H. L. SPENCER GOES TO THE 'CITY OF SLEEP'

Only a leaf, but it speaks to me. Of a soul as pure as the souls above. It breathes in my ear of saintly love. Only a leaf. To my dim eyes I catch a chamber of death recall. And a far-away graveyard where slumbering lies One that was childhood's all in all.

IN these words, H. L. Spencer, poet, journalist and man of letters, wrote of his mother, who was little more than a childhood memory; and yesterday his great soul passed over the Great Divide to the 'City of Sleep' and Eternity.

New Brunswick appealed, and while one sang of it in verse the other endeavored to reproduce it faithfully upon his canvas. To the very last Mr. Spencer was keenly interested in local and world affairs, and his mind had lost very little of its clearness, except loss of memory, until very nearly the end of his long life.

A few close friends will miss him much, but he leaves a lasting memorial in his contributions to the poetry of Canada. The last sunset in the Fugitives is now of peculiar interest. It is as follows: The flowers of Spring will never open again. Beyond recall are Summer's soberer blooms; Where they lie dead falls down the Autumn rain.

Were they worth while? Is it worth while to live? It is worth while even in Autumn time! To reign in one pure heart cannot but give The humblest life an attribute sublime. Clasp my hand closer; Winter comes apace; Clasp my hand closer; soon the snows will fall; And of ourselves, and of past seasons, all There will remain beneath the sun no trace.

THE CITY OF SLEEP

IN the City of Sleep on the Hill Fall the sunbeams, the star-glams and showers, Comes never a vision of ill, And the years glide away like the hours; For the sleepers rock not of the strife, The heathen and trials that fill To o'er flowing the goblet of life, In the City of Sleep on the Hill.

There the day-time and night-time are one, The seasons of blossom and snow, The light of the moon and the sun, The gladness of earth and its woe; We may gather their pillows with flowers And rest with tears, if we will, But they heed not such sorrows as ours In the City of Sleep on the Hill.

O, the City of Sleep on the Hill Is a city of refuge for all Who, weary with struggle and ill, By the wayside are ready to fall; For rest is the cry of the world— A cry that has never been still, And 'Rest' has her banner unfurled, O'er the City of Sleep on the Hill.

—H. L. SPENCER.

JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY

Indianapolis, Ind., October 7.—Indiana awoke to-day for a holiday. It is not a holiday to be celebrated with noise-making and parades but, one to be observed quietly in the home and school. It is James Whitcomb Riley's birthday and the Hoosier State is leading the nation in paying homage to the poet. The climax of the celebration comes to-night in a banquet tendered Mr. Riley by his friends. The guest list includes many distinguished names.

Riley was born in Greenfield, about 20 miles from Indianapolis, some time about 1850. His father, a lawyer and politician, planned that his boy should follow in his profession, but to the lad there was a more potent appeal in wood and field, in farm and stream, than in law books. Later Riley became an itinerant sign-painter and was also something of a fiddler, and in large demand at village and settlement fairs.

In 1863 Mr. Spencer came to St. John and entered business here, also editing 'The Maritime Monthly'. Afterwards he became a valued member of the staff of the St. John Telegraph and the Sun, and later of the Record and the Gazette, corresponding also for other papers.

Although much of Mr. Spencer's best work was contributed to the newspapers, and not preserved in other form, he published a booklet of poems in 1848; 'Summer Saunterings Away Down East,' 1850; 'A Song of the Years and a Memory of Acadia,' 1859; a small volume of poems at a later period; 'The Fugitives, a Sheaf of Verses,' 1909.

Mr. Spencer was personally acquainted with Ralph Waldo Emerson, Nathaniel Hawthorne, and several of their famous literary contemporaries in New England. He was a classmate of Henry Cabot Lodge, Redfield Proctor, and others who became prominent in public life. He also corresponded at intervals for many years with Elbert Hubbard, the famous writer and lecturer, who in the 'Fugitives' published many of Mr. Spencer's poems.

After giving up newspaper work Mr. Spencer went to Whitehead, Kings County, to the home of an old friend, John Edwards, and opened there a little store, which he conducted for several years. There was very little trade, but it kept his active mind partially occupied. He also wrote at intervals during that period a series of short sketches for the Evening Times. These, under the heading, the Inglo Nook Philosopher of Kennebecas Bay, were read with universal interest, not only for their quaint fables and wise reflections, but for their fine literary quality. The birds, the trees, and flowers, the children—Nature in all her moods—furnished material which his lively imagination used with good effect to embellish a story, present a word picture, or point a moral.

But some five years ago his physical weakness became such that the little store had to be closed, and Mr. Spencer returned to the city. Kind friends have since ministered to his comfort as he grew more feeble, and the newspaper men of the city, the Women's Canadian Club, and others, have given him more than one occasion tangible proofs of their regard and their recognition of his poetic genius. The Women's Canadian Club and their president, Mrs. E. Atherton Smith, were specially kind to the poet during the last three years, and their generous appreciation was a great joy to him.

Mrs. Smith hastened to his bedside the morning he heard of the fatal stroke, and has also visited him at the hospital, doing all possible for his comfort. At the hospital he was tenderly cared for by the nurses, and visited by a few old friends, but he was never fully conscious long enough to converse rationally.

Mr. Spencer leaves no relatives in St. John. His wife and son are buried in Rutland, Vermont. He had also a daughter, but for many years had no knowledge of her whereabouts or whether she were living or dead. He had a few correspondents, whose regular or occasional letters cheered his later days. One of these was in Montreal, one in Calgary, one in Chicago, one in Los Angeles, one in Castleton, Vt., one in Newport, N. H., and one in Japan.
