THE OLD GARDEN
 I know a sweet old garden,
 Closed in by sheltering walls,
 Where the sunlight lingers lovingly
 And the twilight softly falls.
 A garden, quaint and peaceful,
 Where I lay aside all care,
 A very Paradise it seems
 Of rest and sweetness rare.
 In spring the garden wakes,
 And from beneath their shading leaves,
 The violets scatter perfume
 On every passing breeze,
 And in one sunny corner,
 All decked with green and gold,
 A wealth of yellow beauties
 Their leaves and cups unfold.
 Then stately lily, lovely rose,
 Bend their graceful heads,
 To the tender little seedlings
 As they creep from earthy beds,
 Whilst bursting buds and blossoms,
 When sunbeams chase the gloom,
 Bring graceful, clinging, lowly things
 And gorgeous glorious bloom.
 Dear garden filled with memories,
 This heritage of ours—
 Are links that bind the passing years,
 Those years so full to me,
 The flowers look up and smile and nod,
 As a soft wind whispers by,
 And they seem to say "Be happy,
 Overhead is God's blue sky."
 O sweetest, fairest flowers,
 Thy mission is to cheer
 Saddened hearts and hungry souls,
 And make life's way less drear.
 How cold and dark the earth would be—
 This heritage of ours—
 Without God's blessed sunshine,
 And his precious gift, the flowers.

CHEAP KNOWLEDGE

WHEN it happens to me that I begin to be weary of the sun, and find the fair apple of life dust and ashes at the core—just because, perhaps, I can't afford Melampus Brown's last volume of poems in large paper, but must perforce condescend upon the two-and-sixpenny edition for the million—then I bring my self to a right temper by recalling to memory a sight which now and again in old days would touch the heart of me to a happier pulsation.

In the long, dark winter evenings, outside some shop window whose gas light flared brightly into the chilly street, I would see some lad—sometimes even a girl—book in hand, heedless of cold and wet, of aching limbs and straining eyes, careless of jostling passers-by, of rain and sleet, of the wind then and about, their happy spirits far from an enchanted world; till the ruthless shopman turned out the gas and brought them rudely back to the bitter reality of cramped legs and numbed fingers.

"My sister!" I would cry inwardly, feeling the link that bound us together. They possessed, for the hour, the two gifts most precious to the student—light and solitude: the true solitude of the roaring street.

Somehow this vision rarely greets me now. Probably the Free Libraries have supplanted the flickering shop-lights; and every lad and lass can enter and call for the books they wish to read. In Miss Bradburn's bookshop, in the luxury's sofa-lap of leather; and of course this boon is appreciated and profited by, and we shall see the divine results in a year or two. And yet sometimes, like the dear old Baron in the "Red Lamp," "I wonder!"

For myself, public libraries possess a special horror, as of lonely wastes and dragon-haunted fens. The stillness and the heavy air, the feeling of restriction and surveillance, the mute presence of these other readers, "all silent and all damned," combine to set up a nervous irritation fatal to quiet study. Had I to choose, I would prefer the windy street, removal of checks and obstacles make the path which leads to the divine mood, ain't too tempting, now that it is less rugged. So full of human nature are we all—still—despite the Radical missionaries that labor in the vineyard. Before the National Gallery was extended and rearranged, there was a little "St. Catherine" by Pinturicchio that possessed my undivided affections. In those days she hung near the floor, so that those who would worship must grovel; and little I grudged it. Whenever I found myself near Trafalgar Square with five minutes to spare I used to turn in and sit on the floor before the object of my love, till gently but firmly rebuked on my legs by the attendant. She hangs on the line now, in the grand new room; but I never go to see her. Somehow she is not my "St. Catherine" of old. Doubtless Free Libraries affect many strange impressions, but on the whole, it is the restriction placed on vice by our social code, which make its pursuit so peculiarly agreeable.

But even when the element of human nature has been fully allowed for, it remains a question whether the type of mind that a generation or two of Free Libraries will evolve is or is not the one which the spare reading and consequent fertile thinking necessitated by the old, or gas-lamp, style is not productive of sounder results. The cloyed and congested mind resulting from the free run of these grocers' shops to omnivorous appetites (and all young readers are omnivorous) bids fair to produce a race of literary resurrection-men; a result from which we may well pray to be spared. Of all forms of lettered effluence, that which exploits the original work of others and professes to supply us with right opinions therewith is the least wanted. And whether he take to literary expression pen or only write the tongue of him, the grocer's boy of letters is sure to find a fulfilling bore. The Free Library, if it is fulfilling the programme of its advocates, is breeding such as he by scores.

But after all there is balm in Gilead; and much joy and consolation may be derived from the spirit of official reports, by which it would appear that the patrons of these libraries are confining their reading, with a charming unanimity, exclusively to novels. And indeed they cannot do better; there is no more blessed thing on earth than a good novel, not the least merit of which is that it induces a state of passive, unconscious enjoyment, and never offends the reader to go to the word right. Next to fairy tales—the original world-fiction—our modern novels may be ranked as our most precious possessions; and so it comes to pass that I shall now cheerfully pay my five shillings, or ten shillings, or whatever it may shortly be, in the pound towards the Free Library; convinced at last that the money is not wasted in training exponents of the subjectivity of this writer and the objectivity of that, nor in developing fresh imitators of dead discredited styles, but is rightly bestowed on the support of wholesome, honest, unpretending novel reading.—From "Pagan Papers," by Kenneth Graham. London: John Lane, 35, 36, net.

OF STUDIES

STUDIES serve for delight, for ornament, and for ability. Their chief use for delight is in privateness and retiring; for ornament, is in discourse; and for ability, is in the judgment and disposition of business; for expert men can execute, and perhaps judge of particulars, one by one; but the general councils, and the plots and marshalling of affairs come best from those that are learned. To study more than time in studies, is sloth; to use them too much for ornament, is affectation; to make judgement wholly by their rules, is the humour of a scholar; they perfect nature, and are perfected by experience; for natural abilities are like natural plants, that need pruning by study; and studies themselves do give forth directions too much at large, except they be bounded by experience. Crafty men contemn studies, simple men admire them, and wise men use them; for they teach not their own use; but that is a wisdom without them and above them, won by observation. Read not to contradict and confute, nor to believe and take for granted, nor to find talk and discourse, but to weigh and consider. Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested; that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read but not curiously; and some to be read wholly, and with diligence and attention. Some books also may be read by deputy, and extracts made of them by others; but that would be only in the less important arguments and the meaner sort of books; else difficult books are like common distilled waters, flashy things. Reading maketh a full man; conference a ready man; and writing an exact man; and, therefore, if a man write little, he had need have a great memory; if he confer little, he had need have a present wit; and if he read little, he had need have much cunning, to seem to know that he doth not. Histories make men wise; poets, witty; the mathematics, subtle; natural philosophy, deep; moral, grave; logic and rhetoric, able to contend; Abstrusum in moribus; nay, there is no stand or impediment in the wit, but may be wrought out by fit studies; like as diseases of the body may have appropriate exercises, shooting for the lungs and breast, gentle walking for the stomach, riding for the head and the like; so if a man's wit be wandering, let him study the mathematics; for in demonstrating things he is called away never so little, he must begin again; if his wit be not apt to distinguish or find difference, let him study the schoolmen; for they are Cymini sceleres. If he be not apt to bent on matters, and to answer the question, let him study the lawyers' cases; so every defect of the mind may have a special receipt.

FRANCIS BACON, (1561-1626)

LIFE OF A BIG GUN

At a meeting of the Faraday Society, Dr. W. Rosenzahn, F.R.S., gave a special lecture on the making of the big gun, in which he extolled the work of the British artillery engineer and the metallurgist. Sir Robert referred to the fact that the life of a gun is really very short—e.g., that of a modern high velocity gun was not much more than three seconds. By this was meant that if one added up the length of time during which the projectile remained in the gun, it would be found that under full service velocities the total time, and consequently the life of the inner gun tube, did not amount to much more than three seconds before the erosion set up interfered with the accuracy of the gun.

Several interesting examples were given by Sir Robert of remarkable results that he had witnessed as being obtained from what he called that "modern high speed and great power heating known as the big gun." One of these was that of a 9-in. wrought-iron plate being attacked by a 9.2 in. Whitworth shot. This plate was swung upon turnings projecting from either side. In other words, the shell would have been possible with comparatively little energy to make the plate swing backwards and forwards.

To show how quickly the shot acted, when the Whitworth shot was fired against the plate and perforated it the plate was lifted from its turnings seating and thrown away some 10 feet or 12 feet, yet the hole was properly punched in the plate. In other words, before the plate had time to swing the shot had passed through it. This brought home a fact which was perhaps not sometimes realized—namely, the enormous rapid action of the shot in perforating.

For example, a 15-in. shot going through a 15-in. plate would perforate at any rate in about 1-1000th part of a second, probably in even less than this. It would be understood that tremendous stresses were suddenly brought to bear upon the shot, and how the slightest flaw or imperfection in any gun would wreck it. In other words, a 15-in. armour-piercing shell, properly hardened and tempered was a very fine metallurgical achievement.

Another instance might be mentioned. One of our 6-in. shot was fired against a 9-in. compound plate, and recovered unbroken. It was so little injured that it was put in the gun and fired again. A second 9-in. plate was also perforated, the shot being recovered unbroken, but slightly ground. It was fired a third time against a hard-faced plate, and being uncapped, the shot, of course, broke.

This illustrated how well a shot properly hardened and tempered could resist the enormous stresses suddenly brought to bear. The shot, by means of its quality, and when possessing enough energy, was thoroughly master of its work against any type of plate without a hard face. To overcome the hard face, the modern cap had been introduced. This enabled even the hardest face to be perforated.

PURGED WEST AFRICA

The last batch of German prisoners who surrendered at Mora, in the north of Cameroon, after being besieged for 12 months, has now reached England, and a single German remains in what was Germany's West African Empire.—The Times, May 12

At Southampton, England, Quarter Sessions in April the Recorder, Mr. Temple Cooke, referring to the recent Act of Parliament which simplified the language of indictments, said the new Act had swept away a large number of technicalities. In 1827 an inquiry for murder was made and ed because it stated, "The jury on their oath present," instead of "oath." Even in the Southampton Court a man charged with stealing a brace of partridges from the rack of a railway carriage got off because the partridges were not described as dead.

Seven boys were ordered to receive 38 strokes with the birch at Aston, England, four being charged with stealing from gas meters and three with breaking into a house. One of the boys, questioned by a magistrate, admitted that he got his ideas from the picture palaces.

A HISTORICAL SKETCH OF THE GRINDSTONE QUARRIES OF NEW BRUNSWICK AND NOVA SCOTIA

As long as men have used steel tools and whatstones to give them an edge. This accounts for the fact that the quarrying and manufacture of these stones was one of the earliest branches of the world's industry.

It is an industry, however, that is narrowly confined to the few localities where suitable deposits of sandstone are to be found. Canada has taken an important part in the production of grindstones and whatstones for the reason that the sandstones of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia have been found particularly adaptable to this use.

One of the most important centres of the Canadian grindstone industry is at Stonehaven, Gloucester County, New Brunswick. The quarries of the Read Stone Company, which have been operated for sixty years are located there.

The quarries are unique in their method of extracting the stone; the areas worked have been reclaimed from the sea by the building of dams. This has been no small undertaking. The dam around the principal quarry which has just been finished, is over one-quarter of a mile long, and in all about a mile of dam has been built there.

At a meeting of the Faraday Society, Dr. W. Rosenzahn, F.R.S., gave a special lecture on the making of the big gun, in which he extolled the work of the British artillery engineer and the metallurgist.
