the government officials there digging a trench where there never was a ship, and I don't believe ever will be, and undermining one of the best steel and stone abutment bridges that the county of Elgin has. As the Minister of Public Works has seen fit to doubt some of my statements I wish to read to him a report of a civil engineer at the head of the county of Elgin engineering department, the city engineer for St. Thomas, and a man whose services are sought by each and every county within a radius of fifty miles from St. Thomas on account of his ability in his profession. This is his report as to what happened in the harbour of Port Stanley :

On account of the Dominion government dredging out the Kettle creek within a short distance of Port Stanley bridge, it had the effect of washing out the creek in front of the west abutment of the bridge to such an extent that the earthwork of the approach has been washed out into the creek. In the early spring the approach gave way and left a large hole in the roadway which I had repaired. Since that time the west abutment shows signs of moving forward towards the creek. The south wing of the abutment is fractured and there seems to be a very slow movement, both the settling and moving towards the east. The north wing does not show any signs of fracture, but there are indications that it is also moving towards the creek, although not to such an extent. This abutment is built on a pile foundation, there being sixty-four piles under it.

There is now thirteen feet of water in the creek a short distance in front of the abutment, whereas formerly there was only about five feet of water. It is very difficult to say what the result of this moving will be. If it continues there is only one thing that can be done. The earth approach will have to be removed and a coffer dam built underneath and made as deep as necessary. This is going to be a very expensive work, and to commence to do this work at this time of the year would have a very serious effect on the business of Port Stanley. I would ask that your public improvement commission visit the site of this bridge on Wednesday morning with me.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JAS. A. BELL, Engineer.

Mr. FISHER. When was that?

Mr. W. JACKSON. Last winter. The dredging was done in the fall of 1905, and the abutment was undermined during the winter of 1906. That is a report made to the county council at their June session by James A. Bell, engineer. There was no more need of digging that trench than there was of digging a trench from Port Stanley to St. Thomas. No vessel will ever lie near there; but through the inefficient management of this government, so far as Port Stanley is concerned, that has cost the county of Elgin $3,000 or $4,000. This government have practically destroyed this bridge, which cost $20,000. It has been suggested to me by the Elgin County Council since last year that this government should be held responsible for destroying that public bridge. Now, I have a word to say with reference to Port Stanley as a port which is well entitled to have public money judiciously expended upon it. That port is bringing in a revenue of between $50,000 and $60,000 in customs duties. The Père Marquette Railway Company, formerly the Lake Erie, with the assistance of $10,000 from this government, have constructed a work costing nearly $100,000. They have built a slip on the west side of the west pier, and this government is extending the breakwater. I hope that when that is completed it will add to the accommodation in the harbour, which is badly required. Notwithstanding all the reports which have come to the Public Works Department in regard to the deepening of the harbour, the 'Bessemer' steel ferry No. 2 made an attempt last year to turn round in it, and it took her four or five hours to do so, with the assistance of two tugs. She had to dredge her own way, and she has never made the attempt since. The only thing a ship of that kind can do, as the harbour is now, is to back in and steam out ahead. Now, I do not trouble this House very much, but it has been my duty this afternoon to bring to the attention of the Minister of Public Works the facts in regard to the harbour of Port Stanley. The electorate of that village and the surrounding country, irrespective of politics, complain of the existing state of things, and have requested me to bring it to the attention of the government. The Public Works Department is going on repairing the piers, which have been overhauled three times within the past six years. Port Stanley was but a 12 foot harbour at one time. Now the government is deepening it to 16 or 18 feet, and as a result the piers are all tipping into the water. The time has come for ceasing that kind of patchwork, and building permanent piers, even if only 200 feet are built every year. I do not think I have been treated fairly this afternoon by the acting Minister of Public Works. I do not think the answer he gave me with regard to that little item was quite a fair answer, when he said that it altogether depended on how many saws you had to file. If the hon. minister had asked his engineer, he would have told him how many saws would have to be filed on a work like that, but the hon. gentleman did not see fit to do so. He sought to make light of the boulders and said he could not believe that the statements I made were correct. I resent these things. I do not trouble the House much, but I am going to do my duty, and when I do I want fair-play. When the hon. minister says, as he did last session, that it is only in the diseased mind of the member of the opposition that these things exist, I want to tell him that I resent that. We are here to assist in the proper management of the affairs of our country. The minister treated me with scant courtesy this afternoon for bringing this matter to his attention.

Mr. J. D. REID. According to the Auditor General's Report, the foreman on this job has been paid for 237 days at $3 a day. Now, as this work was in operation only eight months of the year, out of which there must have been four months of winter, you cannot in that time make more than 200 actual working days. I would like to have an explanation of that. From what the hon. member has said about this work at Port Stanley, there is evidently a most serious state of affairs. The destruction of the bridge owned by the county and the fact that the piering that has been done is now tumbling into the harbour would seem to indicate that there must be some person there who is not doing his duty, although the hon. minister does not seem inclined to believe the statements the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. W. Jackson) has made.

Mr. FISHER. If the work is falling in it must be examined by an engineer and the necessary precautions taken. When the dredging was first commenced there was some damage and that is why the piling was resorted to. The department has no knowledge of any trouble about the bridge.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I think the member for West Elgin (Mr. W. Jackson) deserves every credit for bringing this matter before the House and trying to show the damage resulting from this work. If the minister will promise to investigate all these charges I would be willing to let the item go through, but without such a promise I doubt if members on this side would wish the item to pass.

Mr. FISHER. I am free to admit that the statements require investigation and I shall investigate them.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the minister ascertain the quantities of supplies such as axes, files and padlocks purchased? The quantity seems unreasonable. It must also be possible to ascertain the quantities dredged and whether there are boulders there or not. Possibly it might be made advantageous to the man inspecting the work to say that there were boulders as this would make a difference of perhaps $30 per day in the payment of the dredge and he might put half of that in his pocket.

Mr. FISHER. I shall certainly demand a explanation of the statements and see what truth there is in them. We cannot now ascertain what material was dredged because it has been put into the lake.

Mr. TAYLOR. There are persons acquainted with the bottom of the harbour who can say whether there are boulders there or not.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the minister be willing to recompense the county for the damage done to the bridge if it is found that it has been undermined owing to work done by this government?

Mr. FISHER. I certainly could not answer a question like that without knowing all the facts.

Mr. MARSHALL. I notice the minister has not set aside anything for Port Bruce about which I have been speaking to him privately. The government has already spent about $10,000 or $11,000 on this harbour and $1,000 more is now required to extend one of the piers. It seems that every southwest storm fills up the narrow channel to the harbour and there are many men with nearly everything they have invested in fishing plant which is useless to them if they cannot get in and out of the harbour. If I had a promise from the minister I could write to the many people who have applied to me in connection with this matter.

Mr. FISHER. $1,000 is such a reasonable request that I will surely be able to get it in some way.

Mr. BOYCE. As the minister is in a generous mood, I would ask if he has provided anything for aids to navigation in the Rainy river country?

Mr. FISHER. I must ask my hon. friend to keep a little nearer to the vote in question. If my hon. friend will wait a little perhaps he will see.

Mr. BOYCE. While I am quite willing to be patient there is a point at which I find that with this government patience ceases to be a virtue.

Mr. FISHER. It will have much more effect with me than anything else.

Mr. ARMSTRONG.

Mr. BOYCE. And the people in that country are beginning to feel that patience is ceasing to be a virtue. I would like the minister to decide whether the applications that have been received and which have some virtue are to receive the consideration they deserve?

Mr. FISHER. I am sure they have some virtue.

Otonabee river, $10,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is to continue dredging in the Otonabee river.

River Thames—wharfs at mouth, $1,800.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I do not object to the amount of this vote nor to the work being done if it were done properly. I wish to call attention to the work upon the wharf at the mouth of the river and also on the one built last year at Jeannette's creek, about a mile from the mouth of the River Thames. After a good deal of persuasion from the hon. member for East Kent (Mr. Gordon) and myself, and after a great many petitions had been sent in, the department considered the request favourably and put in an estimate to build the wharf. I asked what the wharf cost and was told $5,000, and that the man in charge was a man named Colby. Mr. Colby is a farmer, who never lived anywhere near water until then, and I am quite sure he knows nothing about building wharfs. He, however, is a good political man in the interests of the government of that district and was consequently put in charge, but with all due respect to him he never had any experience, to my recollection, in work of that kind. I suppose he received his plans from the department which was then presided over by Mr. Hyman, who of course is thoroughly responsible for the whole work. The result was that this $5,000 which was spent on that upper wharf was money thrown away, and the wharf is not worth a dollar to the community. This wharf was supposed to have a concrete facing and was to be of a fairly good size. It was to be built upon a pile foundation, the piles cut off below the water, and a cement course to follow. I drew the attention of the House last year to the condition of that wharf, and I hope that the one now in contemplation will not be constructed as that was. Mr. Colby, not knowing the water levels of the River Thames, had these piles driven not sufficiently deep into the earth and besides they were not sufficiently long. These piles were cut off under water, but not at low water simply because the man in charge knew nothing about the water levels of that district, and the result was that after the wharf was completed, a year ago last winter, the piles in the river stuck out of the water a foot. I drew the attention of the government to this and suggested that some precaution should be taken to protect the foot of the piles which showed above water, or the wharf would go to pieces. Last spring this wharf was completed, the piles were driven in three feet of water, and it was intended to dredge out to the face of this wharf in order to allow boats drawing ten feet of water to reach it. But to my surprise the dredging was not done. The municipalities which this wharf was supposed to benefit contributed many hundred dollars in order to dredge a cut up to Jeannette's creek station so as to build a road to that wharf and thus get all the advantage intended, but much to my surprise the dredging was not done. I called the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) to this early last fall so that the dredging might be done and the farmers might have the advantage of that wharf for shipping their sugar beets and other goods. The minister wrote that he would have the matter attended to at once. I also drew his attention to the fact that there were two dredges on the ground and that there was no reason why the wharf should not be completed. A dredge was sent in there, but it only did very little work, and this cement facing, which is at least 100 feet in length, practically split in two. I happened to be in the vicinity a few days later and was asked by the people there to go and look at the wharf from which they had expected great advantages. I want to say to the acting minister and his head engineer that I counted myself at least twenty-five cracks up and down the face of this concrete. I also happened to be down there one morning and found that evidently this had been drawn to the attention of the government because there were two or three men there plastering cement into the cracks. That $5,000 as that wharf stands to-day, is a complete loss to the country, and the people are not getting any benefit from it. And this is due solely to the fact that the department put the work in charge of a man who had no experience in such work. There was no reason for this because we have there such men as Mr. John Flook, a very capable man for such work, who has done similar work for both this and the late government and works which are a credit to any one. We have other men in the same business who would no doubt give satisfaction. Had the contract been given to Mr. Flook or some of the other contractors we would have had a wharf which would have been a credit to the government and the people's money would not have been thrown away. I am sure that if I wanted to criticise the items of that expenditure, I could make very good reading for my constituency. The department should take active steps without delay. There is no boat which can land within ten or twelve feet of that wharf today. Should you attempt to dredge it out, the wharf will fall into the river because the piles are too short and were not driven to their full depth. The vote we are asked to pass for the wharf at the mouth of the river at the lighthouse is for a very important object. No doubt the wharf is a most important one which the department must keep up. I notice you have this work in charge of one, Mr. Lefave. I do not know anything of his ability, but I hope he is fit to take charge of that work. But I am told on very good authority, I cannot vouch for it myself, that these piles, which were all driven in, and I think part of the concrete work was done, last fall—I am told these piles are driven right through an old ship's bottom which was sunk there many years ago. Now if that is the case, it is simply gross negligence on the part of the department in not clearing up that channel properly before these piles were put down. If that is the case, as stated to me by shipowners and those who have every reason to know the conditions, it means that you will have to spend possibly $2,000 to get a diver there and cut this old ship away. I do not blame the acting minister at all for this, and I want to give him credit for the promises he has made us this afternoon that more precaution will be taken in the future in spending the public money. I say again that it is a shame that the people's money should be squandered as it has been, upon this one wharf in particular. I hope the second wharf upon which we are spending another $5,000 will be made more serviceable, and that the money will not be wasted as it has been in this case.

Mr. CLARKE. As the wharf that has been referred to by my hon. friend (Mr. Clements) is in my riding, I can assure him that Mr. Lefave who has charge of the work is one of the most competent men for that purpose that can be found in western Ontario. He is a gentleman who was recommended by myself, he is a practical man, the government engineer says he is a first-class man, and my hon. friend need have no fear that the wharf, at any rate the wharf in my riding at the mouth of the River Thames, will have the difficulty which he says has occurred in his riding which is still further up the river. The story about driving the piles through an old ship is something which I think has been dug out of fiction. I have been at that wharf many times, and I do not want to let the statement go forth unchallenged. It is one of those rumours like many other rumours that arise, and may be disposed of as discredited. It is a place where I have been many times. There has been a dock there before, and piles have been driven there before, and I never heard up to the present time, a suggestion that there was any difficulty whatever in regard to driving piles there. There must be a difference of opinion between my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Clements) and the government engineer as to the dock that has been already constructed, being the second dock up the river. My hon. friend also repeats rumours about this dock cracking, owing to nigh water. I saw the government engineer within a few weeks, and he assures me that the dock that has been built is an excellent dock, and that there is no fear whatever such as dreamed of by my hon. friend.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Has the hon. gentleman visited this wharf ?

Mr. CLARKE. I have not visited that wharf. I know my own wharf very well, but the one further up I have not visited, and therefore I have to take the word of the government engineer. My hon. friend is good enough to tell me what he had heard said about it. I understand from the engineer that there were some cracks in the original construction, which were inevitable. At certain seasons of the year the water is remarkably low on acount of ice jams in the St. Clair river at the flats, and I think he told me there was a crack, but it had been repaired. The government engineer says now it is an excellent dock, and there is no reason for the criticism.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Why were they not dredged out so that boats could go up to the dock ?

Mr. CLARKE. The work is not completed yet as I understand. They did not get through the work last year. I am not able to say about the dredging. I know there is dredging to be done this year at the mouth of the river, at least I understand so. I am quite as anxious as my hon. friend to see that this is made a first-class job. It is a place where wharfs are badly needed, and I join with my hon. friend in saying that a first-class job should be done on the one that is not completed. But with regard to the wharf in Kent, I do not wish the hon. gentleman's statement to go unchallenged, because the government engineer assured me that, although part of the wharf has been cracked, it has been so far remedied that it is an excellent job, and meets with hearty approval.

Mr. FISHER. The department has a photograph of that wharf of which I have spoken. The hon. gentleman's statement that boats cannot go up to it is a mistake.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Has the minister a photograph showing a large boat lying at the wharf ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not say what size of boat.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I want to say to my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Clarke) that while he claims to have been so often at the mouth of the river of which he speaks, the other wharf is one mile from it. I am sure that the department built that wharf to benefit my hon. friend's constituency as much as my own. I do not care what information the department have here, I say that that wharf has not been twenty-five cents of value to that whole district.

I say again that no boat drawing eight feet of water can land within ten feet of that wharf ; I say that there has not been a shipment from that wharf where there could have been many ; I say also that the wharf is not completed, that there was no reason for saying that the government have not had time to complete the dredging. I am surprised at my hon. friend from Essex saying that, because there were two dredges.

Mr. CLARKE. No, I say I do not know about the dredging.

Mr. CLEMENTS. There were two dredges lying there, and as soon as a dredge came in to dredge the face of this wharf in order to give a depth for boats, the wharf spread in two, and it is simply because the piling is not down deep enough. Any competent man who knows anything about such works will tell you that if you dare to dredge that out to give you the proper draft for boats coming up that river, as it was intended, the face of that wharf will fall into the river. There is only one way it can be remedied, and that is far a new facing to be built further out in the river, and to be put down the proper depth, so as to thoroughly strengthen it, using the inside for an inner wall.

Rondeau harbour—improvements, $48,000.

Mr. CLEMENTS. There is also a wharf built in Rondeau called the Shrewsbury wharf, which I understand cost $5,000, I think somewhat over that. I asked the cost of it, because I wanted to be sure that it was well built. While I am not objecting to this wharf being built, if the department will take care of this wharf, and keep it and put it in repairs as it was intended, the wharf will be a great benefit to that district. I want also to state that this wharf was built, that the contract was given and the piles were hauled out the very day the last elections were announced. There was a considerable vote there to which I am sure my opponent thought it would make some difference, and the pressure he brought caused that wharf to be built. I am not saying anything against the wharf being built, but I do say that there is not two feet and a half of water, or three feet either, at that wharf.

There is only one way in which that wharf can be made useful to the public and that is by continuing the pier out further so that you can get deep water. I also want to draw the attention of the minister to the approach to the wharf. The Hon. Mr. Hyman, I think, a year ago, said that he had an estimate that it would cost $250. I do not think that $50 of actual money was spent there. There is a sandy bottom at the approach to this wharf and they have piled logs and earth in there. The result is that the wash of the sea from Rondeau has carried the sand out and made it absolutely useless to those in the district who desire to drive a team on the wharf. That approach should be remedied at once. The earth should be taken up at the end of the approach and the approach should be filled in with stone so that the wash from the sea would not affect it, and so that the public may have some use of the wharf which affords accommodation for boats drawing from two and a half to three feet of water. This government are spending a great deal of money at Rondeau harbour. I think it is justly spent. As to whether we have got value for every dollar that has been spent there I am not going to say, but this is a good harbour and a proper amount of money should be spent there. The Ontario government have an estimate for a splendid wharf at the public park there, where boats drawing 12 feet of water may land and I suggest that this government continue this pier out to a proper depth or that they dredge into it so that boats may come in there and land at the wharf which the Ontario government are building. Also Shrewsbury wharf. I think that the Ontario and Dominion governments should join hands in making the Shrewsbury and Rondeau wharfs of some value to the people of that district. As far as the Shrewsbury wharf is concerned you might as well build a box out in three feet of water and expect it to serve the needs of the people there. You cannot get at it from the approach or at the other end with boats of any draft. I would ask the acting Minister of Public Works to draw this matter to the attention of the department and see that the approach to the wharf is properly constructed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. When was the wharf commenced ?

Mr. CLEMENTS. If you will give me the date when the last Dominion elections were announced I will tell you, because the first load of piles was hauled from the town of Blenheim on that day.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That wharf was commenced and considerable done on it in 1897 when I had the honour to represent that county.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Shrewsbury wharf ? Evidently the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) has not been in that district if he says that it was commenced in his time. I say that the wharf that I spoke of was commenced and that the first piles that were hauled for it were hauled from Blenheim on the day that the elections were announced.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What wharf do you refer to ?

Mr. CLEMENTS. The Shrewsbury wharf, in front of the Rev. Thompson's residence.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think the item ought to be struck out.

Sault Ste. Marie wharf—dredging approaches, $50,000.

Mr. BOYCE. What is that for ?

Mr. FISHER. This is not under contract. This is for dredging the approaches to the wharf there. There was a vote last year and it was intended to put this work under contract, but owing to the lateness of the season at which the vote became available nothing was done.

Mr. BOYCE. Is this to dredge the shoal immediately around the government wharf ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, the approaches around the government wharf.

Mr. BOYCE. Does the minister intend, by removing that shoal, to endeavour to dredge the channel between the government wharf and the mouth of the canal ?

Mr. FISHER. I understand this is the approach to the basin along the government wharf.

Mr. BOYCE. Who are the contractors ?

Mr. FISHER. I have not the names. It was only allotted a month ago and these notes were made before that.

Mr. BOYCE. I can get it from the minister again ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, it was the lowest tender in answer to public advertisement.

Toronto harbour—improvements and repairs, $100,000.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. May I ask what this is for ?

Mr. FISHER. This is for the continuation of the work at the eastern entrance of Toronto harbour—the breakwater on the lake shore of the island and dredging at the eastern channel bar.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. There are two separate works—the extension of the eastern pier at the eastern entrance is one and the breakwater is another ?

Mr. FISHER. This is the breakwater, I am told.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Surely there is some mistake about that. The breakwater work is an entirely different work. This work at the eastern gap is not yet completed and this item must be intended to cover that.

Mr. FISHER. I understand that this is for the concrete superstructure for the eastern pier at the eastern entrance, for sheet piling of the west pier of the eastern entrance, for the extension of the breakwater on the lake shore of the island, for repairing the stone talus of the breakwater, piling at the base of the slope of the breakwater, dredging 40,000 cubic yards of the eastern channel, superintendence, contingencies, and so on, at a total probable cost of $152,000. We are only taking $100,000, which is probably all that will be needed for the coming season.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Who are the contractors ?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. M. J. Haney, of Toronto.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Has he the contract for both the eastern entrance and the breakwater ?

Mr FISHER. No, this is for the breakwater. We have not yet allotted the contract for the eastern entrance. We will have to call for tenders.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. This whole item is for the breakwater ?

Mr. FISHER. Except for the dredging of 40,000 cubic yards in the channel. The rest of it appears to be for the breakwater, for the east and west piers and the extension of the breakwater.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. That is altogether in connection with the eastern entrance ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. There is nothing for the island breakwater ? It is an entirely different work.

Mr. FISHER. I see that the extension of the breakwater is included in the appropriation.

Mr. KEMP. These two works are kept separately in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. FISHER. I think they come under the head of 'harbour improvements, Toronto.'

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. The work on the eastern entrance has been going on for some time, but the work on the breakwater has not yet commenced, and I want to know what the government intends to do about it. Tenders for the breakwater were advertised for before the last election in the fall of 1904, the contract was awarded in September, 1905, and the work was to have been completed the following March.

Mr. FISHER. To be completed March, 1907.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. The original contract calls for completion in March, 1906, but it was extended.

Mr. FISHER. My engineer assures me there was no extension given, and of course nobody would take such a contract in September, 1904, to complete in March, 1906; the interval being the winter months.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Was there any extension given?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed not. It is quite possible that when the tenders were advertised for an earlier date for completion might have been intended, but the date mentioned in the contract was 1907.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. A return was brought down by the late Minister of Public Works which showed that the time for completion had been extended. Be that as it may, the time has now expired.

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. And the work has not been even commenced yet? A very great deal of damage has been caused on the island, especially by the storms of the last few months, to public and private property on the shore. I have repeatedly urged that the government should complete this work. The original contract called for timber piling, but steel piling was substituted and new tenders asked. No steps have been taken to even commence that work, although it is two years since the first contract was let. At the eastern entrance the government is making fair progress with the work in view of the difficulties that have to be contended against, but the minister should give the House some assurance now that the breakwater at the south shore will be completed immediately.

Mr. FISHER. The contractor has been pressed this winter to go on with the work, and he will be pressed more if he does not do so.

Mr. KEMP. What is the policy of the government with regard to the western entrance to Toronto harbour?

Mr. FISHER. In view of the representations made I have given instructions to the resident engineer to report on the suggestions made by the deputation. Just as soon as that report comes in I hope we will be able to take some action.

Mr. KEMP. This is a very serious matter and the minister should not allow parliament to prorogue without placing a vote in the supplementary estimates to proceed with this work. He can provide the ways and means before he gets the report of his engineer.

Mr. FISHER. Wait until the supplementary estimates come down.

Mr. KEMP. If the minister will hold out some hope to me I will not say another word.

Mr. FISHER. I will hold out hope.

Mr. KEMP. That is rather indefinite. It has been represented to the government by many deputations from Toronto that life is seriously endangered, because it is impossible to get a vessel drawing more than eleven feet of water into Toronto harmour when the wind blows a gale from the east.

Mr. FISHER. You are not keeping your promise.

Mr. KEMP. If the minister will make his promise definite I will deal with him gently. The minister knows that a vessel was wrecked in the western entrance in November last and that six lives were lost in sight of the city lights of Toronto. Such an accident is liable to occur at any time if the improvements are not made. There came into Toronto harbour last year between 3,000 and 4,000 vessels so that I need not impress on the minister the importance of that port. At this late stage I will not take up further time, but I express the hope that the minister will carry out the promise made to various deputations and deepen the western entrance to twenty feet.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I endorse what my hon. colleague (Mr. Kemp) has said. Toronto harbour is one of the most important in Canada, the work necessary is not extensive and the necessity for it is great. I believe the government engineer has practically completed the material for his report and that the minister can deal with it before the supplementary estimates are brought down. The urgency of this work has been represented to the government. Within the last sixty days the government has received petitions and memorials to have this work done from the Masters' and Mates' Association, the Toronto city council, various public meetings held in the city during the past winter, the Toronto Board of Trade, the Toronto Board of Harbour Commissioners, the Turbine Steamship Company, the Niagara Navigation Company, the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, the Hamilton Steamboat Company, the Polson Iron Works, the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Navigation Company and other public bodies. The hon. minister surely has had enough representations made to him to induce him to insert in the supplementary estimates a sum sufficient at least to commence this work.

Mr. KEMP. I might read what the 'Globe' says in regard to this matter, which will sink deeper into the heart of the acting Minister of Public Works than anything I can say, I am sure.

Mr. FISHER. Oh, no.

Mr. KEMP. Well, if the 'Globe' has not more influence with the hon. gentleman than I have, I flatter myself. Referring a short time ago to the western entrance, it said this among other things :

It will be a standing disgrace to the government of Canada and to the city of Toronto if the work necessary to make this a harbour of refuge is not undertaken at once and completed with all practicable speed. As there is nothing but dredging and pier building to be done the work may be carried on with great rapidity. The wreck of the 'Resolute,' with its attendant loss of life, is a warning that cannot be ignored. A similar tragedy might happen any time during the season of navigation. At present there is no harbour of refuge on the north shore of the lake between Weller's bay and Burlington bay—a state of affairs for which the Dominion government and parliament will have to bear a full share of responsibility.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, before you leave the Ontario estimates, I wish to draw attention to a condition of affairs which renders necessary some dredging at the town of Bracebridge. A few years ago the government built a wharf there, but at such a place that vessels could not reach it from the water and people could not reach it from the land. It was something like Mahomet's coffin—it could not be got at from land or sea. However, there happened to be something left over from the second vote for this wharf, and the Public Works Department consented to allow a portion of that to be used to make a road to the wharf. This has been supplemented by the town council, and they have succeeded in blasting out a road. But, as it is at present, the wharf is practically useless for the purpose for which it was intended, as vessels cannot approach it, and the only use made of it in the last two or three years has been that a few old men who do not care to risk the danger of going out in boats go there on calm summer evenings and do a little fishing. The people of Bracebridge would like to have the basin dredged out so that the wharf would be available. I believe that deputations have waited on the department, and have urged this matter on the attention of the minister, and, though I do not find anything in the estimates for it, I hope to see something done. Two years ago I took occasion to lay this matter before the then acting Minister of Public Works, and he assured me that there was a general vote with regard to dredging which would be available for this purpose, but so far nothing has been done. I would like also to call the minister's attention to the requirements of the town of Gravenhurst for a wharf. It is true, there is a pretty good wharf within about a mile of the town, but it belongs to the Grand Trunk Railway Company or the Muskoka Lake Steamboat Company, or both ; but the general public have no right on that wharf. There is a great deal of lake traffic there, but there is no place at which boat owners can land their boats. This matter has been laid before the government so often and for so many years that I think it is time it granted to the town of Gravenhurst some little improvements in the way of a wharf. It need not be an expensive work, costing $20,000 or $30,000 like many wharfs for which requests are made ; but I suppose that $8,000 or $10,000, or perhaps less, would build a good wharf which would be a great convenience to the public. There is a great deal of traffic there, especially during the tourist season, hundreds of people having their own boats and having no place to land without trespassing on private property. It is a condition of affairs that has become almost intolerable. I do feel that the district which I have the honour to represent has not been fairly treated by the Department of Public Works. I believe that Beaumarais and other places have also been urging their requirements on the minister. Some of these places have twenty times the traffic of other places which have been getting improvements. The Muskoka lakes in this respect have claims on the government which it cannot lightly set aside.

Mr. FISHER. I may say to my hon. friend that some representations have already been made to me by the various interests in the places he speaks of, and that I have been trying to take them into consideration. So far as dredging is concerned, that would naturally come out of the general dredging vote. There is also a general item for harbours and rivers out of which we could make any necessary repairs. I have not forgotten the hon. member's constituency.

Mr. WHITE. I would like to ask the hon. minister if any provision will be made in the supplementary estimates for improvements in the Petawawa docks ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend, but I have to warn him that I am not prepared to say what will be or what will not be in the supplementary estimates. I could not answer my hon. friend. We have had representations in regard to the Petawawa dock and they have received very careful consideration.

Harbours and rivers—Manitoba, $32,500.

Mr. STAPLES. I see nothing here for the completion of the wharf at St. Laurent, Lake Manitoba. When was that commenced, how much has been spent on it, and what is its present condition?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed it must have been about three years ago; there is no item in the estimates here for it. Some work has been done, but it is not quite completed.

Mr. STAPLES. The work was begun about three years ago, we know what was on at that time; the people need the wharf but as it stands now it is practically of no use to the community. Would the minister assure me that the work, which will not require much for its completion, will be continued this summer? If he would I would be satisfied to let the item go without further remark.

Mr. FISHER. I shall certainly investigate it, but as to saying that I would appropriate enough to complete it, that would depend on the report on it and the amount required. I could not pledge myself to complete it without further information.

Mr. AMES. While not desiring to be understood as objecting in any way to the passing of this item, there is an incident in connection with the Public Works Department as it affects Manitoba which I think demands explanation by the minister before we permit this amount to be granted. According to a return laid before this House a few weeks ago, we find that the resident engineer connected with the work in Manitoba found it necessary to send in his resignation under circumstances which are hardly made clear by the correspondence ; that is the Hon. F. W. Aylmer, who had been resident engineer in the Upper Columbia Valley under Mr. Keefer, of British Columbia, and who had given excellent satisfaction in that position for a number of years. Mr. Aylmer, on the urgent demand of the department, was removed from British Columbia and brought to Manitoba to take charge of the work that was there being carried on by the Public Works Department in connection with harbours and rivers. Mr. Aylmer did not seek the position, he was not brought to Manitoba at his own demand, but came there somewhat to his own regret and much to the regret of Mr. Keefer who did not wish to have him go. Mr. Aylmer arrived and, understanding that he was to take complete charge in the place of Mr. Malhiot, who was resigning, he made an inspection of the work that was to come under his purview while resident engineer and his letter which gives his estimate of the way in which the work in Manitoba is being carried on is on file and reads in part as follows :

Winnipeg, April 26, 1906.

Chief Engineer,
Department of Public Works, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I beg to inform you that I arrived here on the 22nd instant, since when I have been engaged with Mr. Malhiot looking over the dredges, tugs and other plant belonging to the service on the Red river, and gaining information regarding the office routine, &c. I cannot say that I have been favourably impressed with the plant, nor do I think that I would care to assume charge as resident engineer unless assured that I would be permitted to put this service on an altogether different footing to that obtaining at present.

A pretty strong statement for a resident engineer to make, that he considered that the plant was wholly inadequate and imperfect and that he would not care to risk his professional reputation unless he was assured that he would be given a free hand in remodelling it.

Mr. Aylmer had not been in his position long before, for some reason which is not made clear by the corespondence, he came into disfavour with the chief engineer and as a result felt it incumbent upon him to ask to be returned to his former position.

The chief engineer apparently thought that Mr. Aylmer was evading his orders and Mr. Aylmer considered that the tone used towards himself on the part of the chief engineer was offensive and consequently he asked to be permitted to go back to his old position and Mr. Keefer, the engineer in British Columbia, writes a letter in which he speaks of his pleasure in having Mr. Aylmer restored to him. He asks, as a special favour, that he may be allowed to go back to British Columbia and says:

> Will you kindly let me know so that I need not proceed further in trying to secure a competent successor—which I find a difficult matter. The government service, I regret to say, does not seem to attract men such as the nature and responsibility of the work demand.
> G. A. KEEFER,
> Resident Engineer.

Thus we hear from Manitoba that the work there being done is wholly unsatisfactory to the resident engineer asked to take charge of it, and we hear from British Columbia that it is extremely difficult to get men of the right calibre to assume service under the government on account of reasons not disclosed. I know something of Mr. Aylmer and his reputation in British Columbia; in fact I had an opportunity to see him on his own ground in British Columbia not long ago, and I know him to be a scrupulously honest, a painstaking civil servant, thoroughly desirous of doing his duty and of having everybody around him do the same. I cannot see how it should have so soon come upon Mr. Aylmer that his usefulness in Manitoba was at an end after he had spoken as he spoke in his letter and pointed out how much there was to be done to put that service on a proper basis.

If you turn to the expenditure on public works in Manitoba you find that there were three dredges at work last year, the 'Winnipeg,' the 'Manitoba' and the 'Priestman.' We find that the dredge 'Winnipeg' is credited with having dug out 32,000 yards of material, which cost $16,700 or $2 per yard. The dredge 'Manitoba' dug 28,600 cubic yards, at a cost of $7,943 or $3.50 a yard, and the dredge 'Priestman,' which is described in the report as 'a small dredge, old and not much good,' but which still has a staff of men, is credited with digging 15,000 yards at an expense of a little less than $5,000 or $3 a yard. If you compare these prices with the cost of dredging in other places you will find that the cost is excessively high. Of course it is possible that moving the dredge from place to place——

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I would call attention to the fact that the hon. member is slightly out in his arithmetic. 15,000 yards at a cost of $5,000 is 33⅓ cents a yard, not $3 a yard.

Mr. AMES. That may be.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. All your statements are just the same.

Mr. AMES. I should have said 50 cents, 28 cents and 33 cents. Still——

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. That is a great difference.

Mr. AMES. Still the prices there are much higher than they usually are. If you look over the account of the dredge 'Eastman,' you will find a very large amount expended which appears to have gone into repairs. It is a question whether it is good policy to keep at work 'a small dredge not much good' when it costs from 15 per cent to 20 per cent of the appropriation to keep it in repair. Certainly the characterization by Mr. Aylmer of the work carried on in Manitoba is one which requires some explanation. He says:

> I cannot say that I have been favourably impressed with the plant, nor would I care to assume charge as resident engineer unless I would be permitted to put this service on an altogether different footing from that obtaining at present.

Since Mr. Aylmer returned to British Columbia, has that plant been improved and the service put on an altogether different footing, or is the old machinery and plant still continued and will this money be expended according to the old way?

Mr. FISHER. I am not familiar enough with the department to go into that question very deeply. When Mr. Aylmer was to take charge of the Manitoba division, it was intended that he should take charge of it as it was and do the best he could with it as a government officer. His removal had nothing to do with the condition of the work there but was due to the fact that he did not carry out certain instructions and was censured or suspended by the chief engineer and then offered his resignation, saying he believed he had incurred the displeasure of the chief engineer. His resignation was accepted, and he was returned to work where he had apparently been able to satisfy his superior officer, and apparently was content to go on with the work in the way he had been doing before. He was brought to Winnipeg under recommendation of the chief engineer; and when he resigned there, he went back to British Columbia also on the chief engineer's recommendation, not indicating in any way that he had incurred the displeasure of the chief engineer, but simply saying he had not been able or willing to carry out certain instructions given him. I am not prepared to give an opinion on the value or effectiveness of the plant in Manitoba. It has been doing the work some time. The figures which my hon. friend read a few minutes ago were of course absurd, and he recognized at once that he had make a mistake of a decimal point in his calculations. The correct figures show that the dredging there was done at about thirty cents a yard and that, judging from the cost of dredging at other places, is not very much out of the way. I cannot give a definite opinion because I am not familiar with the conditions these dredges were working under. It might have been quite economical work or the contrary according to the material in which they were working. Soft mud and sand and even clay can be got out at less even than thirty cents and other material cannot. All I can say is that I am proposing this summer to see if we cannot make some improvements in the dredging plant in Manitoba. We have a vote for that purpose in the estimates, and I trust the money will be expended in the wisest way possible.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I have had some correspondence in connection with the tunnel proposed to be built at the Detroit river. Our Canadian tug men say that the American tugs are doing that work and that the Canadian tugs are not put upon the same basis. Does that come under the hon. gentleman's department?

Mr. FISHER. That has to do with the Marine and Fisheries Department.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE Is this vote at Big Sandy Point a new work ?

Mr. FISHER. It is a revote. About $350 was spent out of $1,500 voted last year. We are now asking for $1,500 to finish the work.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is the Grand Harbour improvement a new work ?

Mr. FISHER. The whole of it is a revote. Nothing was done last fall, but we hope to do that work this summer.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. You have a vote in connection with Mossy river. How much has been expended there altogether ?

Mr. FISHER. Nothing.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. That has been voted several successive seasons.

Mr. FISHER. We can do nothing there without building a plant.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE In the Auditor General's Report of last year I see that there has been an expenditure of $4,995.

Mr. FISHER. That was at the mouth of the Mossy river. That is dredging which will be gone on with next year.

Mr. STAPLES. What is the nature of the improvements at the mouth of the Red river ?

Mr. FISHER. Dredging a channel.

Mr. AMES. Is the same old dredge 'Eastman' to be kept at work ?

Mr. FISHER. She will do work at the mouth of the Mossy river where she has been before.

Mr. AMES. A strange thing about the work of these dredges is that the appropriation seems to give out about the middle of the summer. They work from the 1st of July until the fall, and then get ready in the spring but have no money, so that in the month of June nothing is done.

Mr. FISHER. That is due to the fiscal year beginning on the 1st of July, and we could not go on with the work until an appropriation was available. They will from now on have money during the whole season.

British Columbia—Anderson and Kennedy lakes—clearing outlets, $1,000.

Mr. AMES. Will that finish the work? We were promised last year by the minister that the vote of last year would finish the work.

Mr. FISHER. This is to provide an emergency fund to make such further improvements in the outlets as may be found necessary in order to give easy access to boats carrying supplies to the mining camps. It is a continuation of the same kind of work. Sometimes rocks and boulders fall into the river, and this is to clean them out when necessary.

Columbia river—improvements, $30,000.

Mr AMES. Who is the resident engineer in connection with these improvements ?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Keefer.

Mr. AVERY. At what points on the Columbia river is this work being done ?

Mr. FISHER. We expect to work above Golden and to expend $3,000 ; below Golden, $1,500; above Revelstoke, $5,000; below Revelstoke, $2,000; Revelstoke Narrows, $10,000; general improvements all over, $9,000.

Coquitlam river—removal of obstructions, $1,000.

Mr. AMES. Is this being done for navigation purposes, or is it to favour lumber companies who use the river?

Mr. FISHER. The removal of obstructions is to free the river for the floating down of the logs.

Mr. AMES. Then it is entirely done for the lumber companies. Is it customary for the Public Works Department to clear boulders out of rivers to enable the lumber companies to float their logs ?

Mr. FISHER. I think the government has frequently removed obstructions to make rivers floatable.

Mr. AMES. If the government is convinced that it is proper to clear out rivers for the benefit of private companies, they will have many applications.

Mr. FISHER. I think this has been going on for some time.

Fraser river—improvement of ship channel and protection works, $30,000.

Mr. AMES. What will be the total cost, if it is known to the department, of the ship channel from New Westminster to the sea in connection with the Fraser River improvements ?

Mr. FISHER. The department is not prepared to make an absolute statement.

Mr. AMES. Has the department any idea ?

Mr. FISHER. We would not undertake to give what my hon. friend would call an idea.

Mr. AMES. What depth of water does the department intend to give for vessels coming from the sea to New Westminster?

Mr. FISHER. It is intended to make the channel 25 feet deep.

Mr. AMES. But you cannot tell us how much more needs to be expended in that direction ?

Mr. FISHER. I ought to say that this is not all dredging. They will have to include work on the banks to keep the stream in one channel, and beach protection also. It is all for the purpose of improving the channel.

Mr. AMES. Are the government planning eventually to consider New Westminster as one of the national ports on the Pacific coast ?

Mr. FISHER. I am not prepared to give an opinion of that nature.

Victoria harbour—dredging and removal of rocks, $30,000.

Mr. AMES. How much more is required for the improvement of Victoria harbour ?

Mr. FISHER. That is too big a question to answer offhand. We have not got a complete plan of that harbour, and therefore cannot estimate what it will cost. I have no doubt that if a good many of the improvements that have been suggested were made they would cost about a million dollars.

Mr. AMES. That is one of the harbours which will be in future considered as a national port. Has the government no definite information as to what improvements will be required there ?

Mr. FISHER. We have not made a comprehensive plan of improvements required there.

Mr. AMES. It seems to me that the government should begin to consider, as my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) said the other day, the carrying out of the recommendations of the Transportation Commission, and that in order to do so we should have some definite idea as to the improvements that require to be accomplished at national ports on the coast and along the national transportation lines. Here we are called upon to deal with one of the national harbours on the Pacific coast; we would like to know whether we are simply playing with the harbour, or whether the government has a regular definite plan to expend a certain sum of money within a certain length of time, and which will give us a certain amount of accommodation, and a certain depth of water at the end of that time. Then we could feel that we were looking forward to some definite end. That is the information I desired to have in connection with Vancouver, Victoria and New Westminster, in order that we might see that the treatment of national ports on the Pacific coast kept pace with the treatment of the national ports on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. FISHER. I would say to my hon. friend in a general way that the report of the Transportation Commission is a very elaborate and comprehensive one, and I need not say to him that to carry out all the recommendations in that report would involve an expenditure of millions, I might say, tens of millions of dollars. While I think that may come in the future, we are not ready yet to carry out the whole of it. We can only take up such parts of it as the revenues of the country may justify from time to time. As I pointed out on a former occasion we have been called upon to do a good deal and we propose to go on, as occasion arises, and as the commerce of the country seems to justify. Personally I would most emphatically say that we should not do anything which would, on the general and great lines of traffic, be contrary to that general scheme, but that scheme was proposed several years ago and already other demands have been made upon us. I have only to instance the Georgian bay ; already the Canadian Pacific Railway is preparing to adopt a new harbour there which the Transportation Commission never mentioned, never suggested, and other propositions have been made by the transportation and other interests which were not anticipated, discussed or advocated by the Transportation Commission of several years ago. I am not prepared to say that we will be bound down to the recommendations of the commission because in a young and growing country like this new conditions arise and new discoveries are constantly being made with the result that we may have to adopt entirely different plans. I would not like to say that we should confine ourselves absolutely to these great through lines of transportation. I believe that there are other interests in the country that the government must guard and help in every way it can, but I am quite prepared to admit the justification of my hon. friend's suggestion that we should try when we do undertake a large work in a harbour to do such work as will contribute to the final completion of that harbour. That has been the intention of most of the work that has been done by the Department of Public Works in these great harbours in which it has undertaken improvements. Such ought to be the case in Victoria.

Mr. AMES. The minister knows that when a channel is being dredged through an important waterway the probabilities are that the government would first make a narrow channel that will permit large vessels to pass through carefully, and that as time went on they would widen that channel and enlarge the curves in such a way that it might become a double track waterway if such an expression can be used. A similar line of policy should be adopted by this government and by the minister who is at present or who may be in future in charge of the Department of Public Works. There should be a broad survey of the needs of transportation and a determination to develop synchronously the entire line of transportation, both on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. We would then be in a position to know when a certain plan was nearing completion, what was the position of each unit in connection with that plan. We would then be in a position to know that when sums of money were expended upon these different ports the work was part of a symmetrical whole and would bring about a general result for the benefit of the Dominion of Canada. The trouble with most of these Public Works estimates is that they are viewed purely from the local standpoint without being considered from the point of view as to how much they contribute towards the general benefit of the whole Dominion, and the reason why I have raised the question of these ports on the Pacific coast is that I want to know whether they had been looked upon in a broad way and whether they were being developed with an eye to the future in the general interest of the western provinces of Canada. I would like to know that we are to have 25 or 30 feet of water in each of these harbours in five years and that each succeeding year that desideratum is being approached. I trust that whoever may be in charge of the Department of Public Works will in future preface his remarks when he comes down and asks for his estimates by something along these lines, which may enable us to take a general view of what the Department of Public Works is doing for transcontinental transportation in the Dominion.

Williams Head quarantine station—improvements, $10,000.

Mr. AMES. That is the enlargement of the disinfecting station. Is there any considerable immigration coming in that way now?

Mr. FISHER. Not a great deal of immigration, but there is a good deal of through Oriental traffic and we not infrequently have to keep considerable numbers of Orientals at the station.

Dredging, maritime provinces, $170,000.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I would like to ask what the capacity of the dredge 'Montague' is per day?

Mr. FISHER. 800 to 1,000 yards.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. That dredge went to work on the 5th September and only dredged about 20,000 cubic yards during the season. If that dredge has been there for three months and can only dredge 20,000 yards it cannot be in a proper condition to do the work.

Mr. FISHER. It was a new dredge commencing her first season's work and she did not get into working order. It requires some little time for a dredge to get into working order.

Mr. WILMOT. How many dredges are there in southern New Brunswick, at St. John and on the St. John river?

Mr. FISHER. There is no special dredge in New Brunswick, but a dredge called the 'New Brunswick' is working on the St. John river. The new 'Dominion' has been working at St. John and St. Andrew's and there has been dredging done on the north shore by different dredges.

Mr. WILMOT. I confine my inquiry particularly to the St. John river. Last season I was making some inquiry of the officers of the department at St. John and they told me that they were short of dredging machines. There is a good deal of work of that kind required to be done on St. John river apart altogether from the harbour.

Mr. FISHER. These votes are general votes for the maritime provinces. We are hoping to make arrangements by which the dredges there will make a longer season this year than usual. In the past, the dredging votes coming in late in the calendar year, interfered with the length of the dredging season. I hope this year, the appropriation being available earlier, to commence the work earlier in the season and perhaps prolong it more than usual.

Mr. SPROULE. In a great many of these votes you have the proviso: 'Notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.' Is the Civil Service Act systematically evaded?

Mr. FISHER. A number of these technical or semi-technical employees, especially in the lower grades, must be given higher pay than the Act allows, and these votes have been so worded for many years.

Mr. AMES. Might I ask the minister, who compose the committee of artists in connection with the national art gallery?

Mr. FISHER. Formerly a couple of artists were invited on each occasion when a work of art was purchased, but recently I have arranged for the establishment of an advisory council on the advice of the Royal Academy. The order in council constituting it has been passed, but the individuals have not yet been appointed. I may however say that I have been fortunate enough to secure the services of Sir George Drummond, Mr. Byron Walker, of Toronto, and the Hon. Arthur Boyer, of Montreal, who are most acceptable and well qualified to act on the council. Just as soon as I can get the order in council through I hope to call them together.

Telegraph service generally, $3,200.

Mr. SPROULE. How is the revenue of the telegraph lines, especially in the Yukon, holding out?

Mr. FISHER. I am told there is a loss of about $70,000 a year.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. A message from His Excellency giving the supplementary estimates?

Mr. FIELDING. Not to-night, perhaps to-morrow or the next day; I cannot be sure.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is the House to sit on Saturday?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, we propose to give notice that the House will sit on Saturday, but not later than six o'clock. As to the business to-morrow, we will take the Montreal Harbour Commissioners' resolution and one or two Bills and then go into supply with the estimates of the Minister of the Interior.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 18, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRINTING COMMITTEE.

Mr. C. H. PARMELEE (Shefford) moved that the third report of the joint committee of both Houses on printing of parliament be concurred in. He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an observation or two growing out of a brief discussion of this report which took place some days ago. At that time the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) moved reconsideration of the report for the purpose of drawing attention to one or two things in connection with it. Some weeks ago when the insurance report was laid on the table of the House, the Finance Minister, on the plea of urgency, moved that it should be printed immediately. That being done, when the Printing Committee met, and had its order paper before it, the committee very naturally did not order that that report be printed, as that order had already been given by the House and was being carried out. But from that circumstance my hon. friend from Montmagny and my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), expressed the suspicion that the action of the Printing Committee had been prompted by a desire to suppress the translation of the report into French and the printing of it in French. Now, there is no foundation whatever for a supposition of that kind. Any order of this House for the printing of a public document or a parliamentary return of any kind, carries with it the order to translate and print in French. I am not a constitutional authority, but I doubt very much whether this parliament has the right to print any parliamentary paper in one language alone. At any rate, my hon. friend from Labelle pretty nearly stated that the translation of the insurance report had been stopped in consequence of the action of the Printing Committee. He said that the chief translator had ordered those actually engaged in translating the report to stop the work, and that the chief translator in turn had received his order from the Printing Committee. My hon. friend was utterly and entirely misinformed on that point. It is true, for a few moments after the report of the Printing Committee came down the translators were under the misapprehension that the translation would not go on. I was consulted about it, and I told them that they had the order to translate, and that, as the document was one of great importance, which everybody would want, they should get on a hustle and translate it as soon as possible. Now, that was a small thing upon which to base a charge that the Printing Committee, the House of Commons and everybody else were in league to prevent the printing of a document in the French language. While on my feet I might say that ever since I have been in this parliament the translation and printing of public documents in French has been the subject of more or less complaint and grievance. I remember that, when I had the honour of becoming chairman of the Printing Committee in 1901, the complaints were loud and many, and a subcommittee of the general committee on printing took up the whole question, went into it thoroughly, examined witnesses, and collected all the evidence they possibly could, and as a result of the information they were able to collect, we framed a report which was adopted by this House; and in consequence of that report, the translation and printing in French, while not perfect, are now done very much more promptly and efficiently than was the case some years ago. I might also, because I have the opportunity of knowing, pay a tribute to the efficiency and the devotion to duty of the regular staff of translators. Their task is difficult, and, do what they can, it is a physical impossibility that all the parliamentary documents should be printed in French simultaneously with their printing in English. My hon. friend from Labelle made the further complaint against the committee, that it recommended that a very important public document should not be printed, and coupled with that the insinuation that we had done that for the purpose of preventing it appearing in French. Now, that is utter nonsense, because if it was not printed in English, there could not be much complaint because it was not printed in French. He referred particularly to the order of the House for papers, plans, reports of inspections and other documents with respect to harbour improvements at Quebec. He said that the Transcontinental Railway Commission and the Railway Commission, in answer to the order of the House, had made very important returns, which the Printing Committee had seen fit to turn down. As a matter of fact, two such returns were brought down, and in about ten words each they declared that no documents, plans or papers of any kind were in possession of either the Transcontinental Railway Commission or the Railway Commission. On this point I might say that the committee exercises all the care it possibly can in the discharge of its duty. Every single return is laid before the committee, it is taken up carefully, its importance is considered and if it is in the estimation of the committee of sufficient public interest the Printing Committee orders it to be printed. If not it is relegated to the pigeon holes around this House. I may say for my committee that it is well attended and every member of the committee is at considerable pains to discharge the duties pertaining to his position. With these few remarks I move that the third report be adopted.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I remember the discussion to which my hon. friend (Mr. Parmelee) has referred, and I ventured then to offer the explanation that the only reason why the committee had advised that the report was not printed was that it had been already printed in one language, and was then in the possession of the House. At that time I remarked in answer to a suggestion by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) that both the report and the evidence should be printed, that they had then been printed, and the question was practically whether we should have both of these documents printed in both languages. There can be no question that if there is a desire anywhere to have all of this matter printed in both languages it should be printed, but I submit to the House as a practical question, whether it is desirable, whether any good purpose will be served, by translating and printing these large volumes of evidence in another language. I will in that place myself in the hands of my French colleagues, and if they think it desirable that it should be printed, costly though it may be, no one will question it, but I doubt if they themselves will desire that it should be translated. It will be very expensive and I wonder how many people will read it afterwards in all its details. I therefore invite the consideration of the House as to whether any good purpose will be served by the printing of the evidence in both languages. The report, as a matter of course, will be printed in both languages and will form part of the records of the House. I shall not raise any objection to it, if any hon. gentleman, especially any of those who are particularly interested in the French language, think it necessary, but I suggest that there should be an expression of opinion as to whether such printing of the evidence is necessary and I would venture to suggest that it is of doubtful expedience.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). I appreciate what the Finance Minister has said on this question. I would not take it upon myself to say that I would insist on the translation of all these volumes into French, but I want to say that since the report of the committee has been before parliament I have personally received many letters from different parts of our province asking for a copy of the evidence and the report, and as these requests have come from French Canadian correspondents they would of course desire to have it in French, and this leads me to believe that we would have to think twice before refusing to print the evidence in French. Probably the matter will be discussed later on and in the meantime we will think it over.

Mr. FIELDING. We may leave it in that position and before the close of the session come to an understanding. I did not want to object to the translation of the evidence, but in talking to one or two of my French Canadian friends they said they did not think it necessary; but if it is deemed necessary no one would raise a word of objection.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Members representing French constituencies are in this position that if an elector applies for a French version of this evidence and report, the member finds himself in the very awkward position of having to tell his elector that the matter is not printed in French, although the rule is that all public documents should be printed in both languages. Thus, I think, to save all misunderstanding on the point, it would be advisable that the evidence should be printed in both languages.

Mr. FIELDING. Every one will assent to that at once.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). There is another consideration. There is a great deal in what my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. C. Marcil) has said, but in addition to that it would appear that it should be printed in both languages unless there is some very strong and unusual reason why the rule should be departed from. In any question of this kind, which may be regarded somewhat as a matter of sentiment, we should not weigh very much the question of expense in the printing. There is the further consideration that the report refers to the evidence for some explanations that should appear on its face, but for some reason known to the commissioners they have seen fit to give the explanation only by reference to the evidence and if the report is printed in French it seems to me you must also have the evidence printed in French.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). The questions which were raised before the Insurance Commission were very live issues in our province, because I do not know if you are aware that especially in the French Canadian centres we have many mutual benefit societies, and the investigation which took place into the affairs of the Foresters has aroused quite an interest in our province. For that consideration alone, I think the report should be made as public as possible. We have received several requests for copies of the evidence and report. We have the Catholic Mutual Benefit Society, we have many thousand Foresters in the province: in fact on the death of Dr. Oronyatekha it was supposed that Mr. Morin of Montreal, would be selected as his successor.

Mr. BERGERON. He was next in command.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, he was next in command and our people are very much interested in knowing the result of the investigation.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the best course would then be that my hon. friend (Mr. Parmelee) should withdraw his report and amend it, because it stands on the paper now as a recommendation that the evidence should not be now printed. Of course I understand that recommendation was made because it was already printed in one language.

Mr. PARMELEE. We could get at it in another way. I would point out to the Finance Minister that the direct order of the House was to print the report alone. I could either amend the report and have it come before our committee again or the Finance Minister could move a motion directly.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it would be better if my hon. friend would withdraw the report and bring it forward to-morrow. In raising a question about it, I considered not so much the expense as the labour involved in the translation, which would be very great, so that it will be a very considerable time before the documents are ready, and it was thought that by the time they were translated and printed they would be somewhat old. I would now suggest that my hon. friend (Mr. Parmelee) withdraw the report and so amend it that both the report of the Insurance Commission and the evidence will be printed, like other public documents, in both languages.

Motion withdrawn.

QUESTIONS.

STEEL RAILS FOR TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN asked :

1. Did the commissioners of the Transcontinental Railway call for tenders last year for eighty-pound steel rails ?
2. If so, how many tenders were received, and what were the tender prices ?
3. To whom were the contracts awarded, and at what figures ?
4. Were the contractors bound to deliver 17,600 gross tons before the 15th November, 1906, at Quebec, and 20,000 gross tons before the 15th November at Fort William or Port Arthur ?
5. Has such delivery been made by the contractors ? If not, why not ?
6. Is any penalty to be imposed for non-fulfilment of contract ?

Hon W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) :

1. Yes.

2. Five : two each from Dominion Iron and Steel Co., and Algoma Steel Co., one from the United States Steel Products Export Co., as follows :

Delivered at Quebec, 23,000 gross tons.

Dominion Iron and Steel Co., at $34.50 per ton, to be manufactured in accordance with Dominion Iron and Steel Co.'s specifications.

Dominion Iron and Steel Co., at $34 per ton, to be manufactured in accordance with commissioners' specifications.

Delivered at Port Arthur or Fort William, 42,000 gross tons.

United States Steel Products Export Co., at $36.49.

Algoma Steel Co., 32,000 tons at $34.90, in accordance with commissioners' specifications.

Algoma Steel Co., 32,000 tons at $34, in accordance with Grand Trunk Pacific specifications.

Dominion Iron and Steel Co., 10,000 tons at $34.50 per ton, in accordance with commissioners' specifications.

Dominion Iron and Steel Co., 10,000 tons at $35 per ton, in accordance with Dominion Iron and Steel Co.'s specifications.

3. To Dominion Iron and Steel Co., and Algoma Steel Co., as follows :—

Dominion Iron and Steel Co.

23,000 gross tons, for delivery at Quebec, in accordance with commissioners' specifications, at $34 per gross ton.

10,000 gross tons, for delivery at Fort William or Port Arthur, in accordance with commissioners' specifications at $34.50 per gross ton.

The Algoma Steel Co.

32,000 gross tons, for delivery at Fort William or Port Arthur, in accordance with Grand Trunk Pacific specifications, at $34 per gross ton.

4. No. 15,600 gross tons at Quebec and 20,000 gross tons at Fort William or Port Arthur, before date mentioned.

5. No. The quantity called for in contracts was not required and commissioners arranged to defer balance of shipments until opening of navigation in 1907.

6. No.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY CARS IN USE BY RAILWAYS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. AMES asked :

1. How many Intercolonial Railway cars are at present in use by the railways of the United States ?

2. What steps are being taken to secure the return of these cars to Canada ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Acting Minister of Railways and Canals). The information is being obtained from Moncton and will be given later. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) may either let the question stand or renew it, at his convenience.

Mr. AMES. Let it stand.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

TIMBER REGULATIONS OF 1897—PERMITS UNDER CLAUSE 17.

Mr. BURROWS—by Mr. E. M. Macdonald—asked :

1. How many permits to cut timber were granted under clause 17 of the regulation of 1897 ?

2. What is the name of each permittee, and the total amount of dues paid by him to the Department of the Interior, to December 31, 1906 ?

3. What amounts were collected on different products of timber permit No. 827 ?

Mr. FIELDING.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. Fifteen.

2 and 3,

Schedule of timber berths granted under section 17 of the timber regulations, 1897.

Dues on lumber at the rate of $1 per thousand B.M.

No.	Name of grantee.	Total amount paid to December, 31, 1906.

DEBATES COMMITTEE.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Debates Committee, in effect, has not reported for the last two sessions. The committee met last year to elect a chairman and met afterwards, I believe, to do business. That business was reported to the House but no motion was made to give effect to the report that was made. This year, again, the committee held a meeting to elect a chairman, and, at a subsequent meeting, put through some business, but of that no report has been made. I desire merely to call this to the attention of the House. Probably, before the session is over I shall bring it up again. In the meantime, the chairman of the committee will be aware of what I intend to do.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—QUEBEC BRIDGE AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.) I would ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) when he intends to take up order 35, relating to the proposed loan to the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company ? The reason I ask is that some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who are to be absent for a day or two soon, would like to be present when the matter is taken up.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I will endeavour to include it in the programme for tomorrow, without fixing a particular order.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—RENTAL FOR GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY BETTERMENTS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask whether the government have any information to give to the House as to what will be the effect, on the rental paid by the Intercolonial Railway to the Grand Trunk Railway, of the additional betterments that are about to be made by the Grand Trunk Railway. I have not the terms of the contract before me, but as I recollect them, one provision is that the Intercolonial Railway has the option of making use of the betterments, but if it does make use of them it must pay a certain percentage on one-half the cost. It will be a very important matter to the Intercolonial Railway whether or not it will use these betterments, and how much it will pay for them. I do not expect my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to be able to answer to-day, as possibly he has not had his attention directed to the matter. But if he will be good enough to look into it, he might be able to give me an answer tomorrow or Monday.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Acting Minister of Railways and Canals). I will.

APPOINTMENTS TO THE NOVA SCOTIA BENCH.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the Orders of the Day are called I desire to direct the attention of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) to a telegram which I received a day or two ago and which I should have brought to his attention earlier :

> Judge Savary's resignation was accepted to take effect March 31 last, County Court should sit in Clare tomorrow, it being the regular annual sitting for Clare, but no appointment has been made and court will not be held.

May I also inquire whether or not the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia has been filled ?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). The recommendation for the appointment of a successor to Judge Savary was made some days ago. I am not aware—I have not inquired—whether or not it has received His Excellency's approbation. With reference to the other vacancy, the matter is under consideration. That there may not be any apprehension on the part of any hon. member that the public service will suffer, I may say that I have received letters not merely from members of the bench of Nova Scotia themselves, but from other persons of high standing in that province, assuring me that the sessions of the court having terminated and terminated without there being any difficulty in the transaction of business, there is now nothing in the nature of court work which requires the presence of all the judges provided by statute for the court until the spring circuit for the trial of cases beginning six weeks or two months hence.

REPORT OF THE TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Mr. D. HENDERSON (Halton). I beg to ask the Acting Minister of Railways whether any recent report of the commissioners of the Trancontinental Railway has been brought down, or when we may expect such a report. My impression is that we have not had any report for some two years.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a mistake. A report from the Transcontinental Railway Commissioners was brought down some time ago, and is now among the records of the House, among the papers I think that were ordered by the commission to be printed in the usual way. I think it is not yet printed.

ROUTE OF THE TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY THROUGH NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. O. S. CROCKET (York, N.B.). I wish to ask the Acting Minister of Railways if it is the intention to bring down and lay upon the table of the House the report of the commissioners which was presented to the government, recommending the back route though the province of New Brunswick. I called the attention of the Prime Minister to this matter some weeks ago, and I understood from him that he was disposed to order the report to be laid upon the table. He certainly stated that he would inform the House in a very short time as to whether that would be done, that is, whether he would lay the report upon the table before the government reached a decision as to the selection of the route through that province. I asked the Prime Minister on two or three occasions subsequently, and he stated each time that he would inform the House very shortly. There has been no intimation since that time, and I would like to know now whether the Acting Minister of Railways will bring down the report before the consideration of the vote which is proposed in the estimates for the Transcontinental Railway during the coming year. It seems to me that the House is surely entitled to this information before being called upon to vote this appropriation.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the matter has been determined. There seems to be no reason why the report should not be brought down ; I see no objection to it at the moment. Unless there is some reason that I cannot see in advance, I will be glad to bring down the report before proceeding with the item.

APPOINTMENT OF SENATOR FOR THE DISTRICT OF ROUGEMONT.

Mr. H. B. AMES (Montreal, St. Antoine). In answer to an order of the House on my motion, a return was presented yesterday with reference to the correspondence, memorials and petitions regarding the nomination of a senator for the district of Rougemont. This return simply gives the order in council, and it is the only document produced. I desire to ask whether that is a courteous way of intimating to me and to the House that the government does not desire, or does not intend, to produce the other documents in connection with the case. I am credibly informed that there was a number of petitions circulated and sent into the government, that there was a considerable correspondence in connection with this nomination. I desire to know whether, under circumstances such as these, the House is not to be given access to the documents in the case.

Mr. FIELDING. I can only say that the return was sent to me by the Secretary of State in the usual way, and I laid it on the table, as I do all others. With regard to all appointments to public offices there is likely to be more or less correspondence which is of a private and confidential character, and which certainly would not be brought down in a public return. I have no knowledge of the facts referred to. I fancy that whatever was official on the records was included in the return. I will make further inquiry.

Mr. AMES. Does the minister contend that all the petitions, memorials and public documents that were passed around in the city of Montreal, containing the signatures of a large number of people, should be regarded as private and confidential documents?

Mr. FIELDING. But I do not know what the documents are, and would not like to answer the question. I can only state in general terms that in relation to all public appointments there are likely to be confidential communications between the parties who desire the places and the ministers who may have the advising as to the giving of them. I am speaking of the general principle. There may be documents which are legitimate public documents, and I shall make inquiry with a view to what the hon. gentleman has said.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is only necessary to remind the hon. Minister of Finance that private letters between ministers were not regarded of such a public nature by this government, and that after they came into power they published a blue-book containing such correspondence between members of the late Conservative government.

Mr. AMES. I retain the right to interpolate the government with regard to this matter next week, and to ask the minister whether he considers all documents in this case as confidential, or whether he is prepared to differentiate between those of a private nature and those of a public nature, and to give the House those of the latter class.

Mr. FIELDING. If there are documents which are ordinarly regarded as public information, they should certainly be brought down. I agree with the general principle, but the hon. gentleman must be aware that in connection with all these matters there are many letters of a private and confidential character which would not be brought down, and should not be brought down.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903—AMENDMENT.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). There are one or two Bills which have come from the Senate which are not disposed of, and which I think it would be a pity to lose from the mere fact that they are not on the government orders. I beg to call up from Public Orders item (No. 40): Consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 3), An Act in amendment of the Railway Act, 1903, which stands in the name of the hon. member for Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster). The hon. member is not present, but he informed me that the amendment made by the Senate is a change in the wording only, that while in the original Bill reference was made to the revised statutes as they formerly existed, the new revised statutes having been brought into operation in the interim, the Senate say that the reference shall be to the revised statutes as they now are. With a view of accepting that amendment, if it is approved by the House, I will move that item 40 be called.

Motion agreed to, and amendments read a first and second time and agreed to.

GOLD AND SILVER MARKING ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I would also ask that item No. 38 on Public Bills and Orders : Bill (No. 137) to amend the Gold and Silver Marking Act, be called.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

Mr. FIELDING. This Bill stands in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson). Application was made for an amendment to the Gold and Silver Marking Act last session with the view of admitting into Canada certain grades of jewellery which, by the law as it stands, would be forbidden. After thorough discussion before the Committee on Banking and Commerce the conclusion reached was, not to change the form of the Act, but to postpone the time when it should come into operation. The committee I think unanimously reported to amend this Bill so as to provide that the Gold and Silver Marking Act, which would come into operation on the 13th of July, shall be postponed, and shall only come into force on the 13th of March, 1908. The idea is that in the meantime the various sections of the jewellery trade will get together and by that time it is hoped that they will be able to agree upon some arrangement that will meet the wishes of all concerned.

Mr. FOSTER. May I inquire whether there is very great disagreement ? Are the number of persons who are objecting to the Act a very large proportion of the total number who would be interested in the question ?

Mr. FIELDING. Several gentlemen interested in the trade appeared before the committee to object to it and they stated that they were in a position to assure the committee that the Bill, in its present form, was objectionable to a large part of the trade of Canada. That is a matter more or less of dispute. However, all of the interests agreed to a postponement of the operation of the Bill for a few months in the hope that they may be able to come to a better understanding rather than to attempt to change the form of the Bill.

Mr. KEMP. I presume that the government, having adopted this Bill as a government measure last session and having reference to it in the speech of His Excellency on the occasion of prorogation, ought to take the matter up now as a government measure. It is a matter that is very intimately connected with the tariff. The question involved in this measure will be affected to a great extent by the tariff. I think it would be a wise policy for the government to take this measure up.

Mr. FIELDING. That is correct and the government will ultimately have to deal with it. I would point out, however, that while the Bill became a government measure it was a measure which was adopted upon the representation that the jewellery trade were practically agreed upon it. It is a very technical matter. The committees of the Senate and House of Commons which examined it felt that they were dependent to a large extent upon the judgment of experts in the jewellery trade and they felt that to the best of their judgment the Bill would be satisfactory to the trade. There is a dispute between the manufacturers and importers and before next session the government will have to look into that and determine whether they will let the Bill stand in its present shape or propose to the House an amendment to it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, the Bill was regarded as extremely satisfactory at the time it was passed. Perhaps it had not received that consideration to which it was entitled. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) will no doubt recall that the government were so satisfied with it at the time that they referred to its passage in the speech from the Throne at the close of the session——

Mr. FIELDING. The Bill was regarded as satisfactory.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN—and commended to parliament and the country the fact that the Bill had been passed.

Mr. FIELDING. That is true, but the government will have to deal with it next session.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

RESIDENTIAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 161) to amend the Act of the present session incorporating the Residential Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Fielding.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this to amend a Bill passed this session ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is to correct a clerical error in a private Bill which, I think, was in the hands of the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. A. C. Macdonell). It is only a clerical error in the Act which occurred while the Bill was passing through the House and this is a Bill to amend it and to make the Act as the House intended it.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

On the order :

Third reading of Bill (No. 145) to amend the Criminal Code—Mr. Aylesworth.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). Mr. Speaker, this Bill is entered upon the order paper for the third reading. I felt a little surprised when I saw it so entered as my memory of what took place upon the second reading agrees entirely with what appears in 'Hansard' at the beginning of the proceedings on the 4th April. It is stated that the Bill was read a second time and that the House went into committee, whereupon the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) mentioned, that, the Bill not being yet distributed, there was difficulty in following the explanations in regard to it and the committee rose reporting progress. I suppose it would be more convenient if the matter were now to be considered in committee than taken up on the third reading. I therefore move that the order for the third reading of the Bill be discharged and that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for further consideration.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

On section 2,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the minister will state just in the briefest possible way what the change in the law is and what the object of it is, as we go along, it would facilitate the consideration of the Bill.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The second section amends one of the subsections of the interpretation clause by inserting into the definition of the word 'indictment' and the word 'count' the following words: 'Any formal charge under section 873a' which is by virtue of this amendment made to be included within the meaning of 'indictment' or 'count.' In Saskatchewan and Alberta, no grand juries have yet been established, and the provincial authorities are going on with a criminal procedure lacking the grand jury system. This amendment is necessary in order to have a formal charge which can be made under that method of proceeding, included in the legislation of the Criminal Code, relating to indictments and counts.

On section 26,

By striking out the fourth line thereof beginning with the word 'party' and ending with the word 'to.'

Mr. AYLESWORTH. By a printer's error, a line is found in section 26 of the Criminal Code, as printed, which is absolutely meaningless. The section deals with the execution of an erroneous sentence or process of the court, and by some slip in printing the words appear: 'Party to any association or conspiracy, being a party to.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are you satisfied it is not slipped in from some other part of the statute.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I have not personally searched; it evidently belongs to some other section, but it may be repeated.

On section 225.

Section 225.—By repealing it and substituting therefor the following section:

225. A common bawdy house is a house, room, set of rooms or place of any kind kept for purposes of prostitution or occupied or resorted to by one or more women for such purposes.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This is an important amendment. A number of amendments have been suggested to the Criminal Code, but it was thought better not to present them for consideration at this advanced stage of the session. This section, however, deals with a condition of things with regard to which very strong representations have been made by associations of clergymen and others, especially from the city of Winnipeg. The present law defines any bawdy house to be: 'A house, room, set of rooms, or place of any kind kept for purposes of prostitution.' Under that form of words, the court in Manitoba held, following an English decision, that a room in which only one woman lives did not fall within this definition; it was not a room kept for purposes of prostitution. The holding of the court seems fine, but it has the support of English authority. Inasmuch as the condition of things said to exist in Winnipeg calls for action in this regard, the custom there being for women of this class to live singly, it seemed necessary to make this amendment as asked by the ministerial association. The amendment is, by inserting the words: 'One or more women' after the words 'resorted to.'

Mr. FOSTER. What reason is there that you should not substitute the word 'person' for 'women'?

Mr AYLESWORTH. If I apprehend my hon. friend's meaning it is that if there was a place where men resorted for that purpose it would be a common bawdy house. The word 'prostitution' is active in its sense; it is prostituting of one's self; I can hardly see the force of the suggestion.

Mr. FOSTER. I would take it that it was as much prostitution in the one case as in the other. I do not know whether there is any generic term, but I see no reason in the world why the whole onus of what is considered a world wide vice should be thrown on the woman. I think it is just as vile and degrading in the other case; both are human creatures. I think the term should apply to one as well as to the other. Does not the minister think it is rather an unjust assumption against one half of the human race, as though what would be a great wrong in the one would be no wrong in the other?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is not the idea at all. It is said: A person resorts to a place for the purpose of prostitution; the meaning of that phrase is: The person resorts there for the purpose of prostituting the body of that individual, not of some one else. There is no case I have ever heard of, where men resort to any room or house for the purpose of being there prostituted, if I may use the expression. If men lived together in any common place for such purpose they would be liable to be prohibited by legislation, but such a thing is unknown. The evil, which is struck at by this legislation, does not exist in the case of the male sex.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know that I absolutely follow the argument of either side with regard to this; but suppose a room were occupied by a man, and women were brought there by that man for the purpose of prostitution, I doubt if this section would cover it.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think that would be struck at by another section which deals with 'procuring.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know whether that would be procuring or not. It seems to me that if you make the change indicated by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) you would cover the case of the occupancy of a room by a man for the purpose of bringing women there, in order that prostitution might be carried on.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Section 228 provides, that every one is guilty of an indictable offence who occupies any disorderly house, that is to say, any common bawdy house. The case has been put of a man keeping a room or rooms to which women came for purposes of prostitution, and which under this new definition would come within the term, 'common bawdy house,' and the man who kept it would be liable under section 238.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me, with all deference to the Minister of Justice, that the same fine distinctions which have been made by the English courts and the court to which he alluded a little while ago, might lead to a contrary conclusion, whereas if the word 'persons' were inserted in stead of the word 'women' there could be no possible doubt.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I have no objection to the change, though I do not think it necessary.

Mr. BERGERON. Judging by what we read in the papers from the west the other day, my hon. friend cannot take too many precautions in framing that clause.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It would apply to other places besides Winnipeg.

The word 'women' struck out and the word 'persons' inserted in lieu thereof.

On sections 586 and 587,

Mr. AYLESWORTH. These two sections are those to which I referred when introducing the Bill. Offences which are committed in the unorganized parts of Canada have been under the present law tried in those parts of the country before such officials or tribunals as are there constituted. An instance has recently come to departmental knowledge where a case of homicide, which perhaps is murder, took place on board a ship wintering in the ice somewhere northward of the inhabited portions of Canada, and the practical course for the trial of that offence, that would seem natural if the law permitted it, would be for the offender to be tried in such province of Canada as might be most convenient. None of the witnesses are locally identified with the place where the tragedy happened, and this amendment of the law is designed to permit that to be done in cases where it would be convenient to do so. For instance, in this case the offender might be tried at any port in Canada where the ship might call.

Sections agreed to.

On section 823,

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This is an amendment asked for by the government of the province of Quebec, and the effect of it is to give jurisdiction throughout the whole province to the judges of the sessions of the peace. There are judges of the sessions of the peace at Montreal and also at Quebec. Under the existing law the judge who has the right to exercise the jurisdiction of speedy trial in indictable offences in any district where there is a judge of sessions, he is such judge; if there is no judge of sessions nor a magistrate, then the district magistrate; if there is neither judge of sessions not a magistrate in the district, then the sheriff. The amendment provides that in each and every part of the province a judge of the sessions of the peace may have jurisdiction.

Mr. BERGERON. A judge of sessions might be sent from the district where he lives to the district where he is wanted.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. He might.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the sheriff remain?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. There is no change as to the sheriff. The sheriff has jurisdiction in a district where there is neither a judge of sessions nor a magistrate.

Mr. BERGERON. If a sheriff is a doctor, how can he act in a legal capacity?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This Bill will meet that difficulty, because a judge of the sessions could go to that district.

Mr. BERGERON. Then it seems to me the word 'sheriff' should be struck out, because sometimes the sheriff is a doctor or a notary or even a non-professional man.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It will do no harm to leave it in. I had not thought of what my hon. friend suggests. This clause was drafted by the Attorney General's Department in Quebec, and I suppose it was thought wise not to make any greater change in the law than was necessary to accomplish the desired purpose.

On section 873a,

Mr. FOSTER. Might I ask the minister if it is possible in any other province than Saskatchewan and Alberta to commence a charge in the way provided here and ignore the grand jury?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think not.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I suppose the minister does not know whether these provinces propose to do away with the grand jury system? If they do not, what happens? Should not this clause say that until the grand jury system is arranged for in the province such will take place, or would this clash with any legislation by which they might provide for the grand jury system?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I do not think there would be any clash. If they did at any future time establish the grand jury system, this parliament could repeal this clause if that were necessary.

Mr. FOSTER. There might be a time when they would both be on the statute-book.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What change is made by this section?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This is the old section, but leaving out Saskatchewan and Alberta, which now become provinces and fall within that category.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

WINDING-UP ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 147) to amend the Winding-up Act—Mr. Aylesworth—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

1. The Winding-up Act, chapter 144 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is amended by adding the following section immediately after section 131 of the said Act:

131a. The court may, if satisfied that, with respect to the whole or any portion of the proceedings, the interests of creditors, claimants, or shareholders can be classified, nominate and appoint a solicitor and counsel to represent each or any class for the purpose of the proceedings, and all the persons composing any such class shall be bound by the acts of the solicitor and counsel so appointed, and service upon such solicitor of notices, orders, or other procedings of which service is required, shall for all purposes be, and be deemed to be, good and sufficient service thereof upon all the persons composing the class represented by him; and the court may, by the order appointing a solicitor and counsel for any class, or by subsequent order, provide for the payment of the costs of such solicitor and counsel by the liquidator of the company out of the assets of the company, or out of such portion thereof as to the court seems just and proper.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice): The object of this amendment is manifest. Under the present law there is no provision for other than personal service on every person interested in the winding-up of the company. I am advised that there is now in course of winding up a company—the York County Loan and Savings Company—in which there are over one hundred thousand shareholders. To serve every shareholder personally would cost at least $1 for each person, and there would be literally a waste of a very large sum of money out of the already depleted assets of the company. In dealing with a matter of insolvency in cases in which the creditors will never be paid in full—or very rarely—it is desirable to save expense as far as possible.

Mr. BERGERON. This provision we already have in the province of Quebec.

Mr. FOSTER. This only goes as far as the service?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Representation throughout.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Persons would be bound as if they had been served. But in that respect this only follows the course of the Judicature Act in force in Great Britain and in nearly every province of Canada. I have had some experience in winding-up cases; and where we have to serve even five or six hundred persons, it was found expensive, arduous, and often unnecessary. I should think this a very good provision.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 113) to amend the Post Office Act—Mr. Lemieux—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1—repealing paragraph (d) of section 26, of the Post Office Act,

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). This section is to change the statute in relation to the duties of the controller under the direction of the head of the department. The subsection here referred to provides that the controller shall have control of all delayed or missent mails or mail matter. We find it more practical that the post office inspectors themselves should attend to this branch of the work. In fact they already do it. The public always refer these questions to the post office inspector.

On section 2,

Section 30 of the said Act is amended by leaving out the words 'except for British Columbia' in the first line, and by substituting the word 'five' for the word 'ten' in the third and fourth lines.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This section provides that, except for British Columbia, no person shall be eligible to be appointed as a superintendent unless he has been at least ten years in the railway mail service and has served as railway mail clerk during at least half of the said ten years.

This law was passed at the time when British Columbia came into confederation, and it was not thought well to demand ten years of service from these men in British Columbia before they could be made superintendents of railway mail service. But now that the railway facilities in British Columbia are so great, we think it well to place that province on the same level as the others. Further, we reduce the number of years within which a man may become a superintendent of railway mail service. Formerly it was ten years. Now when he has served five years he can become an efficient railway mail superintendent.

Mr. FOSTER. Served in what capacity?

Mr. LEMIEUX. As a railway mail clerk, because the promotions take place from that class only. We do not go outside the railway mail clerks to appoint a superintendent.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that by statute?

Mr. LEMIEUX. By statute.

On section 4—additional dead letter offices.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Here I will ask the committee to add the city of Edmonton as one of the places where a branch dead letter office should be established.

Mr. BERGERON. Will that increase the number of employees?

Mr. LEMIEUX. There will be a few employees to look after the dead letters.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the post office be enlarged?

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is being enlarged.

Mr. BERGERON. I know that last summer they were so cramped that they had not sufficient room for the present staff and some people were obliged to wait ten or twelve days for their mail.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) is right in saying that the condition was deplorable in Edmonton but that was not through our fault; it was owing to the rapid influx of population in the west. We sent our inspector, Mr. Ross, of Toronto, and we are securing a new building, and reorganizing the service completely. I may say that I intend during this summer with two or three officials of the Post Office Department to make a business trip throughout the Canadian west and investigate the postal facilities there.

Mr. FOSTER. It is going to be a business trip?

Mr. LEMIEUX. A business trip.

Mr. FOSTER. Be careful you do not ask about investments in land.

Mr. BERGERON. That would be very difficult as my hon. friend will not be three days on the streets in Edmonton, before he is offered lands for sale.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 5—free transportation of officials of department.

Mr. LEMIEUX. By law, our railway mail clerks are given free transportation on the railways. In the Post Office and Customs Departments in every country in the world the accredited officers of the departments, who have inspections to make, are given free transportation. During my recent visit to Washington I obtained all information as regards the United States Post office Department, and there the officers who have inspections to make, not only on the cars but elsewhere, are given free transportation. I may say for the information of the House that since this Bill was introduced I have seen the railway people and they agree to it.

Mr. FOSTER. I would suggest that instead of the words 'accredited agent' you use the words 'accredited official.'

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would move accordingly that 'official' be substituted for 'agent.'

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On the preamble,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the minister intend to do anything in regard to the demands of the postmasters throughout the country for a fairer scale of remuneration? There has been a good deal of discussion on this point and representations have been made, I think, by the Postmasters' Association. It seems to me that the remuneration in a great many cases is very inadequate and that the government might do justice to these officers without adding anything to the public burdens if they would exercise a little more care in the purchase of goods, for example, purchasing at first cost instead of paying a very large percentage to some person to buy for them, and if they would be a little more careful about the appropriation of public funds for unnecessary purposes. I do not intend to discuss this at present but simply to inquire what consideration has been given to this matter and what conclusion, if any, has been arrived at?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. It seems to me important to consider whether or not it would not be more in the public interest to utilize the surplus which now exists in the Post Office Department in increasing the mail service in various parts of the country. I would not say that there are not instances where the postmasters are entitled to increased remuneration, but it is a serious question whether or not the first claim on the Post Office Department is not rather in the direction of increased services, the conversion of bi-weekly services in country districts into tri-weekly or daily services and the extension of the system.

Mr. FOSTER. That is an important consideration, but I hope the claims of the postmasters will not be laid aside on that account, and that the Postmaster General will not refuse to do what is fair towards that very faithful and widespread class of men who are really the inside management of the post office all through the country. The cost of living and various other things have undoubtedly increased and are increasing and probably will increase in this country and the man with the small salary is the man who feels that to a large extent. Not only the postmasters but the officials of the Post Office Department are a very faithful class of men upon whose honesty and care and diligence the working of the machine is really dependent, notwithstanding the wisest regulations that you may adopt in this parliament or in the department. Those men I think ought to be considered. Whilst of course greater and more frequent mail accommodations, especially in the newer parts of the country, ought to be looked after, it ought not to be at the expense of this worthy and deserving class of men who are very poorly paid for the services that they give.

Mr. BENNETT. Since the subject is under discussion, I wish to say that from different parts of the riding of East Simcoe I have requests that the salaries or postmasters should be increased, and I have no doubt other hon. gentlemen are receiving similar requests. Hon. gentlemen who are at all conversant with the country post office will acknowledge that $25 a year is a mere pittance, and altogether inadequate to the service rendered. I have in my mind an office about eight miles from the town of Midland. The postmaster, a farmer, practically gives up the best room in his house as a post office. Children tramp in there in all kinds of weather with their muddy boots after they arrive from school. At all hours of the day, and even into the night, the neighbours drop in to see if there are any letters for them, and every one knows that the custom of farmers is to retire at an early hour after the labours of the day. And yet these postmasters only receive a remuneration of $25 per year. I think that should be changed, and the minimum raised to $50 at least, and that forthwith. I have in mind one postmaster in particular who, on the last occasion I was home, said to me, I am going to close up this post office and throw up the position if the salary is not increased. And I doubt very much if he should give up the position whether any other person in the neighbourhood would take it. I think that the salaries in these cases should be changed instanter from $25 to $50.

Mr. MACDONALD.

Mr. HENDERSON. I simply wish to emphasize what has been so well said by my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). A short time ago I forwarded a letter to the Postmaster General along this very line, that letter disclosed to me a certain condition which I think should not exist in this country. The postmaster was a farmer who had accepted the office, I believe solely to prevent its being closed up. He had no time himself to give to the work of the office, and another person had to be paid for receiving and delivering the mail. They were unable to get a person for the small consideration that was allowed by the department, and the result was that the farmers in the neighbourhood were obliged to subscribe 50 cents to $1 a piece in order to make up sufficient remuneration to pay a woman to receive and deliver the mail that came to that post office. I think that with the large surplus we have, no one should be called upon to put his hands in his pocket and pay for a service which this country is abundantly able to pay for. I drew the minister's attention to that case, and I know it is not an individual case. I trust the minister will remember his former promises and be liberal in these matters, and treat these deserving people fairly.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to read for the Postmaster General an extract from a reply which he gave to a delegation that waited on him on the 7th of November, 1906 :

> I am very much pleased to have met you, and I may say I congratulate you on having brought my friend Mr. Zimmerman with you. You could not have brought a better man. I do not know what the other ministers will do, but I intend to act immediately. Go back to your homes and tell your confreres, high and low, that they can trust the minister, that I intend to do something during the coming session. Gentlemen give me a free hand. I expect loyalty from you, I know that I have your loyalty, and your support, too. I speak as a friend.

He tells them to go back home and tell their confreres what they may expect. He congratulates them on bringing with them the member for Hamilton (Mr. Zimmerman), saying they could not find a better man, that they had a splendid case, and so forth. Surely in face of these promises——

Mr. LEMIEUX. Was that an answer to a delegation of postmasters or a delegation from the outside service, letter carriers ?

Mr. BLAIN. I am not quite sure, I will hand it over to the minister. But has my hon. friend supplemented his answer to the other class to which he refers, by introducing legislation to meet their case ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I remember that the hon. member for Hamilton accompanied a delegation which came to my office some months ago. So far as I can remember at the present moment, this delegation was composed of members of the outside service of the Post Office Department, not rural postmasters. I did use the words which my hon. friend has just read. The other day when this question was brought up in the House I think the Finance Minister, the leader of the House, said that probably an announcement would be made as regards the whole civil service. That announcement has not yet been made, but will probably be made in a day or so. Now, with regard to the postmasters, I have already expressed my views and I need not express them again. There is one point, however, which must not be lost sight of. Out of the 12,000 or 13,000 post offices throughout the country, there are 5,000 or 6,000 where the total annual revenue does not yield as much as the salaries paid to the postmasters. I do not say that to minimize them in the eyes of the community, or to minimize the importance of the request which is made to the Postmaster General. But I mention this to remind my hon. friends that with many of those postmasters the task is indeed very light.

Mr. BENNETT. Are these little offices allowed to sell stamps?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, they receive a commission on the stamps sold. However, the question is an acute one just now, and I expect to have an announcement to make some day.

Mr. LALOR. Upon what system are the country postmasters paid? Do they get their revenue entirely from the commission on stamps?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The minimum salary fixed by law is $25, after that they get a commission.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I sincerely hope that the minister will provide a better remuneration for the country postmasters. At the lowest salary, they are receiving only 8 cents a day for keeping a room in order, heating and lighting it, and affording the other facilities required. I am satisfied the minister will not think it is unreasonable that we should ask him to increase the salary to 16 cents a day. I might also state while this matter is up, that I would like to urge upon the minister the necessity of investigating further the rural free delivery system as it exists in the United States. I have had the returns which have been placed upon the table of the House with reference to the commission which went to the United States in regard to this matter, and I want to say that the report of the commission is a most unfair and unreasonable one. I sincerely hope that the minister will make a thorough examination of the rural free delivery system of the United States, and if he does he will not then regard the request which is being made for the establishment of a rural free delivery system in this country as an unreasonable one. He says that it is not likely to come into effect until we have 20 millions of people, but I believe that he will realize within the next few years that he will be compelled to take it into his serious consideration and to give the people in the rural districts some relief from the present state of affairs.

Mr. LEMIEUX. While I was in Washington recently I studied with some of the post office officials there the question of rural delivery, and, unfortunately for my hon. friend, I found that if it was a boon to the public it was a great deficit producer to the department. In fact, to-day at Washington, among the officials, the question is seriously considered whether they shall not have to restrict the rural mail delivery instead of expanding it. My hon. friend will admit that we are not ready to spend many millions to establish all over Canada a rural mail delivery system. But we are doing the next best thing. During this session and within a few hours probably hon. members will see in the supplementary estimates a sum of money to be applied to the establishment of the free delivery system in cities and towns whose population shall justify it; that is to say, in towns having a population of 12,000 and a revenue of $20,000 a year. This is a move in the right direction. In the United States the rural mail delivery system has caused a deficit in the Post Office Department of something like $17,000,000 or $18,000,000 a year.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. May I ask the hon. minister if he has made an estimate of the number of millions of deficit that would likely be caused in the Post Office Department of Canada if we were to establish a rural free delivery system the same as they have in the United States?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have never made that calculation, but I know it would cost a great deal of money and that the surplus of the Post Office Department would very quickly melt away.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. gentleman says that it would extend to the millions and yet he has not prepared an estimate showing what it will be. If he investigates the reports in the library he will find that the deficit caused by the rural free delivery system in the United States only amounted to $8,000,000 last year and that with a population of nearly 90 millions of people. Even if we had a deficit of a few hundred thousand dollars for the first few years it is a question which is worthy of consideration and it is highly desirable that the hon. minister should investigate the subject and have an estimate made.

Mr. TURGEON. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) that our country is not yet prepared to adopt the system of rural free delivery. I partially though not wholly agree with the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) that the surplus of the department should be employed in increasing and improving the postal service throughout the country. I agree with him that our rural districts should be better served than they are to-day, and I believe that, with good discretion, the surplus could be very well devoted to increasing the salaries of the rural postmasters and increasing the number of post offices in the rural districts. If we do not increase the salaries of these post offices we will not be able to get any decent honest people to take care of these post offices. The Postmaster General knows that only a few weeks ago I tendered him the resignation of one of our best postmasters in Lower Caraquet because the salary was too low and I had to look for two or three weeks before I could get a good man to take his place. I believe that some consideration should be given to these postmasters in order that we may be able to secure efficient and honourable men in the rural districts to take charge of the post offices there.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. The conditions are different in the east from what they are in the west. I have in my constituency a number of post offices that I expect will have to be closed up unless increases of salaries are granted to the postmasters. There is a large population of Galicians and the farmers who keep these post offices say that they cannot stand the run that there is made upon their houses at the present time. A Galician comes in and he stays in the house if he has nowhere to go. I had to close up last year the old historic post office of Kildonan because we could not get a man to take it at $25 a year. I expect that we will have to close up the historic post office of St. Andrews on the Red river as I cannot get a postmaster there. I have three or four different applications from men now who want to get some one to take their places and I think that in view of the fact that the hon. Postmaster General has had this matter under his consideration for the last two years the least the government can do is to come down during the present session with a Bill providing for an increase in the salaries of country postmasters.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I had a more striking case than any that have been referred to. About two years ago a postmaster wrote to me in a plaintive tone telling me that he had resigned four months previously and that he could not get the government to accept his resignation. He had to continue to perform the duties of postmaster for $25 a year and he earnestly asked that I should bring the matter up in parliament and see if there were not some constitutional mode by which he could be relieved of his duties. However, I think that some arrangement was made and that he was relieved.

Mr. PERLEY. I am sure from what I have heard that it is the desire of the Postmaster General to increase the salaries of country postmasters. During the discussion that we had here the other day both sides of the House expressed themselves as in favour of it. I trust that the council is not going to prevent the minister from carrying out his own wishes in the matter. As far as my views go I would like to strengthen the hands of the minister in giving an increase of salary to the country postmasters.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I have taken the opportunity on two or three occasions to speak on this subject. I have received a number of letters from various postmasters requesting me to urge upon the minister the necessity for making this change during the present session. Surely this House should not prorogue before this very just claim of the country postmasters receives consideration. It is not a small question. It is a very large question. I am not sure whether the minister will bring it under the operation of his new Act if they strike. This is certainly one of the great public utilities and my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has just pointed out where one postmaster was not allowed to resign and I suppose therefore they are not allowed to strike. I do not know how that may be. But certainly the minister must see that both sides of the House are very urgent that this demand be met and I think we should not undertake any new expenditures until such a claim as this is met. I do not say that I do not sympathize with my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) with respect to rural mail delivery, but until the postmasters that we have are a great deal better paid than they are, I do not think we are justified in adopting a system of rural delivery. I, for one, think that the men we have now should certainly be paid a fair living wage for the services they render. The minimum salary paid to a country postmaster should be $50 a year regardless of whether the office pays or not. In such a case that question should not be taken into consideration at all.

Mr. TAYLOR. I fully endorse what has been said by my hon. friend (Mr. Cockshutt) and I want to read a letter to the Postmaster General and to ask him to do what a friend of mine asked me to do. This letter is from Frankville, which is quite a large village in the northern part of my constituency, and it says:

Frankville, April 15, 1907.

Dear Sir,—I think if some of you gentlemen would write a few lines to the postmaster at Frankville he would perhaps stay in the office half the time. Last week I had to go around to try and find him. One traveller had to go down to the saw-mills through the mud to find him.

I have had several complaints about this post office, but this letter is so pointed that I hope the minister will call the attention of the Frankville postmaster to it and ask him to attend to his duty or give up the job to somebody else who will.

Mr. LOUIS LAVERGNE (Translation). Mr. Speaker, before this Bill comes up for its third reading, I beg to draw the attention of the hon. Postmaster General to an unsatisfactory condition of things as regards country postmasters. On Monday last, I referred to the subject in this House, and I take this opportunity of bringing it up once more. The work which postmasters have to perform, for a remuneration which is at best trifling, takes up more time than people are apt to think. In the province of Quebec, they have to keep the post office open from day to day, for the benefit of the people, even on Sundays and holidays. They have to keep the post office open and answer inquiries between mass and vespers. They have, besides, to supply the office, and see that it is heated and kept in proper condition. Notwithstanding which, it has been considered proper to do away with the small rental of five dollars granted to some of them, on the ground that the earnings from these offices were not sufficient to warrant keeping up such expenditure. I appeal once more to the hon. Postmaster General, and trust that he will see his way clear to granting a reasonable salary to country postmasters. Twenty-five dollars is a ridiculously low salary, and quite inadequate in view of the work required to be done. I think the minimum salary should not be less than $50 per annum.

Mr. MARSHALL. I would direct the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that in my constituency we have one post office where the neighbours themselves have to contribute to keep the post office open.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Where is that?

Mr. MARSHALL. It is at Groves End.

An hon. MEMBER. It is a jumping off place.

Mr. MARSHALL. It is not a jumping off place at all; it is a good thriving village, and I regret to say that it is a Liberal stronghold, but however that may be, the condition of things with regard to the post office there is not creditable to the government. I hope the minister will see his way to increase the salaries of the postmasters in East Elgin. I may point out that we have a postmaster at Aylmer who puts in about fifteen hours a day in the post office and he is insufficiently paid for the amount of work he does. The minister is in possession of the returns from this office and they show that quite a large business is done there and that business is constantly increasing. I hope the Postmaster General will not forget East Elgin.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will not.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

INSPECTION OF ELECTRICITY.

Bill (No. 111) respecting the inspection of electricity—Mr. Templeman—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). This Bill, although rather lengthy, does not contain very many amendments to the present Act respecting the inspection of electricity; we have repeated the entire Act, so that all the provisions will be together. In the greater number of the clauses there are no amendments whatever. The whole object and purport of the amendments is to enable the officials of the department to inspect meters that measure electricity used for power. The law as at present empowers the inspectors to inspect meters of electric energy only where it is used for lighting purposes; but as meters are now being used very largely for the measurement of electric power, it is proposed to extend the inspection to them. The Bill is largely technical. The proposed amendments have been carefully considered by the experts of the department, and have been submitted to electric power companies, and have been approved by their representatives. I may say that they almost unanimously agree that the proposed amendments are in the right direction.

Mr. BLAIN. Will there be any new inspectors?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No; the present inspectors will do the work.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I would like to ask the minister if the department has power to see whether the electric companies are supplying the amount of power they say they are; for instance, whether they are giving 16-candle power for a 16-candle light?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I understand that one of the duties of the inspectors is to see that the voltage is up to the proper standard, as the quality of the light necessarily depends on the voltage.

Mr. BERGERON. What would be the remedy for a person who thinks he does not get 16-candle power in a 16-candle light?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. He can call in the inspector at any time to make an inspection.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is the inspector in the city of Montreal?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Mr. Aubin, who has three assistants.

Mr. BERGERON. He would be called upon to inspect the power leased to a private citizen in a town or city?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Any meter.

Mr. BERGERON. Who would pay his expenses? What would be the procedure?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The officials of the department inspect the meters every month; but if, in the meantime, a consumer requires an inspection, he has to pay for it.

Mr. BERGERON. The inspector at Montreal is supposed to inspect at Valleyfield, thirty-five or forty miles above. Is he to make his inspections in Valleyfield every month ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The chief inspector advises me that the inspection in the outlying districts will not be made as frequently as in the cities. They will make the other inspection when they inspect the meters.

Mr. BERGERON. There are some places where meters are not used. In the smaller places they make a contract with the electric light company to furnish light of a certain power—sixteen candles, or whatever it may be—so many lights for so much. How are they to know that they are getting the light they pay for ? If they think they are not getting it, must they tell the inspector ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The reason why I brought this up was because in the smaller municipalities they make contracts with the electric light companies for the delivery of light of a certain standard at so much a month. I have had communications from various municipalities that the light furnished is not up to standard. What I want to know is whether the Inland Revenue Department take advantage of the authority which they, no doubt, have to check up these contracts, outside the large cities and see that the light furnished, in volume of light or voltage, is up to the agreement. My hon. friend behind me (Mr. Cash) suggests the question whether the Inland Revenue Department had authority to check up acetylene gas plants which exist in many places in the Northwest ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. In answer to the hon. member for Beauharnois I may say that where meters are not used there is an inspection of the voltage once a year, or more frequently if the inspector is asked to make it.

Mr. BERGERON. And the consumer has to pay ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am afraid we do not collect much from the consumer at any time or in any way. I understand that the inspection of gas does not include the inspection of acetylene gas.

Mr. LALOR. If the municipality or a private individual wants an inspection must he call upon the inspector ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am advised that the Act gives us the authority to inspect at any time, whether at the request of any person or not. It must be understood that what we inspect is the meter and also the voltage which is responsible for the character of the light.

Mr. BERGERON. But if the person who undertakes to provide light of a certain quality does not carry out his contract, he should be fined. I understand that the consumer may call upon the inspector to make an inspection. But will the expense be borne by the government ? That might be done with safety, if a fine were imposed where the contractor was at fault, because if the contractor was not furnishing light up to the standard agreed upon, he would soon understand that he could not keep on doing business that way.

Mr. BARR. I understand that there is to be an inspector for each district. If the consumer can call for an inspection at any time, upon whom does he call ? And who pays for the inspection ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. As I said a moment ago, the inspection is made once a year by the inspector ; and, if, at any time, the consumer of electricity thinks that his candlepower is not sufficient or that there is anything wrong, he calls upon the inspector of the district, who is well known, to make an inspection. And I was advised a moment ago, that in such a case the inspection is paid for by the consumer—the person applying for the new inspection.

Mr. BARR. Is the inspector a government officer ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Certainly, they are all government officers.

Mr. BARR. The inspection of gas and electricity is under one direction ?

Mr. SPROULE. And the government inspection of weights and measures as well.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Not necessarily by the same person. It may be in some cases, that the same individual will inspect both.

Mr. BARR. Who pays for the inspection, the consumer or the government ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. If it is a special inspection the consumer pays ?

Mr. BARR. Would it not be fair to say that the consumer pays if his light is up to the agreement. If it is not, certainly the government or the person supplying the electricity should pay.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am advised that the point made by my hon. friend is covered by this Act. Where the inspection shows that the light is up to the standard of quality the person asking for the new inspection pays the cost of the inspection; otherwise—

Mr. LALOR. Who are the inspectors? Where are they located? How many are there?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is a rather large order. I think I will have to refer my hon. friend to the blue-book. The chief inspector is in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. BARR. Is each county a district?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There are a number of counties in one district.

Mr. BENNETT. I think the minister will find that in most cases, as, in Barrie, the officer of the Inland Revenue also performs the duty of electric light inspector.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Of course, the officials of this department are officials of the Inland Revenue Department. There are thirty-three inspectors——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It would be better to read the sections and proceed in that way.

On section 1,

Mr. HAGGART. The minister said that this only extended the Act for testing meters for electric power to cases where it was supplied in large quantities.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I did not say that. It is for the purpose of inspecting meters used for measuring electric power in large or in small quantities. The law as it stands empowers the department to inspect meters used for measuring electricity for lighting purposes only; this Act enables us to inspect meters used for both light and power in large or small quantities.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The 'Canadian Electrical News' has taken up this Bill, and has received many letters to the effect that the minister, in the administration of the electric lighting inspection, has a profit of $25,000 accruing to the department and suggesting that the fees should be reduced 50 per cent.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is a small excess of revenue, but $15,000, cost of administration, which ought to be charged to the inspection of electricity, is now charged against the inspection of gas.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It says that the fees for the inspection of meters come to $29,000, and for the registration of companies, to $5,000, making a total of $35,000; the expense of inspection comes to only $8,000 and standard instruments to $1,700, leaving a balance of some $25,000.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That statement is a little misleading as the officials administers the inspection of both gas and electricity is paid on gas account and consequently the surplus in the inspection of electricity account appears larger than it otherwise would.

Mr. HAGGART. This Bill supplants the existing Bill; I understood it was simply extending it.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It re-enacts the old Act and makes several amendments.

Mr. BARR. This seems to me to be direct taxation. The government is making a very large revenue out of electric light, and as gas is not used largely except in some cities, it does not seem to me fair or necessary that the mass of the people should pay so much more than is necessary for the inspection of electricity. They are paying $25,000 above the cost of administration and if the government cover the expenses it will be quite enough.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have here the gas and electric light revenue and expenditure for 1905-6. The revenue was $76,000 and the expenditure $38,000, leaving a balance of profit of $37,000. I cannot help thinking that the suggested reduction is a wise one.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I would rather have a surplus than a deficit. The fees for inspection are fixed by regulation. Meters for lighting purposes are inspected once in five years and the fees run from 75 cents for a range of ten lights to $3.50 for 100 lights. The fees for inspecting the pressure run from 75 cents to $1.50 and that inspection is made once a year or oftener as people may require. These fees are not high and our having a surplus is rather to the credit of the department than otherwise. We do not pay very high salaries for this serivce and one of the provisions of the new Act provides for a certain examination for those who are engaged in this work. If a certain electrical qualification is required of the inspectors, we will probably have to pay them more and would expect to secure a more, a better qualified lot of inspectors. If, when the change has been made, it is found that there is a surplus possibly the regulations which are subject to revision, might be so amended as to reduce the fees.

Mr. LALOR. Do the electric light companies pay the fee?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I assume it is the owners of the meters.

Mr. LALOR. I think the Bill is a very good one. We cannot have too rigid an inspection, and I think more competent men should be employed to make the inspection in future.

Mr. LENNOX. I would like to know from the minister whether it is by virtue of this clause that he gets the extended power that he seeks to take by this Bill? The minister has said that by this Act he intends to extend the power of the government as to inspection and so forth to electrical energy for power purposes as well as to electrical energy for lighting purposes. He says, 'For lighting and for other purposes,' and the definition of 'purchasers' means 'persons to whom electricity is furnished' instead of saying to whom electrical power is furnished. Is there any other clause in the statute which gives power beyond this?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. In the first clause of the title the word 'light' is omitted from the statute, which is one case, and the case my hon. friend refers to is the other.

Mr. LENNOX. Has the government had any inspection of electricity for power purposes up to this time?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I understand that the officers of the department, at the request of companies at various times, have made an inspection to accommodate the companies' consumers. But they have no power to do so, and no charge is made.

Mr. LENNOX. Then under the old statute there was power to collect a fee for the registers of the company. That would not apply to any companies furnishing electrical energy.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Not for power.

Mr. LENNOX. So there will be a large additional revenue by reason of this Act?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There will probably be an increase of a few hundred dollars in the revenue. I beg to move the following definition of 'frequency' in subsection (h):

Frequency means number of complete periods or cycles per second of the alternating current.

Motion agreed to.

On section 4—pressure to be declared.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I propose to introduce an amendment in subsection 1, to add after the word 'pressure' the following words:

Before commencing to give a supply of electrical energy to any purchaser for lighting purposes under this section, the contractor shall declare in writing under his hand to such purchaser the constant pressure, and if from an alternating current source, the frequency at which he proposes to supply energy at the purchasers' terminals.

Then in subsection 2, where percentage of variation is allowed, I wish to change the percentage of variation allowed from the standard voltage, from three per cent to four per cent. We are doing this on the representation of many companies who are engaged in furnishing electrical energy.

Mr. HAGGART. Does not the minister oblige every power company to have a self registering meter which registers the pressure every day?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No.

Mr. HAGGART. In that case, all that would be required by the department would be to send forward and see that the meters are all right. The self registering meter would give the pressure every day during the year.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you mean by the words 'for lighting purposes' under this section?

Mr. HAGGART. Is the minister aware that there are such meters for registering?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes, I understand there are such meters as my hon. friend refers to.

Mr. HAGGART. They should be compelled to have them.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The inspector advises me that that is one of the questions he is going to interest himself in as soon as this Bill becomes law.

Mr. FOSTER. When the machinery is in operation and is fairly regulated and the conditions are normal what is the practical variation? You place a limit here of 4 per cent.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It may run to 3 or 4 per cent. It is very hard to get above 3 per cent; if it goes beyond 4 per cent the quality of the light is very seriously affected.

Mr. FOSTER. In the case of a dispute arising, the purchaser saying that there is a variation of more than 4 per cent at such a time, and the contractor contending that there is not, how do you arrive at a decision? Is there any method of registering the pressure?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The inspector would have to be called in and he would have to report.

Mr. FOSTER. There might be a very low pressure, the variation might exceed 4 per cent at a particular time and before you could get the inspector there it might be back to normal. I can see that it will not be very effective if you have nothing else to depend upon than the occasional visit of the inspector unless there is some method of registering.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is no method of registering the percentage of deviation. If the percentage is too great and the quality of the light is thereby affected the consumer will explain to the company or he will call in the inspector and the inspector will call the attention of the company to it. It is the interest of the company to rectify it.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Perhaps I can explain it to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). At the central station where the current is generated there is a volt meter which registers the voltage at the station when the current leaves the station. You may have a lighting plant and a power plant utilizing the same line. We will say that you have a 50 horse-power motor at work in a certain place and you may have the very best Lombard governor you can find on your water wheel, when that 50 horse-power motor is turned off the voltage will go up at once and when the motor is turned on the voltage will go down at once. But it is only instantaneous; it does not last very long. This clause allowing a variation of 4 per cent above or below was suggested by the Canadian Electrical Association, so that they would have something to fall back upon in case there was any dispute. This variation is only instantaneous, it does not last long and there is no way of registering it in the same way as a thermograph on ship board would register the variations in temperature.

Mr. BARR. I am very much afraid that this Bill is made for the electrical companies more than for the consumers who are the great public. It seems to me that it gives the companies great latitude. Subsection 3 says:

> The contractor shall not be liable for any variation of pressure caused by unavoidable accident to the generating plant or apparatus, or by the uncontrollable conditions of the elements.

Having this latitude you may call in the inspector and he will say that it is due to the elements. The result is that the consumer will get the worst of it every time.

Mr. BERGERON. With respect to subsection 3 of section 4, I might state that I know of a case where electricity struck some of the poles in a town and the people were for two months without electric light. When they asked the company about it they were told that the poles had been struck by electricity and there was nobody to whom the suffering people could aply for relief. They had to pay their accounts all the same. It is an outrage and if we are going to pass this Bill I call upon the hon. gentleman to make it as complete as possible so that everybody may be responsible for his share of whatever trouble occurs, and if it is due to the contractor some one should see that he is responsible and pay for it.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. It is impossible for a man to pay for light on a meter system if he does not get his current.

Mr. BERGERON. It looks like it, but I happen to know all about that.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Well, you will have to tell all that to the sailors, because the marines will not believe it.

Mr. BERGERON. The whole town can testify to it. There is no meter. The rates are paid by the month.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. As this is probably the most important amendment that is proposed, I would like to read the explanation of this clause as prepared by the chief inspector:

> Clause 4. The amendment proposes to increase the permissible variation in the electrical pressure for lighting purposes from 3 per cent to 4 per cent. The original draft of the Bill had it 4 per cent, but it was inadvertently changed in the Senate to 3 per cent. Electric companies find it next to impossible to work within such narrow limits especially with hydro-electric plants where the regulation is not so close as with steam plants. In Great Britain where the generation of electrical energy is almost entirely by steam the Board of Trade regulations allow a variation of 4 per cent. Canadian companies ask for the same allowance and the department sees no objection to their getting it.
> The amendment also brings the frequency of the alternating current within the same regulation. A reduction of the number of alternations by the slowing down of the speed of the dynamo would have the effect of reducing the brake effect on the rotating disc of the meter and thus allow the meter to speed up and register more energy than the purchaser would receive. If the frequency is increased on the other hand, the meter will be inclined to run slow; it becomes necessary, therefore, to regulate the frequency.
> The frequency means the number of complete periods or cycles per second. Each period or cycle contains 2 alternations or reversals of the polarity of the current. The alternating current in Ottawa shows 60 cycles per second or 7,200 alternations per minute.

That is the technical explanation and I am sure it is quite clear to my hon. friends.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to return to the question I asked some time ago. The section reads:

> Before commencing to give a supply of electrical energy to any purchaser for lighting purposes under this section, the contractor shall declare to such purchaser the constant pressure at which he proposes to supply energy at the purchaser's terminals.

In some cases you have a flat rate, but the pressure and energy are the same whether it is under the flat rate or meter system. In one house you may have a meter and in the next house a flat rate. Why should not the users in every instance know that there is a supply adequate to furnish the current which they contract for? If you leave these words in I am inclined to think that it would not be so.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This section applies to lighting only and not to power.

Mr. SPROULE. It is lighting I speak of. You should have it apply to all electric power whether for heating or lighting.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not think it would affect the meaning of the clause.

Mr. SPROULE. It would very materially.

Mr. LENNOX. I think it would be a great deal better to have the words 'in this section' struck out, and I therefore move to that effect.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I have no objection to striking them out.

Motion (Mr. Lennox) agreed to.

Mr. LENNOX. This section declares that before supplying electric energy the contractor shall declare the constant pressure, &c. It should read that he shall declare 'in writing under his hand,' and I move that the words 'in writing under his hand' be added.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I have no objection.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BERGERON. This section seems to be drafted in favour of the contractor for supplying the electric light, and it provides no protection for the consumer. It says the contractor is not responsible in case of unavoidable accident or the uncontrollable condition of the elements, but who is to be the judge of that? Why should there not be a provision stating that the contractor must do his utmost to keep his plant in proper condition and carry out his contract to supply light? My hon. friend from Renfrew (Mr. Wright) is a contractor and his interests are not the interests of the consumers, but I can tell the House that in the little towns these electric light contractors are perfect tryants. They supply the light just as they like; they contract to give 16 candle power and they supply only 8 candle power, and they send in their bills just the same. There should be a provision to make an electric contractor stand by his contract, and to do what he is paid for. You should say that a contractor could not collect his bill until he has done everything possible to carry out his contract.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. The contractor is just as much interested as the consumer, for if he does not furnish any current he does not get any pay.

Mr. BERGERON. I am speaking of places where they have no meter and where the electric light is furnished at a flat rate of so much per month. You may have people at dinner and your light goes out and you are left in darkness, and unless you have a barrel of oil in the barn or a supply of candles in the house you are never sure of having light. That may occur frequently, but, nevertheless, the contractor does not forget to send in his bill and make you pay it.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. No man should pay for what he does not get. It has got to be a strange community that will stand a contractor sending in his bill for light when he does not supply it.

Mr. BARR. The contractors for supplying electric light are human like all others, and I know that people have frequently got to pay when they are not supplied with light. I think the member for Beauharnois is right.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. In the next clause the responsiblity of contractors is defined, and there is a penalty clause when they make default in complying with the requirements.

Mr. BERGERON. If any such accident happens as is provided for in subsection 3, why should not the inspector make a note of the date when it happened, and the nature of the accident and how long it will take to repair it, so as to see that the contractor loses no time in putting the apparatus into proper shape?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is part of the inspector's duty now.

Mr. BERGERON. Then I would suggest that in every town where electricity is used a notice be put up in the post office giving the name and address of the inspector, so that consumers will know where to address him. If the contractors knew that these notices were up, that fact would go a good way to prevent abuses.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman were a contractor selling light, and there were 500 people with their lights out all telephoning to him, he would be sure to get a move on and get the lights put on as quickly as possible.

Mr. BERGERON. The contractor in the town I refer to has no telephone, and will not allow it to be put in.

Mr. LOUIS LAVERGNE. I understand that the inspector for Victoriaville and Arthabaskaville resides at St. Hyacinthe, forty miles distant. I think there should be an inspector for the two towns.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It would be impossible to appoint an inspector for every town and village in Canada where electricity is used. In some towns he would not have more than three or four hours' work in the year.

Mr. BERGERON. I thought my hon. friend said that in some places the officers of the Department of Inland Revenue could do that work?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. They are under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Inland Revenue.

Mr. BARR. It seems to me that an inspector should be appointed for every electoral county.

Mr. LOUIS LAVERGNE. The two towns I am speaking of are large towns. I only suggest that in the meantime the Inland Revenue officer should be the inspector of electric light meters.

Mr. LALOR. I do not agree with the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska (Mr. Louis Lavergne) when he thinks that a local inspector should be appointed for each town. I think we need some one more competent than a local inspector. If we had an inspector for a district, a man amply qualified, and the clerk of each town had his address so that he could be corresponded with, I think that would be sufficient. We want a government official in a central location where he can be reached.

Mr. LOUIS LAVERGNE. If we cannot have an inspector for these towns, the inspector at St. Haycinthe ought to come to inspect the meters more often than every five years. He should come at least every three years.

Mr. BARR. I quite agree with the last speaker, that five years is too long, as these meters get out of order very much more frequently, and the consumer is not aware of that fact.

On section 9—entry of purchaser's premises—repair of damages.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is a slight amendment to be made in subsection (c) of this section to make the wording conform to subsection (a). Subsection (c) provides for the removal of lines, &c. It should read :

(c) Removing any electric wires, meters, accumulators, fittings, works and apparatus belonging to the contractors, in cases, where a supply of electricity is no longer required or the contractors are authorized to take away and cut off the supply of electricity from any premises.

Mr. SPROULE. This section provides that any officer of the contractors authorized in writing by the inspector may enter premises at reasonable times to inspect or remove apparatus, and it provides :

Such officers shall repair all damage caused by such entry, inspection or removal.

There ought to be a further provision—that the work shall be done causing as little damage as may be. It is true that the officer must repair the damage, but this very fact may make him less careful than he ought to be. Suppose, for instance, he must take out wires from between floors. He may cut the floor in a place which will be very awkward. And his idea of repairing it may not be the idea of the owner.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I suppose that it will be a question between the consumer and the contractor. The consumer ought to compel the contractor to repair damages. It seems to me that you cannot go further than to place the liability.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Perhaps the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is not aware that the wiring of a house is not usually done by those who are designated as contractors in this Bill—those who furnish the current. The wiring is done by other parties, under the direction of the owner.

Mr. SPROULE. In the case of a new house, where it is intended to use electricity, that may be quite true. But where a house already built is to be wired and there is not more than one case in fifty where this is not the situation and this wiring is done usually at the instance of the person supplying the current and by his employees. All that I ask is that there should be the same provision here, as we have in the case, for instance, of cutting trees to facilitate the stringing of telegraph or telephone wires. The law provides that this may be done, but it is to be done with as little damage as may be. To save himself trouble, the workman taking out wires from between floors may cut the floor in a place where it would be impossible to restore it to its former appearance—practically destroy the floor. But he says he cannot conveniently do the work by cutting in a less conspicuous place—and besides he claims to repair the damage. He repairs it acording to his own idea, which may or may not be satisfactory to the owner.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) does not understand what I said. The contractor under this Bill is the one who furnishes the current, but he does not do the wiring——

Mr. SPROULE. His men do it.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. No, not usually. For instance, here in Ottawa there are men who engage in the work of wiring houses who have nothing whatever to do with the company who furnish the current.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman is the owner of an electric plant; let me ask him a question: Is it not true that, when that plant was established he sent round the town and made contracts with as many people as possible, and then sent men to wire the houses? Is not that the way it is done?

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Not always. There are contractors who do that work, and we have nothing to do with it. The owner of the house comes and tells us that his house is wired, and all we have to do is to connect it up, and turn on the current—we know nothing about how the wiring is done.

Mr. SPROULE. In the smaller places are not the two classes of men, but the man who has the plant puts in the wires.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. A. A. Wright) does not meet the point raised by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). This simply applies to the contractors, whoever they may be; and if they do not own the wires, &c., in the house, they cannot remove them.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. But this refers to the wires which takes the current to the house, we do not touch the wires in the house.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand perfectly what I am talking about. If the contractor has not put these works in, he has no right to remove them. But, to whomever this right of removal is given, it is only reasonable that he should be put under proper obligation to do his work with as little damage to the owner's property as may be. This is quite usual in such cases.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not subsection 2, providing for damages, cover that?

Mr. LENNOX. In a way, but not in the way pointed out by the hon. member for East Grey. It is one thing to provide that damages must be repaired. But the workman repairs it in his own way. It would be perfectly right to add that, in doing the work he shall cause as little damage as may be, and also that he shall repair whatever damage he does.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) is entirely wrong. We put in our service wires that convey the current to the house, but everything inside the house—wires, fixtures, lamps, and so on—belongs to the owner of the house.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, why do you want the right to take them out, if they do not belong to you?

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. This refers to the service wires that go from the street into the house. These wires carry the current to the wires in the house, and these inside wires belong to the proprietor and are left in the house.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Do I understand my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) to suggest that subclause (c) should be amended by inserting the words 'doing as little damage as may be'? Will that satisfy him.

Mr. SPROULE. That is all.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think that subsection is sufficient, and that, if these added words have any effect, it will only be to weaken the provision as a whole. But I have no objection to inserting the words. I think they will do no good and very little harm.

On section 10—fees,

Mr. LENNOX. Where a municipality is supplying electric light to its own citizens at probably as near cost as can be gauged, it does not seem to me fair that a license fee should be charged. They now pay $25 a year. This was originally intended to cover the case where a speculator is dealing in electric light, but where the municipality is supplying it, particularly having regard to the fact that the department has a surplus of $25,000 a year, I do not think this fee should be collected. Under this Act the government is putting a tax on the supply of electricity for power purposes throughout the country. The question of provincial rights might come up there, but I shall not discuss that now. I hope that the minister will himself move an amendment that this section shall not apply to municipalities supplying their own electric light.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The fee varies from $5 to $25, according to the number of lights, so that in small villages the license fee would not be more than $5, a very small fee for a municipality or corporation to pay. These fees are not levied for revenue purpose, and there may have to be a change in the regulations, as we have no desire to pile up a surplus. The fees may be reduced in the near future, not only for registration, but for inspection; or, as we are raising the qualification of inspectors, we may have to increase the expenditure, but we would then be giving a better service.

Mr. FOSTER. You will not appoint tailors as inspectors any more?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We will try not; we will try to get qualified men. I do not know that my friend's point is very strong. If we are to have a system of registration of companies supplying electricity, it would hardly seem wise not to have registration in the case of a town supplying electricity simply to avoid the payment of the small tax.

Mr. LENNOX. In the case I have in mind the fee is $25; it is a considerable town. There would be no difficulty in having registration without the fee. I feel that this is a direct tax by this government, and is not logical. Having regard to these circumstances, whether the fee is $5 or $25, it should not be imposed on municipalities.

On section 11—examination of inspectors,

Mr. FOSTER. The aim of the clause is excellent, and I am glad that this is being done, but I would like to ask whether you are allowing outsiders a chance to pass the qualifying examination, whether you will follow the civil service rule and make it open to any one to apply for examination, or confine it to the employees already in the office. Will it be thrown wide open, or will you confine it to the employees of the department?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is not intended to insist on an examination of those at present in the service, nor is it the intention to apply the civil service examination.

Mr. FOSTER. The examination, to be any good, would have to be a special examination; the papers would have to be prepared by the inspector or the chief of the department, or some one who understood the electric business; but it is arguable, if you want the best inspectors you can get, whether you should not throw it open to all Canada, to young engineers and those who are devoting their lives to the study of electricity, let them all have an opportunity of passing the examination, and then, when the department wants to appoint a man, they would have a wider choice.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That may come in time, but what is now proposed is to have a board of three examiners, of whom the chief inspector shall be one, for the examination of applicants for positions as inspectors or assistant inspectors. I do not suppose there will be any special time for examinations, but that will be a detail to be worked out in the future. There are not many appointments required, a new inspector may be needed in the west occasionally, where electricity is being used in every new town or village; but to adpot the method of the civil service, and have examinations at stated intervals for positions is something not exactly contemplated by this paragraph. We thought we were making a distinct step in advance, and I think we would have some difficulty if we were to attempt to enforce the conditions suggested by the hon. gentleman. In course of time there might be such an examination as my hon. friend refers to.

Mr. FOSTER. You do not propose to establish any test for those who are at present in the service. The very fact that you are proposing this section to-day shows that you have been driven to provide for qualified inspectors, and to get them by virtue of finding out whether they have the requisite knowledge, and the means by which you find that out is a proper examination. That presupposes the idea that you have found it necessary to have a better class of officials. Underlying that is the fact, I suppose, that you have had many men pressed upon you who had no qualification for the work, but who have been appointed. That is what you want to avoid in future. If the quality of the service is to be looked at, I should think that some test should be applied to those men who are already doing the work, a test which will show that the man is able to do the work for which you are paying him.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I realize what my hon. friend says. But he will recognize our difficulty. We have now a good many assistant inspectors of lights, many of whom could pass such an examination and many of them could not. I presume we would have to find a great many new assistant inspectors if we enforce a rigid examination.

Mr. FOSTER. If that is so, it is the worst condemnation I have heard passed on the department for some time. You have a number of assistant inspectors, and you fear that if you tested them by a proper examination and questions they would not pass the test. Now, an intelligent man who is qualified and who has been at the work for some time, ought to be able to pass a practical examination. If he is not, then some other place ought to be found for him.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I should have stated that I have some amendments to propose to this section. I propose that the whole section be struck out and the following be substituted:

1. The Governor in Council may appoint, for the purpose of this Act, an electrical expert to be known as the chief electrical engineer, together with such assistants as the head of the department may from time to time deem necessary, which electrical engineer shall, under the directions of the Minister of Inland Revenue, have the custody of the standards and the electric measures, and shall conduct all comparisons, verifications and other operations in respect of such measures and other electrical instruments, and shall have general supervision and direction of the work of electrical inspection throughout Canada.

I may say that although the chief electrical engineer has been in the business for a number of years, he has no legal status under the old Act. We propose giving him that by this clause.

2. No person shall be appointed to act as inspector or assistant inspector until he has passed a qualifying examination in electricity, such examination to be held by a board of three examiners, composed of the chief electrical engineer of the department, who shall preside, and two electrical experts to be appointed by the Governor in Council. Nothing herein contained shall affect the position or status of any person appointed prior to the passing of this Act.

3. Graduates in electrical engineering of any university in Canada may be appointed without passing the qualifying examination.

4. No inspector shall be a seller of electricity or electrical meters, or be employed by any person supplying electricity or meters.

Mr. FOSTER. The only change that is made is in giving a status to the electrical inspector, which is all right. At the same time, I have not got an answer yet, in that substituted subsection, as to whether you intend to put any pressure upon existing officials that they shall become thoroughly acquainted with their duties or else be dismissed.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The officials are becoming more competent from day to day and are rapidly qualifying themselves for their work. My hon. friend will see that this will put a stop, at all events in future, to the appointment of any inferior men. We have not a large number of officials doing this work. Many of them are well qualified, the majority are fairly qualified, though they might not pass a severe examination. I think it would be a hardship to some of these officials if we insisted upon their passing this examination. They are doing their duty fairly well.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a new institution, you know. You cannot have very many persons in connection with it. I should like to see a provision that those who are at present employed, within a fair length of time, should be obliged to qualify themselves by a practical examination. I have no faith in what you may call a literary examination. But a man who is inspecting electricity ought to be qualified for that purpose. If these men knew that at the end of a certain time they will be obliged to pass an examination of that kind, it would be a spur to them, and would bring up the service.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The chief inspector advises me that he will be disposed to encourage the present officials qualifying themselves and he would give them a reasonable time for that purpose, a year or two. It is entirely a departmental matter, and it is not necessary to put it in the Act.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not press that it should go into the Act.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. As long as that is the view of the chief inspector I would certainly fall in with my hon. friend's suggestion.

Mr. FOSTER. The officials of the government have to come in contact and mingle with the officers of electrical companies and men who know these subjects well, and the department does not want to be at a disadvantage and have its men compared unfavourably with other men doing similar work for electrical companies. The best way to discredit the service is to have competent men meet its officers and find that these officers are not what they ought to be—up-to-date.

On section 12—meters to be certified.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is no change in that section.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the department have any special meter which it favours in the way of merit and which it recommends or does it simply take every meter and judge it on its merits ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The department has no meter whatever that it recommends.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the public aware of all these regulations ? Is there any way of letting the public know, because I do not believe that a great many people avail themselves of these rules ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. All our officials and all companies have the law. I do not know if even consumers of electricity would bother reading the Act.

Mr. BERGERON. Does my hon. friend know or can he ascertain whether all those who are using electricity in the city of Montreal, either contractors or consumers have conformed with these rules ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not suppose they have. The statutes are printed, they are put through the House, discussion takes place upon them and the individual has to inform himself.

Mr. SPROULE. The individual has to pay for a meter if he gets it. It involves quite a cost, in many cases it prevents him from availing himself of the privilege and he therefore contracts at a flat rate for so many lights.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. If there is a flat rate there is no meter.

Mr. SPROULE. That is what I say. The reason why there are so few meters is that they cost so much. The contractor does not supply the meter.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. The contractor supplies the meter.

Mr. SPROULE. If he does he charges for it.

Mr. BERGERON. He charges twenty times over the cost of the meter.

Mr. HENDERSON. My reading of this clause is that the purchaser may use a meter if he desires. I would like to ask the minister if under this law the purchaser of electrical current can be compelled to put in a meter. The reason I ask this question is that in the village in which I live the municipal corporation supply the current with their own plant. They are insisting that every man shall put in a meter who takes current. From my reading of this Act I should judge that the purchaser is only obliged to do it if he so desires. Will that be the law that will govern ? Will that override any municipal by-law ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The purchaser, if he wants a meter to regulate the supply of electricity, can call for it.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is not the point. Suppose the purchaser says : I am not going to the expense of putting in a meter ; I am neither going to buy one nor rent one ; I will take my current at a flat rate. But the municipality says : You must put in a meter and have your current registered in that way. This clause does not compel the purchaser to put in a meter. The words are 'if the purchaser so desires.' It seems to me that the purchaser has the choice but in the case which I cite the municipality endeavours to force every man to put in a meter.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am afraid that is a question of law. I am not prepared to say if the municipality is entitled to force a man to accept a meter. But, if that were the only condition under which they would supply electric light he would have to put in a meter or not get light. It is a matter of contract. If a company or municipality supplied to all their other customers through a meter and not at a flat rate and one man wanted to buy his current at a flat rate and it was contrary to the way of doing business I imagine that the individual would have to put in a meter or go without electric light.

Mr. HENDERSON. Could he not say, under the Act passed by the Dominion parliament: I am only obliged to take my current by meter if I so desire? It seems to me that this Act is in conflict with the municipal by-law. From the answer which the minister has given—and he has given a very reasonable one—the municipality might say: We will not supply current at all.

Mr. BRODER. Suppose a municipality passes a by-law, puts in a plant and states the conditions upon which light shall be supplied, would this Act override a by-law voted on by the people of the municipality or town?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This Act does not in any way infringe upon any municipal or provincial jurisdiction. We have nothing to do with companies putting in plants, wiring, poles, or anything else. We are simply providing a law for measuring the quantity of electrical energy furnished for power or light. There we have jurisdiction. But we have no jurisdiction over what would be a matter of contract which comes within provincial or municipal jurisdiction.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. The purchaser is obliged to accept a meter because with a flat rate the contractor sells his energy at four times what it is worth sometimes. We are obliged to have a meter and a good inspection of the meter. That is the only way we can procure light at a reasonable rate. By the flat rate they charge more than by the meter rate.

On section 13—meters to be verified and stamped.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN moved to amend the section to read as follows:

No electricity meter shall be admitted to verification in Canada until it has received the approval of the department.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 17—inspection of meters.

Mr. LOUIS LAVERGNE. An interval of five years for the inspection of a meter is too long; I move that the time be reduced to three years.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. That is not necessary, and further the adoption of the amendment would largely increase the expense. If an inspector comes to our town to inspect meters we have to arrange a place for him in our office; we have to get an expert to take down the meter and to put it up again, and a man with a horse and rig to carry it backwards and forwards. The inspection of 100 meters will cost you $50 or $75, in addition to the expenses connected with their taking down and putting up. The latest meters are perfectly good for five years unless some accident happens, and why we should be burdened with this unnecessary extra expense is more than I can see.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is a tax on the consumer.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Certainly, it eventually must come out of him, and it is absolutely unnecesary.

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose the meter always works to the advantage of the electric light contractor.

Mr. CONMEE. The consumer always gets the worst of it.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. That is not so. There is an old story that you never can find an honest miller unless there is a tuft of hair growing on the palm of his hand, but those days are passed. If the least dust gets on the disc of the meter, it retards the motion and the meter continually goes slower.

Mr. TAYLOR. And the consumer has the benefit?

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Yes. I can assure hon. gentlemen that where one meter goes fast you will get 150 that go slow and do not record as much as they should. You may believe that or not as you like, but it is a fact.

Mr. CARVELL. My experience has been that the older the meter is the slower it goes.

Mr. BERGERON. Then, make the inspection every ten years instead of five.

Mr. CARVELL. There is no reason for imposing this additional expense of having the meters inspected every three years instead of five years. My hon. friend (Mr. Wright) is very modest in the estimate of the cost of having 100 meters inspected; I believe it would cost $100 rather than $25.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. And section 18 provides that the purchaser or contractor may at any time, at the cost of the party at fault, require verification of the meter.

Mr. FOSTER. That ought to be sufficient.

Mr. HENDERSON. Suppose I buy a meter from a responsible house, am I to have it inspected by the government inspector ?

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Unless it is inspected by the government inspector you are fined.

Mr. CARVELL. Every meter has to be inspected by the government inspector before it is placed in service.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is it legal for a man in the business to sell a meter that has not been inspected?

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then it should be made illegal. I purchased a meter last year from a reputable firm in Toronto, I had it put in by our own electrician and it has never been verified so far as I know by the government inspector.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. If a man wants to buy a meter for his own use he can do what he likes about it.

Mr. CARVELL. A meter in perfect order might be bought in say Toronto, but if it has to be shipped to any great distance, the jolting might affect the machinery and on its arrival at destination it might be entirely unfit for use. The inspection of a meter is more a readjustment than anything else. There is nothing to be gained by inspecting a meter at the factory where it is made, because it has to be adjusted when it is put in place for use. It is not a proper meter unless it has been inspected at that time.

Amendment (Mr. Louis Lavergne) withdrawn.

On section 18,

Mr. FOSTER. The minister will have to settle the matter with the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell), who says that a meter which may be perfectly correct at one place may not be a proper meter at all when it comes to be put up, owing to the jolting that it receives in transmission ; but under this section you allow a man to take a meter that has been verified at Cape Breton, and jolt it all over the Canadian Pacific Railway to Vancouver, and use it there.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I have an amendment to overcome that difficulty.

On section 24,

Mr. FOSTER. How much would that fee be ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. From 75 cents to $1.50.

Mr. HENDERSON. If I, living 35 miles west of Toronto, wanted to have a meter inspected, where would I find an inspector?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The inspector at Toronto would advise any person where the nearest inspector resided, or would send a man immediately to any place where an inspection was desired.

Mr. HENDERSON. That might be a very costly affair. One might have to pay his railway fare.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The department pays that.

On section 34—penalty for fixing unstamped meter.

Mr. HENDERSON. This section, it seems to me, is very stringent. I suggest, instead of providing the penalty here proposed apply to 'every person who fixes for use, or causes to be fixed for use any meter, before it has been verified and stamped' should provide that 'every person who knowingly fixes for use,' and so on. The penalty should not apply to the person who acts in ignorance of the law.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I have no objection to that amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 39—recovery of penalty.

Mr. TAYLOR. In the second line of subsection 2, the words 'justice or' should be inserted. The section provides that penalties may be levied by warrant under the hand and seal of 'the convicting justices.' Certain of these trials may take place before one justice. Therefore, this should read : 'under the hand and seal of the convicting justice or justices.'

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes, there might be but one.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 42,

The Electric Light Inspection Act, chapter 88 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is hereby repealed.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has the minister been careful to see that he has the right number of the chapter, according to the new Revised Statutes ? We had to correct a mistake of that kind this morning.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes—the Revised Statutes of 1906.

Bill reported.

SUBSIDIES TO PROVINCES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). With the consent of the House, I desire to make a motion without notice. It will be remembered that the House passed an address to His Majesty on the question of provincial subsidies. The question has been raised whether the language of the address adequately expresses all that was desired, particularly in relation to the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, in respect of which there are particular arrangements for the taking of a census which do not apply to the other provinces. There is a general saving clause in the address, which we thought, covered the ground ; but, as doubt has arisen, we desire to be on the safe side. The Senate has not yet dealt with the address. Therefore, I move :

Resolved, that a message be sent to the Senate requesting that their honours will be pleased to return to this House for further consideration the address to His Most Excellent Majesty the King, which was adopted by the House of Commons on the twenty-fifth day of March last, and which was transmitted to the Senate on the fourth day of April instant, for their honours' concurrence.

Ordered, that the clerk of the House do carry the said message to the Senate.

The object will be to make such amendment as I have indicated.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). When the return of that motion is made, as requested, there will be an opportunity to refer to the motion.

Mr. FIELDING. The matter will come up. and we shall have to propose an amendment such as we think will have the desired affect, so as to make assurance doubly sure.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the Speaker allow it to be made ?

Mr. FIELDING. If it comes back and is recommitted.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that the address has not been discussed in the Upper Chamber ?

Mr. FIELDING. It has not been dealt with in the Senate yet.

Mr. FOSTER. But, I understand that the question has been raised whether it is inclusive of the basis agreed upon at the time of the interprovincial conference so as to give proper consideration to every one of the provinces.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes it turned entirely on the question of taking the census. Whereas in the case of the Dominion generally there is a decennial census, my hon. friend is aware that special provision has been made in the case of the western provinces owing to their very rapid growth ; it is provided that there should be a quinquennial census and further that between the two five-year periods there should be an official estimate of population, on which subsidies shall be calculated. That is a special provision in regard to the western provinces in view of the fact that they are in a period of rapid growth and if they had to wait for the ten years they might suffer disadvantage. Parliament has taken that into consideration and made special provision for it, and the fear is that the words of the address as it now stands have not covered that important fact. I may say that there is a saving clause which was intended to cover all special provisions for the benefit of any province, but a doubt has been raised as to whether it is broad enough for that.

Mr. HAGGART. Why not amend the address in the Senate.

Mr. FIELDING. It could properly be contended I think that although this is not a direct appropriation it is a money Bill and as such cannot be amended in the Senate.

Mr. FOSTER. There was no doubt at all that this House in passing the address meant to take cognizance of the censuses between the decade censuses.

Mr. FIELDING. Surely.

Mr. FOSTER. And the object is to clear this of any doubt that will be conveyed to the British Throne.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the exact fact.

Mr. SPROULE. I am glad that the minister has found it out at last because twice I drew his attention to it in the House and he said it was covered.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no recollection of my friend speaking of it, but I have already mentioned that there is a saving clause in the address which is supposed to cover that ; legal gentlemen however have raised a doubt as to whether it is broad enough and if there is a doubt my hon. friend will agree that we will have to make it absolutely clear.

Mr. SPROULE. I called attention to it.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend may be right ; he sometimes is.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS' LOAN.

House in committee to consider the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide as follows:

1. The Governor in Council may from time to time advance and pay to the corporation of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, hereinafter called 'the corporation,' in addition to the moneys authorized to be advanced to the corporation by the Governor in Council by chapter 36 of the statutes of 1903 such sums of money, not exceeding in the whole the sum of three million dollars, as are required to enable the corporation to complete the terminal facilities of the port of Montreal now under construction, and to construct such further terminal facilities as are necessary to properly equip said port.

2. No such advances shall be made unless the plans, specifications and estimates for the works to be performed by the corporation, and on which the money so to be advanced is to be expended, have been first submitted to and approved by the Governor in Council.

3. The corporation shall, upon any advance being made, deposit with the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, debentures of the corporation equal in par value to the advance so made (which debentures the corporation are hereby authorized to issue), and such debentures so issued shall be of such amounts as the Minister of Finance and Receiver General determines, and shall bear date on the day when such advance is made, and shall be repayable within twenty-five years from the date of their issue, and in the meantime shall bear interest at the rate of three per cent per annum, such interest to be payable half-yearly, on the first day of July and the first day of January in each year.

4. The principal and interest of the sums advenced under the authority of this Act to the corporation shall be paid by the corporation out of its revenue mentioned in section 8 of chapter 10 of the statutes of 1896 (first session), and shall be a charge upon the said revenue in the same manner and to the same extent as if the sums so advanced had been borrowed by the corporation under the said chapter 10.—Mr. Fielding.

Mr. FIELDING. It has been the policy of the government and parliament of Canada for many years to grant aid to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, in regard to the important work which they have in charge, in the form of loans. Beginning in the year 1896, a loan was made to the harbour commissioners of $2,000,000 at 3½ per cent. The loans made to the harbour commissioners have been as follows :

Year.	Amount.	Rate, per cent.
1896..	$2,000,000	3½
1898..	2,000,000	3
1901..	1,000,000	3
1903..	3,000,000	3
1906..	250,000	3

It will be observed that on the second loan in 1898 the rate of interest charged was reduced by a half per cent.

There have thus been authorized loans to the Board of Commissioners of the Montreal Harbour, during the period which I have mentioned, to the extent of $8,250,000. Up to date the amount of advances actually made under that authority is, in round numbers, $7,250,000, leaving about $1,000,000 of the authorized sum still available. But the Montreal Harbour Commissioners have large works now in hand and will require for the completion of these works, and for other works which are required in the very near future, very considerable sums of money beyond this $1,000,000 which is still in the hands of the government. It is therefore proposed to loan them the further sum of $3,000,000 as proposed in the resolution which is now before the chairman. It is only fair that we should say as respects the Montreal Harbour Commission that all these large sums which have been loaned have been interest-bearing assets and that the interest upon them has been regularly and promptly paid.

Mr. HENDERSON. Out of capital ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, out of the traffic of the country. Sometimes our friends in Montreal like to present the view that they particularly pay the interest on that capital, but what really happens is that the trade of the Dominion very largely passes over the Montreal docks, and that trade, as it fairly should, has paid the interest on the harbour facilities. At all events the harbour commissioners have always paid the interest very promptly so that in reality all we can charge against the Montreal harbour in the matter is the reduced rate of interest at which we have loaned them the money. In the present instance, for example, we are loaning it to them at 3 per cent, whereas the position of the money market would justify a higher rate. However, I think the committee generally will feel that Montreal harbour bears such an important relation to the trade of the whole Dominion that we will be only too ready to assist the commissioners in the work they have in hand by loaning the money at that rate, even though it involves some little loss to the treasury.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any sinking fund attaching to any of these loans ?

Mr. FIELDING. Speaking from memory I should say not, but I shall ascertain. There has been recently a reorganization of the Board of Commissioners. The new commission, Messrs. Stephens, Ballantyne and Geoffrion have prepared details of improvements which they desire to carry on, and have submitted them to the government as the basis for the application for this loan. The acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fisher) is more familiar with the details of that than I am, and I have no doubt he will be very glad to furnish any additional information required.

Mr. FOSTER. Does this loan run for any length of time ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think for 25 years.

Mr. BERGERON. It is a fiction, this loaning of money to a body that will never pay it back ?

Mr. FIELDING. They pay the interest.

Mr. BERGERON. As a matter of fact if the Department of Public Works would administer the harbour themselves without any commission it would be more regular, it would be taking money from the public treasury to spend in a certain part of the country. We have heard of the loaning of money in this way before. A lot of money has been loaned to the Quebec Harbour Commissioners on which they have never paid a cent of interest. Money was loaned also to the Harbour Commission of Three Rivers. This loaning of money to a corporation created by the government of Canada is a fiction.

Mr. FIELDING. It is not a fiction in the case of Montreal.

Mr. BERGERON. We talked about having a national harbour, a free harbour, and bringing the trade of the world through the channel of our river. This of course is not the proper time to discuss this, but I think it would be a great deal better to abolish the Harbour Commission. The present commission is probably an improvement on what we had before, but the old commission was really almost a scandal in Montreal. There was open fighting among the commissioners, bad trade arrangements have been made for which, after all, we are responsible because we vote the money, it is public money. There has been fighting between contractors and the old harbour board. As a matter of fact the board has always been the loser. They have been making bargains with contractors who made deposits, the contractors did not complete their work and yet the deposits were given back to them. The whole arrangement was the laughing stock of Montreal. The new commissioners, all three of them, are respectable men, but whether they are entirely the men to do justice to the harbour of Montreal I do not know. The way they will act will prove their capacity. But I say again we are loaning money to a body which we have created ourselves, and which will never pay this money back. It is our money, but instead of spending it ourselves, we hand it over to some other gentlemen to spend for us.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the resolution is carried we ought to know generally what this money is going to be expended upon. There is a good deal in what my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has said as to the probability of this money never being returned, so far as the capital is concerned. What the Finance Minister says is admitted. The harbour of Montreal has always paid interest upon the loans which have been put into its hands. But what I object to is that this is another example of doing things by piecemeal. Here is now $3,000,000 more, which will run up to $11,250,000 of money of the country in the shape of a loan, outside of all we have expended upon the channel of the St. Lawrence river, at a very low rate of interest, expecially at the present time. Now whilst we all look upon Montreal as being easily the first port—and if any port has a right to be called the national port it is the port of Montreal—yet we have other seaports of very great importance. I complain that the government will not take up the subject of the other great ports of the Dominion and deal with them in a comprehensive way and upon some general plan. The one that is most insistent, the one that is nearest by, the one that can make the strongest claim, gets the ear of the government, and the public moneys run that way. We are not objecting to the improvement of the harbour of Montreal so long as the money goes to the objective point. I do not know what this commission will do, I hope it will do better than the other commission, and I believe it will. But if it does not do better, it will not command the confidence of the people of this country. Although the government has had plenty of time, it has had its experts, its commissions, and a large amount of money, yet we have the great ports of our Dominion neglected, outside of Quebec and Montreal, with a loan to the harbour of Three Rivers. We have had no consecutive, uniform or comprehensive action with reference to what is to be done. Take the port of St. John. The people of that city have done more than the people of any other city in Canada towards the equipment of their port, and the Dominion has done probably less than it had done for any other large city of the Dominion. It is a very important port, and as the transport system enlarges, and the volume of outgo and income increases through the harbour of St. John, an immense traffic is finding its way in and out. It is not equipped as it ought to be, and it seems something like an injustice that three or four millions should be poured into the port of Montreal, and that comparatively nothing at all should be done for other ports. With reference to the city of Quebec, we have loaned them money, they have not paid even the interest upon it, and we are to-day loaning money, and we are putting work of our own into that harbour at the same time. The whole thing is as bad as it can be with regard to the confusion of authorities in the city of Quebec. Surely it is time for this government, after it has been in power for ten years and has made all its investigations, to come down to this parliament with a comprehensive scheme for the improvement of our national ports, on some wise system, some well thought out plan; then there would not be this feeling of inequality, I do not say of favouritism, but a feeling of opportunism, doing just what you have to do at the time and doing it by piecemeal. I am not going to object to loaning this money. I imagine it will turn out just as my hon. friend says, that some time in the future, in the equipment of our national ports this will be taken into account as an equipment for the port of Montreal. I do not say that you should bestow just as much money on St. John or Halifax, or Vancouver as you do on Montreal. They are proportionately to be considered in the degree of their importance and their interest. But I do say it is really a shame that the government will not take this matter up in a business like way and come to a conclusion, well reasoned out, wisely taken, and then going to work and doing what is one of the most essential things to be done at this time, that is, the equipment of terminal facilities at our ocean ports. We are going ahead with the development of our inland transport system. Our railroads are being increased by hundreds and thousands of miles each year, our productive capacity, especially in the west, is increasing by leaps and bounds. Every hundred thousand people who go in there and begin to produce, send a volume of ever increasing exports and call for a volume of ever increasing imports, and all this has to find its way in and out, so far as foreign markets are concerned, through half a dozen or less ports. And what are we doing for the future? Some day we will be caught between wind and water, and we will find that the trouble will occur, not in the inland facilities for transport, but in having proper terminal facilities for getting out goods that the internal transport brings, and the call for taking goods into the interior. I cannot too strongly impress this necessity upon the government. I believe it is the feeling of this country that they have been dawdling too long altogether over this question of equipping a number of our national ports, with fairness and justice to all the different ports of the country. I think they should come to a conclusion as soon as possible, so that the country may not labour under the inequality of having a large amount of money put in one place and comparatively nothing done for another. Take Victoria, Vancouver, St. John, Halifax and Quebec, and you have ports that you can well call national ports.

Mr. LEMIEUX. And Gaspé.

Mr. FOSTER. Gaspé does not amount to anything yet, it has got size but not much else. We can hardly count Gaspé yet as an ocean port.

Mr. FISHER. I quite agree with the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), that it is important that all our large ports, which handle our enormous export and import trade, should be properly equipped for that trade. I am not prepared to go so far as he implies, without saying so, that until we have formed a complete scheme for the equipment of all these ports we should not do any work like this in one or more of those ports which must necessarily handle our trade. If we were to wait until a plan of that kind was to be elaborated and until we had a complete scheme of harbour equipment, of wharfs, the necessary depth of water, appliances for the handling of traffic, warehouses, sheds and railway terminals and communications, we would have to wait a long time, and in the meantime the trade of the country would suffer. We can, however, work towards that end as the necessities of the trade most urgently require, and we can do that by various means which at the moment seem best. It may be that as time goes on, as our trade develops and as we find out more about the necessities of each individual port, we may have, to a certain extent, to modify the work which is being done. This is a young and growing country, a country in which everything is advancing, and, as circumstances and conditions change, it may be that plans and schemes which were drafted five years ago are to-day antiquated and entirely inadquate to the trade of the country. If we were to-day to elaborate a scheme for the five or six ports that my hon. friend mentions and in each of these ports to lay down a complete plan for their development and improvement, before that plan could be half completed it would have to be modified and changed in many respects. That is a necessity in a rapidly growing country. We have had this question up on various occasions. We have had the Transportation Commission's report brought before the House and quoted, but there are to-day conditions different from those which existed when the Transportation Commission reported and we have already demands on the part of transportation companies and of trade that different things be done from those which the Transportation Commission considered to be necessary and adequate. We are here proposing to do things in the port of Montreal which are to a large extent the carrying to completion of a plan which, with some slight modifications, was adopted and well understood some years ago. We are carrying out that plan with such modifications as have been found advantageous by the experts employed in carrying it out since the original contracts were let.

Mr. HAGGART. Are the plans approved by the government?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, all of them. The harbour commissioners' plans are submitted and approved by order in council on the recommendation, now of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, formerly of the Department of Public Works. The change in the commission, in Montreal, I think, has been beneficial. The old commission, not from any remissness on the part of the members of it, but because of its cumbrous composition and its unwieldly methods of doing business—methods not controlled by itself—was inefficient, and I am glad to know that the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) has expressed exactly the same view. I believe that the whole of the city of Montreal and particularly those interested in the import and export trade there, have approved of the change and the personnel of the commission as to-day constituted. These gentlemen took hold of the work last fall and they have since devoted themselves to it in an energetic way, in a way which has already accomplished a great deal. The plan which they have submitted and which requires this loan has met with the approval of those whom they have consulted. They took the step of consulting with the transportation and commercial interests of Montreal. They heard their views, they tried to harmonize these views and they have put before us a deliberate scheme showing how they intend to use this money. I have before me a statement from the commission which was sent to my hon. colleague, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) and which he left with me. The sum amounts to about $3,500,000. There is required for the completion of the sheds nearly $2,250,000, elevated roadways to the sheds, $400,000, harbour dredging, $300,000; Dominion Coal Company's wharf at Hochelaga, $250,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that part of the harbour under the control of the commissioners?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Did I hear the hon. gentleman rightly that they require $2,250,000 for sheds?

Mr. FISHER. They require $2,217,500, paving the wharfs, $125,000, railway tracks and their management, $75,000, raising Jacques Cartier pier, $35,000, completing Bickerdike pier, $25,000, latrines, fire protection, &c., $10,000, overhead bridge, Victoria pier, $8,500, fire tug and movable derrick, $150,000, making a total of $3,446,000. The harbour commissioners have at the present time a little over $950,000, so that instead of $3,500,000 in round figures they would only need $2,500,000. But, as my hon. friend said a few minutes ago we do not wish to do this piecemeal, and we expect that there will be additional works required before the expiration of two years during which they expect to carry out this work. We therefore ask for authority to loan them $3,000,000. This work is expected to be carried out in about two years' time. I perhaps should state that there were delays which were incidental to the earlier part of this work and which were due to accidents over which the members of the government had no control and over which, I think, that perhaps the commissioners did not altogether have control. I hope that further delays will be obviated and that we will be able to see this work carried out to completion in about two years' time.

Mr. BERGERON. Are the plans for the sheds adopted now and is there going to be any change?

Mr. FISHER. No. Changes have been made, the plans as changed have been approved, arrangements have been made with the contractor to complete these sheds under the new plans, every dispute has been settled and regulated and the harbour commissioners have now reached a complete agreement with the contractor by which they have disposed of his claims for damages and delays and his necessary claims for changes in the plans. He has now his arrangements completed and perfected for the carrying out of the rest of the work without delay or change.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is the contractor there?

Mr. FISHER. Messrs. Peter Lyall & Sons.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the amount of the contract with Messrs. Peter Lyall & Sons at first?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know. I have not the contract here.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the amount of money which was to be forfeited if the contract was not carried out? There has been considerable discussion between the contractor and the harbour commissioners.

Mr. FISHER. The contractor made a claim against the commission of some $600,000 in consequence of the changes in the plans and various things that were not dealt with as promptly as he thought they should be. He claimed compensation for delays and loss in consequence of the increase in cost of materials. That claim was submitted to a board composed of the engineer of the harbour commissioners, the engineer of the Marine Department, and, I think, Mr. Audette of the Exchequer Court, who finally gave an award of $350,000 in round figures instead of some $650,000 which the contractor was claiming. That award was accepted by the contractor and by the harbour commission.

Mr. BERGERON. That amount is in addition to the contract price?

Mr. FISHER. That is over the original contract price. The original contract however was somewhat modified in the plan, and as a consequence the harbour commissioners were obliged to pay to the contractors a difference which was reached on the basis of so much per shed, and which came to, I think, something over $200,000 on the 14 sheds.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the total cost of all the sheds?

Mr. FISHER. The original contract was $2,305,000 for 14 sheds.

Mr. FOSTER. Who got in the way of the contractor to cause the delay?

Mr. FISHER. After the plans of the sheds were adopted, the shipping people pointed out that it would be impossible for them to handle their freight properly if the sheds were so constructed, and after a great deal of discussion and delay there was a report by the harbour engineer, as well as by the outside engineer, that a change in the plan was necessary. While the discussion was going on, the contractor was stopped in his work and the price of the material having increased in the meantime he made a claim which was dealt with in the way I have outlined.

Mr. BERGERON. The fact remains that in all questions of this kind the country is ever the loser. Some years ago a contractor named Connors from Buffalo put up a deposit of $50,000 to do some work, but having failed in his contract he got the $50,000 back. The present arrangement under which the Montreal harbour is managed is unbusinesslike and detrimental to the interests of the country. The people pay the money, but they are not the masters of the expenditure. Formerly they were in the hands of gentlemen on the Montreal Harbour Commission whom the government were glad to get rid of, and now we have this new commission which I admit is composed of honest and respectable men.

Mr. FISHER. And capable men.

Mr. BERGERON. I will not go so far as to say that. I say they are respectable and honest men, but I cannot see what special qualifications Mr. Stephens has to put at the head of a work of that importance. Mr. Ballantyne is a commercial traveller, or a business man, and Mr. Geoffrion is a wholesale grocer. They are respectable men and good business men in their own line of business, but I am not sure that that qualifies them to be at the head of such a work as this.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I believe they are the best qualified men for that work.

Mr. BERGERON. That is a matter of opinion, and when the Minister of Agriculture says the whole city of Montreal approved of their nomination, I may tell him that the citizens of Montreal were not consulted and had no opportunity to express their satisfaction or otherwise. The system in the Montreal harbour is no better now than it was in years gone by; I remember 28 years ago, asking the Minister of Public Works of that day for details of expenditure there, and his answer was that we could not get it because it was in the hands of the Harbour Commission. The Transportation Commission has outlined what should be done with regard to all our harbours, but the minister tells us to-day that conditions have changed so rapidly that the government cannot carry out the report of that commission. If that be so, what was the use of appointing that commission other than for the sake of bestowing patronage. The government should directly control the harbour of Montreal as it controls other harbours in the country. A few years ago we gave $750,000 to the harbour of St. John, and there is no objection to that if the money is properly expended. Recently, some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, who visited Halifax, told me they did not understand why the government of Canada had not spent more money in improving the facilities of Halifax harbour. It is the same way with Vancouver and Victoria, and of course the harbour of Quebec. If these are national works they should be controlled by the national government. The present system of delegating the powers of government to outsiders is unbusinesslike. It would be more constitutional and better all round to expend this money under the direction of a department of government, than to expend it through men who are not responsible to the people, and to whom it makes no difference whether the contracts they let are good or not. When Mr. Tarte was Minister of Public Works he was continually and openly quarrelling with the harbour commissioners of Montreal, to the disadvantage of the port. The harbour commissioners of Montreal have one of the very best engineers in the country; the Department of Public Works had another first-class engineer, but these engineers were constantly coming in conflict, and the public were unable to decide which was right. It is in consequence of this kind of thing that the delays and changes of plans have taken place, and that the country has now to pay $350,000 for this bickering. I have my own opinion, that while Mr. Lyall was asking for $650,000 if he had gone before a court of justice he would not have been entitled to the $350,000, and whether he is entitled to it or not, this great expense put upon the country is due to the fact that the Montreal Harbour Commission did not discharge its duties properly. The present system is not a business-like one, and it should be changed as soon as possible.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. HONORE GERVAIS (St. James, Montreal) Before this resolution is adopted, I would like to say a few words upon it. The sum of $3,446,000, which is being asked for the improvement of the harbour of Montreal, is quite inadequate for that purpose. Moreover, Canada is merely asked to become the guarantor of the Montreal Harbour Commission for that amount. My fear is that the improvements in that port which have been talked of for some years will not be carried out very speedily. They will not be carried out as speedily as those which were made at the instance of the old merchants of Montreal when the port was under the supervision of the Royal Marine Engineers, like Mr. Bayfield and Mr. John Young. Government interference has to my mind delayed the improvements in and around the port of Montreal since the time the port was under the charge of Trinity House, and more especially since the Harbour Commission was established in 1874 or thereabouts. We will not say much about the new commission; the people of Montreal will wait and see what it will do for the improvement of the port. I have not been made very fully acquainted, I regret, with the figures which have just been read to the House. But nevertheless, I hold in my hand the memorial of Mr. George W. Stephen, which has been communicated to me by the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), and which he had got from the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The chairman of the new harbour board, I find, asked that $3,446,000 from the parliament of Canada for the purpose of improving the port. I say that this sum is not sufficient It is all very well to say that the channel between Quebec and Montreal has been sufficiently deepened. For the requirements of the trade of to-day that channel is deep enough; we are not supposed to deepen it for ships which are not waiting to come into it. However, I wish to point out to the House that for the permanent needs of the port of Montreal we need five improvements. I will merely enumerate them. In the eleven items set out in this memorial of Mr. Stephen, which is dated March 28, 1907, I do not see any item to my mind will very materially improve the port of Montreal. In the first place, we need the paving of all the wharfs and piers of the port. Do you know what is the total length of piers and wharfs in Montreal? It is just 38,000 feet, and for the paving of these the sum of $125,000 is totally insufficient. I may say that after a rainfall the wharfs of Montreal are quite muddy and totally unfit for the proper hauling of heavy goods. In the second place, this parliament should grant the necessary money to provide for proper loading and unloading facilities. We have not at present in Montreal such facilities as are to be found in other great ports both in Europe and America. I may be asked, what do you propose? I propose that a sufficient sum of money should be voted by this parliament for the building of hydraulic steam and electric cranes for the rapid loading and unloading of ships. I do not see any proposal to that effect in the memorial of Mr. Stephen. In the third place, I think we should have an adequate system for the transportation of goods after they have been unloaded from the ships or for the purpose of loading the ships. That system should consist of steam or electric railways which would take the goods after they have been unloaded from the ships and have passed the customs, to the consignee. For example, if Henry Morgan & Co., who have a large wholesale and retail dry goods establishment on St. Catherines street near Phillip's Square, receive a case of goods from Liverpool or London or France, they should be enabled to receive their goods within a few hours after they have been unloaded, if the ship is anchored below Nelson's column or near Longue Point. There is no reason why there should not be a system of street cars for transporting goods from the ship to the consignee.

Mr. FOSTER. You want the government to provide that?

Mr. GERVAIS. It should be an accessory of the port of Montreal. If you look at the reports which have been made to the British parliament in regard to foreign ports, you will find that in every case these transportation facilities are considered as an accessory of a first-class port.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose the importer happened to live in Kingston or Toronto. what would become of the delivery of his goods?

Mr. GERVAIS. This system of street car facilities should be used only for local deliveries.

Then, in the fourth place, we should have greater customs house facilities. We should have warehouses for customs examination, as well as for the purpose of goods warehousing. I do not find in this memorial of Mr. Stephen anything relating to an expenditure for these facilities which are much needed in Montreal. For example, let us say that three cases of goods arrive for a certain importer; it will be three or four days before these goods are examined at the delivering warehouse and the importer gets delivery of the same. I think that is altogether too long a delay. Within a few hours after the unloading, these goods should be properly examined for customs purposes, and then, if the duties are paid, the goods should be delivered without further delay. I would call attention also to the fact that these customs warehouses should be built opposite St. Mary's current, say three-quarters of a mile below McGill street. As every one knows, all the harbour facilities in and around the port of Montreal are concentrated within three-quarters of a mile, when they should be extended between Longue Pointe church and St. Mary's current, a distance of about six miles, where any depth of water desired can be found, without improvements, dredging or other expenditures.

In the fifth place we should have a dry dock built within the limits of the port of Montreal—that is within this range that I have spoken of between Longue Pointe church and St. Mary's current. I do not find in Mr. Stephen's report anything for that purpose.

These are the various and diverse reasons for which I say that the estimate now asked of this House is quite insufficient, quite inadequate. I think that, instead of making a request for three millions and a half of dollars, the Harbour Commission of Montreal should have filed before this House a request for ten millions. That is the proper amount that should be asked for to suitably build, equip, maintain and manage what you call the great national port of Montreal.

Mr. LENNOX. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gervais) a question?

Mr. GERVAIS. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. I would ask the hon. gentleman when he expects to have the general elections?

Mr. GERVAIS. I have no official standing before this House to answer such a question. I leave it to the government to decide when the proper time comes.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask for information, is not that a government-owned elevator that was built a few years ago on the water front at Montreal?

Mr. GERVAIS. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. What business has been done through that elevator since its construction?

Mr. GERVAIS. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) to submit that query to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Not much grain has been unloaded into that elevator. What we want in Montreal is not so much what you call permanent or stationary elevators as floating elevators. With twenty-eight or thirty floating elevators, the Montreal Grain Elevating Company of Montreal during the last forty years, under the skilful management of Mr. Alexander MacDougall, has built up a trade of 30,000,000 bushels a year. I fear that not many million bushels of grain have been unloaded into that permanent or stationary elevator. As I have said what we want is floating elevators. Also, we should have a system of premiums for the purpose of compensating ships detained while waiting to load their cargoes for Europe from canal boats coming down from the great lakes. The estimate that I put for the proper and final equipment of the port of Montreal is a fair one. I hold that the request for $3,446,000 does not go far enough, and that the proper request to be made is one for $10,000,000. And I may say that if we do not hurry up, if this new board which has been appointed for the management of the harbour of Montreal does not move quickly, some great injury to the trade of Canada will be the consequence. At any rate, I trust that Mr. Stephens, the able chairman of the Montreal Harbour Board, and his able colleagues will be equal to the task of maintaining Montreal as the great national port of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the minister (Mr. Fisher) what is the cost of the large elevator at Montreal and what quantity of grain went through it last year?

Mr. FISHER. I have not these figures here.

Mr. BENNETT. Cannot the officials give us the idea within a few thousand dollars of what it cost and what amount of trade was done through the elevator last year?

Mr. FISHER. I have not those figures before me. The elevator itself is finished, but the carrier system to connect it with the wharfs or ships is not finished. Part of this loan will go to finishing that system.

Mr. BENNETT. There must have been great dereliction of duty on the part of the department for, unless I am wrong, this elevator was constructed three or four years ago. And what is the government doing with the government-owned elevators at St. John and Halifax? What quantity of grain went through those elevators last year?

Mr. FISHER. I have not those figures here.

Mr. BENNETT. The deputy minister must know if any trade was done through these elevators which are both owned by the Department of Public Works, I believe.

Mr. FIELDING. The elevators at St. John and Halifax come under the control of the Department of Railways and Canals. My impression is that only small quantities of grain have passed through these.

Mr. BENNETT. I think I am within the mark in saying that these three elevators have cost the Dominion of Canada $1,000,000. They stand as monuments of incapacity on the part of the government that constructed them.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. As soon as the $10,000,000 is granted they will get into operation.

Mr. FIELDING. As to these elevators being a monument of incapacity or as to whether their construction was wise or unwise, I say nothing now. But, in the case of the St. John and Halifax elevators, these are works to which the people of these communities attached great importance and which they thought of great value in equipping their ports. How well they have served that purpose may be open to debate; but the fact is that they were constructed in response to strong public opinion, and, in the case of Halifax, the citizens of the place contributed largely to the cost of the elevator.

Mr. DANIEL. With regard to the elevator of the Intercolonial Railway in St. John and the warehouses there, these were constructed under the administration of Mr. Blair, who had made an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway by which that road was to provide freight for the Intercolonial Railway. I believe they were put there in good faith by Mr. Blair, and that, if the Grand Trunk Railway had carried out the arrangement which Mr. Blair made with them, the expenditure would have been amply justified. I do not think that any mistake was made when the elevator was provided and the arrangements made for the shipments by the Intercolonial Railway wharf. I do not think that was misplaced expenditure.

This winter the Intercolonial Railway elevator at St. John has been doing more business. I may say too that some years ago, when I was a member of the common council of the city of St. John, it was a well known and evident fact that the facilities of the Intercolonial Railway at the port of St. John were entirely insufficient to do the business offering at that time, and it was an absolute necessity that the railway should increase its facilities if they wished to even keep up with the business which was offering at that time, so that although the elevator which was put up there remained idle for some years I do not think that that was due to any indiscretion or want of judgment on the part of the Minister of Railways at that time. The expenditure was made in consequence of the arrangement which the Intercolonial Railway made with the Grand Trunk Railway, which arrangement was not carried out by the Grand Trunk people. I think that this year the Intercolonial Railway elevator at St. John has been used to some considerable extent. The berths at the piers have been used and would have been used a great deal more if there had been the proper depth of water, if they had been kept dredged out as the Minister of Railways stated in this House that they were. I hope that the fact that they have not been used this winter to the extent they ought to have been used, on account of not having been properly dredged out, will be taken to heart by the Department of Railways so that the berths will be kept in such a condition that vessels drawing 28 or 29 feet of water will be able to berth there at any stage of the tide. I think it is only right to make this explanation.

Mr. FOSTER. The point which has been raised by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel) suggests the question, if the policy of erecting an expensive elevator there was right and the government spent a large sum of money in St. John owing to a bargain made between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway that the Grand Trunk should furnish grain and freight to the elevator, and if the minister of that day induced the country to undertake that expenditure and enter into the arrangement with the Grand Trunk on the representation that the Grand Trunk were to gather this freight and forward it to the Intercolonial Railway at St. John, why does not the government enforce the contract ?

Mr. FIELDING. Does not my hon. friend think we are getting a good distance away from Montreal Harbour ?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know. We are bringing out what seems to me to be the carelessness or incapacity of the government.

Mr. FIELDING. Even such things as that must come in their proper place.

Mr. FOSTER. The government induced parliament to buy the Drummond County Railway and to make a very expensive contract with the Grand Trunk lasting over 99 years entailing very large expenses upon us from year to year with the possibility of these expenses being increased, owing to our arrangement with the Grand Trunk. This House entered into this agreement on the representation of the government that such an arrangement was made with the Grand Trunk, that it would be the gatherer of freight in all this western country and that it would disembark that freight at Montreal for export via St. John. Then came the building of the elevator. These two went on together as a government expense and now after the expenditure has been incurred we find that the Grand Trunk does not do what the government declared it was bound by the contract to do, and from that time to this we have never heard that there has been any attempt on the part of the government to compel the Grand Trunk to do what was declared to be an essential part of the bargain. Therefore the elevator at St. John lies quiet and dead and does not do the work it was intended to do. The amount of grain that goes through it is a mere bagatelle, and has been from the time it was erected except during the first year when a fair business was done.

Mr. DANIEL. This year it has done more.

Mr. FOSTER. This year it may have done a little more, but as to filling the role in business, to which its capacity entitles it, of course it does not do that. Then we find that out of the $3,000,000, $350,000 is to go to pay a contractor damages because the government got in his way and prevented him doing his work. Not only do we have to give a million dollars to improve the port but one third of that is to be paid to the contractor because of damages which he declares he suffered because somebody got in his way. Who was it got in his way ? Was that when the cabinet were fighting like blazes as, Mr. Tarte tells us ? Was it when the Royal Commission of which the Minister of Finance was a member were fighting like blazes ? Was it then that this contractor wanted to work but was prevented and now wants $350,000 because somebody got in front of him, and would not let him work ? Where is it going to end ? I think we must know the ins and outs of the $350,000. I think the minister owes a full and complete explanation of that before we give any more money into the hands of a commission in Montreal. The minister said he was going to make a loan of $3,000,000 in order to improve the Harbour of Montreal. I was looking for real improvements in the harbour, and I was astounded when I heard the minister read the items. Very little of it goes to the real improvement of the harbour. We are spending $2,217,000 for the completion of the sheds. Something must have been spent on them already so I suppose the sheds will cost somewhere between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000, probably $2,500,000 at the very least.

Mr. FISHER. More than that, more than $3,000,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know exactly what these sheds mean, but according to my hon. friend (Mr. Gervais) when the sheds are completed you will have no working facilities down at that harbour. You have sheds but are they the most important things ? Was there not something else more important to which at least a part of this money might have been devoted ? Could you not have got some of this loading and unloading machinery and these floating elevators ? Here is an astounding amount of money, $2,500,000 and more, for sheds upon the wharfs. What are these sheds exactly, are they warehouses, or in what way do they become indispensable parts of the harbour equipment that these very large amounts of money must be spent on them ?

Many other vital things, if we take for granted what my hon. friend (Mr. Gervais) has said, remain undone and remain to be done. Then when you have the sheds done, you have to build elevated roadways to these sheds. Now what exactly does this mean? The elevated roadways, I suppose, show that traffic comes up into and goes down from these sheds. Here are $400,000 for these elevated roadways to the sheds. Add that to the other, and you have a sum of fully $3,000,000 which are expended there for sheds, and yet you have not a bit of machinery for loading and unloading, such as a great port like Montreal should have, that is, if we must believe what my hon. friend says, who comes from that vicinity and ought to know. Then there is an old wharf at Hochelaga which is wearing out, the Dominion Coal Company chiefly use it. The Dominion Coal Company give a very large part of the revenue, as I understand, in wharfage from their great business. Then you take $250,000 to make an old wharf into a better one, or a new one. Well, I suppose that is legitimate. The revenue depends on the business that is done, and you must have a wharf in order to do business and collect a legitimate part of the expenditure for the real betterment of the harbour facilities. Does that become the property of the Harbour Commission, or of the government through its Harbour Commission? It looks here as if it is a private wharf owned by the government. Is it now a part of the harbour works and owned by them?

Mr. FISHER. It is built by them, always belonged to the harbour works.

Mr. FOSTER. That looks like a legitimate expenditure. Then paving the wharfs, $125,000. If there are thirty-eight miles of wharf and they have to be paved, it will be a pretty large sum before all that pavement can be done. What do they pave them with?

Mr. FISHER. Granite blocks. That does not mean thirty-eight miles of wharf full width, but only thirty-eight miles of the edge of the wharf all round.

Mr. FOSTER. Then you have $75,000 for railway tracks. These are to be put down on the wharfs by the commission itself. Is any toll collected from the railways as a payment for these facilities?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Then there is the raising of the Jacques Cartier pier. That pier, I imagine, belongs to the commission, and it has to be raised so as to keep its head above water.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that the pier where the Richelieu boats stop?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. That is paved already.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. The Jacques Cartier pier is not paved now.

Mr. FOSTER. Then here is another peculiar looking item in which a member of parliament figures. I do not know whether it is perfectly legitimate or not, but there is an item of $25,000 for building a pier for Mr. Bickerdike—or is it put here for building the Bickerdike pier?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. That is the better way to put it.

Mr. FOSTER. But you see how a man might be misrepresented. I would advise my hon. friend to take his name off that pier as quickly as possibly, otherwise there may be some references to it. That is a pier which belongs to the commission, I suppose. Long may the name live, so far as I am concerned, and the pier as well. I hope the pier will last even longer than the name. Then there is an overhead bridge to the Victoria pier. There seems to be a passenger bridge. The question arises whether that is the work of the commission, or whether it is the work of the commission and the city. Then there is a fire tug and derrick for safety purposes, which I suppose is all right. But out of that, you have $300,000 for harbour dredging. What strikes me is the immense amount, $3,000,000, which go into the sheds; and the roadways that are necessary I suppose for the use of the sheds. I think if the minister would give us explanations of these different items it might help us to understand what is going on, and as to whether the immense amount of money that has been placed there has been well spent. When the minister is speaking of harbour dredging, $300,000, he might intimate how much dredging they work out in a year. But the $300,000, I imagine, is an estimate of all the dredging that will be necessary by the Harbour Commission in three years time.

Mr. FISHER. Speaking first with regard to the sheds, they are necessary in Montreal, as in all great ports, for the handling of freight. Steamship owners absolutely require sheds in which to store their freight as they bring it out of the ships, until it can be loaded on to the cars or taken away in drays. These are splendidly and completely built, steel and cement sheds. Until recently the city of Montreal was provided with wharfs which, in the spring floods, were submerged; the ice went over the wharfs and would have carried away any sheds placed on them. A great expense in improving the harbour has been in raising the wharfs above the high water flood level. Before that was done the steamship companies themselves provided their own sheds; they had to provide them temporarily, and take them down in the fall and cart them away, or pile them up above the reach of the floods, and put them back again in the spring. This was a very heavy expense on the steamship companies. The Harbour Commissioners investigated the difficulties of the port, and in trying to provide against them, decided some years ago to raise the wharfs above flood level. When they did so they were asked to put down permanent sheds, and they are doing that with these votes. Those sheds are very large, permanent structures, fourteen in number on all the wharfs. I think they are about 600 feet long, some 1,000 feet long, but I cannot give the exact dimensions. They are solid structures with cement floors, two stories high, with steel girders and pillars, and with wooden filling in between these steel pillars. These sheds are expensive in their construction but the harbour commissioners are going to charge the users of them a sufficient sum of money to pay the interest on the investment, and it comes to very considerably less than the charge now imposed upon the steamship companies in erecting their own sheds in the spring and removing them in the fall.

Mr. FOSTER. This charge will be made against the steamship companies ?

Mr. FISHER. The steamship companies will be charged so much per foot of floor space in these sheds and the expectation is that the rental from the steamship companies will about pay the interest on the investment. That is sufficient in regard to the sheds. The sheds are an absolute necessity in all ports. At every port that I have visited, and I have been at a great many, I have always found very extensive sheds. If my hon. friend will go to New York and Boston he will find that on the wharfs and piers they have splendid shed accommodation, and I do not give it as my own opinion but the opinion of experts who have examined the plans of the sheds in Montreal and of the sheds at ports in other parts of the world that when these fourteen sheds are finished the harbour of Montreal, in so far as shed accommodation is concerned, will be equipped in a manner superior to any American harbour if not to any harbour in the world.

Mr. BERGERON. When was the contract given for the construction of the sheds ?

Mr. FISHER. The contract was given five years ago.

Mr. BERGERON. Why were they not finished before ?

Mr. FISHER. They were not finished because when the contractor got partially advanced with the work the plans of the sheds became the subject of criticism, and eventually, after a great deal of delay, discussion and animadversion and great differences of opinion it was decided to change the plans of the sheds. That change was decided upon and then the contractor was instructed to go ahead.

Mr. FOSTER. Whose were the first plans of the sheds ?

Mr. FISHER. The plans were the plans of the harbour commissioners of Montreal, approved, if I remember right, by the engineer of the Harbour Commission, Mr. Kennedy. The change was very much discussed, very much opposed as well as very much advocated, and it was in consequence of that great difference of opinion not only among the harbour commissioners and business men but amongst the engineers that delays occurred and until that difference of opinion was composed and a definite decision arrived at the Harbour Commissioners did not feel justified in forcing the contractor to go ahead with what was held by some to be a faulty and imperfect construction. When I say imperfect construction I do not mean as to strength, but as to the facilities which the sheds would afford when completed.

Mr. FOSTER. The view of the harbour commissioners and of the government was proved to be the wrong one and the view which some one else took was proved to be the right one?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, if the hon. gentleman chooses to put it in that way. The plans as originally prepared and approved by the Department of Public Works were declared to be wrong and faulty and there was a change resulting as I have said. I do not think that I need to say anything more about the sheds.

Mr. FOSTER. When the sheds are all completed they are simply storage places. There is nothing in the shed itself or in its construction or in the machinery which you have in them which helps you to load or unload? You have nothing like cranes or anything of that kind? All the storing has to be done by truck or wagon or whatever it is?

Mr. FISHER. I will come to that in a few minutes. The next item is that of roadways to the sheds. The scheme—I am not sure whether it will be put in practice or not—is a scheme for arriving at the upper storeys of the sheds. My hon. friend may not be familiar with the wharfs at Montreal but the wharfs are not quite as high as the street along the river front and it is intended to have roadways from that street to the upper storeys of the sheds across the railway tracks which are on the level of the wharfs slightly below the street and which pass along the whole river front between the projecting wharfs, the sheds and Commissioner Street.

Mr. FOSTER. What will be the grade of these roads ?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say offhand. There will have to be a rise of 20 feet or so.

Mr. BERGERON. I think my hon. friend is making a mistake. I think the wharfs are about on the same level as the street.

Mr. FISHER. About the same level.

Mr. BERGERON. And if it is proposed to go to the second storey of the sheds the roads will have to go from the street upwards.

Mr. FOSTER. There would have to be a pretty stiff grade.

Mr. FISHER. They will have to rise 20 or 25 feet in different distances according to the position of the sheds from 100 to 200 and perhaps 300 feet. I am only speaking from memory and from the eye, not from actual measurement. The harbour dredging speaks for itself. I am not familiar with the exact places where this dredging will be but there is dredging going on in the harbour of Montreal all the time increasing the area where the ships can turn and get into the wharfs. It is necessary to enlarge that all the time and to get some place for the proper manoeuvring of the vessels as they come in.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that the harbour commissioners are the owners of dredges.

Mr. FISHER. They are and they use these dredges but they have to pay to run that plant.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. I would like to remind the hon. minister that he has forgotten to mention that these sheds are to be utilized to load grain by the use of carriers.

Mr. FISHER. I was going to speak of that too. Reference has been made to the elevator. On the tops of these sheds are carriers running from the elevator so that grain can be distributed all over the harbour from the elevator either into the ships or taken from the ships and into the elevator. This system of carriers it is proposed to complete by means of a part of this money which it is proposed to advance to the harbour commissioners.

Mr. FOSTER. These carriers are simply for grain ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, in connection with the elevator. I am just informed by the officer that the cost of the elevator was something over $600,000 not including the carriers which still have to be paid for. The next item is the Dominion Coal Company's wharf at Hochelaga. This wharf is situated in the lower part of the harbour and it is used for the great coal shipments received there. As my hon. friend knows the city of Montreal requires constant and very large receipts of coal from the maritime provinces which are used not only for the city of Montreal but for general distribution among the industries of the country which use coal. There has to be a special wharf for that and the receipts which come from that wharf constitute one of the largest sources of revenue that the harbour commissioners have. Harbour dues are collected upon all articles landed on the wharf. The next item is paving the wharfs. The wharfs in the city of Montreal, except perhaps in some small areas, have never been paved. They have been macadamized, but as my hon. friend from St. James, Montreal (Mr. Gervais), says they have been very dirty and in a very bad condition for the traffic. I have myself frequently tried to get across the wharfs at Montreal and have been up to my ankles in mud. Wagons and cabs are plastered all over with mud. It is essential that these wharfs should be paved.

Mr. BERGERON. The incident that my hon. friend has spoken of occurred during construction. It was muddy then but it could not be helped.

Mr. FISHER. I have been there ever since I was a boy and I know that the wharfs in Montreal are in a filthy condition.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not object to it but the condition that my hon. friend speaks of existed during construction.

Mr. FISHER. The railway tracks go all along the level of the street between the sheds and the projecting wharfs and the ramp—and they are the dividing line between the wharfs proper and Commissioner street in the city. When the new wharfs are completed and these sheds are in such shape that they can be used there will be railway tracks going down on the projecting wharfs on each side of the sheds. This will be a large increase to the railway mileage on the wharf. Heretofore the harbour commissioners owned the tracks but the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk shunted the cars ; in future the harbour commissioners will themselves operate all the cars on the wharfs.

Mr. FOSTER. By electricity or steam ?

Mr. FISHER. For the present they will use the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway engines which have been engaged in the work, but just as soon as possible they will establish an electric plant to operate the traffic on the wharf. I was told the other day by one of the commissioners that they propose to equip the new sheds and the railway tracks with the best modern appliances for loading and unloading freight. They have engaged an expert from England who will be in Montreal for several months this year planning how a system of that kind can be best carried out.

Mr. BERGERON. What revenue will be derived from the railway trackage ?

Mr. FISHER. There will be a charge of so much per car for every car shunted on the wharf.

Mr. FOSTER. A charge to the railway companies ?

Mr. FISHER. To any company that sends a car on the wharf. Heretofore the railway companies have done their own shunting and there was constant trouble, so that they are glad the commissioners are taking it over. I am told that the cost to the railway companies will be less in future, and that nevertheless there will be a very handsome revenue to the harbour commission from the work. The harbour commissioners have secured the services of one of the best terminal experts in Canada, who was formerly in the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I understand he will commence work on the 1st of May. The raising of the Jacques Cartier pier speaks for itself ; the other piers have been raised and this pier has to be. The completion of the Bickerdike pier speaks for itself. It is proposed to erect latrines on the wharfs. Hitherto there has been no adequate fire protection on the wharfs in Montreal and the commissioners will now provide adequate protection from fire.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these sheds supposed to be practically fireproof ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes ; reinforced concrete floors and steel frames. In reference to the overhead bridge to Victoria pier; Victoria pier is opposite the Bonsecours market, and from it the ferry boats ply to the south shore and to St. Helen's island. There have been frequent accidents, and great delays on account of the shunting of cars on the wharfs, and the safety of the people demands that there should be an overhead bridge.

Mr. AMES. And one might add, that it is entirely on the property of the harbour commissioners.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, and the necessity for it is due to the shunting of railway cars on the wharfs.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is the present engineer of the harbour commission.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. John Kennedy has been the engineer for many years, but I understand he has been retired although retained as consulting engineer. I do not think the commissioners have any engineer at the present moment. Mr. Cowie, engineer of the Marine Department has been acting for the last few months. Mr. Cowie's work as engineer of the ship channel is not so arduous in winter and his services have been lent to the harbour commission for the last few months. There is one point which I wish to further insist upon, and that is, that the revenues of the port of Montreal have invariably paid the interest on the advances made by the government, so that there has been absolutely no burden upon the people of Canada in this respect, except possibly that the Dominion will have to pay at the present time a little more than the three per cent they have been charging on the advances made. The revenues of the port of Montreal have been increasing from year to year with the increased facilities for handling the traffic of the country. If the harbour commissioners of Montreal ceased to make progress, the revenues of the port would undoubtedly decrease. If, as we hope, the port of Montreal is going to be the great national port for the export and import trade of this country, as it has been for years past, as it must be more and more in years future, it is absolutely necessary that these works should be undertaken and facilities provided for the handling of that trade. There is every reason to believe that as the facilities at the port of Montreal are improved, the volume of trade in that port will grow larger and larger every year, as it has been for the last ten years.

Mr. FOSTER. The statement made by the minister has been full in most respects, and it has given the House some idea of what is really meant by these different proposals as to which the House, and I myself, have very little information. No one objects to the port of Montreal being put on a thoroughly good basis, but the House when it is voting money must always bear in mind that the most important work, is the work which is being done. It is of course impossible to overtake the whole work, even in a series of years, and when one sees an item of a couple of million dollars for sheds, the question arises as to whether it was wise to make that expenditure when other important works necessary to carrying on the commerce of the port of Montreal seemed to be lacking. With regard to the explanations which have come to us, I not being an expert give just a layman's idea. I have no doubt at all as to the necessity for sheds. They seem to be constructed on an improved plan, and I hope they will be, when fully completed, not only as good as but better than those of any other port, as they ought to be, because they are the last ones constructed. So that with the explanation that half a million or so remains after the expenditure on these different items, and that a large portion of that will be expended for loading and unloading facilities, if we can trust the harbour commissioners and the authorities to have these matters carried out thoroughly and economically, the port of Montreal ought to be placed in a very forward position. As to the paving, there is no doubt about the necessity for that. I have myself travelled over those wharfs, and have found mud enough to justify me in employing a bootblack afterwards to get things cleaned up. If you are going to do business in a modern way, you must keep down the dirt. As to the overhead bridge, the explanation of that makes it, I think all right. It will be a convenience and a safety for passengers who are obliged to cross the property of the commissioners, besides doing away with an interference with traffic by the continual passing of people over the tracks. What I especially wanted to get at was as to whether the commissioners were looking upon all these improvements as in the nature of an investment from which they had determined to obtain a sufficient return to pay the interest and the cost of management, and not simply as a free gift from the government without any hope of a return. The whole thing depends in the end upon the calibre of the commissioners and their advisers and the advisers of the government. The government cannot expect to be an expert in harbour works; but the commissioners themselves should always possess three qualities: first, absolute honesty of administration; second, thoroughness and enterprise in carrying through the work; and third, the capacity to get the best advice, and, when they have got it, to carry it out. I do not know all of the gentlemen who are on the board. Two of them I do know. As to their practical expert knowledge I do not know; but if they take the best of expert advice, and follow that according to their own judgment, they seem to be very well qualified for carrying on the business portion of the work. The minister says that they have always got revenue enough to pay the interest and the expenses of management. That is so, because Canada grows, and the peculiar position of the port of Montreal renders it the highway of the commerce of Canada, particularly for seven months of the year, a very eligible place for revenue. That, however, does not take away a single hair's breadth from the statement that if you are going to make the most of this business, you ought to be prepared for it by modern methods and good management. I think the taking over of the whole work of shunting and transportation on the property of the commissioners is one of the best things, considered in the light of business management. Where you have different railways interfering with each other, each doing the work for itself, you cannot have it done as cheaply or as satisfactorily as the commissioners can do it by taking it into their own hands. I hope they will find it possible to have an electric service in place of the old coal burners. The city of New York is just about entering upon a wonderful phase of its business existence in the fact that in a very short time there will not be a single coal locomotive within the confines of the city or probably within twenty-five or thirty miles of it, but every ounce of freight will be moved in and out of the city by the noiseless and cleanly electric motor instead of by the old puffing steam engine. That is modern and I believe it is also economical, and I believe the same sort of service could be established economically and usefully in Montreal.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to say a few words with regard to this, because we have had experience from time to time of similar applications to this House to make the port of Montreal what it should be as a great shipping port. I have never objected to any reasonable expenditure in the port of Montreal when it has been wisely made; but our great objection to these expenditures from time to time has been that we thought they were not wisely made. One of the reasons why in my judgment they are not wisely made is that they are not made on any well considered scheme or plan which is followed from year to year until it is fully carried out. When we find that any public work is changed every few months or every year or two, we naturally conclude that there is something radically wrong either in the judgment of the designers or in the parties who have control of the money. It generally turns out that one reason for the change is to enable those who control the money to pay larger amounts to the contractors from year to year, and to have that money come back to the friends of the government either for election purposes or for some other purpose. We naturally suspect that that is done, because we always find that the cost of construction goes up, and the country pays more and more money for the work. That is exactly what is done in Montreal from year to year. This House receives invitations from time to time to vote more money for that port, and we vote it. The scheme is laid before us and the plans outlined. It is desirable that the work should be done, and the House is anxious that it should be done, and the money is voted; but the next year we are told that something is wrong.

What they did last year was wrong, and they were obliged to change it. Take, for example, these sheds. We were told that these were necessary in order to make the port of Montreal one of the best ports in America. The plans and specifications were prepared; parliament granted the money—or gave the borrowing power to the Montreal commission and the commission raised the money,—and the work of construction on these sheds was commenced. Messrs Peter Lyall & Sons took the contract. But the work was hardly under way before some changes were made. Either a mistake had been made in the first place, or changes were desired for some other purpose. The result was that $300,000 was paid for practically nothing. Now we are told that material has been increasing in price and that wages have been going up and more money must be spent. And the money is spent without tender. And to whom is this expenditure left? It is left to the president of the Reform Association of Montreal. Will any one believe that that gentleman, who is of so much importance to the powers that be, would carry on that work economically and wisely, or that he could be held strictly to account for it?

Mr. FOSTER. Did he run an election?

Mr. SPROULE. Ask the people of Montreal whether he did or not? He ran an election, and ran unsuccessfully; and I have no doubt whatever that a large share of the country's money went into that election in the vain effort to elect that gentleman to this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN. We run our elections with our own money.

Mr. SPROULE. That is not what the courts tell us.

Mr. TALBOT. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) mean in the case of St. Antoine?

Mr. MEDERIC MARTIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) relies upon what he has seen in the newspapers. He cannot always trust newspaper statements.

Mr. SPROULE. The history of these election expenditures in the interest of friends of hon. gentlemen opposite is too well known in this House and in this country to need repeating here. But I object to the country's money going in this way. I object to expenditures being entered upon except in pursuance of some well devised plan. The squandering of money has gone on and still we are told that nothing is completed. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gervais) says we need to have thirty miles of piers paved, and that we want proper machinery for loading and unloading ships. We have already spent several millions for that purpose, and the work is not done. The hon. gentleman said we need proper customs warehouses. I should think that the country should provide such warehouses quite outside of this proposed expenditure. We have been voting money for a quarter of a century, and have been told from time to time that the port of Montreal will be completed, and little substantial progress seems to be made. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gervais) says also that Montreal should have a dry dock. The government, some time ago, devised the policy intended to provide dry docks for the ports of Canada that needed them. They proposed that wherever a corporation would come forward prepared to build a dry dock, the country should assist up to a certain percentage. Why cannot that be done in the city of Montreal? Why should the country be expected to raise all the money for a dry dock in that port?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. The Dominion government has not given one dollar towards these harbour facilities in Montreal.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not say it had.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. The government has loaned money to the port of Montreal, and, up to this time, Montreal has always paid her interest.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) is 'too previous.' I did not say that we had given a dollar towards dry docks for Montreal. I say that a certain scheme for providing dry docks has been carried out in other ports of Canada.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I want to correct the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) he said that for twenty-five years this House had been voting money for the port of Montreal. I say that you have not voted one single dollar for that purpose. I challenge the hon. gentleman to the proof.

Mr. SPROULE. We have talked this matter before, and it is well known what I mean. We have been giving powers from time to time to the harbour commissioners of Montreal to borrow money and they have promised to pay the interest. The time will come when they will say : This money was spent to build up a national port and the interest must be thrown off and the debt abandoned. As sure as we are here to-night, that will be the case, and I prophesy that here to-night, and I appeal to the future to verify my judgment. We have had this experience in other cases, and it will be our experience in the port of Montreal. It is our right and our duty to see that the money the borrowing of which we authorize is wisely and economically spent, so that the country may get a good return for every dollar. If we spend so liberally, we should have reasonable assurance that, as a result of that expenditure we shall have a well-equipped port for the purpose of carrying on the trade of the country. As I have said, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gervais) says that the port of Montreal needs dry docks.

Mr. GERVAIS. We need it badly.

Mr. SPROULE. That may be, but I do not know any reason why the country should pay every dollar necessary for that purpose.

Mr. GERVAIS. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) if he knows what is the total value of the port of Montreal ?

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think that makes any difference.

Mr. GERVAIS. May I be allowed to inform the hon. gentleman that that port represents $30,000,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the value of the port of Collingwood, where we are asked to give assistance to a dry dock construction.

Mr. GERVAIS. Not one-thirtieth of the value of the port of Montreal. And will the hon. gentleman permit me to tell him that out of this total value of $30,000,000 in the improvements of the port of Montreal and the approaching channel the government of Canada has not contributed more than $5,000,000. The merchants of Montreal since 1816, and especially since 1826, have been spending for the benefit of Canada, without hope of being reimbursed, not less than $25,000,000. That is what these merchants, English-speaking and French-speaking, have been doing for the benefit of upper and lower Canada and afterwards of Canada. We are not beggars in Montreal. Canada is just being asked to-night for its benefit to guarantee a loan to the Montreal Harbour Commission, which they are able to repay.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know whether you are beggars or not, but you come to us pretty often for money. My point is that every part of Canada, even though it may be smaller than Montreal, is as much and as directly a port of the Dominion of Canada as Montreal is and as much entitled to the expenditure of public money. I have shown that, in other places, dry docks are constructed and only a portion of the expenditures comes out of the Dominion treasury. That being the case, the claim that we should spend in greater proportion for a dry dock in the city of Montreal is not a good claim in my judgment.

Mr. GERVAIS. I would like to have parliament establish a school of marine in Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. Hold on, you have got enough.

Mr. SPROULE. The modesty of the hon. gentleman's request on behalf of his city is so great that I shall not refer to it any more.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It would make one wish that he lived in Toronto.

Mr. SPROULE. It would, that is a fact.

Mr. GERVAIS. We could educate Toronto people in Montreal, we could train people for navigation on the great lakes.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not object to a proper and reasonable expenditure for this port, but I do object to the way the money is squandered. A few years ago the great need was an elevator there. Mr. Tarte told us the government had mapped out an extensive plan which was to be carried out, and one of the first requisites was an elevator. They boasted when the site was chosen, the contract awarded and a deposit of $50,000 put up as a forfeit in case the work was not completed by the contractor. The elevator is not yet finished, and what became of the $50,000 forfeit put up by Mr. Connors, of Buffalo ? It was given back to him and the elevator is not finished yet.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, the elevator itself is finished.

Mr. SPROULE. Not altogether ; we are told there is still something to be done so it can be used properly and economically.

Mr. FISHER. The carriers which still have to be built were not part of the contract at all. The contract was finished and the deposit was handed back to the contractor, who had a right to it.

Mr. SPROULE. Who finished the contract ?

Mr. FISHER. The contractor.

Mr. SPROULE. At the same price ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr BERGERON. Not Connors ?

Mr. SPROULE. My hon. friend is quite mistaken, my memory is that Connors could not carry out the contract and I can verify that from 'Hansard.'

Mr. FOSTER. Ask the member back of the minister.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Connors did not commence it.

Mr. GEOFFRION. Connors signed the contract and that was all he did.

Mr. SPROULE. What became of the forfeit ?

Mr. GEOFFRION. It was given back.

Mr. FISHER. I supposed you were talking about the man who built the elevator.

Mr. SPROULE. I read the name of Connors.

Mr. FISHER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, I did not catch the word 'Connors' at all.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not responsible for the minister not hearing. These are some of the reasons why we object to this : In the first place there is no well considered and wisely devised plan as there should be. With such a plan the government or the harbour commissioners or whoever is to do this work should see that each piece of work which is undertaken is completed according to the contract and according to the plan, for these constant changes lead to the suspicion that they are made in order to secure the expenditure of more money. If we have a good board of harbour commissioners now, I say for Heaven's sake give them a free hand and let them do the work right. If they are not suitable for the purpose keep it solely under the government and appoint some competent engineer to go down there and supervise the work. Let them have a plan, and let that plan be carried out and let the money be properly and wisely spent and we shall raise no objection to the expenditure.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Our good friend always becomes hysterical if anything is proposed for Montreal. I venture to say, and he knows it, that there is no other city or port from Vancouver to Halifax that has not received more benefits from the government than Montreal.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member says I become hysterical. Will he mention any occasion except one when I objected to the work being carried on at Montreal, and will he tell me if I objected to the expenditure of money ? Not at all, it was the way the money was spent and the way it was squandered and wasted.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I might point out one statement. He said we made a mistake and squandered the money when Connors undertook to build the elevator. He never began the work and we gave him back his money. Then how did we squander the money ? There was not a dollar of the country's money invested.

Mr. FOSTER. What was Connors' contract and what did the elevator cost after Connors slipped out ?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. The Connors contract never went on, it was not the same elevator at all, it was not in the same place, but was in another part of the city entirely. The Connors elevator was to be built at Windmill Point, and he put up a deposit that he would complete it in a certain time but found he could not do it, and we gave back his deposit.

Mr. BERGERON. How long did it take him to find out ?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. About a year.

Mr. GEOFFRION. He found the contract so favourable that he would not take it ?

Mr. FOSTER. That he would make too much money ? I would like to have his portrait.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. My hon. friend can easily get it from Buffalo. My hon. friend claims that the contract has been given to the president of the Reform Association of Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. And the candidate of the Reform party.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I am surprised at a statement of that kind. It is not according to the facts. Mr. Geoffrion is president of the Reform Association, and Mr. Lyall has the contract.

Mr. SPROULE. I said I was informed he was the president, and if I was incorrect in that, I presume he was at some other time.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I do not think he ever was.

Mr. AMES. Is it not a fact that Peter Lyall is to-day the honorary president, the highest official, of the St. Antoine Liberal Club ?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. That is a different thing, he may be honorary president or patron.

Mr. SPROULE. Then I am not so far out after all.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. You are a long way out.

Mr. BERGERON. Was not that Mr. Peter Lyall president of the Reform Club ?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. No, never.

Mr. BERGERON. Are you sure about it?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I am almost sure of it. I do not think he was ever president of the Reform Club.

Mr. SPROULE. He is president over something, is he not ?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. He is president of the Caledonian Society. I think the only fault my hon. friend could have with Mr. Lyall is that he is a good Liberal and a good Scotchman. Now if that is a crime, there are many of us guilty in this country. I want to say further, that I do not know any asset that this government has in this country that will compare with the asset of the harbour of Montreal, and the hon. gentleman's own friends know it ; both the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) and the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) will tell him that from Vancouver to Halifax you have not such an asset, such a chance of realizing on the money you have spent, as you have in the port of Montreal. Squandering the money of the country ! I claim that you have spent more money on a little place like Caughnawaga than you ever did in the city of Montreal. Every dollar that the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal have received from this government, they have paid their interest on it regularly.

Mr. TAYLOR. But they don't ever intend to pay the principal.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Who told you ?

Mr. TAYLOR. You did.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Even if they never paid the principal, you have an asset there than which there is none better, and nothing in Ontario to compare with it.

Mr. SPROULE. An agitation has been going on for some time to make the harbour of Montreal a free port in the interests of the shipping of the whole country. If that is done, what will become of these loans ?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. The whole country will benefit, and you have the asset. Even Toronto will get some benefit from it.

Mr. BERGERON. Why should not the harbour be administered by the Department of Public Works or the Department of Marine and Fisheries, instead of by a commission ?

Mr. FISHER. I am afraid that if it were administered by the government the revenue would disappear, because it would be very hard for the government to get a revenue.

Mr. MARSHALL. I do not live in Montreal, but I know the difficulties they have to contend with, and I must congratulate the minister on the course he has taken. If I understand it right, he is getting the best skill that money can procure to erect these structures. Now there has been a great scarcity of cars, last fall particularly. When I went to Montreal I found there were miles of cars that could not be unloaded because, as a matter of fact, there was no place to put the goods. I feel it my duty to commend this course of the minister because I happen to be a large shipper of canned goods. While these improvements may cost a lot of money, it is better to do them well while he is about it. Something has been said about the minister not being practical. That is all right, he is getting some one that is practical to lay out the work. I cannot help but admire the minister in the course he has taken, I am quite in sympathy with it. I hope the time will come when he will give us a free port.

Mr. AMES. I wish the government as a whole had as clear cut a programme with reference to the improvements of transportation facilities as the present harbour board have with reference to the port of Montreal. They have a definite and distinct programme of improvements which they intend to carry out, and this money now being voted will probably enable them to carry out practically all their present programme. I believe the board are acceptable to the great bulk of the commercial people of Montreal, I believe they are an honest body of men, and I think the programme which they have now submitted is generally endorsed in the city of Montreal by all the interested parties. While I have not in the past commended the attitude of the harbour commissioners nor of the government, inasmuch as I think they are both largely to blame in the past for vacillating conduct which has caused wastefulness, I believe a new era has now opened with respect to the Montreal harbour, and that with the new board, and their evident intention to do what is right, free from all political influence, we may see what we have so long wanted to see, a thoroughly competent body of men managing the port of Montreal absolutely free from politics.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that a reflection on the old board ?

Mr. FOSTER. An interesting question has been raised by information which has leaked out during this debate. It seems that Mr. Peter Lyall is the contractor for the sheds, if I am rightly informed ; he has a contract for all the sheds which has been running for several years, on which he has received an amount which will go probably up to $3,000,000, and necessarily in the expenditure of an immense amount of money like that he is a large employer of labour. What a peculiarly happy thing it was to take Mr. Peter Lyall, under contract with the government, handling $3,000,000 of government money, employing labour right and left, and make him the government candidate to run an independent election in the city of Montreal. How peculiarly wise and skillful it was that, when it was supposed that the voters were not being sufficiently influenced even by that aggregation of wealth and of influence, an ex-foreman of his should make himself a master of telegraphing, and form his cohorts to deliver votes in the election for the Liberal party. That seems to me to be a peculiar comment now upon a government which came in pledged to keep itself free from everything devious, and dark and wrong in the conduct of its elections. Take this contractor who handles two or three millions of money, paid out to him each month, with his hundreds and thousands of employees—are those the best influences to secure pure and independent elections ? Then as I am informed, an ex-foreman of his was the man who, thinking that even there was not influence enough yet of the wrong kind, undertook to marshall his band of telegraphers to put in votes in an election, which were entirely illegal and which tended to corrupt results.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I made a mistake when I said that Mr. Peter Lyall was the contractor. The firm of Peter Lyall & Sons are the contractors and I understand that Mr. Peter Lyall withdrew previously to his becoming a candidate.

Mr. BERGERON. Has he got it now ?

Mr. SPROULE. Perhaps he has a string to his resignation like Hyman.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. No, that is a Toronto trick.

Mr. BERGERON. A London trick, you mean.

Mr. LENNOX. It is supposed to have been done at Ottawa.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I was shocked when I heard the hon. member for North Toronto refer to Mr. Peter Lyall as he did. If the hon. gentleman knew Mr. Peter Lyall he never would have made the statement on the floor of the House that Peter Lyall was guilty of such conduct.

Mr. FOSTER. Which conduct ?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. About having his foremen attempt to do telegraphing. I think the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) knows that Peter Lyall would not be guilty of anything of the kind. It is not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. FOSTER. The information I went upon in making that statement was that Mr. Peter Lyall, a contractor for the government, was a candidate. The statement has been made half a dozen times during the course of this debate and not denied by the minister or any one else that Peter Lyall was the contractor, and I took that information as being correct. It would have been better if a man who was not a contractor and handling a contract of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 of the government's money should stand in the government's interests. If Mr. Lyall, before he entered the contest, absolutely withdrew from the partnership and had no longer anything to do with it in the way of a financial interest then Mr. Lyall would have pursued a perfectly honourable and upright course. If he did not do that or if he simply resigned and then went back to it afterwards that does not look so well. Then my information was that this man Bissonnette who got together his band of telegraphers was an ex-foreman of Mr. Peter Lyall. Whether he acted in Mr. Lyall's own ward or not I do not know. I do not have a word to say against Mr. Lyall in any respect if either of these things is not true. But, I did understand from the whole course of the debate that Mr. Peter Lyall was the man who was the contractor. If so, I criticised it as I had a right to do. I also understand that this man was an ex-foreman of his and that he performed in the same ward. If that is untrue of course it will remove that part of the criticism.

Mr. AMES. Just allow me one word inasmuch as I attended the case in court and heard all the evidence. I believe then and I believe now that Mr. Peter Lyall knew absolutely nothing about the impersonation which was attempted in my division, but I believe that persons very closely connected with Mr. Lyall knew all about it.

Mr. GEOFFRION. I would say that Mr. Peter Lyall is probably known as the best contractor we have in the Dominion. I think nobody can dispute that. He has contracts all over the Dominion and I know of one instance where a bank, which is not managed by Liberals, just gave a very important contract to him without any tender and told him to go ahead. They had so much confidence in him that they told him to go ahead with the work and they would pay him just what it cost according to the work done. In regard to the insinuation of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) a few moments ago that the old harbour board might have been sometimes influenced by elections and that these changes were made at times coincident with elections, I would ask is it possible to make such an argument when the old board was composed of gentlemen representing different influential bodies—the Mayor of Montreal, representative of the shipping interests, of the board of trade and almost all the influential bodies in the city of Montreal. How could these men sit around a table and agree that a contract should be changed just simply to help the Liberal party in an election ?

Mr. SPROULE. Had that board absolute control ? The government was in control and they were exercising an influence upon it.

Mr. GEOFFRION. The harbour commissioners have absolute control of their contracts. They have to be approved of but they have to make the changes themselves. They have to discuss the matter and while they did sometimes take too long to come to a decision, the changes were made by the harbour commissioners themselves. It is an extraordinary argument for the hon. member for East Grey to present when he said these changes were made to influence the elections in the interest of the Liberal party. The mere mention of it is enough to demonstrate its fallacy.

Mr. SPROULE. That is just a little too innocent to go down.

Mr. GEOFFRION. The hon. gentleman still sticks to his argument ?

Mr. SPROULE. I do emphatically.

Mr. GEOFFRION. That the Conservative members of the board would agree to help the Liberals to make changes in a contract ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We are wandering away from the question.

Mr. GEOFFRION. That statement was made by the hon. member for East Grey.

Mr. BERGERON. But my hon. friend forgets that the majority of the members who sat upon that commission were appointed by the government.

Mr. GEOFFRION. Does the hon. gentleman not think it would have come out in the press if anything of that kind had been done ?

Mr. BERGERON. There were complaints all the time that they could not agree amongst themselves, and all this change was in consequence of these disagreements.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. In the past two years the harbour of Montreal was run by the Tories.

Mr. BERGERON. Because members of the board would not go there to vote. They were ashamed to go to the meetings of the board.

Resolution reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. FISHER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 166) to provide for further advances to the harbour commissioners of Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the Bill printed or engrossed ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Would you be good enough, Mr. Speaker, to read the Bill for us ?

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—COAL STRIKES IN THE NORTHWEST.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of supply.

Mr. GEOFFRION.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the House goes into supply I want to call the attention of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux) to a telegram from Blairmore stating that the miners in the Crow's Nest Pass and Western Alberta had gone out on strike, and that the lumber mills and the railway motive power would be completely tied up as a consequence if a cessation from work took place absolutely and continued. I would like to hear from the minister because it threatens a most serious state of things unless something efficacious can be done.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Minister of Labour.) The news is somewhat exaggerated. No strike has been declared. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) must have seen in the papers last night that all the miners in that district belong to the American Miners Association, that large association over which Mr. John Mitchell presides. Mr. Mitchell has given a statement to the press that no strike had been declared, and I am pleased to say that he is against any strike in western Canada at the present time. The fact remains that a few of the men have, not gone out on strike, but have ceased to work, and a distinction must be drawn between the two things.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a sort of a passive strike.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The men and the mine owners have each agreed to appoint a representative on the board, and if they do not agree on a third, by Monday next, the government will appoint one. I would ask the House to suspend judgment until then, because the news published in the papers is exaggerated. There is no tying up of the railways; the business is running just as before, and the mines are all working more or less. I shall keep the House informed from day to day as I receive news from the scene.

EDITORIAL IN 'LE CANADA.'

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Before the House goes into supply, I regret that I shall have to ask its attention to a newspaper article of which I must complain. I believe in the liberty of the press; I believe in its complete freedom, and I must say that generally the press has not been unkind to me, but the article I refer to is apt to create harm in the country, and I feel it necessary that I should comment upon it. 'Le Canada,' the chief Liberal organ in Montreal, has the following article which I translate into English :

The Sam. Hughes incident—An explosion of Tory fanaticism.

With Dr. Sproule and two or three other fanatics, Col. Sam. Hughes forms a group, small it may be, but yet influential in the councils of the Conservative party. The influence at its command may be measured by the consideration shown to his outbursts by men who like Mr. Bergeron, profess to be the only true defenders of the throne and the altar. Still, we must rejoice that the great majority in parliament, the great majority of the population of Canada do not share in the fanatical prejudices of this group, and except in a few instances in which the Conservatives hope to gain party advantage from a political point of view these prejudices but seldom see the light of publicity in parliament, in the press, or on the hustings. And it is moreover a cause of satisfaction that it is in the Tory party alone that these explosions of fanaticism, regrettable but little dangerous, take place, and to which the Liberal party is adverse on principle.

I want to say, Sir, that this article is unfair, unjust, and untrue. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) represents himself in this House. I take such an insinuation as is contained in this article, all the more to heart, because having no French daily press in Montreal, the Conservatives of Quebec province are not able to defend themselves in the press against such attacks as this. We have three organs in the city of Montreal more or less friendly to the government. 'La Presse,' 'La Patrie' and 'Le Canada,' the latter probably the strongest of the three. I feel, therefore, that it is encumbent on me, to contradict from my place in the House the statements made in this article. I sit here next to my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) and we know how the Liberals have used his name in the province of Quebec. Why, they have made such a terror of that name, that they frighten the children at night with it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) has his own convictions and I respect him for entertaining these convictions because I believe he entertains them sincerely. With the exception of a few years, I have sat continuously in this House with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule), for twenty-eight years, and I can safely say that I have never known a more respectable, and a more courteous member of the House. He is friendly to every one, kind to the young members, and willing to offer his services to any who may require them. It is a very unfair thing, to try and make people in the province of Quebec believe, that because such a gentleman holds strong convictions on certain subjects, he is a man with whom the members of this House should not associate. As to the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes), the unfortunate expressions which he uttered in this House, have been very properly dealt with by his leader and by others. If 'Le Canada' wanted to be fair it would have printed the admirable words which fell from the leader of the opposition on that occasion. So far as I know, the Conservative party is guided by what its leader says, and I know that not one member sitting on this side of the House has ever spoken a syllable approving of the utterance of the member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes). On the contrary, every man I have met has spoken in high praise of the language used by the leader of the opposition. And outside of the House, the 'Star' of Montreal, which is an independent paper——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. BERGERON. It will be well that the 'Star' should know that hon. gentlemen opposite do not consider it to be an independent paper. For my part I wish it were not quite so independent, but be that as it may, the 'Star' had a strong article condemning the language used by the member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) and praising the language used by the leader of the opposition. Then, in Ontario, the 'Mail and Empire' which is the mouthpiece of the Conservative party in that province had a trenchant editorial approving of the words which fell from the leader of the opposition in reference to that incident. The speech of the leader of the Conservative party on that occasion should have been printed by these newspapers in Quebec which are constantly reiterating the cry that the Conservatives of Quebec were hand in hand with the Orangemen of Ontario, just as if there were not Orangemen supporting the Liberal party. I know myself that most of the Orangemen in the province of Quebec support the Liberals, but we on this side have never made that a reproach to the government. The Conservative party is broad enough to include within its ranks Canadians of diverse views on religious matters, and I would not be the lover of liberty I am, if I did not repect the honest convictions of my brother man. As to Dr. Sproule, I respect his honest convictions; no better friends have ever sat in this House than he and I; I personally know his good qualities, and I am saying this to-night in justice to him. As a matter of fact he did not know that I was going to speak on this question, and I trust therefore that his modesty will not be shocked.

As for trying to make the people of Quebec believe that the English-speaking Tories of Ontario, as they call them, are opposed to the province of Quebec, let me recall an incident. Ten years ago, when we were in a majority on the other side of House, the question of defending what we thought sincerely were the rights and privileges of the Manitoba Catholics came before us, and nearly all the English Protestants from Ontario and the maritime provinces supporting the government, helped us to render justice to those people. I remember that a good Orangeman from Ontario, Mr. Fairbairn, said that he was going to support the resolution because it was his duty to stand by minorities. Who opposed us on that occasion? Not only the right hon. gentleman who leads this House, but the great majority of his followers from Quebec, except seven, and every one of the English-speaking Liberals from Ontario and the maritime provinces. This is a matter of truth, and I think it important that the people of this country should know it. One word more. We see this kind of thing in the Quebec papers almost every day. This Sam. Hughes incident, is, I believe, going to travel through the province of Quebec the whole of this summer. Does any man believe that this is doing any good to this country? We have a splendid country, probably the finest in the world, and are we going to spend our time in a childish way, talking not sincerely, but trying to make political capital out of incidents of this sort? We are inviting people of all nationalities to come and settle on the immense plains of the Northwest and help us to build up this country. We are giving these people a fine example, by showing them English-speaking Canadians and French-speaking Canadians who have lived side by side for a hundred years, fighting each other on foolish matters of this kind. I hope we shall not hear any more of this, and I hope the press of Quebec will have higher motives and work hand in hand for the best interests of this country.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr WM. ROCHE. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I would like to call attention to a statement on page 6850 of 'Hansard,' as follows:

> Mr. BOYCE. My hon. friend (Mr. W. Roche) knows all about it. Perhaps he can tell where the $10,000 came from that the man swore was in his hands.

I wish to say that my hon. friend is totally mistaken in the statement he made. He has no authority for it whatever. It is not in the evidence which he professed to quote, and I desired at that time to rise and make the explanation, but a number of gentlemen opposite called order, and I having spoken before was not able at that time to denounce the statement, as I do now, as being entirely unfounded in fact. I do not pay much attention to these calumnies in general, but stories of this kind, if undenied, will be used by the press and otherwise, and I do not intend to stand under that imputation when there is no cause whatever for it, and when it has no foundation whatever in the evidence which is printed and on record.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Trade and Commerce, $85,600.

Mr. BERGERON. Does my hon. friend know that last summer a memorial was signed by a great many residents of British Columbia asking the government to allow a certain number of Chinese to come into Canada to work on the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific under the pledge that they would return as soon as the work was done. I understand that a deposit was asked by the government from certain Chinese residents of Victoria to insure the return of those men after the work was done, and that a deposit of $100,000 was made by those people. Does my hon. friend know anything about that?

Mr. FISHER. No, I have no information on that point at all.

Mr. BERGERON. Perhaps the Minister of Inland Revenue knows something about that?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No, I do not know anything of that at all. I never heard that there was any proposition made to the government officially to permit the importation of any number of Chinamen to work on the Grand Trunk Pacific or on any other railway. I am aware that a petition from some of the ladies of the city of Victoria was prepared and sent to the government at Ottawa, asking for the remission of the head tax on Chinamen in order that they might have them for household servants. In some quarters there is an agitation in British Columbia for the removal of the head tax, but it represents only a small minority of the people.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I want to ask when Mr. Joseph L. Haycock's salary was raised from $1,200 to $1,600. I find that his travelling expenses were $1,298. Then, I would like to know why Mr. W. T. R. Preston, who was turned out of the immigration commissionership in London, has been employed in this department. I would like to know if a man who has so disgraced himself that he is not fit to hold the position of Commissioner of Immigration, is fit to be employed as an agent of this department. The Minister of the Interior went to Europe, as we were told by the Prime Minister, to investigate the immigration business, and he reported when he came back that he had no investigation, but only a conversation with Mr. Preston, and that there was no written report made to Council, but only a verbal report. I think that is altogether wrong. If there is to be an investigation, it should be in such a form that a report of it might be presented to this House. We recollect that, when this matter of dismissing Mr. Preston, was up, the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said that it was most unfair to Mr. Preston to dismiss him without giving him an opportunity of bringing in rebuttal evidence,—for, said the Prime Minister, two men were brought from England to give evidence against him, while Mr. Preston had had no opportunity to meet them except with his own evidence. So far as we can learn there has been no rebuttal evidence given and no investigation held. Mr. Preston is now employed in another department with an increase of $600 a year in his salary. There ought to be an explanation, and we have not heard any explanation. Nor, have we heard anything like a reasonable report on the investigation by the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has already stated the facts of the case, and I am afraid that I can not add anything to what he has stated concerning this matter of which he has personal knowledge.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What did he say?

Mr. FIELDING. My recollection is that he said that he had made an inquiry, though not a formal investigation. The hon. gentleman's (Mr. Uriah Wilson's) first question was with regard to Mr. Haycock. I understand that Mr. Haycock's salary was increased about a year ago, at which time some additional duties were put upon him.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What were they?

Mr. FIELDING. Legislation was passed with regard to the granting of a bounty on Manilla hemp for certain purposes, and the administration of that was left to Mr. Haycock in addition to his duties as inspector of binder twine. For that reason, and because he was a satisfactory officer, his salary was increased. With regard to Mr. Preston, it is hardly right to state that he was turned out of the Department of Immigration. Nothing was disclosed in the investigation to affect his integrity.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What about the evidence of Mr. Jury?

Mr. FIELDING. The case was all threshed a year ago, and I do not think I can add anything to what was then said. All that Mr. Jury said concerning Mr. Preston was that he would not believe him. Why, there might be people who would say that they would not believe my hon. friend (Mr. Uriah Wilson)——

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Not anybody who has known me intimately for twenty years.

Mr. FIELDING. There might be such a person who would take a notion into his head to discredit even so fair-minded and excellent a gentleman as my hon. friend. Mr. Preston was not getting along well with the officers of the department. It was thought well that he should cease to occupy his office. He recognized that fact, and resigned and was assigned new duties in the east. He will perform them well, I have no doubt, for no one questions his energy and ability. I believe that he will make a good officer.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I did not know but that Mr. Haycock's salary had been increased because he took an active part in the general election of 1904. He appeared on the public platform in my own town of Napanee on the 29th of October, 1904, with a member of this government, and spoke against me. The present Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) was advertised to hold a public meeting in the opera hall on Saturday afternoon, and who should turn up but Mr. Joseph L. Haycock, along with Mr. Aylesworth, now a member of this government. Since then, Mr. Haycock's salary has been increased $300 per year. He is also allowed $1,298 travelling and other expenses.

Mr. BRODER. What does he get altogether?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. He received $2,898.04 last year. Now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) remembers very well the promise made by the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier)—that any civil servant who took an active part in politics should be given his whole time to attend to politics. I call attention again to that promise and to the action of Mr. Haycock. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) wants evidence he can ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth). Or he can turn to the 'Globe' of 31st of October, 1904. If he is not satisfied with that, if he will give me a committee of this House, I will guarantee to bring fifty men who were there and who saw Mr. Haycock there and heard him speak, and heard him denounce me there in pretty round terms.

Mr. CONMEE. What bad things did he say?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. He said a good many. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) wants to know what they were, let him turn up the 'Globe' of the date I have mentioned. Mr. Haycock is a man well known in our section of the country. He is better known as a man who would distribute boodle than as anything else. He is charged with having, on a couple of occasions, gone to the rear of the country, carrying money to corrupt the electors. I might say a good many hard things that I know about him. But I am not in the habit of doing that sort of thing, and I do not intend to do it now, though the provocation is great. If the government carried out the policy it has announced, Mr. Haycock, instead of getting an advance would get 'the bounce.'

Mr. BENNETT. He was in West Elgin, with Preston and the machine.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Uriah Wilson's) statement is correct, I will not justify the conduct of which he complains. A public official of his class, receiving a fairly reasonable salary, should not take an active part in politics. I do not know the facts in this case, but I would not justify the conduct described on the part of any official in Mr. Haycock's position. I will do my utmost to see that this view prevails.

Mr. FOSTER. This case is an illustration. What right in the world, has any government to ask the members of parliament, including members of both political parties, to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Uriah Wilson) for instance, and other representatives on this side of the House, to vote a salary to Mr. Joseph Haycock, ostensibly to pay him for doing the country's business, and have him go down to his own constituency at the time of an election, go upon the platform, and publicly denounce him ? I say that is an outrageous thing. It goes beyond the bounds of reason, beyond the bounds of common decency, to ask a man to vote a salary ostensibly to engage a man for the public service, and have that man go down and actively electioneer and speak against him. The Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) has met the case fairly and frankly, so far as the principle goes. But will the matter go any further than this disavowal on his part? If the Minister of Finance believes what he has now stated, Mr. Haycock ought to be disciplined—he ought to leave the employ of this government, and the sooner he leaves it the better. I do not believe that the Finance Minister doubts a single word of what my hon. friend (Mr. Uriah Wilson) has told him or doubts that Mr. Haycock did appear as stated and did demean himself as described. Now, that being so, every hour that Mr. Haycock stays in the public employment is a disgraceful thing for this parliament and this government. Surely we must have some rights, and surely there must be some uniformity and some consistency in carrying on public affairs.

Now, I do not think we have been treated fairly in this investigation into the Preston affair, in view of the absolute pledge made by the government on the subject. It will be remembered that the Prime Minister expressed himself strongly, last year, and one hon. gentleman who supports the government stated that he voted for the resolution supporting the government's course only on the pledge given by the government that Mr. Preston's conduct should be inquired into——

Mr. URIAH WILSON. 'Thoroughly investigated.'

Mr. FOSTER. That was the Prime Minister's statement. And there was a vote, and the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) conditioned his vote absolutely upon the pledge of the government that the matter should be thoroughly investigated. And yet we are simply 'jollied' in this matter. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) goes over, and comes back, and, notwithstanding the Prime Minister's statement and the pledge he made to this hon. gentleman (Mr. Guthrie) who voted for him, simply tells us that he had a conversation with Mr. Preston, that the matter was all right and that he did not intend to give the House any information on the subject. That is not what the government pledged, that is not what the member voted on as a pledge by the government and that is not decent treatment by the Minister of the Interior in view of that pledge and in view of what he undertook to do. What is Mr. Preston now doing and what has he been doing for the last five months that he has been under salary-? How long has he been under salary after being shoved out of his old place and what has his salary been ?

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Preston is under salary.

Mr. FOSTER. When did his last engagement commence ?

Mr. FIELDING. It would probably be from the time of his leaving England ; he was sent to Africa and thence to China.

Mr. FOSTER. About what time was that ?

Mr. FIELDING. It would be last summer or early autumn.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Since he was put out of the other office ?

Mr. FIELDING. Since he resigned from the other office.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. By and with the consent of the minister?

Mr FIELDING. Yes, the minister consented.

Mr. FOSTER. How large is his salary ?

Mr. FIELDING. $3,000 a year.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. $300 a month, that is the order in council.

Mr. FIELDING. That would be $3,600.

Mr. FOSTER. And travelling expenses ?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. That is $600 more than he was getting before.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister inform us what work he is doing ?

Mr FIELDING. He is engaged as an ordinary commercial agent.

Mr. FOSTER. Where ?

Mr. FIELDING. China is his main objective point but on the way he was sent to Africa where there was a vacancy ; another officer retired, and he went there on his way to China.

Mr. FOSTER. What was he doing in South Africa while loitering on the way ?

Mr. FIELDING. He was doing the ordinary work of a commercial agent in South Africa.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot take that explanation. The usual work of a commercial agent is to go to the place where he is to do his work, to familiarize himself with the conditions and to give the information which he obtains in that way to the department. There is no possible thing that Mr.

Preston could do by running around the globe spending a little time in South Africa and a little time in some other places as I have been informed by the press he has been doing. If he was appointed as a commercial agent for the east it was his duty to go there and familiarize himself with the conditions as quickly as possible and give this country some return for the money. But what Mr. Preston has been doing has been to take a general tour over a portion of South Africa, then he was gone to some other British possession and by and by he will get to his place. But six months have passed by and Mr. Preston has not yet got to the place where his regular duties commence. What has he been doing, what has he given the government during these six months ? He has been writing letters on general subjects to the press of Great Britain, not necessarily in the interests of Canada but that is not surely the duty for which we are paying his $300 per month. It seems to me as though, in some way or other, Mr. Preston has a hold on this government, and he has got them, it seems to me, closer up than by the lapel of the coat and he is hanging on to them because of what he knows and what he has done with the party behind him.

Mr. TAYLOR. He defied them to dispense with his services.

Mr. FOSTER. All the time he was hugging the machine and doing that kind of party work. What were his duties, and what has he been giving to the government during these six months, to justify him in taking the $1,800 salary and travelling expenses as well ?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) moved his resolution last session, simply asking that the inspector of immigration should be no longer continued in that office. I assume it was the intent of the resolution that Mr. Preston be removed from that office and given some other office.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh I do not think that follows from the resolution.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. To make it clear I shall read a few words from the remarks of Mr. Monk, the member for Jacques Cartier accompanying that resolution. At page 6885 of 'Hansard' he says:

> It seems to me that not only on account of the remarkable contradiction given by Lord Strathcona to Mr. Preston's evidence, but on account of the fact that the future relations between our High Commissioner and Preston cannot be favourable to immigration, it is necessary that Mr. Preston should be removed and given some other employment.

The word 'that' could not have been used in any other sense in that resolution than that Mr. Preston should have been removed from that office and given some other, otherwise the word 'that' does not express anything, it was inadequately or incorrectly used. The mover of the resolution, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), expressly stated that that was the intention of his resolution and every hon. gentlemen opposite voted for it. The government in pursuance of that resolution removed him from that office and gave him another.

Mr. BENNETT. That was with the knowledge of the state of affairs that existed between Mr. Preston and the government that the government could not dare dispense with the services of Mr. Preston, and this government dare not.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. That is another question, that is an assumption of your own.

Mr. BENNETT. They dare not put him on the road, he would hang the government.

Mr. FOSTER. We have not yet had any answer as to what Mr. Preston's duties have been and what he has given in return for the last six months.

Mr. FIELDING. While the intention was that Mr. Preston was to go east he was instructed to go to Africa on the way. One of the officials had retired, there was a vacancy, and pending the making of a permanent appointment he was sent to that agency. He has fulfilled his duty there, a permanent officer has been appointed and Mr. Preston is on the way to China and Japan.

Mr. FOSTER. What have we from him?

Mr. FIELDING. What can we get from any agent except his best efforts in advertising Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. What advertising has he been doing, has he had any special work ?

Mr. FIELDING. He had no special work other than that which a commercial agent has assigned to him in any part of the world. He has made, I am advised, several reports which appeared in due course in the bulletins along with other reports.

Mr. FOSTER. Have these been published ?

Mr. FIELDING. So I am informed, yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Guthrie, the member for South Wellington said :

> I do not rise on this occasion with the intention either of upholding or of defending Mr. Preston in his private capacity before he became an officer of this government. I understand from all accounts that, confined within certain limits, his services as Commissioner of Immigration have been efficient, active and satisfactory. But in regard to certain other matters, the conduct or actions of Mr. Preston as Commissioner of Immigration for this country do not commend themselves to my mind, nor to the minds of a great many people in this country. Unfortunately I have not the honour of being a member of either of the committees before which the evidence was taken in regard to these matters. I have only been able to glean the evidence, and to get it second hand, but from what I have read, from what I have been told, and from what I have heard in the course of this debate, in my own mind I am satisfied that Mr. Preston if not directly, has at least indirectly, contravened his orders so far as his dealings and connection with Leopold and the Labour Bureau are concerned. I feel very strongly inclined on this occasion to vote for the amendment——

That would be against the government.

—and I had fully intended to do so, were it not that the hon. the Minister of the Interior, whose department Mr. Preston serves, has expressly asked the House for time to consider and investigate this matter for himself in order that he may deal with it. I would now ask the Minister of the Interior whether, by his statement in this House to-night, he intended to convey an assurance, not merely an off-hand statement, but an assurance, that he would investigate this matter and deal with it in the near future.

Mr. OLIVER. I think I have already made that statement to the House when the estimates of the Interior Department were under discussion, and I meant to convey the same idea to-night.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Then, Mr. Speaker, taking that as a positive assurance on the part of the responsible minister that this matter will be investigated by him, as it is a matter pertaining to his own department, and he was not even present when it was investigated by the committee, I think the very least we can do is to allow the matter to stand until the minister has had an opportunity of investigating and fairly sifting it. On the evidence, such as we now have before the House, I certainly would vote for such an amendment as has been moved by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). But in the meantime, relying on that assurance, I shall not support the amendment.

I think that is a pretty strong statement. And what information has been laid before this House as a result of the promised investigation? We have nothing more than what amounts to this, that the minister said he had had some conversation over the matter and that he considered Preston all right. But that is not an investigation such as was required, and such as was pledged to Mr. Guthrie. Mr. Guthrie read the evidence against Preston, he wanted now to have a rebuttal of the evidence, and if he did not have it he promised that he could not vote for the government. He was promised evidence the result of an investigation; relying on that, he promised to vote for the government. We have simply to face the fact that there was no investigation. The minister went over to England, he may have made some incidental inquiries, but an investigation such as parliament understood, and the member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) must have understood, there was nothing at all, and no information was given to the House. Now take the Prime Minister's statement in that connection, and it seems as though the government were not treating this House as it ought to be treated. I think we should have had a thorough investigation and the results of it laid before the House, and we should have been able to hear the other side of the story as developed by that investigation.

Mr. BLAIN. I think the member for Lunenburg (Mr. A. K. Maclean) did not do himself justice when he endeavoured to lead the House to believe that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) wished to leave the impression on the House that he simply wanted Mr. Preston removed and put into another office. My hon. friend picked out two or three words, but he did not attempt to look over the whole debate, or he would not have made such a statement. Let me read what Mr. Monk did say, page 6891:

My hon. friend is mistaken, I did not suggest his promotion. I said he should be required to find occupation elsewhere. I am told that I spoke differently, that I conveyed the idea that he should be given another position in the service of the government. That is not my opinion. But in the motion, I have not asked for his dismissal, I have asked for his removal. I consider that it is proper that he should be removed from a position which has brought us into so much difficulty. I have not asked for his dismissal, but I do not suggest that he should be promoted by any means. I do not think a man like that ought to be in the employ of the government at all.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk)) says, 'I do not ask for his dismissal, but only for his removal,' surely that meant that he was not to be dismissed.

Mr. BLAIN. But he qualified that; he says his opinion is that the man should not be in the employ of the government at all.

Mr. FIELDING. Nevertheless he says he does not ask for his dismissal; there can be nothing more direct than that.

Mr. BLAIN. Surely my hon. friend will not attempt to create an impression like that, particularly in the absence of the hon. gentleman himself. The hon. gentleman was quite careful, when his attention was drawn to the fact that the impression was left by some of his words that he only wanted Mr. Preston to be removed from one position to another, to get up and emphatically state that he thinks Mr. Preston is a man who should not be in the employ of the government at all.

Mr. FIELDING. That conflicts with his other statement.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I did not intend to misrepresent the position of the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk); I must admit I had not seen that portion of his remarks which has just been read, but I do not think they make much difference. Let me read again what he said. In citing the reasons for his removal, he closed in the following words :

It is necessary that Mr. Preston should be removed and given some other employment.

Now that can only mean some other employment in the government.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend should take the explanation which the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has given himself.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I presume that during the remarks of the Minister of the Interior the question was raised, and the member for Jacques Cartier modified his previous remarks.

Mr. FOSTER. I find this also. According to the design of the government and of the deputy minister, Mr. Preston had no business to be in South Africa. On September 11, 1906, this letter was written :

W. T. R. Preston, 11 and 12 Charing Cross, London, S.W., England.

Sir,—I have it in command to acquaint you that on the recommedation of the Right Hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce His Excellency the Governor General in Council has been pleased to appoint you a trade commissioner, or agent of the Dominion government, to visit China, Corea and Japan, with a view to ascertaining from personal investigation, under such instructions as may be given to you by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to what extent and in what manner an increase of trade between the Dominion of Canada and these countries can be brought about. While employed in this connection you will be paid for such services at the rate of $300 per month, and such reasonable and actual expenses as you may necessarily incur in making such investigation, all chargeable to the vote for commercial agencies.

I have the honour to be,
Your obedient servant,
W. G. PARMELEE,
Deputy Minister.

I have not the order in council, but no doubt that follows the order in council. Now from September, when this appointment was made until now, Mr. Preston has not been carrying out the duties for which the order in council appointed him, and with reference to which the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce sent him that letter of instructions. The fact of the matter seems to be that Mr. Preston demanded a holiday, demanded a holiday with high pay, that the government granted it to him, and he has been sailing around in South Africa and other dependencies of the British empire under the guise of a high official of the Dominion of Canada, and duly drawing this salary. That is the thing for which he was appointed, that is the business upon which he should have been employed and he should have paid for doing that work and for nothing else.

Mr. DANIEL. I understand there has been quite a clamour for the Chinese as domestic servants in British Columbia. I would like to know whether the government are taking that view of the admission into British Columbia into consideration. Of course I am well aware that organized labour out there is not disposed to admit Chinese but there is a demand for the Chinese as domestic servants, a class of labour which, I understand, it is very difficult indeed to get in British Columbia. I would like the minister from British Columbia, the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Templeman), to let us know if the government has received any petition to that effect and whether there is any intention of taking that into its favourable consideration and allowing the Chinese in for that special purpose.

Mr. FIELDING. At all times since restrictions have been placed upon the Chinese there have been representations to the government by parties who would like to have Chinese labour admitted. The need of Chinese for domestic servants has sometimes been represented to us, but we have taken no action in that direction. We do not contemplate at this moment any change in regard to the Chinese.

Mail subsidies and steamship subventions—ocean and mail service between Great Britain and Canada, $500,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Before we take up the mail subsidies and steamship subventions we ought to have from the minister a statement which it was agreed a few years ago the House should always have as to what has been the general results of these different services. We have been voting for a number of years a million or a million and a half of money and we have never had any statement at all vouchsafed to us as to what these different services were doing, whether they were doing good work or bad work, whether they had proved themselves to be useful or otherwise, whether they were necessary or unnecessary, whether the trade and commerce requirements made it proper that they should be voted, or whether there was any foundation in so far as that goes for the voting of the money. So, the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) acceded to my request, I think, about two or three weeks ago, and promised to have a report brought down each year for the use of the committee before these subsidies were called upon to be voted. Last year we did get such a statement. It was necessarily partial but it was full of information and furnished a basis upon which one could form some sort of judgment. But, it was not distributed and I do not think anybody saw it with the exception of one or two, maybe myself and some one else on this side of the House. The idea was that when we were called upon to vote a million and a half or more we ought to have the fullest information in reference to what had been the actual results of these different steamship operations during the course of the year, as to whether they carried a trade which was at all commensurate with the amount of money we had been expending, whether this trade was increasing or otherwise, whether we were to go on and keep a useless service subsidized or whether we were to have some discrimination between the services, drop those that were of no use and keep those that were proving beneficial and giving some return for the subsidies. This year we run up here, within two or three days of the closing of the House, against a million and a half for these varied services and there is not a scrap of information before the committee as to their necessity or usefulness.

Mr. FIELDING. On each of these items I will be happy to give the committee whatever information is available. My hon. friend is hardly correct in stating that no information has been given in reference to this question. A year ago a very full report was issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce giving the terms of the contract under each item of this service and a reasonably full explanation as to the nature of the work, the steamer performing the service and so forth.

Mr. FOSTER. That was the statement I spoke of last year but that was not put in print.

Mr. FIELDING. It is a blue-book and it was published and distributed amongst those who wished it.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it was published at the time. I received it only a short time before the vote was brought on. I had time to look it over. The deputy minister kindly sent it to me and asked me whether that would fill the bill as to the requirements and I think I told him it was quite full and quite satisfactory. The blue-book, I imagine, is the printed record of that paper. We should have a statement of this kind.

Mr. FIELDING. I am advised that this was brought down last year in printed form and distributed at the time the estimates were brought before the House.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. FIELDING. Well then the deputy minister is mistaken.

Mr. FOSTER. It came afterwards.

Mr. FIELDING. However it will be found that this document contains the contracts, the terms and conditions of these various subsidies and we will be very happy to give any facts that are necessary as to any changes that are made. I do not think this is a document that needs to be reprinted every year and the terms of each contract repeated. But, I can give a statement on each one of these contracts, which, read in connection with the blue-book issued a year ago, will put the committee in possession of what is a reasonable amount of information. Of course, the fact that these subsidies are continued must be taken as a presumption that the government believe they are useful services.

Mr. FOSTER. But the House wants to form its own judgment.

Mr. FIELDING. On each item we will be happy to give all the information we can. The first item is one of long standing being for the mail service between Great Britain and Canada. I do not know that there is anything that can be added this year because the House is familiar with this service.

Mr. DANIEL. This is an increase, is it not ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, a large increase.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. It would be well to read the names of the parties who have the contracts.

Mr. FIELDING. The contractors in this instance are well known, being Messrs. H. & A. Allan. This contract was entered into on July 19, 1906, and it will run until May 1, 1912. The service is in the summer from Liverpool to Rimouski or North Sydney, and in the winter from Liverpool to St. John or Halifax, a weekly service of fifty-two trips. In regard to the mention of North Sydney, what is contemplated is that during the early part of the season, before the straits of Belle Isle are opened, and when the vessels go south of Newfoundland the steamers will call at North Sydney, while in the season when the straits of Belle Isle are opened and the vessels pass through the straits, North Sydney would not be on their route and they would then go to Rimouski. It is contemplated that that course will be taken in the season in which they pass south of Newfoundland.

Mr. DANIEL. Is that part of the contract ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, we have the option to call for that under the terms of the contract.

Mr. DANIEL. That is on the way up the St. Lawrence ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, and down also, for that part of the season when the Belle Isle route is not available. A glance at the map will show that when the steamers pass through the straits of Belle Isle it would involve a considerable loss of time to call at North Sydney, but in the early season when the Belle Isle route is not open it is proposed to call at North Sydney going and coming, and an effort will be made to make that effective during the coming season.

Mr. KEMP. Instead of Rimouski.

Mr. FIELDING. Just for these trips. The idea is to use the land service which is quicker than the sea service. There is a variation in the subsidy according to the different rates of speed, and there is a higher subsidy given for the winter service as will be noticed from the following figures:

The subsidy for each complete round voyage between Liverpool, Rimouski and North Sydney, performed at the rate of eighteen knots an hour is £2,500; for each complete round voyage between Liverpool, St. John, or Halifax performed at the rate of eighteen knots an hour, £3,000; for each complete round voyage between Liverpool, Rimouski or North Sydney at seventeen knots, £2,000; for each complete round voyage between Liverpool, St. John, or Halifax, at seventeen knots, £2,500; for each complete round voyage performed at the rate of fifteen knots per hour, £1,000. The service is being performed now by a joint arrangement between the Allan line and the Canadian Pacific Railway steamship line. The Allans are the contractors, but arrangements have been made by which two fast vessels of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the 'Empress of England' and the 'Empress of Ireland,' are included in the service. The vessels which now come within the scope of this contract are the Allan steamers. 'Virginian,' 'Victorian,' 'Ionian,' 'Sicilian,' 'Pretorian,' 'Tunisian'; and the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers 'Empress of Britain,' and 'Empress of Ireland.' The 'Virginian' and the 'Victorian' are turbine boats which are comparatively new; the other Allan boats are of less speed and receives a less rate of subsidy.

Mr. KEMP. The Canadian Pacific Railway are subcontractors to the Allan line.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, they alternate.

Mr. KEMP. They get a certain sum from the Allan people?

Mr. FIELDING. They get the benefit of this contract according to the rate of speed. Of course their boats are the fastest and they get the highest subsidy.

Mr. KEMP. Is it understood in the contract with the Allan line that they should combine with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. FIELDING. No, the contract with the Allan line contemplated they should build new vessels of similar speed to the 'Virginian' and 'Victorian,' but we were aware that the Canadian Pacific Railway were about launching their vessels and we were always hopeful that a combination would be made in that way. It would be rather unfortunate that the Allans should be obliged to build two expensive steamers while these two very fine Canadian Pacific Railway vessels were available, and we were happy to find that the two companies came to an understanding. The result is that we have got on the whole a remarkably good service, not perhaps all that is desirable, but so much better than any service we have ever had before, that I think it has given a great degree of public satisfaction.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the government pay the Canadian Pacific Railway directly?

Mr. FIELDING. No; we pay the Allans but it amounts to the same thing as the arrangement was made with our full knowledge and approval.

Mr. FOSTER. Does it give the Canadian Pacific Railway the same as if the vessels belonged to the Allans.

Mr. FIELDING. I think so, but that is a matter of arrangement between them.

Mr. DANIEL. When the Canadian Pacific Railway undertook their part of the work as subcontractors under the Allan line, they understood that they could sail between Liverpool and St. John direct. The minister will remember that they made an effort to have the contract carried out in that way, but for some reason it was not allowed. There may have been some good reason why the government did not permit the Canadian Pacific Railway to carry out the contract in a manner which would seem to be best in the interests of the country generally, and if so, I would like to know what it is? As I understand it, both the Allans and the Canadian Pacific Railway people would prefer to have the Canadian Pacific Railway mail steamers sail to and from St. John to Liverpool direct, and that the Allan line steamers sail to and from Liverpool direct to Halifax. There is no doubt that the Canadian Pacific Railway expected they would be able to do that, and they have stated that the service would be more satisfactory and that the mails would get to the Orient with greater expedition if that were done. I cannot understand that any good reason can be given why that should not be done. I have seen it stated in the press that the Minister of Trade and Commerce himself thought that was the very best arrangement that could be made. I quote from the St. John 'Globe' of Saturday, November 17, a despatch from Montreal, dated November 16, and which is as follows:

The facts about the winter arrangement for the transport of the Atlantic mails are briefly these: The government entered into a contract with the Allan Line for the carriage of the mails ; subsequently when the Canadian Pacific Railway put its two new 'Empresses' into the service they became a party to an arrangement under an agreement made with the Allan Line as sub-contractors. It was quite understood by the parties to this agreement that during the winter months the 'Empress of Britain' and the 'Empress of Ireland' would run between Liverpool and St. John, receiving and delivering the mails at the latter port. Were it not for this understanding the Canadian Pacific Railway would not have participated in the contract, because if these vessels are to be kept on the Atlantic route they must serve ports reached by the Canadian Pacific Railway lines.

Then, this despatch states, that the reason why the steamship companies were not allowed to carry out that arrangement was because of the predominating influence of Halifax, and the article continues :

The Canadian Pacific Railway was quite willing to surrender its share in the mail contract rather than subject its passengers to the delay and to have the Canadian winter route for passengers seriously prejudiced by this roundabout service.

Of course the reason for that is plain because we all know that a steamer coming to St. John and calling first at Halifax has to go very considerably out of her course in order to go into Halifax, and in coming out, she has to steam from 50 to 75 miles out to sea to clear the coast. In addition to the delay, there is of course the increased cost of insurance. So that if speed is considered a necessary element in the delivery of the mails, it is important that the proposition of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in that regard should be taken into consideration.

But this could not be done unless the Allan line could secure the consent of the government. They failed to do so, and therefore the Canadian Pacific, in order to observe the terms of the contracts with the Allan line, was compelled to accept the situation.

It goes on to state the delay occasioned by the second port of call, and says :

Save for this call at Halifax on their outward and inward voyages, the 'Empresses' would confine themselves to St. John, the winter port of the Canadian Pacific, passengers and freight being shipped and landed there, while the Canadian Pacific Railway overseas limited, carrying the imperial mails to and from China, would also make St. John its winter terminal. While beyond doubt the arrangement is detrimental to the general interests of the rest of the Dominion, the only advantage accruing to Halifax is the sentimental prestige of being made a port of call, and thus receiving the local European mails a few hours earlier than if they were carried to St. John.

As far as the accommodation of the rest of Canada is concerned, it would seem from this statement of the Canadian Pacific Railway people that it would be much better for both lines to have each its direct port of call. It would be safer in every way, more speedy for the delivery of mails and passengers, and more satisfactory to both lines in every respect. I bring this matter to the notice of parliament and the government, and I would like the Minister of Finance to tell us why such an arrangement could not be carried out, especially as both lines would perfer it.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know what understandings there may have been between the Canadian Pacific and the Allans, but I know that as far as the government is concerned, there has never been any understanding that any of these subsidized mail steamers in the Atlantic service were to set aside the port of Halifax. Halifax from the beginning has been the recognized mail port of Canada for the ocean service. The Post Office Department was satisfied years ago that Halifax was a proper port for that service, and is satisfied with that to-day. The sister city St. John has undoubted advantages for the freight service by reason of its shorter rail haul from western points : but so far as the mail and passenger services are concerned, I think it hardly admits of doubt that Halifax has the advantage. Ever since the beginning of our independent Canadian line, Halifax has been the acknowledged winter mail port. Before the construction of the Intercolonial Railway the mail steamers went to Portland. After the opening of the Intercolonial there was an agitation for those vessels to come to a Canadian port, and thereafter for many years Halifax was the recognized mail port. Another agitation occurred because while the steamers came to Halifax for the mail service they went to Portland for their freight business. It was felt that a subsidized steamer should not go to a foreign port, but should receive and discharge her freight at a Canadian port ; and so the agitation took the form of a demand that the Allan line, being the contractors at that time, should deal with a Canadian port —not any particular one, but that they should be free to come to any port of Canada for the purpose of landing and receiving freight ; and St. John, having undoubted advantages in its connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and in its proximity to the centres of traffic in the west, it was chosen as giving a volume of freight which Halifax could not give ; but Halifax continued to be, as it was from the beginning, the mail port. Therefore there is no change. The arrangements now made are precisely the same as they have been for many years. It is unfortunate perhaps that those two cities down by the sea coast have a certain rivalry—I am happy to say it is good matured ; but I think it will be recognized that each has a certain amount of advantage. Undoubtedly St. John, which has shown a great deal of enterprise in equipping its port, has an advantage in handling the heavier freight, while Halifax has a decided advantage for the mail and passenger service ; and every year will emphasize these two facts. But I can answer my hon. friend that it was never contemplated that the mails should be taken away from Halifax.

Mr. DANIEL. I agree that there has never been any doubt that Halifax has always been the mail and passenger port. I know that it is a good port. The people of St. John have no feeling against Halifax at all. We would be glad to see Halifax grow and increase beyond the dreams of its people ; but this is a matter more in the nature of an experiment, and it places both ports exactly on the same footing, one line going to one port and the other line going to the other, so that there is no discrimination at all. I merely bring it to the attention of the government, because it would appear to be a good way to test the best method of delivering the Canadian mails coming from the old country. It is not that we in St. John are anxious to get a little business that is going somewhere else ; it is merely to get the most rapid and most satisfactory service. If it cannot be done, of course there is an end of it ; but it would seem that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company themselves think that they could give the country a better service by doing that, not only on account of having but one port to call, but by doing away with the risks of a coasting voyage to a certain extent in the winter time, and by doing away with that extra insurance which every vessel has to pay in making two calls instead of one. The Minister knows that the St. John 'Globe' is under the editorship of Senator Ellis, and I think he will regard Senator Ellis as a fair-minded man. The St. John 'Globe' ends its remarks on this subject in this way :

> But the statement of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company lets in important light upon the whole business. That company is able to do its mail carrying work more satisfactorily and more speedily in the winter for the benefit of all Canada and for the benefit of the European senders and receivers of mail matter through the port of St. John than it is through the port of Halifax. That is a condition which the public authorities of this country, the government and the parliament must recognize. It is a condition which must compel attention and consideration from the whole country, and it will fully justify St. John in putting forth every fair and reasonable effort to have the Canadian Pacific steamers come to this port as mail steamers. Further than this, it places a duty upon people here, and a duty upon the government, which cannot be overlooked. The mail service is one of the most important services in which this country is concerned. In some respects it is the most important. The development of the Trans-Pacific part of the business has become a factor in what, in a measure, changes the old situation. If that particular portion of the mail work can be more quickly done through the fine port of St. John than any other port on the Atlantic seaboard, what is left but to do it through St John ?

I take the liberty of bringing this matter to the attention of the hon. gentleman ; and I shall be glad, for one, if the Canadian Pacific Railway are allowed an opportunity for one season to test their views in the matter, and see if a better, quicker and more satisfactory business can be done by having the two lines going to their own respective ports, and thus allow each to give a direct service to the old country.

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that, since that time, the Canadian Pacific Railway have somewhat modified their views on the subject. In saying that, of course, I do not speak by their authority. My impression is that they have found the difficulties which they imagined to exist in the way of their going to Halifax to be largely imaginary, and I think they realize some of the advantages of that route.

Mr. KEMP. There is one point on which I would ask the minister for an explanation. The government made this contract with the Allan line when it had only two fast steamers, but when two other fast steamers were being provided by the Canadian Pacific Railway it would provide four steamers, giving one trip a week. But why was it that the Canadian Pacific Railway was put in the position of being sub-contractor to a rival company ? Does not the minister think it would have done more to encourage the building of fast steamers if such a company as the Canadian Pacific Railway were given a subsidy direct instead of in this way?

Mr. FIELDING. The Allans entered into a contract to supply two steamers of substantially the same class. I may say, frankly, that I think that the Allans, as pioneers of the Atlantic service had a claim upon us above the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Canadian Pacific Railway were engaged in the land service, and they were giving a good service,—for whether the Canadian Pacific Railway gives you a railway, steamer or hotel service, it gives you as far as possible, a good one. Of course, they had their rights, but it seems to me that the Allans, as the pioneers, had claims above them. So we gave the Allans the contract, but at the same time, we said we hoped they would make this arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway, because it would be wasteful for the Allans to provide two steamers of their own. I think the proposition is a fair one in view of the circumstance.

Mr. KEMP. There is a great increase in the subsidy for the service.

Mr. FIELDING. But we get a much better service—the two Empresses, the 'Virginian' and the 'Victorian'—a splendid service as compared with what we had a few years ago.

Mr. KEMP. But the government have set that off with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Had they not been going into the service, the Allans would have been obliged to give us two other boats of about the same size to carry out the contract.

Mr. FIELDING. One reason for making the contract in the way we did was the hope that the two would combine. Another was that the Canadian Pacific Railway control the traffic on land. They could have, as the saying is, 'frozen out' the Allans in the trade, and it was desirable that the two companies should come together and make an arrangement.

Mr. FOSTER. What strikes me as this discussion is going on is this: Even allowing for the merits of the Allan line and its long historic career—one very creditable to themselves and helpful to Canada—does not this arrangement seem like a penalizing of the industry and enterprise of other companies? We must have more steamship lines than the Allans can give us, for the country is growing. The Canadian Pacific Railway were at great expense for steamers superior in every respect to those of the older steamship company, the Allans. It looks like penalizing their enterprise to say: Even though you make the strongest line and have the best ships, you shall not get a single dollar from the country for the carrying of mails, unless you go to one port. The route of the Canadian Pacific Railway steamship line is between Liverpool and St. John, and it does not seem to me to be wholly wise to tell them that for that route they shall not receive any mail subsidy. It seems to me that that does not encourage the energy and enterprise which ought to be encouraged. Many steamship lines are better than one, but it does not seem to be the best way to secure more than one, to say that unless this new line goes into a port which is not one of its direct ports they shall get no subsidy. I am not discussing this from the standpoint of any rivalry between Halifax and St. John. The time will come and it is not very far distant when we will have four or five or six ports to which good vessels will come and where the mails will be handled. In that respect it seems to me from the first of the controversy to be a little unfair, it would be better to have a portion of the subsidy given to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

In regard to speed in the delivery of the mails, what difference in time is there in the passage of the mails, say between Liverpool and Ottawa or Liverpool and Toronto via the Allan line to Halifax and via the 'Empresses' or other vessels to St. John?

Mr. FIELDING. There is a difference.

Mr. FOSTER. How much?

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot give my hon. friend the time, a glance at the map will show.

Mr. FOSTER. I know, but the map does not tell everything, speed tells for something.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is aware that speed on railways as a rule is greater than at sea; hence for mail purposes you want to reach the nearest port so as to have the greater part of your journey by rail. It is just the opposite of the conditions with dead weight. With that you want to get the shortest land haul and the longest water haul.

Mr. FOSTER. Giving that argument all due weight, and I admit the argument, the question still remains that there is a difference. The Post Office Department should be able to give that difference.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will be able to give it in the morning, we have kept in the office here the time of the arrivals by the different lines.

Steamship service—Halifax, St. John's, Newfoundland, and Liverpool $20.000.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the Furness-Withy line which has had it for years.

Mr. FOSTER. The contracts on the steamers will be much the same as in the report?

Mr. FIELDING. It has been that for some time.

Steam service—St. John and Glasgow, $15,000.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the same concern as before, the Donaldson line.

Winter service—St. John, Dublin and Belfast, $7,500.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the Ulster Steamship Company, of Belfast, Ireland.

Steamship line—St. John, Halifax and London, $40,000.

Mr. FIELDING. That also is the Furness-Withy Company who have been performing the service for many years.

Steamship service—St. John and Digby, $12,500.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the Dominion Atlantic Railway. We contemplate by a later appropriation adding something to that subsidy in order that we may establish a daily service all the year round. There will be a further vote in the supplementaries to have it all the year around.

Mr. DANIEL. I am very glad to hear the minister make that statement, because there has been a strong demand to have that very thing done. There is plenty of business to warrant it and it would be a great convenience not only to the New Brunswick side but to the Nova Scotia side as well.

Mr. FIELDING. It is a very important service.

Steamship line or lines—St. John-Halifax, West Indies, and South America, $80,700.

Mr. FOSTER. Is any improvement contemplated in that line ? The general objection to that line is the slow speed of the vessels, and the fact that they are not really up to date. They do not compare with the service from New York to these islands and consequently lose a great deal of trade that might otherwise be secured. Is there any possibility of improving the service with a reasonable subsidy ?

Mr. FIELDING. There has been some improvement, although my hon. friend is right that it is not yet all that it should be. Several years ago we had a rearrangement of this contract which is for the Demerara service. That is a contract in which the Imperial government contribute a portion of the subsidy and the Canadian government the balance, so the contract has to be arranged with the Imperial authorities. We rearranged the contract a couple of years ago with a view to dropping some of the smaller ports. We dropped them regretfully as we would have been glad to have continued their trade too, but having to make so many calls on the way to Demarara made the voyage very long and we dropped some of the ports.

Mr. FOSTER. Both going and coming ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, some of the smaller islands. While to call at all these little islands is very delightful for the tourist, by the time you get to Demarara or Barbadoes you have had a long voyage and the New York steamer is there before you. Instead of two trips a month we now get a trip every 12 days and the vessels in the meantime have been somewhat improved, although the service is still far short of what we would like to have it.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the vessels ?

Mr. FIELDING. There is the 'Carabee,' the 'Oruru,' the 'Memnon,' the 'Orinoco,' the 'Ocamo,' and the 'Olenda.' The 'Carabee' is off and her place is taken by the 'Olenda.' Several of these have been in the service under other names, but they have been very much improved. They were taken to the old country, given new engines and made much better ships, and on the whole the service is fairly good although lacking in speed. This service runs to Bermuda, St. Thomas and a number of small islands and then on to Barbadoes, Trindad, and Georgetown, Demarara.

Steam service—Victoria and San Francisco, $3,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is the Pacific Coast Steamship Company.

Steam service—Halifax and Newfoundland, via Cape Breton ports, $2,000.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the Pickford & Black Company, of Halifax. They have had the service for years.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that developing any trade ?

Mr. DANIELS. Is that the 'Bruce' ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, the 'Bruce' runs between North Sydney and Port au Basque. This is the line going from Halifax to Newfoundland calling at Cape Breton ports, the steamer 'Harlaw.'

Steam service—Mainland and Magdalen Islands, $15,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is the service performed by the steamer 'Amelia. The service has been running, under one contract and another, for many years.

Steam service—Prince Edward Island and the mainland, $10,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is the service from Pictou to Charlottetown and from Point Duchene to Summerside.

Steam communication during the year 1907, that is, for not less than fifty-two full round weekly trips, between St. John and Halifax, via Yarmouth and other way ports, $10,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This line is conducted by Messrs. William Thompson & Company of St. John, and runs from St. John along the south shore of Nova Scotia, and terminates at Halifax.

Mr. DANIEL. Are they intending to keep it up? I heard that they thought the subsidy was too small.

Mr. FIELDING. So far as I know they are continuing. The difficulty is that a railway has been constructed along the south shore and comes in competition with the steamers, and I am inclined to think the railway carries the passengers. Whether there will be enough business to enable the steamer to continue is one of the questions which has yet to be tried out.

Steam communication between a port or ports in Prince Edward Island and a port or ports in Great Britain, $7,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This service, which was not performed last year, we are revoting on the chance of something turning up.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Why was it not performed last year?

Mr. FIELDING. We could not find anybody to do it.

Mr. LEFURGEY. You did not offer them enough money.

Mr. FIELDING. Probably not.

Direct fortnightly steam service betwen Montreal, Quebec and Manchester, England, during summer season, and between St. John, Halifax and Manchester, during the winter season, $35,000.

Mr. FIELDING. That is performed by the Manchester Liners Company, Limited. I think that runs in connection with the Manchested ship canal. It has been a very useful service to us, because we get access for our products to the centre of a large population in Great Britain. Practically they carry no passengers.

Direct monthly steam communication between Canada and South Africa, $146,000.

Mr. FIELDING. That contract was made with the Allans, the Elder-Dempster Company, and the Furness-Withy Company. The Allans have withdrawn, and the contract is now performed jointly by the other two companies. The contract began in 1902 and runs until October of the present year. The service is from Montreal and Quebec to Cape Town and to other South African ports. It is a monthly service fairly satisfactory. Our exports to South Africa are very considerable.

Mr. FOSTER. The imports seem to be small.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the trade is one-sided. I think the exports are growing. But South Africa has very little to send us.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any prospect of this business developing into a trade which would justify the subsidy?

Mr. FIELDING. I think our manufactures generally regard this service as a very desirable one. One of our difficulties with regard to this foreign service is that our manufacturers and producers at home have been pretty busy, and they will not pay as much attention to this foreign trade as is desirable. There is sometimes a complaint that they do not look after trade, that they do not send out their travellers, and are not as particular as they should be in packing their goods. But I think this South African service is valuable, and our manufacturers are looking forward to build up a considerable trade.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. More than that, since the advent of the Liberal government in England and their policy on Chinese labour in South Africa, times have been pretty bad there.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there nothing that they can send to Canada to help freight these vessels? I see you only brought in 819 tons.

Mr. FIELDING. Practically nothing comes back.

Mr. FOSTER. If they do not produce much that we want it is impossible to build up a trade.

Mr. FIELDING. South Africa produces diamonds and minerals, and they do not make freight. We exported 41,641 tons altogether.

Mr. FOSTER. There is even a falling off of 12,000 tons from the preceding year. What came in last year?

Mr. FIELDING. Practically nothing. Still I do not think our producers would care to give up the service. One of the reasons I think is that our people have been pretty busy, and there is no great inducement for them to push the trade. But if we had a check upon our rapidly growing prosperity that export trade would be more valuable to us.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If this line ran from Canada to South Africa and then to Great Britain before coming back to Canada, taking a triangular course, I think they could get better cargoes.

Mr. FIELDING. That would be a matter for the steamship people to settle on commercial principles.

Steam communication during the season of 1907, that is, from the opening to the closing of navigation, between Gaspé Basin and Dalhousie or Campbellton, $15,000.

Mr. FIELDING. That is conducted by the Interprovincial Navigation Company of Canada, Limited, of Campbellton, N.B. The vessel is called the 'Lady Eileen,' a very charming name.

Mr. FOSTER. What amount of freight was carried?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not have any return of that among my papers.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is a first-class service.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not give the answer.

Mr. LEMIEUX. All the business of the Gaspe peninsula is done by that steamer.

Mr. BERGERON. It is a large passenger business; in fact they could not go there without this service.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, it is the only line of boats.

Steam communication from April 1, 1907, to March 31, 1908, between Port Mulgrave and Canso, and between Port Mulgrave and Guysborough, and from the opening to the closing of navigation, 1907, between Port Mulgrave, Margaree and Cheticamp, $8,000.

Mr. FIELDING. I propose to strike that out because we will revote it in a better form in the supply estimates. Meanwhile we have voted one-fifth of this already and it has gone into the Supply Bill, but of course it will not be used. When the supplementary estimates come down it will be dealt with so that we can strike out of this.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The item is cancelled.

Steam service during the season of 1907 between Sydney and Whycocomagh, $1,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What does that do?

Mr. FIELDING. This is a service conducted by the Bras D'Or steamboat Company of North Sydney and it runs through a section of Cape Breton which is far away from the railway.

Winter steam navigation service during winter of 1907-8 between Quebec and St. Lawrence harbours down to Murray bay and River Ouelle, $12,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is going on there?

Mr. FIELDING. That is the connection between the Intercolonial Railway and Murray Bay. The service has been paid for during the past year out of the Intercolonial Railway vote and perhaps it will be voted in the same way, but it has been placed in these estimates here and we are retaining it in case of not making provision for it.

Steam service between Canada and Australia, $180,509.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these the same vessels?

Mr. FIELDING. This service is conducted by the Union Steamship Company of New Zealand who are the managing agents of the Canada-Australia Royal Mail line. The contract of March 31, 1904, has been renewed.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The same contract?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. It is a renewal of the old contract.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. From Vancouver to Australia?

Mr FIELDING. From Vancouver to Sydney, Australia.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What are the calling places?

Mr. FIELDING. Calling at Honolulu, the Sandwich Islands, the outer wharf at Victoria, B.C., with the option of calling at Moreton Bay or Brisbane in Queensland.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Do they not call at the Fiji Islands?

Mr. FIELDING. They always call at the Fiji Islands.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Do they not call at New Zealand?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. They used to.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the tonnage?

Mr. FIELDING. Outward, 16,058 tons, inward, 9,760; passengers carried, outward, 1,140, homeward, 2,376.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. At one time they started to import sugar cane.

Mr. FIELDING. I think they are bringing a considerable quantity of sugar cane from the Fiji islands now.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the minister considered the question of establishing a steamship freight line from the eastern coast? There are a great many hides that could be imported from Australia, but they cannot stand the rail haul from Vancouver east. If there were a steamship route established from Halifax, Quebec or Montreal, I believe it would pay.

Mr. FIELDING. To what point?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. To New Zealand and Australia.

Mr. FIELDING. We have not been doing any thing along those lines.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is felt that it would pay if we could reach the eastern part of Canada with such products as hides and wool which could not stand, the long freight haul from Vancouver east. The carriage would be just as cheap as from here to England.

Mr. FIELDING. If any proposition of that kind is made we shall be glad to consider it.

Steamship service between Paspebiac and Gaspé basin during the months of December, 1907, and January, 1908, $3,000.

Mr. FIELDING. I want to ask the committee to strike that out because it is proposed to replace it in better form in the supply estimates. The portion already voted will not be used.

Item dropped.

Steamboat service between Canada and Mexico, $100,000.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I understand that there was an arrangement made with Mexico that part of the subsidy should be paid by that country and that they have neglected to pay their share.

Mr. FIELDING. The deputy advises me that they have been paying continuously—somethimes a little delay but they have been paying.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Has the Dominion government commercial agents in Cuba?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I have been informed by a Canadian who resides in Cuba that the trade of Canada could be greatly extended if a commercial agent were sent there. They receive oats and produce of that kind from the southern states which are very much inferior to the products which could be sent from Canada. If a commercial agent were sent to Cuba by Canada a great deal of trade from the maritime provinces could be secured. I understand also that recently commercial men from the maritime provinces have visited the West India Islands, including Cuba, and that they found that in the interest of trade commercial agencies might be established in Cuba and some other of the West India Islands.

Mr. FIELDING. The question is well worthy of being looked into, and I will see that it is borne in mind, but we must not forget that Cuba comes under the protection of the United States, and that there are special tariff arrangements between the United States and Cuba, which would naturally place us at a disadvantage in competition with American ports. If there is any chance of trade there we will look into it. At one time we had a considerable export trade to Cuba.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I am told that notwithstanding the tariff conditions, our trade would be greatly increased if a commercial agent were sent there.

Some resolutions reported.

PORT ARTHUR POWER AND DEVELOPMENT COMPANY.

Mr. CONMEE moved first reading of Bill (No. 166) to incorporate the Port Arthur Power and Development Company.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. CONMEE. I move that the Bill be now read a second time.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr CONMEE. The Bill comes from the Senate, it is in readiness, and no good purpose can be served by delay.

Mr. SPROULE. The introduction of these Bills at this late stage is breaking down every rule of the House, and now you want to dispense with printing and everything else.

Mr. FOSTER. The motion cannot be consented to.

Mr. CONMEE. This Bill comes from the Senate.

Mr. MORIN. Send it back.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What will be taken up tomorrow?

Mr. FIELDING. Some of the Bills on the order paper, the Quebec bridge resolutions, and then Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. What about the supplementary estimates?

Mr. FIELDING. I think, although I am not quite sure, they will be brought down before to-morrow's sitting is over.

Motion agreed to, House adjourned at 12.05 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 19, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

Mr. C. H. PARMELEE (Shefford) moved that the third report of the joint committee on printing of parliament, presented to the House of Commons on Tuesday, March 19, 1907, be amended as follows :

1. By striking out of the report the recommendation that the report of the Royal Commission on Life Insurance, No. 123a, and the evidence taken before said commission, No. 123b, be not printed, and that the same be printed.

2. That the said report as above amended be concurred in.

Mr. BOURASSA. Are there any documents in English that have not been printed in French ?

Mr. PARMELEE. Every document we recommended to be printed and which afterwards come to this House to be afterwards translated into French.

Mr. HENDERSON. I find among the papers ordered not to be printed, a supplementary report. Is that a second report ? There is no good reason why a supplementary report to the one we have printed should not be printed.

Mr. BOURASSA. I think that is a list of exhibits, and of course it is not very important that it should be printed in French but if it be the exhibits themselves they should be printed in both languages.

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that what is meant by the supplementary report is a trunk full of exhibits. The commissioners have not made a second report.

Mr. PARMELEE. There was a catalogue of those exhibits printed and published.

Mr. LENNOX. That is what is called a supplement to the report.

Mr. FIELDING. That list should be printed.

Mr. FOSTER. The question of printing the exhibits themselves was discussed. I drew attention to the fact that the evidence was printed and that the evidence referred to exhibits which were not printed. Then a conversation arose as to whether it was wise to print those exhibits. In one sense if the evidence refers to exhibits, those should be where they might be easily referred to. But when you come to look at the exhibits, there are bundles and bundles of printed books and it is out of the question having them printed in great part. When you come to look into it it is absolutely useless for a great part of it to be printed so that the Finance Minister and myself came to an agreement for the time being that if a list of the exhibits were printed then we would have them to refer to and if we wanted a copy of any one exhibit we could send and obtain it from the records of the department. That is the origin of the supplementary list, which is simply a tabulation of the documents and exhibits. I would think it would be a terrible waste of money and time to have the exhibits printed. The great proportion of them would be simply the reprinting of printed documents and great lists of securities and the like of that, which would be of no use.

Mr. BOURASSA. Would it not be still better to have printed those exhibits that are referred to in the evidence and report in such a way that the evidence cannot be properly understood and the report cannot be properly discussed without those exhibits being read at the same time. Of course that would require the work of a sub-committee but I imagine that could be done at the opening of next session.

Mr. FOSTER. That could be done if it were necessary, but I still think that the work of the House would be facilitated by a member who wishes any exhibit sending for it and having a copy made. It would require a very close examination by a subcommittee to decide which motion should be printed.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS BEFORE PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN moved :

That all documents, accounts, letters and other papers produced, during the present session of parliament, before the Public Accounts Committee (except original documents, letters or other original papers), do remain in the possession of the clerk of the said committee until the close of the next session of parliament; and that all such original documents, letters and other papers (copies having first been prepared and retained), be returned, at the close of the present session, to the department from which received by the said committee, but that on the first day of the next session of parliament they again be sent by said respective departments to the clerk of the committee above named as constituted for that session.

Motion agreed to.

SATURDAY SITTINGS.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved :

That hereafter, until the end of the session, the House shall sit on Saturday at eleven o'clock, with the usual intermissions at one o'clock and six o'clock, the order of precedence for Saturday to be the same as the order for Thursday.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understood the minister to say the other day that the House would rise at six o'clock on Saturday.

Mr. FIELDING. The resolution does not cover that according to the usual practice, but it can be an understanding that the House will rise at six o'clock to-morrow.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House do to-morrow go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolutions :

1. Resolved, that the Governor in Council may grant a subsidy of $3,200 per mile towards the construction of each of the undermentioned lines of railway (not exceeding in any case the number of miles hereinafter respectively stated) which shall not cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, and towards the construction of each of the said lines of railway, not exceeding the mileage hereinafter stated, which shall cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, a further subsidy beyond the sum of $3,200 per mile of fifty per cent on so much of the average cost of the mileage subsidized as is in excess of $15,000 per mile, such subsidy not exceeding in the whole the sum of $6,400 per mile :

1. To the Central Ontario Railway for an extension of its railway from a point at or near Bancroft to a point on the Canada Atlantic Railway at or near Whitney, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 4, not exceeding 40 miles.

2. For a line of railway from Woodstock to the international boundary in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 15, not exceeding 26 miles.

3. For a line of railway from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway at or near Welsford or Westfield, or between the said two points, to Gagetown, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 16, not exceeding 30 miles.

4. For a line of railway from Liverpool to Milton, Nova Scotia, in lieu of part of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 23d, not exceeding 7 miles.

5. For a line of railway from Milton to Caledonia, Nova Scotia, in lieu of part of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 23d, not exceeding 22 miles.

6. To the Inverness Railway and Coal Company for a line of railway from Cheticamp to a point on the line already built between Broad Cove and Point Tupper, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 24, not exceeding 37 miles.

7. For a line of railway from a point on the Dominion Atlantic Railway to the government pier or wharf at Canning, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 25, not exceeding 1 mile.

8. To the Nicola, Kamloops and Similkameen Coal and Railway Company for a line of railway from a point at or near Spence's bridge, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, to Nicola lake, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 26, not exceeding 47 miles.

9. To the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company, for a line of railway from the town of Strathcona to Edmonton and thence westerly towards the Yellowhead Pass, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 28, not exceeding 50 miles.

10. For a line of railway from Fredericton to Woodstock, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 29, not exceeding 59 miles.

11. For a line of railway from Hawkesbury, Ontario, to South Indian, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 30, not exceeding 35 miles.

12. To the Tilsonburg, Lake Erie and Pacific Railway Company, for a line of railway from Woodstock northerly to a point on the Grand Trunk Railway at Berlin, or from Ingersoll to Stratford, or to any point on the Grand Trunk Railway between these places, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 31, not exceeding 35 miles.

13. To the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company for a line of railway from Toronto, via the east side of Lake Simcoe, to a point at, near or beyond Sudbury through Parry Sound, in lieu of the subsidy granted to the James Bay Railway Company by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 39, not exceeding 265 miles.

14. For a branch line from a point at or near the intersection of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway (formerly the Great Northern Railway) between St. Philippe d'Argenteuil and Lachute, thence in a northerly direction passing through the village of Brownsburg, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 49, not exceeding 4·2 miles.

15. To the Orford Mountain Railway Company for the following lines of railway, namely: from Bolton line to Mansonville, 7·54 miles; from Mansonville to the international boundary, 3·12 miles; from Windsor Mills to Brompton Falls, 8 miles; from Melbourne road crossing to Melbourne village, 3·50 miles; and from a point on its main line of railway to the south of end of Bonella lake, 5 miles; in lieu of the subsidies granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 50, but not exceeding in the whole 27 miles.

16. To the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company, for a line of railway from a point on its main line at or near L'Epiphanie, passing by way of the parish of St. Jacques de l'Achigan, to the village of Rawdon, in lieu of the subsidy granted to the Chateauguay and Northern Railway Company by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 55, not exceeding 16 miles.

17. To the York and Carleton Railway Company for a line of railway from its present terminus westerly, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 61, not exceeding 5 miles.

18. To the Midway and Vernon Railway Company for a line of railway from Midway to Vernon, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 69, not exceeding 150 miles.

19. For a line of railway from a point at or near the north end of Lake Megantic, thence along the said lake to a point on the international boundary at or near Rivière Morte, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 78, not exceeding 19 miles.

20. For a line of railway from Wellington to or towards Union bay by way of Alberni in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 43 of 1906, section 1, item 6, not exceeding 55 miles.

21. For a line of railway from Ste. Rose (or from Chimney Corner Coal Mines to a point at or near Chimney Corner Cove) thence via the east side of Lake Ainslie to or towards a point on the Intercolonial Railway at or near Orangedale, not exceeding 34 miles; and for a line of railway from a point on the Intercolonial Railway between Orangedale and Point Tupper to Caribou Cove, or Inhabitants bay or river, not exceeding 4 miles; in lieu of the subsidies granted by chapter 43 of 1906, section 1, item 34.

22. To the Klondike Mines Railway Company for the following lines of railway, namely:

(a) for a line of railway from Dawson to a point at or near Sulphur Spring, not exceeding 31 miles;

(b) for a line of railway from a point at or near Sulphur Spring to a point at or near the Divide between Dominion and Flat creeks, not exceeding 45 miles;

(c) for a line of railway from a point at or near the said divide to or towards the Stewart river, not exceeding 8 miles;

The whole in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 43 of 1906, section 1, item 46.

23. For a line of railway from St. Peter's to Louisbourg, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 65, not exceeding 50 miles.

24. For a line of railway from Grandique Ferry, to Arichat, Nova Scotia, being a revote of the subsidy granted by chapter 7 of 1901, section 2, item 15, not exceeding 8 miles.

25. For a line of railway from Connors, at the terminus of the Témiscouata Railway, to a point on the boundary line between New Brunswick and Quebec, at the foot of Bean lake, being a revote of part of the subsidy granted by chapter 7 of 1901, section 2, item 2, not exceeding 18 miles.

2. Resolved, that the Governor in Council may grant, towards the construction and completion of a railway bridge and approaches over the Nicolet river at Nicolet, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 3, item 1, a subsidy of $15,000.

3. Resolved, that in these resolutions, unless the context otherwise requires, the expression 'cost' means the actual, necesssary and reasonable cost, and shall include the amount expended upon any bridge, up to and not exceeding $25,000, forming part of the line of railway subsidized not otherwise receiving any bonus, but shall not include the cost of equipping the railway nor the cost of terminals nor the cost of right of way of the railway in any city or incorporated town; and such actual, necessary and reasonable cost shall be determined by the Governor in Council, upon the recommendation of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and upon the report of the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, certifying that he has made or caused to be made an inspection of the line of railway for which payment of subsidy is asked, and careful inquiry into the cost thereof, and that in his opinion the amount upon which the subsidy is claimed is reasonable, and does not exceed the true, actual and proper cost of the construction of such railway.

4. Resolved, that the subsidies hereby authorized towards the construction of any railway or bridge shall be payable out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, and may, unless otherwise expressly provided in these resolutions, at the option of the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, be paid as follows:

(a) Upon the completion of the work subsidized; or

(b) By instalments, on the completion of each ten-mile section of the railway, in the proportion which the cost of such completed sections bears to that of the whole work undertaken ; or

(c) Upon the progress estimates on the certificate of the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals that, in his opinion, having regard to the whole work undertaken and the aid granted, the progress made justifies the payment of a sum not less than thirty thousand dollars ; or

(d) With respect to (b) and (c), part one way, part the other.

5. Resolved, that the subsidies hereinbefore authorized to be granted to companies named shall, if granted by the Governor in Council be granted to such companies respectively ; the other subsidies may be granted to such companies as establish to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council their ability to construct and complete the said railways and bridge respectively ; all the lines and the bridge for the construction of which subsidies are granted, unless they are already commenced, shall be commenced within two years from the first day of August, 1907, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years from the said first day of August, to be fixed by the Governor in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions, conditions and specifications approved by the Governor in Council on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in each case in a contract between the company and the said minister, which contract the minister, with the approval of the Governor in Council, is hereby empowered to make. The location also of such subsidized lines and bridge shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

6. Resolved, that the granting of such subsidies and the receipt thereof by the respective companies, shall be subject to the condition that the board of railway commissioners of Canada may at all times provide and secure to other companies such running powers, traffic arrangements and other rights as will afford to all railways connecting with the railways and bridge so subsidized reasonable and proper facilities in exercising such running powers, fair and reasonable traffic arrangements with connecting companies and equal mileage rates between all such connecting railways ; and the said board shall have absolute control, at all times, over the rates and tolls to be levied and taken by any of the companies, or upon any of the railways and bridge hereby subsidized : Provided always that any decision of the said board made hereunder may be at any time varied, changed, or rescinded by the Governor in Council, as he deems just and proper.

7. Resolved, that every company receiving a subsidy hereunder, its successors and assigns, and any person or company controlling or operating the railway or portion of railway hereby subsidized, shall each year furnish to the government of Canada transportation for men, supplies, materials and mails over the portion of the lines in respect of which it has received such subsidy, and, whenever required, shall furnish mail cars properly equipped for such mail service; and such transportation and service shall be performed at such rates as are agreed upon between the minister of the department of the government for which such service is being performed, and the company performing it, and, in case of disagreement, then at such rates as are approved by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada : and in or towards payment for such charges the government of Canada shall be credited by the company with a sum equal to three per annum on the amount of the subsidy received by the company hereunder.

8. Resolved, that as respects all railways and the bridge for which subsidies are granted hereby, the company at any time owning or operating any of the railways shall, when required, produce and exhibit to the Minister of Railways and Canals, or any person appointed by him, all books, accounts and vouchers showing the cost of constructing the railway or bridge, the cost of operating it, and the earnings thereof.

9. Resolved, that the Governor in Council may make it a condition of the grant of the subsidy herein provided that the company shall lay the railway with new steel rails and fastenings made in Canada and shall purchase all materials and supplies required for the construction of the railway and bridge and the rolling stock for the first equipment of the railway from Canadian producers, if such rails, fastenings, materials, supplies and equipment are procurable in Canada of suitable quality and upon terms as favourable as elsewhere, of which the Minister of Railways and Canals shall be the judge.

10. Resolved, that whenever a contract has been duly entered into with a company for the construction of any line of railway hereby subsidized, the Minister of Railways and Canals, at the request of the company, and upon the report of the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, and his certificate that he has made careful examination of the surveys, plans and profile of the whole line so contracted for, and has duly considered the physical characteristics of the country to be traversed and the means of transport available for construction, naming the reasonable and probable cost of such construction, may, with the authorization of the Governor in Council, enter into a supplementary agreement, fixing definitely the maximum amount of the subsidy to be paid, based upon the certificate of the chief engineer, and providing that the company shall be entitled to be paid, as the minimum, the ordinary subsidy of $3,200 per mile, together with sixty per cent of the difference between the amount so fixed and the said $3,200 per mile, if any ; and the balance, forty per cent, shall be paid only on completion of the whole work subsidized, and in so far as the actual cost, as finally determined by the Governor in Council upon the recommendation of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and upon the report and certificate of the said chief engineer, entitles the company thereto : Provided always :

(a) that the estimated cost, as certified, is not less on the average than $18,000 per mile for the whole mileage subsidized ;

(b) that no payment shall be made except upon a certificate of the chief engineer that the work done is up to the standard specified in the company's contract ;

(c) that in no case shall the subsidy exceed the sum of $6,400 per mile.

He said : His Excellency the Governor General, having been informed of the subject-matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. H. BOURASSA (Labelle). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I beg to give a personal explanation as a matter of privilege. I see that on the 15th of April a paper known as the Sydney 'Daily Post,' printed an article entitled: 'Tainted Politicians,' in which it says :

It must not be forgotten that quite a number of these politicians are growing rich at the public expense. Let us cite a few cases. The Robins Irrigation deal, which gives the public land to some supporters of Laurier at $1 an acre, has netted the recipients $850,000 so far. Mr. Bourassa, M.P., Sifton's brother-in-law, is now wealthy. He owns 478 square miles of timber lands, which he acquired during the reign of his relative in the Department of the Interior.

I need not say that I have neither the honour nor the advantage to be connected in any way with the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) nor have I the advantage of possessing 478 square miles or any square miles or square acres of timber lands in the Northwest or in the east. I had a few acres a few years ago, but since I have been in politics, not being connected with a minister of the Crown ,they are all gone.

COAL STRIKES IN THE NORTHWEST.

Mr. D. W. BOLE (Winnipeg). I beg for leave to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing the following urgent matter of public importance :

The threatened shortage of fuel for the western country during the coal strike, and the serious consequences likely to arise therefrom.

You will no doubt remember, Mr. Speaker, and no doubt all the members of the House will remember the serious consequences that resulted in the western country last winter in consequence of the coal strike which was commenced about a year ago. By a fortunate course of circumstances the calamities which were at one time anticipated did not materialize. There were intense sufferings in those parts of the country but on account of the tremendous efforts of the transportation companies, the cooperation of the various governments and, I may say, the patriotism of the people, the dire calamity which we at one time anticipated did not materialize. We are informed that a strike at present in fact exists, although we are also informed that no strike exists, but we know that the men are going out in very large numbers and that a practical strike is on at the present time. A fear exists that we will experience next winter to even a greater extent the great inconvenience that we experienced last winter. I have just received the following telegram from the Board of Trade of Winnipeg:

Winnipeg, Man., April 18, 1907.

D. W. Bole, M.P.,
Ottawa.

Winnipeg Board of Trade passed following resolution large meeting held to-day :—Resolved, in view of the fuel shortage throughout the west last winter and the very serious consequences that ensued it is imperative that measures be taken at once to avert the danger of a recurrence that now threatens by virtue of the miners' strike in the Alberta and British Columbia mines. That every board of trade and government in the west be requested to take action by urging upon the Dominion government the absolute necessity of taking immediate possession of the mines and operating them under the best available conditions, until such times as a settlement of the existing difference between the owners and strikers can be reached.

(Sgd.) C. N. BELL,
Secretary.

I only received that telegram about an hour ago and I have had no opportunity of giving it any constructive thought, but I desired, in view of the very serious conditions that exist at the present time and which are likely to exist, to bring the matter to the attention of the House with the view of asking the hon. leader of the House (Mr. Fielding) or the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux) or the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) if they are in possession of any facts or if they have any solution to offer with respect to this very important question. I understand that other members from the west have telegrams which perhaps they desire to read before the members of the government discuss the matter.

Mr. W. E. KNOWLES (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, in connection with what the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) has said, I desire the privilege of reading a telegram which I received this morning from the secretary of the Board of Trade of Regina very much to the same effect as the telegram which has been read by the hon. member from the city of Winnipeg. It is as follows :

Regina, Sask., April 18, 1907.

W. E. Knowles, M.P.,
Ottawa.

I am instructed to forward following resolution :—In view of the fact that there is every reason to believe that a coal strike is now pending in the west, and that such a strike would cause demoralization of the trade of this country ; therefore, the Regina Board of Trade hereby urgently requests the Dominion government to immediately take such action as may seem best to avert that dire calamity. We would further strongly suggest that the time is opportune for the Dominion government to take the necessary steps towards divorcing the Canadian Miners' Union from dependence upon American organizations and their influence, making these unions thoroughly Canadian.

(Sgd.) LAWSON.
Secretary.

I, like my hon. friend from Winnipeg, regard this matter as one of urgency. We had cause for great anxiety last fall in connection with our supply of fuel on the prairies and, while in view of the unprecedented winter which we experienced and of other circumstances, I cannot say that I lay the blame to any government or to any persons connected with administration of the affairs of the country, yet, the manner in which the calamity seemed to come upon us so quickly last fall shows us that it is impossible for us to take precautions too early. Some hon. members have remarked to me that the warm weather will be on now in a little while and it may seem rather premature to bring the matter to the attention of the government at this early date, but this House will prorogue in a few days, we will not meet again until November, and I submit that it is most urgent that the matter should be brought to the attention of the government and the House at the earliest possible moment. My hon. friend from Winnipeg has said that there seems to be every probability of a renewal of the strike conditions in the coal camps of Alberta and British Columbia. I have no definite information upon that, but if there is the faintest possibility of such a circumstance arising it seems to me that it would be criminal if we did not bring it to the attention of the government now. I had the honour in the month of February to bring before this House some of the troubles we had experienced when I made my motion in regard to the Hudson Bay Railway and the necessity for building that road, and without repeating what I then said I can only say that since another visit to the west and on further reflection I am more than ever convinced that there is the possibility of a calamity of the greatest magnitude in that country unless the matter of transportation and of fuel supply is in some way adjusted. I will admit that this is a great problem, I will admit that the responsibility may be somewhere other than on the government of the Dominion of Canada, but somewhere or somehow this matter must receive attention not only in the interest of commerce but in the interest of humanity, for I believe that if there should be a renewal of these strike conditions this year next winter will see us in such a condition that we may get an enormous black eye commercially and it will be something unspeakably horrible from the aspect of the man who has any humanity in his heart. The stream of immigration into the country will be very large. There will be a much larger consumption of fuel than there was in the previous year. The immigration branch of the Department of the Interior have told us that they expect 300,000 immigrants this year and under these circumstances I trust the government will give this matter all the care and all the attention they can with profit spend upon it.

Mr. JOHN CRAWFORD (Portage La Prairie). Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to discuss this question at any length, but there is no doubt that the conditions are very serious in the west not only in regard to the coal and fuel situation but in many other respects. I think that the transportation question is more responsible for this condition than anything else. I have received a document from the board of trade of the town from which I come and I would like to put it on record as it goes to show there is a general movement throughout the western country to investigate the whole situation and endeavour to secure an amelioration of the conditions existing there at the present time. I will just read this document which I received a day or two ago in that connection :

Board of Trade,
Neepawa, 22nd March, 1907.

Dear Sir,—The Winnipeg Jobbers' and Shippers' Association and the Winnipeg Board of Trade in view of the general demoralization of transportation which has prevailed throughout the west for the last year, and reached an acute stage during the past three or four months, have resolved to lay the matter before the proper authorities in such shape that it may be given the attention it deserves. For this purpose it becomes necessary to compile and submit to such authorities facts and specific information as to delays showing in a general way the actual conditions as they exist and giving as many cases as can be conveniently furnished.

The boards of trade throughout the west have been asked to co-operate ; and although in some respects our district has been favoured during the past three or four months, there are some sections which have very seriously suffered.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is impossible to hear the hon. gentleman. If the hon. gentleman proposes to give the House any information will he speak a little louder ?

Mr. CRAWFORD (reading) :

The information required by the board should relate both to freight and passenger or express traffic, and should show the loss or suffering caused by delays in delivering or forwarding freight, &c. It is the intention to ask for information going back to the first of May, 1906, and we would be obliged if you would fill out the accompanying statement and mail it to the secretary of the Board of Trade at Neepawa. He will then lay this information before the first mentioned association to assist them in this work in which the whole west is greatly concerned. We hope we may rely upon your co-operation and assistance.

Yours very truly,
M. H. FIELDHOUSE,
Secretary, Neepawa Board of Trade.

Mr. SPROULE. That has nothing especially to do with the strike.

Mr. JOHN HERRON (Alberta) Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to minimize the seriousness of this subject at the present time. I have no special information from the west in the last two or three days. I have been making inquiries but it is very hard to get any definite information regarding the situation in those mining districts. I have the honour of representing a district which perhaps produces more coal than any one in the western country. One of the most serious problems the people of the west have had to face for a long time is this coal situation, and I cannot do more than ask the Minister of Labor (Mr. Lemieux) to take every step possible to overcome this very serious difficulty. I received a telegram from there stating that a lockout had occurred and drew the attention of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux) to it, and we had the assurance of the minister afterwards that the difficulties were practically settled, but up to the present I do not think they are. I do not know whether this is a lockout or a strike. The papers say that the men are gradually quitting work. In either case the situation is very serious, and will become more so if continued any length of time.

Mr. A. VERVILLE (Maisonneuve). I have just heard read a telegram stating that the government should take steps to have the Canadian unions divorced from the American. I contest the right, in the name of organized labour, of any board of trade to ask the government to have the labour people of the country separated from any other union, whether on the one side of the ocean or the other or in the United States or not. These boards of trade have no objection to doing business on both sides of the line, and should they object to working men uniting themselves with unions on the other side. They are going altogether too far when they ask the government to interfere with the liberty on the part of the labouring class which they enjoy themselves. The government have passed a measure lately for the purpose of settling strikes and lock-outs, and no one suggested that this coercion advocated by this board of trade should be one of the means employed. The government measure has become law and has had already in several instances good effect, and I hope it will prove effective in settling strikes by the coal miners in the west. I want to enter a strong protest against the particular board of trade in question or any other board of trade interfering by urging the government to dictate to the workingmen the manner in which they should organize. I want the boards of trade to understand that we are an organized international union in Canada, and we are here to stay and neither the government nor the opposition nor anybody else will ever stop the working people of this country from organizing.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS (Yale-Cariboo). While I agree with the hon. gentlemen in most of what he has said, I would ask him, as a representative of labour, what he would do with Mr. Sherman who wires the government that the labour legislation is a farce and who is no doubt directing the men to quit work ?

Mr. VERVILLE. I would enforce the law which has been passed by the government.

Mr. KNOWLES. Of course the House understands that I only read what is in the wire message.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Minister of Labour). I am glad this question has been brought up this morning by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole). But even if he had not spoken, I had intended to inform the House of what is going on at present in the mining districts of the west. I wish, however, in the first place, to protest most energetically against the exaggerated telegrams which have been sent from some boards of trade. My hon. friend spoke of a black eye to the west. In my opinion, a black eye to the west may be caused by such exaggerations. The telegram which was read by my hon. friend is a copy of one which was sent the other day by the Calgary Board of Trade, and read as follows :

Calgary Board of Trade strongly urges immediate action, board of conciliation, miners disagreement. Freight traffic ceased entirely, passenger traffic stops few days, miners leaving work in large bodies, though no strike apparently officially declared. Output coal practically ceased, manufacturing plants closing, situation most serious in history of western Canada. Ask your co-operation to prevent fatal demoralization western business.

E. L. RICHARDSON,
Secretary, Board of Trade.

When I received that telegram, I happened to meet a gentleman connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway. I showed it to him and he smiled and said : I do not know where Mr. Richardson got his information, but from the wires I have received there is no such thing; it is an exaggerated statement. On the 18th, yesterday, I took upon myself to write as follows to the president of the Board of Trade at Calgary :

Sir,—I am directed by the hon. the Minister of Labour to acknowledge the receipt of the following telegram from the secretary of the Calgary Board of Trade:

Calgary, Alberta, April 10, 1907.

Hon. Minister of Labour, Ottawa.

Calgary Board of Trade strongly urges immediate action board of conciliation, miners disagreement. Freight traffic ceased entirely, passenger traffic stops few days, miners leaving work in large bodies though no strike apparently officially declared. Output coal practically ceased, manufacturing plants closing, situation most serious in history of wetsern Canada. Ask your co-operation prevent fatal demoralization western business.

E. L. RICHARDSON,
Secretary, Board of Trade.

Upon the receipt of this telegram the department immediately instituted inquiries to verify the statements it contained. From the information which has been received, it would appear that at the time this message was sent, a number of miners at Coleman, Alberta, and some miners at Fernie and Michel, British Columbia, had ceased work because of some misunderstanding, but the department has not received any information which would indicate that, with these exceptions, mining operations had ceased in any of the mines in British Columbia or Alberta, nor do the replies which have been received to the inquiries instituted by the department confirm the other statements contained in this telegram.

The minister is of the opinion that if such a condition as is described in the telegram of the Calgary Board of Trade existed on the 16th instant, in consequence of the slight industrial disturbances reported on that date, too searching an inquiry cannot be made by the department into the causes which, in so short a time, have produced a result so disastrous. On the other hand, the minister is of the opinion that nothing could be more calculated to prejudice the industrial interests of the Canadian west than the circulation of statements such as are contained in this telegram, given to the country, as they are, in the name of a responsible body such as the Calgary Board of Trade, unless they are fully warranted in every way. As the minister is desirous of obtaining the fullest information possible in order that the department may take such action as the facts of the case warrant, the minister would be obliged if the Calgary Board of Trade would let him have, at the earliest possible date, the facts on which, on the 16th instant, the following statements contained in the telegram of the secretary were based :

Freight traffic ceased entirely.
Passenger traffic stops few days.
Miners leaving work in large bodies.
Output coal practically ceased.
Manufacturing plants closing.
Situation most serious in history of western Canada.

The minister desires us to add that copies of this telegram appeared in the public press before its receipt by him at Ottawa, and inasmuch as the telegram has been extensively quoted throughout the Dominion, the minister would be pleased to know whether its communication to the press was at the instance of and in accordance with the wishes of the Calgary Board of Trade.

I have the honour to be,
Your obedient servant,

W. L. MACKENZIE KING,
Deputy Minister of Labour.

The President, Calgary Board of Trade, Calgary, Alberta.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with all that has been said, that we must do our best to stop if at all possible a strike in these mines, and to avert a recurrence of that condition of things which we were threatened with last winter. I repeat that there is no lock-out and there is no strike in the west at present. That is the official information in the possession of the Department of Labour. There is a difficulty between the operators and the miners, but it is neither a strike or lock-out. The operators in some of the mines made the mistake of posting a notice that on the 10th of May another scale of wages would be established. In consequence of this, some of the men who had previously appointed a representative on the Board of Conciliation thought that no investigation was necessary in view of that notice. There is no question but that the owners of the mines have made a terrible mistake.

Mr. FOSTER. To whom do you refer as operators?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The owners of the mines. The operators have appointed Mr. Parker as their representative.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. What are his initials ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. T. L. Parker. Last night I received this telegram from Mr. Eckstein, the representative of the miners :

Mr. Parker will meet me here to-morrow. have been unable to locate Mr. Smith. Expect to reach him soon. Have arranged meeting mine workers immediately as board is filled.

L. P. ECKSTEIN.

The meaning of that telegram is that Mr. Parker, representing the mine owners, and Mr. Eckstein the mine workers, are to get together to-day, and, according to the representative of the mine workers, that meeting will result in the men all returning to work. As I have said, however, a few of the miners have left work because of the notice which was posted. Mr. Eckstein wrote from Fernie under date of April 15 last, and that letter was received in Ottawa this morning.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram of the 13th inst., reading as follows :—

Minister has appointed you member of board being established to inquire into existing disputes between coal companies and employees. Companies have agreed to matters being referred to one board. Presume from correspondence this accords with wish of employees. Companies were requested in letter mailed ninth inst. to name their representatives.

In reply thereto I sent the following telegram :—

One board satisfactory. Important to arrange meeting between companies' representatives and myself immediately after his appointment. Hundreds of men have quit and more doing so. I think that perhaps even before we select chairman the two representatives can establish a modus vivendi and restore confidence. Great trouble is that individually men are dissatisfied, and it has been extremely difficult to prevent general strike for which over ninety per cent vote has been given. If operators could see their way towards withdrawing present notice of intending change of conditions and wages that might relieve acuteness of situation.

Notwithstanding the efforts which have been made by executive officers of the United Mine Workers of America and also by myself to allay their fears, a large majority of men seem to view the notice served by the respective operators of an intended change of conditions to take place on the 10th of May, as capable of coming into operation on that date.

I am told that such changes of conditions would affect about twenty per cent reduction in wages. These notices have been printed on cardboard and posted up in conspicuous places, and have been very generally read by the men. They do not read anything outside of the notice itself, and, therefore, take it for granted that what is notified to them in this way will surely take effect.

It is my opinion that if the operators could either withdraw these notices or convey to the minds of their employees that there would be no change of condition pending the investigation, that that would go a long way towards allaying the trouble and that is why I wired you to that effect.

I am, yours faithfully,
L. P. ECKSTEIN.

I may point out that section 57 of the Act provides that the relations of the parties shall remain unchanged pending proceedings before the Board of Arbitration.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. What action has been taken by the department to enforce section 57 of the Act: That notice posted by the operators is clearly a violation of the Act.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, but we only received that notice this morning.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. What action does the department intend to take?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Any person in that district can take the law in his own hands and go before a justice of the peace.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. What if he does not know the law?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Everybody is supposed to know the law; 'nemo censitur ignorare iegem'.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Since the minister has got this information will he now inform the operators of their breach of the law?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will touch upon that point in a moment. I may say that the miners in Western Canada are all members of that large American association at the head of which is Mr. John Mitchell, and I am pleased to say that he has informed the Canadian miners in the west that he would under no circumstances declare a strike unless they would submit their case to the Arbitration Board first. I am bound to say this in justice to Mr. Mitchell, who is not a Canadian and who is at the head of that great association of miners.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister speaks of the men as Canadian miners; I understand they are all European or American citizens.

Mr. CONMEE. They are in Canadian territory.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I understand that most of these miners are of the same nationality as Mr. Mitchell himself.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The miners working in Alberta and British Columbia are Canadian citizens whether they come from Europe or from the United States. As regards the question put by my hon. friend, I may say that we desire to clear the atmosphere and to enlighten the miners, because this law was passed only a few weeks ago and it is quite natural that they should be unacquainted with some of its provisions. The Department of Labour has decided to despatch this evening the able Deputy Minister of Labour, Mr. King, to the works, and we hope that he will be as successful there as he was at Lethbridge.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). I would like to ask the hon. minister a question. His Excellency Earl Grey delivered a speech in New York the other evening, in the course of which he made this statement, which I am sure must have been furnished by the Department of Labour, and I would like to ask the hon. minister whether it is true or not:

Although the Act came into force only on March 22, it has already averted on three occasions an industrial war, which but for this Act would have engendered feelings of angry bitterness, would have arrested the peaceful development of the arts of industry, and would have left traces of privation and misery in the homes of thousands.

Would the minister be kind enough to tell us the three instances in which this Act has given such valuable service?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not think this is germane to the debate. At all events, I may say this to my hon. friend, that I stand by His Excellency the Governor General: what he said there was positively true.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to inquire from the minister exactly what the position is in the west. There were a certain number of miners at work two or three weeks ago. How many of these are at work now? There is no use of dealing in generalities in this matter, and saying there is no strike. What we want to know is what proportion of the men who were at work are at work now?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The information in the hands of the officers of the Department of Labour is that in all the mines a majority of the men are working. Only a minority of them have left the mines on account of that notice which was unwisely posted by the operators. I could not state offhand the numbers. I may be able to do so during the day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. A minority might mean forty-nine per cent. We do not know whether it means that or ten or twenty or thirty per cent. So that the minister is not very full of information as to the exact details, or if he is, he retains it very much to himself. There is a telegram in the 'Citizen' of this morning as follows :

Fernie, B.C., April 16.—One thousand miners are now out on strike, and more are quitting daily.

I wanted to ascertain definitely from the minister whether or not this is correct.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The information I have is that it is not correct.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister's lack of definite information is so apparent, that I would not be prepared to attach very much importance to his denial. This despatch goes on :

These cover a dozen mining camps along the Crow's Nest line. The situation is desperate and the railway supply of coal will not last ten days.

In reply to a telegram to-day from Hon. Mr. Lemieux, warning him that the miners were violating the law, and urging them to await the government investigation, president Sherman of the United Mine Workers' Union wired the Ottawa authorities :

Your plea comes too late. We look upon investigation as a farce. We will carry this fight to the foot of the Throne.

The men hope to avoid the law's penalty on the plea that they are just quitting their jobs, and not striking. Industries throughout British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan are closing up, as no coal can be secured.

The government has been urged to arrest Sherman, and this move is expected. The government is prepared to place a strong force of militia on the scene of disturbance on day's notice.

About a week or ten days ago I urged on the government that as this law has been passed, not in the interest of the mine owners or of the miners, but in the interest of the public, it was the duty of the government to enforce the law. What was the answer of the Minister of Labour ? It is not, he said, the duty of the government to enforce the law ; there is the law, and any one interested can proceed under its provisions, but, as far as we are concerned, we will not enforce it.' Does the Minister of Labour take that position to-day ?—because it must be apparent that a position of that kind would render the law a mere farce, as the miners have declared that it is. A law such as this, passed in order that these public utilities, if I may call them such, may be operated for the public benefit is of no service at all if the government take the position that they will not interfere, no matter how that law may be violated. As far as the main question is concerned, I am glad that some of the members from the west are more interested in it than they were some time ago, when my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Herron) moved a resolution, and when the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles) moved an amendment which meant nothing, which was intended to divert the issue, which he was probably asked by the government to move and by which brought the discussion to a close in that way. The motion of my hon. friend from Alberta was a motion which went to the point. It asked that the government by reason of its control over these coal lands, should take such action as would render a supply of coal available at all times for the consumers.

Mr. FIELDING. How could that be accomplished if the men would not work ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Surely the government could make as good regulations for its employees in a coal mine as it can for its employees in the post office, on the government railways or elsewhere. We have had no strike in the post office or on the government railways, so far as I am aware.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Does the hon. leader of the opposition make the statement that the same class of men could be found to work coal mines, generally speaking ? Most of the miners are Slavs, and people of that kind will not work in the post office or on a government railway.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is not necessary for the government to employ that class of men, if the hon. gentleman has such a contempt for Slavs.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I have not a contempt for them .

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then why does he speak of them in such a tone ? The government, as was suggested by my hon. friend from Alberta, could get a class of men who would not strike as long as they received a decent wage and fair treatment.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Where would they get the men ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend has resolved himself into an interrogation point this morning.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I am only adopting the tactics of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, if my hon. friend would adopt the usual methods of the leader of the opposition, he would do very much better than he generally does. If he simply imitates the leader of the opposition in asking questions, and if the leader of the opposition asks too many he is not following a very good example. I think it is possible for us to get an excellent class of men to work in the coal mines. There is in the coal mines of Nova Scotia as high a class of men as you can find either on the Intercolonial or in the post office—men of character, men who can be depended upon. They occasionally have their difficulties with their employers; but I venture to say that if you got men of that type and put them at work in one of these mines in the west, you would not have very much difficulty with them, provided you treated them fairly, and gave them a decent living wage. Under these circumstances I venture to think that it is the duty of my hon. friend the Minister of Labour to give us further information on this subject before the day is over. I have read the press despatch. The Minister of Labour, in a somewhat half-hearted way, denies the accuracy of this.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) will excuse me; I did not deny in a half-hearted way the accuracy of the despatch that has been read—I deny it absolutely. No such despatch has been sent. And it is clear, on the face of it, that it is published merely to annoy the labour department, and in the hope that this question will thereby be brought to the front. This despatch is made up. It was never sent to the labour department.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) has a remarkably poor opinion of the bona fides of the journal in which this is printed.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) knows that journals are often the victim of their own ingenuity.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I confess that I do not quite follow the line of thought in the hon. gentleman's mind, when he says that journals are victims of their own ingenuity.

Mr. LEMIEUX. To illustrate: Last night I read in the 'Free Press' that twenty-five young girls perished in the flames in a great fire in Montreal. This morning, I read in the 'Citizen' that the victims are three in number.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would point out that this is a good Conservative journal which never publishes anything that is inaccurate or wrong. I would suggest to the minister that it is his duty not to be satisfied with saying that this is the result of some person's ingenuity. I do not know whether he blames the newspaper proprietor or its correspondent in the west. But in any case, what the hon. minister says is not enough. He himself, admits that some of the men have stopped work. There is no strike and no lockout, says the hon. gentleman, but the men have ceased working. I do not care what the hon. gentleman calls it —if the men have thus ceased working, the same result will follow as though they had ceased to work because of a lockout or strike. Therefore, it seems to me, it would be well for us to know the facts before the day is over. A private telegram which was in my possession yesterday afternoon, and which I asked my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) to place before the House, which telegram came from a responsible person in Blairmore to a gentleman in Ottawa, gives essentially the same facts. There can be no doubt about the bona fides of the person who sent the telegram, and there can be no doubt about the identity of the person who received it. And there can be no doubt about the telegram, for I saw it and had it in my own hands. Perhaps the minister will find that the situation is a little more serious than he suggests. I trust the hon. gentleman will feel that it is the duty of this government to enforce the law in the public interest. I say it is their duty. The law was enacted in order that the people might be protected. And it is not enough to leave it to either party to enforce the law. There is the third and higher interest, the interest of the public; and in that interest the law should be enforced.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS (Yale-Cariboo). The hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) suggests that the government in accordance with the resolution of the hon. member from Alberta (Mr. Herron) should operate mines and pay living wages to the men. If this is done, he says, there will be no trouble. Some of the coal miners in the Crow's Nest are earning as high as $7 or $8 a day, and I do not think that any of them are earning less than $3 or $3.50 a day. It is impossible to secure such a class of labour as the leader of the opposition suggests in that country. Of course, there are a number of miners there who are just as intelligent as the men who are working in the Post Office Department and on the railways; but there are others, foreigners, people who do not understand our language and who have no knowledge of our laws, and who must be in this country a long time before they can become good citizens of Canada. We have to take these people in order to get the men necessary to develop these mines. We have to take them on the construction of our railways and for other kinds of labour.

We have to take into consideration the fact that for our railway construction and in other lines labour is not available in that western country. Those who know that country know that the statement I make is absolutely correct. I would point out also that, before the government could operate a mine in a way to affect the conditions in that country, that mine must be on a shipping basis, which would take two or three years.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What remedy would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Duncan Ross) propose?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. To enforce the Act passed by this parliament, and enforce it decisively.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, the hon. gentleman thinks that it is the duty of the government to enforce it ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. We have before us the fact that the law is a new one. When the Deputy Minister of Labour goes to Fernie, he ought to go there armed with a club and apply it on both sides. Until people become well acquainted with the operation of this Act, I would go as far as the leader of the opposition suggests and let the Deputy Minister of Labour enforce the law, and enforce it against both sides in this controversy. After the operation of the law is well understood, then it can be enforced as the ordinary laws of the country are enforced.

I have lived in that country long enough to know that both sides are determined to take advantage of each other when conflicts of this character arise. I say the coal operators should be punished if necessary because they posted that notice in their mines just when this Act was going to be put into operation. I say that Mr. Sherman, who is the head of the United Mine Workers' Union should be punished for the action he has taken in connection with this matter ; and, if there is no one else to do it, the Deputy Minister of Labour ought to do it when he is there. Because, the whole future success of this legislation depends upon how successfully it is carried out in connection with the strike of the Crow's Nest at the present time. I am afraid, however, that, on account of the similarity of language of the different telegrams that have been read to-day, and on account of some information that I have received from the west—and I am bound to say after hearing the leader of the opposition—that there may be just a slight effort on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to make some political capital out of the situation. I do not think that this should be the case. I think the legislation should give a fair control, and I think that the Deputy Minister of Labour, going out there, should be armed with a strong club and apply it on both sides in the conflict.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does the hon. gentleman (Mr. D. Ross) mean by his reference to the telegrams and the leader of the opposition? Does he suggest that I had anything to do with the sending of these telegrams?

Mr. D. ROSS. No, far from it. I would not suggest that the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) is responsible for any of the telegrams, if that is what I understood him to refer to. But I do say that the telegrams received are couched in much the same language and appear to have been sent for a specific purpose. I say also that the leader of the opposition, in the face of these telegrams, criticised the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles), and other members of this House, for having not adopted the resolution introduced in this House by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) about three years ago. I say that it is apparent, to me at least, that some effort is being made to make some political capital out of the situation which now presents itself in the Crow's Nest.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). There is a hazardous condition of affairs in the Northwest and a call from the people of that country for some federal interference in the situation. There seems to be a reign of monopoly in the west. A report has been read here this morning that the west is dominated by a lumber combine. We find it is dominated by a fuel combine that controls the mines. Now, this government is in possession of mines. The duty of the government is to take up the government operation of mines and the distribution of the product to the people in the west. But it should be clearly understood that you cannot have government operation of mines without government operation of railways—the two go together. For it is found in the United States, where the railways own the mines, that there is a fuel monopoly of a serious kind. If this government has not the courage to apply the remedy to the situation in the Northwest, I make the suggestion to the great and growing provinces there that they take up the question, and that they demand of this government either that this government shall operate the mines or that they shall turn over the mines to the provinces, and that these provinces, not only operate the mines, but build their railways into the mines. It will pay them to do it, and it will secure them, for all time, cheap fuel for the west.

Mr. D. ROSS. What does the hon. gentleman (Mr. W. F. Maclean) mean by combines in the west?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. There are coal combines in the west.

Mr. D. ROSS. In what way?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. There is a monopoly of the coal business in the Northwest.

Mr. D. ROSS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) is wholly mistaken. There are seven or eight independent companies——

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Yes ; and there are more than seven or eight independent lumber companies. How comes it then that there is a lumber combine?

Mr. D. ROSS. I do not think there is.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Then what is the meaning of the report which we have had to-day?

Mr. D. ROSS. That is not under discussion.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. And more than that, the west is ridden by a telegraph monopoly. By reason of the railway monopoly which exists, they are under the worst telegraph monopoly which exists in the world to-day. I have a letter from the west pointing that out, but I will not deal with that now. But there is a call from the west for us to try to meet the hazardous condition that exists there. The people are threatened with a fuel famine. We know that while at times the coal mine operators were willing to work their mines and increase the supplies of fuel to the people, they could not get the necessary cars. Thus, again, we see that the railway question and the mining question are the most serious problems in the west. And the people of the west do look to this government for some remedy for the situation. If this government does not meet the situation, my suggestion is that the people there should claim the right to control and operate the mines, even though they have to operate the railways, too.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Nanaimo). This question is of sufficient importance to claim the fair consideration of every member of this House. After the experience of last winter in the Northwest, every man in this House is seriously anxious to prevent the possibility of a recurrence of that experience. Now, in the first place, I believe there is a mistaken notion that these miners are on strike. But, if I understand the correspondence, the mines are actually working, and that is confirmed by private information that has reached me. That which has given rise to the suspicion that there was a strong probability of a strike, causing a reduced output of these mines, I believe, is that many of these miners have left and gone to the west, where there is any amount of work for miners. It is generally known that there is a considerable scarcity of labour. The miners, rather than be implicated in any trouble, have picked up their belongings and gone to the coast of British Columbia to work in the mines there. Two remedies are proposed by these telegrams from these boards of trade. One is a law to separate the Canadian union from the union on the American side. Of course, the members of this House will see the foolishness of that proposition, the utter impossibility of the government interfering with a matter of that description.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ralph Smith) refer to the emphatic statement of the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville), that neither parliament nor the people have the right to interfere with international unions? And does he not think that, in case of need, parliament has the right to interfere?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I do not think it is at all reasonable that this government should dictate to any man what union he should belong to. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) consider it reasonable that this government should dictate to the investing capital of this country what associations it shall have?

Mr. SPROULE. But here you have an international union organized whereby people from a foreign country can come into your country and interfere with the industrial pursuits of the workmen here, to the detriment of our people as a whole. Under these circumstances, is it not right for the government to interfere?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) belongs to international associations himself.

Mr. SPROULE. No.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member (Mr. Ralph Smith) is entirely incorrect. If he desires to be fair, he will not insist upon that point.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Of course, I want to be fair. I supposed that my hon. friend had his mutual associations on the other side of the line. However that may be, I regard the proposition that this government should dictate to bodies of citizens of this country what kind of association they shall belong to as ridiculous in itself and utterly impossible of carrying out—it would be an interference with the rights of individuals, for a man may belong to any association he likes so long as the business of that association does not interfere with the rights and liberties of the people of this country.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the very point I make—it does.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. If my hon. friend is as anxious to be fair as he is to have others fair, and if he will look into the facts, he will find that individual coal miners in these mines, on account of the scarcity of labour, can find employment at other points, and are simply exercising their right as individuals to leave one point and go to another, rather than have trouble with the company. That is the case as I understand it.

Mr. SPROULE. I can only say that I have no objection to that.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. My hon. friend would intimate that the government could do something to prevent that? And could do something to prevent men from having an association in the shape of a trades union on the American side of the line, which I would regard as a monstrous and preposterous proposition?

Mr. SPROULE. I made no such contention.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. That is what I understood. The next proposition from the Board of Trade in Winnipeg is the government operation of the coal mines. And, if I understand the arguments of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) correctly, he would advocate for the complete adoption of the principle of government ownership of mines in the Northwest. And some other hon. members agree with him. And my hon. friend from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) proposes not only government ownership of mines but government ownership and operation of railways. This he proposes as a remedy for the situation, but that remedy could not be carried out for many years.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Everything has a beginning.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. But I understood that we were discussing a matter demanding immediate practical attention.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ralph Smith) will notice that the telegrams involve the future of the country and say that the same difficulty will arise next year and succeeding years.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Yes, we have to consider the necessity for fuel next session. But if we are to wait until we can purchase and manage the Canadian Pacific Railway and also the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway which is now under construction, we shall not be ready to meet the conditions for many years to come. The difficulty is an immediate one. Now, if the government are to operate mines, they must operate them on paying principle ; they could not call upon the people generally to pay for that operation any more than private individuals can call upon the people generally to make up losses on their operations. The leader of the opposition says that the government should operate the coal mines and pay the men good living wages, and then he assumes that the difficulty would be all over. As a matter of fact the government would have to operate the business on a paying basis like any one else.

Mr. SPROULE. Like the Intercolonial.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I could understand the government operating a railway, when I could not understand it operating a coal mine, that is altogether a different proposition. I do not know that there are any governments in the world that operate coal mines or, if so, that operate them successfully. I am not arguing against government ownership of coal mines except to this extent, that their operation by a government would not be an absolute guarantee against strikes. Men would strike against the government if they thought their remuneration was not there just the same as against a company, and, as a matter of fact, far more readily because they would be able to hold up the government and every representative in this House by the power of their own vote in favour of a larger wage.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Did the letter carriers do it?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. We are dealing with coal operatives in the west.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That was not the experience in Australia.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. In Australia they have a principle of compulsory arbitration, which, of course, makes strikes impossible under private or government operation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I mean that the attempted strike by government employees in Australia did not succeed, as far as I am aware.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. The railways of Australia, less than two years ago, were held up by the federated employees of that country, and they were held up for many months. However, I was speaking to the question of government ownership of coal mines. I contend that if we have to operate coal mines, if the government have to be responsible for the supply of coal fuel to the people of the west they must operate all mines, must take over all the mines. There can be no absolute government success without absolute government monopoly. There is no government in the world that could operate a coal mine in the west in competition with a private company well run in the same territory.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course I realize that for the government to undertake the operation of coal mines in the west would be an extreme step and would be justified only by extreme conditions, but when people are freezing and when immigration into that country may be in danger there should be some relief, and what would my hon. friend suggest ? I want to discuss it in a reasonable way and I am sure that he does.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. My suggestion is that the matter with which we are immediately concerned is the direct application of that legislation which has recently passed through this House. It is very important to know exactly what we can do, because if by experience we discover that it is not capable of preventing this very serious trouble it will be necessary for parliament at another session to strengthen that legislation. Up to the present time it has had no application and I agree that, especially in this instance, when the law has just been brought into existence the government by its own initiative ought to seek the enforcement of the Act against both of these parties. That is the reason I asked the minister if he had information that these companies had posted up notices of reductions of wages and if he intended to enforce the Act. I am not aware that as the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. D. Ross) has insinuated, without saying it, Mr. Sherman, the head of the union, had done unlawful things, nor am I aware that he has, but if he has contravened the Act he should be dealt with just exactly as the company would be dealt with.

Mr. D. ROSS. The only thing I have is a telegram which I saw in that very reputable family journal, the 'Ottawa Citizen' in which Sherman stated he wired the Minister of Labour that he considered the legislation a farce, the men were leaving and they were going to take their grievances to the foot of the throne. I think that statement itself would be a contravention of the Act.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Mr. Sherman cannot prevent men from leaving any more than the government can prevent them from leaving. If Mr. Sherman has contravened the Act then I think the government should do all they can to enforce the Act against both these men. But I do not think the situation is anything like as serious as this telegram would indicate, because the mines are operating, and if the law is properly and well enforced at the present time I believe that any serious trouble will be averted. I certainly think that the general production of coal in the Northwest ought to be very much greater than it is. As I have said I could not support the principle of government ownership unless we had such government ownership that the government would take over all the mines and operate them. Of course it is the duty of the government to do all it can to secure a supply of cheap fuel for the public, but what we ought to do and what we could do immediately is to encourage private capital to develop coal operations in the west. The supply of coal under all circumstances is less than the actual demand, as you will find if you look into the question of supply for the year, and what we want to have is a superabundance of coal so that we will not be compelled to act under stress at all times, but will have, generally speaking, provided for these troubles by having a superabundant output of coal.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We know of course that there is an abundance of coal deposits in the west, but the hon. member says that the supply is not equal to the demand. Why is it that private capital is not invested so that the supply will become greater? What is the reason for that condition? I cannot explain it.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. The most immediate and direct answer to that question that I could make is the fact that people are not encouraged to operate coal production in the west for the want of adequate facilities for transportation.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. There are not half enough cars.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. There is no doubt in my mind that that is at the very basis of the trouble. There is an abundance of capital available and as a matter of fact employers of labour on the Pacific coast, now operating on Vancouver island have been anxious within the last two or three years to make investments for the production of coal in the west but were afraid to do so for the simple reason that the transportation facilities for fuel were not as abundant and as reasonable as they ought to be. The government should do something in that direction. The government should use influence to secure cheaper transportation facilities, the government should demand a superabundance of facilities for transporting coal to the consumers in that country. These are matters with which I think the government could very properly deal and ought to deal and they ought to deal with them this summer, so that we will have the greatest possible guarrantee that the people will be supplied with fuel. If the government acted on that principle it would encourage private capital all over the west to make investments, it would invite capital if it were realized that the mines could be operated at a profit and that the product could be distributed at a cost which would still leave a profit. We would then have no trouble in getting private capital to invest in coal operations. In my opinion that is the practical way of relieving the situation of the present troubles, and I believe that the immediate actual enforcement of the Act itself against both parties will result in a satisfactory settlement.

Mr. HERRON. I wish to draw attention to a remark made by my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. D. Ross) in reference to the class of men who are working in the mines in the Crow's Nest Pass. I do not know what experience the hon. gentleman has of the locality, and whether the men are such a low and ignorant class as he insinuates.

Mr. D. ROSS. I know what the hon. gentleman is driving at, and I do not want him to put words in my mouth that I never uttered.

Mr. HERRON. Perhaps you will allow the House to know what you did say?

Mr. D. ROSS. I will be very glad to do it if the hon. gentleman will allow me.

Mr. HERRON. He referred to them as being inferior to the ordinary labouring class.

Mr. D. ROSS. No.

Mr. HERRON. He said that they were Slavs, not accustomed to the conditions of the country and therefore were not—I am not going to explain for the hon. gentleman any further, I will allow him——

Mr. D. ROSS. I think you had better not.

Mr. HERRON. I must say that the class of miners in my country are not men such as are referred to by the hon. gentleman. They are just as intelligent as the average run of men in any other calling in life. The miners on this side of the divide, in Alberta, are mostly Canadians from Nova Scotia and quite a large percentage of them are from the old country and the United States. I think they are mostly Canadians and I do not thing it is right to have aspersions cast upon these men.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The hon. member (Mr. Herron) has tried to put words in my mouth that I never uttered. He has tried to give an interpretation to what I did say which was never intended. What I did say was that while we have a large body of miners who are an intelligent class, it was absolutely necessary on account of labour conditions in the west, to employ foreigners who did not understand our laws and could not understand our language. The hon. gentleman has lived long enough in the west to know that such a class as I refer to is employed at Fernie and Michel and was employed at Morrissey and I think also at Blairmore and other towns in the Northwest. In so far as the miners in my constituency are concerned, we have no coal miners or coal mines there, and as the hon. gentleman is well aware the miners working in the copper and gold mines are not of the class to which I referred to. The statement that I have made is no reflection upon either Canadian or American miners in that country, but it is an accurate statement of facts in so far as the labour conditions in the Northwest or British Columbia are concerned. I might also say to my hon. friend that I never used the word 'ignorant' with an inflection on it or an emphasis such as he tried to make me responsible for.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) was referring to the possibility of the government being able to manage and operate coal mines and he gave as an illustration of it the fact that they managed the Post Office Department, Railways and other departments. The hon. member (Mr. Duncan Ross) in answer to that, said: You must not imagine that these miners are like such men. What did he imply by that —that they were of a lower class, not as intelligent and therefore not as easily controlled or managed? Then he said that many of these men are men who came from foreign countries, that they did not understand our language, that they did not understand our laws, that they did not understand our conditions and he followed that up by giving the advice that the Deputy Minister of Labour must go out there with a big club and use it. What does he mean by that?—that they were not sufficiently intelligent to be amenable to reason; therefore, you have to resort to brute force to compel them to do it. What does he imply by that? It seems to me that the explanation does not make it any better.

I wish to say a few words in regard to some phases of this question which I think any member of this House has a right to refer to. I desire to disagree with those who adversely criticise boards of trade and other responsible bodies who send their representations to parliament in regard to what appears to be an impending danger which, if it is not serious now, will be serious if allowed to go on. I do not agree with those who deny the right of boards of trade or other bodies to send their representations to parliament. It is their right and their duty as well to do so and it is the right of parliament to take notice of their representations and to endeavour to provide a remedy for the situation in view of the conditions which prevailed all last winter and of the representations made from various parts of the country of people being in a freezing condition there on account of the fuel shortage, it was said over and over again, to the fact that a strike continued all last summer in the coal mines. It was due to a strike which has been settled up. We are now in the spring of the year and strikes are again threatened in these coal mines. In view of the history of the past is it not important, is it not desirable, is it not the duty of the government to bring every influence possible to bear on the situation and endeavour to provide a remedy? Not only is it their right to apply to this parliament, but in my judgment it is their duty as well. I want to say another word in regard to the enforcement of the Act. The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Smith) said that we should enforce the present law. If the present law were not sufficient I give it as my judgment that we should have gone a step further and have compulsory arbitration the same as Australia has. I think this Act would be much more efficient today if we had that authority and power. I submit that I am justified in that view by the history of labour operations in Australia since compulsory arbitration has been introduced there, because it is a notable fact that in so far as we can get any information on the subject there have been very few strikes in that country and there is comparative harmony between capital and labour.

In regard to the right of the government to maintain and operate coal mines, the hon. member for Nanaimo, I understand, says that that cannot be successfully done unless you take over all the coal mines, that you cannot do it in part. Is it not a fact that we are operating one railway in the country and that we do not have to take over all the other railways, and it is generally conceded that we are operating that fairly successfully. We are operating a printing bureau and we do not take over the control of all the printing bureaus in the country. If we can operate this in part in regard to printing and in regard to the running of railways by the same parity of reasoning may we not reasonably conclude that we can operate a coal mine although we do not control all the coal mines in the country? I think we can. It is generally said in regard to a combine or in regard to a commercial enterprise that if you can control 40 per cent of it you can practically control the whole. If you have control of 51 per cent of the operation of a company you can control the whole. If the government have control and are operating 40 or 50 per cent of the coal mines they can largely control the operation of the coal mines of the country. There is no reason why it could not be done successfully. There is another thing that this subject suggests to us and it is the importance of the federal parliament providing means for the enforcement of its own laws. My hon. friend from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) has been trying to impress that upon this government for a long time but with no very great success. But every instance which comes to our attention emphasizes more strongly the fact that there should be some federal authority to enforce the laws that this parliament passes. We see it in this instance and we see it in many other instances as well.

I want to say one word in regard to the observation made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville). I understood him to say emphatically that he denied the right or the authority of parliament to interfere with any international organization.

Mr. VERVILLE. I said I denied the right of the government or any opposition to divorce our labour organizations from American unions.

Mr. SPROULE. Those are different words from the words which the hon. gentleman used. I do not desire or pretend to say that I would advise interfering with any such right, but I understand that just as soon as any international union through the operations or the influence of foreigners exerts a deleterious influence upon the industrial pursuits of our country it is not only the right but the duty of the government to interfere with that international union.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Would it not be just the same thing if it were a Canadian union? If a Canadian union acted disadvantageously to the interests of the country would it not be proper to deal with a case of that kind?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, it would be eminently proper but it would be a stronger reason where foreigners come into the country and interfere with the rights and pursuits of the people. Allegations were made some years ago that in the industrial pursuits of the United States owing to dull times when the manufacturers there were rather under the weather, that the international unions over there sent their representatives through Canada endeavouring to create dissatisfaction among the various industrial concerns of the country advising strikes. That was the allegation, whether it was right or wrong. I said then, and I say now, that wherever there is impending danger from this source, if the allegations are proven to be correct, it is not only the right, but the duty of parliament to interfere with any international union that interferes with the industrial pursuits of our people in this country. To that extent and to that extent only has parliament a right to interfere. I do not see any objection in the world to men joining unions here and having an alliance with unions in the United States, but so soon as these international unions interfere with the pursuits of our people in Canada and bring danger to us, then parliament would be doing less than its duty if it did not interfere.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. A word of explanation——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Spoken.

Mr. SPROULE. The more you explain the worse you make it.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Ross) has spoken.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I wish to make an explanation as a statement which the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) made in reference to me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Unless the hon. member (Mr. Ross) has been misconceived in something he has said he has no right to make an explanation.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The hon. member (Mr. Sproule) put words into my mouth that I never uttered. It is very important, so far as I am concerned, that there should be a contradiction of this statement recorded on 'Hansard,' and it is my right to explain. The hon. member for East Grey made the statement that I said that the Deputy Minister of Labour should use a club on the men because they were ignorant.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not say that.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. That was the inference from his remarks.

Mr. SPROULE. No.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I am in the judgment of the House when I say that such was the inference to be drawn from his remarks.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is a question whether or not such an inference could be taken from the words of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and if the hon. member (Mr. Duncan Ross) thinks such an inference could be taken and that he has been misconceived, he has the right to make his explanation.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The explanation is brief, and 'Hansard' will bear me out, and the hon. members who heard me will bear me out, that what I recommended was that the Deputy Minister of Labour should use a club on both parties.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) would not assume that I wanted a club to be used on both parties because both parties are ignorant? The club I had reference to was one of the pattern of Roosevelt's big stick.

Mr. SPROULE. The line of reasoning taken by the hon. member (Mr. Duncan Ross)——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) thinks that the hon. member (Mr. Duncan Ross) has misconceived him, he has the right to explain.

Mr. SPROULE. I think he has misconceived me. I referred to the remark of the leader of the opposition as to why the government could not take charge of a coal mine the same as they could of a post office, and the answer of the hon. member (Mr. Ross) was that they would have a different class of men to deal with; that the mine employees were not as intelligent as the employees of the post office.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think the hon. gentleman is explaining any remarks of his which were misconceived.

Mr. SPROULE. He either misconceived me or misrepresented what I did say.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (King's, N.B.). Some hon. gentlemen seem to be very unfortunate in the speeches they make in the House; they require three or four editions in order to correct the first one. This question of coal supply in the western provinces is a most important one. I brought the matter up in the House the other night, I pointed out that difficulties were arising, but the Minister of Labour met me with an airy waive of the hand as though he had the whole situation under control. Day after day since then the situation is growing more acute, and now it is up to the government to do something to prevent a serious coal famine in the west next winter. The hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) always sees bugbears in the way, he has a peculiar facility for smelling out combines. He states there is a coal combine in the west.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. A monoply.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, a monoply is not possible without a combine, and having some knowledge and experience of coal mines in the west I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) that there is neither a coal combine nor a coal monoply there. The great difficulty is the question of transportation, as has been said by the hon. member for Nanaimo. The railways seem utterly unable to cope with the situation, or if they can cope with it they are not doing so. The mines are not able to put out a greater quantity of coal than they are putting out by reason of the difficulty of getting cars to carry away the output. It is a very expensive thing to store large quantities of coal at the mine. The tipples have not large storage capacity and it would require an enormous expenditure to provide storage accommodation for large quantities of coal at the mine. It is essential to the operation of all these mines that there should be every day a sufficient number of cars to carry away practically the product of that day, and that the railways are not doing by any means. The coal mine in which I am interested was hung up practically all winter for a lack of cars to carry away the product of the mine. The result is, that to supply the needs of the people for next winter, we only have a few months in which that can be done, and it is going to be absolutely impossible to do that unless adequate transportation facilities are placed at the command of the mines. The government should address itself to that question as well as to the question of preventing a strike. I repeat that there is neither combine nor monoply. There is no necessity for government ownership of the coal mines in the west. There is not very much money in the operation of coal mines in the west as the matter stands to-day; there is no profit in the business for the individual because of the lack of transportation facilities, and so far as I am concerned I would be glad to sell out my interest to the government. It is much easier to obtain mine workers than it is to obtain railway cars, and I trust that the government will at once direct its attention to providing facilities for distributing coal. Coal for fuel is just as important in that country as food for the people, and if the people were starving I think facilities for transporting food would be obtained.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Last fall when we had a coal famine in the Northwest the Lethbridge strike was blamed for it, and to-day when we have a partial failure of transportation facilities in the Northwest, again the coal strike is blamed for it. The conditions last fall were not because of the coal strike, and the conditions at the present time, I venture to say, are not because of the coal strike.

What the conditions are at the present time will of course develop in due course; but what they were last fall we know, and I will take the liberty of giving the House the information which was gathered at that time, so that we may understand thoroughly that there is not a shortage of coal in the Northwest, that there are at the present time abundance of mines in operation to supply the coal, and that the question of transportation is at the bottom of the whole coal difficulty in the Northwest. Last fall, at a time when people were sending telegrams from all over the Northwest asking this government to intervene and provide coal, and when my hon. friend from Alberta introduced a motion into the House indicating that it was because of some fault of the government's administration of the coal lands that this coal famine took place, I took occasion to communicate with the people who were operating the mines in the Crow's Nest Pass to get information on the subject. I was induced to do so by having received a letter from a merchant resident at Cowley, Alberta, in the vicinity of the Crow's Nest Pass. He said :

I think you will be interested in receiving a side light on the coal famine in Alberta and Saskatchewan. On the 30th November, I note Sir Thomas Shaughnessy reported through Mr. Lemieux in the House, that the Canadian Pacific Railway were doing what they could to relieve the situation by hauling coal from Fort William. Another despatch in the same paper states at the present time they are bringing ten cars per day of Pittsburg coal from Fort William to relieve the situation. I am credibly informed that on the 29th November the coal mines of the Crow's Nest Railway requisitioned the Canadian Pacific Railway for one hundred and eighty cars to load on the 30th November, and less than twenty empty cars were on the division to supply this demand.

The Frank Board of Trade presented a memorial to the Railway Commission on this subject which I will take the liberty of reading. It was dated the 17th of December and it said :

Whereas, there is invested in active coal mining operations within a radius of six miles of Frank, Alberta, a sum not less than $9,000,000, the same being invested by the International Coal and Coke Company, Limited, of Coleman, the Canadian-American Coal and Coke Company, Limited, of Frank, the West Canadian Collieries, Limited, with mines at Lille and Bellevue, and the Hillcrest Coal and Coke Company, Limited, of Hillcrest ;

These mines, let me say, produce locomotive and coking coal, a different quality of coal from that produced at Lundbreck, Taber and Lethbridge, which is essentially household and steam coal.

And whereas, the said district and the people therein are entirely dependent on the mines of said district being in continuous operation, therefore :

Your memorialists respectfully represent as follows :

That the various lines of industry are seriously affected by reason of the closing down of the mines of the district a large portion of the time for periods of from one to four days wholly and a much greater part of the time being able to work only parts of days through lack of transportation facilities, or a shortage of the cars necessary to send the product of the mines to market.

From statistics gathered from the mines in active operation in the said district your memorialists are able to state authentically that by reason of the shortage of cars the said mines were operated about half the time during the months of May, June, July, August, September and October, about three-quarters of the time during November, and about a quarter of the time during December to date.

In November and December was the time when the Northwest was suffering from a coal famine, and these mines were operating three-quarters of the time during November and one-quarter of the time during December.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. OLIVER. When the House rose at one o'clock, I was reading from a memorial from the Frank Board of Trade, and shall continue reading it :

From statements supplied your memorialists by the general managers of the said companies, your memorialists learned that the mines in question have an actual shipping capacity of 4,500 tons a day on a loading shift of ten hours, and that were they able to work a double loading shift that output would be nearly doubled. From the statistics referred to, your memorialists find that the actual shipment, during the period mentioned, averaged under 2,500 tons a day, making a net loss to the companies involved of at least 2,000 tons shipment per day. Add to this the fixed running expenses incurred by the companies and the sum total of loss to the companies will be seen to have run into many thousands of dollars.

The effect of these conditions upon the general commercial life of the district is depressing in the extreme. Miners being compelled to lay off so large a portion of the time are only able to earn sufficient to provide the bare necessities of life at best, and your memorialists could cite instances in which men of steady habits have not earned enough to pay their store accounts. As a natural consequence, merchants and men in every line of business suffer proportionately with the mining companies. The situation in this respect leads to much dissatisfaction among the miners and is a fruitful source of labour dissentions.

This condition of affairs is wholly due to failure on the part of the railway company to provide adequate transportation facilities. Your memorialists would further represent that, in their judgment, the generally accepted belief that the coal famine existing in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba is attributable to the recent strike of the coal miners at Lethbridge is wholly erroneous, and that the said strike had little or no bearing upon the coal famine, for these reasons : The Lethbridge mine, working at full capacity, never produced more than 1,200 tons a day. The Pacific Coal Company, operating at Bankhead, is in the market this year with 1,200 tons of coal a day. The Taber mines and the Lundbreck mines are in the market with an average of 400 tons a day and less than a third of this tonnage was on the market a year ago, while the Lethbridge mines throughout the strike produced at least 25 per cent of its regular tonnage. This showing, your memorialists think, takes care of the situation as regards the absence of the output of the Letbridge mines from the coal supply of the country. As regards the increased consumption of coal in the prairie provinces incident to growth, this your memorialists affirm could have been abundantly supplied had the mines in this district been furnished with a full complement of cars, or, in other words, had transportation facilities been adequate to the shipping capacity of the mines in question. In connection with this phase of the coal famine subject, it may interest the commissioners to know that in at least one instance wherein your memorialists have positive proof, a number of cars loaded with coal and billed to points in Saskatchewan suffering for the want of coal, stool on the side tracks five days before being moved from the shipping station. These statements of facts will, your memorialists believe, dissipate the erroneous impression that has become extant throughout Canada, that the coal shortage of the country has been and is due to either the strike at Lethbridge or the inability of the other mines of the country to provide the coal, or to any other reason than the failure of the railway company to furnish adequate transportation facilities. In view of the foregoing representations, the authenticity of which your memorialists will undertake to fully establish, your memorialists would respectfully solicit an investigation with a view to obtaining speedy and adequate relief.

Respectfully submitted,
The Frank Board of Trade,
GEORGE H. MALCOLMSON, M.D.,
President.

J. H. BRICKER,
Secretary.

Frank, Alta, December 17, 1906.
To the Honourable the Railway Commission,
Ottawa.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. What did the commission do ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am unable to answer. On receipt of this memorial, I thought it advisable to address inquiries direct to the coal mine proprietors therein mentioned. I sent the following wire to the different mines :

Please wire if you have sufficient cars to transport coal and whether you can increase output if required.

This was sent during December when the coal famine was extremely severe. The Lundbreck people replied December 19 :

Received only eight cars in the last ten days. Could load five daily if cars provided.

The west Canadian collieries, operating two lines at Lille and Bellevue replied:

In replying your even date. Car shortage very serious. Could more than double present shipments if required and cars were furnished.

The Canadian-American Coal and Coke Company replied :

Mine operating hardly half capacity owing to shortage car supply. Can increase output if necessary.

On the same date these parties wrote :

Your telegram of even date received as follows :

Please wire if you have sufficient cars to transport coal and whether you can increase output if required.

We herewith confirm our answer as follows : Mine operating hardly half capacity owing to shortage car supply. Can increase output if necessary.

Our mine has been and is still idle over half the time as far as shipping coal is concerned, for the want of cars to load the coal in. We have practically speaking had but two days this month, thus far, that we have had a full complement of cars. We can and are more than willing to help out the coal famine, if cars are forthcoming ; and if necessary we can put on a night shift, doubling our capacity thereby. Trusting that you will be able to remedy the car shortage at least some.

We are, very sincerely yours,
Canadian American Coal and Coke Company, Limited.

The Hill Crest Mining Company wired as follows :

This property is closed half the time for lack of cars. Could much more than double the output if cars were furnished promptly.

The International Coal and Coke Company replied :

Your message 19th shortage transportation hampers production below capacity this month to date 8,000 tons. Can mine 1,500 tons daily single shift. Possible to increase to 2,500 within short time if mined regularly.

This was on December 20. These people could have put out 8,000 tons more actually than they did, had they been given sufficient transportation, and, if required and had been given sufficient transportation, they could have mined 2,500 tons a day. That was at a time when the whole country was ringing with complaints as to the coal famine and when all kinds of remedies were suggested. At that time the only trouble was that the mines could not sell their coal because they could not get transportation for it. In the month of January matters became worse. The car shortage instead of being less, was greater. On February 1, right at the close of the severe weather, I wired the West Canadian Collieries at Blairmore and the reply I received was :

Stormy weather still has car supply tied up about the same as last month,

I happened to meet the manager of the Hillcrest mine some time during February here in Ottawa. I asked him what was the condition of his mine. He gave me a statement which I will take the liberty of repeating. From October 15th to January 28th his mine had put out 196 cars of coal, or 5,880 tons. The possible output of the mine for that time was 45,000 tons. In January the mine shipped 26 cars or 780 tons. These were the total shipments for the month of January from the Hillcrest mine, which had a daily capacity of from 500 to 750 tons. That is to say, during the month of January the mine was able to ship the product of one and one-half days' work. The result of this was that at the end of January, at the time when the coal famine was most extreme, when the condition was most acute, this Hillcrest mine, with a capacity of 500 tons a day, shut down—went out of business—because the owners could not afford to keep the men on pay without keeping them in employment.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the minister (Mr. Oliver) will allow me, I will call his attention, and that of the Minister of Labour, to a telegram received by this same Mr. Hill to-day, as follows :

Frank, Alberta, April 19, 1907.

C. P. Hill, Russell House.

Men all quit. No grievance. Settlement indefinite. Curle awaits instructons.

I may say that Mr. Curle is a gentleman who is installing a conveyor and air compressor. His men have quit work, and he is left on his oars. There is no grievance —they have simply walked out.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not need to emphasize the point that was emphasized in the memorial of the Frank Board of Trade. It must be evident to any person who hears the statement I have given in regard to the output of the mines during the very time when the coal famine was at its highest, that the owners of the mines could not give the men steady employment—could not employ them more than half time, and some of them not even that. As pointed out in the memorial, this was the foundation of a great deal of dissatisfaction and labour trouble. Although the men do make high wages when at work, if they cannot get steady employment, the high wages are no inducement to them. And naturally they were looking for different conditions, under which they could make a better living.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask whether or not the minister (Mr. Oliver) submitted these statements to the railway companies concerned, and asked them to make their comment or reply?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, it would be in the interest of the coal companies to throw the blame upon others. I am not impugning their statements ; they may be quite correct. On the other hand, of course, it would be to the interest of the railway companies to throw the blame on others. It seems to me it would be desirable to have the statements of the coal companies and also the statements of the railway companies, to see how far they are consistent with each other.

Mr. OLIVER. I was not concerned in dealing with the matter beyond arriving at the facts ; and having some knowledge of the parties interested, and of the conditions, and having communicated with the parties and got their definite reply, I assumed I had the facts.

Mr. FOSTER. After having received the information, did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) make any use of it towards rectifying the trouble, or is this the first use he has made of it—placing it before parliament?

Mr. OLIVER. I think I may go so far as to say that this information was made the basis of communication on the part of the government to the railway companies, which may have had some effect in somewhat ameliorating the conditions. These were confidential communications which I am not in a position to place before parliament, and which I do not think it would be to anybody's interest to have published. With this information, such as it is, the government was able to approach the railway companies and discuss the situation with them, with a view to having the conditions ameliorated. However, that is not the point I want to make just now. The point I want to make, in the first place, is that the statement that the strike at Lethbridge last year was the cause of the coal famine is absolutely wide of the mark. The other point is that the conditions prevailing in connection with the coal mines go to show that the lack of transportation facilities is the cause of the labour trouble.

Mr. FOSTER. The men could not get work?

Mr. OLIVER. The men could not get steady pay. The operators could not deal with the men in the way satisfactory either to themselves or the men, as they would probably have been able to do had they been in a position to market their output according to the demand.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there no system of storing the coal in the west?

Mr. OLIVER. The coal is sold at such a price that it would not pay to handle it twice. There is no provision for storing coal in any large quantity. The provision for storage and double handling would affect the price so seriously that it is not considered.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. And you could not get cars to move it to the storage grounds?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course, the idea is that it might be stored as wheat is stored in elevators, and moved as cars were available. But that is not a practical commercial proposition.

Mr. BERGERON. Have the railway companies been advised of the shortage of cars?

Mr. OLIVER. Well, yes, I may say they have been advised of it.

Mr. BERGERON. What did they answer?

Mr. OLIVER. I did not carry on the negotiation with the railway companies; therefore, I cannot give the answer.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to hear from the railways, and know what they say.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to give the answer. But I am not discussing this point at the time. I am merely stating the facts that have a bearing on the point that is up for discussion now—and that is the condition prevailing last fall and winter was such as must necessarily lead to labour troubles in connection with these coal mines. That is, we are now suffering the natural and necessary result of the conditions that then existed, whether it exists now or not. We do not need to look for remedies in government operation or government distribution. If we can secure all the coal which the immense capital invested can produce for us and have it mined at the cheapest rate and in the best way and at the highest wages, if we can provide that the coal shall be transported to its market even at the rates that are charged—if we can give assurance that when the coal is mined it will be delivered—then we have touched the real seat of the labour trouble, and put ourselves in a position where we can deal with it intelligently and probably satisfactorily. And until we have arrived at that point, so long as transportation conditions remain as they have been we cannot by any possible process secure a satisfactory or complete solution of the question. The beginning of the solution is to secure transportation for this vast investment of capital, $9,000,000 in these five mines, the equipment of which is not second to any in the world in completeness. The people have put their money into these mines, they have this perfect equipment, the coal is there, they are willing and able to pay good wages and they do pay good wages; conditions are favourable in every way and the whole difficulty has always been the market for the coal. It was always considered that that was a condition that could not be avoided, but that the country would grow out of it and the people who had made the investments felt that in a few years, as the country filled up, they would get their proper and expected returns. But last winter when coal was at a premium, when the whole country was in a state of starvation for coal, those mines were as badly off for a market as they ever have been.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. At what price is it sold?

Mr. OLIVER. I am given to understand that these mines get $1.75 a ton for the coal delivered on the car.

Mr. MORIN. That is a big price.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know whether it is a high or low price, but their market has hitherto been almost solely the Canadian Pacific Railway, and this is the price, I am credibly informed, at which they sell it; they may get ten cents more or less, but the standard price is $1.75 per ton, and as I have already informed the House the coal is of a very superior character; it is coking and locomotive coal and is probably as good as any in the world. These five mines of which I have spoken in which there is $9,000,000 invested, are on the Alberta side of the summit of the mountains; on the other side is situated the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Company with their mines at Fernie, Morrissey and Michel, mining a similar kind of coal to meet a similar market, but I am not speaking of the conditions as they existed there, only of the conditions on the eastern side of the mountains.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it placed in the cars just as it comes out of the pit?

Mr. OLIVER. The mines vary; of course in all cases the coal is screened, and in one case a large washing plant has been put in for the purpose of washing the coal before it is delivered.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to understand why it would be so extremely expensive to store it. The minister says the mines shut down at once because the cars do not come to take the coal away as it is raised from the pit. What I cannot understand is why it would not pay the companies to store it in some way, to pile it there, even if the cars did not come, so that it could be available when the cars did come in large numbers. Of course I presume these gentlemen know their own business and that my question is easily answered, but still I would like to understand this if I could.

Mr. OLIVER. The price of the coal delivered in the car is $1.75. If one mine will not sell at that price the company naturally will buy from the other mines that will, and if a mine wished to store its mined coal in order to operate the mine, it would have to bear the cost of the storage buildings and the cost of a second handling of the coal.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would think there would also be a great deal of loss in shutting down leaving the mine idle, and looking after it while it is idle, keeping it dry, &c., and then starting it again.

Mr. OLIVER. Surely.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And I would think it would be better to store rather than to shut down with all these incidental expenses. Of course I am speaking from the standpoint of one who does not know much about it, but that is how it would strike a person not having special knowledge.

Mr. OLIVER. If the coal would, so to speak, handle itself as wheat does in an elevator, and if the cost of handling was in the same proportion to the price it would it would be all right, but the coal does not handle itself; that is to say the cost of handling it is considerable and it bears such a very large proportion to the total price that it is considered in operation not to be economical to do that.

Mr. BLAIN. Is none of this coal used for domestic purposes?

Mr. OLIVER. The Lundbreck coal is entirely for steam raising and domestic purposes; the other five mines I have mentioned yield coal specially suited for locomotive use and coking, but it can be used for domestic purposes.

Mr. BLAIN. Why do not the mine operators and the dealers in coal in western Canada do as is done in eastern Canada? All coal dealers in eastern Canada, take in the province of Ontario, commence now to get in their coal for next winter, storing it by thousands of tons and even teaming it into the coal bins of the individual consumers. They keep on doing this all summer. Why is that not done in western Canada rather than leave the whole matter to the fall when they want to commence to burn?

Mr. OLIVER. One reason is that in eastern Canada there is a substantial aggregation of capital which is available for all purposes and the investment of money in coal in the beginning of the year means the payment of only a small interest until the coal requires to be used; but in western Canada the capital of the country is in process of creation and it comes in at the harvesting and marketing of each crop. The whole business of the country rests upon that basis, so that every business transaction either actually awaits the marketing of the crop, or is delayed so that the carrying charges between the time of making the expenditure and the realization from the marketing of the crop shall be as short as possible. That is why the people there do not take the same means to provide in advance for their requirements as they do in the east. It would cost them a great deal more proportionately to do it.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) would not pretend to say that condition of things must continue in western Canada. If it does, of course residents of western Canada will have to suffer every year. It would seem to me that in the summer, when the cars are more easily obtained from the railway companies and there is not so much rush, would be the time for the dealers and the consumers to get their supply in rather than leave it for winter.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no doubt about that, it is absolutely admitted, but my hon. friend asked me why they did not do it, and I have told him. Under circumstances of greater stress no doubt they will do so, but up till last fall they had never found the necessity of doing it, and therefore they never did it.

Mr. BLAIN. While there may be some just complaint against the railway companies for not being able to supply cars it seems to me that the foundation of the trouble is upon the people themselves who did not make application and get their coal in before.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not going to dispute that position but what we are dealing with now is the difficulty as it exists and with the mine worker and the mine operator. Neither the mine worker nor the mine operator is in fault in that connection. It is the general public which is at fault in not laying in its stores of coal and until the general public sees fit to change its methods, we will still face that condition and it is one with which the mine worker and the mine operator has nothing to do. That is the point we are dealing with and it is to secure the attention of the House to the direct and immediate cause of the difficulty and to the direct and immediate means of avoiding the difficulty in future that I have taken the opportunity of presenting these facts before the House.

Mr. MORIN. I would like to ask the minister whether the miners work in the mines digging coal by the day or whether they dig coal by the ton?

Mr. OLIVER. The real miner mines by the ton. He is paid so much per ton. But, of course, there are a large number of men employed in the mine who are not strictly miners and who are paid by the day.

Mr. MORIN. Do you know how much they get per ton?

Mr. OLIVER. No, I do not. I think that it possibly varies at different mines and under different conditions.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I have listened to a very great deal of this discussion with the idea of getting information and if possible coming to a conclusion as to where the trouble and the fault lie. I think that the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) did a very commendable thing when he commenced early in December to get information in reference to this matter from the mine operators themselves, but it seems to me that the government—if it were not the part of the minister it certainly was the part of the government—have stopped half way. Now, recollect what has happened. Here were all this stress and trouble in the early part of the year. Up to the 20th of December, or thereabouts, the minister had gained, by active inquiry, this information from the different mine owners in Alberta and he read it to the House to-day. But the minister says he went no further. Three months have elapsed from that time until this. It is certainly more than three months since the minister had this full information in his possession here in Ottawa and it was in the possession of the government. There can be no question that the mine owners and workers make out a good case. They say: The difficulty is that we cannot get the transportation facilities; we have the coal, we have the men to mine the coal, we can produce the coal provided the carriers will send the cars here to take it away. That was the whole trend of the information that the Minister of the Interior got. Having procured that information three months ago what have we presented to us as to action by the government or by the minister since towards remedying that difficulty? Suppose it were absolutely true—not only prima facie, not only ex parte true—but suppose it were absolutely true—the work of the government was not done then. You were only at the beginning of the work. It was then the duty of some one in the government to press the matter home to the railway companies and ask them to remedy it if they were at fault, and if it were possible for them to remedy it. But it does not appear that either the minister or the government took a single step in that direction. That is prima facie proof that the difficulty lies where the minister said, but it is an ex parte statement and while I am not throwing any doubt upon it it is only fair that the House should have the statement of the other party and that is the trouble, because it seems to me narrowed down to the two, the mine workers saying: We could have supplied coal but the reason why it was not supplied was that the railway authorities would not bring us cars to enable us to send it out. It was the duty of the government to have pressed upon the other side for the transport facilities. What answer was made? Where is the correspondence which took place between the railway companies and the government as to this statement of facts as given by the mine operators themselves? Did anybody press it upon them? Did the Minister of Railways and Canals do his duty and why, in the three months which passed, has not something been done efficaciously to remedy this condition? That is a question that presses for an answer and no answer has been given by any member of the government. It is up to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux), the hon. acting Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Fielding) and the hon. the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) to tell us what steps they took three months ago when that information was in their hands to press home to the railway companies the necessity of performing their part in that country? Was it possible or was it not possible? I think that the question goes farther than that and that we have been giving our minds altogether too much to the temporary, the present state of things. The minister says that is the condition which is before us to-day, that is what we are to talk about and what we are to solve if we possibly can. You will never solve it by waiting until the difficulty takes place and then confining yourself only to the difficulty as it exists at that time. There are several causes that contribute to this state of things to-day and it is for the government or anybody else who wishes to remedy it to take them all into consideration. Next year the very same thing may happen. Next year the very same thing will happen if people, companies and the government do just the same as they have done this year. What would we think in the east if everybody who wanted coal to consume waited until the first day of December before ordering a ton of coal? What would we think if the coal dealers who are to supply the demands of the cities, towns and villages waited until the winter season came on before they put in their supplies of coal? Now the people of the Northwest talk strongly because they feel the pinch, but the people of the Northwest must set themselves, on their side of this question, to find a solution. What is it? It is by bringing pressure upon coal dealers by, asking them for a supply, that you produce your middleman and thus produce a permanent supply, but if all the people in the Northwest, now being counted by hundreds upon hundreds of thousands more each year, are going to wait until the pinch of cold weather before they order a ton of coal you will have a very much worse state of things than you have had when another season comes and still another. So that these boards of trade and other people who have rightly brought this matter to the attention of the government have a duty before them and it is to find out whether they have not something to do in the matter. They have something to do and all that the government or the railways can do will never remedy this thing until they do their part. They have to be provident housekeepers and they have to lay in their supply of coal before the pinch of the cold season comes on. It will not be long until you will find dealers who will cater to them, and coal bins and coal yards at all the distributing centres. I think I am perfectly fair in stating that whilst the people are looking to the government and are asking them to do something, they themselves should ask themselves to do what they can in order to remedy this thing, and that is one of the essential parts of the remedy.

The coal companies have been living from hand to mouth ; they started poor ; they had not much of a constituency and it was widely segregated, but, it is essential to a perfect remedy, that every one of these coal companies do something more than bring the coal out of the pit-mouth, and wait for a freight car to dump it into. They will have to make provision to wash, and clean, and store the coal, where the cars can take it out from time to time as the opportunity arises. I know they have been suffering from a lack of capital, but their duty is to supply that need. They cannot come to the government, and they cannot berate the railways if they do not make provision to store the coal, even though it should add something to the cost. The enhanced cost will have to be borne either by the purchaser or the consumer or shared between them. While the minister of labour has been trying to create the impression that this matter is not so bad as represented, while some gentlemen on the other side have been trying to create the impression that the telegrams received are being made to feed a party interest——

Mr. LEMIEUX. I did not say that.

Mr. FOSTER. Some gentleman opposite did. While this is going on in the House, the newspapers to-day are filled with the idea that there is serious trouble in the west. The Minister of Labour says there is no strike, but the telegrams say that the men have quit work, and so far as the supply of coal is concerned there is no difference between a strike and quitting work. The minister tells us that there is coal there and that there is producing capacity, but that this labour trouble is caused largely because the miners cannot get continuous employment. That is no doubt a factor, but there you come again to a proper division of the responsibility as between the coal carriers and the mine owners, and the question of sufficient capital to efficiently carry on mining operations. The Minister of the Interior said that from the 20th of December there has been this shortage of cars. If that be true, what has been done during the past three months to bring the railway companies up to their share of the work ? Has the Minister of Labour done anything, has the Railway Department done anything, has the Railway Commission done anything ? Have these three executive bodies been simply sitting on the information the Minister of the Interior had, and doing nothing to remedy the evil. It is unfair to the railway companies to condemn them on ex parte testimony; we ought to have their side of the case. In common fairness, we must consider the exceptional severity of the past winter which has not been equalled in the Northwest for many years ; we must consider the overplus of demand for coal, owing to the large influx of settlers who call for their supplies just when the pinch of the cold weather comes and not before. All these things have over-burdened the railways. There is not a member from the Northwest in this parliament who has not been continuously demanding that the railway companies should extend lines here and build new lines there; all have been impatient and properly so to have the new country opened up. But it is not within the power of any railway company to build thousands of new miles of line yearly, and to maintain at high efficiency its transportation facilities over the old system and the new. Take old established lines like the Union Pacific, the Great Northern, the New York Central, the Pennsylvania, the South Western and Western Roads; every one of them is in the same box. Rich roads that have the money market of the United States at their command have been overwhelmed, and all this winter not only the climatic conditions but the extra demands upon them have hampered them, coupled with the fact that they cannot find manufacturing facilities to give them equipment, even when they have the money to pay for it. To-day the United States Steel Corporation is filled with orders to the end of 1907, and is taking orders for 1908 ; and the car construction companies of the United States have orders from six to eight months ahead. What can a government do ; what can a railway company do under such conditions ? We must, as reasonable people, take all these factors into account before we get at a proper solution of the difficulty. Any one who knows the Northwest country, knows the difficulty in working engines in a temperature running to 20 degrees, 40 degrees or 50 degrees below zero; a drop in temperature like that is apt to stall the most perfect engine. It is then rushed into the repair shop, the men have not time enough to properly do the repairs necessary, the urgency of the demand calls for the engine to go into service in an inefficient condition, and so it goes to pieces again and again. That has happened. The Lord makes the atmosphere, and sometimes it is so suddenly made that the best expert human ability cannot cope with the exigencies of the situation. The thing we want now, is to keep a level head, and not blame any one unduly. We should keep the pressure on steadily and constantly ; we should first ask the people to act sensibly and provide for their wants in advance of the time when they urgently need supplies ; then keep the railways up to the utmost of their power to furnish transportation ; then impress on the coal companies that if they want to carry on a permanent business they must do something more than live in the open air; they must have facilities for storing their coal and for employing labour more permanently and uniformly.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I have listened very patiently to this discussion, and I have acquired a deal of information. I live sufficiently far from the scene of the difficulty to be able to express a disinterested opinion. For a large part of my life I have been endeavouring to persuade householders and others of the necessity of providing themselves with coal in good season, and therefore the admonition of my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Foster) has fallen on my ears like dew on the mown grass. In the main I coincide with him. I think he has arrived very nearly at the true solution, and I congratulate him on that. If it is only on this one subject that he is right, that is something he is to be felicitated upon. The main point, so far as I can see, is to induce householders as far as possible to lay in their coal early—as my hon. friend from Toronto has expressed it, to be forehanded, and to provide for themselves at a time when the general demand is comparatively light. If that were done it would go a long way to solve the difficulty. As the Minister of the Interior has said, the shortage may be due to the fact that there is not a sufficient number of middlemen or that they have not sufficient capital to accumulate the coal when it is unseasonable. In that respect the conditions in country districts are not the same as those in the cities, where dealers acquire and store up large quantities of coal and distribute it in the neighbourhood. The companies could to a certain extent obviate the necessity of having a comparatively large quantity of coal stored in a neighbourhood by providing a larger number of steel cars. I observe that the railroads in the United States now depend largely on their steel cars, for two or three reasons: In the first place, they can be made of a much larger capacity, and, in the second place, they are not so easily destroyed ; so that they tend to cheapen the transport. Then, the coal-producing companies will have to provide the coal at centres, or provide distributing dealers and find the capital necessary for them. Then they will have to make those who wait till the close of the season before obtaining their coal, pay the expense of doing so. Our endeavour in the east is to make coal cheaper to those who take it earlier, and to make those who take it later pay the interest and the cost of accumulating the article. Self-interest is the largest factor in most business operations, and if we can persuade people that they save money by getting their supply of coal early, a great portion of the difficulty will be solved. With regard to strikes and the cessation of labour, I have had a good deal to do with workmen in various ways, sometimes having had a good many in my employ. I think all workmen should have the right to strike or to leave work whenever they please ; otherwise their work would be a species of slavery. If their interests lead them to go to other localities, they should be allowed to go. But there should be ample protection to the employers of labour who bring in labour to supersede those who have left ; otherwise the public are exposed to combinations and to the arbitrary action of individuals who think only of their own interest and having no regard for the convenience or the comfort of large numbers of people. That is not the fault of the larger proportion of workingmen. A good workingman will have some regard for his neighbours and for the consumers whose comfort depends upon the products of his labour ; but in all large labour organizations there are agitators and indolent men, and those who wish to make up for their own deficiency in working capacity by bringing others to coincide with them in opinion. These are the men who are dangerous in strikes, and who destroy the value and the potency of labour. They do not wish to work themselves, and they want others to agree with them and to cease the performance of duties which are necessary to make all parts of the combined efforts successful. My hon. friend from Toronto has set out in great detail the essential parts of this transaction. I agree with him entirely in what he has said ; he has nearly hit upon the requisite remedy for this difficulty. From what he has disclosed, I do not think there are a sufficient number of individuals with the necessary capital to handle the business. The railroad companies must provide the facilities and have the article stored up in convenient localities, for distribution to those who need it. In the United States the companies handle the coal they mine ; furnish the means of transport, and store the coal at convenient stations, from which it is forwarded to the consumers. The solution of the difficulty at the present time appears to be in the railroad company seeing that it can make money by accumulating the coal at convenient points for distribution.

Mr. HERRON. Mr. Speaker, during the discussion the Minister of the Interior stated that coal was supposed to be sold at the pit's mouth——

Mr. SPEAKER. I suppose the hon. member wants to ask a question ?

Mr. HERRON. That is true. He said that the coal was supposed to be sold at the pit's mouth at $1.75 a ton.

Mr. OLIVER. That is what I am informed by the operators of the mines. When I was at Blairmore on the last occasion, that was the price quoted by the railway company.

Mr. HERRON. I may state to the minister that I have had a great many complaints during the year from consumers, who informed me that there was no coal sold at that price in the Northwest this year, but that it was generally $2.75 and from that up to $4 a ton at the pits' mouth. I think the minister has had complaints of that kind himself.

Mr. OLIVER. The mine operators gave me the price at which they were selling coal to the railway company on contract, which is quite a different affair from the retail price. I am informed that the mines which are under discussion at the present time sold their coal to the railway company at an average price of $1.75, and the railway company was their chief customer.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the price of the custom coal ?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not answer that.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what most touches us.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I would like to ask the hon. minister if there is any prospect of relief being obtained by means of some kind of river or canal navigation for the distribution of coal?

Mr. OLIVER. Not from the Crow's Nest Pass mine, unless my hon. friend can fall back on those steamers which used to run on the prairie dew.

Mr. FOSTER. You might get Hatfield at work to make a stream there.

Mr. McCRANEY. It was reported some three months ago that the Hon. Mr. Motherwell, Minister of Agriculture for the province of Saskatchewan intimated to the public that the province might go into the coal mining business. Has the hon. minister any communication from the Saskatchewan government on the subject of their requiring coal lands, or has he considered the question of the provincial government entering into that field ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not recollect having received any communication from Mr. Motherwell on the subject, but no doubt the House is aware that, under our system of the disposition of Dominion coal lands, it is competent at any time for any business organization or individual to acquire coal lands and to operate them. If the province of Saskatchewan desires to acquire coal lands in order to operate them, it will be the business of the Dominion to facilitate their doing so, and the same may be said with regard to any responsible institution, whether corporate or private.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Although we have reached a stage of the session's business when there is happily a very general desire to bring the session to a close, no doubt we all feel that the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole), in bringing up this question to-day, was fully justified by its importance, and that the discussion has been in some respects instructive and I hope will have a very useful effect outside. I may be pardoned therefore for taking up a little time in further discussing it. The matter divides itself into two branches. The first is the question of the strike ; the second the broader question of transportation facilities generally in the Northwest. Dealing with the matter of the strike, we have had several suggestions in the way of telegrams, newspaper reports and so forth, but all these suggestions seem to have a somewhat extreme and strenuous and almost warlike character. One board of trade suggests that the immediate remedy is that the government shall take possession of the mines and operate them. That is rather a large proposition ; and even if it commended itself favourably to the consideration of the House, I am afraid it would take a little time to mature and perhaps not grant that immediate relief so much desired. Nor would we feel confident that if the mines were operated by the government, there would be any guarantee of freedom from the labour disputes which take place when our mines are operated by private parties. Another board of trade suggests that the remedy is to divorce our Canadian labour unions from American unions. That also, though the suggestion is offered with very great freedom by some estimable gentlemen assembled as a board of trade, has only to be mentioned to suggest difficulties. In the first place, it is an interference with individual liberty ; and I am sure that every man must be disposed to interfere as little as possible with the individual liberty of the citizen. We have excellent unions of an international character which certainly are not causes of any evil ; and if we were obliged to resort to legislation interfering with individual liberty in this respect, that legislation would have to be broader than merely confined to labour unions, and a little consideration will show the difficulties which would arise if any such legislation were proposed. No doubt there are many foreigners, members of organizations in Canada, whom none of us would wish to exclude, and no doubt many Canadians are members of organizations in the United States, and no one objects to such connection. There are international associations of a benevolent character which have their branches on both sides of the line; and in any attempt we might make to deal by legislation with the question of international labour unions, we would be face to face with the broader question of interference with individual liberty. So that there is not much room for remedy in that direction. Then we have the suggestion in a morning newspaper that we should call out the militia and have an armed force to prevent the strikes that are supposed to be threatened. Each and all of these suggestions seem to me open to difficulty and objection. Then there is the suggestion that the government should at once undertake to prosecute the officials chiefly concerned in the miners' movement in the west. That suggestion is also open to very grave objections. If we attempt at once to interpret our law as pledging us to commence prosecutions against people out there, we shall be departing from the principle which underlies the legislation we have enacted for dealing with labour disputes. As to calling out the troops, nothing was further from the thought of the government than that the measure which we adopted in the way of conciliation should, at the first stage and in the process of inquiry, be enforced by a resort to armed force. I am surprised at the statement in a morning paper with reference to this matter. The whole telegram was inaccurate and untrue, and one would be justified in assuming that it was designed for some sinister purpose, but what that is is only a matter of surmise. It states that a certain telegram was sent by one of the leaders of the labour movement to the Department of Labour. My hon. colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux), informs me that no such telegram was ever sent him. That telegram, which purports to be a copy of a communication sent the Minister of Labour, is therefore fraudulent and objectionable on that score. Then we have the statement that the government have been urged to arrest Mr. Sherman and that this move is expected. The government have not been urged to arrest Mr. Sherman, one of the gentlemen chiefly interested, one of the leaders of the labour movement, and have no thought of arresting him. One of the worst possible ways of dealing with the difficulty would be to proceed to arrest Mr. Sherman or call out the militia. Each one of these moves would be tantamount to coercion ; and the policy of this government, which has met the approval of this House, is not coercion but conciliation. If we are to accomplish any purpose, in dealing with labour problems under the legislation recently passed, we must not resort to any extreme measures but rely on conciliation, which is the very basis of the whole statute. The Act has been in force but a short time and has already accomplished a good deal. Even if it had accomplished nothing, that would not be a matter to be laid to the charge of the government, at so early a stage as this ; but judging by the results of its operations in the short time it has been in force, we are satisfied it has worked well. More, we are satisfied it will work well in this instance. True, it is stated in some of these exaggerated reports that many thousands of miners are out ; but while undoubtedly many have left their work, it is also proved that the principle of the law is accepted by many of the miners and by the leaders of their organization, and we have reason to hope that in a very short time the work of conciliation will be successful and the whole difficulty be smoothed over. The miners have accepted the principle of the Bill and have nominated representatives to the board. The mining companies have also nominated their representatives, but the Department of Labour, took exception to their appointment on the ground that the nominee was too directly represented. That led to delay, but now the mining companies have made other nominations. Therefore we have nominations by the mining companies and the workingmen, and at this moment I am advised the representatives of these two interests are in conference at Fernie with the view to agreeing on a third arbitrator. It is altogether probable that they will agree on a third member, but if they do not by Monday next—the time allowed them to nominate the third will have expired—and the government will be in a position to appoint the third member. When that is done, we have no reason to doubt that the whole matter will be dealt with in a good spirit and an equitable issue may be expected. The Deputy Minister of Labour, Mr. Mackenzie King, leaves Ottawa to-night and will arrive in Fernie on Tuesday. We feel hopeful that, in this case as in others, his excellent judgment will bring about a happy solution of the difficulties.

Now, in connection with the suggestion that our Canadian labour unions should cut themselves adrift from international unionism, it is well to remember that, sometimes, international unionism has worked out advantageously. I suppose that, as a rule, most of us in Canada feel displeased when some agitator comes across from the south and stirs up trouble in our minds; and it is not a matter of surprise that some persons should look for legislative interference to prevent such a thing. But whatever may be said generally, the fact is that at this moment the connection of these workmen in our country with international unionism is working towards peace and harmony. These workmen are members of the United Mine Workers of America. The leaders of that great international organization are Mr.

John Mitchell, the well known labour leader, and Mr. Lewis. Mr. Mitchell is the president and Mr. Lewis the vice-president. Both of these gentlemen reside in Indianapolis, or, at least, have their headquarters there. The miners can only carry on a strike effectively when they have the support of the union. If they enter upon a strike without the consent of the proper authorities of the union, they receive no recognition and no support from the union. We are advised that no authority was given by the recognized leaders for a strike in our west. On the contrary, it is a matter of public record that Mr. Mitchell, the leader of the United Mine Workers, has declared himself as opposed to any strike in our Canadian west, and that he is doing his utmost to prevent it. The morning paper which contains the despatch to which I referred, contains also another which might be worth being placed on record :

Toronto, April 18.—'I do not expect that the labour troubles in the colleries in the Crow's Nest Pass will continue,' stated Mr. G. G. S. Lindsey, general manager of the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Company, this morning. Mr. Lindsey said he has received a telegram from John Mitchell, of the United Mine Workers of America, in which he said that this body had advised the men to remain at work. He did not know whether the miners and operators would agree upon a third man for the arbitration of the dispute or not. He was surprised that the men should be unwilling to submit to the rules of arbitration.

In addition, I am advised that the vice-president of the organization, Mr. Lewis, has left Indianapolis and is on his way to Fernie in order that he may support the action taken by Mr. Mitchell. And I have the utmost hope—I may say the utmost confidence—that when Mr. Lewis arrives at Fernie with the message of good-will from the great labour leader, John Mitchell, and when Mr. Mackenzie King reaches Fernie and all the interests confer together, there will be a happy solution of this great 'strike' which some hon. gentlemen have been afraid would take place. It has been said that there has been a strike and that a great many men have left the mines. It is by no means certain that their leaving work is so general. I am informed that, of ten working companies in this region there are seven in whose mines the men remain at work. There are three mines in which a considerable number of men have left. If seven out of the ten mines have made application for arbitration by the Conciliation Act that has recently been passed, I think we may entertain strong hope that the other three will accept the principle of the Bill. There appears to have been an unfortunate misunderstanding which has brought about what is described as a strike, but what is evidently not properly so described. It appears that notices were posted up in a number of the mines on behalf of the mining companies intimating that there would be a very considerable reduction in wages. The men employed in these mines received the impression that the reduction was to take place irespective of what investigation might be held, and also the impression that the mining companies were trying in that way to anticipate the conclusion of the tribunal. For this reason the men refused to work. They had not the authority of their leaders to strike, but, being dissatisfied, they left their work. It seems that it is not contemplated by the companies that that reduction should take place until full and fair investigation. On the whole, the outlook for a happy solution is brighter than some of our hon. friends seem to imagine. When the labour leaders and the representatives of the Canadian government are brought together, as they will be in a few days, there is every reason to believe that we shall have the happy solution of the difficulty that hon. gentlemen generally desire.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was it purely a question of wages?

Mr. FIELDING. Wages and general conditions. At first, it was only a question of wages, but as has happened in so many cases, other matters arose.

With regard to transportation questions generally, I can give some information, perhaps not so much as I could give if I had known that the discussion would take the shape it has taken. The difficulty of transportation in the Northwest has been before us, in one way or another, for several months. I can assure hon. members that, when the troubles occurred several months ago, every effort was made on behalf of the government, by personal communication with gentlemen interested with railway enterprises and otherwise, to do whatever was possible. In troubles of this kind, of course, there are people who are ready to say that something must be done, though they may have little conception of what can be done. There is also the disposition to find fault with somebody, sometimes with the railway company but more often with the government. Representations were made to the transportation companies and they always claimed that they were doing the utmost possible. On behalf of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Sir Thomas Shaughnessy addressed a letter to the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who intended to bring it to the attention of the House. But the favourable moment did not seem to offer and the House passed to other business. Sir Thomas Shaughnessy calls attention to the fact that it has not been made public, and he thinks it only fair that the company should have the advantage of the explanation given some months ago :

Canadian Pacific Railway Company,
Office of the President,
February 11, 1907.

Dear Sir Wilfrid,—I saw the other day newspaper reports of a meeting of the Winnipeg Board of Trade at which the railways were severely criticised for their failure to furnish cars and move traffic with suitable promptness, one member attributing the alleged shortage of cars and other facilities to the fact that 'the transportation companies were filling their own coffers while neglecting the country,' and I believe that similar meetings were held at other points and representations were made to the government, so that the subject is likely to receive some attention in parliament. Therefore, I feel justified in placing before you some information that may be of use in dealing with a matter of much importance to the business community and to the transportation companies as well.

We recognize to its fullest extent the obligation imposed upon railway companies, that receive from parliament their charters and attendant privileges to serve the public truly and well, and if, through any fault of their own, they fail to do this, they deserve the severest criticism.

I do not believe that there is any disposition on the part of our Canadian railway companies to deny the facts. They admit, I think, that they have been unable at times to move all the traffic offering with a desirable degree of promptness, because the volume at such times was in excess of their facilities and they may properly be asked: 'Why was this the case? Why have you not the requisite facilities? The shipper must depend upon you and if he has goods ready to forward, it is your office and your duty to transport them without delay.'

In the present instance the railway companies call attention to the abnormal development that has taken place in the country during the past five years, a development that has resulted, not only in a vast expansion of the traffic to be transported, but has increased a hundredfold the difficulty about getting men and material to do the work necessary to enable the railways to handle it.

Cars and locomotives were not the only essentials. Increased crossing sidings were required, so that a greater number of trains could be moved over a given section each twenty-four hours. Terminal yards, round houses, shops and freight houses had to be enlarged and additional water service to be provided. Then there was the road-bed of the railway to be strengthened and improved, in order that it might be able to bear the strain of the additional tonnage that it was required to carry, and a thousand and one other works were rendered necessary.

Have our railway companies been executing these works during the past five years or have they, with indifference to public convenience and for their own increased profit, been taking advantage of the great augmentation of the revenues resulting from these brisk business conditions without spending the necessary money to do whatever lay in their power to provide the additional rolling stock equipment and the requisite extension of their facilities to meet the situation?

I can answer for only one railway company.

At the end of the year 1901 the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had 732 locomotives and 22,473 freight cars; at the end of 1896, five years later, the company had 1,204 locomotives and 37,467 freight cars; so that, in these five years, there was an increase of 472 locomotives and 14,994 freight cars, or about 70 per cent in each case, without taking into account the fact that each locomotive and each car was of much greater capacity than those previously in service. These with the passenger cars and other rolling stock equipment purchased and built, or in process of construction at the end of the year, represent an expenditure approximating $28,000,000. During the same five years the outlay for other facilities, such as line improvements, shops, round houses and other works calculated to facilitate the operation of the line was about $44,000,000, or a total of $72,000,000, and these figures, understand, are quite exclusive of $35,000,000 spent by the company in these same years for the construction of new railway lines to further develop the country, and for steamships to strengthen Canada's position on the Atlantic ocean. For these latter purposes another class of security is issued, while the cost of equipment and additions and improvements was met by the sale of the company's capital stock which realized more than its face value, and by appropriations from the company's cash reserves. So that, during these five years, in their endeavour to meet the most gratifying growth of the country's business, the shareholders of this company put back into the property, cash to the large amount of $72,000,000, an average of over $14,000,000 per annum or about two and a half times the sum they had received during the same period in dividends on their shares. When one takes into account the labour, the materal and the organization requisite to judiciously expend such a vast sum of money in five years the marvel is that so much was accomplished. But more would have been done if it were possible. Indeed several large works for which money had been appropriated last year were carried over because of their inability to have them completed. We have on order to-day, for delivery during the next four or five months, rolling stock equipment to the value of $11,808,751.14, and we hope to have it all in service before the autumn business commences to move. So that, you see that there has been no disposition on the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway to shirk its responsibilities or to 'fill its coffers to the neglect of the country.' During the execution of some of the larger works, wholly or partially included in the above expenditures traffic was necessarily delayed. The second track now being built between Winnipeg and Fort William will be a source of very great convenience when completed, but in a process of construction, the blasting of rock, and the movement of construction trains necessarily deprive us of anything like the full use of the present track for traffic purposes. I hope, however, that by the end of the year the hardest part of the work will be completed. Might I, in conclusion, be permitted to mention the serious extent to which railways are deprived of the use of their equipment in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta during the busiest season of the year by reason of the provisions of the Manitoba Grain Act governing the allotment of cars to individual applicants. I know that the purpose of the Act was to protect farmers in the matter of the selling price of their wheat. If legislation could be framed that would give farmers this same protection while using the elevators that have been provided at most stations in the grain-growing territory it would, I am sure, facilitate the movement of the crop and be of advantage to everybody concerned.

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) T. G. SHAUGHNESSY,

Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, G.C.M.G., Premier,
Ottawa, Can.

I think it is only fair to the Canadian Pacific Railway that since that statement was addressed to Sir Wilfrid Laurier it should be presented to the House.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the date of it?

Mr. FIELDING. It was addressed to Sir Wilfrid on February the 11th.

Mr. HAGGART. That was before the other debate on transportation in the west and we ought to have had that letter long ago.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not quite sure of the date of the debate. At all events the intention of the Prime Minister was to present the letter at a convenient time. If he overlooked it at that particular moment I cannot give an explanation. I am, I think, only doing what is fair and reasonable to the Canadian Pacific Railway in placing that letter of Sir Thomas Shaughnessy before the House so that the members may understand the question as it is viewed from the Canadian Pacific Railway standpoint. For a time things seemed to be improving in the Northwest, but even at a moment when the weather conditions were promising to be more favourable there was a sudden turn.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the minister had any reply or statement from the Canadian Northern?

Mr. FIELDING. As respects present conditions, yes. About the time that letter was written, or soon after, these conditions began to improve and we were hopeful that perhaps there would be no further cause of complaint from the point of view of the severity of the weather, but quite recently they had a return of severe weather in the Northwest and difficulties arose again. These were the subject of communications between members and their constituents. The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. McCraney) recntly presented to the House some telegrams which he had received with reference to the congested conditions and the difficulties experienced in connection with transportation in the Northwest. Thereupon I directed the deputy minister to communicate with the different authorities and do what ever could be done to press upon them the necessity of using their utmost endeavours to obtain relief. The deputy minister, Mr. Butler, sent the following report on the 10th of April :

Mr. FIELDING.

Dear Mr. Fielding,—The Board of Railway Commissioners have an engineer in the west, who was instructed some time ago to report on the condition and operation of the Canadian Northern Railway, and his report is now under way. Two days ago he was instructed to report further as to whether and when the conditions hindered operation on the Canadian Northern. The board are in communication with the Canadian Northern and are sending an expert railway officer west, to advise on the situation. Mr. Mann, of Messrs. McKenzie & Mann, is at Winnipeg and is in touch with all the parties, and cognizant of the situation; and it is believed that the company are doing all that they can within the limits of their resources. The commission advise that they are feeding cattle and taking care of people now at Winnipeg, so that the only possible plan seems to be, to place an embargo on temporarily, as is quite the usual custom on railways under such congested conditions.

There have been many storms, so it is stated, rendering it very difficult for them to keep the road open.

Yours faithfully.
M. J. BUTLER.

Hon. W. S. Fielding,
Acting Minister of Railways and Canals.

About the same time he addressed the following telegram to the president of the Canadian Northern Railway :

Complaint has been made from Saskatoon and Rosthern to the department that the Canadian Northern Railway have notified all American roads not to accept shipments of settlers' effects for any points on their system, that no mails have been received since March at Saskatoon, that the merchants are out of many staple articles and some necessities, that the Prince Albert branch is tied up both above and below there. It is also stated that there are trains now running by way of Warman and Prince Albert to Winnipeg, but they refuse to carry the mails. Needless to remark it is causing intense agitation in the west and requires prompt and immediate action to alleviate the condition. Please advise prospects for improvement.

M. J. BUTLER.

To this the following reply was received:

Your message to President. Mr. Mann now in the west and on tenth, he wired us that it was then snowing and that on the main line between Humbolt and Clarkboro, ice had formed on the rails underneath the snow making it impossible to use snow ploughs and that all cuts would have to be taken out with pick and shovel, that settlers' effects and passenger trains were being sent around via Prince Albert and Warman to Edmonton and that everything was being done that men could accomplish to relieve the situation. Have wired him again to-day and will wire you definitely on hearing from him.

D. B. HANNA.

On the following day Mr. Butler received the following telegram from Mr. Hanna :

M. J. Butler,
Canadian Government. Railways, Ottawa.
Toronto, April 13, 1907.

Snow blockade Regina, Prince Albert cleared and traffic resumed; same conditions apply on main line between Winnipeg and Edmonton, made one trip only between points named via Prince Albert and this train carried mails. Hope worst condition now over. If weather conditions continue normal, think should be able in short time remove all causes for dissatisfaction.

(Sgd.) D. B. HANNA.

These telegrams indicate that the various officers appear to be doing all they reasonably can. Of course, in a matter of that kind, when the best that they can do still leaves the traffic in a congested condition, it is inevitable that there will be much dissatisfaction and cause of complaint. However, as we are now approaching the warmer season I think it likely that the worst difficulty is over, and in view of the representations which have been made to us as to what the railway companies are doing in the matter of getting new equipment, I think we have every reason to hope that by the time the heavy traffic of the season comes on the railways will be in a better position than they have been recently to handle the business of the country.

Motion withdrawn.

MAIL SERVICE TO GREAT BRITAIN.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). Mr. Speaker, with your leave I would like to give my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) an answer to the question which he asked last night about the mail service between Liverpool and Canada via Halifax or St. John. I have just received from the Deputy Postmaster General a statement as follows :

As nearly as I can make out, in answer to your question as to the difference in time of arrival at destination of two letters leaving Liverpool at the same time, one for Halifax and the other for St. John, the vessels being of equal speed and making the same time the result would be about four hours in favour of Halifax in the arrival of a letter in Montreal or Ottawa. Halifax is about 240 to 250 nautical miles nearer Liverpool than St. John, which would mean that a vessel sailing for St. John would be from ten to twelve hours longer arriving at port. On the other hand St. John is about eight hours nearer to Montreal than Halifax by train. Hence of two letters, one sent from Liverpool to Halifax and the other sent from Liverpool to St. John, the letter from Liverpool to Halifax would arrive in Montreal or Ottawa about four hours earlier than the one sent via St. John.

I have here a statement from Mr. Butler, the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, as to the average time made by vessels or trains carrying mails during the winter. I will send it to my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER. If this answer of Mr. Butler contains no more than the answer the minister gave it does not cover quite what I was after. I am thankful to the minister for it. He assumes two vessels of equal speed.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. But I was taking a comparison between the best vessels of the Allan line and the best vessel of the Canadian Pacific Railway ; start your letter from Liverpool on each, one going via Halifax and the other via St. John and I would like to know which would arrive at its destination first.

Mr. FIELDING. That is not a fair comparison. Take ship for ship and port for port.

Mr. FOSTER. A fair comparison? I suppose I have a right to ask for the information I want and that the minister will allow me the information that I want ? But, when I come to use it then the minister can pitch into me.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will get the answer to the question and let the hon. gentleman have it.

On the Orders of the Day being called :

Mr. W. ROCHE. According to the answer which was read by the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) the distance from Halifax to St. John is given as 250 miles per hour, and for a steamer which has a speed of 17 knots an hour four hours is not a sufficient time. But the Bay of Fundy is not safe for vessels proceeding more than ten, twelve or thirteen knots an hour at most.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. We can hardly have a discussion upon this.

Mr. W. ROCHE. I am done.

RESIGNATION OF HON. C. S. HYMAN.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). Before proceeding with the Orders of the Day I just desire to ask a question of the hon. gentleman who leads the House (Mr. Fielding). Is he in a position to give us any further information in reference to the resignation of Hon. C. S. Hyman, Minister of Public Works ? Has the resignation referred to in the telegram of last Saturday yet reached the Speaker and if it has, is it now in proper and legal form ?

Mr. FIELDING. I regret to be obliged to inform my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) that I have no information on the subject.

Mr. SPEAKER. No such resignation has yet reached my hands.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the minister any knowledge as to whether the report which has been going through the papers that Mr. Hyman and a number of congenial spirits are just about leaving for the old country? We would like to know if that be true or not because that would have an important bearing on the question.

Mr. FIELDING. No, I saw a reference in some of the papers to the effect that Mr. Hyman contemplated taking an ocean voyage. Beyond that general statement I have seen nothing in the press and I have no information on the subject.

Mr. BERGERON. This morning's paper contained that.

Mr. FIELDING. I have not observed the particular telegram to which the hon. gentleman refers.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 136) to amend the provisions of the Criminal Code respecting the preservation of the peace in the vicinity of public works—Mr. Aylesworth—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1—'Intoxicating liquors' defined.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This Bill, I may explain, is introduced at the suggestion of the Commissioners of the Transcontinental Railway, who, in turn, are acting upon the representations of the commissioner of police in charge of the administration of justice in the district which has been proclaimed under the Public Works Act along the line of construction. The Bill consists simply of amendments in regard to the dealing in, or providing of, intoxicating liquor which his practical experience since his appointment to that work has indicated to him to be desirable. I will explain the alterations in each section if the committee permit. In this section the alteration consists in the addition of the last two lines. The definition of intoxicating liquor contained in the present subsection 17 of section 2 of the Code does not include the words with which this subclause now proposes to conclude; that is that any liquor shall be presumed to be intoxicating if it contains more than 2½ per cent of crude spirits.

Mr. HAGGART. What was it before? That will include beer, I suppose?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. In the Revised Statutes there is no such provision at all as to the 2½ per cent but what is desired to be struck at is some particular kind of patent medicines which the Indians, it is said, have a fondness for, and perhaps some white men too are very glad to consume and which are found to contain upon analysis more than this percentage of spirits.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a prescription which the Indians seem to be fond of; they take two or three plugs of blackstrap tobacco, boil it down for a while, add a bottle of painkiller and a little bad whisky if they can get it, and the Indian says that makes 'big drunk' for several days. Will that come under this clause?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. If it contained 2½ per cent or more of alcohol, yes.

Section agreed to.

On section 2,

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This is the introduction of a provision prohibiting the giving of liquor, and at the end of the section an addition as to liquor supplied upon prescription of a medical practitioner, which is not in the present Act.

Section agreed to.

On section 3,

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This amendment increases the penalty for a first offence from $40 to $50; for a subsequent offence the present law provides a penalty of $40, and it is now proposed to make it $100. The following words are also added: 'Such imprisonment in either case to be with or without hard labour,' which words are necessary to empower the magistrate to impose a sentence with hard labour.

Section agreed to.

On section 4,

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The amendment here includes among the places which may be searched a railway carriage, or freight car, or railway station, freight shed or other railway building, which had not previously been included.

Section agreed to.

On section 5,

Mr. AYLESWORTH. In the existing law it is necessary to summon the owner, keeper or person; the word 'summon' is now changed to 'shall be brought.' If the person fails to answer the summons, it is thought he should be brought before the magistrate so that he may be aware of the destruction of his property. At present, if he does not appear on the summons, the proceedings for the destruction of liquor go on ex parte in his absence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before you destroy the liquor there is an inquiry?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Why have all these changes been introduced?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. They have been asked for by the Transcontinental Railway Commissioners in connection with the construction of the new line through Ontario, and they have asked upon the information furnished them by the commissioner of police who is acting in the district.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES.

Bill (No. 139) to create a Department of Mines—Mr. Templeman—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it intended to do away with the Geological Survey and to make it a part of the Department of Mines ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The Department of Mines to be created by this Bill will be presided over by a Minister of Mines, who will be a member of the Privy Council, and will be assigned to that duty by an order in council. As the Bill is framed, the department is divided into two branches, the Geological branch and the Mines branch. What is proposed is to combine the present Geological Survey branch and the present Mines branch of the Department of the Interior in one department. It has occurred to me that, as these branches are largely scientific and technical, it will be necessary also to have an administration branch and I purpose moving an amendment to the Bill to that effect. The Geological branch will be presided over by the director of the Geological Survey, Mr. Low, and the Mines branch by Mr. Haanel. The necessity for this legislation has been very apparent to the government for a long time, that is, the creation of a department that would give to the mining interests of the country that prominence which their growing importance demands. Canada has great mining interests which are increasing very rapidly, and which I think will increase much more rapidly in the immediate future ; and a well equipped mining department may do a great deal in furthering and encouraging the development of the mining resources of the country. It will be to mining largely what the Department of Agriculture is to the great agricultural industry.

Mr. SPROULE. If I understand the Bill correctly, it is proposed to merge the two branches into one and call that the Department of Mines. Then we shall have no Geological survey in future ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It will be the Geological Survey branch of the Mines Department. The word 'survey' was omitted in the original draft, but to meet the views of the geologists of the department, who have strong objections to the word 'survey' disappearing. I propose to amend the Bill so as to call that branch the Geological Survey Branch. I may say that it is not contemplated to increase the number of the officials, but we shall have to a certain extent a re-classification of them.

Mr. PERLEY. I want to suggest that the minister name that branch the Geological Survey, and not the Geological Survey branch. As we all know, the Geological Survey is known throughout the world as one of the finest parts of the government of this country. It has been known by that title for many years, and has been administered by very prominent men—Logan, Selwyn, Dawson, Bell and Low, and I think it would be a great pity if the name were changed in any respect. I admit the difficulty of including the name in the title of the Act, because it would make it too long and cumbersome but it seems to me that this important part of the administration of this country should retain the old name which it has borne for so many years so worthily and under such worthy heads.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I agree with the hon. member for Argenteuil. To blot out the Geological Survey at Ottawa would be a very serious matter. When we remember that its reports are distributed to libraries and various institutions in different countries, and that entirely different reports will be sent out in the future from those in use in the past, we can realize what a serious change this is. I do not quite understand the need of the Mines branch. Why should not the Geological Survey Department take in the Mines branch rather than the Mines branch take in the Geological Survey, if a Mines branch be necessary ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It seems to me that the mines branch is the important or at all events, the practical branch of the department. While not at all desiring to under value the work of the Geological Survey, still what the mining industry wants is a practical mining department.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is not the mining department part of the Geological Survey ? Why should the lesser include the greater.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am inclined to look at it the other way round. I am inclined to think that the mining interest is greater than the Geological Survey branch and that the Geological Survey is only an assistance of the development of the mining industry. The work that the Geological Survey does is preliminary work and purely scientific, and the work of the mining branch will be practical.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to have some general explanation as to what the mining minister and department will do. Suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Templeman) should be the Minister of Mines and have this mining department under his control, what is he going to do with it ? It is easy making a toy, but what use will you make of it ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The Minister of Mines will administer the Geological Survey branch and the mining branch just as any other minister superintends and directs the department under him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there to be an additional minister who will have charge of the department ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is to be another department, but not an additional minister.

Mr. SPROULE. If you have a Department of Mines, unless you combine some other departmental name with it, you must have an extra minister.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There will be no extra minister. If my hon. friend reads clause three he will see that it provides :

> There shall be a department of the civil service to be called 'The Department of Mines,' which shall be under the control and management of a member of the King's Privy Council for Canada, who shall be named from time to time for that purpose by the Governor in Council, and who shall be called 'The Minister of Mines.'

The minister will be appointed by order in council, precisely in the same way as he is now appointed to take charge of the Geological Survey.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This makes it perfectly possible to create an additional minister, and that seems to be contemplated.

Mr. SPROULE. It is creating an additional department.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes, just as the Department of Labour was created an additional department, to be administered by the Postmaster General. But it might be transferred at any time from the Postmaster General to the Minister of Agriculture, who would then be Minister of Agriculture and Labour. This Department of Mines will be administered by one of the present ministers. There is no intention whatever of creating a new minister.

Mr. FOSTER. This is enough to make one dizzy. We do not know where we are. When we see a minister getting up, we are at a loss to know how to address him. At one time he is Minister of Labour and at another time Postmaster General and again minister of something else. If you go on multiplying these different ministers, one will require a new head piece to conduct himself through this maze so as to give a proper title to the man he is addressing. But I do not want the hon. gentleman to get away from the practical question. Here is a new toy he has manufactured, what will he do with it ? What will the Minister of Mines do that is not being done now ?

Mr. FISHER. I understand——

Mr. TEMPLEMAN.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like the minister himself to answer or the gentleman who is to be the minister.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has no more right to address the chair than I have.

Mr. FOSTER. I freely grant that. It is very seldom the hon. minister gets a chance to speak, and I will give him the opportunity.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman says he is getting into a maze and cannot realize where he is with all these different departments, but he forgets that for years there have been ministers of the government who have had more than one department under their respective control.

Mr. FOSTER. And it is getting very hard to bear.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman is not so much in extremis as he would have us believe. He is altogether too modest. The First Minister has been in charge of the Mounted Police Department a number of years. The Postmaster General has charge of the Department of Labour. The Minister of the Interior has the direction of the Department of Dominion Lands and of the Indians and at one time had the Geological Survey under him.

Mr. FOSTER. We do not call him the Minister of Indians.

Mr. FISHER. Still it is just as distinct a department as this is. The Minister of Inland Revenue happens at present to be in charge of the Geological Survey, which is a department by itself with a deputy head, who is deputy head by statute. In this particular case, there is a mines branch in the Department of the Interior, which it is desirable to join to the Geological Survey and call the combined organization the Department of Mines. There is no question that the importance which the mining industry has reached entitles it to have a department of its own. I might just point out that the Geological Survey, while it has done exceedingly valuable work, has largely been a department of surveys, going over and mapping out the country and seeing what developments could be made. But the mining branch has to do with the development of the practical or commercial wealth which the Geological Survey has discovered and pointed out. The mining branch of the Deparment of the Interior has done important work by giving information to the mining people of our mining resources, which is distinct altogether from the work of the Geological Survey. This is an effort to join the two together and make of them a department by themselves.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the Minister of Mines tell us if there has been a Mines branch in operation for the last few years, as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) would lead us to believe, what has been the nature of its work? And has the work been of such importance that it is necessary to establish a bureau of mines, pay extra salaries, make extra appointments and so on?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) asked me what we were to do with the Department of Mines when we had it? I think we can do a very great work for the country.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, what is it?—that is the point.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The House knows that the jurisdiction over the lands and mines of the great provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta rests with this parliament. The House knows also that the jurisdiction over mines in the great territory to the north rests with this parliament. That is, the legislation relating to mines in about two-thirds of the entire territory of this Dominion must be passed here.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Have they not a Bureau of Mines in Ontario and similar bureaus in other provinces, including the west?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I did not mention Ontario. There is no question that the jurisdiction over mines and mining legislation in Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia rests with those provinces. But the mining legislation and the regulation and control of mines in all the rest of the country is with this parliament. We have already the great mining interests of the Klondike and the great coal mining interests of Alberta. Up north we hope some day—and it may be at no very distant day—to discover other Cobalts and Klondikes. The work which has been done in connection with mines under the control and regulation of the Department of the Interior, will, in future, be done in the Department of Mines. I believe this will be one of the most important departments in the government and one with a great work to do. My hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) asked me what the Mines Branch of the Department of the Interior has been doing? I will tell him a few of the things it has done during the past few years. Dr. Haanel, as Superintendent of Mines, carried on experiments in the electric smelting of iron ores at the Soo. That was a very important experiment, and excellent results were obtained.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was the nature of the results?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. An elaborate report was made on the practicability of the smelting by electric process of the iron ores of Ontario.

Mr. HAGGART. Did he discover anything new? Was it not all known before?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I understand that there was a great doubt as to the practicability of smelting the magnetic iron ores of Ontario by electric process.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the minister sure that he is quite correct? I have been told by mining men that the practicability of that work had been amply demonstrated years ago, but the commercial practicability of it had not been demonstrated, and has not been demonstrated yet—that Dr. Haanel is no nearer a commercial result than dozens of others who have gone before.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. He admits that in his own report.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not know who the informant of the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) is, but I do not think he voices the opinion of those who have given the closest attention to the electric smelting of iron ore in Ontario. I know that the investigation made by Dr. Haanel, in Europe, and his experiment carried on at the Soo, have received commendation from all the governments of the world that take an interest in the electric smelting of iron. It may be true that the commercial success of the electric smelting of iron ores has not been finally demonstrated even yet; but Dr. Haanel's report, I believe, was to this effect, that the smelting of the magnetic iron ores of Ontario—there has never been any question of the electric smelting of the hematite iron ores of Europe; that had been demonstrated before—and ores low in iron and high in sulphur, has been greatly advanced. I believe that one of the results was that iron ores containing a high percentage of sulphur can be smelted economically by electricity better than by the ordinary process.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as a laboratory test shows——

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It was more than a laboratory test. Dr. Haanel smelted more than fifty tons of pig iron. It was carried on on a scale sufficient to demonstrate its commercial practicability.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has he done that?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think he has done that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps he has. But I would ask the minister this: he says it is not contemplated to create a new minister. Now I call his attention to the fact that the language of the Bill makes it quite possible to create a new minister and that it is different from the language of the statutes which do not so contemplate. For instance, take the statute creating the Department of Indian Affairs, chapter 81 of the Revised Statutes of 1906. Section 4 provides :

The Minister of the Interior, or the head of any department appointed for the purpose by the Governor in Council shall be the superintendent of Indian Affairs, and shall as such, have the control and the management of the lands and properties of the Indians in Canada.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. What about the Labour Department?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Act creating the Department of Labour is of the same character, except that, curiously enough, there do not seem to be any words creating the department at all.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is a creation, all the same.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I might refer to that as it is rather curious.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. If I mistake not the wording of clause 3 of this Bill is copied from the Act creating the Department of Labour. It was the intention to make the wording about the same.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have the Act before me. Section 1 provides, 'This Act may be cited as the Conciliation and Labour Act.' Section 2 provides :

In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) 'Minister' means the member of His Majesty's Council for Canada to whom, for the time being, the Governor in Council may assign the carrying out of the provisions of this Act.

Section 3 and following sections deal with trade disputes . Section 12 deals with statistics. Section 13, and the following sections deal with railway disputes and then in section 27 I observe for the first time any reference to the Department of Labour, although I have not examined the Bill very exhaustively. Section 27 says that the Department of Labour shall do so and so. That is about all there is in the Act respecting the creation of the department, so far as I have been able to obesrve in running over it hurriedly. But it is very different from this Act which provides for the creation of a new minister, namely the Minister of Mines.

Mr. FOSTER. It must be so because if you establish a Minister of Mines do you do away with the Minister of the Interior ? That brings the matter to a test. The Minister of the Interior administers these two branches which are now to be combined and put under a Minister of Mines. You have a Minister of the Interior to-day, you pass this legislation and you provide for a Minister of Mines. You appoint the Minister of Mines and you have an addition to the Privy Council, you have one more minister.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. My hon. friend will see by clause 4, subsection 2, that it says :

When the management and direction of any subject is transferred to the Department of Mines.

All that is transferred from the Department of the Interior is the administration of mines.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the government does not intend to create another department what is the objection to using language such as is used in the Indian Act ? It is very plain and carries out exactly what is said to be the intention of the government.

Mr. D. ROSS. The suggestion of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) I know would be very objectionable to the west, where we take considerable pride in our mines and mining industry. For many years an agitation has been going on there for the creation of a federal Department of Mines.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not objecting to that, the hon. gentleman does not understand me; I am simply suggesting that you should use such language as is used in the Indian Act and provide that the head of some other department should be the head of this department.

Mr. D. ROSS. But he would not be Minister of Mines.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, he would in the same way as the Postmaster General is Minister of Labour.

Mr. D. ROSS. Of course, I am not particular how it is done, but we in the west have clamoured for the creation of a Department of Mines having a full-fledged Minister of Mines in charge of it. If you are going to change it to a superintendent the same as the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Oh, no.

Mr. D. ROSS. The same agitation was carried on in the United States for a number of years and an association was formed in the United States with their slogan the creation of a federal Department of Mines there. I am not particular how it is done so long as we have our department.

Mr. BARR. I imagine that British Columbia should not be much affected, you are in the same position as Ontario.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not think there is any disagreement. What we want to do is to have a Department of Mines and a Minister of Mines but not to create an additional portfolio. If we go on with the Bill we can hold that over for consideration.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is quite satisfactory.

Mr. SPROULE. How many additional employees or officials will be required ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. None whatever. It is not contemplated to have any additional service and no extra vote except possibly for some experiments and perhaps a few unforeseen expenses, but no more officials are going to be put on at the present time. It is possible and we hope that the department will grow from year to year but there will be no immediate increase of expenditure.

Mr. SPROULE. The deputy head of this department will be the deputy head of the Geological Department?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It seems likely that the deputy head of the Geological Survey will be the deputy head of this at the same salary as he is now enjoying.

Mr. SPROULE. No more officials will be required than are doing the work and there will be no additional salaries?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Mr. Low is at present the director and deputy head of the Geological Survey. My suggestion is that he should become the deputy minister of the department and it would be necessary to make one of the geologists director of the Geological Survey.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister says the department may grow. It may grow in the number of officials and in the expense, because that is the usual result of creating a new branch.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. If it does good there should be no objection.

Mr. SPROULE. It will not be long before this department spreads out in a new line involving more officials and extra salaries.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has the minister decided who the deputy head of the mines branch shall be?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No, I mentioned Mr. Low for the simple reason that he has deputy rank to-day and his position must be recognized in some way. Up to the present there has been no discussion whatever except between Mr. Low and myself and no definite arrangement has been made.

Mr. LALOR. Dr. Haanel is at the head of the mines branch.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. He is Superintendent of Mines.

Mr. LALOR. Will Dr. Haanel be subject to Mr. Low if he is made deputy ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Certainly the Deputy of Mines will be at the head of the department.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have been closely in touch with the Geological Department for many years in our work in western Ontario and in the west as well, and I would like to urge upon the minister the desirability at least of looking into the merits of Dr. Bell as a man for promotion to one of the prominent positions. I am sure the minister is well aware of this gentleman's position not only in Canada but throughout the world as that of being one of the most eminent geologists we have. Of course the minister will take into consideration the welfare of the mining interests in general and if so he will take into consideration Dr. Bell in making these appointments. He has long been in the public service and his work and ability have been of great value to the country. I am not talking in this way because Dr. Bell is a supporter of this side of the House the fact being that he is the very opposite. Dr. Bell is a supporter of the government, but I am merely saying this because I am a friend of Dr. Bell, I know his worth and I know what he has done for the country.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Of course the gentleman who occupies the position of geologist, next to Dr. Bell, is the highest paid official in the department. Dr. Bell's qualifications along with those of others will have to be taken into consideration.

Mr. HAGGART. Is there to be only one deputy head of the Mines Department?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is to be only one deputy head of the Mines Department.

Mr. HAGGART. And the deputy head will be superior to the heads of the two branches, that is the one who is at the head of the Geological Survey and the one who is at the head of the Mining Department?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. One deputy, and what will you call the others?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. In the Bill we call the others the directors. At the present time Mr. Low is the head of the Geological Survey, but it is proposed to have one deputy minister and a director for each branch, each of whom will be subordinate to the deputy minister.

Mr. BARR. Mr. Low was appointed after Dr. Bell. There was some difficulty then and I am afraid there will be more difficulty now.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The difficulty was created a year or so ago. This does not make it any worse.

Mr. BARR. I think there is a little friction yet.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If Mr. Low is removed from his present position and made Deputy Minister of Mines will that remove him from the immediate direction of the Geological Survey which, I understand, was the work he was appointed to undertake?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No, it would not. The only discussion I have had with any of the officials of the Geological Survey was with Mr. Low. I suggested to him that in all probability I would ask him to accept the position of deputy minister. He suggested that he might be permitted to continue his duties as director of the Geological Survey. I said I could see no objection to him doing that until we could complete the organization of the department. But my view was that there should be another geologist appointed to be head of the Geological Survey and allow Mr. Low to become the deputy minister. The deputy minister necessarily has control of the Geological Survey as well as the Mines branch.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. To what extent would he be removed from the immediate direction of the Geological Survey? What would be his powers, duties and functions as they are at the present time as contrasted with those which would be imposed upon him by this appointment of Deputy Minister of Mines?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I suppose his powers and duties will be greater as deputy minister. He will have jurisdiction over the Mines branch. He will be the head of the department. He will occupy exactly the same position in regard to this department that any other deputy minister occupies in regard to his department. The Deputy Minister of the Interior, for instance, has jurisdiction over a number of bureaus or branches.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It does not seem that the minister is very definite about it. What are the duties of Mr. Low at the present time as director of the Geological Survey and will he still continue to perform those duties after he became Minister of Mines?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Not if we appoint another director.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then he will be removed from the immediate direction of the Geological Survey?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Certainly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is what I asked ten minutes ago. Is it not work of that kind that he is supposed to be most eminently fitted for?

Mr. LANCASTER. The minister mentioned that he thought Mr. Low did not want to give up his preesnt work if he is to be appointed deputy minister. Does the minister understand whether that is a work that Mr. Low has been concerning himself in? I am bound to say, having regard to what was put before this House earlier in the session by myself in regard to the investigation made at the Niagara river, that Mr. Low has not shown that alacrity to work in the interest of Canada that he ought to have. His name has been mentioned as having performed a work which began under the direction of Dr. Bell and was carried out under his direction. If the accomplishment of that work in the future is to be ascribed to Mr. Low it is not fair to Mr. Low or to Dr. Spencer who have been working for Canada and who have been accomplishing what was very necessary in regard to the fixing of the quantity of water having regard to the boundary between Canada and the United States in the great lakes and the Niagara river. I do not want to say anything against Mr. Low, but as a public man I object to a gentleman being allowed to retain a position for the purpose of taking some of the glory or aggrandizement to himself that he is not entitled to.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is hardly fair to Mr. Low, because Mr. Low was in no way responsible for the arrangement by which Dr. Spencer was selected to continue the work at Niagara Falls.

Mr. LANCASTER. He delayed the reports.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No, Dr. Spencer delayed them.

Mr. LANCASTER. No, Mr. Low delayed them by not printing them.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not think Mr. Low was in any way responsible.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman from British Columbia seems to press this matter as being the darling scheme of the western members, especially those belonging to British Columbia. I sympathize with him entirely in his desires and aspirations in that respect, but is it not the real service of the mining director that the hon. gentleman wants? It is not the frills or anything of that kind that he is especially anxious for and I want to look upon his subject from that point of view as to whether we are going to better matters much under this arrangement which is proposed. Here you have the Geological Survey which is admitted to be under the direction of as good a man as you can get in Canada. After the arrangement was made and Dr. Bell went out, I think it was pretty well agreed upon that Mr. Low was the man who was fitted to take Dr. Bell's place as he had devoted a long series of years and very arduous efforts to that which was his business. The very moment you translate him from direct connection with his life work and place him where he has to fritter his time away in discharging the routine business of a deputy head, you dissever him from that work in which he is taking a great interest and in which he has done much good to the country. You now propose to make him deputy head of the Mines branch, the active spirit of which has been in the past Dr. Haanel, who would continue to be in charge of it if you make him director. You reduce Mr. Low to a sort of directing machine over these other officials, and you separate him from his intense personal and active interest in a branch to which he has devoted his whole life. I doubt very much if you add to the efficiency of his services to this country by doing that.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. If Mr. Low is ambitious to become deputy head and to make the Mines Department a great department, and if he thinks that should be his life work, what then?

Mr. FOSTER. We have no knowledge as to that. The only knowledge is that the man who is going to be Minister of Mines is going to ask him to take the position.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I know Mr. Low's mind on that question, but if he thinks as my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) thinks, Dr. Low can remain Director of the Geological Survey. He can take his choice.

Mr. FOSTER. You have now an efficient management and administration of the Geological Survey, and do you propose to make it any better by this new arrangement? You have now an efficient officer over the Mines Department; will you add to his efficiency by this new arrangement? The question I pressed on the minister was as to what particular work this Mines Department is going to do. The sympathetic and ornamental part of it is all very well, but what is the practical good that can come of this new arrangement? You will add thousands and tens of thousands of dollars to the expense of the country, because you must have your machinery and your clerks and your offices, and what is the result then? Are you not duplicating the work which is already done by the provinces in their great Mining Departments? You do not own, nor do you control an acre of mining land in Ontario, and the Ontario government is attending to the immense mining development which is going on there to-day. The British Columbia government has control of the mines of that province; and if there is anything in propinquity, the administration by the local government ought to be better and wiser than administration from Ottawa, which is so much further removed from the scene. And, let me ask, why should British Columbia administer its own mining lands when Saskatchewan and Alberta have no control over theirs? There is no reason in the world why, if they are to be provinces, Alberta and Saskatchewan should not have equal rights with the other provinces. I predict the time will come, and it is not far distant, when these new provinces will have these rights, however much we may deny them at present. The general progress of ideas will ultimately land these powers in the hands of Alberta and Saskatchewan, and there are good reasons why it should be so. When that time arrives, the federal government will be left without jurisdiction, to butt in, to make general reports, to get statistics, and the provincial mining departments are doing that already. They have a live Mines Department in Ontario, and the work of that department is progressing and it is established on a basis which I do not think can be improved upon by the Dominion branch. Then, the federal Department of Mines will be left for independent action in the undeveloped territories of the Northwest and the Yukon. Will this new Department of Mines go further than the Geological Survey goes now in the way of prospecting? Are you going to find out where the veins are, and if so, to whom does the knowledge go? There is the difficulty, the moment you undertake any other than general investigation as to our mineral lands. If you are going to prospect for paying veins, is it because you are going to operate them afterwards or impart the information to some one who will operate them? I can see how you could make a business of it by finding out the veins and putting the area up to auction, but I do not suppose that is your idea. Again I ask the minister, what practical work is going to be carried out by this new organization? If the minister can show that this new department is necessary, without duplicating the work done by the provinces, and if he can show that good will come from its establishment, I am not going to oppose it.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I have had the opportunity of discussing this matter in all its phases with Mr. Low, and I am bound to say that he has ideas in regard to a Department of Mines that leads me to believe that he is the right man for deputy minister of that department. I might point out to the hon. member for North Toronto that every provincial government has its Minister of Agriculture and at the same time the Department of Agriculture here has always done good work for the Dominion. If that be true with regard to agriculture, why should not the same thing be true with regard to the mineral industry, which is one of the great industries of this country? In the treatment of refractory ores, in such experiments as those on the zinc ores of the Slocan district, and in exploring new territory, such a department can do valuable work. There is also the work of preparing maps. I believe the Department of Mines should prepare all the maps for all the departments, so that duplication would be avoided. Then the question of irrigation is an important question in the dry regions of the west and the geologists could report on that.

Mr. LENNOX. By the seventh section, the question of irrigation is put under the other branch.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The geologists in the field can take cognizance of the water sheds of the country, and report as to where water can be stored for irrigation, and they can give us valuable information in other ways.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Can they not do all that under the present administration?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I admit that all this can be done under the present administration; but what I am pointing out is that the mining industry is of sufficient importance to justify us in having a full fledged Department of Mines with a Minister of Mines. I do not think the hon. member for North Toronto will say that there is not plenty of work for the officers of this department, or that the cost will be any greater than it is at present, if the work is done properly.

At six o'clock committee rose, and House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 153) for the relief of Victor Harold Lyon.—Mr. Wilson (Russell).

Bill (No. 155) respecting a certain Patent of Phillip J. Green, Melvin Hunt and John McMurrich.—Mr. Perley.

Bill (No. 157) for the relief of Arthur Leon McPherson.—Mr. Parmelee.

Bill (No. 151) to incorporate the General Animals Insurance Company of Canada, Limited.—Mr. Walsh (St. Anne).

Bill (No. 149) to incorporate the Rock Life Assurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Parmelee.

OTTAWA TERMINALS' RAILWAY COMPANY.

House went into committee on Bill (No. 152) to incorporate the Ottawa Terminals' Railway.—Mr. Caldwell.

On section 17,

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. In the Committee on Railways this was amended to read:

17. The company may, subject to the sanction and approval thereof by the Governor in Council, upon report by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, make all such by-laws, rules and regulations as the directors of the company deem necessary and proper for the control, management, and use of the said Central Union Passenger Station and facilities appurtenant thereto, and of any other premises and property of the company, including the use thereof by the public, and for the regulation and control of all vehicular traffic upon the said premises and property.

Mr. LANCASTER. I desire to repeat here what I said in the Railway Committee. When the matter was up there, it struck me and others that this was an interference with municipal rights in the control of cab service in the city of Ottawa. It might be less harmful in Ottawa where the members of the Board of Railway Commissioners reside and where they may be expected to control matters of this kind better than they could in other municipalities. I am bound to say that the Railway Committee seemed to ignore the principle involved in this section, though they amended the section by taking out the word 'control' and also the words 'at the said station.' Still if we pass the section in this form I think we interfere in the most outrageous way in the control of cab licenses in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. FOSTER. This confines it to the company's own property?

Mr. LANCASTER. But the point is that a cabman licensed by the municipality has the right to go on the station grounds with a passenger and his baggage, in order to reach the train. For the municipality to be overruled in a matter of that kind by the Board of Railway Commissioners seems to me an interference with municipal rights. One of the most important services for which cab drivers are licensed by the municipality is to deliver passengers and their baggage at the railway station, on the premises of the company. The cabman ought to be allowed to go on the property of the company if he complies with the regulations of the municipal authorities and ought not to be stopped at the entrance to the station grounds. He has a lawful right to go on the company's grounds, because, the railway company being a common carrier, should be obliged to let people upon their grounds for the purpose of entering their trains, and people who enter upon the company's property for that purpose are not trespassing. In Ontario, as a rule, these matters of cab licenses are regulated by the Board of Police Commissioners and not by the aldermen. But be that as it may the point is that the municipal control ought not to be interefered with.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the objection solely to section 17, or does it apply to section 9 also?

Mr. LANCASTER. Section 9 is involved, but as it stands, it is not as harmful as section 17. Section 17 is a distinct and positive enactment. I would not find any particular objection if this section went down as far as the words 'property of the company.' Or, even if it went on to 'including the use thereof by the public.' But I think all after that should be struck out. That is what I suggested in the Railway Committee.

Mr. FOSTER. Would this allow them to keep a cabman off the premises?

Mr. LANCASTER. Certainly it would. Under this they can form a perfect trust against certain cabmen. Because a cabman does not comply with certain things that the commissioners choose to enact, wheher right or wrong, and regardless of the wishes of the municipal authorities, they could refuse to allow him to drive upon the premises. It may be argued that in the interest of the travelling public the railways should have some means to secure the comfortable and expeditious conveyance of their passengers to or from the depot. That can be done without granting this absolute power to keep out all outside cabmen unless they make arrangements with the company. It would mean that no other cabmen, nor even a citizen in his private carriage or buggy, would be permitted to enter the station grounds unless the Railway Commission and then the Governor in Council choose to disallow the railways' regulations. But it is well known that the attention of the Board of Railway Commissioners is so engrossed with general matters of great importance and urgency, that they are unable to deal with many matters which they should properly deal with and which it was intended should fall within their jurisdiction. It seems to me that all the words of the last two lines after the word 'public' should be omitted and I therefore move to strike them out.

Mr. BARKER. I agree with much of what the hon. gentleman says as a principle, but for two reasons I do not think his argument is applicable to the present case. He has done right and taken a proper course in calling attention to this matter, so that hereafter this Bill may not be used as a precedent. As regards the use of the Central station here in Ottawa where the railway commissioners live and where they can know quite as much about the necessities of the public as the city council of Ottawa, and especially as the council has taken no exception to this Bill, I do not see why we should apply the abstract principle to this case. The promoters of the Bill agreed to strike out the word 'control' so that all that is now in the Bill is that by-laws will be passed to regulate the use for vehicular traffic of that station.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman not think that would allow them to control?

Mr. BARKER. I think if under the word 'regulate' the railway company tried to act arbitrarily and refused to permit a man to drive his own carriage into the station grounds, the Railway Commission would soon remedy that. There can be no doubt of the importance of having good regulations, nor can there be doubt about the need of having fair regulations for all. For a railway owning cabs to prevent any other cabs entering a station would be an outrage and I doubt if any railway would attempt it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Board of Railway Commissioners would not allow it.

Mr. BARKER. The Board of Railway Commissioners have power to regulate the use of the station for that purpose. For that reason I do not see any objection to this particular Bill, although, say in Vancouver, many hundred miles away from the commission, other considerations might arise, but at their home in Ottawa they may well attend to such a matter as this.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems a rather weak argument to say that the principle is wrong, but the practice here is right, and is right because it is close to where the Board of Railway Commissioners live. If it is wrong at Vancouver, it must be wrong here, and of course the duty of the board is to go wherever they are needed and look into the situation. The hon. member said that it would be wrong for the railway company to admit only their own cabs to the station, but the contention set up in the committee was that in certain stations in the United States, if you take the cabs connected with the station, presumably owned by the railway company, you have to pay only 25 cents to be transferred to another station but if you take an outside cab you have to pay a great deal more, signifying, I presume, that the railway company have taken power to control all that traffic to the exclusion of outside cabmen. The railways are common carriers and every one has a right to access to their grounds and stations in order to use the railway trains as passengers or as shippers, and the Railway Act provides that there shall be no discriminating between customers. This Bill gives power to discriminate, and from what we can see at an ordinary country station we know that a railway official, if he has even a show of authority, will sometimes exercise it tyrannically against a person who does not know his rights. This Bill gives opportunity for discrimination and I do not think we should encourage that; it is our duty to see that all have equal rights before the law.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. It is absolutely necessary that there should be some control of vehicular traffic at the terminals, and that control, I think, should be vested in the city of Ottawa itself. There may be some objections to that. It may be possible that the railway companies would object that they should have some power in connection with it but the railway companies are very much interested in many ways and we know that when railway companies have powers they use them somewhat arbitrarily. The instance quoted by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) does not stand alone. We know of numbers of others of the same character. In addition to this danger of the railway companies not being exactly generous towards other carriers we notice here that they are especially empowered to become a cab driving company. They leave their character as a railway company and under this Act they become a cab company. Their interest lies very specially in shutting out others and it is very natural to suppose from all the past records of railway companies that they will use their powers to the utmost. Therefore, I think their should be some other regulation than that which the railway companies themselves may give. The regulations which they may put in force by by-law have to be approved of by the Railway Commission but this Railway Commission can only approve or disapprove; they cannot do anything of their own initiative. I would rather have it under civil control with by-laws passed by the city but subject to the approval of the commission.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I may say that this Bill was very fully discussed in the committee and it seems to me that the interests of all are very properly guarded here. The company may only, by the sanction and approval of the Governor in Council upon a report by the Railway Commissioners, make these by-laws. The Board of Railway Commissioners and the Governor in Council would certainly never sanction a by-law that would prohibit the public from driving into this station. There must be some regulation as to the mode of entering the station, where cabs shall stand, how they shall deliver their passengers and so on. A similar Bill was passed in reference to the Union Station in Toronto. It has worked well and there is no complaint at all. The fact that was stated by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) that the council of the city of Ottawa did not think it worth while to appear to oppose this provision is significant.

Mr. LANCASTER. The city of Ottawa might not suppose that we would pass such legislation and they might not consider it necessary to come and tell us that we had no authority to invade their municipal rights. The fact that they have not does not make me hesitate in endeavouring to see that they get their rights. The House of Commons is responsible for this legislation, the city council is in no sense responsible and they have a perfect right to blame us for not knowing what we are doing when we pass this legislation whether they did or did not draw our attention to it.

We are here for the purpose of seeing that the Bills we pass are properly drawn and that they do not interfere with the rights of the people in enacting them, and that is therefore the reason I say we ought to amend this Bill in some way. The statement of the chairman of the committee that because a similar clause was contained in a Bill relating to the city of Toronto we ought to pass this Bill, does not have any weight with me at all. No one knows better than the chairman of the Railway Committee that many sections of a Bill pass in that committee after a long contest over some other section while the members are still discussing the effect of the amendment to the section which was the subject of a pretty severe fight. Many times in the Railway Committee we pass sections of Bills which we would not pass if we thought over them a few minutes longer. That is perhaps one reason why we go into Committee of the Whole upon these Bills after the Railway Committee has passed them. We do so to correct any errors or omissions that have been made in the Railway Committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think the Railway Committee is the best committee of all.

Mr. LANCASTER. With all deference to the much respected chairman of the Railway Committee—I will say this for him that he does the work there as well as any other chairman in my experience ever did it, and he is not to blame for the way that committee does its work—I must say that after seven years experience in the Railway Committee it is altogether too large. If we had a Railway Committee of 25 or 30 members instead of 150, who attended no other committees of the House, who were charged with that responsibility by this House, who carefully considered the legislation submitted to them and who discussed the measures that they voted upon instead of having a stampede of members coming in and who, without having heard the Bill discussed at all, vote according to the way that some one else has voted without knowing what they are voting upon, as happens over and over again in that committee. There must be something in the statement of the hon. member that we should have more respect and veneration for the action of that committee. While I am saying that I want to point out that we are all in the same trouble in the Railway Committee. I am not excluding myself or the chairman or anybody else. We discuss these matters. Fifteen or twenty of us understand what is before the committee and when the yeas and nays are called members who have never heard the discussion come in and vote the matter down or vote it through without knowing actually what they are voting on. If we did wrongly in regard to the Toronto station two years ago, I am not going to admit that now, with our eyes open, we should repeat that wrong in regard to another city. I do not like to hear the argument put forward outside entirely of the merits that some other Bill may have passed because many clauses of a Bill pass after a strong and fierce contention in regard to other clauses without being any more than read by the chairman. This is not the first Bill of the kind. He is not there to invite opposition, he reads the clause and no objection being made it is declared carried after which the Bill comes down to the House, passes and becomes law. There is a wrong in what we are doing here in the sense that we are evading the spirit of the British North America Act. There are many things being done here in regard to railway charters that the British North America Act never contemplated a Dominion parliament would do. The framers of the British North America Act thought we would do our duty in regard to the matters we were legislating upon always having in view that we should not interfere with local or municipal rights. We are encroaching every day upon provincial rights and municipal rights and if so it is our own fault. We allow little things to be put in a Bill interfering with provincial and municipal rights. It is our fault, not the fault of the applicants for charters, and we are thereby encouraging them to go on and ask for more and more of that kind of thing every year.

Are we not to live and learn ? My hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) says it has worked well in the city of Toronto, but we have had no experience as to whether it works well there or not, because they have not yet built the Toronto station under that Bill. I do know that under the present arrangement, if I hire one kind of cab to go to the Toronto depot, I am obliged to leave that cab at a certain distance from the station while others are allowed to drive up to the door. In my own city of St. Catharines unless I hire the special cabmen that the station agent stands in with, I cannot get near the station grounds. That is all on account of a policy of usurpation on the part of railway corporations. In these small details they do more things they have no right to do than they do things they have a right to do ; but when they get treading on the rights of some wealthy body who is able to take them before the Railway Commission, then they come to time. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) had travelled more and had observed more than is to be seen in the city of Toronto, he would not ask us to pass such legislation as this. My hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Duncan Ross) is laughing, and I suppose he wants me to stop speaking, but even if a repetition of what I have said is going to prevent parliament from passing legislation that ought not to be foisted on the country, I can do my duty in that way as I can in any other.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I was just thinking that the hon. gentleman should have some pity on the 'Hansard' reporter.

Mr. LANCASTER. I don't know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross) is any more serious now than he usually is. I suppose he thinks that because this Bill will not be injurious to some city in his constituency in British Columbia that he has no business to interfere with it. He ought to be big enough to see that the city of Ottawa which he enjoys for five or six months in the year, has a right to be protected just as much as a British Columbia city. It is true that this is a private Bill which only provides for the building of a station in Ottawa, but it establishes a bad precedent and I protest against it. We ought to know enough in this House to confine ourselves to Federal questions and not to invade municipal and provincial rights.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have always held that we should have a member of the government present to direct us in this private legislation, so that we would know what the government policy is on the question, and I would therefore ask the acting Minister of Railways for some light.

Mr. FIELDING. I shall be most happy indeed if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) will give me the assurance that in his political action he will be always guided by my direction.

Mr. LANCASTER. This is a special case.

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) will not give me that assurance. It is always desirable that the minister who is a member of a committee should be present at its meetings, and I have endeavoured to discharge that duty, but the pace is rapid these days, and when this Bill was under consideration in the Railway Committee I thought it was my first duty to attend a meeting of the Committee on Banking and Commerce. On general principles, wherever a committee has discussed a matter thoroughly and reported to the House, I would like to adhere to the committee's decision. In this case it must be apparent that if there is any harm to be done, in the first place the railway company has to devise that harm ; in the second place the Board of Railway Commissioners has to agree to it and in the third place the Governor in Council has to confirm it. Some one of these bodies, probably it is the Governor in Council, may be bad, but it is not reasonable to suppose that the other two would be bad, and I think the public interest is protected when we have these three bodies, all of which have to be in co-operation to pass a by-law.

Mr. LANCASTER. If this is a matter for the municipal authorities why should any of these three bodies have anything to do with it ?

I do not doubt that the Governor in Council, if they dealt with this matter, would deal with it properly ; but outside of the fact that the law of the land gives the regulation of these matters to the municipal authorities, both the Governor in Council and the Railway Commissioners are too busy to deal with this class of matters. The Railway Commission would have to report upon it before the Governor in Council could deal with it ; and that commission has put a statement before this House this session, through the late Minister of Railways, to the effect that the reason why they had not time to attend to the important question of the reduction of passenger fares on railways was that they were overwhelmed with other work which they were appointed to attend to. Therefore I trust that between now and Monday—because I think we may take for granted that this Bill cannot pass to-night—the hon. leader of the House, who is also Minister of Finance and acting Minister of Railways, will have this section so drafted that, if I am going too far in my contention, it will not do harm in the other direction, which the hon. minister would not wish to have done any more than I ; for of all the cabinet members of the cabinet, I think he is the most sincere in trying to adhere to the policy of provincial rights, which used to be a plank in the platform of the Liberal party.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. I would ask the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) if he has drawn any distinction between in-coming passengers and out-going passengers? I think that the railways should have control of passengers coming in, but when they are going out, and they reach the end of its line, I do not think it should have any more control of them.

Mr. LANCASTER. It has control both ways.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Might I make this suggestion in regard to these questions of conflicting jurisdiction which are coming up more and more in connection with railway legislation ? That is, let this House hold any company that comes here for legislation strictly to what is within the jurisdiction of the Dominion ; and if they want anything in regard to municipal jurisdiction, let us say to them : That does not belong to us ; go to the provincial legislature and get what powers you want in another Bill there. I believe that is the solution of all these difficulties. Unless we do that, we shall soon have taken over all the powers of the provinces, and will be at war with the provinces in this matter.

Progress reported.

Mr. FIELDING.

PORT ARTHUR POWER AND DEVELOPMENT COMPANY.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the House to consent to the second reading of Bill (No. 167) so that it may be referred to the Private Bills Committee at an early date. The session is getting very late, and if we gave the Bill its second reading to-night, it could go before the committee on Monday or at its first meeting next week.

An Hon. MEMBER. Is it from the Senate ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, it is a Bill from the Senate.

Mr. FOSTER. We cannot consent to that.

Mr. LENNOX. I find that proper notice was not given as to the extension of power.

Motion allowed to stand.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES.

House resumed in committee on Bill (No. 139) to create a Department of Mines.

Mr. FIELDING. I think business will be facilitated by the committee rising, reporting progress and asking leave to sit again this day. My object is to bring down certain papers which will be of advantage to us in discussing the measure.

Mr. FOSTER. I would suggest seriously to the hon. minister to consider whether or not this is not a Bill which would be improved by allowing it to run over the summer. It is a pretty important Bill. Dr. Low is not present and the Bill makes a generic change. It provides for the turning over of one of our oldest historical departments under a new name, and there are many considerations which might induce the minister to allow the matter to remain over until we meet another year. That will only be a few months and better consideration can then be given the matter than at this very late hour in the session. I think the minister would do well to let this Bill stand over with that regarding Dominion lands.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not feel altogether inclined to accede to the request of my hon. friend. This Bill has been under consideration by the Geological Survey Department and by the officials connected with the mines branch for over a year, so that they are fully cognizant of its provisions. Mr. Low prepared and drafted a Bill, the component parts of which are the principal features of this Bill, so that he is fully cognizant with its provisions and it is not necessary that he should be here. My hon. friend has not advanced any good reasons for delay. It is not a Bill which requires a great deal of consideration. The departments of government which are being combined in this measure are in existence to-day, and we are simply creating a Department of Mines and giving the mining industry better status in the country than it has at present.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think we should discuss this matter now. When we get certain public documents early in the evening, we can resume discussion in the committee. I move that the committee report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Motion agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL—SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Mr. FIELDING presented a message from the Governor General,

Mr. SPEAKER read the message as follows:

GREY:

His Excellency the Governor General transmits to the House of Commons supplementary estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending 31st March, 1908, and in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, the Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House,
Ottawa, April 19, 1907.

Mr. FIELDING moved that His Excellency's message, together with the supplementary estimates, be referred to the Committee on Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this the final?

Mr. FIELDING. I am hopeful that it is, but there is always the open door.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 168) respecting the Erie and Ontario Power Company.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES.

House in committee on Bill (No. 139) to create a Department of Mines.—Mr. Templeman.

On section 1,

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. minister then does not take kindly to the suggestion to think this over during the holidays. I think he would be wiser and we would have a better Bill if he did. I want to ask a question with reference to the Department of Mines. It is understood, I believe, that Dr. Haanel is to become the director. Would the minister kindly inform the House how long has been the service of Dr. Haanel, what are his qualifications, where does he come from, and generally such information as the committee would like to have before the Bill has been gone on with?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. My hon. friend is not quite accurate in saying that I stated that Dr. Haanel would be the director of mines. I said he was the superintendent of mines, and I do not care at present to say whether he shall be director or not. It is a little premature to make such a statement. Dr. Haanel is now superintendent of mines in the Department of the Interior and has been in that office seven or eight years or probably more. I do not know where he comes from. He at one time was a professor in one of the colleges in Port Hope or Toronto. Subsequently he was a professor in the university in Syracuse, whence he was brought by the former Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) to take charge of the mines branch of that department. He is a man of very high qualifications and a professor of chemistry of eminence in certain scientific branches.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Could the hon. minister give some definite idea of what he has been doing besides publishing this report which I got from the library?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I have not had charge of the mines branch and further than knowing in a general way that he has been giving attention to experimentation in certain lines, I do not know particularly what he has been doing. I know that he had charge of a commission that proceeded to Europe to investigate the electrical smelting of iron. Also, he had charge of the experiments carried on at the Soo. He installed and supervised the assay office in Vancouver. He organized and superintended the investigation into the zinc ores of British Columbia. And he has done other work of that kind.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. We were talking about the results of this work and the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has said that we would expect the men in these departments to give us some definite results of their work, and the minister gave the House to understand that this report on electric smelting was a valuable one and had a lot of splendid information that would be of great value to the people. But I think if he will look over the report carefully he will find that in his closing remarks Dr. Haanel practically states that there is no reason to expect that any results in particular are likely to be obtained from any information he has given in the report. He says:

Yet, in spite of the great advantages which will certainly be derived from the introduction of electric processes in certain regions, such as certain parts of Chili, where the industrial conditions are favourable in every respect, and more especially as regards ore deposits and waterfalls, I feel it to be my duty to warn my colleagues, and investors in general, against sanguine expectations and exaggerations, which could not but have disastrous effects. So, that, before investing any capital in electro-metallurgical plants in remote regions it would be well to ascertain beyond doubt——

And he goes on to explain the things which need to be ascertained and which it is practically impossible for him to obtain in such districts as he has been operating in. When the hon. member for North Toronto asks that the men engaged in these operations should give us some definite knowledge as to the practical working and results of their operations from year to year, it seems to me it has been practically the opposite with reference to the work that Dr. Haanel has been carrying on. Will the minister be good enough to tell us if Dr. Haanel is preparing any further report of his work and what is the nature of it?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. As I have said, my knowledge of Dr. Haanel is somewhat limited. My recollection—I would not be sure—is that a preliminary report of the investigation and experiment was published and that a full and carefully illustrated special report will be published.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It has been published.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I was not aware of that. I was talking with Dr. Haanel two months ago and was told that the work was in the hands of the printer.

Mr. BOYCE. The report was published before the experiments were actually made, showing in general terms what the actual system was.

Mr. FOSTER. Showing what was done in Europe and what the commission proposed to do. That was a preliminary report to justify the vote of $15,000 for the experiments planned at Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There were two different investigations. One was the commission's investigation in Europe and the other was the experiment at the Soo. As to the experiment at the Soo, my recollection is that a preliminary report has been issued. I have not seen the fuller report of which my hon. friend speaks. These two investigations together with an investigation into the zinc ores of British Columbia constitute the chief work of Dr. Haanel as an official of the department. I do not know to what extent he has been carrying on his investigations beyond that.

Mr. BOYCE. How does it come that this Act is made to repeal the Geological Survey Act? There seems to be a difference of opinion with regard to the advisability of that course. The Geological Act, if left unrepealed, might be of great practical use as it has been in the past. The Geological Survey seems to have been a very efficiently managed institution and to have been of great practical use in making experiments and investigations and in instituting explorations in all parts of the country. I understand that the minister proposes to incorporate in this Act all that is contained in the Geological Survey Act and so create a merger. But I would suggest that better work could be accomplished by leaving the Geological Survey Act just where it is, and letting the Geological Survey work out the economical problems of our natural conditions in this country. I would not say that the time has not come when the geological areas under the government of Canada make it necessary, or at least expedient, to have a Department of Mines. That may be a debateable point, but I would not take the negative side. I would rather err in favour of expansion than in favour of contraction. But there is danger in the merger that is proposed. I would hesitate before obliterating the Geological Survey which has done so much good in the past and bringing it into a department for, as we know, these departments are managed—without disrespect to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Templeman) and his colleagues—partly with the view to political objects.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. How can that be done more than it is now?

Mr. BOYCE. It is well known that the Geological Survey to-day is practically free from political influence. But if merged in a department it would not be so free from political influence.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes.

Mr. BOYCE. If the Geological Survey were continued, it would be as it has always been. But this seems to be in the nature of a merger of the economic and practical department of the work. There is a great deal in the argument that it would be better to leave the Geological Survey with its present organization and make it subject to the Mines Department.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is what is being done.

Mr. BOYCE. My hon. friend obliterates the Geological Survey.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is all a question of name.

Mr. BOYCE. No, there is more than the name.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I propose restoring the name Geological Survey in an amendment. This Bill, except for the first two or three clauses, is practically the Geological Survey Bill and the geological branch of the Mines Department as here set forth are practically copied from the Geological Survey Bill of to-day.

Mr. BOYCE. That is the geological branch?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes.

On section 3—constitution of department.

Mr. LENNOX. There is probably a decided difference in the wording and the intention between this section and the Geological Survey Bill. With the Geological Survey Bill the intention was to put the department under the jurisdiction of some existing minister of the Crown, but with the use of the vague form of expression 'a member of the King's Privy Council for Canada,' we will probably find before long that we have another minister of the Crown.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am quite willing to adopt any wording that will carry out my hon. friend's idea to guard against the possibility of the creation of another minister and would suggest that we allow this section to stand.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister knows that all members of the Privy Council are not ministers of the Crown; for instance, the late Speaker (Mr. Belcourt) is a member of the Privy Council and under this he could be made Minister of Mines.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 4—transferring work to jurisdiction of department.

Mr. BARKER. Is it intended that upon the passing of this Act the member of the Privy Council in charge of the Department of Mines shall alone administer the law relating to mines and mining?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. As far as the department administers the law.

Mr. BARKER. Will cases now under the consideration of the Department of the Interior be transferred at once to the new department, on the passing of this Bill, or are only such of them as the Governor in Council orders to be transferred and the others remain in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think that is quite clear, the fourth clause says:

> The department shall administer all laws enacted by the parliament of Canada relating to mines and mining, and shall also have the management and direction of all subjects assigned to it by the Governor in Council.

It follows that all questions affecting mines and the mining branch of the Interior Department of which Dr. Haanel is superintendent will, with the sanction of the Governor in Council, be transferred to the Department of Mines.

Mr. BARKER. Is that clear in this Bill?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think so.

Mr. BARKER. Look at subsection 2 of section 4:

> Whenever, under the provisions of this section, the management and direction of any subject is transferred from any other department to the Department of Mines——

This seems to apply that something relating to mines and mining is going to be transferred to the new department and that something will remain where it now is.

Mr. FIELDING. Does it not rather mean that all mining matters will be transferred to the new department but that other matters may also be assigned by the Governor in Council?

Mr. BARKER. I think it would be well to provide distinctly that every matter relating to mines and mining shall, by virtue of this Act, be at once transferred to the new department.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Does not this clause do that?

Mr. SPROULE. Does the government contemplate doing away with any department now existing?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Then if you create a new one there must be an extra one.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We are creating a Department of Mines.

Mr. SPROULE. You create it and provide a minister for it and yet the minister says that you are not going to increase the number of departments.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No, I said we were not going to increase the number of ministers.

Mr. SPROULE. Then you have no provision for amalgamating it with any other department?

Mr. CONMEE. Amalgamate another department with it.

Mr. SPROULE. But you are not closing up another department.

Mr. FIELDING. It is transferring a branch of the Interior Department to the minister to whom may be assigned the new Department of Mines. It is not the creation of a new minister but the transfer of a branch which is now attached to the Department of the Interior to the Minister of Inland Revenue, or whoever may be assigned to the Department of Mines.

Mr. SPROULE. How many departments have you already?

Mr. FIELDING. There are fourteen ministers but several of these have more than one branch under their charge.

Mr. SPROULE. Will not there be one more department after this Bill passes?

Mr. FIELDING. One more department but not one more minister.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not provided that the Minister of Mines shall be the minister of any thing else. You may take something from the department you may constitute a new department and if so there must be an extra department. The whole of the provisions of the Bill seem to indicate that.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is quite clear that there will be a department created out of the Geological Branch and out of certain branches now in the Department of the Interior, but that there is not a new minister. We are trying to frame a clause to guard against the point my hon. friend is trying to make that there will be an additional minister. This department will be, by order in council, assigned to a minister of the Crown and any wording that will prevent the possibility of an increase in the number of ministers for the purpose of administering this department I am quite willing to accept as an amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. There is no limit to the number of ministers of the Crown you may have.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It will be a minister administering another department at the present time.

Mr. SPROULE. If you proposed that it should be attached to some other department and if you like to change the name of the other department to the Department of Mines it might be all right but you do not do that. You leave all the other departments still in existence each one with a minister at its head and then you create a new one and you say that there is not one more.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is a new department but there is not another minister.

Mr. SPROULE. If there is a new department there must be a minister at the head of it.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is a Department of Labour and it is under the administration of the Postmaster General.

Mr. SPROULE. But it was provided that that should be attached to the Post Office Department and under the charge of the Postmaster General.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, they distinctly did that.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No, it might be assigned to any other minister.

Mr. SPROULE. Certainly, had they provided so, but it was provided that it should go under the Post Office Department.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not think so.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will there be any extra expense connected with the operation of this department?

Mr. CONMEE. Why would there not be additional expense?

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There may be no additional expense for some time. There are no additional officers required. There will be a reorganization and probably a change in some of the officers in the new department but they will all assume in the new department practically the same positions that they now occupy and their salaries will remain the same. For some time as far as I can see there will be no additional expense in carrying on the department; at all events it will be very slight. I suggested that there should be an item put in the estimates to carry on some further experimentation and investigation in the Mines branch. For instance, a year or more ago we had a requisition from the people of Ontario to make an investigation into the peat deposits of that province with the view to their utilization, and it is proposed to carry on an investigation along that line and probably there will have to be some investigation made in Europe as to how the peat in those countries is utilized for fuel. It would be an excellent thing if we could economically use our peat deposits in Ontario where we have no coal. That is a sample of the work of the Mines branch and it is proposed to carry on work of that kind during the coming season. Possibly for work of that kind we may require a somewhat larger vote.

Mr. LEMIEUX. In answer to the hon. member for East Grey as to how the Department of Labour is assigned I would refer him to section 2, chapter 24, 63-64 Victoria creating the Department of Labour:

> In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the expression 'minister' means the member of Her Majesty's Privy Council for Canada, to whom, for the time being, the Governor in Council may assign the carrying out of the provisions in this Act.

The Postmaster General was not specially mentioned as being the minister to take charge of that department.

Mr. SPROULE. But that is entirely different from this.

Mr. LEMIEUX. But my hon. friend was saying that the Department of Labour was especially assigned to the Postmaster General by statute.

Mr. SPROULE. We got the impression from the explanation which was made in the House that it was intended to be assigned to the Postmaster General, and I understood it was so assigned by the provision of the Act. From the explanation which was given we understood it was to be under the Postmaster General. You provide distinctly for a new minister and a new department, and you do not provide it should be attached to any other department.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Department of Labour was created by the Act providing for the prevention and settlement of trade disputes and the publication of statistical and industrial information, and the minister was to be appointed by order in council. The department was organized by section 10. The department was assigned to a minister who was to be selected from the others and appointed by order in council, but there was no special provision to appoint the Postmaster General.

Mr. SPROULE. Let me call attention to the wording of this section.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We have allowed section 3 to stand, and I am quite willing to accept any wording that will carry out the idea of my hon. friend.

Mr. BARKER. With regard to matters relating to mines and mining now in the hands of the Department of the Interior and not disposed of, will they, by virtue of this Act, be immediately transferred to the Department of Mines ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I would assume so.

Mr. BARKER. There is no express provision to that effect.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Clause 4 says the department shall administer all laws enacted by the parliament of Canada relating to mines and mining, and shall have the management and direction of all subjects assigned to it by the Governor in Council. Is not that comprehensive enough ?

Mr. BARKER. The last two lines create the difficulty. Under that provision the Governor in Council might transfer to the Department of Mines certain matters from the Department of the Interior, but it may not transfer all.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. It transfers all matters relating to mines and mining.

Mr. BARKER. The last part of the clause says that the Department of Mines shall have the management and direction of all subjects assigned to it by the Governor in Council ; why not say, all subjects relating to mines and mining.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. All other subjects.

Mr. BARKER. If that is so, then it is not what the minister says.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I say that the first part of the clause transfers to the Department of Mines, all laws enacted by the parliament of Canada relating to mines and mining.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Let me put a concrete question : Will the minister in charge of the Department of Mines adjudicate upon applications for coal mining leases, placer mining leases, and all matters of that kind that are now in the Department of the Interior, and which are unsettled ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I assume so.

Mr. BARKER. The clause draws a clear distinction between the administration of the mining laws and the management and direction of all subjects transferred to the department by order in council. The hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Ross) says that the latter part of the section refers to something else than mining which may be assigned to the department.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Irrigation for example.

Mr. BARKER. Irrigation, or anything else. I say the administration of the laws does not necessarily mean the management of the whole mining business.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. What I said was that the first part of the clause is quite distinct that all matters affecting mining will be administered by this department, and that in the second place it will have the management and direction of all subjects assigned to it by the Governor in Council irrespective of what these subjects may be.

Mr. BARKER. I can see that a great deal of difficulty may arise under the wording of this clause.

Mr. BOYCE. Would the question of minerals on Indian lands be under the Department of Mines ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Certainly. It is subject now to the Department of the Interior.

Mr. BOYCE. If an application should be made for a license to mine on Indian lands, would you have to apply to the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs and also to the Department of Mines ? The Department of Mines has nothing to do with Indian lands.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The Department of Mines would have to do with the mining rights, but necessarily there would have to be communication between the two departments if it is an Indian reserve. The land would probably have to be secured from the Indian Department, but the mining laws and regulations would be administered by this department on an Indian reserve or anywhere else.

Mr. BOYCE. At present everything that relates to Indian lands is relegated to the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, and unless there is some express provision in this Act, which I do not see, he would have control of the mines on Indian lands. There is nothing to separate that part of his duties which relates to mining on Indian lands from the Department of the Interior.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The Superintendent General of Indian Affairs has nothing to do with mining, but he has to do with the leasing of Indian reserves for mining purposes. The Mines Branch of the Interior Department administers the mining law. In that respect it makes no difference whether the Mines Branch of the Interior Department or the Department of Mines administers it.

Mr. BOYCE. Except that a great deal of confusion can be wrought by interference.

Mr. CONMEE. The Superintendent General of Indian Affairs is subject to the minister.

Mr. BOYCE. He is by statute subject to the Minister of the Interior. Are you going to make him as to minerals subject to the Minister of Mines and as to wood subject to the Minister of the Interior?

Mr. FOSTER. You enact that the department shall administer all laws relating to mines and mining. A new minister comes in and finds a vast mass of business, some of which is concluded and some of which is under way. Under this enactment it does seem to be that there is something to preclude the Minister of the Interior from attending to all this business. If you inserted after the word 'mining' the words 'and have control and management of all business in connection therewith' you would immediately, without an order in council, put into the hands of the new administrator the whole matter of mines and mining. The whole of the business would then go where it ought to go. When you come to the second part of the provision that 'he shall also have the management and direction of all subjects,' I contend that does not apply to mining at all. Suppose the Governor in Council should assign to the Minister of Mines the question of irrigation?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Whether that is in this Act or not, could not an order in council transfer anything to the Department of Mines as well as to any other department?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but what we want when we are enacting a law is to make the clause inclusive. What is the use of leaving a part of the business to an order in council and enacting by statute another part?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think the clause is clear and distinct as it is. It has been very carefully considered and it has been drafted by the law clerk.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course we have to give due consideration to the drafting of the law clerk, but that is not final.

On section 5—Mines and Geological branches,

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) suggested that the word 'branch' be dropped. I move that the two branches be called respectively the Mines Branch and the Geological Survey.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 6—functions of Mines branch.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN.

Mr. FOSTER. In regard to subsection (b), 'to make detailed investigations of mining camps and areas containing economic minerals' in the province of Ontario or the province of British Columbia a company is working a certain area of ground, and it has all the rights in connection with that ground, what business have you to go into that mine or to go upon that ground and set your men at work making investigations, looking into the veins and finding out how rich they are? What are you going to do with that information? It is no good if you keep it pigeon-holed. But there is a possibility that that information may leak out. I do not see how you are going to go on anybody's mine and make investigations of that kind. You could do that on your own Crown lands, but you have no right to go on my land.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This does not give us that right.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN How can you make the best use of your Geological Survey, if your men are not allowed to visit all mineral properties and make actual investigation? We have in Ontario silver mines, there may be such mines in British Columbia, certainly there are gold mines in the different provinces. There ought to be a central bureau which would collate all the information with regard to each and possibly develop some general principle that might be of the utmost value and result in a change of process and a great saving from an economic point of view. The real strength of our Dominion Mines branch would be that while the provinces are working out each in its own way a mining policy, this branch would collate all that information. One of the most valuable reports issued to-day is that report annually issued now—but which has hitherto been very late and incomplete—giving the total products of the different minerals in this country. I hope that this department will be improved and come in closer touch with the productions of the mines in the different provinces and be able to give statistics in that connection in its published returns. Canada has more prospective wealth in mines and mining than in almost any other of her great resources. If this department is created, will it be energetically administered and all this information brought out? If that is done from a Dominion point of view, it will afford the greatest encouragement to the investment of outside capital.

Mr. FOSTER. I still cannot help but think that the collection of statistics is provided for in subsection (a). The department ought to have the right to get statistics and publish them and that is provided in subsection (a). But in subsection (b) you have various powers given, and one is to make a full investigation of mining camps and areas containing economic minerals.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The difficulty the hon. gentleman has in view would be obviated by dropping the word 'camps.' A mining camp is a place where you have a settlement of men operating a mine owned by private individuals. If you would drop out the word 'camps' and say simply mining areas, that would meet the objection.

Mr. FIELDING. Is not the word 'camp' broader than the individual mine ?

Mr. D. ROSS. A mining area is an undeveloped area where there is no private ownership.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I object to the department being limited, if we want a high class Geological Survey.

Mr. D. ROSS. This does not give you the right to go into individual property.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. It ought to. What are our geologists trying to find out ? They are trying to find out what is the underlying principle of the deposits of certain of these precious metals. For instance, one man here made a great study to find out the secret of the deposits of the Yukon country. If he could get the secret of gold deposits. he would know where to look for gold. He had his theory, but it did not quite work out, but it was because he was in a position to go into the different mines which were being worked and investigated them, that he reached his conclusion. His conclusion was not a success, but it is only by such investigation that a successful conclusion can be reached. The geologist wants all the information he can get with regard to the actual working of the mines. Take the Cobalt country to-day. There are two formations there. The richest silver is in what is called the diabase. They say that the diabase contains silver and that as it goes down it holds its value, and that the contrary is true of the Keewatin formation that the values do not continue so pronouncedly. That is the geological theory but it is not worth anything unless fortified by the investigation of practical mining men. The future largely of the Cobalt camp depends upon the demonstration of the correctness or falsity of this theory arrived at by the geologists. Therefore I would like to see this department have the power to make such investigations, and we should give it that power if it has not got it now. It is not fair to invade private rights and give secrets away, but I should like to see the department have the right to go into all these mines. After all they were got from the country, and the only way by which you can judge the theories of the geologists is by giving them every opportunity to investigate.

Mr. FOSTER. This has reference to the Mines branch. The Geological branch comes afterwards and get its powers. There is a great difference between the geological survey work and that of the mining branch, and this is laying down powers for the mining branch.

Mr W. F. MACLEAN. I would like to see them get that power.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think they should have the right to go on private property without consent. That would be summarily objected to.

Mr. CONMEE. The term 'mining camps' is too limited. 'Mining areas' would have a much wider acceptation. A mining camp would mean a colony of miners which would cover a very small area. A mining territory would mean any territory within the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I think that the term 'mining camp' means mines actually operated, and the use of that term would give the Mines branch the authority to go into operating mines in contradistinction to going into areas that may be owned but not operated.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Does this give you the right to go into private property?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I contend that it does.

Mr. CONMEE. We have already passed legislation dealing with the rights of mine owners. We did that just a year ago, regarding the hours of labour and the means to be taken for the protection of life and health. Why should not statistics necessary for the information of the country and the benefit and advancement of the mines be also obtained ?

Mr. FOSTER. It is all provided for in subsection (a).

Mr. CONMEE. I think the section is not too wide on that point.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. The hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) is quite right about the necessity of investigating in operated mines. We have provided for that in coal mining operations. Mining inspectors can go into coal mines and determine the chemical property of the mines, the quality and extent of the coal, and I do not see why there should not be a like provision in this Bill.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. In my opinion this only describes what the functions of the Mines branch are to be. As a matter of fact, there are very few mine owners who do not wish to see the geologists of this department investigate their camps.

Mr. FOSTER. These are not the geologists.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Or the mining experts. They are all very anxious to have them. Every mine owner in Rossland welcomed Professor Brock, when he was making a structural survey showing the geology and structure of the entire camp, and gave him every facility to go down the shafts and tunnels and make drawings and maps so that he could illustrate the formation of that camp.

On section 7—functions of Geological branch. Subsection (b.)

To study and report upon the facts relating to water supply for irrigation and for domestic purposes, and to collect and preserve all available records of artesian or other wells.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. There is one point I would suggest with regard to this subsection. This provides 'to collect and preserve all available records of Artesian and other wells.' The minister is aware that there are a large number of gas wells and oil wells being drilled in various parts of the country, and the logs of these are most necessary and valuable—I should think among the most valuable records that could be collected by the Geological Survey. I must say that I am enthusiastically in favour of pushing the Mining Branch and Geological Department. I have advocated within the past few years the expenditure of a larger sum of money to make investigations than has been spent for that purpose, for I believe we have oil and gas regions that should be more thoroughly developed than they are, and that the government should take an interest in them. I would like to have 'gas and oil wells' included there.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. These would be covered by the expression 'artesian and other wells.'

Mr. ARMSTRONG. But as our gas and oil fields are so important, would it not be better to name these specially ? In our district, for instance, we have a hundred drilling rigs going all the time. In the Gaspé peninsula, in New Brunswick and in the Northwest, work of the same kind is going on. But the logs of these wells are not being gathered, as they ought to be. It is the opinion of many that if we had the most important of these given every year in the report, it would be a good thing for the country.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It seems to me that the clause as printed covers what my hon. friend wants. There would be no need to say 'gas and petroleum wells.'

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am really very anxious about this. Would petroleum come under the geological branch or under the head of minerals ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Minerals, of course.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then, that would justify the amendment. Because under the Mines branch you have no reference to the logs of the wells.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Both branches belong to one department.

On section 11—employment of special officers.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a pretty dangerous clause.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is from the Geological Survey. All the officers are technical officers with high qualifications, but when the deputy minister reports that assistance of a technical and special character is required, this section applies. As a matter of fact the Geological Survey frequently employs geologists connected with the universities to go out in summer. Professor Brock, who is now permanently with us, was for many years a teacher at Queen's University, but he went out on survey in summer. It was very convenient to get these men in that way as temporary employees.

Mr. FOSTER. The word 'special' gives you wide powers. 'Technical or professional' would cover the case.

Mr. D. ROSS. Take the case of the zinc commission which investigated the zinc resources of the Slocan, we had to employ Professor Ingalls, one of the best authorities on zinc.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be of a professional character.

Mr. D. ROSS. It was special work too.

Mr. BOYCE. The section in the Geological Survey Act is quite different, and ends by saying that the minister may upon the recommendation of the director, employ such number of temporary assistants as are necessary, having qualifications necessary for appointment as technical officers of the department under the last preceding section. The section really confines it as the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) suggests.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the minister had better leave out the word 'special'. This refers not to the Geological Survey alone but to the mines as well.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 12—probation of officials.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think this section and all the rest of the Bill is from the Geological Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a great change. As this is worded, 'if he is not rejected the deputy minister shall signify,' there is no option at all while under the wording of the Geological Survey Bill it is put quite differently. I think the 'may' and the 'shall' should be transposed.

Mr. BOYCE. Why not make it 'may' in both places?

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 14,—present officers of the Geological Survey.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This is necessary because in the reorganization there are in the Geological Survey chemists, assayers, &c., who really come more directly under the Mines branch, the economic side of the work.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you call them officers?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. They are officials.

Mr. FOSTER. It should be 'employees' or 'officials,' not 'officers.' They cannot all be officers, 'employees' is the proper term.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. 'Officials.'

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 15—present assistant directors.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the minister stated it was not proposed to add to the expense.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think so, yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I find that in the supplementary estimates the good work is begun by an item of $15,000 for salaries.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is for the investigations I spoke of.

Mr. FOSTER. 'Salaries and expenses of the Mines branch'?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. My hon. friend will understand that we intend carrying on experiments on several lines, one being an investigation into the peat resources of the country. I think there is a special vote somewhere for peat investigations. Then in this reorganization we may have unforeseen expenses, and while we have not been able to estimate the amount exactly that will be required, we calculated that $15,000 would be ample. I said we did not intend to increase the number of officials and I certainly meant what I said; we have no present intention of increasing the number in the department. It will take us some months I am quite sure to get properly organized.

Mr. CONMEE. I would like very much to see a larger sum for the services of this department. The Geological Department has been handicapped in the past for the want of proper facilities and means to carry on the work. This is a work of first importance to this country. If we are to have a Department of Mines I hope to see it an active department of the government because it will be dealing with the very greatest natural resource which Canada possesses to-day, although I am not going to discuss it now, as it will take some time to get it organized, if it is a live department, if it is going to be equal to the work before it it must be properly equipped. If it were not I would not have the hope I do possess in seeing this step taken. I think it is a step in the right direction, I expect to see it go ahead and I expect to see lots of money voted for it—no waste—but sufficient to accomplish the work of such a department.

Mr. FOSTER. After this confession of faith I suppose we can go on.

On section 16—restrictions upon employees.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This is an exact copy of section 14 of the Geological Survey Act.

Mr. BOYCE. Would the minister insert after the word 'shall' the words 'directly or indirectly.' This is covered by paragraph (d) but it is not included in paragraphs (a), (b) or (c). This will prevent the holding of lands in the name of an agent or a partnership.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is the meaning.

Mr. BOYCE. Put it in the original enactment.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Carried.

Progress reported.

QUEBEC BRIDGE.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution—Mr. Fielding.

On section 1,

1. The Governor in Council may, from time to time, advance by way of loan to the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company, hereinafter called 'the company,' a sum not exceeding six million six hundred and seventy-eight thousand two hundred dollars, for the purposes of the undertaking of the company as set forth in chapter 54 of the statutes of 1903, and the agreement, a copy of which forms the schedule thereto, which loan shall bear interest at the rate of three per centum per annum, payable half-yearly on the first day of April and the first day of October in each year.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister (Mr. Fielding) had better give an explanation.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The importance of the Quebec bridge, that is to say of a new bridge to be constructed across the St. Lawrence river at or near Quebec, has been long recognized by the government and by parliament.

It has been regarded, and very properly so, as a work of a national character. At the first stage of dealing with this enterprise it was proposed to grant aid in the way of subsidies, a direct grant of money as in the case of railways. The city of Quebec gave $300,000 ; the Quebec government, by instalments, $250,000 ; and the government of the Dominion granted by legislation a subsidy of $1,000,000. After further consideration, and having regard to the magnitude of the enterprise (for the bridge is to be one of the great bridges of the world) it was thought that the scheme could not be financed on these lines. In the session of 1903, after very full consideration, the government brought forward a measure for guaranteeing the sum which was deemed necessary to complete the enterprise. The guarantee was for the sum which is now mentioned in these resolutions, viz : $6,678,200 of guaranteed bonds. The bonds were duly guaranteed by the government and delivered to the Royal Trust Company, subject to the conditions of the Act, which were, that the proceeds of the bonds from time to time were to be applied to the construction of the bridge, upon the certificates of the government engineers. A difficulty has arisen however owing to the condition of the money market. In ordinary business transactions two names on a note are better than one, but strange to say that does not apply in the case of a government guarantee. The obligation of the railway company endorsed by the government is really not worth so much money as the direct obligation of the government itself. In other words, the government guaranteed bonds will sell for a little less than the straight government bonds. There is a difference in the classification, the one is a government bond and the other is classified as a railway security. That is true of the money market in London and elsewhere. It is an objection that sometimes may be reasonably offered to the system of the government guarantees, but nevertheless there are compensating advantages. In this case the situation was rendered more difficult by the severe monetary conditions which have prevailed. The guarantee bears interest at three per cent, and at the time the guarantee was authorized in 1903 it was presumed that the bonds would be worth somewhere about par.

Mr. FOSTER. Do the bonds carry three per cent ?

Mr. FIELDING. Three per cent interest. As hon. gentlemen are aware, the money conditions for several years past have been exceedingly severe and the consequence is that these guaranteed bonds could not have been converted at anything approaching par. If they were sold at a sacrifice, not only would the interest of the bridge enterprise suffer, but the credit of the Dominion to some extent would be prejudiced by the sale at a low price of what from one point of view is held to be a government security. For these reasons we advised the bridge company not to sell the bonds, but to arrange to raise money temporarily upon them by the best arrangements they could make at the banks. That policy was adopted and the Bank of Montreal agreed to advance from time to time, up to certain limits, the money necessary to carry on the enterprise.

Mr. FOSTER. At what rate of interest ?

Mr. FIELDING. The advance was made, I understand, at the rate of five per cent. But the banks would only advance to a limited extent. One portion of the bonds was pledged to the Bank of Montreal on a basis of eighty-five per cent. I do not mean they were sold at eighty-five per cent, but they were placed as collaterals at eighty-five per cent. A further sum was placed on the basis of only eighty per cent, so that the bridge company is not in a position to realize to the full extent the moneys which parliament contemplated should be realized at the time the guarantee was given. It becomes necessary, therefore, that the company shall receive some assistance in one form or another to enable them to carry on the work to completion. The contemplation was that the bridge would be finished in December, 1906. That has not been accomplished but the work is very well advanced, and at a reasonably early date—although works of such magnitude are necessarily slow—we may expect the bridge to be completed. It will require a considerable sum of money to enable them to do so.

Mr. FOSTER. Who forms the company ?

Mr. FIELDING. The company as originally chartered had a small amount of capital invested. I cannot give at the moment the list of shareholders, but I am not aware that there has been any change in the personnel of the company since the Act of 1903 was passed.

Mr. FOSTER. How much money have they put into the concern ?

Mr. FIELDING. They have paid up all the capital required of them, but I do not remember at the moment.

Mr. PERLEY. It was $265,000.

Mr. FIELDING. The investment of the company has not been large ; that is quite understood from the beginning. Under the original subsidy scheme, I think $374,000 was contributed by the Dominion out of its grant of $1,000,000, but when we adopted the policy of aiding them by way of guarantee, we cancelled the balance of the Dominion grant which was about $625,000, and that is no longer an obligation on the country.

We have thought it desirable that the enterprise should come into the hands of a terminal company composed of the various railway companies, and negotiations have been had between the representatives of the government and the representatives of a number of the railway companies with a view to the establishing of a strong terminal company. However, these negotiations have not advanced——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. They would control the bridge ?

Mr. FIELDING. The idea was they would take over the bridge, under possibly the present charter, and if not they would get a new charter.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There are also lines into the city of Quebec.

Mr. FIELDING. And incidental thereto, whatever terminals experience might show to be necessary. We have not under the arrangement hitherto, provided any considerable sum of money for terminals, and it may be further sums will be required for that purpose.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I understood that the bridge company had the right to run lines a certain distance out ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes ; but provision was made for approaches and for connection with other lines. We have thought it very desirable that the railway companies, who have knowledge and experience of these matters, should take hold of the enterprise in some way. Whether that should be done by purchasing the bridge outright and taking the place of the present company, or whether the government should exercise its right of taking over the bridge and then lease it to the terminal company, these are questions of detail as to which we have not been able to reach a conclusion. But, either as owners or lessees, we have thought it would be well that the enterprise should come under the direction of a strong terminal company composed of the various railway interests, and of course the railway managers with their large knowledge and experience controlling the whole concern. However, we have not been able, to bring that about, and as we have not been able to work out such a scheme to a conclusion, the question came : How could we best aid this company temporarily until we are able to work out a terminal scheme and have something more definite to present to parliament. We thought the best way to deal with the matter without increasing the obligation of the Dominion, is, that we should agree to become the company's banker ; that whereas the banks were only allowing them on these debentures eighty per cent for some portion and eighty-five for the remainder, we have thought we had better stand in the position of the banks and say : We will loan them the money just as we lent it to the Montreal Harbour Board, and loan it up to the face value of the bonds. Of course, at present money is worth more than three per cent, but in dealing with Montreal harbour we placed three per cent as the rate of interest and we do the same thing in this case.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the government any supervision or audit over the moneys which it has already advanced to the bridge company ?

Mr. FIELDING. In the first place. all the plans and everything of the kind have to be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council at the first stage. Then, every item of the accounts rendered has to pass under the supervision of the chief engineer of the Department of Railways before any of the proceeds of these bonds are paid.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has the government any officer on the ground to inspect the building of the bridge?

Mr. FIELDING. The government have no permanent officer, but they send an officer from time to time as may be deemed necessary. A large part of the outlay is for the construction of the superstructure, the steel work of which is being built by the Phœnix Bridge Company, of Phœnixville, Pa., and the government have an officer at the works of the company keeping a check on what is done there. So that at every stage reasonable guards and checks are imposed as a temporary expedient until we are able to work out a terminal company, or until, failing that, we determine to take over the bridge, as the Act contemplates and as, indeed, was talked of when the guarantee was given. But in the meantime we have thought it wise to help the company tide over their financial difficulty by advancing the money dollar for dollar, whereas the banks will advance them only 80 or 85 per cent. Under this arrangement we do not add to the obligations of the government; we become lenders instead of guarantors, the amount being the same. No doubt ultimately the amount required for the building of the bridge will have to be somewhat increased. The contract that was made for the steel superstructure was made on the basis of the price from time to time of the steel used. Hon. gentlemen are well aware that during the last three or four years there has been a considerable advance in the price of material of that character, and consequently the original estimate will be exceeded. The substructure proved to be more expensive than was contemplated, and we will have to make provision for something more in the aggregate cost of the undertaking.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What will be the ultimate cost of the bridge ?

Mr. FIELDING. At the time the guarantee was given the estimate of its cost was about $7.500,000. The probability is, however, that owing to the increased cost of materials, the deeper sinking of the piers and the greater strength of the material put into what is called the suspended span, it will cost about $8,000,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the depth of the deepest pier below the water line and what is the height above the same?

Mr. FIELDING. The lowest member of the superstructure is 150 feet above high water and the depth of the piers is about 90 feet. It is one of the most remarkable bridge structures in the world.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I asked the question because I was thinking of Prince Edward Island?

Mr. MORIN. How soon does the minister think the bridge will be completed?

Mr. FIELDING. I can tell the hon. gentleman about the condition in which the work now stands. The substructure is composed of two main piers which carry the great cantilevers. There are what are called two anchor arm piers and the abutments. These constitute the substructure, and all these are done. As regards the superstructure, the greater part of the work is done, but there remains the suspended span and one cantilever arm. These are pretty well manufactured and the material is either on the ground on the shore of the St. Lawrence or on land at Phœnixville, which has been leased by the government of Canada in order that we may have control of the material on which advances are made. But we certainly cannot count on the completion of the bridge in less than two years, or it may be a little longer.

Mr. PERLEY. I am sure that we all hope that the Quebec bridge will be a great success. We know that it is one of the great bridges of the world, and I do not intend to criticise the enterprise this evening. But what the minister has told us has shown us that the method adopted by the government in dealing with this bridge has been a very unwise one. I know personally several of the directors of the company, and they are a very fine lot of men; I have nothing to say against them in any way. But if you refer to the statute, chapter 54 of 1903, under which this guarantee of $6,678,200 worth of bonds was given by the government, you will find that it provides that stock shall be paid up to the extent of $200,000 before this guarantee should be given. As a matter of fact, the amount of stock paid up in August, 1905, was $265,585.70. That amount of stock is practically of no value whatever in an enterprise of that size. It does not help the security given by the bonds in any shape or form, and it seems to me a very extraordinary thing that the government should back for such an immense sum of money a company which has such a small capital. Further than that, the subsidies which have already been given amount to $915,170. To whom do these belong?

Mr. FIELDING. They went into the enterprise.

Mr. PERLEY. If this company were selling out would the shareholders be entitled to get that in addition to the capital they have put in?

Mr. FIELDING. No, I think my hon. friend will find that the agreement provides for that. If we want to buy out the property, we do not pay for the subsidies.

Mr. PERLEY. I am glad to hear the minister say that they propose to make an arrangement for a strong company to take over the undertaking, because I think the present arrangement a poor one and the Government will have to pay the interest on the money borrowed from the Bank of Montreal at 5 per cent. If the company had a large capital, the government might give them a reasonable subsidy for the building of the bridge, but where the government is providing all the money it should certainly own the bridge or build it themselves. I am glad to hear that they propose to hand it over to a strong company composed of the various railways. For a moment I wish to call the attention of the government to the different treatment which has been meted out in the case of a bridge across the Fraser river near New Westminster in the province of British Columbia. This bridge of course is not nearly as large an undertaking as the Quebec bridge, but it is a large undertaking, costing over $1,000,000, and to a certain extent it is like the Quebec bridge, because it was too large a project for private capital, and is practically part of a Transcontinental Railway system. It is used for railway and passenger traffic, but it puts British Columbia in close connection with the Great Northern and other railways. For the purpose of explaining this matter I would like to read a portion of a letter which I have received from British Columbia :

> This bridge was built by the provincial government at a cost of over $1,100,000, and as it costs for maintenance and interest about $55,000 per annum, they have to charge tolls on vehicles and passengers. Had they received the subsidy of $300,000, they could have made this part of the traffic free. As to the bridge, what there is to be said about it may be stated in very brief compass. The work, of course, was not naturally a matter for the province to assume. Private promoters had been endeavouring for nearly twenty years to finance the proposition with the aid of a most generous subsidy guaranteed by Act of the provincial legislature, and this subsidy was yet available when the Dunsmuir government unexpectedly took the matter up, on the principle that since the governments were to be called upon for so large a proportion of the cost of the work, it would be better for the public to assume the entire responsibility and own the bridge. Up to that time there had been no reason to doubt that the federal government would grant the usual subsidy. While the bridge was under construction, the matter was taken up at Ottawa by one of the most persistent of the promoters referred to above. Working with Mr. Morrison, the then member of parliament for this district, they secured the promise of a federal subsidy conditional on the bridge being turned over to a private company. This subsidy has been stated unofficially at $300,000. It has been the belief here that if the federal government gave a grant to the bridge, it would be conditional on its being made free to vehicular and passenger traffic; and voicing this sentiment, the board of trade sent a petition to Ottawa a few months ago.

It seems to me that the government ought to treat the province of British Columbia very liberally in a matter of this kind. We all know the nature of the country there. It is composed of many valleys, widely separated by very high mountains, and as a consequence the expenditure to which the province is put for roads and bridges is very much heavier than that of any of the other provinces for the same purpose. I notice in the statement submitted by British Columbia at the provincial conference last fall, the following comparison :

	British Columbia.	Ontario.
Provincial expenditure for roads per head per year for five years..	$2 91	$0 06 3-10
Municipal expenditure for roads per head for 1901..	1 58	1 63
Total..	$4 49	$1 69 3-10

Showing an annual sum of $2.79 7-10 per head, or a sum of $466,425 to place British Columbia on an equal footing with Ontario with respect to the item of provincial and municipal expenditure for this service alone.

This seems good reason why British Columbia ought to have been treated in a liberal manner as regards this bridge. But, as a matter of fact, what happened ? This government refused to assist the bridge at all when they found it was going to be built by the province. Then the Board of Trade of New Westminster wrote the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Kennedy) on the subject, and in the 'British Columbian' of January 10 last, I find the reply which that hon. gentleman gave to the Board of Trade. I shall read only a portion of his reply :

> The bridge at New Westminster, as the board well knows, is entirely a provincial matter, and the government has never subsidized any work of a purely provincial character. I discussed this matter with Sir Wilfrid and he explained all this to me.

There are some other explanations with reference to bridges across the Ottawa river and so on which do not affect this discussion ; but you will notice, Sir, that the statement is here made that this government has never subsidized any work of a purely provincial character. This of course is so different from the fact that I think the hon. gentleman must have used words he did not quite intend using. Surely he must have known that during the last few years we have been discussing in this House subsidies by this government to such works as the famous Disraeli wharf and others of a similar nature, to say nothing of an amount which I see in the railway subsidies brought in yesterday, namely :

> Towards the construction and completion of a railway bridge and approaches over the Nicolet river at Nicolet, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 3, item 1, $15,000.

These are clearly matters of a provincial character. If that is what the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Kennedy) meant, of course there are so many cases to be cited against his statement, that it is hardly worth while arguing it. But if he meant, on the other hand, as perhaps he did, that no subsidy was granted this bridge because it was built by the province, this seems to me a very hard application of that rule. The provincial government had been for years endeavouring to get private capital interested to build that bridge, and finally found it necessary to build the bridge itself. Surely, under the circumstances, the public there have as much right to assistance from this government as would have private individuals. I know there is a feeling in this House that many private individuals have received favours from this government which they should not ; but I did not think surely that the right hon. the Prime Minister would go so far as to say that he would have advised his government to subsidize this bridge had it been built by private individuals, who had put in a small sum of money and received a large sum in subsidies from the Dominion, but when the provincial government decided to build it, he refused to grant any subsidy. I am not this evening going to advocate the giving of subsidies by the Dominion to provincial works, but every one knows that this government has given subsidies to many works of a purely provincial character, which it ought not to have given. The government has been criticised for having done this, and I have criticised it myself, with regard, for instance, to some lakes back in Labelle county, called the Nominingue lakes, where this government is building wharfs with which the Dominion has nothing whatever to do. And since it is the policy of this government to give subsidies to works of a purely provincial character—I need not waste the time of the House by mentioning a lot of them—they ought to treat all the provinces alike, and in this matter of the bridge across the Fraser river at New Westminster, they should give a reasonable subsidy to assist it.

Mr. FIELDING. Navigation generally is a matter which comes under the supervision of the Dominion government. A wharf may properly come within the sphere of the Dominion government often whereas a bridge would not. A bridge might be a purely local matter, coming within municipal or provincial control, whereas a wharf, having relation to navigation, might be properly regarded as a Dominion work. However I need not dwell upon that point. It has been the policy of governments, under all parties, for some years, to grant aid to railways, and of course we cannot run a railway across a stream without providing a bridge. Incidentally therefore a bridge on a line of railway has been subsidized, and that policy has been carried out throughout the Dominion generally, all provinces treated alike. So far the government have felt some hesitation in consenting to subsidize provincial governments which have entered upon any undertaking. There is a certain plausibility in the statement of the hon. gentleman that, if the Dominion government grants a subsidy to a railway bridge which is constructed by a company, why should it not give a subsidy when the provincial government constructs a similar bridge? But the other side of the argument is that if the provincial governments wish to undertake words of that kind at their own expense they should be allowed to do it. They do not need aid as much as a private enterprise would. Take an illustration: Application was made some years ago for a grant in aid of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway, which is a work of the Ontario government. The Dominion government felt that if the province of Ontario wished to take up an enterprise of that kind on its own credit, it should be allowed to do so, but it should not come to the Dominion government to seek aid. At the same time, I admit, that if a railway company were constructing that road, it is probable that it would receive the usual Dominion aid. But this was the view taken by our government when the late government of Ontario presented that claim.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But you changed your mind about that and are going to subsidize it?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not said whether we are or not. I have given the ground taken against the claim when it was entered by the late government. The present government of Ontario have advanced a claim to this subsidy, but it has not been decided to change the policy of the government in that respect. I do not undertake to say anything as to the future, but, so far as the present is concerned, no determination has been reached to aid that road.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why, they are going to give you a connecting link with the Transcontinental.

Mr. FIELDING. I grant all that. We were approached informally with a view to ascertaining whether we would assist the government of Nova Scotia to build a certain line of railway which it was urged very strongly to undertake. With the example of what had occurred in the case of Ontario before me, I told my Nova Scotia friends that I thought they had but a small chance of securing the aid they desired. The matter has not come before us in a formal way, and so has not been formally refused.

If you take the view that the bridge is of considerable size and the Dominion government provide for it, the question arises, where are you going to draw the line? The provincial governments are building bridges, some of them large and fine structures. If you say that because the provincial government and the municipalities want a nice bridge, with fine tracks for vehicular traffic, therefore the Dominion government should give aid, you are opening a door which may admit more than is intended. I am not expressing a final judgment, but simply explaining the principle upon which the government acted in the case brought to my notice from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley).

Mr. KENNEDY. I am thankful to the hon. gentleman from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) for championing the cause of British Columbia. I would back up any recommendation of that kind that would have any influence with the government to induce them to make a grant to such a bridge for the sake of the people who have to pay toll on every thing that goes across that bridge. If a farmer crosses with a load of pigs in a wagon he has to pay so much for each pig, and if a passenger goes over on foot he has to pay.

Mr. PERLEY. Have the railways to pay charges?

Mr. KENNEDY. Certainly. I do not know how much they pay. There is only one road using the bridge at present, the Great Northern. There are three passenger trains a day each way, and freight trains also. The farmers on the south side of the river who wish to come to New Westminster or Vancouver have to cross the bridge, and, as I have said, have to pay toll. I would like to see the tolls removed. We are told by our political opponents that the only way to get the tolls removed is, to get the Dominion to grant a subsidy to the bridge. I approached Sir Wilfrid Laurier about that when I came here first in the early part of the session. He told me what has already been read in the letter. I do not know that I heard the letter sufficiently well to know whether it was a true copy of the one I sent to the board of trade or not. I dare say that it is although I must say that many of my statements have been badly garbled by the gentleman who brought that matter before the board of trade in New Westminster, who was the defeated candidate in the last election, and who is never done abusing me ; he abuses me most unmercifully and most unmanly ; however, I will let that pass, it does not hurt me. I still hope that the government will see their way to do something in this matter, because it would be a great help to the people in my district. I suppose that when more railways use the bridge, as we expect they will in future, the provincial government will be able to remove the tolls on their own account. But if this could be done at once, it would certainly be a great help to the people there. I should be the last to throw any thing in the way of getting a grant to this bridge, but will back up any endeavour towards a grant. I have done all that I could, but the statement of Sir Wilfrid Laurier looked so reasonable that I could not say anything against it. He said that a provincial work should be carried on by the provincial government.

Mr. PERLEY. I would suggest to the Minister of Finance that a simpler way than the one he has suggested would be for this government to stop subsidizing works of a purely provincial character whether they are made by the province or not. This government is helping to build works of a purely provincial character.

Mr. FIELDING. It is hard to define what is purely provincial.

Mr. PERLEY. I know of some works built and aided by this government concerning which the hon. minister himself would not disagree as to their provincial character. On the Saguenay river, the government has built piers and booms purely for the use of certain lumbermen. That cannot, by any stretch of the imagination, be made any thing else than of a private and provincial character,—private works, and all within one province.

Mr. FIELDING. Are not the works the hon. gentleman (Mr. Perley) refers to self-sustaining through the tolls they yield ?

Mr. PERLEY. No, I had intended making some remarks on this subject during the present session, but, as we desire to bring the session to a close, I decided to leave the matter over to next session.

Mr. SPROULE. If I understand the minister (Mr. Fielding), the substructure is not finished ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is finished, and all the approaches, except about $55,000. That is, the work remaining to be done is $55,000 on the approaches and the remainder of the steel superstructure.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the steel superstructure to cost ?

Mr. FIELDING. The original estimate was $4,760,000. It will probably cost somewhat more, for the reasons I have given.

Mr. SPROULE. How much of the loan that we provided for in the Act of 1903 is used ?

Mr. FIELDING. The bonds released from the Trust Company amount to $4,812,-855. Of course, they were only taken by the bank at the discount which I have explained.

Mr. SPROULE. There is that much spent already ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice by that Act that the substructure and approaches on the said bridge had been completed and the portion of the superstructure has been constructed in 1903.

Mr. FIELDING. That is right.

Mr. SPROULE. Uuless there were some debts this money would not be required, it was not required to build the substructure.

Mr. FIELDING. There were debts which had to be provided for.

Mr. SPROULE. Has any of this money gone into the construction of the railway portions of the bridge?

Mr. FIELDING. Only on the approaches to the bridge.

Mr. SPROULE. How much ?

Mr. FIELDING. The estimate of the approaches was in round numbers $1,000,000 and that work has all been done and the money expended except $55,000.

Mr. SPROULE. It did not exceed that ?

Mr. FIELDING. I would not be too positive on that point, but I would be glad at a later stage to furnish the information.

Mr. SPROULE. The government has a right to appoint three directors on the board. Have they availed themselves of that ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. The government also had the right to inspect the books and see that the money was properly expended ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Have they taken the trouble to do that ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. The accountant examined the books and accounts.

Mr. SPROULE. To what extent ?

Mr. FIELDING. As fully as he wished to.

Mr. SPROULE. I am asking these questions because of the constant rumours that a great deal of this money has been filtered away into other channels instead of into the bridge.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think there is any warrant for that.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister says there is no warrant but we have been told this over and over again by men who should be in a position to know something about it, and hence there is a little suspicion that the money granted for the purpose, $6,678,200, did not go into the bridge. The company only put into the bridge $56,000, whereas I understood they were to have paid up stock of $200,000.

Mr. FIELDING. I think they afterwards completed that condition though.

Mr. SPROULE. That was paid in 1903, have they paid any more since ?

Mr. FIELDING. They paid up the sum required by the Act.

Mr. SPROULE. Taking the various amounts granted by the province and city of Quebec and the Dominion together they would be, I take it, independent of the amount of bonds which we guarantee.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend missed a remark of mine, that of the $1,000,000 only $374,000 was paid; the remainder was cancelled and has ceased to be an obligation of the Dominion government; the company never received it.

Mr. SPROULE. They did not receive the balance of it ?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Then we would require to know how much has actually gone into the substructure, and we should have an estimate of the cost of the bridge as a whole, and to what extent it exceeded the estimate of its cost in the first place. We should also know how much has been spent on the construction of the railway approaches, their length and what they will cost. We should also have more information as to the examination of the books and a memorandum of how the money has gone, because there are so many of these rumours that it is difficult to understand unless there was something rotten about the whole concern, how so much money could be spent on it.

Mr. FIELDING. That is very ungenerous.

Mr. SPROULE. It may be ungenerous, but we have learned from experience in parliament here in connection with public works to be a little suspicious. It may be a little ungenerous but we are not going beyond our rights in this House in being suspicious and that makes us desire to go into it more carefully than we would otherwise do.

Mr. FIELDING. The questions the hon. gentleman has put are proper questions and when the Bill comes up for third reading I shall endeavour to supply the information. I am not aware of anything that justifies the suspicion that there is anything wrong with the affairs of the Quebec bridge. On the contrary I have every reason to believe that the officials of the department have exercised a careful supervision and whatever has been done has been done in good faith and to good advantage. However, the questions my hon. friend has put are reasonable and before I move the third reading I shall endeavour to procure the information.

Mr. FOSTER. We want the information when you go into committee.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not particular about that, at a convenient time the information asked for this evening will be obtained and furnished.

Mr. FOSTER. If I understood the minister correctly, none of these bonds have been actually sold, simply held as collateral.

Mr. FIELDING. That is correct, and they are all to come into the hands of the government.

Mr. FOSTER. There have been no sales whatever.

Mr. FIELDING. None whatever.

Mr. FOSTER. And consequently no brokerage or anything like that ?

Mr. FIELDING. No sale was made.

Mr. FOSTER. Just five per cent is what the Bank of Montreal has charged.

Mr. FIELDING. There has been no sale and there can be no brokerage, and the officers have informed me that five per cent was the rate of interest. I am not aware of any other charge but I shall ascertain if there is any.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is the $1,000,000 spent on the approaches in addition to the $8,000,000 ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, it is included in the $8,000,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it true that no work has been done on the approaches on the north shore ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think my hon. friend's information is not correct; there has been very considerable work done on the north shore.

Mr. LENNOX. The points mentioned by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) cover nearly all the points to which I wished to call attention. I did not quite understand about the auditing of these accounts. I think it is important that as complete an account of this should be furnished in some way to the government and ultimately to the House as in reference to any other public work of the government, although this is not directly done as a government work. I do not know whether the government have a detailed and specific account of this, such as a contractor would have who was keeping track of a work which he was carrying on, but the government should have something of that kind and if not they should obtain such an account, because otherwise, as the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) says, whether well-founded or not there will be a grave suspicion that there is something wrong. I would like the minister before we come to the committee stage and at as early a date as possible to give us a clear statement of how much money has actually been expended upon that bridge or in connection with that bridge to this date, of all the liabilities outside of what has been actually paid out and how much of this sum of $6,678,200 will be available for future work or for further liabilities in connection with the bridge; in other words, how much of this is eaten up at the present time?

Mr. FIELDING. These are proper questions and I will see that the information is furnished.

Mr. FOSTER. The discussion, I suppose, might wait until then?

Mr. FIELDING. No, we had better report the resolution.

Mr. FOSTER. I mean to report the resolution.

Mr. FIELDING. I will introduce the Bill but before it goes any farther I will get the information.

Resolution reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 169) to authorize a loan to the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. We will take up some Bills and then go into supply.

Mr. FOSTER. Which supply?

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of the Interior, probably the Minister of Agriculture and perhaps Railways, as much as we can get through with.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of the Interior comes first.

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of the Interior comes first.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.40 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, April 20, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

RESIGNATION OF HON. C. S. HYMAN.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the resignation of the hon. member for London (Mr. Hyman) in the following terms:

Hotel del Coronado,
Coronado Beach, California,
April 11, 1907.

Hon. R. F. Sutherland,
Speaker, House of Commons, Ottawa.

I beg herewith to tender my resignation as member of the House of Commons for the electoral division of London.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) C. S. HYMAN.

Witnesses—
A. D. Clark,
J. J. Hernan.

I have issued my warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to make out a new writ of election for the said electoral district of London.

PRIVATE BILLS COMMITTEE.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS (Yale-Cariboo) moved that the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills be granted leave to sit during the sittings of the House of Commons.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any considerable amount of business before the committee still?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I do not think so. But there are one or two Bills. It seems absolutely impossible to get a sitting before eleven o'clock. Meetings have been called, but a quorum has not turned up. So we think it necessary to move this motion in order to get a sitting of the committee.

Motion agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Acting Minister of Railways and Canals) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 170) to amend the Department of Railways and Canals Act. He said: This is a measure which is represented by the officials of the department to be necessary to enable them to impose penalties in case of damages to the canal property.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

MR. P. M. DRAPER.

Mr. BENNETT—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. What position does P. M. Draper hold in the Printing Bureau?
2. What is his salary and what are his duties?
3. Has said Draper been recently promoted in the said Bureau? If so, what position did he formerly occupy therein, and what was his then salary?
4. If lately promoted, who held the position now held by said Draper before his promotion, or is the office a new creation?
5. Who has been appointed to the position formerly held by said Draper, and what salary is paid to said Draper's successor?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1. Chief foreman.

2. Salary of $1,500 a year. The duties are an extension of his present duties, inasmuch as his responsibility will extend beyond his own room, mainly with a view of expediting the work and preventing any portion from being overlaid and getting into arrears.

3. The promotion was on April 1st. He was foreman of the parliamentary room alone, and his salary was $1,300.

4. The office is a new one as regards the extension of responsibility.

5. No new appointment has been made. Mr. Draper is still holding his old position, but with extended duties.

INDIAN LANDS, DISTRICT OF NIPISSING.

Mr. BOYCE—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. When was the Indian reserve in the district of Nipissing, lying between North Bay and Sturgeon Falls, opened for settlement?
2. What were the terms of the surrender?
3. Upon what representations was the reserve surrendered, and who negotiated with the government, and with the Indians, respectively, for the surrender?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. On the 24th of January last, 67,651 acres of land on the Nipissing Indian reserve lying north of the Canadian Pacific Railway line were surrendered to the Crown, which land is being subdivided into lots with a view to such disposition thereof as may be determined upon.

2. The land was surrendered to the Crown by the Nipissing Band of Indians to be sold for their benefit, on the following conditions:

(a) That a road allowance be provided for from the east boundary, paralleling the Canadian Pacific Railway, to the west boundary of the said reserve.

(b) That each member of the band shall receive $100 cash on completion of surrender, and the land shall not be sold for less than $2 per acre.

(c) That the first and second chiefs shall receive $1,000 each as full payment for themselves and families.

3. The Board of Trade of North Bay, the corporations of North Bay and Sturgeon Falls, and the settlers of North Bay, Sturgeon Falls and the townships of Springer and Widdifield represented to the department the desirability of having the land in question opened for settlement. The surrender was negotiated by the local Indian agent, Mr. George P. Cockburn, of Sturgeon Falls, who acted for the superintendent general in taking the surrender under the provisions of the Indian Act.

INTERCOLONIAL CARS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. AMES—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. How many Intercolonial Railway cars are at present in use by the railways of the United States?
2. What steps are being taken to secure the return of these cars to Canada?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Acting Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. On the tenth of the present month there were 2,246 cars belonging to the Intercolonial Railway, on the railways of the United States.

2. Every thing possible is being done to get the Intercolonial cars returned, by writing, and telegraphing the different railways and by sending tracers after them.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL H. SMITH.

Mr. NORTHRUP asked:

1. When did Lieutenant Colonel H. Smith cease to draw pay as a member of the Medals Board?
2. How long did he draw such pay?
3. What position has he held in the service since he ceased to draw such pay, and what before?
4. What pay did he receive before (a) as member of Medals Board; (b) for other services?
5. What pay is he now receiving?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (for the Minister of Militia and Defence) Lieutenant Colonel Smith has been employed at headquarters on special duty from January 1, 1902. He has never been paid anything as a member of the Medals Board, but as an officer on special duty at headquarters, one of those duties being the work pertaining to his position as president of the Medals Board. His rates of pay and allowances have been from January 1, 1902, to October 31, 1905, $4.87 per diem pay and $2.50 per diem allowances from November 1, 1905, to the present time $5 per diem pay and $2 per diem allowances.

NORTH LAKE POST OFFICE, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN—by Mr. William Wright—asked :

1. Has the location of the post office at North Lake, Prince Edward Island, been changed since 1st November, 1904 ?
2. If so, when was the change made, and at whose suggestion ?
3. Was any investigation made by the department before making change ?
4. How far is the present location distant from the original location ?
5. Who was the postmaster previous to the change ?
6. Who is the present postmaster ?
7. Have any petitions or letters been received from the inhabitants of North Lake by the Post Office Department protesting the change of location ?
8. If so, did the government take any steps to verify the statements made by the petitioning inhabitants in the protest against the removal ?
9. What action does the government intend to take to give proper post office accommodation to the inhabitants of North Lake ?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) :

1. Yes.
2. On 1st of April, 1905, on recommendation of Mr. J. J. Hughes, member of parliament.
3. An investigation was not considered necessary, in view of information received that it was desirable to remove the post office to a more central and convenient location.
4. The department cannot say definitely the distance but is assured that the new site is much more central and convenient to the whole people than the old one.
5. Elisha B. Morrow.
6. George Macdonald.
7. Communications have been received since the change of site was made, objecting to the change.
8. There has been no further action in the matter.
9. As the government is of the opinion that the change made has been in the interest of the people, no further action is contemplated.

ORANGEVILLE POST OFFICE.

Mr. BARR asked :

Has the vacancy in the post office in Orangeville, Ontario, caused by the death of the postmaster, been filled ? If so, by whom ? If not, who has charge of said post office ?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). The vacancy in the postmastership of Orangeville, Ontario, has not yet been filled. Since the postmaster's death, on the 10th instant, the post office has been in charge of the assistant postmaster, Mr. Percy Bradley.

POST OFFICE AT LAKEVILLE, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN—By Mr. Blain—asked :

1. When was the change made in the location of the post office at Lakeville, Prince Edward Island, and at whose suggestion ?
2. Did the Post Office Department make any investigation before removing the post office from where it had been established thirty years ago ?
3. Is the Post Office Department aware that over nine-tenths of the inhabitants of the district are opposed to the removal of the office from its former location ?
4. Has any change been made in the office of postmaster at Lakeville, since November, 1904 ? If so, for what cause ?
5. Have any petitions or letters from the inhabitants of Lakeville been received by the Post Office Department protesting against the change of location and praying for the return of the office to its original location ?
6. Did the department make any investigation since the receipt of said petitions and letters ? If so, what was the nature of such investigation ?
7. What action does the government intend to take to remedy the grievance of the inhabitants of Lakeville ?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) :

1. On the 1st June, 1905.
2. Yes.
3. No representations whatever have been made, to that effect.
4. Yes, as stated, on the 1st June, 1905, it having been ascertained, upon official inquiry, that the post office was not being satisfactorily managed.
5, 6, 7. No objection to the change, nor complaint regarding the new site, has been received at the department.

POSTMASTER AT SOUTHPORT, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN—By Mr. Blain—asked :

1. Who was the postmaster at Southport, Prince Edward Island, in the month of May, 1905 ? Was such postmaster a person of the age of 21 years ?
2. Did said postmaster furnish any security to the government or Post Office Department for the faithful discharge of his duties ?
3. Was not a registered letter addressed to Frederick Masters received at said post office in the month of May or early in June, 1905 ?
4. Did not the post office inspector at Charlottetown report the loss of the letter to the department at Ottawa ?
5. Did the department make any attempt to collect the contents of the letter from the postmaster or his securities, and did they succeed in collecting the contents ?
6. What reasons do the department give for failing to pay over the contents of the letter to Mr. Masters ?
7. In case the Post Office Department appoints an official under age, is not the government responsible for loss sustained by the public by reason of the neglect or misconduct of the official ? If so, why is not this claim paid ?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) :

1. Alexander Walker. The postmaster was about 20 years of age. He was the only person at the time who was willing to assume charge of the office, and as it was necessary in order to meet the postal needs of the district, that the post office should be maintained, it was kept open under his charge.

2. Yes. He was secured under the Post Office Guarantee Fund.

3. Yes, on 29th May, 1905.

4. Yes.

5. Mr. Alexander had resigned the postmastership before the loss of this registered letter was reported to the department. The department, however, endeavoured to collect the contents from him but was unsuccessful, and under the circumstances the amount of the loss was made good out of the Post Office Guarantee Fund.

6. Value of contents of letter has been paid over to Mr. Masters and his receipt is on file in the department.

7. See answer to number 6.

IMPROVEMENTS TO LONDON POST OFFICE.

Mr. ELSON asked :

1. What has been the cost of building the new addition and making improvements to the London post office during the last three years?

2. Is the work of improvement yet completed?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Acting Minister of Public Works) :

1. $45,732.83.

2. Yes.

INSURANCE COMMISSION—BILL.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) if there are any copies of the Bill which was recommended by the Insurance Commission. It seems impossible to get any copies of it ; there are many inquiries.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance.) I understood that every copy of the report was accompanied by a copy of the Bill. If there is an insufficiency printed, I will give directions to have it remedied.

Mr. FOSTER. I think there ought to be, because all the insurance companies are interested.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. FOSTER. On January 14th I called for a return with reference to telegraph lines, which has not been brought down. We have some $11,000,000 of estimates chucked at us here in the last days of the session, and this is an important piece of information, and I want it before we take up these items.

Mr. FIELDING. The information given me a few days ago by the Deputy Minister was that it would take about two weeks to get that return ready. That was on the 12th of April, so it ought to be ready in about a week. I will see that it is pushed forward. In regard to returns generally, since the matter was last mentioned I gave special instructions to have every effort put forth to bring down the returns called for. Quite a number have been brought down ; there are several which I understand require so much labour that they cannot be brought down this session. I am still pressing the departments. If there is any particular return that any hon. gentleman is specially interested in and he will let me know in the next day or two, I will make special inquiry concerning it. Quite a number of returns previously mentioned are now on the table, and others are being prepared as quickly as possible.

SHORTAGE OF CARS IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the Minister of Finance any knowledge from the Railway Department of the work that has been done by Mr. Dillinger, who was sent west I think in connection with the shortage of cars. There was a peculiar telegram published in the newspapers this morning which recites an incident that occurred in the Winnipeg Board of Trade whom Mr. Dillinger was supposed to meet and give them some information. It does not appear to have been very successful. I do not know how much reliance is to be placed on the telegram, but it states that the meeting broke up in disorder and there was great dissatisfaction. It appears that he was not in a position to give them any information.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Dillinger is an officer appointed by the Railway Commission, and of course in an indirect way comes under our control. But I will make inquiry at once of the Chairman of the Railway Commission, as to the facts of the case.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 111) respecting the inspection of electricity.—Mr. Templeman.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 139) to create a Department of Mines.—Mr. Templeman.

On section 3,

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This section was permitted to stand, and on the suggestion of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) I have adopted the wording of the Labour Act. I propose to amend the definition clause in subsection 2 and instead of saying that 'Minister means Minister of Mines,' I propose to say that:

Minister means such member of His Majesty's Privy Council of Canada to whom, for the time being, the Governor in Council may assign the carrying out of the provisions of this Act.

Mr. BERGERON. That means that the Minister of Mines may be the minister of another department?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The amendment of the minister is not very happily worded. It says 'such member to whom.' Would it not be better to say 'the member to whom'?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The suggestion of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) was that the wording of the Conciliation Act should be adopted, which says:

The expression 'minister' means the member of Her Majesty's Privy Council for Canada to whom, &c.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is not the point. That is the way it should be expressed. The minister here uses the expression 'such member to whom.' You want to use good English, that is all.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am glad the hon. gentleman has called it to my notice.

Mr. LENNOX. What we had in contemplation last night was to amend section 3, and I would call the minister's attention to the fact that if he strikes out section 3 altogether he has no creation of a Department of Mines at all. Section 3 provides for a department of the civil service to be called the Department of Mines and then section 4 provides that the department shall administer the laws and so on.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I propose making a slight amendment to section 4 to cover that point.

Mr. LENNOX. What I was going to propose was to leave the minister as he is defined in section 2 and to strike out of section 3 all the words after 'of' in the third line. 'A member of the King's Privy Council for Canada' and substitute 'the head of one of the present departments of the government of Canada.' I will just pass this over to the minister and he can consider it.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. My hon. friend is just trying to do in another way what I am trying to do and it will have practically the same effect.

Mr. LENNOX. I am not at all sure that the minister meets it by the other amendment which he proposes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I point out that subsection 3 does not affect what the minister has just now mentioned. He provides under subsection (b) of section 2, as follows:—

'Minister' means the member of His Majesty's Privy Council for Canada to whom, for the time being, the Governor in Council may assign the carrying out of the provisions of this Act.

That leaves it still perfectly open to create another minister, an additional portfolio. Such an intention is also perfectly consistent with the language of section 3. What my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) proposes is that you shall adopt in section 3 the words which are found in the statute creating the Department of Indian Affairs and which words make it impossible to create another portfolio or an additional minister of the Crown. The section would then read in this way:—

There shall be a department of the civil service to be called the Department of Mines, which shall be under the control and management of the head of one of the present departments of the government of Canada, who shall be named from time to time for that purpose by the Governor in Council, and who shall be called 'the Minister of Mines.'

Language of that kind would carry out what the minister declares to be the intention, namely, that there shall be no additional minister, but that one of the present ministers of the Crown, the head of a department of the government, shall also be Minister of Mines.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. What clause of the Indian Act?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Section 5, I think.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am of the opinion that the amendment I have proposed covers the point. I have made this amendment very largely at the suggestion of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) to cover the very objection which was raised last evening. I am not particular about the form of the amendment. What I want to accomplish is to establish a Department of Mines that will be administered by one of the ministers of the Crown holding another portfolio.

Mr. BERGERON. You do not want to increase the number of ministers?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Quite true.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me that it would answer the purpose very much better if the hon. minister accepted the amendment of the hon. member for South Simcoe. If the minister's suggestion is carried out the statute will not expressly create a Department of Mines. It will refer to a Department of Mines but it will not expressly create one. The amendment which we offer expressly creates a Department of Mines and then it provides that the Minister of Mines shall be a minister in charge of some other department, that there shall be another Department of State but that there shall not be another Minister of State. It seems to me that there cannot be any doubt about that being the proper course to take.

Mr. LENNOX. I understood yesterday from the minister and I also understood from the remarks of the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Ross) that one of the distinctive objects in view was the creation of a Department of Mines and section 3 is the only section which does distinctly create that department. Now the minister proposes to eliminate that, and if the department exists at all, it will only be by implication from other sections. The minister also said last night that he was quite willing to have any amendment which would make it perfectly clear that this would be under the charge of an existing minister. The amendment which I propose carries that out definitely by introducing into section 3, which creates a Department of Mines, a provision that it shall be under the management and control of the head of one of the present departments of the government of Canada.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. If it will save time I am willing to accept the suggestion of my hon. friend, and I will, therefore, move now in substitution of my former motion that clause 3 be amended by striking out the words 'a member of the King's Privy Council for Canada' in the third line and substituting therefor the words 'the head of one of the present departments of the government of Canada.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That makes it perfectly satisfactory.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

EXCHEQUER COURT—SALARY OF REGISTRAR.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:—

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide that the salary of any person who may hereafter be appointed registrar of the Exchequer Court of Canada, shall, upon appointment, be two thousand five hundred dollars per annum, with an annual increase thereafter of one hundred dollars, up to a maximum of three thousand dollars per annum; and that the salary of the present registrar, so long as he remains in office, shall be the said maximum of three thousand dollars per annum.—Mr. Aylesworth.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). The practical effort of the adoption of this resolution would be to increase at once the salary of the present registrar of the Exchequer Court from $2,400 to $3,000 a year. After a great deal of consideration, it seemed only justice that the gentleman who is now the occupant of that office should receive this increase. In 1887 when the court was reorganized, Mr. Audette was appointed at a salary of $2,000, and for the last twenty years he has been registrar of the court. Some few years ago the salary was increased to $2,400. The registrar of the Exchequer Court is not within the Civil Service Act, and when the salaries of civil servants were increased generally in 1903, neither his salary nor that of the registrar of the Supreme Court was increased. In the same session, however, a special statute was passed increasing the salary of the registrar of the Supreme Court by $800, making his salary $4,000, which he has since enjoyed. By comparison, that seems to bear hardly upon the registrar of the Exchequer Court. Apart from any consideration of that kind, the situation which presents itself in the Court of Exchequer is anomalous. Mr. Audette receives a fixed salary of $2,400, while his assistant, who has the rank of chief clerk, will, if he remains in office a few years longer, receive, by the statutory annual increases, $2,500. That condition of things would not conduce to the importance, or the dignity, or efficiency of the registrar's office. In the increase of business which has come to the court since it was established, the registrar has now come to have a very important and responsible position. To illustrate, the amount of money on deposit under his immediate control and upon his actual responsibility has, not long since, reached the large sum of over $1,000,000. There has been added to the jurisdiction of the court lately, the authority to act in the winding-up of insolvent railway companies and that has led to a very large increase of the registrar's work. In the case of the Quebec Southern Railway Company, which was before that court not long since and which was referred by the judge to the registrar, there were over 300 separate claims for adjudication; one-third of them practically amounting to separate causes of action and to contested suits which raised questions of very much importance both as to amount, and as to the difficulty of disposing of them. The registrar, in the increase of the work of the court, has been performing the duties of special referee in many cases coming on for trial before the judge, and in cases where the witnesses are French speaking the judge of the court has for some time past referred the actions almost invariably to the registrar. Consequently, Mr. Audette has been exercising very important functions, and in cases which have not been referred to him and where the witnesses are unable to speak English and have to give their evidence in French, the registrar has for twenty years acted as interpreter without any additional remuneration being received or sought. In these circumstances, his position being of such considerable importance, it seemed no more than just that his salary should be increased to $3,000, and it was thought in view of the undoubted increase in the expenses of living and the increased business of the court, that any person appointed in future to the position of registrar should commence with a salary of $2,500, increasing annually to a maximum of $3,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think the proposal is an unreasonable one, and, so far as the present holder of the office is concerned, I know from personal experience as a member of the bar practising for many years in that court he is a very capable, a very faithful, and a very diligent officer. I think the proposal is one that should commend itself to the committee.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Can the Minister of Justice inform us if this is the same man who acted in the case of Dodge and the King?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No. That was a special officer.

Resolution reported and agreed to.

Mr. AYLESWORTH moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 170) to amend the Exchequer Court Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time and the second time.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Dominion Lands, chargeable to capital—surveys, examination of survey returns, printing of plans, including $15,000 for irrigation surveys, &c., $800,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Can the minister give us any information as to how many men are employed in this branch of the department?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I am not able at the moment to say how many are employed, because the greater part of this money is expended on survey parties, which may be larger or smaller, from time to time. It might be of interest to the committee to know just what survey work it is proposed to provide for out of this vote. There will be three parties for the survey of base lines and of part of the sixth meridian, at $12,500 each, or a total of $37,500. There will be one party for the survey of the fifth meridian to the Peace river, $12,500.

Mr. FOSTER. From what point south do you commence the survey?

Mr. OLIVER. The meridian was surveyed many years ago for some distance north. This is to continue the survey of that meridian due north to the latitude of the base line upon which the Peace river surveys are made, so as to give us a continuous meridian line and a continuous base line connecting the surveys on the Saskatchewan with the surveys on the Peace river.

Mr. FOSTER. That meridian is surveyed now north of Edmonton?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, for a considerable distance—I think to a point north of the Lesser Slave lake.

One party for surveying base lines in Manitoba $12,500.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why is it necessary to have base lines surveyed in Manitoba now? Has not that been all done?

Mr. OLIVER. No, there is an immense area out of which all governments have been surveying that portion which was most likely to come into use the soonest. We have extended the base lines so far and this is for surveys from those base lines. As settlement extends, we have to extend the base lines and meridian lines in every direction. The position with regard to the survey is this: We have the heart of the country surveyed and now we are surveying on the outside of the circle, and that circle is increasing each year.

Mr. FOSTER. In other words you are surveying around the periphery.

Mr. OLIVER. One party for surveying 3,500,000 acres in the Peace river district, British Columbia, $12,500.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. These lands have not been given any company?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How about the Vermilion Land Company at the mouth of Peace river? They went in some years ago and got an extra concession.

Mr. OLIVER. There is one land concession in the Peace river, the papers with regard to which were brought down last session.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That is near the Vermilion?

Mr. OLIVER. No, it is on the Smoky river.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. They were sold land at $1 an acre.

Mr. OLIVER. Provided they fulfilled certain conditions. The area is four or six townships square and is cut by the Smoky river and one corner overlaps the Peace river. It is due west of Lesser Slave lake.

Three parties for subdivision surveys in Southern Alberta at $8,000 each or $24,000. One party for subdivisional surveys between Lesser Slave lake and Peace river, $8,000;

one party for surveying outlines of Saskatchewan, $8,000; seven parties for miscellaneous surveys and resurveys at $8,000 each, $56,000; three parties for subdivision surveys in British Columbia at $8,000 each, $24,000; one party for triangulation in British Columbia, $8,000. These are the surveys which are carried on by day's labour. We hire the surveyors and are responsible for the whole expenditure. There are subdivision surveys under contract, namely:

Fifty-four townships in southeastern Manitoba, $96,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. These are being surveyed for timber?

Mr. OLIVER. No. The Manitoba government has been pressing particularly for additional surveys of the swamp lands to which they become entitled as soon as the lands have been surveyed and inspected. We have not been able hitherto to provide for those surveys, but we are going on surveying each year and are doing a little more this year than previous years.

Forty-four townships near Lakes Manitoba and Winnipeg	$75,000
Nineteen townships on Canadian Northern Railway in Saskatchewan	38,000
Four townships near Nut lake, Saskatchewan	8,000
Seventeen townships near Prince Albert, Saskatchewan	34,000
Twenty-nine townships south of Moosejaw, Saskatchewan	12,000
Six townships at Wood mountain	2,500
Fifty-one townships near Reed Deer river, Alberta	21,000

This is a portion not surveyed lying between the Canadian Pacific Railway and Canadian Northern Railway. When this is surveyed everything will be covered.

Mr. FOSTER. East of Calgary and Edmonton.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, there is a large area unsurveyed and settlement is pressing to have this work done.

Six townships east of Athabaska landing, $12,000.

Fifty townships north and west of Edmonton, $100,000.

That is considered necessary because of the Grand Trunk Pacific construction between Edmonton and the Rocky mountains. Up to that point we grant a total of $398,500, half of which is for day work and half contract. Then besides we have one inspector of surveys and party at $6,000; three at $7,000 each; one topographer and party and office expenses, $7,000; irrigation surveys, $16,000; Yukon surveys, $18,000; employees at Ottawa, $120,000; iron posts, $3,000; stationery, printing, &c., $7,500.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I did not understand the minister to include any amount for surveys in eastern Manitoba? Is there an amount for that purpose?

Mr. OLIVER. I have here, for fifty-four townships in southeastern Manitoba, $96,000; for forty-four townships near Lake Manitoba and Winnipeg, $70,000.

Mr, S. J. JACKSON. And east of Lake Winnipeg?

Mr. OLIVER. Nothing.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I would point out that in the eastern part of my constituency we have a district a hundred miles by fifty miles, practically unsettled. I think it would be advisable for the government to send a proportion of our immigrants to that country rather than to the prairies where there is likely to be a shortage of fuel, and thus have the people subjected to hardship. East of Lake Winnipeg there is a first-class soil, and the people could settle along rivers where there is fish, the country being an excellent one and most attractive for many settlers of the poorer class. In winter they would be employed in getting out cordwood. We have the St. Andrews' locks, to be finished in a year or two, which will afford means of communication. There are millions of cords of wood on Lake Winnipeg which will be required by the people of Winnipeg city. I would suggest to the minister that he consider the advisbility of subdividing fifty or sixty townships along the shore of Lake Winnipeg and back from the lake and along the rivers. There are exhausted timber limits there which can be cut over for cordwood. The settlers would find this a good thing to have, and many people from eastern Canada would prefer to settle there rather than on the open prairie.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Some years ago, I took the liberty of pointing out that, in addition to the wealth of timber of this locality, there is a great deal of good farming land east of Lake Winnipeg. Now, Lake Winnipeg is a shallow lake, the average depth being not more than sixty or seventy feet. The result is that in summer it becomes warmer than most lakes of its size. In the fall it retains this heat, and, the prevailing winds being from the west and northwest, the air is tempered by passing over the water. I am told by travellers and explorers that, on the eastern part of the lake referred to by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. S. J. Jackson), the country is free from frost for several weeks after the western country is closed up. In a few years this section will be well settled.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I know farmers in our district close to the lakes where they have never had frozen crops.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no doubt that we shall have to take that up another year. But everybody will agree, that, for the present, it is very desirable that we should close up that area of south-eastern Manitoba so that we shall be able to get a satisfactory settlement with the province with regard to swamp lands.

Mr. FOSTER. A large part of this surveying is done by day's work. I understand the contract system, but I do not understand the other? Would the minister be kind enough to explain, generally, the procedure in that matter?

Mr. OLIVER. I am afraid I am not able to give all the details that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) would like, but I have some facts, and if he wishes, the others can be given later on.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the first thing is to select a surveyor?

Mr. OLIVER. There are, of course, certain surveyors who come up to the requirements of the survey provisions of the Dominion Lands' Act. Out of that number we select such as we see fit, being guided by the demand, the qualifications of the men, and so on. The rate of pay for the surveyors for block-out lines, and special surveys, such as base lines and all the surveys upon which most depends and in which accuracy is most needed, is $7.50 a day, while in the field or in the office preparing their returns. They get an allowance also of $2.35 a day while in the field, making a total of $9.85 a day while in the field. When the surveyor is in the office his living allowance is $1 a day, making his total pay while in the office, $8.50. The allowance for rations to the assistant is 90 cents a day, and to the other members of the party, 65 cents a day.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the daily pay of the assistant and the others?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not that here. For ordinary surveys, subdivisions and so on upon whose accuracy so much does not depend, the pay of the surveyor in the field is $6.50 a day, with living allowance as in the other case. The rates allowed for surveys under contract are as follows:

	Per mile.
First class prairie	$ 7 00
Second class poplar and soft woods and prairie	13 00
Third class continuous woods, heavy underbrush	21 00
Extra rate for traverse lines	10 00
	Per pit
Allowance for pits and mounds in prairie	0 25
Allowance for pits and mounds in woods	0 40
	Per mile.
Allowance for astronomical determinations	15 00
Allowance for crossing marshes and rivers	4 00

Mr. FOSTER. Who determines whether it is open prairie or brush?

Mr. OLIVER. The surveyor makes his claim, and of course, his field notes show the character of the country. Of course, everything is subject to be inspected and checked —not only the survey, but the surveyor's claim as to the character of the country.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It would take very little extra work for these surveyors, in making the boundaries, to make more extended notes of the physical features of the country. I have often thought that the field notes might give a great deal more data than they do and without much extra trouble. For instance, where the line crosses a deep ravine, what is there to prevent them from marking that ravine on the map and giving its depth? I merely make this suggestion in respect to the township maps, that much more data could be noted upon them than we are now provided with.

Mr. OLIVER. The large township map could set out the physical features of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is a very good plain. You are out of initial expenses If a man is travelling over the ground and he notes these things and sees them, he can jot them down and put them where they will be useful. A great deal of pertinent information might be added without much trouble. Now you put your contract man on, and he gets so much per mile, then you are entirely rid of him with regard to all outfitting and all expense of every kind. He gets his own horses, his own food and outfit. Now, with reference to the principal men whom you pay—I do not know what the usual thing is, but I suppose these people cannot be surveying all the year, and they must be paid a pretty good rate while the survey lasts. It looks as if when you get up to $8 or $9 a day, it is a pretty good pay for a surveyor. But I suppose that is like some other trades, there is a great deal of the time when they are not engaged in surveying. But then the other point comes in; a number of those are in the inside work, after they get the outside work through, I notice their pay is also pretty large. You give them a living allowance and you give them pay about the same. Now, take one of these surveyors who is on the work, take his inside work and outside work, is he not employed nearly the whole year?

Mr. OLIVER. I think they are employed about nine months in the year, sometimes more, depending on circumstances. It takes them nearly as long to reproduce the results of their summer's work as to do the work.

Mr. FOSTER. If that is so, you are really paying these men a pretty handsome salary; it would foot up to about $2,500 a year if they were nine months engaged. I suppose for a professional man that is not too much. Then, with reference to the day's work people. You hire your surveyor, I suppose, and you hire an assistant as well. Then do they outfit themselves, bed and board and everything, out of those living expenses?

Mr. OLIVER. There is an outfit allowed, meaning by that, camp appliances, bedding and cooking utensils. But they look after their own food.

Mr. FOSTER. You provide them with food and you give them so much a day, you give them so much for living expenses, and that runs from 65 to 90 cents a day, and $2.75 for the head surveyor.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. An engineer who goes in there and does his duty in surveying those townships is not too highly paid. With the addition of the little field notes I have drawn attention to, I am satisfied his survey would be very much more useful. The pay of nearly all these men is none too high.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not objecting at all about the pay.

Mr. OLIVER. The camp equipment is generally sold at the end of the season, tent and all, by auction.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Can the minister explain when he uses the one system of contract, and when the other system of employment?

Mr. OLIVER. The contract system is only used in subdividing the townships; that is to say, we employ these men on day's pay to run meridian lines, then we employ men on day's pay to run the base line; then we employ men on day's pay to run the outlines, who lay out the boundaries of the township. Then, that having been done, we employ men by contract to run the lines subdividing the sections within the township. If an error is made there it does not involve very serious consequences, whereas an incorrect survey of a base line or a meridian line would cause a serious difficulty in many townships.

Mr. STAPLES. Do you ever send out surveyors to replace the stakes that have been obliterated in certain townships? For instance, in the county of Macdonald there are several townships that have been swept over by fire and the stakes are completely obliterated; you will have considerable difficulty to ascertain where the boundary lines are. Do the department furnish surveys for that purpose?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, we do, under such circumstances as stated by my hon. friend. We do make resurveys. One of these items under the heading of 'Miscellaneous Surveys' includes resurveys. But in the absence of the Surveyor General, I cannot speak definitely on this point. But there are very serious difficulties arising when we make a resurvey. A man who has accepted the survey that was made at first is very apt to resent a resurvey if that would in any degree affect the holding that he had already, and certainly if a man has secured his patent according to the old survey, I do not think we have any right to interfere with the original survey.

Mr. STAPLES. In this case the lines are completely obliterated and people cannot locate them. That particular locality is being settled up very quickly, they require the construction of roads and they are anxious to have the lines properly defined. There is a great deal of improvement going on this summer, appropriations have been made for the purpose of constructing roads there and I thought that all that would be necessary would be to have one of the surveyors sent out to do the work.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know whether the case that my hon. friend mentions is one of those that we have in mind or not, but of course each case would have to rest upon its merits. It depends on the amount of destruction that has occurred to the old lines. If everything has been absolutely obliterated we would have to make a survey, but if there has only been a partial obliteration it is possible that the people can get along without a survey.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In the old days they used to put down wooden stakes.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. It does not seem to be the policy of the department to make resurveys because I have had applications in for two years, and I have not been able to get many of them made. It has not been the policy in the past or at least since the present minister came in as I have not been able to get many townships resurveyed. It is in a bush country. In a bush country they are not quite so careful to put up mounds as they are on the prairie. I did get a township resurveyed two years ago but before it was undertaken the Surveyor General sent me a list of the men who were settled in that township and he asked me to send to them and get them to sign an agreement that in case the resurvey interfered with the old survey they would not hold the government liable for any damage that might occur. I do not think it has been the policy of the department in the past to make resurveys.

Mr. STAPLES. There is no doubt that it will depend on the merits of the case as to whether they send out a surveyor or not, and I am quite satisfied that the explanation which I have given in regard to the locality which I have named will be regarded as a sufficient warrant for sending out a surveyor. They are anxious to undertake considerable road making and I think it would be well to locate the lines thoroughly before they undertake this work. They completed a road last summer and there is a dispute as to whether it is on the road allowance at all or not. This particular locality was swamp land on which there was a very heavy growth of willow and grass and the stakes are burned out. Two townships in particular are in the condition I speak of. I will make application if the minister will tell me to whom I should apply.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I would like to ask the minister if in a bush country the surveyor is instructed to put up a large mound the same as on the prairie. If these mounds are put up, even if the posts are burned out, the mounds remain.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no doubt that the posts are supposed to be mounted in the woods as well as on the prairie, but in the soft mucky soil that exists in many places in the woods the mound is partially destroyed.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Are you putting in iron posts as a rule now?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. At every section?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. At the half mile too?

Mr. OLIVER. Not at the half mile.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Just the mile?

Mr. OLIVER. Just the mile. If a township is fully settled by people it does not become the duty of the Dominion government to make a resurvey, because the land has passed out of the hands of the Dominion government. Then it becomes the business of the provincial government or the people themselves. But, if there is a considerable part of a township not taken up by settlers, inasmuch as the Dominion is responsible for the administration of Dominion lands, it is necessary that the Dominion should take proper means to enable them to find their boundaries. The Surveyor General is the official to apply to in that connection.

Dominion Lands, chargeable to income—protection of timber in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, the Northwest Territories, and the railway belt in British Columbia ; tree culture in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and inspection and management of forest reserves, $83,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like the minister to give an explanation of that item, what is being done, and what new work is being undertaken?

Mr. OLIVER. I will first read the following statement :

Dominion Lands income—outside service salaries.

Amount asked in main estimates for the fiscal year 1907-8, $250,000.

The sum of $170,000 was voted for the fiscal year 1906-7 (a period of nine months) in connection with Dominion lands income, outside service salaries, and, at that rate, the amount of $226,666.66 would have been required for a period of twelve months.

The sum of $250,000 is asked in the main estimates for the fiscal year 1907-8, an increase of $23,333.34 for a corresponding period of twelve months.

The increase is chiefly due to the following cases :

1. To the great increase in the work connected with land matters at Ottawa which has necessitated many additions to the staff. This may be illustrated by the fact that 177,358 letters were written during 1906 in the Commissioner of Dominion Lands Branch at Ottawa, as against 122,856 in 1905, an increase of over 44 per cent; 15,081 applications for patent were dealt with in 1906 as against 10,197 in 1905 an increase of over 47 per cent; 11,817 new applications for patent were recorded in 1906 as against 7,698 in 1905, an increase of over 53 per cent ; 9,623 certificates of recommendation were issued in 1906 as against 6,788 in 1905, an increase of over 41 per cent; 12,370 letters patent were issued during the fiscal year 1905-6 as against 8,798 in 1904-5, an increase of over 40 per cent. The additions to the staff show an aggregate increase of $10,665.

2. Increase in salaries. The increase in the cost of living in the west, and more especially the great opportunities in the way of outside positions offered to young men possessed of a good education, have made it necessary to raise to a certain extent the scale of salaries of some of the 215 officials employed in the western provinces. A few annual increases have also been granted to some of the clerks at the head office. The total increase in salaries granted amounts to $9,900.

The trend of settlement has rendered it necessary to open subagencies at the following places to facilitate business transactions with the settlers, namely : Strasburg, Saskatchewan; North Battleford, Saskatchewan ; Herbert, Saskatchewan ; Stettler, Alberta ; Daysland, Alberta ; Lac Ste. Anne, Alberta ; Pembina Crossing, Alberta, and Eddison, Alberta. The total annual salaries paid to these subagents amounts to $2,760, total increases, $23,325.

Mr. FOSTER. What has been done in the way of protecting timber, tree culture and the protection of the forest reserves ; is there an extension of that service ?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Stewart who organized the tree culture and forest protection service severed his connection with the department some months ago as he received more attractive inducements elsewhere. Mr. Craig, the gentleman more particularly connected with tree culture in the west, has also done the same thing. We have replaced Mr. Stewart by Mr. R. H. Campbell who was at the head of the timber and mines branch and who was secretary of the Forestry Association of the Dominion. He is at the moment discharging the duty of the two positions, and his salary is $2,500. Mr. Stewart's salary was $3,000. We have not yet been able to replace Mr. Craig. As my hon. friend will see, his resignation somewhat disarranged matters and we have not made new arrangements yet. We hope in due course to make an expansion of the work according to the requirements of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. What took Mr. Stewart away ?

Mr. OLIVER. He is managing director of a large lumber concern in the province of Quebec.

Mr. FOSTER. The Dominion of Canada has just as large revenue and as great needs as any lumber company, and it is a question as to whether the country ought to be deprived of the services of the proper man for the sake of a few thousands of salary. It is not easy to get the proper man for certain kinds of work. A man who was really the man for the position, ought not to be allowed to go out of the service of the country if any reasonable inducement would keep him, because as the minister says, it is disorganizing the whole service, and you may not have another man in training, although that ought to be kept in view. If it is a mere difference in salary of a few thousand dollars, and the man is the man, it is poor economy for the Dominion to allow his services to be taken away. In the case of experts of that kind, I do not think the House would feel like cheese-paring. If the man was the proper man, the ordinary run of wages might have to be raised in order to keep him.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman has taken a very fair view of the question and while we have tried to do all we could within the limits set by precedent, we find that in all our service we are being hampered in that respect. Under present conditions in the country, really good men whom the country needs most, can do better by severing their connection with the government in view of the scale of salaries we pay at the present time. That is a question well worthy the consideration of parliament. How we are going to solve the difficulty I do not know. In Mr. Stewart's case, the inducements to leave the service were such that we could hardly expect to meet them without disarranging the basis of employment of the service generally. It must be recognized that if we are going to retain in our service the men we need most we must pay them better than we do now.

Mr. FOSTER. I have from year to year called the attention of the minister to the system on which these appropriations are prepared, and I trust he will direct the attention of his department to the matter next year. In this appropriation we have contingencies, advertising, &c., and salaries, all in a lump into one vote of $163,333. That money is expended for various services, and the particular services ought to be detailed in the estimate so as to give the House a comparative idea of what is spent in each of these branches. That would also act as a deterrent in the matter of expense. It is possible in a vote of that kind for the minister to use up the whole of it in advertising. The House has a right to know how much money is appropriated for each one of these positions. This tendency of putting these items in a lump sum does not make towards good finance.

Mr. OLIVER. There is a good deal to be said in favour of what the hon. member has said, but I am only following the custom that has prevailed.

Mr. FOSTER. I would correct my hon. friend there. There has never been a time when you could not find divided votes under a general head, without their being specified; but the tendency is to come further and further down to a lump vote without specifications. A comparison between now and ten years ago, and still more between now and fifteen years ago, will show how that is worked.

Mr. OLIVER. For my part, I have no objection to dividing up the vote for Dominion lands.

Mr. FOSTER. What I consider a very great abuse sprang up because of that general vote on immigration. The House did not expect when you were putting through that vote, that you would be empowered by it to make a contract with a company for ten years involving an expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars. That is something on which there should be a policy settled by the House.

Mr. BERGERON. What does my hon. friend intend to do with regard to the protection of timber against fires?

Mr. OLIVER. That is one part of the duties of the Forestry branch. The other part is to do what may be done within reasonable limits for the reproduction of timber. Of course, the requirements of that western country are so immense that if I asked parliament for a sum that would be adequate to meet the actual requirements, it would probably stagger parliament. I must admit that we are only working around the edge, although we are doing some good. For my own part, I am a little doubtful as to how far we can go into the matter thoroughly, and economically. We have in that country immense areas of wood which have a peculiar value because of their proximity to correspondingly immense areas of prairie, and the wood is at times destroyed by the millions of dollars worth. The question is to get any means to prevent that. We might spend an enormous amount of money and yet not secure the protection we would wish.

Mr. BERGERON. What are the means taken to prevent these burnt areas of wood?

Mr. OLIVER. We employ forest rangers from time to time, during the season when fires are likely to take place, and they are expected as far as possible to see that fires are put out and are not allowed to run. When a fire once gets a start it is practically impossible to stop it. The most we can do is to caution or punish people who cause fires to start. The regulations with regard to forest fires are those of the provinces, and these men whom we employ are special police to apply those regulations.

Mr. BERGERON. It is a sad sight to see those immense areas of wood destroyed by fire.

Mr. OLIVER. It is very terrible, in view of the needs of that country for wood. The actual loss there from forest fires is probably altogether beyond the appreciation of even my hon. friend. A series of wet years are followed by a series of dry years. During the wet years there is a rank growth, and during the dry years the conditions are very favourable to fires, and then the destruction is something terrible.

At one o'clock committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Dominion astronomical survey—salaries of technical officers and clerks, $15,305.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that the ordinary amount ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, with the statutory increase. The employees are : J. S. Plaskett, astronomer, present salary $2,050, increased to $2,087.50, being the statutory increase. J. Macara, chief computer, $1,850, increased to $1,887.50. Louis Gauthier, keeper of records, increased from $1,850 to $1,887.50. E. Simpson, secretary of council, increased from $1,550 to $1,587.50. R. M. Stewart, B.A., astronomer in charge of time service, present salary $1,350, increase $187.50.

Mr. BERGERON. Why this increase ?

Mr. OLIVER. I can hardly explain fully. It is intended to increase Mr. Stewart's salary to $1,600, or an increase of $250. F. A. McDiarmid to $1,450 ; and W. M. Tobey to $1,400.

Professor King reports that these men are very competent and that he has to pay these salaries for scientific men or he could not get the work done.

Mr. BERGERON. Will they be entitled to the statutory increase afterwards ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. What will be the maximum of their salary?

Mr. OLIVER. It will be $1,900, which is the maximum of a first-class clerk.

Mr. BERGERON. How many altogether ?

Mr. OLIVER. Ten.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the work of that observatory ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to say what the work of the observatory is. Dr. King has control of the boundary and astronomical survey which regulates the boundaries between Canada and the United States. That is what is called field work and then there is the work done in the observatory.

Mr. BERGERON. When they go on surveys they are paid all their expenses?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Before we pass this item, I think we ought to have more particulars as to what really is the work done. The minister does not seem to know.

Mr. OLIVER. I am sorry that Dr. King is not here. He was here the night before last for the purpose of affording all the information that might be required. I cannot explain very well the technical or scientific work done in the observatory, but the operations in the field I am prepared to explain.

Dominion astronomical observatory—salaries of technical officers and clerks..	$ 15,305
Astronomical surveys — investigations and demarcations of the exterior boundaries of Canada, and the astronomical and geodetic work of the Department of the Interior, including contingent expenses of the Dominion astronomical observatory. Salaries of surveyors, their assistants, and temporary employees in the observatory may be paid out of this vote at rates exceeding $500 per annum, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..	244,000
	259,305

Mr. OLIVER. The survey of the boundary between the United States and Canada in British Columbia requires $35,000. This work consists of a resurvey and the placing of new monuments on the 49th parallel, under the agreement of 1902 with the United States. The operations so far have been confined to the portion of the boundary west of the summit of the Rocky mountains. There are monuments of stone and posts of bronze. The work has been very difficult from the mountainous character of the country. It is expected the mountainous portion will be fully completed this summer. All salaries of surveyors are covered by the amount stated, except that of the chief surveyor. Then for the Canadian and Alaska boundary, under the award of 1893, $41,000. This work consists of the demarcation of the boundary line near the Pacific coast, as defined by the tribunal of 1903. The work is difficult and slow, owing to the extremely mountainous character of the country. During the last three years the line has been surveyed at the most accessible places, but they have not yet reached those regions which are not on the regular routes of travel. Four survey parties are employed on the work, the United States employing a similar number. This boundary line follows partly the summit of the mountain range and partly the sinuosities of the coast, at a certain distance from the coast. So it is a most intricate piece of work. The two survey parties work in conjunction, so that the result will be satisfactory to both countries. The hon. gentleman can understand that a demarcation which is necessary at the summit of a mountain range covered with perpetual snow is a somewhat difficult operation, and involves the transport of supplies and instruments. There are four surveyors, each surveyor having under him a party of men. Then there are operations being carried on on the international boundary line between Quebec and New Brunswick and the adjacent states requiring $25,000. That is similar to the work on the 29th parallel, and consists in resurveying and remonumenting the international boundary line. The United States was asked by Canada in 1900 to co-operate with this work. An agreement was reached last year, and the work begun in August last on the northeast corner of the state of Vermont. The Canadian and the United States surveyors are employed in working together. About 35 miles have been marked. Then $50,000 is asked for demarking the 141st meridian between Alaska and the Yukon. Last year a convention was made with the United States for the survey of this line. The commissioners have been appointed, Mr. King on behalf of Canada and Mr. Jittman on behalf of the United States. They have already completed the division to a point at the crossing of the Yukon river. It is proposed during the coming season to survey a line south with all speed, to reach the head of the White river, where it is understood mining operations are carried on close to the boundary line.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman need not read these details. I want to know how many parties we have out altogether, when did they commence work and when did they finish?

Mr. OLIVER. There are no parties out at the present time. They work only during the summer season, and they have not started on the spring's work. They send their work here to the Dominion observatory, where the officers condense it and prepare it for the report—is that correct?

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. BERGERON. That is as I understand it.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the object of resurveying the line between Vermont and the province of Quebec? I thought that had been done and iron stakes driven long ago to mark the line.

Mr. OLIVER. It was done long ago, but, for some reason, the line was not satisfactory to the two countries concerned. I have already stated that an agreement was arrived at between Canada and the United States a year or two ago to have a resurvey. Arrangements were finally concluded only last year and we are asking for a vote this year to carry out the work.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is any change being made in the boundary line?

Mr. OLIVER. No. There may possibly have been inaccuracies in the original description, or the line as originally defined may have become defaced in one way or another—the monuments or marks may have been lost, so that renewal of them is necessary. And for all this it is necessary to actually and accurately relocate the line.

Mr. HENDERSON. At any place where I have been on the boundary I have found iron stakes driven which seemed to me to be of a permanent character and sufficient for a great length of time. I should dislike it very much if we were giving away a part of our territory.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not in a position to discuss that feature of the case. I assume that the matter received due consideration at the time. I am merely informing the House that the two governents having come to the conclusion that the work was necessary this vote is asked to carry out the work.

Government of the Northwest Territories—
Salary of Fred. White as Commissioner of the Northwest Territories, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..	$1,000
Clerical assistance, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..	600
Schools..	2,500
Relief to destitute..	500
Maintenance of insane patients..	1,000
Maintenance of prisoners..	1,000
Miscellaneous expenses..	1,400
Total..	8,000

Mr. BERGERON. What is now called the Northwest Territories?

Mr. OLIVER. That residue of the Dominion which is not included in the organized government of the provinces or the Yukon Territory.

Mr. BERGERON. What population has it ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have no definite information on that point. I believe there is an estimated population of the census. At one time this was described as the territories of Mackenzie, Keewatin, Franklin and Ungava.

Mr. BERGERON. That is under the Department of the Interior?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. What has Mr. White to do with it?

Mr. OLIVER. He is a commissioner.

Mr. BERGERON. He occupies the two positions?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Government of the Northwest Territories—Salary of Fred. White as Commissioner of the Northwest Territories from 1st September, 1905, to the 31st of March, 1907, at $1,000 per annum, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $1,583.33.

Mr. BLAIN. Is this the same salary as before?

Mr. OLIVER. This is to give Mr. White the amount which had accrued to him, but for which provision was not made.

Miscellaneous—maintenance, construction of roads, bridges and other necessary works in connection with the Hot Spring reservation near Banff station, Alberta, $34,000.

Mr. SPROULE. There seems to be quite an increase here?

Mr. OLIVER. The sum of $21,285 was voted for the nine months ending the 31st of March, 1907, being at the rate of $28,380 per annum. This vote for the next fiscal year is $34,000, an increase of $5,600 for the current year. Of this estimate the sum of $19,000 is for maintenance and $15,000 for new work. The revenue of the park from all sources is $14,044.55 for the fiscal year 1904-5.

Mr. BERGERON. How is that made up?

Mr. OLIVER. There are many sources. The rent yields $4,155.75—that is for the leased grounds—timber dues, $1,405.57; water rates, $200; cave and basin (tickets) $1,885.75; hot springs (tickets), $719.50. There are revenues also from dog licenses, livery licenses and so on.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the government control this sulphur hot water?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, they control the water, and it is on that account that the income is received from sale of tickets.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the government own the buildings?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, the government owns the buildings at the cave and basin and also at the hot springs.

Mr. BERGERON. You have to pay salaries to the employees I suppose?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, that comes under the vote for maintenance.

Construction of roads, bridle paths, and other necessary works, in connection with the Yoho Park and immediate vicinity, $10,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is this park?

Mr. OLIVER. While Banff park is on the east side of the summit Yoho park is on the west side. Yoho park, therefore, is in British Columbia and under different jurisdiction from the other. The Dominion government has retained to itself certain special authority in the government and control of Banff park which it does not have in Yoho park, which is under British Columbia authority. Therefore, though the parks adjoin, it is not well to include them as being actually one park.

Mr. BERGERON. Banff park, then, is in Alberta? Is there not also the local government there?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course, there are points at which the jurisdiction of the province and the Dominion in the park necessarily touch. So far we have not had any difficulty.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Who controls the liquor licenses?

Mr. OLIVER. The local government.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is that near Field?

Mr. OLIVER. Field is the capital, so to speak, of Yoho park. It is said that the scenic attractions are greater than in Banff park.

Cost of litigation, $11,000.

Mr. BOYCE. What litigation is this?

Mr. OLIVER. The sum of $250 was voted for the nine months ending 31st March, 1907, which is at the rate of $11,000 per annum. No increase is therefore asked for the next fiscal year. The money is required to pay costs of matters relating to disputed cases in connection with Dominion lands, timber and grazing leases in Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, mining cases in the Yukon Territory, or other questions which may arise during the period for which this estimate is prepared.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it out of this that you paid the Blairmore case?

Mr. OLIVER. It is not out of this vote but out of a corresponding vote that that was paid.

Mr. HENDERSON. Blairmore has nothing to do with the park?

Mr. OLIVER. No, we have passed from the park.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are the waters of Lake Louise included in Banff park?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, Banff park runs to the summit of the Rockies.

Mr. BERGERON. I thought the Canadian Pacific Railway owned the chalet on Lake Louise ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. We have done nothing at Lake Louise except to build the road. They provide the buildings. In fact, most of the Dominion government's work in the park is the improvement of roads and where they step aside from that is in dealing with the hot springs and in controlling the little town which is specially under their jurisdiction and not under provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose the government keeps the roads in order ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Engraving, lithographing and printing maps of the Dominion and the Northwest Territories, $40,000.

Mr. BERGERON. I hope my hon. friend will keep that work up, I think it is a very useful one and I wish that copies of these maps were sent to every school in the country. That is the best way to teach children what kind of a country we have.

Mr. DANIEL. How many maps does this amount provide for ?

Mr. SPROULE. What distribution of these maps do you make ?

Mr. BERGERON. The department has been very kind in so far as I know in supplying these maps to schools and educational institutions throughout the country. The maps which I procured from the department I sent to schools in my county and the teachers could not say too much in appreciation of them, because the children are very fond of looking at them and they learn a great deal from them.

Mr. SPROULE. What disposition do you make of the atlas ?

Mr. OLIVER. We have not yet arranged our system of distribution. The atlas is so very expensive and is of such a character that I do not think we will be able to make a distribution to what I might call private persons. What we propose to do is to distribute it amongst educational institutions, beginning at the top and going down as far as we have atlases to go.

Mr. SPROULE. What number have you issued ?

Mr. OLIVER. We gave an order for the printing of 6,000 and we have the issue now under order for binding, but of course we only get them from time to time. We got the first instalment a little while ago which was distributed amongst members and senators and we expect another instalment shortly. When that instalment arrives we will have our arrangements made as to what will be distributed, and the distribution will be made on that basis. If possible we will include public libraries of the larger and more important class, but I think, owing to the character of the atlas, it will be of more use to educational institutions than to any one else.

Mr. SPROULE. You are only getting out 6,000 in all ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would like to draw the minister's attention to the fact that the school map pays very little attention to the eastern coast of Canada. It is chiefly made for the west and complaints have reached me that some important places on the Atlantic coast are not noticed at all on this map. For instance, there is a great harbour in my own county known as Country harbour, one of the best harbours on the Atlantic coast. There are a few great harbours in Nova Scotia, such as Halifax, Sydney, Louisburg and Country Harbour. There is an absolute blank at the place where Country harbour ought to be and a number of other large harbours on the coast of Nova Scotia are not noticed at all. In some places that I know of teachers have refused to hang the map in the schoolhouse because it ignores important places in eastern Canada, and I hope the minister will find some person who has a little more geographical knowledge of eastern Canada.

Mr. BERGERON. If you send them a copy of the estimates they will know where all the wharfs and harbours are.

Mr. DANIEL. I noticed that one of the maps in the atlas was supposed to contain the racial characteristics of the people who inhabit the different counties of the various provinces. I noticed that St. John county was painted green. I looked to see what that meant and it meant that the county of St. John was inhabited by Irishmen. While there are a number of Irish in the county of St. John they are far from being the majority and every one knows that the city of St. John itself was settled by Loyalists. If the other counties of the Dominion are no more correct as far as the racial characteristics of their populations are concerned, then I think it will lead to misunderstanding rather than to the dissemination of correct information.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If my hon. friend is attempting to cast any reflection in any way upon the Irish I wish to make an objection.

Mr. SPROULE. I think I have just ground for complaining because I know there are a lot of Orangemen down there and I think there should be something to indicate that.

Mr. DANIEL. As far as the Orangemen are concerned I think they are mostly Irishmen as well.

Mr. BERGERON. But there is a little bit of yellow among the green.

Mr. OLIVER. In looking over that map I noticed a little thing similar to what my hon. friend points out and the way it arises is this : The geographer has taken the census and coloured the different districts according to his classification in accordance with the majority in each area. He has made a division of English, Scotch, Irish, French and German, and by dividing the English, Scotch and Irish separately it rather gives the impression that possibly the German or French are in the majority over the English when it is not the case. He has made a good attempt to give a great deal of information in very plain form, but perhaps his attempt is not as successful as we would wish it to be. However, that is how it occurs.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the colour of the French-Canadian ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know, really. But that is how he made the division.

Immigration—additional amount required for general immigration expenses, including British and continental bonuses and commissions, $100,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Where does this money go ?

Mr. OLIVER. The continental bonuses, $25,000 ; British bonuses, $25,000 ; commission and expenses locating farm labourers, eastern Canada, $50,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Nothing for the North Atlantic Trading Company ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. SPROULE. What are you going to do about the North Atlantic Trading Company ?

Mr. OLIVER. We are going to pay them all we owe them, and that is all.

Mr. SPROULE. They claim the right to continue under their agreement ; what is the government going to do about that?

Mr. OLIVER. We declined to take that view. We gave them notice that on a certain day we would not pay bonuses on immigrants arriving in Canada under their auspices, and it is for them to make the next move.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the date up ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, since the 1st of November.

Mr. BERGERON. When you say you will pay them all you owe them; does that include printing ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. BERGERON. What amount do you owe ?

Mr. OLIVER. They claim we owe them on 1,500 immigrants and we do not admit that. That is the amount in dispute but we hope to have it settled shortly.

Mr. BENNETT. What will they do if you don't pay them ; suicide ?

Expenses of deporting undesirable immigrants, $2,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How many were deported ?

Mr. OLIVER. A day or two ago there were 137 so far. Under the Act of last session we were allowed to go back two years to deport undesirable immigrants, and it is not likely we will have to make as large a deportation in the future.

Mr. SPROULE. If you do not exercise greater caution than you do, you will.

Mr. OLIVER. The fact that we are taking active steps to deport, will I think deter charitable institutions and others from sending undesirables.

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose your agents are ordered to be careful that no undesirable immigrants come in ?

Mr. OLIVER. Undoubtedly, but in the hurry of examination at the ports we may not detect them all.

Expenses incidental to freight blockade in western provinces ; fuel, provisions and seed grain, $30,000.

Mr. BERGERON. How did you ascertain this amount ?

Mr. OLIVER. This undertaking was entered into in February last, and while the accounts are not altogether closed, we have an idea that this will meet the expense.

Mr. SPROULE. By whom is the expenditure controlled ?

Mr. OLIVER. By Mr. Scott of the immigration branch here, and Mr. C. W. Speers has had active control.

Mr. SPROULE. Are you buying much seed grain ?

Mr. OLIVER. 10,000 bushels of oats, 5,000 bushels of wheat and 3,000 bushels of potatoes.

Government of the Yukon Territory, $100,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Have you a governor yet for the Yukon, or are the advertisements still out ?

Mr. OLIVER. We have not opened the tenders yet.

Mr. BERGERON. When are you going to appoint him ?

Mr. OLIVER. In plenty of time to get in by the opening of navigation.

Mr. BERGERON. Things seem to be going on pretty well there.

Mr. OLIVER. The country was very well run under the late commissioner, and it can keep on going for a little while.

Mr. SPROULE. Last session I brought to the attention of the Prime Minister a somewhat lengthy complaint in regard to the administration of justice in the Yukon and he promised to look into it. Were it not that we are drawing so close to the end of the session, I would ask the Minister of the Interior to give us a history of that matter.

Amount required to pay balance of accounts in connection with the construction of a waterworks and sewerage system at Banff, Alberta, $14,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the minister explain how it is that the Dominion government is providing water and sewerage works in one of the provinces of the Dominion?

Mr. OLIVER. It is in pursuance of a policy adopted by the previous government, which established the Banff Park as a recreation ground for the whole people of Canada, and assumed the responsibility for carrying on the local government of the park, in order that the Dominion might have absolute control of it.

Mr. BERGERON. Do the government charge anything to the people who are living there in the way of compensation for these expenditures?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, we have a scale of rates for water.

Mr. BERGERON. Are the animals in the park increasing?

Mr. OLIVER. They are. There was an increase of fourteen last year.

Mr. BENNETT. Is Mr. Congdon still in the employ of the department at the Yukon?

Mr. OLIVER. No, he resigned some little time ago.

Indians, Ontario and Quebec—to provide a further amount for medical attendance, seed and relief, $1,500.

Mr. BENNETT. I want to congratulate the minister on taking the advice—may I say it not egotistically—of myself by opening to public sale the islands belonging to the Indians on the Georgian bay. I think the Indians will appreciate that, and the fair-minded portion of the rest of the community up there will appreciate it also. Had the department pursued that policy during the last ten years, the Indian funds there would have been augmented by tens of thousands of dollars. It has been a standing disgrace that these islands have been given away to political friends of the government, and I congratulate the minister on selling what he sold last year at public auction, and I hope he will stick to that line of policy.

Mr. BOYCE. I hope I shall be able next session to extend my congratulations to the minister on opening up the Indian lands in West Algoma. Petitions from Sault Ste. Marie have been filed pointing out that a large tract of land included in the Garden River Indian reserve is not available for settlement. It lies in the midst of a very valuable tract of country. There has been no difficulty in opening the Indian reserve between North Bay and Sturgeon Falls, which had to a large extent retarded cultivation. There are very strong reasons indeed why the reserve east of Sault Ste. Marie should be opened. It has been lying for years in an undeveloped state. If the minister would take it into his serious consideration, he would confer a great boon on those people, and remove what is undoubtedly at the present time a bar to the advancement of that country.

Mr. HERRON. Has any progress been made with regard to opening up that portion of the Blood reserve which is near the town of Cardston?

Mr. OLIVER. The inspector has been instructed to enter into negotiation with the Indians with a view of securing the surrender of a strip, the balance of the township on the south side of the Blood reserve. In regard to the Sault Ste. Marie reserve, I will take note of what my hon. friend said. Of course, it goes without saying that it is very desirable to secure the surrender of that reserve, but it is not as easy as it appears. In regard to the surrender of the reserve lying near North Bay, the department made three attempts at that before they were successful, the negotiations extending over several years. However, we were successful ultimately in arriving at a fair and satisfactory settlement with the Indians. The Bill which the House was good enough to agree to last session, giving us a little more freedom in dealing with the Indians, has been of considerable assistance.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I want to draw the minister's attention to a matter in the district I come from. I refer to St. Antoine's Island, Lake St. Clair district. The information I have is that this island, which is an Indian island, has been leased to a number of gentlemen who can afford to keep up a club. I understand that the Minister of Public Works is one of them. I want to say that there is great complaint that those who have leased the island are taking in a great deal more of the marsh lands than really belong to it. I draw this to the attention of the minister, so that if the question comes up before his department, he will see that the public is protected.

Mr. SPROULE. How much rent are they paying?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I think $700 a year.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have been collecting information with regard to the Indian Department the last couple of years, and hoped I would have had the time this session to give it to the House. But I want now to urge the necessity of not disposing of an acre of Indian lands except by public auction. It is disgraceful to find that tens of thousands of acres have been sold at ten cents and twenty cents an acre, and islands sold at $1 apiece. Of 550,000 acres, practically 500,000 acres were sold without being put up to public auction or tender. They were sold at private sale or at an upset price fixed by the department. I have not the time to go into that matter this session, but I sincerely hope that the hon. minister will see that not another acre or island is disposed of except at public auction or by public tender at the highest price obtainable. As regards the schools, a number of men have been urging on the minister within the last few weeks the necessity of looking into the Indian schools throughout the Dominion. This investigation is required because of the careless and reckless manner in which the Indian schools are conducted. It is a shame and a disgrace to see them so badly conducted and the money at the disposal of the Indian Department wasted. I am satisfied that if the minister will investigate, he will not allow this condition of affairs to continue.

Mr. LALOR. I want to congratulate the hon. minister on some changes he has made in connection with the Indian schools. I represent a county in which a large portion of the Six Indian Nations are located. Previous to the present minister taking office, the schools upon the reserve were not permitted to use the text books of the province of Ontario as the other schools in the county do. Neither did they have the advantage of the inspection by the inspector nor were they permitted even to have qualified teachers on the reserve. They had to use as text books an old set which had been in use forty years ago, and it was utterly impossible for the children to pass a public school examination for admission to the high school. But I am glad to see that the minister has changed that condition, and has permitted these advantages to be enjoyed by the Indian children. But instead of permitting the enjoyment of these advantages, I hope he will make it absolute law that they shall have these advantages in the future. The use of the Ontario text books is only permissible now, but it ought to be made compulsory. There should also be compulsory inspection, and qualified teachers. If he makes these changes compulsory, he will make a splendid move in the right direction, and I want to compliment him on all the changes he has made.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the celebrated Dugas reserve on the French river yet been surrendered?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. BENNETT. When there is question of surrender, the minister should use extreme caution before disposing of that reserve. That timber is worth over half a million dollars and many a weary pilgrimage has been made to Ottawa within the last ten years in that direction.

Mr. OLIVER. I assume the hon. gentleman means that it would be desirable in the public interest that the timber should be sold.

Mr. BENNETT. Not necessarily, but I am pointing out that it should not be sold without the minister taking every means to get the best price.

Mr. OLIVER. There is always danger of fire, and it would be a loss to the country as well as to the Indians if that timber should be destroyed by fire. Therefore I think it would be desirable to secure a surrender and then put the timber up to the highest bidder. That is one of the cases in which it is clearly in the public interest, as well as that of the Indians, that a sale should be made. But so far it has been absolutely impossible to get the consent of the Indians. We cannot deal with them except with the fullest possible respect for their rights; and when rights are accompanied by prejudices, it is very difficult to come to an agreement. As regards the sales of Indian lands, we have sold something like 220,000 acres of Indian lands within the last few years by public competition and have secured surrender of parts of two more reserves, which will add about 100,000 acres more to that amount. The policy of the department is distinctly to sell the Indian lands at public competition.

Mr. BOYCE. It has not been always so.

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot answer as to that. There are occasions when it is possibly not the best policy to do so. For instance, when it is only a very small island of not very great value, it is probably the best policy to sell it at a valuation, but the rule I have adopted is that if the valuation is $100 or over the islands must be sold by public competition.

Mr. BENNETT. Who makes the valuation?

Mr. OLIVER. The inspector of the Indian Department. An inspection was made some years ago and a valuation, and we intend having another inspection made. I do not want to claim credit where credit is not due, but I am stating what my idea was. Where the valuation is over $100, we say it must be by public competition, where it is less we think it may be sold at a valuation. In regard to Indian education——

Mr. BENNETT. I can tell the minister that there should be no sales by valuation on these islands in the Georgian bay—it should be fair open, public tender. I can tell him that one island has been sold to political friends of hon. gentlemen opposite for $200 on which they will realize $4,000 or $5,000 selling out the island in lots of $100 or $200 each.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. There is the same state of affairs on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. OLIVER. I was about to say, that there is no question with which the government in Canada has to deal that is more difficult than the question of Indian education. It is an old saying that one man can lead a horse to water, but twenty men cannot make him drink. When you are trying to educate a people who do not want to be educated, the problem is certainly a difficult one.

Mr. MORIN. Like waking a man up when he is not asleep.

Mr. OLIVER. Something of that nature. We are doing the best we can. We have had a number of conferences with people who are interested in the subject. And I beg to assure the House that if we have not done better it is not because of lack of intention or desire, but because of the great difficulties of the situation.

Mr. BOYCE. I do not desire to delay the committee, but I would like to mention that there are whole townships of Indian lands in Algoma which have recently been disposed of without competition and on valuations which are open to severe criticism and censure. In excess of 50,000 acres of some of the best timber lands in Algoma have been disposed of to very close friends of the government at ridiculous and absurd figures. One of these sales has recently been the subject of a question on the order paper. The sale is not yet closed. It is made to Pembroke parties and the lands are in Vankoughnet and other townships. The Deputy Superintendent General will be able to advise the minister about it. The terms of sale nominally provide for the most stringent conditions. But, standing here as the representative of West Algoma, I want to say to the minister that I am informed in the most positive manner by men who have travelled these woods for the past eight years, that these conditions have not been fulfilled—not one iota. Yet these men are applying for their patents, and say they intend to get them. I ask the minister to look into the case. Three years have gone by, yet I am told on the most satisfactory authority, the authority of men who reside in the neighbourhood, that the conditions, involving colonization, the erection of mills and so on, have not only not been fulfilled, but have been absolutely ignored. I have two cases now in mind in which the land was bought simply for purposes of speculation and by close friends of the government. The object is to traffic in the timber and in the lands. I purpose, next session, drawing attention to some of these transactions which are of the most outrageous character, transactions by which friends of the government have been enabled to realize tremendous profits, by simply turning over the privileges that have been transferred to them.

Mr. BENNETT. Who is to be appointed to this position of inspector and valuator on Mantoulin Island, at a salary of $1,200 ? No doubt somebody is ready for the position and that, in fact, the salary has been provided for the man.

Mr. OLIVER. The appointee is Mr. John Fraser, of Gore Bay. The appointment is made necessary by the fact that there is considerable timber under license in this district, and also 4,000 acres of unsold surrendered lands, and great care has to be exercised in administering the timber and lands and to settle disputes arising between the holders and the settlers.

Mr. BENNETT. The department has Indian agents strung all along that shore. Why cannot one of them perform these duties ?

Mr. OLIVER. We have not found Indian agents satisfactory for this service. An Indian agent is supposed to be a good man to handle Indians and he may not be a good man to handle timber speculators. Where the interests are important, there should be some person who would be directly and unquestionably responsible to us. To avoid the conditions that my hon. friend from East Algoma (Mr. Boyce) has alluded to, we want some officials who will see to it that the conditions imposed are faithfully acted up to, a man whom we can hold absolutely responsible.

Mr. BOYCE. Did Mr. Fraser hold an office under the late Ontario government ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot answer that.

Mr. BOYCE. Who is the inspector and valuator for Algoma ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is proposed that this gentleman shall be the timber inspector and valuator for Algoma—he is now.

Mr. BOYCE. When was he appointed ?

Mr. OLIVER. In February of this year.

Mr. BOYCE. Who occupied the office before that ?

Mr. OLIVER. Nobody.

Mr. BENNETT. How are these valuations made ?

Mr. OLIVER. The valuations were made by Mr. McCaulay, who was especially appointed for that purpose.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not know Mr. Fraser at all, but he comes from a suspicious part of the country when he comes from Algoma. I submit that when he makes a valuation, an independent valuation should be made by the local agent as well.

Mr. OLIVER. That would be all right.

Mr. BENNETT. There are two or three local agents whose opinions I would as soon have as that of Mr. Fraser or anybody else.

Mr. HERRON. Have any steps been taken to preserve the game in the Rocky Mountains south of the Crow's Nest Pass, which is being exterminated by the Stoney Indians? It will be remembered that during the past year, four or five hundred deer were slaughtered within a few miles of Pincher Creek.

Mr. OLIVER. That is under the jurisdiction of the provincial governments.

Mr. HERRON. But this government controls the Indians, and it is the Stoney Indians who are exterminating the game.

Mr. OLIVER. The Indians are subject to the game laws of the province, just as white men are.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would like to ask the minister how it is that in Ontario and Quebec there are only $126,000 spent for all purposes, while in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta there are $783,000?

Mr. OLIVER. The reason is that the Indians of Ontario and Quebec, a large number of them, are not under the same treaty stipulations as the Indians of the west. The Dominion government has different responsibilities in regard to Indians in different parts of the country. The conditions of the Indians of Ontario and Quebec are not at all parallel to those of the Northwest Territories. Although it would appear that the Dominion government was dealing more generously with the Indians of the west than with the Indians of the east, as a matter of fact, according to treaty obligations, they are dealing more generously with the Indians of the east, because we are not under treaty obligations to give the Indians of the east a large part of the assistance we are giving them, whereas the Dominion government is under treaty obligations to give assistance in large measure to the Indians of the west. The Indians of the east have been under civilizing influences for a hundred years, the Indians of the west have not been under civilizing influences for anything like that length of time.

To provide for expenses in connection with the Babine investigation, $2,000.

Mr. OLIVER. That was a difficulty which arose last fall in the northern part of British Columbia between the Indians of the Babine band and officials of the Marine Department. The difficulty arose in connection with the fisheries upon which these Babines depend for their sustenance. There were alarmist reports of a somewhat serious condition of affairs for a time, and it was thought advisable to have a discussion direct between the Indians and the officials of the department in Ottawa. So arrangements were made whereby the chief and two members of his band, with an interpreter, should come down here and discuss the question with the officials of the Marine Department with a view of arriving at a solution. This is to pay the expenses incurred thereby.

Mr. BOYCE. Was any fee paid to any official of the Indian Department in that connection?

Mr. OLIVER. Certain officials of the Fisheries Department had to be brought down, whose expenses had to be paid by the Marine and Fisheries Department.

Indians—Ontario and Quebec, $126,090.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the minister one question about the disposal of timber limits belonging to the Dominion on Indian reserves. Do you sell the land outright or do you lease the right to cut timber under regulations and conditions?

Mr. OLIVER. If we deal with the timber separate from the land, we deal with it practically in the same way as we deal with the public domain of the country, that is, we put it up to competition, and the person making the highest bid gets the timber and pays dues on what he cuts.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do you endeavour so to arrange it that you can get a perpetual crop off the land? The minister knows the work that has been done, or attempted to be done, by the Forestry Association in educating the public in the proper way to deal with timber limits. It would seem to me that a very good object-lesson might be given if these timber lands could be dealt with in that way. The minister knows from the discussion which took place before the Forestry Association, how these lands are dealt with in some parts of Europe. They are great national assets, and are dealt with in such a way that a crop is produced from them year after year. They are timber lands in perpetuity, yielding an annual crop. It would seem to be a desirable thing that, not only these timber lands, but all timber lands should be dealt with in that way. I remember one illustration that was mentioned at the meeting of the Forestry Association about a year and a half ago. A small mountainous tract in the kingdom of Saxon had yielded what seemed to us an enormous revenue to that kingdom for more than a hundred years, simply because reasonable precaution had been taken as to the conditions under which the timber should be cut.

Mr. OLIVER. I am afraid that up to the present time we have not dealt with the situation as my hon. friend has suggested, except to limit the size of the timber that might be cut. We do not allow timber to be cut under nine to ten inches, so it continues to grow. But we have not systematized our regulations in the manner my hon. friend has suggested, and as very likely we ought to do, that is, regulating the cutting so as to provide for reproduction. That is a matter that will be considered in view of the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any provision made whereby you increase the royalty from time to time as the value of timber goes up? I have always regarded the system of both the provincial government and the Dominion government as a wasteful one in this respect. You sell the timber at a bonus, and that bonus is proportioned to the value of the timber at the time of sale, and it is provided that the royalty shall be paid as well from year to year though they frequently reserve the right to increase the royalty, it is seldom increased. I think that is an absolute waste of what belongs to the public. The royalty should be increased on the cut as the price of timber goes up.

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed there is a provision which would permit the government to increase the royalty, but I am not sure they have ever taken advantage of it. In the case of pine they have increased the duty from 75 cents to $1.40. We have not made the attempt to carry out the principle my hon. friend is suggesting, that is to say, we have not raised the royalty from year to year in proportion to the increase in the price of lumber. Of course a man who buys a limit and has paid the price on a certain basis, would probably think it unfair to him to increase the royalty subsequently.

Mr. SPROULE. I cannot agree with that, because that timber is bought with the distinct understanding and announcement that the government have the right to increase the royalty from time to time as the price of timber goes up. Therefore no injustice is done to him. He buys the timber on the basis of the present valuation, knowing that the timber is liable to double or treble in price and that he is liable to pay the increased royalty. On our timber in Ontario timber licenses have been granted, some of them fifty years ago, covering great areas, for which a very small amount of money was paid, and although the licenses are renewable from year to year they are practically made in perpetuity. Only once in all that time has the royalty been increased something like 75 cents per thousand feet. As between the time when that license was given and to-day the timber is worth probably four or five times as much. How can it be defended? Yet we will give away what belongs either to the country or the Indians upon that basis and allow what ought to be preserved for the benefit of the Indians of the province to pass to an individual who has leased it under conditions which are not the same as those which prevail to-day. I think it is a most unjustifiable thing for any government to deal in this way with the assets of the country that are in trust for the time being.

Indians, relief, medical attendance and medicines—Ontario, $6,000.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the minister how our old friend Giant's Tomb is getting along? Have any more fillibusters been approaching it lately?

Mr. OLIVER. I think that the pirates have rather been scared off. I am informed that we have not had any correspondence since last session.

Mr. BOYCE. I would like to ask the minister what department is liable for the maintenance of roads across Indian reserves? I think there was some correspondence in regard to a road which crosses the Garden Indian reserve. There is a bridge broken down, and it is really very dangerous to traffic. An official of either this government or the Ontario government sent a quantity of timber there to repair the bridge, but nothing has been done. I refer to Beaver creek bridge. I think there is some question of jurisdiction as to the maintenance of roads on Indian reserves.

Mr. OLIVER. This government has all jurisdiction in regard to matters within the Indian reserve, which includes roads, but at the same time there must always be room for what might be called a conflict of interests, which would require an approach between the local government and the Dominion government in regard to these matters. Probably the bridge in question is an instance of the desirability of an understanding between the provincial and Dominion governments.

Mr. BOYCE. It is an Ontario government road that traverses the reserve.

Mr. OLIVER. That is the point. We have jurisdiction over the territory occupied by the Indians for the benefit of the Indians. Our right is to exercise jurisdiction over it for the benefit of the Indians, and if the road or the work on the road is for the benefit of the reserve this responsibility is on us, but if the benefit is to the people who are not on the reserve, then there is a clash of interests. We have the control of the reserve, we have the responsibility on the reserve in so far as the Indians are concerned, but this road that my hon. friend speaks about is not for the benefit of the Indians at all ; it is for the benefit of the white people who live on either side of the reserve, and, as far as that is the case, it is entirely under the responsibility of the provincial government.

Mr. BOYCE. This is the only road by which the Indians can get to Garden River station.

Mr. OLIVER. As far as the road is for the benefit of the Indians, it is our duty to see that it is fixed. But if the road is for the benefit of white people, and merely crosses the reserve for their convenience, then naturally the cost of the improvement of such a road rests upon the people who require to use it, and not upon the Indians, whose land is simply used for the road which crosses it.

Mr. BOYCE. The Indians are complaining that they cannot get across the bridge.

Mr. OLIVER. If it is for the benefit of the Indians, the responsibility is ours, and we will look after it. I do not know this case.

Mr. BOYCE. I think the government built the bridge—I am not quite sure about it—and if they built it they should maintain it.

Mr. OLIVER. There are frequently cases where an improvement is made, not for the benefit of the reserve at all, but for the benefit of the white people on either side of the reserve, and these improvements are under the care of the provincial government. It is necessary that there should be some understanding in regard to that special case between the provincial and Dominion governments, and I beg to assure my hon. friend that there will never be any difficulty from our side in arriving at an understanding which will be for the benefit of both if possible.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose some one happened to meet with an accident on that bridge who was not an Indian, who would pay for it?

Mr. W. WRIGHT. In my district we have an Indian reserve which is very difficult of access, and in order that the Indians might be able to get in and out of that reserve they have to pass over some other territory that does not belong to the reserve. There is a road through that territory travelled by nobody but Indians. The road was built for the Indians' use exclusively, it has been under the control of the Dominion government, and the local government does not seem to feel under any obligation to keep it in good repair. It is in a bad state of repair at the present time, and I would like to know whether this government would undertake to repair that road?

Mr. OLIVER. That is one of those cases where an amicable understanding would be necessary between the provincial government and the Indian Department. The Indian Department has no authority to spend any money outside of the Indian reserve. At the same time, the circumstances being as have been stated, it is just one of those cases where there should be a mutual understanding between the Indian Department and the provincial government ; and I will say in this case, as I said in the other, that we will not stand in the way of arriving at a solution of the difficulty that will be for the benefit of all parties, nor will we stand on any technicality. At the same time we do not want to be asked to spend money outside of the reserve for the sole benefit of the Indians nor to spend money on the reserve for the sole benefit of white people. It is a matter which can only be amicably settled on the merits of each case, and I beg to assure the hon. gentleman that we are prepared to do the amicable on our part.

Mr. BENNETT. I see at page J—8 of the Auditor General's Report under the heading of 'Annuities, gratuities and expenses of negotiating treaty No. 9' that J. G. Ramsden, a gentleman who was pressed upon the department to accompany the party that was out paying annuities to the Indians, an entry 'less $25 paid to Joseph Laurin.' I see that Joseph Laurin officiated also as cook at $65 per month. How does it happen that Ramsden pays Laurin $25 ? Did Mr. Ramsden leave the party, and did Mr. Laurin take his place as guide, philosopher, and cook ?

Mr. OLIVER. It was necessary to employ Mr. Laurin as cook when the party was out, and they had to pay him without bringing him back to headquarters. It was a cash transaction.

Mr. BENNETT. Another item that catches my eye is a payment to an old friend of the late defunct Ontario government, who evidently has to seek new pastures. Mr. Louis Heyd, of Brantford was paid $771 for legal services in the King against Bennett. I am thankful to say that Bennett is no relation of mine. What was that action about ?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Heyd was appointed by the Department of Justice to plead the case of this Indian who was under a serious charge.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the charge ; Mr. Heyd got a pretty good fee.

Mr. OLIVER. The charge was murder and my hon. friend's namesake was hanged.

Mr. BENNETT. It was a pretty good fee for Mr. Heyd, but in view of his bitter disappointment in not being able to get anything more out of the Ontario government I suppose we had better pay it.

New Brunswick Indians—relief and seed grain, $2,500.

Mr. DANIEL. What kind of seed grain do we supply to the Indians; I do not think any wheat is grown in New Brunswick.

Mr. OLIVER. We supply the ordinary field grain, wheat, oats and barley.

Indians—British Columbia—industrial and boarding schools, $66,800.

Mr. SPROULE. How many industrial and boarding schools have you in British Columbia?

Mr. OLIVER. Twenty industrial and boarding schools and thirty-eight day schools.

Mr. SPROULE. Are they under the control of the government or of certain religious denominations?

Mr. OLIVER. They are all under the control of one church or another and the government pays so much per head towards the support of the schools.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the minister give us the denomination to which each school belongs and the amount paid per capita?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, I will give you all the information.

Kamloops, 50 pupils at $130, Roman Catholic; Kootenay, 50 pupils at $130, Roman Catholic; Kuper Island, 50 pupils at $130, Roman Catholic; William's Lake, 50 pupils at $130, Roman Catholic; St. Mary's, 60 pupils at $60, Roman Catholic; Clayoquot, 50 pupils at $130, Roman Catholic; Squamish, 50 pupils at $60, Roman Catholic; Alert Bay, 35 pupils at $130, Church of England; Alert Bay (Girls' Home) 10 pupils at $60, Church of England; All Hallows, 35 pupils at $50, Church of England; Metlakatla, 30 boys at $140, 30 girls at $100, Church of England; Coqualitza, 80 pupils at $130, Methodist; Port Simpson (Girls') 35 pupils at $60, Methodist; Port Simpson, (Boys' School) 20 pupils at $60, Methodist; Alberni, 50 pupils at $60, Presbyterian; Ahousat, 25 pupils at $60, Presbyterian; Lytton, 40 pupils at $130, Church of England; Schelt Boarding School, 50 pupils at $60, Roman Catholic.

Indians—Ontario and Quebec—to provide a further amount for legal expenses, $5,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What is that for?

Mr. OLIVER. This is with a view to secure if possible a settlement of a difficulty which has been outstanding for many years in regard to the Oka Indian reserve. Some years ago we had a vote of $5,000 for legal expenses which it was intended to employ for securing a settlement of this difficulty. It was expected that while the Indian Department would provide the expenses on behalf of the Indians, the other parties to the dispute would provide the other half of the required expenditure. Apparently that is not likely to be the case. The position is that the Indians want a decision from the throne itself; they want the word of the King whether they are right or wrong, and they will not be satisfied with anything less. Therefore, we are asking for this additional amount in order that we may pay the expenses of taking the case to the Privy Council and secure a decision which must be binding on all parties, and which the Indians say they will abide by.

Mr. BENNETT. Who are the counsel in the case?

Mr. OLIVER. We have not engaged any counsel so far and have not taken any active steps in the matter.

Mr. BENNETT. Who has been acting heretofore?

Mr. OLIVER. No money has been expended. On previous occasions there have been different counsel employed representing the Indians on one side and the seminary on the other.

Mr. SPROULE. When did you reach the decision to take the case to the Privy Council?

Mr. OLIVER. Within a couple of months. The chief came up to see me about it, and I discussed the matter with him. He said they would accept no decision except that of the King; if the King said they were wrong, they would move, but until the King said they were wrong they would not move.

To provide an amount necessary to restore to their former condition the funds of the Mississaguas of the Credit for the depletion of their capital by reverse of entry of interest paid under authority of order in council of 30th June, 1884, $29,161.17.

Mr. BOYCE. Will the minister explain that?

Mr. OLIVER. There were certain funds belonging to the Indians which a number of years ago were not credited to them, and action was taken on behalf of the Indians to secure the crediting of those funds to them. The action has been decided in the courts in favour of the Indians and this vote is to carry out the decision of the court.

Mr. LALOR. Where are the Mississaguas Indians located?

Mr. OLIVER. These are the Mississaguas of the Credit.

Mr. HENDERSON. They are in the constituency of the hon. member for Peel.

Mr. LALOR. The reason I ask is that I had inquiries from some parties connected with the Six Nation Indians as to when this sum was to be voted, as they thought some of them might be on the Six Nation reserve.

British Columbia—to provide an amount for Babine Indians, $6,500.

Mr. BENNETT. Is this for the purpose of giving the tribe a trip to England?

Mr. OLIVER. This is in pursuance of an arrangement between the Indians and the Fisheries Department. The Indians complained that they had no agricultural land on their reserve. They had taken the reserve with a view to fishing and not farming; but when the department refused to allow them to fish, the reserve was of no value. An arrangement was made with the Indian Department to purchase for the Indians from the British Columbia government a certain amount of land of agricultural value out of which they could expect to make a living irrespective of fisheries.

Yukon—to pay Godefrey Madore, M.D,, for medical attendance on the Indians of Selkirk and vicinity during a period extending from January 10, 1900, to March 12, 1902, $1,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What has been done since 1902?

Mr. OLIVER. This attendance was given by Dr. Madore before arrangements were made for regular attendance by the surgeon of the mounted police. Dr. Madore was not aware that accounts in detail should be kept. Mr. Congdon, when Commissioner of the Yukon, recommended the payment of $1,000 in full for these services, but the department delayed paying in order to get the usual return. As we cannot get a detailed account, it is a question whether we should refuse to pay for the work unless we get it. But the department is thoroughly satisfied that the work was done.

Mr. SPROULE. You are satisfied from the recommendation of Mr. Congdon?

Mr. OLIVER. No; the account has been certified to by the Commissioner of Police also.

To provide salary and travelling expenses for Indian superintendence, Nova Scotia, $2,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Is that a new office?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. At present we have a number of isolated reserves with local agents scattered over this province. There are no means of carrying on a general policy with regard to them. The reserves are insignificant, the salaries are small, and the agents have really no personal responsibility.

Mr. BOYCE. Has any one been named to the place?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many Indians are there?

Mr. OLIVER. About 1,600.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. You have $7,925 in the main estimates for the Indians in Nova Scotia and are now adding $2,000.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. Will this $2,000 include travelling expenses?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

To provide for the payment of salary of the timber inspector and valuator for the Manitoulin Island and the north shore of Lake Huron and Georgian bay, $1,200.

Mr. BENNETT. Will this include travelling expenses?

Mr. OLIVER. No; he will have travelling expenses besides.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this a new office?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. That was all discussed a little while ago. I explained that where we find we have very large timber interests and have to sell the land and timber under certain conditions, the local agent is not always the best man to see that those conditions are complied with. We think we would do better for the Indian Department if we had a salaried officer responsible to us for the carrying out of the conditions of the sale.

Mr. ALCORN. Why this vote for printing and stationery?

Mr. OLIVER. When the estimates for the nine months to the 31st March, 1907, were prepared, a sufficient amount was not provided for stationery and printing. The schools, which are provided with books and stationery from this vote, usually receive their supply in the summer months, which makes the heaviest part of the expenditure fall into the first part of the year.

Excise—stamps for imported and Canadian tobacco, $10,000.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Before that item passes I want to draw the minister's attention to the matter of the tobacco interest. We had that matter discussed the other day, but since then I have had communications from parties interested who say that the Empire Tobacco Company in Ontario, which buys the bulk of the Canadian tobacco grown in that district, have issued a circular stating that they will not purchase any of this year's crop because they have a supply which will do them for the next two years. That is due to the fact that as the tariff is arranged at present, the American tobacco is taking the place of the Canadian tobacco. That certainly is the case in the district I come from. I cannot speak for the province of Quebec. I cite this to show the position our tobacco growers are in this year and in which they must remain so long as there is no change in the tariff.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I was not aware of the facts cited by my hon. friend. There was a proposition to rearrange the duties, but we found that we could not take that up this session. I do not know whether that is a fact or not, but I suppose that they concluded to purchase tobacco and that they are using American tobacco instead. That is a question of trade which we do not control.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I do not want to object unnecessarily, but this is a matter in which I have taken a great interest ever since I have had the honour of being a member of this House. This is a very important question to our agriculturists, and it seems to me that in connection with it a great responsibility rests upon the government. There are far less important questions to which the careful attention of the government has been given. The tobacco industry of this country is suffering for lack of proper action on the part of the government.

Mr. FIELDING. It may be deemed wise, for departmental reasons or for general reasons, to readjust these duties, and in that readjustment the wishes of the tobacco growers may be more fully met. But, so far as the question of protection is concerned, there is no grievance on the part of the tobacco people. The impression that the tobacco interest is not receiving as fair protection as other branches of industry in this country is a mistake. The tobacco industry is very strongly protected.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Yes, so far as the government is concerned in getting revenue from it, but not from the farmers' standpoint.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, from the farmers' standpoint. The duty on the average American tobacco which comes into Canada in competition with the Canadian leaf—and the price of that class of tobacco on the average, is not more than 15 cents a pound—is 10 cents. This is a very heavy protective duty indeed. It has been under consideration whether the duties might not be readjusted more satisfactorily to the department, and, in that readjustment the interests of the growers might be promoted. But, even if they are not, it is a mistake to suppose that the tobacco industry—that is, the tobacco growing industry, the industry of the farmer—is not protected. It is much better protected to-day than many other classes of industry.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Why not adjust our tariff to the American tariff?

Mr. FIELDING. Why not adopt the American tariff altogether? We have decided that we will not adopt the American tariff.

Mr. WILLIAM WRIGHT. What is the difference between the excise and the customs duties?

Mr. FIELDING. I could not give that off-hand. I was confining my attention to the duty on the raw article. The duty there is called an excise duty, but it is practically a customs duty. There is an excise duty of 5 cents a pound on tobacco manufactured of the Canadian leaf, and 25 cents a pound on that manufactured from imported leaf. In my remarks I must confine myself to the position of the grower of the leaf, who is brought into competition with the grower of the American leaf.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How does the minister account for the fact that the farmers have been notified not to grow this tobacco that it will not be purchased?

Mr. FIELDING. For a long time our manufacturers would not use our Canadian leaf at all. But great progress has been made of recent years. The leaf is grown in better condition and improvements have been made in the curing of it. Our tobacco industry is taking a place which it did not occupy before. But, of course, in some quarters there is even yet a prejudice against the Canadian leaf. However, as I have said, on the tobacco which costs from 12 cents to 20 cents a pound—the average would be less than 20 cents—there is a customs duty of 10 cents a pound.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would it not be possible for the American producers of the cheap tobacco to form a combine or arrange with the Canadian producers that they would not use the Canadian tobacco but would import the American leaf?

Mr. FIELDING. It would be possible. But I do not think there is a combine as a matter of fact. There is a prejudice in some quarters against the Canadian leaf. I will not say that that prejudice was, at one time, wholly unjust. A few years ago, our tobacco was not well cured. There has been an improvement in Candian tobacco within the last few years, and the result is that a great deal more of it has been used. All I desire is that the House should not run away with the idea that the growers of leaf tobacco have less protection than other producers have.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I think I know something of this subject, and, in my opinion, these growers should be better protected. Last year we imported 15,000,000 pounds of American tobacco, and, according to the information given us by the government, 9,000,000 pounds of this goes into plug tobacco. It is precisely the leaf such as we grow and can grow in Canada. Possibly the reason our tobacco has the reputation which it did not deserve is that that 9,000,000 pounds of American tobacco came in to take the place of what should have been grown and sold in our own country. If our farmers were given the protection they ought to have, if they knew that they were being effectually protected, they would feel justified in providing the proper buildings and appliances to make tobacco a better product than it can be made otherwise. If we have not the proper quality of tobacco, it is because we have not proper buildings to put it in, and the reason these buildings are not provided is that there is no encouragement to our farmers to provide them. And there are the figures—90,000,000 pounds of tobacco imported from the United States the sale of which really belongs to Canadians. I do not care how you arrange it, but keep out this 9,000,000 pounds of American leaf.

Mr. FIELDING. No matter how high a duty is necessary?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I don't care—put a dollar and a half a pound on it.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) does not care, but the consumers of tobacco may care.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Can the minister tell us whether the grower of tobacco is in the same position as we found the grower of flaxseed a short time ago? He knows that it was proven that the Canadian grower of flaxseed was receiving 10 cents a bushel less for his flaxseed than the same manufacturer was paying for American flaxseed which was no better, if as good. If the minister is aware that the manufacturers are placing the growers of Canadian tobacco in the same position, he might inform the committee?

Mr. FIELDING. I could not tell my hon. friend. But a great difference was that flaxseed was on the free list, while tobacco is not, but is one of the most heavily taxed of our imports.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. But the manufacturers were taking advantage of the fact that the Canadians were not able to send the flaxseed into the United States, and so they were paying the Canadians less than they were paying Americans for the same article.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to capital—Intercolonial Railway—improvements at Mulgrave, $61,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Does this complete the works?

Mr. SPROULE. What is being done at Mulgrave ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is for protection for the steamer 'Scotia' at the ferry wharf on the Mulgrave side of the Strait of Canso. The total estimated expenditure is $60,800, and this vote will complete the work.

Mr. SPROULE. How is it being done?

Mr. FIELDING. By contract.

To increase accommodation at Pictou, $34,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is for an engine house, $11,000; piping and heating, $4,000; water service, $4,200; coal plant, $4,000; removing of buildings and platforms, $2,400. The contract has already been let to E. A. Wallburg, of Montreal.

To increase accommodation at Sydney, $5,500.

Mr. FIELDING. To raise the overhead bridge in Sydney yard and make a sea wall protection at Sydney wharf. That cannot well be let by contract.

To increase accommodation at Stellarton, $9,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is to provide electric lighting for the yards and buildings. We are putting in our own plant for lighting. This is not an ordinary station. Stellarton is a divisional point. There are three large towns, Stellarton, Westville and New Glasgow, that we group together in which to supply the railway yards and buildings with lighting.

Improvements at Sackville, $30,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is for a station, freight house and platform.

Mr. CROCKET. Is any portion of this for water supply at Sackville?

Mr. FIELDING. No. Station, freight house and platform, $23,600; grading, $5,000; 1½ acres of additional land, $1,365.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you pay $1,000 an acre for land at Sussex, ordinary farm land, with no village within a mile?

Mr. FIELDING. The land has not been bought; this is an estimate for it.

Mr. FOWLER. Surely it is not the intention of the department to pay $1,000 an acre for land at Sackville station. It is ordinary marsh land, the town is some distance from the station. It will never be used for anything but farming purposes.

Mr. FIELDING. This $1,365 for 1½ acres are the figures reported from Moncton as being probably necessary. It is hardly a thousand dollar an acre.

Mr. FOWLER. They are altogether too generous in their figures. I am afraid they have been following Mr. Lodge's figures.

Improvements at Amherst, $34,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is for a station, baggage room and platform.

Mr. FOWLER. Amherst has already a very good station.

Mr. FIELDING. Amherst station is a very unpretentious one for so large a place.

Mr. FOWLER. It is built of stone, a very substantial structure.

Mr. FIELDING. The local authorities regard it as a very mean station for so important a town. They have been asking for it for some time.

Mr. FOWLER. I may say to the acting minister that the station at Amherst is a very handsome, tasty and attractive station, built of stone in a very substantial manner. The minister says that one reason why it was granted is because it has been agitated for some time. I have been in this House for several years, and every session I have agitated for a new station in my county, at Sussex. The station there was built over forty years ago, a barn-like structure that is a disgrace to the railway; and yet agitation there has not produced any such results as the agitation at Amherst. Sussex is one of the most important stations along the whole line of the Intercolonial. The deputy minister knows there is a great deal of business done there, and it is simply a shame and a disgrace that such a wretched structure should be allowed to remain.

Mr. FIELDING. Sussex is one of the points where it is recognized that station accommodation is not as good as it should be. No doubt we will get round to Sussex before long. Sussex is an important place, but it is hardly as important as Amherst.

Mr. FOWLER. At the same time, you have a very good station already at Amherst.

Mr. CROCKET. I hope the minister won't forget Fredericton, either. There we have a very small wooden building that is utterly inadequate to the requirements of the place. The matter has been agitated in Fredericton for some time, the people think they should have a new station. Fredricton is the capital of the province, and the station is entirely out of keeping with the town. I trust that when further appropriations for new stations are being considered Fredericton will not be forgotten. I think perhaps there is no place along the Intercolonial railway where a new station is more required than at the city of Fredericton.

Mr. FIELDING. No doubt what the hon. gentleman says of Fredericton is correct, the station there is a very inferior one. But it is to be remembered that this is a line which has only recently come into the possession of the government, and no doubt from time to time we should put up decent station buildings. Fredericton as the capital is entitled to a better station than it now has.

Improvements at Newcastle, $32,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is for enlargement of the engine house, station, and water service. We supply our own water service there.

Mr. CROCKET. Has a contract been let for the work at Newcastle?

Mr. FIELDING. Not yet.

Mr. BENNETT. Will it be done by contract?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, for the enlargement of the engine house. The water service is done by officials of the government.

Increased accommodation at Antigonish, $10,250.

Mr. FIELDING. Additional shops, platforms and water service.

Water service—Pirate harbour, $10,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is to construct a pipe line from Mulgrave to Pirate Harbour.

To increase accommodation at Truro, $110,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Is that a new station?

Mr. FIELDING. Additional yard accommodation, water service, coal plant, ash pit, cinder pit, and rearranging yard at a cost aggregating $110,000.

Mr. BENNETT. How much will the land cost?

Mr. FIELDING. There is no land to be purchased out of this item.

Mr. BENNETT. Will this work all be done by tender?

Mr. FIELDING. A considerable portion of the work is what is called yard work and is done by the men of the Intercolonial Railway. Outside of that it is expected that it will be done by tender.

To increase accommodation at Halifax, $300,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is for additional facilities on west side of Water street; $173,000; extension of quay wall in connection with pier No. 8, $15,000; 36 stall engine house, heating, turn table, $160,000; double tracking to the cotton factory siding, $55,000; freight car repair shop, planing mill, store house, round house, ash pit, heating and piping of new building and sewer aggregating altogether $597,380, of which it is proposed to take at the present year, $300,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Are these works to be done by tender?

Mr. FIELDING. The contract has been awarded to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. DANIEL. Who has the contract?

Mr. FIELDING. The round house, which is one of the largest items, has been awarded to Mr. M. E. Keefe, of Halifax and the other shops to Rhodes, Curry & Company of Amherst.

Mr. CROCKET. What is the price of the roundhouse ?

Mr. FIELDING. The contract for the roundhouse is $122,000.

Locomotive and car shops, and land purchase at Moncton, $520,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is to provide new shops and additional yard accommodation at Moncton. This, of course, is in consequence of the fire which destroyed the shops at Moncton some months ago. Contracts have been awarded for the locomotive and other shops, to E. A. Wallburg, and for the planing mill to Rhodes, Curry & Company.

Mr. CROCKET. Would the minister give prices of the contracts ?

Mr. FIELDING. The Wallburg tender for the freight car repair shops is $56,630 ; the same contractor for the repair passenger and paint shop and offices $154,945 ; the same contractor for the locomotive shop, $430,000 and Messrs. Rhodes, Curry & Company for the planing mills, $23,295.

Mr. DANIEL. What are these buildings to be constructed of ?

Mr. FIELDING. Steel and concrete chiefly.

Mr. DANIEL. How much of this goes for the purchase of land ?

Mr. FIELDING. None of this is for the purchase of land.

Mr. DANIEL. Was the lowest tender accepted?

Mr. FIELDING. In every case.

Mr. DANIEL. It mentions land in this item.

Mr. FIELDING. For the convenience of accounting the same wording is used as was used in the vote of last year, but there will be no purchase of land out of this vote.

Mr. FOWLER. How much did you pay for the land ?

Mr. FIELDING. $33,000 for 288 acres.

Mr. CROCKET. Does that land adjoin the old trotting park ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is close to it.

Mr. FOWLER. In that $33,000 is there included the amount paid for the land that was bought by Mr. Lodge ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, this is different land.

Mr. FOWLER. If the acting minister will remember when that matter was up for discussion last year the defence that was made by the then Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson), when he was taxed with the price being excessive, was that some twenty years before the Conservative government had purchased land for which they had paid $2,000 an acre, that they had bought some 51-100ths of an acre which would be a fraction over one-half an acre and had paid at the rate of $2,000 an acre. He defended the purchase of this land from Mr. Lodge at a very excessive price on that ground. As I remember the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) took an active part in the debate and his defence of that purchase whereby Mr. Lodge made a very handsome rake-off was upon the same ground that the old government had paid at the rate of $2,000 an acre for land in that vicinity which they had bought some twenty years before. That was the only ground that the Minister of Finance and the present acting Minister of Railways and Canals put forward as a defence for this transaction, which we, on this side of the House, had called a most iniquitous transaction, whereby a very large sum of money was lost to the people of this country. Now it has turned out that the then Minister of Railways and Canals made a misstatement of facts to the House. Instead of it only being a fraction more than half an acre which was bought by the old government it was something over six acres for which the rate per acre would be about $150 instead of $2,000. Has this knowledge come to the ears of the minister and has he any explanation to make to us or has he any other defence of that infamous Lodge transaction ?

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of Railways stated in his speech last year that land had been purchased many years ago under the former government at the price mentioned. I had no knowledge other than the statement which the Minister of Railways himself had made, and in following him in the debate I referred to the same item. The deputy minister informs me that the minister was astray. The figures which should have been six and a half acres had been in a memorandum which had been furnished to the minister by some officer of the department and in copying the statement the figure six was dropped out. It read half an acre and the minister in all good faith read it here as being half an acre. It is quite evident that he made a mistake and it naturally follows that I accepted the statement of the Minister of Railways and made a mistake in accepting it.

Mr. FOWLER. Then what becomes of the defence of that transaction ?

Mr. FIELDING. That was only part of the defence.

Mr. FOWLER. Your defence drops to the ground.

Mr. FIELDING. To that extent.

Mr. FOWLER. That was the only defence the minister put forward.

Mr. FIELDING. It was only part of the defence; it was used by way of illustration.

Mr. FOWLER. The whole defence was that the present government had paid a much smaller price for this land than the Conservative government had paid for similar land years before. If the Minister of Finance will consult 'Hansard' he will find that that was his only defence. Now he declares that that statement was entirely wrong. The fact is that this land bought by the present government had been purchased by Hewson acting as agent for Lodge he, Lodge, knowing that the government was going to acquire this land for railway purposes. The rake-off was something like $8,500, and it went into the pocket of Mr. Lodge and out of the public treasury. The minister has now lost his only defence for this transaction; has he any other to put forward in its place?

Mr. FIELDING. Not in its place.

Mr. FOWLER. Has he any other defence for this transaction?

Mr. FIELDING. It was only one of the grounds of defence, and to that extent the Minister of Railways was mistaken. Mr. Lodge undoubtedly made a profit out of the land; most people who do buy land and sell it again intend to make a profit.

Mr. FOWLER. Sure.

Mr. FIELDING. There was the testimony of independent witnesses from the city of Moncton, men above suspicion, men who had valued the land and who declared before the committee that the price paid by the government was fair and reasonable.

Mr. FOWLER. And yet the owners of the land, only three weeks before, sold it for $8,000 less than the government paid for it.

Mr. FIELDING. Quite possible.

Mr. FOWLER. It is a very lame defence.

Mr. FIELDING. The valuation made by reputable men of the town is not a lame defence.

Mr. LENNOX. A year ago the whole argument of the government was based on the alleged price which the Conservative government had paid for similar land in 1884. Now that defence is swept away, because it is found that the statement as to the price paid by the Conservative government is not true. Mr. Lodge got the property for $5,075 and sold it a few weeks afterwards to the government for $13,850, which, deducting $300 cost of conveyancing, gave him a clear profit of $8,505. He made a profit of 167 per cent on the land and held it for only three weeks. I refer the Minister of Finance to 'Hansard' for 1906, pages 5832-5834, where the Minister of Railways said:

> But in 1884 the Intercolonial Railway purchased right off this block of land, right adjacent to the property we purchased here in 1904, half an acre from Mr. Milner. And how much did the Intercolonial Railway pay for that? One thousand dollars for one-half acre.

Mr. BENNETT. Loud cheers.

Mr. LENNOX. Of course there would be loud cheers. Mr. Emmerson proceeds to say:

> We were able to purchase it at $1,000 when the administration of the Intercolonial Railway in 1884, at a time when my honourable friend (Mr. Ames), the mover of this resolution, would have every confidence in the then administration of the Intercolonial Railway bought 55-100 acre and paid $1,000.

Further on in his speech Mr. Emmerson made the comparison again, saying:

> Judged by what transpired in 1884 when half an acre was purchased by the Intercolonial for $1,000, we in 1904 made a good bargain when we bought the whole acreage at the rate of $1,000 per acre, not at the rate of $1,000 a half acre.

The Minister of Finance followed up the same argument at the time.

Mr. FOWLER. The Minister of Finance says this was the fault of a clerk in the department. What clerk made such a terrible mistake?

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that the Minister of Railways had in his hands at the time a memorandum prepared by the solicitor in the case and in the copying of that memorandum the figure '6' dropped out. The mistake was made probably by the clerk of the solicitor and not by one of the clerks of the department.

Mr. BENNETT. Who is the solicitor?

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Friel.

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, that is where the information was taken from. It was the clerk of the solicitor of the agent who bought the land, was it? That is not what was said at the time. That puts a different face on it altogether.

Mr. LENNOX. Is that Mr. Lodge's solicitor?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, Mr. Friel.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Friel is the solicitor doing the work of the government in many cases down there.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Friel was not the solicitor in that particular transaction?

Mr. FIELDING. I think he was acting for the government.

Mr. FOWLER. No, Mr. Hewson was acting.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Hewson was the vendor and Mr. Friel was acting for the government in examining the title.

Mr. FOWLER. How would Mr. Friel be in possession of this information?

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot tell; that is the information I got when I made inquiries.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Friel would not be an officer of the department?

Mr. FIELDING. He was acting as solicitor and he might be considered an officer of the department.

Mr. FOWLER. The then Minister of Railways said that the information came from the department, and naturally we supposed it was correct. We had no idea it was a fraud on the face of it, and yet the Minister of Railways won great applause, and when the Minister of Finance spoke the applause was redoubled. This tu quoque argument was considered a complete answer because the late government paid more for the land than the present government did, and now it turns out to be untrue. The Department of Railways does not show up particularly well in this transaction. The Minister of Finance should make a retraction and an apology to the House and try and give some better explanation of this nefarious transaction.

Mr. FIELDING. If it will do the House any good I will express my regret. I made the statement relying on what has been said by others and we very often have to do that in discussions in this House. I understand that this was information furnished from the department, but among the papers was this document from the solicitor acting for the railway. I have no doubt the Minister of Railways used it in good faith, and I certainly did. Now that I know it is wrong I am very glad to retract it.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the minister now give us a defence of the transaction, or does he think the transaction is not possible of defence ?

Mr. FIELDING. Oh, no.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the minister think that the valuation of these reputable men is better evidence as to the value of the land, than the price at which the owners of it were willing to sell it a few weeks before to Mr. Hewson, acting as agent for Lodge, the go-between? It seems to me that is a most absurd contention to put forward, and one which I am sure would not satisfy the minister if he were transacting his own private business and not the business of the country.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think it is as unreasonable as the hon. gentleman says. If I want to buy a piece of land to-day, and I get the valuation of reputable and competent men, I think that is fair evidence of what the value is. You may say that I might have been smart enough to have bought it six months before; but the opinion of these reputable men as to its present value is entitled to some weight.

Mr. FOWLER. I would say it would be entitled to very little weight, because every one who knows anything of this land knows that it was practically worthless to any one but the railway. It was low-lying land on which nothing could be raised but grass, and before it could be utilized by the railway, a tremendous expense had to be incurred in filling it up. It was not worth $50 an acre, and these men were glad to sell it at $300 an acre, and the government paid Mr. Lodge something like $1,000 an acre.

Mr. SPROULE. The way to arrive at the value of land is to take the sales that have taken place in the locality within a reasonable time.

Mr. FIELDING. That is one of the elements.

Mr. SPROULE. It is the element. It is the test of value.

Mr. CROCKET. Has the government expropriated a strip of land through the trotting park from the land bought for railway purposes?

Mr. FIELDING. No, it has not yet been expropriated?

Mr. CROCKET. Is it proposed to expropriate it?

Mr. FIELDING. The matter has been under consideration, but no decision has been reached. The deputy minister thinks that in all probability it will be expropriated.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the minister know who owns the trotting park?

Mr. FIELDING. The deputy minister informs me that the Minister of Railways in his capacity as a trustee was interested in the property, and that was one of the reasons in addition to the others why it was thought better to proceed by expropriation.

Mr. CROCKET. It was a 66-foot strip, I believe, through the whole length of the park which it was proposed to expropriate?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. There was some arrangement with the county authorities in contemplation by which they would get a road in return for a piece of road taken for the purposes of the government.

Mr. CROCKET. And it is in such a way as to leave building lots on each side of the strip expropriated?

Mr. FIELDING. The deputy minister tells me that he cannot be sure of that. That is a matter for the engineer down there.

Intercolonial Railway—to exchange drawbars of freight cars, $37,500.

Mr. BENNETT. On the question of the equipment of cars, I would like to ask the minister how the passenger coaches on the Intercolonial are lighted?

Mr. FIELDING. With Pintsch gas.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it as dangerous in case of fire as acetylene ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, it is claimed to be less dangerous.

Mr. BENNETT. There have been some very bad accidents lately, with fires in passenger coaches after collisions have taken place and the cars have been overturned. Are these cars equipped with hand grenades or extinguishers of some kind?

Mr. FIELDING. The deputy minister says that his impression is that every car on the Intercolonial has a fire extinguisher.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the nature of those?

Mr. FIELDING. They are portable fire extinguishers containing chemicals.

Mr. BENNETT. I saw a case the other day of a most horrible experience on one of the railways. It was not the Intercolonial. A lot of passengers stood and saw a man burned to death. I have seen some of those fire extinguishers used with great success. Were the cars equipped with them, it would be possible in case of fire in one coach to bring them from other coaches, and, if not to extinguish the fire, to keep it down for a time until a man could be extricated. Since the cars are well equipped, there is nothing more to be said; but I think no expense should be spared to have a very ample stock of these implements on the coaches.

Mr. FIELDING. I quite agree with my hon. friend in that.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business do you propose to take up on Monday?

Mr. FIELDING. The several resolutions which stand on the order paper, then Bills, and after that supply, with the railway estimates.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at six p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 22, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

Mr. FIELDING.

SURVEYS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 172) respecting the surveys of the public lands of the Dominion, and the surveyors entitled to make such surveys.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the minister give a brief explanation ?

Mr. OLIVER. When the Bill (No. 59), containing the provisions relating to surveys and surveyors which are now contained in chapter 55, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, entitled : 'An Act respecting Public Lands' commonly known as the Dominion Lands Act was prepared it was assumed that the Bill (No. 21), containing the remaining provisions of chapter 55, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, would be passed by parliament at the same time. The provision to repeal chapter 55 was therefore only inserted in Bill (No. 21.) It has been decided to withdraw the Bill until next session, and as the provisions of Bill (No. 59) were assented to by the Deputy Governor upon the 22nd ultimo and are now law, and the provisions in chapter 55 of the Revised Statutes of Canada which were thereby, that is by the passage of Bill (No. 59), consolidated and amended will also be in force because of no provision for their repeal having been included in Bill (No. 59) and many conflicting questions may, therefore, arise it is deemed advisable to repeal the Act which has been passed containing the provisions in Bill (No. 59.)

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is merely to correct an error ?

Mr. OLIVER. It had been intended to withhold the royal assent, but unfortunately that mistake was made and assent was given.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and second time.

INDUSTRIAL AND CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETIES.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I would like to ask the government if it is not possible to give effect to the recommendation of the special committee named to examine into the Bill known as Bill (No. 2) respecting Industrial and Co-operative Societies. The Bill was introduced early in the session and referred to a special committee. The committee went to considerable trouble and took a great deal of evidence, all in favour of the projected legislation. The report of the committee was unanimous, adopting the principle of the Bill. It seems to be a pity that a permissive measure of this nature should not be enacted into law, under these circumstances. Although the time at the disposal of the House is very short, the Bill is not of a nature to provoke any discussion. I think it is so useful a measure that it is desirable in the interest of the public and of those who take an interest in that legislation, that it should be made law without delay.

Hon. R. LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). As my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has just stated, a special committee was appointed at the beginning of the session to hear evidence on the question of co-operation, and to examine the details of the Bill which was introduced by my hon. friend. The committee held several meetings and heard many witnesses, and as my hon. friend states, the evidence was favourable to the idea embodied in the Bill, with a few exceptions however. The committee has reported unanimously in favour of the principle of the Bill, and has ordered the evidence to be printed and distributed; the Bill which was finally drafted was also ordered to be reprinted. I do not know that the Bill which was drafted has been distributed amongst the members, but I know that the evidence which was taken before the committee and which was quite voluminous, has not yet been distributed to members of the House. It is a very important question, and I do not think it would be in the interest of the Bill itself if it were forced upon the House at this late stage of the session, without the evidence being read by all the members of this House and of the upper House. But I can assure my hon. friend that at the beginning of next session I will take the earliest opportunity to give effect to the special recommendation of the committee. It is true that this special committee recommended the adoption of the Bill. It was proposed at first, I believe, by my hon. friend that the Bill should be proceeded with during the present session, but at my request, and after having heard the objections which were made, that part of the recommendations was withdrawn and a recommendation was made simply that the Bill be adopted.

SALE OF RAILWAY PASSENGER TICKETS.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he has examined into the statement I gave the other day about the alleged change of penalties in the law with rgard to the sale of railway passenger tickets?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I have read the statement.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Does the minister still hold to the position he held the other day that there has been no change?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think there has been no change.

STRIKE IN THE NORTHWEST.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I desire to ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux) if he has any information to give to the House with regard to the present conditions of the strike, or the proposed strike, in the western coal fields.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The latest news I have about the strike in the west is a telegram which I received from Mr. F. H. Sherman, who seems to be at the head of the miners. Mr. Sherman is described as president of the district union No. 18, comprising the various local unions of the miners. The communication is dated the 20th instant, and says:

> Am trying to persuade men to accept temporary arrangement and return to mines pending investigation. So far have failed and company will do nothing pending return of the operators' president.

The president of the operators is Mr. G. G. S. Lindsey, he is expected to reach Fernie to-day, and there is at least a strong possibility that temporary arrangement may be made for the resumption of work immediately. Mr. Mackenzie King left Ottawa on Friday evening, and will be to-morrow, or Wednesday morning at the latest, at Fernie. I may say to my hon. friend that from the inquiries I have received from both miners and operators, the arrival of Mr. King is awaited with high hopes that he will be able to bring about a settlement, pending an investigation at least. I may say also that I received another telegram Saturday signed by Mr. Eckstein, representative of the men on the board, and Mr. Parker, representative of the operators on the board. They both say that they have failed to agree to the appointment of a third man. Within a few hours I think I will be in a position to inform the House who the third arbitrator will be.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the minister any information as to the number of men who have quit work?

Mr. LEMIEUX. That I have not been able to ascertain, but I understand there is a large number.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Can the minister say anything about a statement that appears in the morning papers that the Canadian Pacific Railway service is within six days of closing down for the want of a supply of coal, if a strike takes place?

Mr. LEMIEUX. That I cannot ascertain. I think it is an exaggerated statement.

SHORTAGE OF CARS IN THE NORTHWEST.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I would like to repeat the question I put to the Minister of Finance acting for the Railways and Canals Department (Mr. Fielding), with reference to Mr. Dillinger. I think the minister will remember what I stated on Saturday. Has he any information to give to the House with reference to that?

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Dillinger is an officer of the Railway Commission. I saw the Chairman of the Railway Commission who informed me that that gentleman was very highly recommended to him by competent authorities in the railway world; he had no doubt he was a good and useful officer, but he had no information about the particular incident referred to in the press. He was making inquiries.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister know whether Mr. Dillinger is a Canadian or whether he was a citizen of the United States?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know; he was recommended to the Railway Commission.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister might get the information.

Mr. FIELDING. I will bear that in mind.

LAND GRANTS TO SOUTH AFRICAN VETERANS.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY (Calgary). I wish to ask the minister if it is the intention to proceed this session with the Bill respecting land grants to South African veterans for which a resolution was introduced some months ago by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes)?

Mr. FIELDING. No, I think there is an understanding that no new legislation is to be introduced and that matter will have to stand over for further consideration.

PRIVATE BILLS.

OTTAWA TERMINALS RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 152) respecting the Ottawa Terminals Railway Company.—Mr. Caldwell.

On section 19,

Mr. LENNOX. The time limit for construction is very indefinite. It says that construction shall commence within six months after the plans have been approved by the Governor in Council and shall be completed within two years after that date. There is no provision as to when these plans shall be submitted to the Governor in Council and as there is no time for commencement there is no time for completion. This, I think, should be amended.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That point was not raised in the committee, and I think that the provision here is a very reasonable one. I understand it is their intention, as soon as they can get their plans ready, to submit them for approval and then within six months after they are approved by the Governor in Council work must be commenced and be completed within two years. I do not think there is any intention on the part of the company not to proceed with all due diligence, and in such Bills it is not customary to bind them down to a certain time, nor do I think it is in the interest of the public that a specific time should be stated.

Mr. LENNOX. It is a question whether we are to pass legislation which means something or which does not. As the section stands it means nothing at all and we are better without it because it is misleading. If they submit their plans within six months it will be two and a half years before it is completed; if they submit them in six years it will be eight and a half years.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not think there is any objection to fixing a reasonable time; suppose we say that the plans should be submitted for approval within twelve months of the passing of this Act?

Mr. SPROULE. Say six months.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There are a great many things to be considered before the work can be performed.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. You cannot amend without notice.

Mr. SPROULE. Why not let it stand and give notice? I think that six months would be sufficient.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand, of course, that it is their intention to go on with the work and I do not think it would matter if we said six months.

Mr. FISHER. I would rather suggest the 1st of January next as we would then be again in session; I believe the amendment can be made with the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I would move that this clause be amended.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any objection to allowing this to stand over for a day or so that notice could be given? The rule is for the purpose of letting the other side have an opportunity of knowing what is going on and we lose nothing by leaving this over.

Progress reported.

PRUDENTIAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA.

House in committee on Bill (No. 163) to incorporate the Prudential Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Gervais.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. This is a very significant piece of legislation and it throws a lot of light on the life insurance question. Here is a life insurance company proposing not to engage in the business of what is called participating policies. I trust that when the government come to draw up their Insurance Bill next session they will give a great deal of attention to the principle involved in this clause.

Bill reported.

FIDELITY LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA.

House in committee on Bill (No. 164) to incorporate the Fidelity Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Johnston.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. With respect to these insurance Bills, is there a general form which they have to comply with, or are they of more or less a miscellaneous character ?

Mr. FIELDING. There is a general Insurance Act and as far as possible they are made to conform to it. Sometimes for special reasons there is a departure from that Act.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. There is a difference in regard to the qualification of policyholders' directors between this Bill and the Prudential Company's Bill.

Mr. FIELDING. The question of policyholders' directors is not dealt with in the general Act; some of the charters have that qualification and others have not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as these Bills are concerned they should be held to some principle sanctioned by the department; I speak of course altogether apart from the general provisions of the Insurance Act with which, as I understand, they are all made to comply.

Mr. FIELDING. Unless there is a variation specially provided for in their charters.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it the practice to make such variation ?

Mr. FIELDING. The superintendent of insurance informs me that the variations are not so much from the Insurance Act as from the Companies Clauses Act. The Bills conform as closely as possible to the Insurance Act. I hope in the future that view will be broadened, and that there will be less variation than in the past.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The legislation with regard to insurance companies should be in principle very much as in regard to banks. There is a Bank Act which constitutes a charter for every bank in Canada. When a bank is incorporated it must be on condition that a certain amount of capital shall be raised before it commences operations, but when it does commence operations it is absolutely governed by the Banking Act, which Act, and the charters of the companies of the banks, remain in force for a period of only ten years. I would think there should be a somewhat similar provision with regard to insurance companies.

Mr. FIELDING. That is done to a very large extent now in the case of insurance companies, and sometimes not without difficulty as the companies seek variations. I would hope however that in any legislation that is likely to take place next session that rule may be enlarged so that there may be less room for variation, although we do endeavour now to follow established lines.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. In the new legislation the government should make provision for complete uniformity in the charters of these insurance companies. As it stands now, one company is empowered to do a thing which another company is not empowered to do. I know it is a difficult question, but they should be under the same rule exactly with regard to their capital stock, their directors, the representation of shareholders, and things of that kind.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would hail with delight any step towards uniformity in life insurance legislation. We have just passed a Bill which makes no provision for participating policies and I think that is a splendid step in advance. The people of this country have been robbed, practically, by the principle of participating policies. They have been paying higher premiums with the expectation of participating in the profits of the company's business and they find, after a number of years, that the directors simply appropriate the profits and apply them to capital account. Such policyholders thereby lose everything they have contributed over and above what the policy-holder on a flat rate would contribute. I would urge on the government that in any insurance legislation, provision should be made that no company should be permitted to grant a participating policy.

Bill reported.

HAMILTON RADIAL ELECTRIC COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 158) respecting the Hamilton Radial Electric Company.—Mr. Clarke.

On section 1,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like an explanation of why this has become so suddenly a work for the general advantage of Canada. That declaration has been made upon insufficient grounds, sometimes without any grounds whatever, and very frequently during the past eleven years since I have been a member of the House, although I recollect very well that in the session of 1897 or 1898, the then Solicitor General, afterwards Minister of Justice, laid it down as the policy of this government that no such declaration should be made in the future unless in absolutely plain cases. Now, before we take one step in this Bill, I would like a complete statement of the grounds upon which this declaration is sought in the present case. That power contained in the British North America Act has been scandalously abused since 1896, and I dare say on some occasions before 1896. I do not propose to permit its abuse in the future without protest, and very strong protest. In fact, I have raised my voice in protest against it on many occasions during the past three or four years; but it is sufficient to state that we have not had up to the present any statement of the ground on which this declaration can be justified, and I would like very much to hear what that ground is.

Mr. FOSTER. Before that question is answered, I would like to ask another, as to whether this Bill was introduced in accordance with the notice required by Rule 88? I have been informed that the proper notice was not given.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In reference to the point raised by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), I may say that this Bill was introduced in the Senate, passed the Senate and came down to the House of Commons. I cannot say whether due notice was given of it or not, but I presume that the Senate would hardly have passed it and sent it down to us unless notice had been given. In reference to the point raised by the hon. leader of the opposition, it will be seen that the Bill gives the company power to build a line to the Detroit river, with power to build a bridge across that river; also a line from the city of Hamilton to Niagara river, with power to build a bridge across that river, or to enter into an agreement for running rights over any bridge across the said river already or hereafter constructed; also to build a line from the city of Brantford to a point on the Detroit river, at or near Windsor, with power to construct, maintain and operate ferries across the Detroit river. In order to obtain these powers, I understand that it will be necessary to declare the work to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. In reference to subsection (c) of section 4, I may say that there was considerable objection to that clause being put into the Bill, but after consideration the committee allowed it to pass without any amendment. In the latter part of section 3 the company ask for power to build into the city of Toronto. That was struck out at the request of the promoters, and the words 'at or near the city of Toronto' were substituted. In section 6 the company asked for the right to purchase right of way and terminal station buildings in the city of Toronto. That also was struck out at the request of the promoters. While on my feet I may say that I personally was very much opposed to striking out those provisions. The county I represent is surrounding the city of Toronto. The city of Toronto is the metropolis of the province of Ontario. The counties all over the province of Ontario contribute very largely of public money to build up the city of Toronto. In the very estimates which we have before us there are very large sums of public money proposed to be expended for providing better postal arrangements in the city of Toronto, enlarging the armouries, deepening the channels and extending the piers, and in other ways improving that city. The city of Toronto would be no good at all without the country around it. Now, the interests are mutual. The people from all over the province of Ontario want to get into the city of Toronto; they have a right to get in there; they want to take steamers to Montreal and to other points; and I think some arrangement should be made whereby they can get in. As it is to-day, people coming in on the Mimico line along the lake shore, the Lambton Mills line, the Weston line, the Metropolitan line along Yonge Street or the line through Scarborough and Markham, when they reach the borders of the city, are dumped down there, whether it is raining or snowing or cold or hot, and have to wait for another car.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Does not the hon. gentleman think that the Ontario legislature ought to make provision for all that kind of business?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not care who makes the arrangement; it has to be made. I say that people from the country surrounding the city of Toronto are not going to submit to this much longer. I do not care whether it is the fault of the Toronto Street Railway or the corporation of the city or the provincial government; I am speaking for the people. They have submitted now for a good many years. Many women and children come to Toronto on these lines, especially on market days, with their baskets and things of that kind, and it is a very great hardship for them to be dumped in the rain or snow or cold, as they often are, when they reach the borders of the city. In the city of Detroit and other American cities we find cars from a hundred miles around running right into the middle of the city. Why should we not have the same thing in Toronto? I know that the people of the city of Toronto want every obstruction removed; they want the people from one hundred or two hundred miles distant to come and do their trading in the city. I am not prepared to say whose the fault is. If the committee had given the company the right, as they should have, to run into Toronto and erect their terminal stations there, then the people all around the county could go into that city without having to submit to the inconvenience and expense of changing cars. The people of the townships of Scarborough and others represented by the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) the hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) and the hon. member for Halton (Henderson) and Peel (Mr. Blain), want to get right into the city and these hon. gentlemen ought to stand up with me and insist on that right.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman ought to stand up with the hon. members for Halton (Mr. Henderson) and Peel (Mr. Blain).

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope then we shall all stand together and insist that when our people want to go to the great metropolis of Ontario they shall be enabled to go without being compelled to change cars and wait at a junction point without shelter. We should insist on the same provisions being made that are made in every modern city in the United States. We should insist that whether you have come one hundred or five hundred miles, you should go in your railway car right to the centre of the city. I do not care whether they pay another fare. The city may take control of the cars if they like; that is a minor detail. But provision must be made that these people will not be put to that inconvenience, and be able to get right into the heart of the city. It is their money which is helping to develop and build up that city, and I earnestly call on the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) to take such steps as will result in furnishing this accommodation which the people have been desiring for years.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not quite understand the object of my hon. friend in going into a discussion of clause 3 when we are still on clause 1.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You asked for explanations.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The explanations which the hon. gentleman has just given are about as irrelevant as any I have ever heard given in the House. I asked why this work should be declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, and he went into a long discussion as to the necessity for a proper entrance into the city of Toronto. That is a perfectly proper proposal, but the only question is what legislature should enact those provisions. The hon. gentleman says this should be declared a work for the general advantage of Canada because the line runs to a point opposite Detroit. That is no answer. In the first place, if what he has alleged is capable of being maintained, then there is no necessity for the declaration that this work is for the general advantage of Canada, since parliament has jurisdiction, according to his view, without any such declaration. But the mere circumstance that this company is authorized to construct a line to run to the international boundary, is no reason why you should declare the line from Hamilton to Toronto to be a line for the general advantage of Canada. The two things do not go together. I have yet to hear any satisfactory reason why parliament should be called on to make this provision. The hon. gentleman has given none.

Mr. HENDERSON. From the reference made to myself by the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell), it might be inferred that I was opposed to this railway having an entrance into Toronto. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that I hold no such view. I have in previous years supported a measure to permit those railways free entrance into Toronto. I hold the same view with reference to this railway. I am not prepared to discuss whether it should be made a railway for the general advantage of Canada. What I am specially concerned in is that it should be made for the general advantage of Halton.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. The hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) has made an appeal to secure entrance into the city of Toronto for this railway. That is provided in clause 3 and subsequent clauses. We are now dealing with clause 1. But as the hon. member has spoken about Toronto, I can tell him that the city of Toronto is as anxious as any portion of Ontario to have proper railway facilities within its borders. No community is more deeply interested in having an efficient railway service, but we have had many attempted invasions of the city's rights during many years past by Bills similar to this. This Bill was introduced behind the city's back, without its knowledge, or without knowledge to the city of its provisions. There was no attempt to meet the city in a fair business like way or make a demand to enter the city limits, but we find an attempt to steal an entrance without consulting the city as to where the entrance should be made, or the terminals, or for filing any of the plans of the proposed route. They are simply attempting to secure a blind right from this parliament to enter the city where and when the railway pleases and in any way it pleases. The hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) knows that this railway is nothing but a street railway. The running rights they secured over highways and municipalities are all subjects of bargains and agreements.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I beg to differ from the hon. gentleman. This railway is working on its own right of way.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. It is a street railway, and has no power to use anything but electric power. It is denied the right to use steam power. It is a street railway pure and simple, and always will be. The clauses of this Bill giving it the right to run to Niagara and the Detroit river are simply bluffs. This is an attempt to give what is purely a local street railway, and nothing else, an entrance into the city ; and the way this Bill is drawn they can enter the city and run upon its highways without a by-law of the municipality.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. If I remember what took place in the Railway Committee, the promoters of the Bill accepted the clause under which they are not allowed to go into the city of Toronto.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I am dealing with the Bill as drawn.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. We are dealing with the Bill as reported to the House.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. But the Bill as drawn is in the same shape as that in which it is now before the House in that respect.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Not at all.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. The promoters of this Bill accepted two amendments that I proposed, but, as regards this other feature —the right to enter the city without authority of a by-law—no change was agreed to by the promoters or made by the committee. They seek the right to enter the city, and to secure right of way, and to build lines and terminals.

Mr. CONMEE. Did not the hon. member (Mr. A. C. Macdonell) agree to the Bill in the Railway Committee?

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I agreed to the Bill in its present form so far as Toronto is concerned——

Mr. CONMEE. Well, then what is the matter now?

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I am meeting the arguments of the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell).

Mr. CONMEE. You had better take some other time for that.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I am pointing out that in this we have an attempt to secure street railway rights in the city of Toronto.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Why?

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. This road is simply a street railway—it is given the right to use electric power and no other, and it seeks by this Bill to gain entrance, right of way and other rights in the city of Toronto. Further, the attempt was made actually to secure the right to borrow money on such right of way, regardless of the consent of the city—no distinction being made in that respect. The city of Toronto is willing to make proper arrangements with any railway that proposes to enter the city, but it ought not to be required to submit to the entrance of a railway without due protection provided, without even plans being filed showing the proposed route and the terminal—simply an attempt to acquire a right, without compensation, to run a street railway within the limits of the city.

So far as concerns other features of the Bill affecting provincial rights, in my opinion this is a most improper Bill to introduce in this House. We find the attempt made to acquire Dominion rights by having it declared in this Bill that this is a work for the general advantage of Canada. What is the effect of that declaration in such a charter as this? Section 6 of the Railway Act reads as follows :

> Where any railway, the construction or operation of which is authorized by a special Act passed by the legislature of any province, is declared, by any Act of the parliament of Canada, to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, this Act shall apply to such railway, and to the company constructing or operating the same, to the exclusion of such of the provisions of the said special Act as are inconsistent with this Act, and in lieu of any general railway Act of the province.

The effect of declaring this a work for the general advantage of Canada, therefore, is to remove the work from the jurisdiction of the province, and to make this a part of the Dominion system of railways. Yet, as I have attempted to point out, this is merely a street railway. Now, the province of Ontario has sought to protect itself and its municipalities against the invasion of local rights by railway companies.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. C. Macdonell) allow me a question? Did he say that this company was incorporated by the province under the Street Railway Act and not under the Electric Railway Act?

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. It is incorporated by special Act.

Mr. CLARKE. Under the Electric Railway Act or under the Street Railway Act?

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. The Electric Railway Act. But my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) knows that the company is incorporated by the Act of 1894, a special Act.

Mr. CLARKE. Quite so.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. That brings them under the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature and makes them subject to the provincial Railway Act, the provincial Board of Railway Commissioners——

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. All the Ontario railway laws.

Mr. A. C MACDONELL. Precisely. At last session of the province of Ontario, the General Railway Act was consolidated, and in that measure we find special protection for the rights of municipalities. Section 202 of that Act, provides that the time for which a municipality may grant privileges to these railway companies shall not extend beyond twenty-five years ; it provides for certain renewal of rights, and also provides that the municipality may assume the ownership of the works. Thus, safeguards are thrown about municipalities in relation to provincial railways. We find also that, for some years past, the charter of every provincial railway has contained as one of its final sections a provision that the province shall have the right to erect its poles and string wires for the transmission of electric energy along the right of way of the railway. This is a very valuable right for people of the province to possess, more especially in view of the recent active operations of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission. It looks very much as if the province of Ontario would secure cheap power, and this right to string wires along the right of way of these railways will afford an inexpensive way of transmitting that power. Now, if this railway be taken from provincial control and placed under Dominion jurisdiction, all these rights which have been secured for the municipalities cease and these local Acts no longer apply, so that the special privileges secured for the province of Ontario or for its municipalities will be lost. Yet, as recently as the session of the provincial legislature which closed on Saturday last, a further Act was passed, the text of which I have not at hand at the moment, to empower the Lieutenant Governor in Council, to cancel privileges which companies may have obtained from municipalities or in a manner or under circumstances which justify such cancellation. All these advantages will be lost to the people of Ontario in relation to this and similar railways, should they be placed under federal control. It was said in the Railway Committee, and I have no doubt it will be said here to-day, that even at present this railway comes within the term of 'a work for the general advantage of Canada.' It was said by the promoters that the operation of the railway, its connections with and crossing of other railways, and the effect of decisions of the court, were sufficient to give this railway now the right to be considered a Dominion work. This is not the case—I decline to admit for one moment that it is the case. I desire to point out that where a provincial railway crosses a Dominion railway, that crossing does not, ipso facto, make the railway that so crosses the other a work for the general advantage of Canada. That was the argument used in the committee; it was stated that because this railway crosses the Grand Trunk at some point, and an interlocking switch had to be put in, that fact made it a work for the general advantage of Canada. Now section 8 of the Railway Act makes very plain that a work is for the general advantage of Canada for certain specified purposes only.

231½

Every railway, steam or electric street railway or tramway, the construction or operation of which is authorized by special Act of the legislature of any province, and which connects with or crosses or may hereafter connect with or cross any railway within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, shall, although not declared by parliament to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, be subject to the provisions of this Act relating to—

(a) the connection or crossing of one railway or tramway with or by another, so far as concerns the aforesaid connection or crossing ;

(b) the through traffic upon a railway or tramway and all matters appertaining thereto;

(c) criminal matters, including offences and penalties; and

(d) navigable waters.

So in no sense is this Hamilton Radial Railway exempted from the operation of the provincial statutes. It is true that for certain purposes it is to be construed as a work for the general advantage of Canada, but it is not relieved from the operation of the Ontario statutes respecting railways. It is still under those statutes, and still liable to the obligations and penalties therein provided. In no sense is it removed from provincial jurisdiction. It was also urged that by judgment of the Hon. Mr. Justice Street, in a case in which this company was a party, he declared that this Hamilton Radial Company was a work for the general advantage of Canada. Now that is not the case at all. The effect of that decision was entirely different. It is a decision in the Grand Trunk Company vs. the Hamilton Electric Radial Company, to be found in 29 Ontario Reports, at page 143. I will not delay the committee by reading that decision, but it is in the same terms practically as the Railway Act itself, section 8 which I have read, namely, that it is for certain specified purposes only that the crossing of a railway is to be considered as a work for the general advantage of Canada. Therefore the effect will be that if this railway is given a Dominion charter it simply means that for all time to come this parliament will be obliged, in fairness to all other railway companies, to give every street railway company that comes to this House a Dominion charter. That is simply absurd, I do not think any hon. gentleman in this House will contend for a moment that that is right. No one will contend that it is the intention of our constitution to give little local railways, especially street railway companies, Dominion incorporation, more especially when in each province, as in the province of Ontario, we have ample legislation of a fair and equitable character to govern these local railways. Moreover I say that this company has shown no intention of building anywhere except as a local line. I do not think it is unfair to say, what I said before, that the powers asked for by this Bill to build to the Niagara river and the Detroit river are merely a pretext, that the company is insincere. Who will suppose for a moment that this company intends to run an electric road from Hamilton west to the Detroit river, over a territory which is now gridironed with various systems of railways? I do not believe for a moment that that is the case. But even if it be admitted the company can operate under its provincial powers, there is no pretense that the company intends to build immediately to these points. I am not doing the company an injustice to say that it is not sincere in asking for these powers, because it is admitted that there is no present intention of building this line. We find this company incorporated in the year 1894, when it was given five years to complete its work and build its line. Session after session since that time they have received extensions of time. In 1903 or 1904 they received a further extension from the Ontario legislature. They have now up to the year 1909 within which to complete their work. There is no pretense that they are coming here because they are crowded for time, there is no pretense that they are coming here because their time is expired and they want a renewal or extension, because as I have said they have until 1909 by their provincial powers to complete their work. They make no pretense of coming here for any other purpose but to escape provincial legislation. That is the sole object of their coming here—to escape provincial legislation. They are asking to be relieved of something which this parliament should not relieve them from. There is no bona fides in their application, there is nothing urgent. They do not say that they are suffering any hardship, or that they are liable to any forfeiture or loss of rights. They simply come here and ask this parliament to give them this purely local street railway a Dominion incorporation. Now I submit that there is no warrant for taking such a step. If we pass this Act we will be creating a precedent that other railway companies will follow. The public have valuable safeguards and rights secured to them now against this company, by legislation under which they have operated for twelve or thirteen years. The public have vested rights in that legislation, there is no doubt about that. They have treated this company fairly, they have extended the time when it asked for an extension, and there is no reason why it should be given this jug-handled preference. The province has given this company power to make agreements with municipalities for a certain number of years and we find in this wonderful Bill a blanketing clause confirming the agreements, no one knows now many agreements, made with various municipalities, none of which are before this House. We find this Bill proposes to confirm all these agreements. No one knows what these agreements contain except the promoters of this Bill. Indeed I do not think an hon. gentleman in this House is aware of the contents of these agreements with the municipalities. There may be bonus agreements under which certain rights have been given. It may be that perpetual franchises are given this company by some of the municipalities. Now I ask: Is it fair, without a knowledge of what we are doing, to take this step in the dark and confirm a large number of agreements between this corporation and municipalities, not even knowing what these agreements contain. I submit that it would be highly improper to take this step, and distinctly unfair to the province of Ontario and to the municipalities which are immediately affected by this road.

Mr. NORTHRUP. It seems to me this Bill is one which invites about as much criticism as any Bill that ever came before this House. Certain facts must be admitted by the promoters, if there is any promoter present to speak on behalf of the Bill; I infer there is not, by the remarks made by the hon. member for West York. We find that this company, when it wished for a charter went to the Ontario legislature and obtained this charter in 1894, thirteen years ago, and for thirteen years it has been able to do whatever business it required to do, and did it under an Ontario charter.

Evidently there was not any great dissatisfaction with that charter, for having obtained it in 1894 they came back in 1895, again in 1896, again in 1900 and again in 1904 and successively obtained further legislation from the Ontario legislature. If they have acted on an Ontario charter for thirteen years during which time five appeals were made to the Ontario legislature and acceded to, we are surely justified in saying that a great responsibility rests on the gentlemen who now ask us to give them another charter with new and extraordinary powers.

Then the date at which this Bill is brought before parliament leads to suspicion. Parliament has been sitting five months and owing to the change in the fiscal year, we wasted several months at the beginning of the session owing to inability to obtain the public accounts. During that time there was every opportunity for private legislation and many took advantage of it, but here we find this company in the closing days of the session asking for this suspicious charter. We all know that when people come in the closing days of a session with Bills granting extraordinary powers they select that time because it is considered more easy to get such a Bill through then. This Bill was thus introduced and the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) asked why for thirteen years the railway has been for the advantage of Ontario and suddenly it is asked to be declared to be in the general interest of Canada. If it is in the interest of Canada it should be passed here; if it is not in the general interest it should not. The chairman of the Railway Committee who is supposed to know something of the Bill, who is its spokesman, a few moments ago when asked why it was for the general advantage of Canada said that it would enable his constituents in West York to get out of the constituency more quickly, more easily, more economically than at the present time. That may be a good argument from his point of view, that anything that will assist his constituents to leave his constituency is for the general advantage of Canada; in a parliamentary sense I am compelled to accept his statement on the floor of the House, but I think his statement is enough to arouse our suspicions as to whether this work should be declared for the general advantage of Canada. The fact that this road has for thirteen years been operated without question as a work purely for Ontario is prima facie evidence that it should continue to be Ontario work, and while it is quite possible that some change may have taken place at the end of thirteen years, which make it now a work for the general advantage of Canada, surely the onus rests upon the supporters of the Bill to clearly demonstrate that to the House.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The Bill before the House is one in which, unless it may be the interest which the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) has indicated, I have no personal interest, and in regard to which personally and so far as my constituents are concerned, I cannot see that I or they have any special concern. But the hon. gentleman from East Hastings, (Mr. Northrop) has addressed himself to the question whether or not the declaration contained in the first clause of the proposed Bill should be passed by this House and whether or not any reason could be given for passing it. This leads me to point out what possibly has been for the moment lost sight of, namely the circumstances with regard to legislation of this sort in the case of a company whose works are in the position that the works of this company are in.

The design of the British North America Act was, of course, that there should be exclusive legislative jurisdiction residing either in this parliament or in the provincial legislature with reference to different subjects matter, and accordingly section 92, providing the exclusive powers of provincial legislatures, declares that in each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation among other things to,

> Local works and undertakings other than such as are before or after their execution declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada.

Now any work which has been at any time declared to be for the general advantage of Canada is thenceforward to be subject not to the legislative authority of the provinces but to the exclusive legislative authority of the Dominion Parliament, and if, in fact, the works of this company are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, then from the time of that declaration no provincial legislature has power to legislate with regard to this company, but this parliament and this parliament alone, and if these works are already in that position or are in a doubtful position the question, I take it, for decision now is whether or not that doubt should be cleared up, whether or not this parliament should speak, because it is only this parliament which has the power to declare whether or not any certain works in the country are to be considered to be for the general advantage of Canada. This company was, as hon. gentlemen have stated, incorporated in 1894, and after certain amendments in its Act of incorporation there came a time, I am not able to say exactly at what date, when it built its crossing over the line of the Grand Trunk Railway at Burlington. The effect of that action on the part of the company came to be considered before the High Court of Ontario not long afterwards, and Mr. Justice Street, who, I need not say to any one who knew him or to any one acquainted with the jurisprudence of the province of Ontario, was perhaps the most careful and painstaking judge who ever sat upon the Canadian bench, delivering a carefully considered judgment, to which allusion has already been made, pronounced, I think in 1898 or 1899, the law with regard to this particular company, and said in so many words that the effect of the building of the crossing over the line or across the line of the Grand Trunk at Burlington, was, under the Dominion law as it then stood, to make the works of this Hamilton Radial Railway Company, works thenceforward for the general advantage of Canada, and thenceforward subject only to Dominion legislation. These are his words:

> The defendants (The Hamilton Radial Railway Company) are incorporated by 57 Victoria, chapter 88, Ontario, to construct a line of railway crossing the plaintiff's (Grand Trunk line) at Burlington, but are forbidden by section 19 to cross or intersect the line of any railway operated by steam at grade. Proposing, however, as they do, to cross the plaintiff's line, they are brought within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada by sections 306 and 307 of the Dominion Railway Act of 1888, and by section 4 of the same Act the provisions with regard to crossings are made specially applicable to them.

That, then, was a judicial declaration of the position of this company some four or five years after it was incorporated, and we have the High Court of Ontario then saying, by the voice of Mr. Justice Street in the language I have read, that this particular company possessed works which were subject only to the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada and not subject to the legislative jurisdiction of the legislature of Ontario. The foundation upon which that decision rested was of course perfectly plain. At that time and for ten years previously this parliament had declared by its legislation of 1888 that the works of any railway company, which crossed a Dominion road, by that circumstance became works subject to the legislative jurisdiction of this parliament. Section 306 of the Railway Act of 1888 in terms enacts that certain named roads are works for the general advantage of Canada:

> And each and every branch line or railway nor or hereafter connecting with or crossing the said lines of railway or any of them, is a work for the general advantage of Canada.

I am not concerned in the slightest degree with the policy of the legislation. It was the law for nearly twenty years, and the government of that day no doubt considered that it was in the interest of the country to pass it. At all events, it was undoubtedly the law of Canada from 1889 forward to 1903, that any railway which crossed a railway which was a Dominion railway, thereby itself became a Dominion railway also. So we have this situation, that this particular railway, this particular electric road incorporated by the Ontario legislature in 1894 may have been and no doubt was subject to provincial jurisdiction at that time and thenceforward until its line crossed the Grand Trunk, and as soon as its line crossed the Grand Trunk the parliament of Canada by its declaration of 1888 declared thenceforward that this crossing road, however little it may be, is a road over which the Dominion parliament and the Dominion parliament only has legislative jurisdiction.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Might I ask the hon. gentleman a question? When he makes that rule so broad, does he say that if any portion of the street railway of Toronto crosses the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway, it then becomes a work under the jurisdiction of the Dominion of Canada?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am only speaking of the law as I find it, and the law as it stood when Mr. Justice Street pronounced this decision in 1898, I venture to say is undoubtedly as he declared it. I am not expressing my own opinion; I am taking his opinion, which is a great deal better, and his opinion is expressed in the most unequivocal and unmistakable language.

Mr. AYLESWORTH

Mr. FOSTER. Is it contended that that road, the moment it crosses a Dominion railway, becomes subject to Dominion legislation by virtue of legislation passed by this Dominion in the Railway Act?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The Railway Act of 1888; quite so.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Then, from the argument of the Minister of Justice I take it that if the street railway in Toronto or any other city crosses the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific Railway that street railway comes under the Dominion law.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am speaking, as I have said, of the position of this road, and I am resting myself absolutely in this matter upon the language of Mr. Justice Street. I am not pronouncing any opinion of my own, but I am desirous of pointing out to the committee what the position of this road, and any other that is in the same condition, would appear to be. From 1888 until 1903 we had in force in this country the unequivocal declaration of the Railway Act of 1888, that any road which crossed a Dominion road thereby itself became a Dominion road subject to Dominion legislation and Dominion legislation only.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the law?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. No, that is what I am going to point out. This road was declared to be in that position by Mr. Justice Street in 1898 or 1899, and in 1903 this parliament passed the present Railway Act in which it uses this language:

> That every railway, steam or electric street railway, or tramway, now crossing a railway which is subject to the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, is hereby declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, in respect only to such connection or crossing, or to through traffic thereon.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That was a change of policy on the part of this parliament which, after fifteen years' experience, was pronounced in 1903. Now, the contention arises at once, and I should think it is a question of very considerable importance for any railway solicitor or counsel to consider: Can a road which has been for ten years, or for one year, subject only to the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament, be referred to the jurisdiction of the local legislature so far as legislation over it is concerned. There is no provision of that nature in the British North America Act. The only provision whatever on the subject in our constitution is the provision of section 92:

> That such works as have at any time been declared to be for the general advantage of Canada shall thenceforward be subject to the Dominion control only.

There is no power conferred by any express language or by any implication, that I am aware of, upon the Dominion parliament to denude itself of its legislative jurisdiction over the works of any undertaking which it once has established.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the decision of the judge on a point of law make that declaration permanent?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It is only a declaration of what the law is.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. It is the judge's opinion of what the law is.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It is a declaration by the court of what the law was at that time. Of course parliament has the power to amend or alter the law, and often a judicial declaration of what the law is is the very ground for the amendment which parliament in its wisdom makes in that regard. The point I am trying to make clear with regard to the situation of this company is simply this: That from the time its line crossed the Grand Trunk till 1903 it was undoubtedly a road subject only to Dominion legislation.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. If that be so, and if this company understood its rights—the judgment the hon. gentleman speaks of was in 1897—why was it that in 1900 and 1904 it went to the Ontario legislature for amendments to its Act?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. My hon. friend will have to ask somebody else than me for an answer to his question; I am not in the confidence of the company; I do not know anything about the company. I have no idea why they did it; that is their affair. I am not concerned with this legislation one way or the other. The hon. member for East Hastings has asked an answer to the question, why is this declaration in section 2 of the present Act at all necessary? I am trying to point out why it would seem to me to be very necessary in the position in which the law is since the passage of the Dominion Act of 1903. I am saying that from the time the lines of this radial road crossed the Grand Trunk tracks until 1903 there was no question, upon the decision of Mr. Justice Street and upon the plain language of the Dominion Act of 1888, that this road was subject to Dominion legislative control and no other.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In that connection, might I ask the Minister of Justice has he considered the question as to whether or not the provision in the Act of 1888 would necessarily extend to street railways, which are expressly exempted by the Act of 1903? Might it not be possible that that provision would be confined to railways of the character dealt with generally by the Act?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The language of the Act of 1888 is wide enough to include a railway such as this, which I understand to be scarcely what would ordinarily be considered a street railway. It is an electric road which, for a considerable part at all events, travels over its own purchased right of way, and does not travel exclusively on the highways. But in that regard I rest, as I think the temptation of any lawyer would be too strong to resist, upon the express language of the court, a competent court, and in this instance one to whose opinion every one would pay the highest respect, declaring that in 1897, at all events, this particular company was subject to the control and legislative jurisdiction of this parliament.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the Minister of Justice pardon me one more question? I have not done more than glance at the judgment of Mr. Justice Street to which he alludes. Does the definitive pronouncement of Mr. Justice Street extend beyond this, that in respect of the crossing of the Hamilton Radial Railway over the Grand Trunk Railway, the first mentioned company was within the legislative competence of the parliament of Canada, and within the jurisdiction of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council? Apart from what he says, does his judgment extend beyond that point?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I have not the volume before me, and I am not able at the moment to say what the nature of the action was. I was under the impression that it was a claim for an injunction to restrain this road from doing what it sought; but the language of the learned judge is very definite, and in no way limits the matter to the crossing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What the Minister of Justice read did undoubtedly go that far.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I might say that the legislation limiting it to the crossing had not had birth at that time. That was enacted in 1903, and it is entirely anomalous. Far be it from me to raise the slightest question as to the validity of any Act passed by this parliament; but I cannot help noticing that what the British North America Act authorizes this parliament to do is to declare certain works to be for the general advantage of Canada, and under that language we have a declaration, not that the works generally of the company are for the advantage of Canada, but some defined portion of those works alone. However that may be, we have now this position of affairs so far as the present company is concerned: A company incorporated by provincial statute afterwards becoming, in the execution of the works contemplated by the Act which brought it into being, subject to Dominion legislative control and to Dominion legislative control alone, continuing in that position for a period of seven or eight years, and then being possibly dethroned, if I may use the expression, by the passing of the Dominion Act in 1903, which limited the Dominion legislative control to crossings. It is doubtful whether that enactment of 1903 was or was not effective to destroy the Dominion control which had previously existed over the whole undertaking. This company, being advised by their counsel to seek for an authoritative declaration as to their status and position, it is only this parliament which can pronounce such an authoritative declaration. No other tribunal or body can. This parliament is the one which, by the British North America Act, is alone vested with the jurisdiction to declare a particular work to be for the general advantage of Canada. Can it ever undo what it has so declared? I find no warrant for it in the British North America Act. The imperial parliament has said to this parliament: You may, in the exercise of your good judgment, declare any work which you, as a parliament, consider to be for the general advantage of Canada to be of such character; and so declaring, you, and you only, shall thenceforth have legislative jurisdiction over it. This parliament did once so declare with regard to this road. Afterwards something has occurred which puts the position of that road in this respect in doubt. Under these circumstances, it seems to me the most natural thing in the world that this company should seek to have a declaration on the subject which would put its position beyond question. As to the general merits of the Bill I say nothing. I am free to admit that I have formed no particular opinion upon it. If, however, we credit those who are asking this legislation with sincerity, then certainly the provisions of this Bill are such as no other parliament than that of this Dominion can pass.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the minister just explain that? That is not patent to my mind.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Each province has a right, under section 92 of the British North America Act, to incorporate a company for purely provincial objects, but no other company. Now, a company which has for its object to cross the international boundary cannot be a company with purely provincial objects.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Will the Minister of Justice allow me to ask him one question? If this parliament declares the works of this company to be works for the general advantage of Canada, is it possible for the same company to go to the provincial legislature to get legislation to build further railways?

Mr AYLESWORTH.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I do not know whether I can answer that question categorically. I can only say that the effect of declaring certain works to be for the general advantage of Canada gives to this parliament the exclusive right to legislate with regard to them.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Could two legislative bodies have jurisdiction over the same work?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Not the same work but possibly different works of the same company.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Judging by what has fallen from my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), his conclusion is that in consequence of some railway legislation in 1888 and a judicial decision given by Judge Street in 1897, by which it was held that this work became a work for the general advantage of Canada, it clearly was a work for the advantage of Canada from that time until at all events 1904, and it appears to be uncertain under the Act of 1903 whether or not it is a work for the general advantage of Canada to-day. That I think is the argument of the Minister of Justice. Under those circumstances there is only one thing for us to do. If it is really a work for the general advantage of Canada, it is superfluous for us to stamp those words on the Act. If it is not, why should we declare it so? Evidently parliament in 1903 was not inclined to consider this railway for the general advantage of Canada and attempted to lay down a rule under which such works would not be so considered. But if this company thinks now it was made a work for the general advantage of Canada, it can go to the courts and have that declared. There is no reason why we should declare it to be for the general advantage of Canada unless it is. On what ground can it be said that this is for the general advantage of Canada? If it is, let us have the reason. If it is only on the ground mentioned by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), let the railway company stand on the judicial decision of Mr. Justice Street and not come to this House.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That puts any company in a very extraordinary position and one in which no company would wish to be. If they are already for the general advantage of Canada so that this parliament alone can legislate, when they resort to any provincial legislature, any legislation of that body will be ultra vires and the company has to come here.

Mr. NORTHRUP. The fact that they have gone to the provincial legislature several times shows how ready they were to yield to provincial legislation up to a certain point. Has the chairman of the Railway Committee any idea of the number of miles this road has really constructed in thirteen years ? My information is that the whole road, after thirteen years experience, covers about twenty miles from Hamilton to Oakville.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Does it not run from Beamsville ?

Mr. NORTHRUP. My information is simply from Hamilton to Oakville a distance of twenty miles and to say that a tramway running twenty miles is for the general advantage of Canada is absurd.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. With regard to the legal point under discussion, I would like to point out to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice that, with all deference to the view he has expressed as to the judgment of Mr. Justice Street, it hardly seems to me that his decision went that far. What happened in the case alluded to which is reported in twenty-nine Ontario reports, page 143, was this. The Grand Trunk Railway, the plaintiff, applied for an injunction to restrain the defendant—the company now promoting this Bill—from trespassing upon or taking possession of certain land. The application was made in connection with a proposal to cross the Grand Trunk Railway. The Hamilton Radial Company had applied to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council for an order allowing them to cross and that had been opposed by the Grand Trunk Railway, but the Railway Committee had made an order approving of the place and mode of crossing the plaintiff's railway, as indicated by the defendants in their application. Omitting the immaterial portions of the judgment, it amounts to this :

Proposing, however, as they do, to cross the plaintiff's lines, they are brought within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada by section 306 and 307 of the Dominion Railway Act of 1888, 51 Victoria, chapter 29, and by section 4 of the same Act, the provisions with regard to crossings are made specially applicable to them.

Section 4 contains this provision:

In addition all the provisions of this Act relating to any subject or matter within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, and for greater certainty but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing terms, all provisions relating to railway crossings and junctions, offences and penalties and statistics, apply to all persons, companies and railways, whether otherwise within the legislative authority of parliament or not.

The learned judge thus calls attention to the fact hat section 4 of the Railway Act makes the Hamilton Radial Company subjective to the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada, if it attempts to cross the line of a company which has been incorporated by or is within the legislative jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament. On the next page the learned judge goes on :

By section 111 of subsection (d) the Railway Committee have power to inquire into, hear and determine any application, complaint or dispute respecting the crossing of the tracks of one company by the tracks of another.

By section 173, as amended by 56 Victoria, chapter 27, section 1, the above powers are made equally applicable to the case of an electric railway seeking to cross an ordinary railway.

Section 173 of the Railway Act of 1888, as amended by the Act of 1893, 56 Victoria, is as follows:

The railway of any company shall not be crossed, intersected, joined or united by or with any other railway, nor shall any railway be intersected or crossed by any street railway, electric railway or tramway, whether constructed under Dominion or provincial or municipal authority or otherwise, unless the place and mode of the proposed crossing, intersection or junction or union, are first approved of by the Railway Committee on application therefor.

Then follow provisions as to the mode of application. The section continues:

And in the case of crossing by street railways, electric railways or tramways respectively, the Railway Committee shall have the same powers in all respects as to the protection of such crossing and otherwise as are givn to the Railway Committee by this Act in regard to one railway crossing another.

Having regard to these provisions, all that the learned judge decided is that in respect of the crossing by the Hamilton Radial Railway of the Grand Trunk Railway, the Hamilton Radial Railway was within the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada and subject to the provisions which the learned judge cites from the Railway Act of 1888 and the amendments thereto. But it would not necessarily follow from his decision that the work was a work for the general advantage of Canada.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

Committee resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I think we heard here, just before recess, the most surprising and far-reaching argument ever put forward in this House, one that altogether upsets the constitution of this country. For, if the argument of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) be true, he has signed the death warrant of provincial rule, and even of federal rule, and has prepared the way for what has been called autocratic legislative union. Under this argument, municipal rights are gone, provincial rights have ceased to exist—a new doctrine has been declared. I would point out to the Minister of Justice and also to the leader of the House (Mr. Fielding) that decision of Judge Street which has been referred to, was given at a time when Sir Oliver Mowat was Minister of Justice of this Dominion and when the chief beneficiary of the legislation now before us was Attornef General of the province of Ontario. That was the case Mr. Chairman—Sir Oliver

Mowat, of provincial rights and blessed memory, was Minister of Justice and Attorney General of this Dominion at that time; and Mr. Gibson, who is at the back of this Bill, was Attorney General of the province of Ontario. Did Mr. Gibson notice this decision of Judge Street, and sit quietly by, waiting until he could get out of office and use to his own advantage something which he should have corrected at the time? He was a member of a government whose great policy was defence of provincial rights. Yet, instead of calling public attention to this matter, and securing a remedy, he kept his mouth closed; but now he proposes to take advantage of this decision. This statement of the Minister of Justice to-day is like others that we have heard from the same source, it is a purely technical legal interpretation of the case—there is no statesmanship or public policy in it. Now, I want to suggest to the leader of the House what statesmanship and public policy in this matter demand. Rather than consent to the narrow legal statement that has been made, he should insist that this Bill be withdrawn and time taken to consider the whole situation. As I have said, this new interpretation of the constitution will do away with provincial rights and with existing municipal rights under provincial jurisdiction. Why even the street railways in our cities will by it come under the federal power. If that is a true statement of our constitutional position, then the leader of this House should demand opportunity to make an appeal to the imperial authorities for immediate legislation so as to change the situation. The Minister of Justice has told us that once a work has been declared for the general advantage of Canada it can never go back to provincial jurisdiction. That ought to be either rectified or cleared up. If that is the effect of Judge Street's decision, then that judgment should have been appealed—probably it could be appealed yet, or another case involving the same question should be submitted to the privy council that we may have an authoritative decision of the matter. I for one, am not prepared to override the constitution of this country as universally interpreted on a decision of one judge in an insignificant case. If this judgment applies to this Hamilton Radial Railway, it applies to every other railway that was under similar conditions at that time. And the Toronto Railway, which controls the street railways in Toronto and Hamilton, can come here next session—or this session for that matter—and have its lines declared works for the general advantage of Canada. For, the conditions are exactly similar. We know—I am aware of it as a matter of fact—that the Toronto street railway crosses both the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway. And the same is true of the Hamilton railway; no doubt, it is true of practically every street railway in the country. I desire, therefore. to impress upon the Acting Minister of Railways (Mr. Fielding) the fact that every street railway in the province of Ontario will seek to have itself declared a work for the general advantage of Canada so as to get away from all its present engagements to the province of Ontario. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. A. C. Macdonell) all these lines must now concede certain advantages in the interest of the people of Ontario, and these obligations would cease if the argument of the Minister of Justice prevailed in our constitutional system. The right of way of each of these lines, as has been stated, can be used by the province for the transmission of electrical power. Moreover, in the province of Ontario they are under a two-cent-a-mile jurisdiction. Put through this legislation and in effect, you place the street cars in every city of Canada, and especially of Ontario, under a three-cent-a-mile jurisdiction—that is for the eight mile ride in Toronto for which you now pay three cents, you will pay twenty-four cents.

I contend that it is not right to put through legislation such as this at the end of the session. There was a reason in putting it back to this time, I imagine. But, instead of having it go through, we ought to have a statement from the leader of the House that he cannot allow legislation of this kind to pass, or even to take up the whole of the day, until he has had a chance to consider it fully and, if necessary, pass it only after legislation has been provided that will maintain the meaning of the British North America Act. But it is not necessary to amend the constitution; you can do with it what they have been doing with theirs in the United States, and what this government have done time and time again, and that is interpret it to suit. It would strain the constitution less to be interpreted somewhat arbitrarily than to have the whole municipal rights of Ontario done away with.

Now, that which is desired by Col. Gibson and his associates who control the Toronto electric railway and others is to escape from Ontario jurisdiction. Ontario imposes duties upon them, and gives them franchises for not longer than twenty-five years. But if this legislation passes, these companies are on the streets and roads of Ontario for ever. This legislation is altogether inspired by the street railway interests controlling the Hamilton Radial Railway and other great electric railway interests in the province of Ontario, whose first merger was $30,000,000, and whose next merger will be for $150,000,000 or $200,000,000, to include all the trolley systems and power development companies of Ontario.

These men have these roads and companies in their grasp now, and they want to form a big merger in order to get rid of Ontario jurisdiction. They wish to become tyrannical in the province of Ontario, and they are being helped in that by the Hon. J. M. Gibson who was the Attorney General of Ontario at the time this happened. He was a professional advocate of provincial rights for years and years, and was under a leader who was for ever the advocate of provincial rights, and who made his reputation and acquired much glory in fighting this parliament and Sir John A. Macdonald for provincial rights against federal invasion. Now we heard to-day my hon. friend, and my constituent by the by, the member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell), weeping over the poor people who wanted to get into the city. He overstrained his lachrymals in that effort, and I would advise him to take this view, that the people of Toronto would like to have their system go out into the country. The people he was weeping over wish to get into the city of Toronto over the Toronto railway. Is he willing to let the city send out its street cars over these radials ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Most certainly.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Well, what would be the result of that ? These men who were here to-day would oppose these clients of his ; the late Attorney General of Ontario would be here opposing any such legislation ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. What about the people ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I know the hon. gentleman is weeping for the people to-day, but these friends of his would not put the boot on the other foot, they would allow no other company to go over their lines. Now I do not think these radial people would allow any line further back to use their line to get into the city.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I would compel them.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Then you must go to the province of Ontario where the proper jurisdiction is. Ontario to-day is dealing with this question, it has a magnificent law regarding it, it has made all these franchises limited, it has reduced and regulates the passenger rate, it has taken the right to use their poles, and the right of way for the distribution of power. In a hundred ways Ontario to-day is competently and successfully administering all these things. It is because Ontario has a law in the public interest that this great trolly merger are coming here. They want to escape this good law in the province of Ontario, and to come under a new law. They want to get into a position where they can have their friends, who happen to be outside the province of Ontario, give them any concession they ask here. There seems to be a great willingness on the part of some of the other provinces to sacrifice the municipal rights of the people of Ontario.

Mr. TALBOT. What does the hon. gentleman mean when he says that there seems to be a willingness on the part of the representatives of other provinces to sacrifice Ontario's rights ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The province of Ontario has noticed from time to time, when its municipal rights are under discussion here, that there is a certain willingness on the part of some of the representatives of other provinces to vote away the provincial rights of Ontario.

Mr. TALBOT. Would the hon. gentleman define his meaning a little better ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The hon. gentleman seems to know what the reference is.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman refers to the fact that at the time of this trial Sir Oliver Mowat was Minister of Justice and J. M. Gibson was Attorney General of Ontario. Does the hon. member mean by that insinuation that the judge was tampered with?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. J. M. Gibson was Attorney General of Ontario when this attack was made on provincial rights. He was not the defender of municipal rights he was a corporationist then as he is now, and instead of boldly defending provincial rights he and his friends come here to have them murdered. He could have appealed the case to the Privy Council, he could have come to this parliament and said : If that is the law, we in the province of Ontario will join with you in going to the imperial government and having an Act passed defining what the law really is. To-day the Minister of Justice has taken refuge under one decision only, and on that one decision he proposes to turn the constitution upside down. He has not given any clear, statesmanlike reason for turning the constitution upside down in this proposal for bringing every street railway in the country under the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament. Again I appeal to the Acting Minister of Railways and Canals to tell the people of Canada whether he intends to allow this measure to go through without further consideration. We can certainly show that it is in the interest of the public that it should be deferred, that there should be a conference between the provinces and the Dominion on this matter ; and that if there is an invasion of provincial rights, if the British North America Act seems to have altered the original intention of the law, then let it be rectified by an imperial Act. That is the proper thing to do on this occasion. It is not good politics from a federal point of view to invade provincial rights. That ought to be done only on the most careful consideration, after a decision of the judicial committee of the Privy Council has been obtained. I venture to say that the present Minister of Justice has argued twenty times before the imperial Privy Council in the very opposite direction he has argued here to-day; I would not be surprised to learn that he was counsel for the Ontario government in several of these issues, and that he stated before the Privy Council their view of provincial rights. Now in view of the situation I appeal to the leader of the House to hold this measure over. He won't get it through to-day, I do not believe the members here will allow that to go through in a month's time, if we have to sit day and night. In view of the circumstances that exist, and in view of the position that has been stated here to-day, this Bill should not be pressed but it should stand over till another session. It is not in the public interest, no wrong will be done. This company is only a fraction of a big merger of these companies, and no harm will come to any body if the Bill stands over another session. It will only be six or eight months, and in the meantime I do not think this House can afford to let any such measure go through. For my part I am going to oppose it right to the end.

Mr. BLAIN. As I am mentioned by my hon. friend from Centre York (Mr. Campbell) in connection with this proposed construction of an electric road, for fear that my hon. friend might misunderstand my position, I wish to say that I am in favour of the construction of a road from Oakville in the county of Halton, through the county of Peel, to the city of Toronto. I wish my hon. friend to understand at the same time that I am in favour of provincial rights being properly protected, and on that point I do not wish any doubt to remain in the mind of any hon. gentleman.

The government should see to it that this conflict, session after session, between the federal and Ontario governments should be ended in so far as the railway question is concerned. We in Ontario are in our infancy in the construction of electric railways; charters are being asked from the provincial government for the construction of railways all through western Ontario in particular and now when this matter is up I deem it the duty of this government and particularly of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) to have his department and the corresponding department of the Ontario government get together and come to some clearly defined policy so that all promoters seeking charters from either government would understand that they can go so far upon this question and no further. It is not fair to the people of Ontario or of any province that the people should be kept without railway communication because of a clash of jurisdiction between the federal and provincial governments. We have had forty years' existence as a Dominion and it seems to me this question should be settled —it should have been settled long ago. Whatever can be said about past governments the responsibility just now rests upon this government and it is their duty to see that this conflict between the federal and provincial governments does not continue. This road is of importance to the people in the county I have the honour to represent. We have good railway communication through Peel it is true; we have the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway, but our people in the southern part of the county who are raising large quantities of fruit and vegetables for the Hamilton and Toronto markets are anxious for more railway communication so that the rates will be lower and the service better. The Dominion and the provincial goverments should not allow these roads to postpone construction. This charter was granted by the provincial government in 1894, and that is a long time to allow the company to hold a charter without constructing the road, and in so far as that is concerned, I think the provincial government and the members of the company are to blame; I believe now that this government should see to it that such an arrangement is made as will end this conflict and secure the speedy construction of the road. The people in the counties concerned are not particularly interested in the question of a Dominion or provincial charter but they are interested in the construction of the road.

Mr. CLARKE. I agree in the main with what has been said by the last speaker (Mr. Blain). The Bill stands in my name and it is a Bill which I consider to be very much in the interests of Canada. The matter has been very fully discussed before the Railway Committee and I think I can say with the utmost sincerity that not one single person interested—I do not mean the members of parliament—raised any opposition to it; in fact the people who appeared before the Railway Committee were anxious that the road should be constructed, and as the hon. member (Mr. Blain) has just said they do not care very much whether it is constructed under provincial or Dominion legislation, what they want is the railway.

Something has been said about the manner in which this Bill has been brought here; some complain that it has come in late and some that it has come by way of the Senate. Many Bills have come in by way of the Senate before, and if the Senate is to be of any use at all I cannot see why anything that comes to us by way of that House, should be criticised as this Bill has been. As to the time, the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) said that the Bill was brought in behind the city's back. I do not think the gentlemen from Toronto and some of the other gentlemen are doing credit to themselves by making the statement that they only hear of this Bill at the present moment, because if they did not hear of it before they should have heard of it. Other people have learned of it and discussed it, the people as far west as my county have been discussing the matter for two months back. They were notified as I understand all municipalities affected were notified. Certainly Toronto was notified and I find in the Toronto 'Globe' of last Friday, the following interviews in connection with this matter:

City Solicitor Chisholm was asked yesterday as to the reason why this city was not represented by counsel when the application of the Hamilton Radial Electric Company for entrance to Toronto came before the Railway Committee of the House of Commons. He said that he and Corporation Counsel Fullerton had discussed the Bill about six weeks ago, when it was before the Senate committee and they had decided that it would not be necessary for the city legal department to be represented when it came before the Railway Committee, as Toronto's interests were protected by the general Act.

If the company sought to run the railway on any of the streets of the city, it would first have to obtain permission from the Dominion Railway Board to do so, and if a tramway were wished the consent of the city would have to be secured. Anything done in the matter of the Bill would be subject to the Railway Board and this city could yet oppose it if this were deemed necessary. As for himself, Mr. Chisholm said he thought the more railways that came to Canada the better.

The mayor, when spoken to about the matter yesterday afternoon, said he had not seen either the city solicitor or corporation counsel with regard to the outcome of it, but some time ago he had been assured by City Solicitor Chisholm that this city's interests would not be affected by the Radial Railway Bill. That was all he knew about it.

It is apparent that although the members from Toronto and adjoining ridings may not have known of this Bill those most interested in the Bills, those who represented the people of Toronto and the other municipalities, were notified; they considered it and thought that the machinery of the general railway law afforded them sufficient protection. It is a little remarkable to me to find so much opposition in regard to this particular Bill. Members on both sides of the House have been for years declaring railways to be for the general advantage of Canada that had nothing like the claim that this railway has. I have known railways less than one hundred miles in length, situated wholly in Ontario, without any terminals in the United States or in any other province, to be declared for the general advantage of Canada. One of the very railways which it is proposed to incorporate into this system, the Hamilton-Brantford road has been declared by this parliament to be for the general advantage of Canada. What is the character of this road? Its original charter permits it to run over a great many miles, it is authorized to run from Hamilton to Guelph and Mount Forest, Hamilton to Berlin, Hamilton to Niagara Falls and Queenstown and Hamilton to Brantford. Authority is now asked for a branch line to run to Windsor and by ferries to Detroit and also to run across the Niagara river, a system of 300 or 400 or perhaps 500 miles, really a trunk line, and although other lines of less than one hundred miles have been declared to be for the general advantage of Canada here is a road with branches in the United States, really a trunk line, asking for such a declaration and still it is said that this particular road should not be declared for the general advantage of Canada. I would like to hear some person define exactly what is meant by the expression 'for the general advantage of Canada.' Here is a road of very great importance, serving the whole of western Ontario, and if that part of the British North America Act providing that this parliament should declare roads to be for the general advantage of Canada, is to be given effect to, certainly I think this is a case where that section should apply.

The position in which this road finds itself to-day is not of its own creation. The hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) has been again indulging in his favourite pursuit of tilting at windmills. He attacked Colonel Gibson because he happened at one time to be Attorney General of Ontario and is connected with these railways. Did he overlook the fact altogether, that the situation this railway finds itself in to-day was not created by Mr. Gibson, and was not created by this railway company itself, but was created by this Dominion parliament when the hon. gentleman's political friends were in the ascendancy. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) refers to the Minister of Justice as being a man of no breadth of statesmanship because he does not follow the constitution, or in other words because he has some respect for the judgment of a judge like Mr. Justice Street. Well, in my opinion the man with the greatest breadth of statesmanship is he who follows the constitution, and has respect for the judgment of the courts which bear upon that constitution.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How does Mr. Justice Street's decision affect this declaration?

Mr. CLARKE. As I understand the judgment of Mr. Justice Street, he says that this particular road is a road for the general advantage of Canada, and therefore within Dominion legislation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think Mr. Justice Street decided anything more than this; that under the Railway Act of 1888, the crossing of the Grand Trunk road by the Hamilton Radical Railway was a matter within the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada, and within the provisions of the Railway Act. I am perfectly satisfied he decided nothing more than that.

Mr. CLARKE. My hon. friend does not interpret the judgment the same as the Minister of Justice does.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I can't help that.

Mr. FOSTER. That's to the disadvantage of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. CLARKE. If my hon. friends will allow me to analyse that judgment a little, I think the House will agree with me that Mr. Justice Street did intend to go further.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have admitted that his language might go further, but in so far as his decision went—and that is all that would bind any other court—I am perfectly satisfied he did not go beyond what I have stated.

Mr. CLARKE. It may be that the absolute judgment does not go further, and perhaps it was not necessary to go so far as the language went, because under section 4 he held he had power (although the Hamilton Radial Railway was under provincial legislation) to permit the crossing. But surely the section of the Act of 1888 is pretty clear. Certain railways are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada and then it says :

And each and every branch line or railway now or hereafter connected with or crossing the said lines of railway or any of them, is a work for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does my hon. friend make of section 177 of the Railway Act of 1888 ?

Mr. CLARKE. I did not think that had any bearing on the precise question. I did not read it carefully enough to form an opinion, but it seems to me it does not affect this precise question at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will read section 177 with the permission of the hon. gentleman.

Every railway company incorporated by any Act of the legislature of any province, which crosses, intersects, joins or unites with any railway under the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, or which is crossed or intersected by, or joined or united with any such railway, shall in respect of such crossing, intersection, junction and union and all matters preliminary or incident thereto, be deemed to be and be within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, and subject in respect thereof to the provisions of this Act.

Thus qualifying it in that most important respect.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not know the history of these sections, but apparently that section only deals with a particular crossing. But we have section 306 which deals with the whole road. I am pointing out the practical point, that this company is in the position that it does not know under what proceedings to expropriate ; it does not know under what Act it is ; they are a company of large undertakings, they have already spent $775,000——

Mr. CLARKE.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the hon. gentleman keep this point in mind : That although they do not know now what to do or where to go, they did know, on two occasions subsequent to the decision of Mr. Justice Street, that they were to go to the local legislature.

Mr. CLARKE. They were not selling bonds then. I am not counsel for this railway company ; the Bill is put in my hands because it affects my constituency. I have no interest in it one way or the other. I am not responsible for their going to the legislature of Ontario, and I am not here to give an opinion as to whether they did right or wrong. I may say however that matters have arisen even since our Railway Act of 1903, which still more throws doubt upon the question. Now, Mr. Justice Street used this language :

Proposing, however, as they do, to cross the plaintiff's line, they are brought within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada by sections 306 and 307 of the Dominion Railway Act, 1888.

That seems to me to be very plain. It may not be a binding judgment, but these are the words of Mr. Justice Street. It may be that until they crossed they would not be a Dominion road, because section 4 of that Act was all that was necessary for him to invoke in order to authorize the crossing. But, having crossed, if you applied this section at all, it must be that the words used by the learned judge cannot be questioned.

Mr. HAGGART. It was only for the particular purpose under the consideration of the judge.

Mr. CLARKE. The words used in the Act of 1888 are that they are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, and then follows this :

Every such railway and branch line shall hereafter be subject to the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Is not that conclusive?

Mr. HAGGART. For a particular purpose.

Mr. CLARKE. There is no particular purpose about it ; it is not limited. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will have some respect for the opinion of the present chief commissioner of the Board of Railway Commissioners. This matter has suggested itself to him in a recent case which came before him, Patriarche vs. the Hamilton Radial Electric Street Railway Company; this very company. The particular purpose for which that application was made to the Railway Board, was on a question of interchange of freight so that it did not necessarily involve a determination of this question, but this is what Justice Killam says (Canadian Railway Cases, vol. 5, p. 203).

In considering whether the Hamilton Radial Electric Street Railway is subject to the legislative control of the parliament of Canada, several questions of considerable difficulty naturally suggest themselves.

And among others :

3. Can parliament once having declared a work to be for the general advantage of Canada deprive itself of legislative authority over such work, if so, is this done by the repeal of the Act containing the declaration?

The Act of 1903 has changed the former law and Justice Killam naturally assumes that this railway, by the Act of 1888, was declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is where I would be inclined to think that he had assumed too much.

Mr. CLARKE. That may be, but I am not giving my opinion upon it. What I am saying is that the position that this railway company is in, it is in by an Act passed by this parliament to which they are appealing for relief.

Mr. HAGGART. Although it is a provincial railway, does the Act give them jurisdiction to interchange traffic without that declaration ?

Mr. CLARKE. He so held. Mr. Justice Killam said : that for the purposes they were considering there it was not necessary to determine this point.

Mr. HAGGART. And therefore he did not determine it.

Mr. CLARKE. I am merely saying that interpreting the present Act of 1903, he puts the question : Can parliament, having once declared a work to be for the general advantage of Canada, deprive itself of legislative authority over this work? If my interpretation, and the interpretation of the Minister of Justice, and the remarks of Mr. Justice Street, are correct, then when the two roads crossed in 1897 the Hamilton Radial Railroad became a Dominion road under the jurisdiction of this parliament. It may be that on a strict reading of the Act of 1903 it would revert back to the province. That suggests the question which has been put by the chairman of the board : Can parliament, once having declared a work to be for the general advantage of Canada, deprive itself of authority over that work? That is the position we are in here. Surely it is not necessary for this parliament to determine this precise point or to go to the Privy Council to have it determined. This company is only asking for what has been done in a dozen other cases—the power to construct branch lines which, when constructed, must necessarily come before this parliament to secure incorporation in order to pass the international boundary line. Even when doubts arising out of an Act of the parliament of Canada have been suggested by these very eminent authorities, it is not a very gracious thing for hon. members of this House to say : We will not give this company the relief they desire to get them out of a difficulty which we ourselves put them into. I do not think that is what any person would seriously propose.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not like to butt into this argument which the lawyers are making, but I wish to say a word with reference to the way in which it strikes a layman. In the first place, it is strange to me that when the whole question appears to be whether we shall declare this work to be for the general advantage of Canada, and we ask the promoters of the Bill to inform us why it should be so declared, we cannot get a straightforward, simple answer to that question. We have had two legal arguments, one by the Minister of Justice and the other by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. Clarke). The legal argument made by the Minister of Justice seemed to resolve itself into this conclusion, that because of certain sections of the Railway Act, and because Judge Street, having the mere matter of a crossing before him, decided that as respects that crossing the matter came under Dominion jurisdiction, that is equivalent to a declaration of this parliament that that road is for the general advantage of Canada. Now, there may be legal sublety in that argument which I cannot see. An Act was passed by this parliament in 1888. After that time a certain decision was given. That decision had reference to a crossing and nothing more. There was no broader question involved than simply the crossing of one steam railway under Dominion jurisdiction by a street railway under provincial jurisdiction. It was on that narrow point alone that the judgment was given. Does that make it tantamount to a declaration by this parliament that that road and all its branches and additions, then and thereafter, are entirely out of provincial jurisdiction and are under Dominion jurisdiction ? And even that Act of 1888 was amended in 1903 so as to repeal the grounds for the decision above quoted.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Will the hon. gentleman, as a mature lawyer, say that the provincial legislature can have jurisdiction over one portion and the Dominion parliament jurisdiction over some other portion?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not going to debate that oft-debated question as to whether the tail wags the dog or the dog wags the tail. I leave that for the legal ability of the hon. gentleman who has just interrupted me. I have not been able to get an answer to that question as to whether that is equivalent to a declaration that these roads are for the general advantage of Canada. If the Dominion parliament had made a solemn declaration in any case that the railway was for the general advantage of Canada, then I would be willing to give weight to the argument that once it made that declaration and assumed that authority, it would not be able to give it back except under certain circumstances. When we come to interfere with provincial jurisdiction, and can only do so by declaring a work to be for the general advantage of Canada, we are assuming a great responsibility, and we ought to have it clearly pointed out to us why the work is for the general advantage of Canada ; but that has not been done to-day. Then this parliament should be very careful how it interferes with provincial jurisdiction. I think the argument is aside from the mark that certain localities want the road and do not care a fig whether it is built under Dominion or under provincial statute. You cannot push that argument too far. There are certain spheres to which legislation is limited under our constitution. The provincial government has one sphere and the Dominion government another. It is not for us to assume the jurisdiction of the provincial government without overwhelming reasons ; otherwise we might take almost any or all powers away from the local government. If there is one thing the local legislature and the people of a province ought to know how to deal with, it is their local railways, which are built and operated within their own borders, which are under their own eyes, and consequently subject to the will of the people who are affected and subject to no decision by people who are not affected. When you come into this parliament and ask New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, British Columbia, Prince Edward Island and every other province outside of Ontario to decide on a question which primarily belongs to the province of Ontario, you are getting the matter before a tribunal which is outside of the best basis of judgment or conclusion.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question that has troubled me? Will he tell us what railways within the limits of a province this parliament has declared to be for the general advantage of Canada which, in his judgment, are not for the general benefit of Canada?

Mr. FOSTER. I will be quite willing to state my opinion, and that is this, that I do not think any street railway which runs from one point in a province to another point in the province ought at all to be taken from the jurisdiction of the provincial government. That is the general principle, and that ought not to be departed from without overwhelming reasons. That is why I put a great deal of stress on the fact that no answer has been given to that question.

Mr. CLARKE. May I ask what great reason of state has been given for it in any Bill that has been passed here within the last twenty years?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I will frankly say that I think we have got into the habit of infringing on provincial and municipal rights just because of lack of thought, and because of the matter not having been pressed. Neither government is without fault in that respect. But my hon. friend sees how a dangerous infringement may be made on provincial powers without special attention being called to the fact. But in these days questions of municipal and provincial rights are forging to the front, some going a long way in favour of federal jurisdiction and others standing up for the rights of the states, but here is the point : I think that the proper tribunal to look after provincial affairs is the representatives of the province itself, and that when you go outside of that tribunal and ask the representatives of all the provinces to come and decide a question which is germane mainly to one, you are bringing the matter before the wrong tribunal. As to the question : Why prevent these people from building a road through the municipalities? Whose fault is it if they do not? It is certainly not the fault of this parliament. These gentlemen were created by a provincial parliament, they knew their creator, and it is natural that they should go to that parliament for what they require.

Mr. CLARKE. They have been translated to this Dominion parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. They seem to take to the translation very kindly, and under it all there is a little doubt in their own mind as to whether they are absolutely translated yet or not, and they want this Bill passed, with this clause in it, to make their translation sure.

Mr. CLARKE. Is not that right?

Mr. CONMEE. Would not that be a fair reason for coming here?

Mr. FOSTER. You have to know the way by which you will probably go to heaven before you start out on it. We would have been saved a good deal of this trouble if the company had sat down and reasoned out the path they chose to take before coming to us.

Mr. CLARKE. The company did take the matter up with the government of Mr. Whitney. Colonel Gibson wrote a letter to Mr. Whitney discussing the situation, but Mr. Whitney did not even condescend to reply.

Mr. FOSTER. I would be very loath to accept that statement. The local government under Mr. Whitney is favourable to the building of railways for the opening up of the country, and it does not seem reasonable to believe that a proper application to the local government for the extension of a railway system would meet with refusal. There may be something else. Mr. Whitney has two duties to perform. He has to look at the extension of railways in his province, but he has also to see that they are extended on right principles. It may be that in this application to Mr. Whitney things were asked for that could not well be granted. But to say that any company asking the Ontario government for power to extend its street or electric system under fair conditions would be refused is to say something hardly credible.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not mean to say they asked for these rights, but the legal position they found themselves in was taken up and discussed with the provincial government and the reason given why they thought it necessary to come here.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman say that the local government advised them to come here?

Mr. CLARKE. No, but it has been suggested that this is being brought in at the last moment for some improper purpose. The matter was taken up and discussed with the provincial government on the same lines as here and that view was pressed upon it. It was not suggested that the local government should give the powers asked for here.

Mr. FOSTER. What I would like to have is this correspondence and the papers embodying the correspondence. It might change the views of this committee if they found that certain things had been asked from the local government and it had been impossible to give them and there was pressing necessity they should be got at once. So it is not an argument why this committee should pass this Act to say that the people or the communities want to see the roads built. It is not the fault of this committee that the roads are not being built. It is the fault of the company which, in some way or other, has got itself into difficulty and went to the wrong legislature. If you can take that kind of legislation from the provincial government by means of all the members of all the provinces, it seems to me there is no good guarantee that provincial rights may not be completely invaded by the majority in this House, the larger number of whom have no direct interest in the province at all, and are legislating in a matter in which they know less how to come to a proper conclusion. I take the general ground that we ought not to interfere with the rights of a province unless there are overwhelming reasons for so doing. In this matter of the street railway, the provincial legislature is the proper authority. If I were in the provincial legislature I should be very jealous indeed as to the exercise of that authority. All we have to go upon are two legal arguments, in each, by a very narrow margin, and my hon. friend who spoke last would not even plant himself firmly on that. He relied rather on words, stated by way of hypothesis, than upon the bare judicial decision itself. After all it is only a bare judicial decision we have to go by. The whole case was not raised in that decision, and because we have no sufficient ground for declaring this to be for the general advantage of Canada, I shall vote against the Bill.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. There is no question here as to the power of the Dominion to enact this law. The question appears to be rather as to the propriety or fairness of our doing so, and the argument has been raised very strongly by the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) with regard to the invasion of provincial rights. The Liberal party has a record in the matter of provincial rights, and as an old Liberal I have a decided colouring along that line. The colouring comes from the old controversies almost personal between the late Sir Oliver Mowat and the late Sir John Macdonald—controversies which resulted in a continuous series of victories for Sir Oliver Mowat against the policy of the Conservative chieftain. During that time I believe provincial rights were really imperilled, but the principle of provincial rights was established by that series of decisions obtained from the British Privy Council in favour of the provincial view. We were quite justified then in standing up for provincial rights because they were really invaded, but it does not follow that in every controversy between the Dominion and a province the mere raising of the cry provincial rights should throw us on the side of the province. It is quite possible that a province itself may become aggressive. We know that in the past provincial Acts have been disallowed, partly because they were against the public interests, but partly because they were ultra vires. Numbers of them have not actually been disallowed, but the Dominion government has pointed out to the provincial government that it had exceeded its powers. As members of the House of Commons we have a duty to perform, not merely to the country at large but to the provinces as well.

And when a province comes to us and says, or representatives here from any part of a province tell us, that provincial rights are being infringed upon, or that we are going further than, in justice to the province, we ought to go, it is our duty to examine our position carefully that we may have sound reason for what we do. Each member of a body has the rights and privileges of that body to look after. As members of this House, while we should not desire in any way to infringe upon provincial rights, yet we must recognize that it is more especially our duty here to see to it that the rights and privileges of this body to which we belong are preserved; we must not give away those rights, or even weaken them, without good reason. Justice demands, I think, that as members of this House, we do not claim for the House rights or powers that do not belong to us, that we should not endeavour to aggrandize this body at the expense of the provinces. If we desire to be strictly fair in these matters, I think we should examine every case separately. It seems to me that the request made by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) was an eminently just one, that in a case of this kind we could not accept the mere declaration that this railway is a work for the general advantage of Canada without some proof. The extent of proof, of course, will necessarily be different with different people. Each of us has his own standard. But, whatever our several standards, a mere declaration should not be sufficient for any of us—we should have a proof. What is the standard by which we should judge. No special standard has been set up. We have the statement of the British North America Act—I cannot quote the exact words—to the effect that works of merely local interest should be under the jurisdiction of the provinces. But, in interpreting this, where should we draw the line? Many of us have advanced ideas of municipal control. I should like to see all street railways, if not owned at least controlled, by the municipalities in which they exist. With that in view, I should be sorry indeed to see the Dominion parliament take control over any street railway, for, in doing that, we should be going outside our proper jurisdiction. In this case the Hamilton Street Railway is included as a part of the work. The Ontario government has not been satisfied—I do not say they have done wrongly—to merely establish a street railway in Hamilton; they have by subsequent Acts enlarged the sphere of operation until this street railway becomes partly a street railway in adjoining municipalities and partly an ordinary railway for conveying passengers, because it does not entirely run on the roadway, but has an independent right of way of its own. Therefore, this Act of the Ontario authorities has somewhat complicated matters, and to some extent, has made difficult the municipal control by Hamilton over its own system of railways. The question is a difficult one for every hon. member to solve who desires to preserve provincial rights and yet to see justice done. I am sure we have no desire to injure any railway corporation or other corporation that comes to this House for privileges which it is within our power to grant. This railway is in a peculiar position. It is partly under the jurisdiction of the Dominion and partly under provincial jurisdiction. This must affect its efforts to finance its undertaking, because it must find it hard to satisfy financiers that they should advance large sums upon powers granted by the provincial legislature which may be in doubt. I think it would be well if our government could see its way clear to adopt a broad line of policy or make some arrangement with the provincial governments as to a fair line of demarcation between their jurisdiction and ours. I do not know whether that could actually be done but I think some endeavour in that direction should be made. While I have sympathy with the railway company in pressing its claims, I do feel that if the matter is to turn entirely upon the plea that this railway is one for the general advantage of Canada it would take a considerable stretching of our complaisance to believe that the promoters have proved it. But I am willing to suspend judgment until I have heard the rest of the argument. I do not think that, under present circumstances, the cry of interfering with provincial rights should be raised against any hon. member who thinks that in this case he should vote for the railway.

Mr. BARR. There are strong reasons why this Bill should not be proceeded with at the present time. The first is that it is brought down at a time when hon. members are anxious to be relieved of their duties. No sufficient reason has been advanced why this Bill is so late in coming into force. We should place ourselves on record against Bills of this kind being brought down so late in the session. It is said that this Bill only now comes before us, because it has been before the Senate. But if the promoters of the Bill had introduced it in the Senate in due time, it could have passed that body and been brought before this House at a time when we could discuss it and do justice to the interests involved. Another strong reason why, in my judgment, you should not pass this Bill is that, in dealing with a matter involving provincial rights, we are entering upon a discussion of a far-reaching principle. From the time of confederation this question of provincial rights has been one of the most important subjects of public discussion. For years the government of the late Sir Oliver Mowat claimed credit as the jealous defenders of provincial rights, particularly during the time when the Conservatives were in power here at Ottawa. On every platform this was the stock in trade of the supporters of the Mowat government—that it was not in the interest of the province, and not likely to help in the defence of provincial rights to have a Conservative government in Ottawa and to have a Conservative government in Toronto at the same time. We know that the leader of the Mowat government, to use a common phrase, went about with a chip on his shoulder ready for a fight when provincial rights were infringed upon. But a change came over the Reform party as soon as the present Dominion government came into power. When Sir Oliver Mowat left his position as Attorney General of Ontario, Colonel Gibson took that office. Whether it was all due—I do not claim it was—to the fact that the Reform government was in power in Ottawa, or to the fact which, I think, is generally admitted—that Colonel Gibson was strongly in favour of the rights of corporations, being connected with almost every corporation interest, particularly around Hamilton, including the one which has this Bill now before the House and which has been before the country for the last fifteen years, we find that he was not so careful of the rights of the provinces, as his predecessor had been. The result was that he has taken the decision of one judge. in one petty case of a railroad crossing, which did not in any way involve the right of railways to cross under other circumstances.

Now we find there is evidence to-day of a conflict between the province and the Dominion of Canada. We know that the hon. Mr. Gibson allowed corporations to come to the Ontario government and get charters, and then come to this parliament and get charters, with the consequence that much confusion has been created. We know that many of his own leaders were quite willing that that confusion should continue. The result is that to-day we have a corporation like the Niagara Falls Power Company going to the province of Ontario to obtain a charter giving them great advantage, and then coming to this parliament to get another charter. We find to-day that there is a conflict of jurisdiction between the two legislatures. I submit that the time has come when it is absolutely necessary that a halt should be called in connection with this question. The government should make out a case and carry it to the Privy Council in order to obtain a final decision on these vexed questions of jurisdiction, and if necessary the British North America Act should be amended so as more clearly to define their respective rights. We have heard to-day the strange doctrine from the Minister of Justice that a question has come up that he cannot answer. He bases his argument on the decision of a judge in connection with a railway crossing, but I think that if we knew all the bearings of that case we would find that it is not on all fours with the case before us. We have the promoter of this Bill taking the ground that he also is not prepared to give his opinion as to whether this Bill is ultra vires or not. Under these circumstances I say that, while we are anxious to promote the welfare of every part of the province of Ontario, and anxious that radial railways should be established, we do not think it right that just powers should be taken from the province and vested in the Dominion. It is possible that great injustice might be done. The fact that this Bill has been allowed to wait until the last days of the session is sufficient proof that it is not in the interest of the public that this railroad should go on. We have granted charters to many other companies. There are railroads running through Ontario that have received their sanction from the Ontario government, where their powers have been renewed on two or three occasions, and now they come down to this House and ask for Dominion charters. We find them continually offering charters for sale. I say that the time has come when we must decide that question. I think the promoters would be wise to withdraw this Bill; if they do not, it is possible that this discussion may go on for a length of time. This was fought out in the committee day after day, no progress was made; and I must say that in that committee we had no proof that this company intended to go on and build this road, any more than we had on two or three occasions when I was in the provincial House. On every occasion on which they came before the local legislature they showed us better cause for going on than they do at the present time. I well remember that on one occasion they came before the House and showed us a financial statement, showed that they had the money ready, that they had bonds ready to be floated, and they wanted a provincial charter to enable them to build that road. To-day we have no proof that this road is likely to go on, we have had no proof that it is to the interest of Canada, no reason why they should seek to be relieved from provincial control and come under Dominion control. We know what kind of a man the Hon. Mr. Whitney, the Premier of Ontario, is, and we know that he will no longer allow the Dominion government to infringe upon provincial rights. He has declared that the time has come when the government of Ontario will stand for their rights and fight for them, and carry the question to the Privy Council if necessary. And I must say to the credit of the opposition and the leader of the opposition in the local House, that he too has stated that he will stand shoulder to shoulder with the provincial government, and back them up to any extent in fighting for provincial rights. I fancy that those who know the Hon. Mr. Whitney know that he is accustomed to carry out his promises, they know that if he is bold enough to make that statement he is bold enough to fight it out to the bitter end. He is not interested in any corporations, railway or otherwise, he is not a man that can be pulled hither or thither. He is prepared to assert his rights, and to fight for them.

Under those circumstances I suggest that this Bill be left over until another session. In the meantime we can consider whether it is in the best interests of the country or not, and hon. gentlemen will find that while it is not a burning question to-day it is a question which is looming up and even before the next session of parliament we may have evidence of the injustice committed by this government against the province of Ontario and other provinces. The question might then be better defined. I do not see how those coming from the woolly west or from the maritime provinces can vote intelligently without full consideration and discussion on an Ontario subject so important as this. Doubtless they all wish to vote for the best interests of Ontario, the leading province, but we do not believe that they are as closely interested or as well posted in connection with this as the Ontario government. They doubtless know the rights of other provinces and are prepared to exercise them. This is a question of provincial rights which must be fought out and we are wasting time in attempting to settle it when there is not time for discussion and therefore I think the best solution is that this Bill should be allowed to lie over.

Mr. SPROULE. I regard the Act which we have to perform to-day as a very important one. If we allow this Bill to pass we take away from Ontario one of the sacred rights guaranteed to the provinces under the Act of confederation. While only Ontario is affected to-day, this may apply to Quebec or Nova Scotia or Manitoba to-morrow ; the principle is the same all along the line and if we adopt it to-day there is no guarantee for the safety of any province in the future. One of the virtues claimed for confederation was that each province had its own local rights and that within it own sphere those rights were guaranteed to it, and could not be interfered with by the Dominion government or any other power. We have been acting on that assumption for a great many years but by one device and another those rights have been interfered with. The hon. member for Perth (Mr. G. H. McIntyre) said that in Sir Oliver Mowat's day provincial rights were assailed. Does he imply by that that provincial rights are not assailed by this Bill ?

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. I think that to some extent the matter is debatable ; I have not asserted positively that provincial rights are not assailed by this Bill. The line of demarcation between the rights of the provinces and of the Dominion, where we have anything like concurrent power, is not easy to place. In this case I said it requires an effort to accept the view that this railway is for the general benefit of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. This is not concurrent power. There are certain things in which we have concurrent power but there are other things in relation to which each province has absolute jurisdiction, and the Dominion has no jurisdiction. The British North America Act in assigning to the provinces the subjects of their exclusive jurisdiction says :

> Local works and undertakings other than such as are of the following classes :

It then enumerates those belonging to the federal authority. All other works belong exclusively to the local authority providing they are local works. This is undoubtedly a local work. The company was chartered under the legislative authority of Ontario and the charter has been amended four or five times, each time the powers were extended but always within the province of Ontario. It even went so far in one amendment as to provide that they should build a line to Niagara Falls on the boundary line and still it was held to be properly within the legislative authority and jurisdiction of the province of Ontario. In their Act many privileges were allowed them that would not be allowed under federal authority if we were granting that authority to-day ; purely local rights, rights connected with municipalities, street railways, &c., were all given by the province but would never be given by the federal authority. In view of that fact may it not fairly be contended that this is in every sense of the term a local work and therefore one belonging to the legislative authority of the province of Ontario ? To-day we are asked by a mere declaration of this House to say that we will take away from the province one of its sacred rights, without even consulting the province, without analysing the question of whether or not, we are doing an injustice to that province. We are following the principle laid down by Sir Oliver Mowat some years ago when he said : When we have reason to believe that a right belongs to us the proper course is to assume that it belongs to us and exercise that right ; legislate along that line and then allow others whose rights are interfered with to go into the courts and take that right away from us. That is what we are doing to-day, assuming that we have a right, improperly assuming it, I say, and we propose to exercise that presumed right and to take away the right of each province which was given to that province alone by our Act of confederation. Some twenty-five years ago I spoke on this same question in connection with the Hamilton and Northwestern Railway crossing the line of the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway, and thereby brought it under federal authority although it was up to that time a railway under the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario. By bringing that railway under federal jurisdiction you interfere with contracts entered into between the railway company and the municipalities, under which certain bonuses were granted to assist in building the railway. I do not believe it was ever intended that these rights should be taken away simply because the railway is crossed by a Dominion railway, I hold that the mere incident of a provincial railway crossing a Dominion railway does not bring that provincial railway under federal authority. We have heard a good deal about the decision of Mr. Justice Street, but all Mr. Justice Street was asked to decide was as to what authority should be appealed to when a provincial road wanted to cross a Dominion road, and what authority should regulate the crossing. He decided it was the Dominion authority to which they must apply, and they did apply to that authority, and that is all Mr. Justice Street dealt with. The Act of 1888 says :

Every railway company incorporated by the Act of the legislature of any province, which crosses, intersects, joins or unites with any railway within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, or which is crossed or intersected by or joined or united with any such railway, shall in respect to such crossing——

That does not say in respect to the whole railway but——

—shall in respect of such crossing, intersection, junction and union and all matters preliminary or incident thereto, be deemed to be and be within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

It is to the authority of the parliament of Canada that you have to apply for the regulation of such crossing, and that does not in any sense make a provincial railway a railway for the general advantage of Canada. It is contended here that all we have to do to make a provincial railway into a Dominion railway, is simply to declare that it is a Dominion railway. But parliament must exercise some judgment before it makes a declaration that so vitally affects provincial rights. Must not this parliament be well satisfied that we are not interfering in any way with provincial rights before we make that declaration. And, Sir, there are strong grounds why we should not make such a declaration in this particular case. This Bill says :

The expression 'company' means a body politic and corporate created by chapter 88 of the statutes of Ontario, 1894, and continued by said amendments thereto, and the lines of railway which the company is hereby empowered to construct——

That is the lines they had authority under the provincial Act to construct :

—are hereby declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada, and all rights, privileges and immunities which the company is heretofore entitled to under its Act of incorporation and amendments thereto——

And these were given it by provincial authority :

—and not inconsistent with this Act are hereby continued and confirmed.

Are we justified in going so far as to continue and confirm the authority given by the local legislature when, in the meantime we give them power that would interfere with local rights, and take them out of the regulations and control provided by the provincial authorities. We will be interfering with municipal rights and with provincial rights. There is an admirable law passed by the legislature of Ontario to control these different railways in different respects, and if we incorporate this declaration in this Bill, we will take this railway out of the control of the province to enforce the obligations that it has entered into with the municipalities. Are we prepared to go that far ? If we do, are we not invading the sacred rights of the province, and if we continue in such a course will it not result in breaking up confederation. To-day it is in respect to a railway company, to-morrow it is in respect to a Bill with regard to a power company that asks for privileges and takes rights along three rivers whether these rivers are 100 miles long or 1,000 miles long. The water-power belongs to the province, and a Bill which is to come before us seeks to deprive the province of control. How long will it be till the provinces have no rights left them ; how long will the provinces stand this sort of thing ? Mention was made to-day of the strange coincidence that this Bill was introduced in the dying days of the session and an effort made to hurry it through, and one member told us that it had been well considered in the Railway Committee. Well, when I went into the Railway Committee and this Bill was under consideration, I counted exactly twelve members present. My first impulse was to call attention to the fact that there was not a quorum of that committee which I think is thirty-six members——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Twenty.

Mr. CLARKE. Did you say there were only twelve members at the committee ?

Mr. SPROULE. Twelve members only were present when I went in. Do you think it is right for twelve members of a committee composed of over one hundred and fifty members, in the dying days of the session, when the members take little interest in what comes before that committee, and after we have been told that all the important Bills to come before it have been passed, to take up such an important Bill as this and pass it in the course of an hour or so without careful consideration, only making one or two unimportant amendments to quiet the people of the city of Toronto, leaving out of consideration the great interests of the province of Ontario outside of that city? The Bill was pushed through in that way. I regarded it from the first as a very improper Bill for us to deal with. I regarded it as an invasion of the sacred rights of the provinces, which ought to be fought against, and I think so to-day. If we realized what it meant to every province of this confederation, we would fight this Bill day and night before we allowed it to pass. Otherwise it is likely to become an established precedent for going further session after session and taking away the rights of the provinces, until very few of them are left. We are doing a great wrong and injustice which will lead to greater evil in the future. Remonstrances have come to us from the legislature of Ontario that this is an invasion of their rights, but we pay no attention to those remonstrances whatever, and pass the Bill. Are the reasons which have been given for this House taking that course good and sufficient reasons? In my opinion they are not. The Minister of Justice took good care not to deal with the important questions involved in this Bill, but dealt merely with the technical legal phases of it, and seemed to shut his eyes to other considerations. But if we allow this Bill to pass, we will wake up some day to a realization of the fact that we have been sleeping in a fool's paradise. There will come a day of retribution, when the voices of the provinces will be heard with no uncertain sound. You may invade the rights of the province of Ontario to-day and the rights of the province of Manitoba to-morrow; but there will be an agitation started which will go on from year to year with accumulating force, until it becomes so strong that it will tell against the government. I warn them that if this Bill passes, and in my judgment it will not pass, they will hear from the province of Ontario in the early future and from the other provinces later on, that they cannot be allowed to invade the sacred rights of the provinces upon the mere ipse dixit of this parliament that a certain work is for the benefit of Canada and that we have a right to take it from the control of the province and put it under federal jurisdiction.

Mr. J. D. REID. I entered my protest in the committee when this Bill was under consideration there, and I would like also to enter my protest here. In addition to the question of provincial rights, there is another important point involved in this legislation which I think should be well considered. As I understand, the promoters of the Bill have been very anxious that it should be passed this session in order that bonds might be floated to complete the road or buy these other railways. If that is done, the Act that was passed by the Ontario legislature a few days ago may seriously affect the value of these bonds when they are put on the market. This Act is called 'An Act respecting certain Railways and other Corporations,' and it contains the following two clauses:

Mr. SPROULE.

2. In case the undertaking of a company or other corporation operating a public utility and heretofore or hereafter incorporated under a general or special Act of the province of Ontario has been since the 19th day of February, 1907, or hereafter shall be declared by the parliament of Canada to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, or absorbed by or amalgamated with or controlled or operated by any other company or corporation whose undertaking is or has been declared a work for the general advantage of Canada, or which is not subject to the legislative control of Ontario, the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may by order in council declare that all or any of the powers, rights, privileges and franchises conferred upon such first mentioned company or corporation by letters patent or by any general or special Act of Ontario shall be forfeited and thereupon all such powers, rights, privileges and franchises so declared to be forfeited shall cease and determine and every municipal by-law passed and every agreement entered into with any municipal corporation authorizing such company or corporation to carry on business or granting any right, privilege or franchise thereto shall also thereupon become void and be of no effect, and such company or corporation shall forfeit all claim to any bonus or other aid granted by any municipal corporation or by the legislature of Ontario. Provided that nothing in this section shall affect the validity of any debentures issued by a municipal corporation for payment of any such bonus in the hands of a bona fide holder for valuable consideration, nor the claim of any bona fide creditor of such company or corporation.

3. Notwithstanding anything in any Act contained, a municipal corporation shall not hereafter enter into any agreement with any such company or corporation or pass any by-law in relation to any public utility company, which has been declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, or which is not within the legislative jurisdiction of Ontario, until the Lieutenant-Governor in Council has approved of such agreement or by-law, and every agreement entered into and by-law passed or agreement entered into in violation of this section shall be utterly void and of no effect.

What I claim is that if this Bill passes this House, the Ontario government may pass laws taxing these railways to such an extent as to decrease the value of the bond issues or to affect the bonding power of the company to such an extent as to seriously increase its liability. I think that is a very important point which should be taken into consideration by this House. Further, I claimed the other day, and I think the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell), who was the chairman of the committee, agreed with me, that if this Bill were passed, the Ottawa Street Railway Company, for instance, might apply to this House for power to extend its railway to the shores of the St. Lawrence, saying that they intended to build a bridge across the St. Lawrence, and thus put the Ottawa Street Railway in the same position as this railway, taking it out of provincial jurisdiction and placing it under the jurisdiction of the Dominion. In the same way the Toronto street railway, the London street railway, the Port Arthur and Fort William street railways, the Kingston street railway and the Ottawa street railway, might be declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. The result will be that every one of our municipal street railways will be placed under Dominion control. There need not be any trouble with the Montreal street railway. I do not know if it has a Dominion charter or not.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It has, and so has the Ottawa Street Railway.

Mr. J. D. REID. There is no reason why this Bill should not have been passed by the Ontario legislature giving the company power to build up to the river, and then if necessary have a Bill put through this House on account of the bridge they are going to build. Personally I have not any feeling in the matter, but I believe this is a great infringement on the rights of the provinces ; and owing to the attitude taken now against interference with provincial rights, we should avoid doing so, so long as the parties who are getting these charters are not injured in any way. I felt the other day in the Railway Committee that this railway company was going too far. They are not only taking the Hamilton Street Railway but several others and they are taking them out of the jurisdiction of the Ontario government. They are taking the Windsor and Chatham, the Windsor and Essex and the Lake St. Clair and Rapid Railway Company and are incorporating these into one, and they will all have this Dominion jurisdiction.

Mr. CLARKE. They are already in the jurisdiction of the Dominion.

Mr. J. D. REID. The main point of my argument is simply this, that this is one of the most important cases which have come before this House as regards provincial rights. I was speaking about these railways. Some have been incorporated here. On account of the interchange of cars it was thought better they should be. But these electric street railways that are simply within the rights of the provincial government and should be entirely left in the hands of that government. This Bill has been left until a few days before the end of the session when we have not got a fair chance to discuss it. Those who are looking after the interests of the Bill in the committee were willing to do anything to get it through that day. They had it all this time in the local House and could have put it through there. It is the same company coming here to get a Dominion charter in order to take these things out of provincial jurisdiction. This is the time the government should seriously consider the matter and see that this Bill is left to be dealt with by the provincial government.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In reply to the statement made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), regarding the members present at that committtee, he certainly was astray because I do not think we ever opened the committee without having a quorum present.

Mr. SPROULE. I was not astray because I spoke to a party beside me and counted the number over two or three times. I had it in my mind to stop the committee work but it was suggested that it would be better to go on.

Mr CAMPBELL. I am surprised at that admission by the hon. gentleman (Mr Sproule). I am surprised that one of his experience would allow a committee to go on when he knew there were only twelve members present, without calling the attention of the chairman to it.

Mr. SPROULE. We have had many of these Bills from time to time when there was no quorum.

Mr. NORTHRUP. That is done in every committee of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not in the Railway Committee. If the hon. gentleman did not call my attention to the fact, I think he is deserving the censure of the House for not having done his duty.

Mr. SPROULE. The one upon whom a vote of censure should be passed is the chairman who knew there was no quorum and did nothing.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The chairman saw that a short time afterwards we had a vote and about sixty voted.

Mr. SPROULE. On this Bill ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. There were fifty-five or sixty who voted on this very Bill. With regard to this Bill, a good deal has been said by the opposition in which I do not agree. The important feature of it, the only good clause about it, has been dropped ; and so far as the rest is concerned, for my part I do not care a rap whether it goes through or not. I do not take very much stock in this argument about this provincial rights business. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has voted this session in the Railway Committee and last session, over and over again, for Bills not having the semblance of a right to come here for a charter. This Bill asked for the right to go to the international boundary line in two places. I do not know whether they are in earnest or not about it, but we have passed Bills, and my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) supported them, when not an inch of the road ran to the American boundary line or even the provincial line but was wholly within the province of Ontario. If anybody could show that provincial rights were trespassed upon, it was in those Bills. Yet the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) supported and voted for them in the Committee and also in the House.

Mr. SPROULE. No one knows better than the hon. gentleman that over and over again I have objected to this until I found my voice had no influence in that committee on that point and latterly I have avoided it as much as possible.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I differ with my hon. friend. He did not oppose those Bills either in the committee or in the House If he had, they would not have gone through so rapidly. They passed in five minutes without a dissenting voice and passed in the committee almost unanimously. There were some in which his own county was interested, and there was not a word or a squeak heard from him.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know what Bill the hon. gentleman is referring to.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Huron and Ontario, I think it was, which goes through the hon. gentleman's own county and which does not go near the boundary or the provincial line at all.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. member (Mr. Campbell) is refering to the Algoma Central line or the Manitoulin and North Shore

Mr. CAMPBELL. No, it is the Huron and Ontario. There are any number of charters passed last session for purely provincial railways. I believe that, if the time has not already come, it will come very soon, when every railway in Canada must have a Dominion charter. I do not think they can operate successfully otherwise. I grant you that, if a railway wants to run exclusively in the province of Ontario, it can go to the provincial legislature and get a charter; but what I say is that a company cannot operate its road as successively with a provincial as with a Dominion charter.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Because when they want to cross a Dominion road they must come here.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Because they cannot do it without the consent of the Dominion authorities. The Dominion has control over rates also. Suppose I am on a provincial road ten or twenty miles long, and ship flour to be taken upon a Dominion road and carried to Halifax. When the flour reaches the Dominion road, that road is under no obligation to take the flour unless it is unloaded and loaded again upon its own cars.

Mr. SPROULE. Could not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) say the same with reference to the Manitoba roads whose rates are controlled by the province? Freight shipped over the Canadian Northern is shipped at rates fixed by the province.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But the same thing applies as in Ontario. If the Manitoba government or any other provincial government gives a charter to a road, the Dominion chartered roads, are not obliged to take its freight. The Railway Commission has no control over the roads having provincial charters.

Mr. SPROULE. Must not every railway accept freight when it is offered it?

Mr. CAMPBELL. They are not obliged to receive it.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, they are.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not from a provincial road.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. We ought to compel them to do it.

Mr. J. D. REID. Where does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) find that law?

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Reid) will look at the statutes, he will find that that is the law.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not accept that, and would like the hon. gentleman to state his authority.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We have placed the control of the Dominion railways in the hands of the Railway Commission. But the Railway Commission has no control over provincial roads.

Mr. J. D. REID. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) has stated that they are not obliged to accept freight if they do not wish to do so. When they get a charter——

Mr. CAMPBELL. The railways chartered by the Dominion parliament need not take freight from a provincial road.

Mr. SPROULE. Are they not common carriers and must they not receive freight when it is offered them?

Mr. CAMPBELL. One road is chartered by the province and the other by the Dominion. The Dominion has no control over the provincial roads.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, it has, under the Railway Act.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Railway Act applies to roads chartered by the Dominion.

Mr. HAGGART. And local too.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, I have stated my view ; I believe the time will come when all railways——

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Street railways ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, very possibly that may be an exception. I grant you that a street railway running within the limits of a municipal corporation may be an exception. But every road running through the country and connecting with or crossing Dominion lines must ultimately come to the Dominion parliament for its powers. Of course, as I have said, the provincial legislature has the power to grant railway charters within the province. But if I were the promoter of a road, I would not accept a charter from the province if I could get one from the Dominion. With a Dominion charter I could run where I pleased, and no matter, where I went, I would be within the one jurisdiction, and everything would be much better. So far as this Bill is concerned, in the committee the acting Minister of Railways and leader of the House (Mr. Fielding) took considerable objection to it. As hon. members will see, the Bill was very carefully considered, and several clauses have been struck out and others substituted, and other clauses amended. I do not think that any other Bill has received closer or more careful consideration than this.

Mr. J. D. REID. I take issue with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) on this point. This was supposed to be almost the last meeting of the committee——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Bill was considered from ten o'clock until ten minutes to one —nearly three hours. Considering that so short a Bill was given so much of the time of the committee, and considering the amendments that have been made, I think that the Bill was given careful consideration. The clause that was most opposed especially by the hon. members from Toronto, was clause 3 giving the company the right to enter the city of Toronto, which clause the promoters of the Bill agreed to drop, against my wishes and in spite of my request. After that, everything was smooth sailing and the Bill went through. Subsection (c) of section 4 was pointed out as a provision that should not be included in the Bill but after full consideration, it was allowed to go. Then, the latter part of clause 7, providing that all the municipal by-laws relating to this company previous to the passing of this Act, if inconsistent with the Railway Act should take precedence and be considered binding was objected to by some members of the committee, who thought that the Railway Act should guide in these matters. But it was pointed out that many of these by-laws had been passed in years gone by and should be binding, being agreements between the municipality and the railway company. The point was raised that we should not legalize these by-laws without having them before us and knowing what they were. I point these out as objections taken to the Bill. But, after full consideration, the clauses were allowed to go through with some amendment. I pointed out that, in my opinion it would have been better had this Bill been brought down earlier in the session. But, on the other hand, we must recognize the fact that this is an important Bill. And I do not think it makes much difference whether a railway is built under provincial or under Dominion jurisdiction; we want all the railways we can get—we cannot have too many railways. It was my intention to try and get this clause restored allowing this railway to go down into the city of Toronto and give accommodation all round. I am surprised at the hon. members for Toronto——

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I am surprised at the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Here is the inconsistency of these men: This Bill provides that the railway shall run through the cities of Brantford, Woodstock, London and Chatham. All these places would have the same right to object that Toronto has. But there is not a single objection from any of them; but the moment it comes to the case of Toronto, then it must be 'at or near.' Why should the railway be allowed to run through other municipalities and not allowed to run even into Toronto? Why should it not go into the city of Toronto and give accommodation to the people within a hundred miles of that city? These other cities will gladly welcome this and half a dozen other railways; but these hon. gentlemen who represent the city of Toronto and others who agree with them, want to have a stone wall around the city of Toronto—they want no railways to come in. These companies are prepared to buy their way right through the city of Toronto and pay for it whatever they have to; all they ask is for the right to run down into the city. Yet these men will stand up here and say: No, it can come only to the borders of the city, and then you must dump your passengers out, no matter how inconvenient it may be. Put a stone wall around Toronto and keep them out. Surely such a policy as that will never build up a great city. We have the experience of every other progressive city in this wide world where they have removed all obstructions, and facilitate entrance by railways. The company wish to bring people in from near and from far into the city of Toronto, they will spend their own money there, and build up the city and the country. Yet this is the policy pursued. Now, when that clause came up I intended to move to try to get it restored, because I think its absence is one of the great weaknesses in this Bill, and without that clause being restored I would not give five cents for the Bill. I do not know what the position is about this Bill; so far as I am concerned I do not feel like wasting the whole day and the whole night over it. I think if a vote was taken the Bill would probably be thrown out.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) has stated twice to-day that the city of Toronto is the only city that does not welcome radial railways, that every other city on this continent has radial roads running into it. I deny that positively. I do not believe there is one city in the United States where radial roads run into it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will tell you of the city of Detroit which has 150 miles of radial roads that run right down the centre of the city, and turn around and go out.

Mr. OSLER. The moment the cars of the radial road reach the borders of the city of Detroit they are taken charge of by the city railway. It is the city which gives the franchise, and the city railway takes charge of every car, puts its own man on it and operates it. Toronto is perfectly willing to make such an arrangement to-day with every railway, but they must have it under their own control. The city of Buffalo has almost hundreds of miles of radial roads; I happen to know the ins and outs of the agreement, and they have followed the example of nearly every other city in the States. No conductor on the radial road goes into the city, his car is handed over to the operating road the minute it reaches the borders of the city. That is the only way in which a radial road can be of any service to the city, because the radial cars going to the centre of the city do not do any good, you have to transfer the passengers, they still have to change to go where they want to. The practical way is for the cars to be taken charge of by the city railway, and that leaves the control of the city streets where it ought to be, in the city itself. That is what the city of Toronto is willing to do to-day with any radial road.

Mr. MACDONELL. I would be slow to accuse the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) of desiring to misrepresent the attitude and language of the Toronto members on this matter. But this is the second time to-day that the hon. gentleman has put the views of the Toronto members in an unfair light. The attitude taken by them in the committee when this Bill was up for consideration was not hostile to this railway. What we said was this, that if this railway was going to come into the city of Toronto, then the city must have something to say as to the terms on which it comes in, as to the location of the entrance, and so forth.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why did you ask to have that clause struck out?

Mr. MACDONELL. Because it was the only way to save the city's right. The position we took was that we would deal with these railways, but the city wanted an opportunity to make its own bargain with them. The city did not want a bargain made over its head, without its knowledge or consent. That is the attitude we assume. As my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) points out, these various suburban radials that converge about the municipality or come to the limits of the municipality, must get running arrangements to run into the city. The member for Centre York well knows that the franchise of the Toronto company is going to expire in a few years, and it is the intention of the city to retain control of its streets until that time expires; then they will be in a position to deal intelligently with the whole system of street railways within their limits.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do you propose that three adjoining municipalities are going to wait, as they are waiting now, for fifteen years until you choose to make that arrangement? If you do, I think you will find yourself very much mistaken.

Mr. MACDONELL. To make the position still more clear, Toronto is willing to-day to make any arrangement reasonable and workable that will not extend beyond the present franchise of the Toronto Railway Company. Now, the hon. gentleman is not concerned with provincial rights, he says he does not care anything about provincial rights. But there are other members who do care, and I will take this opportunity to read a telegram from the Premier of the Province of Ontario. This telegram was sent to the legal representative of the Ontario government in the city of Ottawa with regard to this very Bill.

Protest strongly on behalf of the provincial government against the passage of the Bill respecting the Hamilton Radial Electric Company. Draw particular attention to the provisions of clause 7, the presence of which in the Bill before the parliament of Canada is a distinct outrage on the civil rights of the province under the Corporation Act.

This is the Act which my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) has just referred to. There are others who do consider that this matter is of some moment as regards provincial rights. Then the hon. gentleman further speaks about the opinion generally prevailing regarding the attempt to effect an entrance into the city, and criticises the attitude of Toronto members with regard to that. Let us see what his own political organ says, the Toronto 'Daily Star,' in its issue of last Friday, after this Bill was up in the Railway Committee. I did not intend to read the whole article, but only that portion which refers to the provincial rights. But I will now read the whole article.

Mischievous Meddling.

It is a pity that the rights of Ontario municipalities should be at the mercy of a body so careless, ignorant, and prejudiced as the Railway Committee of the House of Commons. The Hamilton Electric Railway Bill is a Bill for the construction of railways wholly within the province of Ontario, and ought to be controlled by the Ontario legislature. Here the radial railway situation, as it affects Toronto, is thoroughly understood. At Ottawa there was every indication that the question was thoroughly misunderstood, and the committee, in its intense anxiety to serve the interests of the private corporation, came very near doing a gross injustice to the city.

Toronto is not actuated in this matter by stupid prejudice against radial railways. Its aim is to secure control of the situation at the critical period when the franchise of the Toronto Street Railway Company expires, and not to give any radial railway company a franchise extending beyond that period. This is an intelligent and intelligible policy. Some members of the Railway Committee, instead of making a conscientious effort to understand it, kept bawling out 'carried.' When Colonel Gibson declared that he would drop the whole Bill unless entrance to the city were conceded, some of the most potent, grave and reverent signors of the committee shouted : 'Serve them right.' Do they imagine that it would be a great blow to Toronto if the Bill were dropped ? Toronto would hail the withdrawal of the Bill as a blessed relief from ignorant meddling with its affairs.

Although Colonel Gibson and his friends finally surrendered on this point, the Bill contains a provision that is most mischievous and dangerous, and calculated to embroil the Dominion government in a conflict with the province of Ontario. This clause is intended to defeat the Ontario legislation passed with a view of securing provincial control over provincial charters. The Dominion ministers should take care that this provision is struck out when it comes into the House ; it would be better still if they would oppose the whole Bill, and send it back to the province, where it belongs. In this case justice to the province of Ontario coincides with an intelligent regard for the interests of the government, and of the Liberal party in this province. The Liberal party in Toronto and Ontario ought not to be dragged at the tail of the Hamilton Electric Railway Company.

That very fairly and honestly reflects public opinion in Toronto regarding this Bill ; it is published not by a Conservative paper but my hon. friend's own political friend's evening organ in Toronto—and it is a very strong indictment of the government in regard to this anti-provincial rights feature. I shall now refer to an editorial in the Toronto 'News,' of Saturday upon the same suject, headed Invading Provincial Rights.

It is useless, indeed it is insolent, for the Canadian Senate to proclaim its deep love for the doctrine of provincial rights when it passed Colonel Gibson's Hamilton Radial Railway Bill. That Bill is a direct and vicious assault upon the legislative autonomy of Ontario and the authorities of this province; and cannot be defended even by the methods of casuistry. The proposed lines are to be operated by electric power. There is a direct admission that sometimes the road will be laid along the highway. Not a foot of the railway will be outside the province of Ontario, unless it may reach New York state at Niagara, a very doubtful contingency. In every possible sense the road is local. In view of these facts which are undeniable, clause one enacts that the railway is 'for the general advantage of Canada.' This is not true and if the octogenarians are not old enough to know better they ought to be. The insertion of this false statement puts the road under the federal Railway Act and gives the company powers of expropriation.

This province has a Railway Act which is somewhat drastic, but no one can deny that it is legislation of great public value. It is natural that Colonel Gibson should seek to escape the penalties for loose and careless management and operation which the local Act provides. But when the Dominion government lends a hand to permit this evasion it is not acting in the public interest and is trampling the whole doctrine of provincial rights under foot.

That faithfully summarizes public opinion in Ontario to-day and it is useless for hon. gentleman opposite to say that there is no question of provincial rights in this matter. The matter is distinctly one of provincial rights, or rather provincial wrongs if the Bill is insisted upon, and the attitude of the government is plain, while that of the people and the press is equally plain. They all agree that if the Bill is insisted on it will simply mean the sacrifice of the rights of the province. Mention has already been made of the various advantages which will accrue to the province if this railway continues under provincial legislation, and it has also been pointed out how the railway company will evade those obligations and duties if it is declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. There is no possible foundation for the claim that it should be declared a work for the general advantage of Canada unless it be the judgment that has been referred to, in the case of the Grand Trunk Railway, the Hamilton Radial Electric Company. That case, as has been pointed out, was simply an application by the Grand Trunk for an injunction to prevent this Hamilton Radial Company crossing its lines; in other words the railway company had obtained an order of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council awarding it the right to cross the Grand Trunk Railway lines. The Radial Company was there enforcing its right to cross the lines and the Grand Trunk was seeking to evade that obligation. The Grand Trunk appealed from that decision of the Railway Commission and it was only by way of appeal that it came to Mr. Justice Street. In that judgment Mr. Justice Street simply held that the decision of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council awarding the Radial Company the right to the crossing was final, that it bound all parties and that the only way to evade it was to take an appeal from that to the whole Privy Council. The judgment went no further, it merely said that in so far as the crossing was concerned, this company came under the jurisdiction of the federal parliament. If the words of the learned judge can be stretched to any greater length than I submit they should not be, because that was the only point to be decided and anything further would be going outside the record. It was only with reference to that crossing that they came within the purview of the Railway Act and to that extent the Radial Railway was a work for the general advantage of Canada. Stretching that judgment as far as you can is there anything that warrants this House in passing solemn legislation affirming this right? I submit that this company never intended to claim that right, in their fourteen years' operation they never attempted to claim it, they have made no claim or pretence that they were a Dominion corporation or a work for the general advantage of Canada. On two occasions since then they applied to the Ontario legislature for increased powers. By an Act of 1900, chapter 112, of the statutes of the province of Ontario of that year, they got the time for the completion of their works extended up to the 1st of January, 1905. Again in 1904 they went to the legislature and obtained chapter 77 of the statutes of that year further extending the time for the completion of their works until the 1st of January, 1909, and they were also given power to enter into an agreement with the Toronto and Mimico Railway Company, the Toronto Suburban Railway Company and the Toronto and Hamilton Railway Company showing clearly that they intended to rely on their provincial legislation and they made no effort or pretense that they were a Dominion corporation, so I submit that when the hon. gentleman raises here the question of Dominion jurisdiction by that judgment it is a mere make-shift, a mere afterthought and I do not think there is anything to warrant this House in declaring this to be a work for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke) has made the argument that legislative jurisdiction with respect to this road had been transferred from the provincial government to the parliament of Canada and that possibly the operation of the Railway Act of 1903 had been such as to create a doubt as to where the legislative jurisdiction now exists. If that argument were well founded I think it would be a very good argument for some action in order to make the company's position perfectly plain. The argument does not appeal to me because I do not think anything in the Railway Act of 1888 or the judgment of Mr. Justice Street bears out the position the hon. gentleman has sought to maintain. I have already pointed out the provisions of the Railway Act of 1888, section 177:

> It is declared that every railway company that is incorporated by any Act of the legislature of any province, which crosses, intersects or unites with any railway in the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada, or which is crossed or intersected by or joined or united with any railway under the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada shall in respect of such crossing, intersection, junction or union and all matters preliminary or incidental thereto, be deemed to be and be in the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada and subject in respect thereof to the provisions of this Act.

It is perfectly plain that had Mr. Justice Street conceived this to be a railway within the jurisdiction of the legislature of Ontario, he would have made exactly the same order as that which he did make, dismissing the application of the Grand Trunk for an injunction to prevent the Hamilton Radial Railway from acting upon an order of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. There is nothing in the judgment of Mr. Justice Street which declares the Hamilton Radial Railway to be within the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada and not within the legislative jurisdiction of the legislature of Ontario. It is perfectly plain the company itself understood the decision in that way because after the judgment it succeeded in obtaining two Acts from the legislature of Ontario conferring upon it further powers. I cannot come to the conclusion that there is any difficulty about the legal position of the company, even if this bill should not be passed. It has a perfect right to make an application to the legislature of Ontario and to receive powers from that legislature so far as it possesses jurisdiction under the British North America Act. I am dealing solely with the necessity of this declaration.

Mr. CLARKE. Do you think section 306 has no further effect than section 177?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think section 306 of the Act of 1888 (which is only a re-enactment of a provision which had previously appeared in our Railway Acts) was intended to apply to street railways at all, and that contention is borne out by the amendment made by this parliament in 1883 which draws an express distinction between the ordinary railway dealt with in the Act of 1888 and street railways, electric railways and tramways. In chapter 27, 1893, you find the word 'railway' used, and you find in contradistinction to it the expression 'street railway, electric railway or tramway.' The result of my hon. friend's contention would be that a small street railway in any city of Canada the moment it crossed a Dominion railway would be within the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada, and the provincial legislature would be deprived of control over these small street railways. I do not think it ever was the intention of the Act of 1888 to provide in that way.

Mr. CLARKE. Has my hon. friend considered 63 and 64 Victoria, chapter 23, 1901; it has not been referred to before?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does it provide?

Mr. CLARKE. It provides that street railways and tramways while declared to be subject to the provisions of the Railway Act in relation to crossing or connecting with a railway under Dominion jurisdiction should not be considered to be works to the general advantage of Canada nor to be subject to any other provisions of the Railway Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have not considered that, but I would point out that statutes of that kind are often passed for greater caution, and in order to make provisions plain in respect of which a doubt exists, and I would point out further, that such an express provision is a distinct argument in favour of the contention which I make.

Mr. CLARKE. This is not a street railway we are dealing with now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is it?

Mr. CLARKE. An electric railway; it has its own right of way.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. And it runs on the King's highway, too.

Mr. CLARKE. In Ontario we have a Street Railway Act which deals with railways within cities and we have an Electric Railway Act dealing with railways which run into the country, and which as a rule have their own right of way, although I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have not the statute of 1901, but I will look into it later. Apart from that consideration, we have the ordinary railways of the country distinguished (by the Act of 1893, which is an amendment of the Act of 1888), from street railways, electric railways and tramways, and while there has been a contention raised in the courts that the parliament of Canada had not jurisdiction to deal with the crossing of such a railway over a Dominion railway like the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific Railway, nevertheless the courts have decided that the Dominion parliament has that jurisdiction. Section 173 of the Act of 1888, as amended by the Act of 1893, declares that the parliament of Canada has undoubtedly jurisdiction with respect to such crossings, and that has been recognized by the courts as a valid exercise of its power. It seems to me that you are not to conclude, because a street railway or a tramway or an electric railway within the province crosses one of the railways mentioned in the Act of 1888, that therefore these small local railways are to be translated from the jurisdiction of the province to the sole jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament. As has been pointed out by my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) the Hamilton Street Railway crosses the Grand Trunk Railway and you could hardly give to the Act of 1888 such an extended application as would bring about the translation of jurisdiction over that railway from the legislature of Ontario to the parliament of Canada. It would be a rather ridiculous result and one which I think this parliament never contemplated, nor do I think you can properly deduce any such result from the words of the Act of 1888.

There is another consideration which has not been much dwelt upon, and it is this: How far are we to assume jurisdiction in this parliament over small railways in the province of Ontario, or any other province, merely by reason of the fact that the gentlemen who have control of such railways see fit to combine with them some other railway which extends beyond the borders of the province? If this parliament can properly assume jurisdiction by reason of that, you might have this result: A dozen small street railways in a province, come under the control of some combination of capitalists, and the gentlemen controlling them apply to this parliament asking for further legislation to construct a line of railway which passes into another province. Thus they claim to bring all these local railways under the jurisdiction of this parliament, instead of leaving them under the jurisdiction of the province. I do not think this parliament should interfere to bring about any such result. For my part, I have not heard any sound reason advanced for making the declaration to which alone I have directed my argument up to the present time. My hon. friend from Centre York (Mr. Campbell) said that it was necessary that all these railways should be declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada, otherwise no interchange of through traffic could be made. Section 8 of the Railway Act, chapter 37 of the revised statutes, expressly provides:

> Every railway, steam or electric street railway or tramway, the construction or operation of which is authorized by special Act of the legislature of any province, and which connects with or crosses or may hereafter connect with or cross any railway within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, shall, although not declared by parliament to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, be subject to the provisions of this Act relating to:
> (b) the through traffic on the railway or tramway and all matters appertaining thereto.

So that this parliament has, rightly or wrongly, assumed jurisdiction in that regard, and the law is not in the condition which my hon. friend from Centre York imagines.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What I meant was this, that if I load a car with flour on a road chartered by the province and want to send it beyond that road, say on the Grand Trunk, to be carried to Halifax, the Grand Trunk need not take that flour unless I unload it and put it into a Grand Trunk car.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I need not go into the details beyond this. These local roads, which are under the legislative jurisdiction of the provinces, by the express provision of the section of the Railway Act which I have just quoted, stand so far as the interchange of traffic is concerned, exactly in the position in which they would if declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then, do I understand the leader of the opposition to say that the Railway Commission has control over all the local roads as to the rates of freight and the disposition of freight the same as if they were Dominion roads?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The section which I have read is about as plain as the English language can make it, and it gives the Railway Commission power over through traffic on those roads.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do I understand the leader of the opposition to say that the Railway Commission have control over provincial roads?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They have control over the through traffic which passes from a provincial road to a Dominion road, to the same extent as if that provincial road had been declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. That is what section 8 of the Railway Act expressly provides. So that it is not necessary to have provincial roads declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada in order to accomplish the good result which my hon. friend from Centre York thinks necessary.

Mr. JOHNSTON. For the sake of information, I wish to ask this question: Suppose traffic originated on a provincial road which joined a road under the jurisdiction of the Dominion, on which it was carried for fifteen or twenty miles, does the hon. gentleman mean that the road operated under provincial charter is under the control of the Railway Commissioners of Canada? Because I have in my mind a case in which the Railway Commissioners take the view that it is not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand through traffic to be traffic which is carried over both roads.

Mr. JOHNSTON. And both of those roads come under the operation of the Dominion Act?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as that through traffic is concerned.

Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. CLARKE. One word in regard to the Act to which I refer. Section 1 of chapter 23 of 63-64 Victoria, provides:

> The Railway Act, chapter 29 of the statutes of 1888, is amended by inserting, after section 6, the following section:
> 6a. Street railways and tramways, while hereby expressly declared to be subject to such of the provisions of this Act as are referred to in section 4, shall not by reason only of the fact of crossing or connecting with one or other of the lines of railway mentioned in section 306 be taken or considered to be works for the general advantage of Canada, nor to be subject to any other of the provisions of this Act.

Implying that other electric railways still remain subject to all the provisions of the Dominion Railway Act; and that is emphasized, I think, by subsection 2 of the same section, which reads as follows:

> The said section 6a shall also apply to all electric railways (as distinguished from electric street railways) passing through or over the Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Park, or through or over the property of the province of Ontario lying upon or along the Niagara river and known as the chain reserve.

So that, street railways as such, and these particular electric railways, are made subject to the Dominion Act as to crossings, so far as section 4 is concerned; but it does not say that other electric roads, such as the Hamilton Radial Railway, shall not have the full benefit of section 306, if it is a benefit, and be wholly within the jurisdiction of the Dominion.

No one disputes that this parliament has the power to say this work shall be for the benefit of Canada. That would remove all possible doubt. We have done it with hundreds of other roads of much less importance to Canada. If they should go to the province and get these powers, the Minister of Justice throws doubt on the power of the legislature to give the relief they seek. But if there is one jurisdiction which has undoubted power, it is this one and the other, whose power is doubtful, is the Ontario legislature. It is only fair that the body which has absolute power should be the one appealed to for the required legislation.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If I understood the position of the leader of the opposition, it was that if freight originated on a provincial line and passed over a Dominion line it could be called through freight and come under the control of the Railway Commission. I think that was his contention. But suppose it originates on a provincial line and goes say ten miles on the Grand Trunk Railway, that would not be through freight.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why not?

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is difference between through traffic and local traffic, and I understood the hon. gentleman's contention to be that they would not control the local traffic.

Mr. HAGGART. The commissioners control the local as well as the through.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That was not the contention of the hon. gentleman's leader. He contended that they controlled only the through traffic. Suppose I shipped flour ten miles on the Grand Trunk Railway, that is not through traffic but local traffic, and the Railway Commission would not have anything to do with it.

Mr. LENNOX. My hon. friend does not quite understand the position taken by the leader of the opposition. When the traffic, originating on local lines, came to the point of connection with a Dominion line, there was no power to compel the Dominion line to take that traffic over. I can tell the hon. gentleman from actual knowledge——

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand that in the case of this very railway now before the House, the chairman of the Railway Commission refused to compel them to interchange freight because this was a local road.

Mr. LENNOX. As a matter of actual knowledge, I know that the Railway Commission hold that if any local line is connected with a Dominion line, they can control the interchange of freight under section 8.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BOYCE. Thus far in the discussion of this proposed piece of legislation some points of more than ordinary interest to the country at large, and to each province separately, have developed. That such a question should arise in connection with a private Bill originating as this Bill has originated and with the history attaching to it is a circumstance that naturally claims some comment. That history is referred to in the preamble, which says :

Whereas the Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Company by its petition has represented that the said company was incorporated by an Act of the legislative assembly of the province of Ontario, chapter 88 of the statutes of 1894, whereby and by subsequent amendments of the said Act the said company was authorized to construct various lines of railway from the city of Hamilton to different places in the province of Ontario as in the said Act and amendments set forth, and has prayed that it be enacted as herein set forth, and whereas it is expedient to grant the prayer of the said petition : Therefore His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows :

I question the expediency of granting the prayer of any petition in the language of the preamble. As stated by several hon. members the Hamilton Radial Electric Railway was incorporated by the legislature of Ontario in 1894, under chapter 88 of the statutes of that year. In 1895, by chapter 101, this Act was amended and the company given an extension of time for the commencement and completion of its works. In 1896 a further amendment was made by the legislature of Ontario—chapter 103 of the statutes of that year. In 1900 a further amendment was made—Chapter 112. And in 1904, by chapter 77, there were further amendments and additions to the Act. Apparently, during 1905 and 1906, this company had no need for further legislation ; but when it did see the necessity for obtaining further powers, it very gratefully forsook the paternal care of the legislative assembly of Ontario and came to this parliament asking for regeneration, for new powers and new and more extensive jurisdiction. One is tempted to ask why these conditions exist, why it should be that, any company, having sought power exclusively within the provincial legislature and having gone to that legislature for a renewal and extension of its power, should, in its last days, come to this parliament and ask to have it declared by statute, forsooth, that its work is a work for the general advantage of Canada, seeking from this parliament, I presume,—and I shall elaborate that presently—what it was unable to get from the province of Ontario. I am informed that an effort was made before the legislature of Ontario to get further concessions but the effort failed, and that because of that failure this Bill is presented to this House. Without going deeply into the merits of the Bill, but confining myself more narrowly to the question which is of paramount importance to this House and to this country I would refer to the fact, at the outset, that there is great danger in adopting this preamble, of trenching upon that sacred principle, which is in the heart of all true Canadians, the principle of provincial rights. That the principle of provincial rights is involved in this Bill is too much a truism to admit of question. The sole question is, how far does the Bill seek to trench upon the rights of the province of Ontario ? The Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Company was by incorporation, an Ontario company, and was by incorporation, and by subsequent legislative enactment admitted to be within the control of the provincial legislature. It came distinctly within the class of cases covered by section 92 of the British North America Act which is the charter of the Dominion. Under the heading of 'Exclusive Powers of Provincial Legislatures,' section 92 of the British North America Act of 1867, provides :

In each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated, that is to say :

1. The amendment from time to time, notwithstanding anything in this Act, of the constitution of the province, except as regards the office of lieutenant-governor.

2. Direct taxation within the province in order to the raising of a revenue for provincial purposes.

3. The borrowing of money on the sole credit of the province.

4. The establishment and tenure of provincial office, and the appointment and payment of provincial officers.

5. The management and sale of the public lands belonging to the province, and of the timber and wood thereon.

6. The establishment, maintenance and management of public and reformatory prisons in and for the province.

7. The establishment, maintenance and management of hospitals, asylums, charities and eleemosynary institutions in and for the province other than marine hospitals.

8. Municipal institutions in the province.

9. Shops, saloon, tavern and auctioneer and other licenses, in order to the raising of a revenue for provincial, local or municipal purposes.

10. Local works and undertakings, other than such as are of the following classes :

(a) Lines of steam or other ships, railways, canals, telegraphs and other works and undertakings connecting the province with any other or others of the provinces, or extending beyond the limits of the province.

(b) Lines of steamships between the province and any British or foreign country.

(c) Such works as, although wholly situate within the province, are before or after their execution declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces.

11. The incorporation of companies with provincial objects.

12. Solemnization of marriage in the province.

13. Property and civil rights in the province.

14. The administration of justice in the province, including the constitution, maintenance, and organization of provincial courts, both of civil and of criminal jurisdiction, and including procedure in civil matters in those courts.

15. The imposition of punishment by fine, penalty or imprisonment for enforcing any law of the province made in relation to any matter coming within any of the classes of subjects enumerated in this section.

16. Generally all matters of a merely local or private nature in the province.

We are asked to declare by this Bill that the Hamilton Radial Electric Railway is a work for the general advantage of Canada, and, as such, comes within the exceptions stated by clause 10. It is not entirely pertinent to the consideration of this Bill perhaps, but still very significant, that this Bill comes before us in a somewhat unusual way. The Bill grew into existence and became concrete in the Senate. I notice that this is not the only Bill of a like nature that has reached this House by the same somewhat extraordinary procedure. I fancy hon. members will see that this is not a practice to be encouraged ; because Bills that affect the commercial interests of any province should first be submitted to the Commons. Add to that the fact that the Bill, having passed the Senate, comes before this parliament and its Railway Committee, at a time when its members are being urged to expedite the business of this House with a view to an early prorogation, and we seem to be faced with what one is loath to believe a studied plan, to use a vulgar expression, to 'railroad' the Bill through this parliament in the hope that hon. members may not notice the drastic clauses it contains.

Now I say that is a practice that ought to be discouraged. I have seen that practice followed in relation to another Bill introduced last session. That was a Bill for the incorporation of the Pacific and Atlantic Railway Company, which crept into this House just about the same way last session as this Bill has done, and likewise towards the end of the session. It was a Bill on all fours with this one, it contained exactly the same mischievous provisions. But it received very little consideration at the hands of the House, because all the members were anxious to close the session. The House closed on the 10th of July, on the 25th day of June that Bill was considered in committee. That Bill purported, not to incorporate, but to declare for the general benefit of Canada a railway known as the Pacific and Atlantic Railway Company, which for the first time was heard of in this parliament under the guise of that Bill. It was shown in opposition to that Bill, just as it is shown in opposition to this one, that it was incorporated in 1886 by an Ontario statute, and that from 1886 up to 1906 that Bill, the creature of the Ontario legislature, had had its charter renewed from time to time by that legislature. But in 1905 when that Bill came before the Ontario legislature again, and when another and better set of men had taken hold of affairs, there was a condition attached to the further extension of the powers of that company that it should spend in actual construction $300,000 within a year. What happened? Was the $300,000 spent? Not a dollar. The hon. gentlemen who were promoting that Bill knew a trick worth two of that, and the gentlemen who are now promoting this Bill are trying to emulate their example. They packed their baggage and came to Ottawa to get rid of the obligation to construct a portion of their work for which they were incorporated, to get rid of the obligation of spending any money whatever in actual construction. They caused the Bill to be introduced into the Senate, declaring that their railway, which for twenty years had not done a piece of work under the legislative control of the province of Ontario, was a work for the general advantage of Canada. Without altering the original scheme, without filing any new plans, without altering their original device with regard to the undertaking, they came here and, in order to get rid of the obligations that a wise government had imposed upon them for the protection of the public, they brought in this Bill by way of the Senate. In my humble way I raised my voice in protest against it. I pointed out the iniquity of such a legislation coming before this parliament at that time, and other hon. members on this side of the House joined in that protest. I protested against the violation of provincial rights. The Bill received its third reading, and a motion to give it the six months hoist was voted down, and it became law. There was in that case, as there is in this, no justification whatever for the legislation.

I appeal to hon. members as to how far they are going to be led like sheep by precedents so pernicious. This Act undoubtedly encroaches upon provincial rights; it raises a question wich this parliament should be loath to interfere with. If we have to remain here another two months to fight against such an invasion of provincial rights it would not be time lost. Looking back over the history of our confederation we find that this very matter was the subject of a very thoughtful speech by the Earl of Carnarvon on the second reading of the British North America Act in the House of Lords, which will be found at page 583 of Volume 85 of the Imperial Parliamentary Debates, and I would invite hon. members of this House to carefully consider the words of the noble earl on that occasion. It will be noted that Earl Carnarvon laid special stress on the ninety-second section of this Act, which he said was the most delicate and important part of the whole measure. To-day forty years afterwards, we are facing some of the difficulties that the noble lord then anticipated. We cannot be too careful about the protection of the rights of the provinces. If the original powers of this company were within the legislative jurisdiction of the province of Ontario, why should they be taken away; why should we interfere with what has been vested in that province since 1894? Is it possible that the promoters have some sinister object, some object ulterior to the obtaining of the passage of this Bill? I wonder whether the change of government in Ontario had anything to do with it? I wonder whether the former Attorney General of Ontario, after the deluge of 1905 in that House, was disappointed at the aspect which the provincial legislature then presented to him and that he advised that company, instead of applying to the Ontario legislature for concessions formerly granted in a perfunctory way, to apply to this as an easier forum to which they could resort and where they could obtain balms for the wounds inflicted on them in Ontario? Did they fear that the conditions that would be imposed by the Ontario legislature in regard to the completing of their undertaking and the fulfilment of their obligations to the people would be too stringent?

Are they to be led to believe that they can come here de novo and have the magic words 'for the general advantage of Canada' inserted in the Bill and have all their sins forgiven. This government can fly in the face of the constitution and of the people of Canada, but there is a time when constitutional principles will be regarded as inviolate, and then the day of retribution for this government will come. There is not one circumstance contained in this Bill, as there was not one circumstance in the Bill to incorporate the Pacific and Atlantic Railway Company last year, which would justify parliament in declaring that either is a work for the general advantage of Canada. But when we inquire into circumstances beyond the Bill, it is not difficult to find the object of the promoters. If in 1894 it was considered that the legislature of Ontario was the proper power to incorporate this company, and if in 1895, 1896, 1900 and 1904, that legislature was considered to be the proper forum to which to apply for amendments of that Act, what ulterior object now prompts the promoters to appeal to the parliament of Canada to be relieved from all the fetters which surround the legislation of the province in that regard, in the interest of the people of Ontario. Will not the granting of such legislation as this harass and embarrass the legislature of Ontario in administering its exclusive powers under section 92 of the British North America Act? I do not know whether this government has any respect for the government of Ontario, but to-day we have heard read a telegram from the Prime Minister of that province; a gentleman who is entitled to high respect, a gentleman who, by his stable policy and his energy in the interest of the people of his province, has won the largest majority that ever supported an Ontario government. Surely a telegram from such a Prime Minister stating that this Bill is dangerous to this province should be treated with some respect. I ask this House and this government to pay as much respect to a protest from the Prime Minister of Ontario as they would to a protest from the Prime Minister of Quebec, the Prime Minister of New Brunswick, or the Prime Minister of Nova Scotia. Would the hon. gentleman who now leads the House dare to proceed with the consideration of a Bill if he got a telegram from the Prime Minister of Nova Scotia, or of New Brunswick or of Quebec, protesting against that Bill. No, Sir, he would immediately call on his followers to stop the measure. But, as leader of the House and of the government pro tem, he treats with contempt an urgent telegram from the Prime Minister of Ontario protesting against this invasion of the rights of the people of that province. I ask the hon. gentleman if he regards that as decent parliamentary treatment to accord to the Prime Minister of Ontario?

Mr. FIELDING. I think that when I was Prime Minister of a province, I can recall a telegram I sent here protesting against something, but the government of the day did not think it was conclusive ; I do not say they were right.

Mr. BOYCE. Did the government of the day treat that message in the same way as he has treated the message read by my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. A. C. Macdonell) ?

Mr. FIELDING. What does my hon. friend mean by referring to my treating a message in any way. I have no recollection of ever hearing of that message until it was read here to-day.

Mr. BOYCE. Has my hon. friend no knowledge of the telegram from the Prime Minister of Ontario protesting against that measure ?

Mr. FIELDING. That message was never sent to the government.

Mr. BOYCE. Does my hon. friend doubt the authenticity of such a message ?

Mr. FIELDING. Not in the least.

Mr. BOYCE. As leader of the House, he says that the message not having been sent to him he cannot pay any attention to it. It was sent to an hon. member of this House and read to the House on his responsibility, and yet the leader of the House said he would not pay any attention to it.

Mr. FIELDING. In the first place I listened to the telegram being read and I have not said I would not pay any attention to it. In the second place, it was not sent to a member of this House but to a gentleman outside of the House.

Mr. BOYCE. That telegram is the property of this parliament now.

Mr. FIELDING. It is on 'Hansard,' yes.

Mr. BOYCE. It is on 'Hansard,' and it was read by an hon. gentleman on his own responsibility, and even if he had only stated that there was such a telegram in existence, surely constitutional parliamentary courtesy would allow my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) to extend the courtesy of paying some consideration to it.

Mr. FIELDING. Will my hon. friend tell me what he means by speaking of the courtesy of paying some consideration to it ? It was read by a gentleman in debate, and I listened to it with due respect ; what does the hon. gentleman ask ?

Mr. BOYCE. I was proceeding to point out ; and surely my hon. friend will see some cogency in the argument.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not.

Mr. BOYCE. Perhaps my hon. friend has not been listening.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes I have.

Mr. BOYCE. I was pointing out that it is claimed that this private Bill introduced at this late stage of the session contains a very dangerous clause and infringes upon the rights of the province of Ontario. Some hon. members of the same persuasion as the hon. leader of the House have argued that ; and in support of that the hon. member for South Toronto reads a telegram, the authenticity of which cannot be doubted, from the Prime Minister of the province of Ontario in which he protests strongly on behalf of that government against this Bill as an interference with the rights of that province. Yet my hon. friend the leader of the House has never risen from his seat or paid the slightest courtesy or the slightest attention to that protest.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no quarrel with the Prime Minister of Ontario on this matter. I feel quite certain that if that gentleman wished to communicate anything to the government of Canada in regard to which he wanted their co-operation or assistance, he would have done so. I am not complaining because he has not. He has a perfect right to send a protest to these hon. gentlemen and they have a right to use it in debate ; but they have no right to complain of lack of courtesy on our part if we do not pay any attention to something which is not addressed to us.

Mr. BOYCE. Then it is the method of this protest and the channel through which it comes that my hon. friend find fault with.

Mr. FIELDING. I have not found any fault with the method of the protest nor with the protest itself. My hon. friend is getting up a quarrel where there is none.

Mr. BOYCE. No, I do not desire to cause any friction on this matter. I merely point out that the hon. leader of the House is treading on somewhat dangerous ground when, in order to promote the private interests of the promoters of this Bill, he sits silent in the face of a protest of that kind. I am told—I was not in the committee, the hon. leader of the House will correct me if I am wrong—that when this Bill was under consideration in the Railway Committee on Thursday last, the hon. gentleman was there part of the time, and announced himself as opposed to the Bill as being an interference with provincial rights.

Mr. FIELDING. I was there for a few minutes, and I raised a question as to the wisdom of the Bill. I was obliged to leave. I said nothing as to what views I held on the Bill. I did inquire as to certain questions raised by the Bill, but I was not there during the discussion and do not know what course it finally took.

Mr. BOYCE. Well, I will put it to my hon. friend in this way. In the position in which he finds himself now——

Mr. FIELDING. I do not find myself in any trouble over it.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman himself raised the question on Thursday last as to whether this Bill was an interference with provincial rights We have been talking on this question all day, and my hon. friend has been confronted with a protest from the Prime Minister of Ontario in the name of the provincial government; and yet he will allow the time of this House to be taken up without saying one word as to what his policy is with regard to this Bill. That may be a matter of amusement on his part.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend forgets that we are not taking up the time of the House. The time of the House has been taken up by hon. gentlemen opposite. I am not complaining of it. That is their right.

Mr. BOYCE. That is a very specious way for my hon. friend to argue himself out of a difficult position. He knows that as the leader of this House he ought or ought not to take cognizance of a protest from a procial government. He himself raised the question on Thursday last as to how far this Bill was a violation of provincial rights; yet he sits in the House for a whole day and hears this question discussed, and will not announce what position his government takes on that very important question. How can he complain that the time of the House is wasted——

Mr. FIELDING. I do not complain.

Mr. BOYCE—when he himself, for reasons best known to himself, will not speak in face of such a protest.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend must not forget that I am not complaining at all. It is the hon. gentleman who is doing the complaining.

Mr. BOYCE. Then, I ask, when did my hon. friend change his mind ?

Mr. FIELDING. I have never said that I have changed my mind at all.

Mr. BOYCE. Then my hon. friend, as leader of this House, is in a position of masterly inactivity in regard to a question so vital to the province of Ontario——

Mr. FIELDING. I may not think it so vital.

Mr. BOYCE—and will allow the time of this House to be taken up with a discussion pro and con as to whether or not this Bill is an interference with provincial rights, a question which he himself raised in the Railway Committee. This debate may, and possibly will, drag along all night, and yet my hon. friend sits there, and will not tell us what views he entertains on this question, although he and all his followers know that if he would rise in his place and declare himself one way or the other, that would settle the whole question as far as this House is concerned and would terminate this debate. If my hon. friend is bold enough to be honest and honest enough to be bold, as far as the leadership of this House is concerned, he will announce himself.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend seems to complain that I do not suppress him; but I do not want to suppress my hon. friend. I am perfectly content that he should go on.

Mr. BOYCE. I appreciate very much the courtesy my hon. friend the leader of the House is paying to me, but that does not relieve him of the responsibility that rests upon him. My hon. friend admits that he raised this question in the Railway Committee on Thursday last, and if he would be kind enough to announce the position he now occupies upon it, he would save a great deal of trouble. Will my hon. friend do that ? I will give way to him this moment if he will rise and announce what is the attitude of the government on the question of interference with provincial rights which he himself raised.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not want to interfere with my hon. friend's speech.

Mr. BOYCE. My hon friend, then, finds himself in the somewhat weak and invidious position of having changed his mind very rapidly since last Thursday, when he saw enough of significance and importance in this measure to raise that question before the Railway Committee. He had to leave the committee, as the business of the House required his attention; and when the matter comes before the House on the Monday following, and on the very same question my hon. friend is implored to speak his mind at this hour, when we are short of time, when my hon. friend I presume is himself desirous in the interest of the country to hasten prorogation, and when I offer to give way to my hon. friend if he will only speak, he says he will not interfere. What pressure has been brought to bear upon the leader of this House between Thursday, when on his own motion he raised this question of provincial rights in the Railway Committee, and Monday, when it is brought to his attention on the floor of parliament, and nothing will induce him to come to his feet and announce the attitude his government takes on that very same question ?

Some pressure of great political importance has no doubt been brought to bear on the leader of the House (Mr. Fielding). Possibly it has been impressed upon him that the promoters of this Bill are very strong politically in the province of Ontario and that the question of provincial rights must be made subservient to the greater interests of the Liberal party. I wonder if the opinion of the ex-Attorney General of Ontario had anything to do with changing the mind of the leader of the House. I wonder whether the example of the ex-Attorney General, who himself announced that he was not a policeman, has so impressed the mind of the leader of the House that he himself has decided that, as there was no need for a policeman to safeguard the rights of Ontario in that province, there is equally no necessity for one here. Perhaps my hon. friend appreciates the circumstances under which the ex-Attorney General of Ontario announced he was not a policeman. When sent to defend his government in the constituency I have the honour to represent, he was confronted on the platform with a message that an act of great political corruption was about to be perpetrated in that constituency, namely, that the crew of the famous 'Minnie M' was to start the next day with one hundred voters to plug the polls of Michipicoten district. The hon. gentleman did not know exactly how to reply. As chief judicial executive of the province, it was his duty to do something. He was there with all the machinery of office, his Crown attorney and constable had the power to swear in more constables if necessary. His answer was summed up in the words: I am not a policeman.

Mr. BENNETT. And that he had not his uniform on.

Mr. BOYCE. Possibly the leader of the House is desirous of taking that position. Now, in view of what has been said, that he is not policing the rights of the constitution.

Mr. FIELDING. A policeman's lot is not a happy one.

Mr. BOYCE. No, when constabulary duty is to be done. My hon. friend has the same opportunity as was given the ex-Attorney General of Ontario to be a policeman and safeguard the interests of the people. I hope he does not expect to share the same fate as that hon. gentleman. That answer of the ex-Attorney General was his dying declaration. The people of Ontario took him at his word and decided he was not the man to police their rights, and so they retired him and his government very quickly and emphatically. I repeat the question to the hon. the leader of the House (Mr. Fielding). He has heard the protest. He has had the protest of the Prime Minister of the province against this Bill on the ground of its interference with provincial rights, yet he says nothing. Let my hon. friend the leader of the House (Mr. Fielding) consider that here is the First Minister of Ontario protesting that the Bill proposed is an outrage on the civil rights of that province under the British North America Act. Does he say it is not? My hon. friend is silent.

Mr. BOYCE.

Mr. FIELDING. Silence is a great virtue.

Mr. BOYCE. No doubt, but silence is liable to be misunderstood especially by the people of Ontario.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is safe.

Mr. BOYCE. This company is seeking powers which it is not within the right of this parliament to give. My hon. friend the leader of the House takes refuge in silence. Let me remind him that that was not the refuge which his leader the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) took on this question. We remember that right hon. gentleman's words when introducing a very famous piece of legislation. He then told this House and country that he stood upon the rock of the constitution. But the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), if he ever stood on that rock, appears to have slipped off into the deep waters of silence which envelop him. To repeat in the closing hours of this session what we had in the closing hours of last session is not to commend to the country the stability of the government or its desire to keep intact the constitution of the Dominion. In the case of last session which has been referred to, it was pointed out to the House, that the railway company then seeking powers had been in existence for twenty years, and all that time under the jurisdiction of the Ontario legislature, and that it was coming here merely to evade conditions imposed upon it by that legislature under the Ross government and just before the defeat of that government in 1905. It was pointed out then, as in this case, that the Bill was improvidently brought before the House, and strong reasons were urged why there should be no interference. In that Bill, as in this, there was no new power sought by the applying company except that the work be declared one for the general advantage of Canada so as to deprive the province of Ontario of the power it had exercised over it.

All I can say in closing is that if the government desires to be regarded by the people as a representative and constitutional government, and as upholding the rights of the province and maintaining intact the constitution, it should hesitate before pushing forward such a Bill as this. The leader of the House (Mr. Fielding) takes refuge in silence. Does he think it better to maintain silence rather than even to delay this Bill and the perpetration of the political crime which the passing of it would involve? You have here the declaration of the Prime Minister of the province whose rights are being interfered with, and surely it would be but courtesy that, as this is a private Bill and has come before the House in the last hours of the session, to say that the promoters' interests must not be regarded as greater than those of the province of Ontario. Therefore, in all sincerity I ask the leader of the House to stay his hand, to break through the silence that has enveloped him and to make the declaration which will say, in all courtesy, to the province of Ontario, that he is a stable statesman and desires to uphold the constitution and institutions of Canada and will not allow this Bill to be proceeded further with this session.

Mr. TALBOT. Before the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) resumes his seat, would he be good enough to state to this committee whether he is for or against the Bill?

Mr. SPROULE. Any one who has so little intelligence as that, I think, ought to be given the information he desires.

Mr. TALBOT. I would like also to ask the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) to give us his opinion of the Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. I desire to call attention to some remarks made on this question of provincial rights some years ago. I happen to have a pretty distinct recollection of a long and important debate that took place on this question of provincial rights. Though I was younger than I am to-day, knew less about the question, I felt that the opposition of that time advanced very strong arguments, arguments which in my judgment should have weighed with the House; arguments which I thought would influence the future legislation of both the federal and provincial parliaments. It was away back in 1882 that the question of the Streams Bill was discussed in this House. An interesting struggle arose between the provincial government of Ontario and the federal government here, the federal government standing by a gentleman who was carrying on lumber operations and who desired to have certain rights in certain streams, which rights were disputed. I refer to the old McLaren case arising out of the Streams Bill. The provincial legislature passed an Act taking away rights which Mr. McLaren thought he possessed in relation to a certain stream. The Bill was disallowed by the federal government on the ground that it was not within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature. There was a stay of proceedings, and the case went into the courts and was ultimately carried to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. But the question was imported into this House and a very lengthy and interesting debate took place, a portion of which I propose to read, because in my opinion it bears directly on the question before the committee. I take the speech made by Mr. M. C. Cameron, of Huron, the man who opened the debate. Sir Leonard Tilley moved that the Speaker do now leave the Chair and that the House do go again into Committee of Supply. Mr. Cameron said :

Mr. Speaker, those who, like yourself, are old enough to remember the party struggles, the party triumphs and the party defeats in the old parliament of Canada under a legislative union, the form of government that prevailed before confederation, have a lively recollection of the circumstances and causes that led to these party conflicts in the early days of Canadian history. . . Various schemes were then suggested as a remedy for the prevailing discontent. The double majority was tried, it failed. Government by coalition was tried, it failed. The hon. the First Minister, in the speech to which I have referred, pointed out other remedies. One was the disolution of the union between Upper and Lower Canada, and leaving affairs in the condition in which they were before the union of 1841 ; the second solution of the difficulty was representation by population ; and the third solution was a federal union of all the British North American provinces. The result was a federal union of all these provinces willing to join the great confederation. This union was based on the principle long contended for by the Liberal party, especially of the province of Ontario—the principle announced at their various conventions and gatherings imitated by the leaders of the party and supported by their followers—the principle that all local affairs should be dealt with by the local authorities, and that all affairs of a national character should be disposed of by some joint or federal power.

Now is not that the essence of the question before us, that local affairs should be dealt with by the local authority ? That local authority is vested to-day in the legislative assembly of the province of Ontario.

I am satisfied that the union of the provinces would not have taken place, at all events at the period at which it did take place, has that not been the guiding principle in the minds of the leading statesmen who had to do with that question. I am satisfied it is one of the principles that moved the various provinces to join confederation—the absolute, unchecked, unrestrained control of their own local affairs. Had they thought otherwise that, notwithstanding the union of the British North American provinces, the local affairs of the individual provinces, affairs assigned to them by the constitution, and over which they were supposed to have sole control, should be subject to the revision, and the disallowance of the Dominion government, these provinces never would have joined the great confederation.

Now is not that the essence of the question that the legislature shall have the absolute, unchecked, unrestrained control of their local affairs ? I say that if we pass this Bill we are not. We are not allowing them to control their own local affairs. And is that great Reform party, who then stood so firmly upon the ground of local control, to-day going back upon their record ? Are they willing to sacrifice these principles that were formerly held to be the cardinal principles of the Reform party ? Are they going to take away from a province those local rights that were guaranteed to them at confederation ? I hope they are not, because if they are, they will find that the day is fast approaching when the provinces will be held together only by a rope of sand. There will be no principles to hold them together, and the strongest argument for doing away with confederation will be supplied to them.

It was known after confederation did take place that, although the powers given to each of the governments were reasonably clear and well defined, still under our constitution, new and untried, different interpretations might be put upon the different powers reserved to the different governments, and so at an early day in the history of confederation, it became necessary to lay down some clear, well defined and permanent rule by which the Dominion government would be guided in passing upon local legislation, and by which the Dominion government would be restrained from the exercise of the power of vetoing reserved by the British North America Act to the Dominion government over the legislation of the different provinces. It was of the first consequence to the well being and prosperity of each province. It was of the first consequence to the security and permanence of the union, that the interpretation put by the Dominion government upon that portion of the constitution which assigned to each government its authority and power in matters of legislation, should be certain and permanent. The hon. gentleman who now leads this House, and who then guided the destinies of this country—who was then and is now Prime Minister—aware of the necessity of having these powers well defined, at an early day in the history of confederation, did, so far as human skill and human ingenuity could, define the powers assigned to each of the governments, and especially the right of the Dominion government to pass upon local legislation. Upon the 8th of January, 1868, the right hon. the First Minister prepared a state paper, which I hold in my hand, dealing with this important question. Permit me, for the satisfaction of the House, to read from that reliable and important document, the views which the hon. the First Minister then entertained with respect to the right and power of the Dominion government in passing upon local legislation:

In deciding whether any Act of a provincial legislature should be disallowed or sanctioned, the government must not only consider whether it affects the interest of the whole Dominion or not, but also whether it be unconstitutional——

And that is one of the questions that we should carefully consider, whether this matter affects the right of the whole Dominion to declare this to be a work for the general advantage of Canada.

Whether it exceeds the jurisdiction conferred on the local legislature, and, in cases where the jurisdiction is concurrent, whether it clashes with the legislation of the general parliament.

We should examine whether it affects the whole Dominion, and if we find it does, will that be a justifiable reason for our interference? If we find it affects the whole Dominion that would be a justifiable reason for interference, but that should not be a conclusive reason. We should look further and ask whether the legislature had within its rights the power to pass the Bill and if we found, notwithstanding the fact that it affected the whole Dominion, the legislature still had the right to pass the Bill, we should not exercise the right of disallowance because the Bill affected the whole Dominion but we should take into consideration the fact that we were interfering with the rights of the province under the constitution.

It is recommended that His Excellency should immediately on their receipt refer the Acts passed in any province to the Minister of Justice and that he should with all convenient speed report as to the Acts that he considers free from objections of any kind, and that he make a separate report or separate reports of those Acts that he considers to be:

1. Altogether illegal or unconstitutional.
2. Illegal or unconstitutional in part.
3. In cases of concurrent jurisdiction as clashing with the legislation of the general parliament; and
4. As affecting the interests of the Dominion generally,

And that in such report or reports he gives his reasons for his opinions.

It will not do simply to make a report classifying Acts in this way but a reasoned judgment that can be analysed so that the arguments that influence his decision may be weighed. In this case the local legislature has by a telegram to its legal adviser instructed him to remonstrate with the federal parliament for attempting to pass this law because it violates a sacred right belonging to the province and all we ask is that an agreement should be come to between the federal and provincial authorities as to whether or not that sacred right shall be interfered with in this case. Will confederation be respected, will it hold good, if you violate the rights of the province and absolutely refuse to give an opportunity of consultation before an irrevocable step of this kind is taken? I ask the leader of the House whether he will respect the remonstrance of the province that the passing of this Bill would be a serious interference with the rights of the province, or if he intends to force the Bill through.

Mr. FIELDING. This is not a government matter at all, it is a private Bill. I do not agree with my hon. friend that it is the duty of the government to deal with every private Bill; the government has its responsibility in legislation generally but there are many instances in which a private Bill is dealt with irrespective of the government. My hon. friend wanted to know if I wanted to force the Bill through. I do not want to force it through, I propose to treat it as any other private Bill, to hear the discussion out and to deal with it on its merits.

Mr. SPROULE. Who is responsible for the maintenance of the constitutional rights of the provinces in this House, if the government are not ? The government cannot shelter themselves by saying : This is a private Bill and if it violates provincial rights, we are not concerned about provincial rights here, we are perfectly satisfied to violate the rights of the province so long as it is not a government Bill.

Mr. FIELDING. I suppose there might be some members of the House who would not be ready to agree that it is a violation ?

Mr. SPROULE. That may be, but I asked the leader of the House if he takes the position that the government is not concerned about this because it is a private Bill. Who is concerned in maintaining the rights of the provinces ?

Mr. FIELDING. We all are.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, but the ministers are sworn by their oath of office to a special responsibility, and the leader of the House is bound to advise us when such a question as this arises.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend does not always take my advice.

Mr. SPROULE. My attention has been called to the fact that although some years ago the Kettle River Valley Railway Bill was introduced by a private member the government interfered and controlled the House on it. It is the duty of the government to do the same with regard to this Bill to-night. I shall not detain the House by quoting further from this lengthy speech if I am informed by the government that it is not intended to let this Bill pass. If the government on the other hand should resort to a trial of strength and should help a private member to attempt to force this Bill through regardless of the rights of the province of Ontario, then we shall be obliged to avail ourselves of our rights to the utmost limit of our physical powers to prevent this invasion of the sacred rights of a province of our Dominion. Are we going to violate provincial autonomy by the passage of this Bill? If we are, we are not only doing a grevious wrong to the province, but we are taking a step towards breaking up confederation. Let us confine ourselves to our federal powers and let the provinces administer their powers without our interference. I have here a small book on the Canadian constitution, a book small but important, written by Mr. G. J. Watson, an eminent lawyer of Toronto, and Mr. Watson says :

> As regards the internal and material interests of each of the provinces, their municipal self-government, their systems of education, their public lands and their development, and the administration of justice, the local legislatures are of much greater importance than the federal parliament. Over those vital and complex functions of a free commonwealth, which are known as civil rights and which are the life and marrow of local self-government and constitutional citizenship, the provincial parliaments rule supreme.

He points out that these provincial rights are even more important than the federal rights because the federal parliament was created by each of the provinces yielding a portion of its rights to create that parliament. It was not the federal parliament that created the provincial legislatures; it was the provinces that created the federal authorities and the provinces are as supreme within their powers as the Dominion is within its power :

> It must be borne in mind that the federal parliament is the offspring of the provincial legislatures; that it is not their progenitor, and that in confiding to it such of their powers as were necessary to establish it as a greater representative institution than themselves, there were yet certain powers which they reserved for their own behoof.
> As an illustration of these reserved powers, may be cited the last clause of section 94 of the British North America Act. The section is headed 'uniformity of laws in Ontario, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.' This uniformity has refernce to 'all or any of the laws relative to property and civil rights,' in the three provinces just named and to the procedure of all or any of the courts in those three provinces. But the last clause of this section declares that 'any Act of the parliament of Canada making provision for such uniformity shall not have effect in any province unless and until it is adopted and enacted by the legislature thereof.

We recognized the sacred rights of the province of Quebec when we endeavoured to make these laws uniform in the various provinces. Has the government abandoned the House? I do not see a member of the government present. I think we shall have to adjourn for the want of a representative of the cabinet here. I beg to move, Mr. Chairman, that this committee rise, and that the House adjourn.

Mr. FIELDING. I am sorry that my hon. friend missed me so much.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought that the government had taken to the woods, and abandoned their case.

Mr. FIELDING. I was listening; I was within the sound of my hon. friend's voice.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, I am glad there is one who sticks to his post; the rest seem to be scattered to the four winds of heaven. I was going on to say that when we desired to have uniformity of laws in the various provinces, the British North America Act provided that we should not do it until all the provinces acquiesced by concurrent legislation. In one respect the provincial legislatures have a prominent advantage over the federal parliament; they can at any time amend their constitutions except as regards the office of lieutenant governor, while we cannot amend our constitution; that can be done only by an imperial Act; showing that the provincial parliament is above the federal parliament. Therefore we cannot interfere with the Acts of the provinces. If we do interfere with them, there is sure to be trouble. That was recognized by Mr. Gladstone in a speech which he made in the English House of Commons on March 22, 1867, on the subject of the Canada Loan Bill, when he said :

> We have for a full quarter of a century acknowledged absolutely the right of self-government in the colonies. We do not expect the laws of Canada or of Australia to be modelled according to our own ideas. We grant them a greater freedom from interference than, as amongst the three kingdoms, the legislature grants to the peculiar ideas that may happen to prevail in one of those three. We have carried it to this point, that as far as regards the administration, I believe it may be said that that the only officer appointed by the Colonial Secretary is the Governor; and I believe there cannot be a doubt that if it were the well ascertained desire of the colonies to have the appointment of their own governor, the imperial parliament would at once make over to them that power.

He goes on to show the importance of the provincial governments, and the rights they possess. I claim that the federal parliament has no right to interfere with those rights, because they are superior to ours. If we do interfere with them, we shall be creating trouble. In view of these arguments and the authorities I have quoted, will the hon. leader of the House still persist in saying that we have a right to pass this Bill? If he is prepared to do that, he must take the responsibility of deliberately interfering with the rights of the provinces and destroying the confederation which we have regarded as sacred up to the present time.

Mr. LENNOX. We have been discussing this matter now for about eleven hours, and yet, strange to say, the questions asked by the leader of the opposition at the beginning of the debate have not been answered. The question as to whether the notice was properly given or not, was only evasively answered by the chairman of the Railway Committee saying that he presumed that the notice had been attended to in the Senate, and that the Senate had ascertained that it had been properly given. I venture to say that that is not a safe principle on which to proceed, and that it is our duty to ascertain definitely and clearly whether or not the necessary notice has been given. The other question asked by the hon. leader of the opposition still remains unanswered, that is, what good and substantial reason is there for asking us to declare this to be a work for the general advantage of Canada? The other day in the Senate, a solemn declaration was passed, every senator present except one assenting to it, that in the future they would not pass legislation or make this declaration until clear and definite evidence was given of the fact. If it is the duty of the Senate, it is much more the duty of this House, to see to it, in the interest of the various provinces, that before we pass legislation of this kind, we shall not accept the bare, bald statement, but require it to be established as a matter of fact in the Railway Committee and to be reported to this House, that the work is a work for the general advantage of Canada. I admit that if this House thinks fit, it has the power, without one tittle of evidence, even in the case of a work which is clearly and beyond all question within the rights of a province, to declare such a work to be a work for the general advantage of Canada; and having so declared, we can rob the province of those rights of jurisdiction which it has. By subsection 10 of section 92 of the British North America Act, the following works are excepted from those assigned to the jurisdiction of the provinces :

> Such works as, although wholly situate within the province, are before or after their execution declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces.

So that if we want absolutely to neglect our duty as representatives of the people, we can declare a work, however small and local in its character, to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, and until the people rise in rebellion against our act, the provinces are powerless. That is the position we are in to-night, that there has been no statement made during this debate to show that this is a work really and honestly for the general advantage of Canada, and yet we are asked to say by our votes that it is a work of that character. I venture to think that the country will be somewhat surprised and startled at the propositions which have been made by two hon. members of this House to-day. The first is a proposition from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth). We do not expect the Minister of Justice to occupy the position in this House of a mere special pleader, and I venture to say that the argument he made to-day was a piece of special pleading which did no credit to the position he occupies. He referred to the wording of section 306 of the Railway Act of 1888 and to a case said to have been decided under that section. That section provides :

> The Intercolonial Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway, the North Shore Railway, the Northern Railway, the Hamilton and Northwestern Railway, the Canada Southern Railway, the Great Western Railway, the Credit Valley Railway, the Ontario and Quebec Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway are hereby declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada, and each and every branch line or railway now or hereafter connecting with or crossing the said lines of railway, or any of them, is a work for the general advantage of Canada.

It was argued by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) that that clause in itself, irrespective of the decision of Mr. Justice Street, meant that up to 1903 the Hamilton Radial Railway Company, having been compelled, in the course of construction, to cross the Grand Trunk Railway thereby, became a railway for the general advantage of Canada. I deny that proposition altogether. I deny that the section was ever intended to cover any such case. In the first place there were no electric railways at that time. I attach no great importance to that, but call attention to the wording in order to see if it could be construed as meaning that every line of railway, even if only five or ten miles long, which happened to cross one of the railways mentioned in this clause, became thereby a railway for the general advantage of Canada. Clearly the object of the enactment was that these trunk lines of railway specially mentioned and their various branches and connections should be works for the general advantage of Canada and to exclude altogether railways which incidentally happened to cross these other lines. The words 'each and every branch line or railway' evidently mean each and every branch line or each and every branch of railway, now or hereafter connecting with or crossing the said lines of railway. A fair construction of that enactment is therefore that the railways and branches in connection with these various trunk lines are to be taken as part of the system and considered for the general advantage of Canada. In that connection I am supported by history. Let any hon. gentleman turn to his own province and find what has been its history in connection with such matters. Is there any case in which railways of the class of the Hamilton Radial have been construed, under this Act, as being railways of a Dominion character? With that one exception, there is not a case in the history of Canada which bears out the view enunciated by the Minister of Justice today. In the various provinces, the courts have never regarded any railway as coming under this clause by reason merely of its having to cross a Dominion line. Does the case of the Grand Trunk Railway and the Hamilton Electric Railway conflict with that view? There was a motion by the Grand Trunk Railway for an injunction to prevent the Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Company from crossing their line. The company had endeavoured to obtain a right of way across the Grand Trunk Railway and had applied to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council for an order and had obtained an order. When the Hamilton Radial Company applied to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council for an order to cross the tracks of the Grand Trunk Railway, their application was opposed by the Grand Trunk Railway, but the committee made an order approving of the place and mode of crossing and prescribing certain conditions. We have therefore the Railway Committee of the Privy Council deciding that under the provisions of the Railway Act, 51 Victoria, chapter 29, the Hamilton Radial, in respect of the crossing, were within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada. Upon that state of things, the Radial Railway Company proceeded. And Judge Street decided this point and decided no more than this point, that the only authority having control over this matter was the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, subject to the right of appeal to the Governor in Council. Here is the judgment:

> I am of opinion that the question raised here must be treated as absolutely determined by the order of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, subject to the right of appeal to the Governor in Council.

Then he goes on to say:

> By section 11, subsection (d), the Railway Committee have power to inquire into, hear and determine any application, complaint or dispute respecting the crossing of the tracks of one company by the tracks of another company.
> By section 173 of the Act as amended by 56 Victoria, chapter 27, section 1, the above powers are made specially applicable to the case of an electric railway seeking to cross an ordinary railway.

Then he sums it up in this way:

> In my opinion this question was one of those for the determination of which the Railway Committee was constituted, and in which, subject to the right of appeal to the Governor General in Council, or of reference to the Supreme Court, its decisions are by section 21 of the Railway Act made final.

That he decided, and that is all he decided under the application made to him. In giving judgment he does make reference to section 306 it is true, but he confines himself in his judgment to the one point submitted to him—namely, whether there was a right of appeal to him or not by way of injunction to prevent these parties exercising rights given by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, subject to the appeal of the Governor in Council. He decides—in regard to crossings and crossings only—that the jurisdiction is in the Privy Council subject only to appeal from its decision to the Governor in Council or the Supreme Court. Now, we have a Minister of Justice—and to the Minister of Justice we naturally look for the elucidation of subjects of this kind—who rests a strange conclusion upon this decision of Mr. Justice Street. I am prepared to give my allegiance to that decision, so far as the question up for discussion is concerned, but I submit with all confidence that a fair construction of section 306, according to universal recognition in Canada since 1888, is directly in conflict with the proposition that every line of railway, however short and insignificant it may be, however local in its character, if it crosses a Dominion railway becomes ipso facto a Dominion railway. That is a startling proposition to come from the Minister of Justice of this Dominion. It seems a proposition, however, to which there is one convert at all events, the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell). That hon. gentleman advances a step further. I notice that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) would not venture his own individual opinion in support of the proposition that the mere matter of crossing of a Dominion railway would have the effect declared by reason of the result supposed to flow from the decision of Mr. Justice Street. But the hon. gentleman leaves the impression upon the mind of the ordinary reader who does not scan his words carefully and of the ordinary listener in this House that it is the law that this railway comes within the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament. I deny that proposition absolutely. But we have the further startling proposition from the coming minister of something—I know not what—the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) that all the railways in Canada must ultimately come under federal control. I venture to say that the people of the several provinces of Canada will have a good deal to say before that consummation is brought about. I venture to think that if they believe that the federal power is going to grasp supreme and absolute control of the railways of this country there will be such a stir among the people as has not been witnessed at any time in the past. I believe that, instead of the movement being in the direction of robbing the provinces of their rights and centring jurisdiction in the federal power, the people are more inclined to demand that the federal government shall not encroach upon provincial rights, and that in the very near future we shall have such a movement in that direction as will secure the safety and permanence of our institution.

I wish to repeat here a word that I have said in the Railway Committee more than once. It has been said here that the provinces have been robbed of their rights in this parliament. Hon. members on the government side of the House have stated that on hundreds of occasions undertakings that could not be claimed as undertakings for the general advantage of Canada have been dealt with in our Railway Committee. I say now, as I have said in our Railway Committee, that the time has come when the rights of the provinces must be recognized. The question is not as between the jurisdiction of the provinces and the jurisdiction of the Dominion per se. In the case before us certain gentlemen have a pull in one legislature which they have not in another, and they wish to take advantage of that. Look at the history of this legislation. Take, for instance, what has occurred in the interpretation of this judgment of Mr. Justice Street. We do not hear to-day the interpretation that was put upon it by the company, when applying to the local legislature in 1900 when the matter was fresh in their minds and when the Ross government—or at least when the friends of these gentlemen—were in power in the province. Notwithstanding the judgment of Mr. Justice Street, the local legislature and that alone was regarded as the authority to give extension of powers required. In 1904, when their friends were still in power, when Colonel Gibson was still in office, the application was made again to the local legislature for an extension of time.

Now when there is a change in the government of Ontario, when the people have sent there other men to manage their affairs, and other men to decide upon the question of the Hamilton Radial Railway, then these gentlemen see fit to come to Ottawa and, along with their political friends, to try to force this Bill through parliament by reason of numbers alone. One more point. Assuming that the Act of 1888 had the effect that is contended for it by the Minister of Justice, then what is the position of matters to-day? In 1903 we had a new Railway Act, and the Minister of Justice pointed out that in that Act a different system prevailed, that instead of its providing that these crossing railways should be declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, they should be under control of the Dominion parliament as regards crossings only. A new system, as he suggests. But the Minister of Justice seemed to be of the opinion that having once declared the Hamilton Radial Railway to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, nothing parliament could do afterwards could undo that work. I do not think that is very logical. I turn back to the Act of 1903, and I do not need to waste words as the hon. gentleman did in trying to find something that is not there; I turn to the conclusion of the Act, and I find a list of the Acts repealed, some in part and some in toto. I find at the very head of the list the following:

> The following Acts of the parliament of Canada are hereby repealed
> Chapter 29 of 51 Victoria—the whole.

That is the Act of 1888. Assuming that parliament did acquire power by reason of the Act of 1888, when this same parliament repealed the Act of 1888, I understand it to wipe out every vestige of the Act. The power which could assume and take, can give back to the local legislature that which fairly belonged to it at first. So I submit beyond question that this matter stands fairly and honestly within the jurisdiction of the local legislature—unless they can show some good reason why we should declare that, by reason of special facts and circumstances made to appear before us, this is an Act which, owing to these exceptional circumstances, is fairly entitled to be declared a work for the general advantage of Canada. That has not been shown, therefore I submit that the government ought to take the position at once that this Bill should not pass this House. The opposition have a duty to perform but as it has already been alluded to by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and by other members on this side of the House, the government has a special duty to perform in this matter. I do not for a moment concur in the view that members of the government are in exactly the same position as ordinary members of the House as regards a great constitutional question of this kind, a conflict of authority between the local legislature and the Dominion parliament. They are put in a position of trust, they are put in a position of having a special duty to perform. I venture to submit that it is the duty of the government, and of the Minister of Justice in particular, and of the leader of the House, to take a definite position upon this matter, and to instruct the House and to say that so far as they are concerned they will see to it that the provinces are not deprived of any of their just rights by the action of this House.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion on both sides of the House this afternoon in regard to this important question. Notwithstanding all that has been said to the contrary, I think a great deal is to be said in favour of provincial rights. I am sorry indeed to see that the grand old Liberal party that went up and down the concessions, the side roads, the cities and towns of this country, in 1896, shouting for provincial rights, seem now disposed to go back upon their record. Previous to 1896 one of the principal planks of their platform was provincial rights. They were going to stand by that, they were going to give to the province every just right possible. But here we find them within the last few years doing practically the opposite. We find them in British Columbia taking advantage of the local government and usurping the land of that province; instead of giving that province reasonable and fair treatment, we find them to-day taking charge of lands they have no right to, lands that are undoubtedly the property of the British Columbia government. We find them doing the same thing in the province of Ontario, within the last few months. Now they are taking away from the province of Ontario the right to legislate with reference to railways, a right which cannot be disputed. I want to say further that we should give a warning to all the railways of the Dominion that are coming here for such legislation as this, that they need not expect to have any better consideration than has been given to this Bill at the present time. I am well aware that within the last few years a number of Bills have come before the Railway Committee that certainly deserve the censure of this House, because they were, to say the least, legislation which should be provincial instead of federal. I was surprised to see the leader of the House take the action which he has taken with reference to this measure. I remember well sitting in the Railway Committee and hearing the Finance Minister, now leading the House, read subsection 3 of section 4 with reference to suburban lines of railways within the county of Wentworth and the city of Hamilton. The minister made a number of remarks with reference to that section, and he assured us that so far as he was concerned he did not believe it was wise for us to pass any such legislation in this federal parliament. He urged upon us the necessity of investigating that clause thoroughly before we allowed it to pass the Railway Committee. The clause was thoroughly discussed in the committee and the vote was taken in reference to it. The men who are to-day fighting the cause of provincial rights are the men who stood up in the Railway Committee and condemned the action of the other members who were trying to enforce it through the House. It is not to the credit of the men who are trying to force such legislation which rightly belongs to the province through the federal parliament. In the good old Liberal policy inaugurated in 1895, and the speeches at the time of its promulgation, one of the most prominent planks was that of provincial rights. Sir Richard Cartwright in dealing with this said :

> I think, Sir, we all agree that the constitution of the Senate as it at present exists, is a blot upon public government and free institutions. I think we all agree it is the duty of the Liberal party to preserve the rights of the several provinces and to see that in their sphere the provincial authorities shall have the same rights accorded to them as the constitution accords the Dominion legislature in this larger sphere.

Sir Richard, I have no doubt, was then voicing the sentiments of the Liberal party at that time; but to-day hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who are endeavouring to stand up for provincial rights, are opposed by members on the government side.

This company are asking this legislature for a very unfair and unreasonable Bill, a Bill which will give them an unfair advantage over practically every other electric line in the Dominion and over various cities and towns. Why did they not go to the provincial legislature, why come here if they only require to extend their charter to Niagara Falls or to Toronto? By granting such legislation as this we would be practically holding up Ontario. The hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. A. C. Macdonell) read the telegram from Mr. Whitney, the Prime Minister of Ontario, urging the members of this House to see that justice be done to that province with reference to this Bill. I am surprised to see prominent members of the Reform party trying to force this legislation through when they know that the Premier of Ontario is strongly opposed to it, and I sincerely hope that they will see that it is to their interest and to the interest of the people at large to have this legislation remain over for the present. Mr. Blake in the debate on the Streams Bill to which reference has been made, said :

> Where the law and the general interests of the Dominion imperatively demand it, then and then only shall the power of disallowance be exercised.

I cannot believe that this is one of the cases where the law and the general interests of the Dominion imperatively demand that this legislation should be placed on the statute-books of this country. Those are strong words and I think they should be sufficient to call the attention of the members of the government to the necessity of allowing this measure to stand over for the present, and of giving it further consideration. After referring to the debate on the New Brunswick school question, Mr. Blake quotes from an authority who says :

> He states that the only exception which he would propose in such cases is where the measure in question prejudicially affected the interests of the Dominion generally.

Mr. Blake uttered strong words in support of provincial rights; he urged upon the House that unless the question is of the most vital importance this parliament should not interfere, he urged upon the House that unless the question is inimical to the interests of the Dominion there should be no interference by the Dominion authorities. I urge this House to weigh Mr. Blake's words in defence of provincial rights. I appeal to the leader of the House to give us his opinion with reference to this Bill as he did on the Suburban Railway Bill in the committee, for I believe that the action taken by the leader of the House on that occasion influenced many members to cast their votes as they did. I feel confident that if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) were given personal freedom in reference to this Bill he would be one of the first to denounce it. I am satisfied that before this debate closes the hon. gentleman will declare that the Bill seriously affects the rights of the province of Onatrio and that he will not allow it to go through the House. I was surprised to hear the member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) take the position he did on this Bill. I am satisfied that if he said in his constituency what he said in the House on the question of provincial rights, he would be denounced from one end of the riding to the other. I am satisfied that if he stated that he believed that soon all the railways in the province would be under federal legislation, knowing the people of his riding as I do, and knowing their intelligence, they would decline to endorse any such policy. I trust the day is not far distant when that hon. gentleman will rise in the House and withdraw the language he used to-night. Finally, I urge the members of this House on both sides to stand by the good old platform of provincial rights.

Mr. BENNETT. It seems to be the policy of the government not to allow its supporters to participate in the debates of this House, and so to-night this has been a one-sided discussion. A few weeks ago these gentlemen opposite refused to discuss the Insurance Bill, either believing their position was so weak, or the speech of the Minister of Justice so strong, that they could sit in silence. Only one legal gentleman from the province of Ontario, and he the promoter of the Bill, has spoken on that side of the House in addition to the Minister of Justice, and to do the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke) justice, he seems to be doubtful as to whether this parliament should enact such a measure. What will come next if we pass such a Bill as this ? Are we going to appropriate all the powers of the provincial legislatures, are we going to attempt to denude them of their control over the water-powers within their provinces ?

If that is to be the attitude of the government on these Bills, which are strictly of a local nature, one can easily anticipate what a conflict there is going to be from one end of this Dominion to the other. We are having a great many of these conflicts between the federal power and the provincial power, which I think is rather unfortunate from a federal point of view. That question was involved recently in a dispute between the province of British Columbia and the federal power with regard to certain lands in that province. At present there is a conflict as to the ownership of certain lands in the county of Renfrew known as the Petawawa military ground. It will be an unfortunate thing for this country, and I think for this government also, if these conflicts continue to arise. The stock in trade of the Liberal party in the province of Ontario for many years was their claim to be the guardians and champions of provincial rights. While the legal decisions perhaps gave them something they could claim as praise, the conflicts did not arise by reason of any encroachment of the federal power. Take, for instance, the case of the boundary between the provinces of Manitoba and Ontario. While it is true that the government of Sir John Macdonald referred that case to the Privy Council for adjudication, that government never took the ground that the province of Manitoba was right or the province of Ontario was wrong. They simply said, here is a conflict between the two provinces, and the federal power must not stand as the arbiter and say decisively to which province the lands belong ; it is a question which must be decided by the courts exclusively. The case of the Rivers and Streams Bill was on all fours with that. These were cases forced on the federal government, and it had either to take sides with one province or have the question referred to the courts for adjudication. The present is not a case of that kind at all. This is a case in which the Dominion government is actually going out of its way to imperil the rights of the province of Ontario. Now what are the merits of the Bill before the House? It has been stated that this Bill has not been introduced in the ordinary way in the House of Commons and sent to the Railway Committee of this House. Ninety-nine out of every hundred Bills go through that avenue. It is only Bills of a suspicious nature that are first introduced in the Senate. We have an instance of that in the Jordan Power Company Bill now on the order paper. There is another Bill on the order paper in respect to the Port Arthur Power and Development Company, which will be discussed, I have no doubt, at greater length than even this Bill if the government should be so indiscrete as to countenance it, because it is one which in my opinion encroaches on provincial rights to an unlimited extent. This Bill respecting the Hamilton Radial Railway Company is not one to commend itself to this House, though the parties behind the Bill are said to be in pressing need of despatch. This company, according to the preamble of the Bill, first saw the light of day in 1894, thirteen years ago, and under the powers that were given to it by the local legislature, I understand that only some twenty miles of electric railway have been constructed in that time. The company now comes before parliament with a Bill which on its face does not bear the imprint of candour. Who believes, for instance, that this company have in honest contemplation the construction of a line of railway either to Niagara Falls or to Windsor? Hon. gentlemen know that there is no part of the province of Ontario which is so gridironed with railways to-day as the western peninsula.

Mr. CLARKE. We want more.

Mr. BENNETT. If my hon. friend is sincere in that proposition, he might suggest to the authors of this Bill that they should at present get authority merely to extend their line to a point eastward of Windsor, and in a year or two afterwards they could apply for authority to build it to Windsor. Then they would show their bona fides and that they were in earnest; but under their charter they have only built about twenty miles in thirteen years. The great question before the committee is whether there is to be what is known as an encroachment on provincial rights? Every hon. member knows that for years that has been a burning question in the province of Ontario. Election after election has been conducted on the assertion that Sir John Macdonald and his government were autocrats endeavouring to dominate the people of that province, endeavouring to take away thousands of acres that rightfully belonged to it and hand them over to another province, until the minds of the people of Ontario were thoroughly imbued with the idea that the federal power could at any one time, by its great strength, take one of the provinces by the throat and strangle it; and that will be the feeling of the people of Ontario with regard to the Bill at present before the House. Now, the British North America Act provides that railways which extend beyond the limits of a province shall be vested exclusively in the federal parliament. This Bill provides that this railway is to be extended to Windsor, and that in connection therewith the company is to construct and operate ferries across the Detroit river. Now, if this railway company has been able to construct only twenty miles of railway in thirteen years, at the same rate of progress many of us will hardly live to see the time when it will be built to the city of Windsor. It would be in the interest of the country as a whole to have this railway pushed on; but let its promoters show some evidence of good faith by pushing it faster than it has been pushed in the past. If you are going to grant federal charters for railways simply because certain promoters put in their Bills extreme points which will probably never be reached, then we shall be divesting the local legislatures of all powers which rightly belong to them. Now, section 16 of the British North America Act, gives exactly the case in point. It says:

> Generally, all matters of a merely local and private nature in the province.

When this company started in 1894, evidently that which was in contemplation was a purely local railway, such as those that run in various parts of the Niagara peninsula. It was not anticipated that it would branch out and run in competition with the many lines of steam railway that run towards the city of Windsor. And the same is true concerning the Niagara peninsula, which is gridironed with steam and electric railways. The fact must force itself upon those who regard this Bill upon its merits that there is an ulterior object in placing in the Bill words indicating an intention to run towards the frontier at Niagara and Windsor. What do these people expect to escape? Do they think that in the province of Ontario there will be some privileges taken from this and other railways of a similar kind that now exist. Let us say that the political affiliations of the gentlemen behind this Bill are with hon. gentlemen opposite and not consonant with those of the men who are entrusted with the powers of state in the province of Ontario, and who, in all human probability, will be there for years to come ; is that the reason these men come to this parliament in the dying hours of this session? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is, to a great extent, blameable for the position of this Bill. In the Railway Committee the other day that hon. gentleman thought the Bill of an overreaching nature, and invasive of provincial rights. He 'spoke out in meeting,' so to say. It is to be regretted that he was not able to remain longer at the meeting of the committee on that occasion. Had he remained after disclaiming any idea of supporting the Bill, and had he continued to oppose it openly, that would have probably been the end of the Bill. We must disabuse the minds of those in control of provincial railways of the idea that, by inserting certain words in a Bill, by naming certain places on the frontier, they can procure an enactment by this parliament that will quite remove their undertaking from the control of the provincial legislature. Otherwise the provinces will begin to ask where this thing is going to stop. It will be seen at once that parties who, it may be, simply wish to run a railway between two nearby points within the province, will, that it is only necessary to ask for power to run to Windsor or elsewhere on the frontier, to justify coming to this parliament, thus denying the provincial legislature the rights that it has hitherto enjoyed. Another thing to be considered is that this parliament will soon meet again—probably within five or six months. Surely a company which has delayed its work so much that in thirteen years it has constructed only twenty miles of railway—and that not steam railway but merely for electric service—through a country which is not an expensive country for railway building, it is not likely to be in a great hurry to reach the city of Windsor. If, next year, they come here and show a bona fide intention to construct towards the city of Windsor, parliament can consider the desirability of giving them the power they ask. But that will be a vastly different case from simply putting the names of two frontier places in the Bill merely to override the provincial legislature.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 163) to incorporate the Prudential Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Gervais.

Bill (No. 164) to incorporate the Fidelity Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Johnston.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the programme to-morrow ?

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. FIELDING. The same as to-day, resolutions, Bills and Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 23, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

YUKON TERRITORY—APPROVAL OF ORDINANCES.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) moved :

Resolved, that the ordinance of the 26th of May last, intituled : 'An ordinance respecting liens in favour of miners,' and the ordinance of the 7th of July last, intituled : 'An ordinance respecting the disposal of water from streams and lakes in the Yukon Territory for the purpose of generating power, and for the control and management of the sale, transmission and use of such power,' passed by the Governor in Council, under the authority of provisions which now comprise section 16 of chapter 63, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, and which previous to the coming into force of that Act comprised subsection 1 of section 8 of chapter 6 of the statutes of 1898, as that subsection was enacted by section 3, of chapter 34 of 2 Edward VII., copies of which ordinances, as well as of the necessary order in council in each instance, have been laid before this House, are approved by this House, in accordance with the provisions of section 17 of the said chapter 63.

Mr. FOSTER. What does that mean ? Is it that we are passing a law or an Act?

Mr. OLIVER (reading) :

It is provided by section 17 of chapter 63, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, that :

Every ordinance made under the authority of the last preceding section shall remain in force until the day immediately succeeding the day of prorogation of the then next session of parliament, and no longer, unless during such session of parliament such ordinance is approved by resolution of both Houses of parliament.

Only two of such ordinances require to be so approved at the present session. One is the ordinance of the 26th May last, intituled : 'An ordinance respecting liens in favour of miners,' and the other is the ordinance of the 7th July last intituled : 'An ordinance respecting the disposal of water from streams and lakes in the Yukon Territory for the purpose of generating power, and for the control and management of the sale, transmission and use of such power.' A copy of each of such ordinances and a copy of the necessary order in council in each instance are herewith.

It is well to explain here that when the statutes were being revised all the provisions of the Yukon Territory Act, chapter 34, of 2 Edward VII., 1902, except sections 5 and 6 of that Act were consolidated and are now to be found in the revised Act, chapter 63, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906. The provisions of section 6 were decided to be unnecessary and were repealed. They do not, however, concern the matter now being dealt with. The provisions of section 5 do, however. They are as follows : 'Every regulation made by the Governor in Council under the authority of section 47 of the Dominion Lands Act, applicable or relating to the Yukon Territory, shall remain in force until the day immediately succeeding the day of prorogation of the then next session of parliament, and no longer unless during such session of parliament such regulation is approved by resolution of both Houses of parliament.

In view of the provisions of the Yukon Placer Mining Act, now chapter 64, Revised Statutes of Canada, it was decided that the provisions of section 5 were no longer necessary or effective. They were therefore declared to be effete and were repealed, as will be found by referring to appendix 1 (the history and disposal of the Acts of the Dominion of Canada) at page 35 of volume 4 of the Revised Statntes.

The provisions which now comprise section 17, Revised Statutes of Canada, formerly comprised subsection 2 of section 8 of the Yukon Territory Act, as that section was enacted by section 3 of chapter 34 of 2 Edward VII., and they are so cited in the copies of the two orders in council, herewith, as the authority for the enactment of the ordinance in each instance.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, Mr. Speaker, what we seem to be really doing is passing a Bill into an Act, making it a law, and we are doing that simply by having the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) coming down at fifteen minutes past eleven with a statement the reading of which is the first knowledge we have of it and asking us to make this ordinance law. If a Bill were to be made into an Act it would have to go through the regular form of notice being given and I think the least we can require is that the minister's explanation should go on 'Hansard', this will be a notice of motion and we will have a little time to think it over and take it up on a succeeding day. We could not be expected to pass legislation on such insufficient notice.

Mr. OLIVER. The ordinances in question have been laid on the table of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Our notice has probably not been called to them.

Mr. SPROULE. Probably they have not been read by one out of ten members of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands.

GOVERNMENT LOANS.

On the Orders of the Day being called :

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) for further information in regard to a question I brought up the other day referring to the obligations of the country now falling due. There is a statement in a Montreal paper that they were to be taken up more or less by the Bank of Montreal.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). There is nothing new to be said with respect to that. The Bank of Montreal is the financial agent of the government in London acting for us in our business there and it is acting with respect to arranging a renewal of a portion of a loan for four years.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. At what rate?

Mr FIELDING. It is a 4 per cent loan and we will try to renew it at the same rate. Otherwise the statement in the papers is correct. The Bank of Montreal is not acting for itself, but it is simply taking it up as an agent managing it in London in the usual way.

Mr. FOSTER. Under the permanent contract ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

ADDRESS TO HIS MAJESTY.

Mr. FIELDING moved :

That the address to His Most Excellent Majesty the King which was adopted by this House on the 25th March last, transmitted to the Senate, and at the request of this House returned for further consideration, be taken into consideration to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it intended to proceed now de novo and make a completed document of the address or simply to amend what we have already passed? An amended address does not seem to be quite the proper thing.

Mr. FIELDING. The suggestion seems to be a good one and I think the address should go on the order paper as a completed document. I shall see that the amendment is inserted in the notice as it will appear on the order paper.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 75) to amend the Railway Act—Mr. Aylesworth—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. FOSTER. The minister might explain the Act before we go into the clause.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). It is so long since this Bill was under consideration that the explanations given may have passed out of mind. The Bill consists simply of two clauses. The first confers on the Board of Railway Commissioners the power to make application to the Minister of Justice in any matter coming before the board in which in their opinion the interest of the public requires the employment of counsel on behalf of the public interest as opposed to any conflicting interests that may be represented before the board. The second clause deals with an entirely different matter. It has been, under the provisions of the Railway Act, 1903, and perhaps for a previous period, I am not at all, at the moment, sure, the custom to file with the Secretary of State securities for bonds given by railway companies. Those securities are mortgages practically upon the property of the company and if they were to be subject to the ordinary regulations applying to such mortgages they would require, under the local statutes of various provinces, to be filed in the offices of the clerks of the county courts in every individual county in which any property covered by such mortgage might happen to be. That would be a very troublesome and onerous thing to be compelled to do, and by the Railway Act of 1903 it was dispensed with. But the Railway Act of 1903 was enacted in the year 1903 and it did not come into force until the first of February following. It would have application to any such security entered into and filed after that date, the first of February, 1904, but the position of a security which was entered into within the six months prior to that time, is possibly doubtful. At all events it has been thought that it would be better to have this cleared up and for that reason the second clause is enacted here applying to securities of that character.

Mr. FOSTER. The second clause simply makes the law applicable to a portion of those bond mortgages that is applicable to those deposited since 1903. The security of course in either case is not diminished or made any greater?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. No.

Mr. FOSTER. The titles are searched and it is seen that the mortgages are valid and the bonds are based on these.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It does not touch the bonds, but it relieves the lender from the necessity of filing, in each individual office of the country where his property is, a copy of his mortgage.

Mr. FOSTER. Which would be an expense without any compensating advantage.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Without any advantage.

Mr. FOSTER. The first clause throws into the hands of the Minister of Justice the power to distribute a good deal of patronage in the employment of counsel before the Railway Commission. The opinion has been expressed here that a Board of Railway Commissioners or such a body is just as well to be as little dependent on counsel as it possibly can be. The employment of counsel is apt to lead to loss of time and with a great deal of the work of the commission it is not necessary, although in certain cases it should be done. Could not the Railway Commission employ its own counsel without applying to the Minister of Justice?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I wished to direct attention to this very issue and have given notice some time ago of an amendment to be found at page 386 of the Votes and Proceedings which I think meets the case in a much better way. It is this:

Section 3.—And it shall be the duty of the Attorney General of Canada, and he is hereby authorized and directed to enforce the Railway Act and the Special Act, and for this purpose to cause to be instituted any and all such proceedings, civil or criminal, as in his judgment may be necessary or proper to prevent or to punish violations thereof, and to enforce and collect all the penalties that may accrue thereunder.

This Railway Bill is very important but it has been discovered that the only person who can enforce it at present is the private litigant. The government by their declaration here have absolved themselves from any enforcement of it, and my proposition is that we put in a clause specifically calling on the Attorney General or any other officer named to enforce that law and if necessary to employ counsel and take up the case on behalf of the public himself if he sees fit. There ought to be also an appropriation of public money for this purpose which would enable him not only to employ counsel in special cases but in any case. This argument is supported by the fact that to-day the Interstate Commerce law of the United States is being enforced by the Attorney General of the United States to great effect. It is the policy of the administration at Washington to-day to enforce that Interstate Commerce Bill in all its clauses.

The result is that the railway law of the United States is to-day being administered in the interests of the public. Only last week in Chicago a decision was given out by the United States District Court the net result of which is that the Chicago and Alton Railway and the Standard Oil Company are liable to fines amounting to over $29,000,000 for violation of the rebate law. This decision was given because the duty was imposed on the Attorney General of the United States to enforce the law, and he did enforce it. He employed the most eminent counsel he could get and had any number of agents working on the case. We have just as good a law in this country, but there is no duty imposed on any public officer to enforce it; and what I want to see is the same provision made here that there is in the United States, namely, that the Attorney General of this country shall be specifically instructed to enforce our Railway Act. I do not believe in this petty way of giving him authority to employ counsel to enforce the law if the Railway Commission ask him to do it. He ought to enforce the law, and the Minister of Railways and the government as a whole ought to enforce the law. We have the absurd statement put forward here that it is not their duty to enforce the law, but that that duty rests on the attorneys general of the provinces or on private litigants. But something that proved my case came out the other day during the discussion on the Bill of the Minister of Customs, when the hon. minister admitted that every officer in his department was directly instructed to enforce the Customs Act and to see that the King's revenue was not defrauded. I also elicited from him the statement that the Attorney General of Canada is to assist in the enforcement of the Customs law. The same is true with regard to the Inland Revenue law. We could not prevent smuggling into the country if every customs officer were not specially instructed to enforce the Customs Act. The Railway Act ought to be enforced in the same way. We have in this country what we call responsible government, which means that somebody is responsible for the administration of the government of the country, and the government of the country, I take it, includes the enforcement of the laws. Therefore I ask the acting Minister of Railways to accept this suggestion of mine instead of the milk and water amendment which the Minister of Justice proposes. The American Railway Act has this express provision :

The commission is hereby authorized and required to enforce the provisions of this Act.

Then it goes on :

And the Attorney General of the United States is authorized and directed, whenever he has reasonable grounds to believe that any person, corporation or company has knowingly received or accepted any sum of money or other valuable consideration as a rebate, to institute, in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, civil action to recover such money.

On the next page I find the following :

It shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, whenever the Attorney General shall direct, either of his own motion or on the request of the interstate commission, to institute and prosecute such proceedings as are provided by this Act, and such proceedings shall not preclude the bringing of suits for damages by any of the parties injured..

Both the Railway Act of the United States and the Railway Act of this country are excellent Acts, designed to be for the public interest ; but in the United States the whole administration undertake the enforcement of the law because the statute imposes that duty upon them, while in this country the enforcement of the law is left to private litigants. In our Railway Act there is an excellent provision against discrimination, but there is no public officer to enforce it. There is a similar provision in the American law, and it is enforced by the United States Attorney General. The consequence is that the people of the United States are securing for the first time fair treatment from the railways ; but in this country the people are not getting their rights. I propose to make the Attorney General of the Dominion responsible for enforcing not only the general Railway Act, but all special railway Acts. If that were the case to-day, the Grand Trunk Railway Company would be liable for its refusal to carry passengers at a penny a mile between Toronto and Montreal. There is apparently nobody responsible for the enforcement of the election law either. It is high time that this parliament recognized that it is useless to pass laws unless we go further and impose upon some particular person the duty of enforcing these laws, and it is to that end that I suggest this amendment, which I hope the Minister of Justice will see his way to accept instead of the one he has put on the order paper.

Mr. BARKER. I think both clauses of this Bill are reasonable ; but there is always danger, especially under a clause like the first, of drifting into what may be the engagement of a standing counsel for the commissioners. The Railway Commissioners have at their head a very able judge, and I presume there will always be a man of his standing at their head ; but if once we begin allowing the commission to call for counsel to argue cases before them, we may find very shortly that some gentleman at the Bar will always be called for, so that he will soon become a standing counsel to the commission. I do not think the Minister of Justice intended anything of that kind by this Bill ; but I would suggest that in line four, after the words 'proceedings or matter,' the words 'of special importance' be inserted. Again in line seven I would suggest that the word particular' be inserted before the word 'question.'

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I have no objection.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that it would work out in about this way : You will have a fruitful crop of lawyers all over the country who may be friends of the government employed in these cases, because no municipality or corporation will venture to recommend a lawyer in any case who is not favourable to the government, and the government will always have that class of men around them. On the other hand, it is going to do away with one of the merits which the commission is always said to have over the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. It was claimed that in this commission any municipal representative, such as reeve or a warden, though not a lawyer, might appear and argue the case of his municipality in a common sense way without being hampered with the opposition of a lawyer on the other side. I can imagine what help any municipal corporation could look for from that commission if its reeve or warden were opposed on behalf of the railway company by some eminent lawyer. While I admit that there are some cases in which it may be necessary to have a lawyer to bring out the points of law, I do not believe that the best results would be accomplished by generally resorting to that course. If it is resorted to, the affect will be what I have stated—the lawyers who are supporters of the government will find themselves chosen for service of this kind while others will be allowed to remain at home.

Mr. BRISTOL. I think the legislation is in the right direction. The Board of Railway Commissioners, as I understand it, is intended to protect the public interest. It was felt that the railway corporations of this country, with their permanent counsel and their permanent interest, might overbear the public interest and it was necessary there should be some tribunal which would look after the public interest in a reasonable way. The Minister of Justice in this Bill provides that if, in the opinion of the tribunal—which I venture to submit, so far as we have had experience of it, we may describe as an independent tribunal endeavouring to protect the public interest—it is desirable to have counsel to argue a case on behalf of the public, the Minister of Justice, if he thinks it in the public interest to do so, may appoint such counsel. Surely that is a great protection for the general mass of the public as against the railway corporations. It seems to me that this is most proper and beneficial legislation so far as it goes, though, personally, I would like to see it go somewhat further. I have often felt that the average lawyer appearing before the railway commissioners and instructed by a client on matters pertaining to his individual interest—although that individual interest may be the interest of the public in general—is very much handicapped by the fact that he is opposed by the most skilled and highly-paid counsel in this country. If the Railway Commission see fit to appoint counsel to attend to a case in the public interest, I am sure that hon. members of this House would like to see the best counsel opposed to that of the railway companies. In that view I do not see how we can object to the measure. But, as I have suggested, the Bill should go further. The direction in which I should like to see an extension made is this—that counsel may be appointed not merely to argue the case, but to see to it that proper evidence is brought forward to the satisfaction of the commission. Every lawyer knows that if the evidence is not in to support the case, the most able argument will not avail.

Mr. SPROULE.

Now, I think that my hon. friend from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) has better ground to go upon in support of his contention than the statutes of the United States. With all possible respect to the Minister of Justice, I think that if he will read chapter 21 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. 1906, an Act respecting the Department of Justice, he will find provided every authority that he can require to enforce any federal law of this country which he thinks it proper to enforce No doubt the hon. minister read that when he assumed his duties. But I would like to read it to this House so that hon. members may understand its scope, and if it is not broad enough we might amend it so as to give the Minister of Justice all the powers that it is desirable that he should have. What are the duties of the Minister of Justice? Subsection (b) of section 4 provides that he shall :

(b) see that the administration of public affairs is in accordance with the law.

I venture to submit that if he sees that the administration of public affairs is in accordance with law it is his duty to give attention to every case in which the public interest is involved, whether his attention is called to the matter by the Railway Commission or by anybody else. I hold that every member of this House has a right to bring to the attention of the minister any matter he thinks is not in accordance with the law or in which he thinks the law of the country is not properly administered and to ask the minister to give it his attention. In addition to that, subsection (c) of the same section provides that the Minister of Justice shall:

(c) have the superintendence of all matters connected with the administration of justice in Canada, not within the jurisdiction of the governments of the provinces.

So, apart from everything else, the Minister of Justice is, so to speak, the general manager of the Justice Department. Having the superintendence of the administration of justice so far as federal laws are concerned, he may take it upon himself to see to it that every federal law of Canada is properly observed. But even that is not all his powers. By section 5 the Attorney General is given the fullest possible powers, such as the Attorney General of England has by law or usage, except such as are especially given to the attorney general of each province. So while I think that this present legislation may not be necessary, I believe that it will be an assistance to the Minister of Justice in doing his duty, because it will give the Railway Commission the power to bring to the minister's attention any case in which the public interest is involved, and it will then be the duty of the minister, if he thinks it is necessary to do so, to retain counsel to properly uphold the public interest. Personally I approve the section and would like to see it go to the extent that in every case thought proper, counsel may be appointed not merely to argue the case in the public interest, but to see to it that the proper evidence is presented to support that interest.

Mr. BERGERON. I read a newspaper item the other day which seems to explain a part of this Bill. It was to the effect that an investigation was to be held by the railway commissioners into the telephone companies and that Mr. Shepley has been called upon and instructed by the commission to act as counsel. Of course, there is no authority, in advance of the passing of this Bill, to appoint such counsel, but this will give the commission the necessary authority to appoint Mr. Shepley as proposed. I do not wish to discuss the employment of counsel in these matters on general grounds. At the same time I do not see much use in engaging counsel as the head of the commission, Mr. Killam, is a good lawyer and does not need advice. Besides I do not imagine that the Minister of Justice intends to investigate the telephone companies in the way that the insurance companies have been investigated and make this a matter of inquisition. Under these circumstances it seems to me that it would be useless to authorize the government to pay large sums of money for the services of that attorney or to force the telephone companies to similar large expense which does not seem to be demanded in the public interest.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. With reference to the point alluded to by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) the first thing that strikes me is the usual newspaper inaccuracy, to call it by the mildest term—or, perhaps, to speak of it as a tendency to exaggerate might be fitting. The only foundation for the newspaper report alluded to, is the circumstance, that the telephone and express companies have recently represented to the Board of Railway Commissioners their schedules or tariffs of rates. That is precisely the kind of matter in regard to which the provisions of this Bill would be most useful, as the member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol) has pointed out. In that matter the interest of the company will be protected before the board by skilled counsel who are possibly in the permanent retainer of the companies or who at all events have the advantage of the fullest possible time for preparation and the assistance of skilled accountants and of business men to enable them to present to the commission in the most effective manner possible the interests of the companies in support of, perhaps a high tariff, or at all events such tariffs as the companies have asked the board to approve. The interest of the public may be directly opposed, and there may be no one to represent the public before the board. I ask hon. gentlemen, whether of the legal profession or not, to consider the practical position of no matter how capable a man—even though you select a man most capable for the position, even though you take the present chief commissioner of that board—I ask hon. gentlemen to reflect for a moment upon the position he would necessarily be in in endeavouring not merely to pass upon the question of the propriety of the changes proposed to be made in any such tariff, but to make the necessary inquiries into the circumstances of business relations, into the needs and necessities of the case, with the object of protecting the interests of the public on the one hand and at the same time doing no injustice to the honest interests of the companies that are before him for consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. Has not the board power now to employ experts in any of these lines if they think necessary ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) will see that the mere employment of experts would not answer the conditions which exist. Suppose you have on behalf of the telephone or express company, the most skilled expert they can secure (in the person may be of their manager or of the witnesses they select to support the tariffs they propose) those witnesses must be cross-examined and the work of cross-examining, if it is to be effective, is not the ordinary fireworks that one may see in a police court, but it is a thoroughly effective cross-examination by some one skilled in the subject, some one instructed in a technical knowledge of the matter, and some one who is in a position to bring out of—it may be a hostile witness—such facts as exist, but which otherwise than under the handling of a skilled cross-examiner would probably never be brought to the notice of the commission at all. It seems to the commission as well as to the government that when the public is opposed to the companies, the public should be represented by counsel and solicitor. I state at once to the committee that it was that very circumstance in connection with the presentation of the tariffs of these two companies to the board for approval, and recognition of the amount of work which was entailed on some one, if the interests of the public were to be presented, that led to the introduction of this measure.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It does not seem to contemplate the appointment of counsel for the purpose of cross-examination or general conduct of the case.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. There is an amendment to meet that. My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Bristol) put his finger upon exactly the point in the framing of this section which the chairman of the commission noticed immediately upon its being introduced into the House. The Bill was given its first reading on the 21st of January last, and on the 24th, as soon as he had seen it, Mr. Killam wrote me pointing out that it would be advisable in his judgment to insert the words 'conduct or' before the word 'argue' so that the instructions would be: 'To conduct or argue the case on any question arising in the application.' In other words, to put the matter into the hands of some lawyer who would be selected for the purpose by reason of the character of the application and the special nature of the service that would be required in that matter, putting the whole matter into his hands to be conducted before the commission. I ask that amendment to the clause.

One word with reference to the observations of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), we are not proposing by this legislation to take away in the least degree that character from the Board of Railway Commissioners to which he has referred, and which we are all agreed in considering to be one of its great excellences. It is not proposed to make it a lawyer's tribunal or in any way to exclude from participation in the work of that commission any person, municipal official, or other, who chooses to attend. I have had a little experience before that board, and I have scarcely ever appeared there when there was not some application in which lawyers were not concerned, or in which, on one side or the other, interests were represented by a layman. I am sure there never has been any tribunal in this country where the views of any person who appears before that board, have been received with more sincere attention and considered with more thorough care, no matter whether that person was a professional man or otherwise. No one has any idea that this legislation is to make any difference in that regard. It is intended for that kind of special matter—and, in that respect I am pleased to have the suggestion of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker)—it is intended to apply to that kind of special matter in which you have the interests of the public without representation, while you have the interests of the companies protected by the very best counsel they can procure. It is not intended at all to apply to the general run of applications before that board, or to be any ground for the appointment or retainer of any standing counsel to assist the board or to appear there upon either one side or the other in the ordinary cases. In an ordinary application between two railway companies, or between a railway company and a municipality, each party has its own interest to protect and each will be represented as in any ordinary litigation, but when you come to something such as I have stated, where there is one party vitally interested, and where, as to the other side of the inquiry, there is nobody with any special pecuniary interest to protect, there seems to be necessity for some such authority as this Bill proposes to confer upon the board and upon the Minister of Justice.

With regard to the political views of the person who may be selected, I do not doubt that it is likely that the Minister of Justice, or any member of any government that may be in power, would naturally have confidence in people who would have confidence in him, and that very probably the selection would therefore be, in the main at all events, from the political party to which the minister and the government belonged. I think that hon. gentlemen will see exactly that condition of things, if they will look about them, in the province of Ontario to-day, where they will see the administration of justice in every county and in every court in the hands of Crown prosecutors who are universally of the political party of which the present government of Ontario consists. That is something that is incidental to the disposition of public business in this country under the party system of government.

Now, with regard to the observations of the hon. member for South York, just a word. It is impossible, I suppose, by anything that any one can say to induce the hon. gentleman to look at the constitution of the United States, to which he is so fond of referring. If he will do so, he will see, what has already been pointed out to him repeatedly in this House when he has referred to the very advantageous system of law under which, as he considers, that country prospers, that their system is radically and entirely different from ours, that they have their federal courts expressly constituted for the administration of the federal law; and with that knowledge before the framers of our constitution an entirely different system was deliberately adopted. I am not discussing here, I do not think this is the time or place to discuss, whether that was a wise course on the part of the framers of the British North America Act. If this parliament thinks that the statute in that regard ought to be amended, this parliament no doubt will address His Majesty on the subject. But that is not the present question. At the present time we are taking our constitution as it has been given to us by the imperial parliament, and under that constitution the administration of justice in the provinces is in the hands of the provincial authorities and not in the hands of the Dominion authorities. It is thought that ought to be changed, that is an entirely different question. But so long as we have our constitution in that shape, it is radically different and proceeds upon altogether a different idea from that of the United States. It is of but little service to cite what they do, according to the hon. gentleman, with so much greater propriety, and so much better effect, across the line than we do in this country. I think we shall have to worry and struggle along as we have been doing for forty years back, with such a constitution as we have got, until some one has found a better one by some constitutional means. But under our present constitution the administration of justice is upon the provincial authorities, and with special directions to the Attorney General of Canada in special cases. Otherwise there is not on him the responsibility which the hon. gentleman thinks ought to be upon him; and so far as the present incumbent of the office is concerned, I have merely to say that he has responsibilities enough already without looking for more that have not been imposed upon him by parliament.

Mr. BERGERON. I am afraid my hon. friend (Mr. Aylesworth) has become a rabid partisan, or his memory fails him, when he spoke a moment ago about the political side of this question, and the appointment of lawyers by the Department of Justice. He says he knows of no case where the late government made appointments from the other side. He seems to forget that on a very memorable occasion, when the Conservative government was in power, there was a commission to investigate some charges against one of the departments and two Liberal lawyers were appointed. These two lawyers were very liberally paid for the work they did. That is an example which shows to my hon. friend that the governments do not resemble each other. Now I am not going to discuss whether counsel should be appointed. I think we are creating machinery that will prove very costly for this government. We have a great many commissions, these commissions are wheels within wheels. Now, if we are going to create a kind of legal advisory board for these commissions, there will be no end to it. But if there must be counsel, and if the reasons given by my hon. friend are good, why not appoint the Solicitor General to advise the board and plead before the board? He is a good lawyer, one of our best lawyers in the province of Quebec. He is paid a very large salary, and does not seem to have much to do. Why not appoint him to do that work, if there must be a counsel, and save the country the large expenditure which we are providing for by this Bill?

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) says that a previous Conservative government appointed two Liberal lawyers to prosecute charges made in parliament against one of the departments of government. Does he refer to the late Mr. Geoffrion as one of the lawyers?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think he is in error. Mr. Geoffrion was retained by private parties who were prosecuting a complaint against the department in question; afterwards Sir John Thompson, the Minister of Justice, seeing that Mr. Geoffrion had rendered so important a service to the country, proposed that he should be paid out of the public funds.

Mr. BERGERON. The power given by parliament at that time to investigate the department left power to appoint counsel to those who were conducting the investigation. They proposed Mr. Geoffrion and Mr. Osler, of Toronto, and their names were accepted immediately, and they were paid by the government.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The Minister of Justice is begging the question that I raised. In the first place, the member for South York has pointed out that in the definition of the duties of his office the Minister of Justice has to enforce and administer the laws of this country. I always believed that that was a portion of his functions, at least I always understood that he was to enforce the laws of this country. But we have the confession from him this session, once before and again today, that unless he is specifically instructed to enforce the law he does not consider it his duty to do so, and that that must be left to the Attorney General or to a private suitor. I disagree with that view entirely. If we make a law we ought to enforce it, and he proposes to enforce it only in part. If somebody asks him to employ counsel, then he will protect the public. He confesses that the public ought to be protected. He says that there are powerful corporations ranged against the public, he says that powerful corporations have the ablest legal talent in the world, and he says the public ought to be protected. He always said that if the duty was imposed upon him by a special statute he will discharge it. This is the special statute, and I want it put in this law that he must enforce it, as the Minister of Customs has a law governing his department, where every officer of the service in that department is bound to enforce the law, and where in certain cases they have the assistance of the Attorney General. It is very well to talk about the public having rights to be protected, but we want a system by which some responsible officer shall have the duty imposed upon him of enforcing the law. How can the public ever get their rights as against these corporations if there is not some one to look after public rights? There is no difference between the federal system in the United States and our system in this matter. The minister is dragging a red herring across the trail, because it is in a special Act that the duty is imposed upon the Attorney General of the United States. It is not a general Act. The hon. gentleman takes the position in this House that if the duty is imposed upon him he will discharge it. His argument therefore falls to the ground, and he is trying to humbug this House, as he will try to humbug the people of this country. But I do not propose to allow him to get away from his duty which the law imposes upon him. The law says :

That he shall have the superintendence of all matters connected with the administration of justice in Canada, not within the jurisdiction of the governments of the provinces.

Thus it is provided in this very Act that he shall have the superintendence of matters connected with the administration of justice in Canada, not within the jurisdiction of the governments of the provinces. Surely he has something to do in regard to the administration of this law, and it does seem an absurdity that we should make laws in the interest of the people of the whole country and that we are not to have somebody whose duty it is to enforce them. What would the people of the old land think of an attorney general or a solicitor general if he got up in parliament and said that they had a different system there? When they make a law in the parliament of England they have a responsible member of the government to whom to look for the enforcement of that law. It would be the most shameful confession that was ever heard if the Attorney General or Solicitor General of England got up and said that they had no power to enforce the law. Yet that confession is made here notwithstanding the imposition of the duty upon the Minister of Justice by this Act and by special Act and he says that the American system is different from the Canadian system and that he should not be charged with the responsibility of enforcing the law. He says, however, that he will administer the law if the duty is imposed upon him. To give the House some idea of how serious it is to fight for the public interest in a great case of this kind let me state what was done the other day in this connection in the state of Illinois where the Standard Oil Company was brought before the United States. True it was in the United States court, but we have courts in which you could bring action of that kind. This is what took place :

During the six weeks of the trial more than three tons of documentary evidence was submitted to the jury. Way-bills, shipping orders, receipts, pages from accountants' books and transcripts of records, numbering more than 15,000 were scrutinized by the court and the twelve men who voted for the conviction of the defendant.

There was a trial lasting six weeks, the Attorney General of the United States engaged the ablest counsel he could get, he put half a dozen of them on the case, they had all kinds of assistants in the way of special agents, they had all kinds of witnesses and it cost a large sum of money, but the result was that the law which the people passed through their representatives was vindicated. I challenge the Minister of Justice to get up and tell this House why, in his opinion, contrasting the American system of government with our system of government, we cannot, as the American Congress has done, impose upon him or some other member of the government the duty of administering our law. No private litigant can secure his rights as against the great railway, telephone or telegraph companies of this country. At the most he can spend a few hundred or a few thousand of dollars of his own money to try to get his rights. But he is up against companies of unlimited resources with the ablest lawyers in the country and there is nobody to obtain his rights for him. The minister has made the statement that : If this irresponsible railway board request me to appoint counsel to conduct a case and protect the public interest I will do so. Now, is it responsible government if we are going to have an irresponsible body like the Railway Commissioners acting as the guardians of public rights? I say we have political government in this country—at least I hope we have—and political government means responsible government. political government means that the law make a body, the legislative body makes the law and there should be some kind of responsibility on the part of some one in this legislative body to see that the law is enforced. No such petty defence as was made here to-day as the alleged difference between the two systems of government will fool the people of this country. They will ask that some provision be made in its railway law for its enforcement and for the protection of public rights, and that it shall be administered by some one responsible to this House, some one that we can get at. If some one comes to this House next session and says that public rights are being invaded the Minister of Justice will get up and say : The Railway Commission has not called my attention to it, it has not asked me to name a solicitor to investigate and conduct the case and therefore I am immune from any criticism. The hon. minister in his confession will say that this sacred obligation imposed upon him by the Act which created this office and the Department of Justice does not apply to cases of this kind; it only applies to a case in which this irresponsible Railway Commission request him to intervene and appoint counsel. I ask the farmers of this country and the representatives of the farmers in this House if that is what they expected when they voted to have this Railway Commission appointed to protect their rights? I ask the farmers of the west with whom the great issue is transportation and the supply of the means of transportation, of rolling stock and of proper equipment, if the attitude of the Minister of Justice is satisfactory to them? These railways can be dragged into court if they do not provide the proper equipment and if they do not give the people proper freight rates and they are relying on some one to enforce the law and protect them in that respect. But the confession is heard to-day that nobody is responsible for the enforcement of the law except the private suitor who may be the farmer out west. The farmer will not stand for any such statement as that; neither will the public of this country who are paying an enormous sum for the maintenance of this Railway Commission. It is a good commission but it ought to be strengthened and it ought to be backed up, as it is in the United States, by the Department of Justice or by some other responsible department upon whom should be imposed the duty of administering the Act. We have not an enforcement of the Act here to-day. We cannot protect the public and are those members of this House who represent the farmers and particularly those who represent the people of the west entirely satisfied to have the employment of special counsel to protect the public interest limited to a declaration of request of the Railway Commissioners whoever they may be? They are an irresponsible body. They are in office for a fixed term. They can only be removed in the most difficult way and yet the minister proposes that it shall be left to them to call upon the Attorney General to take over the administration of the law if they think it proper in the public interest. Here is an attempt to evade the enforcement of the law and I intend to press my amendment which is a very straight, and clear cut amendment. If it is proposed that this duty shall be imposed upon the Solicitor General or the Minister of Railways I will accept that, but I will not go on and be humbugged by an alleged comparison between the two systems of government. The amendment proposes to make the Railway Act like the Customs Act and to impose upon the government responsibility for the administration of it. It may be all right to protect the public revenue and see that it is collected, but why is it that public rights are not to be protected? There is this difference between the two Acts: The Customs Act was passed by the Conservative government and here is a Liberal government that passes a great Act but makes no provision for its enforcement. I do not think that the country will accept the subterfuge that was offered to-day by the Minister of Justice, and I intend to press my amendment notwithstanding the suggestion of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BRISTOL. I would call the attention of my hon. friend (Mr. W. F. Maclean) to section 28 of the Railway Act. It seems to me that my hon. friend will find that not only is the Minister of Justice responsible for this but that the Minister of Railways is also responsible under the existing Act. Section 28 says :

> The board may, on its own motion, or shall upon the request of the minister——

That is the Minister of Railways.

> —inquire into, hear and determine any matter or thing which under this Act it may inquire into, hear and determine——

So that if there is any grievance in the country under the operation of this Act the Minister of Railways should deal with it under this section, and I venture to submit also that the Minister of Justice is responsible under the present statute. I quite appreciate the argument of the minister that it is the duty of the provinces under subsection 14 of section 92 of the British North America Act, which assigns the duties of the respective legislatures, to administer justice. That is something which is exclusively under the jurisdiction of the provinces. I do not think the Minister requires an Act of this parliament to give him the right to interfere even although the duty may rest on the province. The Minister of Justice of Canada, in any case in which a federal Act is affected, can interfere if the province does not enforce the Act. That certainly has been done. I might mention the historic instance of the East Hastings ballot boxes. In that case the minister took action and through the detective department swore out informations ; Mr. Shepley was appointed to prosecute and thereafter the province took up the prosecution and the Department of Justice did nothing further in the matter. That shows that if the present administration desires to do anything in connection with the administration of a federal law, it has the right to do so, although it may not have the duty to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. At the time of the creation of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and during the discussion of that subject some years previous to that time, the chief argument against the formation of such a board was that it would simply create another legal tribunal, which it would be difficult to approach, and before which proceedings would be expensive and slow, and burdensome to the parties interested. In answer to that it was said that the composition of this commission was a guarantee to the contrary, that it would be composed first of a legal man of high attainments, well skilled in the law, a railway expert and a common sense man. These three gentlemen would compose the commission and they were to be empowered to call in any expert assistance they required to give information along any line or to assist them in the elucidation of any question. As the board was constituted, it was said it would proceed in a common sense way without being surrounded by the ordinary rules of evidence that would govern a court in bringing out information, that the main desire of the court would be to ascertain whether allegations were facts or not, and then the legal mind was to determine what was to be done. In regard to a case coming before them today the minister says the commissioners require some one to conduct the case and cross-examine. I thought the legal mind would be the cross-examiner and if he wanted expert information or advice, he would be able to bring that to his assistance. This was to be done expeditiously and economically and it was said that the public interest would be safeguarded. It is proposed now that in any case, in the interest of the public, the board may ask the Minister of Justice to appoint expert counsel. Will that promote the economy that was promised? Suppose we have a counsel like Mr. Shepley retained at $100 a day, will that be economy? Will that be what the people expected from that common sense tribunal? Not at all, it will a tribunal before which lawyers friendly to the government may at any time be called to plead and from which they will be able to draw large sums.

> And the board may direct that the cost of such counsel shall be paid by any party to the application.

Suppose there is an application from my county or from a merchant and the Railway Commission advise the Minister of Justice that in the public interest counsel should be appointed; he appoints counsel and then the county or the merchant may be called upon to pay $100 a day for expert counsel selected by the government when they would be prepared to provide their own counsel. I merely draw attention to this because that in my judgment is likely to be the outcome of this provision. The Railway Commission was appointed for certain purposes, but when it comes to discharge those functions, it is found to be impotent without being surrounded by counsel for the conduct of investigation. Looking to the future, when we come to examine the accounts in connection with this commission. I venture to predict that in practice we will find a crop of lawyers friendly to the government drawing large sums of money from this commission, large fees for little work. I coincide very largely in the suggestion of my friend to my right, (Mr. Bergeron) that if the Solicitor General is of any use in the world—he has no work to do, he admits that—and if he is an able lawyer as we are led to believe, why should he not be employed for that purpose? He is receiving from the country a large salary and giving no return. Why not employ him rather than employ outside lawyers at $100 a day, as was paid to Mr. Shepley for 103 days in connection with the Insurance Commission.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Why is the word 'particular' inserted in the section in its amended form?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) and I accepted it at once because it was never the intention in framing this measure that it should be of general application or that its provisions should be utilized except in special and particular cases where the public interest was especially involved.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does the Minister of Justice think of the suggestion made by my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron)? We have an able lawyer filling the position of Solicitor-General; why should not his services be utilized in the public interest? The Act relating to the Solicitor General of Canada is very short. Section 2 is the only important section, the first merely giving the title of the act:

> The Governor in Council may appoint an officer who shall be called the Solicitor General of Canada, and he shall assist the Minister of Justice in the counsel work of the Department of Justice, and shall be charged with such other duties as are at any time assigned to him by the Governor in Council.

His duties are thus twofold. I am not aware what other duties have been assigned to him, but it is a matter of current belief, I do not know whether well-founded or not, that the duties of the Solicitor General have not at any time since the creation of that office been very onerous; and it is a pity to have a man of ability as a lawyer rust in that position when his services might be usefully employed in the public interest. I would suggest to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice that the section might be amended to read in this way:

> The Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada may, in any special application, proceeding or matter pending before it, if in the opinion of the board the public interest so requires, apply to the Solicitor General of Canada to appear before the said board to represent the public on any question arising in the application, proceeding or matter as to any public interest which is or may be affected thereby or by any order or decision which may be made therein, and upon such application to him by the board, or of his own motion, the Solicitor General shall so appear and take such part in the proceedings as may be necessary for such purpose.

I think that would be a reasonable provision and would give to the people of the country the services of the Solicitor General. It would obviate the necessity of employing counsel who would not be likely to do the work so well as it might be done by the Solicitor General himself.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. There is nothing whatever in this Bill to interfere with, much less preclude, what has been suggested being practically done under the Bill if it becomes law. The Minister of Justice is entitled, under the Solicitor General's Act, to the assistance of the Solicitor General in the counsel work of the Justice Department. This work is literally of that character, and this is exactly the kind of work in which the Minister of Justice might, with propriety, as far as he was able, protect the interest of the public if his other duties would admit of his doing so. This is just the kind of work, I take it, in which either the Minister of Justice himself or the Solicitor General, might properly represent the public before this very important tribunal. There is nothing in the statute to interfere with that being done, but it is not perhaps practicable that the Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice himself should take part in every matter before the Board.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the Minister of Justice is not disposed to accept that, why not make an amendment to this effect in the latter part of the section: that the Minister of Justice may instruct the Solicitor General, or if for some good reason he is not able to appear, may instruct some other counsel. I would like to have the duty imposed on the Solicitor General by the terms of this statute.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is a very much wider question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am suggesting this because the Minister of Justice does not seem disposed to accept what I proposed at first.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The responsibility for the administration of this statute ought to be upon a member of the government. The Solicitor General is not in that position, and the amendment which my hon. friend proposed was to substitute the name of the Solicitor General for that of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Solicitor General is a person of some importance in the mother country.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. In the mother country neither the Attorney General nor the Solicitor General is a member of the Cabinet.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Quite so. These, however, are not matters of public administration. They are matters which concern the public interest before the Board of Railway Commissioners. They are distinct from those matters with which the cabinet is specially concerned. If a man is fit to fill the position of Solicitor General, he should be fit to represent the public interests before the Board of Railway Commissioners. If he is not of that calibre, he should not be Solicitor General at all. I do not regard my suggestion as any reflection on the Minister of Justice, because the Solicitor General must have some responsibility, and the government should be willing that he should accept the responsibility of appearing for the purpose of protecting the public interest before the Board of Railway Commissioners. Of course, in all these matters, the Solicitor General would consult his chief, the Minister of Justice, but he would be named in the statute as the person upon whom the responsibility devolved. However, I do not desire to urge that point.

Mr. LENNOX. The Minister of Justice points out that he is in a position to appoint the Solicitor General in any case if he sees fit. Of course he is, but the latter part of the section does not seem to contemplate that, because it provides that 'the board may direct that the costs of such counsel shall be paid by any party to the application, proceeding or matter, or by the Minister of Finance out of any unappropriated moneys.' Then the Minister of Justice says, as is the fact, that he is the person charged with the responsibility of administering the Act, and that for that reason he does not see the propriety of the suggestion of the leader of the opposition that the name of the Solicitor General should be substituted for that of the Minister of Justice. I apprehend that the leader of the opposition would probably be satisfied to modify his proposition to this extent, that instead of striking out the name of the Minister of Justice, it should provide that upon the application of the board to the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Justice should instruct or request the Solicitor General to appear in the case and conduct it. In that case the responsibility would still be upon the Minister of Justice, but his first duty would be if possible to avail himself of the services of the Solicitor General. It might also be provided in the section that he should request the Solicitor General, or, if his services were not available, some other counsel to conduct the proceedings.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask if any order in council has been passed defining such other duties as are to be carried out by the Solicitor General?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am not prepared to answer at once for the years and years before I came into the government. I can say that none has been passed since I came in.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is the chief of the department, and he could find out whether such an order in council has been passed ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I can ascertain.

Mr. BERGERON. I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Aylesworth) that he can learn much on that subject by reading the files of 'Hansard.' Let him turn to the speeches of Sir Richard Cartwright against the appointment of a Solicitor General and against the appointment of Controllers of Customs and Inland Revenue. When he does this, he will be in a position to answer questions from this side of the House. I would call attention to these words in the Bill: 'The board may direct that the costs of such counsel shall be paid by any party to the application.' Suppose that the express companies or the telephone companies are before the Railway Commission, represented by counsel—and as has been said, they will be represented by the best counsel they can find. The result of having these words in the Bill might be that these concerns would be called upon to pay not only their own counsel but the very high fees of the gentleman chosen on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice. I do not think this would be fair. Ultimately all these charges come from the public for the telephone companies or express companies will seek compensation for all their expenses from their customers, the public at large. It seems to me that the suggestion of the leader of the Opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) should be accepted.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Is not the position to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) refers just the position in which parties in court are usually placed? Jurisdiction is given to the courts to determine the question of costs, especially upon which party of those before the court costs shall fall. By this clause, the Board of Railway Commissioners is empowered to make an order as to the payment of costs of counsel who may appear for the public. It is not to be supposed, that the board will order that one of the litigants in the case shall pay these costs unless there is cause for it. It might be that some particular portion of the costs would be occasioned by one of the parties putting forward some utterly untenable or improper contention, assuming some position, which, in the opinion of the board they ought never to assume. It would be just and reasonable that the costs occasioned thereby should fall upon the party who causes them. Ordinarily, it is probable, each party will be left to bear its own costs. But this is a useful power and one that I should be very sorry to see absent from the Bill—that this body which is practically a court, and a court, as I have said, of the very highest authority, should have control over costs, so that it may impose them as occasion may make necessary.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is not unreasonable, but my point is that I am most anxious to get my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Bureau) at work. I know that he is longing to work——

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think there need be no anxiety on that score.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN——and I feel that his reasonable desires in that regard should be gratified. I hope the Minister of Justice will make some amendment to this Bill so that the Solicitor General shall be able to look to this statute and say: I have here a duty imposed upon me which I propose to discharge in the public interest. It is a responsible duty, and, not only that, it is an interesting duty. And it would make the position of Solicitor General much more acceptable to an active and able man than it is at the present time. I believe it would be agreeable to the Solicitor General to have imposed upon him the duty of protecting the public interests in matters relating to public service corporation, and the duty is one which, I believe he would fulfil very well indeed.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It certainly does not seem that anything is to be gained by specially mentioning the Solicitor General in this statute. I am entirely in earnest in what I indicated a moment ago: the duties of the Solicitor General, as defined by statute, are to assist in the counsel work of the department. The present Solicitor General is discharging these duties and discharging them effectively. If he is not engaged to the full extent of physical endurance with other duties, there is every intention on his part, I am sure, as on the part of every one engaged in the administration of this statute, to take his full share of the work in connection with it. That is exactly the situation of affairs, and it would seem an unnecessary thing, when this Bill has provided that the Minister of Justice may instruct counsel to say 'the Solicitor General or other counsel'—for the Solicitor General is but counsel after all.

Mr. BERGERON. Why not provide simply that the Department of Justice shall act? The duty would then fall upon the Solicitor General or upon somebody else who may be appointed.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. What does the Minister of Justice mean by these words in the Bill, 'or of his own motion.'

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That the Minister of Justice may act without being called upon by the board, if necessary.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Why, that is my real point. That makes the Minister of Justice responsible; and yet he (Mr. Aylesworth) has told us that he assumes no responsibility. He says he will not move because he is not called upon to move under the constitution, our constitution in that respect being different from that of the United States. And now he is imposing upon himself, the very duty which I have always contended he should assume——

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Then, what are you kicking about ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I am kicking because the minister has said that it is not his duty to enforce the law, because our constitution is different from that of the United States——

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The hon. minister (Mr. Aylesworth) has said that to me time and time again. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) told me to go to the attorney general of the province of Ontario if I wanted to have the Railway Act and the special Acts enforced. And the Minister of Justice told me the same thing. And now, of his own motion, he may appoint somebody to enforce the Railway Act of this country. Yet he said he would not do it, because our law was not the same as the United States law.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The first thing you know he will repeal it.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. These words put upon the Minister of Justice the responsibility of enforcing this law.

On section 2,—deposit of mortage to secure bonds, &c.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The former Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson), shortly after this Bill was introduced, asked me to propose as an additional clause, an amendment to section 299 of the present Railway Act, which I will do, if there is no objection. The hon. member for Westmoreland has expressed the view that this amendment, which seems to be of a formal character, is necessary. Section 299 of the present Act deals with the purchase of a Railway upon sale under mortgage or by the court, and as the railway may be purchased by a person who has not a corporate power to operate it, the section provides that the Minister of Railways may give an order to the purchaser authorizing him to operate the railway until the end of the then next session of the parliament of Canada. Subsection 5 provides that such purchaser must apply to the parliament of Canada at the next following session after the purchase, for legislative authority to operate the road. The proposal is to change the words 'next session after the purchase' to 'next session after the granting of such order by the minister,' thus making it accord with the earlier section which requires the obtaining of an order during the recess of parliament. I understood from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) that in a case in New Brunswick it would have been desirable had the law been amended as now desired.

Mr. BERGERON. Was there not a similar case in Quebec ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I have not heard of it.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BRISTOL. Is the Minister of Justice of opinion that clause 2 would override the provincial registration law which requires the registration of all conveyances which in any way affect any interest in land. It appears to me that it would be necessary, in view of this proposal, to amend the registration laws of the provinces so as to exempt mortgages which are securities upon railway properties.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The intention is to substitute this provision for the requirements of the various provincial registration laws and to make it unnecessary to register these railway security mortgages in the registration offices of the province.

Mr. OSLER. Does this clause not cover mortgages on real estate ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It is intended to do so.

Mr. OSLER. Surely a mortgage on real state ought to be registered in the provincial registration offices.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Under the present law a mortgage of a railway right of way is registered only with the Secretary of State.

Mr. BRISTOL. It seems to me that the registration of land titles is entirely within the purview of the provincial legislature, and that an enactment of this kind by this parliament cannot override the provincial registration Act. Is it the opinion of the Minister of Justice that this provision would be affective against provincial law ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It is my opinion that this legislation is within the power of this parliament or I should not be here proposing it. I think it is incidental to railway legislation.

Mr. LENNOX. Will this amendment cover the case of a sale which is made during the sitting of parliament ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. If the purchaser is able to obtain parliamentary authority for the operation of a road during the sitting of parliament, without getting any interim order from the minister, no doubt he will do so, but he has the option to obtain from the minister an interim order which will be good until the end of the then ensuing session of parliament and it is proposed to change the time within which application to parliament must be made.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I beg to move the following as an additional clause :

It shall be the duty of the Attorney General of Canada, and he is hereby authorized and directed to enforce the Railway Act and the Special Act, and for this purpose to cause to be instituted any and all such proceedings civil or criminal as in his judgment may be necessary or proper to prevent and punish violations thereof, and to enforce and collect penalties that may accrue thereunder.

I have had that clause specially drafted to make some one under this parliament responsible for the administration of the law. The Grand Trunk Railway to-day, under its special Act, is bound to give the people of this country a penny-a-mile service between Toronto and Montreal, and that Act is not enforced. I have appealed to the courts of the province of Ontario and the judgment of one of the judges was to the effect that the Railway Commission had jurisdiction in this case. I intend to appeal from this decision and I have to do all that at my own expense notwithstanding that we have this great Railway Commission and any number of law departments in the government. I ask hon. members in this House, especially those who live on the Grand Trunk Railway, to support me in this motion.

Amendment negatived.

Bill reported.

Mr. AYLESWORTH moved that the Bill be read a third time.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN moved that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole House for the insertion of the following amendment:

Section 4.—It shall be the duty of the Attorney General of Canada, and he is hereby authorized and directed, to enforce the Railway Act and the Special Act for this purpose, and cause to be instituted any and all such proceedings, civil or criminal, as in his judgment may be necessary or proper to prevent any violation thereof, and to enforce all penalties that may accrue thereunder.

House divided on amendment (Mr. W. F. Maclean).

Amendment (Mr. W. F. Maclean) negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. I did not vote owing to the fact that I am paired with Mr. Calvert, the chief whip of the government. The hon. member for East Durham (Mr. Ward), the hon. member for Prince, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Lefurgey) and the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) have not voted.

Mr. JOHNSTON. How would you have voted?

Mr. TAYLOR. I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. WARD. I was paired with the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl). Had I not been so paired I would have voted for the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. W. F. Maclean).

Mr. BRODER. I was not in the House to hear the motion put.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, I beg to move another amendment. It has already been discussed in committee and is practically the same as that of which I was speaking to the Minister of Justice. I move:

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole with instructions to amend the first section so that it will read as follows :

1. The Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada may, in any application, proceeding or matter of special importance pending before it, if in the opinion of the board the public interest so requires, apply to the Minister of Justice to appear by himself or by the Solicitor General before the said board and represent the public in the application, proceeding or matter as to any particular public interest which is or may be affected thereby or by any order or decision which may be made therein ; and, upon such application to him by the board, or of his own motion, the Minister of Justice may so appear by himself or by the Solicitor General and take such part in the proceedings as may be necessary for such purpose, or if the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General are unable to appear, the Minister of Justice may instruct counsel accordingly ; and the board may direct that the costs of such counsel shall be paid by any party to the application, proceeding or matter, or by the Minister of Finance out of any unappropriated moneys.

Mr. BERGERON. Before the vote is taken I merely wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) to the nominations which have already been made according to what I read in a newspaper :

Ottawa, April 22.—G. F. Shepley, K.C., as counsel, and W. S. Buell, of Brockville, as solicitor, and Mr. Richardson, of Toronto, as expert accountant, have been appointed to assist the Railway Commission when it investigates the rates of the Bell Telephone Company in Montreal about the middle of next month.

Who has anticipated the action of parliament? There is no authority to appoint any of these gentlemen. It is something unusual that this should happen before parliament has pronounced upon it.

Amendment negatived on the same division.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

SURVEYS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

House in committee on Bill (No. 172) respecting the Surveys of the Public Lands of the Dominion and the Surveyors entitled to make such surveys.—Mr. Oliver.

Mr. HAGGART. The Bill is not on our files.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The Bill apparently is not printed, but it is hardly necessary to have it printed under the circumstances. Some weeks ago the House agreed to the Surveys' Bill which was taken from the Dominion Lands Act. The idea was that we would pass the Surveys Bill and the Dominion Lands Act Bill, but at this stage of the session it becomes impossible to pass the Dominion Lands Act and therefore, unless we repeal the Surveys Bill that we did pass, we would have two Acts on the statute-book covering the same ground. It was not intended that the Surveys Bill should have been assented to until the close of the session, but on one of the occasions when the Governor gives an interim assent the Surveys Bill was assented to and so it has actually become law. The present Bill is simply to repeal the Surveys Act that went through so that the Dominion Lands Act as it stands now will remain until we bring in further amendments.

Mr. SPROULE. Are we going to pretend to pass a Bill that is not in possession either of the House or of the minister ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The Bill was introduced in manuscript and sent to the printer, so that there is really no Bill before us. We will have to allow it to stand.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—PROROGATION.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it might facilitate the business of the House in the closing days of the session if I state now what measures the government desire to proceed with and what they propose to drop. Most of the matters on the order paper will have to stand. I think that few of them are matters of controversy. So far as I know all the legislation that is contemplated is now before the House by way of notice. There is a possibility, though not a probability, that we may have to bring down some further supplementary estimates, but the chances are that we will not have to ; if they are brought down they will be simply small items that have been overlooked.

The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had desired to deal with a measure this session which he was obliged to lay aside without even introducing it, but it was his desire that I should make a statement to the House concerning it at a convenient opportunity. It is in relation to the celebration of the 300th anniversary of the founding of the city of Quebec. It is felt that that celebration is of a national and not of a local character. It is expected that the city of Quebec will contribute out of its municipal moneys and the government of Quebec will make a handsome contribution. A deputation presented the claims of the celebration upon the government of the Dominion ; the representations which they made were very strong and made a very favourable impression on the ministers who heard them, and the government had come to the conclusion that the national character of the movement should be recognized, that it was an occasion upon which the government might well contribute a substantial sum towards the management of the celebration. If the Prime Minister had been able to remain here, we should have endeavoured to prepare a measure to be passed at the present session. However, as that was not found convenient, it was decided to make a public statement that the government appreciate the value of the movement; they recognize the celebration of the founding of Quebec by Champlain as an occasion of a national character and at the next session the government will not only introduce a measure to give a substantial grant in aid of the movement but will probably propose legislation with a view to creating a national commission for the management of the celebration.

With regard to the measures that are now on the order paper, the Bill respecting the public lands of the Dominion, as already intimated by the Minister of the Interior, is not to be proceeded with, and if there be no objection I move that order No. 17 which deals with that measure be discharged.

Motion agreed to and order discharged.

PATENT MEDICINES BILL.

Mr. FIELDING. I desire to make a similar motion with regard to item No. 21, which deals with the Bill respecting Proprietary and Patent Medicines. The Minister of Inland Revenue made a statement that he was doubtful about proceeding with it and I now move that order No. 21 be discharged.

Mr. BERGERON. I am very sorry that my hon. friend has found himself obliged to abandon the passing of this Act. I think it is very important and that it should have been proceeded with this session. It has been on the order paper since the 21st of February, and surely there has been time enough to dispose of it. I am sure that the public are waiting the passing of that Act with a great deal of interest, and I hope my hon. friend will find the means to pass it before the end of the session.

Motion agreed to, and order discharged.

Mr. FIELDING. That disposes, I think, of all the matters on the order paper on which we desire to postpone action. The other matters I hope we shall be able to deal with in a few days. Of course, it is impossible at present to fix the precise day of the closing of the session. Very much will depend on the progress we are able to make to-day; but so far as the government business is concerned, I see no reason why it should not be disposed of within the next three or four days, and prorogation be reached by Friday or Saturday. I have every reason to hope that that may be accomplished, because I have had information from some hon. gentlemen opposite that they share in the desire of the government to bring the session to a speedy close.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court of Saskatchewan shall be as follows:—

The chief justice of the court, $7,000 per annum.

Four puisne judges of the court, each $6,000 per annum.

And that the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court of Alberta shall be as follows:—

The chief justice of the court, $7,000 per annum.

Four puisne judges of the court, each $6,000 per annum.

And that in the province of Saskatchewan the salaries of eight judges of district courts shall be, each $2,500 per annum during the first three years of service; and after three years of service, each $3,000 per annum.

And that in the province of Alberta the salaries of five judges of district courts shall be each $2,500 per annum during the first three years of service; and after three years of service, each $3,000 per annum.

Mr. BERGERON. How are the courts constituted now in the Northwest provinces?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Up to the present time the courts in the new provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta have been simply the continuation of the court of the Northwest Territories that was in existence prior to the establishment of those provinces—that is, one court consisting of a chief justice and seven puisne judges, each having jurisdiction throughout the whole of both provinces. The legislatures of the respective provinces at their recent sessions have passed statutes practically in the same terms, by which each province constitutes its own superior court and a number of district courts of inferior jurisdiction. The superior court in each province is to consist of a chief justice and four puisne judges. That will mean an addition of one judge for each province. Then each province has established a number of district courts, which have limited jurisdiction up to certain specified amounts, and has parcelled out the province into a number of judicial districts, Saskatchewan being subdivided into eight, and Alberta into five. That, then, is a body of eight judges in the one province and five in the other who have had no previous existence. This resolution proposes to continue to the chief justice and to the several puisne judges of the high court their salaries at exactly the same amount as now, and to make for the new district judges exactly the same provision which the present Dominion statute makes for the county judges in the province of Ontario. There are in the province of Ontario sixty-seven judges of county courts, each receiving $2,500 per annum during the first three years of service, and after that $3,000 per annum. The amount proposed for the district judges of Saskatchewan is the same as the Ontario county court judges now receive, notwithstanding the fact that the jurisdiction of the district courts of Saskatchewan is in some respects larger than that of the county courts in Ontario, and notwithstanding also the consideration which has been much pressed upon me by gentlemen coming from those provinces, that the cost of living is higher there, and that the salaries of the judges ought to be correspondingly increased. After giving the matter the most careful consideration I could, though the whole tendency of my feeling is towards the view that our judges are by no means overpaid but rather the contrary, I still do not see my way to accept the proposal that the judges of those provinces should receive a higher rate of remuneration than the judges of the province of Ontario, where for many years the salaries were below the present figure, and where they have been only raised within the last year or two to the figures I am now proposing for Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Mr. BERGERON. That means fifteen appointments of new judges—eight in one province, five in the other, and two for the Supreme Court. What kind of a system have they in those provinces? Will the judges of the Supreme Court sit only in banc, or will they go around on circuit?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The system has probably not yet taken very definite shape, as the Act has not gone into force, but will go into force on proclamation. The system which I understand the new provinces intend to establish is the system that obtains in Ontario—that the judges of the High Court should hold the sittings of that court in banc at the capital of the province, and should go on circuit to various portions of the province to hold assize. The district judge in each case will of course reside in his own district.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. With regard to Ontario having 67 county judges, I can only say that we could well spare 17 of those to be sent as a delegation to the Northwest provinces. If we could relieve the country of those unnecessary judges, I would like to see it done.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. If my hon. friend will address himself to his friends in the Queen's Park, that might possibly be done.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I address them and also the Minister of Justice, because we pay for those judges. This government stated some years ago that they would take that matter up with the provinces. They had a conference with the provinces some time ago, but I do not believe that any conclusion was reached in that matter. I do not speak in a partisan way on this subject, but the Minister of Justice at once jumps into a partisan temper and says, go to the Queen's Park. We have a superabundance of county judges in the province of Ontario. The provincial government may, in a measure, be to blame—I do not say who is to blame. But I would like to see the number reduced, and, if we could send some of them out to the west and save their salaries, it would be a good thing for us.

Mr. BENNETT. Would these judges of necessity be appointed from the bars of these two provinces?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I do not think it is essential.

Resolution reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am not in a position to go on with the Bill embodying these resolutions.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Bill is printed, is it not?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am ready to go on if no objection is raised.

Bill (No. 146) to make certain amendments to the statute law in its application to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta—Mr. Aylesworth—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 2—amending section 16 of the Naturalization Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is a similar provision to those which are to be found in the law in regard to the other provinces?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Simply applying the provisions to the conditions of the new provinces.

On section 3—amending section 20 of the Naturalization Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any special change in this?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am not provided at the moment with a copy of the present Naturalization Act, but my note from the gentleman who prepared this clause is that the clause is simply the provision of the existing law, with changes of terms to fit it to the conditions of the new provinces. I think I may assure the committee that there is no change which would affect the present conditions in the other provinces. However, I will send for the volume if desired, so as to make certain.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Section 2 of this Bill, I understand, applies only to the two provinces? The reason why I inquire is because the Bill is one 'to make certain amendments to the statute law in its application to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta.'

Mr. ALCORN. I looked at the Naturalization Act and found that the change made here is to authorize the district court and the officers of that court, instead of the Superior Court, to naturalize the alien.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is what is intended. I did not expect to have this Bill considered in committee to-day, and I therefore am not certain at the moment whether or not a clause should be inserted with reference to the requirements as to Dominion controverted election petitions; and there are possibly one or two other things that ought to be thought of which I would like to have an opportunity to consider. I will therefore move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

BOUNTIES ON IRON AND STEEL.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, 1. That it is expedient to repeal chapter 8 of the statutes of 1899, chapter 68 of the statutes of 1903, and chapter 39 of the statutes of 1904, from and after the 1st January, 1907.

2. That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may authorize the payment out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the following bounties on the under-mentioned articles manufactured in Canada for consumption therein, viz.:

(a) In respect of pig iron manufactured from ore, on the proportion from Canadian ore produced during the calendar years—

1907.. .. .. $2 10 per ton;
1908.. .. .. 2 10 per ton;
1909.. .. .. 1 70 per ton; and
1910 .. .. 0 90 per ton.

(b) In respect of pig iron manufactured from ore, on the proportion from foreign ore produced during the calendar years—

1907.. .. .. $1 10 per ton;
1908.. .. .. 1 10 per ton.
1909.. .. .. 0 70 per ton; and
1910.. .. .. 0 40 per ton.

(c) On puddled iron bars manufactured from pig iron made in Canada during the calendar years—

1907.. .. .. 1 65 per ton;
1908.. .. .. 1 65 per ton;
1909.. .. .. 1 05 per ton; and
1910.. .. .. 0 60 per ton.

(d) In respect of rolled, round wire rods not over three-eighths of an inch in diameter, manufactured in Canada from steel produced in Canada from ingredients of which not less than fifty per cent of the weight thereof consists of pig iron made in Canada, when sold to wire manufacturers for use or when used in making wire in their own factories in Canada, on such wire rods, made after the 31st December, 1906, six dollars per ton.

(e) In respect of steel ingots manufactured from ingredients of which not less than fifty per cent of the weight thereof consists of pig iron made in Canada, on such ingots made during the calendar years—

1907.. .. .. $1 65 per ton;
1908.. .. .. 1 65 per ton;
1909.. .. .. 1 05 per ton; and
1910.. .. .. 0 60 per ton.

3. That it is expedient to provide that no bounty shall be paid under the foregoing provisions in respect of iron or steel made in Canada by the electric process after the 31st December, 1908.

4. That with a view to the encouragement of the smelting of Canadian iron ore by electricity it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may authorize the payment out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the following bounties on pig iron and steel ingots manufactured in Canada, for consumption therein, when such pig iron and steel is the product of Canadian iron ores smelted in Canada by electricity, viz.:

(f) On pig iron manufactured from Canadian ore by the process of electricity smelting during the calendar years—

1909.. .. .. $2 10 per ton;
1910.. .. .. 2 10 per ton;
1911.. .. .. 1 70 per ton; and
1912.. .. .. 0 90 per ton.

(g) On steel ingots manufactured by electric process direct from Canadian ore, and on steel ingots manufactured by electric process from pig iron smelted in Canada by electricity from Canadian ore during the calendar years—

1909.. .. .. $1 65 per ton;
1910.. .. .. 1 65 per ton;
1911.. .. .. 1 05 per ton. and
1912.. .. .. 0 60 per ton.

5. That it is expedient to provide that bounty shall not be paid on steel ingots from which steel blooms and billets for exportation from Canada are manufactured.

6. That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may make regulations to carry out the intentions of these resolutions.

7. That it is expedient to provide that the Minister of Trade and Commerce shall be charged with the administration of the foregoing provisions.—Mr. Fielding.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Since these resolutions were placed on the notice paper, a number of petitions have been presented to the House, chiefly I think from the province of Ontario, very largely signed by people who object to the granting of these bounties. I have no doubt that many of the signers of these petitions have objection on general principle to bounties, and would be prepared to oppose the adoption of the bounty principle in any shape or form. I think, however, that probably many others who signed the petition did so under a misapprehension as to the facts, and particularly under a misapprehension as to the degree of burden under which the system of bounties has placed the tax payer of the country. I think it will be generally admitted that if there is any industry in the country which deserves encouragement—if we are to adopt the principle of aiding any industry by protection in the form of bounties, or of custom duties or in any other form—it will hardly be questioned that the iron and steel industry should receive the favourable consideration of the House. A country which possesses large resources of iron and fails to develop them, would certainly not be a progressive country. The parliament of Canada has for a number of years encouraged the iron and steel industry by way of bounty. There were reasons of a special character why it was well that this industry should be aided in the form of a bounty, rather than by way of a duty. If it be admitted that the industry is entitled to the same measure of protection as the other industries of the country, then the only question to be considered was whether that aid should take the form entirely of a customs duty, or whether it might not, in whole or part take the form of a bounty. I need hardly remind hon. gentlemen that iron is at the foundation of a great many manufactures, and upon the supply of iron, either cheap iron or iron at moderate cost, will depend the success of a great many other industries in the country. If we had applied what I might call the ordinary rate of duty, or of protection, to the iron industry, the consequence would be that iron would be made so expensive that you would have to give compensating duties to the various industries that used iron, and as a result we would be obliged to have a high tariff generally upon the whole metal schedule. A little reflection, will, I think, satisfy most hon. gentlemen that that would have been a misfortune, and that it was decidedly to the benefit of the country that if the iron industry was to be aided, for a time at least, that aid should take the form of a bounty, because you then need not necessarily put higher duties upon the manufactured articles into which iron goes. At all events that is the view which our government took in the revision of the tariff of 1897. The iron industries had then been established, not on a very extensive scale but on a sufficient scale to attract considerable notice in the country, and we certainly had every desire to continue and enlarge the operations of that industry. But we felt that if we should confine the aid entirely to a customs duty, that any such duty which would enable the industries to make reasonable progress would have to be very considerable, and therefore we would have to put higher duties upon the other articles which the manufacturers of the country would produce. Take, for example, the industry of the farmer. In a variety of ways he is a consumer of iron. If we had put a high duty, say on pig iron, then the duties upon agricultural implements, and the duty upon the various things into which iron enters, would necessarily have been higher than the figures at which they were placed. So we concluded that it was wise, in aiding this industry, that we should grant a bounty on the iron and steel, and then have but small customs duties on these other articles. There are some people who contend that a bounty is the best form of protection. That is a question upon which I do not desire to dwell, but there are some advantages in connection with a bounty.

The first advantage is that the taxpayer knows precisely what amount he is paying. It is always a question of debate what is the burden imposed upon the consumer by the customs duty; I suppose that always will be a debateable question. But with a bounty to an industry, at all events we know precisely what the country is paying. There is another consideration that ought to commend it to the consumer. If you put a duty of 40 per cent upon an article for the encouragement of the home industry, you increase the price of all the articles of that class which are imported, and in nineteen cases out of twenty you increase correspondingly the prices of the home made article. So the additional burden is placed on the consumer both with regard to the home product and the imported article. In the case of the payment of a bounty, you do not enhance the price of the imported article at all. That article comes in at a moderate rate of duty, free it may be in some cases, and the effect of the bounty does not touch the price of the imported article. It enables the home manufacturer, the man who produces the bountied article, to sell his product somewhat cheaper than he otherwise would. So I think, even from that point of view, there is much that can be said in favour of the bounty. Certainly, I think in the particular case to which I refer, it can be established that the maintenance of the bounty on the iron industry for a limited period has been a wise policy, and that we shall do well, while looking forward to closing that policy at no distant day, to continue it for the short time contemplated by these resolutions.

Mr. BENNETT. What are the relative proportions of Canadian and American iron ore that enter into the make-up of the ordinary Canadian pig iron, such as is used for the manufacture of rails?

Mr. FIELDING. Rails are manufactured in Canada, either at Sydney or at Sault Ste. Marie. In Sydney the iron is entirely Newfoundland ore, except some small percentage of other ore, it may be, with which it is blended. At Sault Ste. Marie they use largely American ore.

Mr. BENNETT. I may tell the minister that, as a matter of fact, a great deal of the pig iron that is made at Midland goes back to the Soo and is there used for rails. That is why I referred to the proportionate parts. I know they bring to Midland, not only ore from the Helen mine, which is a Canadian mine, but they bring in a lot of American ore.

Mr. FIELDING. I am glad to know that they use some of the Midland ore at the Soo, and I think they use iron which they themselves produce from some Canadian and some imported ore, and they also use, to a considerable extent, imported pig iron. The Algoma Steel Company of Sault Ste. Marie produced, in 1905-6, 6,222,891 tons of steel. There is no bounty particularly on the rail, but that would include all that went into the rail. The ingredients used therein are as follows: Canadian pig iron, 180,472 tons; foreign pig iron, 21,219 tons; other ingredients, 46,821 tons. The sources of the Soo supply are varied, whereas in the case of rails made at Sydney, they are made practically all from Newfoundland ore.

Mr. BENNETT. Could the minister give me that data before he passes on—the proportionate parts in the Midland pig iron of American and of Canadian ore?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not the information at hand, but before the Bill passes the final stage I will be happy to get it.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the meaning of this language:

> In respect of pig iron manufactured from ore, on the proportion from Canadian ore produced during the calendar years.

That is extraordinary language.

Mr. FIELDING. If the two ores are blended they come in at proportionate rates. There is a distinction made between pig iron produced from foreign ore and pig iron produced from native ore. If in any case they use both ores, they are paid in proportion to the respective ores used. There has always been that distinction.

Mr. HAGGART. That may be the intention, but that is not the meaning of the sentence.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the way it is understood, and that is the way it is applied, at all events. There is, I think, an erroneous impression that the iron and steel industries are protected to a particularly large degree. I think that is a mistake. I have no doubt that some of our farming friends will be surprised if I tell them that the protection afforded to the iron and steel industry is not so great as the protection afforded to some lines of agricultural products, but such is the fact. Now, when you grant a bounty on the production of iron and steel you are enabled to get along with a lower rate of duty than you would have if there were no bounty. Let us first see what the rate of duty is on iron products. Take pig iron at an average of $16 per ton, the customs duty under the preferential tariff amounts to about 9½ per cent; or if it were imported under the general tariff, 15½ per cent. Hon. gentlemen will see that these are not the ordinary rates of protection granted to other industries, and if there were nothing but the customs duty in this instance, the protection afforded would be very much below the protection afforded to other lines of industry. Then take steel billets of the value of $24 per ton, the customs duty is 10½ per cent under the general tariff and 6¼ per cent under the preferential tariff. These are very low rates of duty. They would not be considered a protection in any other line of industry, and if there were not any bounty to supplement them, they certainly would not be any substantial protection to the steel industry. If we add the bounty and duty together, and it is fair to do so, we shall still find that the protection afforded to the iron and steel industry is by no means an excessive one. Take again pig iron at the value of $16 per ton. The duty under the preferential tariff is $1.50; the proposed bounty on iron from foreign ore in these resolutions is $1.10. That will make the duty and the bounty together $2.60. The duty and the bounty together will amount to 16¼ per cent. So that the encouragement given by parliament under these resolutions to the pig iron industry, adding the bounty and the duty together, will only be 16¼ per cent, taking the average price of pig iron for some time past. Hon. gentlemen will admit that this is by no means a large protection. It is less protection than is accorded to many other lines of industry. In that case 16¼ per cent is under the preferential tariff. Take the general tariff duty and the bounty and they will amount to 22½ per cent. Now take steel ingots and billets of the value of $24 per ton. The duty is $1.50, the proposed pig iron bounty is $1.10, the proposed steel bounty is $1.65. Here you take the duty, the bounty on the pig iron and the bounty on the steel and add them together, and you have a duty and bounty of $4.25, equal to about 17¾ per cent under the preferential tariff. In that case you take the bounty on the pig iron, the steel bounty and the duty on the steel, and add them all together, and you still find that the protection given to the steel ingots and steel billets amounts to only 17¾ per cent. Now, I believe that if our farmer friends, many of whom signed this petition against the bounties, had had these facts fully before them, they would not have taken the strong position they did against the bounty.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Why didn't you educate them long ago?

Mr. FIELDING. I am educating them now.

Mr. HAGGART. Their argument was that all the manufactures should be made out of Canadian ore; that if there was a protection at all, it should be given to the Canadian manufacture out of Canadian ore. Following the line of the remarks of my hon. friend behind me, I would like very much to know what percentage of Canadian ores goes into this industry.

Mr. FIELDING. I have not the information just in that particular form, but it is a fair question and before the third reading of the measure I will have a memorandum prepared and placed on 'Hansard' answering each one of these questions. My hon. friend uses the argument that these things ought to be made out of Canadian ore. That is in part true, but it is not true entirely, because from the beginning there has been a recognition of foreign ore as well as native ore, with a discrimination in favour of native ore. It is well to remember in regard to foreign ore that in the case of the furnaces at Sydney what they call foreign ore is ore from Newfoundland. Many people are not disposed to look upon Newfoundland as a foreign country. I remember that when these bounties were under consideration several years ago the hon. gentleman who at that time led the opposition, that eminent Conservative leader, Sir Charles Tupper, raised the question as to whether it would not be wise to treat Newfoundland in reference to bounties as a part of Canada and to grant bounties on Newfoundland ore as freely as if it were native Canadian ore. However, we did not feel quite free to do it. Newfoundland ore has been treated as foreign ore and as a consequence the Sydney industries have not received as much bounty as they otherwise would have done. There is another point that must be remembered. In the development of the labour industry of the country, in the creation of labour and the production of wealth that flows from labour economically applied, you have as much labour probably in the production of fuel as in the production of ore, and if you import foreign ore and develop a great iron and steel industry with the use of native fuel, although you are using foreign ore, you will be doing a great deal for the development of native industry by the creation of an increased market for fuel. In view of the results which have been accomplished by the continuance of this policy for many years, first under one government and then under another, even if it had cost the country a very considerabe sum of money, I think a good case can be made out to justify the outlay, having regard to the importance which the iron and steel industry will always bear to the general development of the business of the country. But I think it is as capable of proof as most things are capable of proof in an argument of this character, that every dollar which has been paid out of the treasury for some years past in connection with the development of the iron and steel industry has come back to the treasury from the general development of the country in connection with the establishment of these great industries.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Now, that is protectionist.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not state anything except the facts of the case. If my hon. friend can apply them I will not object. I will give you the plain facts. It is difficult perhaps to present precise figures to lead to an absolute conclusion, but I think the figures which I shall be able to present to the House will go a long way towards establishing the contention I make that the government has received back in the way of increased revenues that which it has paid out in the way of bounties. The iron and steel business is carried on at certain ports. We have the ports of Midland, Deseronto, Hamilton, Sault Ste. Marie, Sydney, North Sydney and Londonderry. With the exception of Hamilton these were all rather small communities. Hamilton was a large and prosperous city and whether or not the iron and steel industry was established there it would have made considerable progress. The increase in the business of Hamilton is not to be entirely attributed to the establishment of the iron industry. A qualification of my figures should be made as respects that port. Let us take the customs collections at these ports for nine years past. I am treating these nine years, because these are the years during which there has been a great development in the iron and steel industries. There was some good work done at some of those ports before that time but it was not large enough to interfere with my comparison. I take for nine years the customs collections at the ports I have named and I find that they amount to $11,785,036.12. For the previous nine years the customs duties at these same ports amounted to $7,101,850.06, showing an increase in the customs receipts at these ports which I have mentioned, in the last nine years of $4,683,186.06. Now, the bounties paid during the past nine years on iron and steel amounted to $7,948,118.28, which is a little under $8,000,000. The increase in the customs duties at the ports mentioned was $4,683,186.06. We have at once accounted largely for a return into the treasury of the sum which has been paid out by way of bounties.

Now, it may be said that some portion of this would have come to us anyway. I think it is fair to admit that some proportion would have. I think that as respects Hamilton some proportion of the increased business of Hamilton is due to other causes. But these large increases during these nine years are due largely, chifly, almost wholly with the exception of that qualification in the case of Hamilton, to the establishment of these iron and steel industries. I will take the industries at Sydney particularly with which I am more familiar; a large proportion of the people who have worked in these industries came from abroad and would not have come except for the establishing of these industries. A large percentage of the increase in customs duties came in the way of duties levied on machinery and materials used in the creation of the iron and steel furnaces and this is due directly to the establishing of this business, Then, a great many of our lower province people who worked at the Sydney furnaces were people of an adventurous character who would probably have gone abroad, most likely have gone to the United States as they did go in bygone years. So that I think it is a reasonable argument that the establishing of these industries brought new people into the country, thus adding to its wealth, and that it had the no less good purpose of keeping at home many of our own people who, but for the establishing of these industries, would probably have gone abroad as they did in former times. So, I think we may attribute this increase of $4,683,000 in the customs revenue from these ports directly to the establishment of the iron and steel industries.

Then, you must take into consideration some other things as to which I have no precise figures but as to which I am sure I will have the judgment of the House as I proceed. There is the matter of excise duties. I have not the figures at hand but I have no doubt it will be found that there has been a large increase in the excise duties in the same way as there has been a large increase in the custom duties. If you add something for them you are increasing to a very considerable extent the receipts at each port which has been built up or created by the iron and steel industry. Then there is another consideration. I have spoken about the collection of customs duties at the particular ports mentioned, but the trade of a large part of Canada has received a stimulus from the establishment of these iron and steel furnaces. Large quantities of goods have been imported at our great importing cities and towns, such as Montreal, Toronto, Quebec. Halifax, St. John, Charlottetown, and all the great importing centres of our country. They have imported large quantities of goods which have gone into consumption at the points at which furnaces have been established. If we had the means at hand of making a close calculation I have no doubt that we would find the increased consumption of goods which have paid duties at these several ports to which I have referred has contributed to the increase in the customs receipts, which I have just mentioned, and I think I have made out a good case to show that probably every dollar that the government have paid out by way of bounties to the iron and steel industry during the last nine years has come back into the treasury in consequence of and due directly to the establishment of these industries.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the hon. Minister, of Finance goes any further I would like to ask him whether he has made any arrangement to have the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) come over from the Senate and answer his very strong protectionist speech.

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of these resolutions, recommends them to the favourable consideration of the House.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Does he also recommend them to our farmer friends?

Mr. FIELDING. I am putting the argument for our farmer friends and I think in such a way that the good farmers in the country will say that they never knew how little protection iron and steel got. For several years the policy of bounties was continued, and then we entered upon what is called the sliding scale. For several years the bounties diminished year by year.

Mr. FOSTER. That was a back-sliding scale.

Mr. FIELDING. For one year it was a back-sliding scale. We have had it in all shapes and forms in order to adapt ourselves to the varying conditions of the country. For several years the bounties continued to decrease and we now propose to arrest the decrease and continue them for three and one-half years beyond the date at which they would have expired. The bounties under existing legislation would have expired on the 1st of July of the current year. We propose to extend them for three and one-half years beyond that, or four years from the 1st of January. We take as our starting point, not the rates of the schedules as they stand to-day, but the rates of the schedules as they stood in 1905-6. At that time the rates were 55 per cent of the original grant. The original grant was $3 on pig iron from native ore, $2 on pig iron from foreign ore and $3 on steel made under the conditions of the Act. We take 55 per cent, which was about the rate of a year ago, and so we established a new scale of duties beginning with that 55 per cent and running for four years. For the current year, 1907, in respect of pig iron made from foreign ore, we take a rate of $1.10. For the second year we keep the rate at $1.10 as we desire to keep the full advantage for two years. For the third year we reduce the rate to 70 cents and for the fourth and final year we deduce it to 40 cents.

So much with regard to pig iron manufactured from foreign ore. Now with regard to pig iron manufaccured from native ore we desire to give it a little more encouragement If there has been any complaint with regard to the operation of the bounties in the past it has been that they have not developed the mining of native ore. That is the point that the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) referred to a moment ago. Therefore, instead of having the difference between the native and foreign ore remain in the same ratio as during the past year or two, we propose to give the native ore a substantial difference of $1 per ton for two years. Thus on pig iron manufactured from foreign ore for 1907-8 the rate will be $1.10 per ton, but if made from native ore it will be $2.10 per ton, the advantage to the native ore thus being a full dollar during these two years.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Are there any new ore fields in sight in Canada being developed or opened up in connection with new railways?

Mr. FIELDING. I have seen it stated that within the last few weeks, since the resolution was put on the order paper, some deposits of native ore in eastern Canada have been placed under bond by some of our large furnace companies, but I have no information except that in the press.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Are not new fields being opened in the Rainy River country ?

Mr. FIELDING. There are some operations there with a view to supplying the furnaces at Port Arthur, which I am told will use Canadian ore.

For these two years we have $1 per ton in favour of native ore. For the third year then, while the foreign will get 70 cents per ton we will give the native $1.70 per ton. In that case the dollar advantage in favour of the native ore is continued. Finally, in the fourth year, while the foreign ore will get 40 cents per ton the native ore will get 90 cents per ton. Thus in the discrimination between the native and foreign ore we keep the full difference of $1 for three years and in the fourth year we reduce that difference to 50 cents. That, I think, will be regarded as a very substantial encouragement for the native ore.

I particularly mentioned pig iron because I wished to call attention to the difference between the native and foreign ore. In addition to the provision we have made in this way for a still further encouragement of native ore, we are asking the attention of the committee to a special provision with regard to assistance to the process of electric smelting. There are vast bodies of ore in Canada which would have great value if they were within easy reach of the deposits of fuel, but they are far away from the fuel supplies, and to bring the fuel to the ore or the ore to the fuel would involve such a heavy charge for transportation that there would be great difficulty and practically these ore bodies are not now capable of development. But while these ores lie far away from the supplies of fuel, in many cases they lie quite near water-powers and with the great development of our water-powers which has taken place in the last few years, we are seeing the way open to bring into practical use these great deposits of ore. Several years ago the government sent commissioners to the old country to investigate this question of electric smelting which was just then engaging the attention of the scientific world. As a result of the inquiries then made, some experiments were initiated at Sault Ste. Marie, and a quantity of iron was produced there by the electric process. I think that the attention of the House was drawn to the matter at the time, and I am sure there was a general recognition of the desirability of having these ores developed by electric power if it could be done. There is no longer any question as to the possibility of electric smelting; it was only a question of economy.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would not section (a) carry it without any additional provision?

Mr. FIELDING. I wish to point out a difficulty which we met. The bounties which we are granting under the first part of our resolutions, create no distinction between electric smelting and smelting by the ordinary blast furnace process. It was represented to us that it would take two years to establish an electric smelting process, and by the time a process was established two of the four years would have passed, and the two years remaining would hardly be inducement enough to encourage people to go into the enterprise. It was represented to us that if we would give to the electric smelting the full four years we give to the ordinary smelting they would be encouraged to go ahead, but if while they were getting their house in order, spending time and money in establishing the process of smelting, two years should pass and then they would only have two years of these bounties, and that at the reduced scale, there was not sufficient inducement to encourage them to go on. They asked us to take that into consideration and try to meet them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are some persons actually proposing to invest capital in this method of producing pig iron?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, we had representations made to us that one body of gentlemen are now considering the propriety of establishing an electric smelting system within reach of Niagara Falls. There, with the power already developed, they would be able to get into shape in less than two years, but in other portions of the country where the power has to be created and developed, it would take the full two years.

As an indication to the House of the attention which the proceedings of Canada in this matter have attracted in Europe, I would like to call attention to a quotation which I think has already been given to the House in some reports of the Department of the Interior. It is well known that Sweden is a great iron producing country and that the experience of that country in everything regarding the production of iron is very valuable. As a result of the inquiries that have been made by Canada, Professor E. G. Von Odelstierna, who is a recognized authority in Sweden, has made the following statement:

> I require, therefore, now to add that this expansion of the iron industry of Canada will very soon be reached, to judge from the gratifying results obtained from the electric smelting experiments at Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario. We have, therefore, to fear that the iron industry of Sweden can expect a dangerous competition from Canada, which not only can cut out our market in the United States, but also our market in England, if that country should adopt the proposed customs union with the colonies; also in regard to China and Japan is Canada better situated, which is clearly evident from a look at the map.
> The Canadian government, which already saw the importance for the country utilizing and smelting their rich ore deposits in the country and not only export the ore, has unconsciously given our government a sharp lesson. As already known, this patriotic government appointed a commission to investigate all the inventions made in Europe for the reduction of iron ores and the making of steel by the electric processes, and enabled the commission to publish a standard work on this subject. On account of these investigations it was considered to be of advantage to further experiment with Canadian raw material in Canada, and the first process employed was the one invented by Heroult.

The results of the experiments made at Sault Ste. Marie, though on a small scale, I am satisfied are such as to justify people interested in the iron and steel industry in entering on the operation of the electric process at points within easy reach of our great water-powers. Another reason which I understand has some force in this connection is that there are qualities in these ores which cannot be easily handled by the ordinary blast furnace process; but by means of the electric smelting process these objectionable ingredients can be very easily removed. At all events, the information we have leads us to believe, having regard to the great quantities of these ores which we have and the splendid water-powers prevailing in portions of Canada where fuel is not to be had, that this is a very important movement; and I believe the House will consider that, if we encourage the iron industry at all, we should extend special encouragement to this new process which is so full of promise for the development of our iron deposits at points within easy reach of such operations.

Mr. SPROULE. There seems to be very little definite information of a practical nature on the subject.

Mr. FIELDING. The experiment was necessarily on a small scale; but my hon. friend will find in the reports of the Department of the Interior every year very full statements of the operations and the results that have been attained. There is quite a lengthy report on the subject.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Can the iron be produced by this process at approximately the same cost as by the ordinary process, or is it likely that the cost will be greater, or that the iron will have certain qualities which will make it very valuable for certain purposes?

Mr. FIELDING. The results show, I understand, that it will produce a finer grade of iron.

Mr. SPROULE. You could use ore containing a higher proportion of sulphur?

Mr. FIELDING. Not only sulphur, but other ingredients which cannot be handled by the other method of treatment. I do not think there will be any question of the wisdom of the government in encouraging the industry in that form. There appears to have been a somewhat unnecessary alarm on the part of some portion of the public with regard to the amount of burden which these resolutions may impose on the country. I think I have presented to the House a fair argument to prove that even if this policy of aid to the iron and steel industry should impose a considerable burden on the country, nevertheless the end would justify the means; but I have shown that the burden in this connection is not a large one, because probably all the money will come back to us in increased trade. But as to the sum which these bounties will call for in the next four years, I have seen it stated in the public press that they will probably call for $25,000,000 and certainly not less than $18,000,000. I think that is an alarmist statement.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. It will all come back.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it will all come back; but I have had a calculation made with the view of ascertaining the probable amount that will be required under these resolutions to respond to the claims of those who may carry on these operations. If we take the operations of the blast furnaces for the past year as a basis, and allow for a moderate increase, which we put at ten per cent for each year, we shall as a result of these resolutions be called on to pay during the next four years, in the way of iron and steel bounties by the ordinary process, $7,500,000. The amount likely to be paid under the electric smelting process is more difficult to estimate, because it is a matter of conjecture how many people will take advantage of it. I would not regard it as a disaster if many people should take advantage of it and if we should be called on to pay a larger sum than we estimate. I am inclined, however, to think that the operation of the electric process during the next four years will not call for more than $500,000 of bounty.

Mr. SPROULE. If they build at Niagara Falls, it will come into operation much earlier than it otherwise would. Have you made any provision that they can take advantage of these bounties if they commence operations before 1909 ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, they would get the full benefit of the Act. In this respect we do not make any distinction between electric smelting and general smelting if either comes into operation during the first four years, as it would then come within the provisions of the first part of the Act. There was a provision in the Bounty Act before, for paying bounties on certain forms of rolled iron and steel. These we have abolished, as we have dealt with these matters in the tariff, so that these resolutions do not call for any payment of bounty on rolled iron and steel. There is also an item calling for payment of a bounty on wire rods. That has no fixed time. That arises from the fact that wire rods are on the free list. It has been deemed desirable that they remain on the free list in order that we may encourage the production of wire in Canada as cheaply as possible ; and if we have wire rods manufactured in Canada and do not levy a duty on them, it seems desirable to aid their manufacture by bounty. The provisions of the existing law in that respect are continued, and it will be for parliament to determine at a future day whether we shall continue that encouragement. As respects the bounties generally, it is our judgment that after the liberal aid which has been granted now for a long period of years, at the end of the four years now provided for, these industries should become self-sustaining—at all events, that they should no longer have any claim for bounties. It is perhaps not possible for any one of us to say what we will do four years hence ; but I think it should be understood that if parliament grants these bounties now, they should, with respect to iron and steel, cease at the end of the four years. The question may then come up whether or not the matter should be dealt with by the tariff. That is a question which the House may reserve for consideration and for freedom of action. In the meantime, the policy of these bounties will be regarded, I think by the House, and I trust by the country, including many who have been prejudiced against them, under the impression that they impose a very heavy burden on the country, as a wise policy to be continued for the short period provided for by the resolutions now submitted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. minister be good enough to tell me at what amount he estimates the bounties which will be called for during the present fiscal year, which will end on the 31st of March, 1908. I am referring to all the bounties covered by the resolutions now before us.

Mr. FIELDING. The figures were prepared for the period of four years. The amount paid in the way of bounties on iron and steel for the year 1906 was a little over $2,000,000, and we are estimating that there will be an increase of about ten per cent each year. I have not the figures for the nine months just closed.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. What other metals are we paying bounties on ?

Mr. FIELDING. There is a bounty Act on lead, but not a bounty; because the terms of the Act provide that when lead advances in price beyond a certain point, the bounty shall cease; and the price has been in that happy condition for several years.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister, I presume, is referring to the gross amount when he speaks of the 10 per cent increase.

Mr. FIELDING. There will be a progressive reduction in the rate of bounty, but I am assuming a development in the trade and an increase in the output, and I estimate that this will cause an increase of 10 per cent in the bounty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The estimates for the current fiscal year, then, is $2,200,000 ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, that will probably be near it.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am sure the House has listened with interest to the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). I do not know exactly what we should call it. Is it an explanation? Or is it an apology?

Mr. FIELDING. No apology.

Mr. FOSTER. Or are we to accept it merely as an indication of advance in the new way ? Taken altogether, this half-hour that we have just passed through has been a rather rich half-hour to the country and to the House. I am sure that my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) has been very much enjoyed by hon. gentlemen on this side.

Mr. FIELDING. Thanks.

Mr. FOSTER. I was reminded, while he was speaking, of the tariff and fiscal history of this country for the last fifteen or twenty years. As he was giving his advanced ideas I could not but think of the position taken by my hon. friend and his supporters in the early days of this propaganda, this system of philosophy, or method of political teaching, or whatever it may be called. When, so to say, the school houses and colleges for the teaching of the principles of protection were established, my hon. friend and his coadjutors went about nights, as well as in the day time, playing the part of incendiaries, trying by inflammatory speeches to destroy the institutions of this system of protectionist education. But they found these institutions, better guarded than they thought, more completely protected by the goodwill of the people. Change their tactics as they might, whether they tried to play the incendiary or made open attacks, they found that, in spite of all they could do, the educational work extended and progressed. After a time they were actually compelled by public opinion to attend these schools. They were very poor attendants at first. They played truant almost every day, and, while doing so, instead of being quiet as they should have been, they were telling horrible tales of the schoolmasters and of what was being taught in the schools, trying to prejudice the minds of those who were responsible for inaugurating this system of education and against the teachers and their philosophy. But, day by day, the pressure became still stronger and these gentlemen were obliged to spend their hours in the protectionist schools. For a time they proved themselves refractory students. They would not study the text books, they would not make the copies, they would not work out the sums. They made faces at the teachers. They kicked up all kinds of rows in school and behaved themselves in the most disagreeable manner possible. But, steadily, steadily, the pressure became stronger, and then they lapsed from the mischievous into the sullen mood. Those who have been in schools, especially those who have taught schools, know that kind of student. They were sullen for many and many a week, for many and many a month—for many and many a year. But, at length, they began to understand that certain prizes were held out to them if they would be particularly good boys, learn their lessons well and prove themselves good students. As a result of these prizes, these prospective honours and public emoluments, our sullen students, one of them being the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) who sits opposite me, began to display a more cheerful countenance. Under the stimulus of the prospects which they had discerned, the prizes which they coveted, they began to look into their text books they began to make the copies, they began to do the sums on their slates. Progressing they committed whole pages of the new philosophy to memory. And so they went on. And now they come before us as masters of a great new philosophy which, to hear them speak, one would suppose had been conceived in their own brains. In this year, 1907, and what strong protectionists they are! you would think they had been nourished in their infancy at the paps of protection, that they had imbibed nothing but the true mother-milk from the time they were able to cuddle themselves in the bosom of the country. They stand here and proclaim the fundamental doctrines of protection. Let me congratulate the Minister of Finance; he did it well. He went back to the elemental truths. There was not an argument in the old repository of arguments that he did not bring out, newly polished and shining with increased brillancy—until I began to think myself a student again beginning to learn something of the reasons for and the processes of the protection philosophy pure and simple.

We welcome the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding). From his years of apostacy and violent opposition, from his refractory moods, his sullen moods, his semi-cheerful moods—all these passed away, we welcome him as a teacher of the art and philosophy of national development by means of the protective principle. Listen to his argument. He planted himself squarely on the foundation of the iron industry. One foot on the ore beds of this country and the other foot on the ore beds outside this country, he declared that no nation could become great unless it produced iron. The iron business, he declared, was the foundation of other industries and of the prosperity of the country. When we commenced, and when the fathers of this movement before myself commenced, this was the very thing we all said. And I remember with what ridicule it was received by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) and those who were with him. Iron a foundation of other industries? they said: Why, that is the very reason why it should be left unburdened by duties. How are you going to make the country prosperous; how are you going to lay this foundation; how are you going to build up an iron industry, if you are going to tax that industry under your scheme of protection? Protection! Why they called it robbery, they said it was the bane and curse of Canada. They declared that it was not only a robbery of the common people, but a delusion and a snare to the nation. Their very Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) went over to England so imbued with the old heresy that he warned the English people to beware of protection, that it was a bane and a curse, that it had been partially tried in Canada and had so worked out in this country.

So, though he wanted a preference for this country, he would not have it if it was necessary to get it, that the English people should introduce even the first edge of a protective principle into their policy. The Minister of Finance now says that if you are going to have a great country you must develop your iron resources and the iron industry. That is exactly what the old teachers taught him when he was a boy kicking up his heels and making faces at the teachers because they told him so, and yet to-day in his more mature years, when he is grey-haired and wiser, he has to come to this parliament to propound the same doctrine and, to do him justice, he propounds it forcibly and well. What a pity it is that his old friend and former leader, who now has a seat in the luxurious chairs of the Senate, was not in his seat here to-day to cheer him up and pat him on the back, and say: Good boy, go it; you have gone one better than the old teachers; I believe what you say is all a pack of lies and nonsense; but go it, our salaries are depending on it, and we will do anything to keep the place warm for ourselves and our party. And then the Minister of Finance tells us: Why, these bounties all come back to the country again, and the good comes back enriched and strengthened rather than in attenuated form. He told us there were nine towns and ports and cities that had been built up by the iron industry. That is what we used to say. We used to say that if you would only protect our industries you would revive and give impetus to them. We did not lay so much stress on the excise as my hon. friend does. We did not ply the argument that men would use more tobacco and drink more liquor, and that the treasury would consequently grow richer as our iron industry would develop. The Minister of Finance says: We will pay out $7,000,000, but we will get it all back. That's what we used to say. But in these days the Minister of Finance talked of the iron industry as a drag on the ankles of the people of Canada, and that if this drag were not on them they would move more swiftly forward towards prosperity and expansion. But now the Minister of Finance has gone so far as to say: Put on the bounties, more will go out, but in proportion as more goes out more and more will come back; if $25,000,000 go out more than $25,000,000 will come back, and you will add eight or nine more cities, and you will stimulate the general business of the country. Splendid protection theory and splendid protection practice. But he did not confine it to the iron industry; he said: Don't you see, it is not only protecting the iron industry and developing our ore beds, but it is developing the coal industry as well. That's what we used to say. We used to say these two industries were twins, that if you developed the one you developed the other, and the Minister of Finance and his political friends used to laugh at us and jeer at us. But to-day the Minister of Finance puts forth the same argument, and tells the benighted farmers of this country, whom his leader, Sir Richard Cartwright, used to coquette with when they were dressed up in the calico frocks of the Patrons of Industry; used to flirt with in the highways and the byways of Ontario; used to say to them along the country roads: Dear brethren, you are my love; we will both go together and work out the destruction and ruin of these Tory protectionists, and we will make the farmers rich.

Mr. BENNETT. They buncoed them all right.

Mr. FOSTER. It is wonderful how things do come around. But the Minister of Finance does not stop at saying that if you pay out money in bounties more will come back. He has further arguments. You generally find it so; a man who becomes a proselyte to a cause which he has hated at one time of his life, feels he has to justify himself for the years he spent in hatred of the thing, and therefore he has to go further in his advocacy of the new-found principle than his teachers used to go. And so the Minister of Finance tells us that it will keep people at home. That is what we used to say in the days of the Hegira, when Edward Blake was preaching the slipping away of the people to Kansas. We used to say: Stop the flight; stop it by introducing industry, by building up cities and giving employment at home. But these gentlemen opposite laughed at us consumedly, and the Minister of Finance laughed at us, and the Minister of Customs used his voice to tremendous effect trying to show the absurdity of an argument like that, and he grew so vivacious and boisterous that measures had to be taken to keep him in order, and his old constituency had to go to work and defeat him once so as to bring him down a litle in his pride and robustness. And now the Minister of Finance tells us that the system of protection keeps people at home. Good. It does. We are obliged to the Minister of Finance for a recantation of all his former heresy. But he goes further; the proselyte has yet some time to make up, and he must work hard, and he tells us that it brings foreigners to settle with us; it keeps our own people at home, brings other people in and adds to our population. What more is there to be said? Let us raise our eyes to the gods and thank them most reverently for all these latter days mercies.

But a year or two ago the Minister of Finance saw the bounties back-sliding and he stepped manfully into the breach, but why does he contemplate any more back-sliding process? If the bounty is good, why does he not keep it up? Is he afraid we will get too much of an iron industry, or of a development, or that we will have too many towns and cities, or to keep too many people at home, or get too many people from abroad. The back-sliding process had to be stopped by him in order that all these things might stay with us. There is only one reason why he contemplates a change. The zeal of the proselyte ceases for the moment, because he thinks of the old friends who stood by him in these days, and whom he has left, and he feels he must do a back-sliding trick again in order, don't you see, to get into a little intimate relationship with the old friends who held him in their arms when he was an infant, and who cry out to him now from their hearts: Please, Mr. Fielding, don't go so fast with your subsidies and protection. And he feels that he must just throw one little sop to them, and that sop is that may be at the end of four years he may back-slide out entirely and not have any more bounties. Did he not say somewhere in a speech in Nova Scotia, four or five years ago, that he hoped to have all bounties in this country swept off in four or five years? I think it is just a prospective reaching backwards of his when he feels that he must do something to placate the friends whom he has left. Well, here we are, and what a change from 1878, when we were fighting against him and his cohorts to develop the iron industry and every other industry, to keep people at home, to draw people from abroad; when we, the Conservative party, were fighting with shield and sword against the cohorts of hon. gentlemen opposite. The battle won, shield and sword laid aside, one contending army victorious, and to-day the two armies in the same fold. Now, I want the Hon. Mr. Fielding to come around with me on some of the platforms in Ontario, and we will take a half-an-hour round each of us, and we will make these old farmers in Ontario and elsewhere feel that they are whittled to the little end of a small stick on this protection business, and when Mr. Fielding gets through with them, and when I come gently up and support his admirable presentation of the question, that in paying out bounties they are getting more back than they are paying out, that after all the iron industry is not heavily protected, and that anyway it is the right thing to do, because it develops the iron industry, and the coal industry, and builds up towns and cities, and keeps our people at home, and brings people from abroad——

Mr. PATERSON. May I go with you too?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, there are limits to one's patience. Now, just one point more, and that is by way of caveat. The session is too late, the time is too short, for me to attempt to combat the one heresy that my hon. friend still clings to, but which in due course of time no doubt, if he lives long enough, we will see him fling away as he has flung away these other old shibboleths of his party, that you are doing all this in the best way, in the cheapest way, and in the most permanent way by a system of bounties rather than a system of customs duties. My belief is exactly the opposite. My hon. friend has given me new confidence in my faith, because he has just now gone back on the bounty system with reference to angles and rolled iron and the like of that. He added on the bounty system, he has taken it off now, and has gone back to the customs system. But when you look into the question you will find that the only permanent, and steady, and least costly way of developing an industry is not by bounties, which simply hold the thing even as long as they are applied, and which allow the industry to lapse back into its place of competitive disadvantage as soon as they are taken away, which do not enlarge the market but which simply give a fillip to the manufacturer for the time being to enable him to hold his own in the market. That system of bounties is the most expensive, the least scientific way to encourage home industries, and it is in the end by far the most expensive way. Let us take what mercies we have and be thankful for them. I feel something like the man whose occupation is gone. I used to think it was my duty to preach protection in this country, but to whom shall I preach it now? There is only one class that my hon. friend seems to fear—though I have no fear of them—the farmers of this country. The farmers of this country are protectionists in principle and protectionists in heart. Through the joint efforts of the Minister of Finance and my own, I have no doubt that in the next year or two we will be able to convince even the obdurate farmers that we are both of us on the right side in this matter, on the side of protection and the encouragement of home industry.

Mr. PATERSON. It appears to me that the old confusion of ideas still prevails in the mind of my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Foster). He does not seem to get even yet a definite understanding of the trade question in this country. He labours under delusions. He speaks of the Liberal party as being all the time opposed to the promotion of home industries, he pictures us in days gone by as if we were the enemies of all advancement and of all progress, and as if he and his friends were the men to whom the present prosperity of the country is due. In that he is all wrong. If he will read my own speeches in 1876 before he came into the House at all, he will find the views I then held, and the policy I then supported is the policy I support to-day; the views I then held I hold now. I advocated that the industries of this country could be promoted, could be encouraged, could be developed under a revenue tariff, better than they could under the principle of a protective tariff, the essence of which is the prohibition of the importation of any goods into this country that can be made here. That policy we opposed, we opposed the measures they introduced. That was their avowed policy. They claim that we are all one on the trade question now. Well unless they have wonderfully changed we are not all one. But we have not changed, we still stand by a revenue tariff, a tariff that will permit the importation of goods upon which we can get the revenue that this country requires. We stand to-day for what we enunciated then. But they stand by a protective tariff which, in its essence, as I say, excludes all goods that can be made in this country. We stand by a revenue tariff with protection as an incidence ; consequently we are wide apart. Revenue is the principle on which we act ; what protection there is in it, and there must be inevitably some protection in it, is merely an incidence. They cannot see it, that is why I say that the same confusion of ideas prevails in their minds that has ever prevailed. But let us change the tactics. It may be that there were strong expressions uttered by some hon. gentlemen on the Liberal side in days gone by ; that has been alluded to, but I do not feel that I am affected at all by that allusion. I am however bound to admit that at times when I heard some remarks that were made, when I was exasperated with the follies of hon. gentlemen opposite, perhaps I could not be described as a very enthusiastic supporter of their policy; I grant that. They say we are all one, that we have come to them, that we are working in the same direction, that we have adopted their policy

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PATERSON. 'Hear, hear,' they say. Well, let us grant it. Take the iron bounties if you like ; in 1887 they inaugurated their policy. They worked it for ten years. We have been working it for ten years too; they say the same policy exactly. What is the result ? Barrenness—absolute barrenness on their part ; flourishing industries everywhere on ours. If it is the same old policy, if we are united on the same policy, as I have said elsewhere, we stand to remain in power here dear knows how long. If there is any difference in the trade and prosperity of the country it must be due to the men who worked the policy because the policy, hon. gentlemen say, is the same. Surely intelligent men will reason in that way. They worked for ten years with this policy in regard to iron and steel and eighteen years in regard to other things. But, take their ten years working of this same policy; they increased the trade of the country by $37,000,000 in ten years. We have been working the same policy—different men, but the same policy—and we have increased it by $311,000,000. The same policy. The people will say, they tell us it is the same policy, but for pity's sake let us keep the men in who are getting very much better results out of it. What other argument could there be ? There is no other argument. How could you produce any other argument ? There is no other explanation. The hon. gentleman talks about their policy being the same, their declared policy of adequate protection the object of which is to shut out every pound of goods that comes into this country. They went the length of advocating in this House that because a few hundred pounds of butter are coming into this whole Dominion, although we export millions and millions, we should double the duty on every pound of butter that comes into Canada. Figure up for yourself the number of pounds that all the babes as well as the grown people use on a slice of bread and there is only butter enough imported into this country to spread one slice of bread once a year. Yet, they want the duty doubled to carry out their principle, the national policy, protection, and they say that we are in the same boat as they are. Now then let us look at the figures. They illustrate the difference that there is between the two parties, between a revenue tariff and their policy. The imports into this country in 1887—and they view imports as a bad thing—amounted to $112,000,000. They decreased to $110,000,000, or $2,000,000 less in 1895. From $110,000,000 as they were in 1895 they have gone up to $294,000,000. We have not adopted the prohibitive tariff of hon. gentlemen opposite. We have adopted a revenue tariff ; only as an incident there is ample protection for the legitimate industries of this country under which they have thriven as they never thrived before and there have been imports coming into this country which have given to us a sufficient revenue and the trade of the country has increased about threefold. The hon. gentleman seems unable to get rid of the idea that the country is in the same shape and that the policy is the same as it was when his friends were in power notwithstanding the fact that he has these figures before him. I need not go on with the argument. The figures are there palpable and plain and if the policy is the same that they worked and that we worked, if they only increased the trade of the country by $37,000,000 and if we have increased it by $311,000,000, it seems to me the people will say that the men who are administering it now know a great deal better how to work the policy than these hon. gentlemen opposite did.

Mr. OSLER. It is very delightful and amusing to hear the voice of the hon. Minister of Customs who has just sat down. I have not had the pleasure of hearing it for some time. But it is a curious thing that on every occasion where the prosperity of the country is in question as it is now and comparisons are made, it is assumed that Canada is the only country that has advanced by leaps and bounds. If you go to the United States and take their industries in the lines which have been referred to by the hon. member, you will find they have increased to a greater extent than we have increased under a strong protection government. We find the industries such as we want to have here being increased to a greater extent than our industries.

Mr. MILLER. Is the hon. gentleman correct in making that statement?

Mr. OSLER. I think so.

Mr. MILLER. That the proportionate increase has been greater?

Mr. OSLER. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. I think not.

Mr. OSLER. And you will find that in every country the proportion of increase in the last ten years has been quite as great as that of Canada. Canada is now attracting a large immigration. We have not only the natural increase but an enormous influx of immigration. Naturally our trade has increased, but I do not think it can be claimed that we have increased to as great an extent as have our neighbours to the south. With regard to the question of bounties or of protection, or of a revenue tariff, I think it is a question of trying to make one's conscience or ideas fit in to avoid the word 'protection' but if we had not protection in the past and we had not protection now I think we would be very much worse off than during the period of dull times which ended about 1897. The prosperity we have had since then has been so great and so world-wide that even in Italy the railways are in almost as congested a state as ours are here. All the world has been prosperous for nearly ten years and we have enjoyed our proportion of it. But, I think that to a great extent this prosperity is due to our protective policy and we are delighted to have had the speech which we have listened to from the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) upholding the protectionist policy that was adopted by the Conservatives.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. I can scarcely understand why we are being urged so strongly by the government to continue to grant bounties to the amount of millions of dollars to the iron and steel manufacturers of Canada. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) are able to make out a very good story; they certainly have made a very plausible story. I have no doubt that they would be able to make black appear white or white black. That is what ability can do. But, it does not convince me in regard to this matter. I thought that these iron and steel industries had ere this ceased to be infant industries. They are of age—some of them at least. We have been spoon-feeding them with government pap now for twenty-one years, and I think they should now be able to sustain themselves. Some of those on the Atlantic seaboard have every advantage they possibly could have; they have the three materials necessary for the manufacture of iron, namely: iron ore, coal for fuel and limestone for flux, in the neighbourhood of their works; and I think that under these circumstances they should be able to compete with almost any other plants in the world. They have also the great advantage of having the competition of land and water for the transportation of their products and I am told that they have the further advantage of a reduced rate on the Intercolonial. I am told that the government, that is the people of Canada, lose $1.50 on every ton of iron and steel that is shipped by these manufacturers from Sydney to Montreal. If this is true, it is exactly equivalent to $1.50 per ton bounty because it comes right out of the pockets of the people of Canada as the deficits and losses on the Intercolonial Railway have to be made up out of the public exchequer.

Then again they have a protective duty of $7 a ton on their completed product and that seems to me to be a duty quite sufficient to give them the Canadian market almost entirely to themselves. In the face of all these advantages I can scarcely see how the government can come to this country and ask the people to grant millions and millions of dollars in cold cash in the form of a gift or clear bounty. They have already been given about $10,000,000 and it is estimated that if the present proposal is carried out they will receive from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 more; that is their output will be so stimulated and increased that they will receive this large sum in addition to what they have already received. I wish to be perfectly fair in this matter and I will assume that they will receive the lesser sum, namely that they will receive $15,000,000 in bounty in addition to the $10,000,000 they have already received; that means a total of $25,000,000 to be granted by the people of Canada to these manufacturers of iron and steel.

The population of Canada at the last decennial census was 5,371,315. This number divided into $25,000,000 gives $4.65 for every man, woman and child in the Dominion of Canada, to be paid in cash as bounty to these iron and steel manufacturers. I was perfectly astounded when I began to apply this calculation to the constituency of East Huron, which I have the honour to represent. Since the last redistribution or gerrymander, just before the last election, the population of East Huron amounted to 19,227. Multiplying $4.65 by 19,227 gives the enormous sum of $89,405.45 or we may say in round numbers $90,000 that is asked to be given by the people of East Huron, in clean, cold cash, as a gift or bounty to these iron and steel manufacturers. There are three ridings in Huron, and for the entire county this would mean $270,000 to be given to these millionaires, to these Canadian Carnegies. I am quite satisfied that if the rich men who own these works would go to East Huron and submit a by-law to the people of that constituency asking the ratepayers to give them a bonus of $90,000 in aid of their works—that is if they were not backed up by any undue influence, political ties or anything of that kind—not one vote would be cast in favour of such a by-law; Liberals and Conservatives would unite to oppose it. It is an enormous sum. I have taken the population for the various municipalities in the riding and, applying this figure $4.65 to the populations, I find that the cost to each municipality would be as follows:

Municipality.	Population.	Contribution.
Blyth..	871	$ 4,050 15
Brussels..	1,114	5,180 10
Grey..	3,557	16,540 05
Howick..	4,140	19,251 00
Morris..	2,606	12,117 90
Turnberry..	2,141	9,955 65
Wingham..	2,392	11,122 80
Wroxeter	446	2,073 80
East Wawanosh	1,960	9,114 00

Nothing but the prospect of securing some industry of great local and national importance would induce the ratepayers of East Huron to grant these enormous amounts of money to these very wealthy men. I know that the estimate I have made is an underestimate. Huron is the second wealthiest agricultural county in the Dominion of Canada; the people there are wealthy and they buy larger quantities of dutiable goods per head than are purchased in many other parts of Canada. Therefore I am satisfied that instead of paying $4.65 per head of population as my figures show, they will pay probably $5 or $6 per head. I wish to be as fair as I possibly can, but I feel that I must protest against the granting of this money in this way. These industries should be able to do for themselves.

Mr. CALDWELL. Would the hon. member prefer to have it in the shape of a tariff rather than in that of a bounty?

Mr. THOS. CHISHOLM. We have the tariff also, we have a tariff of $7 per ton on the finished product. Why not entirely abandon the import duty, make iron and steel entirely free, if the bounty system is the proper one. The minister says that the iron and steel industry is the foundation of all other industries in any country. Why not make it absolutely free, and simply give them their assistance in bounties, if the principle of the bounty is correct.

Mr. FIELDING. We would have to give more bounties then.

Mr. THOS. CHISHOLM. The question is one of time, not of principle. You say that bounties should cease in four years, I say they should cease now. The argument that the iron and steel industry is the basis of all industries has no foundation that I can see. There might be some little excuse for giving a bonus or bounty to new industries such as electric smelting, but I can see no ground whatever for giving this enormous amount to the wealthy men who are now engaged in the iron industry in Canada. Some of these men can and do, on a summer holiday of three or four weeks, spend as much money with a steam yacht as a poor farmer in Huron can save up in his whole lifetime. Are the poor men, the needy men, are the farmers of this country to be taxed, to give all this money to these Canadian Carnegies? I do not see any prospect of our even getting a library from any of them; the probability is that they will spend the money in their own way and for their own purposes. It is no wonder that the poor are getting poorer and the rich richer throughout Canada. I would have been ashamed to go back to my riding unless I had entered a protest in regard to this matter; I have entered my protest and I feel that I have only done my duty.

Mr. LALOR. I want to add my protest to that offered by my hon. friend from East Huron (Mr. Chisholm) against the iron bounties now proposed by the Minister of Finance. I am opposed to these bounties as are also the farmers of the agricultural riding I have the honour to represent in this House. During the past few months I have received a number of petitions from people in the counties of Haldimand and Monck protesting against these iron bounties which they regard as a heavy tax imposed on the farmers and all the people of Canada for the purpose of developing iron industries in the province of Nova Scotia, from which the Finance Minister comes, and where he has so many followers. I cannot understand why he should wish to develop an industry which is so largely local. In my own county of Haldimand we have an industry which is in just as much need of a bounty and of encouragement; that is, a factory which has recently been established for the manufacture of window glass and in which $100,000 has been invested. It comes to that county because there is to be found there the proper kind of sand as well as natural gas. The people interested in the industry are very wealthy capitalists from the United States who have a patent window glass machine, and if they receive proper encouragement from this government in the way of either a bounty or a duty on their product they would develop one of the greatest industries there is to-day in the Dominion of Canada. But that industry does not receive any assistance from this government, while the Minister of Finance places an enormous burden on the people of this country in the way of bounty to the iron industry. I figure that it will cost every man, woman and child in the county of Haldimand at least $5 a head to pay their share of these bounties to the iron and steel industries of Nova Scotia and other places where they may be located. If they were given for the purpose of cheapening the product so that the farmers of this country would obtain agricultural implements at a lower price than they do now, they might be of some benefit to the people, but I know for a fact that these implements are not being sold any cheaper than they were. The people receiving these bounties will put them into their pockets and keep them, while the people who contribute them do not get one dollar of them back. The Minister of Customs has told us about his revenue tariff, which he claims has lightened the burden of taxation on the people; but a few days ago the Minister of Finance told us that he would have a surplus of $23,000,000 on the nine months of this year. Surely a tariff which produces a surplus of $23,000,000 is more than a revenue tariff, otherwise the duties would be placed on such a basis as to yield only sufficient revenue to pay the expenses of the country. But when we look at the Trade and Navigation returns and find that in 1895, the last year in which the Conservative government was in power, the revenue from customs duties was only $17,000,000, whereas in 1906 this government has taken by way of duties $46,000,000 we must surely come to the conclusion that hon. gentlemen opposite are taking from the pockets of the people, by means of a revenue tariff or a protective tariff, whatever the Minister of Customs likes to call it, every dollar of taxation that they can possibly take. There was never a more mistaken idea than the idea that a revenue tariff, as the Minister of Customs calls it, lightens the burden of taxation on the people. The Minister of Customs has framed this tariff in such a way as to take from the people every dollar he can possibly take without giving ample protection to the industries of the country. If he protected our industries as he should the competition among them would lower the prices of goods to the people to a very much lower extent than they are now. In fact, the only way to cheapen goods for the people is to manufacture them ourselves, and the only way to do that is to give them proper protection. But with the tariff as it is now, every dollar you raise under it comes out of the pockets of the people. Our population has not increased very much during the past ten years, but our taxation has nearly trebled under this government during that time.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman confuses the rate of taxation with the revenue, two different things altogether.

Mr. LALOR.

Mr. LALOR. I do not care whether you call it revenue or taxation. The bold fact remains that in 1895 $17,000,000 of taxation in the way of duties was raised from the people of this country and last year $46,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON. What is the rate of taxation?

Mr. LALOR. These figures are taken from the hon. minister's own report.

Mr. PATERSON. The same figures, as the hon. gentleman will see, worked out in a table in the report, show that the rate of taxation was very much higher under the previous government than under this government.

Mr. LALOR. The hon. gentleman has a strange way of working out the figures to suit his argument. The simple fact remains that we raise $46,000,000 in the way of duties last year against $17,000,000 in 1895, and our population has not increased in the last ten years over ten per cent. The hon. gentleman would not put a higher duty on butter because he says not more than enough butter comes into the country to spread a slice of bread for every man, woman and child in the country. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that that is one slice too much. The duty should be raised so that not enough butter would come in to spread that one slice. The farmers of this country could supply every pound of butter required without importing even enough for one slice. I would like to go further into the question of the iron bounties, but the government this session, as in every other session since I have been in the House, have brought these important matters down in the dying hours of the session when half the members have gone home and when they hope to escape from criticism because we have not the time to discuss them as we would like to do. I just wish to protest on behalf of the great counties of Haldimand and Monck against the imposition on the farmers of those countries of the taxation involved in these bounties.

Mr. FIELDING. The only thing I take exception to in the hon. gentleman's remarks is the statement that these bounties are only for the benefit of the province of Nova Scotia. That is an incorrect and unjustifiable statement. The province of Ontario has received from these bounties in the past nine years over $3,000,000, and when the hon. gentleman speaks of them as something for the benefit of the province of Nova Scotia only he is pursuing a very unfair course.

Mr. LALOR. I did not mean to impute them only to Nova Scotia, but chiefly to Nova Scotia.

Mr. FIELDING. He said Nova Scotia only.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to enter a protest against this system of taxation which, although not a new thing, I think ought to have been abandoned years ago. I do not approve of the principle of bounty; the bounty is a wrong system for the fostering of industry. Its effect is only temporary. You may grant bounties for a period of years, but at the end of that time your industry is about where it began. On the other hand, if you adopt a system of protection and continue that system, you foster the industry and enable it to increase until it becomes self-sustaining, an industry founded upon a sound basis. I object to this system of bonuses for the iron and steel industry, because it takes the money from one class of people who can ill-afford to be without it, and pays it into the pockets of another class who need it far less. See how it works out. There has been a great increase in the duties on tobacco since the present government came into power.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) behind him says the duty is wrong.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) is wrong. There is a great difference between tobacco and butter.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) will allow me I spoke of the hon. member for West Kent (Mr. Clements) who said that the tobacco duties should be increased to a dollar a pound.

Mr. HENDERSON. My contention is that the present government has unduly increased duties on tobacco coming into the country. They have laid a tax on practically one-fifth of the people in this country of $1,800,000 for the last year. The working people, including those in the iron industry, the men in the foundries and in the shops, are taxed heavily under these tobacco duties to produce a revenue, and then the government turns around, and hands the money over to the producers of iron. This is unfair. The day labourer should not be called upon to take out of his hard earnings, the sum to pay these bounties. Again, the farmer is called upon to pay an increased duty on sugar. This year that increased duty will be $343,000 over what it was the year before. And then the government turn around and pay this money, in the form of a bounty, to another class of people, to assist different industries. And the Minister of Finance tells us that it makes no difference, because the money all comes back again. The fact is that this government are continually following the policy of taking from one class of people in order to pay to another. And they do it most unfairly, as the hon. gentleman behind me has shown because they take it from those who can least afford to pay it, and they hand it over to those who least need to receive it. When the minister said that it made no difference, because the money all came back again, I was surprised that he did not propose a policy involving the payment of $15,000,000 instead of $7,500,000—for what difference does it make how great the amount if the money all comes back again? I think the people of this country will not regard it in that light. I think the minister's statement is a fallacious, a misleading statement.

Now, with reference to what the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) has said with regard to the rate of taxation. He has been contending for his favourite policy for tariff for revenue. Honourable members will recollect, that six, eight or ten years ago, the favourite expression of the Liberal party was 'Tariff for revenue only.' Do you ever hear a man on the Liberal side now use the word 'only' in this connection now? It is dropped out entirely.

Mr. PATERSON. What is it now?

Mr. HENDERSON. Tariff for Revenue; —that is tariff for taxation. But now their tariff is tariff for protection—they cannot call it any thing else. If the minister will look into the matter he will see that there has been a great increase in taxation in the last fifteen years. I have given the calculation before now to the minister, and I stand by the same to-day. The rate of taxation last year, all told, and including bounties paid—for that is taxation as the minister of Finance himself admitted to-day—estimated on all goods dutiable and free last year amounted to 19·37 per cent. And the highest rate it ever reached under Conservative regime during the last five years of their rule was 18·28 per cent. I am aware that the minister will turn to his Trade and Navigation returns and will quote figures to show me that the rate is only about 15 per cent. But he omits certain items of taxation which I have included, and which ought to be included.

Mr. PATERSON. You should go by the book.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have been too long in the House under Liberal regime to go by one book, I believe in going by all the books. I believe in making a book for myself,—I think I can make one as good as the Minister of Customs can make. In making up his figures he only includes the items of taxation so called, while I include all the items of customs taxation whatever they may be called—the bounties on iron and steel, on coal oil, on binder twine, which are as forms of taxation, the increased duties on tobacco, and all the rest. The Minister of Finance says that my hon. friend from West Kent (Mr. Clements) demanded a higher rate of duty on tobacco. I am not going to discuss that question. I am simply pointing out what has been done by these hon. gentlemen who claim to be low tariff people yet who have increased the rate of taxation as I have shown.

I have entered my protest against this bounty system of taxation. I think the time has come when it should be abandoned. The system of protection carried out in the ordinary way will be much better for the encouragement of industry than a system of bounties, besides avoiding the injustice of taking money from one class to give it to another. I am not going to discuss the question raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) about the high duty on butter. He knows, that, speaking for myself, I never objected to high rates of duty on agricultural products. I have always favoured that, I stand on the same ground still. I am favourable to a high rate of duty on all the products of the farm so as to give the farmers of this country as much of the market as we possibly can. They can produce every thing we want and they are entitled as a hard working people, to all the market we can give them. We regard the market of Canada as the best asset the farmers have, and we are in duty bound to see that that market is not invaded by the surplus products of another country.

Mr. BOLE. I want to correct a statement made by the hon. member for Toronto, when he said that trade had increased in the United States to a greater extent than in Canada. I had the facts in my mind when he spoke. I have the figures now. The total trade of the United States in 1895 was $1,709,000,000 ; the total trade of the United States in 1905 was $2,858,000,000, an increase of 60 per cent. The total trade of Canada in 1895 was $224,000,000 ; the total trade of Canada in 1905 was $550,000,000, an increase of 150 per cent. Some two or three years ago, when I was asked to address a certain audience I made a calculation as to certain countries, and I went carefully into the figures, and I was impressed with the relative position of our own country. I figured out that Canada had a very large percentage over all other countries in the matter of total trade. I think Italy comes second, Japan third and the United States fourth or fifth.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bole) what would be the foreign trade of the United States, if, instead of being all united under one flag, they consisted of thirty or forty different states? Did that ever occur to him? The great fiscal authority on the other side of the House in years gone by, Mr. Charlton, used to dwell on that very much, and any one who considers for just one moment what would be the result of a state of things such as I have alluded to, must realize how absolutely fallacious and imperfect is any such comparison as that which the hon. gentleman has just put forward.

Mr. PATERSON. Would it not be the same in Canada?

Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. To a certain extent, yes ; but not nearly to as great an extent. The Minister of Customs always seems to me to be struggling with an uneasy conscience when he deals with this question of the tariff. I think I can tell him why that is. Of course, he recollects very well a resolution for which he stood sponsor in 1893 ; it is rather lengthy, but I will quote two paragraphs :

> That the customs tariff of the Dominion should be based, not as it is now, upon the protective system, but upon the requirements of the public service.

And yet the Minister of Customs boasts continually of the surplus of $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 or $15,000,000, and is not ashamed.

Mr. FOSTER. That's where his conscience is touched.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This resolution further says :

> We denounce the principle of protection as radically unsound, and unjust to the masses of the people, and we declare our conviction that any tariff changes based on that principle must fail to afford any substantial relief from the burdens under which the country labours.

But now the Minister of Customs defends items in the tariff on the principle of protection, and no other principle, and he has applauded and supported the Minister of Finance when he did the same thing. And yet the Minister of Customs was the gentleman selected to defend those two particular paragraphs in the resolution of 1903.

Mr. PATERSON. Have you got the speech I made then?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, and it is worse than the resolution. I do not think it is a very good speech, and so I will not inflict it upon the committee. Suffice it to say, that speech was exactly the opposite of the speech which the Minister of Finance has favoured us with this afternoon. In 1893 the leader of the Minister of Customs, in calling upon him to act as sponsor for that resolution, used this language :

> I leave it to the judgment of every freeman to the farmers and above all, I leave it to the workingmen in the cities, if protection is anything else but slavery.

Mr. PATERSON. Did I say that?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No.

Mr. PATERSON. Oh, well.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You did not say it, but your leader said it when he was inducing you to propose that resolution, and from the beginning to the end of your speech there is not one word in repudiation of what your leader said.

Mr. PATERSON. Read my speech.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have more mercy on the committee than to read a stale old speech of the Minister of Customs made in days gone by.

Mr. PATERSON. I have not seen it for a long time now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will send it over, and it will be a great surprise to the Minister of Customs when he does see it. But there is another speech of the Minister of Customs. In days past he has talked a great deal about the burden of protection, but to-day he has taken new ground with regard to that. May I awaken his recollection for a moment? Does he recollect the days when he stood in this House and proclaimed by speech, and I think by resolution as well, that the true measure of taxation in this country was per capita taxation?

Mr. PATERSON. I have forgotten that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You have forgotten it?

Mr. PATERSON. Is the true measure of the public debt.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Let us see if that is what he said.

Mr. PATERSON. That is the view I take. What year is this in?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. 1893. It is fourteen years ago, and the hon. gentleman has made many curvets since that time. But here is what he said :

> Of course if the population remained stationary at the figure it was in Mr. Mackenzie's time, and if you figured the per capita tax from 1883 to 1888 on that basis, it would be far more than $4.60 per head. But they have taken the estimate of increased population into account, and, therefore, for purposes of comparison this is absolutely accurate, so far as I can judge, and cannot be assailed from any point.

A little before that he says :

> Sir, I do not hold them to too strict a line. I take these figures from their own Trade and Navigation returns. I ask them to take it on the basis on which they put it there, and no basis can be fairer. Take the Trade and Navigation returns and read the per capita tax imposed by the government from confederation to the present time.

And so on through that column and the next column. The hon. gentleman was taking as a fair basis, a fair method of computation of the taxation of the country, the per capita taxation, and now he shies off from that altogether, he takes the rate of duty which, according to my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson), he does not state with too great accuracy, and he leaves out of comparison altogether the per capita taxation which was his staple argument in days gone by. And if he used the per capita basis at the present time, what would he find ? He would find I suppose—I have not looked at the figures recently—that the per capita taxation has increased by about 250 per cent. Perhaps that is an underestimate.

Mr. PATERSON. The per capita of revenue contributed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It comes out of the pockets of the people, does it not ?

Mr. PATERSON. I see that the hon. gentleman has the same confusion of ideas as the hon. member for North Toronto. Neither this government or any other government can compel you or me to buy a dollar's worth of goods anywhere, we do that ourselves, no one compels us. There is only one thing that the government does in standing between the people and the goods they buy, and that is when they say that the merchant shall not get any goods into this country until he has paid so many dollars and cents on every hundred dollars worth of goods he imports, on the average. There is where the government comes in, for that they are responsible, for nothing else. The increased purchase is voluntary on the part of the people. When the hon. gentlemen went out of office they were charging $18.28, on the average on every hundred dollars' worth of goods that came in, that was their rate of taxation ; while last year our rate was under $16, a difference of 12½ per cent. All you have to do is to see what rate of taxation you impose. If the people are richer and buy ten times the amount of goods they formerly did, the government does not compel them to do so, it is their free will offering.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman's argument to be this, that in 1893 the government compelled the people to buy, and to-day they do not ?

Mr. PATERSON. No, but the people did not buy as much then.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In 1893 they compelled the people to buy ?

Mr. PATERSON. Oh no, the people of their own free will were not able to buy as much as they do now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But they did buy too much, according to the hon. gentleman's argument, at that time, because he argued that the taxation was too high, and now when it is two and a half times as great, he apparently does not think it is high enough.

Mr. PATERSON. Well, you do not understand it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I may not understand that but I think I understand the hon. gentleman. He is not prepared to accept the basis upon which he saw fit to attack the government fourteen years ago, and indeed he has omitted the per capita calculation from his Trade and Navigation returns in order that the contrast between the per capita taxation of to-day and that of twelve years ago might not be discerned by the people. I understand that is the case, and for a very good reason. I thought the hon. gentleman had forgotten this. But when I reflect that he has left this calculation in these latter years out of his statistics, I am persuaded that he recollects these subjects very well, and that he is not now anxious that a comparison should be made now which he himself was ready to put forward in attacking the Conservative administration.

Mr. FOSTER. And yet we must go by the book.

Mr. PATERSON. That would be a serious fault if it were true. I did not make up these figures. There was a change made in that work, and the reason was this: Mr. George Johnston, the statistician, used to give the estimated population year by year and on that estimated population these calculations were based. When the decennial census was taken it was found that he had overestimated the population altogether, and therefore the calculations were valueless. There was not the number of people here, and the calculation was left out; it was thought better not to put it in because it was not a correct basis. That is the reason.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I accept the hon. gentleman's explanation in all sincerity. It is however noteworthy that these calculations ceased to appear in the books just about the time when it was convenient, for certain political reasons, that they should no longer appear.

Mr. PATERSON. That is one of the improvements I made.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is an improvement by means of which a calculation that would be very prejudicial to the interest of the government no longer appeared in these books. The hon. gentleman has exactly the same expression upon his benign countenance as that which I observe when he is making these attempts to soothe the uneasy conscience to which I referred a moment ago; because I have too much respect for the hon. gentleman's intelligence to suppose that when he talks about this being a revenue tariff, and only a revenue tariff, he believes one word of what he says. I would not venture for a moment to assign to the hon. gentleman so small a degree of intelligence as to suppose that he really means what he says when he make these statements, under present circumstances.

Mr. PATERSON. I would rather lack in intelligence than in truthfulness.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, the hon. gentleman makes these remarks in a very jocular way, so I always supposed that he did not really intend them. If he did intend them, of course I would be constrained to assign to him a very much smaller degree of intelligence than his record in this country entitles him to. However, I only rose for the purpose of reminding the hon. gentleman of a few matters of this kind, and I have now much pleasure in sending over to him the proceedings of the Ottawa Conference of 1893, and I would ask him to remember that this is the only copy available in the whole country. I have a notice from the librarian to that effect; therefore he will be good enough to see that it is carefully returned, because it will be required for future reference on many occasions.

Mr. PATERSON. Will the hon. gentleman please say whether he is in favour of these bounties that the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Thomas Chisholm) and the hon. member for Dufferin (Mr. Barr) have opposed. I would like him to say how he views these bounties.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I expressed myself on the bounty question three or four years ago when I moved a resolution against which the hon. gentleman voted. I am in favour of maintaining the iron and steel industries as expressed by the resolution which I moved at that time. When the hon. gentleman disclaims being a protectionist, is he so innocent of all knowledge of political economy as not to know that bounties are the most extreme form of protection? When he brings down a measure for continuing these bounties, does he not know that by introducing and supporting that measure he is proclaiming himself a protectionist, and a protectionist of the most extreme kind? In what way protection should be given to these industries may be a question; so far as I am concerned I stand for such a policy as will continue to maintain them.

Mr. CONMEE. There are some features of the iron bounties that I think have not been referred to. Speaking for myself, I have always been a strong advocate of a policy on the part of the Canadian government of building up the iron and steel industry in this country. Now the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) seems to have taken a good deal of pleasure out of the fact that the policy which was announced this afternoon is somewhat along the lines of the policy of a previous government of which he was a member. But it seems to me that the school teacher, if I may term him so, has lost his charm, because hon. members, one after another, behind him are protesting against this policy, they are not in favour of it. So we have on the other side of the House, not a united protectionist party, not even a united party in support of the present measure that is under review. It is claimed, if I may refer to the fact, that a large number of petitions have come to this House from the agricultural sections which are, I may say, somewhat opposed to this policy. They too regard the bonuses that have been given, the aid that has been given to build up this industry, as rather extreme. I take issue with that view and I wish to state that in my opinion—and I think the evidence will support that opinion—there is no other industry in Canada that is of the same benefit, that gives back to the farmer as great a return as the iron and steel industry that is being built up in this country. The fact was brought up that under the tariff previous to 1896, there had not been that development in the establishment of iron furnaces and the manufacture of iron and steel in various forms which the government of that day had hoped for. I am not going to say at this time that that policy was entirely to blame, or that the administration of that day was entirely to blame for the lack of the growth of that industry, for the checking of it, or anything of that kind, but what I do point out is that we did not prosper and we did not have the development in this country which we have had within the last ten years. I think that it might be fairly claimed that the change of policy has contributed greatly to the building up of that particular industry and the development of the trade of the country. I might point out the difference between the two policies. The policy of pure protection is not as great a direct inducement to capital as the bounty system. It is said that the bounty system after all is the more direct form of taxation. Even if that argument is admitted—I do not admit it—it appears to me that the evidence in our country, without referring to other countries, is sufficient to establish the fact that it is the better policy in so far as this particular industry is concerned. We have had a very great development in this line during the last few years. I might just for a moment allude to a point which was touched upon by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) in introducing the resolution in regard to which I wish to add something to what was stated. The returns which were brought down show that there was about $5,000,000 of an increase that could be attributed to the establishment and growth of the iron and steel industry in Canada in the customs duties at certain ports, but these statistics, as I have them at all events, are only brought down to the end of the year 1905, and there has to be added to that amount considerably over a million of dollars increase in the year 1906 which would bring the increase to the neighbourhood of $6,000,000. Then I think there has to be added the increase at other ports not included in the return ports where works have been established which were not included in the minister's estimate. Port Arthur is one. If I am rightly informed the increase there is over $150,000, which may be attributed to the works which have been established there although these works are not actually in operation at the present time. They are new works which are going in operation within a short time. Then, Deseronto and Londonderry were not included and there are a number of other places in Canada where the establishment of allied works has greatly increased the customs duties. If these be added it must be apparent to every one that the return by way of increased duties is equal to the bounty paid. We are told that this is an old doctrine. I do not care whether it is an old doctrine or a new doctrine; it is a pleasing result and it is one the agriculturist and the representative of the agricultural section, the business man, the merchant, every one interested in Canada, should consider for the reason that the spread of prosperity which is incident to the establishment of these works is not confined by any means to the particular parts of the country in which they are located.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

On the order for private Bills.

Mr. GERMAN. Mr. Speaker, there are two Bills of a non-contentious character on the order paper and I would like the suggestion of the leader of the House as to whether these Bills might not be taken up in priority to Bills which are contentious, as otherwise they may not be reached this session.

Mr. SPEAKER. It can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. GERMAN. Then with the consent of the House I would ask that Bill (No. 115) to amalgamate the Jordan Light, Heat and Power Company, and the Erie and Ontario Development Company, Limited, into one corporation under the name of the 'Jordan-Erie Power Company,' be now considered in committee.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think we can consent to that, there is a very poor attendance and we had better take these things in their order.

Mr. CONMEE. I might point out that Bill (No. 167) and Bill (No. 168) are only on for second reading and if they could be moved ahead a stage if either Bill should prove to be contentious it could be opposed in committee. If they were advanced a stage then if necessary possibly amendments could be made to meet any objections.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand it is contrary to the rules of the House to pass a Bill out of its order without the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. As objection has been taken, the motion cannot prevail; we will have to take the Bills in the order in which they stand.

OTTAWA TERMINALS RAILWAY COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 152) respecting the Ottawa Terminals Railway Company.—Mr. Caldwell.

On section 19,

Mr. LENNOX. I gave notice that I desired to amend that section. I beg to move that the section be amended to read:

The plans and specifications for the said Central Union Passenger Station shall be submitted for approval to the Governor in Council on or before the first of January, 1908, and the construction of the said passenger station shall be commenced within six months after the said plans and specifications thereof have been approved by the Governor in Council and shall be completed within two years after the date hereby fixed for the commencement thereof.

I may say that I fixed on the first of January in deference to the suggestion of the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fisher). I had suggested six months but he thought we should leave it till the first of January. I see by one of the evening papers that Mr. Wainwright says: Let it go, that they had by an agreement with the government fixed a shorter time, which would expire some time in the latter part of July or August. I do not know that that is material. I only wanted it to be definite, that it should not go beyond a reasonable time, and I am quite satisfied with the suggestion of the acting Minister of Public Works that they should have, if necessary, until the 1st of January.

Mr. FISHER. I have not the slightest objection to this amendment, but there is a possible difficulty which might suggest itself to a legal mind. The hon. gentleman is correct in saying that there is a definite agreement between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the government, which agreement was dated the 15th of January last, and which provides specifically that these very plans shall be filed with the government within six months, which would limit the filing of the plans to the 15th of July. I have that information from the Railway Department and also from the Minister of Justice, so that on that point there is no doubt whatever. This Bill is for the purpose of incorporating the Ottawa Terminals Company, not the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I am not prepared to say from a legal point of view whether or not this agreement would be binding on the Ottawa Terminals Company; but as, by the terms of this Bill, the Grand Trunk Company is to transfer certain lands and certain rights to the Terminals Company, I would rather take it that their obligations in regard to those lands and rights would be transferred along with the lands and rights, as well as their obligations under this agreement with the government, to the Ottawa Terminals Company. If the committee think that is the case, there is no necessity for the amendment of my hon. friend, which is quite in the line of what I suggested myself the other night when I did not know about the terms of that agreement. If, however, there should be any doubt whatever as to that agreement being binding on the Ottawa Terminals Company, then I think this amendment ought to be put in, and I do not know that there would be any harm in the amendment unless it would raise a doubt as to the period available for the filing of the plans.

Mr. LENNOX. What the hon. minister says agrees with what was said in the paper to-day. I have no doubt that the agreement allows only six months from the 15th of January last, and therefore to have the statute consistent with the provisions of the agreement, I would move that the 15th of July, 1907, be substituted for the 1st of January, 1908.

Mr. FISHER. I think that would be all right.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. How many companies have signified their intention of using these terminals besides the Grand Trunk?

Mr. FISHER. I am not sure that it is definitely settled. I understand that the Canadian Pacific Railway will use them, and that the Canadian Northern have made a suggestion for their use; but I do not think any agreement has been come to.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. They will all have an opportunity of coming in if they desire?

Mr. FISHER. Oh, yes. The agreement with the company provides that these terminals may be used by any company coming in on fair and reasonable terms.

Amendment of Mr. Lennox agreed to, Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

HAMILTON RADIAL ELECTRIC COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 158) respecting the Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Company—Mr. Clarke.

On section 1,

Mr. LANCASTER. Before that Bill proceeds any further, I want to say a word or two about it. When this Bill was in the Railway Committee it struck all of us, I think, without any exception, that it was an absolute invasion of provincial rights; but some of the gentlemen in the committee thought that as we had invaded provincial rights in regard to so many other Bills, we ought not to draw the line at this Bill. To a certain extent, one would be struck with the fairness of that proposition, if it is at all right to continue to do wrong when you know you are doing wrong. But we tried to get the Bill into such a condition that it would not be an invasion of provincial rights, but that that part of it which was the excuse for bringing it before this parliament at all would be allowed to pass, and the part which was not required to be under Dominion jurisdiction would be stricken out of the Bill. After a good deal of discussion, therefore, I moved that that clause which it was manifest there was no excuse for putting in the Bill, and which, standing alone, would be beyond all question a matter of provincial jurisdiction, that is subsection (c) of section 4, should be struck out. There was a debate on that motion and a division was taken and my motion was rejected. I then came to the conclusion that there was no other way to deal with Bills of this kind than to reject them entirely. One gets no satisfaction in the Railway Committee when one is trying to get the legislation brought before that committee into such a shape that it would be reasonable and fair, even if one gives up a part of his own views for the purpose of compromise or in respect for the views of others, when railway companies come to this parliament and ask it to usurp what belongs under the constitution to the provinces. What he says is used against him and no effect is given to it with any spirit of compromise to achieve anything that would be reasonable and just. This section which I moved to strike out is an instance of how parties are progressing who introduce legislation of this kind, which ought not to be introduced into this parliament at all, and the rapidity they are making, and the nerve they have in these matters. They actually will call these lines suburban lines in the county of Wentworth. They do not pretend to say that the lines authorized in that section can by any straining of the imagination be said to be lines for the general benefit of this country in such a sense as to bring them within the jurisdiction of this parliament. They call these lines suburban lines within the limits of the county of Wentworth and the city of Hamilton. We have here a distinct declaration that we are asked to authorize the building of suburban lines. The promoters ask us to take authority to control lines limited to one county and city in the province of Ontario. The company cannot build outside the county and city—they cannot lay a rail or a tie or buy one inch of land outside that county and city for these lines.

Now, the only excuse they could put forward for our exercising authority in this matter is that this line was supposed to be built to a point on the Niagara river at one end and to a point on the Detroit river at the other end. Though both these points are within the province of Ontario, yet to build to them would carry the line to the international boundary and this is supposed to bring it within our jurisdiction. To test the bona fides of the promoters, I asked Colonel Gibson, late Attorney General of Ontario, who was in the Railway Committee promoting the Bill as a lawyer, how his line was going to reach the Niagara river, for I would call your attention, Mr. Chairman, and the attention of the committee to the fact that a line from the city of Hamilton to a point on the Niagara river between Niagara Falls and Fort Erie would have to ascend an escarpment of 200 to 300 feet in height. This is a rocky precipice which can be negotiated for the purpose of railway building only at certain points; I happen to live there and I know that there are only half a dozen places where the escarpment can be ascended. In reply to my question, Colonel Gibson, with the greatest coolness, said that he did not know how or where they were to surmount this escarpment. I was obliged to say, as I say here, that taking Colonel Gibson's own statement as evidence, it is pretty clear that they have no intention of building this line at present. And it is time enough for them to come and ask for a charter to Niagara river, when they make up their minds where they want to go to. They have no bona fide intention, in my opinion, of building that line, but simply insert this reference to a point on the international boundary as an excuse for parliament to bring this work under federal jurisdiction. As to going to the Detroit river, the answers we received were about as uncertain and indefinite as in relation to the other, and it became quite clear to all of us that, of the three different lines they were asking for, there was only one that the promoters really intended to go on with—the one referred to in subclause (c) in section 4, —the purely suburban lines in the county of Wentworth and the city of Hamilton.

Now, I have received—and I suppose other hon. members have also, for I do not see why the company should favour me—a so-called argument respecting this Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Bill. They first quote chapter 7 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, section 6:

> Where any railway, the construction or operation of which is authorized by a special Act passed by the legislature of any province is declared, by any Act of the parliament of Canada, to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, this Act shall apply to such railway, and to the company constructing and operating the same to the exclusion of such of the provisions of the said special Act as are inconsistent with this Act and in lieu of any general railway Act of the province.

They cite chapter 88 of the Statutes of Ontario, 1894, which I will not trouble the committee to read unless some hon. gentleman wishes it; also chapter 101 of 1895; chapter 103 of 1896; chapter 112 of 1900, and chapter 77 of 1904. We have thus, five Ontario statutes relating to this company. The conclusion of this argument—if you can call it an argument—issued in support of this Bill, is that, in view of these five different enactments of the Ontario legislature, this company should—what? Should go back to the province of Ontario to get their legislation consolidated and put in shape? Not at all; but should come to the Dominion parliament and ask this parliament to knock into a cocked hat, as the saying is, all this legislation of the province of Ontario in regard to this railway and pass the Bill now before the House putting the railway entirely beyond the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario and depriving the people of Ontario of all the benefits to which they have a right under these enactments of their legislature, which created this company in the first place.

In view of the fact that the government has not insisted on the promoter of this Bill withdrawing it, it must be assumed that the government is in favour of its passage. It is not the fault of the opposition that a good deal of talk should be directed against a wrong, the perpetration of which the government have evidently sanctioned. Even if I were repeating all that has been said in this House on this question, I would think it is my duty to do so if by that means I could protect the interests of the people. A decision was given by the Court of Appeal of Toronto, yesterday, which has a peculiar bearing on the point we are now discussing. The Court of Appeal of Ontario, I was going to say it stands as high as any court in the British empire, but I shall not say so as my knowledge of courts is largely confined to Canada. However, I do say that if there is a court in the British empire that gives more sound judgments than the Court of Appeal of Ontario, that court would be entitled to the highest commendation and respect. The Court of Appeal yesterday decided in the case of Crawford vs Tilden and the Guelph and Goderich Railway, an interesting point. The plaintiff was one of a number of men employed on the construction of the railway by the defendant as contractor, and the Guelph and Goderich Railway was incorporated by 4 Edward VII, chapter 81, which declared the railway, although wholly within the province of Ontario, to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. The plaintiff filed a mechanics lien for money due him for work performed, and he succeeded in his action against the railway before Judge Clute, but the railway appealed to the Divisional Court which held that because the railway was incorporated by Dominion enactment the Mechanics Lien Act of Ontario did not apply, and that the poor fellow could not file a lien against a Dominion railway incorporated by the Dominion parliament. An appeal was taken from the Divisional Court to the Court of Appeal, and yesterday the Court of Appeal decided that the poor man had no legal right to file a mechanics lien to get paid for his labour, because that railway was incorporated by Dominion statute which declared, although it is wholly in the province of Ontario, that it is a work for the general advantage of Canada. There is striking evidence of the wrong we do when we pass enactments which are purely provincial, and when we thoughtlessly, and sometimes wilfully and maliciously take away from the province the jurisdiction it is entitled to. I hope some hon. gentlemen on the other side will wake up to their responsibility in this matter. We ought all of us to be protecting provincial rights in this House. This ought not to be a party question. We ought to be here to protect the labouring men of Ontario against the decision which yesterday the Court of Appeal of Ontario gave, and properly gave under the law as it stands.

Mr. CLARKE. When was the Guelph and Goderich charter passed ?

Mr. LANCASTER. The newspaper says it is 4 Edward VII, chapter 81. In glancing over the legal intelligence of the Toronto newspapers of this morning, as is my wont, my eye fell on this decision of the Court of Appeal, and I am glad I noticed it because it is opportune to the discussion that is now before this House. Now what would be the result if that decision of the Court of Appeal were applied to the Hamilton Railway, with this clause in ? What would be the result when they built that railway in view of this decision of the Court of Appeal ? The result would be that a contractor, or a mechanic, or any man who furnished material for construction, would have no right to file his lien and get paid for his material; whereas, if that railway remains under the provincial jurisdiction, he would continue to have that right as he has it now. Supposing this Bill passes, the mechanic, or furnisher of material, will be told that there is no such thing as a mechanics lien under the Dominion Act, and that he has no right to be secured for his labour or for his material, simply because the Dominion parliament has chosen to make this a Dominion railway instead of leaving it a provincial railway.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there not a better way, to make the provincial law in regard to mechanic's lien apply to all Dominion railways ?

Mr. LANCASTER. We cannot do that. Does the hon. gentleman as a lawyer mean to tell me that we can pass an Act here saying what things the provincial Act should apply to ?

Mr. CONMEE. Make the Act subject to the provincial law in that regard. That has been done lots of times.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman who last interrupted me (Mr. Conmee) is not a lawyer, and therefore it is not surprising that he should advance an idea of that kind. The hon. gentleman is very anxious to get the Dominion parliament to invade provincial rights in regard to railway and other matters. But I want to tell him that while he may think it is all right, he cannot control the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, or the Supreme Court of Canada, or any other learned body of judges who know what the law is. Here is an enactment by the Dominion parliament which the Court of Appeal yesterday has decided, among other things, will take away the right of a labouring man or the furnisher of material for construction, to the lien which he would have if we left this railway under provincial jurisdiction. Therefore in view of this fact, Mr. Chairman, and of all the other arguments which have been presented against this Bill, I am bound to enter my protest against its passing through this parliament.

Mr. MACDONELL. The subject matter of this Bill was fully threshed out yesterday, and one would think from the lengthy arguments that were urged against it that we would not have heard of it again this session. But apparently that is not the case. Apparently the promoters of this Bill are still bent upon pushing it through the House. Since yesterday we have fresh evidence of the undesirability of this legislation. The Toronto 'Globe' of to-day contains a leading article under the heading 'Resist the usurpers.' I will read a few lines to show how the people of that province regard this matter :

It needs no fine-spun theories of constitutional or any other kind of law to convince the man who is guided by facts and not by fads that a House which gathers its members from the most distant parts of the Dominion is not the best body to decide the conditions and terms upon which a charter for a tramway between Hamilton and Toronto should be granted. Members from British Columbia on the one hand and Nova Scotia on the other, with all the intermediate distances between them, should not be asked to give their minds to such questions. There is a body which both convenience and the constitution point to as best fitted to deal with such local matters, and it is nothing short of an outrage that the Dominion parliament should shut its eyes to that fact at the bidding of the lobbyist. We have no hesitation in saying that the action of the Railway Committee the other day in passing this Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Bill against the official protest of the legal representatives of the city of Hamilton and against the protests of the representatives of the city of Toronto was secured by the touts of the interestd corporations who haunt the lobbies of parliament.

The pretenses under cover of which this Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Bill is brought before the Dominion parliament are so ridiculous that they could only have weight in an assemblage utterly prejudiced by influences which ought to have no place there. One of the contentions is that the charter covers the crossing of two international rivers, and only the federal authority could grant permission for this purpose. It is not necessary to conclude whether these international crossings are really contemplated or not. The point is that there is nothing in the Bill which depends on the carrying out of this announced intention. If the project as outlined in the bill is not carried out in its entirety there is nothing to prevent the company continuing to operate an ordinary street railway, having thus cleverly evaded the supervision of the provincial authorities.

Now that editorial epitomises the arguments that were advanced in this House yesterday against the Bill. It correctly represents the views of the opposition in this House against forcing this Bill upon the people interested. Now, Sir, we find that history is repeating itself with regard to this Bill. We find that in 1903 the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) introduced into this House a Bill concerning the Toronto and Hamilton Railway, a measure very similar to this one. That Bill was subject at the time to a great deal of discussion, both in this House and in the country at large. I cannot do better than read the views then entertained of that Bill by the then Minister of Railways, the Hon. A. G. Blair. That charter was in almost every respect similar to the Bill which is now before the House. I will not take the time of this House to point out the similarity of the two measures, but they were precisely the same in their purpose, conception and methods. The methods to get that Bill through the House were very similar to the methods by which it is hoped to get this Bill through the House. That Bill came before the Railway Committee, it was advanced by certain stages, it came before this House, a motion was made to refer it back because objection was made by the municipalities affected, principally by the city of Toronto, and by the province of Ontario, and the arguments were sufficiently weighty to warrant the then Minister of Railways and Canals in saying that the measure should not have been brought before the House. A motion was made to refer it back to the Railway Committee and these are the words that were used by the Minister of Railways and Canals which will be found at page 6198 of 'Hansard,' 1903 :

Mr. Speaker, the attention of the government has been called to the fact that very strong objections are entertained to further proceeding with this Bill on the ground that the Bill assumes to take legislative control in respect to a local measure out of the hands of the provincial legislature of Ontario. It is maintained that it is open to objection on various grounds, not simply because it is a usurpation by this parliament of a subject that properly belongs to the provincial legislature, but, because the exercise of authority by this parliament over the Bill would be to withdraw an undertaking of this character from the supervision, regulation and control of the province. The government is desirous that the measure should not be proceeded with to-night and I would ask that it stand with the view of hearing from those gentlemen who are here now and who wish to present their objection to the Bill. I think I may say with authority that if it appears from what may be stated to us by these gentlemen that this is not properly a subject for us to legislate upon and that we are in fact withdrawing from the provincial legislature control over a railway which ought to be permitted to remain within the provincial control, the government will not sanction or permit the Bill to pass. We ask now that it may stand for the purpose which I have mentioned. I beg to move that the debate be now adjourned.

And so on. That language characterizes the action of the promoters of this Bill. It very fairly describes the character of the Bill now before the House, because the Bills were very similar, if not identical, in their meaning and methods. We find this measure is attempted to be pressed through this House not only in face of the facts which I have attempted to state but in utter defiance of the resolution recently passed by the Senate of Canada, and by the legislature of Ontario. The resolution which was passed by the Senate being a resolution denying the right of the parliament of Canada to interfere in purely provincial matters, is a very recent resolution, a resolution passed as recently as the 16th of the present month and was carried in the Senate by a vote of 48 to 1, one solitary member being opposed to it. I take the following statement from the Toronto 'Mail and Empire' of April 16: It is headed 'Senate to stand by provinces.'

By a vote of forty-eight to one, the solitary dissenter being Senator Sullivan, the Senate to-day placed itself on record as the guardian of provincial rights, and after this the promoters of any Bill containing these much-abused words: 'For the general advantage of Canada,' must show that the objects of the Bill are really for the general advantage of Canada, and not merely a means of evading provincial control. If this cannot be proved, the Senate will reject the Bill. The motion, which was introduced by Senator David, is as follows:

The Senate will insist upon the application of section 92, of the British North America Act of 1867, in accordance with the spirit and true intent of that section, to the end that the exclusive powers of the legislatures of the provinces of Canada may be protected and preserved.

The Senate will not consider the mere insertion in a Bill of a declaration that a work is for the general advantage of Canada to be in itself sufficient foundation for the exercise of the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

The Senate will not pass any Bill containing a declaration that a local work or undertaking is for the advantage of two or more of the provinces, unless the truth of that declaration has been proved.

The Senate will not consider the presence in a Bill of clauses relating to subjects within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, to be in itself sufficient reason for the enactment of other clauses relating to a subject not within that authority.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that very correctly defines the arguments against this Bill and the language of that resolution could not more correctly state the objections to it than if it were aimed directly at the provisions of this Bill.

Progress reported.

BOUNTIES ON IRON AND STEEL.

House resumed consideration of the proposed resolutions respecting iron and steel bounties.—Mr. Fielding.

Mr. CONMEE. Mr. Chairman, at six o'clock I had made some remarks in reference to the resolutions before the committee dealing with the iron and steel bounties. I had shown that the advantages that accrued to the country from the establishment and growth of these industries were very important, and that although considerable aid had been for a number of years extended the return in the way of increased customs duties to the country had equalled the sum which had been paid out in bounties. There may be some difference between the figures as given by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and also in a return which was brought down earlier in the session and the figures given by myself, but I think that any difference will be accounted for by the fact that I have added to the other statements the figures for the year 1906 and I have included several ports not included in the return to which I have made reference. The figures show that about the same sum has been returned to the revenue, speaking generally, as was paid out in the form of bounties. That is not all the return that has come to the people of this country. The purchasing power of the various establishments with respect to machinery, agricultural products, the products of the factories and industrial works of this country is very great and has contributed largely to the prosperity of the country, which it will be readily admitted, has in turn contributed to the revenue although perhaps in a more indirect form.

There is another feature that might be worthy of consideration, and that is the enormous volume of traffic in the way of transportation both by water and by rail that these institutions have brought about. I gave the figures in some remarks I made last year to show that the allied works at Sault Ste. Marie afforded a volume of transportation greater than the entire grain trade of the country. That shows the immense advantage to the country of the class of industry which we are now discussing. I might point out that I am informed by the manager of the works at Sydney, that, taking the works in that province at Londonderry and Sydney, the volume of traffic is equally as great as at Sault Ste. Marie. If that be so we have a volume of traffic nearly double that of the grain trade of Canada. I think it will be admitted that that is a return to the people of this country that is worthy of consideration. Another important consideration is the amount of capital invested. I have taken some little trouble to obtain the figures ; I do not pretend to say that they are absolutely accurate but I have them on the statements of the managers of the different works. I find that there is about $71,223,000 capital invested. These various works employ a very large force. In 1901 the total force employed was 1,378 and last year it was 10,751. It will be readily seen that this is a very marked increase and must necessarily mean a great measure of prosperity not only to the particular localities where these great works are established but to every section of the country because the pay roll in wages alone amounts to a very large sum. The figures which have been given to me show that the wages in the various works amount now to between $47,000 and $50,000 per month, or something in excess of $12,000,000 a year. It will be readily admitted that such a circulation of money in the form of wages must extend from the very centre to the circumference of this countrty ; every section of the country is benefited and I submit that the agriculturist is benefited to a much greater degree than any other class of people by such expenditure because the purchasing power of the large number of people employed in these works in respect to agricultural products is simply enormous; they are non-producers in that line of products and must necessarily obtain them from the agricultural section.

It is said : Why are these industries to be protected ? There are various reasons why they should be protected and while I do not claim to be expert enough to give all the reasons, I shall give a few reasons which appear to me to be sound and which I believe will be readily admitted. In the first place we are a new country establishing a new industry, an industry that must be established, having regard to the local conditions in Canada, to the character of ores we have to deal with, to the physical features of the country in regard to transportation and having regard in a considerable degree to the Canadian market and to the possibility of foreign markets. This is a serious question, it is always a difficult undertaking to build up an industry of this class, no matter what country may undertake to engage in it, and the history of the iron industry shows that this has been a very serious matter in all countries that have become important producers of iron and steel. There are other very great difficulties connected with the iron industry in this country which has been commented on by Sir George Drummond in a report which he made in 1906, after speaking of the advantages to accrue to the country from the establishment of the iron industry and giving reasons why, in his opinion, the people of Canada should seriously regard this industry as its greatest asset, as the greatest industry which the country could have, he says :

> Is Canada naturally fitted for the enterprise of iron making ? The work of the Geological Survey has amply demonstrated the existence in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Cape Breton, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia, of almost every class of iron ore known to science, and of mineral fuel in Nova Scotia, Cape Breton and British Columbia.

Then he goes on further :

> The moral obligation to utilize such gifts rests upon the government and people of Canada. The mines and forests must be opened up either by the government of the country or if as in the case of other iron producing countries by private capital and enterprise, then, as in the case of the latter, under adequate government encouragement.

Sir, I think this is a pointed statement as to reasons why the iron bounties should have been applied in the years that have gone by and should be applied in the years that are to come for some time yet. Sir George further states :

> Due consideration must be given to the course pursued under like conditions by Great Britain, Belgium and the United States, the method so successfully followed in the initial years of development in these countries being presumably good for Canada.

I submit that the history of the development of the iron trade in Great Britain, Germany, Belgium, the United States and other countries where that industry has become a great industry bears this out. In England where it is advanced to a much greater degree than it has in other countries of Europe, the history is that for many years the works were established under government supervision. To engage in metallurgy in the early days in the history of iron and steel development in England was to enter the public service and after the industrty had been established for many years and the people had become skilled in that particular line of business it was allowed to pass into private hands, but it was protected for a long period of years after that. The same course or perhaps a still more vigorous course was pursued by the government of Belgium. Belgium is not an iron producing country ; they have no mines but there is there a great production of iron and steel nevertheless, although they purchase from other countries the raw material from which to produce these articles.

In the initial stages of the industry they employed the best skill that capital could obtain from England and France; and for many years the government carried it on under their own supervision until the people became skilled in that particular trade. The same has been the case to a large extent in Germany. That country has in a great many ways assisted by government aid far in excess of anything Canada has done the establishment of the iron industry. In regard to Sweden, we find that Swedish iron has obtained a special value in the markets of the world. That is because the government of Sweden has done a great deal to aid in the establishment of that industry and to bring it to its present stage of efficiency. The government not only aided it in an indirect way by affording transportation facilities, but by a system under which the miner was paid so many dollars per ton for his ore at the pit's mouth. That enabled him to produce the ore. The owners of the furnaces and the manufacturers of the steel were advanced certain sums. By pursuing that policy for many years, a policy which they still pursue so far as the production of the ore is concerned, they have developed the iron industry to a very high degree. In Canada this industry should be assisted for the simple reason that it is to-day in its initial stage. I have no doubt the time is close at hand when the industry can manage for itself; but there is still much to be done. It was intimated by the minister that at the end of the next four years the bounties might cease. I hope that it will be a justifiable thing for this parliament to take that view at that time; but even if that view be taken, that is not the last nor all that this parliament can do for the encouragement and building up of the iron and steel industry of this country. There must be provided cheap transportation, and it must reach the localities where the iron deposits exist. If Canada is to hold her position, and advance as she ought to advance in this particular industry, she must produce her own iron from her own ores and manufacture her own steel. Now, I have some figures from the report of Mr. Drummond, in respect to the relative cost of producing iron and steel. Mr. Drummond is well known to be thoroughly acquainted with the subject and reliable in every respect. These figures were compiled nearly ten years ago. He gives the average wages in Canada at that time in this industry as follows: at the blast furnaces, $1.20 a day; at the coal mines, $1.60; at the iron mines, $1.30. In Belgium at the same period the average wages were: At the blast furnaces, 58 cents a day; in the iron works, 83 cents; there is no mining in that country. In Germany, the average wages were: At the blast furnaces, 44 cents a day; day; in the steel works, 68 cents; in the mines, 71 cents. In Great Britain the average wages were: At the blast furnaces, $1.06 a day; in the iron works, $1.08; in the mines, 65 cents. In Sweden the average wages were: At the blast furnaces, 40 cents a day; in the iron works, 65 cents; in the mines, 65 cents. Wages have greatly advanced in Canada since that time; they are nearly double to-day what they were then. I think it will be readily admitted that the advance in Canada is much greater than it has been in those European countries. The cost of the labour is not much over one-half the cost of producing the article. The cost of the ore, transportation facilities, and various other things which enter into the production of a ton of pig-iron in these European countries would be about half what it is in Canada so that having regard to this and the difference in wages the cost of producing a ton of metal in these countries is about one-half of what it costs in Canada so far as I have been able to get the figures from gentlemen well versed in this particular trade. That is a reason why there should be some kind of encouragement either in the form of protection or of bounty. I have stated, and I repeat, that in my judgment the bounty is the much better policy, for the reason that it affords more direct inducement to capital; and I think the experience of our own country has shown that it has worked better, as the growth and development and prosperity of this particular industry has been very much greater under that system than it was under the system of protection, Therefore I need not discuss that question further at the present time. Now, it has been said by the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Chisholm) that the electors of his riding, if left to themselves without influence, would vote unitedly against the iron bounties. I am bound to take issue with that hon. gentleman. I think it will be admitted that there is not a constituency in Ontario—and I would include the county of Huron, which would be benefited more than some others—that is not greatly benefited by these iron works. If the real facts were made known to the electors of any constituency, they would in my opinion be pretty unanimous in support of the iron bounty; because it must be apparent to every one that the products of the agriculturists are purchased to an enormous extent for the maintenance of these establishments, and will continue to be from year to year. Here is an army of ten thousand people employed; I am informed that it is nearer fifteen thousand now. Is that not a great thing for the young men of Canada? Does it not open to them an opportunity to step out and engage in a growing industry, which is bound to become one of the most stable and lasting industries that can be developed in this Dominion? There is a great field there for the young men of Canada, and we are only commencing the development of this great trade. So, I think that if the facts were well known, instead of the petitions which we have had, we should have petitions supporting these bounties. I have here a petition from the province of Quebec—not a petition of this year but of some years ago—signed by thousands of people. These are residents of the vicinity of Radnor and Three Rivers. The agriculturists in that locality have been made acquainted through experience, with the great advantages of the iron trade, because an industry in that line was carried on for a long period of years in that section. That would be the feeling in Ontario also—I speak of that province because it is the one of which I have the greatest knowledge—if the people had an opportunity to realize the advantage of this industry to the agriculturists.

There is another feature of the case. I am not quarrelling with the resolution, in fact I am in hearty sympathy with it; I feel inclined to congratulate the minister upon having met so fairly the demand for this action. But I desire to call attention to the electric smelting, which is a new branch of the industry not yet established in this country. I believe that the action decided upon is a good one and that it will stimulate that branch of industry, but would have liked to have seen the aid a little greater. I should have liked to see this additional bounty of $2.10 per ton established for at least six or seven years instead of beginning to go down on this sliding scale at the end of four years. However, that is not a very important feature. The fact is that a strong inducement is held out to capital to invest in that particular line of manufacture, and I believe that this inducement will bring its results. I believe that when this government made the experiments they did at Sault Ste. Marie, when it was demonstrated as a matter of practical accomplishment that pig metal could be produced from the ores of Canada, they did something which will prove of vast benefit to this country. I believe that having put their hand to the plough, so to speak, they should have continued and proved the process practical as a business success in a commercial way. No matter what the cost might be. The ores treated were what some geologists call refractory ores, ores that are not treated in ordinary furnaces because they contain elements which disqualify them from making the best kind of iron and steel when treated in the ordinary way, and so cannot come into strong competition with the more Besemer grades of our ores or the American ores which are of very high class and which we use very largely and which can be laid down at our furnaces. American mines can be laid down at our furnaces very cheap.

In addition to the reasons I have given why this industry should be strengthened and encouraged, there is the fact that our mines are not developed and our transportation system is not yet perfected, nor is our command of capital as easily obtained in Canada as is the case with those interested in this industry in the United States. All these are reasons that make it still more justifiable on the part of government to go at least as far as it has done in encouraging this industry.

I shall not discuss the question of electric smelting at any length, because the minister has already referred to it. It is true that we have a great variety of ores which are high in metallic iron and produce the best of iron and steel, but which are not suitable for the ordinary furnace because they contain certain elements that militate against the process used in their treatment. But these ores can be successfully treated by the electric process. And, not only that, but the class of steel produced by the electric process is altogether a higher grade than that produced by existing methods. For that reason it would not for a long time to come enter into competition with the iron and steel produced by existing furnaces. The fact is we import all that class of steel—gun metal, steel for heavier castings for electrical generators and motors and heavy machine castings of that class which are now practically all imported into Canada. The electrical process will furnish this grade of material as soon as the industry is established. Not only have we the ore, but we have other conditions which I believe points to Canada as the great iron and steel producing country of the future. There is no other country so far as I know that has one-half the mineral area or one-half the mineral wealth that we possess. Canada possesses double the area of mineral bearing formation possessed by all the great nations of Europe, and from all the statistics which we have the indications are that we have many times the wealth in minerals, especially in iron. As compared with the neighbouring country to the south we have a much greater mineral-producing area. At present they are greatly in advance of us in development. But, as showing what may be hoped for from this industry, let me quote one or two figures showing the production in the United States. The blast furnaces of the United States in 1905 used materials to the value of $178,941,000, while the value of the products was $228,911,000. This, be it remembered, was from the blast furnaces alone. The iron and steel works—the establishments which manufacture the metal into commodities for commercial purposes—used materials valued at $441,204,302, and the value of their product was $673,967,026. Just contemplate for a moment the enormous amount of capital and prosperity these figures mean for a country even as great as the United States. A part would mean greatness for the Dominion of Canada. I was about to refer to the facilities we possess not only as to ore, but in regard to our natural water-powers. Any one who has studied the map of this continent must admit that we possess great advantages in this respect. Already at the town of Fort William, in the constituency I represent, there are 30,000 horse-power available from Kekabeka Falls, and there are three or four other great powers on that river and its tributaries which ought to be capable of producing more than 50,000 horse-power. I am not drawing too long a bow when I say that at any point within 100 miles of Fort William and Port Arthur 400,000 horse-power could be concentrated. Perhaps it could be concentrated at one point as cheaply as at another, but at all events cheap power can be obtained and for purposes such as this cheap power is the basis of success. I make the statement, knowing something in a practical way of what I am saying, that 400,000 horse-power can be developed in that section for less than $10 per horse-power.

Mr. SPROULE. What power is on the Nepigon and Sturgeon rivers?

Mr. CONMEE. The Nepigon river could furnish over 200,000 horse-power, and there are nine points at which a large plant could be established and furnished with power. The Nepigon river has no tributaries, but Nepigon lake has a great many tributaries, and a very great quantity of horse-power can be created to the north and west shores of that lake.

Mr. SPROULE. What about the Black Sturgeon river and the Pigeon river?

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman need not worry himself about either of these rivers; but I can tell him, if he wants to know, that the Pigeon river is an international stream, and it is not a great producer of power. I do not know that more than 10,000 or 12,000 horse-power can be produced on that particular stream. Near Peninsula harbour, on the north shore of Lake Superior, there are several great streams on which power can be developed, and the same may be said in reference to the country west towards Kenora. In all these sections there are known to exist great deposits of iron. Quebec has also big advantages in respect to its water-powers, and therefore the encouragement which has been held out for electric smelting will conduce greatly to the advantage of Canada, and the government ought to be congratulated for going as far as they do. I believe their policy will result in a development which will enure to the very great advantage, not only of Ontario, but of all other provinces of this Dominion.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I am a protectionist and, more than that, I am the son of a protectionist, and I do not think there is any discredit in it. I believe that the main basis of national greatness is the production of iron, and I believe that Canada will never take the position she ought to take on this continent and beyond it, unless she is a nation producing iron from her own ores, with her own fuel, and by her own citizens. I believe there is no class in the community who will benefit so much from the production of iron as our friends the farmers. The best market for the farmers product is the market afforded by the iron industry, as will be found illustrated in every country that has become a great iron producer. If our farmers have been misled in regard to the encouragement of the iron industry, that is to be attributed to the propaganda undertaken in this country some years ago by the politicians of the Liberal party. An effort was made to induce the farmers to think that the encouragement of the iron industry was not good for the country, and they were told that one blast furnace running half a day for a few weeks in the year would produce all the pig iron that could be consumed in Canada. That statement has been proven to be fallacious. Most of the farmers I know are protectionists themselves, and are willing to encourage the production of iron in Canada either by duty or by bounty. But the great concern of the Canadian farmer is cheap transportation and good railway facilities. If we are to have good railway facilities in Canada we must produce our own rails in large quantities and our own cars and our own locomotives. We must be independent of all other nations for our railway equipment. From that point of view alone we ought to encourage this industry. There is a lack of railway facilities in Canada, and that is largely due to the circumstance that the railways cannot get within Canada that equipment they require. I believe the day is coming when we will have steel cars, and there is reason to believe that large cars composed of steel will help to solve the transportation problem. For these things we need to have an iron industry of our own. I am prepared at any time, and I am prepared most of all in the interest of our farmers, to support a national policy that will make Canada a great iron producing country. We have all the fuel we need, but whether or not we have these immense water-powers, and we are now led to believe that electrical energy can be made the great smelting force of the immediate future. I go further; I want to see a great iron industry in this country, and I want to see Canadian iron used in the manufacture of Canadian ships.

I believe we can establish in this country a great steel plate shipbuilding industry, and we have the proper place to do it in the maritime provinces. But to work out all these things we must first have an iron industry, and you cannot have an iron and steel industry unless you make the necessary sacrifices, and if you do make the necessary sacrifices you will find a return double or treble the cost. While I respect the arguments that have been presented here on behalf of the farmers, I do not quite agree that the incidence of that taxation to which they object, falls upon them. In some way it does not fall on them, but I have not time to elucidate that point at present. If any part does come out of the farmer, there is a compensation that more than pays him for the sacrifice. I am prepared to say that when the question is put fairly before the farmers they will be just as much protectionist in regard to iron as they are in regard to their own products. But don't let us have a policy that is indefinite in regard to these matters ; let us once and for all embark upon a thorough going policy of the encouragement of iron industries in this country. To-day we are practically all agreed in the idea of encouraging native industries, and if to-day the country is very prosperous it is largely owing to the fact that in former days a policy of protection was established; and if it has not done all that was expected of it, it is because it was discouraged by the Liberal party. But to-day we have almost a united nation, the two great parties are united in favour of the encouragement of the production of iron in this country. That being the case, let us adopt a firm, strong and continuous policy in favour of the production of iron, and I believe that in a short time we will rival the United States. That is in fact the foundation stone of the great success of manufacturing industries in the United States, the reason that they have become the greatest manufacturing nation in the world. We have only to follow their example to achieve a like success. Let us look more and more to the example of the United States, and not be afraid to call ourselves protectionists in regard to the production of iron. I say again that I believe if this question is fairly placed before the farmers they will join with every other class in upholding the policy that will build up our nation and develop the resources of Canada.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I may say that on general principles I am opposed to giving bounties to any industry. I can see no reason why any particular industry should be bounty fed. I can see no reason why a man who uses iron should not pay a duty upon it just as he does on his dry goods. The hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) has just referred to the way the United States has been built up. So far as I am able to learn, their iron industries have not been built up by bounties but by a duty. The only thing in these resolutions I am in favour of is that clause which gives a bounty in order to experiment on smelting by electricity ; but I would only continue that bounty until it has been demonstrated that electrical smelting can be made a success. Now we have been giving bounties upon iron from 1883 to the present time. In 1894 the government gave bounties of $2 a ton on pig iron and steel ingots, I believe, and that arrangement was to terminate in 1899. At that time the Liberal party were entirely opposed to the system of bounties. In fact I have an extract from a speech of Sir Richard Cartwright in which he declared he was opposed entirely to the whole thing, and I think he was right. I would feed the industry with bounties only until it became an established success. Now the Act passed in 1894 contained a sliding scale which was to terminate, I think, in 1899. The Liberal party came to power in 1896, and in 1897 they renewed the bounties, to terminate in 1902, on a sliding scale, if I remember correctly. In 1899 they again renewed these bounties to terminate on the 20th of June, 1907. Now why was this done ? Was it not to make the people believe that when we reached these dates the bounties would cease ? Is there any good reason why they should be continued after it has been demonstrated that we can make iron in this country ? Now I would like to ask the minister a few questions, I know he is good-natured and will give us the information if he can. The hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) gave us a lot of figures, but I am afraid they would not stand investigation, therefore I would like to have the figures from the minister himself. He may not be able to give them to us to-night, but I hope he will do so before the Bill is finally passed. I would like to know in the first place his reason for renewing the bounties. I regret that I did not hear him make his explanations this afternoon. I want to know how many companies there are in Canada that are engaged in smelting iron and which get the bounties. I would like to know where their works are located, how many hands they employ, how much wages they pay, what is the output of each company on which bounty is paid. I would like to know what profit they are making. Some hon. gentlemen may think that is something we cannot get at, but I can tell them there are some companies who publish the profits that they make. I have one case right here. If hon. gentlemen will turn to the Toronto 'Globe' of the 19th of February, 1907, they will find that the Nova Scotia Steel & Coal Company paid on their ordinary stock 1½ per quarter, that they increased their sales by $956.000 the last year, and they made a profit of $960,281.93.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Can the hon. gentleman give us any idea what portion of these earnings was the result of the manufacture of iron and steel ?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I cannot.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I may tell my hon. friend that nearly all that profit was the result of their operation of a coal mine. The Nova Scotia Steel & Coal Company is in a somewhat different category from other iron and steel companies inasmuch as they are operating both a very large coal mine and an ore mine.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I think I would rather have an answer from the minister than from the hon. gentleman. He may know a little bit about it but he does not know it definitely enough to give us the information. It is in a general way that the hon. gentleman answers. I am not in a position to know particularly about this company, but here is a statement they give of the profit they make. He smiled when I asked the minister if he could tell us the profits made by this company. They publish to the world the profits they have made and I can assure him they are not very small. In one year they made $960,281 and the year before they made $559,900.

Mr. JOHNSTON. That is from their coal.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. They paid on their preference stock eight per cent during the past year and carried to rest $1,180,783. I think we have a right to know from these companies that we are paying a bounty to, the number of hands they employ, the wages they pay, where their factories are located and the capital invested. I have the facts here in the 'Farmer's Sun' of the 13th February, 1907, and they point out that in 1900 the bounties paid to the smelters of iron in Ontario were $58,000 more than the wages they paid and that in 1903 they were $28,000 more than the wages they paid. There have been in the neighbourhood of seventy petitions sent by the farming communities against these bounties on iron and steel. Some of them came from my own riding and as far as I have been able to learn the farmers generally are disatisfied with these bounties. If the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) went into my section of the country and discussed and defended bounties as he has done to-day he would not be as popular as he is at the present time.

Mr. CONMEE. I would be perfectly willing to go there and discuss them.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I do not doubt it, but you would not be a candidate at the same time.

Mr. CONMEE. No. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I do not mind ; I am a good-natured kind of a fellow.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman says that these furnacemen have made some money. I hope they have. I am glad to see somebody making some money in this country. Let me point out to the hon. gentleman that Carnegie made some money in the United States and I have heard of some other gentlemen who have made some money. Nevertheless the United States is producing, of this class of material, over $600,000,000 worth a year and I would like to know if, because one or two men have made a little money, that nation should lose that great industry.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I suppose that being particularly Irish I might answer the question by asking another. Can you tell me whether the American people are paying bounties on iron or do they protect their industries ?

Mr. CONMEE. The American people, in so far as I know, have not paid exactly in the form of bounties. They have protected this industry but they have done a great deal more. They cancelled the contracts which Carnegie and the Bethlehem Company had for the production of certain qualities of steel and they gave them double the price. They justified that upon the ground that they wanted to keep skilled labour in the United States and the people of the United States approved of it. They gave to the railways which run into Wisconsin and Minnesota, from which a large quantity of the iron ore that we use in Ontario comes, 12,000 acres per mile including the land, pine timber and everything else. That is the way they have provided for transportation and they have assisted the development of the mines.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. That is not a bounty on iron and steel but it is a bonus to railways.

Mr. CONMEE. That is part of the aid.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Yes, that is part of the aid. The hon. gentleman talks about cancelling contracts and giving large prices to these people. I would like to know if he would justify that.

Mr. CONMEE. I would.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I never voted for a man to get more than the contract price on any job he had when I was in the town council and I will not do it to-day. I believe that when men, after fair competition, get a contract they should stand by whatever the contract price is.

Mr. CONMEE. It was a question of experimenting in the initial stage with certain qualities of metal.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I have already stated that I am in favour of an experiment being made in smelting by electricity. I am satisfied to take the responsibility of voting for that but I am not going to vote for it for all time. If it is necessary to demonstrate that they can make a success of it I am in favour of assisting in that experiment. I have asked the minister quite a number of questions and I think perhaps that he will be able to give us some information. If he cannot give it all to us to-night perhaps he will give the balance of it later on. I will not take up any more of the time of the House because it is so late in the session.

Mr. FIELDING. Some of the questions which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Uriah Wilson) has asked, I am afraid, I could not answer, but for some of them I think he will find an answer in the observations I addressed to the House this afternoon. I am sorry I had not the pleasure of having the hon. gentleman as a listener but he would not expect me to repeat them to-night. There is some information which he has asked for that I will give at once—the number of concerns which are receiving bounties, their location and the amounts they have received. The statement is as follows :

That gives all the information as to the locality, the company, the various items on which they received bounty and the total amount received in each case.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Would the minister get the number of hands employed in the institutions and the wages paid ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am not sure I could give that.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. You could get it.

Mr. FIELDING. I suppose I could on applying to the companies.

Mr. URIAH WLSON. I think it is desirable that the House should have it.

Mr. FIELDING. I must not promise it ; I may not be able to get the information. The hon. member made a remark with regard to the payment of dividends. I think the company to which he referred, for several years paid no dividends at all on its ordinary stock. It has paid one recently of 1¼ per cent.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. 1½ per cent quarterly.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, but it was only for one quarter and what will happen next quarter remains to be seen.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. All I can say is that the article I presume was given to the 'Globe' by these people.

Mr. FIELDING. The dividend, I think, was paid for the quarter and whether or not it is to be continued is a matter of which neither my hon. friend nor I can be sure. It is true, as stated by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston), that that particular company has a number of branches of business. It is conducting iron mining operations in Newfoundland, irrespective altogether of its works in Nova Scotia, and it ships the ore to foreign countries.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Do they get bounties on what they do there ?

Mr. FIELDING. They ship the ore to foreign countries.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Just in the raw state ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, in the raw state. Then they are conducting coal mining operations on which I hope they have a profit, and the iron and steel business. However, that I understand has been for several years in a languishing condition, and they have only recently been able to pay the 1½ per cent for one quarter. I hope they will be able to continue paying dividends at that rate.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. You have not given the reasons for the bounties.

Mr. FIELDING. I gave that this afternoon for half an hour, and I really feel that my hon. friend is not supported by the general sentiment of the House in his attitude in this matter. I know he has taken the position in the belief that he is acting in the farmers' interest. However, as my hon. friend from York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) has pointed out, it may be the farmers have not been as strongly opposed to this as some of the hon. gentlemen think. At all events on consideration they will see that it is a policy that on the whole gives results and is not by any means open to the objections taken, more particularly as the amount to be paid is not likely to be more than one half of what the farmers have been told is involved in the granting of these bounties. We cannot be sure, of course; everything will depend on the volume of business, but as I said, if we take the figures for 1906 and make an allowance of 10 per cent increase for each year we find that the total amount to be paid will not be more than one half the amount stated in the press by those opposing the granting of bounties.

Mr. CALDWELL. I have the figures here for 1905. The amount of bounty paid that year was $1,540,202. I have a statement here as to the eight iron and steel furnaces in operation in Canada in 1905 giving the total number of people employed the workers, as 6,716.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Are the figures official?

Mr. CALDWELL. They are official, and the amount of wages for that year paid to these 6,716 people was $4,122,976, so that the statement that the wages paid to the smelters are equalled by the amount of bonus given is inaccurate.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Is it the intention when these bounties are given for iron and steel for the government to see that that bonus is applied to paying the arrears of dividends on preferred stock?

Mr. LANCASTER. I am afraid the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Uriah Wilson) is not as far wrong in his views as the Minister of Finance and the member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) would indicate. I do not suppose it is necessary for me to inform the House that on general principles I am a protectionist representing a protectionist constituency, but I have heard of protection running mad, going entirely beyond the principle of protection, and because a man used to be a free trader and has been converted, he may go to such an extreme that he makes the principle he has undertaken to support ridiculous. The hon. member for Rainy River, (Mr. Conmee) has given some information here that has confirmed me in the view I had thoughtfully come to, that the time had come to discontinue the bounties. At the beginning of the session I presented a good many petitions from my own county and from other parts of Canada from farmers against the continuance of the bounties. I cannot agree with the hon. member for Rainy River and the hon. member for South York in indicating that the farmers upon this question do not know their business and are not as well informed as they should be. The intelligent farmers of Ontario have studied this question, they have heard it debated, they have been more or less convinced by Liberal politicians before 1896, that a government that had protection in any shape or form was committing robbery and then they had the statements of hon. gentlemen on the other side of what might be said in favour of bounties under certain circumstances. I must say that it is entirely erroneous for any gentleman to suppose that the farmers of Ontario at all events have not arrived at that point where they can properly and reasonably judge whether bounties of this kind should or should not be paid. The hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) undertook to give us what he thought were good reasons for continuing the payment of bounties. I am bound to say that every reason he advanced has confirmed me in my opinion that we should cease to pay them. He says that we have every natural facility for producing iron, we have the iron ore, we have all kinds of cheap water-power, everything is most favourable for the production of iron except in some localities the lack of fuel. If that is so he has while expressing himself as in favour of this resolution given the very best reasons why it should not pass. If we are so placed in this country with all the natural facilities, with ore easily obtained, with all the power necessary to work machinery to convert that from ore into iron, if we are so blessed in all these matters, why in the name of common sense is it necessary for us to continue taking from the farmers, the wage earners and the taxpayers of the country generally enormous sums of money for the purpose of helping that industry along? I do not know how far my hon. friend is inclined to carry out theological doctrines in this House; but if he wants to justify that portion of scripture which says that you shall give to him who hath and take away from him who hath not, he is doing it by voting for these resolutions. These people, he says, are trying to get rich and to prosper as much as possible, and because they are prospering and amassing wealth, he says, we should go on and give them the means whereby they can amass more and put themselves beyond all chance of insolvency.

Mr. CONMEE. Will my hon. friend permit me to remind him of another passage in that book?

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not think I ought to take reminders from my hon. friend on that subject.

Mr. CONMEE. There is another passage that says you ought not to bear false witness.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think I am as able as the hon. gentleman to say how these things should be applied.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman has no right to put words in my mouth, and then start to knock down what I never used.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman wants to make all the speeches himself on this question, but he must allow others to say something.

Mr. CONMEE. I am not going to allow the hon. gentleman to misrepresent me.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman made an argument to show that these industries were progressing; he produced facts and figures to show how they had progressed under these bounties. There comes a time, however, when you must cease taking taxes from the ordinary taxpayers and giving them to others. The hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) is always anxious to get his views before the House. I quite understand that these bounties will assist interests in the county which he represents, and I do not blame him for trying to get a lot of money from Canada as a whole and have it chucked into his county for the benefit of his constituents; but I think I have a right to say a word on behalf of the ordinary taxpayer who has to pay this money. I would be in favour of paying bounties of this kind if the necessity for them was shown; but after you have raised the infant to maturity and it has ceased to be an infant and has become an adult, able to make his own way, and has got into the condition of prosperity described by the hon. member for Rainy River, the time has come when he should not be helped at the expense of other people. The gentlemen who signed those petitions have a right to be heard on this question. Very few of the hon. members of this House appear to have read those petitions or to have paid any attention to the arguments put forward in them. I have not heard from either of the cabinet ministers who spoke to-day on this subject any reason justifying a continuance of these bounties; but I have heard from the hon. member for Rainy River reasons which struck me as the very best for refusing to pay them. The hon. member for Rainy River and the hon. member for South York both say that if these bounties were properly placed before the farmers, they would support them. I take issue with these hon. gentlemen. I say that the farmers of this country, after the experience we have had of the bounties paid in the past, and the discussions that have taken place on this question, have arrived at such a state of intelligence on the matter that I do not think it is fair to say that they do not know what they are talking about. I have listened to all that has been said in support of these bounties, but I have not yet heard one good reason to show that the farmers are benefited by them. It is said in general terms that they are. If they were, I think they would know it. I do not think any reason has been advanced to-day for continuing to pay these large sums of money at the expense of the taxpayers, who show by the petitions they have presented that they regard it as unfair to themselves. It is a special tax. As the hon. member for Lennox has truly said, it is not like a duty, which produces a corresponding benefit. It is a special present made at the expense of the people, who have petitioned this House not to make it, and made for the aggrandisement and increased wealth of industries which have reached a period of development when they no longer require such aid. Under these circumstances, as the case presents itself to my mind, I am bound, if the matter comes to a vote, to vote against these resolutions.

Mr. CONMEE. I submit to the judgment of the House that it is not fair for an hon. member to refer to a part of a statement made, and leave out another portion of it which would give it a very different meaning. If my hon. friend cannot apprehend what was stated, I am not responsible for that. I never put the question in the form which the hon. member claims that I did. I put it on the ground that we were a young country in the initial stages of the development of this industry. That was the main basis of my argument. I did say that we had the ores and the water-powers. I also said that our mines must be developed, that transportation must be extended, and that we had to have the capital, and the encouragement of government assistance. I made all these statements, but my hon. friend says that I gave a glowing account of the resources we had, and therefore that no assistance was necessary. I want my hon. friend to be fair.

Mr. LANCASTER. I will accept your apology.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I do not rise to prolong unnecessarily the debate. As so many hon. gentlemen have spoken on the question, it is pretty well threshed out. I only rise, as coming from an agricultural district and knowing the sentiments of the farmers, to enter my protest against the bounty system that has been adopted by the present government. So, Sir, I am a protectionist. I believe in affording adequate protection to all the natural industries of our country—and I believe in protecting all industries alike. I have protested strongly on this floor against the failure of the government to afford sufficient protection to some of our industries.

Mr. CARVELL. Especially tobacco.

Mr. CLEMENTS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) lived in my constituency, he would advocate protection on tobacco, as I do. The hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) advocates the policy here proposed. The industry is one which he hopes to see established in his own constituency. In addition to hearing the hon. member for Rainy River, I should like to hear those hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who represent agricultural constituencies and who are not so intimately connected with this industry as is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee). The farmers are protesting strongly against this bounty system. I have presented petitions against it, and I think the time has come when this bounty system should be abolished. While I am in favour of every adequate protection for every native industry I am opposed to the bounty system. And, so far as the iron and steel industry is concerned, as the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) has said, we have reared that industry until it has become an adult and ought not to be fed at the public expense any longer. I protest against the bounty system, whatever interest it may be used to favour. But, as I have said, I am in favour of protection——

Mr. JOHNSTON. What protection would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) give to pig iron, for instance?

Mr. CLEMENTS. In answering that, let me say that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) accused me in the course of a debate on the tobacco question, of advocating the adoption of the American tariff for this country. I want to say—and I say it though I stand alone—that we as Canadians would do much better if we upheld the policy of Canada for the Canadians, as our neighbours upheld the policy of America for the Americans. I have advocated, in regard to many agricultural products duty for duty with our American neighbours.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Clements) extend to iron?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Johnston) is so well satisfied with his whole opinion on the iron question that he is not likely to accept any advice that I might give.

Mr. FIELDING. As it has been represented that we on this side question the intelligence of the farmers, I would like to say that, if there is any difference between our opponents and ourselves on that point, it is because we have such a good opinion of the farmers as to believe that, when the facts in this case are put before them, they will appreciate them. For instance, the farmers in the constituency of my hon. friend (Mr. Clements) have a protection of perhaps a hundred per cent on their tobacco. We believe that those farmers are not so ungenerous as not to allow the manufacturers of iron and steel from fifteen per cent to seventeen and a half per cent.

Mr. CLEMENTS. What protection has the American tobacco grower?

Mr. FIELDING. That is not the question.

Mr. CLEMENTS. That is the question I want to know about.

Mr. FIELDING. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) is somewhat alone in that, and I do not want to keep him company. The Canadian tobacco grower in the county the hon. gentleman represents, has a protection of 75 per cent on his raw leaf tobacco, and we believe he is too fair minded a man to deny those in the iron industry a protection of from 15 to 17½ per cent. My hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster) treated this as a Nova Scotia question, and said that this money was being dumped into Nova Scotia.

Mr. LANCASTER. I desire to explain that I said what I did because the hon. gentleman from Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) was interrupting me and was defending this proposal. I said he was anxious to uphold it because he had an institution in his own county that would get the benefit of this bounty.

Mr. FIELDING. I merely wish to point out that out of about $2,000,000 paid in bounties on iron and steel in 1906, nearly $800,000 was paid in Ontario. In the second place, I would point out that while the works of some iron and steel companies are located in Nova Scotia, the capital in those works is largely Ontario capital, and the profits, if there are to be any profits, will not be dumped into Nova Scotia but will be dumped into the hands of shareholders in the province of Ontario. The people of Nova Scotia are not rich enough to own these stocks. I take exception to this being regarded as a Nova Scotia matter. The question as to whether the policy is a good one or a bad one, is one question, but if it is good, it is good for the whole Dominion, and is not presented in the interests of any one province.

Mr. LANCASTER. Seeing that the hon. Minister of Finance has misunderstood me, I desire to set myself right. The hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) did not misunderstand me. He was persistently interrupting me and I said that he wanted to support this policy because he had an institution in his county that would benefit by it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Just a word—

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Johnston) will excuse me. The hon. Finance Minister does not need the help of the very alert member for Cape Breton, (Mr. Johnston), and besides, the less he talks about these matters the better it is for his party. The Minister of Finance accuses me of speaking of this as a Nova Scotia question. I think he is in error. I did not mention Nova Scotia.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. No, what I said was that the member for Cape Breton had an institution in his county that would benefit by this policy and therefore, I could well understand that he was specially interested. I appealed to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Johnston) to be broad enough to deal with this matter as affecting the whole Dominion. I never said a word to show that I objected to this proposal as giving money to Nova Scotia or to any other special part of the Dominion. My objection was that a special industry was being fed at the expense of the taxpayers of the Dominion.

Mr. FIELDING. I think that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) will find by 'Hansard' that he is mistaken.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Just one word of personal explanation in reference to the observations of my hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara. I hope that hon. gentleman will not think that I was at all disturbed by anything that he said or that I should be disturbed by anything that he could say on a question of which he knows so little as he knows of this.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then, why did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Johnston) interrupt me so much ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. My complaint was that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) had undertaken to quote scripture, and that he did not do it correctly, and so, Mr. Chairman, I wished you to call him to order.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. At this late period of the session, I shall be very brief in my remarks, that course being all the more necessary in view of the fact that the supporters of the government seem anxious to prolong the discussion and delay the progress of the measure. As a representative of a rural constituency, I protest against these high bounties. I am a protectionist and am in favour of putting on such duties as will protect the industries of this country. But the bounties here proposed carry protection beyond what is necessary. These concerns are in a position to stand in competition with the outside world and do it successfully, and I think it is not in the interests of this Dominion to take out of the pockets of our farmers large sums of money in order to pay it to these concerns. The government has seen fit to lower the duties on iron and steel products for the benefit of certain concerns which use large quantities of these commodities. That means that the duties formerly paid by these concerns will have to be paid by the ordinary consumer, especially by the farmers. And they have to pay the bounties provided for under this measure. Thus we increase the burdens upon the consumer in both ways. It is unfair to the ordinary taxpayers of this Dominion to compel them to pay bounties which are to be continued for so many years. During the early stages of an industry, I should have no objection to giving them protection in a fair way. And, if there are new inventions to be tried, for instance, the electrical process for the production of iron and steel, I would have no objection to voting a reasonable amount to compensate in some degree for the heavy initial expense of experimental work. But, while I should be willing to go thus far, I register my strong protest against these high bounties.

Mr. FIELDING. I would call the attention of the committee to one or two trifling amendments. In subsection (e) of section 2 the word 'ingots' appears in two places. I propose to strike it out, for the reason that steel is made now in some other form, and it is not wise to limit this to ingots. In section 4, the same word appears, and I desire to have it removed from that section also. I also ask consent to the following amendment in relation to the bounty on steel by the electric process :

Provided that bounty, as on pig iron under this section may be paid upon the molten iron from the ore which in the electric furnace enters into the manufacture of steel by the direct process—the weight of such iron to be ascertained from the weight of the steel so manufactured.

The object of that is to remove a possible doubt. We had a question at one time as to whether the pig iron in the molten state was eligible for the pig iron bounty and the courts determined that although the molten iron was not allowed to cool it was nevertheless pig iron and entitled to a bounty. We want to make it clear that the advantage, if it be an advantage, which has been extended to the established furnaces shall also extend to this new experiment, if you call it an experiment, with respect to electric smelting. We put in words to make it clear that the same rule shall be applied to the electric smelting as has been applied to the other smelters.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (Bill 173) respecting bounties on iron and steel made in Canada.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read a first and second time, and the House went into committee thereon.

Mr. FIELDING. The Bill is an exact transcript of the resolutions prepared in the usual form, with the amendments to which I have called the attention of the committee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is section 5 intended as sarcasm?

Mr. FIELDING. What is that?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It says the Minister of Trade and Commerce shall be charged with the administration of this Act; I did not know if I heard it correctly.

Mr. FIELDING. You did.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BOUNTY ON BINDER TWINE.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend chapter 5 of the statutes of 1903, intituled: 'An Act respecting the manufacture of Binder Twine in Canada,' and to provide that the following be added thereto after section 1 thereof, viz.:

1a. That the Governor in Council may authorize the payment of a bounty to any corporation, firm or person, manufacturing cordage in Canada from manilla fibre, such bounty to be equal to the amount paid as export duty in the Philippine Islands on manilla fibre produced on those islands, and used in the manufacture of cordage in Canada; the said bounty to be payable only in respect of manilla cordage manufactured in Canada, on and after first day of January, 1907.

Provided, however, that the bounty shall not exceed three-eighths of one cent per pound on the manilla fibre so used in the manufacture of cordage.—Mr. Fielding.

Mr. FIELDING. This resolution provides for the extension of an arrangement which was made several years ago and which arises out of the peculiar condition of affairs in connection with the trade in manilla fibre. In former years when the Philippine Islands were under the government of Spain there was an export duty amounting to three-eighths of a cent per pound upon all manilla fibre shipped from the islands. When the islands became colonies of the United States that export duty was continued as respects all countries except the United States. The consequence was that by this artificial arrangement the manufacturer of cordage in the United States was enabled to buy his raw material at three-eighths of a cent per pound less than the Canadian manufacturer. We had placed binder twine on the free list. If that condition were to remain the American manufacturer could buy his manilla fibre three-eighths of a cent per pound cheaper than the Canadian manufacturer and he could send the binder twine into Canada free of duty. The placing of binder twine on the free-list was of course regarded as a disadvantage to the Canadian manufacturer, and we thought he ought not be placed under the further disadvantage of competition with the United States under the peculiar circumstances described. We thought we should make good to the manufacturers of binder twine this three-eighths of a cent per pound which he had to pay as an extra tax in buying his manilla. That has been in existence for some years, and we paid last year according to that arrangement some $15,000 as bounty to the manufacturers of binder twine. In the new tariff we have enlarged the free list by including a considerable volume of cordage for the use of the fishing industry. We determined that we would extend to the manufacturers of cordage the same advantage with regard to the manilla fibre as we had already provided in the case of binder twine. At first we proposed to limit it to the particular forms of cordage which were put on the free list, but the customs officials found that it would lead to considerable trouble and that it would only make a small amount of difference if we included all. We have in this resolution proposed that for all of the manilla fibre used in the manufacture of cordage they shall receive a bounty equal to three-eighths of a cent per pound, which they are obliged to pay in the way of export duty in the Philippine Islands. The figures on the imports for 1906 show that if we were to pay this bounty of three-eighths of a cent per pound on all the manilla fibre that is used, outside of what we now pay for binder twine, it would add about $23,000 to the outlay. That is the outside figure that this resolution can involve by way of bounty on the figures of last year. We think that as the amount is not very large, and as the manufacturer, either of binder twine or cordage, is placed under a substantial disadvantage by this peculiar condition in relation to the cost of manilla fibre, we should extend to him the same aid we gave a couple of years ago as respects binder twine.

An hon. MEMBER. What comes from Manilla?

Mr. FIELDING. Only from Manilla. Of course there are many things used in the manufacture of cordage beside manilla, and we do not touch them at all. But for the limited amount of manilla fibre that is used, we compensate the manufacturer to the extent of three-eighths of one cent per pound, which has been brought about in the manner I have described.

An hon. MEMBER. What do the Americans charge?

Mr. FIELDING. Certain kinds of binder twine are free, but if there is any manilla in them it is dutiable, a substantial rate, an hon. gentleman says 45 per cent. But certain kinds with no manilla fibre are admitted free.

Mr. LENNOX. This is only to extend it to the cordage branch. It is already provided as regards the binder twine ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Resolution reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 174) respecting the manufacture of binder twine in Canada.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time and second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS ACT—AMENDMENTS.

Bill (No. 165) to amend the Customs Act—Mr. Paterson—read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to item 35 on Public Bills and Orders :

House in committee on Bill (No. 5) an Act to amend the Act respecting certificates to masters and mates of ships.

This is a Bill that went to a special committee at the instance of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur). The committee have considered and reported it with some amendments to the House. It is a very important measure and the understanding when it went to the committee was that notwithstanding the government might in the meantime take all days for its own business it would not prevent it being dealt with when it came back from the committee. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, we know, is not in the Dominion now and I would like to know what position the Minister of Finance intends to take. Of course, I am also pressed by those who think this legislation should be passed this session, if possible.

Mr. FIELDING. As the Bill in question, while one of importance, might give rise to some controversy and there is a general desire to bring the session to a close, I will have to ask my hon friend (Mr. Lancaster) not to press it further in the present session. In the absence of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), who has given it his particular attention, I think we should have some hesitation in going on with it now, so that we will have to take the responsibility of asking the hon. gentleman to let it stand until next session.

SENATOR FOR ROUGEMONT.

Mr. H. B. AMES (Montreal, St. Antoine). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, on the 18th April, I asked the leader of the House (Mr. Fielding) if all the documents had been bought down that could be brought down in reference to the appointment of a senator for the district of Rougemont. At that time the hon. leader of the House stated that he would make inquiries and ascertain whether there were any other documents that could be laid on the table of the House in reference to this matter. I would like to ask if this has been done ?

Mr. FIELDING. I made inquiry of my brother ministers and I find that there are no documents on record, and therefore I am not able to add anything to the information already included in the return. The hon. gentleman referred to some petition that he understood had been circulated. It is quite evident, if there were some petitions of that kind, that the minister to whom they were addressed regarded them as personal and has not placed them on the files. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) being away, I could not get any information, but I am informed that these petitions were not addressed to His Excellency the Governor General, but were addressed to a minister. Of course, a petition addressed to His Excellency is a public document, while a communication addressed to an individual might or might not be a public document.

Mr. AMES. Is it probable that these petitions were addressed to the right hon. leader of the government ?

Mr. FIELDING. I was told that the petition referred to was not addressed to the leader of the government but to another minister. However, my information is not authoritative on that. My hon. friend may have better information than I have concerning that.

COAL STRIKE IN THE NORTHWEST.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I would like to inquire whether or not the government has any further news as to the condition in the west with respect to the threatened strike ?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Minister of Labour). I received a few minutes ago long telegrams from both the operators and the miners, each side disclaiming being the cause of the trouble. I have received also during the day a telegram from Mr. King saying that he would reach Fernie where a conference would be held this evening with both parties. The train was late, but the Canadian Pacific Railway had been kind enough to give him a special train which would reach Fernie in time. I expect in the morning to have some further news for the House, and I hope some good news.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister has kept us pretty well advised as to the telegrams up to date and perhaps he would have no objection to communicating these telegrams to the House.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly I will.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister has not them here ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have just one, that from the miners, which I would not like to read without having the other. I will bring them down in the morning.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I would like to direct the attention of the hon. leader of the House (Mr. Fielding) to certain returns not yet brought down which we would like to have expedited :

Copy of all applications for the lease of grazing lands between February 1, 1905, and August 1, 1905.—Mr. M. S. McCarthy.

Copy of all correspondence in re the resignation of W. B. McInnes as governor of the Yukon.—Mr. White.

All documents re coal lands leased, sold, &c., from January 1, 1906, to date.—Mr. Lake.

All correspondence, &c., in re the leasing of timber berths Nos. 824, 1062, 1107, 1108, 1171 and 1212.—Mr. Boyce.

These returns relate to matters in the Department of the Interior. Then there is one from the Department of Marine and Fisheries :

Copy of all correspondence in re naval reserve.—Mr. A. C. Macdonell.

There is one relating to the Department of Public Works :

Total expenditure in each constituency each year from 1897-1906, on harbours, rivers, public buildings, &c.—Mr. Sproule.

STANDARD CHEMICAL COMPANY, LIMITED.

Mr. L. ROBITAILLE (Quebec County). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I would like to have some information from the Department of Customs with respect to an order of the House asking for all correspondence relating to the transactions of the Standard Chemical Company, Limited, with the Department of Customs and the Department of Inland Revenue. The papers brought down do not include all called for by the motion. I would like to know from the Minister of Customs if I may expect some more. The same question was asked of the Minister of Inland Revenue, but no papers have been brought down. I understand that the deputy minister is trying to temporize with the expectation of perhaps leaving it over until the next election. In the meantime, I have not received all the papers. I am aware that a certain telegram was sent to a manufacturer here in Canada who had imported under false entry a certain class of machinery calling him to account, but because a prominent lawyer happened to be the friend of a minister he succeeded in getting through an order in council securing the entry of that machinery under a false name. I am certain that he entered other machinery and that the entry was called in question. When I brought this to the attention of the assistant commissioner, Mr. Bain, he showed me—I suppose he thought that I was getting too nosey—a telegram addressed to the man who had made this entry to settle in twenty-four hours or he would seize the plant. That telegram was not included in the return. That telegram is not included in the papers. I was not the only one to see the telegram, I had a senator with me whose word may be taken if mine is not. Three months after I wrote to the department asking if the duty had been paid, it was said it was paid, I brought a senator up and it was a question of who was telling a falsehood. There was an interesting debate in the office, and things were turned around afterwards. Happily, eight months afterwards I was in the House and could work my own little affair in the matter. I would like the minister to state definitely whether all the papers have been brought down. There are other cases of incomplete returns, but it would not be wise for me to tell all the papers that have not been produced that I think are there. When I ask for papers, I want all the papers, not simply those of which I know the contents. The same thing might be said of the Excise Department.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). All I can say is that if there is an order of the House for a return of papers from the Customs Department it is immediately attended to, the papers are prepared, the return brought down and for anything I know everything was brought down in this case. The hon. gentleman speaks of a telegram that Mr. Bain, the assistant commissioner, sent. Whether that went on the public file or not, I do not know. I am sure the commissioner produced a complete return as far as he was aware. I shall make inquiry and I shall let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. Are the returns carefully scrutinized before they are brought down? I notice several cases of replies referring to letters that are not included so that there have evidently been omissions.

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). The hon. gentleman moved for two returns from the Department of Inland Revenue. One referring to the maturing allowance on alcohol has been brought down. The other called for all the correspondence with the Standard Chemical Company, which supplied wood alcohol to the government for a large number of years. I am advised by the deputy minister that to prepare that return would take one person six months. One person has been constantly working on it since the hon. gentleman moved for the return. The hon. gentleman himself visited the department and after conferring with the deputy minister agreed that the return should go over until next year. He was informed that if he would select the particular documents he wanted they would be produced rapidly, but he wanted it all, and he thereupon agreed with the deputy that he would consent to receiving it at the next session of parliament.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Intercolonial Railway—new machinery, Intercolonial Railway car shops and land purchase at Moncton, $520,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Is this all by tender?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Acting Minister of Railways and Canals). Yes, I am assured by the deputy it is.

Increased accommodation and facilities along the line, $62,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the nature of this?

Mr. FIELDING. These are for improvements, enlarged accommodation at the various stations. The largest item is $12,000, for fencing portions of the line not hitherto fenced.

Mr. J. D. REID. What is the minister going to do about this Halifax case? We had Mr. McIlwraith before the Public Accounts Committee and there has been a trial in Halifax in which certain charges went before the jury, and I see by the Halifax paper that Mr. McIlwraith's lawyer says in his speech to the jury:

The thing I am complaining about is that it is said that Mr. McIlwraith has stolen out of the Dominion treasury the money which he got.

That is the $4,015 for the roundhouse or whatever it was. He also states:

The object of the action in the first place is to get a verdict from you as to whether that thing which has been said against Mr. McIlwraith is true or false and also a verdict for the defendant means that Mr. McIlwraith goes out of court with the charge established against him.

The jury brought in a verdict against Mr. McIlwraith and it proves what was proved in the Public Accounts Committee that there was a rake-off among some people down there, and I would like to know whether the government intend taking any action towards recovering the amounts which Mr. McIlwraith and his friends got as a rake-off in that land deal?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know of any rake-off which Mr. McIlwraith or any one got. I am aware there was a trial and the verdict was in favour of the defendant, but I have not had time to read the evidence and I have not read what my hon. friend has just read. Mr. McIlwraith seems to have been tried in the last few days by two tribunals; he was tried by the jury which gave a judgment against him and by the jury of his fellow-citizens who elected him mayor of the city. I do not know which verdict he values most.

Mr. J. D. REID. He was tried in the Public Accounts Committee and it appeared certain that there was a large amount paid for the lands for the railway company.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think it was shown that the price was unreasonable at all.

Mr. J. D. REID. Oh yes, a jury have investigated it and it seems to me that under the circumstances the government should take some notice of the judgment given in the courts, and that the amount taken from the government in a way that it should not have been taken ought to be recovered.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I think my hon. friend should wait until the thing is decided once and for all before he gets gay about it.

Ste. Rosalie—improvements at, $13,000.

Mr. AMES. In looking over the improvements on capital account on the Intercolonial Railway it struck me that there might be an improvement in regard to the time allowed between the advertising and the time when tenders are called. The correspondence shows that parties who desired to tender felt that the time was insufficient. Now, if a fiat goes forth from Ottawa, let us say on the 10th of June, and is published in various places—say Montreal, Ottawa, Moncton, Halifax and St. John—it requires five or six days for the advertisements to get into the papers. If the tenders must be delivered within two or three weeks from the time the advertisement first appears, this limits very much the number of persons who bid for the contract.

Mr. FIELDING. In the case of large works it is desirable that considerable time should be granted. In the case of less extensive works, less time will do. In some instances the department has been able to give only a short time owing to the lateness of the session and the late period at which the money for the work has been appropriated ; so that if the work was to be done at all, it had to be done under a rush order. Under the new condition of things parliament is likely to be prorogued in the spring, so that there will probably in future be no such difficulty. I quite agree with my hon. friend that there should be ample notice given, and I think under the new arrangements we shall be able to give that in the future.

Mr. AMES. It was November, or October at least, before the contractor for the car shops at Moncton got his contract, and it was understood that the work should be finished by the 1st of December. The other bidders were under the impression that two or three months at the outside would be given for the work; but the successful tenderer, E. A. Wallberg, after getting the contract, was able to have it extended until the following July. If the other contractors had felt that they could have their time extended in the same way, there would probably have been other tenders and better figures.

Mr. FIELDING. I can assure the hon. gentleman that there was no discrimination in favour of Mr. Wallberg. The object was to get the work done in the time specified, but sometimes an extension of time to a contractor is unavoidable.

Intercolonial Railway—to strengthen bridges, $309,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Will this work be done by tender ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. Where is the double tracking to take place ?

Mr. FIELDING. From St. John to Hampton, 22 miles, and from Moncton to Painsec Junction, 7·25 miles.

Mr. CROCKET. Are any new bridges to be put on the Canadian Eastern branch this summer ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, at Boiestown and Doaktown—steel bridges.

Mr. CROCKET. What is the cost of these bridges ?

Mr. FIELDING. Boiestown, $34,000 ; Doaktown, $75,000.

Mr. GAUVREAU. Is it the intention of the minister to call for tenders for the Rivière du Loup work this summer ?

Mr. FIELDING. The plans are now under consideration. The deputy minister wishes to be sure that they are all right before calling for tenders ; but it is intended to call for tenders this summer.

Mr. MORIN. I would like to ask the minister a question. When the Drummond Counties Railway was bought by the government in 1898, it was said to be a straight and level road, a first-class road, with the bridges, the masonry work and the rails all first-class. Ever since that time the government has been laying down new rails, making the road straighter and re-building the bridges. Why is that ? Everything was first-class a few years ago, but has become second-class. I would like the minister, when he goes over that road from Montreal to Levis, to look at the old bridges across the river at Mitchell, and he will see one of the shabbiest things for a railway bridge that he ever saw in his life. It is a wonder thousands of people have not perished at that bridge. I would also like to ask the minister if he is going to build a new bridge over the Nicolet river, west of that ?

Mr. FIELDING. There is a contract outstanding for a new bridge across the Nicolet river, and the work is approaching completion.

Prince Edward Island Railway—increased accommodation at Charlottetown, $318,000.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Will the minister tell us something about the progress of that work ?

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that the car shops have been let by contract and that tenders are now being called for the wharf. There are other minor matters still to be done, but these are the principal items.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who is the contractor for the carshops?

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Wallberg.

Mr. BENNETT. Good.

Mr. FIELDING. I think we ought to thank this Mr. Wallberg who gives us low tenders.

Mr. J. D. REID. I fancy he is not always the lowest.

Mr. FIELDING. That is not fair on the part of my hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Reid). If he will give us a specific case we will look into it. But I am sure that in every case in which Mr. Wallberg has received a contract he has received it because he was the lowest tenderer. If it is not so in every case let my hon. friend point out what is wrong.

Mr. J. D. REID. If it were not so late in the session I would.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to capital—Prince Edward Island Railway—Murray Harbour branch, land purchased, $6,560.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Are the claims of the people at Village Green included in this ?

Mr. FIELDING. The deputy minister is not certain they are included here, but if not they are provided for in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. A. MARTIN. The contract for this Murray Harbour branch was given about seven years ago. How comes it that we have this vote to pay these claims only at this late date? I placed a question on the order paper early in the session relating to these claims and the answer I got was that the cases has been referred to the Exchequer Court, which was to meet in December. I have a number of letters from people along the road who have suffered grievously for seven years wnile awaiting the payment of these claims by the government. Some of these claims have not been referred to the Exchequer Court yet. I would like to know from the Minister of Finance why these claims should not be settled. There are a number of people in Village Green who have lost considerably by the delay of the company. If their claims are to be referred to the Exchequer Court what procedure will be taken in regard to them?

Mr. FIELDING. This is a case in which the people made a bargain for the sale of their land and after they had done so they asked to have the case reopened. These claims were not legal claims. It is an act of grace on the part of this parliament to deal with these cases.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Some of the claims on this road have been referred to the Exchequer Court and some have not. Can the minister say why the distinction is made?

Mr. FIELDING. There are certain claims which it is believed wise to recognize and pay. There are others under consideration, but the department has not determined whether it will endeavour to make a settlement or have the claimants dealt with in the Exchequer Court.

Mr. A. MARTIN. I cannot say that that is satisfactory. These people have been kept out of their money for years. I know that some of them have been forced to mortgage their property because this government has been so slow in its settlement. Some of these claims are dealt with in one way and some in another. I am afraid there is a great deal of favouritism, in fact, I know that there has been. I have here a letter from a gentleman who owns property at Montague Bridge—two lots, and the payment in regard to one lot is referred to the Exchequer Court and the other is not. Why should not both be referred to the Exchequer Court? I think it is time that these people had redress.

Mr. FIELDING. I think that with patience we shall reach a settlement.

Mr. A. MARTIN. I would like to ask another question. The ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) before he resigned spoke of some motor cars for this line.

Mr. FIELDING. Here is another case for the exercise of patience; that is dealt with in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Now let me tax the hon. gentleman's patience a little more.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. A. MARTIN. I am not in a hurry. I am, perhaps, something in the position in which these hon. gentlemen were earlier in the session. Ever since this government came into power they have been talking railway extensions in Prince Edward Island, especially just before a general election. Before the election of 1904 many surveys were made. I want to know if this spending of money on surveys, with no other results, is to go on and what the government propose to do?

Mr. FIELDING. We have built several branch lines in Prince Edward Island, though the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. Martin) seems to think it a political crime. We have built the line to Murray Harbour and also the line to Montague Bridge; it seems to me that we have not done so badly. The claims of Prince Edward Island will come up for consideration. I cannot name the date for the beginning of new branch lines.

Mr. A. MARTIN. The Minister of Finance says his government has built branch lines in Prince Edward Island, but I can tell him that they have not even finished the one branch line they undertook to build. The present government said they were going to assume the undertakings of the late government.

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. MARTIN. I have heard that statement from the government side of the House time and again. At confederation, Prince Edward Island had 200 miles of railway built at a cost of $3,000,000 and at that time the whole expenditure of Canada on railways was only $34,000,000, so that Prince Edward Island had then one-tenth of the total. But since we entered confederation, Prince Edward Island has come to a standstill. The minister boasts that they have built about 40 miles of a railway there, but the less he says about that expenditure the better, because I believe an investigation would prove that 40 per cent of it was pure graft. When it took $32,000 a mile to build that branch and when the Prince Edward Island government built the main road 35 years ago for half the money, the Minister of Finance will see that there is something wrong. At least 40 per cent of that money was misspent. In 1896 the Conservative government proposed some railway extensions in my province, but this government has satisfied itself with making surveys just about election time, and though there is an overflowing treasury there is not a dollar to be expended for railway construction in Prince Edward Island. Does the Minister of Finance suppose that the people of Prince Edward Island don't see through that game. If he goes down there the people will demonstrate to him that patience has ceased to be a virtue. The Conservative government in 1896 proposed to build 105 miles of railway on the island, and the Railway Department estimated the cost of that at $10,000 a mile, and that estimate was given after the surveys were made and everything ready for the construction, but when the Liberal government built 40 miles of the 105 miles contemplated it cost $32,000 a mile without rolling stock, and now the minister slaps in our face the statement that his government has spent a lot of money in Prince Edward Island. The people of Prince Edward Island understand how that money was misspent. It was misspent because they gave most of the contract without tender. You first called for tenders for eight miles of the easiest part, an election was coming on, a gentleman named McManus got the contract by tender, but you forced him out and the poor man had to pass the work over to a favourite of the government. The next 40 miles was given without contract at all and the result is that it cost $32,000 per mile although the railway department estimated that it was only to cost $10,000 a mile. The minister has asked me to have patience, but under the circumstances he is asking too much. We see railroads being built all over the country, we see that we are taxed for the building of them ; we see millions of money spent on the transcontinental railway and other railways, and we see that the people of Prince Edward Island are not getting fair-play. I declare here that there was enough money spent on the building of the 45 miles of railway by this government to complete the whole extensions of 105 miles proposed by the Conservative government. I have the 'Hansard' of April 21st of 1896 here and from it I quote :

> Mr. Haggart moved that the House resolve itself into committee to-morrow to continue the following proposed resolution:
> That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to build and operate as part of the Prince Edward Island Railway the following lines of railway, that is to say :
> (a) from Southport to Murray Harbour south with cross line connecting with the Prince Edward Island Railway between New Perth and Cardigan stations, touching at or near Montague bridge.

That is the line the Minister of Finance says he has finished, and I say he has not finished it yet because the most important link of that line is unfinished. It cannot be that the government has fallen short of funds because while the Conservatives had only a revenue of $40,000,000 a year, the Minister of Finance boasts to-night that he is proposing to expend $116,000,000 this year. And yet Prince Edward Island is not to have fair-play. Our province is differently situated from any other in Canada.

If we did build branch lines, would we be treated as Nova Scotia was ? A few years ago Nova Scotia built some branch lines, and a few years afterwards the government took them over and paid the province for them. The government are now proposing to incorporate these branch lines into the main trunk of the Intercolonial. I think it is the duty of the government to place that province in the position which it deserves. It is not reasonable that we should be taxed for railway construction all over Canada, and that not a mile should be built there at all, a province which had a larger proportionate share of railway constructed when it entered confederation than any other province of Canada. In our province we have fifty-four people to the square mile, all the rest of Canada have not two to the square mile. I want the minister to say now if he is going to construct that New London branch, and that Rustico branch which they have surveyed. I want to know if he is going to carry out the programme which the Conservative party adopted in 1896? Besides that branch, there was a branch proposed from a point between Royalty Junction and York station thence to Oyster Bed Bridge and there was a branch from Emerald station to Stanley bridge, and a branch from North Wiltshire to Victoria, all these branches amounting to 106 miles. If these railways were built it would do a great deal to appease the people in the isolated condition in which this government has kept them for so many years. Especially do the people on the north side need railway communication. They are mostly French Acadians, and the country where they are living is denuded of fuel. They have to depend upon Charlottetown for their coal and haul it 24 miles. It costs $4 a ton to haul coal from Charlottetown to Rustico. When these people drive into Charlottetown with their fish all their profits have evaporated. They want railway construction from Charlottetown to these fishing grounds on the north side of Prince Edward Island. This government has allowed the harbours to be closed up. Ten or twelve years ago there were a dozen vessels trading on the north side, to-day there are not three vessels. The harbours are filling up with sand. Every year a vessel is wrecked on this bar, and another is wrecked on another bar. The hon. gentleman says, let us have patience. It reminds me of what he said in discussing representation, he said: We will wait until the population gets to the vanishing point. I hope that is not the mind of the minister in this connection and that he wishes the people of Prince Edward Island to wait until they come to the point when they will no longer need his assistance, when they have passed from this mortal sphere and joined the happy band in a happier land. Now I think the hon. member for King's, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Hughes) should stand up in this House and join us in trying to bring the government to their senses. The government are getting into great discredit in Prince Edward Island, the people see through their pretences in making surveys of roads just before an election, and then doing nothing more until another election comes round. Now I wish to know from the minister what he is going to do? We were told by Mr. Emmerson that these motor cars were to be built and put on these branch lines, and if they were successful, he had no doubt but that all these branches would be built. But the minister says he has no information about these motor cars, although we were told two months ago that they were being built in the car shops at Charlottetown. I would like the minister to tell us when he is going to come to our rescue, or else the people of Prince Edward Island will have to turn their backs still further against this government.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I would ask the minister if petitions have been received by the government from Oyster Bed Bridge, North Rustico, South Rustico, Stanley Bridge, Clifton and French River within the last four years, asking for the construction of branch lines ?

Mr. FIELDING. A number of petitions from various points in the island have been received, and no doubt these were amongst them.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Were any petitions received from the inhabitants of Victoria and Crapeau ?

Mr. FIELDING. A number of petitions have been received from different points I cannot say from what points.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. One more question —Is it the intention of the government seriously to take into consideration the construction of any one of these branch lines ?

Mr. FIELDING. They will receive due consideration, with other enterprises which demand the attention of the government. If he means, Are we to undertake the construction at once, No ; if he means. Are we prepared to give them consideration, Yes, along with various other enterprises which are presented to our attention.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Not in the immediate future ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, we have not made any appropriation for them in these estimates.

Mr. A. MARTIN. How many years does the minister want to consider them ?

Mr. FIELDING. Not so many years as the Conservative government took in regard to works in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I think the hon. members' memory is somewhat defective. I can only tell them that previous to the election of 1883 a survey was made for a branch railway.

Mr. BENNETT. That is outlawed.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. The Conservatives remained thirteen years in power after that and there was nothing done. I could go on and relate several instances of that kind.

Mr. SPROULE. Don't.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I will simply relate this as an example.

National Transcontinental Railway—surveys and construction, $28,360,000.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Crocket) asked me to bring down some information. I have had it prepared but I neglected to bring it this evening. If he wishes to have this item stand I have no objection.

Mr. DANIEL. Better let it stand.

Mr. FIELDING. All right.

Item allowed to stand.

Galops canal—to pay final estimate, $60,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will that finish the work ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is the final estimate.

North channel—to pay final estimate, $25,500.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is that the final estimate?

Mr. FIELDING. That is the final estimate.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is that the Murray and Cleveland contract ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

River St. Lawrence—removal of shoals in river, upper entrance Galops canal, $28,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. Where are these shoals?

Mr. FIELDING. This work was originally contemplated in order to conform with the upper entrance of the Galops canal. The work became a necessity owing to the fact that three boats grounded last season and others touched bottom. This is done at the instance of the Dominion Marine Association.

Mr. J. D. REID. Where is this ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. On Main street.

Mr. J. D. REID. Every time I get up the hon. member for Cape Breton, South, (Mr. Johnston) interrupts. Every person knows that he is a freak and not responsible for what he says. If the minister has him there for the purpose of obstructing I may say to him that I am prepared to fight these estimates. I asked the minister where this work was being done.

Mr. FIELDING. This is the removal of shoals in the river at the upper entrance to the Galops canal.

Mr. J. D. REID. I know the canal well and I had supposed that Murray and Cleveland had dredged that all out.

Mr. FIELDING. No, there is a piece which remains and which requires to be removed.

Galops rapids—to pay final estimate, $17,700.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is that the Gilbert contract ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Trent Valley canal—construction, $280,000 ; surveys, $4,000.

Mr. BENNETT. When is it expected that the survey from a point on Lake Simcoe at Kempenfeldt bay or Barrie will be completed ?

Mr. FIELDING. The deputy minister informs me that the men are making good progress and pushing the work but he would not like to name a time at which they will complete it.

Mr. BENNETT. There is a large vote in the supplementary estimate and whether it may be from Barrie to Nottawassaga bay or by way of the Severn, will part of the work be put under contract this year? And in the event of the Severn route being accepted I would urge upon the government the placing of a lock at Port Severn as being one of the first works undertaken.

Mr. FIELDING. It is intended to place the work under contract this season.

Mr. BENNETT. Whichever route is chosen ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Welland canal—elevator at Port Colborne, $637,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Will that complete the elevator at Port Colborne and will it be in running condition this fall ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, it will not be ready for this season's work.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have heard a good many say that the question of erecting an elevator at Port Colborne should be reconsidered by the government. Deputations have waited on the government asking them to enlarge the Welland canal but it is claimed that this elevator is not going to be what the marine men want. As I understand it they have not commenced work at all. Of course there may be some foundations built but not the main part of the work. If the contract has been awarded——

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the contract has been let.

Mr. BENNETT. How far has the work advanced ?

Mr. FIELDING. The steel work and machinery are all in course of manufacture, the foundations are completed and considerable progress has been made.

Mr. BENNETT. Who has the contract ?

Mr. FIELDING. Peter Lyall & Sons, Montreal.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the contract ?

Mr. FIELDING. $637,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it built of cement or iron ?

Mr. FIELDING. Cement and steel.

Mr. SPROULE. You have spent $200,000 and you are asking for $637,000 more.

Mr. FIELDING. The contract is for $637,000 including the elevator and all machinery for operating. That does not include the foundation, I understand.

Mr. SPROULE. What did you spend $200,000 for ?

Mr. FIELDING. The total expenditure to the 1st October, 1906, at which time these estimates were prepared, was $126,602.

Mr. SPROULE. It is quite clear that you spent $200,000. Why do you want $637,000 to finish it ?

Mr. FIELDING. The deputy minister informs me that at the time that was put in they could not tell whether there would be a revote or not because they were not quite sure as to what amount would be expended. But they have not expended $200,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How much have you spent ?

Mr. FIELDING. $126,000 up to the 1st October.

Mr. SPROULE. And from October to March you must have spent the rest ?

Mr. FIELDING. The season since that time has not been favourable to work so that there has been very little added to it.

Mr. LENNOX. There were $200,000 voted last year and you are asking for $637,000 now ; that makes $837,000 and if it only takes $637,000 to do the whole work you should not take a vote for that amount.

Mr. FIELDING. The $637,000 does not include the foundation.

Mr. SPROULE. How much will the whole work cost?

Mr. FIELDING. About $732,000 all told.

Sault Ste. Marie canal—construction, $150,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is to be expended in deepening and widening what is known as the Vidal shoal at the upper entrance. The work is under contract to C. S. Boone, Toronto.

Cornwall canal—to build a gate lifter, $10,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why do they require a gate lifter there?

Mr. FIELDING. The deputy tells me they want one in each canal.

Galops canal—to build retaining walls, $15,000.

Mr. FIELDING. The bank on the north side at Iroquois has been falling down. We propose to replace the light rip-rap wall that was put in when the canal was enlarged with a heavy one of concrete and stone.

Mr. J. D. REID. It is only a few years since these walls were built.

Mr. FIELDING. The walls were too light.

Mr. J. D. REID. Therefore, there must have been a mistake in the engineer's plans or the government's plans in building them too light.

Mr. FIELDING. It looks a little like that; they were too economical.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who has the contract for rebuilding the retaining walls?

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. G. A. Begy.

Mr. J. D. REID. He was a partner of the original contractor?

Mr FIELDING. If the building was done according to the design the fault would not be his.

Mr. J. D. REID. It was the fault of the government.

Mr. FIELDING. The fault of the engineer.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who was the engineer?

Mr. FIELDING. He is dead now.

Mr. J. D. REID. It was the fault of the government?

Mr. FIELDING. Oh, yes, through its engineer.

Murray canal—to rebuild piers of concrete, $55,000.

Mr. FIELDING. The contractor is Mr. R. Weddell.

Welland canal—to rebuild retaining wall in rock cut; to renew entrance piers at Port Maitland; dredging at Port Dalhousie entrance, $90,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the retaining wall under contract?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the contractor is J. Battle. Six tenders were received and he was the lowest tenderer.

Mr. BENNETT. Does that apply to the entrance piers at Port Maitland, too?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the contractor there is E. Conroy.

Trent canal—improvements, $33,500.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the dredging done by contract?

Mr. FIELDING. It has not yet been done and may be done with our own dredge. It is a small work.

New boat for towing and inspection, $15,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Has that boat been purchased?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. From whom?

Mr. FIELDING. It is being built at the Polson works, Toronto.

Mr. BENNETT. Will that be the entire cost?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. Was the contract let by tender?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Railway Commission—maintenance and operation, $75,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Will that include the new investigations you are going to pass?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it the intention of the government to increase the number of the Railway Commission?

Mr. FIELDING. That matter has been suggested, but it will not be dealt with this session.

Mr. J. D. REID. I made that suggestion some time ago.

Mr. FIELDING. My recollection is that the number of railway commissioners is fixed by legislation and that it cannot be enlarged except by Act of parliament.

Railways and Canals—collection of revenue, Intercolonial Railway, $7,600,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that an increase?

Mr. FIELDING. That is the general vote for maintenance; it is not an increase.

Canals—staff and repairs, $941,217.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the Beauharnois canal going to be leased, if so, will the employees be paid by the government or by the lessees?

Mr. FIELDING. The lessee under the terms of the contract will have to maintain the canal, and in that case, we shall probably not need some small proportion of this vote.

Soulanges canal—lodgings for electrical staff, $1,500 ; wharf at Cascades, $1,300 ; tug boat engine, $1,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the wharf at the Cascades for ?

Mr. FIELDING. To give our boats an easy access to the government stone quarry.

Mr. BERGERON. How many lock labourers are there on the canal ?

Mr. FOWLER. What is the meaning of this lodging for electrical staff ?

Mr. FIELDING. That is for the electrical staff to live in.

Mr. FOWLER. Why 'lodging' ?

Mr. FIELDING. Perhaps 'house' would be better. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) asked for the total number of employees on the Soulanges canal. The total number is 222.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to know particularly the number of lockmen, because if the canal is worked by electricity, it should not be necessary to employ so many lockmen as before.

Mr. FIELDING. The Soulanges canal has always been operated by electrical power.

Mr. BERGERON. At first it did not work, and so more employees had to be kept on than should be necessary when the electrical appliances are working well.

Mr. FIELDING. The statement I have does not distinguish the classes of employees.

Mr. BERGERON. How many are employed on each lock ?

Mr. FIELDING. Four.

Mr. BERGERON. Two men should be enough.

Mr. FIELDING. The officials assure me that the number is not too great. Of course, the canal must be worked night and day.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. minister has not satisfied my curiosity as to that lodging.

Mr. FIELDING. There was a vote last session of $6,000 to build three houses for the electric staff of the power-house. The former lodging of the chief of the electric staff was damp and unhealthy, and the assistants found it difficult to get lodging near the electric station. Between the time the estimate was made and the time the contract was let, the cost of material and wages had increased, and this amount is necessary to provide for the increased cost.

Mr. FIELDING.

The contract was let to E. Belanger, the lowest tenderer out of five.

Mr. BERGERON. If we had the other tenderers we could judge for ourselves, whether this was the lowest.

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid the hon. gentleman will have to take our word for that.

Chambly canal—contribution towards the construction of a conduit under the canal at St. Johns, $8,000.

Mr. FOWLER. To whom did you contribute that ?

Mr. DEMERS. I desire to say a few words about this item. A very important manufacturing firm, the Singer Manufacturing Company, has established works at St. Johns, where it is spending millions of dollars. To supply water for manufacturing and sanitary purposes, it has been necessary to build a canal to reach the Richelieu river, the cost of which canal is paid by the town of St. Johns. To carry out this work it has been necessary to pass under the Chambly canal causing an additional expense of $8,000, which I think it is but fair that the government should reimburse. The right of everybody to free access to rivers being recognized, if one is hindered in the clear exercise of that right, and if the obstacle, whatever it may be, cannot be removed, he is entitled to be reimbursed for the expense to which he is put. This principle was recognized by this parliament in 1898. The town of St. Johns had to build a main drain, but it was put to greater expense in reaching the Richelieu river by reason of the Chambly canal, and the government decided to pay the extra cost of the construction of that work.

Mr. FOWLER. This seems to be on the principle that two wrongs make a right. I do not think that it is incumbent upon the government to pay any portion of this expenditure.

Mr. DEMERS. The Chambly canal was built for the public interest and in these cases it has proved an obstruction to the town, for which obstruction the public must be liable.

Mr. BERGERON. How much will the conduit cost ?

Mr. DEMERS. It has cost $8,000 to carry it under the Chambly canal. The whole work has cost about $32,000. The Singer Manufacturing Company is a very important concern, and is paying duties to the customs at the rate of about $500 a day. It is a very large company.

Mr. LENNOX. How does the minister justify the expenditure of this money to such a purpose ? The question is between the town and the industry, and it has nothing to do with the town at all.

Mr. FIELDING. The town of St. John undertook to supply water to a very large factory and in consequence of their having to pass under the canal they incurred additional expense. They represented that the increased expense should be borne by the government and to the extent of $8,000 we have recognized their claim.

Mr. LENNOX. We had a perfect right to build the canal there, and by the building of it we benefited the town. Then the town asks that because it is more difficult to get the water from the river because the canal is there, the government ought to bear that expense, if that principle is to be applied all over the country where will it end? There is no justification for this expenditure and at the next available opportunity I shall deal with it further.

Mr. FOWLER. Suppose that were a railway instead of a canal and it were necessary to go under the railway would the railway company be obliged to pay the cost of the conduit under the railway. The government is under no legal obligation whatever to pay this money. It is simply a contribution to the town of St. Johns.

Mr. CONMEE. There is a very great difference between carrying a drain under a canal and underneath a railway. The extra expense in the case of a railway would be trifling, but when you have to excavate under a canal the cost is very great. The item is a perfectly justifiable one, and even if it were a contribution I think it is justifiable.

Mr. FOWLER. The principle the hon. member (Mr. Conmee) goes on is that if it cost $1,000 the town should do it but as it costs $8,000 the government should do it.

Mr. CONMEE. That is not my argument.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) has advanced some peculiar principles in this House, but that is the most peculiar of all.

Mr. CONMEE. If in the public interest an obstruction is placed in the way of private interests, there is at least a moral obligation on the government to consider a question of that kind.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. member (Mr. Conmee) who seems to be an understudy of the minister, forgets that when this canal was put there all present and prospective damages were paid for by the government.

Mr. FIELDING. That would be damage to the land owners, not to the community.

Mr. FOWLER. How can you estimate damage to the community. Does the minister say that St. John's is not benefited by this canal?

Mr. FIELDING. Very frequently the government build a bridge over a canal or over a highway when they cause an obstruction.

Mr. FOWLER. You would only do that when you cause an obstruction to an existing highway. Does the minister say that if a municipality built a highway where there was none before, the government is under any obligation to build a bridge over it?

Mr. FIELDING. I would not like to commit myself on a point like that.

Mr. FOWLER. I don't think you would.

To pay J. O'Toole for work done under his contract to construct bridge piers at Merrickville, $1,833.50, with interest from July 8, 1893, to 31st January, 1907, $1,482.46, $3,315.96.

Mr. FOWLER. I want an explanation of this item.

Mr. FIELDING. In March, 1892, a contract was entered into with Mr. O'Toole to construct the piers for a bridge across the canal at Merrickville. In July, 1893 the superintending engineer, Mr. Wise, sent in a final estimate for $6,737.50 of which $6,035.13 was for work covered by schedule, and $702.38 for work covered by allowances. Mr. O'Toole objected to this estimate and asked for examination and remeasurement but in the meantime Mr. Wise died. The case was afterwards referred to Mr. Phillips. The claim amounted to $1,973.80, and he drew attention to the fact that a considerable amount of work was changed from the original place after a large portion of the work had been done, and for some portions of the work no payments had been made, although the details and quantities were shown in the field notes. Mr. Phillips reported in favour of the claim to the extent of $1,833.50 and the chief engineer concurs in that view.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is all right.

Mr. FOWLER. It looks very like an election when you are paying these old accounts. I know that in my constituency there were quite a number of old claims that had whiskers on fixed up before the election.

Mr. TAYLOR. I know something about this, it is in my own constituency.

Mr. FOWLER. Does O'Toole vote for you?

Mr. TAYLOR. It makes no difference about that. I know that Mr. Wise died and that the matter has been a long time in dispute, but I wanted to hear the explanation.

Trent canal—to pay Curtis Brothers damages by flooding, $4,898.

Mr. FIELDING. In January, 1906, a break occurred in the bank of the canal in the township of Otonabee doing damage to the property of Curtis Brothers and arbitrators were appointed.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Northrup) asked that one item stand, that of the Trent canal.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the Trent canal, Curtis Bros., stands.

Remuneration to A. Brunet, government director, Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, $1,500.

Mr. FIELDING. In the Transcontinental Railway Act provision is made for the appointment of a government director, I think the sum is fixed in the Act. This is at the rate of $2,000 a year.

Mr. LENNOX. Why is it brought in as a supplementary at all ?

Mr. FIELDING. If it is in the statute, I do not think we need the estimate. There is no harm in voting it. We won't give it to him twice.

Soulanges canal—staff, $1,250.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to call the attention of the minister to an item which was promised by the late Minister of Railways and Canals. At the head of the Beauharnois canal the banks on each side are in a very bad state. Two years ago the authorities at Valleyfield asked the Postmaster General if he would obtain a sum to make some repairs and put the banks in a proper condition. The request was also made of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and he promised the Postmaster General that he would do it. Afterwards I saw him myself, and he promised again. There was nothing done last year, this year I asked again, and I mentioned the fact to the Prime Minister, who said he had no doubt the matter would be settled by the Minister of Railways and Canals. Before the Prime Minister went away I asked him two or three times, and I was given to understand it would be in the supplementary estimates, but there is no mention made of it.

Mr. FIELDING. Would not our new contract relieve us from the obligation of doing that work ?

Mr. BERGERON. No, it was to be done irrespective of the contract. The last time I spoke to the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals he told me he had an announcemen to make, and it was not quite decided. During this session I mentioned the fact again, I said that a lease was going to be signed, and he said that the government would make the repairs in any case.

Mr. FIELDING. Even though the intention had been to do that work, if the terms of our lease relieve us from doing it, why should we do it ? If the parties who lease the canal are bound to do that work, why should we do it, even though we had previously contemplated doing it?

Mr. BERGERON. It is the entrance of the canal between the lock and the lake. The banks are in a bad condition, and the new lessees have no need to do it.

Mr. FIELDING. If the new lessees are not bound to do it, of course the government must look after it ; but if they are bound to do it, why should we undertake it ourselves ?

Mr. BERGERON. As long as the volume of water which they need passes through, they don't care whether the banks are in good condition or bad condition. But the government already promised two years ago to do this work, and I am asking them to fulfil their promise.

Mr. FIELDING. But even if it were promised, and if we have since made a contract whereby the company are to do the work, why should we do it ?

Mr. BERGERON. There is nothing in the contract. The promise was made before there was any question of leasing the canal.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps the minister will get further information and produce it when we are dealing with the supplementaries.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. leader of the House inform us what he purposes taking up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. Any Bills still remaining on the order paper may be taken up. We will go on with Supply, resuming the railway estimates.

Mr. TAYLOR. The railways in the supplementaries?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, and those which remain in any of the estimates.

Mr. TAYLOR. When will the hon. gentleman take up the railway subsidies?

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid I will not have time to get the information in the morning, but they may be taken up later in the day.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.55 a.m. Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 24, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

COLONY REGISTER A.

Mr. BRODER asked :

Does the government intend to take action to recover from the Hudson Bay Company, Colony Register A, containing the minutes and records of the Governor in Council of the Assiniboia, the land registers of the Selkirk estate, covering the period from 1812 to 1835, also the journals, maps, and field notes of the Hudson Bay Company's land surveyor, Peter Fidler, which were willed by him to the Hudson Bay Company, in trust for the colony, which said will has been probated in England ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

The Colony Register A mentioned is the property of the Hudson Bay Company. So far as the government is aware it has no right in law to the possession of such Register.

PERMITS TO CUT HAY—PRINCE ALBERT DISTRICT.

Mr. BOURASSA asked :

1. Has the Department of the Interior, or any of its officers or agents, granted one or more permits to pasture or the right to cut hay on any of the following lands in the district of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan: section 1, township 44, range 10, third meridian; section 23, township 43, range 10, third meridian?
2. If so, at what time, to what person, for how long, and on what conditions?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. No grazing leases have been granted for the lands referred to. These lands are outside of the track within which grazing leases are now granted. Section 1, township 44, range 10, west third meridian was patented to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Permits to cut hay are issued by local agents and are not recorded here. On notice of this question being given the local agent was wired for the desired information but up to the present moment the reply has not been received.
2. Answered by reply to No. 1.

MR. J. E. MARIER.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE—by Mr. Bourassa—asked :

1. Is Mr. J. E. Marier in the employ of the government, and since when ?
2. What are his duties?
3. What is his salary?
4. By whom was he recommended?
5. Is the government aware that this office takes active part in politics?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) :

1. Mr. J. E. Marier has been in the service of the House of Commons, as temporary clerk in the Translation Branch, since March, 1904.
2. His duties have been to work at indexing, compilation, classification, revision and proofreading in the Translation Branch of the House of Commons and, when required, to act as secretary to the chief translator.
3. His remuneration has been at the rate of $3 per diem.
4. He was appointed during the Speakership of the Hon. Mr. Belcourt, but there is no record as to by whom he was recommended.
5. Mr. Marier states that he has taken no part in politics since he has been in the service of the House.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—VOLUNTEERS FROM PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN asked :

1. Did the government receive a memorial addressed to His Excellency the Governor General in Council from officers and men who enlisted in Prince Edward Island and actually served in the South African war, praying that they should on equitable grounds become beneficiaries under the resolution passed in this parliament at the present session, recommending that grants of Dominion lands be set apart for those who served in the said war ?
2. If so, does the government intend to grant the prayer of the memorialists ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) :

1. A copy of the memorial referred to was received in the Department of Militia and Defence from the right hon. the premier on February 11, 1907.
2. Under consideration.

POSTMASTER AT STANLEY, N.B.

Mr. CROCKET asked :

1. Has Jeremiah Rogers been dismissed from the office of postmaster at Stanley, N.B. ?
2. If so, for what reason ?
3. Has a successor been appointed ? If so, who, and at what salary ?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) :

1. Yes.
2. For continued irregularities in his cash accounts.
3. Mr. Harry Malone has been appointed to the office. The postmaster's salary amounts to $442 per annum.

YUKON TERRITORY—APPROVAL OF ORDINANCES.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) moved :

Resolved, that the ordinance of the 26th of May last, intituled : 'An ordinance respecting liens in favour of miners,' and the ordinance of the 7th of July last, intituled : 'An ordinance respecting the disposal of water from the streams and lakes in the Yukon Territory for the purpose of generating power, and for the control and management of the sale, transmission and use of such power,' passed by the Governor in Council, under the authority of provisions which now comprise section 16 of chapter 63, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, and which previous to the coming into force of that Act comprised subsection 1 of section 8 of chapter 6 of the statutes of 1898, as that subsection was enacted by section 3 of chapter

34 of 2 Edward VII., copies of which ordinances as well as of the necessary order in council in each instance, have been laid before this House, are approved by this House, in accordance with the provisions of section 17 of the said chapter 63.

Motion agreed to.

COAL STRIKE IN THE NORTHWEST.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Minister of Labour). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to give the House some information concerning the troubles in the west.

Mr. SPEAKER. This can only arise on question and answer; otherwise the rule will have to be followed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the minister if he has any information to give to the House?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I thank my hon. friend for paving the way for good news. The following telegram has been received:

Fernie, British Columbia, April 23, 1907.

To F. A. Acland,

Secretary, Department of Labour, Ottawa.

Arrived Fernie six o'clock to-day by extra from Dunmore junction. Announced Mulock's appointment which appears to have given general satisfaction. Operators and miners are engaged to-night in joint conference. Have only had opportunity therefore of short interviews with leaders. Will wire you outlook later.

MACKENZIE KING.

I may announce to the House that we have selected Hon. Sir Wm. Mulock as chairman of the board, and from what Mr. King states this announcement has been a source of pleasure to both parties to the trouble in the west. I expect at any moment to receive some further news from Mr. King which I will communicate to the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There were some further telegrams?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will ask my hon. friend not to press for the publication of these telegrams, as it would be adding fuel to the fire. The men are representing their views very very strongly in the telegrams which I received last night, and so do the operators. Under these circumstances, pro bono publico, I think we should not make their views known to the public.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not know they were so bad as that or I would not have asked for them.

Mr. HENDERSON. I thought the purpose of the minister was to add fuel to the fire.

Mr. OLIVER.

DAMMING LONG SAULT RAPIDS.

Mr. A. BRODER (Dundas). Before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to ask the government whether they have been informed that it is the intention of a company to dam the Long Sault on the St. Lawrence? If this is contemplated it ought to be very seriously considered because it would have a very serious effect on the river above that point.

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that matter is engaging the attention of the International Waterways Commission. We have no special information about it, but believe it is one of the matters which is under their consideration.

Mr. BRODER. It seems to me the government ought to protest against any such thing being done.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 171) to amend the Exchequer Court Act—Mr. Aylesworth.

Bill (No. 172) respecting the surveys of the public lands of the Dominion and the surveyors entitled to make such surveys—Mr. Oliver.

YUKON PLACER MINING ACT—AMENDMENT.

Amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 135) to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act.—Mr. Oliver—read the first time.

Mr. OLIVER moved the second reading of the amendment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the amendment?

Mr. OLIVER. It is an amendment to section 2 of our Bill. The Bill amends the Act relating to the recording of mining claims. When it was before the House, it was agreed that there should be an interval of ten days between the abandonment of a claim and its relocation so as to prevent an abandonment and relocation by collusion. The Bill as it passed this House, provided:

No claim shall be relocated within ten days of its being so abandoned.

The Senate added these words:

And only after notice of such abandonment has been posted up at least a week in the office of the mining recorder.

It carries out the principle of the Bill, but provides for further publicity after the abandonment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The difficulty is that one does not exactly understand what it means. If you apply the first part to the alternative clause, it would read:

No claim shall be relocated only after notice of such abandonment has been posted up for at least a week in the office of the mining recorder.

I suppose what they meant was 'except or until.' They have given an opportunity to ingenious lawyers to raise doubts as to what they really intended.

Mr. OLIVER. That is quite evident, but if we change it the Bill will have to go back to the Senate; and unless the amendment is considered sufficiently important, I would prefer to accept the change made by the Senate.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the minister think about it?

Mr. OLIVER. Though not accurately worded, I think it would be hard to read it so that it did not convey the meaning intended.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is an implied negative, and it says exactly the opposite of what the Senate meant:

No claim shall be relocated only after notice of such abandonment has been posted for at least a week in the office of the mining recorder.

Make it read 'a claim shall be relocated only, &c.' That will express what the Senate intended. But at present there is a statement exactly the reverse of what was intended.

Mr. FOSTER. There is plenty of time to send it back.

Mr. OLIVER. I would ask that it be allowed to stand a little while until we can draft a proper clause.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We can take it up again to-day by consent.

Motion allowed to stand.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

Bill (No. 159) to increase the borrowing power of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners.—Mr. Fielding—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

In addition to the amount of two hundred thousand dollars which the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, hereinafter called 'the corporation,' may borrow under the provisions of section 35 of chapter 34 of the Acts of 1899, the corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to borrow, for the purposes, in the manner, and subject to the conditions in the said section provided, an amount not exceeding in the whole eight hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the amount loaned now to the Quebec Harbour Commission?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). This is not the case of a government loan. There were large advances to the harbour of Quebec. The amount advanced, according to the latest return, is $3,979,645. No interest has been paid for some time.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the interest amount to?

Mr. FIELDING. The arrears to June 30 last, amount to $2,506,336. There is some later interest accrued since that.

Mr. BERGERON. That will make $5,000,000 altogether.

Mr. FIELDING. About $6,500,000. This Bill however is not dealing with the question of government loans except in this sense that it gives the proposed bonds a priority. We are not getting any interest now and will not get any when the Bill passes. We have allowed the commissioners to issue bonds to the extent of $200,000 which will have priority over the government claim. We propose to increase that by $800,000, which will also have a priority over the government claims. It will postpone any early chance of the government getting repayment of the loan or interest.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the government expect anything?

Mr. FIELDING. I would rather not be examined too closely as to expectations.

Mr. FOSTER. Besides this the government has expended how much on the harbour? It has been expending large sums there the last few years.

Mr. FIELDING. There are sums of money expended under the Public Works Department, but I have no memorandum of them before me. These facts can be ascertained if necessary.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to have that.

Mr. FIELDING. Before this measure is disposed of the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fisher) will be prepared to answer these questions. The present proposition comes from the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, who desire to carry on the works which they consider urgent. They have sent a memorandum of the various works they wish to undertake. Quebec, of course, of late years, has taken a rather improved position in consequence of the building of vessels of greater draft than formerly, some of which do not go up to Montreal. It seems probable, that, with further increase in the draft of vessels the business of Quebec harbour will be increased. At any rate, the commissioners feel it necessary to make these additions to the facilities of the port and the government feel that it is necessary to allow them to do so, by allowing them to borrow the money and giving the loan priority over the present loan.

Mr. BERGERON. Do they state what improvements they want to make?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, they are as follows :

Palais harbour crib work and filling west of bridge	$148,846
East of bridge	104,611
Breakwater widening	357,052
Railway tracks	20,000
Shed No. 20 to face dock	16,000
Water service for docks	40,000
Paving roadway	41,675
Floating crane	75,000

Mr. BERGERON. How many commissioners are there ?

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) advises me that there are seven.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the cost of this commission altogether ?

Mr. FIELDING. I shall be glad to have these questions noted and before the final stages of the Bill I will have the information desired.

Mr. BERGERON. This seems to be the same old story. In these matters there seems always to have been wheels within wheels. We are spending money for which we are really responsible, but we are spending it through other channels. Why not do it ourselves ? What is the advantage of having a harbour commission in Quebec, when as a matter of fact, the government of Canada is spending practically all the money ? This money is nominally loaned to the harbour commissioners, but they do not pay interest, and my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) does not expect them to pay interest. A measure was passed in this House some time ago to authorize the carrying on of works in Quebec harbour east of the Quebec bridge. It would seem that the money asked for by the harbour commissioners is to be devoted to helping in the same general scheme of improvement. Yet there is nothing to indicate where the responsibility of one body begins and that of another ends. It is all most unsatisfactory. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) says that Quebec harbour has been improved. It should be—we have spent a pile of money there. In some respects the natural facilities are all that are needed—on the Quebec side dredging is unnecessary. If these people do not pay the interest on money they have borrowed it must be either because their affairs are badly managed or that there is something wrong of which we are not advised. I would again urge the government to take hold of these works themselves. That is probably the worst case we have. We are told that Montreal harbour pays interest on the money borrowed for it. Quebec does not pay interest, and we do not expect it to pay interest.

Mr. FOSTER. The Quebec Harbour Commissioners have an indebtedness of $200,000 in bonds. I suppose the proceeds have been turned into the treasury and used up. Have the harbour commissioners any indebtedness outside the debt to the government and this $200,000 of bonds, which have been taken by somebody ?

Mr. FIELDING. If there is such an indebtedness it will be covered by this obligation.

Mr. FOSTER. No, but I think we ought to know——

Mr. FIELDING. It is a proper question.

Mr. FOSTER. Also, I would like to know what the revenue and expenditure of the harbour have been for a number of years past ?

Mr. FIELDING. The harbour commissioners, I think, make an annual report : But, before the third reading, I will see to it that these questions are noted and the information is at hand to answer them.

Mr. FOSTER. This matter is assuming a serious aspect. The Minister of Finance must realize what it means. We have no information before the House with respect to this harbour. We have loaned the harbour commissioners $4,000,000. The accrued interest amounts to almost $2,500,000, and is constantly increasing. Thus their debt to the Dominion government is six and a half million of which about four millions is said to have gone into the harbour, the remainder, of course, not representing actual work done. Outside of that, the Dominion government, within the last few years, has spent money on the harbour independently of the harbour commission. Not taking either one position or the other—neither advancing anything more on the security of the property, which I suppose would be some security, nor authorizing the commissioners to carry on financing on their own account—the government, has spent, I suppose, half a million dollars on the harbour within the last three years. And now it is proposed to step in between the government's loan and the security for that loan and allow the commissioners to borrow $800,000—making a total of $1,000,000 of loans of this kind—which will be a first charge upon the works of the commission. You have the three operations going on at the same time—expenditure of money of the Dominion loaned to the Commissioners, expenditure of money borrowed from the public on bonds and expenditure of the money of the Dominion direct in improvements for the harbour. And yet, when it is proposed to authorize this issue of $800,000 of bonds, the only information that we are given is in the shape of a few scraps of items politely afforded by the commissioners the reading of which does not occupy more than two minutes. We do not know the condition of the harbour; we do not know what has been effected by our own direct expenditure within the last five years ; we do not know in what condition the money that it is proposed to raise will put the harbour ; we do not know its revenue or its expenditure—we do not know anything about it. This government seems to have drifted into a position with its six or seven millions for a bridge at Quebec, which I think it should never have entered into, and it now comes asking for a direct loan of the people's money to a company over which we have no control, spending money we know not how, and here we have these millions added to all that. What is being done ? Has the government taken any precaution in asking that somebody should make a thorough report upon that harbour in order to know what its present position is, and what this money that we are allowing them to borrow on their own credit and putting our own security behind it, in a hopeless position—will make the harbour what it ought to be, or anywhere near what it ought to be. The government may have the information, but the House is as innocent of any information in all these respects as is the board of trade of the city of Ottawa. We know nothing about it, and we are not even given a statement, when we are asked to give this amended borrowing power, of what the chances are of ever getting it back. It seems to be loose legislation, and the government is not doing what prudent financiers ought to do with reference to this matter. Quebec is only one harbour; we have other ports, and this means expenditures to other ports, and really we do not know what will be the outcome.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not agree with my hon. friend that this information, although useful, is necessary to the consideration of this Bill. But I have no objection to the Bill standing over. I do not admit that such information is needed, because we have not treated this debt of the Quebec harbour as a matter likely to yield any return in the early future. But we are not placing the government in any worse position than it was before. We are getting no interest, and we have not got interest, but I would not like to go so far as to say that we will never get any interest, because that would be a dangerous admission for a Finance Minister to make. At all events, the only question that arises now is whether the gentlemen who are to administer this fund in the city of Quebec are men of good standing, men who can be trusted with this work. I am not giving these as reasons why the hon. gentleman should not be answered and be given further information, though I would prefer to advance the Bill at present.

Mr. FOSTER. Who appoints that commission ?

Mr. FIELDING. The government appoint a portion of them, and, the others are certain representatives of the boards of trade at Quebec and Levis.

Mr. FOSTER. But the government have a majority ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am not quite sure that the government have a majority. It is a joint board of members appointed by the government, and representatives of the various commercial organizations in and about Quebec. The representations made to us are that these works are urgent. There is no doubt that in days past very large sums of money have been spent in Quebec harbour, and there have been discussions as to whether it was wisely spent. Hon. gentlemen opposite are aware of that, and I do not think it would help us to revive recollections of that kind. The main questions are these : Is the money needed, and are we taking means to place it in the hands of gentlemen who can be relied upon to administer it intelligently and faithfully. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) suggests that this is a matter of patronage. But it is quite the reverse. If we were to adopt his suggestions and take the whole matter into the hands of the government, there would be some room for his criticism. As it is now the government do not exercise any patronage in relation to this work. The Board of Harbour Commissioners deal with that matter entirely. There is no doubt that the work of the present Harbour Commissioners is faithful and useful. I do not say this by way of objection to the information being furnished. Each one of these questions is a legitimate one, and I shall be happy, before the Bill passes its final stage, to obtain what the hon. gentleman has asked for, or I would even be willing to let it remain in committee until that can be done. I have sent for the deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but he is delayed in coming here ; he has more knowledge of the matter than I have.

Mr. FOSTER. There are two points in particular in considering our position during the last few years. We have expended a great deal of money there on our own account through the Public Works Department ; I am not sure how much that was, I put it at half a million dollars. In addition, we have made them large loans, and taking these two things into consideration I think what we ought to have is a sufficient answer to two things ; we ought to have some expert knowledge gained by the government as to the condition of the harbour and what this $800,000 is likely to do for it, and particularly with regard to what we have expended lately outside of our loan, and what we may be called upon to expend again. If the government had kept to the one straight position of either loaning money on security, or else giving them power to raise money on their own security, that would be more intelligible. But the government has gone in between these two operations and has expended large amounts of money of its own. Now has this benefitted the port, has this kind of expenditure stopped ? Is it proposed that that $800,000 now to be raised will put the harbour in a workable position ? The government, as working through a commission, ought certainly to have expert knowledge and reports with reference to this matter. I think that information is only fair for decency's sake, before we pass this legislation. I do not want to delay it, but we can take this up at another time, or at any time by consent.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no objection to any such delay. I do not object if the hon. gentleman prefers the Bill to remain in committee. I admit the questions he has asked are reasonable. But we must come again to this great question : Do the Commissioners of the Quebec Harbour need this money for the purposes of the harbour, and can there be any better way of giving it to them ?—for after all you must come down to that question.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Finance will not go so far as to say that wherever you can find some men who are honest and will carefully expend the money, when there is need for it, therefore the money, or the power of borrowing it, should be given to them.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not want my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to think that I am making a frivolous criticism. I am opposed to these commissions, and have always been opposed to them, and facts have proven that I was right. We are spending a very large amount of money through commissions. I think it is un-British for parliament to expend one cent without the representatives of the people whose money is being spent, knowing where the money is going and what it is being expended for. We are spending millions and millions through these commissions, and we do not know where the money goes. My hon. friend says the only question is whether the money should be expended or not. I say no. How does my hon. friend know that this money is really needed to be expended where these commissioners are asking for it ? He may have great confidence in the commissioners, but has parliament confidence in them, has the public at large who pay the money confidence in these commissioners ? The government nominees are in the majority. The hon. gentleman says I am talking about patronage when there is no question of patronage. But surely he knows very well that whether the patronage is distributed through one channel or another, it is still patronage. These commissioners are representatives of the Ottawa government, and when they exercise patronage that fact will be present in their minds. When I speak of patronage I go further ; I say you are paying an immense amount of money without knowing where it goes, and then you are giving the patronage to the commissioners themselves.

Then we give patronage to the commissioners themselves. I am not talking about the employment of men on the harbour commission's work, but I am talking about the commissioners themselves, men who get $5 a day to go and sit there while half of them do not know what is going on. It is very hard to understand why the government have allowed such a thing to go on in Montreal. It continued until it became a scandal in Montreal and we have the very same story yet. We spend millions there through the commission and through the Department of Public Works. It is a mixture and nobody can find out where the line of demarcation comes in. We spend millions in the harbour of Montreal through the commisison and a little lower down we spend millions through the Department of Public Works. Who pays for it ? Jean Baptiste pays for it. The elector, the citizen of Canada pays for it, and he does not know how or why he pays for it. I believe it is wrong in principle. I have always been opposed to these commissions, I am opposed to them more than ever now because more than ever I can see the harm that is bound to result from their continuance. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance regards this matter in an unconcerned way now but if he had been here twenty-five years ago he would not be so placid as he is now when he comes and asks us to continue a loan of $8,000,000 to parties who never paid a cent of this money and do not intend to pay it. While doing that we are asked this year to vote over $116,000,000. I call upon my hon. friend again to abolish these commissions and allow these public works to be managed by the Department of Marine and Fisheries or by some public department which we have under our control in the House of Commons where the representatives of the people can stand up and say : Where has the money been spent, what have you done with the money ? You are levying taxation on the people of this country to the extent of $10 per head and we want to know how this money is being expended. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) sits there, smiles and says : I do not know anything about it ; it is in the hands of a commission in Montreal. Or the hon. Minister of Finance comes here and says that this money is expended by a commission in Quebec and that the representatives of the people cannot know how the money is expended. We have commissions here, there and everywhere, we are ruined by commissions, by the government selling and buying only through their own party and by members of parliament sitting in the House with promises of positions in their pockets.

Mr. FIELDING. Among the many gifts which the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) possesses is that of a lively imagination.

Mr. BERGERON. If it is a lively imagination, it is true.

Mr. FOSTER. It needs a lively imagination to keep up with you chaps.

Mr. FIELDING. So far as these large expenditures in times past in the harbour of Quebec are concerned it is not the men who sit on this side of the House who are responsible for them at all.

Mr. BERGERON. Why did you come into power? You promised to change all that.

Mr. FIELDING. Because my hon. friend and his friends opposite seemed to have had their season, and the public appeared to think that the time had come for a change.

Mr. BERGERON. Your season is nearly over.

Mr. FIELDING. Perhaps. My hon. friends have been saying that for a number of years and every time that an election came on, but at the close of the contest it has always been the same old story. As we look across the floor we still find our genial friend opposite sometimes—not always. Sometimes he drops by the way and then once in awhile he comes back again. I object to his suggestion that there has been any great extravagance in the harbour of Quebec of late years, or at all events since we have been in power. Whatever scandals occurred in the harbour of Quebec occurred under the administration of the former government and not of the present government. As respects the gentlemen who now occupy the position of harbour commissioners of Quebec there is not a shadow of justification for any suggestion that these gentlemen are not discharging their duties intelligently, faithfully and honestly. In so far as there is any reflection cast upon these gentlemen such a reflection is not justified. The hon. gentleman says that there should be no commissioners. Frankly, I differ from the hon. gentleman. I say it is not possible for the government to carry on the vast business of this country without here and there employing commissions for special purposes. Whatever development there may be with respect to these large questions of transportation and terminal facilities, for my part I am not able to agree with the hon. gentleman that it would be a good thing to abolish the Quebec Harbour Commission and deal with the business directly through the government. I cannot agree that it would be a good thing to abolish the Harbour Commission of Montreal. It may be that in the development of transportation facilities some new system may be advisable, but for the present I am satisfied that these works can be better carried on in the harbours of Montreal and Quebec through the assistance of the capable, energetic and intelligent gentlemen who compose these commissions. I do not agree with my hon. friend's ideas that the duties which are now performed by these gentlemen should be transferred to the Public Works Department. My impression is that in availing themselves of the services of these commissions the government are employing the best way of dealing with this question. In regard to the expenditure of moneys my hon. friend has again imagined a story. He says that we cannot find out how this money is spent. There is no difficulty in finding out. If the hon. gentleman will put a question to us we will, I think, be able to give him the information that he requires from these commissions. They are trustees. They issue their reports, we have got them, they send them to us and the hon. gentleman tells us a romantic story when he says that the people cannot get all the information they desire as to how that money is expended. We will be happy to give any information, and if we have not got it we will get it.
