Poetry. A KISS FOR A BLOW. BY MARY E. LAMBERT.

There Charley! don't blush so and bluster, We know that is taught you at school; You are told that forbearance is virtue, And a kiss for a blow is the rule.

It wasn't a blow? he just kicked you? That certainly alters the case. Now tell me the story unvarnished— Why were you sent home in disgrace?

You were in Tommy's way, and he kicked He was bigger than you are, but clumsy, And you pounced him with all of your might.

Must you go up to bed without supper? Hungry, tired, and nervous withal? No; that would spoil good resolutions. Quite enough to make even saints fall!

I want you to be mainly, Charley, And generous to friends and to foe; But in your very best case, Do I tell you to give kisses for blow.

If a girl in weak anger should strike you, Don't touch her, my boy, you are strong. And to strike back once crippled or younger, Would be cowardly, Charley, and wrong.

Be kind and obliging to playmates; I do not like fighting, you know; But if one your own age ever hits you, Just give him a blow for a blow.

"Good gracious, did you think I was crying? Why, I made a bet with a friend of mine that I would go in there and impose upon the very priest by my imitation of their performance; and as I knew the best idea of what a lark it was come over me, and I fairly shook with laughter. I didn't know I was imposing on you as well as the Baptists."

And Barbary laughed again until her tears ran down her cheeks. "It is possible," I was sincerely sorry when I thought you came in here as a worshipper; but now that I find it was a moquer—

"I am somewhat more than sorrow, I suppose; out-and-out horror perhaps; and so good of you, Doctor, when after all I am not even a charity patient of yours."

"Excuse me. I was quite aware of my presumption in addressing you. Your youth, my profession, and the fact of so often meeting you in my own church, must stand for my poor excuse."

"But your poor, I am sorry to agree with you. And so you own the Church of the Four Gospels, do you? Well now, how strange that I should have belonged to it for three years and never found it out!"

"When I say 'my church' I mean the church where I attend and belong," explained Maurice, patiently, "and I am glad to know that you have belonged to it for three years, since that period must embrace pretty nearly all your responsible life."

"Don't agonize any more about my age. I was seventeen on the third day of last May, so we can let the topic rest; and if you have quite done with your lecture, sir, and will pass round the hat, I will contribute my mite toward the encouragement of your benevolent efforts." And carefully extracting a five-cent piece from the breast pocket of her jacket, Barbary made a feat of offering it to the young man, and then dropped it in the alms chest, saying:

"Never mind. We'll give it to the poor; some of your charity patients perhaps, may profit by it."

"I wonder how you knew that there was no such thing as charity patients, since you always drive away the poor people who address you, not even permitting them to reach the rectory, whose concern rather than yours I think it ought to be," said Maurice, bitterly.

"Yes, but you see the dear doctor is so good that he believes everybody, and is always being fearfully imposed upon. I rather wish my business to keep all the poor people away from him that I can, and those who get in in spite of me are twice too many as it is."

"But those whom you drive away are really deserving persons, and you do not inquire to see who are the impostors and who are not?"

"Oh, they are all impostors, and get on somehow, I suppose; and if they don't want matter? There, I am going now. Good night, Doctor Guardian-of-other-people's-bodies-if-not-souls."

"That is rather a long title to use of ten. Perhaps you will accept a card bearing my name usual name."

"As I don't intend it 'to use often,' the longer one will do for me; so good night."

And the wild girl walked away, leaving the young man plants, his card in his hand, and a very angry smile upon his lips.

"I won't have Edith acquainted with her any longer; that's settled," muttered Maurice, and yet for some unknown reason he never, in his formal interviews with Miss Winter, alluded to this objectionable friend of hers, whom indeed, he did not know as yet under any other name than that of Barbary.

But now there came upon the city where all these people lived one of those scourges of pestilence whose full terror is only known to the dwellers in cities, whose constant personal contact with strangers is almost inevitable, so that one never walks the streets, attends a place of amusement, or even one of the more public places, without the possibility of suffering and death to himself or those he love may in that hour have infected his blood or his clothing. Dr. Oldfield found in this great necessity his opportunity, and soon became, known throughout the city as one of the few men who understood and cured, under God's control, the plague; so that his days and nights were soon full to overflowing, not only among the wealthy and influential, who sought him unceasingly, and offered him any reward for the healing he might bring to their beloved, but among those humble and friendless ones whose blessings and prayers were their only wealth. Poor Mary Norcross was one of these, and the daintiest lady in the city received no tender or more constant care from the young physician than did she. Here, however, was the appointed door for her escape from suffering, and poverty, and loneliness, and she passed through it, her hand in Maurice's, and saying with her latest breath:

"Give my love to dear Miss Winter. She and you are all I leave on earth—and she loves you."

Upstairs also they told him of Miss Winter's constant attendance and devoted attention to the sick, and in yet another he heard her name, and always coupled with praise, and blessing, and gratitude.

At last, one evening, he called to see her and thank her as well as to refresh himself by an hour's respite from his painful labors. A quarter of that time was spent alone in the drawing-room, and when the young lady appeared, it was with so uncertain and hesitating a manner, and so powerful an odor of disinfecting drugs hanging about her clothes, and she so decidedly withdrew from his offered hand, that Dr. Oldfield stared in surprise, and at last said:

"Surely you are not afraid of me, Miss Winter?"

"Oh, certainly not, doctor. I suppose of course you change all your clothes after coming out of those dreadful places where they say that you go."

"And they say that you go too, Miss Winter," replied Maurice, smiling tenderly. "I do change my clothes, to be sure; but you run ten thousand times the risk of infection during one of your visits, in which, by the way, I never can catch you, than in seeing me. I have known you, as you said, and at the same time to thank you over and over again for the noble work you have done among my poorest patients. Everywhere that I go among them I hear your name and the stories of your courage and devotion. But—are you ill?"

"A little faint—excuse me—another day I will apologize, but now—"

"And with a gesture of leave-taking, Edith tottered from the room, her face white as the Cologne-saturated handkerchief which she held over her mouth and nose."

"A while, and then rang for a servant to see if Miss Winter was ill and wished to see him professionally. A written answer in her mother's name was presently returned; that the young lady was—only faint from over-fatigue, and need not trouble Dr. Oldfield, who was, however, requested to call again in a friendly capacity."

"Over fatigue from these visits to the poor and sick," said the doctor to himself, as he walked down the street. "What an admirable girl! You wouldn't find that Barbary fatiguing herself in that way. What can have become of that child? Now I have no time for church haunting I never see her. I dare say she has left the city to avoid infection; what a pity so bright and fascinating a creature should be so heartless."

Arrived at home, the doctor glanced a little wearily over the list of applicants who had called during his absence, and rapidly classified them, so far as he knew their names, according to the urgency of their cases. Four of these were quite new, and the nearest address to his own home among them was that of "Christie Love." To this address the doctor once took his way, wondering a little as he went whether Christie Love was a married or a single woman, young or old, very ill or only frightened, and where she had heard of him.

The address led him to a quiet home in a retired street, and hardly had a pallid servant-girl opened the door when a woman's voice sharp with terror called from the top of the stairs:

"Is it the doctor? Please to come directly up."

Laying aside coat and hat, Maurice went up the stairs, and followed the dark figure awaiting him into a dimly lighted room, where, tossing herself to and fro upon the dainty white bed, lay Barbary, her great gray eyes shining like stars, her cheeks and lips glowing crimson red, and the masses of her shining dark hair flowing over her slender form like the shadows of coming night—gloriously beautiful, with a beauty that struck a chill to the heart of the young physician as he held the scorching hand, and watched the glowing face.

"Miss Winter, Miss Winter, Miss Winter! I thought winter was cold, and I'm so warm—so burning, hot!" babbled the bright lips again and again, and the mother, standing helplessly by, moaned.

"She's delirious, you see, doctor, and oh, she's so very sick, and I cannot lose her! Doctor, she my only child, and I am a widow. Save her, save her for me!"

"Madam, I cannot try to save her unless those about her are perfectly calm. Even in delirium the patient is affected by the moods of those around. Please to tell me quietly how long your daughter has been ill, and if she has been exposed to the fever."

"Indeed she has, doctor," replied the widow, her voice subdued and her agitation controlled to a nervous tremor by the mere force of the other's look and tone. She has been round among these dreadful poor people ever since the Roman Catholic church to ask a little help, as they do. It was foolish perhaps, but I didn't like to go to our own lest some one should see me. And you thought I was a hypocrite, and so I helped it on, and I always said, I was Miss Winter everywhere; and Maurice I think Edith likes you, and she is a right good girl, and never does improper things like me—I am so tired—so tired and faint!"

"Eighteen months after this Maurice Oldfield married Edith Winter. Why, I do not know exactly because Mrs. Scott still said that it was best for a physician to be married, and because she was an unexceptionable young lady; and the tepid affection she plainly cherished for him was preferable to utter indifference or to a passionate love which he did not want."

In her betrothal hour she conscientiously confessed her want of candor in accepting praise and admiration for charities she had never professed, but did not feel quite magnanimous enough to disclaim.

Maurice forgave the want of candor, but did not explain the enigma which Edith had never solved.

Neither did she ever know, or even wonder, why the only artistic ornament of her husband's study was a panel on which was exquisitely painted a bunch of barberries; nor did she ever guess motionless before that little painting a mournful smile upon his lips, and unwonted dimness in his eyes.—G. Austin, in Galaxy.

Maurice Oldfield looked about him; a girl's room this, with its white maidenly couch and hangings, its little prettiness, its childish trifles, and hints of dawning womanly tastes; its volumes of fiction and poetry, and its shelf of worn school books not yet quite done with; upon one corner of the mirror hung the black velvet sailor-hat, with its bunch of barberries, and on the other was fastened a rosary with a permanent crucifix, at which Maurice frowned until he perceived that it was too elaborately arranged to be often taken down; upon a table lay a book which he had last seen in the hands of Mary Norcross, with the words "Miss Winter" written across the cover, but here his observations were cut short by a low laugh from the sick girl, as she said:

"Just in time to escape the doctor. Ugh! How the clothes in this closet smell; maybe they have the fever in them. I wish he'd go; but I won't batted till he goes, if it's all day. He hasn't found out Miss Winter yet. Oh dear, it's so warm, so warm, and the clothes smell so feverish! Maurice, Maurice! What a pretty name! I wonder if Edith Winter will call him Maurice. He never cared to come and see me, though he goes there. Never mind, I wasn't a very nice girl, and so young; but he shouldn't have spoken so, and looked so. Oh, it breaks, it breaks my heart."

And she broke into a passion of grief, whose sounds reached her mother's ear, and brought her rushing back to the sick room, crying:

"Christie, Christie, darling! Oh, for God's sake, doctor, do something for her. She said you could. It was almost the last thing she said before she went out of her head. 'Mamma,' said she, 'I have the fever, and I shall be very ill. Send for Dr. Oldfield, and let him write my name upon his slate, Christie Love, although I do not believe he knows who she is; but I will have my own name on once.' Those were her very words, doctor, and what she meant I don't know; but Edith just as she said 'I always do.'"

"Maurice did not reply. A strange light had broken upon his mind, and he was busy, even while tenderly caring for his patient, in recalling their few brief and stormy interviews, and tracing the workings of the willful, true, proud, yet most maidenly nature, which had so carefully hidden all its own best side from one who had misjudged it, and which had taken a perverse delight in deepening the false and had impression accidentally given at first.

All that night, and for a great part of the next day, Maurice Oldfield stood or sat beside that bed, battling as never before with yet with the fell destroyer, for this fair young life which each had determined to make his own—all night and all day, and when night came again he knew that he was vanquished, and that he would yield; but still he knelt beside that white couch, that now became a death-bed, while the moaning, almost lifeless mother lay prone upon the floor beside him, that like Edith judged it, and which had taken a perverse delight in deepening the false and had impression accidentally given at first.

All that night, and for a great part of the next day, Maurice Oldfield stood or sat beside that bed, battling as never before with yet with the fell destroyer, for this fair young life which each had determined to make his own—all night and all day, and when night came again he knew that he was vanquished, and that he would yield; but still he knelt beside that white couch

CIRCUS.—Dan Duosello's circus and menagerie is billed to perform here on Saturday next. This same concern has been here several times before, and judging from the past, we suspect that it is still a "one horse" affair.

LEG BROKEN.—On Saturday last, Mr. Wm. McKenzie, of Port George, had the misfortune to break his leg. The accident was caused by a stick of timber falling upon him, while assisting to unload it from a wagon.

CAMP MEETING.—Camp Meeting will be opened at Berwick, on Thursday 6th instant. Excursion tickets will be issued on the Windsor and Annapolis Railway from 5th to 14th of July at reduced fares.

The schr. "Atwood" will sail from Annapolis for Boston and Portland on July 6th. All persons having freight from those places, will do well to forward their orders at once to A. W. Corbett & Sons, Annapolis. See adv.

The French Chambers of Commerce are planning for a grand canal between Havre and Marseilles. One of the plans is for a ship canal 10 feet deep, 100 feet wide, across the Isthmus of Guiana and Languedoc, shortening the sea route by 800 miles.

At the short-horn cattle sale at Toronto, Hon. Mr. Cochrane's "Airdrie Duchess 3rd" brought $23,600, and "Airdrie Duchess 2nd" $21,000; both these high priced cows were bought by Mr. Albert Crane, of Durham Park, Kansas.

A Greenville gentleman has discovered a remedy for the potato bug. It is beef brine, applied to the plant regularly three times a day. The only objection to it appears to be that the first application kills the plant.—Norwich Bulletin.

The glory of Yankee doodle's centennial year was in its perilous yesterday. Bunting fluttered—cannon roared—crowds shouted—and orators, in their utterances, exhausted the powers of elocution. The American Eagle is a bird that spreads wide wings, and delights to display the fancied glories of its plumage.

The Saturday Review, commenting on dull times, says that it is care and prudence and economy that are now needed, and that the respectable classes of English society are willing and ready to exhibit these virtues when called on is evident to any one who notices the changed aspect of the streets and parks of London.

W. C. Moir & Co. have erected a large mill at Bedford, where they propose carrying on an extensive business. It has a grain elevator with a capacity of about 80,000 bushels—the first in this Province. The firm propose building six cottages for workmen. The water for driving the mill is from a lake seventy feet above tide water.

Mercantile failures continue to be frequent in the parent country, as well as in these North American Provinces. Financial matters throughout the world are in a depressed condition. Perhaps monetary stringency and general business embarrassment just now are more felt in the United States than in any other country in the world.

Archbishop Connolly is delivering a course of lectures on the "Faith and Doctrines of the Catholic Church" at St. Mary's Cathedral, Halifax. Mr. Gladstone, in pamphlets, for a year or two, has been discussing the same matters. We scarcely think the Prelate and Statesman entertain congenial views in these ecclesiastical investigations.

On Friday the June Term of the Supreme Court closed. It was chiefly occupied in trying causes of comparatively trivial importance. Much business remained over for the autumnal term. Four colored men were arraigned for burglary. They all pleaded guilty, and were sentenced to the penitentiary—one of them, an old offender, for five years—the others for three years.

The Paris Gaulois says that the English iron clad Sultan, now commanded by the Duke of Edinburgh, was constructed on a model made by a French engineer—Canivet; whose drawings, approved by the Emperor, were sent to the Minister of Marine and there forgotten. Driven to despair, Canivet finally sold his plans to England, and in 1869, made frantic by suffering, blew out his brains.

A man working in a well in Lookland, Ohio, was covered by a fall of stones. Although imprisoned, he was unhurt, and could talk with those who set about rescuing him. A new peril appeared, however, in the rise of the water in the well. Slowly the doomed man was submerged, and the exertions were redoubled to get him out; but the water reached his face and drowned him before he could be saved. His prayers and struggles to escape were pitiful.—Eg.

SAD ACCIDENT AT PORT GEORGE.—On Saturday, the 1st inst., a lamentable accident occurred at Port George, by which Mrs. Owen Riley lost her life. It appears Mrs. Riley was engaged scrubbing the floor of her residence, and while so doing, it is supposed that she took a fit, for when found, she was quite dead, head her being immersed in the pail of water she was using.

THE "IVICA."—Capt. Longhore has been lying at the wharf for the past week giving his pocket schooner Ives a coat of paint, which improves her appearance materially. The Ives is running between this town and St. John as a packet. Capt. L. has by his attendance to the wants of those intrusting their business to him, made a success of his enterprise. The Ives sailed from here on Monday.

A VALUABLE DISCOVERY.—The New Glasgow Copper Mining Company, prospecting near Lochabar Lake, Antigonish County, struck what is familiarly known as the "big boulder" lead, about ten days ago. It shows rich ore, and is about six feet thick. This makes the fourth lead mine now opened on this property, all within a few feet of each other. This promises to be one of the most valuable discoveries in mining properties in our province.

Five miles of the first railway in China have been completed. It is between Wasing and Shanghai, and will be fifteen miles long when finished. The "Celestial Empire," with a population of 400,000,000 is satisfied with fifteen miles of railway, while our Dominion of only 4,000,000 inhabitants, are clamouring for a road to accommodate the "Iron Horse" from Cape Breton to the Pacific, a distance of four thousand miles.

ACCIDENTS.—Mr. Phineas Walker, of Granville, had the misfortune to fall from the roof of a new barn which he was engaged in shingling. The only injury sustained was a severe shaking up. Mr. Andrew Walker, a relative, was on the roof at the time, but saved himself from falling by catching hold of an upright. Had he fallen to the ground in all probability he would have been killed, as a large pile of stones was directly beneath him. On Sunday, a little boy, son of Mr. Jos. Buckler, of the Bridgetown Hotel, fell out of a tree and was seriously hurt.

STRAWBERRY FESTIVAL AND TEA MEETING.—We are informed that a Public Entertainment of a very pleasing character, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to a praiseworthy object, is to be held at the farm of Mr. John Gesner, Belleisle, on Thursday week. The Ladies of Bridgetown and Belleisle, together, are engaged in getting up a liberal supply of Strawberries and a first-class Tea. We advise all our readers, who are desirous of enjoying a real good time, not to fail to be on hand on Thursday the 13th inst. The proceeds of the Entertainment are to be devoted to repairing the Rectory, Bridgetown.

For a number of years it has been known that in Brecon (Wales) there are two or three large Estates, which together with an immense sum of money in the Bank of England, amounting in the whole to about thirty millions of dollars belonged to a Mr. Church, who died about the year 1845, leaving no heirs in Great Britain. The Church families in the United States, and also the Church families in Falmouth, N. S., have each expended a large sum of money in endeavoring to prove their heirship to this property, but have failed to do so. It is believed that two sisters of this Mr. Church, of Brecon (Wales) removed to this Province a number of years ago, and married two men by the name of Morse, at that time residents of this County, whose descendants are quite numerous in this town and vicinity. Recently new light has been thrown upon the subject of the heirship to this immense sum of money, and the heirs living in this Province have advertised for a public meeting to be held at the Court House in this town, on Saturday the 15th day of July instant, at two o'clock, P. M. Important documents will be laid before the meeting. We sincerely hope that the claimants may be successful.

A HARDONCE ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—Mr. John Stewart, of Guy, Stewart & Co., about a month ago filed up a house for Mr. Patrick Ganey, of Sand Point, as an acknowledgment of his services, and also of his gallant conduct in saving a female passenger who fell into the Carleton slip from the ferry boat, for which he some time ago received a testimonial.—St. John Telegraph.
