

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580 (716) 872-4503 STATE OF THE STATE

CIHM/ICMH Microfiche Series. CIHM/ICMH Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadien de microreproductions historiques

(C) 1983

Technical and Bibliographic Notes/Notes techniques et bibliographiques

The to the

The poss of the filmi

Orig begi

sion othe first

sion or ill

The shall TINU which

Map diffe entir begin right requ meth

The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming, are checked below.			qu'i de c poir une mod	L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.
	Coloured covers/ Couverture de coul	eur			Coloured Pages de
	Covers damaged/ Couverture endomi	magée			Pages da Pages en	maged/ dommage	ies
	Covers restored and Couverture restaure					stored and staurées e
	Cover title missing, Le titre de couvertu			\checkmark		scoloured, colorées,
	Coloured maps/ Cartes géographiqu	es en couleur			Pages de Pages dé
	Coloured ink (i.e. o Encre de couleur (i.			e)	Showthre Transpar
	Coloured plates and Planches et/ou illus					f print va négale de		ion
	Bound with other r Relié avec d'autres					suppleme d du mate			ire
	Tight binding may cause shadows or distortion along interior margin/ La re liure serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de la distortion le long de la marge intérieure Blank leaves added during restoration may appear within the text. Whenever possible, these have been omitted from filming/ Il se peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutées lors d'une restauration apparaissent dans le texte, mais, lorsque cela était possible, ces pages n'ont pas été filmées.			e la	Only edition available/ Seule édition disponible Pages wholly or partially obscured by errata slips, tissues, etc., have been refilmed to ensure the best possible image/ Les pages totalement ou partiellement obscurcies par un feuillet d'errata, une pelure, etc., ont été filmées à nouveau de façon à obtenir la meilleure image possible.
	Additional commer Commentaires sup	nts:/ plémentaires;
	item is filmed at the
Ce d	locument est filmé a (14X	u taux de rédu	ction indiqu 18X	ié ci-dessous. 22X		26X		30X
			1
	12X	16X	2	ю×	24X		28X		32X

ire détails ues du modifier ger une

filmage

ées

ire

ed to int ine pelure,

acon à

y errata

32X

The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

Library of the Public Archives of Canada

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol → (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ▼ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

La bibliothèque des Archive

La bibliothèque des Archives publiques du Canada

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole → signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole ▼ signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents.
Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

1	2	3

1
2
3

1	2	3
4	5	6

LETTER

ADDRESSED TO THE

ABBE RAYNAL

ON THE

AFFAIRS of North-America.

IN WHICH

The Mistakes in the Abbe's Account

OF THE

REVOLUTION OF AMERICA

ARE CORRECTED AND CLEARED UP.

By THOMAS PAINE, M. A.

OF THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA, AND AUTHOR OF A TRACT, ENTITLED "COMMON SENSE."

PHILADELPHIA, PRINTED:

LONDON, REPRINTED,

FOR C. DILLY, IN THE POULTRY.

M.DCC.LXXXII.

re an A to pr tra an ry

R A had the void the total

INTRODUCTION.

LONDON translation of an original work in French, by the Abbe Raynal, which treats of the Revolution of North America, having been reprinted in Philadelphia and other parts of the continent, and as the distance at which the Abbe is placed from the American theatre of war and politics, has occasioned him to mistake several facts, or, misconceive the causes or principles by which they were produced; the following tract, therefore, is published with a view to rectify them, and prevent even accidental errors intermixing with history, under the sanction of time and silence.

The editor of the London edition has entitled it, "The Revolution of America, by the ABBE RAYNAL," and the American printers have followed the example. But I have understood, and I believe my information just, that the piece, which is more properly reslections on the revolution, was unfairly pursoined from the printer which the Abbe employed, or from the manuscript copy, and is only part of a larger work then in the press, or preparing for it. The person who procured it appears to have been an Englishman, and though in an advertisement presixt to the London edition, he has endeavoured to gloss over the embezzlement with professions of patriotisin, and to soften fosten it with high encomiums on the author, yet the action, in any view, in which it can be placed, is illiberal and unpardonable.

ed

tic

ſm

m

OV

ade

w

fio

fer

Ι

vif

cip

and

bee

per

wil. exc

con

exp

gra

ſubj

inte

thou

tuni Serv

law: It is

ago,

pres

leari

the 1

"In the course of his travels," says he, "the translator " happily succeeded in obtaining a copy of this exquisite " little piece, which has not yet made its appearance from "any press. He publishes a French edition, in favour of "those who will feel its eloquent reasoning more forcibly "in its native language, at the fame time with the fol-" lowing translation of it; in which he has been defirous, " perhaps in vain, that all the warmth, the grace, the " strength, the dignity of the original, should not be lost. "And he flatters himself, that the indulgence of the illu-" strious historian will not be wanting to a man, who, " of his own motion, has taken the liberty to give this "composition to the public, only from a strong persua-" fion, that its momentous argument will be useful, in " a critical conjuncture, to that country which he loves "with an ardour, that can be exceeded only by the " nobler flame, which burns in the bosom of the philan-"thropic author, for the freedom and happiness of all the " countries upon earth."

This plausibility of setting off a dishonourable action, may pass for patriotism and sound principles with those who do not enter into its demerits, and whose interest is not injured nor their happiness affected thereby. But it is more than probable, notwithstanding the declarations it contains, that the copy was obtained for the sake of profiting by the sale of a new and popular work, and that the professions are but a garb to the fraud.

It may with propriety be remarked, that in all countries where literature is protected, and it never can flourish where it is not, the works of an author are his legal property; and to treat letters in any other light than this, is to banish them from the country or strangle them in the birth.—The embezzlement from the Abbe Raynal, was, it is true, committed by one country upon another, and therefore shews no defect in the laws of either. But it is nevertheless a breach of civil manners and literary justice; neither can it be any apology, that because the

t the

ıflator quifite e from cur of orcibly he fol-:firous, ce, the be loit. he illu-, who, ive this perfuaeful, in ne loves by the philan-

e action, th those iterest is But it larations sake of and that

f all the flourith gal prothis, is in the Raynal, another, er. But I literary cause the countries countries are at war, literature shall be entitled to depredation *.

But the forestalling the Abbe's publication by London editions, both in French and English, and thereby not only defrauding him and throwing an expensive publication on his hands by anticipating the fale, are only the smaller injuries which such conduct may occasion. A man's opinions, whether written or in thought, are his own until he pleases to publish them himself; and it is adding cruelty to injustice, to make him the author of what future reflection, or better information, might occafion him to suppress or amend. There are declarations and fentiments in the Abbe's piece, which, for my own part, I did not expect to find, and fuch as himself, on a revifal, might have feen occasion to change; but the anticipated piracy effectually prevented him the opportunity, and precipitated him into difficulties, which, had it not been for fuch ungenerous fraud, might not have happened.

This mode of making an author appear before his time, will appear still more ungenerous, when we consider how exceedingly few men there are in any country, who can at once, and without the aid of reflection and revifal, combine warm passions with a cool temper, and the full expansion of imagination with the natural and necessary gravity of judgment, so as to be rightly balanced within themselves,

^{*} The state of literature in America must one day become a subject of legislative consideration. Hitherto it hath been a disinterested volunteer in the service of the revolution, and no man thought of profits: but when peace shall give time and opportunity for study, the country will deprive itself of the honour and service of letters and the improvement of science, unless sufficient laws are made to prevent depredations on literary property.— It is well worth remarking, that Russia, who but a few years ago, was scarcely known in Europe, owes a large share of her present greatness to the close attention she has paid, and the wise encouragement she has given, to every branch of science and learning; and we have almost the same instance in France, in the reign of Lewis the XIV.

themselves, and to make a reader seel, fancy, and understand justly at the same time. To call three powers of the mind into action at once, in a manner that neither shall interrupt, and that each shall aid and vigorate the other, is a talent very rarely possessed.

It often happens that the weight of an argument is lost by the wit of setting it off; or the judgment disordered by an intemperate irritation of the passions: yet a certain degree of animation must be selt by the writer, and raised in the reader, in order to interest the attention; and a sufficient scope given to the imagination, to enable it to create in the mind a sight of the persons, characters and circumstances of the subject; for without these the judgment will feel little or no excitement to office, and its determinations will be cold, sluggish, and impersect. But if either or both of the two former are raised too high, or heated too much, the judgment will be josseld from its seat, and the whole matter, however important in itself, will diminish into a pantomime of the mind, in which we create images that promote no other purpose than amusement.

THE Abbe's writings bear evident marks of that extension and rapidness of thinking, and quickness of sensation which of all others require revisal, and the more particularly so, when applied to the living characters of nations or individuals in a state of war. The least misinformation or misconception leads to some wrong conclusion, and an error believed becomes the progenitor of others.—And as the Abbe has suffered some inconveniencies in France, by mistating certain circumstances of the war, and the characters of the parties therein, it becomes some apology for him, that those errors were precipitated into the world by the avarice of an ungenerous enemy.

underwers of neither rate the

nt is loft ifordered a certain nd raifed nd a fufit to creand cirudgment determit if either or heated feat, and will diwe create ement.

of fensathe more racters of least misrong congenitor of onveniences of the t becomes recipitated enemy.

that ex-

LETTER

ADDRESSED TO THE

ABBE RAYNAL

ON THE AFFAIRS OF

NORTH-AMERICA,

the Abbe Raynal, it might very well become me to apologize for the present undertaking; but as to be right is the first wish of philosophy, and the first principle of history, he will, I presume, accept from me a declaration of my motives, which are those of doing justice, in preserve to any complimental apology, I might otherwise make.—The Abbe, in the course of his work, has, in some instances, extolled without a reason, and wounded without a cause. He has given same where it was not deserved, and withheld it where it was justly due; and appears to be so frequently in and out of temper with his subjects and parties, that few or none of them are decifively and uniformly marked.

IT is yet too foon to write the history of the revolution, and whoever attempts it precipitately, will unavoidably mistake characters and circumstances, and involve himself in error and difficulty. Things like men are seldom understood rightly at first fight. But the Abbe is wrong even in the foundation of his work; that is, he has mifconceived and mistated the causes which produced the rupture between England and her then colonies, and which led on, step by step, unstudied and uncontrived on the part of America, to a revolution, which has engaged the attention, and affected the interest, of Europe.

To prove this, I shall bring forward a passage, which, though placed towards the latter part of the Abbe's work, is more intimately connected with the beginning; and in which, speaking of the original cause of the dispute, he declares himself in the following manner-

"None," fays he, " of those energetic causes, which " have produced fo many revolutions upon the globe, existed in North-America. Neither religion nor laws " had there been outraged. The blood of martyrs or for patriots had not there streamed from scaffolds. Morals 66 had not there been insulted. Manners, customs, habits, no object dear to nations, had there been the sport 66 of ridicule. Arbitrary power had not there torn any " inhabitant from the arms of his family and his friends, " to drag him to a dreary dungeon. Public order had 66 not been there inverted. The principles of administra-"tion had not been changed there; and the maxims of 66 governre de-lution, idably imfelf m un-wrong s mifed the s, and yed on which, work, and in ite, he

which

ngaged

globe, or laws yrs or Morals is, hae fport in any itends, er had miftra-

ms of

vern-

" government had there always remained the fame.

"The whole question was reduced to the knowing

" whether the mother country had, or had not a right

" to lay, directly or indirectly, a slight tax upon the

" colonies."

On this extraordinary passage, it may not be improper, in general terms, to remark, that none can feel like those who suffer; and that for a man to be a competent judge of the provocative, or as the Abbe stiles them, the energetic causes of the revolution, he must have resided in America.

THE Abbe in faying that the feveral particulars he has enumerated, did not exist in America, and neglecting to point out the particular period, in which he means they did not exist, reduces thereby his declaration to a nullity, by taking away all meaning from the passage.

THEY did not exist in 1763, and they all existed before 1776; consequently as there was a time when they did not, and another when they did exist, the time when constitutes the essence of the fact, and not to give it, is to withhold the only evidence, which proves the declaration right or wrong, and on which it must stand or fall. But the declaration, as it now appears, unaccompanied by time, has an effect in holding out to the world, that there was no real cause for the revolution, because it denies the existence of all those causes, which are supposed to be justifiable, and which the Abbe stiles energetic.

I confess myself exceedingly at a loss to find out the time to which the Abbe alludes; because, in another part of the work, in speaking of the stamp act, which was B 2 passed passed in 1764, he stiles it "An usurpation of the Americans most precious and sacred rights." Consequently he here admits the most energetic of all causes, that is, an usurpation of their most precious and sacred rights, to have existed in America twelve years before the declaration of independence, and ten years before the breaking out of hostilities.—The time, therefore, in which the paragraph is true, must be antecedent to the stamp act, but as at that time there was no revolution nor any idea of one, it consequently applies without a meaning; and as it cannot, on the Abbe's own principle, be applied to any time after the stamp act, it is therefore a wandering solitary paragraph connected with nothing and at variance with every thing.

THE stamp act, it is true, was repealed in two years after it was passed, but it was immediately followed by one of infinitely more mischievous magnitude, I mean the declaratory act, which asserted the right, as it was stiled, of the British Parliament, "to bind America in all cases what soever."

If then the stamp act was an usurpation of the Americans most precious and sacred rights, the declaratory act lest them no right at all; and contained the sull grown seeds of the most despotic government ever exercised in the world. It placed America not only in the lowest, but in the basest state of vassalage; because it demanded an unconditional submission in every thing, or as the act expresses it, in all cases what sever: And what renders this act the more offensive, is, that it appears to have been passed as an act of mercy; truly then it may be said, that the tender mercies of the wicked are cruel.

ALL the original charters from the Crown of England, under the faith of which, the adventurers from the old would fettled in the new, were by this act displaced from their foundations; because, contrary to the nature of them, which was that of a compact, they were now made subject to repeal or alteration at the mere will of one party only. The whole condition of America was thus put into the hands of the Parliament or the Ministry, without leaving to her the least right in any case whatsoever.

THERE is no despotism to which this iniquitous law did not extend; and though it might have been convenient in the execution of it, to have confulted manners and habits, the principle of the act made all tyranny legal. It stopt nowhere. It went to every thing. It took in with it the whole life of a man, or, if I may fo express it, an eternity of circumstances. It is the nature of law to require obedience, but this demanded fervitude; and the condition of an American, under the operation of it, was not that of a subject, but a vassal. Tyranny has often been established without law, and fometimes against it, but the history of mankind does not produce another instance, in which it has been established by law. It is an audacious outrage upon civil government, and cannot be too much exposed, in order to be sufficiently detested.

NEITHER could it be faid after this, that the legislature of that country any longer made laws for this, but that it gave out commands; for wherein differed an act of Parliament constructed on this principle, and operating in this manner, over an unrepresented people, from the orders of a military establishment?

ALL

Ame-

tly he

is, an

o have

ration

ig out

para-

St, but dea of

and as lied to dering

at va-

years

red by

mean it was

a in all

Ame-

ratory

e full

exer-

in the ause it thing,

And

it ap-

y then

THE Parliament of England, with respect to America, was not septennial but perpetual. It appeared to the latter a body always in being. Its election or its expiration were to her the fame as if its members fucceeded by inheritance, or went out by death, or lived for ever, or were appointed to it as a matter of office. Therefore, for the people of England to have any just conception of the mind of America, respecting this extraordinary act, they must suppose all election and expiration in that country to cease for ever, and the prefent Parliament, its heirs, &c. to be perpetual; in this case, I ask, what would the most clamorous of them think, were an act to be passed, declaring the right of fuch a Parliament to bind them in all cases whatsoever? For this word what sever would go as effectually to their Magna Charta, Bill of Rights, Trial by Juries, &c. as it went to the charters and forms of government in America.

I AM persuaded, that the Gentleman to whom I address these remarks, will not, after the passing this act, fay, "That the principles of administration had not been se changed in America, and that the maxims of govern-" ment had there been always the same." For here is, in principle, a total overthrow of the whole; and not a fubversion only, but an annihilation of the foundation of liberty, and absolute domination established in its stead.

THE Abbe likewise states the case exceedingly wrong and injuriously, when he fays, " that the whole question 66 was reduced to the knowing whether the mother country had, or had not, a right to lay, directly or in-"directly, a flight tax upon the colonies." — This was not the whole of the question; neither was the quantity of the tax the object, either to the Ministry or to the Americans. It was the principle, of which the tax made but a part, and the quantity still less, that formed the ground on which America opposed.

THE tax on tea, which is the tax here alluded to, was neither more or less than an experiment to establish the practice of the declaratory law upon; modelled into the more fashionable phrase of the universal supremacy of Parliament. For until this time, the declaratory law had lain dormant, and the framers of it had contented themselves with barely declaring an opinion.

THEREFORE the whole question with America, in tree opening of the dispute, was, Shall we be bound in all cases whatsoever by the British parliament, or shall we not? For submission to the tea or tax act implied an acknowledgment of the declaratory act, or, in other words, of the universal supremacy of Parliament, which, as they never intended to do, it was necessary they should oppose it, in its first stage of execution.

It is probable, the Abbe has been led into this miftake by perufing detached pieces in some of the American news-papers; for, in a case where all were interested, every one had a right to give his opinion; and there were many who, with the best intentions, did not huse the best, nor indeed the true ground, to defend their cause upon. They selt themselves right by a general impulse, without being able to separate, analyze, and arrange the parts.

I AM fomewhat unwilling to examine too minutely into

ed to or its fuclived office.

d exe pren this
them
ght of
pever?

is ex-

I adis act, ot been

es, &c.

ent in

overnnere is, d not a ndation in its

wrong question mother y or in-'his was the whole of this extraordinary passage of the Abbe, lest I should appear to treat it with severity otherwise I could show that not a fingle declaration is justly founded: For instance, the reviving an obsolete act of the reign of Henry the eighth, and fitting it to the Americans, by authority of which they were to be feized and brought from America to England, and there imprisoned and tried for any supposed offences, was, in the worst sense of the words, to tear them, by the arbitrary power of Parliament, from the arms of their families and friends, and drag them not only to dreary but distant dungeons. Yet this act was contrived fome years before the breaking out of hostilities. And again, though the blood of martyrs and patriots had not streamed on the scaffolds, it streamed in the streets, in the massacre of the inhabitants of Boston, by the British foldiery in the year 1770.

e

C

d

0 te

B to

pa

gu

m

he

fh

th

to

bu

rev

in

wa

ma

HAD the Abbe faid that the causes which produced the revolution in America were originally different from those which produced revolutions in other parts of the globe, he had been right. Here the value and quality of liberty, the nature of government, and the dignity of man, were known and understood, and the attachment of the Americans to these principles produced the revolution as a natural and almost unavoidable consequence. They had no particular family to fet up or pull down. Nothing of personality was incorporated with their cause. They started even-handed with each other, and went no faster into the several stages of it, than they were driven by the unrelenting and imperious conduct of Britain. Nay, in the last act, the declaration of independence, they had nearly been too late; for had it not been declared at the exact time it was, I see no period in their affairs since, in which

which it could have been declared with the same effect, and probably not at all.

But the object being formed before the reverse of fortune took place, that is, before the operations of the gloomy campaign of 1776, their honor, their interest, their every thing called loudly on them to maintain it; and that glow of thought and energy of heart, which even a distant prospect of independence inspires, gave considence to their hopes and resolution to their conduct, which a state of dependence could never have reached. They looked forward to happier days and scenes of rest, and qualified the hardships of the campaign by contemplating the establishment of their new born system.

If on the other hand, we take a review of what part Britain has acted, we shall find every thing which ought to make a nation blush. The most vulgar abuse, accompanied by that species of haughtiness, which distinguishes the hero of a mob from the character of a gentleman; it was equally as much from her manners as from her injustice that she lost the colonies. By the latter she provoked their principles, by the former she wore out their temper; and it ought to be held out as an example to the world, to show, how necessary it is to conduct the business of government with civility. In short, other revolutions may have originated in caprice or generated in ambition; but here, the most unoffending humility was tortured into rage, and the infancy of existence made to weep.

A UNION fo extensive, continued and determined, suffering with patience and never in despair, could not have been produced by common causes. It must be something C capable capable of reaching the whole foul of man and arming it with perpetual energy. In vain is it to look for precedents among the revolutions of former ages, to find out, by comparison, the causes of this. The spring, the progreis, the object, the confequences, nay, the men, their habits of thinking, and all the circumstances of the country are different. Those of other nations are, in general, little more than the history of their quarrels. They are marked by no important character in the annals of events; mixt in the mass of general matters they occupy but a common page; and while the chief of the fuccessful partizans stept into power, the plundered multitude fat down and forrowed. Few, very few of them are accompanied with reformation, either in government or manners; many of them with the most consummate profligacy. Triumph on the one fide and mifery on the other were the only events. Pains, punishments, torture, and death were made the business of mankind, until compassion, the fairest affociate of the heart, was driven from its place, and the eye, accustomed to continual cruelty, could behold it without offence.

But as the principles of the present revolution disfered from those which preceded it, so likewise has the conduct of America both in government and war. Neither the soul singer of disgrace nor the bloody hand of vengeance has hitherto put a blot upon her same. Her victories have received lustre from a greatness of lenity; and her laws been permitted to slumber, where they might justly have awakened to punish. War, so much the trade of the world, has here been only the business of necessity; and when the necessity shall cease, her very enemies must confess, that as she drew the fword in her just defence, she used it without cruelty, and sheathed it without revenge.

As it is not my design to extend these remarks to a history, I shall now take my leave of this passage of the Abbe, with an observation, which until something unfolds itself to convince me otherwise, I cannot avoid believing to be true;—which is, that it was the fixt determination of the British cabinet to quarrel with America at all eyents.

THEY (the members who compose the cabinet) had no doubt of success, if they could once bring it to the issue of a battle; and they expected from a conquest, what they could neither propose with decency, nor hope for by negociation. The charters and constitutions of the colonies were become to them matters of offence, and their rapid progress in property and population were difgustingly beheld as the growing and natural means of independence. They faw no way to retain them long but by reducing them in time. A conquest would at once have made them both lords and landlords; and put them in possession both of the revenue and the rental. The whole trouble of government would have ccased in a victory, and a final end been put to remonstrance and debate. The experience of the stamp act had taught them how to quarrel with the advantages of cover and convenience, and they had nothing to do but to renew the scene, and put contention into motion. hoped for a rebellion, and they made one. They expected a declaration of independence, and they were not disappointed. But after this, they looked for victory, and they obtained a defeat.

Ir this be taken as the generating cause of the contest, then is every part of the conduct of the British Ministry consistent from the commencement of the dispute, until the signing the treaty of Paris, after which, conquest becoming doubtful, they retreated to negociation, and were again deseated.

Tho' the Abbe possesses and displays great powers of genius, and is a master of stile and language, he seems not to pay equal attention to the office of an historian. His facts are coldly and carelessly stated. They neither inform the reader nor interest him. Many of them are erroneous, and most of them defective and obscure. It is undoubtedly both an ornament and a useful addition to history to accompany it with maxims and reflections. They afford likewise an agreeable change to the stile and a more diversified manner of expression; but it is absolutely necessary that the root from whence they spring, or the foundations on which they are raifed, should be well attended to, which in this work they are not. Abbe hastens through his narrations as if he was glad to get from them, that he may enter the more copious field of eloquence and imagination.

THE actions of Trenton and Princeton in New-Jersey, in December 1776, and January following, on which the fate of America stood for a while trembling on the point of suspence, and from which the most important consequences followed, are comprised within a single paragraph saintly conceived, and barren of character, circumstance and description.

"On the 25th of December," fays the Abbe, "they (the

(the Americans) crossed the Delaware, and fell acci-

dentalis upon Trenton, which was occupied by fifteen

"hundred of the twelve thousand Hessians, sold in so 66 base a manner by their avaricious master, to the King " of Great Britain. This corps was massacred, taken,

" or dispersed. Eight days after, three English regiments

66 were in like manner driven from Princeton, but after

"having better supported their reputation than the fo-

" reign troops in their pay."

THIS is all the account which is given of these most interesting events. The Abbe has preceded them by two or three pages on the military operations of both armies, from the time of General Howe arriving before New-York from Halifax, and the vast reinforcements of British and foreign troops with Lord Howe from England. But in these, there is so much mistake, and so many omisfions, that, to fet them right, must be the business of history and not of a letter. The action of Long-Island is but barely hinted at, and the operations at the White Plains wholly omitted: as are likewise the attack and loss of fort Washington, with a garrison of about two thoufand five hundred men, and the precipitate evacuation of Fort Lee, in consequence thereof; which losses were in a great measure the cause of the retreat through the Jerfies to the Delaware, a distance of about ninety miles. Neither is the manner of the retreat described, which, from the feason of the year, the nature of the country, the nearness of the two armies, (sometimes within fight and shot of each other for such a length of way) the rear of the one employed in pulling down bridges, and the van of the other in building them up, must necessarily be accompanied with many interesting circumstances.

It was a period of distresses. A crisis rather of danger than of hope. There is no description can do it justice; and even the actors in it, looking back upon the scene, are surprised how they got through; and at a loss to account for those powers of the mind and springs of animation, by which they withstood the force of accumulated missortune.

IT was expected, that the time for which the army was inlifted, would carry the campaign so far into the winter, that the severity of the season, and the consequent condition of the roads, would prevent any material operation of the enemy, until the new army could be raised for the next year. And I mention it, as a matter worthy of attention, by all suture historians, that the movements of the American army, until the attack upon the Hessian post at Trenton, the 26th of December, are to be considered as operating to effect no other principal purpose than delay, and to wear away the campaign under all the disadvantages of an unequal force, with as little missortune as possible.

But the loss of the garrison at fort Washington on the 16th of November, and the expiration of the time of a considerable part of the army, so early as the 30th of the same month, and which were to be followed by almost daily expirations afterwards, made retreat the only final expedient. To these circumstances may be added the forlorn and destitute condition of the sew that remained; for the garrison of Fort Lee, which composed almost the whole of the retreat, had been obliged to abandon it so instantaneously, that every article of stores and baggage was lest behind, and in this destitute condition, without tent or blanket, and without any other utensils to dress their their provision, than what they procured by the way, they performed a march of about ninety miles, and had the address and management to prolong it to the space of nineteen days.

By this unexpected or rather unthought of turn of affairs, the country was in an inftant surprised into confusion, and found an enemy within its bowels, without an army to oppose him. There were no succours to be had, but from the free-will offering of the inhabitants. All was choice, and every man reasoned for himself.

It was in this fituation of affairs, equally calculated to confound or to inspire, that the gentleman, the mer-chant, the farmer, the tradesman, and the labourer mutually turned from all the conveniencies of home, to perform the duties of private soldiers, and undergo the severities of a winter campaign. The delay, so judiciously contrived on the retreat, afforded time for the volunteer reinsorcements to join General Washington on the Delaware.

The Abbe is likewise wrong in saying, that the American army sell accidentally on Trenton. It was the very object for which General Washington crossed the Delaware in the dead of the night and in the midst of snow, storms, and ice; and which he immediately recrossed with his prisoners, as soon as he had accomplished his purpose. Neither was the intended enterprise a secret to the enemy, information having been sent of it by letter, from a British Officer at Princeton, to Colonel Rolle, who commanded the Hessians at Trenton, which letter was afterwards sound by the Americans. Nevertheless the post was completely surprised. A small circumstance, cumstance, which had the appearance of mistake on the part of the Americans, led to a more capital and real mistake on the part of Rolle.

THE case was this. A detachment of twenty or thirty Americans had been fent across the river from a post, a few miles above, by an Officer unacquainted with the intended attack; these were met by a body of Hessians on the night, to which the information pointed, which was Christmas night, and repulsed. Nothing further appearing, and the Hessians, mistaking this for the advanced party, supposed the enterprise disconcerted, which at that time was not began, and under this idea, returned to their quarters; fo that, what might have raised an alarm, and brought the Americans into an ambuscade, ferved to take off the force of an information, and promote the fuccess of the enterprise. Soon after day-light General Washington entered the town, and after a little opposition, made himself master of it, with upwards of nine hundred prisoners.

This combination of equivocal circumstances, falling within what the Abbe stiles "the wide empire of chance," would have afforded a fine field for thought, and I wish, for the sake of that elegance of resection he is so capable of using, that he had known it.

But the action at Princeton was accompanied by a still greater embarrasiment of matters, and sollowed by more extraordinary consequences. The Americans, by a happy stroke of generalship, in this instance, not only deranged and defeated all the plans of the British, in the intended moment of execution, but drew from their posts the enemy they were not able to drive, and obliged them to close the campaign. As the circumstance is a curiosity in war, and not well understood in Europe, I shall, as concisely as I can, relate the principal parts; they may serve to prevent suture historians from error, and recover from forgetfulness a scene of magnificent sortitude.

IMMEDIATELY after the surprize of the Hessians at Trenton, General Washington recrossed the Delaware, which at this place is about three quarters of a mile over, and reassumed his former post on the Pennsylvania side. Trenton remained unoccupied, and the enemy were posted at Princeton, twelve miles distant, on the road towards New-York. The weather was now growing very severe, and as there were very few houses near the shore where General Washington had taken his station, the greatest part of his army remained out in the woods and fields. These, with some other circumstances, induced the recroffing the Delaware and taking possession of Trenton. It was undoubtedly a bold adventure, and carried with it the appearance of defiance, especially when we confider the panic struck condition of the enemy on the loss of the Hessian post. But in order to give a just idea of the affair, it is necessary I should describe the place.

TRENTON is fituated on a rifing ground, about three quarters of a mile diffant from the Delaware, on the caftern or Jersey side; and is cut into two divisions by a small creek or rivulet, sufficient to turn a mill which is on it, after which it empties itself at nearly right angles into the Delaware. The upper division which is to the north east, contains about seventy or eighty houses, and the lower about forty or fifty. The ground on each side this creek, and on which the houses are, is likewise rising, and the two divisions present an agreeable prospect to each other, with the creek between, on which there is a fmall stone bridge of one arch.

each

SCAPCELY had General Washington taken post here, and before the several parties of militia, out on detachments, or on their way, could be collected, than the British, leaving behind them a strong garrison at Princeton, marched suddenly and entered Trenton at the upper or north east quarter. A party of the Americans skirmished with the advanced party of the British, to afford time for removing the stores and baggage, and withdrawing over the bridge.

In a little time the British had possession of one half of the town, General Washington of the other, and the creek only separated the two armies. Nothing could be a more critical situation than this, and if ever the fate of America depended on the event of a day, it was now. The Delaware was filling fast with large sheets of driving ice and was impassable, so that no retreat into Pennsylvania could be effected, neither is it possible, in the face of an enemy, to pass a river of such extent. The roads were broken and rugged with the frost, and the main road was occupied by the enemy.

ABOUT four o'clock a party of ti. Pritish approached the bridge, with a design to gain it, but were repulsed. They made no more attempts, though the creek itself is passable any where between the bridge and the Delaware. It runs in a rugged natural made ditch, over which a person may pass with little dissiculty, the stream being rapid and shallow. Evening was now coming on, and the British, believing they had all the advantages they could wish for, and that they could use them when they pleased, pleased, discontinued all further operations, and held themselves prepared to make the attack next morning.

Bur the next morning produced a scene, as elegant as it was unexpected. The British were under arms and ready to march to action, when one of their light-horse from Princeton came furiously down the street, with an account, that General Washington had that morning attacked and carried the British post at that place, and was proceeding on to feize the magazine at Brunswick; on which the British, who were then on the point of making an affault on the evacuated camp of the Americans, wheeled about, and in a fit of consternation marched for Princeton.

This retreat is one of those extraordinary circumstances, that in future ages may probably pass for fable. For it will with difficulty be believed, that two armies, on which fuch important consequences depended, should be crouded into so small a space as Trenton, and that the one, on the eve of an engagement, when every ear is supposed to be open, and every watchfulness employed, should move completely from the ground, with all its stores, baggage, and artillery, unknown and even unfufpected by the other. And so entirely were the British deceived, that when they heard the report of the cannon and small arms at Princeton, they supposed it to be thunder, though in the depth of winter.

GENERAL Washington, the better to cover and disguise his retreat from Trenton, had ordered a line of fires to be lighted up in front of his camp. These not only served to give an appearance of going to rest, and continuing that deception, but they effectually concealed from the British whatever was acting behind them, for slame can no more be seen through than a wall, and in this situation, it may with some propriety be said, they became a pillar of sire to the one army, and a pillar of a cloud to the other: after this, by a circuitous march of about eighteen miles, the Americans reached Princeton early in the morning.

THE number of prisoners taken were between two and three hundred, with which General Washington immediately set off. The van of the British army from Trenton entered Princeton about an hour after the Americans had left it, who continuing their march for the remainder of the day, arrived in the evening at a convenient fituation, wide of the main road to Brunswick, and about fixteen miles distant from Princeton.—But so wearied and exhausted were they, with the continual and unabated service and fatigue of two days and a night, from action to action, without shelter and almost without refreshment, that the bare and frozen ground, with no other covering than the sky, became to them a place of comfortable rest. By these two events, and with but little comparative force to accomplish them, the Americans closed with advantages a campaign, which, but a few days before, threatened the country with destruction. The British army, apprehensive for the fafety of their magazines at Brunswick, eighteen miles distant, marched immediately for that place, where they arrived late in the evening, and from which they made no attempts to move, for nearly five months.

HAVING thus stated the principal outlines of these two most interesting actions, I shall now quit them, to put the Abbe Abbe right in his mistated account of the debt and paper money of America, wherein, speaking of these matters, he says,

"THESE ideal riches were rejected. The more the multiplication of them was urged by want, the greater did their depreciation grow. The Congress was indig- nant at the affronts given to its money, and declared all those to be traitors to their country who should not receive it as they would have received gold itself.

"Den not this body know, that prepoffessions are no "more to be controlled than feelings are? Did it not 66 perceive, that in the present crisis every rational man-"would be afraid of exposing his fortune? Did it not " fee, that at the beginning of a republic it permitted to 66 itself the exercise of such acts of despotism as are un-"known even in the countries which are moulded to, " and become familiar with, fervitude and oppression? "Could it pretend that it did not punish a want of con-"fidence with the pains which would have been scarcely "merited by revolt and treason? Of all this was the "Congress well aware. But it had no choice of means. "Its despised and despicable scraps of paper were actu-" ally thirty times below their original value, when more " of them were ordered to be made. On the 13th of 66 September, 1779, there was of this paper money, " amongst the public, to the amount of £.35,544,155. "The state owed moreover £.8,385,356, without reck-66 oning the particular debts of fingle provinces."

In the above recited passages the Abbe speaks as if the United States had contracted a debt of upwards of forty millions millions pounds sterling, besides the debts of individual States. After which, speaking of foreign trade with America, he says, that "those countries in Europe, which "are truly commercial ones, knowing that North-Ame-" rica had been reduced to contract debts at the epoch of even her greatest prosperity, wisely thought, that, in her present distress, she would be able to pay but very little, for what might be carried to her."

I know it must be extremely difficult to make foreigners understand the nature and circumstances of our paper money, because there are natives, who do not understand it themselves. But with us its fate is now determined. Common consent has consigned it to rest with that kind of regard, which the long service of inanimate things insensibly obtains from mankind. Every stone in the bridge, that has carried us over, seems to have a claim upon our esteem. But this was a corner stone, and its usefulness cannot be forgotten. There is something in a grateful mind, which extends itself even to things that can neither be benefited by regard, nor suffer by neglect;—But so it is; and almost every man is sensible of the effect.

But to return. The paper money, though issued from Congress under the name of dollars, did not come from that body always at that value. Those which were issued the first year, were equal to gold and silver. The second year less, the third still less, and so on, for nearly the space of sive years; at the end of which, I imagine, that the whole value, at which Congress might pay away the several emissions, taking them together, was about ten or twelve millions pounds sterling.

Now

Now as it would have taken ten or twelve millions sterling of taxes, to carry on the war for five years, and, as while this money was issuing and likewise depreciating down to nothing, there were none, or sew valuable taxes paid; consequently the event to the public was the same, whether they sunk ten or twelve millions of expended money, by depreciation, or paid ten or twelve millions by taxation; for as they did not do both, and chose to do one, the matter, in a general view, was indifferent. And therefore, what the Abbe supposes to be a debt, has now no existence; it having been paid, by every body consenting, to reduce at his own expence, from the value of the bills continually passing among themselves, a sum, equal to nearly what the expence of the war was for five years.

AGAIN. The paper money having now ceased, and the depreciation with it, and gold and filver supplied its place, the war will now be carried on by taxation, which will draw from the public a considerable less sum than what the depreciation drew; but as while they pay the former, they do not suffer the latter, and as when they suffered the latter, they did not pay the former, the thing will be nearly equal, with this moral advantage, that taxation occasions frugality and thought, and depreciation produced diffipation and carelessness.

And again. If a man's portion of taxes comes to less than what he lost by the depreciation, it proves the alteration is in his favor. If it comes to more, and he is justly assessed, it shows that he did not sustain his proper share of depreciation, because the one was as operatively his tax as the other.

It is true, that it never was intended, neither was it foreseen, that the debt contained in the paper currency should sink itself in this manner; but as by the voluntary conduct of all and of every one it has arrived at this sate, the debt is paid by those who owed it. Perhaps nothing was ever so universally the act of a country as this. Government had no hand in it. Every man depreciated his own money by his own consent, for such was the effect, which the raising the nominal value of goods produced. But as by such reduction he sustained a loss equal to what he must have paid to sink it by taxation, therefore the line of justice is to consider his loss by the depreciation as his tax for that time, and not to tax him when the war is over, to make that money good in any other persons hands, which became nothing in his own.

AGAIN. The paper currency was issued for the express purpose of carrying on the war. It has performed that service, without any other material charge to the public, while it lasted. But to suppose, as some did, that, at the end of the war, it was to grow into gold or silver, or become equal thereto, was to suppose that we were to get two hundred millions of dollars by going to war, instead of paying the cost of carrying it on.

But if any thing in the situation of America, as to her currency or her circumstances, yet remains not understood, then let it be remembered, that this war is the public's war; the people's war; the country's war. It is their independence that is to be supported; their property that is to be secured; their country that is to be saved. Here, government, the army, and the people, are mutually and reciprocally one. In other wars, kings may lose their thrones thrones, and their dominions; but here, the loss must fall on the majesty of the multitude, and the property they are contending to fave. Every man being sensible of this, he goes to the field, or pays his portion of the charge, as the sovereign of his own possessions; and when he is conquered a monarch falls.

it

y

٠,

g

d

al

e

l-

n

r

ſs

at

or

et

r

s

r

t

y

:8

THE remark, which the Abbe in the conclusion of the passage has made, respecting America contracting debts in the time of her prosperity (by which he means, before the breaking out of hostilities) serves to show, though he has not made the application, the very great commercial difference between a dependent and an independent country. In a state of dependence, and with a fettered commerce, though with all the advantages of peace, her trade could not balance itself, and she annually run into debt. But now, in a state of independence, though involved in war, the requires no credit; her stores are full of merchandize, and gold and filver are become the currency of the country. How these things have established themselves it is difficult to account for: But they are facts, and facts are more powerful than arguments.

As it is probable this letter will undergo a republication in Europe, the remarks here thrown together will ferve to show the extreme folly of Britain, in resting her hopes of success on the extinction of our paper currency. The expectation is at once so childish and forlorn, that it places her in the laughable condition of a famished lion watching for prey at a spider's web.

FROM this account of the currency, the Abbe proceeds to state the condition of America in the winter

1777, and the spring sollowing; and closes his observations with mentioning the treaty of alliance, which was signed in France, and the propositions of the British Ministry, which were rejected in America. But in the manner in which the Abbe has arranged his facts, there is a very material error, that not only he, but other European historians have fallen into; none of them having assigned the true cause why the British proposals were rejected, and all of them have assigned a wrong one.

In the winter 1777, and spring following, Congress were assembled at York-town in Pennsylvania, the British were in possession of Philadelphia, and General Washington with the army were encamped in huts at the Valley-Forge, twenty-five miles distant therefrom. To all who can remember, it was a season of hardship, but not of despair; and the Abbe, speaking of this period and its inconveniences, says,

" A multitude of privations, added to fo many other

" misfortunes, might make the Americans regret their

" former tranquillity, and incline them to an accommo-

66 dation with England. In vain had the people been

"bound to the new government by the facredness of aths and the influence of religion. In vain had en-

66 deavours been used to convince them, that it was im-

66 possible to treat fafely with a country in which one

66 parliament might overturn what should have been

66 established by another. In vain had they been

"threatened with the eternal refentment of an exaf-

66 perated and vindictive enemy. It was possible that

"these distant troubles might not be balanced by the weight of present evils.

66 So thought the British ministry when they sent to 66 the New World public agents, authorized to offer every thing except independence to these very Ame-" ricans, from whom they had two years before exacted so an unconditional submission. It is not improbable, 66 but that by this plan of conciliation, a few months 66 sooner, some effect might have been produced. But 46 at the period at which it was proposed by the Court " of London, it was rejected with disdain, because this 66 measure appeared but as an argument of fear and " weakness. The people were already re-assured. The 66 Congress, the Generals, the troops, the bold and " skilful men, in each colony had possessed themselves 66 of the authority; every thing had recovered its first 66 spirit. This was the effect of a treaty of friendship and commerce between the United States and the Court of Ver-" failles, signed the 6th of February 1778."

On this passage of the Abbe's I cannot help remarking, that, to unite time with circumstance, is a material nicety in history; the want of which frequently throws it into endless confusion and mistake, occasions a total separation between causes and consequences, and connects them with others they are not immediately, and sometimes not at all, related to.

THE Abbe, in faying that the offers of the British Ministry "were rejected with disdain," is right, as to the fact, but wrong as to the time; and this error in the time, has occasioned him to be mistaken in the cause.

THE figning the treaty of Paris the 6th of February, 1778, could have no effect on the mind or politics of E 2 America

America until it was known in America; and therefore, when the Abbe fays, that the rejection of the British offers was in consequence of the alliance, he must mean, that it was in consequence of the alliance being known in America; which was not the case: And by this mistake he not only takes from her the reputation, which her unshaken fortitude in that trying situation deserves, but is likewise led very injuriously to suppose, that had she not known of the treaty, the offers would probably have been accepted; whereas she knew nothing of the treaty at the time of the rejection, and consequently did not reject them on that ground.

THE propositions or offers above mentioned were contained in two bills brought into the British Parliament by Lord North on the 17th of February 1778. Those bills were hurried through both Houses with unusual haste, and before they had gone through all the customary forms of Parliament, copies of them were sent over to Lord Howe and General Howe, then in Philadelphia, who were likewise Commissioners. General Howe ordered them to be printed in Philadelphia, and sent copies of them by a slag to General Washington, to be forwarded to Congress at York-Town, where they arrived the 21st of April 1778. Thus much for the arrival of the bills in America.

Congress, as is their usual mode, appointed a committee from their own body, to examine them and report thereon. The report was brought in the next day (the twenty-second) was read, and unanimously agreed to, entered on their journals, and published for the information of the country. Now this report must be the rejection jection to which the Abbe alludes, because Congress gave no other formal opinion on those bills and propositions: And on a subsequent application from the British Commissioners, dated the 27th of May, and received at York-Town the 6th of June, Congress immediately referred them for an answer to their printed resolves of the 22d of April. Thus much for the rejection of the offers.

On the 2d of May, that is, eleven days after the above rejection was made, the treaty between the United States and France arrived at York Town; and until this moment Congress had not the least notice or idea, that fuch a measure was in any train of execution. But lest this declaration of mine should pass only for affertion, I shall support it by proof, for it is material to the character and principle of the revolution to show, that no condition of America, fince the declaration of independence, however trying and severe, ever operated to produce the most distant idea of yielding it up either by force, distress, artifice or persuasion. And this proof is the more necessary, because it was the system of the British ministry at this time, as well as before and fince, to hold out to the European powers that America was unfixt in her refolutions and policy; hoping by this artifice to lessen her reputation in Europe, and weaken the considence which those powers, or any of them, might be inclined to place in her.

AT the time these matters were transacting, I was secretary in the foreign department of Congress. All the political letters from the American Commissioners rested in my hands, and all that were officially written went from my office; and so far from Congress knowing any thing thing of the figning the treaty, at the time they rejected the British offers, they had not received a line of information from their Commissioners at Paris on any subject whatever for upwards of a twelvemonth. Probably the loss of the port of Philadelphia and the navigation of the Delaware, together with the danger of the seas, covered at this time with British cruizers, contributed to the disappointment.

ONE packet, it is true, arrived at York-Town in January preceding, which was about three months before the arrival of the treaty; but, strange as it may appear, every letter had been taken out, before it was put on board the vessel which brought it from France, and blank white paper put in their stead.

HAVING thus stated the time when the proposals from the British Commissioners were first received, and likewise the time when the treaty of alliance arrived, and shewn that the rejection of the former was eleven days prior to the arrival of the latter, and without the least knowledge of such circumstance having taken place or being about to take place; the rejection, therefore, must, and ought to be attributed to the fixt unvaried sentiments of America respecting the enemy she is at war with, and her determination to supporther independence to the last possible effort, and not to any new circumstance in her favour, which at that time she did not and could not know of.

Besides, there is a vigour of determination and spirit of defiance in the language of the rejection, (which I here subjoin) which derive their greatest glory by appearing before the treaty was known; for that, which is bravery in distress becomes insult in prosperity: And the treaty placed America on fuch a strong foundation, that had she then known it, the answer which she gave, would have appeared rather as an air of triumph, than as the glowing serenity of fortitude.

Upon the whole, the Abbe appears to have entirely mistaken the matter; for instead of attributing the rejection of the propositions to our knowledge of the treaty of alliance; he should have attributed the origin of them in the British cabinet, to their knowledge of that event. And then the reason why they were hurried over to America in the state of bills, that is, before they were passed into acts, is easily accounted for, which is, that they might have the chance of reaching America before any knowledge of the treaty should arrive, which they were lucky enough to do, and there met the fate they fo richly merited. That these bills were brought into the British Parliament after the treaty with France was figned, is proved from the dates: The treaty being on the 6th, and the bills the 17th of February. And that the figning the treaty was known in Parliament, when the bills were brought in, is likewise proved by a speech of Mr. Charles Fox, on the faid 17th of February, who, in reply to Lord North, informed the House of the treaty being figned, and challenged the Minister's knowledge of the same fact. *)

Though

^{*)} IN CONGRESS, April 22d, 1778.

letter of the 18th, containing a certain printed paper fent from Philadelphia, purporting to be the draught of a Bill for declaring the intentions of the Parliament of Great Britain, as to the exercise of what they are pleased to term their right of imposing taxes within these United States; and also the draught of a Bill to enable the King of Great Britain to appoint Commissioners, with powers to treat, consult, and agree upon

THOUGH I am not furprifed to see the Abbe mistaken in matters of history, acted at so great a distance from his sphere

upon the means of quieting certain diforders within the faid States, beg leave to observe,

"THAT the faid paper being industriously circulated by emissaries of the enemy, in a partial and secret manner, the same ought to be forthwith printed for the public information.

"THE Committee cannot ascertain whether the contents of the said paper have been framed in Philadelphia or in Great Britain, much less whether the same are really and truly intended to be brought into the Parliament of that kingdom, or whether the said Parliament will confer thereon the usual solemnities of their laws. But are inclined to believe this will happen, for the following reasons:

if it. Because their General hath made divers feeble efforts to fet on foot some kind of treaty during the last winter, though, either from a mistaken idea of his own dignity and importance, the want of information, or some other cause, he hath not made application to those who are invested with a proper authority.

" 2dly. Because they suppose that the fallacious idea of a cessation of hostilities will render these States remiss in their preparations for war.

3dly. Because believing the Americans wearied with war, they suppose we will accorde to their terms for the sake of peace.

4thly. Because they suppose that our negociations may be subject to a like corrupt influence with their debates.

"5 5thly. Because they expect from this step the same effects they did from what one of their ministers thought proper to call his conciliatory motion, viz. that it will prevent foreign powers from giving aid to these States; that it will lead their own subjects to continue a little longer the present war; and that it will detach some weak men in America from the cause of freedom and virtue.

"6thly. Because their King, from his own shewing, hath reason to apprehend that his sleets and armies, instead of being employed against the territories of these States, will be necessary for the defence of his own dominions. And

"7thly. BECAUSE the impracticability of subjugating this country being every day more and more manifelt, it is their interest to extricate the offelves from the war upon any terms.

"THE Committee beg leave further to observe, That, upon a supposition the matters contained in the said paper will really fphere of immediate observation, yet I am more than furprised to find him wrong, (or at least what appears so to go into the British Statute Book, they serve to shew, in a clear point of view, the weakness and wickedness of the enemy.

" THEIR WEAKNESS,

"1st. Because they formerly deciared, not only that they had a right to bind the inhabitants of these States in all cases whatsoever, but also that the said inhabitants should absolutely and unconditionally submit to the exercise of that right. And this submission they have endeavoured to exact by the sword. Receding from this claim, therefore, under the present circumstances, shews their inability to enforce it.

" 2dly. Because their Prince hath heretofore rejected the humblest petitions of the Representatives of America, praying to be considered as subjects, and protected in the enjoyment of peace, liberty and safety; and hath waged a most cruel war against them, and employed the savages to butcher innocent women and children. But now the same Prince pretends to treat with those very Representatives, and grant to the arms of America what he resused to her prayers.

"3dly. BECAUSE they have uniformly laboured to conquer this continent, rejecting every idea of accommodation proposed to them, from a confidence in their own strength. Wherefore it is evident, from the change in their mode of attack, that they have lost this confidence. And

"4 4thly. Because the constant language, spoken not only by their Ministers, but by the most public and authentic acts of the nation, hath been, that it is incompatible with their dignity to treat with the Americans while they have arms in their hands. Notwithstanding which, an offer is now about to be made for treaty.

" THE WICKEDNESS and INSINCERITY of the enemy appear from the following confiderations:

"If. EITHER the Bills now to be passed contain a direct or indirect cession of a part of their former claims, or they do not. If they do, then it is acknowledged that they have sa-crificed many brave men in an unjust quarrel. If they do not, then they are calculated to deceive America into terms, to which neither argument before the war, nor force since, could procure her assent.

"2dly. The first of these Bills appears, from the title, to be a declaration of the intentions of the British Parliament concerning the exercise of the right of imposing taxes within these States. Wherefore, should these States treat under the said me) in the well enlightened field of philosophical reflection. Here the materials are his own; created by himfelf; and the error, therefore, is an act of the mind.

HITHERTO

Bill, they would indireally acknowledge that right, to obtain which acknowledgment the present war hath been avowedly undertaken and prosecuted on the part of Great Britain.

"3dly. Should such pretended right be so acquiesced in, then, of consequence, the same might be exercised whenever the British Parliament should find themselves in a different temper and disposition; since it must depend upon those, and such like contingencies, how far men will act according to their former intentions.

"4thly. The said first Bill, in the body thereof, containeth no new matter, but is precisely the same with the motion before-mentioned, and liable to all the objections which lay against the said motion, excepting the following particular, viz. that by the motion actual taxation was to be suspended, so long as America should give as much as the said Parliament might think proper: Whereas by the proposed Bill, it is to be suspended, as long as suture Parliaments continue of the same mind with the present.

King may, if he pleases, appoint Commissioners to treat and agree with those, whom they please, about a variety of things therein mentioned. But such treaties and agreements are to be of no validity without the concurrence of the said Parliament, except so far as they relate to the suspension of hostilities, and of certain of their acts, the granting of pardons, and the appointing of Governors to these sovereign, free and independent States. Wherefore, the said Parliament have reserved to themselves, in express words, the power of setting aside any such treaty, and taking the advantage of any circumstances which may arise to subject this continent to their usurpations.

of thly. The faid Bill, by holding forth a tender of pardon, implies a criminality in our justifiable resistance, and confequently, to treat under it would be an implied acknowledgment, that the inhabitants of these States were, what Britain has declared them to be, Rebels.

them as subjects, they may infer, from the nature of the negociation now pretended to be set on foot, that the said inhabitants would of right be afterwards bound by such laws as they should make. Wherefore any agreement entered into on such negociation might at any future time be repealed. And

"Sthly. Because the faid Bill purports, that the Commif-

HITHERTO my remarks have been confined to circumflances; the order in which they arose, and the events

fioners therein mentioned may treat with private individuals; a measure highly derogatory to the dignity of national character.

"FROM all which it appears evident to your Committee, that the faid Bills are intended to operate upon the hopes and fears of the good people of these States, so as to create divisions among them, and a desection from the common cause, now by the blessing of Divine Providence drawing near to a favourable issue. That they are the sequel of that insidious plan, which, from the days of the Stamp-act down to the present time, hath involved this country in contention and bloodshed. And that, as in other cases so in this, although circumstances may force them at times to recede from their unjustisable claims, there can be no doubt but they will as heretofore, upon the first favourable occasion, again display that lust of domination, which hath rent in twain the mighty empire of Britain.

"Upon the whole matter, the Committee beg leave to report it as their opinion, That as the Americans united in this arduous contest upon principles of common interest, for the defence of common rights and privileges, which union hath been cemented by common calamities and by mutual good offices and affection, so the great cause for which they contend, and in which all mankind are interested, must derive its success from the continuance of that union. Wherefore any man or body of men, who should presume to make any separate or partial convention or agreement with Commissioners under the crown of Great Britain, or any of them, ought to be considered and treated as open and avowed enemies of these United States.

"And further your Committee beg leave to report it as their opinion, That these United States cannot, with propriety, hold any conference or treaty with any Commissioners on the part of Great Britain, unless they shall, as a preliminary thereto, either withdraw their sleets and armies, or else, in positive and express terms, acknowledge the Independence of the said States.

"And inasmuch as it appears to be the design of the enemies of these States to lull them into a fatal security—to the end that they may act with a becoming weight and importance, it is the opinion of your Committee, That the several States be called upon to use the most strenuous exertions to have their respective quotas of continental troops in the field as soon as possible, and that all the militia of the said States be held in readiness, to act as occasion may require."

Fo

they produced. In these, my information being better than the Abbe's, my task was easy. How I may succeed in controverting matters of sentiment and opinion, with one whom years, experience, and long established reputation have placed in a superior line, I am less consident in; but as they fall within the scope of my observations it would be improper to pass them over.

FROM this part of the Abbe's work to the latter end, I find several expressions, which appear to me to start, with a cynical complexion, from the path of liberal thinking, or at least they are so involved as to lose many of the beauties which distinguish other parts of the performance.

The following is the answer of Congress to the second application of the Commissioners:

York-Town, June 6, 1778.

SIR.

HAVE had the honor of laying your letter of the 3d inflant, with the acts of the British Parliament which came inclosed, before Congress; and I am instructed to acquaint you, Sir, that they have already expressed their sentiments upon bills, not essentially different from those acts, in a publication of the 22d of April last.

"Be affured, Sir, when the King of Great Britain shall be feriously disposed to put an end to the unprovoked and cruel war waged against these United States, Congress will readily attend to such terms of peace, as may consist with the honor of independent nations, the interest of their constituents, and the facred regard they mean to pay to treaties. I have the honor to be, Sir,

Your most obedient, and most humble servant, HENRY LAURENS, President of Congress."

His Excellency, Sir Henry Clinton, K. B. Philad. THE Abbe having brought his work to the period when the treaty of alliance between France and the United States commenced, proceeds to make some remarks thereon.

"In short," says he, " philosophy, whose first sentiment is the desire to see all governments just and all people happy, in casting her eyes upon this alliance of a monarchy, with a people, who are desending their liberty, is curious to know its motive. She sees, at once, too clearly, that the happiness of mankind has no part in it."

WHATEVER train of thinking or of temper the Abbe might be in, when he penned this expression, matters not. They will neither qualify the sentiment, nor add to its desect. If right, it needs no apology; if wrong, it merits no excuse. It is sent into the world as an opinion of philosophy, and may be examined without regard to the author.

IT feems to be a defect, connected with ingenuity, that it often employs itself more in matters of curiosity, than usefulness. Man must be the privy counsellor of fate, or something is not right. He must know the springs, the whys and wherefores of every thing, or he sits down unsatisfied. Whether this be a crime, or only a caprice of humanity, I am not enquiring into. I shall take the passage as I find it, and place my objections against it.

It is not so properly the motives which produced the alliance, as the consequences which are to be produced from it, that mark out the field of philosophical reflection. In the one we only penetrate into the barren cave of secrecy, where where little can be known, and every thing may be mifconceived; in the other, the mind is presented with a wide extended prospect of vegetative good, and sees a thousand blessings budding into existence.

But the expression, even within the compass of the Abbe's meaning, sets out with an error, because it is made to declare that, which no man has authority to declare. Who can say that the happiness of mankind made no part of the motives which produced the alliance? To be able to declare this, a man must be possessed of the mind of all the parties concerned, and know that their motives were something else.

In proportion as the independence of America became contemplated and understood, the local advantages of it to the immediate actors, and the numerous benefits it promised to mankind, appeared to be every day encreasing; and we saw not a temporary good for the present race only, but a continued good to all posterity; these motives, therefore, added to those which preceded them, became the motives on the part of America, which led her to propose and agree to the treaty of alliance, as the best eftectual method of extending and securing happiness; and therefore, with respect to us, the Abbe is wrong.

FRANCE, on the other hand, was fituated very differently to America. She was not acted upon by necessity to feek a friend, and therefore her motive in becoming one, has the strongest evidence of being good, and that which is so, must have some happiness for its object. With regard to herself, she saw a train of conveniences worthy her attention. By lessening the power of an enemy, whom, at the same time, she sought neither to destroy destroy nor distress, she gained an advantage without doing an evil, and created to herfelf a new friend by affociating with a country in misfortune. The springs of thought that lead to actions of this kind, however political they may be, are nevertheless naturally beneficent; for in all causes, good or bad, it is necessary there should be a fitness in the mind, to enable it to act in character with the object: Therefore as a bad cause cannot be profecuted with a good motive, fo neither can a good cause be long supported by a bad one, and as no man acts without a motive, therefore in the present in-. stance, as they cannot be bad, they must be admitted to be good. But the Abbe fets out upon fuch an extended scale, that he overlooks the degrees by which it is meafured, and rejects the beginning of good, because the end comes not at once.

a

ie

is

O

d

?

ie

e

) -

s,

F-

d

y

at ì.

111

o

It is true that bad motives may in some degree be brought to support a good cause or prosecute a good object; but it never continues long, which is not the case with France; for either the object will reform the mind, or the mind corrupt the object, or else not being able, either way, to get into unison, they will separate in disgust: And this natural, though unperceived progress of association or contention between the mind and the object, is the secret cause of sidelity or desection. Every object a man pursues, is, for the time, a kind of mistress to his mind: if both are good or bad, the union is natural; but if they are in reverse, and neither can seduce nor yet reform the other, the opposition grows into dislike and a separation follows.

WHEN the cause of America first made her appearance on the stage of the universe, there were many, who, in the the stile of adventurers and fortune-hunters, were dangling in her train, and making their court to her with every profession of honour and attachment. They were loud in her praise and ostentatious in her service. Every place echoed with their ardour or their anger, and they seemed like men in love. But, alas, they were fortune-hunters. Their expectations were excited, but their minds were unimpressed; and sinding her not to their purpose, nor themselves reformed by her influence, they ceased their suit, and in some instances deserted and betrayed her.

THERE were others, who at first beheld her with indifference, and unacquainted with her character were cautious of her company. They treated her as one, who, under the fair name of liberty, might conceal the hideous figure of anarchy, or the gloomy monster of tyranny. They knew not what she was. If fair, she was fair indeed. But still she was suspected, and though born among us appeared to be a stranger.

ACCIDENT with some, and curiosity with others, brought on a distant acquaintance. They ventured to look at her. They selt an inclination to speak to her. One intimacy led to another, till the suspicion wore away and a change of sentiment stole gradually upon the mind; and having no self-interest to serve, no passion of dishonour to gratify, they became enamoured of her innocence, and unaltered by missortune or uninstamed by success, shared with sidelity in the varieties of her sate.

This declaration of the Abbe's, respecting motives, has led me unintendedly into a train of metaphysical reasoning; but there was no other avenue by which it could fo properly be approached. To place presumption against presumption, affertion against affertion, is a mode of opposition that has no effect; and therefore the more eligible method was, to shew that the declaration does not correspond with the natural progress of the mind and the influence it has upon our conduct.—I shall now quit this part, and proceed to what I have before stated, namely, that it is not so properly the motives which produced the alliance, as the consequences to be produced from it, that mark out the field of philosophical ressection.

hy.d-toyd

It is an observation I have already made in some former publication, that the circle of civilization is yet incomplete. A mutuality of wants have formed the individuals of each country into a kind of national society; and here the progress of civilization has stopt. For it is easy to see, that nations with regard to each other (notwithstanding the ideal civil law which every one explain, as it suits him) are like individuals in a state of natures. They are regulated by no fixt principle, governed by no compulsive law, and each does independently what it pleases, or what it can.

WERE it possible we could have known the world when in a state of barbarism, we might have concluded, that it never could be brought into the order we now see it. The untamed mind was then as hard, if not harder, to work upon in its individual state, than the national mind is in its present one. Yet we have seen the accomplishment of the one, why then should we doubt that of the other?

THERE is a greater fitness in mankind to extend and complete complete the civilization of nations with each other at this day, than there was to begin it with the unconnected individuals at first; in the same manner that it is somewhat easier to put together the materials of a machine after they are formed, than it was to form them from original matter. The present condition of the world differing so exceedingly from what it formerly was, has given a new cast to the mind of man, more than what he appears to be sensible of. The want of the individual, which first produced the idea of society, are now augmented into the wants of the nation, and he is obliged to seek from another country what before he sought from the next person.

Letters, the tongue of the world, have in some measure brought all mankind acquainted, and, by an extension of their uses, are every day promoting some new friendship. Through them distant nations become capable of conversation, and losing by degrees the awkwardness of strangers, and the moroseness of suspicion, they learn to know and understand each other. Science, the partisan of no country, but the beneficent patroness of all, has liberally opened a temple where all may meet. Her influence on the mind, like the sun on the chilled earth, has long been preparing it for higher cultivation and further improvement. The philosopher of one country sees not an enemy in the philosopher of another: He takes his seat in the temple of science, and asks not who sits beside him.

This was not the condition of the barbarian world. Then the wants of man were few, and the objects within his reach. While he could acquire these, he lived in a state state of individual independence, the consequence of which was, there were as many nations as persons, each contending with the other, to secure something which he had, or to obtain something which he had not. The world had then no business to follow, no studies to exercise the mind. Their time was divided between soth and satigue. Hunting and war were their chief occupations; sleep and food their principal enjoyments.

Now it is otherwise. A change in the mode of life has made it necessary to be busy; and man finds a thousand things to do now which before he did not. Instead of placing his ideas of greatness in the rude atchievements of the savage, he studies arts, science, agriculture, and commerce, the refinements of the gentleman, the principles of society, and the knowledge of the philosopher.

e

¢

THERE are many things which in themselves are morally neither good nor bad, but they are productive of consequences, which are strongly marked with one or other of these characters. Thus commerce, though in itself a moral nullity, has had a considerable instuence in tempering the human mind. It was the want of objects in the ancient world, which occasioned in them such a rude and perpetual turn for war. Their time hung on their hands without the means of employment. The indolence they lived in afforded leisure for mischief, and being all idle at once, and equal in their circumstances, they were easily provoked or induced to action.

Bur the introduction of commerce furnished the world with objects, which, in their extent, reach every man, and give him something to think about and something to do; by these his attention is mechanically drawn from the pursuits, which a state of indolence and an unemployed mind occasioned, and he trades with the same countries which former ages, tempted by their productions, and too indolent to purchase them, would have gone to war with.

THUS, as I have already observed, the condition of the world being materially changed by the influence of fcience and commerce, it is put into a fitness not only to admit of, but to desire, an extension of civilization. The principal and almost only remaining enemy it now has to encounter, is prejudice; for it is evidently the interest of mankind to agree, and make the best of life. The world has undergone its divisions of empire, the several boundaries of which are known and fettled. The idea of conquering countries, like the Greeks and Romans, does not now exist; and experience has exploded the notion of going to war for the sake of profit. In short, the objects for war are exceedingly diminished, and there is now left scarcely any thing to quarrel about, but what arises from that demon of society, prejudice, and the consequent fullenness and untractableness of the temper.

THERE is something exceedingly curious in the confitution and operation of prejudice. It has the singular ability of accommodating itself to all the possible varieties of the human mind. Some passions and vices are but thinly scattered among mankind, and find only here and there a sitness of reception. But prejudice, like the spider, makes every where its home. It has neither taste nor choice of place, and all that it requires is room. There is scarcely a situation, except fire or water, in which a spider will not live. So, let the mind be as naked as the walls of an empty and for faken tenement, gloomy as a dungeon, or ornamented with the richest abilities of thinking, let it be hot, cold, dark or light, lonely or inhabited, still prejudice, if undisturbed, will fill it with cobwebs, and live, like the spider, where there seems nothing to live on. If the one prepares her food by poisoning it to her palate and her use, the other does the same; and as several of our passions are strongly charactered by the animal world, prejudice may be denominated the spider of the mind.

Perhaps no two events ever united so intimately and forceably to combat and expel prejudice, as the Revolution of America and the Alliance with France. Their effects are felt, and their influence already extends as well to the old world as the new. Our stile and manner of thinking have undergone a revolution, more extraordinary than the political revolution of the country. We fee with other eyes; we hear with other ears; and think with other thoughts, than those we formerly used. We can look back on our own prejudices, as if they had been the prejudices of other people. We now see and know they were prejudices and nothing elfe, and relieved from their shackles enjoy a freedom of mind, we felt not before. It was not all the argument, however powerful, nor all the reasoning, however elegant, that could have produced this change, fo necessary to the extension of the mind, and the cordiality of the world, without the two circumstances of the Revolution and the Alliance.

e

d

1

r

s

ď

,

e

y

y Y HAD America dropt quietly from Britain, no material change, in sentiment, had taken place. The same notions, prejudices, and conceits, would have governed in both countries, as governed them before, and still the slaves flaves of error and education, they would have travelled on in the beaten track of vulgar and habitual thinking. But brought about by the means it has been, both with regard to ourselves, to France, and to England, every corner of the mind is swept of its cobwebs, poison, and dust, and made sit for the reception of generous happiness.

Perhaps there never was an Alliance on a broader basis, than that between America and France, and the progress of it is worth attending to. The countries had been enemies, not properly of themselves, but through the medium of England. They, originally, had no quarrel with each other, nor any cause for one, but what arose from the interest of England and her arming America against France. At the same time, the Americans at a distance from, and unacquainted with the world, and tutored in all the prejudices which governed those who governed them, conceived it their duty to act as they were taught. In doing this, they expended their substance to make conquests, not for themselves but for their masters, who in return treated them as slaves.

A LONG fuccession of insolent severity, and the separation finally occasioned by the commencement of hostilities at Lexington, on the 19th of April, 1775, naturally produced a new disposition of thinking. As the mind closed itself towards England, it opened itself towards the world, and our prejudices like our oppressions underwent, though less observed, a mental examination; until we found the former as inconsistent with reason and benevolence, as the latter were repugnant to our civil and political rights.

WHILE we were thus advancing by degrees into the wide field of extended humanity, the alliance with France

France was concluded. An alliance not formed for the mere purpose of a day, but on just and generous grounds, and with equal and mutual advantages; and the easy affectionate manner in which the parties have since communicated, has made it an alliance not of courts only but of countries. There is now an union of mind as well as of interest; and our hearts as well as our prosperity call on us to support it.

THE people of England not having experienced this change, had likewise no idea of it. They were hugging to their bosoms the same prejudices we were trampling beneath our feet; and they expected to keep a hold upon America, by that narrowness of thinking, which America disdained. What they were proud of, we despised; and this is a principal cause why all their negociations, conftructed on this ground, have failed. We are now really another people, and cannot again go back to ignorance and prejudice. The mind once enlightened cannot again There is no possibility, neither is there any term to express the supposition by, of the mind, unknowing any thing it already knows; and therefore all attempts on the part of England, fitted to the former habit of America, and on the expectation of their applying now, will be like perfuading a feeing man to become blind, and a fensible one to turn an idiot which is unnatural, and the other impossible.

As to the remark which the Abbe makes of the one country being a monarchy and the other a republic, it can have no effential meaning. Forms of government have nothing to do with treaties. The former are the internal police of the countries feverally; the latter, their external police jointly: and so long as each performs its part, we have no more right or business to know how the one or the other conducts its domestic affairs, than we have to enquire into the private concerns of a family.

But had the Abbe reflected for a moment, he would have feen, that courts or the governing powers of all countries, be their forms what they may, are relatively republics with each other. It is the first and true principle of alliancing. Antiquity may have given precedence, and power will naturally create importance, but their equal right is never disputed. It may likewise be worthy of remarking, that a monarchical country can fuffer nothing in its popular happiness by allying with a republican one; and republican governments have never been destroyed by their external connections, but by some internal convulsion or contrivance. France has been in alliance with the republic of Swifferland for more than two hundred years, and still Swifferland retains her original form as entire as if the had allied with a republic like herfelf; therefore this remark of the Abbe goes to nothing. - Besides, it is best that mankind should mix. There is ever something to learn, either of manners or principle; and it is by a free communication, without regard to domestic matters, that friendship is to be extended, and prejudice destroyed all over the world.

But notwithstanding the Abbe's high professions in favour of liberty, he appears sometimes to sorget himself, or that his theory is rather the child of his sancy than of his judgment: For in almost the same instant that he censures censures the alliance as not originally or sufficiently calculated for the happiness of mankind, he, by a figure of implication, accuses France for having acted so generously and unreservedly in concluding it. "Why did they, so (says he, meaning the Court of France) tie themselves down by an inconsiderate treaty to conditions with the Congress, which they might themselves have held in dependence by ample and regular supplies."

WHEN an author undertakes to treat of public happiness, he ought to be certain that he does not mistake passion for right, nor imagination for principle. Principle, like truth, needs no contrivance. It will ever tell its own tale, and tell it the same way. But where this is not the case, every page must be watched, recollected, and compared, like an invented story.

y.

S

h

ď

n

óf

10

es

I AM furnished at this passage of the Abbe. It means nothing or amans ill; and in any case it shews the great difference between speculative and practical know-ledge. A treaty according to the Abbe's language would have neither duration nor affection; it might have lasted to the end of the war, and then expired with it.—But France, by acting in a still superior to the little politics of narrow thinking, has established a generous same and won the love of a country she was before a stranger to. She had to treat with a people who thought as nature taught them; and, on her own part, she wisely saw, there was no present advantage to be obtained by unequal terms, which could balance the more lasting ones that might flow from a kind and generous beginning.

From this part the Abbe advances into the secret transactions of the two Cabinets of Versailles and Madrid-H respecting respecting the independence of America; through which I mean not to sollow him. It is a circumstance sufficiently striking without being commented on, that the former union of America with Britain produced a power, which in her hands, was becoming dangerous to the world: And there is no improbability in supposing, that had the latter known as much of the strength of the former, before she began the quarrel as she has known since, that instead of attempting to reduce her to unconditional submission, she would have proposed to her the conquest of Mexico. But from the countries separately Spain has nothing to apprehend, though from their union she had more to sear than any other power in Europe.

THE part which I shall more particularly confine myfelf to, is that wherein the Abbe takes an opportunity of complimenting the British Ministry with high encomiums of admiration, on their rejecting the offered mediation of the court of Madrid, in 1779.

It must be remembered that before Spain joined France in the war, she undertook the office of a mediator and made proposals to the British King and Ministry so exceedingly favorable to their interest, that had they been accepted, would have become inconvenient, if not inadmissible, to America. These proposals were nevertheless rejected by the British cabinet; on which the Abbe says,— [&]quot;It is in such a circumstance as this; it is in the time when noble pride elevates the soul superior to all terror;

when nothing is feen more dreadful than the shame of

[&]quot; receiving the law, and when there is no doubt or hefi-

[&]quot; tation which to chuse, between ruin and dishonour;

h

i-

he

r,

d :

he

eat

b-

of 25 ad

y-

of

ni-

ia-

ıed

ia-

łry

1ey

not

er-

the

me

or;

of efi-

ur;

6 it

"it is then, that the greatness of a nation is displayed." I acknowledge however that men, accustomed to judge of things by the event, call great and perilous resolutions, heroism or madness, according to the good or bad success with which they have been attended. If then, I should be asked, what is the name which shall in years to come be given to the firmness, which was in this moment exhibited by the English, I shall answer that I do not know. But that which it deserves I know. I know that the annals of the world hold out to us but rarely, the august and majestic spectracle of a nation, which chuses rather to renounce its duration than its glory."

In this paragraph the conception is lofty and the expression clegant; but the colouring is too high for the original, and the likeness fails through an excess of graces. To fit the powers of thinking and the turn of language to the subject, so as to bring out a clear conclusion that shall hit the point in question and nothing else, is the true criterion of writing. But the greater part of the Abbe's writings (if he will pardon me the remark) appear to me uncentral and burthened with variety. They represent a beautiful wilderness without paths; in which the eye is diverted by every thing, without being particularly directed to any thing; and in which it is agreeable to be lost, and difficult to find the way out.

BEFORE I offer any other remark on the spirit and composition of the above passage, I mall compare it with the circumstance it alludes to.

THE circumstance then does not deserve the encomium. The rejection was not prompted by her fortitude, but her vanity. She did not view it as a case of despair or even of extreme danger, and consequently the determination to renounce her duration rather than her glory, cannot apply to the condition of her mind. She had then high expectations of subjugating America, and had no other naval force against her than France; neither was since certain that rejecting the mediation of Spain would combine that power with France. New mediations might arise more favorable than those she had refused. But if they should not, and Spain should join, she still saw that it would only bring out her naval force against France and Spain, which was not wanted and could not be employed against America, and habits of thinking had taught her to believe herself superior to both.

But in any case to which the consequence might point, there was nothing to impress her with the idea of renouncing her duration. It is not the policy of Europe to suffer the extinction of any power, but only to lop off or prevent its dangerous encrease. She was likewise freed by situation from the internal and immediate horrors of invasion; was rolling in dissipation and looking for conquests; and tho' she suffered nothing but the expence of war, she still had a greedy eye to magnificent reimbursement.

But if the Abbe is delighted with high and striking singularities of character, he might, in America, have found ample field for encomium. Here was a people, who could not know what part the world would take for, or against them; and who were venturing on an untried scheme, in opposition to a power, against which more formidable nations had failed. They had every thing to learn but the principles which supported them, and every thing thing to procure that was necessary for their defence. They have at times seen themselves as low as distress could make them, without shewing the least stagger in their fortitude; and been raised again by the most unexpected events, without discovering an unmanly discomposure of joy. To hesitate or to despair are conditions equally unknown in America. Her mind was prepared for every thing; because her original and final resolution of succeeding or perishing included all possible circumstances.

THE rejection of the British propositions in the year 1778, circumstanced as America was at that time, is a far greater instance of unshaken fortitude than the refusal of the Spanish mediation by the Court of London: And other historians, besides the Abbe, struck with the vastness of her conduct therein, have, like himself, attributed it to a circumstance which was then unknown, the alliance with France. Their error shews their idea of its greatness; because, in order to account for it, they have sought a cause suited to its magnitude, without knowing that the cause existed in the principles of the country. *)

d

o

r

ıt

۱-

d

g

10

bŝ

re

to

ry

^{*)} Extract from " A short review of the present reign" in England.

Page 45. in the New Annual Register for the year 1780.

"THE Commissioners, who, in consequence of Lord North's conciliatory bills, went over to America, to propose terms of peace to the colonies, were wholly unsuccessful. The conciliatory would have been received with the utmost gratitude, were rejected with disdain. Now was the time of American pride and haughtiness. It is probable, however, that it was not pride and haughtiness alone that distated the Resolutions of Congress, but a distrust of the sincerity of the offers of Britain, a determination not to give

⁶⁶ THEIR LATE TREATY WITH FRANCE."

But this passionate encomium of the Abbe is deservedly subject to moral and philosophical objections. It is the essuance wild thinking, and has a tendency to prevent that humanity of resection which the criminal conduct of Britain enjoins on her as a duty.—It is a laudanum to courtly iniquity.—It keeps in intoxicated sleep the conscience of a nation; and more mischief is effected by wrapping up guilt in splendid excuse, than by directly patronizing it.

Britain is now the only country which holds the world in disturbance and war; and instead of paying compliments to the excess of her crimes, the Abbe would have appeared much more in character, had he put to her, or to her monarch, this serious question—

ARE there not miseries enough in the world, too difficult to be encountered and too pointed to be borne, without studying to enlarge the list and arming it with new destruction? Is life so very long, that it is necessary, nay even a duty, to shake the sand and hasten out the period of duration? Is the path so elegantly smooth, so decked on every side and carpeted with joys, that wretchedness is wanted to enrich it as a soil? Go ask thine aching heart when sorrow from a thousand causes wound it, go ask thy sickened self when every medicine sails, whether this be the case or not?

QUITTING my remarks on this head, I proceed to another, in which the Abbe has let loose a vein of illnature, and, what is still worse, of injustice.

AFTER cavilling at the treaty, he goes on to characterize the

the feveral parties combined in the war—" Is it possible," fays the Abbe, " that a strict union should long subsist amongst confederates of characters so opposite as the hasty, light, disdainful Frenchman, the jealous, haugh— ty, sly, slow, circumspective Spaniard, and the Ame— rican, who is secretly snatching looks at the mother country, and would rejoice, were they compatible with his independence, at the disasters of his allies."

To draw foolish portraits of each other, is a mode of attack and reprisal, which the greater part of mankind are fond of indulging. The serious philosopher should be above it, more especially in cases from which no possible good can arise, and mischief may, and where no received provocation can palliate the offence.—The Abbe might have invented a difference of character for every country in the world, and they in return might find others for him, till in the war of wit all real character is lost. The pleafantry of one nation or the gravity of another may, by a little penciling, be distorted into whimsical features, and the painter become as much laughed at as the painting.

But why did not the Abbe look a little deeper and bring forth the excellencies of the feveral parties? Why did he not dwell with pleafure on that greatness of character, that superiority of heart, which has marked the conduct of France in her conquests, and which has forced an acknowledgment even from Britain?

THERE is one line, at least, (and many others might be discovered) in which the confederates unite, which is, that of a rival eminence in their treatment of their enemies. Spain, in her conquest of Minorca and the Bahama islands issands confirms this remark. America has been invariable in her lenity from the beginning of the war, notwithstanding the high provocations she has experienced? It is England only who has been insolent and cruel.

But why must America be charged with a crime undeserved by her conduct, more so by her principles, and which, if a sact, would be satal to her honour? I mean that of want of attachment to her allies, or rejoicing in their disasters. She, it is true, has been assiduous in shewing to the world that she was not the aggressor towards England, that the quarrel was not of her seeking, or, at that time, even of her wishing. But to draw inferences from her candour, and even from her justification, to stab her character by, and I see nothing else from which they can be supposed to be drawn, is unkind and unjust.

Does her rejection of the British propositions in 1778, before she knew of any alliance with France, correspond with the Abbe's description of her mind? does a single instance of her conduct since that time justify it?—But there is a still better evidence to apply to, which is, that of all the mails, which at different times have been way-laid on the road, in divers parts of America, and taken and carried into New-York, and from which the most secret and considential private letters, as well as those from authority, have been published, not one of them, I repeat it, not a single one of them, gives countenance to such a charge.

This is not a country where men are under government restraint in speaking; and if there is any kind of restraint, restraint, it arises from a sear of popular resentment. Now, if nothing in her private or public correspondence savours such a suggestion, and if the general disposition of the country is such as to make it unsafe for a man to shew an appearance of joy at any disaster to her ally, on what grounds, I ask, can the accusation stand. What company the Abbe may have kept in France, we cannot know; but this we know, that the account he gives does not apply to America.

d

n

n

n

g,

ſe

d

3,

d

le

ıt

-

n.

Œ

e

١,

e.

HAD the Abbe been in America at the time the news arrived of the disaster of the fleet under Count de Grasse, in the West-Indies, he would have seen his vast mistake. Neither do I remember any instance, except the loss of Charlestown, in which the public mind suffered more severe and pungent concern, or underwent more agitations of hope and apprehension as to the truth or falsehood of the report. Had the loss been all our own it could not have had a deeper effect, yet it was not one of these cases which reached to the independence of America.

In the geographical account which the Abbe gives of the Thirteen States, he is so exceedingly erroneous, that to attempt a particular resutation, would exceed the limits I have prescribed to myself. And as it is a matter neither political, historical, nor sentimental, and which can always be contradicted by the extent and natural circumstances of the country, I shall pass it over; with this additional remark, that I never yet saw an European description of America that was true, neither can any person gain a just idea of it, but by coming to it,

Though I have already extended this letter beyond
I what

what I at first proposed, I am, nevertheless, obliged to omit many observations, I originally designed to have made. I wish there had been no occasion for making any. But the wrong ideas which the Abbe's work had a tendency to excite, and the prejudicial impressions they might make, must be an apology for my remarks, and the freedom with which they are done.

I observe the Abbe has made a fort of epitome of a confiderable part of the pamphlet Common Sense, and introduced it in that form into his publication. But there are other places where the Abbe has borrowed freely from the same pamphlet without acknowledging it. The difference between society and government, with which the pamphlet opens, is taken from it, and in some expressions almost literally, into the Abbe's work, as if originally his own; and through the whole of the Abbe's remarks on this head, the idea in Common Sense is so closely copied and pursued, that the difference is only in words, and in the arrangement of the thoughts, and not in the thoughts themselves *.

Bur

* Common Sense.

"Some writers have so confounded society with government, as to leave little or no distinction between them; whereas, they are not only different, but have different origins."

"Socrety is produced by our wants and governments by our wickedness; the former promotes our happiness positively, by uniting our affections, the latter negatively, by rettraining our vices."

ABBE RAYNAL.

"CARE must be taken not to confound together society with government. That they may be known diffinftly, their origin should be considered."

"Society originates in the wants of men, government in their vices. Society tends always to good; government ought always to tend to the repressing of evil."

But as it is time I should come to a conclusion of my letter, I shall forbear all further observations on the Abbe's

In the following paragraphs there is less likeness in the language, but the ideas in the one are evidently copied from the other.

COMMON SENSE.

to

ive

ng had ney

and

f a

in-

ere

ely

The

ich

ex-

bri-

be's

; fo

nly

and

UT

not

iety

hey

heir

d."

in

ent

nds

ent

the

" In order to gain a clear and just idea of the design and end of government, let us suppose a small number of perfons, meeting in some sequestered part of the earth unconnected with the rest; they will then represent the peopling of any country or of the world. In this state of natural liberty, fociety will be our first thought. A thousand motives will excite them thereto. The strength of one man is so unequal to his wants, and his mind fo unfitted for perpetual folitude, that he is foon obliged to feek assistance of another, who, in his turn, requires the same. Four or five united would be able to raise a tolerable dwelling in the midst of a wilderneis; but one man might labour out the common period of life, without accomplishing any thing; when he had felled his timber, he could not remove it, nor erect it after it was removed; hunger, in the mean time would urge him from his work, and every different want call him a different way. Disease, nay even misfortune, would be death; for though neither might be immediately mortal, yet either of them would disable him ABBE RAYNAL.

" Man, thrown, as it were; by chance upon the globe, furrounded by all the cvils of nature, obliged continually to defend and protect his life against the storms and tempests of the air, against the inundations of water, against the fire of vulcanoes, against the intemperance of frigid and torrid zones, against the sterility of the earth, which refuses him aliment, or its baneful fecundity, which makes poilon fpring up beneath his feet; in short, against the claws and teeth of savage beasts, who dispute with him his habitation and his prey, and, attacking his person, seem refolved to render themselves ruters of this globe, of which he thinks himself to be the matter: Man, in this state, alone and abandoned to himfelf, could do nothing for his prefervation. It v is necessary, therefore, that he to aid unite himself, and affociate with his like, in order to bring together their strength and intelligence in common Rock. It is by this union that he has triumphed over so many evils, that he has fashioned this globe to his use, restrained the rivers, subjugated the feas, infured his Abbe's work, and take a concise view of the state of public assairs, since the time in which that performance was published.

A MIND habited to actions of meanness and injustice, commits them without reflection, or with a very partial one; for on what other ground than this, can we account for the declaration of war against the Dutch. To gain an idea of the politics which actuated the British Ministry to this measure, we must enter into the opinion which they, and the English in general, had formed of the temper of the Dutch nation; and from thence infer what their expectation of the consequences would be.

Common Sense. from living, and reduce him to a state in which he might rather be faid to perish than to die.-Thus necessity, like a gravitating power, would form our newly arrived emigrants into fociety, the reciprocal bleffings of which, would fupersede and render the obligations of law and government unnecessary, while they remained perfectly just to each other. But as nothing but heaven is impregnable to vice, it will unavoidably happen, that in proportion as they furmount the first difficulties of emigration, which bound them together in a common cause, they will begin to relax in their duty and attachment to each other, and this remissness will point out the necessity of establishing some form of government to supply the defect of moral virtue.'

ABBE RAYNAL. subsistence, conquered a part of the animals in obliging them to ferve him, and driven others far from his empire, to the depth of deferts or of woods, where their number diminishes from age to age. What a man alone would not have been able to effect, men have executed in concert; and altogether they preserve their work. Such is the origin, fuch the advantages, and the end of fociety. - Government owes its birth to the necessity of preventing and repressing the injuries which the affociated individuals had to fear from one another. It is the centinel who watches, in order that the common labours be not disturbed."

of

ce nt

in

i-

n

of

er

rt ig en

tØ

of

er e. ot

en id

ir

n,

ne

ty

ar

he

r-

D.

Could they have imagined that Holland would have feriously made a common cause with France, Spain, and America, the British Ministry would never have dared to provoke them. It would have been a madness in politics to have done so; unless their views were to hasten on a period of such emphatic distress, as should justify the concessions which they saw they must one day or other make to the world, and for which they wanted an apology to themselves.—There is a temper in some men which seeks a pretence for submission. Like a ship disabled in action and unfitted to continue it, it waits the approach of a stil larger one to strike to, and feels relief at the opportunity. Whether this is greatness or littleness of mind, I am not enquiring into. I should suppose it to be the latter, because it proceeds from the want of knowing how to bear misfortune in its original state.

But the subsequent conduct of the British cabinet has shewn that this was not their plan of politics, and consequently their motives must be sought for in another line.

THE truth is, that the British had formed a very humble opinion of the Dutch nation. They looked on them as a people who would submit to any thing; that they might insult them as they liked, plunder them as they pleased, and still the Dutch dared not to be provoked.

If this be taken as the opinion of the British cabinet, the measure is easily accounted for; because it goes on the supposition, that when, by a declaration of hostilities, they had robbed the Dutch of some millions sterling, (and to rob them was popular) they could make peace with them again whenever they pleased, and on almost any terms the British Ministry should propose. And no sooner was the plundering committed, than the accommodation was fet on foot, and failed.

When once the mind loses the sense of its own dignity, it loses, likewise, the ability of judging of it in another. And the American war has thrown Britain into such a variety of absurd situations, that, arguing from herself, she sees not in what conduct national dignity consists in other countries. From Holland she expected duplicity and submission, and this mistake arose from her having acted, in a number of instances during the present war, the same character herself.

To be allied to, or connected with Britain, seems to be an unsafe and impolitic situation. Holland and America are instances of the reality of this remark. Make those countries the allies of France or Spain, and Britain will court them with civility, and treat them with respect; make them her own allies, and she will insult and plunder them. In the first case, she feels some apprehensions at offending them, because they have support at hand; in the latter, those apprehensions do not exist. Such, however, has hitherto been her conduct.

ANOTHER measure which has taken place since the publication of the Abbe's work, and likewise since the time of my beginning this letter, is the change in the British ministry. What line the new cabinet will pursue respecting America, is at this time unknown; neither is it very material, unless they are seriously disposed to a general and honourable peace.

REPEATED experience has shewn, not only the impracticability of conquering America, but the still higher impossibility of conquering her mind, or recalling her back to her former condition of thinking. Since the commencement of the war, which is now approaching to eight years, thousands and tens of thousands have advanced, and are daily advancing into the first stage of manhood, who know nothing of Britain but as a barbarous enemy, and to whom the independence of America appears as much the natural and established government of the country, as that of England does to an Englishman. other hand, thousands of the aged, who had British ideas. have dropped, and are daily dropping, from the stage of business and life. The natural progress of generation and decay operates every hour to the difadvantage of Britain. Time and death, hard enemies to contend with, fight constantly against her interest; and the bills of mortality, in every part of America, are the thermometers of her decline. The children in the streets are from their cradle bred to consider her as their only foe. They hear of her cruelties; of their fathers, uncles, and kindred killed; they fee the remains of burnt and destroyed houses, and the common tradition of the school they go to, tells them, those things were done by the British.

y

ıg

r,

be

ca

ofe

ill

£ ;

ın-

ons

id;

ch,

the

the

the

our-

ther

to a im-

gher

back

to

THESE are circumstances which the mere English state politician, who considers man only in a state of manhood, does not attend to. He gets entangled with parties coeval or equal with himself at home, and thinks not how fast the rising generation in America is growing beyond his knowledge of them, or they of him. In a few years all personal remembrance will be lost, and who is King or Minister in England, will be little known and scarcely enquired after.

THE new British administration is composed of persons who have ever been against the war, and who have con-flantly reprobated all the violent measures of the former one. They considered the American war as destructive to themselves, and opposed it on that ground. But what are these things to America? She has nothing to do with English parties. The ins and the outs are nothing to her. It is the whole country she is at war with, or must be at peace with.

Were every Minister in England a Chatham, it would now weigh little or nothing in the scale of American politics. Death has preserved to the memory of this statesman, that fame, which he, by living, would have lost. His plans and opinions, towards the latter part of his life, would have been attended with as many evil consequences, and as much reprobated here, as those of Lord North; and, considering him a wise man, they abound with inconsistencies amounting to absurdities.

It has apparently been the fault of many in the late minority, to suppose, that America would agree to certain terms with them, were they in place, which she would not ever listen to from the then administration. This idea can answer no other purpose than to prolong the war; and Britain may, at the expence of many more millions, learn the fatality of such mistakes. If the new ministry wisely avoid this hopeless policy, they will prove themselves better pilots, and wifer men, than they are conceived to be; for it is every day expected to see their bark strike upon some hidden rock and go to pieces.

But there is a line in which they may be great. A more brilliant opening needs not to present itself; and it is such a one, as true magnanimity would improve, and humanity rejoice in.

A TOTAL reformation is wanted in England. She wants an expanded mind,—an heart which embraces the universe. Instead of shutting herself up in an island, and quarrelling with the world, she would derive more lasting happiness, and acquire more real riches, by generoufly mixing with it, and bravely faying, I am the enemy of none. It is not now a time for little contrivances, or artful politics. The European world is too experienced to be imposed upon, and America too wise to be duped. It must be something new and masterly that must succeed. The idea of seducing America from her independence, or corrupting her from her alliance, is a thought too little for a great mind, and impossible for any honest one, to attempt. Whenever politics are applied to debauch mankind from their integrity, and dissolve the virtues of human nature, they become detestable; and to be a statesman upon this plan, is to be a commissioned villain. He who aims at it, leaves a vacancy in his character, which may be filled up with the worst of epithets.

d

e

Ьf

 $^{\mathrm{rd}}$

ηď

ite

in i

is

er;

ıs,

ry

ves

to

ikc

A

and

ve.

A

If the disposition of England should be such, as not to agree to a general and honourable peace, and that the war must, at all events, continue longer, I cannot help wishing, that the alliances which America has or may enter into, may become the only objects of the war. She wants an opportunity of shewing to the world, that she holds her honor as dear and facred as her independence, and that she will in no situation for sake those, whom no negociations could induce to for sake her. Peace to every reslective mind is a desirable object; but that peace which is accompanied with a ruined character, becomes a crime to the seducer, and a curse upon the seduced.

Bur where is the impossibility, or even the great dif-K ficulty, 3

ficulty, of England forming a friendship with France and Spain, and making it a national virtue to renounce for ever those prejudiced inveteracies it has been her custom to cherish; and which, while they serve to sink her with an encreasing enormity of debt, by involving her in fruitless wars, become likewise the bane of her repose, and the destruction of her manners? We had once the fetters that she has now, but experience has shewn us the mistake, and thinking justly has set us right.

The true idea of a great nation is that which extends and promotes the principles of universal society. Whose mind rises above the atmospheres of local thoughts, and considers mankind, of whatever nation or profession they may be, as the work of one Creator. The rage for conquest has had its sashion, and its day. Why may not the amiable virtues have the same? The Alexanders and Cæsars of antiquity, have left behind them their monuments of destruction, and are remembered with hatred; while these more exalted characters, who first taught society and science, are blest with the gratitude of every age and country. Of more use was one philosopher, though a heathen, to the world, than all the heathen conquerors that ever existed.

SHOULD the present revolution be distinguished by opening a new system of extended civilization, it will receive from heaven the highest evidence of approbation; and as this is a subject to which the Abbe's powers are so eminently suited, I recommend it to his attention, with the affection of a friend, and the ardour of a universal citizen.

POSTSCRIPT.

POSTSCRIPT.

SINCE closing the foregoing letter, some intimations, respecting a general peace, have made their way to America. On what authority or foundation they stand, or how near or remote such an event may be, are circumstances I am not enquiring into. But as the subject must sooner or later become a matter of serious attention, it may not be improper, even at this early period, candidly to investigate some points that are connected with it, or lead towards it.

)t

rs.

ir

h

ſŧ

le

y

11

e

THE independence of America is at this moment as firmly established as that of any other country in a state of war. It is not length of time, but power, that gives stability. Nations at war know nothing of each other on the score of antiquity. It is their present and immediate strength, together with their connections, that must support them. To which we may add, that a right which originated to-day, is as much a right, as if it had the sanction of a thousand years; and therefore the independence and present governments of America are in no more danger of being subverted, because they are modern, than that of England is secure, because it is ancient.

THE politics of Britain, so far as they respected America, were originally conceived in idiotism, and acted in madness. There is not a step which bears the smallest trace of rationality. In her management of the war, she has laboured to be wretched, and studied to be hated; and in all her former propositions for accommodation, the has discovered a total ignorance of mankind, and of those natural and unalterable sensations by which they are so generally governed. How she may conduct herself in the present or suture business of negociating a peace, is yet to be proved.

5 2

ſh

He is a weak politician who does not understand human nature, and penetrate into the effect which measures of government will have upon the mind. All the miscarriages of Britain have arisen from this defect. The former Ministry acted as if they supposed mankind to be without a mind; and the present Ministry, as if America was without a memory. The one must have supposed we were incapable of feeling; and the other, that we could not remember injuries.

There is likewise another line in which politicians mistake, which is that of not rightly calculating, or rather of misjudging, the consequence which any given circumstance will produce. Nothing is more frequent, as well in common as in political life, than to hear people complain, that such or such means produced an event directly contrary to their intentions. But the fault lies in their not judging rightly what the event would be; for the means produced only its proper and natural consequence.

It is very probable, that in a treaty for peace, Britain will contend for some post or other in North America; perhaps Canada or Halifax, or both: and I infer this from the known deficiency of her politics, which have ever yet made use of means, whose natural event was against both her interest and her expectation. But the question question with her ought to be, Whether it is worth her while to hold them, and what will be the consequence.

RESPECTING Canada, one or other of the two following will take place, viz. If Canada should people, it will revolt; and if it do not people, it will not be worth the expence of holding. And the same may be said of Halifax, and the country round it. But Canada never will people; neither is there any occasion for contrivances on one side or the other, for nature alone will do the whole.

Britain may put herfelf to great expences in fending fettlers to Canada; but the descendants of those settlers will be Americans, as other descendants have been before them. They will look round and see the neighbouring States sovereign and free, respected abroad and trading at large with the world; and the natural love of liberty, the advantages of commerce, the blessings of independence and of a happier climate, and a richer soil, will draw them southward, and the effect will be, that Britain will sustain the expence, and America reap the advantage.

One would think that the experience which Britain has had of America, would entirely ficken her of all thoughts of continental colonization; and any part which the might retain, will only become to her a field of jealoufy and thorns, of debate and contention, for ever flruggling for privileges, and meditating revolt. She may form new fettlements, but they will be for us; they will become part of the United States of America; and that against all her contrivances to prevent it, or without any endeavours of ours to promote it. In the first place, she cannot draw from them a revenue until they are able to pay one, and when they are so, they will be above subjection. Men soon become attached to the soil they live upon, and incorporated with the prosperity of the place; and it signifies but little what opinions they come over with, for time, interest, and new connections will render them obsolete, and the next generation know nothing of them.

WERE Britain truly wife she would lay hold of the present opportunity to disentangle herself from all continental embarrassiments in North-America, and that not only to avoid future broils and troubles, but to save expences. For to speak explicitly on the matter, I would not, were I an European power, have Canada, under the conditions that Britain must retain it, could it be given to me. It is one of those kind of dominions that is, and ever will be, a constant charge upon any foreign holder.

As to Halifax, it will become useless to England after the present war, and the loss of the United States. A harbour, when the dominion is gone, for the purpose of which only it was wanted, can be attended only with expence. There are, I doubt not, thousands of people in England, who suppose, that those places are a profit to the nation, whereas they are directly the contrary, and instead of producing any revenue, a considerable part of the revenue of England is annually drawn off, to support the expence of holding them.

GIBRALTAR is another instance of national ill policy. A post which in time of peace is not wanted, and in time of war is of no use, must at all times be useless. Instead

VC

iey

the

ley

ns

ion

the

nti-

not

ex-

uld the

iven

t is,

eign

after

A

fe of h ex-

le in

fit to

, and

art of

fup-

olicy.

h time

nstead

of

of affording protection to a navy, it requires the aid of one to maintain it. And to suppose that Gibraltar commands the Mediterranean, or the pass into it, or the trade of it, is to suppose a detected falshood; because though Britain holds the post, she has lost the other three, and every benefit she expected from it. And to say that all this happens because it is besieged by land and water, is to say nothing, for this will always be the case in time of war, while France and Spain keep up superior sleets, and Britain holds the place.—So that, though as an impenetrable inaccessible rock it may be held by the one, it is always in the power of the other to render it useless and excessively chargeable.

I should suppose that one of the principal objects of Spain in besieging it, is to show to Britain, that though she may not take it, she can command it, that is, she can shut it up, and prevent its being used as a harbour, though not a garrison.—But the short way to reduce Gibraltar, is, to attack the British sleet; for Gibraltar is as dependent on a sleet for support, as a bird is on its wing for food, and when wounded there it starves.

THERE is another circumstance which the people of England have not only not attended to, but seem to be utterly ignorant of, and that is, the difference between permanent power, and accidental power, considered in a national sense.

By permanent power, I mean, a natural inherent and perpetual ability in a nation, which though always in being, may not be always in action, or not always advantageously directed; and by accidental power, I mean, a fortunate a fortunate or accidental disposition or exercise of national strength, in whole or in part.

THERE undoubtedly was a time when any one European nation, with only eight or ten ships of war, equal to the present ships of the line, could have carried terror to all others, who had not began to build a navy, however great their natural ability might be for that purpose: But this can be considered only as accidental, and not as a standard to compare permanent power by, and could last no longer than until those powers built as many or more ships than the former. After this a larger fleet was necessary, in order to be superior; and a still larger would again superfede it. And thus mankind have gone on building fleet upon fleet, as occasion. or fituation dictated. And this reduces it to an original question, which is: Which power can build and man the largest number of ships? The natural answer to which, is, That power which has the largest revenue and the greatest number of inhabitants, provided its situation of coast affords sufficient conveniencies.

France being a nation on the continent of Europe, and Britain an island in its neighbourhood, each of them derived different ideas from their different situations. The inhabitants of Britain could carry on no foreign trade, nor stir from the spot they dwelt upon, without the assistance of shipping; but this was not the case with France. The idea therefore of a navy did not arise to France from the same original and immediate necessity which produced it to England. But the question is, that when both of them turn their attention, and employ their revenues the same way, which can be superior?

THE

THE annual revenue of France is nearly double that of England, and her number of inhabitants more than twice as many. Each of them has the same length of coast on the channel, besides which, France has several hundred miles extent on the bay of Biscay, and an opening on the Mediterranean: and every day proves, that practice and exercise make sailors, as well as soldiers, in one country as well as another.

o r

7-

ıl, y,

ilt

a nd

n-

OIL.

ţi-

nd

ver

si-

pe,

em

he

de.

af-

ith

to Tity

:haŧ

neir

HE

If then Britain can maintain an hundred ships of the line, France can as well support an hundred and fifty, because her revenues and her population are as equal to the one as those of England are to the other. And the only reason why she has not done it, is because she has not till very lately attended to it. But when she sees, as she now sees, that a navy is the first engine of power, she can easily accomplish it.

ENGLAND very falfely, and ruinously for herself, infers, that because she had the advantage of France, while France had the smaller navy, that for that reason it is always to be so. Whereas it may be clearly seen, that the strength of France has never yet been tried on a navy, and that she is able to be as superior to England in the extent of a navy, as she is in the extent of her revenues and her population. And England may lament the day, when, by her insolence and injustice, she provoked in France a maritime disposition.

It is in the power of the combined fleets to conquer every island in the West Indies, and reduce all the British navy in those places. For were France and Spain to send their whole naval force in Europe to those L islands, islands, it would not be in the power of Britain to follow them with an equal force. She would still be twenty or thirty ships inserior, were she to send every vessel she had, and in the mean time all the foreign trade of England would lay exposed to the Dutch.

It is a maxim, which, I am perfuaded, will ever hold good, and more especially in naval operations, that a great power ought never to move in detachments, if it can possibly be avoided; but to go with its whole force to some important object, the reduction of which shall have a decisive esfect upon the war. Had the whole of the French and Spanish sleets in Europe come last spring to the West Indies, every island had been their own, Rodney their prisoner, and his sleet their prize. From the United States the combined sleets can be supplied with provisions, without the necessity of drawing them from Europe, which is not the case with England.

ACCIDENT has thrown some advantages in the way of England, which, from the inferiority of her navy, she had not a right to expect. For though she has been obliged to sly before the combined sleets, yet Rodney has twice had the fortune to fall in with detached squadrons, to which he was superior in numbers: The first off Cape St. Vincent, where he had nearly two to one, and the other in the West Indies, where he had a majority of six ships. Victories of this kind almost produce themselves. They are won without honor, and suffered without disgrace: And are ascribable to the chance of meeting, not to the superiority of sighting. For the same Admiral, under whom they were obtained, was unable, in three former engagements, to make the least impression on a fleet confishing of an equal number of ships with his own, and compounded for the events by declining the actions *.

To conclude, if it may be said that Britain has numerous enemies, it likewise proves that she has given numerous offences. Infolence is fure to provoke hatred, whether in a nation or an individual. The want of manners in the British court may be seen even in its birth-days and new-years Odes, which are calculated to infatuate the vulgar, and difgust the man of refinement: And her former overbearing rudeness, and insufferable injustice on the seas, have made every commercial nation her foe. Her fleets were employed as engines of prey; and acted on the furface of the deep the character which the shark does beneath it.—On the other hand, the Combined Powers are taking a popular part, and will render their reputation immortal, by establishing the perfect freedom of the ocean, to which all countries have a right, and are interested in accomplishing. The sea is the world's highway; and he who arrogates a prerogative over it, transgresses the right, and justly brings on himself the chastisement, of nations.

l f

ι,

าา

d

n

of 10

211

as a-

rſŧ

ic,

a-

0-

nd he ng.

ed,

the

:alt

PERHAPS it might be of some service to the future tranquillity of mankind, were an article introduced into the next general peace, that no one nation should, in time of peace, exceed a certain number of ships of war. Something of this kind seems necessary; for according to the present

^{*} See the accounts, either English or French, of three actions in the West Indies, between Count de Guichen and Admiral Rodney, in 1780.

present fashion, half the world will get upon the water, and there appears no end to the extent to which navies may be carried. Another reason is, that navies add nothing to the manners or morals of a people. The sequestered life which attends the service, prevents the opportunities of society, and is too apt to occasion a coarseness of ideas and language, and that more in ships of war than in commercial employ; because in the latter they mix more with the world, and are nearer related to it. I mention this remark as a general one; and not applied to any one country more than another.

Britain has now had the trial of above feven years, with an expense of nearly an hundred million pounds sterling; and every month in which she delays to conclude a peace, costs her another million sterling, over and above her ordinary expenses of government, which are a million more; so that her total monthly expense is two million pounds sterling, which is equal to the whole yearly expense of America, all charges included. Judge then who is best able to continue it.

SHE has likewise many atonements to make to an injured world, as well in one quarter as another. And instead of pursuing that temper of arrogance, which serves only to sink her in the esteem, and entail on her the dislike, of all nations, she will do well to reform her manners, retrench her expences, live peaceably with her neighbours, and think of war no more.

Philadelphia, August 21, 1782.

ř es

0-:f4 :r-:fs

ari ix

ntó

rs,

ids
on=
ver
ich
e is ole dge

in≓ i11ves

lifan≓ Her

