most extraordinary change of manner and purpose. My dear Ogilvie, you shall know all. Read this, the Colonel, writing on the newspaper, and unfolding it, he pointed out the following paragraph—

By the death of the Right Hon. Lord Seckington, Captain Alverley, formerly of the Guards, succeeds to the title and estates, which are great, as well as to the splendid accumulations of landed property said to have been made by the late Lord S.

Well explained the General, after having read the paragraph twice over, in perturbed silence, returning the paper, 'of course, it is easy to guess your intentions.'

'Intention!' exclaimed Colonel St. Helen, with great vivacity, 'this is the first time that I have touched freely since my arrival in England!'

'Do you, then, really think of meeting this man?' enquired the General, gravely, after a pause.

'Meet him! Do I intend to meet him?—Ogilvie, you vex me! replied Colonel St. Helen, briskly and bitterly at the same time, in a quivering voice.

'Let me see—how shall I know when he arrives in London?' said the Colonel, abruptly, as if he had thought aloud.

'Oh, there cannot be much difficulty about that,' replied the General, who had satisfied himself of the hopelessness of attempting to dissuade Colonel St. Helen from his evident purpose.

'Dear Ogilvie—my dear, good brother,' said the Colonel, with affectionate energy, 'do not think I shall permit you to be at all involved in this affair. Mischievous as it may be, I cannot deprive my sister and my children of your presence, even for a moment.'

'You shall not meet him unless I am at your elbow,' interrupted the General, with a determined air. 'I can be firm, St. Helen, as you are.'

low. He had, in truth, long been greatly embarrassed and involved,—yet he contrived to appear possessed of all the wealth and to enjoy all the pleasures and elegancies that pensions young men of fashion so mysteriously secure for themselves.

Now, however, the money he had obtained from Mrs. St. Helen, as well as a few hundreds that had been supplied to him by a brother mercantile in order to carry on the intrigue, had almost disappeared.

He began to feel himself placed in very awkward circumstances. What a prosaic man of action in Paris! Colonel Alverley looked so burdened with the perpetual pressure of a woman who was weeping bitterly from morning to night—frequently in very violent hysterics—and who reproached him with the loss of his money, and the loss of her money. He soon began to sneer at all this.

Was it for this that he had quitted all the pleasures of London, and lost all his hopes of advancement in the army? Paris was a very pleasant place, and he could have enjoyed himself there but for this unfortunate man—and he soon felt and expressed it most disgustingly.

He therefore began to brood over the very sight of his miserable companion. It was unquestionably with a feeling of keen regret that he found her brought home one night dripping from the Seine, after an abortive attempt at self-destruction to which he could scarcely be supposed to have been the author.

him that he ought not to dine out till after his uncle's funeral—well knowing that his own funeral might probably take place at the same time. It may be easily understood that he was in a humour to renew the business-details which Major Darnley's arrival had interrupted.

He sent a message to that effect to his solicitor, to whom he had promised to return, begging a quarter before, and looking by Captain Lecester. He was in full dinner dress, having been sent by Major Darnley, just as he was preparing to go to the Duke's—where he was to have been surprised by the appearance of Lord Seckington. After his hurried interview with Major Darnley, he had come off direct to—

Well, Alverley—Seckington, I mean—you see it's just as I expected, and, besides, stopping up to Lord Seckington.

'Yes! he replied, shaking his cordially by the hand, and unconsciously sighing. 'May I reckon on your services?'

'Oh, of course—I am here on the business now.' 'Where were you going when Major Darnley found you?' enquired Lord Seckington, alluding to Captain Lecester.

'The Duke of—' 'Ah! I was to have been there to,' said Lord Seckington, 'they'll suspect that something's wrong by our both being absent, and I could not without the happy home of his brave brother-soldier—to escape from the mortal thraldom he was now enduring.'

'Perhaps had he been calm enough, a lesson of his earlier days might have occurred to him before the fearful lesson of the ensuing morning.'

'Audite et sperate, pretium, prodece rebus! Qui nichil nisi vultus et omnia parva labenti! Uique illis multo corrupta dolere voluptas! Atque inter rursus, cadit dura inter se pericla!'

'You know, Lecester, it is not death that I care for, come how or when it may,' said he, 'I'm a little above that, I should hope.'

'Don't fear Boggy, then, eh?' interrupted Capt. Lecester, with a smile.

'Pshaw!—But, by the way, what am I to do? How often am I to receive his fire?'

'Ah! I've been considering that point a little. Why, I think—twice.'

'And I—' 'I've made the first time, of course!—' 'But I don't think it is quite such a matter of course, Lecester.'

'Oh, nonsense, it's as clear as daylight—trust me. Really it's devilish hard—' 'I'll try to make it go—' 'It's throwing away my only chance. It's going out to be clean murdered!'

'Seckington, put yourself in my place. It must be so, or I am not responsible. If nothing happens, of course I'll demand another shot; and then, you may perhaps—' 'I don't see what goes on to do, but I think I know what I should do.—And the same if a third is asked for.'

'Why the devil don't the fellow announce dinner?' exclaimed Lord Seckington, violently pulling the bell.

'Hush—don't be so feverish. He announced it five minutes ago—I've been on the move ever since. I've now only a quarter of an hour. He'll be here, well considered the odds—never to have blazed the happy home of his brave brother-soldier—to escape from the mortal thraldom he was now enduring.'

'Perhaps had he been calm enough, a lesson of his earlier days might have occurred to him before the fearful lesson of the ensuing morning.'

EXETER, OCTOBER 5. MERRICK, SQUIRE.—On Saturday last, an operation was successfully performed in this city, of the utmost importance to the medical profession, and of still greater interest to persons labouring under pulmonary complaints.

A young man of the name of Tucker, about 25 years of age, a resident in the West Indies, and now lodging in North-street, had been afflicted for nearly two years with an asthma in the lungs, which had increased to such a degree that his case was deemed utterly hopeless, and he came over to England for change of air, or rather, as he said, with the expectation of laying his bones in his native county of Devon.

Mr. Tucker, who had been in the city for some time, was introduced to the notice of the late Dr. Mearns, who had performed a successful operation on the mother of this young man, and as she is now alive and well, he naturally made an application to the late Dr. Mearns, who had performed a successful operation on the mother of this young man, and as she is now alive and well, he naturally made an application to the late Dr. Mearns.
