"Hugh Miller."

This was the subject of a most inter-sting lecture delivered by Rev. Mr. Mc-coll, of Dundas, in Knox's Church, on Thursday night, being the fourth of the series under the auspices of the Y. M.'s Christian Association. The attendance was tracting one vile habit, and appeared without a stain. On concluding his apprenticeship he went to Edinburgh, where a new field for his abilities appeared. Here he stood before the monument of Charles First and regarded it with all the scorn that was in his nature, and here he paid the deepest reverence to the statue of Knox. While here he made his first attempt at literature, in the shape of an article under the title of "Traditions," which was well received. Having received the position of accountant in a branch bank he returned to Cromarty. The dark days of 1843 were just dawning, and he found means of employing his pen. No wonder that chivalire people like the Scots, who loved their i freedom beyond all else, should take such a determined stand when Lord Brougham, in his historic speech, said that the congregations of the Church of Scotland had no right to appoint their own ministers.—And Hugh Miller was not backward in expressing his feelings, as his letter to Lord Brougham shows. Out of this letter arose his appointment to the position of editor of the Witness, the exponent of the church in the noble throes of freedom. Convinced of the propriety of this course, he failed not to fill his position creditably and honorably. No foe was to be so much dreaded as a vitiated press, and Miller devoted his talents to the preservation of the glory of the profession. As a writer he was clear and vigorous and an easy familiarity pervades his articles. He was thoroughly acquainted with flat subjects, and could discuss all topics with great clearness. Dr. Guthries of his "Siege of Acre," "I would rather write that article than take that fortress? As a reviewer he was impartial, giving credit where there was merit, and where merit was lacking he criticized with flearless candour, without being severe. Many Christians looked upon geologists as unscrupulous magicians, whe tried to read the hieroglyphics of nature, the Chief of Police immediately telegraphied to Hamilton, Toronto, Sarnia and Detroit, and soon after received from Capt. Prince, of Toronto, a reply that he had arrested a colored man, who gave his name as Curtis, with eighteen pistols and revolvers in a bag. The Chief then telegraphed for particulars, and received in answer that "the name of J. Gurd is on a revolver."

Hamilton and North-Westers Rainway.—On Wednesday evening a deputation and met the Directors of the above railway at the Royal Hotel. The object of the deputation was to impress upon the Directors the importance of running the proposed line to Collingwood. After talking the matter over and examining the map, it was considered feasible to give an extension from some point between Toronto and Flos to the town of Collingwood. The interview was of the most satisfactory character; and a strong feeling was exhibilited by the deputation in favor of the Hamilton scheme. A house has been found in a pleasant locality on Yeoman's Hill, Belleville, north of the late "Home," and has three and a quarter acres attached. It is two stories high and is furnished with all the conveniences and outbuildings. The property has cost $3,000.—a very low estimate. There has been paid down $750 ont of contributions, there is also $500 on hand to buy furniture, &c. All told, $4,000 will be wanted to accomplish the end in view. The Proton Committee met again on Thursday morning. Pardee and Boultbee were absent. The Chairman handed in the telegrams he had received from Dwight, the parties interested having consented to 'their production. These telegrams included all that were sent to or received from South Grey about the election. They simply related to the arrangements for holding the meetings and the progress of the campaign. Lauder, finding that his case had completely broken down, did not want to proceed further on the ostensible plea that witnesses were not to be believed, and he wanted the committee to obtain power from the House to examine witnesses under oath before proceeding any further. The committee took no action upon this suggestion, adjourned to meet again on Saturday morning, when Lewis will be examined, and they hope to close the investigation.

All on the platform having shaken hands with Traviss, the Rev. Mr. Curtis offered up prayer. At a given signal from the Sheriff, the bolt was withdrawn at twe minutes after nine, and the vietim planged almost head foremost through the trap, and fell a distance of six feet. There was no struggle beyond two convulsive tremors, and the unfortunate man was dead. The body was allowed to remain hanging an hour, when he was cut down. The usual coroner's jury was held and the necessary formalities having been complied with, the body was buried within the gaol walls. Within the last few days of Traviss' life, he supplied Rev. AN UNFORTUNATE VYNTURE.—Some time since we made mention of the fact that Mr. Cameron of Collingwood lost a valuable Clyde stallion which he was importing, by his death on the voyage out. We are sorry to learn that he has recently met with another loss, having purchased a second and more costly horse of the same stock, which was shipped on the 13th of January, per Australian steamship. Owing to the rough weather which prevailed the unfortunate animal shared the fatter leaving port. He was a dark bay five years old, named the Marquis of Lorne, and the winner of several first class prizes. Mr. Cameron, in no way discouraged by his ill fortune, will make a third attempt during the more propitious weather of the summer months. We have heard of several casualities of this description during the fall and winter, and should strongly advise all intending importers of stock to wait for a more fayorable season.—Gentlemen's Jornal.

FRIDAY EVEN'G, FEB. 23, 1872. GOAERNMENT AID TO BAIL.

If any stronger proof were needed to show the unscrupulous character of the Premier of the late Government, the revelations made by Mr Blake in speech on the resolutions for granting aid to railways, have furnished all that we require. The chief objection made to the policy of the late Government for aiding railways was, that it gave them an unconstitu tional control over the fund placed at their disposal, that that control was tiable to be abused, and the money employed as a lever for carrying elections and influencing politicians The revelations made by Mr Blake bear out to the fullest extent the ob jections which were urged. They took on themselves the responsibility of spending a million and a half of of spending a million and a half of dollars to aid in the construction of railways, and their promises of such aid were most lavish and included all railways east, west, north and south. From the voluminous correspondence read by Mr Blake, it seems that Mr Sandfield Macdonald made ample promises to every railway deputation which waited on him asking aid. Had the promises being kept the million and a half dollars, and a great deal more, would have been exhausted, and yet some of the enterprises must necessarily have been deprived of their and yet some of the enterprises must necessarily have been deprived of their promised bonus.

These promises, read in the light of subsequent events, had a meaning as we shall show. The railway subsidy bill was assented to on the 15 of last February, and the new elections wer ordered to come off about a month after. In the course of that month Mr Sandfield Macdonald was active enough in distributing his promise for railway aid, for by doing so he vainly imagined that he could bribe a number of constituencies to return members who would supprt his Gov erament, and enlist the entire railway interest of the country on his side The scheme was cunningly devised and cleverly carried out, but it failed and now that the whole facts hav come to light, we see plainly from what a system of wholesale attempts at bribery we have escaped.

As a sample of the system pursued by Mr. Sandfield Macdonald, we may refer to his promise, made in a de spatch to the Hon. John Hamilton, of Kingston, of aid to the Vaudreiul and Ottawa Railway, and to which he ap-

"Must leave the county (Prescut) to evert itself to start the eandidate most likely to defeat the present member. Do not lose sight of the fact that he has acquired experience in Parliament. This world militate against new candidate without that advantage."

As figured up by Mr. Blake, the late Premier promised aid to twelve or thirteen distinct lines of railway, comprising in all some 950 miles. To some of the Companies interested in these groads direct promises were made, to others he was more indefinite—in fact he tried to managure them all so as to keep them dancing attendance on him until he could get all the beginning the elections.

The policy of the late Government has placed the present one in a somewhat, difficult position as regards this fand, and it is in order to keep faith with the country, and to carry out as far as possible the assurances of the late Government—false in some cases though they may have been—that it is now proposed to increase the Railway Aid Fund to the amount of $400. On, and to distribute that amount in accordance with the provisions contained in the resolutions submitted to the House. Mr. Blake moved that the House go into Committee on the Railway Resolutions.

Mr. Rykert recapitulated some of the objections he had expressed last session to appropriation of so large a sum of money to the purpose of railways and also to the terms of the Act which gave the benefits of the Railway Fund to lines constructed only in certain districts, leaving the southern counties without any share in its benefits. He moved an amendment. "That until it shall be more clearly shown to this House that the railway aid fund, consisting of one million and half dellars, is insufficient to meet the requirements of all bona fide railways already undertaken and which the Lieut-Governor has by Order in Council declared to be entitled to participate in the said fund, it is expedient to grant any additional sum towards the said fund."

Mr. Cameron contended that the express or implied promises of the late Premier had not pledged the House or the Government to aid the several schemes referred to in Mr. Blake's speech on Wednesday. Professing his willingness to vote merely in aid of public purposes tending to the progress of the country, he still contended, in the same spirit as the previous speaker, that no case was made out for the proposed addition to the Railway Fund.

Mr. Lander would not vote beyond the willien and a half.

HELEN MOIR NEW

Love and Honour.

A TALE OF THE CLYDE. CHAPTER XVIII.

THE RECOGNITION, AND WHAT IT LED TO.

Absorbed in his reflections, David Bridgenorth sauntered slowly along the road, and neither saw nor heard Helen till she emerged from under the trees close past which he was walking. The rustle of her dress at his elbow caused him to look up, and there, within two feet of him, stood the fair girl whom he had been yearning to meet.

Aye, for days he had been so yearning—watching her at a distance as she moved about the beach—longing, yet daring not, to go near and address her. At sight of her now standing in his path with flushed, eager face, and sparkling eyes, he gave a great start, his lips formed a studen ejaculetion, and his arms moved forward with an impulsive motion to embrace her.

This took place in the first moment of his surprise at the unexpected meeting. Another instant's reflection, however, showed him the imperative necessity of restraint, and quickly he drew back and waited till she spoke, though every fibre of his being quivered with emotion.

Helen was too full of the thoughts of her purpose to notice his strange aspect, and with the eagerness which shone upon her countenance she hastened to address him.

"Mr. Bridgenorth," she said, "I have IE BECOGNITION, AND WHAT IT LED TO her countenance she hastened to address him.

"Mr. Bridgenorth," she said, "I have never had an opportunity of thanking you for the very great service you rendered to me. I have never seen you since but at a distance, and always hoped you would pay a visit at the villa. I am so glad I have met you here. Mrs. Allerton is seated on the rocks below, and she is also very desirons of making your acquaintance. Pray, come and join us."

Oh, heaven, how the vision of that fair girl brought the past before him!! Helen was her mother's image, and it seemed as if it was his long-lost, his long-mourned love he gazed upon. Master of himself at that moment he was not. His being was shaken to its centre, his heart throbbed to bursting, and there was a wild, bewildered rush of feeling in his brain.

There was also a dull but operative sense of the necessity of concealment, and he answered her mechanically—"Don't mention it, Miss. I deserve not hanks for what I did. I—I—really I do not, and I beg you will not speak as if I did."

You are very generous, sir, and, be-

"Yes, theremone,
"And it is the beautiful scenery that teeps you?"

"The place has a very strong attraction for me," answered Bridgenorth with a sigh. The short walk over the stones gave him a little time to recover his selfcontrol, and he was amazingly helped in this by remembering that he was going into the presence of Mrs. Allerton. He felt the importance of being on his guard lest after should recognize him.

In a minute or less they reached the place where Mrs. Allerton sat: and at their approach she rose and extended her hand to Bridgenorth, receiving him with a frank and hearty smile. He met her without allowing his evesto rest on her's; and after they had shaken hands, and were scating themselves; he tried to place
