we cannot concur in this opinion. The value of any property is estimated on the basis of the income it will produce, and we confidently assert that there are very few business enterprises which will pay the same interest that can be realized from a highly-bred and successful stallion or brood mare. In this estimate we admit fully the risk of accident or death and the depreciation caused by advancing years.

In illustrating this statement we can mention eally a few prominent stallions, which we select a random and with no purpose of distinguish ing one horse above another. The service book of Red Wikes was filled two months age at a season fee of $300. This sum represents a pretty fair interest on $50,000, and while to many that sum seems an exorbitant price for a stallion, we have no accessed in the same and the
