CHAPTER XXII.

"To Madge she appeared like a vision, ethereal." Her feet seemed scarcely to touch the ground; her loveliness was so spiritual that, in her state of confusion and bewilderment, Madge would not have been surprised if she had seen the slim, graceful figure float ceilingward.

Irene gazed at Royce and Seymour with a murmured "Royce," and made straight for Madge.

Madge rose as if compelled, and her handsome face flushed. She expected Irene to say, coldly: "How do you do? Have you had a pleasant journey?" But Irene took her hand, and bending forward, kissed her—not on the brow, but on the red, pure lips. Not a cold kiss which means "I hate you," but a warm, girlish, tender kiss that went straight to poor Madge's heart and brought the tears to her eyes.

"Oh, I am so sorry I am late," said Irene, seating herself beside her and still holding her hand; "but I had a bad headache and went to lie down, and I fell asleep and did not hear the bell, I am so sorry, for I meant to go down to the lodge and meet you. Will you forgive me, dear Madge?"

Madge was speechless for a moment. The sweet voice rang in her ears, echoed in her heart, filling her with gratitude and love.

"I am sorry your head ached," she said in a low voice tremulous with the feeling Irene's tenderness had called up. "Are you better now?"

"Quite," said Irene, with a smile; but even as she answered, Madge noticed that the lovely face was pale and looked wan, and that there were dark shadows under the eyes, that the smile was sad as well as tender—"quite, I am used to headaches"—"lately," she was going to add, but checked herself.

"And have you had a good time? You must tell me all about it when we are alone. How well Royce looks!" She glanced at him, only just glanced. "I have so much to say to you—to show you—"

The butler appeared.

"Dinner is served, my lady," he said in solemn tones.

Seymour came across the room to the two girls, and offered his arm to Madge.

She did not know what he meant for a moment, then she rose and put her hand in his arm. He smiled covertly at her hesitation, but said, courteously enough:

"I hope you have a good appetite, Madge. You should have, after your long journey."

He led her into the dining-room and put her in her seat, and the sense of embarrassment came rushing back upon her.

The room, with its oak paneling and pictures, its old tapestry hangings, looked richly in the subdued light. The table glittered with cut-glass and silver-plate; in the center, and in shining plateaus, were choice flowers, which shone like colored gems against the white cloth, and filled the air with fragrance.

There were three footmen in rich livery, as well as the butler, and to Madge they all seemed to be looking at her—watching for some mistake, some blunder on her part.

She looked down at her plate, noticed that there were two knives and forks and three wine-glasses at the side, and her heart sunk. She knew that she must blunder, must do something wrong.

Seymour went to the bottom of the table; Royce sat opposite her, and Irene by her side. Seymour pronounced a long grace, with a sanctified expression on his face, and in a kind of chant, and dinner commenced.

Madge watched Irene before she ventured to take up her spoon for the soup, and when the footman brought round the hock, said: "No, thank you," as Irene did. The things they brought her seemed endless, and she refused them, one after the other, until Irene, who looked to her continually, said: "But you are eating nothing, Madge, dear; you must take some of those cutlets."

Madge might have responded, "You yourself eat very little," for Irene seemed to have as little appetite as Madge; but she took the cutlet without a word.

She noticed that some of the things were eaten with a fork only, for no apparent reason, and that when she put her fork and knife down on her plate the footman instantly removed it. He seemed to her to be watching her every instant—as indeed he was—and she wondered how the rest could go on eating and talking as unconsciously as if these men-servants were not present.

As she looked across at Royce her mind wandered back—it had not very far to wander; only a few days—to the meals she and he had eaten round the camp-fire, and it seemed to her marvelous that he could ever have endured the roughness and wildness of his surroundings; and as she listened to his deep, musical voice, as he talked to the countess, she asked herself if it could be possible that the aristocratic gentleman in evening-dress, with the footman behind his chair, could really be Jack, the horse-dealer of the gypsies, and whether she could be Madge Lee, who a week ago lived in a caravan, and wore a red shawl, with Mother Kate and Lottie and Tony for companions.

And even in that moment the past rose before her, and her heart ached with a wistful tenderness for them all. Did they miss her? Had Tony cried much? Had he forgotten her?

Meanwhile, she listened to the talk going on around her. It was as strange to her as the great house, the magnificent rooms, the cut-glass, the plate, the silent, noiseless servants.

She heard Jack—no, Royce—asking his mother about Lord and Lady Balfarraz, and Sir William and the Duchess of Kingford, and she realized how widely she was separated from all these people.

The dinner proceeded, and, marvelous to relate, she had made no great blunder as yet; but presently the footman put on the dessert service. The plates were of rare Sevres. To each person was placed a finger-bowl of old English cut-glass, as rare and almost as precious as the Sevres.

Now Madge had declined all the wines excepting a glass of claret, and thinking that the water in the finger-bowls was for drinking, was about to take it in her hand, when Irene quickly, yet so softly, said:

"You are admiring this old glass, dear? They are very, very old. I think they came from Holywood Palace, and it is just possible that Mary Queen of Scots dipped her fingers in them as we do now;" and she dipped her fingers in the scented water and wiped them on her napkin.

Madge looked at her, her eyes eloquent with gratitude.

"I did not know," she said in a low voice.

Irene drew the dish of grapes toward her, and cut off a branch from the bunch with the silver-gilt scissors.

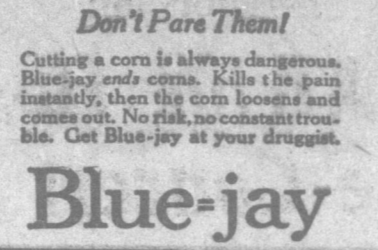

"Are they not beautiful with the

Destined Ways

We boast of roads that we shape and tread.
But, whether we like it or no,
We take the roads that were made for us
Long ages and ages ago.

We are no more than the silver hordes
That, led by the tide, move forth
From sheltered waters and follow the coast
The winds may howl and the seas may rage
And fishermen take their toll,
Yet ever and ever by reef and dune,
Shall follow the track of shoal.

No hand may stay them but that
That strange hand
That marked their path through the sea
Ere man knew wisdom and laughed to scorn
The puzzle of Destiny.

The strong man's will is a mighty power
That battles to good through ill;
When age creeps on and the flesh grows weak,
Where then is the strong man's will?

We are no more than the wild black swans
That fly when the world's at rest—
A trailing flock 'neath a crescent moon—
West ever and ever west.

No hand may stay them but that
That strange hand
That marked their course in the air,
Ere man, at the birth of time, was born
To sorrow and toil and care.

We boast of roads that our own selves build;
But whether we like it or no,
We take the roads that were built for us
Long ages and ages ago.

Will Maeterlinck Fight Fistic Duel?

Challenged by Sicilian Lawyer—
Latter May Be April 1 Victim.

Milan, Italy, April 5.—(Associated Press.)—Following a challenge sent by Sebastian Bondi, a Sicilian lawyer in this city, to Maurice Maeterlinck, the famous Belgian poet and playwright, for an alleged defamatory article recently published concerning the poet's Sicilian trip, lively speculation has been aroused in sporting circles here as to whether the affair will be settled by ten rounds with the gloves, or a duel with the sword or pistol. Maeterlinck's prowess with the gloves is well known. In his challenge to the poet, Signor Bondi is quoted as saying:

"I read with indignation and disgust your infamous article on your recent trip to Sicily, published in a Belgian review and then reproduced in the Secolo in Milan on April 11."

"As a citizen of glorious Palermo, famed for its courtesy, I hotly you herewith that I consider your ears boxed. I hold myself at your disposal."

Friends of Bondi warned him to beware of April 1 publications.

To My Little Son

By JULIA JOHNSON DAVIS.

In your face I sometimes see
Shadows of the man to be,
And eager, dream of what my son
Will be in twenty years and one.

But when you are to manhood grown,
And all your manhood ways are known,
Then shall I, wistful, try to trace
The child you once were in your face?

It was opposed by the administration leaders in charge of the bill as destructive to the whole theory of Pan-Americanism.

TALK OF WAR RIDICULOUS.

TOKYO, April 19. Talk of military action as a result of United States exclusion legislation is ridiculous, however much congress has wounded the Japanese pride, Lieut General Lehtsuke Tsuno, Vice-Minister of War, said in a newspaper interview to-day.

A Clergyman and Scripts

Editor Evening Telegram. Dear Sir--Recently there has come to my knowledge a rumour that my name has appeared on a large number of scripts for the purchase of intoxicating liquor. Indeed, the rumour goes as far as to say that so many such scripts have been presented at the Office of Control, that my name has been included in a list of the names of persons to whom no more liquor can be supplied--that is, that I have been "blacklisted."

So far as those who know me in the country are concerned, I could afford to treat this matter with silent contempt. But, unfortunately, such rumours run far beyond one's friends and acquaintances, and my silence may be misinterpreted. If there are, or ever have been, any scripts in the Office of Control bearing my name, either as issuing or receiving them, the persons who placed my name on them, or caused my name to be placed on them, have been guilty of FORGERY, for I have never either issued or asked for a script. A good many years ago, I did give, to a few persons who pleaded serious illness in their families, notes for the drugstore or bond store notes for small quantities; but I soon found that some of these were being abused, and I ceased giving them at once. Since then I have not seen a script. I do not know the color of the paper on which they are printed.

I do not make this disclaimer for the defense of my own name so much as to wipe off a slur which this wretched rumour must cast upon the ministry of which I have the honour to be a senior member.

Yours very truly, W. T. D. DUNN.

THE MYSTERY.

We live and ponder the why of it,
And what is it all about;
The world and the arching sky of it,
The battle, the gain, the rout,
The man who has dabbled his years
In pain,
The man who has suffered to be a saint,
The boy held fast by a flaming dream
Are they all a part of this mortal scheme?

We live and share in the sigh of it
And slowly the march moves on;
We join in the hue and cry of it,
Yea, steadily, one by one,
Each to a curious urge he bent,
In the trade of words this life is spent
And that one fashions in steel and stone
The thing he dreams when he sits alone.

But back of the glistening eye of it,
And back of the hammer's blow,
And the towers men sing to the sky
of it,
The great souls greater grow,
Men paint and write, and build and sing,
To the urge of that strange mysterious thing,
Which whispers that death is another
birth,
And the whole of this life isn't lived
on earth.

Sir Richard Squires
Denies He is Guilty of Graft Charges

FINDINGS "ABSURD," INQUIRY
"POLITICAL," SAYS ex-PREM-IER OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

FORESEES HIS VINDICATION.

The findings were absolutely absurd and contrary to the evidence. From beginning to end it was purely a political affair. Such is Sir Richard Squires' opinion of the findings of a Royal Commission, which declared that he was guilty of graft during his term as Premier of Newfoundland.

Sir Richard arrived in Toronto on a business visit on Saturday, and will be here until to-night. When interviewed at the King Edward Hotel yesterday he flatly denied the charges which have been given publicity in Canadian newspapers recently. "There is no recourse to the courts," stated the former Premier, "but the report of the Commission will be tabled in the Newfoundland Legislature on April 22—if it is not I will ask for it—and I look for complete vindication during the debates which will follow. Moreover, I am certain that as soon as I can get to the country I will lead the Liberals to a victory at the polls, and will regain my former position."

Political, He Says.

According to Sir Richard, the commission which investigated his administration was a political and not a judicial tribunal. Its powers were framed to suit the political convenience of the Government, and the inquiry was conducted by the Government for political purposes, he said.

Analyzing the charges in detail Sir Richard said:

"The first paragraph alleged that the accountant in my office had received financial accommodation from Mr. Meaney, the Acting Liquor Controller. The second was that the Dominion Iron and Steel Company or the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company had made payments of money, which, while not made to me personally, or made with my knowledge, had been made for my benefit.

Other Phrases of Probe.

"The third was regarding an investigation into a portion of the accounts of the Department of Agriculture and Mines. The fourth was connected with an investigation into the accounts of the Department of Public Charities. The fifth covered an investigation into the Department of Public Charities.

"The Commissioner's report under paragraph one was adverse to me. My position is that the report was entirely contrary to the weight of the evidence.

"As to paragraph two, the fact that the Dominion Iron and Steel Company had, without my knowledge and during my absence in England during the summer of 1920, given financial assistance to a newspaper published in St. John's which had largely assisted my party in the general election campaign of 1919, and the by-elections of 1920 was already a matter of public knowledge, and had not at any time been disputed.

Denies Personal Benefit.

"But the suggestion that either myself personally or any member of my party had personally benefited to the amount of even one dollar was entirely without foundation in fact.

"As to paragraphs three, four and five, it was shown that an amount of $3,000,000 had been expended over a period of years in public works, relief operations and direct graft in connection with that large expenditure with which either myself, Dr. Alexander Campbell, ex-Minister of Agriculture and Mines; W. B. Jennings, ex-Minister of Public Works, or the late Mr. H. O'Dwyer, then Commissioner of Public Charities, were, directly or indirectly, associated."

On April 8th District No. 2, S.U.F. met for its anniversary at St. Paul's Lodge, St. John's. There are six Lodges in the jurisdiction of D. G. Loken. Representatives were present from these Lodges, viz. Catalina, Port Rexton, Ireland's Eye, Amberley, and St. Paul's. It is constitutionally required to have two meetings yearly at the annual meeting of the District. The first meeting was taken place earlier in the year, but owing to circumstances it was found impossible to do so. Lodge opened at 4 o'clock on Tuesday evening, April 8th, and at 6 until 9 o'clock Wednesday evening. As customary there was a dining meeting of St. Paul's No. 49 on Tuesday night, and G. delegates were in attendance. The pleasure being enhanced by the selections rendered by the men of Port Rexton Lodge, gladly, willingly and most gave of their services at the order to add to the pleasure of the District Grand Lodge on Wednesday, April 8th, commencing at 8 o'clock. The following were discussed, after which election and installation of officers for the ensuing year. P. M. Canada, Crown and Commonwealth

By THOMAS GUERIN.

On March 20th, the question of Canada's relation to the Mother Country through the ties of the British North America Act was raised in the House of Commons by Mr. J. S. Woodsworth, the member for Winnipeg Centre. The ulterior motives which prompted Mr. Woodsworth's motion were but thinly veiled, nevertheless, the members of the House of Commons are destined to hear more on this topic, probably through more disinterested motives.

The status of Canada has been discussed on many occasions, it has been the happy hunting ground for many political theorists. It has been used to serve the purposes of Imperialists, Nationalists and Autonomists alike. Each has dissected it, and found in it matter to conform with his particular political bias.

The rising of the British Commonwealth of Nations has to a great extent disorganized many of the accepted theories of Canada's status, and rendered obsolete many opinions which had become regarded as facts. The vital question today is not that of Canada's relationship to the Mother Country, but that of the relationship existing between the free Nations which form the British Commonwealth.

To establish the relative ties that bind together the component Nations of the British Commonwealth is a task which might well frighten the most temerarious. The British Empire is an evolution. It set forth its way, a slow moving caterpillar. It passed through the stages of its growth and change till it burst upon the Twentieth Century with a butterfly's wings upon its wings the magic word "Commonwealth." The King has used the term.

In order that the feeling of adolescence which was permeating the young young countries might not be fettered by the weighty chains of Empire, the lighter bonds of Commonwealth were imposed.

The evolution has come so gradually that the state of Commonwealth membership has slipped unnoticed upon our national life. The King's oaths of the British Commonwealth have scarcely realized the change which has come over them, but have continued the even tenor of their way oblivious of their political manumission.

The significance of the term "Commonwealth" appears to have been overlooked. A few theorize over it and derive from it conclusions to confirm their own political views. The true significance of the word is "Wealth of the People." The Romans called it "Res Publica," but that might mean "public." The King has used the term "Commonwealth," and he can do no more.

Whoever invented the term seems to have played a shabby trick on the hard-empiricists. To have substituted a Res Publica for an Empire was, to say the least, taking a little liberty; but what is the difference in name when the substance is the same?

Empiricists may quote the British North America Act to prove that Canada is still a colony. By it, they establish that she is bound by laws to Downing Street, yet, Canada is freer than India—and India is an Empire.

The chains which bind together the British Nations have this long been rusted through. They still exist, but their usefulness is gone. In their place there is the silken web spun by the bonds of common interest and common loyalty.

Recently in England members of the Radical wing of the Labour Party had become imbued with the doctrines of Internationalism, who were unable to realize the reasons which their indiscretions had caused, openly spoke of the prospect of abolishing the Crown and Monarchy, and substituting a "modern" or more "democratic" form of administration. These people were unfortunately ignorant of the fact that Great Britain is the de facto monarch of the world, and would dethrone the King and set up a republic in his stead without regard for the consequences to the other sister Nations who form the Commonwealth. Even if the people of England and Scotland were unanimous in favour of such a change, what allegiance would any Indian, Australian, or even Irishman owe to some blatant opportunist who might be chosen or proclaimed President of Britain? If such a change of affairs should ever take place—and some Englishmen do hope for it—Britain herself would have to withdraw from the Commonwealth, and return to the isolation of a fifth rate nation. The Commonwealth would continue to grow and prosper, its selfsame King, domiciled in London.

The dream of Proletariat supremacy over the British Empire is a materialist, what right would they have to choose the one who would head the former Empire? Such things would be most unjust.

These radicals do not seem to realize that the British Commonwealth is not even an English Power. It is neither a Christian Power, nor a "white" Power—the vast majority of its subjects are of dark complexion, and the overwhelming religion is that of Islam.

In the Commonwealth should develop republican tendencies, the component parts would have the democratic right of jointly choosing the one to preside over them. The prerogative of choice would certainly not belong to the inhabitants of Britain. The citizen of India would have his voice in the selecting, as well as the man from Canada. The inhabitant of Zululand would be co-equal with his British brother. It is doubtful if even the British Radical Labour element would relish the sight of a "President" of the British Republic newly arrived from Central Africa, Hong Kong or Calcutta established in Buckingham Palace directing the destinies of the former far-flung Empire. Yet, one condition entails the other: in the brotherhood of Republican Democracy. There is no reason why the Caliphate of the Mohammedan world should be in Bagdad, Cairo or Angora when London is the centre of the Islamic Empire, and when it might well adorn the shoulders of the one who presides over the destinies of that Empire.

It requires an enthusiastic democrat ever to picture the British Commonwealth ruled by other than a Royal Crown. Crowns may no longer be worn in many countries, yet, they are the very life of others. In lands whose people are sorely lacking in the bonds of a common interest, the cementing of a common loyalty is necessary to bind them together. This is the case with the British Commonwealth. Outside of the bonds of common citizenship, Canada has little in common with India. New Zealand and Rhodesia are as far apart as the poles. Yet, they are all closely held together by one strong tie, the bond of loyalty to a common King.

The British North America Act was the instrument which united the Provinces of North America. It was the seal which was placed on a mutual agreement, and it defined the powers which the new Dominion might exercise at that time. It is broad enough to allow of liberal interpretation. When it was drafted, no British or Canadian statesman ever dreamed of a Canadian Minister to Washington or of a Canadian Plenipotentiary signing a treaty with a foreign Power. It has come through the evolution of adolescence, and still remains the certificate of Canada's liberty.

The Island of Britain is mistress of her own destinies, but she is not the mistress of the British Commonwealth. The politicians of England may talk for England, but the same moral obligation rests upon them as rests upon the smallest Country in the Commonwealth; to do nothing that would in any way injure the cohesion of the whole.

The Crown alone is the tie which binds together the sister Nations. The common interests are not great enough to hold together the British Family without the bond of common loyalty.

To-day the free Nations of the British Commonwealth from the arch upon rests Justice and Liberty. The keystone of that arch is the King. Without that stone, the arch must fall, and ruin will be where glory stood.—The Listening Post.

Holy Father's Health is Good

SAYS CARDINAL MUNDELEIN IN CORRECTING UNTRUEFUL REPORT.

ROME—Reports to the effect that the Pope is in poor health were controverted in an interview, given to the N.C.W.C. News Service by Cardinal Mundelein of Chicago after he had had a special audience with the Holy Father.

"Anyone who says that the Pope is suffering and tired, is saying something that is untrue," the Cardinal said. "I met the Pope when he had just returned from an hour and a half walk in the Vatican Gardens. He was fresh and vigorous, and spoke with youthful energy, precision and clearness, and with greatest kindness."

Further discussing his audience with the Pope, Cardinal Mundelein said: "When, about twenty years ago, I was received by Pius X., I had the deepest impression of that Pope's kindness, and I believed it would not be possible to receive a similar impression again. Now, however, that impression has been surpassed by the extraordinary kind welcome by Pius XI."

Currents That Send Ships Ashore

Hitherto unsuspected facts about ocean currents, knowledge of which may prevent many shipwrecks along our coasts, have been brought to light in recent investigations by the U.S. Coast and Geodetic Survey, according to Lt.-Com. G. T. Rude, Chief of the Division of Tides and Currents of that bureau. Says Science Service's Daily Service News Bulletin (Washington): "Contrary to the belief of mariners, a local wind creates a current setting not in its own direction, but in a direction about fifteen degrees to the right of the wind on the Pacific coast and about twenty degrees to the right on the Atlantic Coast, a long series of observations have shown. The importance of this, Commander Rude explained, lies in the fact that a wind blowing parallel with the coast produces a current which may tend to set a coastwise vessel on shore. For example, a vessel bound up the Pacific coast with a following 60-mile wind will overrun her log, due to wind-driven current alone, by one and one-tenth knots per hour, and be set in toward the land fifteen degrees on the average to the right of the wind direction. While from Ekman's theory a deflection to the right in the northern hemisphere is to be expected from theoretical considerations, due to the earth's rotation on its axis, it is modified along the coasts by the configuration of the bottom friction, and the form of the coastline. Therefore, while a general law may be given of the general current produced by any given wind velocity, observations are necessary at intervals along the coast, particularly well inshore, to determine the actual velocities for that particular locality. On sailing lines for coastwise navigation, however, the general law will hold with sufficient accuracy for practical results within five to twenty miles offshore. It has been found, Commander Rude said, that the velocity of the wind-driven current varies fairly proportionately with the wind velocity, and is about two per cent. in knots of the wind velocity in miles per hour on the Pacific coast, and one and a half per cent. on the Atlantic coast. In practice, however, it is necessary to take into consideration the combination of this wind-driven current with the periodic tidal current, the direction of which changes constantly in a rotary movement. The velocities of this type of current vary with the changing phases of the moon on the Atlantic coast, while on the Pacific coast the principal variation in velocity is due to inequalities

STUART ENGLAND HAD OUR PROBLEMS.

Miss Mary Coate's entertaining book, "Social Life in Stuart England" proves that there is nothing new in our social troubles of to-day. They were all familiar to our forefathers under the Stuarts. Take unemployment:

A modern authority estimates the number of men thrown out of employment by enclosures from 1455 to 1637 at 34,000, and he considers the proportion, small out of a total population of about 3,000,000, but if the number was small, the bitterness was great and widespread.

Or take housing? Shortage of cottages was another very real grievance, for, in spite of frequent proclamations from the State, many landlords refused to repair their cottages. Shortage of houses and low wages helped to perpetuate the patriarchal system by which the farmer boarded the unmarried men and maids in his employ.

Or, again, take the neglect of the men "broke in our wars": As a contemporary declares, the case of maimed and destitute soldiers was hard: "Men that have ventured their limbs in our behalf. . . are thus required, when they come home to live by some labour in their natural country, every man sayeth, 'We will not be troubled with their service.'"

Miss Coate's book may be warmly recommended to all. It has some excellent illustrations, and is a work of real scholarship and research.

How Do You Know You Haven't Neurasthenia?

"Never before in the world's history has there been such an excess of cases of run-down constitutions where the nerves of both men and women alike show the need of an up-building tonic. The condition known as neurasthenia being the most common and most widely known ailment—makes you feel miserable and depressed—have the 'Blues' and existence is nothing short of misery." This is the clipping referred to in the following letter from Mr. Moore: "As a user of your tonic known as Carnol, I wish to state that it is the leader of all tonics. That's the way I speak of it. The clipping enclosed is just the way my wife felt, also she could not eat or relish a meal. Now she is always ready for her meals. I work is no burden. I have tried all kinds of tonics but none did what Carnol has done. It was recommended to me and it is a pleasure for me to recommend it to others because of what it did for my wife. Any one who is in need of a tonic or body builder should use Carnol. You can use my recommendation anywhere or any way you like. That's how much faith I have in Carnol. Excuse me writing to you, also accept my thanks for the tonic known as Carnol."—J. Moore, 18 Rydal St., Toronto, 17-9. Carnol is sold by all good druggists everywhere.

The Situation To-day

The recent pronouncement by the Government that further investigations would be made in the Department of Agriculture and Mines, the Liquor Controller's Department, as well as that of the Auditor General was followed, we understand, by an application to the Colonial Office to recommend an official to undertake the work. The names of three prominent men have been submitted to the Executive, and their selection will be made at an early date.

An audit of the accounts in the Departments concerned has already been begun by the firm of Messrs. Reid, Son and Watson, and it has been decided to complete this work before the arrival of the Commissioner, in order that the enquiry may not be unduly prolonged. It is expected that at least two months will be required by the auditors to prepare their reports, and as it is apparently intended in this second spring cleaning to leave no dark corners unexplored, it will not occasion surprise if considerably more time has to be given to this work than is anticipated.

The public will be gratified to learn that in the arrangements made with the Colonial Office consideration to the question of expenditure, and while the person appointed as Commissioner will possess in the highest degree the necessary qualifications, the cost to the country will be considerably less than it was in the recent Enquiry. Considerable surprise has been expressed because of the delay which the various proceedings have occasioned, and not without reason. At the same time it is obvious that the Government realize fully the gravity of the problems which they have undertaken, and if further time is required in which to solve them to the satisfaction of all, it is only fair and reasonable that every opportunity should be given them to complete their task.

The coming session of the Legislature will be a momentous one in the history of the country, and as it would appear that we have reached the turning point in our economical life, an earnest effort should be made to sink political differences and to shelve irrelevancies which might tend to jeopardize our recovery or delay the period of prosperity which is in sight.

Stories From Nfld. History.

In a little book entitled "Stories from Newfoundland History," issued by F. A. Owen Publishing Co., Dansville, N.Y., Dr. W. W. Blackall has assembled in a manner that arouses one's curiosity regarding the earliest history of this country, a series of stories about the Beothucks, and various traditions of the voyage of the Norsemen to these shores. It is unfortunate that the records of the aborigines are so meagre, and it is only by arousing the interest of students in this mysterious race that research may bring to light further information concerning them. Perhaps, too, one of these days the hull of a viking ship will be unearthed along our shore, and thus confirm the stories to which frequent repetition has not tendered to add veracity. We recommend this brochure to students and teachers to whom both its matter and the conciseness of arrangement will appeal.

No Longer Militia Building

The new East End Post Office will be ready for occupation before May 1st. Messrs. Thomas Brothers, Contractors have the work of making the necessary alterations well in hand. The Pensions Board, which occupied the room where the post office will be located, moved office to rooms 3 and 4 upstairs formerly held by the Employment Bureau. As everything in connection with the Militia has disappeared with the removal of Mr. Howley to rooms in the General Post Office, it would now be a misnomer to call the premises the Militia Building. All the rooms on the top flat are occupied by the Denominational heads of Education. On the next flat three rooms are given over to the Department of Education and half the ground flat is in possession of the Council of Higher Education.

SEALING NEWS

During the past few days the remainder of the ships on the Northern front received a bad drubbing owing to the north east gales and snow storm, and as a consequence the Thetis and Terra Nova were compelled to run for shelter. The former anchored at Westville and the latter at Pool's Island. As far as can be understood both ships will proceed to continue the search for old bedlamers as soon as the weather moderates. The Viking in the Gulf does not report having taken any seals. Her position is in the vicinity of East Cape, jammed, with the Stella Maris alongside. A message to the Deputy Minister of Customs from the Sub-Collector at Twillingate received this morning states that the Terra Nova was sighted 10 miles N. W. Long Point, steaming about, while the Ranger is reported between Twillingate and Bacallou picking up the balance of her pans. A heavy sea is still running with numerous seals in the vicinity.

The following are the messages received over Saturday night:—

SAGONA FOURTH ARRIVAL—SHE HAILS FOR 9,000 SEALS.

S. S. Sagona, fourth arrival from the sealfishery this spring, entered port at 6:30 this morning halting for a catch of 9,000 seals, 1,500 of which are bedlamers. The Sagona, under the command of Capt. Radde, led the race with four other ships of the fleet after clearing the ice jam outside the Narrows on March 12th, and by the 14th she was about 15 miles off Seal Cove when the first bad weather was encountered. Getting within sighting distance of the Funks, they found the ice loose and heavy with numerous growlers around. There the ships remained for a period of 12 days in the worst predicament the captain ever remembers having been. However, she weathered the situation and towards the latter part of March a rent came in the ice, and fair progress was made into White Bay. Later the ship became jammed in the vicinity of Cape John. The ice was very tight and further headway impossible. To make matters worse the North East winds which prevailed drifted the ship with the ice rapidly towards the shore, and when the floe tightened up the ship was only about 130 yards from "Mother Burke," a huge rock well known to all mariners. The ship's predicament was a rather perilous one for all on board, but by the careful management of the captain the ship was kept under full steam, heading out the bay, and in a few hours the danger was overcome. On March 24th, the Sagona's position was 10 miles N.E. Partridge Point, when the Terra Nova and scattered whitecoats were sighted. On the following day with the ship jammed in heavy sheet ice, and unable to make any progress, several of the crew set out to walk to the Terra Nova, but were compelled to retreat owing to three miles of that ship with large lakes of water. The first seals were taken on the 4th of April, 2 miles south Little Harbor Deep, 7,000 of which were young harps. The Thetis and Ranger steamed into the patch on that day, and the three ships cleared up a patch estimated about 27,000. Hauling seals on board was then resorted to, and when the pans were located a large number of the dead seals were found missing. The captain states that the landsmen from Cat Arm, Coney Armand Jackson's Point, who were operating the seals a week previous to their steaming in, played havoc with the ship's seals, which no doubt augmented the landsmen's catch considerably. After stowing down about 8,000 harps, and the patch cut up, a search was made for the bedlamers, and on and on during the last two weeks some 1,500 were hatted and placed on board. The ice conditions during the spring were indescribable, the captain stated. Owing to the ship running short of coal the captain decided to bear up for home on Friday last, and once getting clear of the ice in White Bay, good progress was made to port. The entire ship's crew are in excellent health after all the hardships endured. The Sagona commenced discharging her fat at Bowring's Southside premises shortly after her arrival.

SIDE TALKS.

By Ruth Cameron.

THOSE HIDDEN PERSONALITIES.

The Man Behind.

A public speaker, whom I know, always seems to have the cleverest and most whimsical little jests to fit in at the right spot. One day he told me that he got a good many of them from the C. R., naming a religious paper.

"There's something about their exchange column," he said, "that's entirely different from other exchange columns. I don't know just why it is."

The answer to that is simple enough. The editor of that column is not satisfied to clip just carelessly. He has the same material to draw from as other exchange editors, but he evidently has a very keen sense of humor, and that part of his personality has made itself felt in spite of the fact that his name is unknown and his existence only vaguely apprehended by those who read his column.

He Creates the Atmosphere.

There is a certain hotel to which I always like to go when I go to the big city because there is an atmosphere of friendliness and welcome. Back of the staff of that hotel is a man with a friendly, genial personality, and it makes itself felt in the atmosphere that fills his house.

"If a man can write a better book, preach a better sermon, or make a better mousetrap than his neighbor, though his hut be in the forest, the world will make a beaten path to his door," said Emerson. I don't know about the world making a beaten path to his door. The world generally prefers to follow beaten paths rather than make them. But I do believe that any such force of personality, any such struggle toward perfection, will make itself felt, even if the world doesn't ever trace out the individuality behind the force.

Perhaps even now your personality is throwing such a far-reaching and beneficent shadow.

The Wonderful Hat Buyer.

There is a certain shop to which everyone in the big city near which I was born used to go for their hats if they could afford it. To say your hat was bought at R's meant something. Yet there were many other shops as expensive. Furthermore, there were many other departments at R's and the goods in them did not have the distinction of the hats. One day I met a woman who knew a good deal about merchandising and she told me about the wonderful buyer of hats at R's. "She has the most uncanny flair for getting the smart thing," she said to me, "there isn't another woman like her in the city." And so it was that the lengthened shadow of that personality made itself felt in the popularity of her department, despite the fact that 99 per cent. of her patrons had never heard of her and, accepting the shop in the unthinkable way most of us accept such service as if it were a sort of mechanical affair, scarcely realized that she existed.

VIEWING WITH ALARM.

These are truly perilous times and forever worse they grow, still we read of sins and crimes in the places high and low; bandits shoot us for a cent; in the halls of government every day some weeping gentleman springs another tale of woe. Drearly we read our hair as we read the daily news, and we cry in our despair, "Does the race its conscience lose? Is there any guy on deck having name without a speck, having fame that's not a wreck, scented not with oil on hooves?" Let's remember as we read that our fears are often vain; let no hallyho stampedee people claiming to be sane; there is just as much worth on this good old priceless earth as there was before the birth of this present oily rain. There are statesmen just as white as the world has ever known, public conscience shines as bright as the blamed thing ever shone; righteousness is still alive, though some seven skates or five in their moral blindness strive to acquire the easy bone. If a robber piles a gun for a gullider on a street of honest men; if a grafter plays with oil, breaking all the rules of Hoyle, scores adhere to honest toil and restore our faith again.

Training Your Mind

By A PSYCHOLOGIST.

Psychology has been too long considered as an abstruse, "dry-as-dust" scheme, interesting only to the specialist; whereas it is a subject that affects the man in the street in countless ways every day of his life.

The greatest benefit that the study of psychology can confer on the individual is self-control, lack of which lies at the root of most of the troubles of the present age.

Self-control is the chief feature that distinguishes the outstanding man from the rank and file. Concentration of attention, self-mastery, and will-power are the insignia of real genius. Yet these are human qualities, capable of immense development, and their continual neglect is a standing reproach to our educational methods.

A great deal of the tension that seems to be inseparable from modern life may be attributed to such energy-wasting habits as restlessness, irritability, acquisitiveness, worry over trifles, want of concentration, and just for social pleasures, all of which are indirect evidences of a want of self-control.

Every family doctor knows that a large proportion of the minor ailments of the present day are traceable to a want of self-mastery. Those whose lives are a continual round of hurried meals and rushing for train or omnibus, or who are nervous and irritable from the deadly effects of worry or too much pleasure, make up the bulk of the medical practitioner's daily round.

While the strain of modern life is apt to be exaggerated, yet there is no denying its effects. The truth is that anyone can easily stand it who knows how to conserve his mental energy.

REPORT FROM THE CHIEF AGENT FOR WEEK ENDING APRIL 18.

Humanely put to death a dog for a resident of Casey Street. Received a report from a boy named Bown, that a dog had been run over by a car on Springdale Street and left in a wounded condition and had perished. I am trying to locate the owner of the car. Another report was received from Mr. Penman that a dog had been run over by a car on Prescott Street. I got there. There is not much to report this week as I have been ill with a severe cold owing to the weather. I ask the lovers of animals all over Newfoundland to report any ill-treatment of animals to me in confidence.
