the Philadelphia Sunday Despatch, gives a humorous and sarcastic account of the un-fortunate attempt of J. Alfred Brimmer, Esq., editor and proprietor of the Morning Glory, to establish in his paper a new de choly subject, death. Having observed the disposition of persons bereaved of their relatives to give expression to their feelings in poetical form, he reflected that it might perhaps be a good thing to introduce tment of obituary poetry. He considered whether if, when an individual inserted fifty cents' worth of death-notice popular vehicle for the conveyance of that form of intelligence to the public, and acordingly laid his plans. He sent for Mr. ington Ott, who had frequently contributed to the columns of The Morning Glory poems of what would have been considered by a fastidious student of English literature an appalling and revolution ary character, and soon effected an arrangement with the bard, by which it was agreed that Mr. Ott should take a position in the office for a short time, and whenever a death-notice arrived he should immediatey endeavor to grind out some verses expressive of the situation "You understand, Mr. Ott," explained

Brimmer, " that when the death of an in lividual is announced, I want you, as it were, to cheer the afflicted family with the ources of your noble art. I wish you throw yourself, you may say, into their tuation, and to give them a verse or two bout the corpse which will seem to be the

When the day's work was done, Ott went home with a con viction that The Morning Glory had finally in a poketonnet and silver spectacles saddenly emerged from the stairway and pinned the editor to the wall with the ferule of her umbrella. After grinding her teeth at him for a moment she floored him with her weapon, and seating herself upon his prostrate form, she extracted a copy of The comparatively valueless. In the morning Mr. Ott proceeded calmit to the office for the purpose of embalming in sympathetic verse the memories of other departed ones. As he came near the establishment he observed a crowd of five or six thousand peo ple in front of it, struggling to get into the door. Climbing a tree, he everlooked the crowd, and could see within the office the clerks selling papers as fast as they e mid handle them, while the mob pushed and jammed and yelled in frantic efforts to obtain copies—the press in the cellar meanwhile clanging away like mad. As he approached the sanctum; loud voices were heard within. Mr. Ott determined to ascertain the cause before entering. He bhained a chair, and mounted and peeped over the door. There sat Brimmer holding The Morning Glory in both hands, while the fringe which grew in a semi-circle around the edge of his baid head stood straight out, until he seemed to resemble a gigantic gun swab. Two or three per-cons stood in front of him in threatening attitudes. Ott heard one of them say: "My name is McGlue, sir. I am a br her of the late Alexander McGlue.
