Letters and articles intended for the next issue should be in the hands of the Editor not later than the day morning.

British American Presbyterian, FRIDAY, MAY 26, 1876.

There were ministers of religion who favoured the opening of the Centennial Exhibition on Sundays, but, strange to say, they were all of the Universalist persuasion.

The Rev. John S. Lechead, A.M., of Athelstan and Elgin, Que., was unanimously elected Minister of Valleyfield, on the 8th. Stipend $800 with free house and garden.

It is interesting to note that Dr. William Black is now on his way to the settlement of Livingstonia, in the heart of Africa.

Mr. Spurgeon's College for the training of Theological students was founded some twenty years ago. He began with one student, but during these years no fewer than three hundred and fifty students have passed through the rev. gentleman's hands on their way to the ministry.

PRESIDENT GRANT, at the opening of the Centennial Exhibition, has once more distinguished himself by the utterance of one of his short, sententious, wise speeches.

The birth day of Her Majesty, the Queen, was held on Wednesday, with more than the usual demonstrations of joy and satisfaction.

The Evangelists, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, are invited to take up their abode in Boston, the so-called Hub of the Universe.

We regret very much to have to record the sickness of Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, but we trust that his usual spring visit to the continent will accomplish much for his recovery.

GREAT rejoicings have been held in England over the return of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales from India. It is to be regretted that the advisers of His Royal Highness did not see fit to take more notice than they did of the various missions established and maintained in India by the different Evangelical Churches in Great Britain.

In a recent number of the Canada Law Journal, the following appears: "We are glad to learn that His Honor Judge Gowan has been added to the Commission for consolidating the statutes of Ontario, and is taking an active part in the revision of the work already done, and in suggestions for its future prosecution."

PRESBYTERIAN GENERAL ASSEMBLIES.

It is interesting to think that during this week so many General Assemblies of the Presbyterian Church are convened for the accomplishment of the various purposes for which they are constituted.

It is characteristic of the age, that all these ecclesiastical assemblies meet for the consideration of their legitimate work. With much interest we have read the programme of business of the Presbyterian Assemblies, both North and South.

The grand lesson that is read by these movements of the various churches, is for each church to do her duty by the Lord. To every Church its own work.

The United States Government has refused to remit the duties on wines sent from Austria for exhibition at the Centennial, and which were afterwards to be distributed to the hospitals.

CHRISTIAN DELEGATIONS.

What a change has taken place when we consider that as we write, delegates from the various Evangelical Churches are on their way to represent the denominations with which they are connected in the various ecclesiastical assemblies that are being held.

It is difficult to know what to do with these delegates when they do appear. Hitherto we have been contented with giving them a hearing, commending them to the blessing of God, and bestowing upon them a fraternal farewell.

What we want above all in those Christian delegations is for one church to help on another, in regard to the great work which the Lord has committed to it.

THE LATE REV. WM. MCKENZIE, ALMONTE.

The Presbyterian Church has just sustained a heavy loss, in the removal by death of Rev. Wm. McKenzie, minister of St. John's Church, Almonte.

When he had ministered for a number of years to that large congregation, he saw it to be necessary to make a division, in order to meet the spiritual need of the rapidly rising village of Almonte.

Thus closed upon earth a life of great activity and singular fruitfulness. Mr. McKenzie's death is mourned by the entire community where he resided.

The life of our dear friend is full of impressive lessons. Socially he was distinguished by a whole hearted geniality, and by a simplicity of manner which made every one feel entirely at home with him.

As a preacher, he was most careful and painstaking in his preparation for the pulpit. He would not offer to the Lord that which cost him nothing.

He was remarkable for his open-handed liberality. From the time of his conversion, he resolved to give a tenth of his income to the cause of Christ.

In our Church Court Mr. McKenzie will be greatly missed. Ripe of judgment, and calm and dispassionate in debate, he was ever listened to with deep attention.

"Soldier of Christ, well done! Praise be thy new employ; And while eternal ages run, Rest in thy Saviour's arms."—Cox.

DR. WATERS' DECLINES.

The cordial call extended to Dr. Waters of St. John, N.B. by the congregation of old St. Andrew's, Toronto, has failed to induce the rev. gentleman to leave the city by the sea, to the great joy of his people, and the Presbyterian public generally.

"Rev. Dr. Waters' decision to decline the brilliant offer made to him by a Presbyterian congregation in Toronto, and remain with St. David's church, St. John, has given the utmost satisfaction to his people, and, indeed, to all who knew the reverend gentleman either personally or through his works."

Our friends of old St. Andrews made a commendable effort to secure the services of a first-class minister. Their non-success will not, we feel assured, discourage them. They must just "try again."

Ministers and Churches.

REV. A. MCKAY, D.D., and his wife, started for Scotland last Wednesday, where they will remain two or three months, visiting their friends.

THE Rev. D. MacRae has received a unanimous call from the congregation of Dunmore, in the presbytery of Peterboro'.

THE Barrie Examiner says: The Rev. John Gray, M.A., of Orillia, preached in the Presbyterian church here, last Sabbath, both morning and evening, in connection with the dispensation of the Lord's Supper.

THE Presbytery of Ottawa met on Wednesday the 17th inst., in Calvin Church, and inducted the Rev. W. D. Ballantyne, B. A. late of Whitby, to the pastoral charge of the Presbyterian Congregation, Pembroke.

In our Church Court Mr. McKenzie will be greatly missed. Ripe of judgment, and calm and dispassionate in debate, he was ever listened to with deep attention.

CHAPTER LV.

Mary De L'Isle carried out her plan of summing nurse Parry to her aid, on behalf of Mrs. Brant, and two or three days later she and her husband drove to the railway station to meet their old friend who had telegraphed her consent to the request. Many of the stations who were sauntering about in expectation of the coming excitement to be found in the arrival of the train, watched with admiring eyes the pleasant picture presented by the young couple, as they stood side by side on the platform waiting for its appearance. Bertrand had quite recovered his good looks, as well as his strength and activity; and although his bronzed complexion still bore traces of the open air life he had led during the campaign, yet his handsome face had regained all its brightness of expression, and the somewhat massive proportions of his stalwart frame contrasted well with the grace and delicacy of the pretty figure by his side. Mary did indeed look fair and lovely as the white rose, to which his father always likened her, and his blue eyes shone with joy and pride as he turned them on her each time she spoke to him with her low soft voice.

of Miss Trevelyan; I have never been able to hear how she passed through the terrible time of the siege. 'Ah,' says I, 'there is no such person as Miss Trevelyan any longer, but I was sorry the moment I had said so, for he went as white as a sheet, and caught me by the arm, crying out 'O surely, surely, it cannot be! is it possible she has really gone quite away from this weary, wicked world?' 'No, no,' says I, 'she is married now; and she has become Madame de L'Isle.' 'Married!' says he, 'and to her own true love; for I suppose you mean it to be Bertrand Lisle that has got her.' Then he drew a long breath, and said, heartily, 'Well, I am right glad of it, for now I hope she'll be happy, though she can be my bright particular star no more.' 'No, in deed,' says I, 'she is nobody's star but Bertrand's, and I can tell you she is a countess now.' 'A countess, cries he, 'she is fit to be queen, and better than a queen. There never was anybody like her, and there never will be!' and with that he asked a great many questions about where you were going to live, and Bertrand's property and title, and I answered them all, and then when he was quite satisfied about Mary, he said to me, 'And now Mrs. Parry, will you tell me where I can find John Pemberton? I want to see him very much.' You may fancy it gave me quite a turn to hear him say that, without a notion of the truth, so I answered, hastily like, 'You'll have to wait till you get to heaven before you can see John Pemberton, Mr. Davenant, and the poor young fellow gave a great cry. 'You don't mean to tell me he is dead, Mrs. Parry! after all his trial and sorrow it would be too sad!' But I was obliged to tell him it was unhappily true, you know, and when he heard the story of his death he fairly broke down, and sobbed like a child, till it made my heart ache to hear him. He was sitting at the table with his head laid down upon his folded arms, and he was just opposite the door of the inner room, and presently he raised himself to ask me some other question, and lifted his eyes, and there in the doorway stood little Valerie Brunot, in a blaze of light from the sunshine streaming down on her out of the window behind, with her dress shining white and glistening, and her hair all golden like a glory round her head, and she was looking straight at him with her great clear eyes and her beautiful young face so solemn and tender; he stared at her for a minute like a man in a dream, and then whispered to me, 'What is it Mrs. Parry? is it an angel?' but before I could answer Valerie began walking slowly towards him, and she came and stood in front of him as he drew his chair back from the table, and said, in her sweet clear voice, 'Did you love Mr. Pemberton sir?' 'Oh, I did indeed,' he said, 'he was my dearest friend.' 'Then I will love you,' she said, and she put her two little hands in his, and he stooped down and kissed them.

CHAPTER LVJ.

Lurline had been moved by the De L'Isles to more comfortable rooms before the arrival of Mrs. Parry, and it was therefore to a large airy apartment, where the open windows let the light fall freely upon the invalid, that Mary conducted her old nurse the morning after her arrival. True to her loyal devotion towards the De L'Isles, whom she believed Laura to have cruelly injured, the good woman grumbled at the task before her all the way from the hotel, and continued to grumble as she went upstairs to the very door of the sick room; but the moment her eyes fell on the wan mournful face of the sufferer all her unwelcome sternness gave way, and her kind heart went back with a great revulsion of feeling to its natural compassionateness and ready sympathy; and when Mary with her usual quiet tact, placed the fragile neglected infant in her arms, the victory over her motherly instinct was complete; in an instant she was lavishing endearments on it, and tending it with an artistic skill which brought a smile even to Laura's pale lips, while she became so completely engrossed by its various requirements that she heard nothing of the conversation which was soon commenced between Mary and her friend. Two or three days had passed since that eventful evening when Lurline first heard of the death of the man whose ill-fated love for her had been indeed strong as death, and might be said to shed its light upon her even yet, from the very darkness of the grave, and she had said no word to Mary of what might be passing in her mind as regarded that conversation of her own soul to love and truth for which she had promised so earnestly to strive; yet there were many indications that her mind was dwelling on it anxiously, and her manner was much more subdued and humble than it had ever been in all her life before. She was slowly improving in health, and it was quite plain now that she was likely to recover completely under the tender care which surrounded her; but on this morning when Mary asked her how she had slept, Laura answered that she had passed a very restless night. 'Thinking, always thinking, Mary, till my brain reels, and my heart is so weary. I seem possessed by my past life; it is continually passing in review before me, with the light from the Sun of Righteousness bringing out in ludicrous aspect all its wickedness, treachery and selfishness. I long, I pine, for pardon and peace, but I seem as one dead. I have no power to enter into that faith and love which John Pemberton so earnestly desired for me. I do as you told me, Mary, I appeal to the merciful Christ direct. I scarce cease to call on him night and day; but it is with me as with the disciples of Baal, there is no voice nor any that answers, sometimes I think that even the prayers which rose from that pure heart of which I was so unworthy, cannot be heard for such as I have been.'

band to let me go to him, bitter though it will be to do it; but from the moment that you told me of John Pemberton's life and death the whole world has seemed changed to me, and I feel as if nothing was of any consequence, except to win eternal life in the love of God, if only it be possible to me.'

Scientific and Useful. FARINA TAPIoca CRIDDLE CAKES. Soak one pint of Durkee's Farina-Tapioca in one pint of milk over night. In the morning add one quart milk, one quart flour, a teaspoonful salt, two well-beaten eggs, and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder.—Mrs. Beecher. STUFFED LOGS. Boil them hard, cut them in two, remove the yolks, and beat them up with a little grated ham, parsley, pepper and salt to your taste; replace this mixture within the whites, cut the under part a little so as to make them stand well on the dish, and serve them with white sauce. TO CURE HOARSENESS. When the voice is lost, as is sometimes the case, from the effects of a cold, a simple, pleasant remedy is furnished by beating up the white of one egg, adding the juice of one lemon, and sweetening with white sugar to the taste. Take a spoonful from time to time. It has been known to effectually cure the ailment. LUMBER SHORT-CAKE. One cup stewed and strained pumpkin or squash, one cup of oatmeal porridge, and one cup water. Beat these up together, and then add three cups fine Graham flour Mix thoroughly, spread half an inch thick on a baking tin, and bake half an hour in a good oven. Cover for ten minutes, and serve warm or cold. NOVELTY PUDDING. Make a teaspoonful of strong, well-cleaned coffee; beat four eggs with five ounces of sugar, one pint of milk previously boiled, and half a pinch of salt; add the coffee, stir into a pie-dish two inches deep; put the dish into a sauce-pan, with sufficient boiling water to reach to the middle of the dish; put into a moderate oven till quite firm; when cold, sprinkle powdered sugar over it and glaze with a red-hot iron. LIME IN PRESERVING WOOD. A French railway contractor announces a method of treating planks, posts, ties, etc., that greatly enhances their value. He piles the lumber in a tank, and then covers thickly with quicklime. Water is slowly added till the lime is slacked. In about a week the wood becomes impregnated, and is ready for use. Timber prepared in this way has been used in mines and other exposed constructions with good results. GRAHAM GEMS. Two teaspoonfuls of buttermilk, a little salt, three even cups of Graham flour, and one teaspoonful of soda. Stir well and bake in iron gem pans, which should be hot on the stove before filling; put them into a very hot oven and bake from fifteen to twenty minutes. If you want them of extra quality, take one teaspoonful of butter-milk, one egg, two teaspoonfuls of the flour, with soda and salt, as before. Very good gems are made by taking one teaspoonful of sweet milk or water, one and a half teaspoonful of the flour, half a teaspoonful of soda, one of cream tartar, with a little salt, and a spoonful of sugar; beat well until it looks smooth. CIRCULATION OF THE BLOOD. Prof. Marshall of London attributes the heart rhythmical movements to the alternate contraction and expansion of the auricles and ventricles; its slight rotary movement, its two peculiar sounds, one long and soft, due to the closure of large valves, the other sharp and abrupt, due to the closing of the small, semi-lunar valves. The pulse he attributes to the pulsations or waves of the mass of blood, caused by the elongation and distention of the elastic walls of the arteries, and said to be simultaneous with, but distinct from the onward flow of the blood. The position of the heart, and its relation to the nervous system, are, however, such that, while in health, we are unconscious of the existence of the complicated mechanism employed in the circulation of our blood. CHLORAL HYDRATE IN NEURALGIA. The intimate mixture of equal parts of chloral hydrate and camphor will, it is said, produce a clear fluid which is of the greatest value as a local application in neuralgia. Dr. Lenox Browne states, in one of the English medical journals, that he has employed it in his practice, and induced others to do so, and that in every case it has afforded great, and in some instances, instantaneous relief. Its success, he says, does not appear to be at all dependent on the nerve affected, it being equally efficacious in neuralgia of the scintia as of the trigeminus—as of the greatest service in neuralgia of the larynx, and in relieving spasmodic cough of a nervous or hysterical character. It is only necessary to paint the mixture lightly over the painful part, and to allow it to dry. It never blisters, though it may occasion a tingling sensation of the skin. For headache it is also found an excellent application. THE USE OF WELL WATER IN CITIES. The State Geologist of New Jersey, in his recent report, calls attention to the habit still in use in some of the older cities of New Jersey, of people drawing the supplies of water from old wells. In an analysis of the water coming from some nine wells in Princeton, five of them were found to contain free ammonia, albuminous matter, and chlorides in excess. In tracing the effects of these waters, it was found that in almost all cases diarrhoea and typhoidal fevers accompanied their use. It is almost impossible to be sure of the good quality of any well which is surrounded by houses, where drains and sinks empty into the surrounding soil. It would be well if not only the proprietors of large country hotels of summer resort would look more closely to their resources of water, but would eschew well water entirely. For the health of their guests it is better in all cases, where running water does not exist, to seek their source of water from cisterns which are fed from the rainfall on the roofs. Wherever such rain-water is used it may be safely stated that there is an entire exemption from the diseases which always attend the use of water contaminated with putrifying organic matter.

The Imperial Title.

Mr. Gladstone has written the following letter to Dr. Abbott:—19th March, 1876.—Sir,—In reply to your favour of 10th, asking me if, in my opinion, the past history of the reign of our Queen would justify the assumption of the title 'Empress' by her Majesty 'in its true and correct, classical and historical sense,' I have looked into the matter carefully. I have given both sides of this important question the fullest and most complete consideration, and I have come to the conclusion that while in its 'correct, historical, and classical' significance, her Majesty is not justified in assuming it, neither does the solid gold of the time consecrated crown of England's monarchs require the fictitious and tawdry lustre conferred by this modern shallow gilding. India does not want it, England will not have it. In my opinion the project was conceived in error, brought forth in error, and like all error, only required open public exposition and investigation to be shown in all its imperfections, shallow, baseless, and absurd. In my opinion the word Imperator can only be properly understood when taken in conjunction with imperium. According to Roman usage, if not actual law, the title of Imperator was conferred upon a conquering general, and imperium meant the power he possessed of compelling the fulfilment of his behests by the use of physical force. In its 'correct, historical, and classical sense' the title Imperator belongs to Clive; it never could or should be tacked to the crown of the eminently humane and august lady who reigns over this realm. It has been said that Rome was powerful and peaceful during the reign of the Antonines. The answer which springs to my lips in reply to this assertion is—If all the Roman governors were Antonines, Rome would have had no Emperors.—I am, sir, your obedient, faithful servant, W. E. GLADSTONE.

Ode to Spring.

Fullo most earthily thence, O Spring,
of thee may poets sing,
And yet possess a charm as new
As when thy first inspiring fit
Evok'd his rapturous lays

And ves all love thee gentle Spring,
And yet thy will thy praises sing,
Newness of life ecstasies thee
From tiny blades, to lofty tree,
All quicken'd by thy touch

Now, countless swelling buds unfold,
And myriad flowers from leaty mould
C'p'ring all redolent and fair,
Sprawling like gems of beauty rare,
Upon thy verdant robe

Now, too, the vernal sun's mild rays,
Calls forth Creation's ceaseless praise,
That wafting o'er the living air,
Rejoice us of that Springtime where
They sing the glad new song.

And now, O'er dewy breeze is borne,
Sweet carolings at early morn,
And the low wail of evening rill,
Makes music sweet, when else was still,
The close of springful day.

And man rejoices in the scene
Of land and sea, where late had been
A heavy waste, himself refresh'd,
And strengthen'd, by his winter's rest,
Joins the glad burst of song.

And with elastic step, and high
And buoyant hopes, uplifts his eye
To God in trust, and joyfully
Go forth each day and positively,
Survey the landscape thus--

"While, now the emerald green I see
Of wood and field, yet they shall be
Soon leafless, sore, and bare again,
But glorious truth still doth remain,
The sure word of our God."

Christian and Social Tolerance.

If it may seem as if, in this view of the work of God in nature, and of Christ in the Christian Church, we were far enough from any practical connection with our own daily life. And yet it is not so.

If, in Christian or social intercourse, we wish to deliver any man from what we think error, we must do so by putting him in the way of convincing himself.

It should be considered, further, that if we wish these we are influencing to become valuable for anything, it must be by permitting them to be themselves.

In all this work, there are needed two great qualities, love and wisdom. Neither will suffice alone.

ONCE upon a time there lived an old couple, known far and wide for their domestic difficulties.

Great Work among the Santals in India.

Peter met with a most astonishing result on one occasion, when he obeyed our Lord's behest, "Let down thy net for a draught," and this has been fulfilled again in several places among the Santals.

Among the large numbers who turned Christians last year are people of all sorts and conditions, rich as well as poor. Santal chiefs and village headmen, as well as "Jangurus" (wise men), priests, witches, and ryots.

In order to show that this Christian life is a reality, and not a mere verbal profession, we may relate a few instances of what came more prominently than usual to our notice last year.

ONCE upon a time there lived an old couple, known far and wide for their domestic difficulties. Suddenly they changed their mode of life, and were as complete patterns of conjugal felicity as they had formerly been of discord.

whole matter, it was impossible for us to forbid them, and we could only encourage them to persevere, in spite of Paul's injunction, that "the women keep silence."

An old farmer's description of a pious preacher was, "A good man, but he rakes with the teeth up."

See to it that each hour's feelings, thoughts and actions are pure and true, then will your life be such.

Or all the shreds of truth, with which men cover up error, they cannot make the truth. The truth is like the robe of our Lord—it is seamless.

EVERY saint in heaven is as a flower in that garden of God, and holy love is the fragrance and sweet odor they all send forth, and with which they fill the bowers of that paradise above.—Jonathan Edwards.

BISHOP CURRIE says that the surest way to destroy a church is to give it a fashionable congregation, plenty of money, let the clergyman live in luxury and self-indulgence, and give the organist five thousand dollars a year.

It is impossible to escape troubles by running away from duty. Jonah once made the experiment, but did not succeed.

ENTHUSIASM is the blossom of which all true greatness is the fruit; imagination the germ of all glorious deeds; and few are ever distinguished for high practical greatness who could not refer to a childhood of enthusiasm.

To break up Colds, Fevers, Inflammatory and Billious attacks, take a full cathartic dose of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets when the attack first comes on, and follow with two or three Pellets each day until a perfect cure is effected.

CURE OF EPILEPSY, OR FALLING FITS, BY HANCOCK'S EPILEPTIC PILLS. Persons laboring under this distressing malady, will find Hancock's Epileptic Pills to be the only remedy ever discovered for curing Epilepsy or Falling Fits. The following notice is a valuable proof by all the afflicted, they are in every respect true, and should they be read by any one who is not affected himself, it will be a great advantage to suffer, he will do a humane act by cutting this out and sending it to him.

A MOST REMARKABLE CURE. PHILADELPHIA, June 29th, 1857. SIR: I have been afflicted with Epilepsy for many years, and my physician was summoned, but he could give me no relief. I consulted another physician, but he would not give me any medicine, he only returned to my family physician, who was called and he gave me several pills, I was generally attacked without any previous warning, I was once attacked in my sleep, and would fall over a wall, or over a fence, or over a cliff, and was never injured. I was once attacked in the middle of a street, and I was carried to a hospital, where I was confined for several weeks. I was again attacked in my sleep, and I was carried to a hospital, where I was confined for several weeks. I was again attacked in my sleep, and I was carried to a hospital, where I was confined for several weeks.

IS THERE A CURE FOR EPILEPSY? The afflicted will answer. GRENADA, Miss. June 21.—SIR: I have been afflicted with Epilepsy for many years, and my physician was summoned, but he could give me no relief. I consulted another physician, but he would not give me any medicine, he only returned to my family physician, who was called and he gave me several pills, I was generally attacked without any previous warning, I was once attacked in my sleep, and would fall over a wall, or over a fence, or over a cliff, and was never injured.

ANOTHER REMARKABLE CURE OF EPILEPSY, OR FALLING FITS, BY HANCOCK'S EPILEPTIC PILLS. MONTROSVILLE, Texas, June 20th, 1867. SIR: I have been afflicted with Epilepsy for many years, and my physician was summoned, but he could give me no relief. I consulted another physician, but he would not give me any medicine, he only returned to my family physician, who was called and he gave me several pills, I was generally attacked without any previous warning, I was once attacked in my sleep, and would fall over a wall, or over a fence, or over a cliff, and was never injured.
