It was only a simple hallad,
Sung to a careless throng;
There were none that knew the singer,
And few that hereigt the song;
Yet the singer's raise was tender
And sweet as with love unfold;
Surely their hearts were hardened.
That is left so proved and cold.

In the dusk of the gloaming gray.

Then when the song was ended,
They hashed the last sweet tone,
The list her rose up softly
And went on her way alone,
Once more to her life of labor
She passed, but her heart was strong;
And she paysed, "God bless the singer!
And oh! thank God for the song?" -Chamber! Juanal,

EUY AT WHOLESALE.

There is hardly any mark of improvidence more infalible than the habit of living "from hand to month," as buying at retail, in small quantities and at a high price, articles that are in common use, and that may be bought more cheaply in large quantities. Of course, there are people so poor that they cannot—at any rate not without sacrifice in other directions—buy, anything two great as well as too little provision for the future. But we are now speaking of wise and possible, conomy, not of unwise and imposible, Illustrations of what may be done are sumberlegs. We select a few. When

A little thing, you say? True, but you have saved eight or nine per cent, on that one purchase, and if you can do as well on all others, you will find that the aggregate economy in the course of a year is ten, thirty or fifty dollars.

And you, air,—do you not buy a single newspaper every morning or evening, and pay for it at a rate much above that for subscription by the week, month or year?

And one in a distant corner—
A woman worn with strife,
Heard in that song a message
From the springtime of her life.
Fair forms rose up before her
From the milit of vanished years;
She sat in a happy blindness,
Her eyes were veiled in tears.

Then when the song was ended,
